Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, about two-thirds of Albertans consistently say that they oppose the NDP's carbon tax. My question is: why does the Premier keep calling them names? Why does she call all of those Albertans, quote, climate deniers? I happen to disagree with the Premier on the efficacy of carbon taxes. We don't need to call each other names if we have a policy disagreement. So I'd like to ask the Premier: would she please stop the name-calling, and would she please listen with respect to the two-thirds of Albertans who say that punishing consumers, telling seniors to turn the heat down at home in the middle of a cold winter is not an environmental ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, fearmongering is not an environmental policy either. The member opposite understands that 60 per cent of Alberta households have received rebates in order to ensure that, in any case, they come out ahead.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, the member opposite has yet to stand up in this House and say that he believes that human activity is the primary cause of climate change, so I will continue to characterize that failure exactly as I have been because all Canadians need a government that will act to combat climate change, and that's what they have ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the belief that carbon taxes can solve climate change is true, then why is the Premier not advocating for the $300 carbon tax advocated by Environment Canada, the $200 carbon tax advocated by her adviser Professor Leach? See, she is completely torn by a fundamental contradiction in her argument. She says that carbon taxes can help stop climate change, but she's unwilling to be honest with Albertans about the only price point that will make that happen. Why doesn't she just tell people the truth that ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Interestingly, the Harper government signed on to the same targets for carbon emission reduction as the Trudeau government, and the $300-a-tonne price to get you there was actually information that was in front of the Harper government. So the question that I have is: were they planning a $300-a-tonne carbon tax, or were they lying when they said that they would hit those targets, or were they planning to fail just like they did on pipelines? [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

Mr. Kenney: Doubling pipeline capacity is anything but a failure, Mr. Speaker. What we have from this Premier is a record of failure, a carbon tax that has punished ordinary Albertans, a Premier who's told people to take the bus to work when many of them simply have to drive; they can't drive less to work. Seniors can only turn the heat down by so much at home. That's exactly why the Conservative government was not going to punish consumers and hard-working people with a punitive consumer tax on energy. I ask the Premier yet again: can she identify one environmental organization that has gone from no to yes on pipelines as a result of the carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can identify a federal government that has approved the pipeline to tidewater and done the work that needs to be done to ensure that the decision is upheld by the courts as a result of the work that this government did on climate leadership as part of a national plan for combatting climate change. Pipeline plus climate change fighting go together. The member opposite wants to turn his back on fighting climate change, and he wants to jeopardize the pipeline as a result. Albertans and Canadians deserve better.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Government and Alberta Party Fiscal Policies

Mr. Clark: Why, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today the Alberta Party caucus tabled our fourth shadow budget. Now, we believe the role of opposition is not just to oppose the government but to propose ideas and tell Albertans what we would do differently. One of those ideas is to ensure we prepare our province for an uncertain future. The Alberta Party would increase investments in education. We would support social innovation in the not-for-profit sector and beyond. We'd commit $100 million annually to an innovation strategy. We'd also make investments in justice, culture, and social services. To the Premier: can we expect to see significant investments in these areas, and at the same time will you find meaningful savings in health ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question and for presenting their proposed plan, which, I have to point out, had a billion-dollar reduction to health care investment, had increased revenue in the line item that I believe said fees and taxes. It sounds like the recycled, failed health care premium that Albertans rejected in the last election. That sounds like the scary politics that were proposed right before 2015 that Albertans rejected. On this side of the House we're protecting health, we're protecting education, and we aren't bringing in regressive taxation that taxes people for wanting health care services.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government assumes that the only way to save money in health care is by cutting on the front lines, and that is absolutely not true.

Another core value of the Alberta Party, Mr. Speaker, and of Albertans is fiscal responsibility, which is why I was surprised to hear the Minister of Finance say yesterday that his only hope of balancing the budget is for the price of oil to go up. Now, hope is not a strategy. To the Premier: what is your energy price forecast, and why have you doubled down on keeping Alberta on the resource revenue roller coaster?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The reality is that we will be introducing the budget tomorrow, and I look forward to hearing the member's comments with respect to the budget tomorrow.

You know, you can't have it both ways. The fact of the matter is that you either protect your health care and your education services, or you go back to the old way of making regular working people pay for the failure to diversify that happened over years and years and years of Conservative governments. We are not going to do that. We will have Albertans' backs. At the same time, we will protect their services, and we will bring the budget to balance.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Clark: Well, Mr. Speaker, that balance, I suspect, relies on unrealistic resource revenue forecasts. We'll have to see.

Unlike my colleagues to the right, I will never cheer against Alberta, which is why the Alberta Party wants to see the Kinder Morgan pipeline built. But pegging Alberta's entire budget to a project that is at risk of failure or, at the very least, delay is incredibly risky. The Alberta Party's shadow budget uses far more conservative revenue forecasts than the NDP's, but it still balances in four years. To the Premier: do you have a contingency plan if the Kinder Morgan pipeline is delayed or, heaven forbid, cancelled?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, the member opposite will see the budget numbers tomorrow when the Minister of Finance introduces that budget. Under our leadership we have long since taken the position of introducing risk adjustments into every budget to allow for the inevitable ups and downs of commodity prices and the other kinds of things that could impact what we receive from our revenue. In every case that has allowed us to meet our targets or in many cases exceed our targets since coming into government, and we will continue that record.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Red Deer Regional Hospital

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As central Albertans my colleague from Red Deer-North and I share the concerns of our constituents about services and wait times at the Red Deer regional hospital. Red Deer regional hospital is now the fourth-busiest medical facility in the province, serving over 400,000 central Albertans, and is in dire need of expansion and a cardiac catheterization lab. To the Minister of Health: how are we ensuring that the Red Deer regional hospital can meet the care needs of central Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for her question as well as to both members from Red Deer for their advocacy on behalf of the people of Red Deer. Important work is happening in central Alberta and Red Deer, including the development of a cardiac care roadmap, a long-term central zone health care plan to address the needs of the region, and a refresh of the needs assessment for the hospital. AHS expects to complete this work in the coming months, and I'll be happy to update those.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Central Alberta's population has grown exponentially over the years, but investment by previous governments has not kept pace, placing a burden on infrastructure, medical staff, and patients alike. Can the minister reassure this House that quality health services in Red Deer will be available as our community continues to grow?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Facing the worst recession in decades, we had a choice: reckless cuts that would make life worse or protecting the health care that Alberta families need. Our government believes that all Albertans deserve access to high-quality public health care. We added community paramedic teams in Red Deer last month so that people can get care in-home instead of in the hospital. We're building a new eight-bed youth addictions facility, and at the hospital we've added a new state-of-the-art MRI and new labour and delivery operating rooms. We look forward to talking about the next plans in the months to come.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As central Alberta continues to grow, so too does its need for more complex care. While I'm thankful that this government has made investments in the hospital, I've heard from my community and from doctors that there is still significant need. To the minister: what plans are in place to expand the hospital in Red Deer?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again to the member for the question. We are looking forward to the completion of the three AHS plans I mentioned in my previous answer. We don't know yet what the recommendations will be, but we do know that Red Deer needs health capital investments such as upgrades to the medical device reprocessing units that were neglected by the previous government over decades. We also know that once a needs assessment is complete, there will need to be a business case. We've heard from the community, the doctors, and of course our local MLAs, and we will have more to say in the coming days.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

2:10 Oil Sands Advisory Group Former Co-chair

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I asked the environment minister and the Deputy Premier a series of questions about their close personal relationship with Ms Berman. Following that, in an interview the environment minister said that Ms Berman was appointed to the oil sands advisory panel at the request of industry, specifically CAPP. Minister, do you still stand by that statement?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the founding president of CAPP, Dave Collyer, was part of that initial process that began, as I understand it, in 2014 to find ways to get us out of the dead end that the government that the Leader of the Official Opposition sat in and successive Conservative governments here had driven us into. So there was certainly a presence from the founding president of CAPP in addition to ConocoPhillips and Cenovus and other Suncor employees.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mrs. Pitt: Okay. Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure I heard the answer there. Specifically, I would like to know if the minister can answer: does she still support the statement that she said in an interview yesterday that CAPP had recommended Ms Berman to sit on the oil sands advisory group? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the founding president of the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers was in conversations with environmental groups from the very beginning, much before our government came to power, and indeed was looking for ways to make the conversation more productive because government had done such a terrible job of managing the reputational risk to Alberta's energy industry and, in fact, investor certainty for Alberta's energy industry. That's why the largest members of the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers – Suncor, CNRL, Cenovus, and others . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, I think that's NDP for no.

We need to shut down the tar sands; we need to move away from the development of oil: these are Ms Berman's own words.

Given, Mr. Speaker, that this environment minister has yet to actually say that having and hiring, appointing Tzeponah Berman and Ms Mahon to the oil sands advisory group was a bad idea, perhaps I'll give an opportunity for her to do so now. Minister, do you admit that having Ms Berman on the oil sands advisory group did nothing for Alberta, got us nowhere on pipelines, and will you admit that it was a bad idea to have her appointed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I will admit is that the work of the oil sands advisory group, which concluded some months ago, provided us advice in a multilateral sort of way, from indigenous peoples, from northern communities, from energy companies, and from environmental groups. That 100-megatonne limit was part of the reason why we got the pipeline approvals. There were very robust indigenous voices on that group as well. I noticed that the hon. member is not at all interested in talking about that ever.

You know, Mr. Speaker, the record speaks for itself. We got this . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. Thank you.

Just a friendly reminder to be cautious about no preambles in the supplementary questions.

Carbon Levy and Economic Competitiveness

Mr. Loewen: Recently the Deputy Minister of Climate Change confirmed what we all knew, that the carbon tax is harming the competitiveness of Alberta's industries and companies. Every NDP politician has been denying it, swearing it isn't true, but it is. They even have a name for it: the carbon competitiveness incentive program. Can the minister please tell Albertans the truth on the cost to Alberta industry and companies of the carbon tax in regard to loss of competitiveness?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, it's hard to find some competitiveness effects in an economy that is poised to lead the country in economic growth this year as well as last year. That is because our climate leadership plan is a carefully calibrated plan to control for any competitiveness effects in an economy that is very much outward facing and is very much trade exposed. That's why we undertook the carbon competitiveness incentives and the carbon competitiveness regulations, to replace the old system from the member's own party that was in place and to incent a green and clean development.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Loewen: Given that in that meeting the deputy minister did say that they're continuing some of those old programs but given that during the same discussion the deputy minister said that there was no sign of investment avoiding Alberta because of the carbon tax, can the minister explain to Albertans how she can be bailing out existing Alberta companies and industries that are suffering because of the carbon tax, on the one hand, and, on the other hand, expect new companies to invest in Alberta knowing they can only be competitive with taxpayer-funded incentives?

Ms Phillips: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, last week I was at the Globe sustainable business forum, where I met with a number of Canadian clean tech entrepreneurs. Most of them, the ones that I met with, were in Alberta because things are looking up and people are looking for ways to solve problems; $1.4 billion worth of investments and incentives and loan guarantees in order to make that happen out of the carbon competitiveness incentive regulation is helping to kick-start all of those new businesses and all that new employment and that optimism and those opportunities. But as for energy good news, we've got Chevron increasing spending in the oil patch, we've got JACOS celebrating a $2 billion expansion, we've got Suncor filing an application for a massive new . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Loewen: Given that there seems to be a lot of kick to industry and not so much start and given that the government has implemented a damaging carbon tax on Albertans and sold it to us on the premise of rebates, free light bulbs and given that corporations are having problems being competitive in the marketplace and need government incentives to stay in business and that there are no measurable benefits to the environment, will the minister just admit that the carbon tax has been a colossal failure and cancel the tax?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Suncor took its first steps to set up two cogeneration units at its oil sands base plant recently, in addition to their application for a massive new oil sands project that could create hundreds of good jobs and billions of new investment in Alberta. Earnings are up in the oil patch. Investment is up about 60 per cent in conventional. Drilling is up, 64 per cent more wells drilled than last year. Here's what the CEO of Suncor thinks. I heard that these are companies that are at the trough yesterday from the Member for Airdrie. He said, "Bold, ambitious action is required by all of us to effectively tackle . . . climate change."

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Barnes: Many Alberta children, including my own, receive a weekly allowance in exchange for completing chores around the house. Having an allowance teaches kids the value of work, and even more importantly it teaches them the value of saving and living within one's means. Sadly, the latest NDP fiscal update showed that these lessons have not been learned: devastating unemployment, more spending, and $9 billion more on the next generation's credit card. To the Finance minister: when will you start applying these practical, common-sense ideas to Alberta's budget?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, at Q3 I was able to report to Albertans that the economy is looking up, jobs are up, and the deficit was down by $1.4 billion. So it really goes to show that the plan is working. On the other side, the plan would be to give tax breaks to the highest earners in this province for $700 million. The rest of us would have to pay for that with fewer programs and services. That won't work. Our economy is growing. We're doing the job on this side.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow Alberta families will learn how much they have to pay for this minister's reckless spending. Given that when this government was elected, Alberta had little debt and no interest payments and that after just a single term they will saddle Alberta children with a $70 billion bill – annual interest is already $1.5 billion – to the minister: will you please take off your rose-coloured, virtual reality goggles and start dealing with Alberta's debt disaster so our kids can once again enjoy the Alberta advantage?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, we saw a shadow budget from the AP over there. We saw one from the independent member. In four years we've not seen one from this group on this side. You know, there's a good reason for that. They don't want to show what their destructive policies would mean for Albertans. It would mean $700 million going to the wealthiest people in this province. The rest of us would pay for it. Let's not go down that road. Saskatchewan has an austerity budget. They want to go there. Well, they can go there.

Mr. Barnes: Given that the Finance minister can't stand on his record and given that the Finance minister has a spending problem and is now relying on the completion of a stalled pipeline as the foundation of his plan to balance – talk about putting all your eggs in one basket, Mr. Speaker – and given that even the most optimistic don't predict the Trans Mountain will be completed before 2020, to the minister: when will you acknowledge that your plan to diversify the economy continues to be a complete failure and begin taking real steps towards balancing the budget and protecting our and our children's future?

Mr. Ceci: You know, Mr. Speaker, it's really disappointing talk about diversifying the economy. It's disappointing to hear the Conservatives talk down the start-up and tech sector in this province. Whether it's the virtual reality world or the real world, the Conservatives have no plan at all. Theirs doesn't exist in any world in terms of supporting the economy. We'll present a budget tomorrow. That budget will continue to have the backs of Albertans. It'll continue to make life cheaper for Albertans, more affordable for Albertans, and we will show how it will . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Carbon Levy and Nonprofit Organizations

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, Reverend Todd MacDonald and the Sunde ministry provide a significant amount of support and social services for our community, including things like food hampers, emergency shelter, and chaplain services for those in palliative care. The list goes on and on. He's asked me to ask the Premier the following question: can the NDP afford to pick up the community services we provide when we shut down as a result of the carbon tax? What costs more, the government providing the services that we supply or cutting nonprofits some slack on the NDP's carbon tax? Will the Premier answer Reverend MacDonald's question?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Our government is working to make life better for Albertans by protecting and improving the things that make a difference in their lives, and we will continue to do so. In just the last two and a half years we have added $103 million to the PDD program, almost $100 million to the AISH program. If we were to take advice from that side, they suggest that we cut $500 from every AISH cheque to make it equal to what B.C. is paying. We will not do that.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, that's not what I asked.

Given that Reverend MacDonald and the ministry provide a significant amount of social services for our community and have asked a simple question before this House today, what will the government do to make sure that they continue to help these nonprofits put the social safety net in our community? Charities are facing a perfect storm in our community right now: increased demand because of the economic downturn under this NDP government and a decrease in donations to provide the services. Instead of dodging the question, Mr. Speaker, could the Premier stand up and answer Reverend MacDonald's question? Can this government afford to pick up the slack that will come if these organizations shut because of the carbon tax this . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are many Albertans, including Reverend MacDonald, who are doing amazing work in their communities. To support that work, we have added $25 million to the family and community support services program, FCSS, and we have provided almost $29 million in grants from the family and community support program to support the work these incredible individuals are doing in their communities. We will continue to work with our community partners to make sure Albertans have the support they need in their communities.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, these people in these communities don't want to hear about how many light bulbs this government has bought. They want to hear what this government is going to do, because they're seeing a significant decrease in their ability to provide services to our communities. One charity in my community has seen 7 per cent of their total budget go towards the carbon tax, and this Premier's issues management team – and the Premier's laughing about it right now – told them to fund raise to pay for the carbon tax. The question is very simple. Will the Premier apologize for her people telling the seniors in my community that, or is it now the policy of her government that our seniors should fund raise to pay for their carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, seniors built this province, and we want them to retire in dignity and have the supports they need. Like, 260,000 seniors will be receiving up to $300 from the levy rebate, which is a significant amount. We've invested over $3 billion in seniors' programs plus $1.2 billion in our capital plan for affordable housing. We're making a significant difference. We have their backs.

Forest Management

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, the constituency of Banff-Cochrane has a diverse economy based on tourism, cement, ranching, and forestry, among others. Everyone agrees that these industries provide good jobs and have literally built the homes, roads, and bridges that we need as Alberta has grown. But time and time again, when a timber harvest is set to begin like the ones in the Ghost valley, Highwood pass, and now the Mustang hills, constituents express serious concerns and don't feel they've been adequately consulted. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: what are you doing to address my constituents' concerns?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. As you know, forestry is an important industry in our province. A balanced approach is taken when we're developing harvesting plans to ensure that we're supporting the economy and companies operate sustainably. That being said, I have heard those concerns from constituents across the province and from the MLA, and our office has taken action. We've asked the company to redraw their operating plans to take into consideration a new site for building a bridge, for harvest layouts as well. We're taking action, making sure that those constituents' concerns are heard.

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that no one denies that forestry plays an important role in our economy, what assurance can you provide to my constituents that Alberta's forests are being managed in the best interest of the public in a way that is environmentally sustainable?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With this government Albertans can count on us having a balanced, fair approach to business and sustainability. We recognize that there is a diversity of value in the landscape, and we take this seriously. Our government has shown its leadership on balancing sustainability and the creation of economic opportunities for the province today. It's worth noting that Canada and Alberta have the most sustainable forest practices in the world. We'll continue working with industry so that that maintains. We're responsive to the concerns of Albertans when it comes to ensuring that harvesting is done in a safe and sustainable manner.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that Spray Lake Sawmills has made significant investments in equipment and therefore has a vested interest in the future health and sustainability of Alberta's forests, what assurances can you provide to them that they can continue to operate in a manner that will be acceptable to the public?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, we work very closely with forestry companies to ensure that they have access to business opportunities while clearly understanding the expectations government and Albertans have for their operations. We know that forestry companies make long-term investments in their operations, and our procedures reflect this. We are very clear. Long-term process on tenure, operating standards, and reforestation here in Alberta: our staff works very hard to ensure that companies maintain these high standards, and the industry is very open to being able to make changes where they have to to satisfy those standards.

Postsecondary Education Concerns

Mr. Fraser: My colleague mentioned earlier that the Alberta Party caucus shadow budget was released today. That shadow budget talks about the need to support the growth of our postsecondary institutions. They need to be able to teach students the necessary skills to succeed in a changing economy. This includes the skills being taught in certificate programs at colleges and technical schools, and those are often a better option for students and employers. To the Minister of Advanced Education: with the number of colleges transitioning to universities, what are the plans in place to ensure that students can still choose certificate programs over degree programs?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank the hon. member for the question. Of course, I was very pleased to announce our government's investment of $43 million over the next five years to create 3,000 spaces in programs just like the ones that the member mentioned. If he's genuinely supportive of that initiative, I anticipate that he and his party will support the budget once it's released. It includes those expansions. Of course, we are committed to promoting opportunities in higher education all across the province. That's why we're working with Grande Prairie Regional College and Red Deer College to offer a wider array of programs for students in those areas, and I look forward to continuing that work.

Mr. Fraser: Given that reforming Alberta's postsecondary institutions to meet the demands of a changing economy requires the government to work in close partnership with those institutions and given that it would be difficult to work in close partnership with someone that you accused of lining their own pockets at the expense of students and given that your government often states that they believe in negotiating wages at the bargaining table, to the same minister: why are you attacking public servant decisions and salaries in public and in media, and what does that mean for the future work with the University of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, I continue to meet with representatives from the University of Alberta to continue to do the good work that that institution is doing on behalf of Alberta students. You know, that member sat in the government caucus and let executive compensation balloon out of control. Postsecondary presidents are the highest paid in the country because of the actions of his current leader and the former government. It's time for that to end. Our government is finally taking action on something that they failed to do.

Mr. Fraser: Given that the current president of the U of A, David Turpin, negotiated his contract in good faith and given that Dr. Turpin likely attracts more talent and funding than he draws in salary and given that the estimated structural deficit of the U of A, driven in part by this government's tuition fees, is $14 million, far greater than the amount the minister claims Dr. Turpin is lining his pockets with, to the same minister: why are you lashing out at Dr. Turpin for your decisions, and should other postsecondary presidents expect similar treatment?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to remind the hon. member that Dr. Turpin actually negotiated his contract with the board of governors that was appointed by that member's government. They have a terrible record of letting executive compensation balloon out of control. The people of Alberta have had enough. They do not want to see their students pay more in tuition to make sure that we have the highest paid presidents in the entire country. It's time that our government takes action to rein in executive compensation. We've done that with other agencies, boards, and commissions. We're going to be doing that very soon with postsecondary institutions.

The Speaker: I'd just encourage members again to direct your comments through the chair and avoid making specific figurative references to other members.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: For the record, Mr. Speaker, that's not members on this side of the House.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister of the environment said last week that Tzeporah Berman was there as co-chair of the oil sands advisory group because the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers invited her, will the minister confirm that the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers invited Ms Berman to the government committee to which she was appointed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I will confirm is, of course, that we were approached in the fall of 2015 by a number of companies, including the founding president of the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, with a set of discussion points around how to repair Alberta's reputational damage and the investor uncertainty that had been created by the Harper government and by 40 years of Conservative government in this province, that really let our environmental reputation languish. That is what I will confirm.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, what's languishing is that minister's credibility.

The founding president of CAPP, incidentally, given that he was Mr. Gerry Protti, Mr. Speaker, a former official, is not the organization, so I will give the minister the opportunity to stop languishing and to actually answer a direct question directly and factually. Did the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers invite Ms Berman to be co-chair of the oil sands advisory group, and if not, why did this minister claim otherwise?

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, the initiative was co-led by one Dave Collyer, who had a number of roles within the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, and we'll gladly table that information afterwards.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, something I don't understand about this government is why they can't take responsibility when they make mistakes. Given that Ms Berman, before her appointment, called for the elimination of the largest industry and job creator in this province, given that she is now participating in illegal protests, including protests that yesterday resulted in the injury of three RCMP officers, given that this minister has now uttered mistruths to the public about CAPP's involvement in this nomination, why can't they just admit that Tzeporah Berman's appointment was a big mistake?

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's talk about big mistakes. How about riding roughshod over indigenous people's rights to be consulted, resulting in a pipeline failure and a failure to get that pipeline to tidewater? That's actually what happened from the government that that member sat in, and now that same member goes out and insults indigenous peoples by threatening to cancel their climate leadership initiative programs and by insulting the chief of the Blood Tribe in my own area. That's a failure.

The Speaker: I would again ask that you not make physical gestures across the House. I don't think it's helpful to the place.

Government Spending Decorum and Civility in the Assembly

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Premier has often proselytized about UCP members wanting to return to the ideas of the 1990s. She has said of our leader: the 1990s are calling; they want their ideas back. Well, I remember the 1990s, and there were some pretty fantastic ideas like balancing the budgets, getting out of debt, reducing the tax burden on hard-working families, and getting the government out of the way of wealth-creating private enterprises. To the Premier: does she oppose these common-sense ideas?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I also remember the 1990s. I remember my dad, a school principal in rural Alberta, having to lay off front-line workers. I remember my dad, a school principal, going with a custodian and unscrewing light bulbs in that school. I remember hospitals being blown up by wrecking balls in downtown Calgary. I remember hospitals in Edmonton, in my now riding of Edmonton-Glenora, being shut down and sitting there to languish. I remember the '90s, too. Albertans had a chance to vote in 2015. They voted for a government that would take a different path, that would stand up for the people of this province.

Mr. Hunter: Given, Mr. Speaker, that I would like to remind the Premier of the late 1980s, when governments at that time got us into serious debt and also injected taxpayers' dollars into diversifying the economy, and given that when the smoke settled, the Alberta taxpayer was left with $2.4 billion in boondoggles and given that this government's new diversification strategy is eerily reminiscent of the 1980s strategy, are the NDP concerned that the 1980s are calling them and want their ideas back?

Mr. Ceci: Let's fast-forward, Mr. Speaker, to 2017. Ninety-thousand jobs were created in this province. GDP growth of 4.5 per cent led the nation in this country. Small-business confidence is up. Manufacturing is up. Housing starts are up. Why don't you get with the present and stop looking at the past? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Hunter: The minister forgets to say that debt is up every time he says that.

Mr. Speaker, given that many of the NDP MLAs have commented on how much they appreciate the new level of civility and decorum shown by this side of the House since our new leader took office and given that that civility is the classy thing to do, whether you're in the '80s, '90s, or in 2018, through you to the Premier: are you willing to instruct your caucus to raise the level of decorum, as our leader has, so that we can focus on debating this government's deplorable financial records versus slinging insults and heckles? I think that Albertans deserve that much.

The Speaker: I want to just advise, you know, that the supplementaries are intended to be to the original question. The supplementaries encourage that.

The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I remember the '80s, I remember the '90s, and I do enjoy the tone that's being set by having Conservatives in the opposition instead of in the government. We're happy to have that maintained and to have that continue as we move forward. We are very proud of our record standing up for the people of Alberta. Feel free to sit there nice and quietly while we do the job of governing this province and taking care of what matters to working families.

Calgary Southwest Ring Road Construction Concerns

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The southwest ring road is a major project with significant impacts on the quality of life of nearby residents. My constituents in east Discovery Ridge, The Slopes, and Springbank Hill noticed early on that the plans for the multilane freeway did not include sound attenuation, but they were thankful when the Minister of Transportation agreed that they deserved safety and sight and sound barriers. Minister, respectfully, do you still agree with the residents' concerns?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, we have worked hard to mitigate the impacts of the construction of the ring road. The construction of the ring road and its alignment were determined in an agreement that was signed with the Tsuut'ina by the previous government and the hon. member's colleague. Unfortunately, it passes quite closely to some residential neighbourhoods. We've been working very hard to mitigate the dust and the sound and other nuisance effects of construction, much of which is, unfortunately, inevitable given the . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given that the department maps and detailed plans displayed at recent open houses indicate that the province has no intention of building a sound barrier for the neighbourhoods I just mentioned and given that the department staff at these open houses confirmed that the anticipated barrier is not part of the design for the project – Minister, the residents had the utmost confidence that the final plans would reflect your direction for the sound attenuation – are you aware that this important quality-of-life feature is not included in the most recent designs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for the question. As I said, we've been working hard to make sure that we mitigate the impacts of construction, which is very close to these populated areas.

With respect to further sound mitigation I'm always open to have further conversations with MLAs. Certainly, MLAs on this side of the House have been very strong advocates on behalf of their communities, and I've also met with some of the opposition MLAs with respect to some of their constituents' concerns, and I'm going to continue to do that, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Minister, I certainly do appreciate the meetings that I have had with you, but given that residents of Calgary-West have had years of distress over the construction plans and that they are really disappointed, to say the least, about this latest turn of events and given that they deserve a direct answer, with all due respect and on behalf of the constituents of Calgary-West will you please provide firm direction to your department to include sound, safety, and sight attenuation for these neighbourhoods?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll remind the hon. member that the alignment was established by his colleague two seats over when he was the Minister of Transportation, and we're working hard within those constraints to protect those communities. I'm going to be continuing to be open to talk to representatives of those communities and to do whatever possible we can to mitigate sound and dust effects of the construction.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we'll go to Members' Statements in 30 seconds.

Climate Change

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I think I heard the Leader of the Opposition finally say that human-caused climate change is real. After weeks of uncertainty and after repeatedly being asked by our Premier to make his position clear, his response on this issue is so refreshing and, no doubt, is a relief to Albertans all across the province. I can't help but wonder: if he did say it, has he given some clarity to the rest of his caucus? For example, how is the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat feeling?

Mr. McIver: Point of order.

Mr. Sucha: Will he still be allowed to take his colleagues out for dinner with climate deniers? I'm sure that the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon is relieved. He has long since made it clear that he understands the science of climate change and supports the reduction of emissions. Well, what about the Member for Drumheller-Stettler? Does he still think that markings on rocks in Drumheller mean that climate change isn't real?

Mr. Speaker, carbon dioxide levels in the air are at their highest level in 650,000 years, 17 of the 18 warmest years on record have happened since 2001, in 2012 arctic summer sea ice shrank to its lowest extent on record, and satellite data shows that the Earth's polar ice sheets are losing mass. The fact of the matter is that companies from Suncor to Staples recognize the science of climate change, and if we want to remain a competitive jurisdiction, we must have policies in place that will address this problem.

Perhaps the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka enjoys the warm days in the dead of winter, Mr. Speaker, but I, for one, hope to hear the Leader of the Opposition say again that climate change is real and that it is caused by human activity.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, I believe you have two.

Mr. Cyr: I do. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the chair of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts I am pleased to table five copies of the 2016 report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, covering its work during 13 committee meetings for the period from January to December of 2016, during the First Session and Second Session of the 29th Legislature.

I am also pleased to table five copies of the 2017 report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, covering its work from January to December of 2017.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to highlight the ambitious meeting schedule of the committee during this period. Twenty committee meetings were held in 2017, during the Second Session and Third Session of the 29th Legislature. This is the greatest number of Public Accounts Committee meetings held in a calendar year during the last decade. I want to recognize the hard work and commitment of the deputy chair, the committee members both past and present, as well as the LAO, the caucus staff, and those who provided support to the committee.

These reports will be posted to the external committee website, and copies are also available through the committee offices.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite five copies of the Alberta Party Caucus Shadow Budget 2018, a document that balances in four years while making increased investments in education, justice, social services, and innovation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is a day with a lot of alternative budgets around here. I rise today to table five copies of my Alternative Budget 2018-2019, balancing Alberta's operating budget by the date that the government committed to in 2019-20 and balancing the overall consolidated budget by 2020-21, including a 5 per cent rollback for all core government employees, including every member of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of an article out of the Edmonton Journal that I referenced yesterday when I was doing some of my questions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have eight letters I'd like to table from pharmacists within my constituency. This one here is from Mandy Davey. I just want to quickly quote from her. "Stop the wastage in the system and let us help. We are a phone call away."

Curtis Conrad is quoted as saying, "These are my concerns with the proposed pharmacy funding framework. Once again, I applaud the effort in reducing healthcare spending, however cutting front line services is not the answer to saving healthcare dollars."

We've got Paul Tellier. "The highlights are 6 different cuts to the profession, some of which have good logic behind them that we do not take exception with, especially in the current economic state of the Province."

I have Peter Davey. "We are here to help."

Paige Shiller: "Stop the wastage in the system and let us help."

I have Denis Lavoie. "Alberta Health's new proposed pharmacy funding has a number of drastic cuts which [will] significantly impact [the] ability to deliver care."

Carter Wagner goes on to say, "Alberta is in the middle of an Opioid Crisis. Pharmacists are stepping up to the plate and providing comprehensive opioid assessments in an effort to prevent addiction."

The last one is Tanis Bremer. "We are the most accessible health care professionals providing the best care for Albertans."

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any others, hon. members?

Hon. members, I believe we had at least one point of order today. The Government House Leader had raised a point of order.

Ms Ganley: I apologize, Mr. Speaker. We will withdraw that point of order.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I believe that the Member for Calgary-Hays had a point of order. Hon. member, if I might, I would just advise that in the future when you raise a point of order in Members' Statements, I've suggested you wait until the end of the two minutes and then raise it.

Go ahead.

Point of Order Members' Statements

Mr. McIver: Thank you, and I'll compliment you on that, Mr. Speaker. I completely agree with that. I think all members, as you've acknowledged yourself many times, deserve to be able to give their members' statements uninterrupted. I did my best to call the point of order without interrupting, and I would compliment you on doing your part by not interrupting while acknowledging the point of order.

Having said that, under sections 23(h), (i), and (j), imputing false or unavowed motives to another member, abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder, and making allegations against another member, you yourself, Mr. Speaker – and you'll have to forgive me. At least I hope you will because I don't have the Blues available to me because it was just about two minutes ago. But the member chose to make several suggestions against other members, referring to them using terms that you've said yourself are not appropriate in this House, things like "climate change denier" against our leader and other members of this House that he mentioned.

You know what, Mr. Speaker? I think it's fair game for members to stand up and say that the other side is wrong on every policy and that they're wrong about everything in the world. In this House I think that's appropriate debate, but I think we've agreed as a House and I think you've ruled that using a member's statement to make personal attacks is not appropriate, and I would hope you would call the member to account for so doing.

Let me also say, Mr. Speaker, that we're largely at your mercy because I don't expect we'll ever be perfect. We're committed to raising the level of decorum in the House, so we are not likely to respond in kind. We're kind of depending upon you to uphold that standard of not using members' statements as personal attacks but rather as policy attacks.

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Sorry. I apologize. I don't have the benefit of the Blues, but I do have some understanding of what the member had said. I'm failing to see where there was any allegation made against a person. It is a policy to decide to deny the existence of human-caused climate change or to decide that we ought not to do anything about it. That's not, I think, a personal decision; it's a policy decision, much like we make policy decisions on this side of the House to do something about climate change. So I'm failing to see where this is a point of order.

I certainly do understand that the members are probably not happy to hear our members, you know, calling out things that they've said in the past. Ultimately, Mr. Speaker, it is the policy of this government that climate change is real, that humans are in a large part responsible for climate change; therefore, we ought to do something about it because it is a real threat that faces the population. Obviously, that's not a policy shared by the other side of the House, but to say that that's a personal attack is incorrect.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I think, as noted by both members, we're all at a disadvantage in timing. We don't have the Blues in front of us. I am advised, though, that members have stated several rulings on this in the past, that you ought not to use members' statements for personal attacks against other members. Since I don't have the Blues, nor do you, I will simply use this as an opportunity or reminder that past precedent and practice has in fact directed that you stay away from any personal attacks. If they were made, let's just use this as a reminder that it's not going to happen again.

I think we also have a point of privilege to deal with. The Government House Leader.

Privilege Misleading the House

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising to address the purported matter of privilege raised by the Official Opposition House Leader yesterday. The facts, as I understand them, are these. The complaint of the Official Opposition relates to comments made by the Minister of Environment and Parks on Monday in question period. At that time the minister was accused by the Official Opposition House Leader of not consulting with the public regarding regional planning in the member's constituency. In response to these allegations the minister stated, "I met with the mayor of Rocky Mountain House a couple of weeks ago and discussed the economic development and tourism opportunities that are available through the regional advisory council's advice."

I'm advised by the minister that on March 5 she hosted an event coinciding with the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change conference in Edmonton. The mayor of Rocky Mountain House, Tammy Burke, attended the minister's event. I understand that upon seeing the mayor, the minister took the opportunity to tell Mayor Burke about the impending release of the North Saskatchewan Regional Advisory Council recommendations for the area, which have subsequently been released and are open for public comment. I'm advised that they spoke for about 10 minutes at this event.

Now, yesterday the hon. House leader for the Official Opposition raised a purported matter of privilege indicating that he had received a communication from the mayor indicating there was no such meeting, just a brief, light conversation. It's clear that a formal meeting on this matter between the minister and the mayor did not take place, but that is not what the minister had claimed. Members opposite and the mayor are entitled to say that the minister's discussion at the minister's event did not constitute a formal meeting. They are entitled to argue that it did not constitute adequate consultation on the issue. But, Mr. Speaker, that is a matter of debate, not a matter impacting the privileges of a member, nor does it come close to being contempt of the House, which has been alleged.

What constitutes misleading the House? Allegations of misleading the House are very serious, as has been discussed in this Assembly many times. Page 85 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, third edition, sets out the following requirements for someone to be found to have misled the House.

One, it must be proven that the statement was misleading; two, it must be established that the Member making the statement knew at the time that the statement was incorrect; and three, that in making the statement, the Member intended to mislead the House.

Mr. Speaker, rulings by yourself as well as your predecessors on December 12, 2016, November 20, 2014, November 24, 2011, and November 7, 2007, have all applied the same test based on these three elements, and it's clear that these conditions have not been met.

To review, it must be proven that the statement was misleading. Mr. Speaker, I would submit that the statement was not misleading. It was a statement of fact. The fact that the minister and the mayor spoke at this event is not in dispute. The minister did not state that there had been a meeting out in Rocky Mountain House on the matter, nor did she imply that there had been a thorough discussion or a consultation involving officials. She merely stated that she had met with the mayor, and this issue had come up.

Secondly, it must be established that the member making the statement knew it was incorrect. Again, the minister knew that she had in fact seen this individual at an event and raised the matter. She knew this for a fact because she was one of the participants, Mr. Speaker.

Thirdly, the guidelines state that the member must have intended to mislead the House. In fact, the minister of environment had no such intention. She was merely updating the House about a discussion that took place.

In terms of a dispute over the facts Speaker Zwozdesky made a ruling on March 12, 2014, on a purported matter of privilege that I believe is relevant here. At that time he indicated:

Frequently we'll find that one member sees an event or an activity or a statement one way, hears it one way, and another members hears it and interprets it in a different way... quite often it's really a disagreement on facts or a matter of interpretation.

Similarly, Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, citation 494, on page 151 states:

It has been formally ruled by Speakers that statements by Members respecting themselves and particularly within their own knowledge must be accepted... On rare occasions this may result in the House having to accept two contradictory accounts of the same incident.

That is clearly what has happened here. The minister states that she discussed a matter with an important stakeholder when they met. There is no attempt to dispute the fact that this discussion took place. The minister in good faith has stated that this took place. What is being disputed here is whether or not this constitutes a meeting. There may be differences of opinion as to whether this meeting was a meeting. There may be legitimate differences of opinion as to whether this meeting or nonmeeting was sufficient consultation on the matter being discussed. Those are legitimate differences of opinion, but they do not constitute a contempt of the House. They merely constitute what Speaker Zwozdesky called "a matter of interpretation" and what Beauchesne's calls "two contradictory accounts of the same incident."

Rulings in other jurisdictions, Mr. Speaker, are relevant. In conclusion, I'd like to reference a ruling by former Ontario Speaker Carr in June 2002, which was cited by Speaker Zwozdesky in a ruling he made on November 20, 2014. In that ruling the Speaker stated:

The threshold for finding a prima facie case of contempt against a member of the Legislature on the basis of deliberately misleading the House is therefore set quite high and is very uncommon. It must involve a proved finding of an overt attempt to intentionally mislead the Legislature. In the absence of an admission from the member accused of the conduct, or of tangible confirmation of the conduct independently proved, a Speaker must assume that no honourable member would engage in such behaviour or that, at most, inconsistent statements were the result of inadvertence or honest mistake.

I believe that what was stated by Speaker Carr is directly applicable to this case. For such a matter to actually constitute contempt, there must be an overt attempt to intentionally mislead. That did not happen here. Mr. Speaker, what we have is simply a difference on the meaning of the word "meeting." What did happen is a genuine disagreement over how extensive a particular discussion was. In the Official Opposition's argument yesterday they likened the discussion to briefly saying "hi" and shaking hands and to idle chit-chat. The minister's view is that the conversation was more than that.

I understand that the opposition would like to make the argument that not enough consultation took place. That, Mr. Speaker, is a legitimate point of debate, which members opposite have every right to make. In fact, I understand that the minister herself spoke with the mayor at lunch today and clarified the concerns around this important issue. However, that simply does not constitute a matter of privilege or contempt.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

You'd like to speak to the matter?

Mr. McIver: Yes, I would.

The Speaker: Is there something substantive in the comments?

Mr. McIver: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What's substantive actually references what the hon. Government House Leader said just now. He actually acknowledged there was no meeting and tried to suggest that the minister had only said that they'd met when, in fact, the minister was quite clear. The hon. Opposition House Leader was chastising the minister, as is appropriate in question period, about not making the effort to contact the municipality. The minister, to defend, I suppose, her embarrassment on having not done so, said: I had a meeting with that mayor...

The Speaker: Hon. member, something more substantive. I've heard that on both sides already. Is there something, a precedent, that you could speak to?

Mr. McIver: I just think if you look at the two arguments, it'll be quite clear to you which argument is credible, and the government's side is not, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: I have information, Mr. Speaker...

The Speaker: Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, since you have already spoken to the matter, I cannot allow you to speak to it.

Is there a point of order you want to make?

Mr. Mason: It's not point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would hope that we wouldn't allow endless debate. The normal practice is that one person stands, makes their purported privilege, the other side responds, if other parties want to participate, but it shouldn't be a back and forth, in my view.

The Speaker: That's the reason, Government House Leader, why I asked for something substantive.

I will plan to make a ruling on this matter tomorrow morning at 9 a.m.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Bill 2

Growth and Diversification Act

[Debate adjourned March 20: Mrs. Littlewood speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill in second reading? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to speak to Bill 2, Growth and Diversification Act. This government and this minister are continually looking for ways to position themselves as the great diversifiers because, of course, before we had an NDP government, every single Albertan worked in oil and gas and the economy was a hundred per cent focused on one industry and the Alberta advantage was just some odd fantasy dreamed up by Conservative spin doctors. But funny how almost every Albertan knew what it, and by that I mean the Alberta advantage, meant to them. It meant something different to almost every Albertan, but it did mean something.

Ignoring, of course, that from 1986 to 2016 Alberta's GDP grew from $59.6 billion to $314.9 billion and that during those 30 years oil and gas and mining decreased as a percentage of total GDP from 23.2 per cent to 17 per cent and that without oil and gas Alberta still represents the third-largest economy by GDP in Canada, ahead of British Columbia – Alberta was able to grow in part because previous governments worked extremely hard to make Alberta the most business-friendly environment in Canada and perhaps in North America and one of the few debt-free jurisdictions in the world. Corporate tax rates were reduced, personal income tax rates were reduced, yet the economy continued to grow and the tax base with it.

Just yesterday we heard the minister of economic development say that “because Alberta has not had these programs previous to our government, it left Alberta and Albertans at a competitive disadvantage. So what we've done is levelled the playing field.” Minister, this is curious to me as, if I recall correctly, in 2013-2014 Alberta created fully 87 per cent of all of the new jobs in Canada, in fact 82,300 new jobs, and all of that with a supposed competitive disadvantage and an unlevel playing field. I think that unlevel playing field was once called the Alberta advantage, but so I digress.

Alberta had the highest median wages in the country, not the highest mean, the highest median, indicating that the data was not being skewed because of a select few who were making an inordinate amount of money. A growing economy isn't all that valuable if everyday, hard-working, work-seeking Albertans are unemployed and if we cannot generate the wealth and thereby the tax revenues to balance our budgets without reaching deeper and deeper into the pockets of hard-working Albertans. Kind of like what we have right now, where the Minister of Finance says that things are looking up, up, up while Calgary has the second-highest unemployment in Canada among major cities, and Edmonton is tied for third.

Madam Speaker, as Edmonton is fully represented by government MLAs and hence might be considered a stronghold, I would just like to read a quick quote from the CEO of the Edmonton chamber of commerce. I quote: “Some might say the tide has turned, that we're on our way back to prosperity, but has it? Are the difficult times truly behind us? That's not what I hear. Things on the ground appear to be still as much of a struggle as ever. The news people read gives them hope and encouragement, but as a bottom line impact there's another story.” Unquote. Not exactly what we hear from the Minister of Finance, is it? Green shoots and sunny ways, indeed.

So the government has decided that to turn the tides, they will introduce Bill 2, the Growth and Diversification Act. This bill builds on Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act, which introduced two tax credits, the Alberta investor tax credit and the capital investment tax credit. During the debate on Bill 30 members of the opposition continuously told the minister the scope of the AITC was too narrow and would result in reduced uptake. Well, lo and behold, if you go on the government website as of March 20, you will see that roughly 5 per cent of the money designated for the AITC program remains unallocated, almost as if the scope could have or should have been expanded, not to narrowly pick winners and losers that align with a specific world view.

As a whole I think both Bill 30 and Bill 2 are focusing on the trees at the expense of nurturing a mighty forest. Both bills are basically applying what I would call a Band-Aid to a critical injury or perhaps throwing candy at us after taking away our plate of meat and potatoes. Madam Speaker, choose your own metaphor. They all paint a picture of trying to undo a failure of economic, regulatory, and fiscal fundamentals. We wouldn't even need programs like this if this government had not so severely damaged Alberta's attractiveness for business and investment and business and investor confidence.

Madam Speaker, the University of Calgary School of Public Policy issues a number of excellent publications throughout the year. One of my recent and personal favourites is an October 2017 paper co-published by former Saskatchewan NDP Finance minister Dr. Janice MacKinnon. In this paper they highlight the importance of real economic growth as a key factor in reducing government deficits, growing the economic pie, as it were, instead of trying to find new ways to slice it in many different ways and to reach deeper into those slices. They state that to grow the economy, you need to consider important factors like the right tax mix and the creation of a positive environment for investment.

First, they briefly looked at the Saskatchewan NDP of the 1990s. To spur economic growth, this incarnation of the NDP abandoned traditional NDP policy, which supports raising taxes on businesses and high-income earners in the name of tax fairness. However, as this paper notes, raising corporate and personal income taxes discouraged investment and economic development. In the interests of being pragmatic and doing what is best for the citizens of their province at that time, the Romanow government, perhaps counterintuitive to their ideology, actually lowered business taxes, royalties, and reduced income taxes for high-income earners. This led to economic growth and eventually balanced budgets.

MacKinnon then contrasts this approach with the approach taken by the Alberta NDP. They state:

In contrast, the Alberta NDP has raised taxes for larger businesses and high-income earners, increased environmental and other regulations, imposed a carbon tax, significantly increased the minimum wage and has run large deficits, raising the prospect of future tax increases to balance the budget. Taken as a package, the message to potential investors is that doing business in Alberta is becoming more difficult and more expensive. Hence, changing some of these measures and creating a more investment climate would promote more economic growth and enhance government revenue.

My favourite line from that paragraph is: “Taken as a package, the message to potential investors is that doing business in Alberta is becoming more difficult and more expensive.”

That is the crux of this issue and the issue with the government bringing in legislation like Bill 1, Bill 2, and Bill 30. The government has gone out of its way to erode the Alberta advantage. They have introduced cost after cost after cost, and they wonder why the Minister of Finance's talking points and debt tolerance are so different than the experiences and priorities of everyday, hard-working Albertans. If the government had not implemented all of their negative policies in the first place – dare I mention the all pain and no gain carbon tax – there would be no argument, no justification nor need for programs like these because Alberta would have no hurdles or issues attracting and retaining investment or worries about competitiveness in all market sectors and industries, including capital markets. If you drill 20 holes into a bucketful of water and then plug them with one, two, or even three – plug those holes, your economic bucket is not going to hold a whole lot of water. That is essentially what this government has done. They took a bad situation and made it worse. Now they're turning around and pretending like everything is rosy and that these Band-Aid, candy-like, hole-plugging programs will save Alberta and attract back the investment we truly need for robust and sustainable economic recovery. Those arguments and your bucket, Minister, do not hold water.

Madam Speaker, what Alberta needs is to recommit to becoming the most business- and investor-friendly jurisdiction in North America. We need to get back to making sure that the world knows that Alberta is open and looking for business and welcomes new investment and that we respect investors, the risks that they take, the jobs they create, and that we do not jealously covet the profits they might earn. Unfortunately, this government has demonstrated little promise in this area. Sadly, I think we will be seeing the impact of that negligence, the product of a misguided NDP world view, for years to come. Again, these Band-Aid, candy-like programs are simply not good enough. The NDP world view, quite frankly, is failing Albertans, and it is quite clearly failing Alberta business when it is clear that our economy requires large-scale, fundamental, and some might say ideological change to get Alberta back on track for a bright, prosperous, and sustainable future.

With that, Madam Speaker, I move to adjourn debate. Thank you.

[Motion carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2018

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my privilege today on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance and Treasury Board to rise and move third reading of Bill 3, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2018.

This interim supply bill will ensure that the normal course of government business can be carried out for the first two months of the 2018-19 fiscal year as the Assembly takes the necessary time to discuss and debate Budget 2018 through the Committee of Supply process. By passing this interim supply bill, we are ensuring that government can continue to fund the programs, services, and infrastructure Albertans rely on as Alberta begins a new fiscal year on April 1. The full details of the budget will be presented tomorrow, March 22, and the estimates will be fully debated in the Legislature in the coming weeks.

In the meantime, Madam Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Finance and Treasury Board I encourage my colleagues on both sides of the House to support this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Do any other members wish to speak in third reading? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Very good. Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's indeed always my honour to stand in this House and speak and today to speak to Bill 3, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2018, a whopping five pages – a whopping five pages – that ask this Legislature to vote in favour of defraying certain charges and expenses of the Legislative Assembly and the public service of Alberta, charges and expenses of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta that were not otherwise provided during the fiscal year ending March 31, 2019.

Just let me see here for a minute. How many numbers have we got? Let's start with schedule 1, Legislative Assembly. It looks like $29,420,000. Now, of course, that's like a lottery win to just about anybody on the planet. Things start to get a little vague after we are able to read that number of $29,420,000 under the heading of legislative supply.

Turn the page on this – I hate to say large bill, but the numbers in it are large. If we turn to page 3 of the five, we see a breakdown of what the money is actually going for. But wait. There is quite a bit of money under this heading. I believe there are nine – yes, nine – headings, but they're just headings, basically, with a number that follows behind.

Let's look here at the very first heading under Legislative Assembly, support to the Legislative Assembly. That's what it says, Madam Speaker: support to the Legislative Assembly, $13,528,000. That is where most of this $29,420,000 under the heading Legislative Assembly goes. Now, if I were to want to take a shot at what that $13 million is going to, I wonder what I would refer to. What document, which I certainly don't have, tells me what the $13,528,000 to the Legislative Assembly is actually for? You know, I don't know. We're doing some work over at the Federal Building. I don't know if we're doing a facelift on the Legislature Building. Maybe the Federal Building is considered a part of the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Schneider: I could be corrected on that. You know, I can't quite throw a rock from here and hit it.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we have a point of order.

Go ahead, hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm not certain of my point of order, so I certainly stand to be corrected. It is my understanding that support to the Legislative Assembly is actually determined in the Members' Services Committee. It has been delegated to the Members' Services Committee directly and is not normally debated in the House. Now, what I'm not sure of is whether this applies as well to interim supply. In the past in opposition I was ruled out of order by the Speaker for attempting to debate support to the Legislative Assembly precisely because that has been specifically delegated to the Members' Services Committee. I guess I'm asking more for direction than making a definitive point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: I don't have the exact answer to that at the moment, but I suspect that you're on the right track. Perhaps, let's hear a little more.

Did you wish to speak to that?

Mr. Nixon: Yeah. I would like to respond to that, Madam Speaker. While the hon. Government House Leader may or may not have a point – I don't know the answer – he himself indicated as he rose that he doesn't even know if he has a point of order. Of course, with due respect to you, Madam Speaker, you've indicated that you don't know if there's a point of order. I'm not hearing anything from the table officers that we pay to let us know if there's a point of order. So I am a little troubled about the instruction to a member of the Legislature to not continue a line of questioning to the government during interim supply or supplementary supply debates on a hypothetical rule that may or may not exist.

Madam Speaker, with due respect, I think that the member should be allowed to continue unless we confirm that that in fact is true.

The Deputy Speaker: My sense on this one is that it's the nature of what you were discussing. You weren't really directing specific questions to the government, looking for answers. You were more articulating what your thoughts were on this. I guess, be careful that we're not put in that position where you're actually questioning some expenses that maybe are more appropriately dealt with in Members' Services.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Schneider: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. That certainly is something that I wasn't aware of, and I appreciate the hon. Government House Leader bringing that forward. I guess in response: I can't ask a question in this House on what support to the Legislative Assembly is about?

The Deputy Speaker: Just to clarify, hon. member, I don't believe that's the direction that the Government House Leader was going in with that, but there is a past precedent regarding asking questions in the House about matters that are under the purview of the Members' Services Committee. I believe that's where the issue lies.

Mr. Schneider: Okay. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I won't ask any questions about it. Basically, I guess I did ask a question of where the money came from. Okay. Fair enough.

I guess I can't ask these questions. All the things that I was going to bring up, Madam Chair, that talked about, you know, that maybe we were going to hire security: that's just something that weighed in the back of my mind. Or maybe the rugs needed replacing, you know, something like that. All that sounds a little ridiculous, admittedly. But, folks, I guess we have a committee that understands what the money that goes to the Legislative Assembly means. I guess a question I have is: would the backbenchers of the NDP government have any idea what that means? Would they have any idea what the $13,528,000 is to be spent on, or would only the committee members?

I mean, when the NDP government has a caucus meeting – like, let's talk about the last caucus meeting before interim supply was presented in this House. Were all the members on the other side of the House given a binder explaining what this amount of money was for in this very first item under Legislative Assembly, and did it kind of say where the dollars were split up and where they were heading? I guess that binder wasn't available to this side of the House. I'm sure that it wasn't available to the members sitting where I could hit them. These guys didn't receive anything that says where that money is being spent.

I guess the point here is that the government, Madam Speaker, has asked this House to approve Bill 3, a bill that at the end of the day is asking us to approve a supply of money from Albertans to cover shortfalls in the budget that this same government put forward in March of last year, a bill that is asking this House to approve somewhere north of $8.5 billion, basically, with not enough information, certainly, in this five-page document to appease, well, I guess something like a grade 6 accounting class. No context, not one word of context that would tend to give a hint as to what the millions and millions of dollars that are sprinkled throughout these pages are being sent to, some 30 headings on these five pages. Well, maybe the front row knows. Maybe the front row was involved in knowing all those numbers.

Anyway, I guess the point here is that it's grossly apparent that this government is chronically underprepared. Chronically underprepared. What that invariably leads to is a government that is less transparent and accountable to Albertans. Albertans: remember those folks? They're the ones that pay the freight around here. Try to remember who those folks are. They're the ones that are asking where all this money is going, this $8.5 billion.

I mean, I'm just not sure how to answer that for the councillors, all the councillors over at Rural Municipalities of Alberta this morning. How do I tell those folks that were asking me this morning where the government is spending $8.5 billion, based on what's in this document of five pages? You see, Madam Speaker, those councillors and their CAOs that were also present over there today are from all over rural Alberta. Those folks are family members and family people, too, just like all of us in the House here. They have children that they are just trying to get through high school or elementary or junior high school or university, the point being that they have children that at some point in the future will be having children themselves who will be faced with the kind of reckless spending that this government has imposed on Alberta. Our children's children will be trying to pay down the debt that this government has incurred.

When interim supply was introduced in this building, it was the morning of March 13. On the morning of March 14 we started debate. As you know, Madam Speaker, I think my colleagues did a pretty good job. They asked some pretty good questions of the Finance minister, considering that they had 24 hours to prepare to ask the Finance minister about an $8.5 billion expense with, really, no information whatsoever, a five-page document that the best accountant in town would have trouble deciphering because there's no information other than a huge 10-digit number that most calculators won't even recognize.

Madam Speaker, my colleagues that asked those, well, what I would consider pretty good questions even though they had no information to work from were stonewalled at every turn. I guess that's the best, most appropriate comment I can make. When my colleagues asked really good questions that sought more specific information about where interim supply was actually being spent, the Finance minister and the rest of Executive Council – I mean, seriously, if they could actually find another member of Executive Council to answer a specific question – basically did the same thing. My colleagues were stonewalled by those that were attempting to answer the serious questions that they were putting forward, well-thought-out questions, even though they were only given 24 hours. They were stonewalled, or Executive Council members just plain failed to provide any specific information on the questions that were being asked.

You know, Madam Speaker, it really is unacceptable for the members of this House to be told that they will have to wait until the budget is announced on Thursday before they can actually find out where the money is going. It seems like that is backwards, in my line of thinking. You know what that is? That's politics. Politics is getting in the way of legitimate questions to the Finance minister and/or Executive Council on behalf of – remember the folks that actually pay for the stuff around here? – Albertans, on behalf of those folks.

With little or no information to substantiate or describe or explain the numbers in this five-page document that would hardly make a good paper airplane, this Legislature is being asked to provide this out-of-control spending with not quite a blank cheque but a cheque for $8.5 billion without having the foggiest idea of where the money is going. Madam Speaker, there isn't enough information here to even begin to suggest what the money is for, and $8.5 billion is no insignificant amount of money, as we all know.

Even when we had the opportunity to ask questions during interim supply debate, all we got were generalities, lots of "Wait for the budget" and "That will be answered in the budget." Heck, you know, between interim supply and supplementary supply questioning, we'd be lucky if the minister in charge of that ministry was around to answer the question, not that any of the answers, to be perfectly honest, were in any way forthcoming.

But $8.5 billion being asked for over and above is very telling, very telling indeed. I guess the question would be: how is it that this government can't get somewhere near what they budgeted prior? Being $8.5 billion short is no small number. Don't get me wrong; I understand that governments before have done the same thing. We've heard the folks from the other side say over and over that they've got Albertans' backs and that they're going to do a better job with accounting. I guess that if this government had been prepared with a budget on time, interim supply wouldn't have been required.

Now, it was my understanding – and I'm always prepared to be corrected – when I got here in 2015 that in normal years the fiscal year-end of government was March 31. I'll repeat that. If the government had been prepared well in advance of that March 31 deadline, it's unlikely that we would be having this meeting at all. Estimates would have been within a week of being completed by now. Certainly, we would have come back to the House earlier than we tend to, and who would have an issue with that? I mean, we're getting paid to come to work. I'm sure we'd all be prepared to come to work. Or, once again, is it that this government is underprepared by such a huge margin that getting the budget, let alone bills – they sometimes are delivered to our desks still warm – actually done on time is a hurdle too high to jump?

That kind of gets back to the root of the problem. Why do we need interim supply? I know why the government says that we need interim supply: because we need to keep the lights on and pay the bills and keep the front-line staff working and collecting paycheques. Once again, if we had determined that we should come back to the House early, probably sometime in February, and had the budget and estimates passed in March – well, you get my point. It's feasible. It seems common sense, but as I said last week, I think, here in the House, Madam Speaker, common sense just ain't so common any more.

Madam Speaker, it's unlikely that most average, common-sense Albertans, that see a 10-digit number as something that is just about incomprehensible, would continue to support a government whose spending is so remarkably out of control. Every budget since this government took office has been extreme. Albertans have been watching for nearly three years now, and folks that didn't used to worry about such stuff, people that walk up and down Main Street, Alberta, and that we run into, are asking us questions all the time. Albertans are worried about their and their children's children's future. This government is putting those futures at risk, and I think that's wrong, and so do those average, everyday Albertans that walk up and down Main Street, Alberta.

That being said, I appreciate the opportunity to stand in the House and speak today. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill in third reading?

Hon. Government House Leader, on behalf of the President of Treasury Board do you wish to close debate?

Mr. Mason: No.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a third time]

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2018

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board it's my privilege to rise today and move third reading of Bill 4, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2018.

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my honour to speak to Bill 4, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2018. It's a bill that does concern me, with the abilities of this government to be able to properly budget and set priorities for the coming year and be prepared for what their priorities and what Albertans' priorities should be for the fiscal year that is before us. So we take a look at the budget process in the previous year or the current year, that we're in, that we're just finishing up, and here we are.

We're seeing a government that wishes to increase spending by approximately 1 and a half billion dollars, and we have to ask: why? Is there a good reason? I would suggest that on a few files there were some unexpected expenses, but also I would suggest that on the vast majority of it, it was decisions made by this government to increase spending, it kind of looks like, because there was more revenue available to spend.

I find it interesting that on my ride home to my constituency on Thursday last week the media was contacting me and needing to get a better understanding of why the Official Opposition decided to vote against certain items within this supplementary supply. I believe that what needs to be recognized is that the Official Opposition is voting against the ability for this government to ensure that they keep their spending under control. It's very important that they recognize, before a budget year starts, that priorities have to be set at that time and not that all of a sudden, because there's extra money available, they're going to spend some more money.

The media was asking me relative to the spin that one of the other MLAs in my region was putting forward, the fact that the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater put into the local paper an article with regard to rural crime. As part of that, his comment was: "So you can imagine how surprised I was when on March 15 every UCP member in the House voted against $37 million in much-needed funding that would help fight rural crime all across the province."

What surprises me, Madam Speaker, is the fact that rural crime was highlighted well over a year ago, close to two years ago as a significant concern, so the priority should have been there already. Yet this government failed to recognize that that was a priority and failed to fully recognize the need to put in place what is necessary to help alleviate some of the difficulties we're faced with in our rural crime.

It's also concerning to my constituents. You can imagine how surprised my constituents were when a couple of years ago we had a government that said that there were not enough resources to put into more judges at that time. My constituents were incredibly surprised when this government set their priorities to spend $10 million on advertising for the carbon tax, for their climate leadership plan. My constituents thought that that was a complete waste of money and that it would have been much better spent on some of the priorities that this government needs to focus on, and that is enforcement of the rule of law. You can also see that that was wasteful spending.

But we also see a government that is going down a road, in certain aspects, of inefficient spending. When the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater is highlighting that there was $37 million needed in an ask from Justice and Solicitor General for increased spending for rural crime and he's surprised that we voted against that, we also recognize and my constituents recognize that this government has wasted or spent inefficiently $200 million on AHS laundry/delivery services. Madam Chair, $200 million, $200 million that could have been spent on other priorities. But their ideology decided that it was time to remove a privately held contract and move that in-house, so they decided to spend $200 million extra on laundry.

For the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater to think that the UCP was voting against $37 million to help fight rural crime is a spin that I believe all Albertans see through. All Albertans recognize that this government has been in the practice of not only wasteful spending but also inefficient spending, and when they do a budget – and the budget is coming down tomorrow – we have to ensure that the priorities of this government are recognized at this time and that we don't have to be faced with a situation where now the government is requesting another 1 and a half billion dollars of spending.

I would suggest that this government has a spending problem, and when we start to see several requests throughout the year for increased spending for many of the departments, then it does become a concern that they were not able to properly budget at the beginning of the year. I would encourage them to do better this time – and, hopefully, they will do better – so that when we do see revenues in excess of $2 billion higher than expected, this government doesn't find themselves wanting to spend it.

The Finance minister said this morning at RMA that money was put towards MSI funding. Why? Because they recognized that it's necessary funding. But at the same time, was that not recognized last spring when the budget was developed? Why was there all of a sudden a change of heart that now we just about double MSI funding? Is it because we can, because there was increased revenue? Yes, I would suggest the Finance minister led us to believe that this morning. The minister said that because we had the capacity to increase funding, they decided to. But it's all borrowed money. The capacity was the same last spring as what the capacity is today. It's all borrowed money because this government is running a colossal deficit.

The decision to spend $800 million more in MSI funding was a decision based on: well, we had the financing in place, so let's use it. Is that wise fiscal prudence? I don't get to see all the numbers, but I would suggest that when you're out on a budget item by just about half of what you're going to spend on it now, $800 million, that's a significant miss on the ability to budget properly. Albertans expect governments, when they put a budget in, to try their level best to follow their budget and not to just make decisions on the fly because they had capacity.

You know, Madam Speaker, opposition members have been raising the issue of rural crime for over a year. It was known last spring when the budget was put down that this was a serious problem, and the government decided not to recognize it at that time. It does give me some comfort that they've now recognized it. I hope they've recognized it for what it is because in a country and a western, developed society that is able to enjoy peace and security from rule of law and protection from others, not only protection from other citizens but also protection from government, rule of law enforcement is critical to ensure that our citizens feel that they are safe to enjoy life in Alberta. It is one of the highest priorities, I would suggest, of any government in this land.

Obviously, UCP supports additional police officers for rural Alberta; however, the NDP has repeatedly refused to answer when Albertans can expect to see these new officers in their communities. I believe it may be some time. At RMA this morning there was also concern on the backlog, that we don't have the officers in place that are being fully funded, so there's a whole other discussion to be had there. But we have to ensure that our citizens can feel that their safety and their ability to feel safe at home is a high priority of any government.

Supplementary supply is riddled with spending that we absolutely cannot support because I do believe that departments need to live within their means. If we get into situations where departments can easily move from living within their means, then, really, what confidence do we have that this government will live within their means and protect the fiscal well-being of this province and of Albertans? This government proves that they are not protecting taxpayer resources in a manner that gives Albertans the impression that this government really cares for fiscal responsibility.

The problem is that this government has a spending problem, which supplementary supply completely fails to address. The deficit went down from $10.4 billion to $9.1 billion, so what does the NDP plan to do? They have decided to spend 1 and a half billion dollars more than originally planned. You know, we saw where revenues were up well over $2 billion, and now because revenues are up they decide that: well, we're going to spend 1 and a half billion dollars more. But your capacity to spend wasn't any greater because you're in a position where you have to borrow the 1 and a half billion dollars that you propose to spend. That doesn't make Albertans feel any better. The people that are feeling good about this are the guys on Bay Street, the guys on Wall Street, the guys that we've got to go to to finance this kind of a spending habit. I believe that government can do better.

I have concerns when MSI funding all of a sudden doubles, and it begs the question: what changed? The only thing I can come up with is that revenues went up. So we're in a position to now spend more? I suspect that the money isn't even going to be able to be spent by the end of the year. So are we playing games now with Albertans and putting in place what the government wants to put in place as spending into this fiscal year? Can the money even be out the door by the end of the fiscal year?

I don't know those answers. Only the government knows those answers. I would suggest that, yes, the government has to sleep at night, too, so probably best not to be playing games with Albertans, especially on sums of money such as this, large, large sums of money. Most Albertans, I would say probably 99 per cent of Albertans, have very little understanding or can really get a good feeling of the size of that amount of money, 1 and a half billion dollars, can't even imagine what that feels like.

But the other thing it also does do is that when we see that a government proposes to spend a certain amount and then now moves into discretionary spending and decides to spend more, it makes credit agencies reassess the ability of the company, the government, to do proper budgeting, that they can feel confident that the board of directors, the government in this case, that this company is under good management and that they can and they know how to stick within their means and they know how to budget properly. Credit agencies look at this and they say: "Wow, I don't know if I can trust that. I'm not sure that this is good, sound planning." Do we put ourselves at risk of another credit downgrade?

Now, thankfully, my critic department, Infrastructure, is not asking to spend more money this fiscal year. I'm thankful for that. That says to me that they're living within their means, and that's a good sign. But 37 times departments went to Treasury Board asking for more money last year. Some examples: Agriculture and Forestry went back seven times; Labour, four times; Service Alberta, four times; Transportation, four times; Municipal Affairs, three times; Environment and Parks, three times; Culture and Tourism, twice; Justice and Solicitor General, twice; Advanced Education, once; Seniors and Housing, once.

Economic Development and Trade wants to transfer $10 million from the expense vote to the capital investment vote for a capital grant to Alberta Innovates Corporation for the Alberta carbon conversion technology centre. It sounds like possibly a good idea. I heard about this place down near Calgary that's going to pull CO₂ right out of the air. But I question whether or not this is a sound investment based on a company in Squamish, B.C., called Carbon Engineering, which already is doing much the same thing, maybe even the same thing that we're spending the $10 million on. This side of the House and Albertans would like to know, need to know: is this $10 million being directed in a way that we can feel confident that it's not lining the pockets of government friends? I suspect that will be a question in estimates. Is that wise spending?

Incorporated in 2009 and privately owned, Carbon Engineering is funded by private investors, some of them well-known names: Bill Gates, Murray Edwards. Most people in this place would recognize those names. Carbon Engineering grew from academic work conducted on carbon management technologies by Professor David Keith's research group at the University of Calgary and also Carnegie Mellon University.

So this technology has been invested in, and possibly we can see where Alberta Innovates is seeing research going in another direction, and that might be helpful. But, you know, I'm thinking that Albertans would like to know if that's a good investment. Otherwise, why are we investing in technology that has already been invested in and proven? That wouldn't make sense.

United Conservatives are talking about common-sense solutions to problems that Albertans face. We are committed to defending Alberta. We are committed to defending its industries against a host of ideological policies from not only the Alberta NDP but also from its cousins, the British Columbia NDP, and their close friends in federal government in Ottawa that threaten our long-term prosperity. This is a significant concern of many Albertans, that our industry is being threatened by ideological governments that are closely aligned with our NDP government here.

All of this spending from supplementary supply means that the government fails to address the issue of increasing debt and deficit. As I said, Madam Speaker, the 1 and a half billion dollars, every dollar, is borrowed money. We've been borrowing money for probably the last few months because we haven't been able to bring in enough. The realization that this growing debt is a concern . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Mr. Cyr: I've heard extensively about this government's inability to spend responsibly, but I'd like to hear more about the growing debt that this government is putting onto our children and our children's children for generations to come. I would love to hear more on that.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, 29(2)(a) doesn't apply. You'd be speaking directly to the bill. The member's speaking time has expired.

Mr. Cyr: I apologize. I thought it was 29(2)(a), and I believe I spoke on this one already.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you. I'd like to speak a bit about the debt that our kids and our grandkids and future generations are going to have, never mind the clogging of our economy for our job providers, our wealth creators and how that's going to reduce our competitiveness, you know, in our economy.

My goodness, three years with this government and we're already at $50 billion of debt, estimated to be at least $71 billion, Madam Speaker, in just another year. It seems like every time they find a little bit of saving, it gets spent and more, more again.

I think back to when Canadians had to face some tougher times, you know, a few years ago and when Albertans had to face some tougher times a few years ago and how Albertans were willing to bear down and pull their weight and make things happen. But it wasn't easy. It wasn't easy to have to have those hard-earned tax dollars go to pay interest and go to pay debt.

You know, I look at the $1.5 billion that this government just borrowed for supplementary supply, and – what a coincidence – this government also spent $1.5 billion in interest last year, interest that, of course, we've heard many times, just goes to pay the rich, pay bondholders in New York and Switzerland and around the world. The big concern with debt, of course, is that that's what it is at the end of the day, the poor and the middle class just paying the rich. So that concerns me greatly.

I wonder at this government's way out of this because I think back to what we just saw, Madam Speaker, in the Q3 update, where even this government, who drastically raised personal income tax rates, who raised corporate tax rates 20 per cent at the same time that major competitors of our commodity markets are reducing their taxes 40 per cent – and what happened? You know, you like to think that when a store raises its prices, it actually has more revenue. You like to think that when a government raises their tax rates, it could actually maybe go to reduce the deficit or provide some policemen for rural crime or something to make Albertans' lives better.

But, Madam Speaker, the exact opposite happened. In the last quarter, personal income tax revenue was down $322 million from what they budgeted. Corporate tax revenue was down $66 million from what they budgeted. We have a situation where revenues are down and expenses are up and spending is up, so when this government comes to us and asks us to write a blank cheque for interim supply because they didn't get their budget done on time and now for supplementary supply because they overspent by a billion and a half dollars . . .

Mr. Gill: How much?

Mr. Barnes: A billion and a half dollars.

Mr. Gill: Is that a "b" or an "m"?

Mr. Barnes: It's with a "b," a big "b," a capital "b."

Unfortunately for our kids and our grandkids and our economy, they're the ones that will have to endure this, and what a problem that'll be down the road as this money has to go to interest instead of to services.

Another problem, though, that I have with the supplementary supply is what it doesn't talk about. My hon. colleague from Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock talked about the MSI and how there's an astonishing $800 million for our municipal partners, municipal partners that have many needs and are faced with the economic slowdown, that this government has managed. They're looking at, you know, linear taxation being re-evaluated and brought down, which, as the value of those assets falls because of the layers and layers of burden that this government has added to our good industries – it probably only makes sense that these companies come back and look for a fairer taxation level. But at the end of the day, it comes out of Albertans, and it comes out of the services that can be provided.

I wasn't clear myself on the answer that the minister gave today. The question was clear: is this $800 million that you're using for MSI a shell game? Is it just borrowing the money in this year's budget to put into next year's to make it look like the deficit will be lower next year? I didn't hear a clear answer from the ministers. I'm very, very much looking forward to estimates, when we have the chance to see if this $800 million is, in fact, a shell game to make it look to Albertans like they do have a plan to, you know, get closer to balance, although the reality is – you know, for Albertans, thank goodness that the Official Opposition is here to ensure that money, hard-earned tax dollars, money taken from job creators, is spent as efficiently and effectively as it can be. I look forward to the actual budget. I look forward to the estimates. I look forward to getting answers on what is really happening with that $800 million of MSI, that we really had one day to research and look at before it hit our desks.

But while we're talking about $800 million, the other thing that this government doesn't like to talk about and which was in the Q3 update is $771 million that was put into the budget, put into our expenses to pay the cost of their failure on the Balancing Pool and the power purchase agreements . . .

Mr. Nixon: Secret agreements.

Mr. Barnes: Secret agreements.

. . . money, Madam Speaker, that is coming directly out of Alberta families, directly out of Alberta communities all around Alberta, money that with a little bit of foresight, with a little bit of oversight, with a little bit of acumen, with a desire to ensure that Alberta's competitive advantage of low-priced electric generation was maintained – instead, this government, for ideological reasons, threw all of that away, threw it away in a way that, again, our communities, our kids, and our grandkids are going to have to pay.

What I'm surprised I didn't see in the supplementary supply that was in the Q3 update: I think I have a number of $230 million from the climate leadership plan in surprise grants.

Madam Speaker, I guess what I'm talking about is transparency and the failing grade that this government has earned on this one. We have a situation where MSI money looks like it's part of a shell game. Even though, in my six years in here, I and others have stood up many times and said, "Let's budget properly for floods, for wildfires, for natural disasters," no government has listened to that. Of course, the money still has to come from the taxpayer or be paid back by our kids and our grandkids. Shame on not being transparent and open to the Albertan taxpayers as to what that's going to cost.

I'm dismayed at how this was presented, with a day's notice. I'm dismayed that in the Q3 update we had a $9 billion deficit but no mention of the $5 billion borrowed for capital funding. Obviously, the taxpayer, the future generations of Albertans cannot pick and choose what debt they pay back and which debt they don't pay back.

Madam Speaker, I will close with the burdens, the layers of rules and regulations that this government has put on our economy, our wealth providers, our job creators, on their opportunity to work hard, to build Alberta families and communities. They're faced with a 20 per cent higher tax. They're faced with a provincial tax that can be as much as 50 per cent higher now. What this government is seeing is a failure to generate more revenue from these huge increases.

So the prudent thing to do would be to address your spending. The prudent thing would be to look for savings and efficiencies. Instead, this government has put our kids and our grandkids approximately $71 billion in debt in just four short years, a number that is per capita easily – easily – I think, or even not per capita, Canada's biggest provincial deficit by miles right now. It's a burden that our kids and our grandkids don't deserve. It's a burden that only together, through the skills and the quality of our good people in the commodity markets, whether it's oil and gas, forestry, or agriculture, we'll be able to get out of.

Madam Speaker, I am pleased and proud to be voting against this government's big-spending ways, and I will ask all of my colleagues to do the same.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) now comes into effect if there are any questions or comments.

Seeing none, are there any other members who wish to speak to the bill?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: You're ready for the question?

Hon. Government House Leader, do you wish to close debate?

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Energy Diversification Act

Mrs. Pitt moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 1, Energy Diversification Act, be amended by striking out all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 1, Energy Diversification Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to get up and speak on Bill 1. Now, this bill is regarding energy diversification. I always like to see exactly the intent the government has got when it comes to their bills, so I like to go to the press releases. The press release I'll be referencing is Investing in a Diversified Energy Future. It was released on March 8, 2018. Now, the first paragraph here is: "New initiatives would create thousands of jobs, attract billions of dollars in private investment and secure Alberta's energy future through diversification and innovation, under legislation introduced today." That's very impressive. Getting into the fact that I believe that this legislation should be referred to committee, I will go through this press release as well as some of the other things to show the importance of making sure that we get this right.

Now, with the fact that this is the second round of money that's being put out, my big question is: did the first round work? I don't think that's unreasonable, and I don't think it's unreasonable to see if the committee can investigate that and come up with whether or not the first tranche of funding worked as had been anticipated. Do we just take the government's word that it's hugely successful and everybody is happy? Or do we actually do our jobs and look at something as important as making sure that we diversify our economy?

Now, I'd like to talk about a quote that the Minister of Energy put forward: "We're taking bold steps to help the energy industry innovate and diversify. These measures are not one-off fixes – they're part of our made-in-Alberta plan for a more diversified and resilient economy that's built to last . . . no Albertan is left behind." That's very impressive. We've got a long-term plan, it sounds like, that we're going to be putting forward with these things. So why wouldn't we want our MLAs to be able to make sure that they get input to be able to make sure that the viability of Alberta moves forward?

Now what I'm going to go on to is the throne speech. We've talked a little bit about the press release, but I think that the throne speech is something that actually sets the direction here. On page 6 of the throne speech, under the heading Diversifying Our Economy, the first line is:

Albertans want off the resource royalty roller-coaster.

If that is the case – and I would say that nobody wants to see our economy tied to oil and gas royalties – then why wouldn't we want our Resource Stewardship Committee discussing the best way to get off this roller coaster?

What happens here, to move further down under this point, is that it says:

The first bill will focus on diversification within the energy sector. As we work to diversify the markets our energy resources can access via pipeline, we will also do more to add value to our resources right here at home.

Bill 2:

The second bill will focus on diversification across [the] economy.

And

The third bill will focus on laying the groundwork for new renewable energy jobs and an [energy] system [that has] more stable prices.

So we've got a minister or ministries that are putting forward bills that are saying that our goal here is to diversify. It is so important that they've come up with three separate bills to do that. Why cannot our government accept the fact that we really need to move something this important to committee? I don't think this is unreasonable, especially with the fact that we are looking at this government's inability to be able to consult with its stakeholders.

Now, what I'd like to start off with here is to show that the government hasn't been perfect in its rollout of past diversification bills. There's a Bill 1, coincidentally, from 2016-2017, the Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act. This was put forward by the Minister of Economic Development and Trade and was arguably one of the largest failures that this government has put forward. Now, it was in the end so much of a failure that we don't even see the Economic Development and Trade minister in this first bill announcement. This announcement is only done by the Energy minister.

We've already had something move forward that flopped, so we're trying it again. The first time, I believe, it flopped because they didn't use committees to actually identify how to get this right. We need to go back to basics. We need to start using these committees as they were designed for, not throwing through legislation that is arguably just as important. But what we need to start doing is saying that if this is the keynote of the Premier's vision for the province, why is she not including all the Alberta MLAs in this vision?

Now, I'm going to read the preamble for the other Bill 1, just parts of it because I don't want to go through the whole bill.

Whereas Albertans desire a prosperous and vibrant economy that offers employment opportunities for Albertans of different skills and backgrounds;

Whereas all areas of Alberta, from rural communities and indigenous communities to the largest cities, will benefit from a stronger and more diversified economy;

Whereas the Government is committed to supporting working people and their families and supporting businesses in their efforts to create and retain jobs and to diversify the products and services Albertans sell and the markets Albertans sell into;

Whereas by harnessing the opportunity for diversification and investment, Albertans can realize additional jobs and benefits from Alberta's many resources; and

Then this last one:

Whereas accessing additional markets will give Alberta exporters and manufacturers more opportunities, choice and certainty.

That was the preamble from Bill 1 from 2016-2017. I'm going to read you Bill 1 right here:

Whereas Alberta's bitumen production can realize better overall value for upstream producers through large-scale partial upgrading technologies;

Whereas Alberta will benefit from a stronger and more diversified economy if it takes full advantage of the opportunities its hydrocarbon feedstock provides to create value-added processing and the production of secondary and tertiary non-energy products.

You'll find that these statements from both of these bills are very close to each other. One is, overall, saying that we need to manage our entire economy for Alberta. One is being very focused on saying that we need to address some of the upgrading that we're doing here. Both are saying that they're out to diversify the economy.

You know what? I do believe that the NDP are looking to diversify the economy, but we're spending a lot of money doing it, which is why it is so important that we get this right. We've heard from the minister already, saying that this is a long-term vision. Well, let's get everybody onboard with this vision. I don't believe that's unreasonable to say.

I want to go into the panel that has been set up by the minister. Now, this panel was the Energy Diversification Advisory Committee. What we ended up doing was that we created a committee to start to review the best ways to create diversification in Alberta. Now, we ended up with some committee members – and I would like to thank the committee members for their hard work. You can see that this 167-page report they did had a lot of thought put into it. I do understand that there are concerns when it comes to the members themselves, but again giving some, I guess, leeway to the government, I do believe that they're trying to find ways.

When I looked through the report, what I saw was that this committee met a total of six days. We've got March 13 and 14, March 28 and 29, May 2, and June 12. Six days. Then we've got one-on-one meetings with the stakeholders. Now, my curiosity in all of this is: who met with these stakeholders? Was it the committee members, or did we have government officials? Now, again, this is why it is so important that this get referred to a committee. We need to know these intricate facts that are coming forward.

We have two committees which, I would argue, would fit in this, the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future and the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship. You can't tell me that one of these two committees could not find the best route to go. We've got billions and billions of dollars on the line when it comes to making sure this gets done right.

According to the Alberta Industrial Heartland Association there is a potential for $30 billion in new capital investment in the heartland by 2030 with potential infrastructure, a skilled work force, and government support. This is the press release again. We're talking billions and billions of dollars, which is why I talked to my colleagues across the aisle. It's important that we get this right. We don't know if the first tranche of actual investment worked. We should look at it and make sure this is the right direction. You know what? If it worked, I will give credit to the government.

The first time Bill 1 flopped. But you know what? The fact that they're willing to go to industry and say, "What works for you?" and actually seeing that result that we're hoping for is a win for all Albertans, and that includes the opposition.

I would like to move on, and I'd like to say that what we're seeing here, it appears, is an exercise of this government trying to distract from their current record. Now, what we've seen with this government is that right now they're trying to deflect us from the current size of our deficit. We've heard about this. What's problematic about this is that if we put billions and billions of dollars forward to these projects potentially through government guarantees and tax credits, we are putting our children on the hook for a ton of money.

The whole function of our government is to make sure that we discuss everything that goes through this House, especially when it comes to large sums of money or protecting our citizens or making sure that in the end we always are debating what's important to Albertans. But right now it appears that we're ramming legislation through this Legislature on one committee who met six times with it looks like multiple different businesses, which is good. I have to say that this is a step up from what we saw from Bill 6.

What we're looking to do here is say: let's review this report. We have 36 recommendations. Why not sit down? It could be that the Minister of Energy may have chosen the wrong direction to follow in this report, but we'll never know because in the end it was not debated. What we're looking at here is a report that – I looked at the PDF date on it, and it appears that the report was put out in February 2018. Now, if I'm incorrect, then the government can feel free to correct me, but that shows that we've had a very small amount of time. Now, I do know the government had it probably before it was released.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to make a few comments about what my colleague here is saying around the referral. I'm hearing a couple of different things from him. One would be that there's a concern that we haven't done enough consultation, so I would just like to, you know, put out to the hon. member that these are some of the different places that we have consulted with.

First, we had the Energy Diversification Advisory Committee, that was responsible for the overviewing and writing of the report. They consulted with Cenovus Energy, Dow Chemical, NOVA Chemicals, Suncor, Inter Pipeline, Mega Energy, the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, the Chemistry Industry Association of Canada, Methanex, Seven Generations Energy, Shell Canada, Sherritt, ARC Financial, AltaGas, Imperial Oil, capital region board, the MD of Greenview. There's a list that goes on and on about the different organizations that were consulted with in regard to making sure that we were actually looking at what potentials we had.

The other thing that I also find really interesting is that over the last few years since we've been elected, the Official Opposition has continuously said that we don't support the oil and gas industry, that we haven't been having conversations with anybody about the oil and gas industry, and, you know, that it's the driver of the province. Well, they're absolutely right. The oil and gas industry is the driver of the province. We acknowledge that. We are working with them. This is a very clear sign to investors in Alberta, to investors across the world that we are extremely serious about looking at the oil and gas industry, not in the context of how it exists today but in the context of how we can look at diversifying it so that we can get even more production and even more value out of our industries.

It's interesting because on one hand they're saying that we're not listening to Albertans, yet when we respond with a bill that is very clearly listening to what Albertans have been telling us, then they say: well, you haven't consulted enough.

Although they could send it back to a committee, although I don't support that because I find it interesting – I mean, I would be very curious to find out from the hon. member who he feels that we've missed talking to, who he sees outside of this list that he feels is more important than talking to everyday Albertans, than talking to our constituents. We all door-knock in our party. We are all out there talking to people. I represent the heartland, so I'm talking to people that are working in the heartland all the time about different options that we can do. So I'm not quite sure what piece we're missing here.

The other component that I think the hon. member also was speaking about was, you know, the money that's being spent. Let's be clear. There has been an offer put out by the government to provide some investment dollars. The commitment around those investment dollars is very clear, that the product has to be built and that the product has to be in production before any dollars will leave the province. Like, the government is not giving any money until they can actually prove that these industries are viable. There's that piece.

There's also the piece of the fact that the opposition says that we are driving industry out of the province because we're not incentivizing enough, and then we come forward and say, "Well, we're going to incentivize so that we can keep industry here and give them a very clear message that we want them to build in Alberta." They say, "Well, don't do that." But the reality of it is that anywhere internationally, whether it be the United States in Louisiana and Texas, whether it be overseas, every single government is supporting the oil and gas industry in their upfront development costs. It's the reality of it. We are competing right now with Texas and Louisiana, the United States, our biggest competitor. They are subsidizing and supporting their industry to build new refineries, to build new industry, to build new manufacturing, and now the opposition is saying: well, let's refer it; let's stall it; we don't want this bill to go forward; we want more consultation. What it really sounds like to me is that they just want to refer it so that they can stall us out because heaven forbid that the NDP, the new diversification party, actually has a good plan, that makes sense, that's going to get us what Albertans need.

I think it's time that we all just look at what we're doing, recognize that this is in the best interest of all Albertans, get this bill passed, and stop talking about referrals. Let's actually start diversifying because that's what we should be doing. That's what's going to bring revenue into this province. I would love to hear from the hon. member on who he thinks we've missed.

Mr. Cyr: I would make a correction. I think it's the new debt party. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members to speak? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today on Bill 1 and the amendment. I absolutely support the referral amendment to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship. This is absolutely the place to discuss this bill, this is absolutely the place to make this bill as good as it can be, and this is absolutely the place to ensure that all Albertans have their chance to come forward to be heard.

Madam Speaker, I think back to my time on the Resource Stewardship Committee in 2012 and 2013. Two of the interesting proposals that we looked at were high-speed rail and the opportunity for an alternative of more electric generation ideas, run of the river principally, in three Alberta rivers. My goodness, I was very pleased. I was very impressed with the process. All kinds of experts came in that understood those two dynamics and had an opportunity to talk to both sides, the government and the opposition. Through us and through the transparency and how that gets put out to all Albertans, it was really an ideal opportunity for them to speak to all Albertans. It gave an opportunity for a report to be written. It gave an opportunity for everybody to have a second thought and to have their input.

At the end of the day, you know, we're transferring hard-earned tax dollars, taken from a family, taken from a productive individual, and giving that to another participant in the economy. It's crucial that everybody has their say and that everybody has the opportunity to ensure that if this is going to happen, it is happening in the best way forward.

I'm always surprised at how it works in Alberta. Although I'm not very familiar with it directly, my understanding is that in Ottawa, in our Parliament, almost every bill goes to a standing committee. There are a couple of permanent standing committees. Instead of Committee of the Whole, in Parliament everything goes to a standing committee, where Canadians – experts, people with a vested interest, people with the best ideas – have an opportunity to come forward. Why in the world wouldn't we do that, Madam Speaker? Why in the world wouldn't we look at the opportunity and put the call out there to hear from all Albertans, especially when it comes to energy diversification?

Madam Speaker, we have seen so many jurisdictions get this wrong. We have seen so many jurisdictions burden families, their communities, and individuals with utility rates that have to be subsidized by the taxpayer, adding hugely to the deficit, a similar position that the Alberta NDP has put us in here. We have heard horror stories of utility rates going through the roof. We've heard of people in Europe, my goodness, seniors that have to make a choice between heat or eat, as I've heard it described. Here's our opportunity to ensure that we explore all the good ideas, all the best options for Alberta going forward. Again, this government, based on their ideological belief that they somehow know better than 4.1 million Albertans, people that spend their whole careers, all their time, in industry, in business, understanding how these things work, is not wanting to talk about it.

I'll also say that I don't know that the first one worked very well. Some information I saw showed that not all the money was picked up. Perhaps this government would have been a lot smarter, a lot further ahead, Madam Speaker, to have put that bill to the standing committee, where good ideas could have come out and made it happen. I talked to people that wanted to be part of that but weren't because they felt there were other problems, other roadblocks in the way of doing business in Alberta. How good would this be if at our Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship we got to hear from some of these people what the other reasons were that Alberta wasn't on the favoured list?

Of course, we've heard and talked about how prior to this government being elected, Alberta was the most favourable jurisdiction for oil and gas. It potentially led to a diversification of the economy by 40 per cent. We've all read recently, Madam Speaker, where we're 15th in North America just amongst the oil and gas producing jurisdictions, never mind all the other jurisdictions, the ones that don't provide that. Wouldn't it be good to hear what this government did well, what this government could have improved on, what our last government did well, and what our last government could have improved on from those Albertans that live it, those Albertans that every time this government does something, it changes their ability to make a living, to care for their families, to send somebody to university or to take a holiday? Who better to hear from about what might be the best thing going forward?

You know, I heard a question earlier about: we have to provide these incentives; we have to do this to stay competitive. Madam Speaker, I do hear that a little bit when I'm out talking to constituents and wealth and job providers, but mostly what I hear is that what we have to change is all the damage that this government has done to our economy, all the damage they've done. The number one thing I hear about the most is the tax increase, increasing corporate taxes 20 per cent. You don't have to look very far or very hard to read that corporate tax increases are so easy to pass down to consumers and families. So good work. You just raised the cost of living for all Albertans, and you drove business out.

Somebody was telling me at the new Rural Municipalities yesterday about a project that somebody wanted to do in Texas, something to do with oil and gas – it was quite technical – and it took 24 hours to get approval. Twenty-four hours. Everything I've heard about in Alberta is two to four years. Everything I've heard about in our neighbouring province, a neighbouring competitor in this case, Saskatchewan, is around a week. I also understand that Saskatchewan and B.C. both took definite, direct action to reduce regulatory red tape and make it so that safe, environmentally responsible job and wealth producers could do business on a timely basis. Madam Speaker, that is maybe the number one thing we have to do to bring back investment.

If we talk about investment for a sec, we heard the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers mentioned earlier today in question period. I wasn't there, so this is a little bit of second-hand knowledge, but I understand they made a presentation showing how oil and gas investment in Alberta has declined by 40 per cent since this NDP government was elected. Forty per cent is just a number, but that's probably 50,000 or 60,000 jobs, Madam Speaker. That's probably why the people in Cypress-Medicine Hat and around Alberta are only making 60 per cent of what they used to earn, working hard in the middle of winter, 10 miles from the Arctic Circle, all those things that we all value so much. At the same time that we've dropped 40 per cent, oil and gas investment is up in America 70 per cent. So what is the difference?

If we destroy billions and billions of dollars of investment and value and we throw a billion dollars at it and we're not doing it in the right way, Madam Speaker, I would suggest to you that we're not earning our salaries. We're not doing the best job for our constituents. What a shame that is. Of course, every four years we have the opportunity to be held accountable by our constituents.

I hear time and time again how that hundred megatonne cap on oil sands production has let oil and gas companies turn back oil sands leases bigger than the province of Prince Edward Island. My goodness, maybe we just haven't got that right. Of course, at different times oil and gas companies paid millions of dollars for those leases. It makes me wonder – what has to change in our rules and regulations; what has to change in our taxation system? – that somebody would walk away from $10 million, $20 million, $40 million because the economic environment has changed so much. Madam Speaker, these are the very kinds of things that the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship could hear about and could maybe make a suggestion to this government on a better way to bring back jobs and bring back wealth producers.

Second to the 20 per cent increase in corporate tax, the number one thing I hear about is the carbon tax, one of the reasons that people are not prepared to invest in Alberta, not prepared to create jobs and create wealth. Madam Speaker, it's layered into every bit of our costs. We live in a wonderful, great big province, you know, but I've heard that everything that gets manufactured or touched here on average gets transported five times. If there's a carbon tax five times layered in and marked up 6, 8, 12, or 20 per cent every time, my goodness, how much longer before our families and communities will be facing even more hardship?

Madam Speaker, these are the very things that the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship should be hearing about, should have the opportunity to at the very least make sure that the NDP corporate welfare is directed to where it's going to do the most good.

The other thing I really liked about the time that I was on the Resource Stewardship Committee was how Albertans were able to be engaged. While I was on that committee as one of the opposition members – I think there were 10 or 11 of us – I received a number of e-mails from around Alberta, you know, the pros and cons of why people wanted us to look at high-speed rail, the pros and cons of why people thought we should look for more hydro opportunities. At the end of the day, when we're here as Albertans' representatives, it's an ideal way for us to take an extra two or three months and get it right. I think that in getting it right, that is where it starts. Let's involve and engage as many Albertans as possible.

I'm so grateful to represent Cypress-Medicine Hat, but probably my greatest joy is that you never know where the good ideas are going to come from. I can't count the number of, you know, young people that I bump into that say something to me that, holy smokes, would be a wonderful idea. Or I'm just out knocking on doors or I'm at a social event, and somebody will come forward with an idea that can really make Alberta better for our families and communities and really give all Albertans an opportunity to be more involved. Again, if we put this out, if we invite experts, if we invite Albertans, if we invite everyone who has an interest, an idea, and some expertise to be involved, this will make this bill better, not just better for the NDP, but it will make it better for all Albertans. At the end of the day, of course, that is why we're here.

Madam Speaker, let's not lose sight of the fact that we are blessed with the job of stewardship of Albertans' tax dollars. The top tax rate now – by the time we add the NDP 15 per cent provincial tax to the federal tax of 33 per cent, some of our people are paying 48 per cent of their income to income tax. At the very least – at the very least – we owe it to them to magnify that money so as many social programs are available and are as widespread as possible.

Of course, with Rural Municipalities here today, it's always a reminder of the challenges that people outside of metro Alberta have. The quality of life is fantastic, the independence is well loved and wanted, but it's hard to provide services. It's hard to do things in a cost-effective way. That's even more reason why we have to give these good Albertans the opportunity to come forward, the opportunity for them to be involved in how their money is being spent, the opportunity for them to be involved in the future of Alberta, and the opportunity for them to be involved in diversifying this economy.

Madam Speaker, I absolutely cheer for this economy to diversify. I absolutely cheer for more opportunities for all Albertans. I was reading a few months back about how something like 300,000 . . . [Mr. Barnes' speaking time expired]

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to support my UCP colleague's motion to refer Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act, to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, where in-depth consultation can occur with experts. Let me start by indicating our caucus's support for diversifying Alberta's economy and expanding our petrochemical sector as a means to do so. You know, as this NDP is learning, there are no quick fixes for diversifying. That's one of the reasons we need to scrutinize Bill 1 carefully.

This bill is proposing to use a mixture of incentives, also called taxpayers' money, to encourage the petrochemical industry to develop in Alberta. The NDP has claimed for years that it is doing wonderful things for Alberta's petrochemical industry, but this bill is its first effort to do so in three years. In the meantime it drove business out of Alberta with, you know, a 20 per cent tax hike, added rules and regulations, and, of course, the carbon tax, all of which had been mentioned by my colleague from Cypress-Medicine Hat. Have investors, Madam Speaker, swarmed to Alberta when other jurisdictions are lowering taxes, cutting red tape, and refusing to impose a carbon tax? Of course not. But having said that, we in the UCP don't want to reject this bill out of hand. Perhaps it has some value, but until we actually run it by, you know, the various businesses that it's aimed at, we just can't know.

So I support sending this bill to a committee for a full review. The Resource Stewardship Committee can invite stakeholders – in other words, those companies wanting to invest in Alberta – to discuss, you know, what kind of support they are looking for to invest right here in Alberta. Now, that all-party committee can consult with stakeholders to determine if the direction set by the proposed legislation offers a common-sense approach that will work for them. Why serve up hundreds of millions of dollars of taxpayer funds before understanding if there are simpler, more basic ways of encouraging economic diversification and development? Let's get in a room with members from all parties, compare notes from our constituencies, and meet with the developers that we are wanting to help.

Alberta's economic development has been stymied for three years, you know, since 2015, because approval processes just appear to be dragging on and on and on. Now, there are easy fixes. We can get everyone in a room to discuss publicly what works best for their industry and, quite frankly, Madam Speaker, just get it done. That's how you really do economic development. We would like to see companies lined up to come to Alberta, for it to be the land of opportunity. They just need a common-sense regulatory environment, infrastructure that will sustain their projects, and fast government processes. These are the things that are out of their hands but are in the hands of government. Since government has not listened to them, let's use the committee forum in order to do this.

Now, the standing committees and legislative policy committees have proven their worth time and time again. We in the UCP want to use them more to connect with Albertans and to help inform government about the most efficient ways to move forward. This bill, for the reasons I have already outlined, is a perfect example of one that contains concepts we need to run by the affected industries first.

Since I'm talking about the value of committees, if we're going to refer Bill 1 to Resource Stewardship, we have to unfetter the committee to allow it to take as many consultations as it wants to do. Our UCP members have been urging the NDP to allow our committee to perform other tasks. The Legislative Assembly has sent them a piece of legislation, of course, for them to review currently. When we're doing these reviews, we often wait for weeks for the public to provide submissions and then for presentations to be co-ordinated. Now, during those times the UCP members have been seeking the ability to continue to meet with many stakeholders, which, of course, is very, very important. We're sending in requests to the chair to speak with the committee. We'd also like to initiate our own consultations on issues pertinent to the committee.

Let me provide an example. The Resource Stewardship Committee has a lineup of six organizations, some of which have now been waiting for three years, Madam Speaker, to meet with its members. Our UCP members have made motions in committee to create working groups to meet with these patient stakeholders. These motions, sadly, have been rejected. We have even made a motion to change the standing orders to allow the committee to perform other business when the Legislative Assembly has handed it a task, because committees can and should be able to multitask, but the NDP members of the committee vote it down, sadly, each and every time.

So let me stress that they're voting against meeting with Albertans. In supporting this referral motion for Bill 1, I just want to take the opportunity to note the importance of changing the standing orders to allow the committee to work on as many different tasks as it wishes while also performing the work that the Legislative Assembly is requesting it to do. The NDP members of committees are using the standing orders, sadly, as an excuse not to meet and won't even let us set up working groups in order to meet.

Madam Speaker, we're stymied. At the last Resource Stewardship meeting the chair immediately shut down our UCP member and would not even entertain his motion. It is time that we free up the committees to truly work on behalf of Albertans, as they did prior to 2015. Let's send Bill 1 to committee because this government is going down a path that industry can help with and correct if we do consult and consult properly. Let's change the standing orders to avoid the NDP, you know, hampering the Members of the Legislative Assembly in listening to Albertans just because the government wants to take its own route on every issue.

Madam Speaker, to get back to the motion to refer Bill 1 to committee, let's not lose this opportunity to take the right steps for Alberta, for the very businesses we want to affect. I, of course, encourage all Members of this Legislative Assembly to support this referral motion.

Thank you for your time.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have to say that that was a very interesting discussion and reasoning that my honoured colleague brought forward. You know, when it comes to making sure that our committees are run appropriately, I have to say that if something is truly not working correctly, then it needs to be addressed. I think that's where my honoured colleague is really trying to go to here.

What we're seeing here in this specific case, though, is that this is a good example of a bill that should move forward to committee. This is a good example of changing the – I'm going to use it again from the throne speech: "Albertans want off the resource royalty roller coaster." I would say that many Albertans would agree with that statement in the throne speech. Why wouldn't we want to make sure we get this right, make sure that we have the experts in place to ensure that we're able to fully review this legislation? I understand, again, that when it comes to our government, they're hesitant to move things to committee because that could potentially mean that it changes the bill from what the intended results would be. But if this bill is not a good bill, then it should be identified within that process, and if you go back to my honoured colleague, he is very clearly stating that right now that process doesn't seem to be meeting the needs of Albertans that are trying to get in front of that committee.

Now, I would say that we've got a government that appears to put committees together with no intent to actually involve MLAs for their feedback on exactly the best route to go. We've got to remember that the energy resource committee, the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, is a nonpartisan committee, like all of our committees are. It's us working together. When the government makes it sound like we're there to stall or take other means to be able to prevent this bill from moving forward, that simply is not the case. What we're doing is that we're trying to move forward a clear idea of direction for this province. Yes – you know what? – our committee can only sit so many times, so we have to prioritize, but if this isn't a priority, then why is it Bill 1? Why is it clearly being labelled as a priority in the throne speech?

It's not unreasonable to say that we need to bring this legislation to a committee. We need to review it. We need to go through the consultation process to make sure that it is done fully. We need to bring experts in to make sure that this has been done correctly – that means sitting with stakeholders – and then ensure that it is done right. You know what? In doing something right for the long term – we're talking 20, 30 years – it is important to get it right. That means that, in the end, we're all involved with that process. Again, nonpartisan. Nonpartisan.

When the government is saying that they are not looking to refer this to committee, that is very disappointing, and to infer that the opposition is not interested in diversifying our economy is also an error on their part. I don't believe that the intent of any one of my colleagues would be to say that we don't want to see diversity in Alberta as well. I think that there are a lot of opportunities we can do and make sure that we hit those opportunities right so that we don't have to go back and correct it or where it costs billions of dollars, like what's happened with the Balancing Pool, where the government went in and made changes. They implemented a carbon tax.

In the end, what we've seen here is massive amounts of money going out to corporations because the government didn't understand all of the interconnections that came with that. That would have come out... [The time limit for questions and comments expired]

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my honour to rise today and speak on my colleague's motion to refer Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act, to the committee. Once again with this NDP government – let me rephrase it. My hon. colleague from Edmonton-Manning said "new diversification party." I think let's go back to the reality; it's like a nondevelopment party, in my humble opinion, but anyway, that's a discussion for another day.

Once again with this NDP government bill we always get, like, this mixed bag of legislation. We don't truly understand what are the ramifications of this bill without going into details with this bill. We do know that this bill includes hundreds of millions of dollars of taxpayers' money. That for sure we do know. This bill uses a variety of incentives with the goal of diversifying Alberta's petrochemical industry and other industries. Should these incentives prove successful, we could see boosted industrial development around Alberta. Alberta's Industrial Heartland northeast of Edmonton, Red Deer, Medicine Hat, and Grande Prairie could benefit. That's certainly a lofty goal, but only if they're successful.

We're not saying that we should not do this. We're just trying to say: let's look into the bill. Again, we do need time to delve into the details of this legislation. Even more importantly, the members of this House need to have the confidence that the companies at which these incentives are aimed actually want and need these incentives. Those are, of course, two different things, Madam Speaker. I mean, needing them to spur investment is one consideration, and wanting them is another one. We have seen the track record of this government when it comes to consultation: Bill 6, minimum wage, and the list can go on. But I want to stick to this bill right now.

When we're talking about hundreds of millions of dollars, I think as legislators we need to make sure that, you know, we take some responsibility for taxpayers' money. We need to make sure that they will do what this government wants them to do, which is what the whole ultimate goal of this bill is, to diversify the economy. As we all know, this government has a terrible track record of understanding the needs of the businesses. In fact, it has made great and alarmingly successful attempts to push business out of Alberta. We've seen that, like, almost approximately close to $40 billion in investment has fled this province because of this government's policies.

This hasn't been lost on Albertans. The NDP is heralding Bill 1 as a piece of legislation that will counter its poor record. All of a sudden this government wants to be the champion of this province after, like, $40 billion has fled this province yet has made clear to investors that their money is not welcome here. I don't know. That's the sense that this government is sending to investors around the world. I know my colleague from Edmonton-Manning is thinking it's funny, but it's not. You know, the contradictions are baffling, hon. member, and if they are baffling to Albertans, you can imagine how much confidence the investors can have in these statements made by this government. In fact, these incentives are spread over the next eight years. Then you really have to see if this bill is actually window dressing.

We're not saying that it is window dressing. I think the government is trying to make an attempt, but it is going to take more scrutiny to determine whether it actually builds a worthwhile foundation for more petrochemical investments. If that's the goal, surely the NDP doesn't mind waiting a few months as the Resource Stewardship Committee reviews it. After all, the NDP has already waited three years before trotting it out despite all the talks about diversification during that time. The government waited three years. Why can't we send it to the committee for a few months and let them involve the stakeholders, let them engage all the industries and see if this is a good thing for Albertans or not?

It is quite ironic that it has a new-found interest in attracting investment. Once again, in this province where we used to attract investors from all around the world, they have left this province. It is because of this government's poor policies. When this government was elected, Madam Speaker, and they immediately hiked corporate taxes, investors simply crossed Alberta off their list, just like, "Not interested," and went wherever it was an investment-friendly zone to them. So when the NDP brings forward a bill in the third year of its mandate and holds it up as the answer to diversification, we are wondering if it is window dressing. What is the real intent of this government? If the NDP's track record was better at keeping and attracting businesses, this bill would have been another matter, right? That would have been another matter, but we've all seen the track record of this government with investment and businesses. That's why we're wondering, like: what is going on here?

Another problem we have with this government is that it loves throwing money around. Our province has, like, a $10 billion deficit. Actually, sorry, it's going to be – what? – $9.998 billion or something tomorrow. We'll find out. That's a little bit better. Now the government is keen to spend $200 million in grants for partial upgrading and $500 million in loan guarantees for feedstock and infrastructure. And there's more. It's topping it off with $800 million in loan guarantees for partial upgrading. So far we're at $1.5 billion. Those aren't large figures to this NDP government because when you're used to $10 billion, $11 billion – I don't know even know – by the time this government is done, $70 billion, $80 billion, $100 billion. I don't know the deficit. This $1.5 billion is nothing for this government, but it is a lot of money for the Alberta taxpayers. Is it a good use of taxpayers' money? That's a good question, and I think the stakeholders need to be at the table to answer that question promptly and accurately, if this is a good use of the taxpayers' money. Perhaps we will find out that this is a good approach by the government.

Right now we have this complex bill before us, and for all the reasons I mentioned, I think it needs some more discussion. I think the members on this side of the House, everybody is working in good faith, saying: let's send this bill to committee. I've personally seen us regardless of what party we represent put aside the partisan environment that is obviously on full display in the House. When we're working in committee, we tend to work together and come to good conclusions. The committee can reach out to stakeholders, as I said, Madam Speaker.

I think it's a good approach to send this bill to a committee. Yes, it does take time but not a lot of time for the scope of things that we're looking at. Like, this government took three years to get to this level, and now all of a sudden a few months is too much time. In my humble opinion it will get the right results. I think it's worth while. The results are very good when the committee is tasked with reviewing legislation. There's no doubt in my mind, Madam Speaker, that this kind of methodical review needs to occur with this Bill 1. Another reason for sending this bill to committee is that the inexperienced NDP government has a poor track record of creating legislation that has unintended consequences.

Madam Speaker, we had Bill 201 by my hon. colleague from Highwood. It was Bill 201, Employment Standards (Firefighter Leave) Amendment Act, 2018, which the hon. Member for West Yellowhead spoke on from the government side, the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville spoke on from the government side, and the hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater spoke on from that side.

I have a copy of the Hansard right now, March 19, 2018, page 207. I was just searching it while I was here. This is from the hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater, and this is their explanation of why the government wanted to send this important bill to the committee.

Now, one thing I would have to say, though, in looking over the bill, is that I think the intent is excellent. However, this isn't something that I've actually had an opportunity to talk to people in my riding about. I haven't had a chance to talk to the fire chiefs that I know on just how this is going to work in practice. I think, you know, that like so many things that come before the House, sometimes the devil can be a bit in the details.

The Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater, basically, is justifying why we need to send Bill 201 to the committee for bigger engagement.

If the government can take a stand on that bill, Bill 201, which is a very important bill alongside this bill as well – I think they're both important – to send it to committee for a fulsome consultation, I'm just wondering: what is the problem with sending this bill to the committee? Why are there two different standards? When the opposition members bring a bill, it needs to go to committee, which will never see the day, but when it's a government bill, then it needs to be pushed right away. I think it's a double standard.

Let's pause, legislators from all sides. Let's do the right thing while we're all here to represent our constituents, represent Albertans, over 4 million people, and investors and send this bill to committee so that we can have a fulsome discussion. Hopefully, this is the best thing the NDP has ever discovered. We will find out.

I hope that we can get the support on this thing. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers wishing to address the amendment?

Seeing none, are you ready for the vote?

[Motion on amendment REF1 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: We're back on the main bill. Any further speakers? The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate on Bill 1 at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Sweet moved, seconded by Mr. Malkinson, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 20: Mr. Bilous]

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak to this? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my honour to rise today in the Assembly to respond to the Speech from the Throne as the Member for the amazing constituency of Calgary-Glenmore. The word "Glenmore" is derived from a Gaelic word, "mór gleann," which means big valley in English, and my name, Anam, is a Gaelic term for soul. Therefore, I'm pleased to say that it is my honour to be the anam mór gleann, soul of the big valley, by being the MLA for Calgary-Glenmore.

Madam Speaker, Calgary-Glenmore is a vibrant constituency that consists of highly active and engaged community members, leaders, and associations. It is known for its beautiful parks, landmarks, churches, synagogues, highly reputable schools, long-term care facilities, and seniors' homes.

The uniqueness of this riding is evident when we look at the Glenmore reservoir. The reservoir is a source of drinking water for Calgarians and also connects various parks of the constituency with each other, namely: Heritage Park, the only living history museum in Canada to represent the western culture; North Glenmore park; South Glenmore park; and Weaselhead/Glenmore preservation park, which is one of the three designated natural parks in Calgary. I'm especially proud of the recently opened Variety park in my constituency as it is an inclusive park for people with disabilities, the only park of its kind in Calgary. I advocated strongly for this park, which was able to open due to the strong support of our government and community members. In addition, the Glenmore reservoir connects the Calgary Canoe Club and the Calgary sailing club, which is run by people with disabilities.

I'm also very proud of our government's southwest Calgary ring road project that not only reduces commuters' time but also helps further strengthen and connect our communities to one another.

The other important places that offer services to our constituents and many other Calgarians on an everyday basis include the Rockyview hospital, Calgary Jewish Centre, SouthWest Communities Resource Centre, and the community associations of Braeside, Cedarbrae, Chinook Park, Kelvin Grove and Eagle Ridge, Haysboro, Oakridge, Palliser, Bayview and Pump Hill, Lakeview, and North Glenmore Park.

In our riding we have a variety of excellent schools that give parents a choice in education for their children. For example, there are Calgary board of education public schools, Calgary Catholic public schools, charter schools, private schools, and home schools.

In the Speech from the Throne Her Honour talked about all the work that's ahead of this government, and I'm pleased to be able to play a part in this. As mentioned by Her Honour, when our government was first elected, we inherited an economy in free fall. The boom had ended, and the bust had just begun. But this bust was unlike others that had come before, different not only for its severity but in how we chose to respond by working to make life better and putting the priorities of regular people first. We did not rest idle or turn our backs on the day-to-day needs of people and families.

After years of overcrowding, hundreds of new schools have either been built or are under construction. More will be announced this year. Furthermore, we introduced a new school nutrition program to help kids get a good, healthy meal to start the day. This year that program will expand. I'm proud to step up today to support our government's initiatives to ensure our children have access to the best education in schools of their choice.

Another factor that makes our constituency so special is the fact that it borders on the Tsuut'ina Nation reserve. There has been a continuous engagement between the Tsuut'ina Nation people and the residents of Calgary-Glenmore. In the Speech from the Throne Her Honour mentioned that when our government was first elected, we made a government-wide commitment to make sure that the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples was respected in all policy deliberations.

Our government is working to keep that promise, and it is paying dividends. Initiatives such as affordable housing for indigenous people living off-reserve, the climate leadership plan, the renewable energy program, the curriculum review, work to better protect children in care, and more have all been strengthened because we engaged with indigenous people and their interests in a constructive and practical dialogue. The government will also take action in response to the child intervention panel so that we can do more to help vulnerable children and to reduce the number of indigenous children in government care.

Madam Speaker, when there is balance, there is fairness, and when there is fairness, there is success. Calgary-Glenmore is a perfect example of this balance, and I'm honoured that I have the opportunity to bring my constituents' voices to this Assembly every day. Fairness is also at the heart of our government, and the Speech from the Throne highlighted this commitment. As Her Honour mentioned, when government fails to work for people, inequality rises. Since coming to office, our government has ensured that Alberta makes progress in building a fairer province.

Our government understands that the people who work across our public sector are integral to the services Albertans rely on. We have already reached practical agreements, with no raises and better job stability, with many labour partners, including teachers and nurses, and a tentative agreement has been reached with our allied health professionals such as paramedics, lab technologists, and X-ray technologists. We have also extended the pay freeze that covers all government managers for two more years while also expanding its reach.

At the same time our government is committed to making sure that taxes on people and businesses remain the lowest in Canada. Building on our work to reduce exorbitant salaries in government agencies, boards, and commissions, work that has seen salaries cut significantly, with some executives seeing their salaries cut to the tune of hundreds of thousands of dollars a year, we will now focus on our postsecondary institutions. We owe it to our students to ensure that funding for education goes where it belongs, the classroom.

Madam Speaker, I'm very proud to stand up for my constituents and work with our government to protect continued funding for our schools, hospitals, and the services on which Albertans rely. Those times are gone when the poor and the most vulnerable have been left behind in recoveries of the past. In this time of economic recovery our government makes sure that this recovery works for everyone. Therefore, our government is working hard to make sure that every Albertan can live to their fullest potential by supporting our most vulnerable neighbours through improving income support programs. In addition, a review of the persons with developmental disabilities program is being conducted to determine how best to support persons living with disabilities.

Madam Speaker, families, children, and seniors are at the centre of Calgary-Glenmore, and I'm proud that our government has made the well-being of children, families, and seniors as the centre for our government as well. In the Speech from the Throne Her Honour talked about the fact that hundreds of thousands of families have received financial support through the Alberta child benefit and the enhanced Alberta family employment tax credit. Further, more affordable housing for people has been built and better supports for seniors have been introduced. Our government also pioneered a new, affordable, high-quality child care program so that the paycheques of new parents go further. I'm looking forward to working with our government to expand that program this year.

I am very proud to be a voice for the residents who work day and night for the success and sustainability of the communities in Calgary-Glenmore. As a resident of Calgary-Glenmore I want the best for my neighbours. I want to ensure that my constituents are employed with good jobs, that can support their families, and enjoy the quality of life that makes Alberta the best place to live in. I'm looking forward to participating in the steps our government will be taking to further diversify our economy and build a more resilient future. As more workers are finding more jobs in manufacturing, tourism, and renewable energy and our economy is looking up, now is the time to help more Albertans find jobs in new areas of opportunity.

There will be three bills aimed at diversifying our economy, with the first bill focusing on the diversification of the energy sector. This will help diversify the markets our energy resources can access via pipeline. We will also do more to add value to our resources right here at home.

Madam Speaker, in conclusion, community building is my passion, and I will continue working hard to strengthen communities in Calgary-Glenmore. The word "community" can be seen as the combination of communication and unity because, to me, the key to a strong community is communication and unity. As such, I will ensure that my constituents are continuously engaged and involved in this process to build the best vision for our constituency and communities.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of questions and comments.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise and speak in this House in response to the Speech from the Throne, which, with all due respect, really appears more than anything else to be a government trying to position themselves for the next election. I assume some of that probably comes from the reality that recent polls show Albertans expressing a significant amount of distrust for this government. They have no faith in this government's ability to stand up for them or their interests. As a matter of fact, I think a recent ThinkHQ poll revealed that 55 per cent of Albertans feel that the NDP has had a negative impact on their life since taking office.

However, whatever their motivation underneath may be for this throne speech, let's look at some of the details. I will say that I'm pleased and thankful to see that a throne speech delivered on International Women's Day gave credit and recognition to the women of our province and indeed to the world. I truly believe that the women of our communities should be celebrated and acknowledged and cherished for all that they do because many of them do really make a sincere and strong contribution to our province, to our communities, and to our lives. I just really want to take the opportunity also to express my own personal appreciation and thank you to all the women of our communities.

I would like to take a minute also to look at the portion of our throne speech that refers to the need for Alberta energy to get to Canadian tidewater. This has been an important issue and a bone of contention for many Albertans, who look with confusion, quite frankly, at the flip-flop that this NDP government has demonstrated. Leading up to and in the beginning of this NDP government's tenure, they were adamantly opposed, quite frankly, to the oil and gas sector as a way to build prosperity in this province. They wanted anything and everything but that and looked for every opportunity to disparage the oil and gas industry, the wealth that it produced, as somehow something that was tainted and, actually, the people that contribute to it.

However, in the throne speech, after months of sitting idle on the Trans Mountain pipeline, all of a sudden now they've come out and they speak about their new, united conviction that a new pipeline to a Canadian coast is a must, has to be built, and how the land lock must end. It sort of sounds like something out of a Conservative playbook, but let it be. Let it be. I'm glad to see that they now agree with us and have stated in the throne speech that billions of dollars have in fact been wasted and lost, that thousands of good, mortgage-paying jobs have been tossed out the window, that money that should have been in the pockets of hard-working Albertans – actually, the phrase in the throne speech was "Canadians." But, really, it's Albertans that earned that for the benefit of the rest of Canadians. In fact, all that wealth has made its way where? South of our border, to our competitors.

Indeed, I find it fascinatingly interesting that the Globe and Mail has pointed out just recently that there are thousands and thousands of U.S. lobby dollars spent to shut down Canada's economy and prosperity, $40 million in fact to hundreds of enviropolitical activists who shut down Canada's economy, who disparage our industry and our product and the people who produce it and, in fact, have brought a great deal of loss to the Canadian economy.

But it isn't just the lack of NDP support for the pipeline that has sent business south of the border; it has been NDP erroneous ideological policies that have also hurt business growth and sent investors out of this province by the billions. Minimum wage has hurt businesses, the carbon tax, labour compliance laws, WCB's lack of clarity. All of these things and multiple other reasons have contributed to investors picking up and leaving or, worse, going out of business. There are many restaurants in this province that have gone out of business.

The sunflower seed plant in southern Alberta finally had enough, closed up shop. Where did they go? They moved their operation to the U.S. and set up, and they're going to continue the same thing in the U.S., where the environments are better. In my riding, when I first came to office, Rahr Malting was looking at doing a major, major expansion here in Alberta to produce brewing malt. Because of endless regulatory compliance issues, their company finally decided to forget it. They went to the U.S. and set up a whole new plant there, and they're producing it in the U.S. We grow the best barley. The production should be here. But, no, now our barley is going to get shipped south of the border, and they'll produce it there. Not to mention all of the oil and gas companies, the oil and gas service companies, the oil and gas manufacturing companies who have closed up shop or have been severely curtailed, laid off hundreds and hundreds of people. There are literally acres of industrial shops and warehousing in the Red Deer region that are closed and empty because of the policies of this government.

Regarding the dispute with British Columbia, which has triggered an attack on Alberta's jobs, this should have been dealt with immediately. This is why Albertans need a government that will stand up for their jobs, for their economy, for their prosperity, and for their future.

I'm actually glad there's at least an opposition that stands up and speaks. The United Conservatives have been offering common-sense solutions to everyday Albertans and to the real problems that we've got. They're actually interested in common-sense, real solutions. We're committed to defending Alberta and its industries against a host of ideological policies not only from this Alberta NDP but from their cousins in British Columbia and then also from their friends in Ottawa, who have threatened our long-term viability. Not only that; our prosperity and, in fact, the honour of what Alberta produces as a product and a service enriches Canada. We have governments that are more interested in virtue signalling than in providing good jobs for people and taking care of them and providing the kinds of fundamental, system-wide policies that allow industry to prosper and to grow.

The statement that this government has been vigilant in defending workers is just simply not accurate, and Albertans know that. To date very little has really been done. Albertans can only hope that the talk is going to be more than just talk. I will say, though, that time is ticking, and the Alberta NDP should really have taken up UCP's calls for these things and come back to the House early in February for an emergency debate on these issues, with what's happening in B.C. Perhaps we could have even had this resolved by now if we had done that.

There's been a considerable amount of confusion also of late regarding the plan to balance the budget depending on pipeline construction. That's like gazing into a crystal ball. This government early in its tenure was so against using resource money to employ Albertans, and now it's done a complete one-eighty. It's no wonder Albertans are confused. Under the section where you discuss how things are looking up so great and so wonderfully, there are a lot of Albertans that find that very hard to believe, a lot of Albertans who are very confused by that kind of language. They struggle in their own reality to see that actually happening.

The speech talks about new jobs, yet we still have over 165,000 unemployed Albertans, 26,000 more than when this government took office. Last month alone 10,500 jobs were lost and replaced by part-time gains and low-paying jobs that don't really pay the mortgages. There are currently nearly 43,000 unemployed youth in Alberta. The youth unemployment rate is 13.1 per cent, the highest outside of Atlantic Canada. There were 92,000 fewer payroll jobs in Alberta at the end of 2017 than there were before the recession came. Calgary currently has the second-highest unemployment rate in Canada's major cities, and this government tells us that everything is looking up and beautiful. This government doesn't acknowledge that Edmonton is currently tied for the third-highest unemployment among Canada's major cities. People are making less money. They've got fewer job prospects. Things are not going well at the personal level for many of these people who've had to take much lower paying jobs.

Then if you still want to think that Albertans should believe that the tough times are behind us, the reality is that 73 per cent of businesses surveyed have repeated that their costs have increased due to the carbon tax and all kinds of other things. They're actually predicting about 60,000 fewer jobs by 2019 due to the increase in minimum wages across the country and, as I've said, the carbon tax and labour compliance and some of these other things.

The tourism industry is reporting that it's struggling. The government wants to tell us that it's all up and beautiful. Well, except for the mountain parks, which are the only bright spot in this province right now, the tourism industry is down. The Hotel & Lodging Association has been very clear about the fact that their room rental rates are down with the increased costs. We have figures from them that indicate that the carbon tax levy on room rates impacts them by about $300 a year. That's $30,000 that they're paying for a 100-room hotel just on that. They're saying, quite truthfully, that the industry is not healthy, that they're not actually making money, and that things are not looking good for them.

I just had a conversation last week with a major high-density housing builder in Calgary. They're struggling. They're hardly able to sell a house at what it costs them to build it, and they're selling very, very few houses because things are not up. Jobs, housing, tourism, hotel and lodging, restaurants, and construction. Also, I know guys who were making lots of money in construction who are actually trying to build furniture in their garages now to survive. You know what? The government wants to say that things are looking up, looking up, looking up. Well, we're so far down the hole at the moment with these policies that it's going to be a long ways up.

Albertans themselves are not convinced that the tough times are all behind us. They're not thrilled about where we're at, and they're still struggling. What we should be talking about in this province is that we really need to continue to work hard, we need to dig down deep, and we need to do what Albertans do when things are tough and make things better. To just sort of try and present some fairy tale that everything is getting better and all is well: just not true. C.D. Howe Institute said that the NDP plan to boost the province's minimum wage will probably lead to a loss of 25,000 jobs long term. This is a stark reality. Things are not necessarily looking up, and we can't pretend that Albertans don't realize this reality.

I don't dispute that we would all like to see things looking up. I think the members on the opposite side want to see things looking up, but that's not the reality we're at yet. We may get there at some point, but the truth is that we are not actually there yet. To try and somehow just keep saying it enough times and hope it's actually going to come into existence isn't being very realistic. I really believe that this government does want to do what's best. What I dispute is that the government's disastrous ideologies are not working, ideologies for which they did not have a mandate, no matter how much they want to try and say that they did. Most people didn't know what was coming.

I believe also that all of the members on the other side of the House are starting to actually believe that these disastrous ideologies aren't working; otherwise, why the flip-flop, the complete 180 a year before the general election? Or is it just electioneering? Why is it that I can go through the Speech from the Throne and pick out multiple places where it sounds just like they came out of a Conservative handbook? Very strange indeed. Electioneering. It's a sign of a desperate government that's willing to say anything to try and get re-elected.

As much as the stark reality of this economy stares us in the face, I think it's time that we begin to actually look at the future with some realism, with some real confidence instead of fairy dust and determine to build a more resilient economy, one that puts us back on the path to economic security, one that builds fundamental and systemic policies instead of picking select businesses to have as bragging points. The reality is that Albertans are looking for better days and hoping for it, but they're not going to find it with this government, and this throne speech won't be able to deliver it to them in the end.

Once again, with all due respect, as I read through the throne speech, I just see an NDP government positioning themselves for the next election instead of listening to real . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you again, Madam Speaker. I want to thank all participants for the excellent debate we've had this afternoon and move that we adjourn the House until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:42 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good morning.

Let each of us reflect or pray and take the time to understand and prioritize our duties in order that we can properly fulfill the requests of our constituents and indeed all Albertans who count on our dedication, our service. Let us listen. Let us try to understand before being understood.

Please be seated.

Privilege

Misleading the House

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, as I indicated yesterday in the House, I intend to rule on the purported question of privilege raised by the Official Opposition House Leader on Tuesday, March 20, 2018.

With respect to the formalities of the purported question of privilege my office received notice from the Official Opposition House Leader on March 20, 2018, at 11:12 a.m. of his intention to raise a question of privilege under Standing Order 15. The member has satisfied the requirement in Standing Order 15(2) for notice to be given to the Speaker at least two hours before the opening of the sitting. The notice did not, however, contain many specifics, and in the future I would respectfully request members to include more details of their question of privilege in the written notice. By doing so, we might well be more efficient in the utilization of this Assembly's valuable time. I would note that the debate on this matter occurred on March 20 and 21, and the arguments can be found on pages 259-261 and pages 293-294 of Alberta Hansard for those dates respectively.

As to the facts of the matter before us today, the Official Opposition's purported question of privilege has to do with an alleged deliberately misleading statement that the Minister of Environment and Parks made on March 19, 2018, in the Assembly. Specifically, in a question period exchange the Official Opposition House Leader asked whether the Minister of Environment and Parks will "come and talk to the people of Rocky Mountain House and Sundre about the future of the Bighorn." The Minister of Environment and Parks responded to the question that "I met with the mayor of Rocky Mountain House a couple of weeks ago and discussed the economic development and tourism opportunities that are available through the regional advisory council's advice." This exchange can be found on page 197 of the March 19, 2018, edition of Alberta Hansard.

Hon. members, this is not the first time during the 29th Legislature that a purported question of privilege concerning an allegation of deliberately misleading the Assembly has been raised. I ruled on a similar matter on December 12, 2016. As members may recall, a question of privilege raising these types of allegations is a very serious matter. Such a question purports that a member has made a statement to deliberately mislead the Assembly and, as such, is treated as a possible contempt of the Assembly.

One authority treating these matters as possible contempts is Erskine May's Treatise on The Law, Privileges, Proceedings and Usage of Parliament, 24th edition, as discussed on page 254. Another is the third edition of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice on page 85.

The second aspect to note regarding purported contempts of this nature is that there is a test for deliberately misleading the Assembly. This three-part test was referenced on Tuesday in the Official Opposition House Leader's arguments which are available on page 260 of Alberta Hansard for that day.

The test was devised by the former Clerk of the New Zealand House of Assembly, David McGee. An explanation of it can be found in the third edition of his book, Parliamentary Practice in New Zealand, on pages 653 to 654. Quoting McGee, there are three elements to be established when it is alleged that a member is in contempt by reason of a statement that the member has made: the statement must in fact have been misleading, it must be established that the member making this statement knew at the time that the statement was made that it was incorrect, and in making it, the member must have intended to mislead the House.

Hon. members, as I noted in my ruling of December 12, 2016, which may be found on pages 2508 to 2509 in Alberta Hansard, I would like to point out that the three-part test is very difficult to meet. In his arguments on Tuesday the Official Opposition House Leader stated that the Minister of Environment and Parks did not, as she had stated, meet with the mayor of Rocky Mountain House. Instead, he alleged that the minister encountered the mayor in passing in a hospitality suite in Edmonton. He further claimed that this did not constitute a formal meeting, and as such the remarks of the minister "showed contempt for this Assembly because she chose to answer a question by referring to a meeting that did not take place, thereby misleading this Assembly." These comments can be found on page 260 of the March 20 edition of Alberta Hansard.

The Government House Leader in his submissions noted that he was advised that the Minister of Environment and Parks met with the mayor of Rocky Mountain House for about 10 minutes at an event coinciding with the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change conference in Edmonton. He further claimed that there is no dispute as to whether a discussion between the two individuals took place. Rather, there is a difference of opinion as to whether or not this encounter between the minister and the mayor was indeed a meeting. He argued that: "There may be legitimate differences of opinion as to whether this meeting or nonmeeting was sufficient consultation on the matter being discussed. Those are legitimate differences of opinion, but they do not constitute a contempt of the House." You may find those arguments and the various authorities and precedents that the Government House Leader referenced on pages 293 and 294 of yesterday's Alberta Hansard.

Considering the facts of this situation and applying the McGee test to the matter at hand, it would be very difficult to conclude that the minister's statement about a meeting was in fact deliberately misleading. The minister claimed that she met with the mayor of Rocky Mountain House while the Official Opposition House Leader stated that although the minister and the mayor did encounter each other, they did not in fact have a meeting regarding economic development as the minister indicated in her response.

This situation is similar to the one facing Speaker Kowalski on November 24, 2003. In that instance Speaker Kowalski concluded that the then Minister of Infrastructure's response left "considerable room for subjective interpretation and ambiguity." Speaker Kowalski relied upon a reference that is now found on page 516 of the third edition House of Commons Procedure and Practice.

In most instances, when a point of order or a question of privilege has been raised in . . . response to an oral question, the Speaker has ruled that the matter is a disagreement among Members over the facts surrounding the issue. As such, these matters are more a question of debate and do not constitute a breach of the rules or of privilege.

Members may find Speaker Kowalski's ruling on pages 1803 and 1804 of Alberta Hansard for November 24, 2003.

Paragraph 494 on page 151 of Beauchesne holds that "it has been formerly ruled by Speakers that statements by Members respecting themselves and particularly within their own knowledge must be accepted."

Hon. members, the matter before the Assembly today also involves a disagreement among members as to the facts. The question of what an interaction must be in order to qualify as a meeting is subjective. It's not a matter for the Speaker to adjudicate. Accordingly, because this is simply a disagreement as to the facts, I find there is no prima facie question of privilege, and this concludes the matter.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 2 Growth and Diversification Act

[Adjourned debate March 21: Mr. Gotfried]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Good morning, hon. members.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by the Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 2, Growth and Diversification Act. Here we go again. We have come full circle on AITC, the Alberta investor tax credit, and CITC, capital investment tax credit. Now we also have an interactive digital media tax credit, IDMTC. Too many acronyms.

This new tax credit would provide a 25 per cent tax credit on eligible salaries and wages with an additional credit being available for companies who hire employees from underrepresented groups. Wow. Maybe my East Indian friends living in Silicon Valley, who are facing H-1B visa issues in the U.S.A., might move to Alberta, Madam Speaker. I wish so. Currently there are roughly 50 interactive digital media studios in Alberta, with approximately 500 full-time employees. These employees earn over $70,000 per year on average, and the industry contributes roughly $80 million to Alberta's annual GDP.

Madam Speaker, I do question the wisdom of targeting this sector. If Alberta is lagging behind B.C. and Quebec in terms of developing our digital media sectors because we have not previously had a tax credit, how are we going to catch up if we implement a similar program and are already so far behind? Overall on tax credits other provinces such as B.C., Manitoba, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia have found success with some version of a small-business venture capital tax credit. Tax credits can be good stimulus, too, if they are not too onerous on the red tape. According to the government the CITC has already stimulated more than $1 billion in capital projects for manufacturing, processing, and tourism infrastructure.

With respect to the AITC it remains a first-come, first-served funding pool. As of March 16, 2018, there was still $1.397 million approximately in unallocated money, roughly 5 per cent of the total initial amount, Madam Speaker. We know that AITC was supposed to be $90 million over two years and that it was later changed to three years and that now it offers a 20 per cent tax credit to investors. According to the minister last year at estimates:

For the AITC as of March 31 of 2017 there were 126 eligible business corporations, two venture capital corporations. By sector 87 per cent were research, development, and commercialization of proprietary technology and products and processes.

I would like to get a formal update on those numbers one year later.

The Minister of Economic Development and Trade further went on to say last year:

I do need to say that we don't release the names of the companies that are receiving these funds. They're not posted.

That's on page EF-666, Alberta's Economic Future, April 10, 2017, in Hansard, Madam Speaker.

But just one month ago, on February 21, 2018, the same minister put out a press release.

Tax Credits Spurs Growth in Northern Alberta.

Alberta's north will see new jobs and business expansion with support from the Capital Investment Tax Credit (CITC) . . .

Seven Generations Energy, a liquids-rich natural gas developer, received conditional approval of a $5-million tax credit to build a natural gas processing facility in the Montney Kakwa River area. The project will create about 150 construction jobs and dozens of direct permanent jobs once operational.

The minister went back on his words here, Madam Speaker. He said before that he cannot release the names, but then he did a campaign-style announcement on the same subject which he said is supposed to be confidential. The minister went back on his word here, and he ran a press release announcing who got the tax credit. He went on in the press release – I want to quote this.

New projects include building a cannabis manufacturing and processing facility, a skydiving facility, a craft brewery and tap room, a biofuel facility and a glass factory. Expansion projects include upgrades at a precision machining shop, a trailer manufacturer, a metal manufacturing plant and pulp mills.

In small communities people know who these businesses are, Madam Speaker. The minister was not going to reveal who got the money, but now he has. He wouldn't tell me or the public a year ago, but now he is telling everyone. So Albertans suspect that the NDP minister is picking winners and losers. Why not give industry the opportunity to come before the Legislature themselves and tell us why this wonderful Bill 2 and the AITC and CITC are so important to them?

In that light, Madam Speaker, I would like to move an amendment. I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 2, Growth and Diversification Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 2, Growth and Diversification Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

I have the requisite copies, that I'm passing on to the page. I'll wait for you to call me to speak again.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. If you could just wait until I have a copy of the amendment.

Hon. member, your amendment will be referred to as RA1. Please continue.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The reason I am moving this amendment is that in parliaments around the world bills get referred to committees all the time. I should know that because when I went to the Mother of Parliaments in London, U.K., that's what I learned about.

If the grants are so important to the recipients, we should let them come here and tell us why the programs the ministry is expanding are essential to grow the economy and the future of Alberta. Coming to the committee will allow the members to ask important questions of the department on the bill, questions like: why wasn't recommendation 7.4 of the Energy Diversification Advisory Committee included in Bill 2? That particular recommendation, 7.4, reads, "Seek the permanent extension of the existing accelerated capital cost allowance for manufacturers such as the petrochemical industry to provide certainty to those interested in investing in the downstream."

Madam Speaker, as you know, the United States is going to eat our lunch on this particular business. The Trump budget cut allows an accelerated capital cost allowance, and some say it is more powerful than a corporate tax cut. So there is merit in referring this to the standing committee.

Not very long ago in this House, actually this week, the Member for Lethbridge-East spoke. I'm just looking at the Hansard from March 19. The member said:

Clearly, there is a good case to be made that we need to take a closer look at changing the standing orders to allow for further committee-initiated reviews. I would note that there is a standing committee of the Legislature, that being the Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing Committee, whose mandate is expressly to review proposed standing orders. I believe that that committee is the appropriate venue for the discussion of this proposal to take place.

For that reason, I have an amendment that I would like to put forward.

That's how that particular Motion 501 was referred to a standing committee, Madam Speaker. If that argument was true two days ago, it's still true now, today, and tomorrow.

This particular bill that we are talking about, Bill 2 – there was a lot of talk in the throne speech. If this government truly believes that it's an important bill, we have to actually strengthen the bill. That's why I moved this amendment.

Madam Speaker, I look forward to the debate on this amendment, and I also look forward to the discussion in the committee.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to the referral amendment? Oh, 29(2)(a) first. Sorry.

Now is there anybody wishing to speak to the referral amendment? The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak, of course, against this amendment. You know, it's important that the government get on with the agenda of managing the affairs of the province, and, of course, sending this bill to committee would certainly interfere with that.

You know, it's interesting that the member opposite for Calgary-Foothills implies that sending this bill to committee will in fact enhance the work of this Legislature. But it's interesting that when his leader, his current leader, was a cabinet minister in Ottawa, he and the Harper government, of course, wrote a 200-page manual on how to use committees to obstruct the work of the House of Commons. I don't know if the members opposite, of course, have a similar document available to them now. I would anticipate that many of them probably wouldn't have the attention span to read a 200-page document.

Mr. McIver: Point of order, Madam Speaker. I'm sorry to have to call this.

The Acting Speaker: Point of order.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Point of Order

Language Creating Disorder

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Madam Speaker, under 23(h), (i), and (j). I appreciate that the hon. minister considers himself a comedian, but the fact is that insulting the intelligence of other members of the House, I think, really falls directly under words that would disrupt the order in the House, "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member," and I think it pretty much qualifies as "abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." I would respectfully ask you to insist that the minister withdraw those remarks.

The Acting Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Yes, Madam Speaker. I've been feeling a little feisty this week, and I realize that I perhaps got a little too excited in my previous comments. I withdraw and apologize to the members opposite. However...

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, thank you. Just a reminder. Today's a great day; it's budget day. So if we could just keep the tone of the House down and have a respectful debate, that would be appreciated. Please continue.

Mr. Schmidt: Madam Speaker, my point stands, though, that the work of diversifying the economy of Alberta is urgent. You know, later this afternoon we're going to hear the Minister of Finance deliver the budget speech. We're all eagerly anticipating that. In that speech I'm certain that the Minister of Finance will probably talk about the importance of building an economic recovery that will last, an economic recovery that serves the needs of working people.

We've been through the worst economic downturn in a generation, and we know that things are starting to look up. We've created 90,000 new jobs, and every economic indicator that can go up is up, Madam Speaker. But we also know that there's more work to do, that not everybody in Alberta is feeling the positive effects of this economic recovery. That's what this bill is intended to do. That's why I think it's not wise to refer this bill to committee, because there are thousands and thousands of people out there in Alberta who are still not feeling the effects of the economic recovery. It's important that the government get on with building a recovery that will last, that brings up everybody, all regular Albertans. We cannot afford to spend time in committee deliberating whether or not the proposals brought forward here will be good for the people of Alberta because we know that it'll be good for the people of Alberta. The people of Alberta can't wait for this Legislature to continue its deliberations. The people of Alberta want this government to take action, and that's what we're doing by bringing forward this bill. So I encourage all of our members to vote down this amendment to refer this bill to committee.

I want to go on, Madam Speaker, if I can for a moment, to just outline some of the points of this bill that require this Legislature to deal with this urgently so we can get on with building an economic recovery that's built to last.

One of the first things that the member opposite noted is that we provide supports for a digital media tax credit similar to Quebec. Quebec, of course, has a burgeoning video game industry. Now, Madam Speaker, this may come as a surprise to you. I know that I don't look like the kind of person who would play video games, but I do. I have been an enthusiastic player of video games ever since the age of four or five, and I know that the Member for Edmonton-Decore is also an eager video game player.

A number of the video games, of course, that I've enjoyed over the previous few years have been built right here in Edmonton by a studio that many are familiar with called BioWare. BioWare, of course, has created a number of video games that have been tremendously popular and tremendously fun to play. I have spent many hours playing Dragon Age: Origins, which was a tremendous video game. I spent many, many, many hours playing the Mass Effect trilogy, Madam Speaker, and I just want to put it on record that I thought the ending of Mass Effect 3 was just fine.

Madam Speaker, just to go a little bit deeper into the catalogue of BioWare games, people who have been playing video games for a while will remember, of course, that BioWare also created the Knights of the Old Republic series of video games, which were a classic and probably the best Star Wars video games that have ever been made. No Star Wars game since has really come close to capturing the essence of the Star Wars universe quite like the Knights of the Old Republic video games. But my personal favourite BioWare game was one that didn't receive a lot of commercial success. It was a video game called Jade Empire. It was created for the Xbox, and it was really BioWare's take on a kung fu movie.

I see, Madam Speaker, that you are eagerly anticipating me to speak to the amendment. Trust me; I will get there. Let me just say that Jade Empire, of course, came out in 2004, I believe. It's been 14 years. I'm still eagerly anticipating a sequel. Maybe this digital media tax credit will spur the people of BioWare on to create that sequel. I can only hope because that was, of course, by far my favourite BioWare video game, and I've been waiting for the sequel for a number of years.

But the digital media tax credit is not the only piece of this legislation that must be passed urgently so that we can continue to build an economic recovery that is built to last. You know, this act includes a number of proposed changes that directly impact the postsecondary system in our province in a very exciting and positive way. This legislation includes supports for 3,000 new tech spaces in Alberta's postsecondary system that will increase educational access for learners across our province. Our goal is to spread the 3,000 new spaces to a number of institutions from across the province, meaning that this program will support accessibility and educational growth in urban and rural areas.

Madam Speaker, it's our intent to fund 200 of these spaces during the upcoming 2018-2019 academic year if this bill passes the Legislature. That's one of the reasons that I urge our members to vote down this amendment to send it to committee, because time is of the essence. We need to do the work of identifying the 200 spaces that will be created for the upcoming 2018-2019 academic year. Of course, we know that committees don't work quickly enough to get this work done so that these spaces will be in place for the 2018-2019 academic year.

In addition to those 200 spaces for the next academic year, an additional 550 spaces will be made available in the 2019-2020 school year, with 750 spaces being added each of the following three years, meaning that by 2022-23 all 3,000 new tech spaces will be available to students in Alberta. This bolsters our existing strong programming in the tech sector currently being offered by our province's postsecondary institutions.

When the Minister of Economic Development and Trade and I made this announcement at NAIT, Erin Wilson, a recent graduate of the NAIT instrumentation technology program, who is currently at NAIT training for the mechatronic skills competition, said: I believe it's very important for students to have access to a diverse range of programs to build and update their skills; this program will create more opportunities for students like me to train and grow and hopefully improve the economy.

We've also heard from industries across the province, and we know that access to a highly skilled talent pool is one of the determining factors that high tech firms consider before making investment decisions. Zachary Fritze, the CEO of Promethean Labs, said at this same announcement: new technology brings global opportunities closer together, and they affect every sector of our economy; Promethean Labs uses satellite imagery to help agricultural companies be more efficient; here from our head offices in Edmonton we bring our technology to the world; we need to support students locally to help prepare for the incredible job opportunities in tech in Alberta, right here; that will help us ensure that our province continues to be a global leader today and tomorrow.

Madam Speaker, we also made a similar announcement in Calgary, and at that announcement Mary Moran, the CEO of Calgary Economic Development corporation, said: this proposed expansion of tech spaces at postsecondary institutions is fantastic; I'm very impressed on how quickly the government moved on this. I want to emphasize that. She said: I'm very impressed on how quickly the government moved on this.

Of course, this referral amendment that the Member for Calgary-Foothills has made would severely disappoint Ms Moran and the Calgary Economic Development corporation and prove that perhaps government isn't as nimble as the people of Alberta would like it to be. I don't understand why the Member for Calgary-Foothills insists on bogging down the work of the Legislature by sending everything to committee.

But anyway, Ms Moran went on to say: Calgary Economic Development corporation was very vocal about the gap that Alberta has in the tech talent post-Amazon; we want to help them in conjunction with postsecondaries, and they've done a great job of responding; this is needed both short- and long-term; they're taking long-term vision in how they can adjust the economy; we are really behind the eight ball in high tech; in terms of software engineers we're behind the rest of the country; we have to get caught up because we are a centre for industries, whether it's energy, transportation or logistics or agriculture, and we don't have the talent to support the digitization of these industries; Alberta's assets in terms of ensuring that tech graduates stay here are our quality of life, our high cost of living, Rocky Mountain playground; safe communities are a big lure for people that want to work here.

I'm sure that she meant to say "our low cost of living," Madam Speaker. Vancouver and Toronto are having difficulty retaining people because housing is too expensive, commutes are tough, housing is tough.

We're committed to technology and digitization of our sectors and showing talent that this is a destination. This won't happen overnight, but it will happen. That will happen, Madam Speaker, unless this Legislature decides to send this to committee and delay the passage of this bill and make Albertans continue to wait for tech talent that we could have right now instead of dithering about this in committee. The Growth and Diversification Act will take unprecedented steps to increase our existing talent pool so that our province can support local start-ups and established tech giants. We know that additional spaces are needed to keep pace with the demands of the new economic reality, and we know that our postsecondary graduates are highly skilled and coveted by businesses across North America. So this bill would be a win for students, a win for industry, and a win for our provincial economic future.

To ensure that our graduates are entering the workforce as quickly as possible, the initial 200 spaces may potentially be supplemented by the delivery of a number of short-term skill development opportunities. Potential areas in which short-term skill training may occur include 3-D modelling, new media design, predictive analytics, and industrial network cybersecurity. If implemented, these skill development programs could help Albertans, particularly those with existing credentials, to acquire tech-related skills to aid in the transition to permanent employment.

Additional programs could be developed in areas such as information and communication technologies, clean and renewable technology, artificial intelligence, and quantum computing. In addition to increasing access to tech programming, we will also be adding supports to ensure that education remains affordable. New scholarships will be created by this legislation to encourage students to join the high-tech workforce that will sustain our province's economy now and in the future.

Together with the advice of our government partners, including Indigenous Relations, Status of Women, Community and Social Services, we will work to ensure that underrepresented groups, including women, have access to exciting, future-focused career training. A portion of these new scholarships will be focused on women interested in entering tech-related training programs. As with the 3,000 additional spaces, the scholarships will be rolled out over a five-year period.

Madam Speaker, again, providing these urgent and desperately needed financial supports for our students just highlights the urgent nature of this bill and reinforces the fact that we shouldn't vote to send this to committee, that we should deal with this legislation right here today in the Legislature.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you so much, Madam Speaker. The minister's speech was interesting. Time is of the essence, he said. Time is of the essence to ensure various things. More particularly, the message I heard loud and clear from the minister was: future creations of video games coming right out of here in Edmonton so that he can play them. That's loud and clear the message.

But I really heard, Madam Speaker, and what I'd like, probably, some further clarification on is his comment: time is of the essence. There's no time to study this. There's no time to bring in witnesses and ask what they think or give suggestions on perhaps how to strengthen this piece of legislation.

But time is not of the essence for this minister and his government when it comes to firefighter leave. Time is not of the essence when it comes to supporting a motion to do more than one thing in committee, which he also touched on, saying that committees already have lots of stuff on the go. It's interesting, Madam Speaker, that this government doesn't support being expedient in any other area other than things on their own agenda, and it's disturbing that they don't appreciate that there are constituents in constituencies other than their own that would like to have a say, that would like to have an impact on the legislation that will be imposed on them by this government. This government continually barrels through with their ideological agenda without consultation.

They consistently get in trouble from the public over these matters, like Bill 6. With Bill 6 having been one of the first pieces of legislation that really got them into trouble in regard to consultation, you would think that this government would have learned a lesson, Madam Speaker. That's clearly not what's happened on bills 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, prorogued back one, two, three, four and so on and so forth. That's clearly what's happening here with Bill 2, the Growth and Diversification Act, that is meant to in essence encourage other sectors to invest and participate in the Alberta economy, probably because one of our major industries has been so poorly damaged by this NDP government's policies.

I commend efforts to diversify, Madam Speaker. That's not what this is about. This is about the Minister of Advanced Education specifically citing that time is of the essence. He refused to support an amendment to refer this bill to committee for future study but, on the other hand, won't support a motion to actually make committees more expedient. It's, like, I think, to the average person not going to make sense. It doesn't make sense.

Furthermore, they're not interested in being expedient in assisting firefighters in our province, especially the volunteer ones, guys that put their lives in their own hands to help out their communities very cheaply.

Madam Speaker, time is of the essence. Time is of the essence to remove this government. Time is of the essence to bring back investment to Alberta without government handouts. Time is of the essence to refer this bill to committee and have it properly studied. I want to hear from the NDP's friends as to how much this bill is needed. Who's going to benefit and why from this piece of legislation? What is the impact on Alberta families of this piece of legislation? That's what I want to hear.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the referral amendment? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to rise and speak in favour of this referral motion. I rise to speak to my colleague's referral motion on Bill 2, the Growth and Diversification Act. This bill is yet another example of the classic NDP world view and misguided economic philosophies that we've seen for many years now. This government and their ideological allies believe that every problem arising in economics and society can be solved with the meddling hands of government.

Madam Speaker, I can tell you that I support growth and I support diversification, but I'm not sure that this bill will effectively promote either. For the almost three years that we've seen this government in action, what we've seen is the exact opposite of what this bill claims to promote. What does promote growth? I would argue that it's lower taxes, less regulation, and a government which doesn't treat wealth-creating private enterprise like the enemy. How about diversification? I would posit that diversification will only come when innovators and entrepreneurs have access to capital.

It is well apparent that much of what this government has done, in fact, has sent both domestic and international investors fleeing for other jurisdictions. In fact, Madam Speaker, $36 billion in the first two years has fled this province according to the Conference Board of Canada. With Alberta business reeling from the destructive policies of the NDP, what have they decided to do? Grace us with yet another government program to try and reverse some of the damage that they have caused. Are you friend or foe to Albertans if you first create the problem then seek to remedy it?

Madam Speaker, I would encourage the government, if they truly want growth and diversification, to reverse their antigrowth and antidiversification policies: scrap the carbon tax, for one; reverse their 20 per cent increase in corporate tax; and remove the shackles of regulation that they have placed on free enterprise in this province. Albertans have already suffered the consequences of NDP legislation that was not completely thought through.

Let's support this referral amendment and let the committee process try and make some improvements and get our professionals and people who understand these industries into a room to talk about what the best practices are. A fulsome vetting process would be the second-best approach. The best approach would be an economic impact study, which never seems to get done by this government.

Madam Speaker, I would also point out that this isn't the NDP's first shot at this. In 2016 they passed the Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act, and while that legislation may have its merits, it certainly hasn't performed the economic miracles that the NDP might have expected it to.

A large part of this bill rests on support for industry through tax credits. Tax credits can incent economic activity, but I would question whether they will come anywhere close to making up for the disincentives created by the NDP's other policies. Boutique tax credits have rarely ever been shown to outperform across-the-board tax reductions. I would also question the wisdom of the sector-specific credits that this bill extols. When we start handing out favours to specific people in specific industries, we start picking winners and losers. Just look to the east, to Quebec, to see what has happened with Bombardier for many, many years.

Madam Speaker, if you want diversification, you should let the market decide which areas to diversify in, not the government. Market has the best ability to be able to identify what is a growth industry and what isn't. We have a huge industry, we have a huge economy, especially in first-world countries, and Alberta certainly fits that model. These market forces are so difficult to predict that even people who have studied it for years have a difficult time in doing that and getting it right. If you want to use tax credits, then let's have them available to all sectors, not those that the front bench opposite us happens to grace with their favour on any particular day.

Foreseeing the potential problems with these types of tax credits doesn't require a crystal ball; it only requires time and thought. Let's take the time to consult and weigh this legislation a little more before proceeding. We can do that by referring it to committee now.

We also need to look back at the way tax credit programs have performed in Alberta in the past. Were the objectives of the past legislation met? Did the relief get to those who needed it the most? What kind of returns did we see? Before we utilize the power of government, we should see if these industries can attract private capital and succeed on their own. There was a day not too long ago in this province when the Alberta advantage gave our companies a leg up against those in other jurisdictions. I hope, along with Albertans, that this government hasn't completely removed that unique support.

Some other points that I'd like to point out, Madam Speaker, are that the AITC is a first-come, first-served funding pool. As of March 16, 2018, there was still almost $1.4 million of unallocated money left in there, roughly 5 per cent of the total amount. Because the budget has not been released, the total funding being committed to the IDMTCC has not been reported, so we need to give this time to be able to actually find out from that budget what that report will say. If Alberta is lagging behind B.C. and Quebec in terms of developing our capital media sectors because we have not previously had a tax credit, how are we going to catch up if we implement a similar program and are already so far behind?

One thing that we found that this government has a lot of support for is these superclusters. The federal government is also in support of these superclusters. What they've realized is that there are certain areas that have their natural advantages over other areas. Like, for instance, in my riding Taber has actually been granted one of the superclusters' funding for that area to be able to do a beta test for a supercluster. Anyways, we have a lot of high-heat units down in that area, and it's a natural fit for being able to have this supercluster down there. The problem, Madam Speaker, is that if you were to try to apply that to, say, Fort McMurray, they don't have the heat units up there, obviously, and it just wouldn't work. What we've seen is that certain areas have their natural advantages, so it makes sense for those areas to start growing and diversifying in those areas.

However, for us to say "Quebec is doing it" or "B.C. is doing it" is not really a fulsome way of looking at the whole picture of this because it doesn't really indicate whether or not we have the natural ability to be able to compete with Quebec or B.C. Just because other provinces offer these incentives doesn't mean that we have to. Alberta has a history of success in taking our own approach to the economy.

I think that rather than saying that we don't like that approach – and I've heard the members opposite say that we've messed up for 44 years. I would have to say that a lot of them have moved to this province because of the opportunities that they were given, and for them to say that is completely disingenuous, Madam Speaker. I hope that just because something is being done in another jurisdiction doesn't mean that we have to follow suit and do it here. We might be behind the eight ball on that. That doesn't mean that we have to keep on doing it.

I think that Albertans are a little concerned about how disingenuous the NDP sound when they only send opposition motions and bills to committee and refuse to do their own.

I think it was a little telling when I heard the Minister of Advanced Education just minutes ago say, Madam Speaker, and I quote: we know this bill will be good for all Albertans. Now, the question that I have. I don't know what crystal ball the Minister of Advanced Education has, but we constantly ask: have you done an economic impact study? What we are constantly told is: no, we have not.

I had an opportunity to speak to the Minister of Labour a couple of times, talk about this exact issue. One of the things that she said to me that also I found very interesting was: we have not done an economic impact study, but we will assess as we go. Those were her words. The problem is, Madam Speaker, that the value of an economic impact study is that it provides us with an opportunity to be able to figure out: what are the pros and what are the cons of any piece of legislation that is brought forward that will be binding on Albertans and binding on our wealth creators and entrepreneurs in this province? You know, unfortunately, I don't understand why this government has not implemented that very important tool, an economic impact study. They have refused to do that.

Because of that, some of the things that I've heard people around Alberta say in describing this government are: a government of unintended consequences. Look, I'm not trying to be rude. I'm just telling you what I've heard people say, and this is not an attempt on my part to be glib in any way. But I think we need to take a look at what people are saying, especially if you're in the government right now. You need to say: "Okay. Well, why are they saying that? Why are they saying that this is a government of unintended consequences?"

I think the reason why is because when you have a policy come forward – when I talked to the Minister of Labour about this issue of minimum wage and she was set, dead set, on making sure we get to $15 minimum wage, I asked her. I said: have you done an economic impact study? She said: no; we're going to assess as we go. I gave her the studies, Madam Speaker, about other jurisdictions that have actually increased minimum wage quickly, and the studies are pretty clear that for every 10 per cent you increase the minimum wage, you actually increase unemployment anywhere between 4 to 8 per cent amongst young people. The studies are actually – look, these are not studies where people just say: you know, this is what I think is going to happen. This is actually looking back on what they've done.

So how do we know whether or not it's a good policy or a bad policy? Well, we can now look back and take a look at what's happened. We are now sitting at 13.1 per cent unemployment rate amongst young people in this province. At what point are we going to be in a situation where this government says, "Enough is enough; we need to stop punishing our young people"? The reason why I point this out is because right now we're speaking, Madam Speaker, about taking this legislation, sending it to committee, properly vetting it, and hoping to be able to get the proper iteration that would be good for all Albertans.

Now, when the minister, I believe with good intentions, said that he believes – no, he didn't say that he believes. He said: we know this bill will be good for all Albertans. I believe he thinks that. I believe that he actually believes that. The problem is that he doesn't know, and unless he actually did and their government actually did an economic impact study, Madam Speaker, I don't know how they would know. Even an economic impact study will only give you the best direction going forward. I have to say that I am deeply concerned – deeply concerned – that this government refuses to do economic impact studies. They refuse to consult in a proper, fulsome way with the people who are in the industries, that have been there for 10, 20, 30, 40 years in these industries, that know best, rather than actually saying that they know best.

There's a level of arrogance when people say, "We know best," rather than saying: "We need to ask the people of Alberta. We need to ask the people in these industries. We need to ask the people who are in the trenches." Once we do that, we can get a great discussion. We can have a great opportunity to be able to figure out, really, what will be best for Albertans.

I have no doubt that, you know, if the NDP were graded by intentions, they would get A's. I don't have any doubt that they have the best of intentions. But, Madam Speaker, this government is not being graded on their intentions; they're being graded on the outcomes. They're being graded on how well they do for Albertans. To tell you the truth, the evidence is not looking so good for them at this point.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I really appreciate my colleague reasoning very reasonably with the government benches here to support this motion. I really appreciate that. He has very, very, very valid points about the big picture, so he's not just looking at this bill, but he also said how we can actually help Albertans to get back to work. He said that he did some work with the Labour minister and gave them input on the impact of minimum wage policy and other labour policy amendments. I really appreciate that.

Now, I would like to ask him to also talk about the hesitancy on the side of the NDP here, why they can't support this referral motion and how they can justify the referral of Bill 201. If you can share your thoughts on that, I would appreciate it.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate my colleague for the question. I think it's a very important question because it strikes at the heart of the issue here, and that is that, unfortunately, we've seen for almost three years now with this government a propensity to believe that they are right when it comes to reshaping Alberta. You know, we've heard it many times where they believe that there has been a real travesty that's happened in Alberta for the last 44 years and that it's their responsibility to set things straight. Now, I appreciate that they may think that and believe that. I would even be willing to accept it if the outcomes showed it. So far, though, all we've seen in the last three years is a fleeing from this province of foreign investment.

Remember, Madam Speaker, that when they talk about how, you know, we did so bad or so wrong in this province during the '90s, there was a 10-year period, actually, during the '90s – I think it started around '93 – where there was more foreign investment that came into Alberta than Ontario and Quebec combined. Because of that what happened was the trickle-down effect. That foreign investment that came in: we had small businesses that were able to start because of that. We had more jobs, obviously, because of that. We had almost the size of Lethbridge moving into this province every year. That kind of growth is a good thing. And you know what? To tell you the truth, this has been a great blessing to me and my family and something that I'm very grateful for. We used to call that the Alberta advantage.

Madam Speaker, I have to say that their approach to reshaping Alberta and saying that Alberta had it wrong for the last 44 years: I don't see the evidence to show that. I see instead people from all over Canada and all over the world coming here because of the many opportunities that Alberta provided for them. To change that and to say, "We know a better approach," I'd like to know: what is the evidence? Where is the example in other jurisdictions that you're pulling that from? If it's, you know, coming from Bernie Sanders's ideas, I don't think that's going to work because he hasn't proved it can work.

Wherever they are bringing their ideas from, I think that they need to bring forward the evidence. If it's corporate welfare, we've tried that in this province. It cost us $2.4 billion in the past, Albertans' taxpayer dollars going down the drain. That's money we had to pay back. It was difficult for us to do that.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the referral amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Yes, I do rise to speak to the referral amendment. I'm going to speak against referring this particular bill because while I don't think it's perfect, I think that it's important that we get on with it and ensure that we don't send the wrong signal to investors who would seek to create jobs in our province, who would seek to make investments in our province. I think that even the government would acknowledge it's been a very difficult time when it comes to attracting investment capital in this province. I think they bear some pretty clear responsibility for creating uncertainty, for putting roadblocks in the way of investment, for all the changes big and small that have driven capital out of Alberta. Those are true things that have happened. At the same time, I think that, broadly speaking, the provisions that are contained within Bill 2 are to be lauded, and I think that the investor tax credit, in particular, is one that deserves an opportunity to go ahead and to continue to evolve as this bill does.

Again, we in the Alberta Party caucus do have some concerns, which we will raise through the course of debate. We may bring some amendments once we find ourselves in committee. But as it stands now, I think we would rather see this bill move forward and move into the committee phase, and we can have a more detailed discussion on specific clauses and aspects of the bill at that time.

I think what the minister had talked about is worth noting. When you have feedback from organizations like Calgary Economic Development that are in support of these sorts of initiatives, when you have Amazon not choosing Alberta primarily because we did not have enough tech talent in this province, I think it's a wake-up call. I think it's sobering. I think we all feel very strongly about what our province has to offer in terms of quality of life, in terms of cost of living, and in terms of the talented people who we have in this province.

Unfortunately, the talented people that we have are not the right sort of talent. We have a lot of engineers, and I hope that we continue to have a lot of engineers. I think we need to grow that number and improve our focus on the STEM areas. This bill has provisions that, I think, if done properly, will help us get there.

I do have concerns about the timeliness of some of these things, in particular the 3,000 new technical training spaces. If we're to play this forward, what I see from the bill is that of the 3,000 seats we'll have 200 new ones in the first year, 550 in year '19-20, and then 750 new seats over the next three years. Now, I realize we can't just flick a switch, create new seats, and have 3,000 software engineers roaming the streets of Edmonton, Calgary, and rural Alberta within a couple of years. However, I do question the timing, and I do think that there should be a sense of urgency here, especially because this is not creating new seats in new programs in every case; it's simply adding seats to existing programs in many cases.

I think there is a real opportunity and, frankly, a missed opportunity here for the minister and for the government to move more quickly to create new seats in the shorter term. Of course, once you've created that training spot, the students still need to complete the training. They then need to get working, and they need to gain some experience. I think that when Amazon is talking about hiring 50,000 software engineers and related professionals – and we're far short in terms of our numbers – realistically, this plan would have us not get there for another decade. I think that when we're talking about referring it to committee and slowing things down, as the UCP would do, frankly, we need to go the other way. I think we need to move more quickly, and we need to find our way to creating the right sorts of skill sets and doing that in very short order, Madam Speaker.

As we talk specifically about the CITC and the AITC, the capital investment tax credit and the Alberta investor tax credit, what I'd like to see from the minister – perhaps we can hear it through debate at some point – is some report on what we learned from evaluating the first iteration of this, not just pure numbers in terms of how many dollars have gone out the door but which jobs have been created, what kind of return have those companies generated, what sorts of companies have in fact produced jobs as a result of these tax credits. Now, I recognize that it's a year and that except in rare circumstances we're not going to see massive returns in short order, but I would think that that would be something that the ministry is doing. I imagine it is something they're doing; if they're not, they certainly should be. But that's something I think they should be bringing before the Legislature.

On the interactive digital media tax credit, again, it's something that I think is interesting if Alberta wants to be in this sector. One of the questions I have is about the definition under section 1(d) of an interactive digital media product. What I'm curious about is whether that definition of an interactive digital media product,

(iii) is capable of presenting information in at least 2 of the following forms:

- (A) text;
- (B) sound;
- (C) images,

includes services. Are we only talking about software products, or are we talking about services, things like Facebook or Netflix? Would this help nascent companies, which could turn into the next Facebook or Netflix? Would it help those sorts of companies? Again, those are questions that I hope to see answers to as we move forward, and I hope we'll move quickly as we go forward here.

Just another, I guess perhaps, point on the unmanned aerial systems. While I absolutely support and I think there is some real potential and some already very interesting things happening in southern Alberta with unmanned aerial systems research, much of what we are challenged by is actually not provincial jurisdiction but federal transportation jurisdiction, federal regulatory jurisdiction. What I'm actually curious about is: what problem does this bill solve that we currently have? What hindrance exists that this legislation would seek to remove? Again, I'm quite curious to hear from the minister. Do we even need this section, or is it something symbolic so that the government can trumpet the fact that they purportedly are doing something when, in fact, it may not even be necessary? We've seen some of that, you may be surprised to hear, in my opinion, here with Bill 1 as well.

Finally, as we talk about the scholarship piece, which falls under the technical training provisions, again, I'm a big, big supporter of that. What I'm surprised to see, though, is actually what's not there. There seems to be a lack of an explicit focus on women and underrepresented people in STEM programs. It's not embedded in that aspect of the legislation where we have the diversity and inclusion enhancement program, which is included in the investor tax credit and the digital media tax credit. That is something, again, that I would like to hear from the government, whether they envision including diversity provisions within the scholarship because, frankly, that's a great challenge. There is, I will say, a tremendously, deeply unfortunate and, in my view, unacceptable lack of diversity in particular within the STEM disciplines.

I'll even tell you a story. My 13-soon-to-be-14-year-old daughter was offered an opportunity to do some mentorship work, women in STEM. She actually said to my wife, who is so accomplished that she has more letters after her name than she has in her name, quite a remarkable professional woman in STEM herself: "But, Mom, there are so few women in science and math. Should I even bother going down this path?" It hit me – right? – because, boy, my daughter does take after my wife. She's very good in school, very focused, and she enjoys the STEM disciplines. That was a very sobering moment. There is such a lack of diversity. She's interested in computer programming. She's decided that she's going to teach herself Python over spring break. I'm just going to stand here and talk about my daughter. That's actually kind of fun. That's something I'm awfully proud of. She would be deeply embarrassed that I'm doing this right now, but Hansard is forever, so too bad, sweetie. I'm very proud of both of my girls.

As we look at expanding scholarship opportunities, I think it's very, very important that we have explicit support for women, for indigenous peoples, for minorities of all kinds, for people of lower income, for people who don't ordinarily take advantage of or participate in this, not from lack of ability but from lack of opportunity. So I think that would be something that I'd love to hear from the minister, from the government as to whether or not that has been contemplated here. If it hasn't been, I can assure you that

I'll bring forward some amendments during committee to make sure that it is

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under 29(2)(a), the Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise, of course, under 29(2)(a) to offer some comments on the previous speaker's remarks. Certainly, first of all, let me commend the Member for Calgary-Elbow for stating that he would vote against this. I appreciate very much the fact that he recognizes how important it is that we get on with the work of diversifying the economy and building a recovery that's built to last and built to work for regular Albertans and that he recognizes the importance of this legislation in accomplishing just that. He did pose some questions that I'd like to hopefully answer in my remarks, particularly around the allocation of the tech spaces.

One of the things that I didn't get the opportunity to speak to in my remarks because of the time limits is the fact that the bill will create a talent advisory committee. We will strike a panel of experts who are working in postsecondary education, in high-technology industries to provide the best advice to the government on how to allocate these programs so that by 2022-23 we will have wisely allocated the 3,000 tech spaces that we're proposing to create, so that we achieve the maximum benefit from supporting the development of high-tech industries in this province and support people who want to go back to school or go to school in the first place, I suppose, and be trained to work in this high-tech sector. I hope the creation of this talent advisory committee will of course allay some of the member's concerns about how the government will be allocating these spaces.

With respect to the creation of the scholarships, of course, as I noted in my remarks, Madam Speaker, as you'll well remember, some of the money that we are setting aside for scholarships will in fact be targeted to underrepresented groups such as women. Our government believes strongly in gender equality, of course, which is demonstrated by the fact that we have near gender equality in our caucus, a remarkable achievement in the history of Alberta electoral democracy. You know, we continue to support gender equality through a number of initiatives, and we will continue to do that work with setting aside some financial aid for women who want to pursue education and work in the STEM sectors.

You know, what I would note, what I did find interesting in the comments, which should be concerning to the people of Alberta, Madam Speaker, is that, of course, the member is supportive of the government's initiatives to create 3,000 tech spaces and scholarships that support people who want to pursue this kind of education, particularly people from backgrounds who are underrepresented in the tech spaces, but I had a quick review of the Alberta Party shadow budget, and it's interesting that the members opposite put not one additional dollar in the Advanced Education line – not one – which is remarkable. Isn't it remarkable that somebody who says that he would support the creation of 3,000 new tech spaces, who says that he would support the creation of scholarships to help people from underrepresented demographics to pursue education and work in the tech sector – that as soon as he's asked whether or not that support extends to actually spending money on creating those things, the answer is no. It's remarkable.

I'm curious to know how the member thinks that he can support the creation of 3,000 new tech spaces and $7 million worth of scholarships if he's not going to put any money into it. You know,

I know that postsecondary institutions do the good work of educating people, but they don't do it for free, Madam Speaker. Students who want to pursue this kind of education need financial aid to pursue this kind of education, and we need the money in the budget to do this.

Of course, we've announced through Bill 2 that we will put money in the budget, and I would encourage the member opposite to actually put his money where his mouth is and develop a shadow budget that shows financially his support for these positions.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Speaker's Ruling

Question-and-Comment Period

The Acting Speaker: I just want to remind all members of the House, before we move on, around 29(2)(a). It is comments and questions, but as you all know from past rulings, typically you leave time for the person to be able to respond to the questions. So I would just encourage all of you as you are speaking under 29(2)(a) that if you are asking and commenting towards the speaker, you stay relevant to what they have spoken about and as well give them time to respond to whatever it is that you are commenting on.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the referral amendment? The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I wish to speak to Bill 2, Growth and Diversification Act, which I believe should be referred to committee to be looked at further to possibly conduct an economic study and look at the repercussions of this bill. I think we all agree on both sides of the House that the economy is not doing very well and that this Growth and Diversification Act is an attempt by the government to stimulate the economy and get Albertans working again. I do believe that this government's heart is in the right place and that they want to see Albertans succeed, and while they may be trying to accomplish that through bills and regulations and through using corrective measures, much more work needs to be done. There's a huge concern across the province regarding employment, and while these measures may be good ones, we also know that many Albertans have given up looking for work while some others, who may have been fortunate enough to have found a job, are working for less money than they've previously earned.

This bill does not seek to address the current and future labour shortages in the tech sector, one that is near and dear to my heart. I worked in the IT industry for well over 30 years. I was afforded a comfortable living because of the industry. I got a chance to advance my education, I worked in other countries, and it provided me the opportunity to travel and, moreover, to build a business and build shareholder value for my investors and, of course, to create employment for several Albertans.

Part of the bill seeks to increase job activity in digital media production. While I'm all for investing in the future of the province, there has to be a balance created first. Creating sector-specific tax credits is all fine and dandy, but when there are other policies that have been implemented to hurt businesses in Alberta, we have to wonder why those policies aren't being looked at first. While this bill shows the government's goodwill, the truth of the matter is that we need to work towards getting back the Alberta advantage. However, as the government looks at implementing Bill 2, how will it help when increased labour costs, followed by the carbon tax and other recent labour policy decisions, have had a detrimental impact on our already economically weakened economy?

The UCP is very concerned about the job loss in Alberta that's been caused by this NDP's policies. We're worried about the future of our children and our grandchildren. We're worried about how these policies will affect young Albertans. But without rescinding other hurtful ideological policies, implanting a tax credit will only offer somewhat of a Band-Aid solution, perhaps only temporarily. If the economy isn't nursed back to health with care, the consequences of this bill, potentially the only purpose, could distort the market or encourage tax credit subsidy dependence. Unfortunately, while I can see the government's intent to make things better and give them credit for trying, these tax credits will not be able to offset the damaging fiscal regulatory tax policies that government has already introduced. These policies, as I mentioned before, undermine competitiveness in the attractiveness of investment capital.

In November 2016 the NDP introduced Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act, which they passed that December, and it came into effect in January of 2017. Two tax credits were brought in, the Alberta investor tax credit and the capital investment tax credit. The Alberta investor tax credit has a budget of $90 million over three years and offers a 30 per cent tax credit to investors who provide venture capital to Alberta companies with fewer than 100 employees in specific areas such as IT, clean technology, interactive digital media, game productions, postproduction visual effects, and digital animation sectors. Bill 2 will essentially be an addition to this tax credit by providing an additional 5 per cent to investors who meet certain inclusivity and diversity requirements.

However, on the government website it states that almost $1.4 million is still available this year even though the fiscal year ends in just a few weeks. This says one of two things, that the government's anticipated uptake on this credit was too narrow or too sector specific or that the credit was not effectively or efficiently distributed to investors. Either way, something needs to be adjusted to improve success.

I'm not quite sure if the government is bringing in Bill 2 to try and fix or alleviate some of those problems, but it would sure be nice to see an economic analysis done or some statistics on how well the program actually worked. Since they've not already released those details, I'm sure that it will not achieve what they expected.

The capital investment tax credit has a budget of $70 million over two years and offers a 10 per cent nonrefundable tax credit of up to $5 million. This was for businesses who make an eligible capital investment of $1 million or more. These companies must be involved in manufacturing, processing, or tourism infrastructure. The government claims that this tax credit stimulated more than $1 billion in capital projects throughout Alberta.

Bill 2 creates the digital media tax credit, and even though it is clear that the credit will provide 25 per cent on eligible salaries and wages and an additional credit being applied for companies who hire employees from underrepresented groups, we still will not know what the government's funding commitment will be until the budget details are released here this afternoon.

This bill was created to initiate and address current and projected labour shortages for computer and information technology professionals – software designers, programmers, and developers – and will add 3,000 new tech spaces in postsecondary institutions over the next five years. While that may be a positive step, my question is: is this really enough? When I say that, I don't mean financially. I mean that with all the other hurtful ideological policies that this government has also put in place, will this bill and others be enough to bring back the Alberta advantage? Further study of these things really needs to be undertaken.

Madam Speaker, Albertans do not know the answer to that question. They want the disastrous government policies repealed. They really need jobs today, not 10 years in the future. We need to do more than just what this bill offers. In the last three years we've known that the current NDP policies have not helped Alberta. While they may be trying to accomplish that through bills and regulations and through using corrective measures, on which more work needs to be done, there is a huge concern across the province regarding employment. While these measures may be good ones, we also know that many Albertans need employment today. Our caucus will do the very best to make sure that happens in short order.

Now, just as a bit of an aside, I listened to the minister talk about his expertise in video game playing, or what I call alternate reality. This is the real world. These are real dollars. These are real people. Albertans know there are consequences in a real world. My colleagues and I, with all sincerity, see the government's intent to correct the economy, but what we need is not to rush through legislation just to make a correction but to take a good look at Alberta's economic problems as a whole. I therefore believe that this bill should be referred to committee to do the good work for Albertans. Our caucus is committed to do their best to make sure that that happens in quick order.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the referral amendment? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this morning. I've been listening intently to the debate. It has been riveting, to say the least, and it's a pleasure to be able to speak to the referral this morning.

You know, we've heard a number of interesting things, particularly from the Minister of Advanced Education, around anything from our attention span to the importance of utilizing the processes that are available to members of the Assembly to be informed about decisions that the Assembly makes. Now, I understand he made some allegations about those processes being a slowing down or a clogging up of the Assembly, but nothing could be further from the truth with respect to Bill 2 and the desire to have the appropriate information for members on this side of the Assembly. Just because a bill goes to committee doesn't mean it needs to go there forever.

Now, I know that the government has a habit of sending off pieces of legislation that they don't like, particularly from private members. They go to committee forever, and they wind up dying there. Sometimes they get brought back to life because the government has made a poor political choice, so they reincarnate a piece of legislation, and then they send it back to committee to kill it again. But that's not how it has to work. I know that the government has used committee to make it work like that, but the committee process can be utilized to make legislation as strong as possible.

Now, we saw just two days ago the government send a motion to committee because it needed more study. This particular motion would have had very little in the way of costs to the taxpayer. It would have perhaps increased the number of times that a committee would meet in a year, but it may not have, in fact, in that the groups that would like to come to the committee could have potentially tagged onto other meetings, and there may have been a zero impact.

What I can tell you is that there is no way that there would be millions and millions and millions of dollars associated with the cost of that motion. The government decided: we need more study; we need more study of this motion. My sense is, Madam Speaker, that the reason why they wanted more study is because the Official Opposition proposed the idea and it was a politically expedient way for them to deal with that particular motion so as not to have to vote against the use of committees.

Here before us today we have a referral motion that is looking to refer a piece of legislation to committee. That committee would be able to meet expediently and before the end of this session quite likely make a recommendation back to the House and would be able to accomplish all of the glorious goals that the minister of postsecondary claims that Bill 2 is going to deliver on.

Now, with respect to content of Bill 2 I might just add that there are a number of very, very positive things in this particular bill. I would say that while I have not fully decided if, in fact, I support the legislation or if I will be voting against the legislation, what I am certain of is that I would like to be able to get a much better understanding of how Bill 2 will be applied and hear from stakeholders and experts, both on the pro and con sides of this particular issue, so that we as a Chamber would be able to make the best available decision in front of us.

As I said, it's quite possible that I will be supporting Bill 2, but I have yet to make my mind up. Unfortunately, in the current context what we have is the minister of postsecondary telling us that everything is awesome and that everything is good when you're part of the government. But we don't have the opportunity to hear from others with respect to: what exactly will this bill do, and how will it be applied?

Now, if there's one thing I can assure you of, Madam Speaker, it's that I don't want to be a part of the minister of postsecondary's team. I will acknowledge that from time to time I might support an idea that he would propose, but on balance that happens less often than more often. It is possible that with respect to Bill 2 we will be happy to support it, but I wouldn't say that we're there yet.

One of the reasons why we're not there and I'm not there is this government's track record on the economy. We all know that Bill 2 has some lofty goals with respect to diversifying the economy, but we also all know that this government has a terrible, terrible, terrible track record on managing the economy. If you speak to CFIB, they will tell you that 92 per cent of business owners are not confident that the Alberta government is committed to improving the business climate.

I can tell you this. When I speak to the outstanding constituents of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and business owners in that region, one of their significant concerns is around the way this government has handled the economy. Any time that the government proposes legislation like we see before us today, I think that we should all have pause.

You know, Bill 2 has a number of concerns around it with respect to the scope and: have we struck the right balance? I'm not saying that we haven't, but I'm also not a hundred per cent convinced that we have. This particular tax credit and the scope to which it reaches could use some further discussion to make sure that we have in fact done that.

One thing that I do know when I have spoken with industry, particularly with respect to Bill 1 – and I understand that we're debating Bill 2 here – and reached out to some industry folks: their first and foremost goal is to have an economic environment, a regulatory environment, and a government that understands that the best way for the government to diversify the economy, to strengthen the economy is to create the environment for those that do the job creating to do what they do best.

What we've seen is the government create a disaster in the economy and now, trying to put tax credits and other pieces back together, to be, like: "Hey, look, everybody. Everything is okay, and we're actually putting this back together." Yet we are here in many respects because of their lack of fundamentals on the economy.

The government, in this case for Bill 1 and Bill 2, is ultimately going to be engaged in the process of picking winners and losers, and they're going to be picking and playing favourites with different sectors of the economy. Some will benefit, and others will not. Any time that we have the government doing that, it poses significant risk to the taxpayer. It poses significant risk to the way that our economy can recover, and it poses risk with respect to the actual costs to the taxpayer.

Now, I also want to be clear that I think it's important that our technology sector is growing. I think it's important that many areas of our economy are growing. But are government incentives the best way to do that? That ultimately is the question that we need to be asking ourselves. Making our province more appealing for investment for our tech sector is great, but is incentivizing them or offering tax credits the best way that we can make the environment for our tech sector grow? Is it the best path to do that?

You know, there was a time not that long ago when Alberta was thriving, when Alberta was the envy of the world to invest in. At that time Alberta had the highest median wage in the country. People from across Canada and literally around the world flocked to Alberta for the quality of life, that was unparalleled. The question I have for you, Madam Speaker, is: did they come here for government programs, or did they come here because of the opportunity that existed because of a growing economy?

I think that if you asked the vast majority of those Albertans, it was not because the government was incentivizing business or the economy, but it was because our economy was growing, and opportunity was on the increase. We had a business climate that encouraged investment of private dollars from all around the world, and Alberta was a solid place to invest, a safe bet for return on investment. Now we have a government that is needing to incentivize when what we really need is a government that's going to provide a structure for that activity to flourish again.

That's, again, why the referral is so important. We need to have the facts around: is this the best path forward or not? I know that some of my other colleagues have highlighted the fact that this particular tax credit was not fully utilized on its first go-around. Now, I'll be the first to acknowledge that the vast majority of the tax credit certainly has been utilized, but there is approximately $1.4 million that's still available. Committee would be a great place for us to be able to discuss whether or not the government has the scope correct, whether or not the amounts are correct instead of just listening to the Minister of Advanced Education saying that everything is A-okay, to actually find out if the costs that Alberta taxpayers are going to incur because of this credit are in fact going to do exactly what they claim.

Since the NDP has come to power, they have horribly mismanaged the economy. Alberta business owners and investors – you know, it comes as no surprise to folks on this side of the House and should come as no surprise to them as well that the vast majority of the constituents in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills that I speak to feel attacked by the government, particularly with respect to the way that they have imposed the carbon tax; increased income tax, personal tax, corporate tax; increased the regulatory burden; increased, too, a number of challenges in the labour market with respect to major, significant changes in how businesses interact with that piece of legislation and the costs that have been incurred.

At one point in time we had the opposite of that. I know that the good people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills really feel like this government is imposing death by a thousand cuts. Perhaps each single item in isolation is not the end of the world, but when you pile up that big, big pile of damage that has been imposed by the NDP, the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills are feeling that.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would also like to thank my hon. colleague from Olds-Didsbury . . .

An Hon. Member: Three Hills.

Mr. Panda: Three Hills?

Mr. Cooper: Yeah. Don't forget Three Hills.

Mr. Panda: Yeah. The second-best riding after Calgary-Foothills.

I really thank him for standing up to speak in support of my referral amendment, and I want him to continue sharing his thoughts with us on the big picture and on the economic impacts of this government's risky ideological policies. It seems that his constituents are feeling the same way as Calgary-Foothills residents, so I would ask my hon. colleague to talk about the rise in unemployment and debt and deficit and so on.

Mr. Cooper: Why, thank you to my colleague from Calgary-Foothills. I was so engaged in the previous remarks that I actually had some more to add, so I'm glad that you've offered me the opportunity.

You know, I think, as I speak to constituents in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and, in fact, around the province that not only have so many of them been directly hurt and their businesses impacted – the government has created an inhospitable investment environment so that investors and business owners are almost feeling a little bit bitten, if you will, by this government – but while they show some sense that they can see now the government recognizing that they've made a mess of it and that they're trying to do something in the form of Bill 1 and Bill 2, et cetera, it's almost like they're concerned to stick their hand back through the fence, afraid that the government is going to lash out at them again. They're apprehensive about this government having control of a $52 billion economy. We've continued to see this concern that the folks on the front lines have with respect to the direction that the economy is going.

You know, it's almost like this, Madam Speaker. The government is trying to undo a lot of the damage that they have created in the economy and the investment climate. I would suggest that perhaps this legislation wouldn't be necessary if the government hadn't done its best to get us in such a bad spot in the first place. While the resilience of Albertans remains strong and while I believe that the best years for our economy are ahead of us, it's not because of that government and some of the projects that they are trying to implement. It's because of the mom-and-pop shops, small-business owners that have tightened their belt, that have done their very best through a very difficult time, in spite of the government, to make sure that when the investment climate is right again, they will be there to support the families.

They will continue to be the job creators that they have been, and the entrepreneurial spirit of Alberta will remain in spite of the fact that the government has done its very best to destroy the playing field. And now we've heard the minister talk about trying to level the playing field. It's a playing field that they tilted in the wrong direction and are now just trying to get back to level. What Albertans are hoping for is a government that puts the playing field back in their favour, not in the favour of a select few but in the favour of creating an investment climate and an economic framework that puts Albertans first.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the referral amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to Bill 2, the Growth and Diversification Act, which indeed carries a lot of important principles. Nobody can disagree with the kinds of efforts that this represents.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I just want to clarify that you know we're on the referral amendment, not the bill itself.

Dr. Swann: Yes. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. Just clarifying. Thank you.

Dr. Swann: Sorry. I meant the referral amendment. I would like to speak to that after making some preliminary comments about what we have seen so far, which suggests that, once again, we're going to provide subsidies to business rather than look at alternative methods of stimulating the economy. In other words, we're still picking winners and losers in this province.

There are other ways to stimulate. Frankly, a lot of my colleagues and constituents are concerned that further distortion in the market doesn't promote more investment in Alberta. It creates the sense that there is a lack of competition, that there is a lack of equity in terms of companies' abilities to compete on a level playing field. That's the bottom line.

Efforts are there, but the question is: what's the impact? It's more and more of a concern the more money we see going out the door and the higher the debt load is getting to be in this province.

Just to summarize, there are three different paths of this bill. Schedule 1, which is the lion's share of the bill, proposes to enact the interactive digital media tax credit to create new media activity, with a 25 per cent refundable tax credit on eligible salary and wages as well as an additional 5 per cent credit if they hire employees from underrepresented groups.

Schedule 2 proposes to amend the Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act to include a diversity and inclusion component whereby investors that are eligible to receive the Alberta investor tax credit are also eligible to receive an additional 5 per cent credit in the same way. Currently the AITC offers a 30 per cent tax credit to Alberta investors who provide venture capital to small Alberta businesses substantially engaged in tourism, research, development of interactive digital media, postproduction visual effects, and digital animation.

Schedule 3 proposes to amend the Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act by inserting certain instructions for the Minister of Advanced Education relative to technology education. It indicates, for example, that the minister shall

- (a) take steps to increase the number of seats in new and existing technology-related post-secondary programs by 3000 over the next 5 years,

- (b) consult with interested parties, including industry, post-secondary . . . Alberta Innovates and organized labour to develop . . . a strategy to allocate those 3000 seats, and
- (c) take steps to establish new scholarships or awards to support learning.

Well, this is all very good on the surface of it, but the concern, again, that we have is that this is, arguably, omnibus legislation that cobbles together various proposals and initiatives from at least two different ministries, some of which are required to be given force by legislation but others that are clearly not, all brought together under the rubric of economic diversification.

Again, around business subsidies, this appears now to be the second one aimed at the digital media industry after the Alberta investor tax credit. For a government that claims to support diversification, there's not a whole lot of diversification in the way these business subsidies are handed out. Certainly, some industries are getting more favourable treatment than others, and this is a concern.

The bill also establishes or adds a 5 per cent diversity and inclusion incentive to certain tax credit programs. An intriguing idea, to be sure, and I hope it leads to positive change. We all want to see more diversity in our industry. Tiny as this is, it may have some impact, and I give credit for that effort. Again, though, the initiative strikes me as being more about promoting diversity and inclusion than diversification of the economy, especially when one understands that businesses are looking for certainty, clarity, equal opportunity, and a level playing field.

The January 2018 report from the University of Calgary School of Public Policy noted that Alberta has the dubious distinction of having the least transparent public reporting when it comes to business subsidies. Another area that this government needs to improve on is more transparency about where the subsidies are going and what the impacts of those subsidies are.

Lastly, if we're going to be looking at these issues, schedule 3 reads more like a mandate letter from one of Alberta's late Conservative Premiers to his ministers and seems totally out of place. If creating tech training spaces is a government priority, which it should be, why do we need to use legislation to instruct the minister to, quote, take steps towards creating spaces for establishing scholarships? This is already in motion. It's Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act, which is currently before the Legislature, again, using showpiece legislation to compel a minister to do something that's already being done.

When previous governments increased spaces for postsecondary students, this has typically been given effect by announcing an increase in provincial funding as part of the budget. While the government has already signalled that 200 new tech spots are set to be filled in the next year, this will happen as a result of the budget and not Bill 2. Bill 2 could actually be defeated, and these tech training spaces, of course, would go ahead. It's hard not to view this bill as little more than a pre-election promotional message masquerading as legislation, something that we are seeing much more frequently now from this government, treating legislation as another media platform to disseminate information on its initiatives.

There are not a lot of concrete issues that Bill 2 actually does in regard to technology training in postsecondary programs, although to listen to the March 14 news conference, you'd think the bill was quite prescriptive and quite expansive. For example, Albertans were told that Bill 2 will establish a talent advisory council on technology to advise government on the creation or expansion of specific programs. It's also suggested that Bill 2 extends the Alberta investor tax credit and the capital investment tax credit. It's also suggested that Bill 2 specifically includes a scholarship program worth $7 million over five years. Lastly, Albertans were told that Bill 2 specifically includes $43 million over five years to fund 3,000 new tech training spaces.

Other than pledging to fund 3,000 new tech training spaces over five years, none of these proposals or dollar figures are what we will be debating in this House. While the government may in fact be planning to do all these things at some point, they aren't actually being given effect by Bill 2. It's a bit disappointing that the government is portraying it in this way.

I also find it a bit rich that the NDP is now trying to make political hay out of extending the Alberta investor tax credit and the capital investment tax credit when, in the case of the former, which was announced back in spring 2016, program changes and application processing delays have seen the rollout move at a snail's pace. I'd suggest that what's being referred to as a program extension may in fact be a failure to launch, with unallocated funds simply being pushed further down the road for more political gain. I suspect there may have been similar challenges with getting the capital investment tax credit off the ground. I actually wrote to the Minister of Economic Development and Trade about these delays, but I don't believe I've received a reply.

Lastly, the Minister of Economic Development and Trade has tried to suggest that the trade missions to Silicon Valley are behind Albertans' bid to produce more graduates for the tech sector. Let's be honest. Calgary's failed bid to entice Amazon to build its second headquarters in Calgary and concrete actions being taken by jurisdictions such as Ontario and B.C. were the wake-up call. Amazon reportedly told Calgary officials that it didn't make the 20-city short list because of a significant gap in the local tech talent pool. It's encouraging that the government is at least taking steps to remedy this, but we'll have to wait and see how this all plays out.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Could I adjourn debate?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, you move to adjourn debate?

Dr. Swann: I move to adjourn debate. Thanks.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

11:00 Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Sweet moved, seconded by Mr. Malkinson, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 21: Mr. Mason]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I just want to stand up, of course, and make a few comments in regard to the Speech from the Throne. I certainly believe it was appropriate, you know, on International Women's Day that we recognize the wonderful opportunities and people that have come forward to really bring gender parity to the forefront. One of those who was in this Chamber whom I did not see recognized – however, certainly, I possibly could be mistaken, and if so, I'm sure it was an oversight on the government's part – was Senator Betty Unger. She was in the Chamber; she was on the floor.

For those that do not know, she lives here in Edmonton. She is a Senator. She was the first woman in Canadian history to be elected as a Senate nominee and appointed to the Senate by the Prime Minister. I certainly had an opportunity to speak to her after the event, and you know, we had a very wonderful and engaging conversation. She's currently dealing with marijuana legislation in the Senate in Ottawa, and hopefully I was able to assist her by providing some insight from my experience as a former law enforcement officer. Of course, she has experience as a registered nurse, and obviously there is, you know, certainly a positive relationship typically between law enforcement and nurses.

Madam Speaker, you know, the Speech from the Throne has a section called Protecting Albertans from Crime. I just want to note that it states: "Today in Alberta, especially in rural areas, people are concerned for the safety of their homes, their property, and the well-being of those they love. That must change." Well, I could not agree more with that statement. However, the frustration is: why did the NDP wait so long to even acknowledge that this crisis is occurring in rural Alberta? You know, this is a crisis that has been identified at least on this side of the House, an issue that we've tried to raise for quite some time. In November the UCP took serious measures, hosting busloads of people from all over rural Alberta to this House. The galleries were full of concerned residents, and every member acted as their voice inside this Chamber.

You know, we brought forward that motion for an emergency debate, and sadly, to the shock of the residents who were here, that debate was voted down. It made me think, to put this really in perspective for folks to understand, of one fellow that was a victim of crime who was interviewed by a media outlet. We're not talking about victims of crime as it pertains to thefts or property damage. In some of these cases we're talking about serious, violent home invasions where individuals inside their residence, law-abiding citizens, are being victimized to the point where they are receiving grievous bodily harm and sometimes situations where those scars, although external, leave an internal scar as well.

You know, I can tell you that this is a crime epidemic that really is no different than the fentanyl crisis and requires a co-ordinated response that involves a multitude of different agencies to come together and recognize that all levels of the justice system, whether it be the judiciary, whether it be our Crown, whether it be our law enforcement community, have to work together in order to solve this problem.

Now, let's take a look. The minister, of course, recently made an announcement regarding some funding for some officers, 39 officers, boots on the ground, as she put it. Sadly, by her own admission, there's no indication of when or even if those RCMP will be able to come out into the communities, when they will be coming from Depot. I think people need to understand that a request for police officers, especially from the RCMP, is a process. This is not something that is very easy. You don't just make a request, and there are 39 officers sitting in Depot in Regina waiting to be dispersed and ready to go to Alberta. There's an application process. This application process is time consuming. Again, an individual just doesn't show up at an RCMP station and request a form to get hired and then are hired within two weeks. Sometimes that process can take anywhere from six months to a year before that person is even accepted as an applicant. It's a rigorous, rigorous process with checks and balances, with investigations on who those individuals are. Polygraph tests: that's another thing.

Throughout Canada if they can get enough people to form a class, then those individuals go to Depot. Well, that's another six months, Madam Speaker, six months worth of training. Hopefully, some of those individuals have completed it. The goal, of course, is to successfully get them all passed, but that's not always the case. Let's just take, for instance, that it is the case that all of them pass. Then there's a process in place in Ottawa as to where those individuals will be then dispersed throughout Canada.

Sadly, the RCMP are facing a significant shortfall, Madam Speaker – we're talking 20 to 30 per cent – to reach their minimum staffing levels. Now we're talking about: okay, let's say that we get a handful of those officers. Well, those officers, once they reach the detachments, will take another six months at minimum before they are possibly ready to go out on their own. They're going to have to be trained with a senior officer. I can tell you from experience that for a police officer to really, truly feel comfortable riding on their own and being able to handle any and all calls that come their way can take as much as five years. Wow.

When we add the time from the initial application, assuming everything goes well, all the way through to them reaching the detachments, possibly in Alberta, hopefully in Alberta, we're talking about two or two and a half years. Some of my sources within the RCMP have indicated that that could be even longer, and that's concerning. That's deeply concerning.

You know, we talk about the police officers, and we talk about the tactics. Well, let's talk a little bit about these officers, who are going to be pillaged, from what I can tell, from other detachments that are already feeling the shortfall within their communities. One of the tactics that was mentioned was bait car and tracking. Madam Speaker, that's a tactic; it's not a solution. When I was in the Calgary Police Service, we did bait cars. I can tell you from experience that there was limited success, sometimes no success, quite frankly. Certainly, to sound off as though this is a solution to the problem, I think, is really giving people what I would call false hope.

Another piece of information that the minister had indicated was the sharing of information with Alberta Sheriffs and fish and wildlife and commercial vehicle enforcement. My question, when I heard that, was: is that not done now? Are they not communicating right now? I can tell you that in order to have any successful operation, you must be able to communicate.

The funding: the minister mentioned $8 million for the 39 new officers. Well, $8 million on top of $500 billion: the math on that, Madam Speaker, is 1.6 per cent. That's a drop in the bucket when dealing with a crisis of this magnitude. You know, that reminds me of 2004, when I was a law enforcement officer, a young constable, and I was on what is now known as the Red Mile. It's actually world famously known as the Red Mile. I remember being one of a team of six officers and a sergeant, so there were seven of us. The Flames were doing, obviously, very well at that time, and we had heard that there was going to be a mass exodus out of the Saddledome, that they were going to come down 17th Avenue, which is in Calgary, which is now, again, as I mentioned, known as the Red Mile. I remember the six of us on the street and our sergeant saying to us: keep them all on the sidewalks. Twenty-thousand people, six police officers. Keep them all on the sidewalks: unreasonable, completely unreasonable. That's why I'm talking to the 1.6 per cent of $500 billion. It's just not enough.

We learned from that though. We learned to prepare. We put processes in place, and we put the necessary resources in place.

Then when 2006 occurred and the Flames were doing well again, we were prepared to have the thousands and thousands and thousands of people hit the streets, and we had the necessary resources in place because the issue was identified to us and we formulated a plan, a successful plan, a plan that has been recognized not only in Alberta but throughout Canada on how to properly prepare for events. That's something that the Calgary Police Service is very proud of. They did that with the G8, another major incident that had no issues whatsoever because of the proper preparation.

Going back to this, when the government was aware that rural crime was starting to become an issue, there needed to be proper communication, there needed to be proper planning, and they needed to get the necessary resources in place working with all of the law enforcement communities throughout this province in order to execute a plan, not some smoke-and-mirrors plan where there's false hope given to residents that these 39 police officers are going to be magically showing up in their communities. That's, quite frankly, Madam Speaker, just not reasonable. This is a very negligible amount, and I really do hope that these detachments have an opportunity to at least, at the minimum, get their minimum staffing requirements.

Do you know that when rural crime was first identified, Madam Speaker, the minister was telling rural municipalities that they have the ability to get money and get more police officers themselves? Yes, they can, but as I already indicated to you, they're not even meeting the minimum staffing requirements. Even if a municipality did find the money and they were able to give it to the RCMP, the likelihood of them getting an officer was slim to none, as I already explained to you what the process is. In fact, some of my sources . . .

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. The hon. Member for Calgary-West was actually just about to give us some more insights, which I think are valuable in this case because I'm not sure how many other members of the Chamber actually have the inside experience and knowledge about what happens with the police services. So I would like him to complete what I thought was winding up to be an important point, please.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-Hays. What I wanted to continue to say – and, you know, I really hope that my sources are incorrect on this, but I sadly believe that they're not. We're talking about a period of seven, seven and a half years if a municipality decides to give the RCMP some extra money in hopes of getting a police officer. We're talking about that long a period of time.

Quite frankly, that's why – that's why – we need to start looking in Alberta at other alternative means in a co-ordinated effort. Although the RCMP have rolled out a number of tactics in order to deal with this, what I did not hear from them is the relationship that they would be having with their other law enforcement community members; as an example, Edmonton Police Service, Calgary Police Service, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, our sheriffs department. I haven't really heard anybody even talk about the sheriffs department. There are many things that this minister can do, quite frankly, with the stroke of a pen in order to ensure that we properly and more effectively use our sheriffs within this province, that I have not heard anybody mention.

Now, I will say this. It is also vitally important to ensure that those individuals are up to a certain training standard. I mean, I will give you an example, Madam Speaker. Although I have the great honour to be in this House representing the wonderful people of Calgary-West, I am a fully trained police officer and can, if I had the opportunity, choose to go back and perform the duties as a police officer at any time. I can tell you that, you know, many of our sheriffs are retired from other jurisdictions. They are fully qualified and capable of performing the duties of a police officer. Those individuals need to be identified and recognized, and they certainly can have the opportunities to further assist in working with other law enforcement officers in order to help in a crisis which is currently facing the people of this province.

You know, I just want to say as well that this is an epidemic that has grown and, I would say, kind of raged on, that is putting our rural communities in a situation now where they are starting to have diminishment in what I call the public trust. The public trust, I can tell you, is really what law enforcement has in order to have an effective and efficient police service.

Let me give you an example, Madam Speaker. When I was a constable in the Calgary Police Service, I can tell you that there were many complaints that would come that, in my opinion as a young rookie, seemed rather, let's say, nebulous. Then as I evolved and I grew and I learned and certainly had the fortune to become a supervisor in the Calgary Police Service, as a sergeant I realized that what the Calgary Police Service had was public trust. They had a 96 to 97 per cent approval rating, and that was because the people of that city knew that if there was a problem, they could call the police, that they will attend, and that they would deal with the issue in a timely and efficient manner.

That is the issue that we're seeing in rural Alberta right now, the diminishment of public trust. I believe, from the people that I have spoken to in rural Alberta, there is massive concern that when they call the police . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I'll call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, and good morning, Madam Speaker. I'm thrilled to stand here and reply to the Speech from the Throne. As I open up, I would be remiss to not, like many other members here, reflect on the fact that we did this on International Women's Day. So I would like to open up by recognizing some amazing women in my constituency.

The St. Mary's University women's basketball team, a team that in its first year, in 2013, had only won one game, a team who, despite a couple of seasons of heartbreaking losses in the final game of the tournament, went on to win the ACAC women's basketball tournament, crowning St. Mary's with its first-ever provincial championship: I always admire watching these women play and sharing this with my kids. I think that here in Alberta we could do more to support collegial sports since in many instances the pace and intensity outmatch that of professional play.

Now, many people throw around the term "David versus Goliath," but I prefer the little engine that could, because this team, despite everything, being one of the most underfunded universities, not having its own gym, kept chugging along and never gave up. When push came to shove, they dominated the matches they played. Having spoken with some of the parents who were there at some of the games – I ran into them at the Calgary International Airport just last weekend – they said that the team played phenomenally in the nationals. They didn't bring home the big championship, but it was setting them up for more consecutive years of success.

This really does parallel well with the work that St. Mary's does in collaboration with its indigenous community. Their First Nations, Métis, Inuit initiatives focus on relationship-building first and allow their program to meet the needs of First Nations students. This led to the hosting of the truth and reconciliation synopsis on campus and has really led to a lot of other postsecondary institutions coming to them and seeking advice from St. Mary's, being a leader in this field.

Now, their work with First Nations complements our government's commitment to our First Nations. We continue to maintain meaningful dialogue to work with our First Nations through our diversification of our economy. As mentioned in the throne speech, through constructive and practical dialogue we will continue with our nations through a renewable energy program, curriculum review, and improvements to our child intervention system. In the past year I've been humbled, similar to yourself, Madam Speaker, to be involved in the child intervention review. The dialogue we had with stakeholders taught me a tremendous amount, and it showed the urgency to do things better and work towards ending the cycle of trauma.

During the throne speech event we saw a lot of Alberta's historical context. I'm sure someone at home could have played a drinking game around the number of times in this House that we mentioned Peter Lougheed, so allow me to mention him a few more times and encourage people at home to drink a bit more Alberta craft beer.

Our expansion of the petrochemicals diversification program has helped many people in Calgary-Shaw get back to work. The Fluor office in Sundance recently was contracted to engineer some of the projects during the first round of the project. Their contributions have helped us diversify our economy and leverage our natural resources. As we develop our resources, we need to recognize global and world trends. Right now there is a need for sustainable oil products, that Alberta can provide, but we need to look to the future. I can tell you, as the Member for Calgary-Currie mentioned his cars earlier in the response to the throne speech, that my Mazda5 does burn a lot less fuel than my parents' K-car did. So investing in processing and value-add will allow long-term jobs for the people of Alberta and allow us to continue developing our alternative resources.

I want to reflect on another vision that Lougheed had for Calgary-Shaw, which was Fish Creek park and the development of Fish Creek park, which since its creation has seen, unfortunately, quite a bit of neglect from the previous government over the last quarter of a century. Our government is now reinvesting in the infrastructure deficit that was left behind, by restoring structures, improving pathway networks, tackling invasive weeds. While there is more to do, our government has committed to this park. We will continue to do it with the tremendous support that we receive from the Friends of Fish Creek, who do a tremendous amount to advocate for that area.

Now, the Friends of Fish Creek have provided us with a tremendous amount of support in the area by providing educational programming that benefits the people of my area in south Calgary. Many of the programs also promote self-awareness, an awareness of nature and culture. The Friends have been very helpful during developments in my constituency, which we saw a couple of years ago during a contentious natural gas pipeline that ATCO was developing. One of the feedbacks that they provided to the project managers during this construction allowed us to find ways to replant natural grassland species and actually renew the park. As we move towards the southwest ring road development and its interjection with Fish Creek park, the Friends of Fish Creek are going to be a valuable resource as we look to renew the land and regrow that area.

Madam Speaker, right now in Alberta I see two visions. I see one that is the UCP's vision, which we can see reflected in the province of Saskatchewan, which has failed to create growth in their economy. Now, you don't have to take my word for this. We can look at RBC's report, which I can table later today. In March it can be seen that Alberta led the country in job-creation growth in all the oil-producing jurisdictions while at the same time Saskatchewan saw a 2 per cent decrease in its economy. Manufacturing and retail sales are up here in Alberta while Saskatchewan declines or stays flat, all this while we're bending the curve on spending, charting a path to balance, freezing many government departments' hiring and spending.

To add a few more numbers to this equation, Alberta saw a 10 per cent increase in wholesale trade while Saskatchewan saw a decline of 3 per cent. While the opposition may speak praise of this government, that is running a deficit while it has gone ahead and raised the PST, cut public services people depended on, and is layered in scandal, we will stand up here as this government for Alberta jobs and the services that people rely on.

Now, at least every week, Madam Speaker, I find myself at Cardel Rec centre, which is in my riding. I'm either there attending meetings, attending events, or simply just taking my kids to the library. Sometimes when I'm there, I set up a table, and I just talk with people and constituents. While I'm here, I've heard from a lot of people about how the economy is shifting and how we're starting to see people getting back to work. While I recognize that we're not out of the woods just yet, things are improving.

Now, one of the times when I was at Cardel Rec, I was actually talking to someone while I was grabbing a coffee at the coffee stand. He said that it feels like, for the first time, the government of Alberta has his back. He is a 31-year-old service worker who's earning minimum wage. You know, I get it. It's easy when you're in this dome or when you're in an ivory tower to not recognize what it is like to try to get by with so little, but you know what? We're a government with so much diversity, who really engages with their constituents.

You know what? I'm reminded of this every time I door-knock in communities like Shawnessy or Midnapore and I hear from people at the door who say that this is the first time they've heard from a politician when it's not an election year. I'm sure I can see a lot of head-nodding from my colleagues on the government bench here, so I think they all hear it, too. We're here to get our feedback, we're here to hear from Albertans, and we're not here just to pander for votes.

Now, one thing that you cannot miss when you're at Cardel Rec centre, Madam Speaker, is how full the high school there is. Both high schools in my riding, Bishop O'Byrne and Centennial, do so much with such limited space, and I do have to thank the teachers for what they do to maintain it and keep it going. The fact of the matter is that our government is listening to Albertans, and we're following through on our plans to build new schools, which is why I'm excited that next year we'll be opening up a new school in Legacy, which will directly have an impact on students in my riding and the entire south end of Calgary. In fact, we have over a dozen projects in south Calgary alone, projects like roof replacements and new schools throughout my area. Now, the difference between us and what we've seen in the past is that we don't just announce it; we actually get it done.

I've heard commentary about maintaining a sense of decorum in this House, and I'm hopeful that this type of respect can be found. I want to make comments about some criticism that I received from the former Member for Calgary-Lougheed about me mentioning pro wrestling in this House last spring. You know, now that I have the forum to go deeper into the context, I will use that opportunity because I was quite disappointed about the criticisms that were made. The reason why is because last May at the Backlash pay-per-view – oh, and by the way, happy Rusev Day for those watching at home – we saw Jinder Mahal win the WWE title. This was the first time that a Calgarian had done so since Bret the Hitman Hart. I was excited to see this not only as a wrestling fan, which I am – I'll admit I am – but also as a person who grew up in northeast Calgary.

You see, Mahal, whose parents are of Indian descent and who is Sikh, became the first world champion in the WWE of this descent. Early in his career he trained with many greats in the Calgary area, including the late Bad News Allen and Gerry Morrow. He cut his teeth in Stampede Wrestling and the Prairie Wrestling Alliance before he entered his stint in the WWE. After being released, he worked hard to achieve a remarkable physique, which led to his eventual and inevitable win.

Since his win the thing that's been really amazing and something I'm really proud of him for is that he's used this platform to inform people and dispel myths about the Sikh culture. You know what? To be honest, I'll call it as it is. The wrestling fan base are not ones that have the means to necessarily inform themselves about the Sikh culture, so sometimes biases do develop. He's really used this to relate to fans through podcasts or interviews and just talk about the culture and history, which I found remarkable.

You know what? I do have to say that if there's anything I'm going to be known for, it's that speech that I made during that time because it garnered nearly 40,000 views on YouTube and was reported by news outlets in four different countries, including Mexico, Great Britain, and even on CBS Sports. It was quite funny because I got directly messaged by a lot of fans in the Calgary area and from abroad who actually said: you know, it's really neat because someone from this government is just like me and gets what I'm talking about.

You know what? I'm proud of the pro wrestling history. It's something that has existed in the Calgary area for almost 70 years, and it's a shame that sometimes people ridicule it because there was a time when there were only two things that people could tell you about Calgary. Those were that we hosted the Olympics and that's where Bret the Hitman Hart is from.

In the last year we've also seen another Calgarian, Natalya Neidhart, who comes from that family, win the women's championship as well, which led to a lot more equality in women's wrestling and the removal of a lot of the biases that used to exist there.

Now, I really want to also take this opportunity to reflect on how my riding is going to change in the 2019 election. It will gain communities like Silverado, Legacy, Chaparral, and Walden. To all those residents in the area: I want to reiterate that your NDP government has your back. We have maintained the MSI program, that the city of Calgary leveraged for projects like the 162nd interchange. We are opening up dozens of schools to make sure that your kids can go to school near their homes. In the meantime, while you wait for those schools, we're removing the busing fees that you have to pay because there is no school in your area. We're also taking a lot of feedback into a lot of mitigation around projects, including the construction of the ring road, and we've learned a lot from the past as that develops. I would like to also use this opportunity to thank my colleague from Calgary-Bow, who has been advocating for this immensely as well.

To the residents of south Calgary: we're working to build jobs, diversify the economy, and we're going to do this while maintaining the lowest tax rate in Canada, without giving handouts to the richest 1 per cent, as proposed by the opposition through their flat tax.

Now, I also want to use this opportunity because today I received an e-mail from the Calgary Highlanders, who recently had their Highland Ball. I recognize this because Her Honour is a strong supporter of the Calgary Highlanders and our military history here in Calgary. I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, who is the liaison for the province of Alberta to the Canadian military, for coming down and attending. It was a very successful event. They drew a lot of attendance; a lot of people went and supported them. I really enjoyed the parallels because as the grandson of a Calgary Highlander it was remarkable to see this legacy continuing, this part of our history that we continue to maintain and to encourage. It's just remarkable to have an opportunity to share that history in this House as well.

With that, Madam Speaker, I'm proud of the work our government has accomplished and the work that we continue to move towards doing.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very pleased to be able to serve on the delegation to the Pacific NorthWest Economic Region with the Member for Calgary-Shaw. I know he's been doing a lot of work lately with regard to working for our economy here in Alberta in terms of the NAFTA file. I was just wondering if he could perhaps expand on a little bit of the work that we've been doing through the Pacific NorthWest Economic Region to ensure that Alberta, you know, still has access to export markets.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for the question. I first want to take this opportunity to really recognize the hard work that the Member for Calgary-East is doing on this file. You know, there's a lot of stuff that we do to advocate for our province and our economic growth that may not see the light of cameras. We may not be necessarily waving the flag to the public, but we're doing the work. She's been doing a tremendous amount of work to get our products to market, to advocate for pipeline development and getting our resources to market. I want to thank her for her hard diligence on this because she's been holding a firm line and holding the entire organization accountable.

The one thing that has been great to see is that through some of our leadership that we have been doing, that I've been doing as the vice-president of the organization and the member has been doing with the delegation, we've been trying to work with all the partners from the five U.S. states as well as the Canadian provinces to have a united front on NAFTA and to really talk about how as a region we all actually benefit from this. Exports and imports are moving constantly across the border, and before product is even in its finished state, it has potentially moved across the border a few times. So there is a lot at risk if we were to eliminate what is currently in place. We do recognize as an organization that any policy does deserve to be renewed and that the IT sector wasn't as big as it was when we originally signed on to NAFTA. From this forum last November we were able to get the entire organization to agree as a united front to encourage Washington to take a stance that recognizes the interdependencies that the entire region has.

Then when the steel and aluminum tariffs were being proposed and we didn't know where we would land with the tariff policy, we urgently reached out to the organization. We got the president, who is Senator Arnie Roblan from Oregon, and myself to issue a letter to President Trump recommending and encouraging him to exempt Canada from the tariffs on steel and aluminium. I was really excited that two days after we issued that letter to Washington, they did exempt our country from the steel and aluminum tariffs.

You know, it's really the commitment that a lot of our government members make to advocate for resource development and advocate for well-paid jobs. It's what New Democrats do. At the end of the day, we're going to continue to support our resources, we're going to continue to advocate for the jobs that are here, and we're going to continue to work collaboratively with trade partners from across the world and continue to maintain all the good relationships that we have because it's how we're going to continue to benefit. I think that some of this hard work that we started doing is why, as I alluded to before, we're leading in a lot of our manufacturing sectors, we're leading in our exports, our agricultural sector continues to grow tremendously. We continue to leverage new technology and new products that are available to us.

You know, I'm really proud whenever I go and hear about new, exciting things like pulses and how we're leveraging some of the new technology around refining canola and how we're able to start exporting a lot more of our beef to Asian markets. They're things that, you know, I never necessarily thought I would dabble in. Even looking at my previous life, which was as a grandson of a Slovakian who settled on a farm in Innisfail, it's neat to see that this continues to be an area that we develop immensely and see it really drive our provincial economic growth.

With that being said, there are a lot of exciting things that continue to happen. We continue to work hard to diversify our economy and create more jobs. We recognize that we're not out of the woods just yet and that we have to do this in a very calculated, systematic way that will ensure that a recession like this never happens again here in Alberta.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to rise and speak in response to the Speech from the Throne. It's my greatest honour and privilege to represent the residents of Calgary-Foothills, the hard-working people of Calgary-Foothills. What I hear from the residents of my constituency is that the throne speech covered some very important points, but it also was silent on other important, long-term goals of this province and the direction we are going to take. I'll speak to that in my speech.

Before I start, I would like to pay homage to the great NDP luminary and former federal NDP leader, the late David Lewis. David Lewis was born in present-day Belarus and grew up during the Bolshevik Revolution and during the Russian Civil War and the Polish-Soviet War. David's son Stephen Lewis rose in prominence as the leader of the NDP Official Opposition in Ontario. Stephen Lewis's son is Avi Lewis. You might have seen him on the CBC or Al Jazeera. Avi is married to journalist and author Naomi Klein.

Canada's NDP royal family is known for being signatories to the infamous Leap Manifesto. Tzeporah Berman is a signatory; so is David Suzuki. But I don't want to talk about the document or the signatories. I want to talk about David Lewis and the gift he gave us: free market, Reagan- and Rogernomics, titles that we continue to use today. At a speech in Pictou county, Nova Scotia, in August 1972 he criticized the government of Nova Scotia for giving grants and loans to Michelin Tire and Scott paper, Madam Speaker. David Lewis called those businesses corporate welfare bums. The name has stuck ever since.

When governments go handing out grants, loans, loan guarantees, equity positions to subsidize business and industry, it's the practice of handing out corporate welfare. David Lewis would be ashamed of today's Alberta NDP, Madam Speaker. This is no longer the NDP of David Lewis. While David Lewis would be ashamed, Tommy Douglas would be very proud because he wanted all the multinationals to be kicked out of Canada. This provincial NDP is very successful in doing so. Look at Shell, Chevron, ConocoPhillips, Total. All those multinationals left Alberta because of the economic policies of this government.

The previous speaker, my friend from Calgary-Shaw, talked about the importance of having good relations with neighbours, and then he went on to attack the Saskatchewan government. I don't know how we are going to, you know, maintain good relations and get the results we are looking for while at the same time attacking a neighbour who is our trusted friend in fighting for pipelines and market access. I don't get that. If he wants to comment on that, he should look at the recent polls. Scott Moe is still the most popular Premier in this country, and you can contrast that to our Premier. I'll leave it there, Madam Speaker.

This throne speech is riddled with allusions to corporate welfare. Corporate welfare is one of the factors affecting how we can balance the budget. It is ironic that this NDP government is factoring in the Trans Mountain expansion project to balance their budget. After railing against pipelines in opposition, the NDP have come to realize that pipelines create wealth. The previous speaker also mentioned how he and his colleagues are working on market access. I really thank them for doing that. I appreciate that. Although they are late to the game, it's the right thing to do, and Albertans appreciate that. These pipelines move the product that give us the royalties to help pay for health and education, teachers and nurses, and even the NDP buses to rural Alberta, where the market has failed.

The NDP Deputy Premier talked about how we are exporting 99 per cent of our oil production to our one-and-only customer south of the border, the U.S.A., and we get told by the NDP and the left-wing academics that the carbon tax won't affect our competitiveness. Really? We're only shipping to one customer south of the border, and we are talking about competitiveness here. Down in the United States of America they rejected the Paris climate agreement. The U.S.A. doesn't care about our carbon tax. They're our only customer. They don't care about our carbon tax. And here we go; we have a carbon tax. [interjection] Yeah. I'm coming to that. We'll talk about other countries, but in the meantime our only customer, who is receiving 99 per cent of our product as per the Deputy Premier, doesn't have a carbon tax, so us imposing a carbon tax is not helping industry here.

Then we needed the pipeline to ship the product to China and India, but China, Russia, and India don't have carbon taxes either. The U.S.A. now has an accelerated capital cost element, and some say that it is more powerful than a corporate tax cut.

Madam Speaker, as you know, I immigrated to Canada from India to fulfill my economic dream because Canada is an energy superpower. But upon arrival I realized that the NDP and their fellow travellers just want to leave $11 trillion worth of natural resources in the ground instead of improving life for themselves.

Talk to Jagmeet Singh. He'll tell you. Your own leader will tell you that he wants to leave the resource in the ground. Your own colleagues in B.C. even, whether it's the Premier of B.C. or the mayor of Vancouver or the mayor of Burnaby, or the NDP in Manitoba: talk to them and see if you can convince them to support these pipelines.

I was so amazed when I heard that Canada was the energy superpower, so I came here to realize my economic dreams, but once I landed here, my dreams were shattered after watching all these NDP fellow travellers blockading the pipelines every single day, to the extent that they are now even harming the security people in B.C. The police were hurt by these radical environmental activists. That is so sad, Madam Speaker. Something is fundamentally wrong with this in our country if we cannot get our resources to tidewater for global export. It's a lack of common sense. That's what I call a lack of common sense.

A multimillion-dollar effort known as the Tar Sands Campaign has literally stifled our pipelines. The goal is to landlock Russian and Canadian oil so that it cannot reach overseas markets for higher prices. It was launched in 2008 by the Rockefeller brothers and the William and Flora Hewlett Foundation. It has nothing to do with climate change or saving the environment. The campaign uses those environmentalists as stooges to accomplish the goal of ensuring that cheap oil moves south. That's what's happening, Madam Speaker. We are subsidizing. We are shipping our oil at a $30 discount, and the U.S. is exporting their oil at market price.

The Tar Sands Campaign through the Tides Foundation has made at least 400 payments worth $36 million to more than a hundred organizations in Canada, the U.S., and Europe. This is a very serious problem, Madam Speaker, and the throne speech didn't mention a word about it. None of the front-benchers in this House talked about that. By sullyng our product through an information war with selective and sometimes blatantly false facts, shaking investor confidence, the industry is curtailed by the big American interests. That's what we are doing unknowingly. I don't think my NDP friends realize that what they're doing is actually helping the U.S.A.; it's not helping Canada. By blockading pipelines, they are actually helping the U.S.A.

False facts like the Alberta oil sands impact an area of the size of England or Florida – that is false. The truth is that the oil sands impact less than 1 per cent of the boreal forest. That is the truth, and it was not mentioned in the throne speech, Madam Speaker. The success of the campaign hinges on its ability to get air and media. The folks up in the press gallery: when the eco radicals pull a stunt, they don't report it. It's a cry for attention to keep cheap oil moving to the U.S.A. Alberta and Canada are subsidizing America. Who ever thought Uncle Sam would be a corporate welfare bum?

In Ottawa the wise old Senators support new pipelines. They get it, but we don't get it here. We moved an amendment to the government motion to support this government, to strengthen the motion by asking them to use 92(10)(c). This government rejected that whereas on Tuesday, March 20, the Senate of Canada unanimously adopted a motion introduced by Conservative Senator

Richard Neufeld urging the Prime Minister to bring the full weight and power of his office to ensure that the Kinder Morgan Trans Mountain expansion project gets completed on schedule. With its adoption, Conservatives, Liberals, independents, and nonaffiliated Senators have united their voices in asking that the Prime Minister and the government ensure that the expansion is completed on time and that this commitment be conveyed to the governments of British Columbia and Alberta in a manner that leaves no doubt as to the federal government's determination to see the project become fully operational within the present timeline. That was the release from Senator Neufeld's office, Madam Speaker.

Even if and when Kinder Morgan's Trans Mountain expansion gets built, we still need an additional million barrels of pipeline space per day based on CAPP's forecast, Madam Speaker. CAPP says that we are short 1 and a half million barrels. I'm optimistic that when Trans Mountain gets built, we'll still be short another million barrels of pipeline capacity. That was not addressed in the throne speech. The throne speech did not address that, and there was some news yesterday that . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was riveted by the hon. member's comments and would like to hear the remainder of it if he would be willing to.

The Acting Speaker: Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yesterday there were some news articles about celebrating this Trans Mountain pipeline. When the first barrel of oil is flowing in that expansion project, we will all celebrate together with the Premier, but we have some more work to do on that project. The throne speech is silent on any firm action. If the pipeline is delayed and if we have economic difficulties, how do we still balance the budget? It doesn't talk about that.

Now, already the Finance minister is finding an excuse for not balancing the budget. He can blame it on the B.C. NDP and the NDP mayor of Vancouver and the NDP mayor of Burnaby and the federal NDP leader for not being able to balance the budget, which is not good.

In this throne speech we did get a handful of programs espousing development and a plan B for pipelines, but some of them come out to being nothing but corporate welfare, Madam Speaker. That's why I talked about the Lewis family and former NDP leader. This corporate welfarism is the right idea, but those are the wrong tools to be used now.

Madam Speaker, thank you for the time to . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2.1) the Assembly will now stand adjourned until 1:30 this afternoon.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, March 22, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

I'm just curious if anybody in the Assembly has bought a new pair of shoes today.

We have a very busy day, so I'd ask you to keep your introductions concise and descriptions of tablings brief.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure if the students from Webber Academy are here; I was told that they would be in later. But while I have this moment, I'd certainly like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Legislature the students from Webber Academy, located in the fine constituency of Calgary-West. They are accompanied by their teachers, Mrs. Valerie Ellard, Ms Jennifer Harriman, and Mr. Steve McMurdo. I'd like everybody to give them the warm welcome of this Assembly, if not now, when they do arrive.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly the staff of the Alberta Teachers' Association, who are joining us today as a professional development opportunity to learn a bit more about the work of the provincial government. If we can give them the traditional welcome of the Legislature, I would appreciate it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and privilege to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly 112 students from Michael Strembitsky school in the riding of Edmonton-Ellerslie. They're joined by their teachers, Tanya Boyko, Peter Utivlugt, Kelly Boudreau, and Lynnell Gagnon, as well as their parent chaperones, Daisy Rai, Eric Chi, Maninderjit Sauger, and Samar Al-Hajjaj. Please give them the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups today?

Seeing and hearing none, the hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to the Assembly three of your special guests, who are currently sitting in your gallery. I'll ask them to rise and remain standing when I call their name. First of all, Perry Deering is the president of the Medicine Hat & District Chamber of Commerce. Along with his wife, Chris Deering, Perry runs his family business, Deerview Meats, in Cypress county. His wife, Chris Deering, is not here yet. Sarah MacKenzie is the first vice-president of the Medicine Hat chamber of commerce, who has worked at family-owned, Medicine Hat-based MacKenzie Eye Care along with organizing a number of local community-building and volunteer initiatives. Lisa Kowalchuk is a long-time executive director of the chamber of commerce, who – I don't think anyone will disagree – has been a linchpin of that organization and a true advocate for southeastern Albertans. Please give these three members the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Jabbour: I have another introduction, Mr. Speaker. The other introduction is a guest of mine. Sylvia Johnson is the president of the region 6 Métis Nation of Alberta, who's travelled from Peace River to be with us today. I'm not sure if she's in the gallery yet, but please give her a warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, I understand you have three introductions.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, with your permission. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly an amazing woman, Colleen Chapman. Colleen Chapman is the president and founder of the Friends of Church Street, past president of the British Columbia Bereavement Helpline, and volunteer co-ordinator for the Boyle McCauley News. Today she's involved in many projects in the Edmonton inner city, including supporting truth and reconciliation initiatives. Thank you so much for rising. If we could please extend to her the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

It's also a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very special group of guests. My member's statement today will speak about the student conference that my constituency office assisted Balwin school in organizing for the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. We had numerous guest speakers, and I'm pleased to introduce many of them attending here today: Chevi Rabbit; Bean Gill; Paula Kirman; Katherine Swampy; Beatrice Ghettaba; trustee and board chair, Michelle Draper; and Wati Rahmat, representing Mona Ismaeil. If you could all please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. Thank you, again.

It's also a pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Principal Christina Jones, Assistant Principal Andy Connelly, and the leadership team who assisted in making yesterday's event a huge success: Kelsey Kindred, Sarah Ferrante, Chanelle Cluett-Alstad, and Ann Gariano. I would ask you all to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce two leaders from the business community in the Bow Valley. I'd ask my guests to rise and remain standing as I call their names. Casey Peirce is the executive director of the Association for Mountain Parks Protection and Enjoyment. Casey and AMPPE advocate for a balance between sustainable tourism, ecological integrity, and a positive visitor experience in Canada's Rocky Mountain parks. Brian McClure is the founding president of the Bow Valley Chamber of Commerce, that recently celebrated its first anniversary. The chamber is off to a great start thanks to his leadership along with the founding executive board and its members. I'd ask my colleagues to extend to my guests the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: My guests are not yet in, Mr. Speaker. If I could possibly get up later.

The Speaker: Are there any other guests, hon. members? The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Mr. Gerry Steinke and Mrs. Karen Becker. Both of them are representatives of the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta, but more importantly they're fast becoming friends. Karen is a trustee with the Wetaskiwin school division and has actually baked doughnuts for my constituency cup basketball tournament, that I have in my constituency. Gerry is the father of Nathan Steinke, a former legislative co-ordinator for the Wildrose Party. Could you please give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Any other introductions? The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to introduce two people that are with the Grande Prairie Regional College. Of course, they're still glowing over the recent announcement of the degree-granting status. Obviously, thanks to the Minister of Advanced Education and the government for doing that. If you could please rise as I say your name. Mark Evans is director of communications, and Carmen Haakstad is the vice-president of external relations. If we could please give them the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are your guests here now?

Dr. Swann: They have arrived, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the House our passionate, articulate, and fearless leader in the Alberta Liberal Party, David Khan. I'll ask him to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly, and with him Nicolaas Jansen, vice-president of policy for the Alberta Liberal Party, a bright and generous volunteer with a master's in public policy from the University of Calgary.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Diabetes Fundraiser in Peace River Constituency

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The people in my constituency truly exemplify the spirit of innovation and drive, creating wonderful events that are not only good for the community but also a lot of fun.

I was able to participate in one such event earlier this month when I was invited to help judge High Level's first ever Battle of the Bands: A Tribute to Merle Haggard. The range of talent was truly impressive, with musicians competing for over $7,000 in prize money. These included Fort Vermilion's Tamarackin', Twangin' Country from John D'Or, Calvin and Taryn from La Crête, Vanishing Breed from the Northwest Territories, and Wayne Lambert and Smokin' Country, comprised of players from across northern Alberta.

Once the formal judging was done, the fun truly began. All the musicians, including one of the judges, took to the stage to back up Calvin and Taryn's sweet harmonies. Soon we were enjoying acrobatic fiddle antics and audience members performing impromptu jigs. Everyone was having a great time, but that enjoyment was only a small part of what this was all about.

Val Courtoreille, a dedicated community organizer, spearheaded this initiative on behalf of the Team Diabetes Fort Vermilion fundraiser for Diabetes Canada. Given that statistics indicate that 70 per cent of indigenous women are at risk for developing diabetes, this fundraiser is incredibly important to the north.

Another of Val's projects is the Northern Alberta Fiddling and Jigging Championships, which will showcase the Ivan Flett Memorial Dancers and Ryan Keplin this year on May 5 in Fort Vermilion. Val started this to revive traditional dance and music and to encourage tourism to the north. I've had the honour of participating as judge support every year since its inception. Community youth are given jigging classes, and talented dancers and fiddlers travel from afar for this wonderful event.

Our next Battle of the Bands: A Tribute to Merle Haggard competition is set for June 2, with Merle Haggard's sons Ben and Noel confirmed for the main event. Join us for a lot of fun and to support a great cause.

Of course, Val doesn't do this all alone. She has a team of volunteers who readily give their time and energy to help make these events successful and memorable. Thank you to all of you. You all make our community a great place to live, work, and play.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Agricultural Society Funding

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With all the uncertainty around crops, weather, moisture, drought, grain cars, and such as of late it came as a pleasant surprise that this government isn't going to cause Alberta's ag societies further grief this year. It's been announced that our seven regional and 283 primary agricultural societies will receive stable funding in an announcement earlier this week. After being left with nothing but uncertainty around funding last year, our agricultural societies can depend on predictable funding and budget accordingly. That's good news.

But it's not all sunshine and good times for those societies, Mr. Speaker. We live in a world where the myth of social licence has brought us a punitive carbon tax. That means that it costs more to heat community halls, run curling rinks and rec centres, and it means severely increased costs to run the ice plant at the local hockey rink, many of which are funded by your local ag society. That means that funding levels, although fairly consistent over the years, just won't pay the same amount of the power bills, buy the same amount of supplies, and pay to keep the water flowing and the heat on.

That's because this government has chosen once again to raise their tax on everything to $30 a tonne. That means our ag societies have to make do with less because this government's ideological experiment didn't factor in how much this actually harms nonprofits. This also means those services provided to our rural communities may offer less, be available less often, and cost more to the end-user. And it's going to get worse as this government has tied themselves into Trudeau's Liberal scheme to raise the carbon tax a further 67 per cent, to $50 per tonne, meaning these organizations will soon have even less to work with, all of this simply because this government sees this punitive tax as buying us access to tidewater.

Most Albertans live in the real world, Mr. Speaker, not some virtual one, where social licence may buy you something.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is budget day in Alberta, and we'll get some insight into what the government's priorities are. There's a lot of pomp and circumstance around budget day. There are traditions like the Finance minister's new shoes. There are endless scrums and interviews about what the budget means or who got left out or what the big numbers are. But eventually the cameras leave, ministers and MLAs go home, and tomorrow will just be the day after budget day.

What we need to remember is that for Albertans every day is budget day. One way or another the financial plan that the government puts out will affect every one of us every day of the year: a line in the budget for carbon tax revenue and what it means for Alberta families, funding for AISH and income supports, and how much money someone has to house and feed themselves for the month. Borrowing money might mean the government can deliver much-needed services today, but it also means that the next generation will be responsible for the services we use. All this is to say that a budget is a collection of choices, and those choices impact the lives and livelihoods of everyone in Alberta.

In the coming weeks we'll be sitting down to go over estimates. We'll be asking specific questions about what the government is funding and what it means for Albertans. For many this will be the only time that they'll have to put a voice to the questions directly to the government. We need to treat that process with the appropriate respect. If we go into committees with the intent of scoring political points or the intent to obscure answers to legitimate questions behind layers of bureaucracy, we're doing a disservice to Albertans. This is an opportunity to represent our constituents, to find out what this budget means for them, beyond the talking points.

Our caucus didn't release a shadow budget because we thought we could solve all of Alberta's problems. We did it because we wanted to engage Albertans in a conversation about choices that matter the most. We won't stop talking to Albertans because we just put out that document, just like I hope the government will listen to the opposition's concerns out of respect for those that we represent. Today is for speeches and interviews and traditions, but for Albertans every day is budget day.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Energy Industry Diversification

Cortes-Vargas: Mr. Speaker, in Strathcona county a lot of hard-working and highly skilled Albertans lost their jobs during the downturn that resulted from the oil price shock of 2014. These hard-working Albertans tell me they're tired of the boom-and-bust cycle. They want and deserve stability and security, just as Peter Lougheed envisioned when he began the process of diversifying Alberta's energy sector decades ago. They want this current recovery to be built to last.

Since being elected in 2015, I have been a vocal voice for expansion of initiatives like the petrochemicals diversification program. Our government's recent actions to diversify our energy sector were welcomed by industry leaders and families in the Industrial Heartland: supporting commercialization of additional partial upgrading for more refineries and increasing the capacities of our current and future pipelines; incentives to help petrochemical facilities upgrade raw resources into higher value products; and the second round of our already successful petrochemicals diversification program.

That's why I don't understand why the Leader of the Opposition is so opposed to energy diversification. He claims that the government shouldn't be supporting winners and losers. On this side of the House we don't need to take any lessons about picking winners and losers from folks who, when they were in government, awarded their favours to people that they had on their speed-dial.

The truth is that right now we're losing out to Texas, Pennsylvania, and Louisiana, and they're winning the hunt for investors. If the Leader of the Opposition has his way, they will go on winning. Members on this side of the House are picking Albertans, Alberta workers and Alberta families, to win, and we will keep picking Albertans to win each and every time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Balwin School Student Conference on Racism

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's disheartening that Alberta, too, has seen its own incidents of racism, Islamophobia, and homophobia since I was elected in 2015. I have zero tolerance for any form of discrimination in my riding.

Yesterday was the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. Together with Balwin school we organized a student conference to inspire the students to make a difference in the world and combat racism. The students from Balwin school were joined by students from Belvedere school to listen to numerous guest speakers, that included all of the guests that I introduced today as well, including folks like the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, Bashir Mohamed, the Member for Edmonton-Centre, Jasdeep Panesar, Japman Bajaj, and Seada Karalic. It was a wonderful day of embracing our diversity and celebrating all of our differences.

It was such an honour to be a part of this very special day. I would like to commend Balwin school for being an exemplary model in celebrating the diversity found within their school and making every student feel special, cherished, and loved. I would also like to give a special thank you to everyone who made this day special, because together we can eliminate racism and discrimination once and for all.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Oil Sands Advisory Group Former Co-chair

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a few days ago on 630 CHED the environment minister said that Tzeponah Berman was put on the NDP's oil sands advisory group as co-chair because CAPP invited her. We have repeatedly asked in this Chamber if that is, in fact, true. This time, though, because the environment minister continues to dodge it, I will ask the Premier. Is it true that Tzeponah Berman was put on the advisory panel for the oil sands by you because CAPP requested it? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is making reference to my remarks from a radio interview in which I could have been clearer. It is true that a group of individuals, including Ms Berman, came forward to government with a proposal on the emissions cap. Among those individuals was the past president of the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers. Our government has no current relationship with Ms Berman, and her position on energy infrastructure is not only irrelevant; it is wrong.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this environment minister continues to try to muddy the waters. The fact is that at the radio station she said that Tzepporah Berman, an individual who compared our oil sands to Mordor, an individual who said that the oil sands should be shut, was put on the advisory panel by the NDP at the request of CAPP, not a former president of CAPP, not somebody who's formerly been associated with CAPP but on behalf of CAPP. Is it true, or is it similar to meetings with the mayor of Rocky Mountain House?

The Speaker: Hon. member, there's been a ruling in the House on that matter.

The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, a group of individuals, including Ms Berman, came forward to government with a proposal on the emissions cap, in 2015. Among those individuals were a number of companies and the past president of the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers. We find Ms Berman's comments on Alberta's need for extra pipeline infrastructure and a replacement of the current TMX line to be offensive, and we also believe that her comments are an insult to the hard-working men and women of this province.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, clearly, this government continues to want to blame other people for their mistakes. They will not address whether the statements of the environment minister are, in fact, factual from the other day on the radio. But what is true, for sure, is that at the end of the day it's the NDP who appointed this individual to their oil sands advisory group, an individual who compared the oil sands to Mordor, who said that oil is destroying our democracy. Will this Premier and this NDP government stop blaming other people for their mistakes? Will they stand up and recognize that they made a terrible mistake by putting this individual on the oil sands advisory group and apologize to Albertans for that decision?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have been very clear for some months on this issue. Of course, the oil sands advisory group's work has now concluded, and the work around the emissions cap, the legislation, has passed, and we are now moving on. Our government's plan to reduce emissions and make meaningful progress on climate change got us federal approval of two pipelines, and we will not stop until, certainly, the TMX project is moving and shovels are in the ground and Albertans are getting access to tidewater.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the NDP may now claim that they disagree with Tzepporah Berman's position now that she's left the advisory group, but that begs the question: did the NDP agree with her before they appointed her to the group? She said in 2011, and I quote: we need to shut down the tar sands; we need to move away from the development of oil. In 2013 she said that oil is corroding our democracy. Did the Premier agree with her statements back then? If not, why did she put her on the advisory group? Or is she embarrassed now about that decision, and that's why her environment minister is now on the radio trying to blame CAPP for that decision?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, in 2015 a group of individuals, including Ms Berman, came forward to government with a proposal on the emissions cap as part of the consultations on the climate leadership plan. There were a number of companies among those individuals, and the past president of CAPP, Dave Collyer, was among them as well. Our government has no current relationship with Ms Berman. Certainly, the climate leadership plan: that group of individuals contributed to it, and it did result in the approval of two pipelines.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this government does have a relationship with Ms Berman. They put her on their oil sands advisory group. They now want to move away from that. I don't blame them given the things that she has said. The fact is that this government has a relationship with an environmental activist that is now illegally protesting against a pipeline that we're trying to get built, and this government, because they're ashamed of that fact – and they should be ashamed of that fact – is now going on the radio and attempting to blame CAPP for it. Again, will the minister or the Premier stand up and apologize for the ridiculous decision to put Tzepporah on their oil sands advisory group?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government has no current relationship with Ms Berman, and of course the oil sands advisory group has concluded their work. Part of that work was, of course, the passing of the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act. Certainly, our government's plan to reduce emissions and make meaningful progress on climate change has resulted in moving the Alberta economy forward, with the approval of two pipelines, but it also put forward to Canadians a credible climate leadership plan that is substantive and that grows the economy while taking seriously the matter of climate change and protecting . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the environment minister continues to stand up in this House and try to avoid her relationship with Tzepporah Berman. That is ridiculous, and Albertans are not falling for it. The question that has been asked over and over in this Chamber in the last couple of days: is what the environment minister said on the radio about CAPP true? Yes or no? She refuses to answer that question. We're not talking about former presidents of CAPP. We're not talking about people that may have met her in a hospitality suite. We want to know if CAPP asked to have Ms Berman on that panel, yes or no, because that is what the environment minister has said on the radio. Is it true, or is it not true?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A group of individuals, including Ms Berman, came forward to government with a proposal on the oil sands emissions limit, which is why she was on the oil sands emissions limit. Among those individuals was the past president of CAPP and a number of companies.

Mr. Speaker, the only reason I can see that the members opposite are fixated on this issue is because they have no plan to address climate change, and in fact they can't even get a handle on the science. The Finance critic for that party even financed a climate change denying film. He promotes climate change denying books on social media. I certainly wouldn't want him managing my books.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this environment minister wrote an introduction to a book, An Action a Day Keeps Global Capitalism Away, that talks about taking illegal action to protest inside of this province.

But we'll digress from that. Here is the fact. They put Ms Berman on their panel, an individual who said that we need to shut down the tar sands, that we need to move away from the development of oil, that oil is corroding our democracy, an individual that is in B.C. right now illegally protesting a pipeline that we're trying to get built, at protests, by the way, Mr. Speaker, that have seen RCMP officers hurt. This minister went on the radio and said that CAPP is the one that wanted her on this panel. Yes or no?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, Ms Berman's comments are offensive to the hard-working women and men of this province and to all Canadians because this project is certainly in the national interest.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member across the way seems to want to take a trip down memory lane. Might I remind that party that trips down memory lane often end in a lake of fire. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, that is one of the most desperate displays I've ever seen from this government. This government is so desperate that they will dig in on anything to do but answer the question.

The question, Mr. Speaker, is so simple. This minister said on the radio that CAPP asked to have Ms Berman put on the oil advisory council. Did that happen or not? You can't get any more simple than that question. Now, I get why they want to avoid it, because they want the public not to remember that they put this individual on the panel. But this minister said that on the radio. Is it true, or is it not true?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is making reference to my remarks from a radio interview in which I could have been clearer. A group of individuals, including Ms Berman, came forward to government with a proposal on the emissions cap. Among those individuals were a number of companies and the past president of the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the minister. She was very clear on the radio. She said that CAPP asked for Ms Berman to be part of the oil advisory council. That is the question. The minister does not want to answer the question. It is embarrassing that a minister of the Crown would continue to stand up in this House and mislead Albertans this way. Is it true that CAPP asked for Ms Berman to be on this panel? Yes or no? Stop hiding from Albertans, and tell the truth in this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, let's take a trip down memory lane. The government put together the oil sands advisory group, which put forward a proposal, which informed our climate leadership plan, which led to the federal approval of two pipelines. I'm very proud of the work that our government has done and our minister of environment has done in securing a pipeline approval, something that the Leader of the Opposition couldn't do when he was in Ottawa for 20 years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Emergency Medical Services Funding

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, on Monday I questioned the Minister of Health on whether or not she would finally commit to properly funding EMS and support paramedics. The minister responded by pointing her finger to anyone she could, claiming that a four-year-old budget that was never passed in this House was the source of the current struggles for EMS workers. I imagine that if that were the case, the minister would have no trouble addressing that shortfall within the three, soon to be four budgets that she's been present for. To the Minister of Health: do you believe that three years as Minister of Health has been long enough to address this funding issue for EMS, or will front-line workers continue to have to wait?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm incredibly proud to stand in this House and defend our government's record, which included stopping the drastic cuts that were proposed by that member's party when they were in government. In a few short minutes we'll be able to discuss the budget in great detail. I can tell you that what we have done is brought forward stability in terms of health care funding. What we have done is brought forward stability in terms of leadership for Alberta Health and Alberta Health Services, things that the members opposite failed to do because they don't believe in public health care. On this side of the House we do. We protect our front lines, and we protect the Albertans who rely on those services.

Mr. Fraser: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's go down memory lane. Last year that minister cut EMS by $17.5 million. When you talk to paramedics today, things are getting worse. In fact, they've gone to CBC, and a CBC article revealed that the call volume is up since 2012 by 20 per cent, and the number of paramedics increased only by 3.4 per cent. I'll gladly admit that our previous government didn't get it right in three of the last six years, but this minister has been at the helm for the last three years. To the minister: will you take any responsibility at all for the shortfall?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very proud of the fact that response times haven't gone up, that we have found ways to increase front-line service providers, and that we continue to do that. We'll be happy to talk about this year's budget in just a few minutes. Let's again remember what happened under the then government, oh, of which the leader of that party was the Health minister. They brought forward a proposed billion-dollar cut. They brought forward a proposed health care tax. Even in their proposal for this year's upcoming shadow budget they're proposing those same failed solutions. You can't cut a billion dollars from health care, bring in a new tax, and expect things to get better. On this side of the House we're standing up for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East. Second supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I honestly believe that the minister has the best interest of Albertans at heart and that this oversight in funding for EMS is simply a mistake. But it's a mistake that puts lives at risk, so I feel compelled to stand up and continue to question her about this issue. It's been identified, the solutions are within the minister's purview, and the need is only growing. Regardless of how we got here, we need to start moving forward to ensure that Albertans have access to life-saving emergency care. To the same minister: if you won't take responsibility, will you at least take some action?

Ms Hoffman: I'm proud to do both, Mr. Speaker. We've taken responsibility for reversing the cuts that were proposed by Mr. Mandel, the leader of the party that's asking the very question. We've taken action on making sure that we protect front-line services throughout our province, including expanding capital, including expanding EMS services. We took action on putting the paramedics under the Health Professions Act, something that the member opposite appears to have attempted to do and that was not done when he was in government but that we did on this side very shortly after taking government. We've taken action on bringing in power structures. In a few short minutes we'll have an opportunity to take action on discussing our vision, including our budget, including that for EMS in this province, and we'll see . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Tourism in Banff-Cochrane Constituency

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, Banff-Cochrane is home to the rolling foothills and the majestic Rocky Mountains, some of Alberta's most iconic scenery. The region attracts millions of tourists each year who enjoy four-season recreation and excellent hospitality. To the Minister of Culture and Tourism: what strategies are being developed to leverage the incredible tourism assets found in the Banff-Cochrane constituency?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Travel Alberta works with tourism partners like Banff/Lake Louise Tourism to leverage marketing opportunities through the co-operative marketing program, to develop new as well as to enhance existing tourism product experiences. This year's program, held in Banff from March 5 to 8, was on developing new winter and year-round experiences to increase visitation in the shoulder season. Through the visitor services innovation fund with the Banff/Lake Louise Tourism Bureau we have offered mobile social media counselling to provide visitors with convenient trip-planning services, resulting in a 35 per cent . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the Stoney Nakoda First Nation is eager to see an expansion of indigenous tourism in Alberta, do you have a strategy to help them accomplish this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud that our ministry was the first provincial government to provide a $100,000 grant to establish an indigenous tourism association in Alberta. We know that indigenous people in Alberta have inspiring stories to tell. They can offer authentic educational experiences that visitors are looking for, creating good-paying jobs in indigenous communities. We're going to continue working with the Stoney Nakoda First Nation to explore opportunities, to attract investments, and to expand tourism products and experiences in the area.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that there are ample opportunities to expand and diversify the tourism sector through sport-related activities such as mountain biking and ecotourism, what actions are being taken to help fill up hotel rooms during shoulder seasons?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're working on a nature-based tourism action plan to help identify key opportunities and strategies to diversify Alberta's nature-based tourism experiences and attractions. Also, the tourism entrepreneur start-up seminars currently being offered throughout the province will provide a strong foundation, with expert knowledge and business fundamentals to help those interested in exploring opportunities in this very exciting industry.

Thank you.

Electric Power System

Mr. Panda: It is clear that this NDP government has mismanaged electricity and that Albertans are stuck with the bill. Enmax transferred the carbon credits to the Balancing Pool and received $5 million in the settlement over the PPA agreements. This PPA scandal is costing us up to $2 billion. To the minister: why did you hide these numbers last week? The $2 billion would have brought the green line LRT to suburban Calgary without any carbon tax.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. You know, just over a year ago we took action to protect Alberta families, and I'm pleased to say that we've settled all PPA disputes with companies and provided a loan, as was mentioned, to the Balancing Pool. If we had not acted, customers would have seen great spikes in their bills. In fact, in the next coming while their bills will be 78 per cent below what they would have been had we not taken action.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that Enmax lost $30.3 million last year and given that the third-quarter financial report of the NDP government showed borrowing of $650 million for the Balancing Pool, why is the NDP government denying dividends to Calgarians, who own Enmax, and saddling Alberta taxpayers with a multibillion-dollar burden for the NDP's mismanagement?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we're pleased to have concluded the agreement with Enmax. As was stated many times last week on that agreement, there is no impact on Albertans. It was very clearly stated. It was a question of turning in carbon credits for an offset. The company clearly does belong to Calgary. This agreement is good for Enmax, it's good for the owners of Enmax, and it's good for our province.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given the record price of 3.7 cents for a kilowatt hour set in round 1 of the renewable electricity program auctions and since rounds 2 and 3 are under way, will the minister admit that the record prices do not include the price to build new transmission lines all over Alberta or the cost to build the backup natural gas plants? Why is your NDP hiding the real cost to consumers and taxpayers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yeah. We were very pleased to get record-setting prices in our first REP auction, 3.7 cents. You know, Alberta is blessed with a fairly robust system. The projects that were chosen are right near the line, and there will be no extra costs for that because that's the way we planned it, and that's the way it's going to be.

Carillion Highway Maintenance Contract

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, given that the Rural Municipalities of Alberta meeting yesterday heard from the minister that the company Carillion has a contract to maintain 43 per cent of Alberta's highways and is in receivership and given that the government of Alberta will pay $8.9 million on behalf of Carillion to make sure they have items like sand and gravel, which are important, in stock to keep the highways maintained, to the Minister of Transportation: is it legal for the government to pay the expenses of one of the winners of the road maintenance tenders while others that won the tenders don't get that support? And even if it is legal, is it fair to the other contractors?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. I appreciate his concern for all of the other companies, but the fact of the matter is that Carillion's parent company is in receivership, and they're losing money on these contracts. In order to make sure that they can pay their suppliers and continue to get things like sand, gravel, and other supplies, fuel, and be able to pay their workers and keep our highways clear and safe until the end of winter, it is important that we support that company's operations. The alternative . . .

Mr. McIver: The fairness question went unanswered.

Given that the minister told the large room of RMA attendees yesterday that the $8.9 million, as he said, is to get us to the end of April and given that April can be a high snowfall month, which makes our highways an important safety issue – it makes sense – to the Minister of Transportation: what are you doing to make sure that the standards of care provided by this company in receivership will not go downhill during this important time, putting Albertans' safety at risk?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. That's precisely what we have done. We've ensured that we keep the suppliers and the employees whole, that the company is able to continue its operations. I might suggest that the contracts awarded to Carillion took place when that member was the Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: The contracts are not in question, Mr. Speaker.

Given that it's unfair to companies maintaining Alberta's highways without Alberta financing to now be competing with a company who banks at the government of Alberta and given that

Albertans should know that the safety of their highways is in the hands of a company that can afford to operate, to the minister: in order to have Alberta's roads looked after by a viable company in the future, on what date will you or your ministry put out the next tender for the 43 per cent of roads now under the care of Carillion, and if you do not know the answer today, will you tell us on what date you will inform the House?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, there are a variety of contracts that have been established under the previous government for the maintenance of our highways, and in fact they expire at different times. In this particular case there are a number of options that we're considering in order to deal with the areas that Carillion has bid on, which, I might add, is about 43 per cent of the roads in the province. They are certainly the largest operator. We are working on contingency plans. I want to assure the House and all Albertans that we are going to ensure that our highways are safely maintained during winter, summer, all year-round. That's our obligation. We take it very seriously.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Calgary-West.

Justice System

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government knows that an accused must stand before a justice of the peace within 24 hours of their arrest, which is now the sole responsibility of Crown prosecutors. Yet we now know that judges are dropping charges and letting accused offenders walk free because Alberta Justice is not meeting this critical time limit. Minister, you cut funding for prosecutors in your very first budget and left 35 positions vacant and, in doing so, you put Albertans at risk. Did you not consider the serious consequences that might occur?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, it was our government who acted on the recommendations of the committee, after the tragic death of Constable Wynn, to look into our bail system in order to move it forward. It was our government that advanced the funding to allow those Crown prosecutors to be in courtrooms to start to move the system forward. It's our government that's been investing in both RCMP and Crown prosecutors, and we'll have more to say about that in the future. We take our responsibilities very seriously.

Mr. Ellis: Let's be clear, Mr. Speaker. It was that minister and that government that cut the Crown's budget by $5 million in 2015-2016, and now we're playing the catch-up game. Given that rural Albertans are expressing great concern about the revolving door that is setting offenders free to continue preying upon vulnerable citizens and stealing their vehicles, ATVs, tractors, and the list goes on and on and on, Minister: what are you doing to fix this problem?

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for what is really a very important question. We all know that the Jordan ruling was a massive change in law. That resulted in us having to rethink the way we were doing business. In order to ensure that we're able to meet those timelines, this government advanced funding to a number of areas in Justice. We continue to monitor the situation and continue to work with all of our partners throughout the system to see where those pressures continue to evolve, to keep moving forward. This is a government with a history of investments in front-line services and ensuring we provide the services that Albertans need, and we will continue to do that.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister likes to avoid responsibility by claiming issues lie in the federal realm and given that because it is the responsibility of the provinces to create an efficient bail hearing process and the minister has a clear role to play in closing the revolving door that is instilling fear in law-abiding citizens, Minister, you have a responsibility to protect the citizens of this province. When will you start protecting the victims?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we believe we have a responsibility to the citizens of this province. That's why we've taken the step of investing throughout law enforcement. I was very interested to see that the members opposite were not interested in supporting those investments in the supplementary supply. We will continue to make those investments. Our seven-point plan allows more RCMP officers not only to be in the field but takes those RCMP officers out of the back offices and puts them on the front lines so that they can continue to assist in ensuring that we are catching those perpetrators.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Carbon Levy Rebate for Seniors

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Tuesday I asked the minister of seniors some questions that were not answered but dodged, so today I will be tabling a ministerial order in which the minister of seniors very quietly decided to allow the government housing foundations to include carbon tax as a portion of seniors' income for rent calculation purposes, forcing some of the poorest in society to pay higher rent. But, curiously, seniors who receive direct-to-tenant rent supplements are exempted from including carbon tax rebates for rent calculation purposes. Minister, please explain that.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we know that our climate leadership plan is working. We know that approximately 260,000 seniors are eligible for up to $300 annually for the carbon levy rebate. We continue to invest in seniors, make sure that they're well taken care of in this province, and we're very proud of our record.

Mr. Orr: Seniors don't consider an increase to their rent helping them out.

Anyway, given that we will see a further 67 per cent hike to the carbon tax and given that seniors who live in these government-subsidized facilities are there because they are very low income, often due to no fault of their own, how do you suppose these low-income seniors will make it once this increase comes into effect? I can't really imagine the implications well.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We certainly worked very closely with the housing management bodies across the province. We have over 100 housing management bodies that provide affordable housing. We have a significant investment. We gave them $88 million this year to do energy upgrades, things to help them in that regard. We know that the opposition would be cutting billions of dollars from that budget. We inherited a billion dollars in deferred maintenance, outstanding maintenance, so that wouldn't be taken care of. We are investing and supporting seniors in our province.

Mr. Orr: If the seniors pay for it.

I will ask again, Minister. Since we know that the carbon tax affects everything that low-income seniors buy, from gas in their car to groceries at the store, how could you, Minister, use this rebate to force a carbon tax driven increase in rent for an already low-income senior who depends on subsidies, especially after they've spent their life building this province from the ground up?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we know that seniors built this province and deserve to retire in dignity. That's why we invest significantly in seniors' programs. We've increased the Alberta seniors' benefit. We invest significantly in affordable housing. Right now we have 62 projects under way in this province. Our government absolutely has seniors' backs. We support them. That government would be cutting significantly from their programs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

New Edmonton Hospital

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency of Edmonton-South West is one of the fastest growing communities in the province, and as this community grows, so too does our need for services like schools and hospitals. That's why I was pleased to stand with the Premier and Minister of Health to announce over $400 million to fund a new hospital in the constituency. But with the urgency of this facility, to the Minister of Infrastructure: what is being done to ensure that the project will be delivered on time?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an exciting project. Hospital projects like the Edmonton hospital are particularly complex, so it's very important that in the planning stages of a project like this, extensive work is done to meet the desired outcome. Of course, the significant outcome of the planning stage is that we deliver a project that's on time and on budget. Right now our efforts are diligently focused on the Edmonton hospital. The project team is working very hard on this to adhere to the work schedule, and the timeline is on time right now.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the update. To the same minister: when can my constituents actually expect the design phase and the construction phases to be completed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member. I know he's very excited, as are we all, about this project coming down the pike. You know, as we move forward on this, we anticipate that the design concepts will start in about 2019, with the design work getting under way in 2020. We expect the initial site work to begin in 2020 as well, and a completion date on this very complex build is going to be 2026.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, major projects like this can involve noise and traffic congestion both during and after construction and when the project is complete. To the Minister of Infrastructure again: what strategies are being taken to help mitigate or address these issues?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, one of the big issues that we have to deal with when we're doing a project this big and this complex is that it's going up oftentimes in a community that's fairly dense with population, with residential homes, and with businesses, and we take that into consideration in the project planning. Take, for instance, the Calgary cancer centre. One of the great things that was done in the planning of the cancer centre was that specific sites were set up where workers could go and park at those sites. Shuttle buses would then take people over to the site to do the work. There are a lot of mitigation efforts done in terms of making sure that there is as little disruption as possible.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Pharmacy Funding Framework

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've heard a substantial amount of feedback on the new pharmacy agreements that the government is implementing. Pharmacists entered discussions with Alberta Health and Blue Cross, fully anticipating a collaborative and open approach. The government delayed discussions when they chose to hire a third-party negotiator and allowed only a few members of the Pharmacists' Association to negotiate, and they had to sign nondisclosure agreements. How is this an open and transparent government?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We were very clear at the beginning, when we formed government, that we weren't going to move forward with 12 per cent increases like we'd seen in some years, but we also weren't going to move forward with deep cuts. Instead, we've brought forward stability. We've brought forward a proposal, that we sat down with RxA to negotiate, that saw a 4.3 per cent increase rather than the 12 per cent that was negotiated under the former government, of which the member is a caucus member now. What we found was that we came up with a solution that protects the front-line services, the people of this province, and comes up with reasonable increases. We think 4 per cent is reasonable, we think 12 per cent isn't, and we think the opposition's proposals for deep cuts are also unreasonable.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, one thing that stood out about this agreement was the rejection of a proposal by pharmacists to expand their capabilities. Pharmacists approached the government with 40 procedures that they could perform for Albertans and provide at a relative cost savings. Why did this government reject those proposals that the pharmacists provided to you?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, what we did is that we sat down at the table – just to clarify, if there was any confusion, the 4.3 per cent is for growth in that area, and that's reasonable. If there are new people that need new prescriptions, we have growth to fund that. What we did is that we sat down at the table and we said: this is what we can afford; help us come up with a formula to get there. Instead of going from being 50 per cent higher than the next highest jurisdiction for flu immunization, we went to being tied for the highest. I think a number of those changes were done in partnership with the RxA, and they came up with a formula that is going to help us achieve these realistic budget targets for growth but at the same time will be sustainable for the . . .

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Health has committed to reinvest at least half of the underbudget savings that will result from this agreement in mutually agreed upon pharmacy services. To the Health minister: what exactly are these services, and what do you do with the other 50 per cent?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What we have done is to come up with a proposal that will see an increase, obviously, with respect to demand and the needs in the area without moving forward with an unsustainable growth model. We have reduced the level of increase because we think it's important for us to have sustainability for all of us in the province of Alberta. What we are doing is finding ways to increase access for the citizens of the province as well and reduce their expenses and keep money in their own pockets. For example, I had seniors reach out to me – I imagine that some of the other members may have as well – saying that they had to get prescriptions refilled daily or weekly. Instead, now it's only twice a month, reducing the copay.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mental Health Services for Children

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, according to statistics from AHS the success rate for mental health services for children has steadily fallen under this NDP government. In 2015, when they took office, only 1 in 10 children were not offered an appointment for mental health services within 30 days. Two years later nearly 4 in 10 children are not able to access the treatment that they need within 30 days. Can the minister please explain to parents waiting for these services why their vulnerable children cannot get the care they need?

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Our government knows how important it is, when Albertans reach out for help, for them to get that help as quickly as they can and close to their communities. That's why we funded new counselling supports for survivors of sexual and physical abuse such as the Zebra Child Protection Centre, opened the new Rutherford mental health clinic for children and youth in Edmonton and surrounding areas, and we're building a new eight-bed youth detox facility in Red Deer. This is among our many actions that we are taking across the province to help support children and their families.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given that investment has increased yet outcomes have decreased and that this ministry consistently produces poor results despite increases in spending, to the minister:

would you please update this House on why the nearly 4 in 10 children who are suffering from mental health issues cannot get the timely services that they deserve?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we inherited a system where mental health was underfunded and not really given the importance that it deserved, which is why one of the first actions our government took was to commission the Valuing Mental Health review, and we've been moving forward on implementing the recommendations from that. We've been working in partnership with communities across the province, including with school boards, to make sure that there's access to supports in schools and working on capacity building and resiliency in classrooms as well as communities from the top of our province to the southern borders. We know that it's important to reach out to children . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, the outcomes have gotten worse under this minister. All we ever get are talking points around the right health care in the right place at the right time. My question is simple. When can the nearly 4 in 10 Alberta children suffering from mental health challenges expect to have the right health care in the right place at the right time? Under this minister they don't have any of it, and it's gotten worse, not better.

Ms Payne: Mr. Speaker, working under the leadership of the Valuing Mental Health: Next Steps and the advisory group, which has representatives from the northern part of our province to the southern, we are working to expand those supports for children. We have supported mental health initiatives in 85 communities across the province, from Fort Chip down to Milk River. These guys keep talking about wanting to have billions of dollars of cuts to health care. That's not going to lead to enhanced supports for children and youth who are struggling with mental health. That'll lead to longer wait times, fewer services, and more children at risk.

Mackenzie County Gas Supply Disruption

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, during an extremely cold spell this winter a state of emergency was declared in Mackenzie county due to low natural gas pressure in the lines of the Northern Lights Gas Co-op. Apparently, the distribution line is too small and runs to a dead end, leaving hundreds of residents without heat. The population is growing, economic development is limited because of a restricted natural gas supply, and there is a fear of a year-round natural gas shortage. What steps has the NDP government taken to ensure that this emergency never happens again?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll take the first part. Yeah, in that situation it was very unfortunately in cold weather. It happened in one of the natural gas co-ops, and one of the things in my looking into the issue – and I'll let my colleague minister explain. Over the years no one had looked at decommissioning, when the event would come that there was decommissioning, and that's been happening now. I've been in touch with a couple of the councillors in Mackenzie county to look at how we can work with that, and I have also said that I'll be working with my colleague the Minister of Ag and Forestry to look at solutions for this problem.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given the representatives of Northern Lights Gas Co-op and Mackenzie county have met with the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry, looking for a solution to ensure that the homes are heated and industries remain open next winter, will the NDP government ensure that a solution will be found and the gas co-op will not miss the construction season over administrative minutiae and bureaucratic red tape, which would put the lives of residents at risk again next winter?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very good question. It's important to note that there are a couple issues here. The gas field that's currently supplying a lot of these residences and communities is getting dry, and the other one is aging infrastructure in the pipelines. There are a couple issues here. We're talking to those communities, talking to the Federation of Alberta Gas Co-ops as well to ensure that we have a plan in place to ensure that those communities, those residences have the necessary natural gas they need to heat their homes, working with Energy and my department colleagues, ministry colleagues, you know, right across the front bench here to ensure that we do have a plan and that those residences have the gas they need.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that the processing industry in parts of Mackenzie county has to shut down during low gas pressure situations and given the concern in Mackenzie county that the NDP government in Edmonton is not looking out for their interests when presented with things like the caribou range plan, will this government continue to treat Mackenzie county as an abandoned territory, a territory larger than the province of New Brunswick, or will this government partner with Mackenzie county to help sustain their industries and communities and to promote economic development throughout their region?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you. I can just touch on a couple of things. Actually, I would say that it's more of a crossministry. There are 342 municipalities in this province, and we're concerned about every single one of them. Safety is paramount. The Alberta Emergency Management Agency, who are under Municipal Affairs, took it upon themselves to pump in extra gas to Mackenzie. I've also been in contact with them. I was up in La Crête and in High Level a few months back and had a conversation, and I did it recently as well. We will always be concerned about safety. Whenever these things happen, we will take action immediately or as quickly as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This NDP government's best friend in Ottawa, Mr. Trudeau, has announced a 10-year plan for a $40 billion national housing strategy. On a per capita basis Alberta should receive $4 billion of that total amount; however, the stakeholders I've been talking to are saying that we're only getting approximately $560 million from that amount. Minister, since we all know that Justin Trudeau will not stand up for Albertans and our resource industry, will you at least ask him to be fair and provide us with the share our citizens deserve on this important issue?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, our government is committed to making sure Albertans have the affordable housing we need, and we work with our federal partners regarding that. There is a bilateral agreement that we're beginning negotiations on very soon, and we absolutely will advocate for Albertans although here in Alberta we already are doing a significant amount, $1.2 billion in investments, which is creating 62 new projects across the province. We're doing a lot in Alberta already.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the stakeholders I'm talking to would like to see this government resurrect Alberta's support of the supportive living initiative program, which saw the government partner with the private industry to efficiently and cost-effectively build affordable accommodations for seniors and given that this public-private model not only proved efficient at addressing the pent-up demand for accommodations, it also used taxpayers' money cost-effectively, Minister, was your decision to end this successful public-private partnership made for fiscal reasons, or was it simply to support your NDP world view?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do encourage the member to ask members of his own caucus who were part of that process. I can tell you that when I sat down and reviewed those contracts with officials, they weren't based on what was in the best interest of even the folks living in these communities. Having a retrofitted hotel serving takeout food from the restaurant next door is not the quality care that I would expect for anyone that I loved who was requiring these services. So we sat down. We very carefully reviewed the contracts. We found ways to improve the level of care where it was needed and to work with the providers to get the best outcomes for those projects.

I'm really proud that they're moving forward. We're on track to open many of them this quarter, and last quarter we . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the NDP is intending to move to a purely public model and that the minister said that they want the best outcome, let me share some numbers that Albertans understand. Given that Willow Square in Fort Mac, which is fully public, will cost Albertans $763,000 per unit and that Bridgeland in Calgary, also fully public, will cost $650,000 per unit and given that under the former public-private program the average cost per unit was $65,000, can the minister please tell me: if you truly believe in serving Albertans, why won't you maintain public-private . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under the former government we know that the pendulum swung very far towards proposing projects that were only in the interest of their friends and insiders. We know that it's important to have balance. We know that it's important to have seniors as the focus. We are going to continue to move forward with the projects that we announced, many of which were through partnerships, including private industry as well as nonprofits, as well as moving forward with some public projects.

I know that the idea of having choice, including public options, isn't something that they support, but we think that it's important to have all options, Mr. Speaker. We're going to continue to move forward protecting the people of this province and building . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Condominium Property Regulations

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. More and more Albertans, including my constituents, are choosing to live in condos. What's the government doing to protect condo owners?

The Speaker: The Minister of Service Alberta and of Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for his question. This government cares about everyday Albertans, and we believe Albertans deserve to be protected when they make a purchase, especially when it's as important as buying a home. I'm proud to say that on January 1 the new phase of the condo regulations came into effect. These new protections will provide more information for buyers at time of purchase, give the option to cancel a contract if a unit doesn't look like what they were promised, and protect Albertans' money when they're putting deposits into a trust.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that these new regulations relate mostly to buying a condo, something that I had experience with, over 800 transactions in my 30-year career. However, once a condo is purchased, people still continue to live in them. I'm wondering: what's the government doing to make life better for Albertans living in the condos once the transaction is over and to improve the day-to-day operations of condo boards?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are wrapping up consultations on the second phase of regulations, that will address living in a condo, including condo governance. This past summer we invited Albertans to open houses that we held across the province so that they could tell us how we could improve condo living for them. Based on what we heard, we launched an online survey to continue this important conversation. Finally, we have followed this up with targeted stakeholder meetings to obtain further feedback. We're confident that the final regulations will reflect what we've heard from Albertans and make life better for condo owners.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, despite the proposed regulations to make living in a condo better, I've heard from my constituents that conflicts have arisen between condo owners and their condo boards. Currently the only recourse for the two parties is through the courts. What is the government doing to allow Albertans a lower cost alternative to court action?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As part of the third phase of regulations we are also consulting on a dispute resolution mechanism for Albertans, including the determination of the tribunal's jurisdiction and structure. Albertans want and need a more efficient, less expensive way to resolve condominium disputes than having to proceed through the court system. The dispute tribunal is intended to provide them with that alternative.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, is it true, the statement that the environment minister made on the radio that CAPP asked for Tzaporah Berman to be appointed to the oil sands advisory group? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is making reference to my remarks from a radio interview in which I could have been clearer. A group of individuals, including Ms Berman, came forward to government with a proposal on the emissions cap. Among those individuals and representatives from some companies was the past president of the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers. Our government has no current relationship with Ms Berman, and her position on energy infrastructure is not only irrelevant; it is also wrong.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the minister was crystal clear.

I'll try it a different way. Is it false, what the minister said on the radio, that CAPP asked for Tzaporah Berman to be appointed to the oil sands advisory group?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the oil sands advisory group has concluded its work. They provided us advice on a 100-megatonne cap on oil sands emissions. The legislation has since passed, to take effect in terms of how we manage our oil sands emissions going forward. Of course, this cap was proposed to us by a group of individuals, including Ms Berman, who came forward to government with that proposal.

Mr. Nixon: Was the minister of environment's statement on the radio the other day true, that CAPP requested that Tzaporah Berman be put on the advisory group? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, a group of individuals, including Ms Berman, came forward to government with a proposal on the emissions cap. Part of that group were a number of companies. The past president of CAPP indeed was part of it. It is quite possible that I could have been clearer, but what is also clear is that Ms Berman's views on energy infrastructure that is in the national interest are not only irrelevant, but they are wrong. This line of questioning has become somewhat repetitive.

Pharmacy Funding Framework

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, Alberta pharmacists are trusted and highly skilled. In many communities the pharmacist is the only health care professional that has remained constant. Ninety-five per cent of Albertans named their pharmacist as the most accessible health care professional. Their close connection and dedication to their patients and their ability to identify and prevent health problems saves our system hundreds of millions of dollars every year.

But pharmacists don't just save money; pharmacists save lives. That's why it's incredible how this government has treated this group of trusted professionals. The pharmacy association was forced to sign a nondisclosure agreement during negotiations on a new funding agreement. Now, we're being told that this is standard practice, but it's funny that the Alberta Medical Association sends regular updates to its doctors when their funding framework is being discussed. Maybe this government thinks pharmacists can't be trusted.

Pharmacists with advanced prescribing authority provide enhanced patient care and have been compensated accordingly. The new framework eliminates that. Pharmacists administered over 50 per cent of the flu vaccinations in Alberta last year. The new framework cuts that fee, and some pharmacists will be unable to provide the service. How many more cases of flu will that result in, and what will that cost? And starting next year, Alberta Health will withhold at least 10 per cent of fees payable to pharmacists and only pay it out if they meet their budget targets. Now, they call that risk sharing. Pharmacists call it: using my income to backstop Alberta Health. Maybe the money is needed to pay for unionized laundry services or the government's new superlab.

Pharmacists came to the table with over 40 proposals to cut health care costs. Alberta Health accepted none of them. Mr. Speaker, all Albertans, including pharmacists, want to curb health care costs, but the first principle of medicine is: do no harm. This framework will seriously harm the financial viability of pharmacists and put their patients' health in jeopardy. That's not what I call making life better for Albertans.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund it is my pleasure to table five copies of the report covering the committee's activities in 2017. This report fulfills the requirements of Standing Order 55 and section 6(4)(c) of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act. This report will be posted on the Assembly's website, and copies are also available at the committee's office.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Government House Leader and Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to give oral notice of a motion for the Order Paper, that motion being: "Be it resolved that the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices be authorized to meet during the consideration of the 2018-19 main estimates."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This time I would like to table a petition that was presented to me just about an hour and a half ago signed by over 150 Albertans protesting the government's cuts to pharmacy through the new pharmacy framework.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings to present today. The first is a copy of a ministerial order from the Department of Seniors and Housing outlining the change to rent calculation and carbon tax rebates.

The second one is copies of many letters addressed to the Premier regarding the fact that time lost without heart treatment equals irreparable heart muscle loss and death for up to 35 central Alberta region patients annually. Central region patients receive a lower standard of care in relation to the Calgary region, which receives up to 20 times more funding per capita.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising to table the requisite five copies of the schedule for consideration of main estimates. I can indicate that pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(3) consultation with House leaders on this schedule has taken place.

In addition, in accordance with Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) I am advising the House that government business is scheduled for consideration on the afternoon of April 4 as well as the afternoon of April 10. I have the estimates here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today in my response to the Speech from the Throne I made contrast of our plan to that of the UCP by referencing this RBC economic outlook report, which I am tabling the requisite five copies of. This shows that our numbers are up while currently Saskatchewan's are down.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have achieved the target ahead of time. We'd like to move to Orders of the Day, and in order to allow adequate time to prepare for the Budget Address by the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance this afternoon, the House is recessed until 3:15 p.m.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Transmittal of Estimates

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've received certain messages from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All stand, please.

The Speaker: The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required by the offices of the Legislative Assembly for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2019, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required by the government for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2019, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the 2018-19 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates as well as the 2018-19 government estimates. In addition, I also wish to table the 2018-21 government of Alberta strategic plan and the Budget 2018 ministry business plans.

Government Motions

Budget Address

13. Mr. Ceci moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, I now wish to table the government's Budget 2018 fiscal plan.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present Budget 2018. Before I begin, I would like to acknowledge that we are gathered here on the traditional territory of Treaty 6. I would also like to acknowledge the Métis people of Alberta, who share a deep connection to this land.

Mr. Speaker, this budget is based on extensive consultations with Albertans, and it reflects their priorities. I want to thank Albertans for their constructive and thoughtful input.

Alberta's economy is coming out of the worst recession in generations. When the global price of oil collapsed and the recession hit, we had a choice: cut or build. We chose to build. In making that choice, we focused on the priorities of regular people and families, creating badly needed jobs, building our province for the future, making life more affordable for people, and protecting the schools, hospitals, and public services all Albertans rely on. That plan is working. Today in Alberta things are looking up. Jobs are up, 90,000 last year, Alberta's economy is growing faster than any province in Canada, and the budget deficit is coming down. Though we have come a long way from the recession's low point, there's still much more to do.

Mr. Speaker, that's what Budget 2018 is all about, making sure this recovery is built to last and built for working Albertans. Budget 2018 is built on three pillars: first, controlling costs to stay on a path to balance; second, investing in jobs and diversification; and third, protecting public services and supporting Albertans.

To set the context, let me begin by looking more closely at the economic recovery under way in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, in 2017 Alberta's economic rebound surpassed expectations. Real GDP grew an estimated 4.5 per cent, with nearly every sector expanding. Exports increased by nearly 30 per cent on rising oil production and an expanded manufacturing base. Housing starts grew by 20 per cent. Retail sales expanded by 7.5 per cent. Rig activity jumped 66 per cent, and the labour market strengthened throughout the year.

Not only that, Mr. Speaker. Alberta also outperformed the rest of the country on a number of key economic metrics: the highest per capita GDP, the highest average weekly earnings, and the highest employment rate in the country. An improving economy supports an improving fiscal picture. We are forecasting a $1.5 billion reduction from the deficit forecast at last year's budget, to $8.8 billion. This forecast is based on an economic growth projection of 2.7 per cent and an oil price of $59. These forecasts are in line with those of the private sector. In short, following a very difficult recession in Alberta, today jobs are up, the deficit is coming down, and our economy continues to grow.

With that economic momentum we can continue on our path to balance by 2023. For too long Alberta has been locked in a cycle of boom-and-bust spending that tracked the price of nonrenewable resource revenues. Earlier this decade when oil prices were high and the economy was growing, the budget remained unbalanced, and savings were not put aside for the future. Between 2010-11 and 2014-15, for example, oil prices averaged $90 a barrel while the economy grew more than 5 per cent per year, more than double the national average, yet over this period the government ran deficits in all but one fiscal year. Boom-and-bust spending was inefficient and unstable.

Upon taking office, our government set out to fix this. We embarked upon a thoughtful and strategic plan to smooth out the wild spending swings that characterized budgeting in Alberta. First, we restored progressive taxation, asking the top 7 per cent of income earners to pay a little more to support health care and education; second, we raised the general corporate tax rate by 2 percentage points to 12 per cent; and third, we implemented an economy-wide price on carbon. With Alberta's economy in recession, every dollar raised through the carbon price was reinvested in the economy in rebates, infrastructure investments, and initiatives to lower greenhouse gas emissions and improve energy efficiency. Even with those changes Albertans and Alberta businesses pay at least $11.2 billion less in taxes than they would in any other province. Mr. Speaker, Alberta's tax advantage is secure.

Today, with the private sector gaining momentum, these important and long-overdue tax reforms will help reduce our overreliance on nonrenewable resource revenue. Revenues from corporate and personal income taxes are forecast to grow by as much as $1.2 billion, with the amount increasing over time as our economy grows. Moreover, as our economy relies less on government stimulus, additional carbon revenue will help contribute to an improving bottom line. Beginning in 2021, additional revenue resulting from the federally imposed carbon price tied to the construction of the Trans Mountain pipeline will be used to support vital public services as the province stays on track to balance the budget by 2023. Mr. Speaker, this is an important step in the direction of stable, predictable budgeting, that this province needs.

But to succeed, it must be joined by other measures to keep spending growth down to stable and manageable levels. First among these is the government's ongoing efforts to eliminate waste and find efficiencies without compromising core public services. It's no secret that by 2015 many spending priorities had become severely distorted. The sky palace, a few hundred metres from here, is only one of the most high-profile examples of this. Less well known were the golf club memberships handed out to highly paid executives in an ever-growing alphabet soup of agencies, boards, and commissions. The same goes for annual government hospitality bills.

Mr. Speaker, from the beginning the government has worked to tackle this legacy and bring down costs. We eliminated perks such as golf club memberships. We slashed travel and hospitality expenses. We introduced sunshine laws to open up the books on public salaries. We eliminated or consolidated 26 agencies, boards, and commissions, and we slashed exorbitant salaries at those agencies, boards, and commissions, with some executives seeing their salaries cut by hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Mr. Speaker, in Budget 2018 that work continues. This year we are extending our salary review to postsecondary executives and school superintendents. We are keeping tight control over discretionary spending, with restrictions on travel, conferences, and hospitality, and we are consolidating services such as communications, information technology, finances, and human resources. This work is important not only for the money it saves but also for the trust it builds. To work effectively, government must demonstrate that the money it spends is spent efficiently and on things that matter to everyday families.

Mr. Speaker, an effective government is also one that responds quickly in a economic crisis. When the oil price collapse hit, tens of thousands of Albertans were thrown out of work. On taking office, the government took the advice of the former Bank of Canada governor David Dodge and injected stimulus into the economy by dramatically increasing spending on infrastructure, developing a capital plan that led the country in investment. This made economic and fiscal sense. Interest rates were low, the economy was depressed, and Albertans needed work. As a result of the government's infrastructure investments, tens of thousands of jobs were created and supported, and Alberta will have the modern, economic, and social infrastructure we need to compete and win in the global economy and build strong communities.

Today, with our economy growing and the private sector creating jobs, we continue to follow Mr. Dodge's advice. It is time to rein back capital spending to more normal levels. Last year's capital plan budgeted $29.5 billion over four years. This year's capital plan returns to more normal levels of spending, $26.6 billion over five years, and makes good on previous promises while promoting growth through strategic infrastructure investments. Reductions are being achieved by extending capital grants across the five years of the capital plan. Capital project cash flows are being closely managed to reduce borrowing costs.

Mr. Speaker, Budget 2018's measures to scale back capital expenditures are joined by the government's ongoing efforts to manage public service compensation in the interests of all Albertans. Alberta's public servants work hard each and every day to make life better for people and to protect Albertans. The government has already reached practical agreements with no raises and better job stability with many labour partners, including teachers and nurses, and a tentative agreement has been reached with our allied health professionals such as paramedics, lab technologists, and X-ray technologists. As negotiations in other sectors advance, we will continue to take the same practical approach that values our public service providers and recognizes the province's fiscal realities.

In addition, Budget 2018 continues the freeze on salaries for non-union staff across the public sector until September 2019, and it keeps the growth in the public service flat, with new hires focused on front-line service delivery.

Mr. Speaker, taken together, these steps will keep Alberta's economy growing and on a path to balance by 2023 without reckless measures that would hurt families and harm the recovery. Budget 2018's path to balance is supported by realistic and achievable spending and the revenue targets built on the best available private-sector forecasts in oil and economic growth, and it is leading towards a stronger and more secure future.

To balance our budget and stabilize our finances, we must continue to diversify our economy and create good jobs for Albertans. This is a top priority of Albertans, and it is a top priority of this government. While 2.3 million Albertans today have work, with more people working in Alberta than at any point in our history, the economic recovery has not reached each and every household. An economic recovery that fails to reach every Albertan is no recovery at all.

The economic recovery must keep going, our economy must keep growing, and more jobs must be created. To do that, we must move on all fronts. We must get top dollar for the energy resources we export. We must get more value out of our energy products here at home. We must support new and emerging industries. We must continue to diversify our agricultural markets and build on our growing strength in agrifoods. And we must make sure that Albertans have the training and skills they need to get the jobs of tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker, we have secured the approval of critical energy infrastructure projects such as the Keystone XL pipeline, Enbridge's line 3 replacement, and Kinder Morgan's Trans Mountain pipeline expansion. We backed Keystone XL with a commitment of 50,000 barrels a day for 20 years, construction on line 3 has begun, and we are leading the fight to build the Trans Mountain pipeline with the full support of this Chamber. We will continue to make sure that construction on the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion begins without undue delay and that our constitutional rights are respected as partners in Confederation. When complete, these pipelines will provide critical market access as oil sands production rises and emissions remain capped, supporting new investments and jobs. The addition of these pipelines is forecast to lift Alberta's GDP by about 1.5 per cent to 2 per cent by 2023. As our economy grows with diversified export markets, we will continue to work with our energy industry partners to diversify our energy sector, encouraging more value-added production.

Mr. Speaker, Budget 2018 begins our commitment to a new round of investments in the petrochemical diversification program along with partial upgrading and the petrochemical feedstock program. These investments will support up to $13 billion in new investment. More importantly, these programs will create good jobs, continue to help diversify our energy sector, and allow us as Albertans and owners of this resource to generate more wealth and value here at home.

Mr. Speaker, beyond our energy sector, Budget 2018 helps businesses hire and grow and helps students train for the jobs of tomorrow. The Alberta investor tax credit and the capital investment tax credit will be extended to help even more businesses grow and attract investment. The new interactive digital media tax credit will make Alberta a more competitive place for our growing and exciting interactive digital media industry.

To make sure Albertans can get the skills they need for good careers in our growing technology sector, we are creating 3,000 new postsecondary technology spaces and a new scholarship program to support technology and other emerging sectors. Budget 2018 provides $6 million to begin investing in 3,000 new technology-related postsecondary program seats, which will grow to $43 million per year by 2022-2023.

Mr. Speaker, these training and diversification measures will take place in the context of an economy that has already benefited from major capital investments during the height of the downturn. Hundreds of new schools are either built or being built. A new cancer centre is being built in Calgary, and a new hospital is being planned in south Edmonton. The construction of the green line in Calgary is the single largest public infrastructure project in that city's history, and it will create tens of thousands of jobs. Across Alberta highways are being made better and safer, bridges are being built and strengthened, and new infrastructure is making it easier for people to get around in our growing province, all the while creating thousands of good jobs.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans have been very clear: bring the budget back to balance while protecting the things that matter to ordinary people. Albertans deserve a balanced plan for a secure future, one that carefully and responsibly controls costs while protecting vital public services. From day one we resisted the call to respond to the oil price collapse by making deep cuts to hospitals and schools. Instead, we made sure Albertans would have the services they need when they need them.

Budget 2018 takes that same approach. I'm proud that we have built hundreds of new schools for our kids and for future generations. These investments create good construction jobs in the short term and modern spaces for our kids to grow and learn in the long term. Mr. Speaker, in Budget 2018 nearly $400 million will be allocated to build more badly needed new schools for our children. This budget includes 20 new schools, including support for new schools that will primarily serve indigenous students. These new schools are backstopped by our commitment to continue funding enrolment growth, which will add 600 new teachers and 300 new support workers to Alberta's classrooms.

This year we will also expand our school nutrition program. When the school nutrition program began, it helped make sure 5,000 young Albertans got a healthy meal while at school. This year that program expands to 30,000 students – 30,000 students – helping more kids across our province focus on their studies and not their hunger.

Mr. Speaker, people come to our colleges and universities in search of better lives. A well-funded postsecondary system is vital to making sure our province can help people get skills and keep people working here in Alberta. For Albertans who decide to get trades training or pursue a degree at a growing number of degree-granting institutions in Alberta, we are in their corner. In addition to thousands of new spaces in technology as well as dedicated new scholarships, funding for postsecondary education will remain stable and predictable with an increase of 2 per cent over the last year and an additional $17 million to support the tuition freeze.

More indigenous people will be able to get the skills they need to build the futures they want with more support for indigenous training providers and targeted financial supports for learners. With Grande Prairie Regional College and Red Deer College beginning the work to become degree-granting institutions, people in northwest and central Alberta will be able to get a degree closer to their homes and families.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans depend on getting quality health care when they need it. Spending on health care will increase this year by 3 per cent. In addition to making sure our front-line health professionals have the stable, predictable funding they need to care for Albertans, these funds will also increase support to combat the opioid crisis, increase support to combat substance use, and increase support for mental health.

Mr. Speaker, as we protect and support our schools and hospitals, we will do more to help keep children and families safe. Support for child protection will increase. With a $60 million increase over last year's budget, more than $800 million has been allocated this year toward strengthening the child intervention system. These funds support the work of the all-party committee and will deliver both prevention and intervention programs to help keep young Albertans safe.

Mr. Speaker, to better help working families emerge from the downturn, we will continue to make their lives more affordable. This year more new moms will have an easier time joining the workforce, and more young families will benefit from affordable child care. We are expanding upon and learning from our $25-per-day child care pilot program. This year we will create an additional 4,500 affordable child care spaces across Alberta.

More needs to be done to bring affordable child care within reach of more families, and we are committed to continuing this important work. At the same time the Alberta child benefit will continue to make life more affordable by providing direct financial assistance to lower income families, and the Alberta family employment tax credit will continue to help low- and middle-income families make ends meet.

From the day this government took office, through recession, and now into recovery, we have strengthened and improved supports that make life better and more affordable for families. In making sure this economic recovery is built to last and built for ordinary people, we must make sure that more families emerge from the downturn stronger and more secure. This budget helps families do exactly that.

Mr. Speaker, Budget 2018 also makes communities and families across this province safer. When it comes to crime, especially in rural areas, we have heard the concerns of Albertans loud and clear. That's why we are taking action to ensure that they feel safe in their communities. Together with the RCMP we launched a new rural crime strategy. This strategy put more boots on the ground in rural areas by expanding the RCMP's rural crime reduction units, which focus on putting thieves behind bars. We are adding new supports to keep more police in their communities rather than sitting behind their desks.

We are hiring more Crown prosecutors focused on rural crime, hiring additional intelligence co-ordinators to track offenders, utilizing GPS technology to catch thieves in the act, and supporting citizen-led crime watch and patrol groups. That work will be bolstered by the new police officers funded by this budget. All Albertans should feel secure at home, from our biggest cities to our smallest towns, and we will keep supporting our police.

Women in Alberta should also feel secure. Sadly, that is not always the case. Too many women do not have the supports and services they need to come forward and find help after an assault. For that reason, we are significantly increasing support to help survivors of assault. More than $11 million will be provided to the Association of Alberta Sexual Assault Services to expand counselling and crisis support.

Mr. Speaker, affordable housing is a key building block to security and stability for people and families. More needs to be done to improve existing facilities, build new ones, and help seniors and families with this most basic of needs, a warm, safe place to call home. We will continue to make sure that our affordable housing units contribute to healthy lives and healthy communities.

This budget also increases funding for seniors' housing so more of our neighbours can live with dignity and safety, and it commits to building new affordable housing across Alberta. In Calgary, Edmonton, Fort Saskatchewan, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, Red Deer, Slave Lake, and Whitecourt we will build roughly 400 new units. These will be good new homes for seniors, youth in need of security, people with disabilities, and people prone to periods of homelessness. As our population ages and grows, the need for affordable housing grows, too, and this budget continues our commitment.

Mr. Speaker, during the recession we stood by our municipalities to make sure they could continue to deliver high-quality services for their residents. As we dial back our capital spending to reduce our debt burden and reduce our borrowing costs, the government will make changes to the municipal sustainability initiative, and small reductions will be made to other municipal grants. Alberta's transfers to municipalities will remain above the national average. As we bring our budget into balance and as the expiry of MSI approaches in the fiscal year 2021-22, funding arrangements with municipalities will be reviewed.

Through the city charter discussions we have been working with Alberta's two largest cities on a long-term revenue-sharing formula that will support their continued growth and recognizes the unique opportunities and challenges they face. In addition, the government recognizes the invaluable contributions that cities, towns, and counties of all sizes have on the quality of life of Albertans and on economic diversification opportunities they create. New funding arrangement discussions will begin with municipalities large and small. Pending those agreements, the government will aim to make legislative changes this year to have a new system operational by the time MSI is set to expire.

Building on the $3 billion we have already committed in LRT funding, we will also work with Edmonton and Calgary to establish a long-term provincial transit investment plan that will support growth in the cities and the surrounding communities.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's best days are ahead of us, not behind us. As we come out of this recession and keep our province on a responsible path to a balanced budget, we do so surrounded by new signs of hope and determination. Albertans are united behind our efforts to get a new Canadian pipeline built to the Canadian coast. Our kids are getting high-quality education in great public schools. Our loved ones are getting world-class health care in modern hospitals. Our streets are safer, with more police and new supports to fight crime. More education and training will mean more Albertans have the skills they need to get good jobs. More affordable housing is helping more people put roofs over their heads and new dreams within their reach. More kids are getting nutritious meals at school. More jobs are being created, and more Albertans are working than ever before.

When the recession hit, we made the choice to put the priorities of ordinary people first. We are going to keep putting ordinary people first. To those Albertans who have yet to experience the recovery, who are counting on us to do more, we will stand up for them, together, always. We are going to keep fighting to make sure that this economic recovery is built for working people and built to last.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That was a lot to unpack. In the coming weeks I fully anticipate a lot of debate in this Assembly, but for the time being, I would suggest that we adjourn debate, and therefore I will move such.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the hon. Treasurer for his great speech and move that we adjourn the House until 10 a.m. on April 3.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:53 p.m. to Tuesday, April 3, at 10 a.m.]

10 a.m.

Tuesday, April 3, 2018

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Prayers

The Acting Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect and pray, each in our own way. As we return from time with our families and loved ones in various corners of our province, let their support and patience inspire us to continue to have diligent compassion in our work as elected representatives. Amen.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

14. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices be authorized to meet during the consideration of the 2018-19 main estimates.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. By way of explanation I can indicate that on March 22 the chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices made a formal request that the committee be authorized to meet during consideration of estimates this spring. Similar requests have been made and granted several times in recent years, most recently last year by the Select Special Ombudsman and Public Interest Commissioner Search Committee.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion?

[Government Motion 14 carried]

Provincial Fiscal Policies

13. Mr. Ceci moved:
Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Adjourned debate March 22: Mr. Nixon]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. And to you and all members of the House, I hope that all members had a good constituency week and a joyful Easter holiday as well.

Madam Speaker, I rise to speak to the budget speech of the hon. Minister of Finance tabled just before we last broke 10 days ago. For decades Alberta has been the engine of Canada's prosperity. For decades we have had the highest incomes, the lowest unemployment, the lowest debt, the best fiscal position in the country. In fact, it was not long ago when we had zero net debt as a province. We celebrated that in 1994, when the former Premier, the late hon. Ralph Klein, stood up and announced that Alberta had paid off all that we owed. That's important to this province because this is, I believe, the only province in Canada that actually defaulted on its debt – that's part of our history – during the crisis of the Great Depression. So Albertans have always understood the danger of debt until this government, which in this NDP budget is dragging Alberta deep into a sea of debt, of red ink, with no end in sight.

Madam Speaker, when the NDP came to office in the spring of 2015, Alberta's total liabilities, our total debt, stood at some $13 billion. The week before last the hon. Finance minister announced a plan to increase that debt to nearly $100 billion by the end of his fiscal plan; to be precise, $96 billion. But that, first of all, was hidden. That figure appears nowhere in the budget documents.

I remember going in to read the budget in an embargoed lock-up prior to the minister's speech, and the very first question I asked of staff and officials was: "What are the total liabilities? What's the total debt?" We had to get out our calculators, Madam Speaker. In fact, it was the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat who had already done some advance calculating. He had figured out what the cumulative deficits were to be plus the capital borrowing through to the year 2023, and his number was confirmed by officials, a number that the Finance minister tried to hide from this Assembly and from Albertans, a $96 billion number. The most important number in the budget was hidden in it. Talk about hidden agendas.

That $96 billion itself is predicated on the rosier of scenarios. The government would have us believe that this is all predicated on, amongst other things, the Trans Mountain pipeline being built. To be clear, we certainly hope that happens, Madam Speaker, but it's a year behind schedule, and the New Democrats in British Columbia, the New Democrat government there, the New Democrat mayor of Vancouver, the New Democrat mayor of Burnaby, the New Democrat mayor of Coquitlam, the federal New Democrats, all of them are doing everything they can to stop that pipeline from actually being built. So to actually budget on such a high level of uncertainty is at best imprudent and at worst reckless. Ninety-six billion dollars means that we as Albertans will be spending billions of dollars enriching bankers and bondholders rather than funding public services. That's the consequence of debt, enriching bankers and bondholders in Zurich and Tokyo, in Toronto and New York rather than building schools and hospitals here in Alberta.

Now, the NDP started with a $13 billion debt, or they inherited a $13 billion debt, I should say. They've run massive deficits ever since, borrowing on average nearly a billion dollars every month. There is virtually no change in this budget, with a projected deficit of $9 billion, Madam Speaker, so we're borrowing $800 million, $850 million a month. We're going to those bankers to borrow that money with a commitment to pay it back down the line plus interest, interest that is nonnegotiable.

Madam Speaker, this has led already to $56 billion in debt today. We've gone from $13 billion to $56 billion in debt. This means that we are now paying $1.92 billion in interest payments at $56 billion in debt. By the way, the reckless fiscal mismanagement of the NDP has led now to six credit downgrades. Now, I know that whenever this happens, the Finance minister bristles. I think he once ran off down to Toronto to plead with the Dominion Bond Rating Service agency and Standard & Poor's and the other bond-rating agencies, "Please don't downgrade us," but they promptly did so. About two weeks after he left his meetings in Toronto, they sized up what he had said, they sized up the fiscal credibility of this NDP government, and they said that there is none. There is no credible plan to get back to balance, and six credit downgrades have followed.

Now, I know that many of my friends opposite think: oh, those are just bad people in Toronto and New York who don't understand how compassionate we are. No, Madam Speaker. These are hard-nosed financial experts. They aren't motivated by sentiment or politics. They simply analyze numbers. That's all they are. They're objective analysts of numbers, and the numbers that they have seen from this government in the last three years tell them that there is zero credibility in the fiscal plans of the NDP; hence, six credit downgrades.

Now, these downgrades are not some abstraction. It's not some notional, like, reputational problem. This has real, hard, concrete, real-life consequences for the lives of Albertans. Why? Each time that our credit is downgraded – guess what? – we have to pay more in interest on that debt, and we're borrowing money to pay interest on that debt. It's the vicious cycle of debt. It's something that Albertans understand but apparently this government doesn't. Six credit downgrades. Fifty-six billion dollars in debt. A $9 billion deficit. Headed to endless deficits and by the end of their fiscal plan a $96 billion debt with – get this, Madam Speaker – over $3.7 billion in projected debt interest payments.

Now, let's put this in a little bit of context in terms of what we are spending on debt interest. The current debt interest bill of this government, $1.921 billion – that's how much we spend every year – is enough to build 98 new schools based on $393 million per school or to build one new major hospital at least. The huge new Calgary south campus hospital was a $1.3 billion capital expenditure, less than we spend on interest this year, $600 million less. It would be enough to pay the salaries of 33,000 teachers or enough to hire 25,000 nurses, based on average salaries.

Madam Speaker, as it is, this government is spending more to enrich bankers through interest payments than we spend on 19 of the 23 government departments. Only four government departments spend more than this Finance minister's interest bill. So I would appeal to the hon. ministers opposite, as they struggle to provide public services and to make challenging fiscal decisions, to think about the consequences of this overspending, of this massive borrowing, of this growing debt interest burden. It means that for 19 of the 23 ministers their departmental budgets are less than the payments that we make to bankers and bondholders in Zurich, Toronto, and New York.

Now, Madam Speaker, you know, this is not consistent with the best traditions of the prairie New Democrats. I grew up in Saskatchewan like many Albertans, and I remember Tommy Douglas, who ran consistently balanced budgets. You know why? Because he understood that it was immoral to spend money that belongs to future generations without their consent, to engage in massive intergenerational transfers of wealth, particularly in good times, and he also understood that it was immoral to enrich bankers and bondholders rather than focus public resources on social programs. That's why Tommy Douglas and, after him, Roy Romanow made difficult decisions to manage their spending, to be efficient, even to be parsimonious when times required it. Former Premier Roy Romanow made tough decisions to reduce overall government spending in Saskatchewan, to stop the downward cycle into debt because they understood the consequences of that. Sadly, the New Democrats opposite are completely disconnected from that tradition of responsibility of fiscal management of the prairie New Democrats.

Madam Speaker, this budget, because of the massive new borrowing and no credible plan to restore fiscal balance, has already resulted in warning signals coming from the credit-rating agencies. In fact, the Dominion Bond Rating Service essentially said that this budget shows no plan to restore fiscal balance. Why is this happening? The NDP has raised tax rates, so presumably they're getting a lot more revenue. Oh, but that's not true. It's not happening. They raised taxes on job creators and businesses. The NDP, motivated by its ideology of resentment and its philosophy of punishing entrepreneurs, raised taxes on businesses. They also raised taxes on incomes, and guess what's happened? For every one of the last three years revenues generated by business and income taxes have declined. Higher rates, lower revenues. Higher business tax rates, lower business tax revenues. Higher income tax rates, lower income tax revenues.

A message to my New Democrat colleagues opposite, Madam Speaker: when they get excited about their class warfare rhetoric, when they say, "We're soaking the rich; we're taking it to those evil, job-creating businesses," when they really get their socialist spirits up about the social justice of taxing more wealth creators and job creators, they should reflect for a moment and realize that they're actually generating less revenue.

Why? In part, because they've done what the left always does. They have attacked the wealth-creating capacity of the economy, and people have responded. What New Democrats do not seem to understand is that capital money is fluid. People are not forced to reside in Alberta, and high net worth individuals, many of them, have relocated their residences outside of this province because, between the increase in tax rates imposed by the New Democrats concurrent with the tax increases of their close ally Justin Trudeau in 2015, we've ended up taking the highest marginal income tax rate in Alberta from 38 per cent to 49 per cent, a massive increase in the overall burden. And guess what, Madam Speaker? People respond to disincentives. When governments disincentivize working, saving, and investing, people tend to do less of it.

That's why so much capital has been relocated outside of Alberta, not just personal income taxes but business taxes as well. In the past 18 months alone, we have seen an estimated $35 billion of capital pulled out of the oil and gas sector in Alberta alone, redeployed to the oil and gas sector in other parts of the world at the same global prices, money that's no longer being taxed in Alberta, no longer producing jobs or wealth.

Now, Madam Speaker, why, then, a $9 billion deficit? Why, then, a government that's moving debt from $13 billion to nearly $100 billion, interest payments from $1.3 billion in 2015 to $3.7 billion in 2023? Why? Why is this happening? Well, Madam Speaker, it's not happening because of inadequate revenues. The government has raised the tax rates. It's happening primarily because this government is incapable of managing their expenditures. In fact, government spending is up by 16 per cent since the NDP came to office, faster than the rate of growth in inflation, population, or the economy itself.

If, according to Professor Trevor Tombe at the University of Calgary and others, the government had simply decided not to cut spending but not to increase it, to effectively freeze spending at 2015 levels, which were, by the way, already the highest – by far, the highest – per capita program spending of any provincial government in Canada, the highest level of spending in our fiscal history by orders of magnitude, if they had maintained that extraordinarily, historically and relatively, high level of spending, we would be at a balanced budget next year, Madam Speaker. If they were simply to freeze spending now and we were to get reasonable rates of economic growth, 2 or 3 per cent, they would have a balanced budget by 2022-23, but they're not doing that either. They're continuing to increase spending faster than inflation, faster than the rate of growth in our economy and, in so doing, diving us deeper and deeper and deeper into debt that we have to repay with interest.

Oh, I forgot. It's true that they did raise rates on income and business taxes and had revenues decline, but baked into this budget is a continuation of the largest tax hike in Alberta history. In the 2015 election campaign, Madam Speaker, the NDP ran on a platform. I actually have it on my desk right here, handily. It's an important reference guide. They ran on a platform which enumerated – let me count – five tax increases, seven tax adjustments altogether, a couple of reductions like the health care levy, but four tax increases.

I'll read these into the record, Madam Speaker, for your edification. Remove health care levy. Remove user fees: commendable. Restore charitable tax credit: good call. Personal income tax increase: we've already covered that. Corporate tax increase: we've discussed how revenues have come down. They were projecting they would go up every year; they've gone down. Delinquent corporate tax collection: well, that's a good one, but revenues have gone down. It hasn't worked. Railway fuel adjustment tax: that was just a $10 million item.

Did anybody hear anything about a carbon tax here, a carbon levy? Madam Speaker, this is page 24. This is the appendix of the NDP platform, entitled Leadership for What Matters, published by the New Democrat Party in the last campaign. I cannot find the words "carbon tax." In fact, to cure my insomnia, I read the whole platform, all 24 pages, a lot of pictures. I couldn't find a single reference to carbon tax or carbon levy or consumer tax or energy consumption or energy tax or de facto consumption – zero reference, zero allusion – and five, six months later the government announced the largest tax increase in Alberta history, the multibillion-dollar carbon tax.

Now, Madam Speaker, you know, sometimes I'm accused of being naive. You can try to believe the best about people, that they're telling you the truth and they're being transparent and all that, right? You want to. In politics I think that's important for the sake of civility, that we give each other a bit of credit. I might be sometimes naive, but I'm not really that stupid. I don't know about my colleagues here, but I don't think there's a single person in Alberta, least of all the hon. the Premier and her front bench, who didn't understand that they were going to impose a carbon tax. That was essential in their plan. They hid it. It was the biggest hidden agenda in Alberta political history.

Now, Madam Speaker, when I came to this place and started participating in question period for the first time, three weeks ago, I wanted to follow up on this big NDP hidden agenda, so I asked the hon. the Premier in question period when the NDP planned to raise their job-killing carbon tax from $30 to $50 a tonne, because the government has announced their intention of doing so.

By the way – get this – do you know the reason why they've said they were going to increase the carbon tax, Madam Speaker? Do you know why? Because Justin Trudeau asked them to – you can't make this up – because Justin Trudeau in Ottawa told them that they're not punishing Alberta consumers enough, that they're not making it expensive enough for seniors to heat their homes when it's 30 below outside, that it's not punishing working Albertans for getting in their cars and trucks and driving to work. Justin Trudeau said, "We've got to punish them more," and our Premier said, "Yes, Prime Minister; I'll do what you tell us to." The history of Alberta Premiers is one of standing up for and fighting for the interests of working men and women in Alberta. Now, for the first time, arguably, in our history we have a government who thinks their job is to say, "Ready, aye, ready" when Justin Trudeau gives them orders. He ordered them to raise their carbon tax by 50 per cent.

But I've got a theory about this, Madam Speaker. Why was the government, the NDP, so eager to please Justin Trudeau when he asked them to raise their job-killing carbon tax by 67 per cent, from $30 to $50 a tonne? I'll tell you why. Because they really want to. It's about more government control. It's about more government money, taking more out of the pockets of taxpayers that they can spend.

You see, here is the fundamental difference between members of the Official Opposition and members of the government. We believe, like, I think, most Albertans, that an ordinary, average working Albertan, that a senior on a fixed income, that a homemaker or an entrepreneur knows better how to spend an extra buck than a bunch of politicians and bureaucrats. That's the fundamental difference when you get right down to it, Madam Speaker, and that's why they're more than happy to have the cover, the political cover, of Justin Trudeau's carbon tax proposal to raise it by 67 per cent.

I apologize, Madam Speaker; I caught a cold over the weekend.

Madam Speaker, I asked the Premier when they plan to raise the carbon tax by 67 per cent, and she stood in her place opposite and gave an answer I was actually pretty impressed with. I commended her for the answer. She said that she would not raise it until the Kinder Morgan pipeline was constructed. That's an improvement because before she gave a blank cheque to Justin Trudeau. She said that she'd raise it regardless. Then after that she changed her condition and said that she'd raise it if Kinder Morgan was approved. It was approved. Then she changed it to say: if construction begins. I think before she said: if construction ends. I don't know. Her position keeps changing, but somehow, notionally she has tied the carbon tax increase to the construction of Kinder Morgan. I thought that was great.

But imagine my surprise, Madam Speaker, when I opened the budget 10 days ago, two weeks ago, only to find that the carbon tax increase is baked into the budget, the 67 per cent. They're already planning how to spend that money. The $97 billion debt, the $3.7 billion in interest payments: that's predicated on a 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax, that they never mentioned to Albertans, which, as recently as two weeks ago, they denied their intention to raise without conditions. Those conditions, to be clear, have evaporated in the Finance minister's budget. There is no mention of any conditionality for the 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax, no tying it to any pipelines. It's just the blank cheque that their friend and ally Justin Trudeau asked for.

What does this mean?

Mr. Nixon: How high will they go?

Mr. Kenney: How high, indeed, because the Premier has said, as I've quoted many times, that the carbon tax will continue to have to increase.

You know why? Let's cut the obfuscation here, to be polite, to use a parliamentary word here. Let's just be blunt. Let's call a spade a spade, Madam Speaker. What is going on here is that the NDP understands what the fans and supporters of carbon taxes understand, which is that you don't get anywhere in any measurable or meaningful reduction of CO₂ output or greenhouse gas output as a result of a $20 or $30 or even $50 carbon tax.

I know that to be true, Madam Speaker, because I've asked the government: by how much will CO₂ emissions be reduced as a result of the carbon tax? They cannot, they will not answer the question because the answer is zero measurable reduction because the experts who support carbon taxes say that the price has to be at least $200 per tonne. That's Professor Leach at the University of Alberta, who wrote their carbon tax plan. He says: $200 per tonne plus a lot of other measures. Environment Canada is closer to the consensus on this point when they say that it has to be $300 a tonne.

Madam Speaker, I know that members opposite love getting on their moral high horse and pretending that they're, quote, saving the planet with their $30 carbon tax when they know perfectly well that the only way they can have a snowball's chance in Hades of achieving the Paris convention climate targets on greenhouse gas emissions for Canada through a carbon tax would be a 1,000 per cent increase in the tax, at least a 1,000 per cent increase in the tax.

That's what they believe, Madam Speaker, in their ideological, socialist heart of hearts, that that's a good thing. It's more government control of the economy. It's more of us telling people to change how they live their lives, as the Premier did when she suggested that people take the bus more often to work. I don't know about you, Madam Speaker, but there are very few Albertans I know who are able to take a bus in Chestermere or in Rocky Mountain House or in most of Calgary. Sure, people use public transit when it's convenient, but to live a modern life in a cold northern economy, guess what? I know it's a terrible thing, but people have to drive cars.

The Premier says: take the bus, and change the way you live your lives, and if you don't do it, we're going to punish you with a punitive tax, a tax based on the consumption of energy in a cold northern, modern economy. Madam Speaker, they love the idea. So let's cut the nonsense here. What's really going on? It's called the frog in the pot. You take a frog and drop it into a pot of cold water – he likes the cold water – and you gradually turn that up to lukewarm. It's a little more comfortable. He's getting relaxed. You turn it up from lukewarm to a very low simmer, and he doesn't quite notice. Then simmer goes to warm, and the warm goes to boiling. Before you know it, Madam Speaker, you've got a boiled frog. But if you drop a frog in a pot of boiling water, he jumps right out. The boiling point is $200 or $300 a tonne. The cold water was $20 a tonne.

Madam Speaker, this is incrementalism. That's all it is. They and their close ally Justin Trudeau and his Liberal government are trying incrementally to get Canadians used to a punitive tax on their consumption of energy so that they didn't notice, really, when it went from $20 to $30 a tonne on January 1, a 50 per cent increase three months ago. They're hoping that they won't notice when it goes from $30 to $40 a tonne, baked into this budget, and that they won't really notice when it goes from $40 to $50 a tonne and then from $50 to $80 and from $80 to eventually $200. Let's be absolutely clear. It would be nice.

You know, Madam Speaker, I understand the NDP's concern about climate change. I, too, am concerned about climate change. But if they were sincere in their concern, in their belief that carbon taxes could mitigate climate change, then they'd be honest with themselves and with Albertans. They'd be honest. Let's have an honest debate about this and say, as the NDP should say because they believe this, that we need a carbon tax of $200 or $300 a tonne. There's only one reason they won't, because they know Albertans would laugh in their faces.

Two and a half years after the NDP announced their carbon tax intentions, every single poll on the issue indicates that a supermajority of Albertans are resolutely opposed to the job-killing carbon tax, on average about 67 per cent. That's even after the NDP has spent millions of our tax dollars telling Albertans why it's in their interests to spend more in taxes to government for the energy they consume. Sixty-seven per cent, on average, opposed. Even in the environment minister's own riding, where she's lectured people for two and a half years about the need to be punished for consuming energy in a cold climate, the vast majority oppose the carbon tax. That, Madam Speaker, was at a carbon tax rate of $20 a tonne. Imagine where Albertans will be at $50 a tonne. Imagine if the NDP was honest with Albertans and said: we need a $250-, $300-per-tonne carbon tax.

Madam Speaker, what really disturbs me is not just the negative economic impact of this huge tax, which has prolonged and deepened one of the longest recessions in Alberta history, but it's the fundamental mendacity, the dishonesty at the heart of the NDP's management of this issue.

The Premier said on April 15, 2016, here at the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce that "every penny raised by the carbon levy will be rebated back to Albertans or put back to work for our economy in new economic initiatives." You know, I have great respect for our Premier, Madam Speaker. I think she is an intelligent, committed, and capable leader. I respect her personally. I respect her office. I respect her so much that I'm going to quote that again. "Every penny raised by the carbon levy will be rebated back to Albertans or put back to work for our economy in new economic initiatives." Oh, I've got another quote from the hon. the Premier, from November 24, 2015, the Globe and Mail. The situation is the carbon tax. "This is not a situation where we're going to apply it against the deficit, for instance, to maintain current operations, or anything like that." Understandable commitments. That's what they've been saying since the day they announced it.

But, Madam Speaker, they have now admitted it, not formally in the budget documents but yet again as a hidden agenda. The Finance minister and the Premier were forced to come clean with Albertans, in questioning from the media on budget day, that this is no longer true, that every incremental dollar raised through their higher carbon tax will go to general government spending, to the NDP slush fund, to whatever they want. Zero additional rebates for the incremental revenues. Zero spending notionally tied to environmental or green initiatives. Sorry, folks. No more free shower heads or light bulbs or faucets. They're not going to raise a dime more to hire a company from Ontario to come in and change our light bulbs. Probably a good thing.

Madam Speaker, that additional revenue, from $30 to $50 a tonne, which they're now blaming on their buddy Justin Trudeau – it's hilarious. They're calling it the Trudeau tax. That additional tax rate will generate revenue. One hundred per cent of it will go to general government revenues and not go back to Albertans for rebates or to work for our economy. The carbon tax itself, the biggest whopper – is that parliamentary? – in Alberta political history, is now compounded by yet more mendacity, yet more falsehood from this government to Albertans. So we will end up paying more.

What does this budget come down to? More debt and more taxes, higher debt and higher taxes. Now, only the NDP thinks that the path to prosperity is paved with higher debt and taxes. Economic history tells us otherwise, Madam Speaker. One of the things that concerns me about this budget and the rhetoric surrounding it is this notion that happy times are here again. The Finance minister keeps telling us that we're on fire with a great huge recovery and that Albertans are back on track when first of all he has never taken responsibility for his high-tax policies, the massive additional red tape and regulatory burden of this government, massive new labour costs, massive new costs for entrepreneurs, all of which poured fuel onto the flames of the recession.

You know, Madam Speaker, when you're in a recession, what's technically happened? Technically you're in at least two quarters of negative economic growth. When I grew up in rural Saskatchewan, one of the lessons I learned is that when you're in a hole, stop digging. But what did the NDP do in this economic trough? They got out their shovels and kept digging. They made the hole deeper. They deepened and prolonged the recession.

Now, I know, Madam Speaker, they like to blame international commodity prices. They claim that we are the hapless victims of global commodity prices. Well, the truth is this. The global price for oil is bouncing around $62 a barrel right now. That is an historic high. I mean, not an absolute high, but it's higher than the average throughout our modern history, substantially higher than the average. In fact, the Klein government in the 1990s eliminated the largest provincial deficit in Canada, went on to eliminate the debt, brought in a flat tax, presided over the highest levels of growth, the highest incomes, and the lowest levels of unemployment in Canada, averaging about $20 a barrel for oil. In one of those years oil was down as low as $11 per barrel.

We have been through fluctuations in commodity prices before, and obviously – obviously – when there's a downturn in those prices, they do affect incoming revenues, and they do affect the treasury. Madam Speaker, when that happens, the challenge for the government is to adopt policies that incentivize investment and growth, not punish those things. But this government raised income taxes, raised business taxes, and imposed the largest tax increase in Alberta history, the multibillion-dollar, job-killing carbon tax. They raised labour costs, they imposed massive new regulatory mandates on business, and now we've seen the flight of tens of billions of dollars of capital from Alberta.

The Finance minister says that it's all wonderful out there. Tell that, Madam Speaker, to the 175,000 Albertans who are on the unemployment lines. Tell that to the tens of thousands who have left the labour market and have given up looking for work altogether. Tell that to the tens of thousands of Albertans who have left our province, many of them, I know, immigrants who chose Alberta as the land of opportunity, only to come here to face unemployment or underemployment and who have since left for greener pastures. Tell that to the tens of thousands of small-business owners who have lost their businesses and often with them their life savings, their hopes, and their dreams. Tell that to Albertans who are working for less. You know, amongst some of the people who have gained employment in the past year, many are working for substantially less than they did before. They've gone from good, high-paying, often six-figure jobs to unreliable piecemeal or contract work at much lower levels of income. That is the economic reality in Alberta today, a reality made worse by this government's policies.

There was no effort in this budget to restore fiscal health to our province. There was no effort to restore investor confidence, which has been so dramatically lost. There was no effort to constrain spending. Oh, and by the way, Madam Speaker, I expected that. In the fall the Premier said that there would be – I think it was her phrase – compassionate cuts or compassionate restraint.

Mr. Panda: Belt-tightening.

Mr. Kenney: Compassionate belt-tightening.

Well, I've tightened my belt a couple of notches lately, Madam Speaker, and I was expecting to see the government do the same. I was getting ready for the belt-tightening season. It turns out that they're letting it out another notch. They're not tightening. They had to go and buy a new belt, a bigger one, because their spending is going up by another 16 per cent under this fiscal plan, faster than inflation, faster than population growth, faster than the economy.

Madam Speaker, what happened? What happened to the Premier's promise? Perhaps in this debate one of the members opposite could give this one a shot. Why did the Premier tell us that a hundred per cent of carbon tax revenues would go to rebates and so-called green spending when that's not true? Why did the Premier say that there would be belt-tightening, i.e. reduced expenditures in this budget, when they're actually increasing spending? Why did the NDP – oh, I forgot to mention this. In this platform that I quoted from earlier it says: fiscal year 2018-19. This is the NDP platform. It says under total deficit or surplus for this fiscal year: a surplus of $25 million. Now they think balanced budgets are a terrible thing, but when they sought the votes of Albertans, when they went door-knocking, when they dropped off this brochure, Madam Speaker, they said: "We're committed to fiscal responsibility. We believe in balanced budgets. You vote for us, and we'll give you a $25 million surplus in fiscal year 2018-19." Instead, a $9 billion deficit.

Now, before I'm done, could I ask one of my colleagues to get out their calculator and figure out by what percentage are they off? A $25 million surplus but a $9 billion deficit: the math is so big. I don't know, Madam Speaker, but it's a lot. They're off by $9 billion. That's not a little whoopsy. That's not a Justin Trudeau eensy, teensy, weensy, little deficit. I know the Finance minister is going to stand up and he's going to tell us that the only option to all of this reckless borrowing, reckless debt is ...

Mr. Nixon: The iPhone won't do it.

Mr. Kenney: What is it you've got? The calculator is not big enough, Madam Speaker, to figure out the percentage difference, and with all the discovery math these guys don't know their math anymore. It's making me hoarse just talking about this.

Madam Speaker, I know the Finance minister is going to tell us that the only option, the only way to keep their promise is, they will say, reckless cuts to front-line services. Of course, I think sometimes New Democrats repeat that line in their sleep.

In fact, Madam Speaker, we want to talk about how irresponsible they can be. The day after the budget, on March 23, the Premier's director of communications, Ms Oates, tweeted the following. "There is a very quick way to deal with debt. Blow up all our hospitals & schools or raise everyone's taxes through the roof." Honestly, I'm not making that up. I'd be happy to table that. I don't think it's been deleted.

The spokesperson for the hon. the Premier says that the only alternative to the government's violation of its election commitment, the only alternative to a $96 billion debt, the only alternative to a 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax, the only alternative is to "blow up all our hospitals & schools," not just some of them, Madam Speaker. You know, it's remarkable. The NDP fiscal apocalypse is getting worse and worse by the day.

When I was running for this seat in the Legislature back in December in Calgary-Lougheed, my NDP opponent, a very esteemed physician, a good man, a great candidate, said – presumably it was Ms Oates who suggested this brilliant talking point to him – that I wanted to shut down every hospital in the province. Now they've expanded that, Madam Speaker. In the space of three months we've gone from shutting down just every hospital to every hospital and every school, and we've gone from shutting them down to blowing them up.

When I read this quote, I thought of that great skit with John Candy and Eugene Levy on SCTV, a celebrity farm blow-up. You know, that's what this is turning into. It's like a SCTV episode over there, Madam Speaker. How do they expect anybody to take them seriously?

Madam Speaker, here's a news flash for my New Democrat colleagues opposite. Yes, it is possible to restrain spending without blowing up every school and hospital. If the government had simply kept spending increases at zero in the past three years, we'd be, basically, at a balanced budget now without closing a single school or hospital. If the government were to freeze spending now without closing, let alone blowing up, a school or hospital, they'd be at a balanced budget a year before they propose without unrealistic revenue growth presumptions and without their 67 per cent increase in the job-killing carbon tax. So it's 360 . . . [interjection] Oh, wow. Okay. I got the number. Congratulations. Somebody here knows how to work a calculator. Is it the Member for Calgary-Hays that did that? I want to give him credit.

An Hon. Member: In case I get it wrong, yes.

Mr. Kenney: It turns out, Madam Speaker, that a $9 billion deficit this year is 360 times larger than the $25 million surplus that the NDP committed to. Oh, and, by the way, I know what they're going to say, that when they presented this $25 million surplus – this is the one they ran on; this is the one they told Albertans about when they asked for their votes; this is why they're sitting in this Chamber, in part – the economy was already in the tank. We'd already seen the huge plummet in energy prices. The previous PC government had already recognized that. This was not a surprise. So the NDP commitment, a $25 million surplus this year, was made with eyes wide open.

All that's happened since then, Madam Speaker – and, really, you have to ask yourself: why did the Premier prepare us for belt-tightening? In fact, let me offer people a little insight into politics. When a head of government begins talking like that, it's called prepositioning. It's getting the public ready for some difficult decisions. That's what's called prepositioning. That was the deliberate message of the government in the fall, but it didn't happen in the budget. What happened between compassionate belt-tightening and a hundred billion dollar debt?

I'll tell you what happened, Madam Speaker. The NDP cabinet met, and undoubtedly the public service brought forward various options on spending restraint, and the NDP cabinet couldn't say yes to any of it. This is a classic example of a failure of leadership.

Now, Madam Speaker, at similar times Tommy Douglas and his Saskatchewan NDP cabinet and Roy Romanow and his Saskatchewan NDP cabinet rose to the occasion. They made difficult decisions. They kept or got their province out of deficit. That's not happening anymore. That's not happening with this government.

So here we have the NDP that's 360-fold off of their surplus projection for the current fiscal year, taking us from $13 billion to $96 billion in debt, from $1.2 billion to $3.7 billion in interest payments, already spending more in interest than all but four of the government departments.

Let me pause there to say that I wonder if the New Democrats, Madam Speaker, always, you know, proud of their class warfare, their egalitarianism, their passionate desire to stick it to the wealthy and redistribute wealth: are they proud that they're enriching bankers and bondholders in Toronto, New York, and Zurich? Does that make them really happy? Is that social justice, to take money from low-income taxpayers, to punish seniors for heating their homes when it's 30 below outside in order to send a growing portion of that money to billionaire bankers? Is that why they ran for public office? Is that why they became New Democrats? Is that why they're social democrats? Is that why they believe in egalitarianism and wealth redistribution, so they could be in government to tax the poor and give to the rich through debt interest payments? That's exactly what they're doing.

Madam Speaker, this is the consequence of a government that was – let's be honest – unprepared to govern from day one. This is the consequence of a government that has an inability to make difficult choices. This is a consequence of a government that believes that wealth can be redistributed without that wealth being created in the first place. This is a consequence of a government that believes that it can tax and borrow and regulate its way to prosperity.

Their recent policy on corporate welfare for a hand-picked number of companies: they've decided to give a billion dollars to hand-picked energy companies after nearly $40 billion has left that industry in Alberta to go to that industry in other parts of the world at the same global prices. Madam Speaker, their doing so reminds me of what Ronald Reagan said socialists always do. He said that their attitude is at first to tax it; and if it keeps moving, regulate it; and if it stops moving, subsidize it. That in three lines sums up the economic philosophy of the NDP.

Madam Speaker, I'll just close by saying that while this budget is a fiscal disaster for Albertans, while we will have to work for years and years to come to get ourselves out of the hole into which they have dug us, while we will have to reignite Alberta's economy and restore investor confidence to re-create this province as the job-creating engine of Canada, while all of those things are true, I think that the most disturbing aspect of this budget is the deep dishonesty within it: their failure to be forthcoming with Albertans about the $100 billion debt and their failure to be forthcoming about the 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax, whose imposition they denied from day one, 100 per cent of which incremental revenues go to the government's bottom line.

Well, Madam Speaker, on behalf of the Official Opposition and I believe on behalf of the vast majority of Albertans, we reject this government's reckless mortgaging of our future. We reject this government's deepening of an investment crisis in this province. We reject this government's denial of the economic pain being felt by hundreds of thousands of ordinary Albertans every day. We ourselves will work every day over the course of the next year to present Albertans with a fully costed and credible fiscal and economic plan to reignite our economy and to renew the Alberta advantage.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's with great intentness and great reverence that I rise to speak because as one of the members in this Chamber who's lived for almost 65 years close to the social gospel experiment known as Saskatchewan and living in Alberta, I want to abuse the Member for Calgary-Lougheed's vocal chords a little more to give some examples of the unintended consequences. He should well know, being a former resident of Saskatchewan, the advantages of the Alberta environment, the Alberta advantage, where we have allowed ourselves to come from chains to freedom whereas Saskatchewan sought the example of taking freedom to chains and only now have 1.1 million people where in Alberta we have north of 4 million people. I'd ask the Member for Calgary-Lougheed to please expound on that.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, just hesitate.

Hon. member, yes?

Mr. Westhead: Point of order there, Madam Speaker. It's my understanding that there's no 29(2)(a) on the second speaker after . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I appreciate that, but the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition is actually the third speaker on this.

Mr. Nixon: I was the second speaker.

The Acting Speaker: He does have 29(2)(a).

Mr. Nixon: I'll send you some standing orders later.

The Acting Speaker: I will now return.

I apologize, hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler. Were you finished?

Mr. Strankman: Absolutely, Madam Speaker. If the member would respond. Thank you.

Mr. Kenney: Well, I thank my hon. colleague from the Drumheller-Stettler constituency for the question and his service. Madam Speaker, the member raises a very prescient historical comparison. In 1944, when the CCF came to office in Saskatchewan, the headquarters of western Canada's oil and gas industry were located in Regina.

Mr. Nixon: And the insurance industry.

Mr. Kenney: And the insurance industry in western Canada. Regina was the Calgary of that time. Saskatchewan had a population of about a million, and Alberta about half of that at that time, after the Depression and after the war. But then the CCF, the parent party of the NDP, came to office. They raised business taxes. They raised personal taxes. They fiddled with the royalties. They created investor uncertainty. They massively increased the regulatory burden. They massively increased labour costs. They imposed massive new red tape. As one those corporate headquarters of the western Canadian oil and gas industries and financial services sectors picked up and moved west to Calgary.

Two provinces have followed different policy approaches for the following six decades. Alberta ended up with over four million people and Saskatchewan with still a million. Six decades of economic and demographic stagnation in one place; six decades of dynamic economic and demographic and social growth in the other. That is the difference that policy makes. It's, frankly, the difference that politics makes. But even in that Saskatchewan, where they drove investors and hard workers and entrepreneurs and talented young people out of the province, even they understood the importance of balanced budgets, unlike this crowd over here.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed for opening our eyes when he looked at the platform of the NDP in the last election, which I didn't pay attention to, and many Albertans probably didn't, otherwise the result would have been different. But since this government came to power, every single day in this House we were told that they're making life better for Albertans. Every single day they say that. On the other hand, you know, constituents in Calgary-Foothills are telling me that they can't afford life under this NDP government.

Like you mentioned, many people like me chose Alberta because it was debt free. That's the reason that I left Mumbai and came here. But now we are saddled with a potentially $96 billion debt. After your speech I observed that all this front bench left. They can't take those facts anymore.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, if you could refrain from referencing whether individuals are in the House.

Mr. Panda: Okay. Thank you. I withdraw that. But I'm saying that the facts sometimes are tough for people to listen to and observe and appreciate, but I'd like to ...

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The time is now up on 29(2)(a).

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion carried]

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Sweet moved, seconded by Mr. Malkinson, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Debate adjourned March 22]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to reply to the Speech from the Throne for the Fourth Session of the 29th Legislature, delivered by Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor. Last week's Speech from the Throne was very meaningful to me on International Women's Day, delivered by a Lieutenant Governor who is a woman to an Alberta Legislature with the largest number of elected women, a gender-balanced cabinet, and, of course, a Premier who is a woman.

I would like to share a quote from the throne speech. "Women's rights are human rights, and your government celebrates them." A powerful statement but not without action. Since 2015 our government has taken many bold steps, and one of the first was creating the Status of Women ministry.

Let's contrast that bold and progressive action with what we know about the new leader of the UCP. While the leader of the UCP was PM Harper's lieutenant, he helped to erode women's equality in Canada by weakening organizations that could have and would have challenged attacks on women's reproductive rights, pay equity, and child care. The Harper government, which included the new leader of the UCP, systematically shut down 12 of 16 regional status of women offices, eliminated the court challenges program, and abandoned an agreement on universal health care.

I was not surprised to see zero positive reaction from the UCP when the throne speech celebrated women or when they voted against funding for sexual assault services across the province. It's clear who sets the tone over there, and the person setting that tone was a leader in a federal government that systematically turned the clock back on gender equality.

The World Economic Forum gender gap index ranked Canada seventh in 2004, and we fell to 30th in 2015. That means that under the Conservatives gender equality in Canada fell by 23 positions. While our government is choosing to support affordable child care and has invested resources to expand shelter spaces, sexual assault services, counselling, and crisis services for women, the track record of the Leader of the Opposition is to systematically erode equality for women in Canada.

I've worked in Alberta all of my adult life and have raised both of my children here. Throughout that time Alberta was under the thumb of the Conservative Party, 44 years, to be exact. You know the drill: boom, bust. When oil prices were high, it was a spending free-for-all. When the bubble burst, we faced devastating cuts, that are still felt today, and massive infrastructure deficits. In St. Albert we continue to try and play catch-up by building schools that the Conservatives only announced with huge signs and ribbon-cutting ceremonies. The Sturgeon hospital finally received the needed funds for a boiler that should have been funded years ago.

Until 2015 I managed a nonprofit, created to support people with disabilities, enabling them to live their lives in the community. I think I became keenly interested in oil prices during that time. Why, you might ask? Because we knew that when the oil prices dropped, it meant cuts, clawbacks, and transformations that were not meant to address progressive growth. Changes were just cost savings. That's how it was. The opposition leader can tell you – he is quite a historical revisionist – his little story, but that was not the reality in Alberta.

I am so grateful that our government chose not to turn their backs on the day-to-day needs of families and people in Alberta. Listening to the sound advice of David Dodge, the former governor of the Bank of Canada, we invested in infrastructure and put people to work. Any pragmatic person knows that investing in infrastructure when costs are lower and unemployment is higher makes sense. Any sensible person knows that cutting essential services like education, health care, and disability supports while people are already struggling does not make sense. We've always known that.

I wasn't surprised that the UCP and their new boss didn't like the throne speech. Ask yourself why. Although we cannot know for sure how they would have managed the recession we were hit with, we can guess based on the Leader of the Opposition's record in Ottawa. The Leader of the Opposition believes himself to be an economic saviour. I think he engages in fantasy economics. There's a reason that he won't show you a concrete plan: he can't.

Under Harper our country's real GDP grew barely enough to keep up with population growth. He doesn't tell you that, though, when he gives you the history lesson. Under Harper and the Member of Calgary-Lougheed our country had the worst job-creation record since 1946. Our job-creation rate under his leadership was slower than the rate of population growth.

Let's be clear. The 2015 recession was under Harper's watch. Many people have suggested that the only reason the oil price slump could tip the entire country into a recession was because our economy had so little momentum in the first place. Over the many years that the Member for Calgary-Lougheed was in Ottawa and in power, his government ran a string of six deficit budgets. Six. Then we entered a recession.

To quote from the throne speech: "When government fails to work for people, inequality rises." This has to include all people as defined by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This document is important to Albertans and Canadians.

I know one person in this Chamber that appears to disagree with the human rights as defined in our Charter. The leader of the UCP, then minister for immigration, wanted to force women who chose to wear a niqab not to do so during citizenship ceremonies. The federal Court of Appeal sided with the previous lower court ruling that struck down government policy banning face covering during a citizenship ceremony. The leader of the UCP also shut down family reunification immigration for two years. He apparently needs an English-to-English translation of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

While organizations, businesses, and governments around the world are finding ways to support women making Me Too disclosures of sexual harassment and misconduct, here in Alberta we have a new political party that promotes a man who chose – keyword "chose" – not to protect a woman who disclosed sexual harassment but to fire her. According to the new leader of the UCP he was young, so that's okay. He was promoted and made House leader. That's okay. That is the kind of behaviour that has perpetuated and condoned systemic sexual harassment in the workplace.

I'm not surprised the UCP and their new leader didn't appreciate the tone and commitment expressed in the throne speech. It doesn't match their values. Religious freedoms seem only to extend to people who believe the same as they do. Women's rights are human rights, and our government will work to protect them and preserve access.

We know that the single greatest challenge facing our world is the reality of man-made climate change. Thousands of scientists, leaders in their field, agree that we must control and reduce greenhouse gas emissions. The cost of doing nothing is astronomical. The leader of the UCP would rather spend his time on Twitter attacking doctors at the university, scientists. The Leader of the Opposition believes that climate change is simply a natural phenomenon, and he is worried about the indoctrination of our children in school when it comes to climate change. It's called science.

They say that the best predictor of the future is the past. Let's have a look at the Leader of the Opposition's actions related to science and climate change. Under his government's watch research programs monitoring climate change and ocean habitats were terminated. Under his government's watch thousands of scientists were dismissed, and the majority of the department of fisheries and oceans library was closed. Muzzling government scientists was the norm. Here's an example. Based on the government's direction the Environment Canada media office granted zero interviews after their team published a paper in 2011 concluding that a two-degree increase in global temperature was unavoidable by 2100.

I am grateful to live in a province that saw fit to elect a progressive government, one that believes in the human rights of all people, one that takes action to address climate change while protecting our province's resources and jobs. I'm grateful to live in a province that has a progressive government focused on a prosperous and inclusive future.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I listened to the member's response to the throne speech, and what I noticed – and this is my question to the member – is that the member spent a lot of time talking about previous federal governments and not what her government would be doing. She spent a lot of time talking about things that she seems to have disagreed on with the former Prime Minister Mr. Harper. I think she's got some of her facts mistaken, but that would be a matter of debate.

What was interesting to me, Madam Speaker, was that the member never rose and talked about the fact that she belongs to a government that has brought in a carbon tax that they did not campaign on, that now has a Premier and a Premier's office who has told constituents in my constituency to fund raise to pay for their carbon tax, senior citizens that are on a fixed income to fund raise to pay for their carbon tax. The leader of her party has told my constituents to take a bus, not bothering to realize that there are no buses in our communities. She's called my constituents Chicken Little in the past.

Now we see over the constituency break, Madam Speaker, that this government is allowing seniors to have their carbon tax rebates taken away from them because the organizations and the housing that keeps care of them, of course, have increased costs as a result of the carbon tax. Those seniors now can't even depend on the limited carbon tax rebates that this government was providing. I notice the member won't stand up and talk about that.

Another interesting thing, Madam Speaker. The member never talked about the attack that this government has sustained on rural Alberta, particularly the agriculture community. You know, Bill 6, for example, and the brutal way that farmers and ranchers were treated in this province by this government: the member did not speak about that. Also, in regard to the throne speech the word "agriculture" was only used once in the entire speech. I notice the member doesn't want to talk about the fact that our second-largest industry doesn't even seem to be on the radar of this government.

She wants to continue to talk about the former Prime Minister inside this House. I find that disappointing. I'm a little bit interested in how the member can continue to stand up and attack other levels of government that aren't even in power right now and continue to gloss over . . . [interjections] You can see they're excited about it. They don't want to talk about their record but continue to gloss over the nonstop attack on everyday Albertans by this government. I mean, the hon. member is waving her hands around. I'm not sure what she's trying to say to me, Madam Speaker, but I'm sure she'll have a chance in a moment.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Madam Speaker. I do have the floor.

I notice that the hon. member does not want to talk about the damage that her government's policies are doing to Albertans. Now, if I was a member of that government, that's probably what I would want to do, too. I probably would not want to stand up in this House and talk about my record, because their record is nondefendable. They cannot defend their record. This is a government that has told seniors to fund raise to pay for their carbon tax, has completely ignored fixed-income seniors.

We've talked lots about the Sundre West Country Centre in this House. It's interesting that over the constituency break the Premier's office reached out to them yet again – because I keep bringing this issue up in the House – and suggested that they spend $15,000 doing an energy assessment on their building. Fifteen thousand dollars. They can't afford to pay the carbon tax right now, and the government's new suggestion is to come up with another $15,000. I don't know. Maybe they're supposed to fund raise for that.

If the hon. member wants to talk about the throne speech and her government's record, she should start to talk about her government's record. But she won't talk about her government's record; she'll talk about Stephen Harper and the federal Conservatives. Now, I'm a federal Conservative. I'm pretty proud of the federal Conservative record, but it's irrelevant to this conversation about this government's throne speech. [interjection] It's not relevant. They're heckling "debt" at me now, Madam Speaker. This government took it from $13 billion to now $100 billion in debt. I don't think they should heckle about that.

Mr. Westhead: I don't think it's $100 billion in debt.

Mr. Nixon: No, you're right; $96 billion is where they'll be at. I should have been more clear, Madam Speaker. It's $96 billion.

I notice that the hon. member never stood up and talked about the fact that her government told Albertans that they would not use the carbon tax for general revenue, that they would make sure that the revenue from the carbon tax would go back to Albertans. Now we find out that hidden inside their budget is a carbon tax that is being put into general revenue just like the carbon tax that that hon. member went door-knocking in her riding on and never told anybody that that was coming.

Speaker's Ruling

Question-and-comment Period

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Just a reminder to all members of the House that 29(2)(a) is comments and questions, which means you should be able to provide time for an answer to a question. [interjections] Hon. members, we have done past practice in this House. I have reminded this House on more than one occasion that there must be time for a response from the individual that you are speaking to under 29(2)(a). It is in Hansard. I can pull the reference for you if you would like.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to the government's Speech from the Throne. The constituents of Cardston-Taber-Warner elected me to make sure that their voices are heard in this Legislature, and I can tell you that they have strong feelings about this NDP government's agenda. The NDP government is, frankly, out of touch with the ordinary women and men of this province, and the agenda they have set out is yet further proof of this.

Since the Member for Calgary-Lougheed took his seat as Leader of the Official Opposition, this government has spent much time rewriting their positions to be more in line with what we have been saying and what he has been saying for the past months. Madam Speaker, when this government does come out with an idea of its own, it reeks of the out-of-touch, big-government philosophy that Albertans have clearly rejected. If this government ever understood what Albertans wanted, they have surely lost touch with that now.

If there is one clear example of this, it is the way the NDP have responded to the rural crime crisis. When we asked for an emergency debate last November, this government shot it down. With the gallery seats filled with victims of rural crime, this government's priorities were so out of sync with reality that they couldn't even take the time to meet with Albertans who had been repeatedly victimized and were calling for action, while our members have been meeting with Albertans all across the province on this issue. And even though the NDP have finally acknowledged that there is a serious problem, they are scarcely found at town hall meetings hearing the concerns of residents and front-line law enforcement officers. Madam Speaker, maybe if they showed up to listen to ordinary Albertans, they would have some idea of what they want and expect to see from their government.

They promised some extra officers and have promised new prosecutors, but they have yet to present a substantive plan on how to make these promises come to reality. Let us hope for the sake of rural Albertans that they have a plan beyond their announcement that they intend to do something on this issue. Given this government's track record I am hardly optimistic.

Madam Speaker, the throne speech talked a lot about ensuring Canadian tidewater access for Alberta energy. I'm happy to talk about that subject at this point. Let's start with a Tzeponah Berman discussion. As we begin our conversation about getting Alberta's energy to tidewater, she plays an integral role in this. Tzeponah Berman is a radical environmental activist. Her anti-Alberta activism is a matter on record, yet in 2016 this radical environmentalist was appointed as co-chair of the Alberta NDP government's oil sands advisory group. This group was tasked with making recommendations on implementing the new climate leadership plan, reviewing impacts of oil sands operations, and proposing climate recommendations for the future. This government likes to lecture Albertans on what they call a world-leading climate plan. Let's be honest. By appointing Ms Berman, they sent a radical signal right off the bat that the only thing that we would be leading the world that is on track, the resource sector, that is the lifeblood of this province's economy, is down the drain.

Now, despite that Ms Berman has moved on to other things, going from enabling the damaging policies of the NDP to enabling the constitutional violations of the B.C. NDP and the illegal protest of radicals bent on the destruction of our job-creating industry, this government keeps telling Albertans to trust their plan for pipelines. They keep telling us that if we continue to place burdens on our industry, we will attain social licence. But, Madam Speaker, there is not a single environmentalist or left-wing politician that has been convinced by the actions of this government, not a single group that has come from the no to the yes on pipelines save for perhaps the hon. members across the way. But are they?

Now, I've said this before in this House. I had the opportunity, dealing with my insomnia, to read through the NDP's constitution. This is the Alberta NDP's constitution, not the federal's, just to be clear. [interjection] Yes. There probably isn't a difference. This is very interesting because constantly they have said that Ms Berman does not speak for the NDP, but what we find within their own constitution – it was right at the end, under appendix C, for your reading enjoyment. I'm just going to read a couple of things in here because we need to bring this into context. First of all, it says:

Socialism is essentially the application of democracy to the economy. Economic democracy, i.e. democratic socialism . . .

And here the NDP uses "economic democracy" and "democratic socialism" synonymously.

. . . assures production to supply the needs of all people.

It's very, very important to remember that. They believe that they can assure production to supply the needs of all people. I'm sure you've read in other books, in other records that same kind of concept. But we won't talk about that here at this point.

The market economy produces transnational corporations, who give private profit priority over public interest, social justice and workplace democracy.

It goes on to say:

Economic democracy demands a co-operative rather than a competitive system.

Now, you read through this stuff – and I'm going to carry on with this – and you begin to realize where the NDP are coming from. You have to read it to be able to believe it. I can honestly tell you, as I've talked to many people in my riding, that they don't believe this. They don't adhere to these kinds of principles and beliefs, and they think they're counterproductive to being able to create growth and prosperity for their families.

I want to read to you something that I think will put into perspective Ms Berman's actions, because they cannot keep on saying that Ms Berman does not represent an NDP ideology. In reality she epitomizes it, and you'll realize why once I read this. It says:

Ecological Sustainability must permeate all economic and social policy. Meeting human material needs must not use more of Earth's resources than can be renewed within each generation.

I have no idea how the members opposite got here today. I hope that they walked or that they actually rode a bike because their own constitution, their own beliefs do not believe that they should be using nonrenewable resources.

Now, Madam Speaker, this statement says that we should not use oil or gas because, certainly, they cannot be renewed within each generation. They are adequately named nonrenewables for that reason. This is why everywhere I go in this province, I hear Albertans telling me that they don't believe the NDP when they say that they are fighting for the oil and gas workers of this province. Again, I've brought this up a few times, and I have actually yet to hear one of the NDP MLAs stand up and explain to me how this works with even the presentation that they have now, which is that they are advocates for the oil and gas sector in this province.

Now, this government keeps telling Albertans to trust their plan for pipelines. They keep telling us that if we continue to place burdens on our industry, we will attain social licence, but I can't imagine that if they really believe the constitution, that they probably helped write, they would be advocates for pipelines in all directions.

Madam Speaker, in this province we are extraordinarily blessed. Every other province in this country and every other country on this Earth would only wish to have the abundance of energy resources that we find here in Alberta. I'm not sure that everyone here appreciates how blessed we are. We have in this province the third-largest oil reserves anywhere in the world. We have an opportunity to be among the most prosperous societies in history, and unlike the other major oil producers of the world, this wealth is accompanied by the rule of law and freedom for every individual.

Madam Speaker, if this government seeks to set a new direction in this throne speech, then let them take the opportunity to unburden our industry and empower the market to unleash the productive potential of our province. We on this side of the House appreciate that the government has said that they will take a hard line with B.C. when it comes to obstructing the rule of law and ignoring the Constitution. We only hope that these are not just words but an actual commitment that will be backed up with action.

That said, this government needs to do more. They need to realize that the Trudeau Liberals in Ottawa are not friends of this province or this industry. The Premier must demand that the federal government take action to enforce the approved construction of the Trans Mountain pipeline. The time for going along to get along with Prime Minister Trudeau needs to be over. It is time to make sure that Alberta's voice is heard in the Confederation. The people of Alberta deserve as much, and frankly the economic success of our country demands it.

Madam Speaker, there is more that must be addressed here. The throne speech tries to paint a rosy picture, but Albertans see an entirely different reality. Calgary has one of the highest unemployment rates outside of the Maritimes. Many people across the province have exhausted their benefits in a futile bid to find employment. Across professions and across industries too many people have been let down by this government, too many people have had to give up, and too many people have lost sight of the dream that once was Alberta. Those who are employed, in many cases, have had to settle for a stopgap job out of their field and for considerably less pay just to keep themselves afloat. These aren't long-term solutions, and they aren't solutions that are making life better for Albertans.

Last night I had the opportunity of going to a restaurant. I had an opportunity to talk to the owner of the restaurant. He was actually from the oil and gas industry – he was an engineer – and he had gotten out of the oil and gas industry because he felt that the government was not supportive of it. He felt that there was no future for him in that industry anymore, so he had bought a restaurant, hoping to be able to try to make something for him and for his family. As I talked to him – he had spent many, many years going to university to become an engineer. That was his love. It was something that he enjoyed doing, yet he was in a position where he was forced into doing something else in order to be able to make ends meet for his family in a province that has the third-largest resources, oil and gas resources, in the world. We have an engineer that's being forced to do something else. If that is the definition of diversification, then I don't think Albertans want to have anything to do with it.

What they want is to have good-paying jobs. They want to be able to go to university and be able to provide for their families and for their prosperity. This is what I heard as I listened to this gentleman speak. Regular Albertans want this government to stop overburdening them with unnecessary taxes like the job-killing NDP carbon tax. They want jobs that will pay the mortgage. They want their towns to be vibrant communities. They want a government that doesn't pick winners and losers. They want a government that doesn't scare off investment coming into the province through ideological, socialist policies. Madam Speaker, I know that this is what regular Albertans want because it is what I hear every single day from the good people of Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Madam Speaker, this government talks a lot about diversification. In fact, they seem to be announcing a new government program or initiative at every corner. Well, I know that what I am about to say doesn't fit with the NDP ideological agenda, but it is the straight truth. Government programs, higher taxes, and multibillion-dollar deficits will not diversify our economy, full stop. It is the wealth and investment generated by our existing industries that will provide new opportunities in emerging sectors. It is the dollars created by the private sector that will fuel the economy of tomorrow.

Now, when I talk to people, I talk to people about what an economy is and about what our society in Alberta is like, and I talk to them about the analogy between the heart and head. The heart of a society is the wraparound services that the good people of Alberta are more than willing to be able to provide for each other. This is the heart. This is the schools and the health and the policing and the fire and the ambulance and all of the social programs that we've provided to be able to help when people are down, when they're out, to be able to help lift them, and to be able to help give them a sense of decency. The head part is the ability to be able to provide those services. The head part is the ability to be able to have entrepreneurs be able to create wealth, because you cannot spend the money unless you create it first, and this is what this government seems to have missed out on.

Conservatives understand that oil and gas is not what just makes up Alberta. They understand that there is more than just oil and gas, but they do know that it's a big part of our economy. If the government wants to spur investment and diversification, it needs to take yet another page from the playbook of the United Conservative Party: empower the free markets, support entrepreneurs and job creators by lowering taxes, cutting red tape, and getting the government out of the place that it does not belong.

Speaker's Ruling Question-and-comment Period

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Just before we move on to 29(2)(a), I'd like to clarify my comments from before. I have a few references that we can look back at to discuss the fact that we need to have comments and questions, which means comments plus questions, and allow the member to respond. On March 24, 2011, the hon. Speaker Kowalski referenced during the debate:

I think before we go on, I... want to remind the member, like the hon. Government House Leader has correctly said, that the five minutes for comments and questions are about the bill. And be concise so that other members can participate.

From November 21, 2012, by the hon. Speaker Zwozdesky:

I just want you to know. But 29(2)(a) was put in for a... good purpose, and I want to just ask you to consider what the real spirit of 29(2)(a) was for subsequent speakers after this one.

From November 21, 2012, by the hon. Speaker Zwozdesky:

The point I [am] trying to make is that Standing Order 29(2)(a) is usually reserved for short snappers back one way and the other. I realize this is a complex issue, and there's nothing the Speaker can do – you have the floor; you can speak the full five minutes if you want – but let's... keep in mind what the spirit of the debate aspect was when 29(2)(a) was... brought in. It's a unique feature of this Assembly.

From November 21, 2012, again, the hon. Speaker Zwozdesky:

[Please] review the purpose of 29(2)(a), with no reflection on the answer just given or the previous question. One person stands and asks a question. It takes 20, 30 seconds maybe, and then the person answering gets up and consumes the rest of the time.

I also did a ruling on March 22, 2018.

[Just reminding] all members of the House, before we move on, around 29(2)(a). It is comments and questions, but as you all know from past rulings, typically you leave time for the person to be able to respond to the questions.

I would like to clarify for all members that 29(2)(a) is for comments and questions, to allow the other person to respond.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for clarifying. Certainly, I don't want to run out the clock like the previous speaker under 29(2)(a) did.

Debate Continued

Ms Renaud: But I will ask a question to the member who just spoke to the Speech from the Throne. One of the things I enjoyed about the Speech from the Throne was the references to the need to work on inclusion and that "inclusion" is an action word. It takes actual work and it takes legislation and it takes investment to make it happen. To the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. I know that in the news over the last little while the city of Taber, I believe, has struggled with people vandalizing the pride flag. I think that it was at a municipal building. The first one was burned or stolen. I'm not sure. The second one was stolen. I know that a number of your constituents and others around Alberta wanted to know online or even in this House: why is it that you wouldn't say something about that or work with the city to ensure that all members, all citizens of that city felt safe and valued and included? I wonder if you could speak to that.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?
The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I wanted to go on a little bit on what the Member for St. Albert was talking about. I was actually at the first Taber pride flag raising last year. I would say that it was very emotional to be at the first flag raising in Taber and to see the constituents of the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner talk about how they needed support from both their local government, the provincial government, the federal government, and all their representatives. I was sad to see that at the time of the flag raising there was also a municipal council meeting going on, but one of the councillors was able to come out briefly to say a couple of words. I was there, able to support the Taber equality society as an MLA even though I had to drive about two, three hours down to Taber.

I was very disappointed that the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner was not present. I don't know if he was busy that day or if he wasn't in town or if he was stuck in Edmonton. But I was really proud to be there to stand with his community and to show that no matter who you are in this province, you're respected by this side of the House, by this government, and this party. I don't know what the UCP stands for. I don't know what the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner stands for, but I don't think he stands with his constituents when it comes to this exact moment. I hope to see him this summer when the Taber equality society raises their pride flag above the provincial building in Taber. I hope to see him there.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise under 29(2)(a) and address the member's comments on the throne speech. Now, the member made reference to a co-operative rather than competitive system of business, and I think that's an important comparison and an important distinction. I would ask the hon. member, for the people in your riding of Cardston-Taber-Warner, when you address them or if you've talked to them about this difference, for your opinion on which method of business seems to serve your constituents better in terms of being able to look after their families, in terms of being able to have jobs, and even in terms of generating tax revenue for local, municipal, and federal governments to provide much-needed public services, infrastructure, social services, all those types of things, because I think that was an important issue that the hon. member raised. I would invite him to talk about that difference between a co-operative rather than competitive system of business.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It was a very good question that was asked. It was a question that was talking specifically about the throne speech. [interjection]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member.

Please go ahead.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you. This is something that goes back to maybe some comments that were made by our hon. leader. He was talking about the difference between Saskatchewan and Alberta, and one of the differences – I was talking to some of the MLAs from Saskatchewan. They were talking about the potash in Saskatchewan.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the throne speech?

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 5

An Act to Strengthen Financial Security for Persons with Disabilities

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to move second reading of Bill 5, An Act to Strengthen Financial Security for Persons with Disabilities.

Madam Speaker, all Albertans should be able to plan for their children's future. This legislation amends the AISH Act and the AISH general regulation so Albertans can establish trusts for family members and loved ones who are receiving AISH benefits without affecting their AISH eligibility.

The AISH program, assured income for the severely handicapped, provides financial and health-related benefits to support almost 60,000 adults with a disability. AISH benefits help people with their daily needs and with living as independently as possible. This program is about much more than a monthly living allowance. AISH includes significant benefits, including health benefits, that cover the cost of dental, optical, and prescription drugs as well as covering some of the costs of child care. Madam Speaker, AISH provides the support people need on a daily basis to live meaningful and engaged lives.

AISH should not prevent Albertans from saving for their future. People with disabilities should have the same opportunity for financial stability as other Albertans, and many Albertans have told us that. People across the province reached out to us and said that Albertans with disabilities should have equal access to financial security, and we are listening and taking action. Under Bill 5 Albertans will be better able to plan for their children's future. They can help ensure that their children or loved ones are taken care of. This legislation will ensure that people with disabilities have access to funds for continued care and quality of life. It will ensure that people remain eligible for the AISH program without having to deplete their trusts, and AISH clients will have time to invest unexpected payments such as an inheritance in an exempt asset without losing their benefits.

For decades the previous government's regressive policies were designed to keep people off AISH. We are working to ensure Albertans have clear access to the supports they need. We have invested $188 million in the AISH program and are working to create a shorter, simpler, and more accessible application form, developing user-friendly how-to guides to help Albertans apply for AISH, and setting clear standards to ensure the program works for Albertans.

Our government believes in the power of collaboration. Last year our colleague the MLA for Calgary-Currie met with self-advocates and families of people with disabilities and heard their concerns. In response, he championed changes to the AISH Act with a private member's bill introduced last fall. His bill did not make it to final reading, but he highlighted the importance of the issue and a lack of fairness in the system that needs to be corrected.

He was supported by Inclusion Alberta, an organization that advocates on behalf of children and adults with developmental disabilities. Inclusion Alberta started a petition, and our government heard from more than 3,400 Albertans asking for changes to the AISH Act. We are taking action. As the Minister of Community and Social Services I am honoured to say that Albertans are at the heart of all of our ministry's programs, and with Bill 5 we are putting Albertans first.

Alberta is one of the few jurisdictions that doesn't have explicit exemptions for trusts for people with disabilities. Under the current legislation an AISH recipient could lose their eligibility as the result of an inheritance. This is not right. As I said earlier, all Albertans want to have peace of mind and ensure that their children or loved ones are taken care of no matter their financial situation. They want to have the option to leave behind their personal financial resources and other assets, the things they have worked for throughout their lives, to support the standard of living of a loved one with a disability and to be able to do so when unexpected costs or expenses arise. Most importantly, they want to be able to do this without jeopardizing their loved one's eligibility for the AISH program.

We heard from Albertans loud and clear on this issue, and we are taking action. Two changes are proposed in this bill. First, Bill 5 amends the AISH Act to ensure that trusts are exempt as an asset when determining eligibility for the AISH program. Secondly, there will now be a one-year grace period, if someone receives a large payment such as an inheritance, to invest the payment into an exempt asset. This grace period will allow time to make a thoughtful decision and plan for their future. People will now have time to seek advice and make good choices about how to invest their assets, and parents and guardians will be able to make thoughtful decisions and plan for the long-term care of their children and loved ones who have disabilities. AISH recipients will not have to deplete their trusts to continue to receive benefits.

Discretionary trusts were allowed until the previous government prohibited them in the 1990s. This was a significant penalty on families and individuals looking to prepare for their future. With this legislation families can now help provide for the long-term care of a loved one. These changes allow more flexibility to plan for the future while remaining accountable. Bill 5 will allow for the exemption of discretionary and nondiscretionary trusts as an asset in which an applicant, client, or cohabiting partner is a beneficiary. Should the bill pass, a client will be able to be a beneficiary of a trust of any value, in addition to the current $100,000 nonexempt asset limit, without affecting their eligibility for the AISH program.

Bill 5 also includes an amendment that will temporarily exempt as an asset payments that are not considered income by the AISH program and a one-year grace period to place those funds into an exempt asset. This could include an inheritance or gifts. The grace period ensures AISH recipients will not be penalized and potentially lose AISH eligibility if they receive a lump-sum payment that puts them over the $100,000 nonexempt asset limit, and it provides the time for people and their families to make long-term financial plans without pressure that they will become ineligible for the AISH program in the meantime. Community and Social Services will advise Albertans affected by this change to consult professional estate planners and legal experts for advice and direction on how to make the best choice to plan for their long-term needs.

Madam Speaker, Bill 5 is about fairness, and our government has committed to protect vulnerable Albertans and ensure they are treated fairly. I'm committed to ensuring that people who receive support from the AISH program have the best system possible to meet their needs. For this to happen, we need to ensure that more emphasis is on being fair to all Albertans and especially to people who receive our services.

As I mentioned earlier, we are committed to making real changes that will help improve the lives of Albertans with disabilities and their families. We are taking significant action, including moving forward on the first advocate for persons with disabilities in Alberta's history, which we will begin recruitment for this spring. We have made changes to the service dog regulation to increase access for persons with disabilities. We have stopped previous government policies that the community felt were regressive and disrespectful, including the persons with developmental disabilities safety standard and the supports intensity scale.

We are currently engaged with the community to work on a review of the PDD program. We have increased funding to PDD and AISH to ensure Albertans get the supports they need. We have released the AISH action plan to make AISH more user friendly and accessible instead of trying to keep Albertans off the program, like the previous government did. We have worked openly and collaboratively with self-advocates, families, workers, and service providers, and we have heard loud and clear from the community: Nothing about Us without Us. We have and will continue to honour this and work with the community to make improvements together.

Bill 5 is an important step forward. We have garnered support from a wide array of stakeholders, including those 3,400 Albertans who signed Inclusion Alberta's petition: Frances Harley, mother of a disabled daughter; Joan Lee, CEO of the Vecova Centre for Disability Services and Research; Bruce Uditsky, father of a son with disabilities and head of Inclusion Alberta; Lesley and Sherwin Tabler; Donna Desjardins of Inclusion St. Paul; Tina Trigg, mother of a disabled daughter and board member with Inclusion Alberta.

Madam Speaker, Bill 5 will make life better for Albertans and will help ensure that Albertans with disabilities are treated fairly, and it will support families that are planning for their children's future. I want to thank all of the self-advocates, families, and the staff that advocated for these important changes. I encourage all members of the Assembly to support this important bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 5 this morning with the limited time that we have left before we rise here at noon, but I will try to make the most of the time that we have available as we speak to Bill 5 and some of the important things that the minister has outlined. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak in favour of Bill 5, An Act to Strengthen Financial Security for Persons with Disabilities. [interjection] It's okay. You can go ahead if you want.

It's not all that often that in this Chamber we find such common cause, but I think that we've done that with Bill 5. It has been said that teamwork makes the dream work, and I think that we will be able to support such a valuable piece of legislation with respect to people with disabilities in our province.

In fact, Madam Speaker, this piece of legislation is long overdue. It's a long-overdue measure to ensure that Albertans living with disabilities are not unfairly penalized for inheriting assets or other gifts from family members, folks who would like to have some sense of peace of mind when it comes to caring for the needs of their loved ones without any concern or fear of having their AISH benefits clawed back.

All members of this Assembly, regardless of their political stripe, recognize the amazing contribution that individuals with disabilities make to our great province, and they also recognize that the government does have a role in caring for those vulnerable populations. Persons with disabilities should not be given fewer financial protections than those without disabilities in terms of inheritance, and parents leaving their children their hard-earned money should not have to worry about those funds being clawed back and, in fact, those funds creating harm to their child as they may risk losing their much-needed AISH support.

I want to take just a brief moment to commend my colleague from across the aisle, the Member for Calgary-Currie, for originally bringing this legislation forward in his private member's bill. I know that he worked incredibly hard on outreach on portions of this legislation as well as on outreach to all members of the Assembly to try and see that piece of legislation passed in its previous form. I know that I have personally heard from many stakeholders that have been advocating for this issue and about the great deal of time that they've spent trying to get this particular issue across the line. I'm pleased that it's finally being addressed.

Now, there are a number of situations inside this piece of legislation that I think require some additional discussion and more robust debate. I don't think that we're going to have time for that this morning. However, I hope that throughout other stages of the legislation we will be able to address some of those things, in particular around some of the issues with respect to discretionary trusts and nondiscretionary trusts and if the government has addressed some of the potential concerns that we have heard from stakeholders, particularly around nondiscretionary trusts. Some of the issues that can be found in the legislation with respect to what will be exempt and what won't be exempt, the assets and how that would be applied to assets, I think will be important for some further discussion.

As well, perhaps we should be asking ourselves if there are areas where people receiving AISH supports can receive some income from work that they might require and if they should in fact be able to benefit from the trust on a monthly basis or not. I think it's an important discussion that we have here in this Chamber.

I look forward to continuing to support this legislation. In that support, it does mean that we need to ask some important questions and about some checks and balances, making sure that they're in place. But, on balance, I think that this is a step that's long overdue, and I look forward to supporting it. I look forward to hearing from the minister on some of the questions that we have as we continue the debate, but in the name of time for this morning I'll be happy to keep my remarks to this point now.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 4(2.1) the Assembly will now stand adjourned until 1:30 this afternoon.

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, April 3, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. R.J. Chambers. I would invite all to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you to all the members of the House I'm very pleased to stand today and introduce 38 students from the wonderful school of Meyokumin in Edmonton-Ellerslie. They're accompanied by their teachers, Brianna Orchin and Kristine Anderson, as well as their chaperone, Seema Saini. I would like them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you students and teachers and chaperones of Fort Saskatchewan elementary school. They're accompanied by Mrs. Alanna Lutz, Ms Bartsch, Mrs. Laura Simpson, Mrs. Carol Kaehn, and Miss C.J. Barnes. I would like to thank them for the opportunity to visit with them at school just a few short weeks ago. We talked a lot about provincial politics and, I'm sure to their most benefit, how to convince others – probably, namely, their teachers and parents – of your arguments. Thank you so much for joining us here at the Legislature. I would ask everyone to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups today?

Seeing and hearing none, the Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to introduce to you today and through you to all members of this Assembly three constituents of mine who also happen to be good friends of my colleague the Minister of Environment and Parks: Erika, Katarina, and Matthew Holden. Matthew works for Community and Social Services and lives in Widewater, just outside of Slave Lake, on an acreage with his family. He's joined today by Erika, a grade 6 student who has a big role in her upcoming school play at E.G. Wahlstrom. Erika wants to be a vet, so she spends a lot of time caring for her family's animals. Matthew is also joined by Katarina, a grade 8 student at Roland Michener, who travelled to Fort McMurray this winter to compete in the Alberta Games as a wrestler. Katarina is also active in her school's band and GSA. Like me and my family, the Holdens love spending their time enjoying the great outdoors, skiing and hiking around Lesser Slave Lake. I now ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Mark Jones. Mark has served Red Deer in so many ways. He recently retired from the Red Deer public school division after a 34-year career there. He was a board chair of city parks and rec, past VP of Red Deer Minor Hockey, is the current president of the Red Deer Tennis Club, and also sits on the Alberta Motor Association board. Mark is now the CEO of the Central Alberta Child Advocacy Centre, which works with many partners to support children, youth, and families impacted by sexual abuse, physical abuse, and neglect. I thank the Central Alberta Child Advocacy Centre for the critical work they do and ask Mr. Jones to now rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize our province's oncology nurses and the specialized care that they provide to Albertans every day. Today is Oncology Nursing Day. These nurses are a critical part of our health care system, and we value the work they do to provide quality, person-centred care. I am grateful to the more than 1,000 registered nurses, including nurse practitioners, who work in oncology and cancer care units across this province for providing information, compassion, and care to Albertans when they need it most. I'd like to invite Linda Watson, president of the Canadian Association of Nurses in Oncology, along with Elysa, Janice, Jennifer, Nanette, Karina, Nicole, Bronwen, Anna, and Louise to please rise and receive our warm welcome and our appreciation.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you key members, partners, and volunteers of Autism Edmonton in recognition of world autism day. Thanks to organizations like Autism Edmonton, Albertans living with autism as well as their friends and family have a place to get vital information and resources to help them recognize and understand autism. Autism Edmonton also offers empathetic support and help to understand the unique and often complex situations faced by people affected by autism. I encourage all Albertans to educate themselves and those around them about autism so that we can accept and normalize autism in our communities. I would ask David Jardine, president, along with the other Autism Edmonton advocates to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Joining us today are leaders from Alberta's largest student advocacy groups, the Alberta Students' Executive Council and the Council of Alberta University

Students. I've had the pleasure of working with some of these folks for a couple of years now, achieving meaningful progress on issues like freezing tuition and student mental health funding, and I look forward to working with the incoming executive in the coming year. My guests are – and I will apologize in advance for any errors or omissions in the names – Ian Lee, Nicholas Newnes, Alex Dimopoulos, Rachel Moerschfelder, Doris Car, Naomi Pela, Alysson Torres-Gillett, Laura Hebert, Marlene Morin, Brenda Needham, Kayla Gale, Garrett Koehler, Daniel Caine, Reed Larsen, Conner Peta, Parvin Sedighi, Stephanie Nedoshytko, Marina Banister, Branden Cave, Puncham Judge, Shifrah Gadamsetti, Aria Burrell, and Hailey Babb. I ask that my guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Great. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was just on my way to send you a note to ask you if I can rise and introduce two guests to you and through you to all members of the Assembly, two incredibly hard-working women who I'm very, very proud of. One is my sister Elysa Meek, who is an oncology nurse, as well as my cousin Linda Watson, who is the president of the Canadian association. I'm thrilled to have them join us here today. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to introduce to you and through you to everybody in this Assembly two people that are very close to my heart, my son Christopher Carlier and his wife, Amanda McArthur, from Regina, Saskatchewan, where Christopher is a 10-year employee of GasBuddy and Mandy is a music teacher in the public school system. I'll ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other guests today, hon. members? The Member for Calgary-Klein.

1:40

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two Mount Royal University students dedicated to keeping GSAs, climate change, and a strong economic recovery on the provincial agenda. Olga Barceló is the president of the Mount Royal New Democrats, and Henry Wearmouth is the vice-president external of the Mount Royal New Democrats. I ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a very active and ambitious and vocal person in the Grande Prairie-Wapiti constituency. I'd like to introduce to you Maurissa Hietland. If she could stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Central Alberta Child Advocacy Centre

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am honoured to speak about the Central Alberta Child Advocacy Centre in Red Deer. The CACAC is a not-for-profit organization that works in partnership with the central region child services, Alberta Health Services, Alberta Justice, Alberta Education, and the RCMP to better serve children, youth, and families impacted by sexual abuse and the most serious and complex cases of physical abuse and neglect. Because CACAC works collaboratively with such partners, they are able to achieve greater results than anybody could on their own. They're able to combine expertise in investigation, treatment, prevention, education, and research to provide an integrated approach wrapping around children and always working in the best interest of the child.

The CACAC opened its doors November 29, 2017, and has since then triaged over 90 cases with their multidisciplinary team and completed 60 forensic child interviews. In a collaborative effort 28 criminal charges have been laid in 16 different files. In 60 per cent of the cases the primary type of abuse has been sexual abuse, 20 per cent physical abuse, and 20 per cent has been neglect, sexualized behaviours, drug endangerment, and sexual exploitation; 70 per cent of offenders are interfamilial or are related to the child. While the highest number of case files have been children in the 10- to 13-year range, the youngest victim has been a one-year-old child.

The CACAC currently serves five zones, ranging from Clearwater county in the west to the Saskatchewan border and from as far north as Drayton Valley and Vermilion to down past Drumheller, serving a population of over 332,000 Alberta children. I would like to thank them . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Conservative Government Achievements

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the NDP speak in this House or in public, they like to point out the 44 years of Conservative governance as having done nothing for our province. It is unfortunate that they insist on making those comments because in doing so, they are disrespecting the legacies of fine Premiers like Ralph Klein and Peter Lougheed. Since the NDP insist on taking this tack, I would like to highlight some of the things that Conservatives have accomplished to make Alberta the envy of the world.

Hundreds of thousands of immigrants who come here from other parts of the world have benefited from the Conservative legacy. Let's start with the fact that Alberta still has no sales tax. That reality, Mr. Speaker, is thanks to 44 years of Conservative service to the people of Alberta.

Let's specifically look at the debt-free legacy left by Premier Klein and, on top of that, hundreds of billions of dollars contributed in equalization payments to Ottawa during that period.

We all remember when Premier Lougheed stood against the federal Liberal government for their attack on our resources, and now this NDP government has made the Trudeau Liberals their allies, when Justin Trudeau is not only sitting on his hands while B.C. attempts to block the Trans Mountain pipeline, Mr. Speaker; he destroyed Northern Gateway and Energy East.

Now, let's look at this NDP government, Alberta under this NDP government. In only three years they've imposed a carbon tax, the largest tax increase in the history of Alberta, without talking to Albertans; $96 billion of debt; raised personal and corporate taxes; chased almost $40 billion of investment out of this province; increased unemployment; disrespected our farmers, small-business owners, job creators; and told Albertans to take the bus and eat less meat if they are not happy with their climate leadership plan.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Easter

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take a moment today to speak about Easter and what Easter means for many Albertans. As we know, in the Christian tradition Easter is the celebration of the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ. For many across Alberta, Easter brings the renewal of faith and hope as they celebrate the season according to their own particular beliefs and traditions.

I have fond memories of our family celebrating Easter egg hunts and visits with my grandparents in northwest Calgary, where we would break and then feast on traditional Ukrainian babka, or Easter bread. Like so many families in Alberta, my grandparents came from the culture where the beautiful pysanka was born, and they shared that tradition with me here in Canada.

This past weekend I had the opportunity to celebrate Easter in new ways, Mr. Speaker, with families across Calgary-Currie. All of these families were celebrating peace, friendship, and joy as well as the return of spring. Community associations across Currie, like the one in Richmond and Knob Hill, held an extravagant Easter egg hunt for Calgarians of all ages. Later this week the Bankview community gardeners will gather to swap seeds and to share stories about the glory of having their hands in the dirt, their heads in the sun, and their hearts filled with nature, assuming, of course, the snow melts by then.

While out speaking with Calgarians on Holy Thursday, Mr. Speaker, I met with a family who arrived from Syria not long ago, who, like my family years before, came to this place seeking opportunity. While I was unable to break Easter bread with them, they welcomed me into their home, shared with me their own traditions, and fed me some very delicious pastries, that I enjoyed very much.

Wherever you found yourself, I hope everyone had a healthy and happy Easter. As we say in my baba and gido's home, Christ is risen. Khrystos voskres

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Carbon Levy

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Speaker, I rise today on an issue of great concern for my constituents of Bonnyville-Cold Lake. In the budget recently introduced by the NDP government, we received confirmation of a NDP plan to follow the lead of the Trudeau Liberals and increase their already burdensome carbon tax from $30 to $50 per tonne. That's a 67 per cent increase, an admission of more punitive taxes coming from this NDP government.

From the beginning, since the NDP announced this job-killing tax, that wasn't mentioned anywhere in their 2015 election platform, they promised Albertans that it would not be just another revenue-generating tool. The NDP told Albertans that a hundred per cent of the revenue from the carbon tax would either go to rebates to Albertans or to the environmental initiatives, yet it seems like they forgot to mention a caveat on this. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that with the release of the 2018 budget, it was revealed that future revenues generated by the carbon tax will be going to general revenues – that's truly shameful – to plug the out-of-control spending that led to a deficit currently sitting at $8.8 billion.

What does that mean? It means no help for struggling Albertans. Seniors who live on fixed incomes will be among the hardest hit by this carbon tax. The NDP will be taking billions more out of the pockets of Alberta families, who are trying to make up for this fiscal mess that they, the NDP, have created. Mr. Speaker, Albertans cannot afford to bail out the NDP for the consequences of their reckless ideological agenda. It's time for the NDP to get onside with Alberta families, stand up to Justin Trudeau, and repeal the carbon tax.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The official Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Carbon Levy Rate

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and Happy Easter to you. Two weeks ago I asked the Premier when she was going to raise the NDP carbon tax by 67 per cent, and she said: not until we get a pipeline. But in her budget she baked in the 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax. Why did she change her mind? Why is she proceeding with the 67 per cent hike in the carbon tax when times are tough and Albertans need tax relief, not higher taxes?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I think it's very interesting. Our budget, that we were very proud to introduce a couple of weeks ago, is focused on building a recovery to last. Now, the member opposite is out there telling Albertans that he can cut taxes, that he can balance the budget, and that he can do so without hurting front-line services. The member is lost in a storm of fairy dust. He is either deeply, deeply misinformed or purposely misinforming, and my question to the member opposite is really: which is it?

Mr. Kenney: For the record, Mr. Speaker, the NDP ran on a platform that did not mention a carbon tax. Five months later they introduced it, the biggest tax hike in the province's history. They then announced plans to raise it by 67 per cent because Justin Trudeau told them to, but then they said that they wouldn't without a pipeline. Now it's baked into the budget. Why can't they get their facts straight? Why are they going to proceed with a 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax even though they said that they wouldn't without a pipeline? There is no Trans Mountain pipeline. Why the 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax in this budget?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The fact of the matter is that notwithstanding how much the member opposite wished it wasn't so, that pipeline has been approved. You know what? Just a week and a half ago we won in court again. Fourteen cases out of 14 cases we have won in the courts. We are winning. We are going to win. We are not going to bet against Albertans, and the member opposite should stop doing that, too.

Mr. Kenney: This is remarkable, Mr. Speaker. The Premier can't make up her mind. At first it was a blank cheque for her ally Justin Trudeau to raise the carbon tax by 67 per cent. Then she said: well, only if a pipeline is approved. Then she said: only if construction begins. Then she said: only if construction is completed. Now all of those conditions are out the window. Could she point to the page in the budget speech, in the budget documents which says that there's any condition on the 67 per cent increase? Why is she giving Justin Trudeau another blank cheque to raise taxes on ordinary Albertans?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I'm wondering if the member opposite could point to any page in his shadow budget. Oh, wait. No, he can't because the member opposite and the Official Opposition are the first ever to never introduce a shadow budget. But what we do know is that you can't have it all. You can't give a tax break to the rich. You can't balance the budget. You can't not affect front-line services that Albertans rely on. It can't be done, and sooner or later he's going to have to come clean to Albertans on what his plan actually is.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, she'll have plenty of chances to ask questions a little over a year from now, but now I'd recommend that the Premier try to answer them.

Budget 2018

Mr. Kenney: Here's another question Albertans want to know. This Premier said that every penny raised by the carbon tax would be rebated back to Albertans or put back to work in our economy in new economic initiatives, but now the government has admitted that that's no longer true. For every incremental penny raised by their 67 per cent hike in the carbon tax, one hundred per cent will go into the NDP slush fund to spend on whatever they want, with no rebates, no fake green spending. Why did the Premier break her word to Albertans?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what I have always been very clear on is the climate leadership plan which our government brought in. The additional levy that comes from the federal government will be reinvested to support Albertans. It will support our hospitals. It will support our schools. It will support our justice system. It will support making life better for Albertans while we adopt a reasonable path to balance which, at the end of the day, will make sure that Alberta moves forward in a progressive way.

Mr. Kenney: There you have it, Mr. Speaker. They said all along that every penny would go back into rebates and for so-called green initiatives. Now the government is admitting that it's just going into the general revenue fund. They're admitting – won't the Premier just stand up and be honest with Albertans? – that it's just another tax. It's a sales tax by another name. It's a tax on every bit of energy that Albertans consume in a cold and modern economy. Why won't the Premier just admit that this 67 per cent hike in the carbon tax is needed just to prevent the deficit and debt from going even higher?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I will say to Albertans is that when we reach our path to balance in 2023, when we reach balance, we will still enjoy an $11 billion per capita tax advantage over the next lowest taxed province in the country, so we are absolutely protecting that. At the same time, we are continuing to invest in hospitals, we are continuing to invest in schools, and we are continuing to ensure that Albertans have a government that has their backs, not a government that's jumping on their backs, trying to make them the . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I have here the platform on which the NDP ran in the last election. It committed to three deficits and a balanced budget – in fact, a surplus – this year. Altogether they promised Albertans $11 billion in new borrowing and then surpluses. Instead, they are delivering $83 billion in additional borrowing, headed for a debt of nearly $100 billion. Why did the NDP so catastrophically break their word to Albertans? Why are they planning to increase debt by $83 billion more than they promised?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm not going to take fiscal management lessons from the member opposite. When they were in Ottawa, they introduced six straight deficit budgets. One year their deficit was $56 billion – $56 billion – and they added $145 billion to the national debt before they left office. You know what? The fact of the matter is that we are charting a responsible course to balance while supporting Albertans, while supporting our hospitals, while supporting our schools, while supporting our kids and our seniors, and we won't stop.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Provincial Debt

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, after over a century of history Alberta had an accumulated debt of $13 billion when the NDP came to office. It's now $56 billion, and it's headed towards $100 billion. I'm only asking the government to hold themselves to their own standard, not someone else's standard. Their standard this year was a $25 million surplus. Instead, we've got a $9 billion deficit. Their standard was $11 billion in new debt. Instead, we've got $83 billion in new debt. Will the Premier just admit that they've made a mess of the province's finances?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what I will admit is that we took over this province from a government that had left the province unprepared to deal with the devastating drop in the price of oil, one that went far lower than people were projecting in April 2015.

The other thing is that by 2023 we will still have the best balance sheet in the country, and to get there, we will not have laid off the 3,600 or so teachers that the member opposite suggested just this morning that he would like to lay off. By the way, that's exactly what would happen if we had to freeze our finances the way he suggested.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Well, here we go, Mr. Speaker. The Premier's communications director said last week that we would have to, quote, blow up every school and hospital in the province to balance the budget. This is from the government that said that they were going to have compassionate belt-tightening. Instead, we continue to have the most inefficient provincial government in Canada. My question is this. Is the Premier proud of the fact that her government is now spending more on interest payments to bankers and bondholders than in 19 of the 23 Alberta government departments?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, here's what I'm proud of. You know, this morning the member opposite said that what we should have done was freeze spending in 2015. What I'm telling the members opposite is that that would mean there would be 3,600 fewer teachers and teachers' assistants in the province of Alberta today. I am very, very proud that those 3,600 teachers and teachers' assistants are in our schools today teaching our kids and giving them the opportunities that they need to build a strong future. Those are the kinds of choices our government is making.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the NDP's choice is to encumber those kids with $100 billion of debt that they're going to have to pay off with higher taxes in the future, in the meanwhile enriching bankers and bondholders as we're now spending $2 billion on interest. Under their plan, that's going up to $3.7 billion, more than we spend on 19 of 23 departments. Is this what the NDP dreamed of, enriching bankers and bondholders with tax dollars rather than investing in public services?

Ms Notley: What I don't dream of, Mr. Speaker, is giving the richest 1 per cent of Albertans a $700 million tax gift. I'm absolutely not planning on doing that, not planning on taking 3,600 teachers out of our schools, not planning on cancelling the Tom Baker centre, not planning on cancelling the green line because – you know what? – we have Albertans' backs. We are moving forward, and that's exactly what we are going to do.

Pharmacy Funding Framework

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I've said many times in this House that we need to address the rising health care costs if we're ever going to get the budget to balance. When I raise these concerns in the House, the government is quick to point the finger and accuses us of wanting to cut funding for front-line services. It appears as if the government is trying to divert attention away from the fact that their own fiscal plan is beginning to have a direct impact on front-line services. The most recent budget saw this government cut funding to Alberta pharmacists by $150 million. Would the minister agree that this is a direct cut to front-line services, or does she not consider the work of pharmacists a crucial front-line service?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I find it very rich that the member opposite, when they have their own shadow budget proposing a billion dollars' worth of cuts, proposing increases in fees and user costs – it sounds like the rejected health care levy that was proposed by his leader when he was the Health minister in the last election. At the same time what we're doing is that we are increasing pharmacy by a reasonable rate of increase, which is 4.3 per cent, to cover the fact that there is inflation, to cover the fact that there are new people going on new medications. We've got balance on this side. On that side all they've got are old, recycled ideas of deep cuts from the 1990s.

Mr. Fraser: One thing we often suggest to the government is that instead of cutting funding for the front line, as the minister has done, savings can be found through efficiencies. The government likes to laugh at that, but the issue is that the pharmacists provide a good example of what we're referring to. One service that the government is cutting funding for is paying pharmacists to provide flu shots. Lowering the incentive for pharmacists to provide flu shots means that more shots will be given by doctors, and a flu shot given by a doctor is about four times more expensive. To the same minister: how does paying doctors more money to deliver the same number of flu shots save the province money at all?

Ms Hoffman: Well, my question to the member opposite and, rather, his leader, Mr. Mandel, who was the Health minister, is: how does it make sense that we pay 50 per cent higher than the next-highest jurisdiction? I don't think that's fair. We sat down with pharmacists, and we said: we want a fair plan that ensures that patients still have good access. We're still going to be paying the highest in the country. We're just going to be tied instead of being 50 per cent higher than the next highest in the country, Mr. Speaker. I think that's fair and reasonable. I have to say that cutting a billion dollars from the front-line workers of health care or, at a time when fentanyl was on the rise, your leader turning down $1.4 million of funding, no strings attached, from the federal government to address the fentanyl crisis: that is irresponsible.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, pharmacists are well trained, highly educated medical professionals, and we rely on pharmacists to know all the effects of medications, to warn of the potential dangers of mixing drugs. They provide advice and consultation for people struggling with mental health, addictions, and the treatment of chronic conditions, and they are often the medical professional that people see the most often. Pharmacists are saying that the government's proposed cuts would put patients at risk by limiting their access to these types of services. To the same minister: why are you choosing to cut funding in these areas that will directly impact Albertans' health and well-being?

Ms Hoffman: Well, once again, Mr. Speaker, the member opposite is dreaming in technicolour. We have a 4.3 per cent increase to that line item. It's important to us that that goes towards patients and ensuring that they can continue to access important services. We're proud that we've worked to reach an agreement, a collaborative agreement, at 4.3 per cent. Under the watch of that member's now leader, the former Health minister, we saw 12 per cent increases to that finance line item. That's irresponsible. That's not in the best interests of Albertans. Conservatives let things balloon, and then they pushed deep, drastic cuts, saying that they had to. On this side of the House we work with people to develop sustainable, reliable front-line care.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Business Link Support for Immigrant Entrepreneurs

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many new Canadians find that they face barriers in finding employment, so they opt to open their own businesses, but when they do, they often face challenges of language and culture in trying to navigate our systems. Business Link received funding in the past, but the previous government chose not to renew it. They received funding to develop and operate pilot programs to support immigrant entrepreneurs. One of these focused on creating multilingual guidebooks that offered plain-language information on starting a business, marketing, financing, and business planning. To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: has your ministry given any thought to working with Business Link to update and make these documents available again?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's small businesses have a bigger impact per capita than any business anywhere in Canada. In addition to providing hundreds of thousands of jobs to Albertans, they inject about a hundred billion dollars into our hometowns and our communities. Now, we are collaborating with Business Link to provide in-person access to business advisors along with phone, e-mail, and webinar materials. I can tell you that we're always looking at ways to support our business community even more, and we want to ensure that new Canadians also have those supports.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that studies show that entrepreneurs that receive mentorship from those with more experience have greater success in attracting investment and expanding their businesses, increasing revenue and their employment impact, and given that Business Link also pioneered a successful pilot program which provided culturally sensitive mentorship for new Canadian entrepreneurs, to the same minister: has your ministry considered investing and providing those kinds of supports?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I can tell the member – and I appreciate and thank him for his question – is that we doubled funding for a very popular tech development program through Alberta Innovates. There are a number of supports that we've rolled out to support businesses, including partnering with BDC, Business Development Bank of Canada, so that entrepreneurs can launch more start-ups and innovate and expand. What I can tell you is that the previous government ended the funding specific to the Business Link program that the member is talking about. Our government brought back the self-employment training for entrepreneurs that the previous government cut and that the current opposition would cut.

I can tell you that I commit to working with new Canadians as entrepreneurs.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Second supplemental.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. I do appreciate the work that you've done. Given that after I met with representatives from Business Link and brought them to meet with your chief of staff, they submitted a proposal to your office to revive both of these programs that I mentioned at a cost of only $150,000 per year, to the minister: are you willing to consider providing just this small investment to help new Canadian entrepreneurs truly thrive?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for his advocacy on this. I can tell you that we know that the dollar amount may be fairly small, but it has a significant impact on businesses and helps them grow and become more successful. I can tell you and all members of the House that the proposal the member is referring to I find very interesting and very promising. I will be looking at it and going through it to see if there is an opportunity for our government to continue to support entrepreneurs, especially new Canadians, who, we know, are very, very innovative and want to get their businesses up off the ground.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last month Alberta Health pulled out its metaphorical mortar and pestle and proceeded to grind the pharmacy profession. Now, while this NDP government likes to brag about how it has preserved front-line public services, when it comes to community pharmacies, that boast rings hollow.

The recent pharmacy funding agreement includes cuts that will jeopardize the health of vulnerable inner-city residents, that were provided through the award-winning ACE, adherence and community engagement, program. To the minister: why have you approved a framework that will harm some of Alberta's most vulnerable citizens?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I certainly want to say that our government values the role that pharmacists play in supporting the health care needs of Albertans, and under this new framework Alberta pharmacists continue to be compensated at a rate higher than their counterparts in other provinces. We think that that's appropriate, and we think that the Alberta Pharmacists' Association stepped up to the plate, worked with us to find a way that we can see that 4.3 per cent increase go towards volume increases in the number of medications as well as population increases. That's where the increase should be going. We think that it's important to look at other jurisdictions and find ways to be efficient, and that's exactly what we did.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that every decision made by government must be analyzed in terms of the full economic impact and given that Alberta Health's many highly capable bureaucrats must have projected and provided this minister an increased overall health care cost estimate caused by withdrawing these critical pharmacy services, to the minister: what was that number? How much will health care costs increase because of the cuts to front-line services caused by the new pharmacy funding framework?

Ms Hoffman: Again, I want to thank pharmacists for working with us to keep costs down and making sure that they're sustainable for future generations. The association recognizes the current fiscal environment in our province, the need to reduce the growth of the health care system spending, and that the 12 per cent increase, or in excess of that, that was reached under that member's former government was not fair or reasonable or sustainable in the long term. So what we did was that we sat down and said that we want to make costs more affordable for Albertans, which includes reducing the number of times they need to fill prescriptions so that over a thousand seniors in Alberta are going to be saving more than $100 in their own pockets. That's because of work that this side of the table did.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the increase in overall pharmaceutical cost has much more to do with the increased cost of the drugs and not the druggists and given that award-winning programs like ACE cut ER visits by an estimated 60 per cent, saving countless dollars more than the small amount that this program costs, to the minister. I want to believe that you had no idea that the new framework would have this effect. Will you agree to meet with the ACE program pharmacists to discuss restoring funding to this vital community health program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My Health officials have already met with ACE, and we will continue to work with them. We are, of course, keen to make sure that we find ways to continue to grow opportunities for people to receive care as close to home as possible.

Dr. Starke: You've given the same talking points for years.

Ms Hoffman: I respect the question. I wish the member asking it would respect the fact that I'm answering it appropriately and saying that we're going to continue to work with them and give them an opportunity to work with us. I will treat you with respect and would like you to do the same for all Albertans, including those who are accessing these services, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, this government's wild spending ways have resulted in the province racking up a debt topping $55 billion this year, ballooning to a staggering $96 billion by 2023. The cost of servicing the debt: $3.7 billion a year. This year alone we will spend $1.9 billion on interest. That is $1.9 billion that could have been used for front-line services or left with families and their communities. Minister, when there are so many more important priorities, why is your government jeopardizing the future of our children in favour of lining the pockets of bankers and Bay Street?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, it was mentioned earlier that Alberta has the best balance sheet and the lowest net debt to GDP ratio in the country, and it will be that way when we balance in 2023. Just at the end of November I stood up and said that our deficit was being reduced by $1.4 billion because of the hard work of this side in finding agreements that are better for our labour partners and us, finding people who want to continue to serve Albertans in the best possible way. We're doing it.

Mr. Barnes: Tripling that net debt ratio in just three years is nothing to be proud of.

Given that the minister is a prolific spender and is jeopardizing the future prosperity of the next generation and risking today's economy and given that this government's tax increases have actually produced less revenue and that our minister and our kids are now at the beck and call of bankers and bondholders and given that this government's borrowing not only crowds out private-sector investment in jobs but risks Alberta's future, Minister, when will you stop the reckless spending, stop handicapping our job creators, and focus on balancing the budget?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, I'm incredibly proud of the work of this side of the Chamber. That side I'm not so sure about. I can tell you that we're carefully and prudently reducing the deficits. We're making sure that the reckless spending that was left for us by that side comes down. We have cut salaries and eliminated bonuses for the highest paid executives of agencies, boards, and commissions. That side wants to give a $700 million tax break to the richest 1 per cent in this province. We're not going to let that happen. We're going to continue to prudently bring down . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that this government is on track to leave nothing but a legacy of debt, crippling interest payments, and lost opportunity, it is no wonder that Albertans are losing confidence and Alberta families are worried about our future. Given that the greatest legacy one can leave Alberta is to leave it better than they found it and given that the province's books are a catastrophic failure, turning $13 billion of debt to $55 billion, headed to $96 billion before you balance, Minister, aren't you ashamed of your legacy?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, what that side refuses to look at is where the economy is now. Jobs are up in this province, 90,000 mostly in the private sector, as a result of the work of this side. Growth is up, and GDP growth is up by 4.5 per cent. I don't hear that from that side. They're wishing Alberta fails. We're going to continue to stand up for Albertans. Manufacturing is up, restaurant receipts are up, wages are up. I heard from the Leader of the Opposition that wages are abysmal in this province. We're leading the nation in average weekly wages, and we're going to continue to do so because of the work of this side.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, over the past week I listened to and spoke with many Albertans, and I can tell you that they are not happy with this NDP budget. In their platform the NDP promised a $25 million surplus by this year. Instead, their five-year plan is to increase our province's debt by a massive 638 per cent of what it was when they formed government. This is shameful. We're talking $96 billion in debt, and this government is proud of themselves. Minister, Albertans want to know how far in debt this province will go before you finally see it as an intolerable level of debt.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Budget 2018 has many things this province continues to need, and it's an economic recovery we're supporting to make sure it lasts. You know, if that side had its way, we would not have 20 new school projects scheduled to start this year. We would not have the 4,900 construction jobs that come with those school projects. We would have hospital and care facilities that would not get built, and our seniors and others would go wanting. We are doing things like the Calgary green line, the valley line LRT, the Edmonton and Calgary ring roads, and the Peace bridge . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that it's still years from now when this government finally plans to balance a budget and that that means spending $3.7 million a year in interest payments to bondholders and foreign bankers – that's more than the budgets of most government departments, and how many schools is that? – and given that this NDP government's budget does not show an actual plan on how to pay down the debt, Minister, do you have any plan in place to start paying down the debt that will be saddling our children, my children, who deserve at least the same or better opportunities to succeed in life?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we do have a Path to Balance section in this budget, and by 2023 we can do that without firing thousands of people that that side wants to put out of work. We're going to continue to clean up the Conservative waste and carefully find spending control. That side: some years it was 10 per cent operational spending year over year. We are working to get off the resource revenue roller coaster. That side wants to keep us on that by buying tickets on that roller coaster. You know, we have economic recovery going on in this province; that side does not want it to happen.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that this government wants to get off the resource roller coaster, yet their budget depends on the pipeline actually getting built – Albertans deserve a government who can properly manage the province's finances for years to come, and this NDP government is certainly not that – and given that this government's policy choices have made things worse for Albertans and our economy, Minister, we surely hope that the Trans Mountain pipeline will get built, but if it doesn't, how much more debt are you going to put our province into? Surely, please tell me you've considered this.

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, you know, our path to balance carefully considers everything, and it also considers bringing in 24-hour health care in Airdrie. It also considers new schools in the Airdrie region. We're doing that because we don't want to leave Albertans without health care and education, something that that side doesn't really seem to care about because they want to keep budgets at zero per cent, which is a cut. Those things wouldn't happen in Airdrie.

Economic Competitiveness

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, I've just spent the last 10 days diligently consulting my constituents. The message I heard over and over again is that Albertans aren't buying the minister's unbelievable up, up, up, and they are done, done, done with your burdensome and irresponsible debt, and they want you out, out, out along with your job-killing carbon tax. To the Finance minister: can you come clean and admit to Albertans that your debt-loading, tax-burdening policies and fiscal mismanagement are making us and them uncompetitive in the global economy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I disagree with the premise of the member's question, that Alberta is uncompetitive. We've seen some historic investments in cities like Lethbridge with Cavendish Farms. We've attracted Amazon to the province. Google opened their first-ever AI lab outside of Europe here in Edmonton. There are an incredible number of great examples of companies that are moving here, relocating to Alberta. They know that we are the lowest taxed jurisdiction in Canada. We have the youngest, smartest workforce. We have incredible postsecondary institutions and a number of strengths to build on. Despite what the opposition says, I'm very proud of our province and the businesses that are here.

2:20

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, that bucket has too many holes in it, 34.8 billion, in fact.

Given that roughly 300,000 barrels of environmentally insensitive, foreign-conflict crude, exempt, no less, from upstream and downstream emissions, are coming into Canada per day and given the abject failure of your social licence in winning over hypocritical eco activists and politicians and even your friends and allies in B.C. and central Canada, to the Finance minister: when will you admit that your misguided social licence croquet and all economic pain, no environmental gain carbon tax has failed Albertans miserably?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think the member is confusing our government with his own leader, who spent 20 years in Ottawa and got zero pipelines to tidewater. I'm very proud of the work that our Premier and our government have done. We've introduced a very strong climate leadership plan, that has led to the approval of two pipelines, and we've heard the Premier say over and over again that our government will do whatever it takes to get the Trans Mountain pipeline built. Guess what, Mr. Speaker? Mark my words.

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, we'll leave the confusion and insults to the other side.

Given that the Premier and her environment minister's social licence in concert with the tepid support from their federal Liberal friends has failed in both influencing their B.C. NDP comrades and in aggressively upholding the Constitution and given that Albertans were promised that the route to carbon salvation was social licence and the highly punitive and now de facto provincial sales tax, to the Premier: how will you explain to Albertans, Alberta businesses, their laid off employees, seniors and nonprofits that they have taken an economic hit for nought and that your costly ideological experiment has failed?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, our government has done more in three years than the previous government did in 44. Line 3 is under construction, Keystone XL has its commercial arrangements done so they can proceed, and Trans Mountain is progressing. We're battling a thousand right now in the courts, with 14 out of 14 court cases that we've won. We're going to continue to fight for that pipeline, and as my colleague said, mark our words. That pipeline will be built.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

School Construction

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After decades of neglect by the previous government, our government promised to actually build more than 200 badly needed schools across the province. The previous government announced the number of schools election after election but had no plan to build them. Our government did fund them and is building them. To the Minister of Education: how many of these 200 schools have been completed?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. Certainly, I think it's incumbent upon our society in general and even during an economic downturn to ensure that we build the infrastructure for children here in the province of Alberta, so we've done so since 2015. We have completed 144 projects across the province and certainly made sure that we had the financing in place to get the job done. For so long the previous government would put up a sign that said: future school. The sign would fall down: no school. We've built 144 so far.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Budget 2018 announced 20 schools, including Chester Ronning school in Camrose, and we had several hundred parents out for that announcement last week. To the same minister: how are these projects supporting communities and school boards across the province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, it was great to be in Camrose last week for the announcement of the new Chester Ronning school. We can see that it's not just going to be a school with walls and bricks and mortar, but the spirit of the community was so evident. A lot of people came there. They went to school there themselves. Their kids were going there. They taught for a career there. Now right across the field there'll be a brand new, beautiful school, not just for learning but as a community centre and as a source of pride for the city of Camrose.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The new schools announced this year are a step in the right direction, but we realize there is still more work to be done. To the same minister: what plans are in place to ensure that we continue to build much-needed schools across the province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, the job isn't done by any means. We have a lot of catch-up in terms of building new schools, modernizations, and so forth. We have lots of enrolment pressures across the province that we need to address every step of the way. For those schools that perhaps are still on the drawing board or where they don't know what school boards are looking for, make sure that you bring the case forward to us, and we will entertain it. Ultimately, our children's future and their education are paramount to our government and to a prosperous future for all.

Thank you.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past week I spent time door-knocking in my constituency, and I met a senior who had a very clear view of this government's budget. His name? His name was Rick Mercer, and he assures me that he is the original Rick Mercer. This Rick Mercer also had something to rant about. I asked him what he would like me to ask the government on his behalf. He told me: tell them to stop spending money they don't have. So on behalf of Mr. Mercer I ask the Minister of Finance: what do you have to say to him and all other Albertans who are justifiably upset with this budget and your lack of any effort to find any sort of savings anywhere in this government?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to Mr. Mercer through our member over there. You know, we have found savings. In this year, the 2017 budget, $750 million were culled out of the budget, and we are not going to spend those monies again. I asked for discretionary spending back from all of the departments. I reduced the salaries of agencies, boards, and commissions' executives. I froze salaries of government employees that are management and non-union, and we're looking for practical agreements with our labour partners.

Mr. Clark: Well, Mr. Speaker, this budget is incredibly short on details, and the details we do have are based on some pretty optimistic assumptions. Given that no less an authority than noted economist Trevor Tombe said that the Alberta Party shadow budget was far more credible than this government's own plan to balance, my question, again, to the Minister of Finance: why should we believe you, and what happens if you're wrong?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, you know, there are some additional validators that I'd like to just bring up for a second. Scotiabank, for instance, says that the deficit elimination detail and Alberta's efforts to slow its net financial debt accumulated are both encouraging. On the capital side, Trina Hurdman from the Calgary board of education says, "We are grateful for this funding to create these new learning spaces." Additionally, on the operation programs, Scott Nye of BioWare says: the budget levels the playing field for us. There are many validators here.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Clark: Well, Mr. Speaker, look, while I sincerely hope the Kinder Morgan pipeline is built, there is absolutely no question that it is at risk, just like every single one of the assumptions this government has made on its plan to balance. Given that Enbridge's line 3 is not a sure thing and given that oil prices are nowhere near guaranteed to meet your estimates and given that corporate and personal taxes are not likely to grow 40 per cent and given that this budget relies on you actually sticking to your budget plans, unlike you have done through every budget so far – that is a lot of if – to the Minister of Finance: have you completed a detailed analysis of what happens if any one or, heaven forbid, all ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: The member opposite keeps hoping that Alberta will fail. On this side of the House we are using the results that have proven to be effective. The Minister of Energy has toured line 3; it is well under construction. She's right that the approvals are all in line for things going south, and going west, they're also in line, Mr. Speaker. We're going to use the best evidence we have to make the best decisions. The evidence all shows that Alberta wins a thousand per cent of the time on Kinder Morgan. We're going to win a thousand per cent of the time on getting that line built, and that's why it's in our budget. On this side of the House we use evidence and we bet on Alberta, and you can bet that we're going to get that pipeline built. [interjection]

The Speaker: Hon. member. You can almost hear the Easter Bunny sneaking around.

Electric Power Prices

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, this morning my office called the Alberta electricity Market Surveillance Administrator. Will the Minister of Energy confirm or deny that there is an active investigation by the Market Surveillance Administrator against the NDP government due to the government's manipulation of electricity prices?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. member across the way understands that when there's an active investigation going on in any matter, it would be inappropriate for us to comment.

Mr. Panda: Given, Mr. Speaker, that the Independent Power Producers Society of Alberta filed a complaint against the Balancing Pool in August because it believes that the Balancing Pool is in contravention of the Electric Utilities Act and is affecting the efficiency of the Alberta electricity market, can the minister confirm or deny that the NDP government is ordering the Balancing Pool to manipulate electricity prices?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I've said many times that we're focused on the priorities of regular Albertans, like ensuring that electricity bills are affordable. That's why back almost a year ago we capped energy bills, to protect families and businesses from any spikes, something that we experienced for many years previous. We told Albertans that we have their backs. Since electricity prices were deregulated under the Conservatives, Albertans have been exposed to a price roller coaster, and that's something that we're working on.

Mr. Panda: Given that the NDP is planning for higher electricity prices with this $74 million subsidy this year due to generating stations being mothballed and given that the Market Surveillance Administrator agrees with the industrial power consumers association that this action runs against the public interest, why does the NDP insist on playing a shell game with the ratepayers and taxpayers, who are the same people, about the real cost of the changes to the electricity system?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the Conservatives all along have had the wrong priorities. They'd like to take us back to tax cuts for the rich and insider deals that cost Albertans hundreds of millions of dollars. The Conservatives again want to cut taxes; we want to make life affordable for everyday Albertans. They want to keep doing and standing up for insider deals. We've capped electricity energy bills to protect Albertans from those price spikes. Their deregulation policies caused the roller coaster that I mentioned. We're working on that to make bills stable, more affordable, and more predictable.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Long-term Care Beds

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Increasing numbers of seniors just waiting for long-term care now fill 18 per cent of acute-care hospital beds. For Q1 AHS reported 765 acute-care beds held seniors waiting 51-plus days for long-term care spaces. Such mismanagement means that acute-care beds are unavailable for those who really need them. When is this government going to free up hospital beds and save money by providing affordable alternate level of care options for seniors?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud of the fact that on this side of the House we're working to make sure that we have 2,000 public long-term care spaces available to the people of this province, ensuring that Albertans can make sure that they can access the care they need when they need it. In terms of freeing up hospital spaces, they talked last week about how great the '90s were. Well, I remember the '90s. You freed up a lot of spaces by blowing up hospitals. I don't think that that was the right move by the opposition, what they're proposing then. On this side of the House we're going to continue to make sure that we build appropriate supports for people throughout our province and take care of them instead of moving for drastic cuts that would result in things like blowing up hospitals.

Mr. Orr: Blowing up anything is inappropriate language.

Since AHS is already developing an enhancing care in the community plan that will emphasize person-centred care and address gaps and opportunities in residential continuing care and given that small neighbourhood personal care homes already exist and fit this model perfectly, when will this government deliver on the plan for accommodation and alternate level of care delivery by local and neighbourhood seniors' homes?

Ms Hoffman: Well, what was wrong, Mr. Speaker, was actually blowing up a hospital. If you don't remember, it was the Calgary General, and there are definitely plumes of smoke videos that you can see. That was what was wrong.

On this side of the House we've protected important front-line acute-care services, and we're continuing to expand other care in other parts of the community, including a significant increase to home care to keep people home, safer in their own environments, and of course continuing to build much-needed long-term care and continuing care spaces, including in the former Leader of the Official Opposition's riding of Fort McMurray-Conklin. We think it's important for people to have opportunities to age in the communities they helped build.

Mr. Orr: Given that a constituent's father does not need 24-hour nursing but an alternate level of dementia care and given that D., a senior herself on limited income, spends a lot of money and time, an hour and a half driving several times a week, just to help care for her father because there are no suitable facilities locally, will this government incorporate small neighbourhood personal care homes into the plan for enhanced care in the community?

Ms Hoffman: Well, we certainly are continuing to build a number of dementia care spaces, including the one that will be opening soon in Red Deer county, not far off the highway, just to the west, as well as ones that we're opening in Bridgeland and other parts throughout the province. We think it's important to have the care that people need where and when they need it. That's why we've expanded home-care services, that's why we're expanding opportunities for long-term care and dementia care supports, as were mentioned, and that's why on this side of the House we presented a budget that will do that. We'll see what the members opposite do with that budget. I have a feeling that they're going to say one thing today and vote another thing tomorrow.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Deerfoot Trail

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The good people of Calgary-Hays and one-third of Albertans that live in Calgary depend on Deerfoot Trail to go to work and to shop and to go home after working and shopping every day. I appreciate – I do – that the Transportation minister has been working with the city of Calgary on a study to determine which improvements are needed for Deerfoot Trail. To the Transportation minister. The study, I believe, is due to be completed in 2019. Is it complete now, or at what date in the future – and I appreciate that it's not 2019 yet – can Calgarians expect to see that final report?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I will undertake on behalf of the member and his question to find out exactly when that study is going to be ready, and I'll let him and the House know. But I want to assure him and all Calgarians that we are certainly taking a serious look at the Deerfoot. We understand the congestion that's there, and we understand that it needs work, but we need to make sure that we have all of the information so that we can make good decisions on behalf of Calgarians and his constituents.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the short-term interim report includes five recommendations, which are out now, and given that there is reported to be no funding at this date to build these five improvements and will not be at least until the land needed to do so is identified and costed out, again to the Transportation minister: on what day do you plan to complete this costing out so that you can then start to decide which improvements are a priority for the government and which ones will have to wait? What date, please?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. It may come as no surprise to the hon. member that we haven't calculated the precise date on which we will have this information, but I will make sure that when we meet again, I have that information for the hon. member, and I can provide it to him and to the House.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm grateful for the first two answers.

Another little piece of information that the good folks of Calgary-Hays and the rest of Calgary would like is: given that there has been a plan to improve the Anderson Road to Southland Drive portion of Deerfoot Trail for some time now and given that that intersection is perhaps the least expensive to improve and will probably or possibly provide one of the largest benefits per dollar to Calgary commuters as a result of that improvement, can the minister commit to giving that intersection extra attention when he considers the future plans for Deerfoot Trail since it . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much for the question. I'm not quite sure how he defines extra attention. Does he mean, you know, just reading more carefully, or does he mean more money? But in seriousness, Mr. Speaker, it's important that when we have intersections between city roads, as he knows as a former minister, and provincial highways, it is a joint effort and that conversations need to take place with the city of Calgary and that we need to determine their priorities as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Agricultural Society Funding

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is home to almost 300 agricultural societies, being supported by more than 65,000 volunteers. Now, last year we heard loud and clear from ag societies, including in places like Lamont, Mundare, Bruderheim, that they didn't know when their government grants were coming or how much they would be for. Of course, part of this is due to the fact that previous governments never ensured that there was stable, predictable funding. To the minister of agriculture: how are you ensuring that ag societies have that stable, predictable funding into the future?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Our government has supported the good work that agricultural societies do. While rural Alberta went through one of its most protracted recessions in years, we supported these community organizations. We know that through the hard work of their volunteers, they help to make rural Alberta the rich place that it is. Recognizing this, we are pleased to fund them through the agricultural societies program.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you. Given that ag societies, of course, provide support for critical infrastructure like curling rinks and hockey rinks and that, of course, it creates the support also for this committed group of great volunteers, can the same minister let us know how this longer term funding will allow societies to plan for the future so that they can do that good work and provide great places for people to live in rural Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I was pleased to announce during the recent RMA annual meeting that our government will be providing three years of stable, predictable funding to ag societies. This is a departure from previous years of funding, where ag societies would have to wait to see what they received. For many smaller ag societies this waiting can be a hindrance to sustainable planning. This government values the hard work of our nonprofit organizations, and we do not believe in reckless cuts that would leave them vulnerable.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that agricultural societies provide support for things like Alberta Open Farm Days, local food, and farm safety education, can we also find out from the minister how else you can support the sport and cultural activities that are also provided by agricultural societies in our communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Our ag societies are responsible for a wide variety of programming in their communities, from after school activities like skating and baseball to large events that bring neighbours together to celebrate rural Alberta's heritage. These activities are not only fun but help maintain the overall strength and welfare of rural communities. As mentioned previously, we as a government believe in policies and programs that put communities and families first.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Support for Immigrants

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Immigrants: they get the job done. That's a sentiment from The Hamilton Mixtape and one that I absolutely know to be true. In my time as an MLA it's been my honour to meet, connect, and work with so many communities of people who've come from around the world to build their lives here, just as my father and my mother's family did. They've helped make our province what it is today, and they'll be a driving force in shaping its future.

That's why I've been proud to join them in celebrating so many important moments for their communities at dozens of events with the African and Caribbean communities, celebrations for the Lunar New Year, Filipino and Greek independence days, Vaisakhi parades, Ramadan feasts, oplatek, Hanukkah, and many more. That's why I've been proud to stand by, support, and recognize the many organizations serving and supporting new Canadians in my constituency like Action for Healthy Communities, CANAVUA, the Somali Canadian Women and Children Association, the Africa Centre, OSCAR, IFSSA, SCERDO, the Fukienese Association of Alberta, the diversity centre, and the race and economic equality centre, to name only a few.

I'm also proud, Mr. Speaker, that our government has taken real action to support these communities. We've supported and multiplied their work by providing stable, predictable funding for public services, restoring STEP, and increasing funding for FCSS; funded 40 daycare spaces at the Africa Centre to support new Canadian families at $25 per day; committed to building a permanent home for l'école À la Découverte, a francophone school that serves mainly new Canadian families; worked to improve diversity and representation on agencies, boards, and commissions; provided funding to support training and mentorship for new Canadian women to become community and political leaders. I've been personally advocating to secure funding to restore Business Link's immigrant entrepreneur support programs, which, though successful, were shuttered by the previous government.

Our commitment to Alberta's cultural communities goes beyond simply showing up to take a photo. We're taking concrete action to support, benefit, and empower them as residents of Alberta and members of their communities so that we can all work together to make life better for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Rural Crime Prevention

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The verdict is in. This NDP government does not (a) recognize a crisis when it's occurring and (b) care to address it in a timely or meaningful manner. That's likely why they try to pretend everything is just fine until they can no longer ignore it.

Fentanyl was the first crisis and a deadly one. The NDP were told plenty of times that they needed to deal with it before it got out of control. Its first reaction was to ignore it. Then too many people were dying, so suddenly they reacted. What did they do? They distributed naloxone kits to pharmacies because the NDP had no clue how to help an addict.

Their initial reaction to the opioid crisis was purely reactionary, and now so is their response to rural crime. Mr. Speaker, this crisis did not creep up. There were plenty of stats that confirmed this. If the NDP members were in touch with rural Alberta, they would have known about it. But even when rural residents flooded into this Chamber last fall to plead for government action, the benches on that side were silent. So the epidemic raged on, and it grew.

Then three weeks ago we had a superficial announcement that was going to fix this crisis: 39 officers, which we now know are simply going to be posts from already understaffed detachments, and 10 Crown prosecutors, who don't even come close to replacing the 20 who have recently left. That is not just reactionary, Mr. Speaker; it is smoke and mirrors. Citizens of rural Alberta no longer feel safe in their homes, and this is unacceptable. Public safety and security should be first and foremost on the mind of any government.

Mr. Speaker, our UCP caucus has brought this issue to the forefront for one reason. We want to ensure rural residents can once again sleep easily at night, and if this NDP government will not do it, then we will.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. S. Anderson: No. I have a bill.

The Speaker: Municipal Affairs. Sorry.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that the Minister of Finance and I look very similar. I know it's tough sometimes. I'm a little younger though.

Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2018

Mr. S. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, it's an honour to rise to table for first reading Bill 8, the Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2018.

In the past 10 years Alberta has seen an increasing number of severe natural disasters, which brought significant impacts on personal lives and property. Unfortunately, we expect this trend to continue, and we all need to be better prepared for these types of devastating disasters.

In the face of these challenges Albertans have consistently pulled together to respond. Our municipalities have shown incredible leadership, and our first responders have demonstrated expertise and bravery. We have learned from each of these disasters and recognized that there are changes to our legislation we can make to ensure we are all prepared for the disasters we will continue to face.

Mr. Speaker, I am tabling this bill today so that hon. members and stakeholders will have a chance to review the legislation. My ministry will be seeking feedback from municipalities, law enforcement agencies, first responders, First Nations, and Métis over the next few months on the bill and on development of a municipal regulation. The intent is to hold debate on this bill until we return to the Legislature in the fall session with any amendments needed to reflect this input and to debate the bill.

Our government is committed to making Albertans' lives better. Bill 8 will result in a safer, more prepared and resilient Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today on behalf of the Leader of the Opposition. The first tabling is in regard to a document he referred to in his speech this morning, which is the NDP's 2015 campaign document, which clearly shows that there was no carbon tax in it as well as that at this time we would be at a $25 million surplus, not a $9 billion deficit.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is another document that the Leader of the Opposition referred to this morning in his speech, which was a Globe and Mail article from November 24, 2015, in which the Premier was quoted as saying that none of the carbon tax would be used for general revenue to pay down debt, which we now know is where the carbon tax went.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of the Automobile Insurance Rate Board's 2017 annual report for the year ended December 31, 2017.

The 2017 annual report of the Automobile Insurance Rate Board was prepared under the board's direction and must be tabled in accordance with the Insurance Act, Mr. Speaker. As an independent body the rate board regulates rating programs of automobile insurers doing business in Alberta, with the goal of ensuring that insurance for automobiles is fair, accessible, and affordable to Albertans. The annual report provides a concise description of the rate board, its roles and responsibilities, its accomplishments for the year, and five years of statistics.

This is the third full year that the rate board has operated under the Enhancing Consumer Protection in Auto Insurance Act, which came into force July 2014. This legislation expanded the rate board's responsibility from the regulation of basic automobile insurance coverage to include the regulation of additional automobile insurance coverage and the provision of consumer education.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any other tablings?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I rise to table two news stories. The first story is from MarketWatch, that indicates the electric car company Tesla is just four months away from bankruptcy. The second story is from Zero Hedge, showing that bonds for Tesla are now rated riskier than investing in Ukraine.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have one tabling this afternoon. I rise to table five copies of Perspectives on Climate Change Action in Canada: A Collaborative Report from Auditors General, March 2018.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Acting Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Gray, Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal, pursuant to the Land Surveyors Act the Alberta Land Surveyors' Association report of proceedings of the 108th annual general meeting, April 20 and 22, 2017, and proceedings of a special general meeting, September 27, 2017.

On behalf of the hon. Ms Hoffman, Deputy Premier and Minister of Health, pursuant to Standing Order 53(2), a letter, undated, from the hon. Ms Hoffman, Deputy Premier and Minister of Health, to Mr. Cyr, chair, Standing Committee on Public Accounts, responding to the report respecting Better Healthcare for Albertans, a report by the office of the Auditor General of Alberta, May 2017, 29th Legislature, Third Session, October 2017.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the daily Routine is now concluded. Pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) the House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 1:30.

The legislative policy committees will convene this afternoon and tomorrow morning for consideration of the main estimates. This afternoon Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates for Indigenous Relations in the Parkland Room, and Families and Communities will consider the estimates for Justice and Solicitor General in the Rocky Mountain Room. Tomorrow morning Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates for Treasury Board and Finance in the Rocky Mountain Room, and Families and Communities will consider the estimates for Seniors and Housing in the Parkland Room.

The House stands adjourned.

[The Assembly adjourned at 2:53 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b)]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Chair: Good afternoon.

Let us each reflect. Let us each work together to create a province where we produce food in a world where many walk in hunger, for hope in a world where many walk in fear, and for friends in a world where many walk alone.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's really my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the students, 49 in the public gallery and 47 in the members' gallery, from Simons Valley school in Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill. I'd like them to rise, and I'd also like to read out the teachers and chaperones that are here today with them: Andrew Cull, Laurie Reeve, Colleen Nabata, Charlene Mudry, Vanessa Blyth, Charlene Buenting, Michelle Kenney, Jana Blake, Maria Pullen, Jenna Watts, Angela Shaw, Zoey Jachdeva, and Chad Watts. I've had the pleasure of visiting the school on a number of occasions. They always have lots of really great questions about the Legislature. I'd like us all to extend the warm welcome to our guests.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other school groups?

Seeing and hearing none, the Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand and introduce to you and through you three active members of the Edmonton-Mill Woods constituency: Bhavna Ashta, Yogesh Ashta, and Yash Sharma. Mr. Sharma is well known for his strong community work within my constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods and is a local business owner.

I'd also like to introduce Manjula Sachdev, who is the cousin of Mr. Sharma and is visiting from India. I wish you all a wonderful and, hopefully, warmer visit in our beautiful province of Alberta. Thank you for coming to visit us in the Legislature Building. I'd like to ask all my guests to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Ms Alison Poste. Alison is an emergency response professional who takes a very keen interest in yesterday's introduction of Bill 8. She's also very active in her community and very committed to the democratic process, having run in the last fall's municipal election in ward 4, as well as being co-organizer of the Edmonton's women's march. If I could ask Alison to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce the parents of one of my political staff, Pam and Rob Hoben. Pam and Rob are visiting Alberta all the way from Grand Bay-Westfield, New Brunswick. Pam is a nurse at the Saint John regional hospital, and Rob is retired. They're here visiting their son John, who works in my office as one of my ministerial assistants. During their visit they'll be travelling all over our beautiful province. Please join me in welcoming them to Alberta by giving them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mrs. Schreiner: Mr. Speaker, I have two sets of introductions this afternoon. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly several guests today. Here representing the Central Alberta Economic Partnership are Executive Director Kim Worthington; Kim's son and chief of staff, Alex Worthington; and CAEP's administrative assistant, Vanessa Mariani. CAEP, now celebrating its 20th anniversary, supports regional collaboration and was a pilot project from which the regional economic development alliance grew. REDA serves in empowering member communities to advance sustainable regional economic development at the local level. They do important work all across our province. I ask my guests to now rise and receive the traditional welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Please continue.

Mrs. Schreiner: Mr. Speaker, I wish to introduce my sister Cindy Bourk. Cindy has been my confidante and best friend and one of my greatest supporters. There is no greater strength than that of your family, and I'm so thankful and deeply indebted to her for her ability to always be in my corner. I ask the House to please give Cindy the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Dawson Rowe and Tania Denroche-Rowe. Dawson is a high school student from Airdrie who just completed the Ride of the Mustang, raising money for kids with cancer in and around our area. He is a staunch Conservative, here to witness the proceedings of the House today. Please greet them with the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the House the incoming student executives here on behalf of the Council of Alberta University Students. I had the pleasure of meeting with them yesterday to talk about various issues from affordability to student employment and mental health supports on campus. They're seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask them to rise when I call their name: Mount Royal University President-elect Andrew Nguyen and Vice-president external elect Amanda LeBlanc; from the University of Lethbridge Students' Union, President-elect Laura Bryan and VP external elect Victoria Schindler; from the University of Calgary Students' Union, President-elect Sagar Grewal; and finally, from the Student's Association of MacEwan University, VP external elect Andrew Bieman. Let's give them the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Jenny Nguyen. She's a fourth-year accounting student at the U of A participating in the tri-level internship, where she interns with all three orders of government: federal, provincial, and municipal. She's completing her provincial internship with Economic Development and Trade's finance and admin branch. She plans to pursue her master's in accounting upon completion of her degree and expressed appreciation and enjoyment for her opportunity with my ministry. I'd ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you two incredibly strong women from the Kensington clinic in Calgary. I ask that they rise as I introduce them. They are Celia Posyniak and Jennifer Berard. Kensington clinic focuses on providing reproductive health services to women, trans, and nonbinary folks, including essential abortion services. Celia, the executive director, started that clinic almost 30 years ago and has dedicated her life to ensuring that women have choice and access to the medical services that they need. Jennifer is an administrative assistant, and her work focuses on ensuring that women feel supported and safe. Please join me, colleagues, in showing our support and gratitude and welcoming our guests.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce a group of advocates with the Canadian Cancer Society Alberta-Northwest Territories division. April is Daffodil Month, a time to focus attention on advocacy, life-saving research, education, and support for people living with cancer and to honour those who have passed away by wearing a daffodil. The daffodil has come to be seen as a symbol of strength and courage in the fight against cancer. The support and compassion of dedicated volunteers like our guests means so much not only to those affected by cancer but also their families and friends. I'd ask that Chelsea Draeger, executive director, along with Alexa, Haley, Charlotte, Maya, Palwasha, Chu Yang, Lorelee, Rhianna, Christine, Oksana, Pamela, Angeline, and Dr. Mercer please rise and receive the warm welcome and appreciation of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Grande Prairie Regional Agricultural and Exhibition Society

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In February Evergreen Park once again hosted the Growing the North Conference, the largest economic development convention in a region that also takes in northeastern B.C. The park is able to host the Growing the North because it is home to the Entrec Centre, the biggest full-featured exhibition complex north of Edmonton. The centre is just one of many amenities at Evergreen Park, which also offers banquet halls, concert venues, agriculture and energy sector services, agriculture pavilions, equestrian amenities, a fairground, a casino, and one of the best race tracks in the country.

Mr. Speaker, many of my colleagues may be surprised to learn that this bustling cultural, recreational, and business hub is operated by our local agricultural society. The Grande Prairie Regional Agricultural and Exhibition Society was founded in 1910, and that year it held its first farm fair and rodeo. Since then, decades of volunteer boards have evolved Evergreen Park into a world-class venue which attracts half a million visitors a year while still retaining its traditional agricultural and community-based roots. The economic spinoffs to our region are immense, with a 2014 study estimating the park's financial impact at an amazing $43 million a year.

Mr. Speaker, just like the rest of Alberta's 300 agricultural societies, Grande Prairie relies on provincial funding for a firm fiscal foundation from which to launch its operations. The society's only request is that the province continue providing the stable and predictable base funding it has long appreciated, and it will continue to spin it into much greater value for its community, the region, and Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Refugee Rights Day

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. April 4 marks Refugee Rights Day in Canada. This day commemorates the historic 1985 Singh decision, which changed the fate of many refugees seeking asylum.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms protects everyone's right to justice when life, liberty, and security of the person are at stake. This entitles refugee claimants to an oral hearing in accordance with the principles of international law and fundamental justice.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to say that our country is and has long been a destination for refugees fleeing all sorts of injustice. Refugees have come to Canada fleeing religious and racial persecution, revolution, and war from Yugoslavia, Chile, Thailand, Syria, and many, many other countries. In our province wonderful groups like Refugee Alberta help newcomers to our country who land here. Recently Syrians fled their country, and many have settled here with great success, starting businesses, getting involved in the community, and enrolling their children in our schools. This is a record I'm sure all Canadians can be proud of.

However, I'm not so sure when it comes to the record of the leader of the Conservative Party. He tweeted about one refugee's "perfect, unaccented English" as if speaking with an accent is somehow shameful. He stripped refugee claimants' access to life-saving health care, creating an outcry from medical professionals across the country. Taken with concerns surrounding how the member handled the temporary foreign worker program, this is deeply concerning. The member opposite has a history of working to undo our country's great reputation.

Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that all Albertans will take this day to reflect on how we can be more welcoming to those fleeing injustice and how we can work to strengthen our just, caring society.

Thank you.

United Conservative Party

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, in less than a month Albertans from across the province will come to Red Deer to participate in the founding convention of the United Conservative Party of Alberta. While many of the attendees are long-time politicals, there is a steadily growing number of political neophytes. Let's call them Average Albertan.

Since the NDP took power, Average Albertan has seen their income tax increased, their business tax increased, a carbon tax introduced and increased. They have seen red tape and bureaucratic interference increase exponentially, and they just don't feel as optimistic as they once did. Average Albertan is tired of seeing more and more businesses shuttered and their proprietors move across the border, where they're taxed less.

The Alberta advantage isn't what it used to be. Here's what Suncor said in February: we're having to look at Canada quite hard; the cumulative impact of regulation and higher taxation in other jurisdictions is making Canada a more difficult jurisdiction to allocate capital in. Here's what ATB Financial's chief economist said last month: people are making less money, and job prospects are still there, but they're at lower-paying opportunities.

When a guy in a blue pickup arrived in town talking about uniting common-sense and free-market Albertans, average Albertans found themselves more and more interested in what he had to say. Soon enough average Albertans bought a membership, were attending meetings, found themselves elected to their local CA board, and even submitted a couple of policy proposals on reducing red tape and bringing back the Alberta advantage, all of that to say that an unprecedented number of Albertans from all stripes and backgrounds will be gathering in Red Deer from May 4 to 6 and forging a new way forward, one where all Albertans can be successful and included.

We invite all Albertans to get involved, come to Red Deer, and share their ideas on building strong families and communities. Albertans everywhere want Alberta to be a leading partner in a Canada that works, a province that protects the financial future of the next generation, and an economy where all Albertans can succeed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Daffodil Month

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first memory of Daffodil Month with the Canadian Cancer Society was many years ago when as a teenager I volunteered to distribute daffodils to shoppers in the old downtown farmers' market in Edmonton. I knew we were collecting money for a good cause, but I really had no understanding of cancer and its impact. It wasn't until a dearly loved uncle was diagnosed with and finally succumbed to lung cancer that I realized the terrible impact and damage cancer inflicts on people suffering from the disease and those near them. Since that time I've learned more about cancer prevention, treatment, and research and the Canadian Cancer Society.

After my uncle's death I learned that many cancers can be prevented, that early diagnosis can be a lifesaver, and that a diagnosis of cancer need not be a death sentence. The outlook for those diagnosed with cancer has improved because of a number of factors, the most important of which was the establishment of the Canadian Cancer Society in 1935. Over time support for cancer research through the Canadian Cancer Society has grown, and it now supports thousands of researchers through the administration of more than $1 billion in cancer research funding.

Over the past 85 years incredible progress has been made in the fight for life. The Canadian Cancer Society is a national community-based organization whose mission is the eradication of cancer and the enhancement of the quality of life of people living with the disease. Its vision is to create a world where no Canadian fears cancer. This organization has made an immense difference in many Canadians' lives, and their work through supporting research will continue to impact Canadians' lives into the future.

Daffodil Month is a time to remember what can be accomplished when people work together to achieve goals.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Partial Upgrading of Oil Sands Bitumen

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act, is based on the recommendations from the Energy Diversification Advisory Committee to expand Alberta's downstream oil and gas sector. Among them is a plan to increase partial upgrading of oil sands bitumen here in Alberta. Partial upgrading will increase the value of that bitumen being shipped through pipelines like the expanded Trans Mountain pipeline or in 60,000-barrel unit trains leaving from the oil-to-rail terminal near Bruderheim in Alberta's heartland. It's going to help Alberta's bitumen producers to get a better price for their products, and it's going to help Albertans to extract more value from the resources that we own through increased jobs, economic activity, and tax revenues to support important public services like health care and education.

Recently I toured the oil-to-rail terminal at Bruderheim and learned a lot about the potential to massively increase value for Albertans by applying made-in-Alberta technology to bitumen and other heavy oils before being loaded into the Kinder Morgan pipeline or onto unit trains. Partial upgrading will increase the capacity of the pipeline by at least a third and would markedly reduce the need for dilbit. In addition to lowering shipping and refinery costs, partial upgrading would also mitigate some of the environmental concerns that come with dilbit. It would remove insoluble substances in the bitumen such as asphaltenes, which lead to reduced flow in the pipeline and which complicate rail car filling and emptying. The asphaltenes can further be processed into paving material, shingles, and waterproof coatings, among others.

These are just some of the exciting Alberta technologies that the Energy Diversification Act will foster. Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to be part of a government which promotes adding value to our resources here at home and creating good, family-supporting jobs for Albertans while doing everything possible to protect the environment and our future prosperity.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Government Spending

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP MLA for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater said, "We dropped our 2018 budget last week. It's looking pretty balanced." He goes on to say that the NDP budget was "able to curb spending more or less." This is a budget that has seen a 16 per cent increase in spending under this NDP government, has an $8.8 billion deficit in it, and is well on its way to a hundred billion dollars in debt. If this is curbing spending, I'd hate to see what's not. When are the Premier and the NDP ready to take spending seriously?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our budget is focused on supporting families, it is focused on continuing to invest in our health care and our education system, and it's focused on continuing the good work that it has already achieved in terms of stimulating economic growth: over 90,000 jobs just last year, exports up, manufacturing up, retail sales up. These are things that happen when you invest in Albertans rather than making them pay for the mistakes of the past. We will not do that.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, what this budget is focused on is giving bankers money. Debt servicing this year alone will be $1.921 billion, which is more than 19 government departments' total expenditures. Debt servicing between 2018 and 2024 will be $17.63 billion. That could help a lot of families, a lot of constituents of mine and yours. Again, will the Premier stop dodging the question and stand up and tell us: how high? How up, up, up will she go? When will she get spending and debt in control in our province?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One of the things I was very proud about with respect to the budget that we delivered was that we did something that no other government has ever done, which is that we actually mapped out a seven-year plan going forward. No other government has ever provided that much detail. That's in contrast to the Official Opposition, which also, unlike previous Official Oppositions, hasn't bothered to ever introduce a shadow budget or, in fact, describe to Albertans what they would do differently. In fact, we are moving forward with a reasonable, stable, thoughtful path to balance in 2023 while preserving those important services that Albertans rely on and continuing our work . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, proud of the NDP's budget? This NDP government projected that they would be in surplus right now. Now we find out that four years from now they're going to be a hundred billion dollars in debt. I certainly wouldn't be proud of that. The question, then, is this. It's going to be a 646 per cent increase to the debt under this NDP government. Are the Premier and the NDP proud of that?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What, as I said, we are proud of are the 20 new schools that were announced in this year's budget, moving to ensure that our kids are actually learning in safe and modern places; the continued investment in health care; the 1,400 new long-term care spaces; you know, investments in places like the area of the MLA for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, where we're seeing additional investments in health care, which, of course, the member opposite has long asked for. We're very proud . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Second main question.

Carbon Levy and Seniors

Mr. Nixon: Well, I'm glad the Premier brought up Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. We have a seniors' centre inside Sundre, which has been discussed in this place many times, and the Premier's office told those seniors to go fund raise to pay for their carbon tax, told those fixed-income seniors to raise their rates to be able to attend their seniors' centre. I have repeatedly asked her: is it the position of your government that seniors fund raise to pay for your carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is the position of our government that we have invested in seniors' services quite significantly over the course of the last two and three years. We've moved forward on our election commitment to open more long-term care beds. We have provided grants through Energy Efficiency Alberta to nonprofit organizations. We have provided rebates through the climate leadership plan. Pretty much every senior is eligible for them, so many seniors actually come out ahead. At the same time, we are continuing to have the backs of Albertans as we move forward on a responsible path to balance.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, under this government we're now seeing carbon tax rebates being clawed back 30 per cent on seniors – 30 per cent – and then when asked about it, this government's minister for seniors says: that's okay; they still have 70 per cent. You've got the Premier's office telling my seniors to fund raise to pay for the carbon tax and now taking away 30 per cent of the rebate. Again, is it the position of your government that seniors should fund raise to pay for your carbon tax? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, as I've said, it's the position of our government that we need to continue to fund those services that support seniors, that support their health care, support their accommodations, and support the many services that they receive each and every day through the government of Alberta. Were we to embark upon the path that the members opposite suggest, where we give a $700 million tax cut to the top 1 per cent, claim that we can balance the budget, and then mislead people about whether or not that would have any impact on front-line services, the people that would be among those hurt the most would be seniors. We won't let that happen.

Mr. Nixon: Well, let's talk about misleading. This NDP government misled Albertans. They campaigned without telling anybody about a carbon tax that they were going to bring in. They told Albertans that the carbon tax would not be used for general revenue and for operations. But what happened? We now know from the budget that it is. Misleading Albertans? It's pretty clear who's misleading Albertans. Again to the Premier: is it your position that seniors should fund raise to pay for the carbon tax? Yes or no? It's the third time we're asking it.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the things that I think we do need to be very honest with Albertans about and that I think the members opposite should start doing, to go back to the point that I was just making, is that you cannot give a $700 million tax cut to the top 1 per cent, cancel the carbon levy, balance the budget, and not impact front-line services. That is not true. They are not being clear with Albertans about the consequences of their ill-prepared plan that they won't actually come clean to Albertans about, and quite honestly it is time for them . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, what is clear is that this government told seniors in my community to fund raise to pay for the carbon tax. This government, this Premier's own office, said that and, in fact, told the seniors in that community that there was no money available for them and that maybe their centre would just have to shut. These are seniors in our community that won't be able to go to the centre. The Premier has not apologized for that statement. I'm assuming that maybe that's true. Is it the government's position that seniors should fund raise for the carbon tax? Are you going to continue to watch seniors' carbon tax rebates be clawed back under your watch? If you're willing to throw seniors under the bus, who else are you willing to throw under the bus?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I was in error. That was your third main question. I identified it as second supplemental.

The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On this side of the House, the government side, we stand up for everyday Albertans. That's why we are so proud to have a track record of investing in students when they show up to school, investing in health care where it's much needed. For example, we worked to ensure that long-term care beds were available in Sundre, and the mayor said: thank you for this shining example of how government should work with Albertans; this is a successful story for our community that I'm very proud of; I want you to be able to share in that pride because without you it wouldn't have been possible. That's because we have a government that's investing in the people of this province.

Mr. Nixon: Well, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the mayor of Sundre was extremely disappointed that this government told seniors in his town to fund raise for the carbon tax. While the Deputy Premier just rose in this House and tried to divert from the question, the question is very simple. Is it the NDP government's position that seniors should fund raise to pay for their carbon tax? Yes or no?

Ms Hoffman: No, Mr. Speaker. That's why we have a rebate that's sent out to Albertans who make less than a certain value in terms of income. That's why we made sure that about two-thirds of Alberta families get this rebate. Most seniors are eligible for it. We think it's important for them to have the ability to be able to live in their community, including lodges, and for those lodges to be in good working order. That's why we're also investing in lodge programs and other types of supportive living and community-based care options. We stand up for the people of this province. We're not pushing for deep, ideological cuts that would leave them out in the cold.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thanks for finally giving us an answer. Hopefully, the government will apologize to the seniors of Sundre for telling them to fund raise for their carbon tax.

Now, the Deputy Premier brings up the rebate. That's an interesting thing. Under this government's watch we now know that seniors in Alberta are having their rebates reduced by 30 per cent, and all the minister of seniors will say is: ah, it's okay; they've got another 70 per cent. Well, Mr. Speaker, it's not okay. When will this government start really standing up for seniors and stop playing games in this Assembly?

Ms Hoffman: We're incredibly proud to stand up for seniors every day in this government, Mr. Speaker. That's why we've made sure that if you have a certain level of income that is below a threshold, you're eligible for this rebate, and that's why two-thirds of Albertans actually do receive this rebate. It's not a barrier to accessing supportive living types of accommodations. That's why we're incredibly proud that we continue to put this money in the pockets of Albertans. We also acknowledge that lodges do have some costs that they need to address and that they do take a portion to ensure that they can have efficient operations as well. We're proud of the fact that we're sending rebates to constituents throughout the province, including the town of Sundre.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

School Design and Construction

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. North-central Calgary has lacked robust middle and high school infrastructure for a while now, and that means thousands of students must travel outside of their communities for their education. Schools with integrated community centres, libraries, recreation and child care facilities represent sustainable investments to support vibrant communities now and in the future. To the Premier: how many of the schools that were recently announced will be designed with community and complementary activities in mind?

Ms Jansen: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, you know, one of the great things we have in our Infrastructure department is a wonderful group of people who design schools. I have a chance to work with them on a pretty regular basis, and they really are amazing people. They're creative, they're inclusive, and they spend a lot of time talking to educators about what should go into a successful school build. I'm very confident that when the opportunity comes for us to build a school, whether it is an elementary, a middle school, or a high school, we take into account the needs of the community, we're nimble about the design, and all the way through the process we take the community into . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Ms McPherson: Thank you. Evanston is one of the fastest growing communities in Calgary and has been for five years. Elementary schools like Kenneth D. Taylor are core schools for 300 students, with 300 more in portables, which can be moved to another school when they aren't needed any longer. The government's budget cuts funding for modular classrooms from $50 million to $25 million next year to zero for all of the following years. To the Premier: what's the plan to ensure that diverse and growing communities like Evanston continue to have flexibility as their populations change?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, when we talk about the need for schools, we're talking about infrastructure, and when we talk about infrastructure, we're talking about something that you can't build based on buttons. You need money for it. It's amazing to me that the folks across the aisle consistently stand up and tell us to do some compassionate belt-tightening except when it comes to an infrastructure project in their area. Now, I'm absolutely willing to sit down and talk to anyone about an infrastructure project they want to talk about, but I'll tell you that it takes an investment. That's what we're doing right now in our budget.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms McPherson: Evanston has a Catholic elementary school and a CBE elementary school, which both opened in 2016 and still don't have playgrounds. The community has long identified a need for a CBE middle school. This is at the top of the CBE priority list, yet the recently announced schools included an additional Catholic elementary school for the community. Can the Premier explain why this decision was made? It seems at odds with the community's demographics and needs.

Ms Jansen: Well, you know what, Mr. Speaker? I am delighted to have a sit-down with the hon. member and have a conversation about how she can support us in making sure that we show our public support for the infrastructure build in this province. In 2015 the Premier announced a capital plan that was almost $30 billion. That's transformational infrastructure for this province. As we go forward, we're continuing to build that. But you know what? You have to support us in that build and not complain when you feel that the bill is too high. It doesn't work both ways.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Calgary Winter Olympics Bid

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Over the past few days out at the doors in Calgary-Currie or on the phone I've heard and spoken with constituents who are expressing concerns over the Olympics in Calgary. Whether they are for or against it, they have a shared opinion that there must be a plebiscite on the Olympics. If we do have a plebiscite – to the hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism: will you support an Olympic bid if Calgary does not have a plebiscite first?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Our government committed $10 million to explore a bid, but we have been very clear that any additional dollars above the $10 million to submit an official bid must include meaningful public engagement, including a plebiscite to assess public support for an official bid.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that you've met with IOC officials, what have they told you about reusing our older infrastructure for a possible Olympics?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I met with IOC and COC officials, and they have told me that their vision includes one where we use existing infrastructure in order to keep the costs down. We're going to continue having conversations with our partners, both in the federal government and the city, going forward.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: if a bid is not successful, what will happen to the current Olympic facilities that would have received an upgrade from a successful bid?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgarians and Albertans are very fortunate to still have the use of infrastructure, facilities, the legacy of the '88 Games. In fact, 31 out of the 57 medals won in the last Olympics were from athletes who trained here in the province. We want to ensure that Calgarians and Albertans still have use of and access to the facility, and that's why our government invested $10 million to refurbish the sliding track at WinSport.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Hospital Emergency Room Wait Times

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The colossal waste of EMS time spent in the emergency room waiting to transfer their patients, roughly 650,000 hours out of service in 2016, will not be solved by more ambulances and more paramedics. This is a hospital ER problem, and Alberta Health Services' negligence is costing over $20 million per year just in salaries. It puts patients and communities at risk. But hospitals now have a standard in the United Kingdom, a transfer time of 15 minutes, one-quarter of our median transfer time. To the minister: given that more ambulances and staff will not solve this risky and wasteful practice, what is AHS going to do to solve the ER wait for transfers?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member is right about one thing, and that is that there is a problem with capacity in many of our hospitals. That's one of the reasons why we're working to expand the community and paramedicine program, so that paramedics don't always need to bring patients who don't need to be in a hospital to a hospital. That's why we're expanding the number of long-term care beds and other types of acute infrastructure, including the Calgary cancer hospital, in municipalities where we know that there is a backlog and that people are waiting in hospital rather than in the community in a more appropriate setting or in an acute-care setting. That's also why we are working to expand community-based health care and making sure that people can get care in places other than emergency rooms.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, the United Kingdom and Israel have solved the problem. In a few minutes they transfer patients, because they have staff there and they have space there, to the nurses on the wards to take care of, in the hallway if they need to be. Why do they have to stay in emergency rooms and depend on these EMS workers that should be out on the road serving other people?

Ms Hoffman: A fair question, Mr. Speaker, and one that I asked. The answer simply is that for years there was an infrastructure deficit in this province caused by the previous government that failed to build the adequate space, including long-term care, supportive living, and acute-care spaces, in various places throughout our province. I don't want to simply move people from one stretcher to another stretcher. We need to make sure that we have people in the appropriate places, that the folks who are in hospital in acute-care settings that shouldn't be there have somewhere safe to live that's appropriate, whether that be home-based care through home care that we've expanded or through long-term care. That certainly is one of the big areas of priority and a big area of action for this government.

Dr. Swann: Will the minister resolve to learn from these other countries' ER solutions and make sure that we end hallway waits within this year? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If it was possible to cut them by a quarter within one year, we certainly would be very eager to do that. We have looked at those models in other jurisdictions. One of the big changes is that they've expanded community-based health care, which our government has taken as a very serious initiative. They've also got the appropriate number of spaces in other care facilities so that those beds that have acute-care patients in them that don't want to be there and that aren't supposed to be there have somewhere else to be. It takes time to build long-term care, supportive living, and expand home care, but those are certainly priorities and pillars of this government rather than deep cuts that are being proposed by the Official Opposition.

Carbon Levy Economic Impact

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, despite the government's own rhetoric, here is what Albertans have received in return for the $96 billion in debt and a 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax. First, the percentage of unemployed Albertans who are out of work for over a year has doubled, going from 8 per cent to 16 per cent, and the average number of weeks Albertans were unemployed last year was the highest it has been since 1976. To the minister: instead of unprecedented levels of debt and making life more expensive with the carbon tax, why won't your government recognize the full, costly, and devastating impacts of the carbon tax and scrap it?

Mr. Ceci: You know, Mr. Speaker, the whole story is that the GDP in this province grew 4.5 per cent last year. It is poised to lead the nation again this year and the year after that. I don't know where the hon. member gets his information, but clearly jobs are up in this province, GDP growth is up, small-business confidence is up, wages are up, et cetera, et cetera, including the communities of Edmonton and Calgary. Calgary is the fastest growing, GDP-wise, prairie city this year and next year. Things are looking up.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Barnes: Just go talk to Albertans. Given that this government gives with one hand while taking even more with the other and given that when I speak with Alberta businesses and entrepreneurs, what they really want from this government isn't subsidies but is to scrap the carbon tax, reduce unnecessary regulations, balance the budget, and return the Alberta advantage and given that the Calgary Chamber of commerce reports that 73 per cent of businesses surveyed reported that their costs will increase due to the carbon tax, again to the minister: will you finally start listening to our province's job and wealth creators and scrap your economy-shrinking carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, Alberta led the country in GDP growth in 2017 and again in 2018, we have created 90,000 new full-time jobs, and certainly we have moved forward with pipeline approvals that have certainly laid the foundation for an economic recovery in our energy sector. Of course, we got those pipeline approvals because of the climate leadership plan. Certainly, we are moving forward. The economy is moving forward. We do not think that you go forward by looking in the rear-view mirror. That's an awfully dangerous way to drive down the road.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that those numbers are from our own ATB and given that the government's priority is to diversify the economy and given that the government is now 16 per cent more reliant on nonrenewable resource revenue than when they took office – this despite racking up $96 billion in debt and costing $3.7 billion in annual interest – to the minister: did your well-intentioned plan to diversify the economy fail, or was it just a hypocritical ploy to take more taxes from families, communities, and local Alberta businesses?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know what? I'm proud of the tax credits that our government introduced to help diversify this economy, and I want to remind the members opposite that Bill 30 passed unanimously in this House a little over a year ago. Our capital investment tax credit has leveraged $1.2 billion worth of investments in the province. But what I can't wait to hear is to see the member explain to his leader that he supports our plan and not his leader's plan, which calls for the end of these tax credits.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Environment and Parks Minister's Meetings

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the minister responsible for climate change if she knows a gentleman called Mr. Dan Woynillowicz, if you know him, and if she met him during her recent visit to Vancouver.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. member, I'm not sure exactly where your question was going. Is it intended to address the government policy question rather than just the name of an individual that a member may or may not know?

Mr. Panda: It is, Mr. Speaker. Can you reset the time? I'll ask it again.

The Speaker: I'm not sure I will, no. Would you keep going?

Mr. Panda: Okay. My question is to the minister of climate change. A few weeks ago she met a gentleman called Dan Woynillowicz in Vancouver. My question is if she talked about . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. You get two more supplementals. You get an opportunity to – Minister, anybody?

Ms Phillips: Well, that extended question-and-answer period led me to go through my mental Rolodex. I do believe that I have met such an individual in my life. I meet a lot of people, Mr. Speaker, and certainly I met a lot of people at Globe in Vancouver. It was a very productive time in terms of discussions with the Vancouver business community, the clean tech sector, and others.

The Speaker: First supplemental, hon. member.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will address her mental remembrance by submitting the evidence from her own Twitter account.

But my question is whether the minister knows that Mr. Woynillowicz was involved in an infamous 2008 Rockefeller Brothers Foundation project between wealthy U.S. foundations and Canadian activists to land lock Canada's oil sands?

The Speaker: Hon member, I'm going to let you go. Please be seated if I could ask. I listened to the question, and I'm trying to ask if you have a question related to government policy rather than a name association process. If other ministers would like to respond to the question, please proceed, but I don't think, hon. members, that this is – again I remind you that it's addressing government policy that this issue is rather than name association.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Ms Phillips: Okay. We're truly through the looking glass now, Mr. Speaker. I meet a lot of people in the run of a day. There are a lot of Canadians out there, and I have met many of them. I don't know where we're going with this, but it sounds like we're heading down the road of a ridiculous drive-by smear of an individual, and I'm just not going to dignify it.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I will give you one last opportunity to focus on policy if you could.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given the Government House Leader's defence of the issue surrounding the minister's meeting with the mayor of Rocky Mountain House – this would count as a meeting, whether she remembers mentally or not – and given the NDP's disastrous appointment of Karen Mahon and Tzeporah Berman and given her close association with Greenpeace, does the minister feel that it is appropriate to meet with individuals that helped conspire to sabotage our energy sector?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, I believe that we are talking about a number of folks that I ran into and talked to at the Globe sustainable business forum, including the Vancouver board of trade, including the B.C. Chamber of Commerce, including a number of other individuals in the business community. I met with a number of companies as well, went to a women's luncheon. Perhaps that is objectionable to the hon. member. I met a lot of folks at Globe. I'm not going to apologize for that.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

School Construction Priorities

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Minister, the fiscal mismanagement of this government is well known, and it's led to some very, very difficult choices like who will get dollars to build schools, and, well, there has been zero accountability to my community. Given that Chestermere's existing schools will be at 107 per cent capacity by 2020 – the fact is that we're the second fastest growing city in the country – and given that the people of Chestermere are fully aware of this government's fiscal mismanagement and given that every dollar that these schools have is eroded by the carbon tax, could the minister please elaborate on the criteria that were used to pick the schools that have been given the go-ahead?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's perplexing that my friends across the aisle spend so much time talking about reducing spending while at the same time presenting me with a long list of infrastructure demands. It has actually already topped $2 billion, billion with a "b." So I appreciate a conversation ... [interjections]

Well, there's your new tone, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The day started out so nicely. Every day is a surprise. I'm going to say to go to your first supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What's perplexing is that I actually wasn't asking about spending. I was asking about the criteria that allows infrastructure projects to go forward. There's a huge difference, just in case you're curious.

Given that we're heading towards a $96 billion deficit and given that this government now has limited dollars and given that the government is spending $2 billion a year in debt repayment service costs alone instead of building much-needed infrastructure, how can the minister justify spending billions of taxpayer dollars on debt repayment instead of much-needed schools?

Ms Jansen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am curious, so I, in fact, would ask a question of the member. If you are so concerned about infrastructure in your community, sit down and work with me and support our infrastructure plan instead of complaining every time we want to build something. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Well, it would be helpful if the government could admit that it is their fiscal mismanagement that has actually left communities like mine without the needed schools and portables and expansions. And when you're on this side of the House, you can ask me all the questions that you want. I can't wait.

Given that Chestermere-Rocky View families have been directly impacted by this government's 67 per cent increase in carbon tax and $2 billion a year in debt repayment – it's a whole lot of schools, Minister, and it's a whole lot of teachers – and given that these wasted dollars could be spent instead on needed infrastructure, what does the minister ...

The Speaker: Thank you.

I would ask that the volume of responses stay lower. I am having difficulty hearing the question. I'm not exactly sure where it was.

Ms Jansen: Well, I'd like to thank the member for pointing out that I'm not on that side of the House, and you know why? I'm not on that side of the House because they're not too fond of progressives, people who actually want to build infrastructure. Now I'm on this side of the House, and that's what we get to do. So who's in the better position? I think it's me.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Calgary Southwest Ring Road Construction Concerns

Mr. Sucha: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Spring is here – well, sort of – and we're about to enter the thick of construction season and further development of the Calgary southwest ring road. After attending the most recent open house about this project, I have some questions I would like to ask, that came from some stakeholders in my area. Now, I know the Member for Calgary-Bow has been a strong advocate for mitigating the impacts of dust from the project to neighbouring residents by bringing these issues to the minister's attention. To follow up, to the Minister of Transportation: what is being done to ensure that the air quality in the summer is safe and not disruptive for the quality of life of people living near the project?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: Why, thank you. It's nice to stand up again in the House. We've applied strict controls on our contractor who is operating the gravel operation in that area, including the installation of tarps, sprinklers, dust suppressants to the crushing operation. We've had some wonderful advocacy in that area on this particular issue. Construction is a nuisance. We find that all the time in Infrastructure and in Transportation. The result can be noise and dust issues. However, all efforts are being made to minimize the construction-related impacts to the work that's being undertaken right now in the transportation utility corridor.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that another issue is around light pollution – the astronomy community has indicated that certain filters can block out specific light temperatures while others cannot – to the same minister: what is being done to ensure that light pollution from the street lights is not an issue and that the kelvin level is set so that the colour can be filtered out using telescopes for recreational or scientific purposes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, there's a lot of thought that's been put into this. In fact, lower temperature LED lights are being used to minimize the amount of blue light in the area. Light is going to be directed downward on the highway from 15-metre poles. Those are going to be used to minimize the spread of the light. Cut-off fixtures are going to be used to minimize light spillage and reduce glare, and there's no high-mast lighting along highway 22X. That's going to help us avoid light flooding.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that concerns are being raised around the interaction with wildlife, to the same minister: what is being done to reduce the impacts on wildlife to ensure the park areas around the road are at their most pristine conditions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: I thank the member. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the section of the southwest Calgary ring road where the road crosses the park area, the bridges have been designed with wildlife passages. That was really important in that area. We have a substantial amount of wildlife, and I'm glad the member is concerned about that. Wildlife fencing is being installed to guide the wildlife to these crossings. No recreational pathway is going to be completed in that area, further separating the wildlife from human interaction. Along the wildlife crossing our contractors are installing native trees, grasses, shrubs, providing cover for animals who are crossing the road. And Alberta Environment and Parks compliance . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Airdrie.

Carbon Levy Rebate and Seniors' Expenses

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is on the record saying that every penny raised by the carbon levy will be rebated back to Albertans. However, we know that seniors in Alberta will have to fork over 30 per cent of their carbon tax rebates just to pay their rent. Given that the minister is fine with it because they still have 70 per cent left over, how much of the carbon tax rebates can be taken from our seniors before this minister thinks it's a problem?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government is very proud of the work that we have been doing to support seniors in this province, everything from our affordable housing strategies to continuing to make investments, including making sure that our seniors are able to be part of the 60 per cent of Albertans who get a carbon levy rebate, making sure that we are able to take action on climate change and rebate to 60 per cent of Albertans an amount that helps them cover those costs and move forward our province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Pitt: Well, Mr. Speaker, only 70 per cent of the carbon tax rebates given by this government are being left in seniors' pockets while 30 per cent is leaving them, and this government doesn't care. My question is: has this government done an impact assessment of the 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax rebate on our senior citizens?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Approximately 260,000 seniors are eligible to receive up to $300 annually from the carbon levy rebate. We also protected the seniors' benefit so that seniors have up to $280 a month when they really need it. Of course, the Conservatives would cut the seniors' benefit, making life harder for low-income seniors.

We continue to work for seniors. We protected more than $800 million in seniors' benefits over the last two years. We're very proud of that, Mr. Speaker, and we will continue to work with seniors to make life more affordable.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, this government can pretend to care about seniors and social programs all day long, but Bernice Westfall, an AISH recipient from Edmonton, says, and I quote: what are we supposed to do; we're not going to be eating very healthy; I'll tell you that much; I don't think the government thought this through properly. Will this government at the very least admit that their carbon tax is punishing seniors in our province?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are also investing in energy efficiency audits for housing management bodies. We're strengthening public services that seniors count on. We're ensuring that AISH benefits are there for those who need it. We're working to make life better for everyday families. Contrast that with the folks across the way who would give tax cuts to their wealthy friends and make low-income seniors pay for it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Health Services Procurement Process

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For democracy and government institutions to function, there must be trust, trust from those who are elected to serve and trust from those who assist in delivering public services. Alberta Health Services – and I quote from their website – “is Canada's first and largest provincially, fully-integrated health system.” A big part of delivering those services is achieved by securing high-quality suppliers through a public procurement process. My question is to the Minister of Health. Can she explain to the House Alberta Health Services' legal and policy obligations as to how it ensures that 22 billion of public dollars is managed to the highest standards of fairness, openness, transparency, and accountability?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I'd be very happy to table AHS's legal frameworks that they have in that regard, and I will do that either later on today or tomorrow.

But I do want to say that on this side of the House we absolutely believe in public health care. We want to ensure that it's here for this generation and for future generations. We know that the Conservatives have attempted it before, and a month from now we'll hear about their new plans to privatize health care. On this side of the House we're making sure that we have efficient, effective public delivery. We'll just wait and see, Mr. Speaker. I have a feeling they're going to be pushing big cuts and big privatization.

Mr. W. Anderson: My second question is to the Minister of Health given that she has the authority to overturn a procurement award either through the application of policy or otherwise made by Alberta Health Services. If not, how was she able to stop the DynaLife award in its tracks?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There were certainly opinions that were done. I think the member is asking about a lab process that was under way when government changed. We were very clear in the platform that we were going to end experiments in privatization, that we were going to work to protect and promote public health care. I'm incredibly proud that we did that and that we've moved forward with plans and that a site has been secured for a new public lab right here in the city of Edmonton.

Mr. W. Anderson: Well, my third question is to the same minister. If established Alberta Health Services had breached its policies by running a procurement which did not meet those standards, what would she do about it?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of the fact that we have a good, collaborative working relationship and that we are continuing to develop effective ways to invest in and protect public health care. Again, I'll be happy to table those guiding documents. I'm confident that they're on their website, but I'll be very happy to present them in this House to all members. If the member has a specific concern he'd like to raise, I'd welcome him to do so. In question period we try really hard not to deal with hypotheticals. We talk about government policy, and I'll tell you that I know the opposition's policy on health care. It's deep cuts. They've proven it in the past. They'll be arguing for it again at their convention, and they argue for these deep cuts and privatization every day in this House.

Physician Locum Services in Rural Alberta

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, in the town of Vulcan there are currently just five doctors that are practising at the local clinic. Only three are available to provide full, on-call coverage for the emergency room on weekends. One of them only covers ER during the week, and the other, who lives 50 miles away, doesn't cover those shifts at all. The community has requested several times for locum coverage due to the lack of ER coverage. Minister, the community would like to know if the criteria for locum services can be based on the number of physicians available to be on call rather than simply based on how many physicians practise in that community.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do work with AHS to ensure that they have the appropriate coverage for their hospitals, but I'll be happy to raise that question yet again on behalf of the member. We do certainly welcome people to work throughout the province, including a variety of locum opportunities. One of the things that I love about rural health care is that most of the rural practitioners live in those communities, they're part of them, and they step up to the call to help one another, including covering times, whether it's a bake sale at the school or covering important emergency room times at the hospital. Again, if there's a specific question about this that you'd like to follow up on, I'd be happy to do that outside of this House.

Mr. Schneider: Well, given that on-call emergency coverage from a doctor 50 miles away is not a possible solution to this critical emergency coverage and given that three doctors cannot possibly provide the coverage on weekends, especially if any of them are on vacation or away for other reasons, and given that in this current situation a doctor taking a few days off has to pay a locum out of his pocket for coverage, Minister, will you consider a change in the criteria for locum services based on the availability of doctors that cover emergency services rather than how many doctors just practise at the community centre?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can tell you from my background, being trained as a teacher, that if teachers want to take time off that isn't part of the scheduled year, they do pay for their own substitutes. There isn't such a thing as being able to take additional time. I understand the question that's being asked and will certainly look into it.

Again, the previous question was about being prudent with spending. We do have a significant budget, and we're proud of the work that we do to protect public health care. Now you're asking me to spend more money. Your colleague was asking me to spend less. It would be really nice if you guys figured out what day of the week it was and what you were going to call on us to do in terms of government policy.

Mr. Schneider: I call that a cop-out, Mr. Speaker.

I guess I'll make this very clear. They have five doctors. One lives 50 miles away and doesn't cover emergency services. One doesn't cover emergency services on the weekend because he's over 55. Minister, why is this arbitrary cap on locum services so inflexible that common-sense solutions can't simply be dealt with by the government directing AHS and the AMA to work together with rural doctors so they will know how many shifts local doctors can and will cover in their local ERs, thus ensuring that the AMA will know with certainty how many locums, if any, are required?

Ms Hoffman: Well, Mr. Speaker, on this side of the House we're proud to provide stable, predictable funding to health care. That includes making sure that we have the right practitioners. We've worked with RPAP to expand their mandate so that it's looking at additional health practitioners in addition to physicians. We're going to keep doing this work with local communities to make sure that we have the right care in the right place and by protecting the services that Albertans count on.

I can tell you that you can't cut your way out of having staffing shortfalls. The members opposite are constantly calling on us to have deep cuts, to go back to 2015 spending limits. The other parties are talking about billions of dollars of cuts as well. You can't do that and increase access.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Fish Populations in Northeastern Alberta

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fishing is an integral part of the way of life in northern Alberta. In recent years many Alberta anglers have rightly become concerned about the closure and restrictions on our lakes and streams. For my constituents this is a serious issue. With the 2018 fishing regulations recently released, confirming the further expansion of closures and restrictions, to the minister of environment: will you commit today to directing your ministry to create a plan to fully reopen our lakes in northeastern Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is quite right that fishing and angling opportunities both in tourism and for local economic development are very, very important to northern communities, as they are throughout the province. That is why we take a science-based approach to population numbers and study what the recommendations are going to be every year for a number of fish species and so on that may be subject to angling in any given year. We have seen a recovery in some walleye populations, and we have also seen an expansion of those . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that one of the main concerns driving closures of our lakes and streams is the maintenance of healthy fish populations and given that the Cold Lake fish hatchery has been a source of fish stocks for lakes across Alberta since 1984, will the minister consider stocking our struggling northeast lakes with walleye from the Cold Lake fish hatchery?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we review our fishing regulations every year for opportunities just like the hon. member flags for us here, and we're certainly willing to take those suggestions onboard. There are a number of folks who have brought us suggestions around walleye populations. What I will say to the hon. member is that what we didn't do this year was close stream angling opportunities in about four or five different areas. Instead, we're going to focus on habitat restoration and recovery because we don't believe that anglers should have to pay for 40 years of mismanagement of the fisheries.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Instead of closing streams, you closed lakes.

Given, Mr. Speaker, that cormorants are devastating Alberta fish populations and given that over a thousand residents of Alberta have petitioned the government to address the cormorant problem within northeastern Alberta and given that the province has engaged in targeted culling of cormorants in the past, will the minister deem the invasive species a pest to protect Alberta fisheries?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I will commit to doing is taking a science-based approach to our fisheries management. I will commit to ensuring that we have stable, predictable funding for our fish and wildlife officers, for our conservation officers, for our operations staff, for our local regional staff, who are out there every day doing the hard work of protecting the environment and making sure there is something to fish and something to hunt. Drastic ideological cuts will not help and, in fact, will hurt the communities that the hon. member purports to represent.

The Speaker: We are at Calgary-Hawkwood.

Correctional Worker Safety

Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A few months ago I had the eye-opening experience of visiting the Calgary Remand Centre with the Minister of Labour. When we asked corrections officers what their one ask of government would be, they exclaimed that they needed a full-body scanner. To the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General: is there any plan to expand the full-body scanner pilot program to include the Calgary Remand Centre in order to ensure the safety of my constituents?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for raising this very important issue. We were proud to announce a pilot project to use a body scanner in the Edmonton Remand Centre and to determine how effective that scanner would be in contributing to overall safety. I don't want to speak before the results are announced, but it seems to be having a very good impact. We'll continue monitoring that closely and looking to see whether that's a tool that ought to be utilized in other places.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I have heard from numerous constituents in my riding about the need to protect workers from potential exposure to opioids and given that this is especially true for front-line workers like corrections workers, to the same minister: what protections are in place for workers who may be exposed to dangerous opioids like fentanyl and carfentanyl?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for another important question. One of our priorities across government is to ensure that all workers can go to work and return home safely. In correctional facilities AHS health care staff are on-site and equipped with naloxone. Corrections officers are also trained in detecting fentanyl and other illicit substances. They have a number of tools available to them, including thorough examination for weapons and other items that pose a safety risk as well as opiate drug screening, drug dogs, and searches. The health of those workers . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister.

Now to the Minister of Labour: what has been done to ensure that Alberta's correctional officers are supported in their workplaces and supported once they retire?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I enjoyed the opportunity to speak with correctional officers with the member asking the questions. Every Albertan has the right to go to work and come home healthy and safe at the end of the day. The safety of staff, inmates, and visitors is paramount in our correctional centres. Our government has always stood with our front-line workers, including peace officers, and we will continue to have their backs. That's why last session we passed legislation to ensure that we have safer workplaces, and we made sure correctional officers will have presumptive coverage for PTSD. Unlike the members opposite, we know that having their backs means investing in supports rather than making big cuts to front-line services.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'll just apologize to the member. There was a disconnect in terms of the script.

The hon. Member for Highwood.

Okotoks Water Supply

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An urgent issue affecting the residents of Okotoks, that has been brought up and postponed time and time again due to this government's inefficiency, is the challenge of a devastating water shortage in the community. Since 2015 municipal representatives and I have urged this government to collaborate to help fix the shortage of water that has only been precipitated by the rapid and dramatic growth in the community over the past decade.

We've sent letters and brought up critical issues in this House year after year. The prebudget water pipeline proposal that was required was sent to the Premier, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, and the Minister of Transportation. This project has been shovel ready for almost three years now, but due to the inactivity and denial of this government our community is unable to move forward with critical infrastructure projects. An inability to attract investors or encourage and establish businesses is in essence stifling the growth of my community.

This government has been aware since 2002 that the town of Okotoks has taken very aggressive environmental action pertaining to conservation and the management of their water resources. They also know that due to their efforts, they've been recognized by various agencies and associations. Just recently Okotoks town received the prestigious FCM sustainable communities award, but it seems these environmental stewards have not been recognized for their efforts and have had repeated barriers presented to them each and every time from this government. This government is playing games by changing the rules and moving the goal posts. They haven't recognized this community for their efforts to comply with this government's wish list.

This government has received sufficient funding for exactly these types of water projects from their federal counterparts, yet these funds have not yet been allocated from the federal clean water and wastewater fund. This government is obligated to provide Okotoks with the resources they not only deserve but desperately need.

Mr. Speaker, I'm wondering if this government understands that water is still deemed a necessity to life.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise, and on behalf of my colleague the hon. Minister of Health I would like to give oral notice of a bill for the Order Paper, that bill being Bill 9, Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a current story from the Financial Post that shows that renewable energy companies, despite supposedly favourable Canadian taxes, subsidies, and incentives, are divesting their Canadian investments and moving south of the border to invest in the U.S.A. due to tax reforms undertaken by that country. I have the required copies.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table some petitions from pharmacists across the province petitioning the government to reinvest at least 50 per cent of savings anticipated from the generic drug cost reductions resulting from the five-year agreement recently negotiated between the Pan-Canadian Pharmaceutical Alliance and the Canadian Generic Pharmaceutical Association into front-line pharmacy services and programs to ensure the delivery of better health care for Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings. One of them is a tweet and photograph of the minister of environment taken on March 14, 2018, meeting with Dan Woynillowicz, one of the global conspirators against Alberta's pipelines and refineries, who has done his part to ensure Alberta's oil remains landlocked.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a document entitled The Tar Sands Campaign, produced by Michael Northrop, program officer of the Rockefeller Brothers Fund, July 2008. On page 25 commences the slides of Dan Woynillowicz, who worked at the Pembina Institute in July 2008, calling to stop pipelines and refineries, and met with the Minister of Environment and Parks last month in Vancouver and conspired against Alberta's energy sector.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a document outlining the brutal cuts made to staff, long-term care during the Klein years in response to the UCP members questioning this government's long-term care commitment.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have an e-mail from a constituent that he asked me to pass on, and he has some advice for the government on how to deal with their current negotiations with British Columbia on trying to get the pipeline approved.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table this petition that I received into my office. It's specifically asking the minister of environment to review the policy of using tags or shutting down lakes altogether. It's very disappointing to see that there is no apparent science-based approach being used to do that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Calgary-Foothills, you have another?

Mr. Panda: Yeah. That is the third tabling, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the sections of the Government House Leader's defence of the minister of environment that pertain to the definition of what is a meeting, as taken from Hansard on March 21, 2018, in reference to a point of privilege over whether or not . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, you don't have to read the whole thing. That matter has already been dealt with in this House. Please give it so that it can be distributed.

The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to table the requisite number of copies of the Alberta Health Services procurement policies regarding the DynaLife decision.

The Speaker: Are there any other tablings?

I believe we had at least three points of order. The deputy government – no; the Opposition House Leader.

Point of Order

Restrictions on Oral Questions

Mr. Nixon: Yeah, not the Government House Leader although very soon I hope we're on that side of the House so that we can get some better decorum. [interjections] I know, Mr. Speaker, it's disappointing. I think that's what we're going to talk about today.

The first point of order I rise on is 23(h), (j), and (i). It's in regard to an exchange that took place between the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills and the minister of environment, Mr. Speaker. The government at that time, I guess, appeared to have not liked the line of questioning that was being raised, like they are right now, the deputy whip. [interjection] I do have the floor. Thank you.

The Speaker: Yes, you do.

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

They began to try to shout down the member while you were trying to decide if the question was relevant to government policy.

Let's first talk about whether it's relevant to government policy. The individual whom the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills brought up in that question – he has now tabled the documents – certainly has extreme views towards the oil sands, which would fall definitely under government policy. But putting that aside, the question itself – and I have it in front of me, Mr. Speaker – talks about the oil sands, about policies in regard to land locking the oil sands, which the individual the Environment minister was meeting with has stated that he believes in. The next supplemental after that talked about Tzaporah Berman, Karen Mahon, who were appointed to the oil sands advisory group by the NDP government, certainly something to do with government policy. So, one, I would contend that it was government policy, but, second, we continue to see that the government, particularly the further we go into this sitting – I don't know if it's the polling numbers; I don't know what it is – continues to try to shout down our members as they ask questions.

It's one thing for you to make a ruling, Mr. Speaker. See, that's an example right now of that happening. It's disappointing. You are making a ruling and interacting with the Member for Calgary-Foothills, and they're yelling things.

I'm going to give you a couple of examples. We're going to talk about this in another point of order shortly, too, the minister of postsecondary yelling at the Member for Calgary-Foothills: are you dumb, are you stupid, did you come to work prepared? It's not helpful, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, let's speak to the point of order.

Mr. Nixon: I'm speaking to the point of order. So my point of order is, Mr. Speaker, that, one, it was government policy unless the oil sands are not part of this province now and unless the NDP oil sands advisory group is not part of the government. Lastly, if you would have the government stop abusing and victimizing our members.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

The Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm almost not really sure what to say in response to this one. Let's begin with the collateral attack on things said by the Minister of Advanced Education, which were, incidentally, not said. I have the benefit of sitting directly in front of the member. I don't know if they're talking about today or yesterday or sometime 17 years ago, but that's certainly not what's at issue. I'm not really sure what this game is that they're playing in terms of putting things on the record.

The hon. member was speaking just now, and someone may have shifted or coughed or something, and he's referring to it as shouting down our members, Mr. Speaker. He's trying to essentially take advantage of the fact that the microphones fail to pick up other things that are going on in the room by creating things that were never said. You know, I think the members are probably glad that the microphones don't pick up those matters because certainly some of the things they were saying . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, to the point of order.

Ms Ganley: Well, I think, Mr. Speaker, that when they rise and launch a series of collateral attacks that have nothing to do with the point of order, I'm entitled to at least respond to those, and in this case this has been a persistent course of action on their part.

But to get to the point of order, essentially the member is asking whether the minister met someone. Well, possibly she did, Mr. Speaker. I was out door-knocking on Sunday. I met many people. I don't happen to remember every single one of their names off the top of my head, and it's not in any way relevant to government policy that I spoke with someone. In fact, I think it's probably a good thing that our ministers get out of this place and go out there into the province, into the country, especially at a time when we're trying to convince other members of the country to allow us to put a pipeline to tidewater because it's absolutely critical. I think it really behooves us to go out and meet with people, and I don't think that it has the first thing to do with government policy.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. member, you have something substantive to the point of order additionally to mention?

Mr. Clark: I think it would be a welcome change to say that in fact I do, Mr. Speaker. I'd appreciate a few moments.

The Speaker: I will be waiting with bated breath. It must have some substance to it.

Mr. Clark: I do. I'm going to start where I think every good point of order should start with, and that's a citation from Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, sixth edition, section 410(6). I'm going to argue, frankly, in favour of the point of order and the point I believe somewhere in there that I think the Opposition House Leader was trying to make. In talking about the conditions and precedents for Oral Question Period, section 410(6) says, "The greatest possible freedom should be given to Members consistent with the other rules and practices." I think in this case we then look at section 410(10), "The subject matter of questions must be within the collective responsibility of the Government or the individual responsibilities of Ministers."

Now, I think that, perhaps, is where the dispute arises on this one, as to whether or not a meeting the minister may or may not have had with a particular stakeholder in British Columbia is relevant to her portfolio. I would argue that it is given what I understand of the person the minister apparently met with, who has a very strong opinion about a matter that is important to this province, that is within the purview of her ministry of environment. I do think it is within the realm of public interest that Albertans know whether or not the minister met with that person, and perhaps Albertans could draw their own conclusions about what that means one way or the other.

I do think that in this case the question is relevant, and I would just supplement my point by referring to House of Commons Procedure and Practice, third edition. Page 507 really just repeats – I'll start with 508, actually, really just repeating the point that members should be given the greatest possible freedom in putting questions forward. Page 507, I suppose, is a good reminder to all of us that Oral Question Period is "often an intense time, [and members] should be on [their] best possible behaviour." I would suggest that that maybe extends to arguments around points of order on occasion. Mr. Speaker, I think in this case I believe the member's question was in order, and I would argue in favour of this point of order.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, let me just firstly read a copy of the Blues.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the minister responsible for climate change if she knows a gentleman called Mr. Dan Woynillowicz, if you know him and if she met him during her recent visit to Vancouver.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker . . .
Order, please.

Hon. member, I'm not sure exactly where your question was going. Is it intended to address the government policy question rather than just the name of an individual that a member may or may not know?

I think that at that stage there were a number of exchanges, but let me just say that the record shows that the member was given a chance to explain. His two supplemental points, supplemental questions afterward allowed for the member and for that matter the government to respond to the question. I was having great difficulty with both the supplementals to determine whether or not the matter was addressed to government policy. In that regard, the responses I heard – and I did give the opportunity. I don't believe in this instance it was a point of order. Therefore, I urge you, hon. member, when you are framing the question, I think you need to get it more focused on whether or not the policy matter is at stake rather than whom members met at a certain event.

I think we have a second point of order. The Opposition House Leader.

Point of Clarification

Mr. Nixon: I'd like to go on 13(2), Mr. Speaker, and ask: is a meeting with a minister and somebody related to government policy relevant to government policy?

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Sure, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to speak to this. Obviously, that would be dependent on the circumstances. [interjections] But I think that this time that we have in question period is a chance for all members to hold the government to account, and even though I am in government, I think that that's . . .

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect . . .

Mr. Clark: This is 13(2).

Ms Ganley: Sorry. Did you want a response?

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Ms Ganley: Okay. I think the point is that this is a chance for members to hold the government to account in terms of their policies and procedures, not a chance to catch ministers out, to say that you were walking down the street or you went to an event and someone came up and said hi. That's not relevant to government policy, Mr. Speaker. The fact that our ministers are out in public is a good thing.

The Speaker: Is there new information that's going to be added to this very complex public policy matter that we are dealing with here?

Mr. McIver: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The new information is that the hon. Opposition House Leader made a question to you under 13(2), that the Speaker shall explain, and rather than the Speaker explaining, the Speaker had the Deputy Government House Leader explain. I guess that leads me to ask the question: why did you ask the Deputy Government House Leader to answer when it was your turn to answer?

The Speaker: Well, hon. member, I determined, maybe incorrectly, that the point that was being raised by the Opposition House Leader was, in fact, his second point of order, so that was a disconnect. I thought that's where you were going.

Notwithstanding that, hon. member, though, under 13(2), as I understand it and as we've discussed many times before, I answered your question on the first point of order, and that explanation stands. So there has been a ruling. I've made it. To have another one seems redundant.

Are we now at your second point of order?

Mr. Nixon: Sure.

The Speaker: Great.

Point of Order Remarks Off the Record

Mr. Nixon: I rise under 23(h), (i), and (j), particularly “uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.” Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to two other pieces of Hansard that I think will help you with what I have to raise. They’re very brief.

The first is from November 8, 2017, page 1833, in which you say, Mr. Speaker:

On another related matter, I would like to remind members to give respect to all members by not just allowing questions to be asked but also to be responded to without interruption. Earlier this week there was an inordinate amount of heckling directed towards the Minister of Infrastructure. I reviewed the incident, and while I did not intervene at the time, I certainly will intervene in the future if that kind of behaviour persists and is continued.

The next day, Mr. Speaker, November 9, 2017, on page 1864 of Hansard, you did intervene, and I agreed with you. You said:

Hon. members, you may remember – I believe it was yesterday – that I reminded you that in any event where one single member in this House was victimized by a group and not treated with respect, I’m going to call and name some people. So please respect each other and just don’t as a massive group in any way detract them from their job or not allow them to do what they are supposed to do in this place, whether they’re government or opposition. You said that, Mr. Speaker.

Now, when the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View was asking her questions today, Mr. Speaker, the government, way overboard, was trying to yell her down. I’ll give you some specific examples.

The minister of postsecondary – and I want to stress, Mr. Speaker, that we’ve been here a few times on the minister of postsecondary, and the government in the past has just risen and said that that did not happen. I suspect that if that happens, you’re going to see member after member after member who watched this happen rise and say that. The minister, a minister of the Crown, said to the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View: are you dumb, are you stupid, do you come to work prepared, and that is a dumb question. He got extremely aggressive, making hand gestures and those types of things. I don’t know what they meant, but it was inappropriate. The House then continued to try to yell her down as she tried to do her job in this place. It is totally inappropriate.

It’s certainly inappropriate for a minister of the Crown to continue to do this inside this Assembly. But, beyond that, Mr. Speaker, it’s disrupting this place, which is against the standing orders. It is time for the government to stop acting like this and to start acting appropriately in this Chamber. It’s embarrassing. It needs to stop, and the hon. member does not deserve it.

The Speaker: I’ve heard enough, hon. member. Please be seated.

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, obviously, I’m not able to get information on this specific incident right now. Again, I would state that I would find it surprising that something could be heard across the House when I, sitting immediately in front of him, could not hear it. I also believe that the minister answering was the Minister of Infrastructure, which means that her microphone would have been directly beside the Minister of Advanced Education and presumably would have picked up such a thing.

Mr. Speaker, I mean, obviously, I’m not in a position to respond. I agree with the general principle that folks should be polite on both sides of the House. I do know that sometimes the temperature rises in this place. I didn’t hear the comment. I don’t know that the comment was made. Their complaining that people are yelling things across the House while they’re yelling things across the House seems a little bit overboard. I didn’t hear it. I don’t know if you heard it. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, please.

Continue. I couldn’t hear. Did you have an additional point?

Ms Ganley: No, Mr. Speaker. I think my additional point is that we’ve been around this bend several times. Perhaps if the members would let us know what the issue is when we could still try to resolve it, that would be more helpful than just making things up after the fact.

Mr. Nixon: Whoa, whoa, whoa. Mr. Speaker, the minister just called me a liar in this Chamber. It’s inappropriate.

The Speaker: Hon. member, when all is said and done – and I’ve said it many times, many, many times – in this Chamber it’s the responsibility of individual members, firstly, and secondly it’s with respect that the House provides for the Speaker in this institution to make the decision as to whether or not business is going to be addressed and if we can move on.

In this instance I did not hear nor did I see the statement that you allege was made. That’s just the way it is, hon. member. I did not see it.

Hon. member, would you please be seated for just a moment? Thank you.

In this case I see no point of order as well.

Hon. Member for Airdrie, did you have an additional new piece of information?

Mrs. Pitt: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to say that I witnessed the hon. minister insult . . .

The Speaker: Good. Hon. member, I didn’t realize that was the . . .

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, may I . . .

The Speaker: Please be seated. Please be seated.

I made a ruling. The important part is that I didn’t hear it or see it. Decision closed. Done.

I would like to go back to the point made by the Opposition House Leader. It may well be wrapping up, but I’ll just tell you two things that I’ve noticed since we’ve returned. The first is that today there were a number of comments, either in debate or in Members’ Statements, that referred to individual members of this House, to the point that the Opposition House Leader addressed the November ruling. That still stands, as far as I’m concerned, and I think that you need to be looking at what you continue to do, making comments about individuals rather than policy matters.

There seems to be an escalation in the allegations and accusations about comments that are being made and that time may be being used to rehash, repeat, with some colourful language, in terms of the way and manner in which the allegation is made. I hope that that does not continue, and I would urge your side of the House to do the same.

I’m lost. Are we at point of order 3?

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise under 23(h), (i), and (j) again, particularly under (i), “imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member,” as well as “makes allegations against another Member.” At the time I raised that point of order, the Minister of Infrastructure, in response to the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View – this will definitely be in Hansard – said that the member provided a detailed list of infrastructure asks to the minister's office. That list was not asked for. That did not in fact take place, and by saying in question period to the member that they did something that they did not in fact do will certainly create disorder, certainly puts motives on that member that, quite frankly, just aren't true. It never happened, and I think the minister should withdraw and apologize for that comment.

The Speaker: Go ahead, hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't have the benefit of the Blues, but what I heard the minister say or what I recall the minister saying was that your side has submitted a list of asks, and that is true. Whether in question period, whether through meetings with ministers and municipal officials and members of the opposition, whether through letters written in, they have submitted a series of asks in terms of infrastructure projects. I think it's reasonable for the Minister of Infrastructure to point out that at the same time that they call for us to cut the Infrastructure budget, they also call for a number of projects, in this case I believe she said over $2 billion worth. It was in reference to asks from all over that side of the House, and I think we can provide evidence of that if it's necessary.

The Speaker: I, too, have not had the opportunity of the Blues. I will read them, and I will make a ruling at a future time.

Orders of the Day

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Sweet moved, seconded by Mr. Malkinson, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate April 3: Mr. Westhead]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's an incredible honour and a privilege to respond to Her Honour's Speech from the Throne. I'd like to begin by thanking Her Honour for the emphasis that was placed on working with indigenous peoples. When our government was first elected, we made a commitment to make sure that the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples was respected in all policy deliberations. The government and I have been working hard to keep that promise in the spirit of trust and respect.

A strong province is built on strong relationships, and I'm proud of the relationships that I've built with the Stoney Nakoda people. I was honoured to have Chief Wesley of the Wesley Nation, Chief Dixon of the Bearspaw Nation, and Chief Young of the Chiniki Nation accompany me at the Legislature on the occasion of the Speech from the Throne. Just recently I was invited to attend and take part in the inauguration ceremony for the newly elected and incumbent chiefs and councils for the Chiniki Nation in Morley. The ceremony was beautiful and powerfully moving. The singing, dancing, and drumming were mesmerizing and resonated with deep cultural meaning.

The Stoney Nakoda chiefs and councils have expressed interest in initiatives that were discussed in the Speech from the Throne such as the climate leadership plan, the renewable energy program, the curriculum review, and work to better protect children in care. Indeed, the next phase of the renewable energy program focuses on partnerships with indigenous communities such as the Chiniki Nation, and Chief Young attended the press conference for this announcement to show his support for and interest in the project.

Another way that we are taking steps to respect UNDRIP is to take action in response to the recommendations of the Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention, which I was proud to serve on. We can do more and we must do more to help vulnerable children and to reduce the number of indigenous children in government care. The child intervention panel heard from and visited indigenous communities across the province. Many of the stories shared with the panel were heartbreaking, but we also heard stories of hope. There is much for us to learn, more work to do, and a long road ahead as we walk the path of reconciliation together. We do these things not because they are easy but because they are hard. This challenge is one that we are willing to accept and one that we are unwilling to postpone.

Another challenge being taken on in the constituency of Banff-Cochrane is that of enhancing human coexistence with wildlife. The Rocky Mountains are not just one of Canada's most iconic landscapes; they are also home to some of Canada's most iconic wildlife such as grizzly bear, wolf, and elk. The abundant recreational opportunities and sheer beauty of the Bow valley means that increasingly more and more people are coexisting on the landscape with wildlife, which can lead to conflict situations.

Residents and visitors alike have a deep appreciation and respect for wildlife and their habitat. We put our garbage in bear-proof bins, set aside dedicated movement corridors and habitat patches, build wildlife overpasses and underpasses, and make seasonal area closures to give animals the space that they need during certain times of the year.

The Bow valley is a critical link among connected landscapes that support wildlife movement. It is imperative that we maintain these connections in light of the increasing human pressures. Thankfully, the Bow valley has experts working together to ensure that we can continue living in harmony with wildlife, experts like Jay Honeyman, a human wildlife conflict biologist with Alberta Environment and Parks, and Bill Hunt, the resource manager for Banff national park. They are part of a larger technical working group and round-table looking for solutions and improved co-operation between the three levels of government that have neighbouring jurisdictions in the Bow valley.

Of course, there is much wisdom to be gained from First Nations, who have coexisted with wildlife on these landscapes for thousands of years. One such way of assessing environmental conditions and generating data that can be used to inform conservation plans is through cultural monitoring. Cultural monitoring offers a means of integrating traditional ecological knowledge into the identification of priority areas for conservation and restoration in a manner that recognizes various environmental factors while also considering local knowledge and perspectives.

While Banff-Cochrane is proud of its history and heritage, people here are also forward looking. The announcement in Her Honour's speech that the government will help support job creation in digital industries with a new digital industries tax credit was welcome news. Both the Bow Valley Chamber of Commerce and the town of Cochrane are looking to support innovation and to attract knowledge and learning-based technology professionals. The digital industries tax credit act referred to in the Speech from the Throne would create thousands of new spaces in our postsecondary institutions dedicated to technology that will help the Bow Valley chamber and the town of Cochrane achieve their goals. I'm proud to support this proposed investment that will enable more Albertans to get the education and training that they need to secure good jobs in this growing sector that will also help our economy continue to diversify.

I'd like to begin concluding my response to the Speech from the Throne by applauding the commitment that was made to undertake major initiatives to help families keep property safe, especially in rural areas. Everyone deserves to feel safe in their homes and in their communities. This government has a track record of supporting police services. Each year, since our first budget in 2015, more than half a billion dollars have been invested into policing, including over 1,500 officers in rural Alberta. We maintained and even increased funding for policing during one of the province's worst recessions. In 2016 additional funding was provided to Alberta law enforcement response teams, also known as ALERT. ALERT is a key part of an integrated, province-wide team that crosses local and regional boundaries. They conduct joint investigations with local police services to help combat criminal activity and co-ordinate intelligence sharing, keeping local police informed about serious and emerging threats in communities.

More recently the commitment made in the Speech from the Throne to take further action to address rural crime was acted upon the following day when the Minister of Justice announced $10 million towards hiring more RCMP officers, civilian staff, and Crown prosecutors. The announcement also included measures to ensure that police have the resources needed to address top priorities such as focusing on intelligence, sharing information to help police better identify and catch prolific offenders, and shifting some routine tasks to civilian workers so officers can spend more time patrolling and investigating in the community.

With help from our valued partners in the RCMP, the government has developed a detailed plan to protect rural Albertans and their property. While there's no single easy solution to fix rural crime, the strategy put several important tools in the crime-fighting tool box. In addition to these measures, we've made changes that allow officers to spend more time on the streets fighting crime, like eliminating arrest warrants for unpaid fines for minor, noncriminal offences.

Madam Speaker, we are taking action on rural crime. We are taking action on pipelines. We are taking action on the environment. We are taking action to diversify our energy sector, and we are taking action to engage in reconciliation.

As we have from the start, we will continue to create jobs, diversify our economy, and protect the health and education services on which families rely. Our task is to make sure that this recovery keeps working for working people, and that's what we are committed to do.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure today to give my response to the throne speech. First of all,

I do want to point out a few things that I thought were great. Having the Speech from the Throne take place on International Women's Day gave an opportunity to celebrate the great women in Alberta. As I wander the Legislature, I'm always impressed with the display of the Famous Five, the five women that worked so hard to make sure that women were considered persons. As we look at society today, it's hard to believe that this was ever an issue. It's also hard to imagine that in some parts of the world women are still treated horrifically. Hard to imagine, but it's still happening. We have so many women that have done so many great things and continue to do great things. As was said in the throne speech, "Women's rights are human rights."

It was also nice to recognize our first responders, those that put their lives on the line for us, run to the fire instead of away, sacrifice so much for our safety and security, and also their families, who worry each time they leave the safety of their home. We salute all of our first responders.

Now, we do have to give credit that the Premier has started to talk a good game on pipelines. Unfortunately, it's a little hard to fully trust what this government is saying. Let me take you back to 2015. The NDP was just elected, and the Premier was answering questions in this Legislature on pipelines. Here's a quote from June 17, 2015. "If we're going to make progress, we're going to do it by finally creating a record that we can be proud of." You see, that's the problem, and we've seen this attitude rear its head over and over again: "finally creating a record to be proud of." It was that same attitude that had the Premier call Albertans embarrassing cousins. The fact that there was no pride and, in fact, open disdain for an industry that is the best in the world in safety and environmentally, taking place in a country that has a higher social conscience in human rights than their competitors should be enough to be proud of. But no; they felt that they couldn't be proud of it. This is an industry that they now say they support.

On June 17, 2015, the Premier said, "I identified what most people in the industry already understand and have in fact confirmed to me, that the likelihood of the Northern Gateway pipeline being approved in the near future is not great." So here we have a Premier matter-of-factly saying that one of the pipelines to tidewater is not likely to happen. I think what's most important is how she reacted. What did she do regarding this devastating news? Absolutely nothing.

Now, the other day the Government House Leader stood in this House and talked about the federal court's decision in this regard. He quoted, "It would have taken Canada little time and little organizational effort to engage in meaningful dialogue on these and other subjects of prime importance to Aboriginal peoples. But this did not happen." So would the NDP support the little time and organizational effort to engage in meaningful dialogue with aboriginal peoples to get Northern Gateway back on track? Nope. They said and did nothing. Previously there was no talk or action on pipelines; now lots of talk but still no action. If they actually cared about getting our product to the coast, they would have shown concern over this, but instead, crickets.

The Government House Leader went on to say, "the actual facts that it was the negligence and neglect of the federal government, of which he was a member, that resulted in the courts cancelling that project." In classic form this government blames everyone else for any problems, but what did they do to try to remedy the situation? Nothing. Just to be clear, it was the NDP's friend Prime Minister Trudeau that cancelled Northern Gateway. Remember the tanker ban? That was implemented by Trudeau before Northern Gateway was cancelled. Does that look like a Prime Minister that wanted to help get our products to the coast? Not at all.

This government even helped to pass my motion to urge the provincial government “to request that the federal government not implement the moratorium on crude oil tanker traffic along British Columbia’s north coast and that it swiftly approve pipelines such as the Energy East, Trans Mountain, and Northern Gateway.” That was a motion to have this NDP government request the federal government to cancel the tanker ban and approve pipelines, including Northern Gateway and Energy East. But even with that commitment does the NDP look like a government that truly wants to get our products to the coast? Well, if so, they have a funny way of showing it, absolutely no support for that pipeline to the coast or against the Prime Minister that has been focused on destroying our opportunities to exercise our constitutional rights of getting our products to market.

Further along in this vein is the Premier’s comment, also in 2015, when she said, “I’m also quite interested in pursuing Energy East and working with industry.” Now, the company trying to build Energy East walked away, citing NEB regulation changes brought on by the Trudeau government. That was regarding the inclusion of upstream and downstream emissions. What was this government’s reaction? The Energy minister sent a letter, a letter suggesting that downstream emissions shouldn’t be included. What about upstream? What about something more than a letter? One might send a letter to one’s grandmother that lives far away, but a multibillion-dollar loss of opportunity to your constituents may warrant a little bit more. Just a little bit. But nope, nothing. If Albertans aren’t quite buying the rhetoric that this government actually supports pipelines, it’s no wonder.

I want to cover a little bit more that has Albertans not quite buying the integrity of this government when it says that it supports pipelines. We can start with the NDP’s Leap Manifesto, that calls for an end to all new pipelines. This document was supported at an NDP conference that took place right here in Edmonton. At that time the Alberta NDP could have removed itself from the federal party, but alas they did not, so they remained one and the same with the federal Leap Manifesto-supporting NDP.

Let’s talk about some of the NDP ministers and MLAs and their actions and comments. Let’s start with the Minister of Education. There are YouTube videos available online where he states, repeatedly I might add, that there should be no new approvals for, quote, tar sands, unquote. That doesn’t sound like a champion of the oil and gas sector to me.

Then we can talk about the seniors minister. Now, she took a little holiday to southern B.C. to campaign in the last federal election for an NDP candidate. Who is this candidate, you might ask? None other than Jacqui Gingras. In an Edmonton Sun article it says, “Gingras is an environmental extremist. Last year, she helped organize an anti-pipeline rally on behalf of LeadNow . . . LeadNow is opposed to every pipeline project currently proposed in Canada.”

That’s who the minister was backing for parliament. I wonder if she’s given Gingras a call to see if she will support the minister in her new-found love of pipelines. Mind you, I don’t know that the minister has publicly supported pipelines yet anyways.

Now we can move on to the Energy minister. Her chief of staff was the executive director of Leadnow. Now, in fairness to her, she said that she never knew him and that he was chosen by the Premier’s office.

Mr. Westhead: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we have a point of order.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

Mr. Westhead: I rise under 23(h), (i), and (j) and reference a ruling that Mr. Speaker made not half an hour ago indicating that we shouldn’t be engaging in personal attacks in the Chamber. This is exactly what this member is doing. Considering that the caution was made not very long ago in this Chamber and I believe the member heard the ruling, I would think that we should stop from engaging in these kind of personal attacks.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It’s a pleasure to rise on the point of order. I’m not sure if you have the benefit of seeing the ruling or the comments that the Member for Banff-Cochrane has made with respect to the ruling, but I think that if we had the benefit of the Blues, we would see that the Speaker was specifically referring to the use of members’ statements in the Chamber.

As you know, Madam Speaker, there has been some significant latitude used with respect to members’ statements. The Speaker was reminding the House about a trend that he may have observed in members’ statements becoming more targeted on certain members of the House, in my interpretation of the ruling, in particular from the government members directed towards the opposition. He reminded all members of the Assembly that perhaps during members’ statements we might refrain from such activity.

I think that in the to and fro of debate there will be consistent discussion around members’ statements that members of this House have made, particularly statements that members of the government have made, be it current or in the past. I think what we have here is a matter of debate.

Having said that, I think it’s reasonable for us all to consider the debate that we engage in, but I think it is very reasonable for members on both sides of the Chamber to discuss positions that members of the government or members of the opposition have held.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the point of order?

As you’ve correctly noted, I don’t have the benefit of the Blues, so I can’t reference exactly what ruling the Speaker might have made a short time ago. However, the rules around members’ statements are more for respect. Each member has that opportunity to speak about an issue, and you don’t disrupt that. The rules are the same for any kind of dialogue going on in this House. We avoid personal attacks. We avoid saying things that will cause disruption to the Assembly and the decorum. I would encourage all members to please continue to be aware of that.

I believe that the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky was getting close to crossing the line, so I would caution him to be a little bit more careful about the difference between making a point based on policy and a point based on something that’s quite personal to a member.

Please continue.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Now, I was just talking about how the Premier had actually chosen the chief of staff for the Energy minister. I thought that maybe that wasn’t so surprising when we see pictures of the Premier at anti-oil and antitanker and antipipeline protests.

Now, I won't have time to get into the other anti-oil and antipipeline activists that this government has hired as senior staff, but how about the environment minister? She co-wrote the foreword to a radical environmental book called An Action a Day Keeps Global Capitalism Away.

Mr. Westhead: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, a point of order?

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Madam Speaker, you just warned the member to be cautious. He seems to have a laundry list of personal attacks lined up here, so I wonder if the member might reconsider some of the things he's about to say in his speech.

Mr. Loewen: Obviously, the governing party here has a problem with facts being stated. I'm clearly stating facts. I think you could go on any given day in this House and look through the Hansard and find personal attacks on the Leader of the Official Opposition. I don't see what the problem is here. This is stuff that's been said in this House before. In fact, on this same quote that I used, there was a point of order called by the government side that they lost because it was a point of debate. That exact same statement.

So there's no point of order here. I should be able to continue on with my speech like I would like to do. They're obviously trying to run me out of time so that I can't say everything that I'd like to say, and that's appalling.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the point of order? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm a little confused why the deputy whip for the government is now calling these types of points of order. If you look through even today the comments in members' speeches, almost all of them refer to the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, the Leader of the Opposition, in very personal ways.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky is a hundred per cent correct. This is a matter of debate. This has already been ruled on in this place, and the government lost that point of order at that time. Clearly, the government deputy whip is trying to deliberately stop the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky from delivering his speech, and he should stop that.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the point of order?

I do have a reference here that I would like to refer to, Beauchesne's 481(f). Remarks about another member's integrity and honesty are never in order, so I would caution members to please be aware of the difference. It's one thing to reference a quote that's a reference of policy, but please be cautious that you are not moving into that line of questioning another member's honesty or integrity.

Please continue.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Now, I was talking about the environment minister, who co-wrote the foreword to a radical environmental book called An Action a Day Keeps Global Capitalism Away. What's interesting about this is that the Government House Leader called a point of order, that we just referred to, on the Leader of the Opposition for merely mentioning this fact. A little sensitive about this, I guess.

Now, the minister claimed that she just helped with some grammar, but the author said this in the book: "It would not have been possible to put this book together without her. She pushed me to write it, edited my work, and contributed to its content . . . I owe her a heavy debt." There are two versions of a story there that I think we could kind of look at and come to our own decisions on.

This brings us to the Member for Calgary-East. Now, we've all see the picture of her with the sign that says: No More Dirty Oil. It was interesting to hear her comments on that situation just the other day. You'd think there would be an apology or some sort of regrets as this government tries to build the credibility of its pipeline support, but, no, no apology and no regrets. Now, that might be bizarre, but maybe even more bizarre is her excuse for doing it. She said, "A pipeline in 2011 would not have created the jobs." What? How does that even make sense? She goes on to talk about how poor the last government was and how great the present government is like it matters to the pipeline or to the jobs it creates or to the increased return for our products which government is in power. It's about what's best for Albertans no matter which government is in power.

She also said, "We need the ability to sell our oil now." Well, that's a really good point, but there's a problem. Because of anti-oil activists and obstructionists like her and her colleagues the pipeline didn't start being built in 2011. If it had, we would be selling our oil right now at a better rate than we are getting now. Let me say that again. If it hadn't been for the radical activists and obstructionists, you know, like the members on the government bench and their friends they campaigned for and their friends they hire with taxpayer money, we would have a pipeline now. We haven't started building it yet, and once we do, it'll take some time to get it done. I wish we could have had these people's support back then because, after all, we needed pipelines then. But just remember that these are the people that say that they support our oil and gas industry, unapologetic, anti-oil activists.

Now, this leads to the oil sands advisory group. The minister hand-picked two anti-oil activists to sit on the panel. Can you imagine choosing people that are extreme anti-oil activists "to provide advice on the implementation of the emissions limit as it relates to oil sands"? I can only imagine how much an anti-oil activist would like to be involved in capping our oil sands. Now that the advisory panel is finished, these activists are actively working at protesting the Trans Mountain pipeline as we speak. Sadly, three police officers were recently hurt at these protests. Come on, Premier. Albertans deserve better than that.

Now, the Premier said something interesting the other day when debating the pipeline motion. She said:

But the new B.C. government in coalition with the Green Party has now determined that it is willing to use any means necessary, including unconstitutional ones, to harass and delay the Trans Mountain pipeline.

Let's be clear. That's a change in their strategy.

Well, I'm not sure where the Premier has been for the last 10 months, but the B.C. NDP has been promising this all along. On May 4 the Canadian Press reported that Horgan will use "every tool in the toolbox," and, "There's a whole host of other legal remedies available to us and we'll be laying that out" to stop the pipeline.

On May 31 – that's after the election – CBC news reported that "B.C. Green Party leader Andrew Weaver and John Horgan of the NDP said their alliance dictates that once in government, they will immediately employ every tool to stop the expansion of the Kinder Morgan pipeline."

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?
The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I want to say thank you to my hon. colleague from Grande Prairie-Smoky for giving an important response to the Speech from the Throne. I would ask him if he could continue and please finish his speech pertaining to the government Speech from the Throne.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you. I just read the quote from the leader of the Green Party and John Horgan of the NDP and their alliance about doing everything they can to stop the Kinder Morgan pipeline.

Then on August 10, 2017, the B.C. minister of environment and climate change put out on their government website: "During the election, we promised to use every tool in our toolkit to fight for BC against Kinder Morgan's proposed heavy oil pipeline and tanker expansion." Well, to me it sounds like the B.C. NDP government has been very clear about its intentions, but unfortunately the Premier of Alberta wasn't listening.

Now, the Premier really should have been listening to John Horgan when she sat down with him. Afterwards Horgan said that it was just a meeting of two old friends and, quote: I had no intentions of being persuaded, and she had no intentions of persuading, end quote, on the pipeline issue. I would have hoped that the Premier, who purports to be such a stalwart supporter of pipelines, might have tried to persuade Horgan on the importance of a pipeline, but, alas, no such luck.

Of course, recently the Premier has publicly stated that their support for the Trudeau carbon tax was linked to the construction of the Kinder Morgan pipeline. But in reviewing her past comments, we find out that it is just not true. On October 3 in a Calgary Herald article she is quoted in regard to the federal carbon tax as saying, "We can't be talking about the sort of prices that got rolled out today until we get a commitment from this federal government that they're going to move on this fundamentally important economic piece that Albertans need."

Then on November 29, 2016, just six weeks later, the National Observer had an article entitled, quote, smiling Alberta Premier open to Trudeau's carbon tax after pipeline approvals. In the article it says:

Moments earlier, she shook Justin Trudeau's hand and thanked him on behalf of all Albertans for his leadership and "demonstrated commitment" to building the economy . . .

[She] explained that her government was now "well positioned" to support Trudeau's efforts to ramp up a tax or price on carbon pollution to $50 per tonne by 2022.

They additionally quote the Premier as saying, "Prime Minister Trudeau is showing some extraordinary leadership today."

So when the Premier says that she linked the federal increase in the carbon tax to pipelines under construction, it's just not true. She sold out Albertans on the federal carbon taxes more than a year ago. They have even included these funds in their budget forecast. Clearly, when Trudeau says, "Tax," the Premier asks: how high?

Another thing we hear the Premier say quite often is that the previous federal and provincial governments couldn't get a pipeline built. Well, that's not true. The Kinder Morgan anchor loop, the Enbridge Clipper, the TransCanada Keystone, and the Enbridge line 9B: that's four pipelines built, not just approved but built. They increased oil flow by over a million barrels a day.

Now, during the NDP's and Liberals' time in government there were two pipelines approved and two pipelines cancelled, one of which was approved under the Conservative governments, only to be cancelled by the Liberals, and so far none built.

Please remember this very important point. The Trans Mountain pipeline is an expansion. There's an existing pipeline there. It has been operating safely for decades. This should be a no-brainer to improve. It's not a whole new corridor; it's just more pipe for increased flow. Also, the Enbridge line 3 that was approved is a replacement of an older existing line, again not a whole new pipeline, just a replacement of an existing line that will transport a higher volume, another no-brainer. To listen to the NDP, you'd think that they changed the world to get an expansion and a replacement. This should have been simple.

Now, the NDP sold us that the carbon tax would give us social licence to get pipelines built. This clearly has not happened because there has not been one anti-oil group or individual that has moved their position from antipipeline to pro pipeline due to the carbon tax. Not one.

They claim that Trudeau approved the Kinder Morgan because of the NDP climate leadership plan. Well, I don't buy it. Trudeau was looking for a way to sell his carbon tax to Canadians, so he linked the approval to the climate leadership plan. Of course, he mentioned the oil sands emissions caps as one of the reasons he approved the pipeline. That makes sense because he wants to phase out oil sands. What's sad is that the NDP is willing to sell out Albertans to get a pipeline. That is just wrong. There is a process to get pipelines approved, and that process doesn't include taxes and caps that punish people, businesses, nonprofits, schools, and families.

Now, I do need to make clear that it is good to see the Premier and the NDP government finally following the lead of us in opposition and fighting for pipelines. We were pleased to see the wine ban, even though it didn't go far enough. It should have just been the first step. We were disappointed when the Premier dropped the ban prematurely. It's clear that the B.C. NDP has yet to reduce its hostility to pipelines, so why would we back off?

Clearly, if any pipelines get built, it won't be because of this government's support; it will be in spite of its lack of support.

Speaker's Ruling Question-and-comment Period

The Deputy Speaker: Before we continue with the next speaker, I would just like to remind all hon. members of a ruling that was made yesterday here in the House by the Acting Speaker regarding the use of Standing Order 29(2)(a). We've given a great deal of latitude on this particular standing order in the past to allow members to continue on with their statement, but members are quite aware that there are time limits for debate. They know going into that how much time they're going to have, and to be continually using 29(2)(a) to simply extend your debating time isn't really within the spirit of 29(2)(a).

I'll just reference some of the past rulings on page 359 of Hansard from yesterday, where the Acting Speaker ruled on this, that the spirit is to be questions and comments to kind of encourage healthy debate in the House. While we're certainly not intending to move away from the traditions of the House dramatically at this point, I would really encourage hon. members to move more towards a genuine debate in a question-and-answer format in the use of 29(2)(a).

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The next speaker on this issue, the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is with great honour that I stand today and respond to Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's speech during the Fourth Session of the 29th Legislature. I am proud to recognize how the priorities of our government have made life better for people in Red Deer-North and all across Alberta.

It is fitting that our session opened on International Women's Day since women are so well represented in this Chamber. Outside of my Legislature office is our province's tribute to Alberta's Famous Five, and I cannot express my appreciation for their conviction. They are a testament to the power of citizens working together and how formidable that impact can be. Because of that, we sit today with a woman Premier and a cabinet that is over half made up of women.

Recently I had the pleasure of celebrating our women of influence with the Member for Calgary-Varsity. Celebrating the first provincial ministry of women was a thoughtful and moving experience. I am proud to stand with my government as we break down barriers and build equity. That, Madam Speaker, is what doing the right thing looks like.

Since 2015 we have witnessed one of the worst economic downturns in our province's history. This, in addition to natural disasters, has made the past few years a difficult period indeed, but Albertans are known for their adaptability and resilience. Madam Speaker, that resilience will only become stronger with economic diversification. While my response focuses on Red Deer, Red Deer is a corridor to both of our province's major centres. As a result, what's good for Red Deer supports our government's mandate of making life better for all Albertans.

Though we all come to this Legislature as individuals, what we have in common is the respect for sound governance. In 2015 the people of Alberta recognized that the antiquated ways of a tired government were not going to get us where we needed to go or where Albertans wanted to be.

In March of 2017 our government announced its support of a Red Deer regional justice centre, recognizing that the current model could not provide the service that Red Deerians and central Albertans required. This investment shows that we are hearing what Albertans are saying. We are meeting their needs through investment in the services that give them timely access to the legal services they need. In addition to this justice centre, I am proud to hear of our government's initiative to take action against rural crime. Our government made the right choice to respond to the call for more funding, investing 10 million new dollars into policing, which includes 39 new officer positions, 40 civilian staff, and 10 Crown prosecutors in rural Alberta.

Strong communities are a cornerstone of Alberta. With this in mind I wish to respectfully acknowledge and applaud the Premier and the Minister of Advanced Education for their recent announcement in support of Red Deer College pursuing degree-granting status. For 25-plus years Red Deer College has requested this status. Access to advanced education enhances economic growth by supporting the knowledge and skills needed in the workforce. On March 1, 2018, Red Deer and central Alberta knew that government was listening. No longer do those who seek advanced knowledge need to move away and leave their homes. They need not incur additional economic hardship to achieve their dreams. Our future leaders and entrepreneurs can remain in their home communities to obtain university education. This serves to support education, families, and communities, and that, Madam Speaker, is what right looks like. Knowledge is an invaluable asset, and when we couple this opportunity with current tuition freezes, we can see how the government is empowering opportunity to flourish. When we empower Albertans, we strengthen our communities. That, fellow members, is what right looks like.

Any modern society also has its problems. Fellow members, I am saddened by the opioid crisis. I wish to extend my sincere condolences to all Albertan families impacted by this. While we attempt to address this alarming situation, I am proud that this government recognizes that addiction has no bias. Our opioid crisis affects everyone. It calls on all of us to open our minds to the trauma that those who are vulnerable to addiction experience and to open our hearts with empathy to those in need of support.

I am proud to be part of a government that recognizes that our future must include consideration for those suffering from addictions and social disadvantages. Recently our government has increased funding to assist in combating the crisis. Doctors, nurse practitioners, and primary care providers will have increased access to opioid dependency treatment in community clinics as well as overdose prevention training and naloxone kits for front-line workers.

My community of Red Deer is privileged to have our Safe Harbour and our government's investment in 20 medically supported detox beds. Since its opening in 2017 it has provided treatment to 130 clients, with 89 clients actively receiving treatment. There is no wait-list, and treatment can generally be initiated the same day as the first consultation with the addiction physician. I have so much gratitude for and pride in the work that Safe Harbour does and for the heroes in my community that embrace those who need help.

Our government is responding in other ways as well. Recently the Associate Minister of Health announced a major expansion of community paramedic supports. Mobile community paramedics respond on-site to seniors and other Albertans with chronic conditions, reducing the use of ambulance transport, acute-care beds, and hospital resources. This solution reinforces the importance of providing in-home care and specialized supports.

Friends, I am aware of the importance of Red Deer regional hospital's call for expansion. I am forever thankful for the additional services that serve to accommodate central Albertans in the interim and incredibly proud that these needs are at the forefront of our government's thoughts. In this respect, Red Deer has been incredibly fortunate.

Better primary and secondary education is also coming to Red Deer. This current school year brought the opening of St. Joseph high school in Red Deer-North. I recently had the privilege of hosting the Minister of Culture and Tourism at our newest addition. Its diverse scholastic opportunities and its open learning concept are truly unique. Attached to the high school is the Red Deer Royals field house. In 2019 this renowned marching band will celebrate their 50th anniversary. They have received provincial, national, international, and world titles.

Also within Red Deer-North, Fairview elementary was one of the schools chosen to pilot our province's nutrition program. We all know children learn better when they have the resources to reach their potential, and I am proud to see our government respond to the well-being of our youngest citizens.

Madam Speaker and fellow members, everything our government does is for the future of Alberta, and this includes the recently introduced Energy Diversification Act. As contenders in a global market we know that when times are great, we flourish, and when global times are bad, we suffer. We need to recognize past trends and implement a strategy that decreases our susceptibility to the historic cycle of boom and bust.

In November 2014 Alberta fell upon tough economic times. We could not continue to make the same mistakes if we were going to strengthen our competitive advantage. As a province we need to accept that diversification enables change, and change is necessary to secure recovery and conquer tough times. Diversification is critically important for building an economy for the future. Throughout our mandate we stand firm that no Albertan is left behind. While we fight for new pipelines and better oil prices, it is important to seize the opportunity to diversify. We need not cower at change but embrace its opportunities.

When we look to the future, we must also consider our environment. We are in a position to harness diversification while providing strong environmental stewardship. This, fellow members, reframes our economic development holistically. That is what right looks like. Technology, research, development, and diversification are components of an equation that delivers economic and environmental balance. Our mandate to support environmental stewardship through our climate leadership plan also aligns with our commitment to the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples. We cannot embrace our future without recognizing where we have been. Everyone deserves a clean environment. We are committed to engaging in dialogue and thoughtfulness for all stakeholders with shared consideration.

Madam Speaker and fellow members, thank you for allowing me the opportunity to respond to the mandate set out in our next session. I speak with firm conviction that our path is established clearly and with the best interests of all Albertans in mind.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I want to thank the Member for Red Deer-North for her comments and for speaking so eloquently and kindly about Red Deer and the city that it is. I think back to my earlier memories of Red Deer, going there with the school band, actually. The provincial competition was always in Red Deer. I played trumpet in both the jazz band and the concert band, and we went there every year for competitions. It was always fun to go to Red Deer. Of course, who can forget Gasoline Alley, travelling through Red Deer and having to stop for gas or a snack in Gasoline Alley. A great city. Like I say, I was happy to hear the Member for Red Deer-North talk so kindly about that great city.

I did make a couple of notes here. She talked about the government making life better. She talked about the worst economic downturn. In particular, she talked about the boom-and-bust cycle, so I just wanted to ask a question on that. It seems like this government has been talking a lot about this oil and gas roller coaster. The Finance minister has talked about that on a couple of occasions. The Member for Calgary-Currie talked about the resource roller coaster. And even the MLA from West Yellowhead talked about this boom-and-bust economy.

The Member for Red Deer-North talked about this boom and bust, but what I find interesting is that when the budget came out – and I'm just going to take a couple of quotes from a couple of different news articles. March 20, Michelle Bellefontaine, CBC News: "Balanced Budget Tied to Trans Mountain Completion, Alberta Finance Minister Says. Looking for pipeline development to help balance the books." They quote the Finance minister: "We've built those into the budget in anticipation that Trans Mountain expansion and [Enbridge] Line 3 will be operational."

Even Dean Bennett from the Canadian Press said, "Alberta to Rely on Expected Trans Mountain Revenue to Balance Budget. Finance Minister . . . says Alberta is banking on anticipated revenue from an expansion of the Trans Mountain oil pipeline to balance the budget within five years." Again the Finance minister is quoted: "We've built (the revenue) into [the] budget because that's what everybody believes will happen."

We have this situation where the government talks about getting us off this boom-and-bust cycle and getting us off this resource roller coaster, but then they come out with a budget that completely relies on the oil and gas sector to get us out. I'm not sure how the government can kind of ride both sides of the fence on this one and is able to say that they're going to get us off this roller coaster but then rely on this roller coaster to balance the budget.

Of course, it is kind of a bit of a gamble that this government is taking on these pipelines because we don't know that they're going to get built. We sure hope they do. We would hope that the government would support all the pipelines in all different directions, but they seem to be fairly selective in the ones they support and don't support, and then sometimes their support doesn't seem quite as strong as what we would like to see.

Also as far as getting us off of this roller coaster of oil and gas revenue, you know, the Speech from the Throne didn't mention agriculture once. I couldn't find the word "agriculture" once in there. The closest they got was talking about rural crime. Of course, that's incredibly important. In fact, it was so important that last November we wanted to have an emergency debate on it. The government argued against it, and it didn't happen.

Another thing to get us off of this boom-and-bust cycle, this oil and gas roller coaster that they talk about, that was missing was forestry, another huge industry in Alberta that's been threatened by the caribou issue and that sort of thing.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, were you planning on allowing any opportunity for the Member for Red Deer-North to respond?

Mr. Loewen: Yes. For sure. I would like to ask the member about that in particular as far as how we can go from this government talking about the oil and gas roller coaster and the boom-and-bust cycle and then not mentioning anything about agriculture, depending on the oil and gas sector to bail us out of the deficits, these massive deficits they've been getting us into, and also, you know, not mentioning anything about forestry and how important that is to our industry here. I guess that's my question for the member, to kind of give us a bit of an idea how the government can balance that in their minds as far as, on one hand, expecting all this money from oil and gas revenue and, on the other hand, not talking about the other important industries that we have in our province and how that affects the economy of Alberta. I think there seems to be some disparity there. I'd hope that the member could kind of clear that up and maybe give us an idea how that kind of balance works with this government as far as having that oil and gas roller coaster and talking about it with such disdain and then relying on it, on the other hand, and then of course not mentioning anything about it in the budget.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and respond to the government's Speech from the Throne. I would like to take a moment to thank our amazing Lieutenant Governor for her grace and her hard work. It's always amazing to have her in here and be able to participate.

I'd like to respond to this speech, Madam Speaker, as an everyday person, not as an MLA but a regular Albertan, the person that the government speaks about in their throne speech. I am a regular, everyday person, a mother and a wife, a business owner, and a fierce advocate for special needs. As a regular Albertan I see the very real and consequential actions of government and government policies, their words and their actions and how they impact the very people that they're here to represent.

I'd like to highlight a couple of examples from the throne speech that I thought were extremely thoughtful. It was very nice to hear about these things. I would like to thank the government and the Premier for their continued work to end executive perks and insider access. Madam Speaker, Alberta belongs to all of us, and a true democracy means that you cannot buy your seat at the table. Our taxpayer dollars should be directed to providing world-class services for the citizens of Alberta.

I also want to commend this government for their support for the Association of Alberta Sexual Assault Services and the amazing work that they have done to expand counselling support services. As we all know, Deb Tomlinson is an incredible human being. She's done so much to advocate on behalf of this particular group of people. I'm very proud to know her and the work that she's done and various groups that work with her. They all work so hard at these centres to provide for Albertans at their most vulnerable times and to offer preventative initiatives that they have developed. They're truly, truly remarkable human beings. I'm grateful to see that they will be better equipped to handle the influx of caseloads that we have. As we know, those have increased immensely in the last little while, especially with the economic downturn.

Sexual violence and harassment have absolutely no place in our society. It's important to say it in here, but it's an important statement to say wherever we go. The more that we say this statement, the more that it resonates, and the more that it matters. We all believe that, we all know that, but it's language that we just need to incorporate all the time. You wear it, and you live it, and you don't accept it. It's most important, I believe, that we continue to shine really bright lights into society and especially into these dark places so that society continues to understand how important it is.

Again, the government continually talks, and rightfully so, about the number of incredible women that they have on their side. We're a little bit smaller on our side but strong just as much. We very, very much appreciate the strong voice that comes from that and the importance of what that means and the impact it has on all of us and also the incredibly strong, wonderful men that we have surrounding us that support us through this and all people who have been impacted through sexual violence. Again, the more that the language is there, the more that it rolls off our tongues that we are not accepting of these things, the more that we lead by example. I'm very grateful for that.

These are important steps that will ensure a brighter future for all Albertans. Those highlights are truly important. Again, I'm extremely grateful.

But I do have to also point out some areas that I believe were not touched on or were touched on and I'm not quite sure I understand the government's point of view. One of those things and what is incredibly frustrating for me is for a government to tout that a recession is over. You know, I think every single person in this House has had people come through their offices with stories, unbelievably huge stories of pain and loss in various different aspects but especially with loss of jobs. You know, you can look at any smaller pieces of any larger puzzle independently and neglect to look at the overall picture, and you do not give a full story. That is manipulative, blatantly manipulative. You have to be able to look at the full story.

It's not to say that there aren't things that can happen that are wonderful and that are helping the economy and all these things, but that is a pat on the back that Albertans deserve. That goes to the people of this province, those people that have been through the various roller coasters, the various things that happened in this province, whether that's fires or floods or a downturn in the economy or failures in crops or whatever it is that all of the people that we have the privilege of representing go through. That resiliency, Madam Speaker, goes to them. The policies that happen in this House have ripple effects and impact those people definitively.

You can't just say that a recession is over. I hear that all the time from this government, and I don't quite understand why that language is being used. I have constituents in my office, Madam Speaker, pretty consistently, desperately pleading for help, men and women that have been out of work for months, have applied for hundreds of jobs, and believe me; these are humble folks. They're looking for just about anything. They don't have EI, it's about to run out, and they're asking what they're supposed to do. If you could actually understand, Madam Speaker, the impact the words, "The recession is over," have on a group of people, thousands of people, that aren't there yet, that doesn't inspire that that change is going to be happening.

The Calgary Food Bank – and my husband is actually on the board of our food bank in Chestermere, and we've seen these numbers, too. The client numbers, I mean, have rarely been higher than in 2017, and the homeless shelter Inn from the Cold, in Calgary, said in November that they had been at capacity for nearly a year. Shelters and not-for-profits across Alberta are having to divert resources away from the vulnerable. Do you know why? Because of the carbon tax. Money that they would have had before, hundreds of thousands of dollars in some cases, is being diverted away from the help that they're able to give to vulnerable people. I mean, these folks are there to help these people. That's what they want to do, and money is being diverted away.

In fact, did you know, Madam Speaker, that these not-for-profits don't receive any rebates at all? So I'm curious. Are the homeless now supposed to start fundraising for the carbon tax as well? I'm curious because we have a group of people who are in desperate need. We have the people who are willing to provide that paying a carbon tax with zero exemptions and no rebates coming to these folks. These are the ones that help the people in this province. We can say from a government perspective all that we do, this side or the other. It's actually the people on the ground that do that work. They're the heroes of this story.

The interesting thing is that, you know, the government is touting jobs and job creation. There were 92,000 fewer payrolled jobs in Alberta at the end of 2017 than there were before the recession.

Mr. Nixon: Wow.

Mrs. Aheer: I know. It's really, actually, an unbelievable number. I mean, if you go into downtown – right? – it's really obvious. It's just empty. The whole concept of rush hour certainly doesn't exist the way that I understood it a few years ago. Then, 165,000-plus Albertans remain unemployed. That's 26,000 more people than when the NDP took office. So I really don't know how the government can in good conscience say that the recession is over, because as far as Albertans are concerned, we have a long way to go, Madam Speaker, a long way to go.

Really, this actually comes down to government policy, not government thinking that they know better than the average Albertan knows. Albertans are resilient. They know how to get through these things. They just need to have their government behind them.

The CEO of the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce had this to say on March 7, 2018: “Are the difficult times truly behind us? That’s not what I hear. Things on the ground appear to be still as much of a struggle as ever.” Literally, I can take that statement almost verbatim and implant that into my office, and even more so, not even just at my office, everywhere. All of us travel all over the province and meet people all the time. We’re all hearing this. There’s no way that I’m the only one that’s hearing this. We need to be very realistic about where we are, Madam Speaker, and have an honest discussion about how difficult it is for Albertans right now.

There’s something extremely gratifying about being in this position and being able to try and help people as much as possible, but the hardest days for me are when somebody comes through your doors and has these stories and you just don’t know what to do. It’s actually quite overwhelming.

There was another piece. I was a little shocked to realize that other than a brief reference to the PDD review, which has really been steeped in mystery – I mean, we don’t really know what’s happening with that – the government made absolutely no reference to people with disabilities. We are overspending by billions of dollars every year. We have a $2 billion debt repayment every year, yet there’s simply no mention about providing opportunities for a very abled population. As a mother of a now young man, an amazingly able child – he’s driving, he’s working, he’s doing all of these incredible things. He deserves to have the opportunity in life that every other Albertan child and adult gets. He should be given the same access to postsecondary education, the workforce, but unfortunately organizations that facilitate these opportunities do not have the resources to do this.

This isn’t a spend request, just in case that’s what’s going to come. This is about the fact that this government is overspending more than inflation and more than the economy can keep up. This is not an issue of revenue. This is an issue of overspending, and we have a responsibility to make sure that every single person in this province is able to live and breathe in a meaningful way and live an independent and as fulfilled life as they can.

Another highlight from the speech I’d like to touch on and that’s very close to my heart is regarding rural crime. I think it was one of the members that was talking about this from the government side. I mean, these stories just make you want to cry. I attended several meetings on rural crime. I had the privilege of being with my MP, Martin Shields, for one of the ones that we did, and the stories were just unbelievable. I mean, some of them just make you want to curl up. It’s quite terrifying, actually, what some of these families have been through.

I would like to talk about the truth about this and why I question if the government is actually going to be able to follow through with this investment. It’s an investment of half a billion dollars annually into police services across the province. Okay. To look at it on paper, that looks really decent, but the government knows – they know – that there are not enough RCMP. They know that. There are not enough. The government knows that these dollars will not produce more officers. You can pretend on paper as much as you want. You could put that you are going to put $4 billion into it. There are not enough RCMP officers, Madam Speaker.

The truth is that we have a national shortage. But instead of inspiring communities, coming up with other solutions for now before more innocent people, Madam Speaker, are robbed or worse, the government has falsely promised my rural families that they care when they know that we are years and years away from boots on the ground. There are not enough RCMP officers to go around, and the government knows that. I would love to know how that promise is going to be fulfilled. You can say whatever you want on paper, but we know, everybody in this House knows, that we do not have enough RCMP officers in Canada. It’s a national shortage.

I would love that explained to me, how in my community, where people are being robbed – we have families that leave their children with their grandparents and are being robbed four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, 10 times a year on the same properties, all of their things stolen. They have to claim insurance. Then they have to pay for the insurance and the replacement of those things. They’re sitting in their houses cowering as people are coming onto their properties, stealing their things. There is no way that the RCMP can get there in time because there are not enough. Our front-line workers are working like crazy to try and help as much as they can. In rural areas we’re talking about large distances.

Where is our public trust? The truth is that the government knows this, Madam Speaker, and is promising the people of our constituencies, the rural folks, that somehow they’re magically going to have boots on the ground. We know that this isn’t possible. I would love to have an answer to that question.

Now, in terms of the economy I understand why the government might feel that the tides have turned and sunny skies are here.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I was listening to the member talk about the rural crime issue, and I hear her. I’ve heard my constituents say – you know, we share a border, actually. I share a border with the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, and a lot of my constituents are experiencing the same problems as hers are. I hear that she’s concerned about not having RCMP officers hired in a reasonable amount of time, and that’s not an unreasonable thing to be concerned about.

You know, I have the same questions. It’s great to put money towards hiring officers, but having them actually be on the ground and doing the work that we want them to do is another part of the solution. I suppose that some of the ways that we’re trying to address that in the short term is also by hiring civilian officers who can file reports so that trained officers can be released from behind their desks and get out into the community and do the patrolling, so that they’re not stuck writing reports. Those are some short-term solutions in terms of getting boots on the ground.

But, you know, the member is right, and she identifies concerns with rural crime. What we did is that we spoke to the RCMP and the Crown prosecutors and asked them: what resources do you need to help start addressing this problem? The answer they gave us was: we need additional funding for more officers and for trying to get officers out from behind their desks so that they can be in the community. So the approach we’ve taken to try to address this problem is speaking directly to the police and asking them what their solution is. The member is now saying that she disagrees with what the RCMP are telling us the solution is.

I agree with the member’s concerns, and she raises some valid points, but I’ve yet to hear any solutions that they would provide. So I’d like to give the member some opportunity to tell us solutions rather than complaints.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, and thank you to the member. It’s interesting that you should bring that up because I’ve also spoken with our local RCMP. The interesting thing is that those solutions that you're referring to, the ones that you're talking about, actually came from the RCMP. That was a long consultation because we actually did consult. That is part of the solution. The one that you spoke about is one that we actually came up with on our side. [laughter] In fact, it came up from our side because we actually consulted.

I find this interesting, Madam Speaker, that they laugh when not a single NDP member in this House attended any single rural crime meeting that we put together. Everybody was invited. Not one. In fact, we were at all of them. We talked about them at a federal level, at a provincial level.

The member actually brings up a very valid point about bringing in local people to work with officers. That is an RCMP idea and initiative, one that worked. When I was a young kid, we had parents on patrol, we had local community patrols. We had all of these kinds of things that worked together with the local police to help.

One of the solutions, in fact, to the member, is actually to inspire public trust, to be able to inspire people to help out their communities, to actually layer it back into the community, to not take this approach from a top-ended level that somehow the government knows better about what's going on in these communities. Reach out to your communities; that's a solution. Talk to the RCMP; that's a solution. Attend our town halls; that's a solution.

We have families all over the place in these rural communities that have absolutely no idea how to move forward. Even still, if they are inspired to have ideas of how to work together, to bring together community as opposed to a government that provides divisive behaviour versus bringing communities together, that would provide a ton of solutions. Instead, the government makes false promises to our rural folks that somehow they're going to get boots on the ground. That's what was in the Speech from the Throne, not about any other solutions.

I can give you a ton of solutions, and – you know what? – I'm not taking credit for any of them. They came from the people that I represent who live it, breathe it, feel it, and are impacted every single day by what is going on. It is not my place to come up with solutions for people. I didn't live what they went through. These people have the absolute – it's a crisis. And I find it absolutely appalling that members of the government would feel that they can laugh because they think that – they didn't attend any of our town halls or any of the ones that were put on by any of these rural people.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and respond to the throne speech. There's a lot of content in this throne speech, and unfortunately with the little bit of time that I have in front of the Chamber, I can't cover it all. I do miss my time in the fall, serving as Leader of the Opposition, when I'd have a full 90 minutes. I'm sure you miss it, too, Madam Speaker, listening to me go on for 90 minutes. Instead, I have my 15 minutes.

The first thing I'd like to talk about. You know, the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View spoke about this a bit. In the throne speech it talks about how everything is okay now. Lots of optimism, and the problems are fixed, and we're all hunky-dory and moving forward. The problem, Madam Speaker, is that when I talk to my constituents, they certainly don't feel that way, and when I talk to your constituents and constituents of the members across the way, they don't feel that way. I was in Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater a few weeks ago having a speech. They were frustrated. They didn't feel like it was going that way. Vegreville, Viking: I dropped by there, and I've been to Red Deer. They don't feel that everything is okay.

Probably the reason they don't feel everything is okay is that there are some numbers that show it's not. First off, there are 165,300 unemployed Albertans right now in this province, 26,000 more than when this government took office. It doesn't feel that good. In January 10,500 full-time jobs were lost in Alberta, not fixed, and 43,000 unemployed youth are in this province right now. There were 92,000 fewer payrolled jobs in Alberta at the end of 2017. Calgary currently has the second-highest unemployment rate in the country, at 7.9 per cent, and Edmonton is currently tied for the third-highest unemployment rate of any large city in this country.

ATB Financial's chief economist, Todd Hirsch, says that people are making less money, that job prospects are still there, but they're at lower paying opportunities.

The Edmonton Chamber of Commerce says: "Are the difficult times truly behind us? That's not what I hear. Things on the ground appear to be still as much of a struggle as ever."

From the Calgary Chamber of Commerce: "73% of businesses surveyed reported that their costs will increase due to the carbon levy."

The Bank of Canada says that there will be about 60,000 fewer jobs by 2019 directly as a result of the minimum wage increases across this country.

The list goes on and on.

Our constituents certainly don't feel like it's okay. And when they read that from this government and they hear that from this government, they feel like this government doesn't hear them. A lot of that is because this government doesn't talk to them. As you know, Madam Speaker, this government spends most of their time talking to themselves or within a bubble of people that have the NDP world view.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View did a great job just a few moments ago in her speech talking about this in the context of rural crime, which is also in the throne speech. The rural crime issue has been a big issue in rural Alberta for two years. Particularly, last year it increased significantly. Communities that I represent, counties that I represent: some of them have seen increases of 400, 500 per cent in their property crime rates. That's an epidemic. The police have been saying it's an epidemic.

I've been coming to this Chamber and saying for a long time on behalf of my constituents that there's a serious problem with rural crime, and so have my colleagues. For most of that time this government was silent on that issue. Even their rural members who knew that and were hearing that from their constituents sat there very silently and never advocated on their behalf.

We filled the galleries, Madam Speaker, with hundreds of people from all across this province, all across central Alberta in particular. They were the ones who came up, who travelled here to say to this government: hey, we have a serious problem. I moved to have an emergency debate in this House about that serious problem, and the government spoke against that emergency debate, to not grant it to them.

Now, something happened with this government over Christmas and over the break, particularly the last few weeks. I suggest to you, Madam Speaker, that it was probably the election of the Member for Calgary-Lougheed as Leader of the Official Opposition and the uniting of the Conservative Party and the fact that the NDP are still stuck in the high 20s in the polls and can't seem to go any higher than that. All of a sudden they realized: "We've got a big problem. We do have some rural Alberta seats. We need to try to hold them."

I don't know if that's possible based on stuff like Bill 6 and rural crime. I don't know. You may know better than me, Madam Speaker. I would suggest probably not. Rural Albertans, of which I am one, will not forget that easy how we have been treated by this government for the last three and a half years.

But that's what changed over Christmas. Then all of a sudden the government comes back, and they say, "We're going to solve the problem; we're going to solve the problem; we're going to put in $11 million," I believe it was, Madam Speaker, "towards the employment of some new officers and some Crown prosecutors." One of the issues for sure is a shortage of law enforcement officers and a shortage of Crown prosecutors. I will point out that that announcement doesn't even get the Crown prosecutors back up to the level that they were at before they were reduced.

You know, it's a step in the right direction – good for the government for finally taking it – but the problem is that when you then go and look at the announcement, all of those officers are coming from detachments across rural Alberta. They're being removed from those detachments, and they're being put into these other spots.

I represent detachments that are already under extreme stress, under capacity already, things like maternity leave, stress leave, reasonable reasons why officers are on stress leave. They're not back because of those reasons, and now they're going to see their colleagues be removed. A great example is the staff sergeant at Rocky Mountain House, a dear friend of mine, Mark Groves, who has been bumped and promoted up to try to deal with this rural crime issue in central Alberta. He's a great person for that job, but now we don't have Mark doing the work in Rocky Mountain House, one of the busiest detachments in this province.

I can expect, possibly, that we are going to continue to see the capacity and the stress issues and people having to go on leave because now there is even less capacity for these officers that are dealing with that. Now, the number one reason for that is because there are not enough officers in the depot. The RCMP do not have enough officers to fill that.

If this government had taken the time to go talk to anybody in Red Deer county, Lacombe county – those are big counties. Maybe call up the reeve and say: "Hey, what's going on? Your crime rates have been up. What's been going on?" You know what they'd tell you? They've been trying to hire RCMP officers. The money is there from the county. They themselves have been trying to solve this problem for the provincial government. They can't get the officers. One, two, three years go by, and they can't get the officers because there is nobody there.

So then the government wants to tell the public – and this is what the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View I think was so upset about, and rightly upset about – that they've solved this problem. But they're misleading Albertans. They haven't solved the problem, and they haven't taken the time to talk to anybody that's experiencing this problem.

Back home over the constituency break another elderly man out at Rocky Mountain House – I know him – was robbed at his place and beaten and put in the hospital. This is a real problem. This is a serious problem. It is an epidemic, like I said it was when I first came to this Chamber. It is a serious issue, not consulted. Then they want my constituents and this side of the House to trust them, to trust that they've got this fixed. Well, how can we when they keep misleading us, when the government keeps misleading us?

You know, the carbon tax was also talked about in this throne speech. This is a tax on my constituents and your constituents that this government never campaigned on. In fact, they hid it from Albertans during their campaign. They hid it from Albertans when they door-knocked. They hid it during the debates when their leader was in the debates. They hid that carbon tax from the people of Alberta. Then they brought in the largest tax increase in Alberta. Not a lot of trust there.

Then they said: "This is going to be the amount. We won't raise it." Then their ally and their good friend Justin Trudeau called them up, and they flew down to Ottawa and said: "What do you want, Justin? We're in. Whatever you need." And they raised that tax. Another promise broken.

Then the Premier – the Premier – says:

Every penny raised by the carbon levy will be rebated back to Albertans or put back to work for our economy in new... initiatives.

She's referring to the carbon tax here.

This is not a situation where we're going to apply it against the deficit, for instance, to maintain current operations, or anything like that.

Then we sit in this Chamber, Madam Speaker, and we read the budget, and we find out that that's exactly what they're doing. They've brought in a backdoor PST because they knew that in this province you have to have a referendum if you want to bring in a PST, and they knew that Albertans disagreed with their carbon tax. They know that Albertans disagree with the PST, and they didn't want to go back to the boss and say: can we bring in this tax? So they snuck it in and misled Albertans and told Albertans: we won't use it for general revenue. Now they're doing it. Trust? I don't think you can trust that.

Rebates. Let's talk about rebates. You've got a 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax in this budget, that was hidden in the budget – we're starting to see a bit of a pattern here – but it's been admitted to now by the Finance minister's office. Of that 67 per cent tax increase, is any of that going to rebates? No. There's no increase in rebates, totally against the promise that the Premier has made.

Now we find out that seniors living on fixed incomes are being charged 30 per cent of their carbon tax rebates to pay the rent. Now, they still have to pay carbon tax on everything because this is a tax on everything, as we know. It's a tax on the seniors' centre that they go recreate at. It's a tax on the swimming pool they participate in. It's a tax on every grocery that they buy. It's a tax on everything because everything comes by train or car in our society, so everything goes on fuel. They've lost 30 per cent. Then when the seniors say, "Whoa, whoa, whoa; this isn't fair," the hon. minister of seniors says: "That's okay. They've got 70 per cent left." Seventy per cent? First, you said that they were going to get all the rebate; now you're letting people take 30 per cent of their rebates.

Here we go. You've got a tax you never campaigned on, never told Albertans about. You hid it, tricked them, brought it in. Now you've got it. Then you tell them that it's going to stay at $40. Now it's up to $50. Now you've got a 67 per cent increase in the tax in the budget. Now you've got the tax being used for general revenue. Now you've got seniors losing their rebates after this government told seniors in my community to fund raise for the carbon tax, one of the most ridiculous things that I think anybody could ever say to seniors in our communities, that have built them.

They want us to trust them. That's what they're asking with this throne speech, but given that history just on the carbon tax alone, plus the lack of consultation on things like crime, a pattern of this government – I know you know, Madam Speaker, that this government does not consult outside of their inner circle. Bill 6 was a great example of that, and the list goes on and on. But they want us to trust them, give them a blank cheque: "It's okay. It's okay." Well, we can't. We can't, especially when you look at the fact that at $50 for the carbon tax, the average Albertan's heating bill will be up $250. That's significant. I can tell you that I know for sure that the members across the way are hearing from constituents about their heating and electricity bills, and I bet you their constituents won't be very happy about spending $250 on natural gas because of this government's cash grab on them.

But the government's own tax adviser says that the only way that you could actually get an impact on the environment is to raise the carbon tax to $200. Now, if you've got this pattern of misleading Albertans by this government since the very first day they took office, since before they took office – they misled them while they were campaigning – how are we supposed to trust that they're not now going to raise this carbon tax to $200, jump up everybody's gas bills, you know, $1,000 plus? I don't think we could take their word for it. I know the constituents that I represent wouldn't take their word for it. Instead, they want to come talk about this throne speech.

The other part of this speech that I find humorous, sadly, is that there's a section in it called Path Back to Balance. Then we see this government bring forward a budget. A budget. This year this government predicted that we would be in surplus. Now we find out that this government's numbers, something we said would happen, are $96 billion in debt over the next four years. Ninety-six billion dollars in debt.

This government has an $8.8 billion deficit. They have raised spending by 16 per cent since the PC government was in power. They love to stand in this Chamber and say: "Well, we do it differently than the PCs. It's the PCs' fault." Well, look, I come from the former Wildrose legacy party, and I can point out some things the PC Party did wrong. But what I can tell you is this. This government raised things 16 per cent since they took over. They put in an $8.8 billion deficit, and they got our province on track for one of the largest intergenerational thefts against our children, $96 billion. When the PCs left office, they were under $13 billion in debt. This government is getting close to two-thirds of the way there just in this year's deficit.

They want us to trust them. They want to blame other governments. In 2018-2019 the debt has increased by 321 per cent under this government's watch. They can't blame anybody else for that. Under their own projections, if they're still in office in 2021 – I hope they're not – it'll be a 500 per cent increase. By 2019, when that $96 billion in debt arrives, it'll be a 646 per cent increase. A path to balance inside your throne speech? It's crazy, Madam Speaker.

The MLA for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater said in the Smoky Lake Signal on April 3: we dropped our 2018 budget last week; it's looking pretty balanced. He goes on to say that the NDP budget was able to curb spending more or less. A member of this government wants to go to his newspaper and say that a 16 per cent increase in spending is getting spending under control, that an $8.8 billion deficit is getting things back to balance, that putting a budget before this Chamber that will see us go to $100 billion in debt and see my grandchildren still having to pay for the mess that this government has created is a path back to balance. Well, it's not, Madam Speaker. It's ridiculous to even assert that.

But if the fact is that this government thinks that that is a path back to balance and that that is getting spending back in control, then we are in a lot of trouble. This government has no plan to get our fiscal house back in order. They will continue, it appears, with their budget, despite what they say inside their throne speech, to destroy our economy. They will continue to put debt on our children and our children's children, and they don't want to talk about the consequences of that. You know, we're looking at, between 2018-2019 and 2023-2024, under this government's projections, about $17.63 billion in interest payments alone.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Westhead: Yes, under 29(2)(a). Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre said just near the end of his speech there that – he claims that there are certain things that the government doesn't want to talk about. You know, I guess I'd like to ask him the same question, if there are things that he doesn't want to talk about. I know that there are quite a few good things happening in his constituency.

I know that there's a pipeline, for example, under construction. It just really strikes me as odd that a member like him doesn't talk about the good things. I mean, certainly, it's within his rights as a member to talk about the things he's concerned about, but I would think that he would also want to talk about the good things that happen in his community. It just strikes me as odd that, you know, he accuses us of not talking about certain things. Meanwhile he neglects to talk about certain things, too, like the pipeline that's under construction.

There was an announcement that was made just a few days ago that I would wonder if he would want to talk about or perhaps answer a question I've got for him. There was $1.9 million from the federal and provincial governments that had gone towards the Mountain Rose Women's Shelter in Rocky Mountain House. This is funding that builds on our government's commitment to protect and support women and children that are affected by family violence. We're going to stand with survivors of violence. The new shelter is going to ensure that families have a safe and supportive place to live.

You know, the member doesn't like to talk about certain things, and I wonder if the reason he doesn't want to talk about things like a women's shelter is because of his own past, firing someone who came forward with concerns about sexual violence or sexual harassment. The member needs to look at his own behaviour and answer questions in his own mind and solve his own cognitive dissonance and help us understand why there are things like that that he doesn't want to talk about.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, for the question. First off, the Mountain Rose Women's Shelter is a great organization in Rocky Mountain House. I do a lot of fundraising with the women's shelter. I have a program based out of my office where we do baskets of hope, actually, for the ladies that are in the shelter. Often only toys are donated to the shelter for kids, so we focus with the community primarily on trying to make sure that we have Christmas for ladies that are in the shelter. In fact, the shelter auctions off a fishing trip with me every year, to come fishing on my boat, with the proceeds going to the women's shelter. A very big fan of that organization and the hard work that they're doing. I'm working hard with them personally to help them build their new building, and I thank the hon. member for bringing that up.

As for his other assertions, you know, trying to compare an organizational decision of a company that I owned, which was a mistake that the company made – we have apologized for that, and that situation was over a decade old – is kind ridiculous when his government called constituents inside my constituency and told fixed-income seniors to fund raise for the carbon tax, something that this government has never apologized for; when this government has ignored the swimming pool in Sundre when they say, "Hey, we may have to shut our doors"; when this government has ignored the AISH recipients inside my constituency who are crying out for help because of the damage the carbon tax is doing to them and the fact that this government has taken no concrete action on PDD. It's pretty rich for that member to do that.

What's even worse is that I share a border with that member. In fact, not too far away from my ranch, right on the other side of the road, is the member's riding. He's never spoken to any of those constituents. He's never come and talked to them about Bill 6. When the agriculture industry was being affected, he didn't care, never left his office. My office had to help service all those constituents. Now, fortunately for them and for me, they'll be my constituents after the next election because of the boundary redraw, and they're very happy about that.

It's disappointing that this government wants to talk about the past and not about their actions now and that they still have not stood up in this House and apologized to the seniors of Sundre that they told to fund raise to pay for your ridiculous carbon tax.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will recognize the Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and respond to Her Honour's Speech from the Throne. Over the last few years Alberta has experienced the longest and deepest recession in a generation. Our government had a choice: to slash programs and services that Albertans rely on and to follow through with the previous government's plans, which would have seen cuts to health care, schools without enough teachers to meet enrolment growth, the introduction of a hospital room waiting tax, and a continuation of a decades-long infrastructure deficit – our government chose a different path. We stabilized funding for education and health care, and we invested in infrastructure repairs and upgrades to ensure that our public infrastructure is around for generations to come. These are investments not just in our province's present but also in our future.

Nearly three years later the recovery is well under way, with 90,000 new jobs in 2017 and the fastest growing economy in the nation. As we've heard in this House, manufacturing is up, housing starts are up, exports are up, retail sales are up, and drilling activity is up. These are all good signs and good news for the people of Calgary-Acadia and indeed across Alberta. But we know that the recovery hasn't reached every household. We know that there is more work to be done.

Our government is committed to a recovery that is built to last and that focuses on all Albertans, one that supports the diversification of our economy and that builds on our strength and our ingenuity as Albertans, which is why I'm so very proud of our government's work to diversify and support new and growing industries in our province such as the digital industries tax credit and the creation of new seats in our postsecondary education system to support this program. By increasing access to digital media and tech education, Albertans will be able to train for great careers in this growing sector. It will also ensure that Alberta-based employers in this sector are able to grow their businesses with highly trained, talented people right here at home. Madam Speaker, this is a winning proposition all around.

Now, as a born-and-raised Albertan I know how much our oil and gas industry has contributed to our province's prosperity. Indeed, my family has benefited greatly from the industry as well. My father's career has been in oil and gas as an engineer. In fact, his career started in Calgary, when he and my mom moved here from Manitoba nearly 40 years ago. It's in fact their anniversary this spring, so I'd like to also take this moment to extend to my parents a happy 40th anniversary as Albertans. My youngest brother is also an engineer in the oil and gas sector, and I myself spent many years in the industry. Throughout those years in the industry I learned a great deal not just about the industry but also specifically about pipelines and the importance of pipelines as a safe and efficient way to transport our product to the coast and indeed across our country.

These markets to the coast enable us to access markets around the world so that, truly, we can move away from selling our product to our greatest competitor. I would argue that one of the greatest challenges facing our economy is that we are selling our product at a discount to the United States. By not receiving the full value for our oil products, Albertans and indeed all Canadians are losing out. It's impacting resource royalty revenue. It's impacting job creators. It's having an impact on employment levels. Truly, this is something that impacts us not just here in Alberta but in communities in B.C., communities on our east coast, and across the country.

Madam Speaker, this land lock must end. The Trans Mountain pipeline has received the necessary approvals, and it is time that this pipeline be built, which is why I am proud to be part of the government that is working so hard to ensure that this pipeline is built. When necessary we even intervened in court, and we have won. We have stepped up when the B.C. government attempted to regulate something it had no right to regulate, and we will continue to do whatever it takes. We will not hesitate to invoke legislation to protect workers in our energy industry and the resources that we own, just as Premier Peter Lougheed did. Every option is on the table, and we will get this pipeline built.

Madam Speaker, I'd like to take a moment to speak about our government's work to address the opioid crisis. But before I begin, I want to start with a personal message to my fellow Albertans. To anyone who's listening, if you or a loved one is struggling with opioid abuse or opioid use, you are not alone. We have your back. Nearly two Albertans a day are dying from fentanyl-related overdoses. These are family members and friends from all corners of our province, from all walks of life. They leave behind grieving families and friends and deep holes in our communities. To all who have lost a loved one, know that we grieve with you. I am so deeply sorry for your loss. We will continue to do all that we can to save lives and prevent more overdoses.

To that end, we are investing in new primary care supports so that individuals and families can more easily access treatment and counselling in their home communities. A 9 and a half million dollar grant is increasing the ability of family physicians to respond to the opioid crisis. Making sure that we identify and open new treatment opportunities and harm reduction programs in all corners of our province is a priority. We've opened more opioid dependency treatment clinics, detox beds, and telehealth programs to reach all across our province and to serve an additional 3,500 patients each year. Receiving Suboxone or methadone treatment helps people to reach stability in their lives and to continue on their journey to recovery. It's been called the gold standard and a game changer for individuals living with a medical condition that is a substance-use disorder. We will be opening more clinics in other communities in Alberta in the weeks and months to come.

Nearly 50,000 naloxone kits have been distributed in communities across the province, and more than 3,300 overdose reversals have been voluntarily reported. Alberta's first supervised consumption services opened in Calgary in October. As of the end of February they've had close to 7,000 visits, and staff have reversed 119 overdoses. Alberta's harm reduction agency, ARCHES, opened its supervised consumption site in February, and staff there work with 90 to 100 clients every day. Supervised consumption services are now also open in Edmonton, including for in-patients at the Royal Alexandra hospital, a first in North America.

We worked closely with the Kainai First Nation to make sure that that community had the life-saving services provided by an overdose prevention site. We worked quickly to secure federal approval to deploy the trailer that had been used to provide temporary supervised consumption services at the Sheldon M. Chumir Health Centre in Calgary before the permanent service had opened there.

Our response has been and continues to be guided by the Minister's Opioid Emergency Response Commission, which includes public health leaders, law enforcement, community workers, and Albertans who've experienced this crisis first-hand. The Minister's Opioid Emergency Response Commission has made 26 recommendations as of February of 2018 and forms the basis of our co-ordinated response to this crisis. The first 12 of those recommendations were officially accepted by myself and publicly posted on the opioid website in late 2017, and the subsequent 14 recommendations have been accepted by myself and are expected to be publicly posted and released shortly, but all are in the process of being implemented.

Some of the successes over the past year include, as I noted, distributing over 50,000 naloxone kits, opening the first supervised consumption services in Calgary and gearing up for other locations in Edmonton and Lethbridge, and improving access to treatment by opening new clinics and programs in places like Grande Prairie, Fort McMurray, Sherwood Park, central Alberta, and via telehealth to all corners of our province. We've also enabled firefighters, police officers, and other emergency responders to inject naloxone. We've worked with First Nations and Métis partners to gather data, and we've established a new $5 million grant program to fund indigenous communities to allow them to create and roll out opioid-related initiatives in their communities.

By the end of fiscal 2017 government had spent the total $30 million allocated for recommendations made by the commission and approved by myself. While it will take time to see the number of deaths decrease, the commission is working closely with service providers and people with lived experience to save lives. We continue to work with the commission and our partners to build and strengthen actions to prevent opioid overdoses and provide appropriate supports and service options for those struggling with opioid use.

I often hear from members of the community about the importance of treatment and ensuring that the mental health supports that individuals need are available for them as they take steps forward in their recovery, which is why I was so proud to see the inclusion and the announcement of legislation that will be forthcoming from our government to ensure that there is safety and quality care in private treatment facilities. This is something that is long overdue, Madam Speaker, and I think really speaks to the former government's unwillingness to acknowledge that substance use is a medical health condition and requires a medical response.

In the months to come we'll continue to expand public treatment, continue to expand harm reduction, and continue to expand public education. By working together and treating this like the health crisis that it is, we can save lives and work to stop the devastation and the heartbreak that is caused by this crisis.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I was very pleased to hear of the hon. member's efforts with respect to safe consumption sites. Certainly, in the community that I represent, in Lethbridge, there is one such site as a result of the business community in my city as well as mayor and council, front-line workers, the fire and EMS chief, the police chief, and others throughout the community and many advocates asking for this to be so.

So it was with great dismay that we saw the Leader of the Opposition come into our city and lecture our police chief, our fire and EMS chief, our business community, our mayor and council, our front-line health care workers on how they ought to be responding to this crisis. This site was some months and years in the making and certainly as a result of community action and community coming forward. Certainly, in Lethbridge many people, Madam Speaker, found that to be an insult, and it was a grave mistake on the part of the Leader of the Official Opposition to be so strident and ideological in his condemnation of this site in my city.

Madam Speaker, I'm wondering if the member can talk a little bit about what has happened since that site opened, how many lives have been saved, and any other details that she's heard from the community, and share those details with the House because in my view this is a great legacy of this hon. member, these safe consumption sites. They have saved lives, and we ought to be very, very proud of the work that she has done in the public interest in this province.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Madam Speaker and to the member for the very important question. I really need to take a moment to commend the city of Lethbridge, their leadership at the council level as well as police, other first responders, the mayor, and the community agencies such as ARCHES, which have really come together to find local solutions to the opioid crisis in their community, drawing on their experience of their community.

You know, when I spoke with the chief of police, one of the comments he made was that we can't enforce our way out of this problem. Ultimately, in order to address the opioid crisis, we need to provide the supports that individuals need so that they may make their way from drug use through treatment when they are ready.

I, too, was dismayed by the Leader of the Opposition's comments. The fact of the matter is that you can't get well after you've died. We have lost far too many Albertans by pretending that substance use is a personal choice, that it's something people just decide that they're going to do. No one chooses substance use. No one chooses to put their life at risk in that way. In so many ways I think that the shame and the stigma that was evidenced by the member opposite's comments really worsens the problem in many ways.

I have heard from so many family members who've lost a loved one who said that they didn't know what to do to help their child, they didn't know where to turn, they felt shame that their child was struggling, and because there was no one to turn to, they ended up losing their child. My heart breaks for those families, Madam Speaker, especially because we know better now. We know that this is a public health concern. We know that there are safe and effective treatments, medical treatments, available.

That is why, Madam Speaker, it is so important for us to be expanding access to these treatments through primary care networks, through family doctors, and working to address some of that stigma that can still exist in parts of our communities. Every person in our province struggling with substance use deserves dignity and respect and a chance to make a choice for treatment another day.

That is why I am so proud of the work of supervised consumption services to be able to support people. Since the ARCHES site has opened in Lethbridge, we've seen between 90 and 100 people coming each and every day. These are individuals that would have been at risk of overdose. One of the really fantastic things, in my opinion, about supervised consumption services is not just that there are medically trained professionals to intervene at the first sign of overdose . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wish to speak to this matter? The hon. Member for Howwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to respond to the throne speech that was given on the 8th of March. It's no doubt that members on the other side of the House have put a lot of effort into the preparation going into this session, and I want to acknowledge the hard work they've done. However, I'm still a little disappointed that many families in our province are still struggling under the weight of the recession and the added burdens this government has inflicted on them in recent years.

We were all relieved when we finally heard the measures the Premier and her caucus were going to make to get British Columbia to back away from their illegal point of their plan and effectively make sure that all Canadians knew their resolve. They stated in their Speech from the Throne that they "refuse to let anyone turn their backs on the thousands upon thousands of working people in our energy sector." They affirmed that they would "do whatever it takes" to get the pipeline built, but reality is that time is ticking, another year has gone by, and there's still no pipeline built.

Struggling families have not only been stifled with unemployment; they've been burdened with a huge tax that this government never campaigned on. I find it ironic that while they spoke about making sure that consumers have more predictable bills and that investors have more certainty, there's no mention of the huge carbon tax, that is hurting families, businesses, and investors, a tax they never campaigned on or spoke about in their throne speech, a tax that conveniently funnels more revenue to government coffers to spend on whatever government decides.

We've continually said over and over again that there is a scientific consensus that anthropogenic climate change is real, yet they try and shift the conversation and say that we're climate change deniers just because we do not believe in their tax. We're not pro carbon tax politicians, and the politicians on the other side of the House, who are, can't even tell us by how much the taxes will reduce emissions, nor did they dare to talk about it in their Speech from the Throne. As a matter of fact, in the recent budget the NDP admitted – and we knew that this was the case all along – that their carbon tax is simply about grabbing more tax revenue for the government.

It talked about how Albertans step up to defend one another and how, when they're down, we help each other. It sounds more like a pep talk to struggling families to step up to the plate and help each other out, without the devastating carbon tax. They have, after all, told our seniors to hold fundraisers to help pay for the carbon tax. They're worried that they will lose their recreational facilities due to the exorbitant costs.

They spoke about billions of dollars for schools, hospitals, and public services having actually evaporated and how thousands of good jobs have been tossed aside and how money that should be put in the pockets of working Canadians has been directed south of the border. These statements aren't inaccurate. They are. But where is this government to help keep the families and the struggling businesses? They've inflicted the economy with a huge so-called carbon tax, which is really a sales tax. If we're going to be honest, they've hurt the economy with their reckless and harmful policies and legislation.

Businesses have gone south of the border, and they've told us why. They've left due to huge increases that cut into their bottom line and have no choice but to move. Struggling businesses that were hit recently by the recession don't need to be hit with a carbon tax. Minimum wage increases and new labour legislation are putting an unnecessary burden on businesses here in Alberta. The $15-an-hour pledge for the minimum wage is not and was not addressing equality at all, like the NDP wants to portray, but instead increasing Albertans' wage so that the government gets more in the form of taxes. If that was what this government is really concerned about, they would increase the basic personal amount, which would help employers and employees alike without increasing everyone's tax.

Can I just emphasize right now that the new labour legislation that changed the Employment Standards Code affected small, medium, and large businesses in so many ways? Many of them already have implemented the carbon tax and the minimum wage increase, and they cannot make ends meet. The rules governing holiday pay, overtime, and vacation increased labour costs. These were drastic for some and, unfortunately, fatal for others. Employees that worked in restaurants and businesses that could not take another blow from the government ended up not only getting holiday, overtime, and vacation increases, but they've actually lost their jobs.

Layering small costs on top of small costs on top of small costs ends up being big costs that the businesses just can't keep up with. The government talks about how businesses have moved south of the border. Yes, they have, and for good reason. This province has lost billions of dollars in investment capital and will have, with that money moving south, a potential brain drain in the future.

The throne speech talks about choices that were made during the downturn and how the government did not rest idle or turn their backs on the day-to-day needs of people and families. Can I just say that if the people of Alberta truly felt in their hearts that this was the case, then the government should not have had to say that?

The speech spoke of a path back to balance and how once the budget was released, it would show this plan, but Albertans are having a hard time seeing any balance in the budget just dropped a few short days ago. The budget actually included more spending and included an $8.8 billion deficit, that will lead to an overall $93 billion deficit in five short years. I'm not sure how this budget will lead to a balanced budget in the future.

It's truly discouraging to hear that our province's debt load is currently at $54.2 billion this year. In a province that was effectively debt free a short 14 years ago, this leaves us with interest payments on the debt of almost $2 billion a year, and that number is supposed to climb to $4 billion a year in the next few years. Let's hope we don't get another credit downgrade. This is unsustainable, and our children and grandchildren will not be afforded the lifestyle we are accustomed to if we leave this debt to them.

Also, saying that this government is committed to making sure taxes on people and businesses will remain the lowest in Canada is really not adequate. More needs to be done. Albertans will not be able to withstand the 67 per cent increase to the carbon tax that's coming and the sales tax in disguise. This government knows that. The budget does nothing to show the people of Alberta the NDP's commitment to that end.

Now, the throne speech talks about crime; to be exact, protecting Albertans from crime. Rural Albertans are concerned about their safety and protection of their homes. The speech says that this must change. And while I'm glad that the government has finally come to a conclusion after we've loudly raised the issue with them over the past few years, it's really bad in rural Alberta. This is where the change is needed. Let's not talk about this anymore; let's take some action. Let's see the initiatives you spoke about being implemented. This is not something that can wait any longer. Rural Albertans need to see boots on the ground. That's where they're needed most. You spoke about this, but this needs to be resolved. We need to look at other measures to make sure rural Albertans and their properties are safe.

Now, I've had several town halls in my constituency, and this is what we've heard: we need to address the gaps in the current judicial system. Quite frankly, the amount of capital that's being allocated for the number of Crown prosecutors who are retiring and leaving right now: we're not even going to meet that demand, never mind adding more Crown prosecutors.

We need to review the resources for the RCMP. We need to review the centralized 911 system. We need to increase the resources for mental health treatment. We need to support designated crime reduction units and work closely with the rural crime watch.

Finally, to bring my speech to a close, I'd like to stress that no one in this Chamber cheers for Alberta to fail. We all work together in this opposition as Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. We'll do the best we can to continue robust debate and bring the truth to this Assembly.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any others wishing to speak to the Speech from the Throne? The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my privilege to rise in the House today to respond to the Speech from the Throne. I think the member who just spoke mentioned this being about choices. That was the theme of the throne speech. I think the key kind of line from that is when the Lieutenant Governor – and I got it right this time, which is great – said, “The cumulative impact of making different choices is paying off.” I think that if we wanted to summarize maybe the leitmotif of our government, it's that.

Of course, we do have an NDP government in Alberta. In May 2015 the people of Alberta decided that they wanted to make a different choice. They'd been told for decades that – you know, the refrain was this person called TINA, right? I mean, our predecessors liked to talk about TINA all the time. TINA was one of Klein's favourite people. Of course, TINA refers to: there is no alternative. The message that Albertans had been told for many years was that there was only one party that could govern the province and that there was only one way of doing things. The sort of sad irony of that is that that way of doing things was pretty much the opposite of many other jurisdictions.

The kind of choices we made in the past would be – I guess you could characterize it as reverse Keynesianism. Classic Keynesianism is the idea that, you know, there are going to be boom-and-bust cycles, that that's something that comes with our free-market system. The government does have a very important role in evening that out, and they do that by spending more money, borrowing money, if necessary, during a downturn in order to keep the economy from continuing to sink, and then they start to work to restrain spending, carefully and responsibly, once the economy starts to recover.

In Alberta we tended to do it the opposite way. When the economy started tanking, the idea was: “Oh, well, what we need to do is cut spending. We need to slash infrastructure. We need to cut back on maintenance. We need to start laying off teachers. We need to start laying off nurses.” The refrain was: yes, you know, it's really unfortunate, it's too bad, but there is no alternative.

Now, of course, in the early spring of 2015, you know, Premier Prentice proposed his budget, which was very much framed that way, that we have no alternative, that we need to freeze or roll back spending, and that we need to increase a whole bunch of user fees, things that even at the time they'd know would slow down critical sectors of our economy such as the real estate sector and the energy sector. It just sort of goes on. I think Albertans made a wise choice at that point and said: “We've had enough. We've given you guys 44 years, and this is the best that you can provide for us? This is what you're telling us?” I think that the last few years have shown that Albertans, despite what some of the opposition say, do know what they're about and that they made the right choice.

I think that where we are today as a province reflects that. We're leading the country in growth. We're the first out. Although there is a long way to go – and I think nobody here pretends otherwise – definitely all the numbers and all the indicators show that we are definitely on the right track.

One of the first rules – and I think one of the other members alluded to it, but maybe I'll take a different spin on it – is that when you're in a hole, the first thing you want to do is stop digging. Now, I mean, you could characterize that as “stop digging to spend resources,” but another way to look at “stop digging” is not to make things worse – that's sort of the first step, I think – and then to incent recovery. It's going to be a different type of recovery, based on different understandings.

You know, another choice that our predecessors made and that the new, rebranded incarnation is making is this misconception that the government really can't do anything to help diversify the economy, that you just have to leave these things up to the market and that the market always knows best. The problem with that is: what do you do when the market puts you in a way where you're dependent on just a few commodities and you don't have any recourse if they start to collapse?

I had one interesting discussion, just to give an idea of this sort of attitude. I won't mention who it is, but I did speak to a high-ranking member of the previous government. I asked him the question: how is it that you guys didn't have a ministry for economic development? Why didn't you have, you know, officials that are working directly on diversifying our economy? The response I got was sort of: well, we didn't need one. I mean, I'm not sure how far-sighted that was. We're not making that same mistake, so what we're choosing to do is that we're choosing to use the power of government to make investments happen where otherwise they wouldn't.

A key part of that – and I'm happy to see that referred to in the budget – is the petrochemicals diversification program. It's a wonderful program because, of course, if the projects don't go ahead, it doesn't cost the taxpayer a dime. In fact, the credits being provided are being paid for by property taxes and income taxes before it's even complete. I mean, it's an ideal program, and it managed to bring Alberta back into consideration for these types of projects. For many years people didn't think about Alberta for petrochemical diversification, and I'm happy to report that that has changed in a big way. I've spoken to companies and individuals from jurisdictions like Texas and other areas that are actively looking in Alberta. What's bringing them in? The wonderful work that they're seeing happening in the Industrial Heartland. Basically, now that we're going to be having a supply of polypropylene, that opens up a lot of doors for us, too.

That's a choice we made, and that's why people elect a government, to make these types of choices that are going to benefit people rather than pretending that they don't have a choice. There is an alternative, and I think that whatever else happens in the future, we've shown Albertans that there is another way of doing things. I think what it means is that in the future they're going to be a little bit harder to fool.

I'll talk about another thing where making choices would be – you know, we can go back to the last big recession or, of course, the Klein government, which our opposition tends to pump up, that this was a great thing. I mean, that was a choice about once again pretending there was no choice when there was, and the sad part is that in that situation it was done quite intentionally. Basically, the idea was that our deficit was totally out of control and that we had to hack spending or the province was going to go bankrupt.

Now, I'm sure some of the members remember an individual named Kevin Taft. At that time Kevin Taft blew the whistle on that approach. I don't know if I need to table this or not. He basically said that the fix is in, that the types of small cuts and, you know, the incremental approach that had been done by the Getty administration had slayed the deficit dragon and we did not have to have massive and brutal cuts.

You know, what about under Klein? They set that aside. Instead, they went to Albertans and they told Albertans: there is no alternative; we're going bankrupt; we need to slash and burn. Then, with that, came a lot of the other issues that we're dealing with to this day. So they used it as: "There is no alternative. We have to privatize services. We have to privatize Alberta Transportation. We have to privatize registries. We have to privatize liquor stores." Some of those changes maybe were good; some of those maybe we're starting to regret. But, I mean, it was done under them.

My suspicion is that if the opposition changes sides with us, you know, after the next election, it's going to be very much that narrative. I mean, right now they're basically claiming that they can do – well, let's just say that if they have a magic formula for how you can continue infrastructure spending, cut taxes, reduce the deficit, and do that with no impact to front-line services, I'd like to see that magic formula.

Now, of course, one thing is the deus ex machina that the Leader of the Opposition has proposed: well, we're just going to take the government to court over equalization payments. I don't know if they're still saying that because their messaging keeps changing. But I think they know very well that they're not going to succeed. Just as the Leader of the Opposition and the members of his caucus say: we're also going to repeal the carbon tax. You know, this is despite the understanding that is out there that this is something that the federal government can make provinces do.

Why would they say these things when they know that they can't do them? Because they want to be able to be all things to all people until after they get elected, and then guess what they're going to be saying? There is no alternative. Then they're going to be able to do the types of cuts, you know, the slash and burn. I mean, the last round of that: in a major way the province is still recovering from that.

So, you know, it's about choices. I mean, the other choice would be to – the opposition likes to talk about that we let rural Albertans down. We made a much different choice than they did in a similar situation, where we didn't download our deficit problems onto municipalities. We've maintained MSI funding. We've even advanced it.

You know, I kind of wish that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre had kept – he quoted three lines, I think, or three words from an article in the Smoky Lake Signal, taken out of context, of course. That's just fine, but I wish that he'd kept on reading because at that same meeting the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills was present as well, so he could actually – the mayor of Smoky Lake was also at the meeting. And this is from the article: after his report, the town of Smoky Lake's mayor, Hank Holowaychuk, expressed his appreciation to the NDP government and to Piquette for looking at the rural crime issue, ensuring the stability of the MSI funding, and ensuring that the agricultural societies have the funding they need as well, all positive moves; we appreciate you guys. That's what he said. He then goes on to mention a couple of infrastructure projects that all of us wanted to see, that he was disappointed that he didn't see them. But that was really the outcome of that meeting. That's really the type of reaction to the direction we're going in, reflecting the throne speech, reflecting the budget, that I'm seeing out there.

I mean, I guess the other choice, you know, the one that the Member for Banff-Cochrane alluded to, was to fund the rural crime initiative. I have to say that I'm really nonplussed. When I talk to RCMP staff sergeants and constables – actually, I spoke to an officer from Ardrossan just this morning – and ask them their opinion about the rural crime initiative, I get a very, very different interpretation of what it means than what the opposition is presenting here. What they tell me is that they think this is the way to go, that being able to bring in additional resources in problem situations to be able to nip that problem in the bud is, like, a solution that makes sense to them, that, as a matter of fact, providing more support for civilian staff so that they can be out in the community more, so that they can actually leverage existing resources makes perfect sense. They're excited about these crime reduction units.

I don't seem to hear much concern about recruitment into them. On the contrary, you know, this type of posting is going to be something that's going to be very attractive to ambitious RCMP officers because, of course, they get the opportunity to investigate. Now, that was our choice, and it was their choice.

Well, they keep criticizing us, but I've yet to hear any sort of rural crime strategy, well, at least one that has anything to do with the province. The last I heard, they were waiting a year before they would propose something. I don't think Albertans... [Mr. Piquette's speaking time expired] Oh, I guess I'm out of time.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, just a request to please table any articles you've quoted from.

Mr. Piquette: I understand.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As I listened to the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater, he was referencing an economist, John Maynard Keynes. It's interesting. I appreciate that he's read and studied past economic models, but the Keynesian economic model states that you buy your way out of your troughs, but as you get out of your recession, you save for the next one. And the reality is that we now have decades where we've been able to study these models, and unfortunately there's actually been very little evidence that any of the governments that follow a Keynesian economic model actually save during the good times. So to base the government's policies, to base the government's go-forward strategy on an economic model that has been proven to be ineffective in being able to accomplish the second part of that model, which is the saving for that rainy day when the economy goes into recession again, is folly.

Now, I get the idea, and I've heard many times from the government side that they had to make choices, that they had to choose whether or not they were going to tighten their belt or whether they were going to spend their way out. Again, every Keynesian economic strategist would say that that's the right approach. The problem is that the original strategy that the government had at this point – and they did recognize this right from the beginning, and I take my hat off to them for recognizing the problem that we were facing. Right from the beginning their approach was that they would quickly inject quantitative easing, whatever they want to call it, into the economy in order to be able to try to pull us out of that recession quickly. At this point, based upon their strategy, their Keynesian economic strategy, they should be at a positive. This year should have been a positive figure. Then they would show positive figures going into the future, which would fulfill that second part of the Keynesian economic model, which is to always save for the next time that it goes into the trough.

I do have a question, and I'm going to let the member have the opportunity to respond. I want him to be able to help this side of the House understand if they do have a plan for being able to get to that point where they actually do pay off or start to pay down that debt that they've accumulated, which is to the tune of about $96 billion from their own numbers.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Piquette: All right. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to answer the member's question. Now, we do have a path to balance. Of course, we can't predict the future. I mean, these are plans; these are guidelines. But we would be, you know, running a balanced budget by 2023, and then that would be the time.

Now, of course, there's another factor to this, which is that over time, as long as the economy keeps growing, the debt becomes smaller relative to the overall economy. I mean, we look at other jurisdictions that run debts. The United States has carried a national debt I think since the Civil War. They're maybe not in a good situation now, but when they were growing, it was not seen as a big issue because it was in small proportion to the overall economy.

Now, as we go into the future, you know, we're bringing spending into balance. The productive potential of the economy is increasing as well; therefore, we're getting more tax revenue. We've made some very, very conservative assumptions about this.

The other thing that can prevent – I know what his concern is, of course, because until recently he was a member of quite a different party. He was a member of a party that, in fact, you know, came up partly to concerns over the Progressive Conservatives. [The time limit for questions and comments expired] Oh. I wish I could. Next time.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the Speech from the Throne? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As always, it's indeed an honour to be able to rise in this House and give my response to the Speech from the Throne. Every time I rise in this House, I feel privileged that I was elected to represent the constituency of Little Bow. Despite the privilege of being an MLA, I think of myself as a pretty regular guy. I like to work around the farm. I like to ride my off-highway vehicle out west. I like the occasional beer on a hot day just like the Finance minister. I like classic westerns. And I like spending time with my family. That's who I am, and that's who I like to be.

What I don't want to do is to become out of touch with where I came from. I don't want to succumb to what my colleague from Drumheller-Stettler often refers to as dome disease. That isn't who I want to be. If I get a chance on a Friday afternoon, I'll go down to the curling rink and shoot pool with the boys for two or three hours. It's a pretty good barometer of what's going on in Alberta, not near as formal as some would think it needs to be but a good barometer for me nonetheless.

Unfortunately, this malady, this dome disease, creeps up on you, and it can colour your thinking. I think that's what's happening to this government. It appears to this side of the House that the government may be a little out of touch with Albertans, and they're starting to realize it now. We've seen more and more examples of this ever since the Member for Calgary-Lougheed took his place in the front row as the Leader of the Official Opposition. This government has spent a lot of time backtracking from their previous positions to be more in line with the views expressed by members from this side of the House. It may seem odd that a party of socialists could come around to conservative thinking, but I guess that when a party spends as much time talking about a former Conservative Premier as much as the present one does, well, I guess it's not that far of a reach. It kind of makes me wonder why they don't shout out about the virtues of any socialist leaders that they prefer in their speeches. But I digress, Madam Speaker.

My point here is that sometimes I can't help but wonder if this government truly understands what the average Albertan feels, what's important to them. I talk with them all the time, Madam Speaker. I attend council meetings. I talk to reeves. We have a group down in southern Alberta called the mayors and reeves of southwestern Alberta. I get to speak with mayors and reeves from all over the area, meet with other politicians. I talk to folks on Main Street, Alberta. I've held town halls. I've got to tell you that the feedback I've heard leads me to believe that this government has lost touch with the average Albertan.

Rural crime has been brought up in the House a lot of times today. It was a good portion of the throne speech, yet if it was such a priority of this government, why was it that when we asked for an emergency debate last November, this government shot it down, with the gallery seats full of victims of rural crime? You know, I understand that it may have been procedurally incorrect, but if the government was compassionate and actually felt that a discussion about rural crime could be something important, I think the House leaders could have met. Maybe the House leader from the government would have said: "Look, we've got a full slate for the next week. What about Tuesday next we give you some time, and we'll have a debate next week?" That would have made some sense. That would have been a compassionate government understanding the people that were in the gallery here that day.

Despite numerous town halls – and that's been said several times here today, too – held by both UCP members and Members of Parliament, they have more than ample time to do so. I keep hearing: why weren't we invited? Members opposite were asking why they weren't invited. Well, the members opposite are citizens of Alberta just like every other Albertan, just like everybody on this side of the House. We're free to come and go as we please. All of our town halls were sufficiently advertised, and anyone would have been welcome. Madam Speaker, I'm not going to go too far there, but I think that truly is being out of touch.

We've heard discussion from the Justice minister that they've promised some extra officers. If there's a plan on how they're going to roll this out, I'm afraid I haven't heard it. For the sake of those victims that were here today and the victims that I listened to in five town halls that I went to and the victims in all of rural Alberta that are feeling this kind of pain, I hope that it's a better plan than the one they rolled out when they alienated rural folks across the whole province with that ill-conceived Bill 6, the farm bill. They had to scramble a little to fix that one, and the residual damage is still being felt today. They just seem to have a certain disconnect, and that's what makes this throne speech so frustrating. It touts a list of objectives, but given this government's poor record of carry-through I can't help but be a little pessimistic.

Madam Speaker, the throne speech talked a lot about ensuring Canadian tidewater access for Alberta energy. There are certainly a lot of things that we could talk about there if we start that discussion with Tzepporah Berman as we begin our conversation about getting Alberta's energy to tidewater. Tzepporah Berman is a radical environmental activist. Her exploits are well known. She's been connected with civil disobedience for nearly 30 years. In 2016 this radical environmentalist was appointed co-chair of the Alberta NDP government's oil sands advisory group. Right from the Alberta government's website I'd just like to quote what the group was intended to do.

Specifically, the group's primary focus was to:

- consider how to implement the 100 megatonne per year carbon emissions limit for the oil sands industry.
- develop durable, effective structures and processes to address local and regional environmental issues.

Examples being air, land, water, biodiversity, cumulative effects and such.

And to:

- provide advice to government on investing carbon price revenue in innovations to reduce further emissions intensity.

Basically, the board was charged with making recommendations on implementing the new climate leadership plan, reviewing cumulative impacts of oil sands operations, and designing climate recommendations for the pathway to 2015. Quite a board to appoint a radical environmentalist to.

It didn't last long, though. It became a bit of a problem for the Alberta government when Ms Berman made it clear that she supported British Columbia's newly minted NDP Party and its environmental thoughts. Everyone involved claimed that the Berman release from the OSAG was some kind of mutual agreement. I guess it really isn't important enough to talk about or worry about. At the end of the day, she left an organization that was to implement a plan of the Alberta government on behalf of Albertans so that she could get back to fighting and chaining herself to equipment and causing as much civil disobedience as humanly possible for a pipeline company and work against the Alberta government. And it's a pipeline company, as much as this Alberta government hates to admit it, that they need to get busy with a project that will see Alberta's energy delivered to British Columbia, to be sent off from there to world markets. That is just one of the issues with Alberta energy that this government just doesn't seem to have quite figured out.

When I got here in 2015, the new government was teetering on how to keep oil in the ground because it was dirty somehow, off base. To me, it is amazing how that message has changed in under three years as this government has found that without oil, we are just another province. Madam Speaker, every other province in this country would give an arm for what we have, an abundance of wealth near a small city called Fort McMurray, 3 trillion barrels of the stuff that dreams are made of. There are a lot of zeros in 3 trillion. There are a lot more zeros in the value of those 3 trillion barrels, a number that this government has now realized it is impossible to do without.

The wealth in the oil sands is not an easy portion of the gross domestic product to ignore. That's why an environment that encourages development of that monstrously huge resource that directly affects the economy of the entire country is so hard to ignore, so hard to ignore that a once leave-it-in-the-ground government has turned into a fight-for-Alberta government simply out of necessity. As Conservatives we appreciate this government helping themselves to the opposition's ideas because those ideas really do help Albertans. The only issue for the Alberta government now is that their ally and friend Ms Berman is helping or possibly leading the battle to make sure that our resource, that every other province would bend over backwards for, never gets to tidewater. Ironic.

Oh, the government speaks about social licence and how that will get this Trans Mountain pipeline built. "Social licence," a term that their friend in Ottawa, Mr. Trudeau, embraced because Alberta went ahead and did what he was hoping to see go forward. But the funny thing is that their friend is what I would call missing in action on this file. If the friendly Mr. Trudeau is to be of some help to get this pipeline built so that oil from this province can get to world markets, he's going to have to hurry up because Albertans are going to be making a pretty big decision about their government's future in a very short time.

Now, another topic from the throne speech talked about how things are looking up. Well, I would like this government to tell that to the folks that are unemployed here in Alberta. Calgary has one of the highest unemployment rates outside of the Maritimes. Madam Speaker, many people have also come off the unemployment rolls for a number of reasons. They may have exhausted their benefits. In a futile bid to find employment, they may have been in a trade and hung out their own shingle in order to go into business for themselves, or they may have had to settle for a stopgap job out of their field for considerably less pay as a way to keep themselves afloat financially. These aren't long-term solutions.

The government actually said in their speech that "now that the economic recovery is here, we will keep our focus on the priorities of regular people." Well, from what I hear, what regular people want this government to do is stop overburdening them with unnecessary taxes like the never-ending, ever-growing carbon tax. They want mortgage-paying jobs. They want their towns to remain viable without fading into history due to some ideological slant the government takes. They want a government that doesn't choose winners and losers with our wildlife. They want a government that doesn't interfere with investment coming into the province by making the economic climate hostile. That's what regular folk want, and we know that because we talk to them.

Madam Speaker, it's no secret that ideology pushes the government's agenda. We heard it throughout the throne speech. Their plan to diversify the economy is rife with it. Just a sidebar, our economy has never been as diversified as it is right now. In fact, in 1986 Alberta's economic prosperity table showed that the economic diversity in that year had a total gross domestic product of $59.6 billion. In 2016 that number skyrocketed to $314.9 billion. In fact, the greatest portion of this economic diversification came from the previous Conservative governments. How can you expect economic growth when you align yourselves with only those sectors that coincide with and complement your ideology? Why do that at the expense of other sectors? When you hamper other sectors' growth at the expense of another's growth, it is near impossible, but that doesn't seem to bother.

Madam Speaker, this government talks about choices made during the downturn. Well, one of those choices, of course, was foisting the single largest tax on Alberta taxpayers that's ever happened in this province. That was the choice that this government made during the downturn. Imagine burdening a hurting company with a crippling tax that was nowhere in their election platform.

I came across a fellow from northern Alberta. Just a little anecdote here. Not every area has access to clean-burning, efficient natural gas. They just don't. Fortunately, technology has progressed so that furnaces that burn stoker coal were efficient enough to be a cost-effective way to heat homes, heat barns, outbuildings, et cetera. Well, Madam Speaker, some of those rural locations still don't have natural gas options. Solar and wind don't have the efficiency or the ability . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Schneider: Just tell them to adjourn. They want to adjourn.

The Deputy Speaker: You can't adjourn under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Panda: Yeah. I was very closely following what the Member for Little Bow was saying in a very balanced, very civil manner. I would like him to tell me about the people in southern Alberta, south of Calgary, actually, in the area that you represent and the rest of the southern Alberta ridings. How are they feeling about this recent budget or the direction this government is taking? If you can share your thoughts, I'd appreciate it.

Mr. Schneider: Well, Madam Speaker, I was in the process of starting a story, and I'm going to finish it. As I was saying, some of these rural locations don't have natural gas options. Solar and wind don't have the efficiency to stop the gap; otherwise, they wouldn't need natural gas as a fallback. So they still use this coal.

One such operation, just a gentleman that sent us a copy of the bill that he paid, recently bought a load of coal to use on his farm. The cost of said coal was $45 a tonne. The carbon tax on this was $53.09 a tonne, and with the GST, which is the tax on the tax, the total was $60.08. This resident paid over eight bucks more for a tonne of carbon tax than the price of his coal. Those are choices made during the downturn, Madam Speaker.

Average Albertans understand that fossil fuels are transitioning out, but this is cutting off your nose to spite your face. I guess there will always be other choices to be made, choices that will be made in 14 months, choices made in the next few months.

Now, I would be remiss if I didn't touch on the path back to balance, that portion of the throne speech. Would the average Albertan actually believe that a debt of $42 billion, or about 9,800 bucks a person, is the path back to balance? I wonder. At this rate our children's children will be paying for this government's follies.

By now everyone has seen the media report stating that if Kinder Morgan pipeline is built, we – and by “we” I mean the government – believe that we can balance the budget in five years, which begs the question: what happened to getting off the royalty roller coaster if they're putting all of their financial eggs in the Trans Mountain pipeline?

Madam Speaker, this brings me full circle back to the malady of dome disease. Could it be that our government is so infected that it completely contradicts its previous positions almost on a weekly basis? Is this simply spending too much time under the dome in the halls of power, or is it a manifestation of a government that simply can't reconcile ideology over economy, a government that is completely out of step with the average Albertan?

That being said, Madam Speaker, I thank you for the time I have been allotted to speak. I'm going to adjourn debate if that's all right.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the Speech from the Throne? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Madam Speaker, I'd like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 2 Growth and Diversification Act

Mr. Panda moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 2, Growth and Diversification Act, be amended by deleting all the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 2, Growth and Diversification Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Adjourned debate on the amendment March 22: Dr. Swann]

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: The referral amendment?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to support my UCP colleague's motion to refer Bill 2, Growth and Diversification Act, to the committee. This bill is proposing to use a mixture of incentives, also called taxpayers' money, to encourage diversification in Alberta's tech sector. I support sending this bill to committee for a full review because the committee can invite stakeholders to discuss whether this is the kind of support they are looking for. An all-party committee can spend time meeting with stakeholders affected by Bill 2 to determine if the direction set by the proposed legislation is the common-sense approach they are seeking. After all, the Alberta investor tax credit left $1.4 million on the table. This might indicate that the government has had a lower-than-anticipated interest in this tax credit because it's narrow and sector specific. Another possibility is that the government has not been able to efficiently and effectively distribute this money to investors.

Clearly there are questions about this tax credit and how it is performing. Why serve up millions of dollars of taxpayers' funds before understanding if this sector needs this change to the tax credit? The AITC is only one of a suite of tax credits adjusted or introduced into Bill 2. Concern is that the government is playing favorites by seeking a focus of tax credits on relatively narrow sectors of industry. Is this the right approach for Alberta? This question is a very good reason to send Bill 2 to committee. Let's review the sector's needs before introducing tax credits or increasing and adjusting others.

Standing committees and legislative policy committees have proven their worth time and again. We in the UCP want to use them more to connect with Albertans and help inform government about the most effective way to move forward. Since I'm talking about the value of committees, if we're going to refer Bill 2 to Resource Stewardship, we have to unfetter the committee to allow it to take on as many consultations as it wants to.

Our UCP members have been pleading for many months to allow our committees to perform other tasks when the Legislative Assembly has sent them a piece of legislation to review. When we're doing these reviews, we often wait for weeks for the public to provide submissions and then for presentations to be co-ordinated. During those times UCP members have been seeking the ability to continue to meet with the many stakeholders who are sending requests to the chair to speak with the committee.

We would also like to initiate our own consultations on issues pertinent to the committee. Let me provide an example. The Resource Stewardship Committee has a lineup of six organizations, some who have now been waiting for three years to meet with us. We have made motions in committee to create working groups to meet with these patient stakeholders. These motions have been rejected. We have even made a motion to change the standing orders to allow a committee to perform other business when the Legislative Assembly has handed it a task because, Madam Speaker, committees can and should multitask. But the NDP members of the committee vote it down every time. Let me stress that they are voting against meeting with Albertans.

So in supporting this referral motion for Bill 2, I want to take the opportunity to note the importance of changing the standing orders to allow the committee to work on as many different tasks as it wishes while also performing the work that the Legislative Assembly is requesting of it. The NDP members of committees are using the standing orders as an excuse to not meet, and they won't even let us set up working groups that could do it. We were totally stymied at the last Resource Stewardship Committee meeting. The chair immediately shut down our UCP member and would not even entertain his motion. It is time to free up committees to truly work on behalf of Albertans, as they did prior to 2015.

Let's send Bill 2 to committee because this government is going down a path that the sector can help correct if we consult with it. And let's change the standing orders to avoid the NDP from hampering Members of the Legislative Assembly from listening to Albertans just because the government wants to take its own ideological route on every issue.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's always an honour to rise in this House and speak. Today we are talking about the referral motion on Bill 2, the Growth and Diversification Act. This bill has two points. It establishes a talent advisory council on technology to advise government on the creation or expansion of the new postsecondary tech spaces. The other one is that it introduces an interactive digital media tax credit to improve Alberta's national competitiveness in terms of attracting and developing skilled workers in that growing environment. It introduces the DMTC while reupping the Alberta investor tax credit and capital investment tax credit. It provides clarity for government, postsecondary institutions, and industry to co-ordinate investment and collaboration opportunities in the unmanned-vehicle system sector, like drones.

Other provinces, Madam Speaker, such as British Columbia, Manitoba, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia have found success with some version of a small-business venture capital tax credit. I think we need to have an opportunity to review their models to see if Alberta is aligned for the same success, if this bill would work in our province. Again, we can only do this if we have time to send this bill to committee and work in committee as research prepares a cross-jurisdictional report like when, you know, we recently engaged with stakeholders, for example, on daylight saving time. So I think it would be a good idea to send this bill to committee.

Now, according to the government the CITC has already, Madam Speaker, stimulated more than $1 billion in capital projects in manufacturing, processing, tourism infrastructure. If we send it to committee, committee can review that claim. We can't, I mean, take that number just on face value in this Chamber. We all see the argument, and we can talk about those things all day. The revenue from the carbon tax was supposed to be rebated, and now it's going to be going into general revenue. We can't take anything this government is saying, so I think it's important to send that to committee to discuss it.

That's why on this side of the House, Madam Speaker, the United Conservative Party has some questions about the economic policies of the sector-specific tax credits. Will they distort the market? Will they result in industries that are dependent on tax credits and subsidies? I mean, these are important questions, and on behalf of Albertans I think we need to do a thorough engagement and research. That's why it's important that we send this bill to a committee. Then we can find the answers to those important questions. If the sectors are having trouble attracting investment through traditional markets and investment channels, perhaps there are competing factors that are affecting that issue. The committee can review those issues in an in-depth discussion.

As you know, Madam Speaker, any time a tax credit is offered, we need to make sure that the companies who are set to receive it actually need it and that we're not doing it just for the sake of doing it so that we can, you know, make an announcement that we have given this money away. Are there any other channels that they can be using rather than relying on the government? We need to look into those things. The AITC has $1.4 million left in the pool. It wasn't fully used. Why? Was it needed? All these questions need to be answered. It's important that we send Bill 2 to committee.

These are some of my arguments and reasons. I think that if we really explore these things and further discuss Bill 2 in committee, it'll have fruitful results. If the intent of the government is to actually diversify our economy, as they always say, then send this bill to committee. Let the committee do the research, and then the committee can advise this House on the outcome.

You know, hopefully, we'll get the support of all members to send this bill to committee. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the amendment?

Are you ready for the question?

[Motion on amendment RA1 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 4(2) the House now stands adjourned until tomorrow at 1:30 p.m. The legislative policy committees will convene tomorrow morning for consideration of main estimates. Families and Communities will consider the estimates for Justice and Solicitor General in the Rocky Mountain Room, and Alberta's Economic Future will consider Advanced Education in the Parkland Room.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, April 5, 2018

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us reflect or pray, each in our own way. Let us be ever mindful of our responsibility as elected officials. Give us the wisdom to serve for the common good of all Albertans, and help us to carry out our duties with respect and courtesy for all of our colleagues in the Assembly.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, it is my absolute pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some exceptionally special guests. In the gallery today is a group of our own athletes who competed in the 2018 Olympic and Paralympic Winter Games in Pyeongchang, South Korea. They inspired the nation, and they brought home a record number of medals.

As I read their names, I'd ask that each of these remarkable women and men please rise: Jack Leitch, gold and bronze medallist, para-alpine; Kurt Oatway, gold medallist, para-alpine; Kirk Schornstein, para-alpine; Alana Ramsay, bronze medallist, para-alpine; Derek Zaplotinsky, para-Nordic; Justin Kripps, gold medallist, bobsleigh; Melissa Lotholz, bobsleigh; Jesse Lumsden, bobsleigh; Alysia Rissling, bobsleigh; Seyi Smith, bobsleigh; Neville Wright, bobsleigh; Joanne Courtney, curling; John Morris, gold medallist, doubles curling; Karl Stollery, bronze medallist, men's hockey; Kimberley McRae, luge; Tristan Walker, silver medallist, luge; Brooke Apshkrum, luge; Barrett Martineau, skeleton; Kevin Boyer, skeleton – these skeleton people, Mr. Speaker, suggest that theirs is the safest sport ever; I don't buy it – Mackenzie Boyd-Clowes, ski jumping; Gilmore Junio, speed skating; Denny Morrison, speed skating; Keri Morrison, speed skating; Brady Leman, gold medallist, ski cross.

Mr. Speaker, these athletes, each and every one of them, inspired us, and each and every one of them made us deeply, deeply proud. I'd ask all of my colleagues here in the Assembly to rise and demonstrate that pride for all of them at this time. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you.

I know that I speak for all of the Legislature and the representatives here: you made our province very proud. Thank you.

Hon. members, are there any school groups here today? Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Sorry, kids, but you probably won't get a standing ovation. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House 60 students from Glen Avon school in St. Paul along with their teachers, Ms Deschamps, Mrs. Karen Kendel, Miss Nickason, and chaperones Tracy Boulianne, Tannis Baerg, and Debbie Rak. If I could get the students and chaperones and teachers to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. Government House Leader, did you have a visitor?

Mr. Mason: I do, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. Ian Waddell. Mr. Waddell is a former parliamentarian of long standing. From 1979 to 1993 he served in the House of Commons representing the riding of Vancouver Kingsway and the riding of Port Moody-Coquitlam. He served as energy critic for the federal NDP caucus, and in that capacity he worked with both Premier Lougheed and Grant Notley and was a critic of the national energy program at that time. Later he served in the Legislature of British Columbia from 1996 to 2001, representing the riding of Vancouver-Fraserview, and served in two ministerial roles.

In addition to serving as a distinguished parliamentarian, many Canadians know Mr. Waddell as an author and a filmmaker. He divides his time now, Mr. Speaker, between Canada and Hollywood. He wrote a popular political mystery, A Thirst to Die For, and he is also well known in legal circles. He's a former Crown attorney, helped litigate the first class-action suit in Canadian history, and was a clarion voice for the creation of the International Criminal Court. Following his noted legal career, he was appointed Queen's Counsel in 2013.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Waddell is seated in your gallery, and I would ask that he now rise and that all members join me in welcoming him to our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. I trust that one of the chapters in your new book will not be representative of this institution.

Back to school groups if I might. The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you the fantastic students of Mills Haven school, which happens to be a German bilingual school. The students are with their teachers, Irene Kolomijchuk, Derek Zukiwsky, and their chaperones/parents Doreen Checknita, William Langford Bawn, April Caron, and Tanya Lawrence. I would ask all of the students and their chaperones and teachers to rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my absolute honour and privilege today to introduce two truly amazing individuals, the inspired Shirley Penner, founder of Youth Singers of Calgary, and her wonderful husband, Don McLean. I will be speaking more about Shirley in my member's statement today. I'd also like to thank the Minister of Culture and Tourism for having some time for them today. We're truly grateful to you for that time. I would please ask my wonderful guests to rise and receive the warm and welcoming applause from this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all of our colleagues a wonderful student visiting today. Roslin McKechnie has joined us from Lethbridge on her last day of her senior practicum in social work. She has spent the last four months doing that senior practicum in my constituency office in Lethbridge-West and has been assisting many of my constituents. Roslin will be missed dearly when she leaves my office, but I do thank her for her service and congratulate her on joining the fine profession of social work, a profession that contributes to making Albertans' lives better. Roslin, if you could please now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and to all members of this Chamber my constituent Nicole Imgrund. Ms Imgrund is a Canadian certified counsellor and founder-director of the River's Edge Counselling Centre in St. Albert. She is also the chair of FACT-Alberta, a group pursuing regulation and the development of the Alberta college of counselling therapists. Please join me in welcoming this dedicated advocate for quality, regulated counselling therapy.

The Speaker: Welcome.

1:40

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the entire Assembly here today two fantastic women, Rohini Kaur Arora and Maninder Kaur Arora. Of course, Rohini is my constituency assistant, and let me say through you to her here today that I couldn't do the job that I do without having her incredible support. As well, Maninder is also a union leader who is visiting her daughter here from B.C. I'd ask both of them to please rise at this moment and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, my guests have not yet arrived.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly staff and board members of the Alberta Sport Connection who did a fantastic job today of putting on the celebration for our Olympic and Paralympic athletes. I'd ask them to please rise, if possible, as I read their names: Scott Fraser, Tony Flores, Lloyd Bentz, Don Wilson, Tim Bjornson, David Hennig, Brandon Diprose. Alberta Sport Connection's vision is to make Alberta the premier sports delivery system in Canada. Through the support of our government, Alberta Sport Connection is proud to support a sport system where home-grown talent and athletes from all over Canada are able to live and train in our province using world-class facilities. I thank you all for the hard work you did in putting together this special day for our athletes and for the work that you do year-round to make life better for Albertans. I'd ask my colleagues to give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other guests? The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce guests from Woman's Health Options here in Edmonton as well as Compass Centre for Sexual Wellness, also in Edmonton. I'd ask that they rise while I introduce them. Woman's Health Options provides abortion and reproductive health services, including counselling and birth control options. From there we have Kim Cholewa, executive director; joined by Laura McBride, who is a counsellor and social worker; as well as Dr. Ann Marie Long, who is a physician. We also have joining us Erin Bilawchuk, who is the executive director of the Compass Centre. Their work focuses on providing pro-choice sexual health education, counselling services, and resources to ensure that women feel safe and supported in their choice. Please join me in welcoming and showing your gratitude to these front-line health care professionals.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Carbon Levy

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We hear a lot of negative hot air from the opposition about the climate leadership plan and the carbon levy. I just wanted to set the record straight because I, for one, am proud that Alberta is leading the rest of the country on the path to a more sustainable economy and a cleaner environment. The carbon levy is helping in so many ways to make that happen.

We're helping municipalities across the province with $54 million to address climate change, with $17.5 million specifically to reduce energy costs of community rinks, arenas, and swimming pools. We're helping the agricultural sector with $81 million for solar panels, irrigation, and other energy efficiency programs. We're helping indigenous communities with $35 million to support local renewable projects, energy efficiency audits, and training for jobs in a low-carbon economy.

We're helping everyday Albertans with energy efficiency programs, which have saved more than 420,000 gigajoules of energy so far, which is equal to heating over 3,500 homes. We're helping nonprofit and volunteer-based organizations conduct energy audits and create energy management plans with the nonprofit energy efficiency transition program, and we've provided $795,000 to 106 nonprofit organizations for energy efficiency projects.

We're helping lower and middle-income families through the carbon levy rebates. Two-thirds of Albertans got a rebate on the carbon levy last year, and that rebate will continue in 2018. We're helping low-income single seniors in Alberta by providing them with a $300 carbon levy rebate. We're helping small businesses by allocating $40 million in carbon levy revenues toward a small-business tax reduction, and we're helping all future Albertans by ensuring that carbon funds are working towards a greener and healthier future for our children and grandchildren.

This government, Mr. Speaker, is showing the world how it's done.

Shirley Penner

Mrs. Aheer: Mr. Speaker, in 1985 Shirley Penner had the dream of giving young people a chance to express themselves on stage through music. She created Calgary's most comprehensive and exceptional performing arts program. In 2002 the Alberta ministry of learning formally acknowledged the Youth Singers curriculum by awarding it accreditation through the Calgary and area school boards. She became the first executive director of the Associated Manitoba Arts Festivals, and in 1980 she joined the staff of the provincial government's department of culture as the manager and was responsible for the development, implementation, and evaluation of cultural services for all regions in Manitoba.

She is a performer, a teacher, a director, a producer, and has worked in television. She received the YWCA woman of distinction award, was named a Paul Harris fellow by Rotary International, received the 2005 Alberta centennial outstanding citizen award, and was awarded the Queen's diamond jubilee medal, and finally, the Alberta Order of Excellence in 2016.

She gives young people once-in-a-lifetime opportunities to showcase their talents across continents. I have personally travelled with her and her group, with my son as roadie, to China and Hawaii.

Shirley, your influence spans generations of families, and your dream to create a unique choral program where there's a place for anyone and everyone has impacted our family and thousands of others in ways that are very hard to express.

She inspires an army of volunteers that emulate the quality of the program and are invested in the program and work on everything from costumes to prop design. She has created a community that gives back to the community. She builds leaders and teachers and confident youth who feel ready to take on the world. The premise of the program is not just for the gifted but, rather, is a civilizing and humanizing force that makes a real, real difference in the world.

One thing, Shirley, that you said to me at Choralfest that resonates with me and stays with me is, quote: some people see obstacles as things that get in the way of opportunity. She sees opportunity in obstacles.

Thank you.

Emergency Medical Service Delays

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, Alberta continues on the edge of a preventable emergency services disaster with precarious surge capacity in our EMS to respond to multiple casualties. Emergency response times are barely acceptable now in major urban areas only as a result of Herculean efforts and massive overtime by our dedicated paramedics in Alberta, with serious morale implications.

Our sympathies go out to the Morley families in a dramatic and tragic incident yesterday involving 15 people, including 10 children, in one house requiring assessment and evacuation to a medical facility. This incident illustrates just how close we are to the break point with our emergency response. Sources indicated a city-wide appeal was made to find five ambulances free to travel one hour out to Morley. This left the city vulnerable to any major crisis and highlights the fact that we cannot safely manage a major disaster.

The minister said yesterday, "It takes time to build long-term care, supportive living, and expand home care." I couldn't agree more, but these are longer term solutions. Alberta needs solutions to our critical EMS inefficiencies now, and a major immediate action would be ending ER hallway wait times. The 650,000 hours wasted annually in ER hallways can end tomorrow if this minister tells Alberta Health Services to reduce the standard transfer times in ER from one hour to 15 minutes. Tomorrow. They have done so in the U.K. and Israel. Only 5 per cent of transfers occur in Alberta within 15 minutes.

Currently AHS management has little incentive to do this as long as they can exploit EMS staff to continue to do the nurses' jobs in emergency. The priority is to get patients needing admission off EMS stretchers and onto hospital stretchers, up to the appropriate ward as necessary, to wait if necessary in their hallways, where they get specialized nursing attention, and free up the paramedics.

Get the critical EMS back on the road doing their life-saving work, with a bonus: save $15 million to the health system a year. Madam Minister, in the interests of a safe disaster response, end EMS hallways now.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Carbon Levy Revenue and Rebates

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I apologize in advance for my voice.

Mr. Speaker, a question to the Premier: how much more revenue will be raised by the budget's 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I certainly hope that the member opposite is feeling better. He does sound a little under the weather, I must say.

As the member knows, we are looking forward, and the exact numbers are in the budget documents, which we'll have a chance to go through. But there is no question that the additional levies that would be going forward in, I think, 2021 and forward are noted in our budget and will be invested in protecting things like our education and our health care and bringing us to a stable, prudent path to balance.

Mr. Kenney: The budget documents do not include that number, Mr. Speaker, which is why I asked. Unfortunately, the Premier doesn't have an answer.

Mr. Speaker, does the government's projection of a balanced budget in 2023 depend on higher revenues raised by the 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As we've already articulated, our path to balance depends upon diverting some of the money from the federal increase in the levy towards the path to balance. That is something that we are going to do because, in so doing, we'll be able to reach that prudent state of balance in 2023 while ensuring that we protect our hospitals, our education, our teachers, our nurses, and those important services that Albertans rely on. We're glad that we've been able to reach that balance.

Mr. Kenney: To decode, the answer was that, yes, the balanced budget in 2023 depends on the 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax.

Mr. Speaker, will the government increase the carbon tax rebate when it increases the carbon tax by 67 per cent?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, we will be looking at that matter at that time, when that comes forward. That's still an issue that we are examining because, of course, we are talking about four years down the road at this point. At the same time, we are very proud to be in a position to be able to present to Albertans a thoughtful, reasonable six-year plan to bring the budget back into balance while protecting nurses, while protecting teachers, while protecting the kids in our classrooms, while ensuring that Albertans can continue to count on the services that are important to them and their families.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Second main question.

Mr. Kenney: The Premier says that she will look at it, but her Finance minister said that the budget does not include additional rebates. So, Mr. Speaker, which is it? Were the budget documents tabled two weeks ago inclusive of rebates or not?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The budget documents tabled two weeks ago talk about the budget for this year, and they also talk about the business plan, that goes out for three years, which is exactly what budget documents typically do. Our government went a step further than any government ever has in the past, and we provided high-level figures with respect to how we were going to bring the budget into balance by '23-24. This is in contrast to the opposition, which has yet to bring in a shadow budget, after three years of being here, and has yet to provide any explanation for how their path would ever be achieved.

Mr. Kenney: Does that projection of a balanced budget in 2023 include additional rebates to match the 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax or not? Does it include additional so-called targeted environmental spending or not?

Ms Notley: Again, Mr. Speaker, as I've outlined, because we are going out four years into the future, the level of specificity becomes a little bit harder to target. One of the reasons for that is because one of the key elements of the climate leadership plan and the carbon levy is to reduce emissions and to reduce carbon use. As that goes down, the amount of revenue that comes in may well go down as well as the cost that is experienced by individuals. At that time, we need to look at the appropriateness of adjusting the rebate, and that's what we will do when we are within 48 months of the time.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Kenney: So the government told Albertans that they have a plan for a balanced budget, but the Premier now tells us that they don't know how much spending is in that plan.

Since she raised carbon emissions, can the Premier tell us by how much the 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax will reduce carbon emissions?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, we know that there are a number of factors that are going to go towards reducing emissions as we move forward. Some of them are related specifically to the application of the carbon levy. Others are related to our ability to invest in a number of different things that will reduce emissions. Whether it's the hundreds of millions of dollars that we are partnering with industry on, for instance, to help them innovate, which we're very excited about, and bring down their emissions within the energy industry, whether it's with the renewal energy sector and being able to bring in the kind of amazing new investment we've seen, there are a number of different ways in which emissions will come down.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Third main question.

Carbon Levy and Emission Reduction

Mr. Kenney: By how much will carbon emissions be reduced as a result of the 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, as I've said, there are a number of different factors that are in play and a number of different tools that are being used. We are making a global set of estimates, which have been, actually, reviewed by the Auditor General recently, who indicated that we had a pretty rigorous level of assumptions and research that went into the plan. As I said, we are very proud as a government to be able to be in a position to have a number of different strategies that are focused on bringing Alberta's emissions down and doing our part to tackle climate change.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, by how much will carbon emissions be reduced as a result of the 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, our climate leadership plan, as has been published many times over, will cut emissions drastically, a projected 30 per cent reduction by 2030. That's as a result of a number of different factors, including a coal phase-out, carbon pricing, a system of output-based allocations, and investments in clean tech. We may go as low as 222 megatonnes, and that will keep dropping, with respect to the investments and innovation. That's in stark contrast to the hon. member, who sat in a government, articulated the target, and then sat on their hands and did nothing to achieve it.

Mr. Kenney: So they tell Albertans that their carbon tax is going to save the planet, but they have no clue by how much it's supposed to reduce emissions.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier told me that she was imposing conditions before she would raise the carbon tax by 67 per cent. The condition was the completion of the Trans Mountain pipeline. Why did she remove that condition in her budget?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, in fact, we haven't done that, and I reject that characterization. What our budget does is that it bets on Albertans and it assumes that the pipeline that has been approved will ultimately be built. You know, it's interesting because the Leader of the Opposition spent 10 years in Ottawa – 10 years – and no pipeline. He had the ball; he fumbled. We are marching down the field. We're almost at the goal line. The member wants to throw in the towel. We will not. We will get the pipeline.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Alberta Health Services Letters to Clients

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we learned about a very disturbing letter sent to a 15-year-old indigenous girl that used the words "treaty Indian" instead of her name. To the Premier: is this the only letter that has gone out with such an offensive name? If not, how many more are there, and have you contacted each of the recipients to apologize?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin by saying that I share the member's concern about this letter and about this incident. The language is completely inappropriate, and it is culturally offensive, and it should never have been used. Let me take this opportunity to offer my personal apologies to the person in question who received the letter. Should we discover that there are any others, that apology would be extended to them as well.

We take this incident extremely seriously. I understand that the Health minister along with Health Services is working very quickly to prevent it and also to move forward.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Premier. I hope that you will undertake a thorough investigation and commit to informing the House of the results of that investigation as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker, this is and should be a teaching moment. I'm glad to know the Premier and I agree that this should never have happened. While I commend her and her government for the steps they have taken towards reconciliation, very clearly, not enough has changed within all aspects of the provincial government. Again to the Premier: what specifically are you doing to ensure that this doesn't happen again anywhere else in the provincial government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

2:00

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. I'm going to talk about Alberta Health Services specifically because this is where the incident happened. I, too, share my disappointment and frustration and anger that this person wasn't addressed with her name but rather with a title that has a deep historical legacy. Antiracism education is certainly an area of focus for our government, making sure that we break down the barriers, making sure that groups that already disproportionately access health care less frequently and have lower life expectancy should not feel that continued institutionalized racism impacts their ability to do so.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, privacy is of paramount importance, especially when dealing with health information. I'm concerned that this letter is not only grossly culturally insensitive, but if there are letters with confidential health information being sent to generic names rather than individual Albertans, there is the potential that this represents a significant breach of not only trust but of privacy. Earlier today I wrote to the Privacy Commissioner asking that she investigate to determine if there has in fact been a breach of the Health Information Act or any other relevant statute. To the Premier: will you support my request for this investigation? Will you ensure that the Privacy Commissioner receives the complete co-operation of any and all government . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. We certainly respect the Privacy Commissioner's range of scope in being able to identify the appropriate places for these investigations. Regardless of what she chooses to do, AHS has launched their own investigation into this matter and will do their part there, and certainly if the Privacy Commissioner chooses to do her investigation as well, we will very happily comply. Our goal is to make sure that we address what happened in this situation so that it never happens again.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Supports for Postsecondary Students

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I met with two representatives of the Council of Alberta University Students, CAUS, as they advocated on a number of issues. They spoke passionately about a number of initiatives they feel would make lives better for students. What is your ministry doing to make life more affordable for students, and what action was taken in this year's budget on their priorities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to thank CAUS for the work that they've been doing and for taking the time out of their lives to come and talk to us here at the Legislature. We're proud in our budget of 2018 to provide significant supports for students. That's why our budget has included a 2 per cent increase in operating grants for every university and college in the province as well as backfill funding to compensate for the continuation of the tuition freeze. This will ensure that our students continue to receive an affordable, high-quality education here in the province. Our tuition freeze will mean that the average student has saved over $1,200 on the cost of a four-year degree. We expect to have more to say . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The CAUS representatives did tell me that they were thankful for the action this government has taken to provide ongoing mental health funding. They would like to see this funding increased to provide further benefits to students. Is this something that is possible down the road? To the same minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're proud to have launched an initiative that is providing $8 million a year for mental health supports on campuses across Alberta. This funding means that colleges and universities will be able to hire counsellors, community outreach social workers, and psychologists. It also supports mental health workshops, stress reduction events, and peer support programs. We're committed to making sure that students have the supports they need, and we are continually monitoring our programs to make sure they are meeting the needs of students. Of course, all of this funding would be at risk if the Official Opposition had their way. They want to pay for a billion-dollar tax cut to millionaires, which would make it impossible to fund . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has demonstrated a strong commitment to protecting front-line services and making sure that they're available where Albertans need them most. CAUS has advocated that more mental health supports be located on campus for students to have the fewest barriers to access. To the same minister: what are you doing to ensure this happens?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the funding that we've provided is already being used to create new initiatives and programs on campuses. When we rolled out this plan, we made sure that students would be very involved in the development and ongoing analysis of these programs. Beyond our commitment on campuses we're also working with AHS to make sure that there's a better integration of supports within our broader mental health system. Of course, the opposition doesn't like it when I raise this, but I will continue to do so. All of this is at risk if they had the opportunity to give away almost a billion dollars to millionaires and put this funding at risk.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Carbon Levy Rate

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the budget includes projected increases in revenues from the 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax. As we've already established, that's the basis of the projected balanced budget in 2023. Can the Premier point me to any mention of conditions before that tax would be increased in the budget documents?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the province of Alberta has signed on to the pan-Canadian framework on clean growth some months ago on the condition that we would get pipeline approvals in place, and we got those pipeline approvals. Therefore, we have received $150 million in federal investments in energy efficiency and lowering energy usage and lowering people's bills via those programs. The federal government is moving forward with legislation on the pan-Canadian framework.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Kenney: The question was to the Premier. It really dealt with the budget, not with the environment minister's responsibilities.

Let me restate it. Given that the balanced budget projected for 2023 is predicated on additional revenues coming from a 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax, where are the conditions attached to that? Is it not true that the balanced budget projection disappears without that 67 per cent increase in carbon tax revenues?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the federal government is bringing in carbon pricing across the country. The question, then, for Albertans becomes: do we have a made-in-Alberta plan that grows the economy while reducing our emissions, or do we have a plan imposed on us by Ottawa? I know that the hon. member has a great deal of affection for Ottawa and thinks longingly of his years there, but I am more interested in making sure we've got a made-in-Alberta plan in place that reduces our emissions, that grows our economy, that moves Alberta forward.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Kenney: Given that this government has a great deal of affection for Justin Trudeau, they signed a blank cheque and agreed to raise their carbon tax by 67 per cent. The question is: where are the conditions in this budget? Will the government recommit that it will not raise that additional revenue by hiking the carbon tax by 67 per cent unless a pipeline is completed? The question is not for the environment minister. It's for the Premier.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I will say is this. I would refer the member opposite to page 80 of the fiscal plan where, in fact, that's exactly what is included in that part of the fiscal plan. That being said, we talk about putting the path to balance at risk, and I'd just like to talk a moment about what really puts the path to balance at risk. What puts the path to balance at risk is cancelling the climate leadership plan and giving $700 million away to Alberta's wealthiest citizens. That, in fact, blows about a $5 billion hole in our attempt to get . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Well, given that I'm looking at page 80 and there's no mention of conditions, I don't know what the Premier is talking about.

GST on the Carbon Levy

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the carbon tax is taxed by the federal goods and services tax. Does the provincial government agree with the taxation of the carbon tax?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would just read out from page 80. "The federally-imposed carbon price will increase carbon revenue based on federal approval of the Trans Mountain Expansion . . . and the federal government's commitment to its construction." I think that's awfully clear unless we want to get lost in debating the minutiae of language. I'm not sure. I think that's pretty clear. I would suggest that what our government has effectively done by embracing our climate leadership plan and moving forward is that we've gotten a pipeline built, and we will get . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, given that the Premier did not answer the question, I'll ask it again. Does the government agree with the taxation of the carbon tax by the federal GST?

Ms Hoffman: Does the member opposite want to say why he spent 20 years in Ottawa, 10 in government, and did nothing to prevent that from happening, Mr. Speaker? That's what I'd like to know. On this side of the House we impact the things that we have the ability to change. That side of the House should have done it when they had a chance in Ottawa.

Mr. Kenney: I take it from that non answer that the government agrees with the application of the GST on the carbon tax.

My question is: is the carbon tax a good or a service?

Ms Hoffman: Climate change is real, Mr. Speaker, and on this side of this House we take that seriously. We know that we have to do something to get a pipeline built to tidewater. That's why we brought in a climate leadership plan that led to that exact approval. We got two approvals. Line 3 is well under construction. We keep winning every single appeal that gets put in our way on the way to the west coast. I wish we didn't have to win appeals every single time in this House. It's time to get onboard. The opposition should realize that this is a pipeline that is in the national interest and stand up to support this government in making it happen.

Provincial Debt-servicing Costs

Mr. Kenney: Given that the government didn't answer that question after three times, I'll ask a different question. How much does the government plan to spend on interest payments between now and 2023?

Ms Hoffman: My real question is: how much time are we going to spend debating the fact that the member opposite didn't do anything to prevent this from happening when he was in Ottawa and had the exact ability to prevent it from happening? We will certainly do everything in our capacity to lobby on behalf of Albertans, to make sure that we have a climate leadership plan that results in the pipelines that we have gotten approved and that we will get built, Mr. Speaker. I know that it's would've, could've, should've from the member opposite. I get it. You should've fixed this when you were in Ottawa. We're fixing things here in Alberta. I expect that you will get onboard to stand up for Alberta and get our pipeline built.

Mr. Kenney: Given that apparently the audio system isn't working here, Mr. Speaker, I'll ask the question again, which had absolutely nothing to do with the non answer. How much does the government plan to spend on interest payments – I'll put that a different way – on debt interest costs between now and 2023? How much does the government plan to spend on debt interest costs between now and 2023?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what we will do is service the debt in the same way any government would service the debt as long as the debt is in place. Now, the way to get rid of the debt is to balance the budget. The members opposite are suggesting to Albertans that they can give a $700 million tax cut, protect services without any impact on Alberta families, and somehow get rid of the deficit early. That's the implicit thing here. It's not true. It just isn't true, and they need to start coming clean with Albertans about what their plan actually is.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I twice asked the government a very simple, factual question about their budget. I asked them how much they project to spend on interest costs in the next five years. The answer is $18 billion. Does the Premier think that $18 billion in interest payments to bankers is a good use of tax dollars?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, as I've said before, we inherited an economy that was ill prepared to deal with the fiscal situation, that was ill prepared to deal with the catastrophic drop in the price of oil. The members opposite would have had to deal with the same issues. The question is: how do you deal with that kind of crisis? Do you pile on? Do you cut more jobs? Do you jam kids into classrooms? Do you blow up hospitals? Or do you have Albertans' backs? We chose the latter. We are investing in Alberta. As a result, we've created 90,000 jobs. Manufacturing is up, exports are up, and so is . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
We are at the third main.

Mr. Kenney: I infer from the non answer that the Premier believes that $18 billion spent on interest payments is a good investment.

Mr. Speaker, we are currently spending nearly $2 billion in interest payments. Can the Premier tell us how many of her government's departments spend less than that $2 billion?

Ms Notley: Here's a different answer, Mr. Speaker, but it's on the same principle. When you look at some of the plans that the member opposite has talked about, say, for instance, "Let's emulate B.C.'s spending," well, if we were to do that, the kind of cuts that that would bring into effect would eliminate the Department of Justice. Just eliminated. No Department of Justice. That's what happens when you address these problems through a lens of reality and facts, and I would suggest that the member opposite ought to start doing the same.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, given that the Premier didn't answer the question, I'll answer it for her. The $2 billion, the cost of interest this year, is more than the government spends on 19 of its 24 departments.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier told us before the budget that there was going to be belt-tightening. Why, then, did the budget increase spending and increase debt by over $50 billion?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What we have done is work to carefully reduce the rate of spending, even as Alberta grows and pressures grow, and to do it in a thoughtful, strategic, intelligent way that protects families. We will not make arbitrary, massive cuts, for instance, to do what the member opposite suggested on Monday, to get rid of over 3,000 teachers and teachers' aides. On Monday that's what he suggested he would have done, and that's not all. Those are not the kinds of careful spending decisions that we will make. We'll carry on with the record we have so far.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I made no such suggestion.

Can the Premier point to anything in the budget that constitutes belt-tightening? Her phrase, not mine. She said that there would be belt-tightening in the budget. Where's the belt-tightening?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, on Monday, just to clarify, the member opposite suggested that what he wanted to do was to have spending frozen at 2015 levels. Since 2015, through funding enrolment growth – thank goodness – we've been able to add over 3,000 teachers and teachers' assistants to our schools. So that's where we get that from, and it wouldn't have happened if we followed his path.

With respect to careful decision-making, Mr. Speaker, what we've done is that we've cut massive salaries in agencies, boards, and commissions. We cancelled the golf club memberships. We've made sure that the sky palace type decisions that his friends brought into place aren't being made anymore.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Federal Infrastructure Funding

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that our government has committed to building the schools, hospitals, and rapid transit that Albertans rely on and given that the province this week signed a significant funding agreement with the federal government, can the Minister of Infrastructure tell us how much Alberta will be receiving over the next 10 years and the different streams of funding available?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member. [interjections] I'll wait for the heckling to go down.

Minister Sohi and I signed our ICIP agreement on Tuesday, $3.39 billion over 10 years. Streams for this program include public transit infrastructure, green infrastructure, rural and northern communities, and culture, community, and recreation infrastructure. Each of those streams has different criteria with different cost-sharing percentages, and Alberta is investing nearly $30 billion in this plan.

The Speaker: Thank you, Minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that Edmonton-South West is one of the fastest growing areas in this province and given that public transit projects like the Heritage Valley park-and-ride are crucial to servicing this region and given that the city of Edmonton is an important partner to the province and the federal government, can the minister tell us specifically: what is Edmonton's share for the public transit stream, and how was that amount determined?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, Edmonton's share is over $877 million. The amount is determined by ridership. The funds can be used for projects that will improve capacity, improve quality and safety, and improve access to public transit. I know that if the members on the other side of the aisle stop visiting, they may want to listen to that. Infrastructure, obviously, is pretty important to them, as it is to us.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the answer. Given that I know that there are many community groups in my riding and area who would like to apply for this funding, can the minister inform the House how the application process will work and how we can make sure that that process is fair and transparent?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, more information can be found through infrastructure.alberta.ca. It's a great website to go to. The first three of the four streams have already begun, so you can certainly get your applications in. Of course, August 1 is the deadline for the first set of applications. For all those fans of infrastructure – and I know we have quite a few on the other side of the aisle – they may want to take that information down. Certainly, now with over $3 billion in infrastructure requests from the opposition, I think that they might want to check out that website.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mental Health Services

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The impact of poor mental health on our citizens can't be overstated, and we need to adequately address mental health issues in this province for economic reasons, public health reasons, and simply because it's the right thing to do. We're coming up on a year since the Valuing Mental Health: Next Steps report was released, and it has been two years since the Mental Health Review Committee's report. To the Deputy Premier: how many of the 32 recommendations and 18 actions proposed by those two reports have been addressed?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. To date, for the 2017-18 fiscal year, we've granted $35.8 million directly to AHS or community organizations to implement the recommendations of Valuing Mental Health, and earlier interventions, of course, were for children and youth, better access to mental health services and supports for those using substances, for new detox beds, and so forth. I'll be happy to table the exact number, but we are well on track. We've implemented a great deal, and there is still more to come.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the habits and practices that lead to good mental health are best taught in early life and given that young people and adolescents are especially vulnerable to mental health issues and given that it can be harder for young people to access mental health supports in the same way that adults do, to the same minister: what is being done to ensure that young Albertans specifically are able to access the necessary mental health supports and services?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're making smart investments to support our children and youth. For example, we've funded new counselling supports for survivors of sexual and physical abuse, including the Zebra Child Protection Centre. In 2017 they supported over 1,600 children and youth. We opened a new Rutherford mental health clinic here in Edmonton for youth in Edmonton and the surrounding areas, which triples capacity for this region. We're building a new eight-bed youth facility in Red Deer. We've added new detox beds for children and youth in Calgary, which results in shorter wait times, and the list goes on. The need does as well, and that's why we won't let up. That's why we won't allow for the deep cuts that are being proposed by the members opposite.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fraser: Given that the demand for mental health services and supports is only increasing and given that the people suffering from mental illness or trauma are often desperate for any offer of help at all and given that this desperation can often make them targets for unlicensed and unregulated counselling and mental health supports, a practice that could lead to even more long-term harm, to the same minister: will you assure this House that you will regulate mental health counsellors and mental health services so that Albertans know that they are receiving a high standard of care when they seek it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. This is something that we've heard calls for. It's something that we are in the process of doing consultation on. We want to make sure that we get this right. There are a variety of different types of people who use the term "counsellor," whether it's a guidance counsellor in a school, a financial counsellor, emotional, psychological, social support, or a religious counsellor as well. We want to make sure that we do the right consultation with the community to get the right feedback and make the right decisions as we move forward, but I appreciate the vein in which the question is being asked.

Federal Impact Assessment Act

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the Trudeau government has brought forward a bill that will likely make it impossible to build major new pipelines. The Canadian Energy Pipeline Association says, quote: it is difficult to imagine a new major pipeline could be built in Canada under the Impact Assessment Act, Bill C-69. Does the Alberta government oppose the federal Bill C-69?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, our job is to stand up for Alberta and our industry by getting real results like, for example, pipeline approvals to tidewater.

With respect to the new impact assessment legislation, we have been in very close contact with the federal government. We've been ensuring that Alberta's perspective is heard at every turn. We have made some changes to that legislation, for example around legislated timelines. We know there is more to do, and we're committed to doing it.

Mr. Kenney: Given the non answer, I will ask again. Does the government oppose or support the federal Impact Assessment Act, Bill C-69, as it currently stands?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are large pieces of that legislation that require more clarification from the federal government, and that's exactly what we've sought from them; for example, around what is meant by a preplanning phase and preconsultation.

Also, Mr. Speaker, we are quite adamant that we believe that our climate leadership plan should be recognized as sufficient for any evaluation of a climate change assessment within federally assessed projects. We have a number of other concerns as well around harmonization and so on.

Mr. Kenney: Given that the Canadian Energy Pipeline Association has said that Bill C-69 would make it difficult to imagine a new major pipeline being built in Canada, does the government agree with the Canadian Energy Pipeline Association and this assessment?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we're committed to working very closely with energy pipeline companies as well as other firms who are affected by this legislation. That is why, for example, we were very pleased to learn that in situ projects will not find themselves on a project list if they are covered by a climate leadership plan, that is to say a carbon pricing regime and an emissions cap, which puts Alberta at significant strategic advantage. That strategic advantage would not be there if it were not for the climate leadership plan, something that the member opposite opposes.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Second supplemental.

Mr. Kenney: Well, given yet another non answer, it's clear that the government does not oppose this bill, which the industry characterizes as the end of any future pipeline approvals and, by the way, Mr. Speaker, a massive violation of Alberta's jurisdiction. So my question for the government is: just what does it take for them to stand up to Justin Trudeau, to tell their close ally and friend that they will stop selling out this province to Justin Trudeau's anti energy industry agenda?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I was incorrect. That was a main question rather than a supplemental.

Minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The assertion is preposterous, that this province has not been advocating for Alberta's interests from the very beginning. The letter that I wrote initially, in response to the initial discussion document that came out in the summer of 2017, enumerated a number of concerns that Alberta had. Many of those concerns have been acted upon, as I indicated, not all of them, and that is why we continue to advocate.

Mr. Speaker, there are different ways of doing politics. I do not need to jump up and down, and I resent the idea that somehow we are not advocating for Alberta simply because we're not taking a belligerent . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, if there's a belligerent tone, it's not coming from this side of the House. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

Keep going.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Justin Trudeau vetoed Northern Gateway. He killed Energy East. He surrendered to Barack Obama on the veto of Trans Mountain. He's doing nothing to assert federal jurisdiction in the construction of Trans Mountain. According to this government he's forcing them to raise the carbon tax by 67 per cent, and now he's introduced a bill that will make future pipelines just about impossible to get approved. How is that alliance working out?

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have been in close contact with the Canadian Energy Pipeline Association, with other affected firms on this matter, and that is why the hon. Minister of Energy and I have been tracking this file from the very beginning in terms of the assessment of upstream greenhouse gas emissions, for example, and other matters that we find problematic within Bill C-69 and its potential associated regulations. That's why we continue to do this work.

Now, Conservative blustering left our province's most valuable resources landlocked for decades, Mr. Speaker. That is not . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, given that Justin Trudeau vetoed Northern Gateway, killed Energy East, surrendered on Keystone XL, and is doing nothing for the construction of Trans Mountain, why does the government now trust him on a pipeline bill that the industry says will make it impossible to get another pipeline built?

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, the first line in the interview that I gave on this matter yesterday afternoon was, "We are by no means happy yet." We will continue to do the work to advocate on behalf of Alberta's interests. Those interests include pipeline approvals, that the hon. member could not get done in almost 20 years in Ottawa. It also means moving forward with the climate leadership plan so that we do not have one imposed on us by Ottawa, and it does mean that we ensure that we can get large projects built in a way that has appropriate timelines . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

2:30 Federal Equalization Payments

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, speaking of Ottawa, can the Finance minister point to any section in his budget which speaks to the need to reform equalization so that it is fair for Alberta?

Mr. Ceci: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member from the other side likes to talk about their work on the equalization format, but I can tell you that the Fraser Institute report – yes, the Fraser Institute – spells it out clearly. A rule change when he was in the federal cabinet actually hurt Alberta's economy just as we were in a downturn. The Conservatives did nothing to support Alberta with respect to equalization when he was there. He made the issue worse for Alberta.

Mr. Kenney: Well, given that that is yet another non answer, the minister would be interested to know, Mr. Speaker, that actually during the tenure of the Harper government, federal transfers to Alberta more than doubled.

Mr. Speaker, let me ask the question again. Does the Finance minister share the concern of most Albertans that while times are tough here, we should not be, through our federal taxes, contributing over $12 billion in equalization that benefits politicians who oppose our energy industry, that generates that wealth in the first place?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, Alberta needs a better deal when it comes to equalization, so I raised that issue when I was down at the Finance ministers' meeting in December. At that meeting I also called for the unanimous support of a pipeline to tidewater as our resources are a critical source for the future of the equalization program in this country. We will continue to fight for Alberta's priorities at each and every turn.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, if reform of equalization is a priority for the NDP government, why is it not mentioned once in the budget?

Mr. Ceci: You know, Mr. Speaker, I point back to the Fraser Institute report, where that side, that individual had an opportunity to address the GDP growth rate rule imposed by the Harper government, and they did nothing. It gets worse. That rule will give Ontario a whopping $1.3 billion and Quebec an extra $433 million by 2020, so either his government intentionally made the issue worse, or they didn't know what they were doing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Hospital and Long-term Care Spaces

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. WestView health centre in Stony Plain has some of the longest wait times in the greater Edmonton region. The facility averages 149 per cent at capacity, with 10 to 13 out of 23 acute-care beds occupied by people waiting to transition to long-term care. To the Minister of Health: what plans are in place to alleviate the pressure on facilities like WestView health centre?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This January I was pleased to have the opportunity to visit the WestView health centre with the member, and there, for example, I met many staff, including Roy, a dedicated member of the staff who happens to be the father of one of our pages, Jordan. He's incredibly proud of that, too. We also heard about some of the challenges that patients are facing. The government is committed to building 2,000 new long-term care spaces. We're on track to meet that goal, and we hope to share plans for building additional capacity beyond that very soon in this province.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what are the wait times to get into long-term care facilities and out of transition, and has that wait time increased or decreased in the past three years?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we know that there are significant pressures on our hospitals while patients wait for placement in long-term care, but these are issues that have been in place for decades. For example, under the watch of Ralph Klein in the 1990s, which the members speak gleefully about, we lost 88 per cent of our staffed long-term care beds in the province of Alberta, which, of course, has made this a very difficult situation for us to catch up on. We're working diligently to do so. That's why we're building 2,000 beds, and that's just the beginning.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we know that people are healthier – physically, mentally, and emotionally – when they can transition into care in their own communities, how are we supporting that in rural communities like mine, where more long-term care and assisted living beds are required?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you. We are committed to helping Albertans lead healthy and safe lives in their homes and in their communities. That's why in Budget 2018 we're making significant increases in home care. We hope that all members of this House stand in support of increasing investment to keep their communities intact, their residents safe and at home. Last year we saw over 3,800 additional new clients served by home care. Unfortunately, the members opposite didn't vote for it then. Maybe they will this time, though, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Carbon Levy and School Transportation Costs

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On March 23 I met with a group of local school bus drivers in the St. Paul area. They expressed some very grave concerns about the ever-increasing effects of the NDP carbon tax on their livelihoods. These are the men and women that we entrust every day with our most precious cargo, our children. To the Minister of Education: is there any plan to help alleviate the extra cost this crippling carbon tax puts on these vital operators of our school busing system without simply passing the burden on to our already struggling school boards?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. Certainly, I've been working closely with all of our school boards here in the province, and rural school boards specifically, on ways that we can make our transportation systems more efficient and to ensure that they are properly funded as well. We know that the key way by which you can do that is to ensure that you have that base operating cost; in other words, make sacrifices in other areas to make sure that we're funding for enrolment in the province of Alberta for our kids. You know, that has resulted in about $970 million, $980 million more into school boards over the last three budgets that I've built, and I'm very proud of that fact.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hanson: Mr. Speaker, our bus drivers need help right now. Given that a bus driver picking up our children on a given route has no way of reducing the number of kilometres they drive or how many litres of fuel they burn while they're making the route, to the minister: was there any thought to how the ever-increasing NDP carbon tax would affect our school bus operators, especially since it will have a zero effect on GHG emissions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, part of the whole concept behind the carbon levy is to make sure we realize savings so that you actually save money. When you do fix up, let's say, your insulation in your school and you save money, you're burning less power, right? When you are working with some bus routes and looking for ways by which to co-operate with the separate school system, the public school system, you can end up saving money as well as reducing carbon. So there's a whole universe of advantage to pursuing these things, and I think the vast majority . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, Mr. Minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I was talking about bus drivers.

Given, Mr. Speaker, that we have constantly requested a cost-benefit analysis with respect to this NDP carbon tax and given that this punitive tax has only negative effects on the men and women that transport our children, with no change to GHG emissions, Minister, will you do the right thing and simply scrap this ridiculous tax on our bus drivers and indeed on our entire education system?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What we are doing is ensuring that we have higher efficiency in all of our public buildings over time, investing in higher efficiency windows and lights and so forth. I mean, I know that transportation is more challenging, but I'm working with individual school boards to make it happen. School boards recognize the value as well of helping to educate young people around carbon and the process of climate change. To make any denial in that regard goes against common sense, it goes against what children want for their future, for their education, and it goes against actually saving and helping to diversify our economy in the future.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Educational Curriculum Redesign Participants

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The largest curriculum rewrite in Alberta's history is currently ongoing. All parties must work to ensure that positive educational outcomes are the priority of this process. In order to achieve this success, the rewrite needs a balanced approach in order to develop our children into strong, critical thinkers. The minister has stated on numerous occasions that this balance will be achieved during this rewrite process. If this is true, could the minister provide the list of names of the university professors and the outside interest groups providing input into the rewrite? Please note: we are not looking for the names of teachers.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the hon. member is correct. We are using literally hundreds of people working in our curriculum groups plus many, many other groups making presentations, including the energy industry, the banking industry in terms of financial literacy, computing – postsecondary institutions and industries associated with that as well – as well as working with our postsecondary institutions. It's one of the best canvassed and widest spread curriculum rewrites to help to build a stronger curriculum for everybody, and I'm very proud of every step that we have taken.

2:40

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister seems to have taken the first small step towards doing what we were asking him to do and since he's provided a few names and interest groups today in the House, would the minister, in the name of transparency for the people of Alberta, publish the list of all of the other professors and interest groups who've been involved in the curriculum rewrite process to this point?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I will always be in compliance with the law and so forth, but I will also be in compliance with the security and privacy of individuals who I will not see harassed by special-interest groups or members opposite who are very regularly using the sort of witch hunt sort of mentality of publishing and trying to shame people who are actually helping us to build curriculum. No, I won't do that, but I certainly will work for the benefit of our children.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not aware of anybody on this side of the House that has shamed anybody that's been involved in the process.

Given that the minister has repeatedly assured this House and the concerned parents across Alberta that the curriculum rewrite will be inclusive of all political philosophies and given that many continue to express their doubts that this is occurring, again to the minister: can you outline for all Albertans how the professors and the interest groups involved in the curriculum rewrite were selected, what criteria were used, and was there a specific focus on ensuring a broad range of philosophical representation amongst these groups and individuals?

Mr. Eggen: Again, Mr. Speaker, you can see exactly that this is a portrayal of my reluctance to subject individuals to this sort of witch hunt mentality that exists across the aisle and with other groups as well. We are working very closely with literally anybody. The door is wide open for people to make submissions. We had people interested in submissions around Arab culture and history just a couple of days ago, with certain groups. We're certainly working with people that are willing to be open and to represent all sides. This is not – the politicization is coming from that side.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. members, I have a request for unanimous consent to introduce a guest.

Introduction of Guests (continued)

The Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of Albertans who have dedicated themselves to market development of Alberta's organic and local food systems from farm to table. Consumer appetite for organic food and local food has grown considerably over the past several years and shows no signs of slowing down. We have with us Charles Newell, president and director of Organic Alberta, crop farmer and cattle rancher near Radway; Abbie Stein-MacLean, director of Organic Alberta; Jason Anderson, president of Alberta Farm Fresh Producers Association and producer from Kathy's Greenhouse, near Kitscoty; Jim Hill, producer from Hidden Valley Garden, near Sylvan Lake; and Gezinus Martens, Alberta Milk board member and dairy farmer near Calmar. I would ask them now to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Counselling Service Oversight

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Alberta anyone can call themselves a counsellor. There are no regulations or oversight to regulate this profession in Alberta. Nicole Imgrund, my constituent and an advocate for regulated counselling, stated in a recent op-ed: it's estimated that there are more than 5,000 unregulated counsellors in Alberta. With an increased openness to talk about mental illness across Canada and a decrease in the stigma surrounding seeking help, more Albertans than ever are using therapists and counsellors. In fact, following the Me Too movement, support centres such as the Sexual Assault Centre of Edmonton are seeing demand in counselling services up by 53 per cent. The SAIF Society in St. Albert is also being overwhelmed.

Unregulated counselling can and has led to harmful outcomes for people seeking help. Unprofessional biases lead to discrimination against a client based on sexual orientation, race, or other factors. Think about conversion therapy. Think about fake pregnancy counsellors. Other problems with unregulated counselling therapists may lead to abuse and exploitation, breach of privacy, unethical business practices, or a failure to recognize that a client is suicidal or has a serious mental illness.

FACT, the Federation of Associations of Counselling Therapists in Alberta, represents 14 professional counselling associations and has over 3,500 members. This very large and diverse group agrees that regulating counselling therapy cannot wait.

To date FACT-Alberta has developed a definition of counselling therapy, adopted an entry-to-practice competency profile, created a code of ethics to ensure a smooth implementation of the counselling therapy college. The only steps remaining are a consultation process, which is under way, and the passing of the legislation.

Nicole Imgrund from FACT and I have met with the Associate Minister of Health twice over the last year, and a great deal of work has taken place. We can prevent well-meaning but untrained people from providing counselling supports that may have negative consequences for Albertans by doing this. It's an important step towards valuing mental health.

Thank you.

The Speaker: My apologies to the Member for Edmonton-South West.

Traffic Congestion in Southwest Edmonton

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Imagine pouring a gallon of water through a straw. It takes a lot of patience and care. You have to pour that water painstakingly slowly, waiting for it to carefully drip or else it's going to spill out everywhere. Now, that is the current traffic situation in my constituency. In the fastest growing part of Edmonton my constituents have to face this challenge every single day.

The 2017 INRIX global traffic scorecard, which ranks traffic congestion in cities across 38 countries, showed that Edmonton drivers spent about 5 per cent of their commute stuck in traffic. That amounts to an average of 14 hours per commuter per year in congestion during peak travel times, Mr. Speaker. I can tell you that I myself sometimes make up an entire hour of that in one day. The city of Edmonton's Urban Planning Committee reports that 6 per cent of Edmonton's arterial road intersections are operating below an acceptable level of service, so we see that there are real transportation issues.

Now, public transit is similarly lacking in this area, with very few bus routes available to take people where they need to go. That leads to angry parents rushing their children to school; upset commuters, who are running late for work; and stressed out drivers, who are not as productive in our society.

Mr. Speaker, the government's recent commitment to the Heritage Valley park-and-ride is much applauded and a significant investment in our area. However, the southwest portion of the Anthony Henday is still a massive point of congestion in my riding and areas around it. I know that other roads like Terwillegar Drive, which goes through my colleague's riding, are driven on by over 44,000 vehicles a day. That is an immense number of cars.

We need to continue to invest in the road system and work with our municipal and federal partners to be able to offer people transportation options such as rapid transit, buses, and trains. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I urge the government to commit to supporting transportation and improving the traffic situation in Edmonton-South West.

Federal-provincial Relations

Mr. Fildebrandt: The last time that a Trudeau was in power in Ottawa, the long-standing quasi-colonial attitude of the federal government to Alberta and the west began to boil over. Preston Manning and Stephen Harper constructively channelled our frustrations under the banner The West Wants In.

The election of an Alberta Prime Minister in 2006 saw some of the antiwestern injustices like the Wheat Board scrapped, but institutions and entrenched interests are hard to overcome. Equalization and other transfer programs continue to bleed Alberta dry of our hard-earned prosperity. The Senate remains unelected, unequal, and ineffective as ever. All four Atlantic provinces together have a combined population of 2.3 million, represented by 30 Senators. Alberta, with twice the population, has just six.

Albertans have always been willing to pay more than our fair share into Confederation out of love for our country and the understanding that, at the very least, we have the right to trade in an open and free fair market. But now this most simple condition for the existence of even a quasi-functional national state is questionable at best. Despite the NDP's well-meaning and honest efforts to bend over backwards to earn social licence for a pipeline, those who benefit from Alberta's economy continue to do everything possible to bite the hand that feeds. While I do believe that a change in both the federal and provincial governments will improve our situation, I fear that the deep institutional resistance towards Alberta's interests is becoming impossible to overcome.

In my constituency and across large swaths of our province Albertans, patriotic Canadians all, are beginning to lose hope. What were once whispers are fast becoming a demand for justice.

My colleagues, we are all proud Albertans and proud Canadians, but our relationship with the federal government is quickly becoming untenable. I ask that we stand together behind the old banner The West Wants In before some people want out.

An Hon. Member: You know that was pioneered by the CCF, right?

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to give notice of a motion for the next Order Paper, that being:

Be it resolved that the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne be engrossed and presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor by such members of the Assembly as are members of Executive Council.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Bill 7

Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act

Mr. Carlier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today and introduce Bill 7, the Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act.

This bill stems from our government's commitment to work with producers, retailers, and processors to eliminate barriers to local food production and marketing. It also builds on efforts by Alberta's organic food producers to address the regulatory gap for organic foods produced and marketed within Alberta.

Alberta agriculture is ready-made for innovation, diversification, and job creation. This sector was strong through the recession and will continue to grow as we build a recovery to last. Alberta is uniquely positioned to continue that growth, Mr. Speaker. There's been a tremendous increase in local food purchased through on-farm sales and through Alberta's unique farmers' market system, supported by world-class food and excellent programs and policies.

Bill 7 will provide the forum and foundation to continue Alberta agriculture's track record of success.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a first time]

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier and Minister of Health.

Bill 9

Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to request leave to introduce Bill 9, the Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act.

All Albertans should feel safe when accessing their health care services. That includes abortion services, which have been legal in this country for almost 50 years. This new act will ensure that women in Alberta can exercise this choice without fear of interference, bullying, threats, or intimidation. This legislation will also protect doctors and other service providers from harassment and scare tactics. All Albertans should feel safe when accessing any health care service, including abortion.

Introducing this bill is also a significant step in ensuring that health care providers feel safe when they do their jobs.

I look forward to the discussion and deliberation with my colleagues in the House on this very important issue. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Bill 203

Long Term Care Information Act

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request leave to introduce Bill 203, the Long Term Care Information Act.

Mr. Speaker, I worked as a health care professional for years in long-term care. I saw with my own eyes the families and loved ones of seniors come through our doors asking for information about the facility. Everybody in Alberta deserves to have that information available to them in a format that is accessible and easily understandable. Bill 203, the Long Term Care Information Act, will provide them with that information. I have talked to long-term care providers and to those looking for long-term care.

I look forward to debating this bill with my colleagues in the House. Thank you for the opportunity.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Bill 204

Land Statutes (Abolition of Adverse Possession) Amendment Act, 2018

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to beg leave of the House to introduce Bill 204, the Land Statutes (Abolition of Adverse Possession) Amendment Act, 2018.

This bill seeks to abolish adverse possession in Alberta, also known as squatters' rights. Alberta and Nova Scotia are the only provinces in Canada with legislation enabling claims of adverse possession. I believe this bill is a positive step for the protection of the rights of urban and rural landowners across Alberta.

I would also like to at this time give special thanks to Ken Allred, former MLA for St. Albert. Ken brought forward a private member's bill just before the 2012 election which would have abolished adverse possession. The bill passed first and second reading at that time but did not pass through the House before the election. Mr. Allred decided not to seek an additional term of office, and his bill died on the Order Paper.

I would like to thank Mr. Allred for his great work, tireless advocacy, and guidance on this issue, and I will be honoured to introduce him when he joins us during debate of this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 204 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of an article from the Smoky Lake Signal on April 3 this year: MLA Says Alberta Is on the Right Track for Economic Rebound. I referred to it in my response to the throne speech yesterday.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In reference to a point of order that was made yesterday, where it was alleged by the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre that an infrastructure list was not asked for and that it, in fact, did not take place, I table the requisite five copies of a letter that was addressed to all MLAs, including yourself and the member, on capital plan priorities, seeking information about priorities for Infrastructure by the Minister of Infrastructure.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. I rise to table five copies of pages 80 and 84 of the Budget 2018 fiscal plan, and page 4 of my budget speech, which state that the federally imposed carbon price will increase based on the approval and construction of pipelines.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two documents to table, and I have the requisite number of copies. They are the AHS procurement policy documents titled Competitive Bid Processes and Corporate Contracting. These are available online; however, I did commit to tabling them in the House yesterday, and I'm proud to keep my word.

The Speaker: The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today, during consideration of the main estimates of the Ministry of Advanced Education, I made reference to a letter from the Alberta Beef Producers to the Minister of Advanced Education calling for a review of the decision to defund the Western College of Veterinary Medicine in Saskatoon. I have five copies of that letter to be tabled.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you. I'm tabling today a document containing a petition on behalf of the Friends of Berwyn Autumn Lodge, containing about a thousand signatures and asking that the Autumn Lodge in Berwyn be kept open. The closing of the Autumn Lodge will displace some 40 seniors from their homes. They go on to say that similar lodges in the Peace Country built at the same time, on an identical footprint, are still being used. Obviously, the closure of the Berwyn Autumn Lodge will be, you know, economically disastrous to the community of Berwyn. It also hurts small rural communities.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I wish to advise that the Routine needs to end, and we need to move to Orders of the Day. We will proceed very soon.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

The Speaker: My apologies to the House. I indicated that I would make a decision concerning the point of order from yesterday. I know that you're really waiting, so I would like to address that at this point. I deferred my ruling at the time because, as I noted yesterday, I did not have an opportunity to see the Blues.

I have now reviewed Alberta Hansard from April 4, 2018. I would note that the point of order was raised during the question period exchange between the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View and the Minister of Infrastructure, which can be found on page 384 of yesterday's issue of Alberta Hansard. In the exchange the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View commented on the government's fiscal management plan and its effect on the Infrastructure budget and specifically the need to build additional schools in the province. She asked in her main question about "the criteria that were used to pick the schools that have been given the go-ahead." The minister responded by stating, among other things, that "it's perplexing that my friends across the aisle spend so much time talking about reducing spending while at the same time presenting me with a long list of infrastructure demands."

The Official Opposition House Leader, who raised the point of order, alleges that during the exchange the minister imputed false and unavowed motives and made allegations against the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View when, in his words, the minister stated that "the member provided a detailed list of infrastructure asks to the minister's office." The Official Opposition House Leader contended – actually, the deputy House leader I think it was at the time – that that did not occur.

In her response to the point of order the Deputy Government House Leader argued that the Official Opposition has in the past requested in question period, in meetings, and through a variety of other methods that the government undertake a number of infrastructure projects. The arguments from both House leaders can be found on pages 391 to 392 of Alberta Hansard for April 4, 2018.

Hon. members, it is not uncommon that such disagreements arise between members as to the facts of the matter on one side as compared to the other. In this case there was a disagreement as to the facts, but there is no point of order.

This concludes the matter.

Orders of the Day

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Sweet moved, seconded by Mr. Malkinson, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate April 4: Mr. Drysdale]

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and give a reply to the Speech from the Throne. Starting out, I suppose, with the positive, I was very pleased in the Speech from the Throne to see that many of the very best ideas in there originated on this side of the House. I'm very pleased to see that the government took at least some of that good advice that they've been receiving from our side of the House and pleased that they saw fit to put it into the throne speech.

Mr. Speaker, the throne speech is an important thing because it's the opportunity, typically, where the government sets the tone for the next session of the Legislative Assembly, and for approximately 4.3 million Albertans, I think, that should give them at least some signal of where the government is about to go. They are looking for a hopeful signal, particularly when one considers that there are, as of a Statistics Canada labour force survey in February 2018, 165,000 unemployed Albertans. That number would be 26,000 higher than when this government took office. The previous month there were 10,500 full-time jobs lost and replaced by part-time jobs in Alberta.

While it may not be true in every case, I think most members of this House and most Albertans would agree with me that there is a much higher chance of those jobs being mortgage-paying jobs when they're full-time than the chance of those being mortgage-paying jobs when they're part-time, so potentially there are as many as 10,500 more homes struggling after that month to pay their mortgage than there were before that month.

Indeed, there were nearly 43,000 unemployed youth in Alberta, and that, of course, is also according to the Statistics Canada labour force survey in 2018. The youth unemployment rate, at 13.1 per cent, is the highest in Canada outside of Atlantic Canada.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these are all statistics where Alberta used to lead the way. Clearly, something has changed. Indeed, there were 92,000 fewer payroll jobs in Alberta at the end of 2017 than there were before the recession. Again, not my numbers but, rather, those of the Statistics Canada survey of employment, payrolls, and hours.

Calgary currently, again according to the February 2018 Statistics Canada labour force survey, has the second-highest unemployment rate amongst Canada's major cities, at 7.9 per cent. You can only imagine why Calgarians are so very unhappy.

Mr. Speaker, the Calgary Chamber of commerce and many other Albertans that keep track of these things made their feelings known of how unhappy they are, yet I will say that there are things we are pleased with. We're pleased that the government took our side and decided to become supportive of pipelines. We appreciate that they took our side and decided to push our neighbouring government in B.C. Again, I would say to anyone listening that our quarrel has never been with the people of British Columbia but, rather, with their NDP government, that chooses to try to hobble the most important industries in Alberta.

So, Mr. Speaker, it wasn't all bad, but it surely could have been a lot better had this government taken more of the advice from this side of the House than that which they did indeed choose to take. While I'll say that I'm grateful for the advice they took from us, they didn't finish the job.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will thank you for this opportunity to reply to the Speech from the Throne, and I will take my seat.

The Speaker: Hon. members, any other questions or observations under 29(2)(a)?

The Leader of the Queen's Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to rise for what is formally my maiden speech in this place in response to the address and reply to the Speech from the Throne.

Let my first formal words on the Hansard record here be those of gratitude: gratitude for the constituents who have invested in me their confidence as their representative in this Chamber; gratitude for those who helped with my election in Calgary-Lougheed last December, the volunteers and many hundreds of people who contributed and participated in the democratic process; respect, parenthetically, for my fellow candidates from other parties who offered themselves in that democratic process; gratitude, of course, for my family, all members of whom have, in one way or another, like for all of us, helped to shape me as a person and given me my passion for public service.

I think particularly of my paternal grandfather, Mart Kenney, who was Canada's best-known musician in the 1930s and '40s and, after that, was a household name as the leader of Canada's best-known big band and dance band. He was also a passionate Canadian nationalist who really invested in me my own passion for public service.

Gratitude for one of the former deans of this place, our friend Dave Rodney, my predecessor as the member of this Assembly for Calgary-Lougheed, for his statesmanlike decision to give me an opportunity to seek election to the Legislature to serve in the capacity as Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Members who know Dave know him to be a quintessential Albertan who personifies the hopefulness and optimism that has always characterized Alberta. I respect him greatly for his past public service and for having given me the opportunity to be the voice for the Official Opposition in this place.

Finally, gratitude for the members of my caucus and for the members of my party for having confided in me their trust to be leader of the new United Conservative Party and, consequently, Leader of the Official Opposition. Mr. Speaker, I am deeply grateful for that trust, and I will endeavour every day to discharge the serious obligations that come with this role in an honourable fashion.

Mr. Speaker, let me begin with words of profound esteem for this institution in which we are also privileged to serve. I join in that privilege now, and we should never forget. I counsel my fellow members as somebody with nearly two decades of parliamentary experience never to take for granted the privilege of walking into this place. I quoted the late Rt. Hon. John Diefenbaker in my farewell remarks in the House of Commons in September 2016. He said at the beginning of his long and storied parliamentary career: "When I first walked into this Chamber, I was humbled. I looked around at this Chamber, that looks like a cathedral, and wondered to myself: how in the world did I ever end up here?" And he said: "A few days later I looked around myself and said: how did the rest of them end up here?" I'm sure that will never happen.

As I speak about the institution, let me begin by speaking about the people who inhabit it, all of us who are custodians of this institution and the customs that it incarnates, this great tradition of ordered liberty, the customs of free people of which parliament and its constituent chambers are the safeguard. Mr. Speaker, we are debating now the address and reply to the Speech from the Throne, which some might regard as an anachronistic tradition but I regard as an essential symbolic reflection of our constitutional order, of our parliamentary democracy, of our constitutional monarchy.

I'm proud to sit in a Chamber where our gracious sovereign looks over us every day and where Her authority is symbolized in the Mace that is before us, in an Assembly which flies the proud flags of Canada and Alberta but also the Royal Union flag, which reminds us every day as we approach this building, as we enter this Chamber that we are entering not just a sterile room, not merely some debating Chamber but a living institution that has developed organically over centuries of struggle, an institution and values which we can never take for granted.

The history of the development of parliament, going back to the 14th century in England, is the gradual, halting, occasionally violent but usually peaceful and organic development of free people finding their voice. It is no coincidence that the root word of "parliament" from the Norman French is "parler." It is the place in which we speak. It is that Chamber that initially placed checks and balances on the royal prerogative of the Crown.

But what is unique and one of the reasons why the Westminster parliamentary tradition, in which we all participate here, became the first and the oldest democratic tradition in the world is because there was a brilliant, delicate balance between order and liberty, between authority and democratic representation. There is that dynamic tension in the historic development of parliament about which we should always be mindful.

The entire secular liturgy around the Speech from the Throne reminds us of that. As Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor enters the Chamber, she does so accompanied not only by our accomplished Sergeant-at-Arms but by other representatives of martial authority, by her aide-de-camp, by leading members of Her Majesty's Canadian Armed Forces, by leading members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, all of whom are here in a sense representing the executive authority of the Crown meeting with the people's representatives.

We should never regard these as anachronistic customs. They give living expression to 800 years of development of this institution. Let's remember that from time to time. I think one way in which we can give practical expression of our collective esteem for this institution and what it represents and, in turn, can demonstrate our respect for the constituents, the Albertans whom we represent in this place, is through a degree of civility in the way that we engage in our debates here.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will of course frequently allude to my experience and privilege of serving in the Ottawa Parliament. Let me offer a mea culpa. There is no doubt – well, absolutely no doubt – that in my 19-some years in that place I said and did things that I regret, that were uncivil. I heckled. I made unnecessary noise. I'm sure I was a thorn in the side of your counterparts in the federal House of Commons from time to time. Mea maxima culpa.

However, I now find myself in the privileged position of serving as Leader of the Opposition in this place. That is why, upon meeting my colleagues here shortly after becoming elected to this Chamber, I proposed that we try to raise the tone, raise the bar of our comportment in this place. Even if it's not reciprocated, we can control at least our own actions, Mr. Speaker. I hope that in so doing, we have as a caucus decided to suspend the practice of thunderous desk thumping, which I think creates unnecessary disorder in this place and detracts from the quality of debate. As much as possible we have tried to suspend the custom of heckling.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I say these things knowing full well that parliamentary debate is not croquet. This is not a walk in the park on Sunday afternoon. This is where we resolve our differences peacefully but often in a spirited way. There should be clash. There should be occasionally partisanship as long as that partisanship isn't mindless. Partisanship simply means that we associate ourselves with other elected officials who broadly share our values, principles, and policies, to assert those in an organized and collective way. That's how our parliamentary system has developed. This is sometimes derided but, I think, something to be honoured and celebrated. Yes, this is a partisan institution, a place where there is and should be clash and occasional discord, but surely that clash and debate can happen in a broader context of civility, and the parameters for that civility are the institution itself and the customs that it incarnates.

I hope that we as the Official Opposition at least have been doing our best of late to demonstrate that respect for the institution and the people that we serve. As I've said, I am sure that I and perhaps even some of my colleagues here will do and say things in this place that we will regret, but at least we are trying to set for ourselves a higher standard. I do invite members of all parties to join with us in that effort. Nobody here is holier than thou, but we are all here. Regardless of our partisan affiliation, our political philosophy, or personal background, we are all here, ultimately, I hope, as humble servants of the people and of our sovereign. That is my commitment to you, Mr. Speaker, that as long as I stand in this place, I will try, at least, to respect the best traditions of this place.

Mr. Speaker, that leads me to some words about the province and the people whom we serve and the country to which we are so proud to belong. I note with pride that this is, I believe, the only Legislative Assembly in Canada out of the 14 Assemblies, including the federal Parliament, which displays all of the flags of the 10 provinces and three territories, a beautiful expression of the innate patriotism of Albertans.

In some places patriotism has gone out of fashion. There are some who suggest that to be patriotic is to be jingoistic, that there cannot be a healthy patriotism, that, rather, it immediately passes into jingoistic nationalism. I don't agree, Mr. Speaker. Patriotism simply means love of country, and I think that Albertans, perhaps because of the natural kind of unpretentiousness of Alberta people, are not afraid, are not ashamed to be proud as Canadians. Even when we believe that the federation sometimes is not working for our best interests, the response of most Albertans to that is to work to improve or perfect the federation rather than to undermine it or tear it apart. That impulse, that love for Canada, for the dream of Canada as a great land of opportunity is reflected in those flags that surround us here. I speak not just as an Albertan but as a Canadian first.

You know, Mr. Speaker, regrettably, in the give-and-take of partisan rhetoric, I've found in the past 18 months members of different parties attacking me because I was born in Ontario – heaven forbid – and raised in Saskatchewan before moving here to Edmonton, Alberta, when I was, I think, 22 years of age. I'm proud to have spent virtually my entire adult life in Alberta and over half of my life in this province.

But, Mr. Speaker, I am proud as well to have been born in and lived in other parts of Canada. You know, one of the most remarkable features of this province's political culture is how welcoming it is. I have rarely found traces of xenophobia amongst Albertans. To the contrary, this is a province that welcomes newcomers from every part of Canada and all around the world. The ethic of Alberta is simply this: we judge you not by where you came from, what your last name is, how you pray, or whom you love, but we judge you based on how you treat others, how hard you work, how you contribute to your community.

Mr. Speaker, if there is one word that can characterize the culture of this province, Alberta, it is "meritocracy." It is a province where we judge people by their merit, and that is why newcomers – and I love this. When I go through the Calgary Stampede parade, as I have 19 times as an MP, you see hundreds of thousands of people lining the streets and huge, I think disproportionate numbers of apparently new Canadians, Canadians by choice and not chance. It moves me when I go through that parade and I see little kids of African or Asian origin, Latin American origin, from all around the world, who are participating in that parade, wearing their cowboy hats and their little cowboy boots. They're eager, their families are eager to become Albertan, to identify with the symbols that are rooted in our history. That is how welcoming this place is.

We believe, Mr. Speaker, in the dream of unity in diversity. We Albertans don't believe that diversity is a strength in and of itself. We believe the strength lies in unity in our diversity, in sharing what's best about our cultural patrimonies and faiths and backgrounds in a true and authentic pluralism. That's how Alberta has always been.

In fact, let me reflect on our history, Mr. Speaker. I look at those families as I go through the Calgary Stampede parade. I'm often able to identify which countries of origin people are from and very often able to identify people who came to Canada as refugees. I know this because of my five-year experience as the federal minister of citizenship and immigration, during which time I was honoured to welcome over 1.2 million new permanent residents to Canada, including over 120,000 refugees to this country.

Mr. Speaker, as I said in my farewell speech to Parliament and as I will say now in my maiden speech in this Assembly, according to the McGill historian and former NDP candidate Desmond Morton, Canada has been built, quote, by the losers of history. Now, that's an odd thing to say, perhaps. It doesn't really feel right to think of ourselves that way, but let me develop what Professor Morton meant in his essay on Canada as the country built by the losers of history.

If you think about our history, our First Nations peoples who came to this often inhospitable environment tens of thousands of years ago and built communities in this place but who at the time of European contact lost a great deal and who suffered many indignities and injustices too numerous to recount. Those aboriginal people were in some sense the losers of history.

The French Canadians, les Canadiens français de la Nouvelle-France ont été les perdants de l'histoire. The new French Canadians who lost the French colony in 1759, at the Conquest, were, in a real sense, losers of history.

They were shortly followed by the United Empire Loyalists, who effectively founded English Canada. I'm proud to call some of my ancestors in their numbers. Those United Empire Loyalists were the losers, literally, of the American Revolution, Mr. Speaker. They were loyal to this Crown under which we serve, and they were willing to risk and lose all to maintain that fidelity to the institutions that we represent here. They came north. They came to Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario, Upper and Lower Canada as well, and they essentially founded English Canada. They were then followed by – let's be clear. They were refugees. They were refugees that had everything taken from them and had to start plowing virgin soil with nothing but a small land grant, living through the first years of terrible deprivation, with a high rate of mortality. These were the people that founded English Canada.

Then the Highland clearance Scots, whose parents and grandparents had lost in the Jacobite uprisings and lost their small farms with the Highland clearances of the 18th century, one of whose descendants was Sir John A. Macdonald, the great father of our country, those Highland clearance Scots that populated Cape Breton and other parts of Canada, whose descendants have moved west to Alberta: they, too, were losers of history.

Mid-19th century, the Irish famine émigrés, Mr. Speaker: when a third of the population of Ireland, between 1847 and 1854, died in the famine, a third emigrated, a third survived and stayed in Ireland. Of the third that emigrated, tens and tens of thousands came to Canada, and I'm proud to say that I am one of their descendants. My family name came to this country in a coffin ship. I believe that my great-great-grandmother is buried in the mass graves at the quarantine station on Grosse-Île, at the mouth of the St. Lawrence River. These were tough people. They were the losers of history, and they helped to found Canada. Their descendants find themselves, so many of them, here in Alberta. By the way, as members can see, I'm pleased to report that the Kenney family has since recovered from the famine.

Mr. Speaker, one could go on to the Mennonites, who fled pogroms and persecution in Ukraine and Russia, had been persecuted in western Europe before that, who came west – think of all sorts of communities in Alberta, from La Crête to Taber and everywhere in between, populated by those hard-working Mennonites, descendants of refugees – or the European Jews who escaped the pogroms before the Second World War, many of whom came from Belarus, Ukraine, and Russia, from the steppes of Europe, to become merchants in small towns in Alberta.

Think of the remarkable Chinese labourers, the bachelor labourers, who were brought over here to build the Canadian Pacific railroad, with a high rate of mortality, often exploited, yet even though Canada wouldn't give them full citizenship, they still believed in the promise of this country. They planned and built their futures here. They spread out across every little town in the Canadian prairies, all throughout Alberta, and they started their small businesses, their restaurants, their laundromats, and their motels. Many of those families are still there 120 years later. In some sense, they were, originally, the losers of history, too.

You could think, of course, about the European or Jewish refugees who came after the war. You know, in Canada it's a great shame that we essentially had a none-is-too-many policy refusing the admission of European Jewish refugees during the Holocaust but, perhaps, in some small way redeemed ourselves by accepting the third-largest number of European Jewish refugees after the Shoah. Many of them I know, friends of mine, now in their 80s and 90s, who are amongst those survivors, losers of history.

One can think of the Hungarians of 1956, the anti-Soviet, anticommunist uprising – you know, one example: the entire forestry faculty of the university in Budapest was basically airlifted to Vancouver, became the faculty at the university; much of the forestry expertise in Alberta came from those individuals, losers of history, who all lost their homes, lost their freedom – the Czech refugees of 1968, right on down till today.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I can think of one man who I helped to come to Canada, named Lu De Cheng. Lu was at the Tiananmen Square protests in June 1989, in Beijing, and he was arrested and thrown into a laogai forced labour camp and tortured for the better part of a decade before escaping. He managed to get to Thailand. Members of the prodemocracy movement contacted me, and I helped Lu start his new life here in Canada.

Right down to the Middle Eastern refugees who have come here, many of them victims of the genocide of Daesh and other terrorist organizations – Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry for the long aside on our history, but it's important to remember who we are. The people that founded this province – the Ukrainians, who left, often, political oppression and hopelessness in their homeland to cross a vast ocean and then cross an enormous continent, then to plow virgin soil and live in mud huts for their first two or three years in a place with no stores, no supplies, no lumber – these people were heroes.

We stand on the shoulders of such heroes. Think of the Americans who came up from scrub farms in the American northern Midwest and settled much of southern Alberta. Think of the people like the family of my friend from Drumheller-Stettler, who got through the Depression and the drought in the special areas in the 1930s, when there was often nothing to eat but dust. These were tough people, resilient people. They did not give up. It didn't matter what nature threw at them or chance. I mean, Mr. Speaker, these are the people that built this province.

Here's my point. If we were to apply the current fashion of identity politics, of the politics of resentment to the history of all of these people, we would imagine that we are just a warring, squabbling series of factions, all with their historical grievances, all wanting to settle scores, all animated by bitterness and a desire to right history's wrongs. But no. Instead, all of these people decided to focus on the future; yes, to be proud about those who had gone before and the sacrifices that they had made, never to forget those things, including some terrible injustices, but never to become embittered or encumbered by those things.

Rather, they chose together to build a great country in the vision of Thomas D'Arcy McGee, the great martyr of Confederation, Mr. Speaker, who himself started as a Fenian rebel animated by bitterness towards the Crown under which we serve, yet he came to accept that in Canada we were building something remarkable in human history. We were building a place of fresh starts and new beginnings, a place where it was possible to leave our ancient grievances outside of this country and to build it together, united in our diversity. In so doing, we, the descendants of these great people, have become the winners of history.

That's why I'm a proponent of a certain Canadian exceptionalism. I do believe there is something exceptional in the character of this country and, particularly, this province, which takes all of those experiences and then adds to it, like, a special entrepreneurial drive and work ethic. That's what I love so much about this province.

In fact, I myself as a 22-year-old had a good-salary job offer to go down and be a political staffer in Ottawa and then, at the same time, an offer to come up here and help start an organization more or less from scratch, the Canadian Taxpayers Federation in Alberta, the Alberta association of taxpayers at the time, in 1991. For some reason, maybe just because I was young and foolish, that idea of starting something, of not knowing where your next paycheque would come from, of putting it all on the line, appealed to me.

That is the draw of Alberta. That is why we have been, all through our history, a magnet for risk takers and entrepreneurs and hard workers and wealth creators. It's that belief in the creative power of human freedom. Mr. Speaker, it is no coincidence, as we enter those doors to this Assembly, that over them is written this province's motto, Fortis et Liber, strong and free, words beautifully taken from our national anthem, words that themselves perfectly reflect what I call this Canadian tradition of ordered liberty, strong and free. This, I believe, is the only province in Canada which includes freedom in its motto – and it's no coincidence – the land of big skies, of endless opportunity, where dreams can come true. That is the province of which we all are custodians. So I rededicate myself to that Alberta project of being a sign of hope for people all around the world.

Let me share with you, Mr. Speaker, a remarkable and true story, an Irish story. It would have been in 2012, I believe, when I was minister of citizenship and immigration. Members will recall that one of the most significant challenges in our economy at the time was labour shortages as our economy was supercharged. We had, effectively, full employment. Boy, wouldn't it be nice to have those days again. But employers were desperate, and the number one request I was getting in Alberta as the federal immigration minister was: we need more workers.

So I went to Ireland to attend and participate in something called the Working Abroad Expo, and I went there with several dozen Canadian employers, Edmonton Economic Development, Calgary Economic Development, and so forth. In fact, I think Alberta Health Services was there trying to recruit nurses. There were employers from Canada, United States, Australia, New Zealand, and elsewhere. At that time Ireland and Europe were still going through their financial crisis. In fact, I think that unemployment in Ireland at the time was 20 per cent. It was 40 per cent youth unemployment. There was, like, much of that through parts of Europe.

I will never forget it. At 9 a.m., as they opened the doors for the jobs expo, there were over 10,000 young Irish and other Europeans and people from, actually, all around the world that went around several city blocks. On that misty Irish morning I worked my way down that queue and tried to shake every hand, spent four or five hours going down that line because, Mr. Speaker, my formal agenda was to encourage them to come to Canada, but I must confess that I had a hidden agenda. It was to get them to come to Alberta.

As I went down the queue, I saw in the faces of so many of these young people who had been unemployed for two or three years a look of hopelessness and despair, which, sadly, have been too much of Ireland's history. I would say to them: which of the countries that are represented here do you think you might be interested in going to? I was pretty pleased that about half of them said Canada. About half of them. We were beating Australia, with their beaches and their warm weather. That was pretty cool.

And then for those who said Canada, I went a little deeper. I said: now, do you know which part of Canada you might be interested in? Mr. Speaker, it sends a shiver up my spine to think of it every time. Again and again and again that morning I heard from those young Irish and others the same word: Alberta, Alberta, Alberta. They said this, people who had no relatives here, had never visited here, had no friends. It would be a hard place to find on a map, but the word "Alberta" represented for these young people hope, opportunity, and a new beginning.

This is not just a random place on a map. It is not a haphazard collection of people. It is an idea, an idea that has the power to animate hope amongst the hopeless halfway around the world. That is Alberta, Mr. Speaker, and that is why we all serve this province. Having said that, having said that we do have this special, exceptional – Canada is exceptional. I believe in world history for the reasons I've described, and I believe Alberta is exceptional within Canada for those reasons.

So, Mr. Speaker, what then motivates me personally in my public service? I'd like to cite words I offered when I began our Unite Alberta campaign on July 6, 2016. I talked about those newcomers who had come from every corner of the Earth to a land where dreams come true, and I said: that's what drew me to devote my life to public service, a passion constantly to renew Canada's promise as a land of opportunity so that every one of us, especially those who are least fortunate, can realize their God-given potential.

The greatness of Canada and of Alberta is not an accident of history. Every day people join our family, having left behind countries seized by corruption, poverty, and tyranny. Why, then, are we different? Why are we considered a model to the world in so many ways? It is not because, as Justin Trudeau claims, we are a, quote, postnational state with, quote, no core identity. It is not because we are simply a reflection of the world or, as Yann Martel, the novelist, said, Hotel Canada.

It is because we are the inheritors of a great tradition of ordered liberty based on the dignity of the human person, the inalienable dignity of the human person incarnated in certain institutions and customs like the rule of law, limited parliamentary government, and the sanctity of property and contract. From these have come the brilliant achievements of free markets, free enterprise, and democratic capitalism, of innovation and prosperity, all of which have harnessed human freedom to lift countless women and men out of poverty and despair, to realize the greatness of their potential.

I say these things because I want to start at the beginning. Far too often in politics we forget what we are about. We lose track of the first principles that animate us. So I say to you: these are my first principles. I am a conservative because I believe we have an obligation to transmit and renew these traditions of ordered liberty that have helped to make Canada the envy of the world.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with that as a statement of my philosophy about our country, province, and politics, let me then turn to more current challenges which we all face. I preface this by reiterating my respect for members of all parties, including the government. It is important to offer this condition because I do not want my criticism of the policies of the government to be taken as an ad hominem personal criticism of the people who make up the government.

Insofar as the hon. the Premier is my opposite in this Chamber, I would like the record to be clear about my highest esteem and respect for our Premier. When she has been sometimes viciously attacked on social media and elsewhere, I have tried to remind people that we do not have an obligation to agree with our head of government, but she is our elected head of government, and we do have an obligation to respect her mandate and to respect her office and to respect her personally. And that, Mr. Speaker, applies to every minister of Executive Council and every Member of this Legislative Assembly. To reiterate what I said earlier about civility, I hope to be able to disagree without being disagreeable, for the differences to be predicated on policy and not people.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I am very conscious of this. It is my constitutional role as Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition to hold the government to account and to prepare an alternative government to the Lieutenant Governor should circumstances warrant it. That is a burden, a constitutional convention that falls on the Leader of the Opposition and the Official Opposition, and I'm serious about discharging that.

That is why, Mr. Speaker – let me just begin with this section of my remarks – I and so many others have worked so hard over the past 21 months to create one united, competent, credible alternative to the current government. Twenty months ago, when we launched this Unite Alberta campaign, we had two conservative parties in Alberta. The Progressive Conservative Party had a great legacy of having helped to build modern Alberta with inspired leaders like the great Alberta statesman the late Peter Lougheed, like the great Ralph Klein, a man of the people. I know friends opposite didn't agree with Premier Klein, many of his policies, but I think very few Albertans could deny that Ralph, as we all loved to call him, had a passion for the little guy and an innate sense of the common sense of common people.

Mr. Speaker, so much of modern Alberta developed through these and other leaders. They weren't perfect. Those governments made mistakes, and that's why we're in the opposition, some of those mistakes that were made in recent years. Some of those mistakes were also why we ended up with a division in the conservative movement in this province. This is no secret. We had two ostensibly conservative parties, the Progressive Conservatives and the Wildrose Party, which itself incarnated important Alberta values: a belief in fiscal responsibility, in democratic reform. While in its relatively brief existence some members of the Wildrose Party made mistakes as well, fundamentally I believe that the members of both parties were animated by a love for this province and a desire to serve her.

Unfortunately, the members of these two parties were locked in a war of attrition, much of it animated by bitterness and resentments that had developed over a decade of division. It was not only my observation, Mr. Speaker, but others' that as long as this war of attrition continued, we would be creating the potential conditions for a re-election of the current government. I respect the 40 per cent of the popular vote won by the New Democratic Party in the May 2015 election and the majority of members elected to this place as a result. I point out, however, that the combined vote of the Progressive Conservative and Wildrose parties in the same election was over 50 per cent of the vote.

My view, the view of so many of us, was that whatever differences those parties had between themselves, they paled in comparison to the differences that we shared with the New Democratic Party. It was our view that we had to find a way to overcome these differences, to heal the wounds, to start again, and to give a new beginning to democratic conservative politics in Alberta.

We went through a huge amount of heavy lifting. At first the Progressive Conservative Party decided in its leadership election just over a year ago to get on the path to unity. I want to thank the former members of the PC caucus who are in this United Conservative caucus for their leadership. It wasn't an easy or an obvious thing to do, and they deserve great credit for being ahead of the parade, Mr. Speaker.

Then we negotiated a unity agreement. It was hard work. You need only ask these two gentlemen, Mr. Speaker. I appointed the Official Opposition whip, the Member for Calgary-Hays, as my primary representative on the negotiating committee, and our House leader, the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, was one of the principal Wildrose representatives. Look at them getting along here right now, the very picture of unity. Someday I will perhaps join with them in writing the history of what happened in those difficult negotiations. It was not a sure-run thing, by any means. A couple of times this thing was stuck in a ditch, and as one prairie politician once said, you don't shout "whoa" when you're stuck in a mudhole. That wasn't the Member for Drumheller-Stettler either.

So, Mr. Speaker, we got it done. We got the unity agreement done, and then we presented it to the members in a democratic exercise. This was not a top-down, elitist contrivance. It was an authentic reflection of a democratic will. We all had the courage to put it all on the line. Again, the outcome was not certain. Yet I am pleased to say that 95 per cent of the members of both of our legacy parties said yes to unity. They said yes to the future. They decided to focus on the future rather than getting stuck in the past. They said that our province is more important than any political party.

We did it, so thank you to my colleagues and, through them, to the 120,000 members that make up the newest political party in Canada. With that novelty comes a great deal of opportunity but also concomitant responsibility. That's why I have emphasized with all of our party members the importance of rising to that level. We'll begin doing some of this important democratic work at a founding convention on the first weekend of May in Red Deer, where our members will have their say on the initial policy direction of our party and so much other work to be done.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to address this in my maiden speech because what we have done together is to make history. Every day, hon. colleagues, we continue to make history together. So let us never forget the lessons of a decade of division and what it has cost Alberta, and let us rededicate ourselves to the mission of renewing this province as that beacon of hope and opportunity and renewing the Alberta advantage.

Let me, then, turn to those imminent challenges, Mr. Speaker. Our province has recently gone through the longest and deepest recession since the Great Depression of the 1930s, and that was a doozy. This province went bankrupt, effectively, in 1934. Albertans are still suffering the consequences of this long and deep recession, at the height of which over 200,000 Albertans were unemployed. We had a 9 per cent unemployment rate. We had gone from consistently the lowest unemployment rate in Canada to the highest, outside of Atlantic Canada. We saw near-record levels of business bankruptcies and insolvencies. We saw tens of thousands of people leave the labour force altogether, just giving up looking for work, and tens of thousands of others who left the province. We had seven straight quarters of net out-migration, with more Canadians leaving Alberta than coming to it.

Mr. Speaker, in the last 20 months I've put 140,000 kilometres on my pickup going to over 900 events everywhere from High Level to Milk River and Manyberries to Rocky Mountain House. How many times have I been in Rocky? About six times? To the Member for Medicine Hat, I think it's about 12 times that I've been in the Hat. As I've gone around and just listened to Albertans, as I've done that – by the way, Winston Churchill reminded us that moral courage consists not just in speaking out but also in humbly listening. We've done a lot of humble listening in the last 18 months. As I have done that, I have been moved again and again by the stories of despair being experienced by our fellow Albertans. I'll never forget.

I was going around in the Drumheller-Stettler constituency to three events one day, and there was a couple who followed me to each of the three events. They spent the whole day driving around listening to my speeches again and again. I wouldn't have done that for my speeches, I assure you. At the end of it, the third event, I went up to them. They were kind of shy, and they were standing at the back, and they were frankly looking like they'd been through some bitter times, you know. It kind of reminded me of one of those Johnny Cash songs, Mr. Speaker. It looked like they'd lived through one of those tough country music songs.

I went up to the husband and wife and said: why were you following me around all day? The wife broke down in tears. She said: "Well, Mr. Kenney, my husband was in the construction industry and lost his job. It was through his job that we were able to pay the bills to keep the farm going, but when we lost that income, we lost the farm. Now we're living in a trailer on our son's acreage. We're in our late fifties, and we've lost everything, and we feel like we have to start all over again like we're in our twenties. We're embarrassed to be dependent on our son." Breaking down in tears in front of me, they said: we just want to know that there's some hope that we're going to turn this thing around.

I think of the lady who approached me after a speech I gave in Calgary, who again came up to me – this happened a lot – and just broke down emotionally and she said: "Mr. Kenney, six months ago I lost my job. I've been looking for work ever since without any luck. The company that I worked for here moved to the States, and they said that this government's policies were part of the reason why." And she said, "Finally, just to put food on the table for my family, I had to take the same job I was doing when I was 18, an entry-level retail job, and I just feel ashamed and embarrassed." She broke down in tears in front of me.

When I think of the young man – many of my colleagues have heard this story. I was filling up my gas tank at the Esso station in Hardisty. Whose riding is Hardisty in? Battle River-Wainwright? You know the Esso station there. Mr. Speaker, I'm filling up, and this young man pulls up behind me in his pickup. He jumps out. He seemed to recognize me. He said, "Are you that Kenney guy?" I said, "Yeah." He said, "How long before you replace this government?" I said, "Well, hopefully, three years." He said, "That's not fast enough." I said, "Well, buddy, I'm going as fast as I can, but we don't decide when the election is." He said: "But, sir, you have to understand. This really matters. My dad lost his job two years ago, and he can't find any other work, and he's getting depressed now. I've never seen him like this before." Then the young fellow goes on to say, "Sir, I'm just 17, and I'm now the only paycheque for dad and mom and all four of my brothers and sisters, and the pressure and the stress is getting to me, too." And this young man started to break down in front of me.

Now, I think we all know that young man. Some of us may have been that young man or a young woman like him. We know that at any normal time in our history a 17-year-old oil field worker like that would be working hard and playing hard, that he couldn't pick me out of a police lineup, and he probably wouldn't know what government is doing. But, Mr. Speaker, all of a sudden this young man understood that politics has real-life consequences for him and his family, and he wants to do something about it.

These are the Albertans that I have met, and when they hear the government say, "Happy days are here again. It's all fine. There's some great recovery going on," it doesn't relate to their real, lived experience, Mr. Speaker. We still have 175,000 unemployed

Albertans and 40,000 who have left the labour market and stopped looking for work. Many of those who are technically working – I mean, this is supported by the data; it's not my opinion – are working part-time, piecemeal, and contract work, where they were in full-time, secure, high-paying, often six-figure jobs, and they're having a hard time making it. I just met with such a fellow in Drayton Valley the other day: a nice, young, I think 28-year-old oil field worker. He's working in Saskatchewan because there's no work for him here. He says: maybe I can get a day or two, but at least in Saskatchewan I can get regular work.

Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, it's not just workers who have left the province. Why are they leaving the province? Why do we have 9 per cent unemployment in Calgary, the highest of any city in the country? It is in part because tens of billions of dollars of capital have fled this province. Now, the government tells us every day that this happened simply because we are the passive victims of global commodity prices, that we can't do anything to help, that we have to surrender in the face of global commodity fluctuations. Nonsense. Our province has been through cycles and downturns before, but at least in the past we had governments that were trying to maintain and restore investor confidence rather than undermine and destroy it as has happened in the past three years.

Mr. Speaker, over $36 billion has been taken out of Alberta's oil and gas sector alone in the past two years, redeployed to the same industry, oil and gas, in other parts of the world at the same global prices. It is not about price. Through most of our history – like right now global prices are $62, and our effective export price to the U.S. is $35. Those price points are high compared to most of our history. The Klein government balanced the budget at $20 and then $10 oil. Through most of our history we've had lower prices than this, but tens of billions of dollars have been relocated.

Take, for example, one of the majors – I think it was Exxon – who took billions out of the oil sands and then redeployed that capital to former Soviet Socialist Republic of Kazakhstan, one of the most corrupt economies in the world. What's wrong with this picture? Total, the French oil giant, divested themselves of a multibillion-dollar oil sands development, and then they redeployed that capital months later to gas fields in the Islamic Republic of Iran, a theocratic dictatorship that stones women accused of adultery and hangs gay men, Mr. Speaker. Is the world better off? You know what that means? That decision means that some guy, probably with a PhD, sitting in the Total headquarters in Paris did a global risk assessment and determined that Iran was a lower risk for Total's capital than the province of Alberta. This is what's happened to this province, every day.

Drilling activity was up dramatically in Saskatchewan while it was down in Alberta. You know, the oil field is booming in the Bakken in North Dakota, in Colorado, in the Permian basin in west Texas every day. Talented Albertans – we had this incredible brain drain. Why is all of this happening? Well, its not, obviously, about the same oil prices, the same gas prices. It's about policy. Alberta has fallen from being the 14th to the 44th most competitive jurisdiction in North America for upstream oil and gas investment, and it's just beginning.

Why? Because this government decided to pour fuel on the flames of a recession rather than trying to douse the flames. Mr. Speaker, we found ourselves in a hole of the recession. The first thing you do is that you stop digging when you're in a hole, but they dug deeper. They raised taxes on everything: higher income taxes, higher business taxes, higher provincial share of property taxes. They're helping Mr. Trudeau, their close ally. They just can't say no to Justin. They've never met a Trudeau policy they didn't love.

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

When the Liberal Prime Minister, who's polling at 11 per cent in Alberta right now, half of where his father was during the NEP – the NDP may not have figured it out, but Albertans sure have, that Justin Trudeau does not have our best interests at heart. When Justin Trudeau said, "I want to raise the CPP payroll tax to make it more expensive to hire people and create jobs," the NDP government said: "Oh, sure. Yeah. Okay." Then they imposed the largest tax increase in Alberta history, the multibillion-dollar, job-killing carbon tax, which they did not mention to Albertans in the last election. I keep it here on my desk every day, Mr. Speaker. It's the NDP platform, Leadership for What Matters, page 24, balancing the books. [interjections] Yeah, balancing the books. That was supposed to be this year, a $25 million surplus. Whoops. They were only off by $9 billion. That's 16,000 per cent. Is that right?

Some Hon. Members: It's 364 per cent.

Mr. Kenney: Three hundred and sixty-four.

Mr. Speaker, I read this, like, almost every day because I think I'm missing something. There are seven tax changes mentioned, not one mention of a carbon tax or a carbon levy or a save-the-planet tax or whatever they're calling it now. Zero. It was the biggest misrepresentation, mistruth – I'm looking for a parliamentary word – in Alberta political history. They imposed it five months later. They pretended: oh, we had never really thought about it; it was just kind of a new idea. And then they raised it by 50 per cent on January 1. Then Justin Trudeau comes along and says: "Yeah, I don't like your $30 tax. I want it to be $50. You should go 67 per cent higher."

Now, at any normal time in Alberta history an Alberta Premier would have said: "Hold on a second, Prime Minister. We're going through a tough time here. We've got a couple hundred thousand unemployed people. There's a total failure of investor confidence. You know, incomes are down and unemployment is up. No, no, Prime Minister. I'm sorry." A normal Alberta Premier would have said: "No. We're going to fight you on this." What did they say? They said, "Absolutely. We'll happily implement your 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax." Then the Premier goes on, as I've quoted her before, saying that they're open to raising it beyond that.

I said this the other day on the speech last week on the budget. We all know what it's about, Mr. Speaker. To give New Democrats their due, they really believe that they're saving the planet by forcing seniors to turn down the heat at home in Alberta when it's 30 below outside. They're so driven by that ideological zeal. We all know where that really leads us to. Professor Leach, who wrote their carbon tax, said: we need a price of $200 a tonne to achieve Paris climate targeted goals. Environment Canada says: $300 a tonne. And that's where they want to go.

This is just incrementalism. Like, who's kidding whom? Let's be grown-ups here. What's the point? As Andrew Coyne says in today's National Post of a punitive consumer tax that makes it more expensive for people to consume energy in a big, complex, industrialized, cold, northern economy: what's the point? When there's no elasticity, people don't stop driving to work. Carbon emissions are up in B.C. over where they were when they brought in that carbon tax. The Australians repealed their carbon tax because it didn't work, didn't reduce emissions, but it did hurt the economy. He says: what's the point? Go big or go home. Make it 300 bucks a tonne or stop hurting our economy.

Well, Mr. Speaker, on top of all of that – on top of all of that – massive new regulations, increased labour costs. What government raises labour costs by 50 per cent in the middle of a recession, when people are losing their jobs?

You know, I get a kick out of the NDP talking about evidence-based policy. Well, here's the economic evidence. According to a metastudy of all of the minimum wage increases in Canada in the past 40 years a 10-point increase in the minimum wage results on average in a 2 per cent reduction in employment for immigrants and youth. Why? Because they're the newest entrants to the labour market, the most marginal in the labour market.

What do you think a 50 per cent increase in the minimum wage results in? Well, according to the Bank of Canada 60,000 job losses across the country. According to the C.D. Howe Institute 25,000 job losses in Alberta. Think about how – oh, my goodness – when New Democrats get on their moral high horse and pretend they have a monopoly on compassion, and then because union bosses tell them to, they bring in a policy that according to the think tanks will kill 25,000 jobs for immigrants and youth. Where is the compassion for those who lost their jobs, Mr. Speaker? There is none. There's no regard.

The massive new regulations on everything: you know, their economic policy reminds me of how Ronald Reagan used to characterize socialist economics. "If it moves, tax it. If it keeps moving, regulate it. And if it stops moving, subsidize it." That's a billion dollars in corporate welfare for hand-picked companies in the energy sector after $35 billion in capital has been pulled out and, by the way, an unnecessary royalty review that helped to fuel this investor uncertainty, and it goes on and on.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, our concern is not limited to the economy, but look at the fiscal catastrophe in what I think history will record as one of the worst budgets in Alberta history. The NDP was elected. All of the members opposite went to Albertans and said: vote for us, and we'll give you a $25 million surplus in the 2018-19 fiscal year, this fiscal year, and we'll only increase the debt by about $11 billion. That was the contract with Alberta voters in 2015; instead, a $9 billion deficit and a plan for another $40 billion in debt. Altogether they promised $11 billion in debt, but we're going to end up with a debt of $96 billion, nearly $100 billion, based on absurdly optimistic projections; mortgaging the future, as I said in the budget speech; spending $4 billion in interest payments, already at $2 billion, more than 19 of the 23 government departments.

I asked the Premier today: does she think that spending $17 billion in interest payments in the next four years is a good use of public money? And she couldn't even bring herself to say no. How far these Alberta New Democrats have strayed from the great tradition of Tommy Douglas, who, for all of his policy mistakes, balanced Saskatchewan's budget 17 times because as an intellectually honest social democrat Tommy understood that when you borrow money, you've got to pay it back, and to whom? The bankers. And where? Bankers in Toronto and in London and in Zurich and in New York. Tommy understood that there's no social justice in enriching bankers and that it therefore requires discipline, a discipline this government is completely incapable of demonstrating.

Not only is this a fiscal train wreck, Mr. Speaker, but we are profoundly concerned about the government's direction on so many other issues, including, for example, education. Albertans want to ensure that we have a quality education system that focuses on the transmission of critical knowledge and skills to young people to help ensure their success. What Albertans don't want is failed pedagogical facts or political agendas in the classroom. We are deeply concerned as well about the NDP unleashing their astroturf front groups to attack Alberta's wonderful tradition of school choice.

We hear all these speeches about diversity, but they are ideologically – it's NDP policy. It hasn't yet become government policy, but NDP policy is opposition to diversity in education. They don't believe in pluralism in education. They believe in monism, only one way, government cookie-cutter schools whereas we believe that every child is unique, that families have different values and they have a prior right, as reflected in article 26(3) of the universal declaration of human rights, to choose the form of education that their children will receive. Well, we will defend that universal human right against the NDP's allies, Mr. Speaker.

So, Mr. Speaker, it will fall to us in the year ahead to present a compelling alternative to the economic disaster and the fiscal train wreck of this ill-prepared government, and we will do so deliberately and democratically. Some of our critics say: well, why don't you have a platform, an alternative budget, and so forth? We're not going to, like the NDP did in their platform, make stuff up on the back of a cocktail napkin. We're going to consult our own grassroots membership with a deliberate debate to set the basic policy direction of our party, and then we will consult broadly amongst Albertans of all backgrounds and walks of life to produce a comprehensive, positive, compelling, realistic, and affordable plan, blueprint, to reignite our economy, restore investor confidence, and renew the Alberta advantage.

I can, however, tell you that I think we have a consensus on some elements of that plan. It is our intention, Mr. Speaker, should we be honoured with the confidence of Albertans in the election scheduled for next spring, to call an extraordinary summer session of this Assembly, so I forewarn colleagues who are running for re-election to book off no summer holidays next summer. Okay. You can take Canada Day off, and that's it.

And should we have this opportunity to come to this place, we will begin systematically to repeal every damaging element of the NDP's economic agenda. Beginning with Bill 1, the carbon tax repeal act, we will put that job killer through the shredder. Mr. Speaker, within weeks if we should be honoured with the confidence of Albertans, we will repeal the legislation, the damaging aspects of Bill 6 that imposed massive costs on our farmers and agribusinesses and agrifood operators. We will repeal the regulations and the new laws imposed by this government as part of an endless accretion of higher costs on the entrepreneurial sector of Alberta's economy. We will move to demonstrate fiscal responsibility.

It's interesting. The NDP was saying last fall that I have a secret agenda, they claim, to cut government spending by 20 per cent. Now, just today the Premier is saying that I have a secret agenda to freeze government spending at zero cuts. Boy, that's quite a shift. But last week her communications director, her spokesperson said that the only way to balance Alberta's budget was, quote, to blow up every school and hospital. To Albertans who are watching this, Mr. Speaker, that's a preview of the election to come. As this government runs out of time, becomes increasingly desperate, we can expect the volume of that hyperbolic anger to reach ear decibel breaking levels.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans aren't going to rise to that bait. Albertans are too smart. They understand that we can exercise some reasonable fiscal discipline in the provincial government that spends more than any other in per capita terms by far. We are the most inefficient provincial government in Canada by a country mile, and this is not simply the fault of the NDP. Recent PC governments must share a part of the responsibility for that.

So, Mr. Speaker, we will demonstrate that commitment to fiscal responsibility. We will demonstrate an immediate commitment to lifting off of the wealth creators in our society the enormous accretion of job-killing regulations. We will eliminate that huge, massive new tax burden of the carbon tax, and we will do everything to send a message all across Canada and around the world that Alberta is open for business again and that this, once again, is that land of opportunity.

Why do we do this, Mr. Speaker? I'll close with this. We do this not because there's some great unique virtue just in having balanced budgets or allowing people to keep more of their own money. We do this because we understand that wealth cannot be redistributed unless that wealth is being created through people's hard work in the first place, that in order for us to have the means to be a generous society with proper funding for critical social programs like health care and education, we need that wealth to be generated in the first place. The NDP raised taxes on incomes and businesses but saw revenues go down. We need to reignite the creative power of this economy so that we have those resources and so that we are not wasting billions of tax dollars year after year enriching bank holders rather than investing in the future of this province.

The blueprint that we present, our vision of the renewal of the Alberta advantage, is designed not to achieve some abstract economic growth. What drives us, what motivates us is a passion to ensure true equality of opportunity for every member of Alberta society, especially those who live at the margins, especially those who have many disadvantages: for persons with disabilities who want to get into the workforce, for single moms who need that opportunity that they desire, for First Nations people who too often are excluded from prosperity in our economy, for low-income seniors who are having a hard time paying the bills as they go up with the carbon tax and the cost of heating their homes.

For all of those who are at the margins, what we will present is a vision, a credible plan of opportunity once again to restore Alberta as a province that is the beating heart of enterprise in Canada, the job-creation engine of this country's economy, that Alberta that animated those young people in Ireland I met five years ago to see this as the land of fresh starts and new beginnings, that Alberta that is, in the words of our province's motto, strong and free.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Time is short, and there's not enough time, unfortunately, for a full 29(2)(a), but keeping, of course, with parliamentary tradition, through you on behalf of the entire Assembly and certainly on behalf of the Official Opposition I'd like to congratulate the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed on his maiden speech before this Assembly.

Also through you to him, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Official Opposition we'd like to congratulate him on getting here. I'd like to say that you've got it all the way done, but I think, through you to him, that he has one more step to go. I'm looking forward to his maiden speech a little over a year from now as Premier of Alberta.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 4(2) the House stands adjourned until Monday afternoon at 1:30.

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:28 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 4th Session (2018)

Activity to Thursday, April 5, 2018

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sittings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, April 9, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

I wonder if we could pray or contemplate, each in our own way. As our nation mourns the death of so many fellow Canadians, let each of us think about our loved ones, our children, our grandchildren, who may have all travelled on a bus to play the game they love. We share the crippling pain felt by the families affected by this tragedy. Let this incident yet again remind us about what is really important. Please may we observe a moment of silence.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. R.J. Chambers. I would invite all to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today on behalf of my colleague the MLA for Edmonton-Riverview and Minister of Seniors and Housing to introduce to you and through you students from Malmo elementary school. They're accompanied today by their teacher, Theresa Bonar. I would ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise on behalf of the Member for St. Albert and introduce to you and through you 50 students and chaperones from Albert Lacombe school in St. Albert. The students today are accompanied by their teachers, Miss Leis, Miss Kaplar, and Mrs. Michael, along with their chaperones, Mrs. Shankaruk, Mrs. Carlson, and Mrs. Sylyski. If they could please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, any other school groups?

Seeing and hearing none, the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my constituency assistant, Niel Parker, and my outreach officer, Azure Johnson. We all know the vital role they play in serving the public, especially when we are not able to be in our offices. I admire their dedication, professionalism, tact, and charm. Please welcome Niel and Azure with the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For more than 110 years Rotary International has taken action on sustainable projects. As Rotarians we're always working to better our world. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the members of the district 5370 Rotary board: Frank Reitz of Fort McMurray – please stand as I say your names – Kathy Strobl of the Whyte Avenue branch, and Laura Morie of Westlock. I ask you all to please stand and receive the warm applause of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to recognize members of the Professional Association of Resident Physicians of Alberta seated in the members' gallery. Their association is often referred to as PARA. They are here annually to meet with elected officials. Today's focus will be on how a provincial pharmacare strategy would support the provision of excellent patient-centred care in the province of Alberta. I look forward to meeting with them later today. I now invite Dr. Michael Martyna, PARA president, as well as Dr. Michele Foster, vice-president leadership and engagement, along with staff and all members of PARA to rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the entire Assembly three young-adult community organizers from Canadian Roots Exchange. Specifically, they're from the youth reconciliation initiative, a program that puts youth in a position of leadership with regard to reconciliation. They foster discussions between indigenous and nonindigenous youth about topics surrounding decolonization and reconciliation, when we create a more just province for all. I ask that they please rise as I call out their names: Aura Leddy, Brittany Whitford, and Hyungu Kang. I ask all members to provide them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you visitors from a great business in my riding of Calgary-Acadia. I'll ask that they rise as I introduce them and remain standing: Abdulfatah Sabouni, Husny Hadry, Walid Balsha of Aleppo Savon; and Sam Nammoura and Saima Jamal of the Calgary Immigrant Support Society. Abdulfatah was forced to flee his home and family soap business in Syria a few years ago. Now he and his family call Calgary home. He and his business partners have created new jobs by bringing Aleppo Savon to Calgary with the same passion, ethical practices, tradition, and family pride to create wonderful soaps. I have to say that they are high-quality, excellent products. To the Aleppo Savon team: we love your products, and we look forward to watching your business grow. Please join me in extending the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-MacKay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the members of the Assembly Saima Jamal, an activist and inspirational humanitarian who's furthering her work by joining the Alberta Party caucus in the capacity of outreach officer, and her partner in the Calgary Immigrant Support Society, Sam Nammoura, who was recently a finalist in the immigrants of distinction awards in Calgary. I'd like everyone to please extend to them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Humboldt Broncos Bus Crash

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans and all Canadians are reeling from the horrific Humboldt Broncos crash, that claimed 15 lives. The pain of this loss is staggering. It transcends this Legislature, this province, and this country. It is far from just us who rise today to pay our respects and to mourn. It is a safe bet that the name "Humboldt Broncos" is being uttered in every coffee shop, community club, schoolyard, and place of worship across Alberta, Saskatchewan, and beyond because, really, there is not an Albertan who doesn't in some way see themselves and their loved ones in this tragedy. I know that I hug my kids tighter, and I'm sure that that goes for a lot of us. After all, our children, our families, and our communities are what unite all of us.

This is about families who have lost children and loved ones, and it's about communities who have lost bright young stars and dedicated leaders, and it is about the connections between kids, coaches, families, fans, and everyone who ever volunteered in their community. Those connections make us neighbours, they make us friends, and they make us Canadians. They fill us with pride, with hope, and with optimism. They bring us together now to hold one another and comfort one another in the face of tragedy, to lift one another up when the weight of that tragedy is upon us, and to remember forever and always the beautiful group of people that we lost.

We grieve for the 10 incredible young men who were at the beginning of their careers and their lives: Adam Herold, Conner Lukan, Evan Thomas, Jaxon Joseph, Jacob Leicht, Logan Boulet, Logan Hunter, Logan Schatz, Parker Tobin, Stephen Wack. They all ranged in age from 17 to 21, so young. That crash claimed their potential in sport, in their communities, and in achieving their ambitions and their dreams. It is a tragedy whose scope is beyond comprehension.

Just last week all members of this Chamber had the honour of meeting many of Alberta's Winter Olympians and the honour of congratulating them. They sat up in that gallery. We looked up to them and we applauded. Many of those athletes know well what it's like to be on a bus criss-crossing the prairies. It's an essential part of sport in Canada, and those Olympians were products of organizations like the Humboldt Broncos, organizations that cultivate and encourage the best of the best and strong, community-minded Canadians.

Members of this House today turn our attention to the communities of Slave Lake, Spruce Grove, Lethbridge, Peace River, Edmonton, Stony Plain, and, most tragically, St. Albert, each and every part of Alberta where the memories of those lost and the suffering of those injured is more than a name. It's a memory of a young boy growing up down the street, a smiling face at a local fair, a big brother that was looked up to. This loss reverberates in a million ways through all the lives touched by these bright, unforgettable lights.

We also grieve for the loss of Head Coach Darcy Haugan and Assistant Coach Mark Cross. Their leadership and their passion to inspire is now lost to this and future generations of hockey players, coaches, and community members. Darcy Haugan's hometown of Peace River is in mourning. We grieve for statistician Brody Hinz, a dedicated, loyal, and much-appreciated team volunteer and member. We grieve for Tyler Bieber, the Broncos' play-by-play broadcaster. He was 29, not much older than the players. We grieve for bus driver Glen Doerksen, a dedicated family man who is remembered by the women and men who transport our kids from game to game and tournament to tournament.

At yesterday's vigil in Humboldt, when the puck was supposed to be dropped, roses were dropped instead. Families, communities, hockey greats, and government representatives from all levels and all over the country came together, united in mourning and in remembrance. Sheldon Kennedy was at the vigil along with other survivors of the 1986 bus crash that took the lives of four members of the Swift Current Broncos and injured 24 others. It was a strong and welcome statement of solidarity. It was also a stark reminder that countless teams on countless buses travel our roads every year in pursuit of their sport. It is a core part of life on our prairies.

As we mourn those who were lost last week, we stand with the survivors: families, friends, and those who are recovering from injury. We thank and honour all the first responders and medical personnel, those who were on the horrific scene and those who are caring for the survivors and families now. When we see a glimpse of the crash scene, we are reminded of the level of responsibility and sacrifice that those first responders and medical professionals meet and take on on a daily basis and how, some days, they are faced with tragedies that stand out and will never be forgotten. We thank them, and we stand with them, and we will do all we can to comfort and support them through all of the sleepless nights that will surely follow.

Mr. Speaker, for everyone who has been touched by this tragedy, the grief it has generated will not dissipate any time soon. Let us remember that as this grief is processed over weeks, months, and years, we must be kind to one another, we must be compassionate, and we must be the best of who we are as neighbours, Albertans, and Canadians. To all of those struggling through this tragedy: if you need help, please ask for help. We are here for you. I know I speak for all Albertans and especially for everyone in this Assembly when I say that we share your pain, and we, of course, are committed to ensuring that we help in whatever way we can.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, first, let me thank the hon. the Premier for those beautiful and heartfelt words.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to join with the Premier and all members in expressing our profound sadness in the wake of Friday's tragedy involving the Humboldt Broncos junior hockey team. At times like these, words do not suffice. There is nothing that we can say adequately to express our grief for the loss of these 15 souls, our condolences to their families, and our solidarity with the community of Humboldt, the province of Saskatchewan, and the network of hometowns across the prairies that have lost one of their own. The outpouring of love and support that has come from across Canada and indeed around the world has, however, been nothing but astonishing, and I hope that it has brought all of those grieving this tremendous loss some small measure of comfort. We also, as the Premier has done, acknowledge the heroism of the police, paramedics, and medical personnel for their compassion and professionalism.

Mr. Speaker, I grew up in a small Saskatchewan junior hockey town, and I can tell you that in these towns the local team is the heartbeat of the community. So often, cheering these boys on is what brings together friends and neighbours and creates a broader family, knits together a community. We cannot imagine how the community of Humboldt is suffering as it comes to grips with the bleak events of the last 72 hours.

Mr. Speaker, as the Premier has said, the team bus figures so prominently in our collective experience as Canadians and, I think, especially in remoter parts of our country: the prairies, northern Ontario, and elsewhere. All across the country, parents put their kids on buses just like the one that was carrying the Broncos to game 5 of the Saskatchewan Junior Hockey League semifinal series against the Nipawin Hawks. Generations of Canadian kids have grown up on these buses, travelling thousands of kilometres to get to the next game or the next competition or the next performance. I know that most members of this Chamber have spent significant amounts of time travelling vast distances on buses just like that. This is why this tragedy is so unspeakable and hits so close to home for so many Albertans. That bus could have been any bus on any highway, carrying any one of us.

But in the midst of such darkness and heartache, stories of hope have begun to emerge, like the news that Logan Boulet, a 21-year-old Broncos player from Lethbridge, had just recently signed his organ donor card and that this act of bravery will save the lives of at least six people.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to join the Premier in remembering the names of each of those who were lost and, with each of these names, to express our condolences to their loved ones: Darcy Haugan, Mark Cross, Brody Hinz, Tyler Bieber, Glen Doerksen, Parker Tobin, Logan Schatz, Jaxon Joseph, Adam Herold, Stephen Wack, Logan Hunter, Connor Lukan, Evan Thomas, Jacob Leicht, and Logan Boulet. Eternal rest grant unto them, O Lord, and may light perpetual shine upon them.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I would respectfully request unanimous consent from the House to allow a member from the Alberta Party to provide a response to the Premier's ministerial statement.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta Party.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, one of the ties that binds this nation together is the love and passion that we have for the game of hockey, but I would suggest that one of the strongest ties that binds this nation is how Canadians come together during a time of tragedy, as we saw these past 72 hours. It makes me extremely proud to be a Canadian, a former hockey player, a member in this Chamber. On behalf of the Alberta Party we want to send our deepest condolences to the families and the communities affected by this tragedy and to the Humboldt Broncos and our prayer for them, for these families and communities, that they would find peace and comfort during this time.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View. Was that a part – I'm just getting the note – of unanimous consent?

Mr. Mason: We didn't get a request, Mr. Speaker, but if the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View wishes to speak, I would request unanimous consent to allow him to do so.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the Legislature. As a father and now a grandfather of a passionate 15-year-old hockey player I must express my deepest sympathies to these players, families, friends, and the community in this heartbreaking tragedy. The injury, loss of life, and grief caused by this crash cannot be expressed in words. I find myself, with many Canadians, struggling to process this profound loss of these great young men and their team staff.

However, amidst the sorrow there is a positive glimmer. Vast geography and separate lives have not dulled our empathy across this country and, in fact, across the world, for this tragedy. All Canadians and many around the world have expressed their support directly or indirectly for this tragedy and offered further support. As a nation we have not simply mourned the loss; we have risen to the occasion and provided support to victims and families. From fundraising campaigns to Canadians giving their airplane seats to grieving family members to Canadians opening their homes to those needing lodging, Canadians are doing all they can do.

For any Albertan – that is, most of us – struggling with the emotional response to this crash, let us reach out to one another, share the grief with friends, family, and, if necessary, a professional.

God bless us all.

The Speaker: I'll need to clarify from the table if the original motion included other members. I haven't had a chance to check that.

Mr. Mason: It was my intention, Mr. Speaker. Yes.

The Speaker: Anyone who wishes to speak?

Mr. Mason: No. Any one of the independents.

The Speaker: The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, thank you, and thank you to my colleagues for affording me this opportunity to just add a few brief comments to what has already very eloquently been said by colleagues. Ever since first news broke Friday evening of this terrible tragedy on this lonely piece of Saskatchewan highway, I was reminded of the years that I coached speed skating, because while there's been a lot of talk about hockey this weekend and, certainly, we tend to focus on hockey, it's not just hockey. There are teams of speed skaters and volleyball players and bands and dancers and young people who travel the vast reaches of our country to pursue their dreams and their joys.

At the beginning of each speed skating season with my athletes, Mr. Speaker, I would always ask them the question: what's the thing you like most about speed skating? And the answer always came back the same: the bus trip. It had nothing to do with speed skating. It had to do with those hours that they spent on the one trip a year that our club chartered a bus to go to an out-of-town competition. It was those hours where those lifelong friendships were shared. Many times I clambered aboard that bus with the other athletes and said goodbye to parents who were leaving them, and there was always this trust. There was always this feeling that we would get there safely. Most of the time, the vast majority of the time, of course, that's exactly what happened, but tragically on Friday night that's not what happened.

Mr. Speaker, because we have that shared experience as Canadians, because so many of us have spent those hours on those buses with teams of athletes, with teams of artists, with teams of young people pursuing their dreams, that is why this is such a shared experience and why the collective grief over this experience has become so widespread and so profound. To all of the family members of the Humboldt Broncos that were affected by this: my deepest condolences. And, of course, my thanks to the first responders for their professionalism and their courage in the face of such unspeakable horrors. As a country and as a nation, together with the community of Humboldt, we will heal going forward. That is part of our resolve as Canadians, and I have every confidence that we will remain Humboldt strong and strong for the Humboldt Broncos.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Federal Response to Pipeline Opposition

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, yesterday was a terrible day for Alberta's economy with the announcement of the suspension of the Kinder Morgan Trans Mountain pipeline expansion. It is clear now that the Premier's close ally Prime Minister Trudeau has done nothing to ensure the construction of this pipeline and respect for the rule of law. Will the hon. Premier now join with me in calling on the federal government to invoke section 92(10)(c) of the Constitution to declare the Trans Mountain pipeline as being for the common advantage, thereby overriding any legal delay tactics by the government of British Columbia?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What we will do and have done is to call on the federal government to essentially follow the lead of Alberta. The federal government has greater authority, in fact, than Alberta, but ultimately the strategies that they can use fall into one of three buckets. They can put economic pressure, fiscal pressure, on the province of B.C. They can assert their jurisdiction either legislatively or through the courts. They can support investor certainty, as we talked about doing yesterday. All three of those will assist, and we are calling on . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Kenney: I thank the Premier for her answer, but in terms of the federal government asserting its jurisdiction, that's precisely what I'm asking the Premier to agree with me on, to do so by the invocation of the national interest power under section 92(10)(c) of the Constitution. I wish you would be explicit about this. Will the Premier join me in calling on the federal government to get ahead of one of the B.C. delay tactics by, instead, having a direct federal reference to the Supreme Court of Canada on the matter that the B.C. Premier proposes to hold at the B.C. Court of Appeal?

Ms Notley: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, these are issues that have already been well under discussion with the federal government as well as the B.C. government as well as the proponent. That is, absolutely, one tool that could potentially add certainty to the matter. As I've said before, there are different tools, all of which are focused on ensuring certainty so that the investors move forward with construction, and we are going to continue to advocate that all of those tools be used and, in fact, that the work that is under way be accelerated.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've been proposing tools that the federal government could use that this government has refused to endorse.

Here's another one, Mr. Speaker. The Trudeau Liberals are punishing Saskatchewan because it refuses, in turn, to punish its citizens with a carbon tax. The federal government is withholding transfers from Saskatchewan as a result. Will the Premier join with me in calling on the federal government to withhold transfer payments from the Horgan NDP in Victoria unless they begin to respect the rule of law and the Constitution of Canada?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, when it comes to the funds that would be transferred as a result of participation in the pan-Canadian framework, we've already made that request to the federal government, and I believe that it is under consideration. So that's fine.

As I've said before, there are a range of tools which the federal government needs to strategically deploy, many of which they are already working on. Our view – and I think we probably agree with the members opposite – is that those tools need to be accelerated, and we are going to do everything we can to make sure that they are, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Construction Suspension

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Premier has one of those tools in her own hand. The federal government says that they want Alberta to have this carbon tax that's hurting Alberta consumers, and the deal was that they'd get a pipeline built. They're doing precisely nothing to ensure that that happens. Will the Premier join with me in saying to Justin Trudeau that Alberta's carbon tax will be repealed unless he gets that pipeline built?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I have said before, our participation in the pan-Canadian framework, which essentially begins in 2021, is conditional on that pipeline being built, and the Prime Minister and the federal government are fully aware of that. But cancelling our climate leadership plan here in Alberta is not the path to getting the pipeline built. That, instead, is emulating the same failed tactics of the members opposite that didn't get a pipeline built for over a decade. We must demonstrate to all Canadians that we can build the economy and protect the environment.

Mr. Kenney: It doesn't matter how often she says it, it's still not true, Mr. Speaker. Four pipelines built would be 1.7 million additional barrels per day under the Harper government.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier spoke last night about the possibility of public participation in the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion to ensure its construction by reducing the risk for the shareholders, the risk of which is the result of a failure of governments in this Canada to ensure the rule of law. Will she join with me in stating that Alberta will not participate financially in that pipeline unless the federal government does so as well?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Yes. First of all, Mr. Speaker, just to be clear, because we need to start every question with a clarification, no pipeline to tidewater was completed under the previous Conservative government. Just to be clear there.

On the second issue, Mr. Speaker, what we will do is that we will do everything we can to get this pipeline built, and we will not put a desire to position ourselves against the federal government over and above the need to get the pipeline built. To be clear, we will do whatever it takes, and we will not box ourselves in in the way the member suggests.

Mr. Kenney: She's still giving her ally Justin Trudeau a blank cheque, Mr. Speaker, to weasel out of any meaningful action.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Premier declared victory. When the government of British Columbia brought in yet another delay tactic, she lifted our symbolic wine boycott on British Columbia, and just last week, based on one court decision of many to come, she did a victory lap. Why has the Premier repeatedly declared victory when, in fact, the enemies of our economic progress have succeeded in suspending the Kinder Morgan pipeline expansion?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what we have not done is cheered for the pipeline to fail, and we will not do that. In fact, we will remain as determined as we always have been to get this pipeline built. The fact of the matter is that we have won 14 out of 14 cases, and I feel very confident that we will win more. But what we've also done is give notice that there will be significant economic consequences to the province of B.C. and potentially other parts of the country if this matter does not go forward. We will not back down before we get this pipeline built. We stand up for the interests of Albertans.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Provincial Response to Pipeline Opposition

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, let's be clear. This government has been fumbling the ball since day one. They gave Justin Trudeau his carbon tax without any actual commitment to action. They did nothing to protest the federal veto of Northern Gateway, which was approved by the last government. They did nothing to protest Trudeau's killing of Energy East. They did nothing to protest Barack Obama's veto of Keystone XL. When the B.C. NDP came to power with the promise to do everything to stop Trans Mountain, they criticized me for suggesting a fight-back strategy, and now we see nothing but more empty rhetoric. When are we going to see more than words? When will we see real, meaningful action from this Premier to fight for our province's vital economic interests?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given the member opposite's record over 10 years of not getting a pipeline to tidewater, I think that, quite honestly, the accusation of words and nothing else, no action, is one that would actually be appropriately applied across the way. Words that are said more loudly, with more anger and more drama, don't actually change the situation one little bit. What does is the piece of legislation that we will be giving notice of this week, what does is the kind of engagement that we've already been involved in, and what does is the approval that's already under way. We will get this pipeline built.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, Albertans have lost confidence in this government's ability to actually defend our economic interests. This Premier mocked and ridiculed the suggestion of turning off the taps to B.C. last summer until making that her policy recently. This Premier imposed a wine boycott but then reversed it because she said that she'd won the war with her B.C. allies in the New Democrat government in Victoria. Even last week she said that there was a decisive victory even though Kinder Morgan has been warning about yesterday's decision for months. Why has the Premier been so consistently wrong on this essential question about our economic future?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I said before, what our government has done is that we have worked to put economic pressure on B.C. We have done that through a number of strategies. We have succeeded in doing that, and we have clearly gotten their attention. I know the member opposite is unhappy to talk about it, but we have also won 14 out of 14 cases in front of the courts where Alberta has taken a very clear position. Now we have indicated, as a result of discussions that, frankly, have been under way for some time now, that we are prepared to provide support and security to investors to make sure that the job gets done.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, it's clear from that answer that this government still doesn't get it. It doesn't matter how many legal victories there are. The tactic, the strategy of the B.C. New Democrats, the New Democrats in Burnaby, the New Democrats in Vancouver, the New Democrats federally is death by delay. It is creating investor uncertainty, and that's what they got yesterday when the market spoke with the suspension of this project. Again, what specifically is this Premier calling on Justin Trudeau to do? Is she willing actually for the first time to stand up in this place and criticize him for his inaction?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, what would create investor uncertainty would be cancelling the climate leadership plan and the hundreds of millions of dollars and, indeed, billions of dollars that industry has made plans around. So just to be clear, if investor uncertainty is something the member opposite is worried about, he ought to stop creating it.

Now, that being said, what our government has done and will do and is very clear to the federal government about is that they must put economic pressure onto B.C., they must assert their jurisdiction either legislatively or judicially, and they must come to the table to reduce the risk for investors, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like most Albertans, I want to see this pipeline completed, but, Premier, here we are. Everyone has been warning you, but your government continued to boast about getting a pipeline to tidewater, and now we're two months away from the whole thing being scrapped.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I know you're well intended, Premier, but intention without action is delusion. What is this government going to do different between now and May 31 to make sure that this pipeline doesn't get scrapped altogether?

2:10

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. First of all, let me just reiterate that what the government will not do is cheer for the pipeline's defeat by declaring it over, like the members opposite have done. Quite frankly, it is not over. We will get it done. As I've said before, what we are going to do here in Alberta is that we are going to exert economic and fiscal pressure, we are going to continue to assert the rights of the federal government in the courts, and we are going to support and reduce investor uncertainty.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Without this pipeline the path to balance is gone before we even get finished with estimates and this government's fiscal credibility along with it. With that in mind, to the Premier. The Premier yesterday floated the idea that the province would buy an equity stake in the pipeline expansion and use that stake to make sure that the pipeline goes ahead. What assurances do Albertans have that any deal on the Trans Mountain project is in their interests and not your own political prospects?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm not sure where the member opposite has been, but I think that there's a clear consensus among everyone but, perhaps, the Alberta Party that the completion of this pipeline is in the best interests of all Canadians, not just Albertans but all Canadians, including British Columbians. It will create jobs, it will allow us to diversify our markets, it will build our economy, and it will ensure that we are a better place for more investment internationally. I think we are all quite clear on what the benefits are.

Mr. Fraser: Madam Speaker, for the record the Alberta Party caucus wants this project to be completed. We do believe that it's in the best interests of Albertans and Canadians. But, Premier, it comes down to leadership. Federally all we've seen is flash and no substance. Clearly, we haven't had a hundred per cent effective action from your government either because here we are. Your plan has Albertans on the hook once again for a pipeline that's supposedly in the national best interest. Will you call on the federal government to backstop this project with federal money so that they actually have some skin in the game?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I think the member opposite might want to begin backpedalling on the "supposedly in the national best interest" statement because I'm pretty sure most Albertans are going to be a bit troubled that he's not convinced that that is the case.

That being said, Madam Speaker, as I have said, we have already been very clear with the federal government. We've already been working with the federal government, and we will continue to do that on a number of fronts, including ensuring that instability and a lack of certainty are removed with respect to the investors in this pipeline.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Oil and Gas Pipelines to the West Coast

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Madam Speaker. At community association events in my riding I heard from constituents who were concerned about pipeline approvals. One of the projects that constituents were concerned about was the Shell-Coastal GasLink project, which would export liquefied natural gas from the B.C. coast. Given that this project would allow natural gas producers in Alberta and B.C. to more readily access markets in Asia and around the world, to the Minister of Energy: does this government support the Coastal GasLink project?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, our government absolutely supports further development of liquefied natural gas. In fact, our Energy Diversification Advisory Committee report underscored the benefits, not just to Alberta and B.C. but to Canada, of advancing LNG projects. The committee noted that methane would be a good source of supply, which is good for the Montney region up where I live. Ethane would be good here for petrochemical development, and LNG would be good for Alberta's economy in using up some of that gas. You know what else is good for our economy? A pipeline to tidewater.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As part of the GasLink project the B.C. government has announced that LNG facilities would be exempt from their carbon levy. On the other hand, they adamantly oppose the expansion of the Trans Mountain pipeline. To the same minister: can you please comment on the B.C. government's discrepancy in their approach to carbon levies and Alberta tidewater access?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Again, we absolutely support the development of Canadian LNG resources, but what we don't support and will take action against is the environmental hypocrisy of B.C. speaking out of both sides of their mouth. In fact, they believe that they can develop resources which are good for Canada, but they stand against our Trans Mountain pipeline, and that's not acceptable. It's inconsistent and, frankly, very un-Canadian. You know, we are going to do what we need to do to get that pipeline built, and legislation we'll be introducing shortly will show . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Madam Speaker. To the same minister: how are we working to ensure that Alberta's oil and gas resources make it to market through projects like the Trans Mountain pipeline?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, we've made it clear from day one that we will get that pipeline built. Tens of thousands of jobs depend on it. Billions of dollars of investment depend on it. We need better schools and roads and hospitals, and that all depends on getting this pipeline built. We've already won 14 out of 14. We're batting a thousand in our court challenges with B.C. We're going to continue. We're following the path, certainly, that Peter Lougheed, our previous Premier, many years ago took when he was under attack in his government. We're going to be introducing legislation shortly which will inflict pain on British Columbia.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Colleagues, the news last night of the impending cancellation of the Trans Mountain pipeline is a national disaster. It is a national disaster for sane economic policy, it is a national disaster for balanced economic and environmental stewardship, it is a national disaster for investor confidence, but most importantly, my friends, it is a disaster for national unity. We are being treated as a mere colony. If this pipeline does not get built, would the Premier agree that at this point the federal government has done more harm than good?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, I've made clear many times that we will get this pipeline built. We've won a series of challenges in the court, as I mentioned, 14 out of 14. We're battling a thousand. We continue to be confident that we will win future challenges should they exist. But we do agree that it's time the feds step up, and they need to defend Alberta as in the past they've defended Ontario with the auto sector and Quebec with the aerospace sector. Alberta energy companies need the feds, and we need them right now.

Mr. Fildebrandt: This is no longer about economics or even resource development. This is about our very ability to function as a normal, unified, first-world country. Even if this pipeline gets built, it will have come at the cost of Energy East and will have come after half a decade of costly lawsuits and investor uncertainty. It will now have to come at the cost of taxpayers having to take an equity stake in a project that just a week ago had all of the private-sector investment that it needed, and it will likely come at the cost of armed guards at work sites. Premier, at what point are we going to stop asking nicely?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As I mentioned, we continue to fight in the courts, and soon we will be introducing legislation to limit resources being exported to B.C. They've made some decisions, and we're going to inflict pain on those economic decisions so they understand what they've done.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Albertans pay vastly more to the federal government than we get back, and in return too often all we receive for our contribution to Confederation is jealousy, scorn, and obstruction. If the federal government won't protect our ability to trade across provincial boundaries like a normal country, then many Albertans will ask themselves why they have a federal government at all. Premier, in the event that this pipeline does not get built, do you believe that it will be necessary to negotiate new constitutional protections for Alberta?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, Premier Horgan believes he can harass this project without economic consequences, but he's wrong. We're calling on the feds to stand up and stand up quickly. We are prepared to do, as we said, what it takes to get this pipeline built. If this means more tools or investments, we are going to be looking at that. One thing I want to say is: do not count Alberta out.

Mr. Panda: Madam Speaker, Kinder Morgan gave us precisely 52 days to remove the roadblocks for the construction of the Trans Mountain expansion. This means that our Premier's pending legislation to turn off the taps to B.C. must have greater impact than the B.C. wine ban. Will the Premier prioritize utilizing a hundred per cent of the existing Trans Mountain pipeline space by shipping bitumen instead of diesel and gasoline?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, as I mentioned, in the coming days we will be introducing legislation which will have much more detail on what we will be doing to restrict product going to B.C. We continue to be ready for any further court challenges. We're working with companies. Never underestimate our resolve to get this pipeline built.

Mr. Panda: Given that the B.C. NDP openly campaigned last year on using every tool in their tool box to stop the Trans Mountain expansion, will our Minister of Energy prevent B.C.'s natural gas and coal from crossing the border into Alberta, denying B.C. the royalties, or will the Minister of Energy direct the Alberta Electric System Operator to halt all imports of electricity over the B.C. intertie? Which option are you going to use first?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As we've said many times, we're going to use every tool in our tool box to fight the decisions B.C. is making. As I mentioned, in the forthcoming days there will be legislation dropped – and I hope you will be supporting that – to restrict resources to B.C., to inflict economic pain upon them so that they realize what their decisions mean.

Mr. Panda: Madam Speaker, given the economic pain the minister is promising to cause to B.C. and given that section 136 of the Traffic Safety Act allows the inspection of all commercial vehicles, will the NDP government immediately enact full and thorough inspections of a hundred percent of B.C. commercial vehicles entering or exiting Alberta to ensure they're in full compliance with Alberta traffic safety laws?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As I've said many times, we have an advisory committee that we're in discussions with on possibilities. Every decision we make will be weighed against benefit to Alberta, pain to B.C. At the end of the day, as I mentioned, there'll be more to come in the coming days about our legislation, but again, despite what we have in our tool box, we're calling on the federal government, who have a lot of tools in their tool box, to stand up and to stand up now.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Carbon Levy and Pipeline Approvals

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This government claimed that their carbon tax would give us social licence for pipelines. I quote the Minister of Economic Development and Trade from two years ago. "We've . . . introduced the most robust climate leadership plan in the country that we will get the social licence to get pipelines approved and our product to tidewater." The Trans Mountain pipeline project is barely hanging on. Energy East and Northern Gateway have already been cancelled. Minister, will you finally admit that the carbon tax is not giving us social licence on pipelines?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I think that I will answer the question not in my own words but in the words of Ian Anderson, the president of Kinder Morgan pipelines, who said about the climate leadership plan: I think the Alberta climate change plan was a huge step forward; it was a huge benefit to me and us, and we've seen that on the ground.

Mrs. Pitt: Madam Speaker, Kinder Morgan was just quoted yesterday as cancelling future pipeline expenditures.

Regardless, given that the Minister of Finance claimed, and I quote, that the climate leadership plan that we have put forward is far-reaching, that it will improve Alberta, that it will give us social licence, end quote, and given that this NDP government is out of touch with everyday Albertans and that their carbon tax is not improving Albertans' lives – it has made everything more expensive, and this government is still increasing the carbon tax – Minister, by your government's own admission your friend Justin Trudeau isn't doing enough for Trans Mountain, so when are you going to stop going along with their carbon tax?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. On carbon pricing, Ian Anderson, who is the president of Kinder Morgan pipelines, said:

We're encouraged to see this positive step forward and commend the hard work of all involved. The collaboration of industry, the Government of Alberta, First Nations leaders and environmental groups helps pave a path forward and provides important clarity to policy and direction for the entire industry.

It is Ian Anderson and Kinder Morgan with which the hon. member has a quarrel, not us.

Mrs. Pitt: Madam Speaker, there is a lot of confusion coming from the minister, because Kinder Morgan just yesterday said that they have suspended nonessential spending on the pipeline. I don't know what this minister is referring to.

Now, given also that Kinder Morgan pointed out today that there are other pipeline projects where it can invest money and efforts – but this project is vital to our province and our economy, and we need it to proceed – Minister, Albertans want to know when your carbon tax will give us certainty.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I refer the member back to the words of the representative from Kinder Morgan, who said that the climate leadership plan "provides important clarity to policy and direction for the entire industry." The fact of the matter is that this pipeline will be built, and it secured its approvals based on the existence of the climate leadership plan. Those approvals were not in place by the previous government, and that tidewater access has been secured through the existence of the climate plan.

Mr. Nixon: Madam Speaker, the Energy minister said earlier today in response to a question that the NDP are batting a thousand on pipelines when, in fact, they are one hit away from losing this pipeline. That's a fact. Can the Energy minister stop using bad sports metaphors, stand up, and tell us the clear tools that she can use to help get this pipeline built and what tools she's going to use first and when she's going to use them to actually get this pipeline built?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, Albertans have told us to do whatever it takes to get the pipeline built, and that's exactly what we're doing. Frankly, we're calling on the federal government as well to do their part. We'll make, as I mentioned, B.C. feel the economic pain. We're introducing legislation in the coming days that will allow us to restrict product. We're fighting in court. Again, we have a perfect round, 14 out of 14 so far. In fact, the courts threw out the last attempt. They weren't even going to hear the arguments. We potentially could take a public position on the pipeline . . .

Mr. Nixon: Madam Speaker, this government is in denial. This pipeline was suspended. The work on this pipeline was suspended yesterday. The time for rhetoric is over. They're in denial. They need to stand up, tell us clearly what they're going to do to get this pipeline to work. Albertans: of course they want action taken. We've been talking about it in this Chamber. So what action is this government going to take right now to get this pipeline built?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, we're also calling on the federal government to do their part. They can do all of these things as well. They should impose economic pain on B.C. as well. They should be taking a lead in fighting in the courts, and they, too, can be investors in the Trans Mountain pipeline. We're calling on them to step up. They need to step up now, just as they did in previous times in Ontario and Quebec. It's now Alberta's turn, and they need to step up. They need to step up now.

Mr. Nixon: Madam Speaker, we've been telling the government forever that the federal government needs to stand up. The question, though, is: what is this provincial NDP government going to do to make the federal government stand up to the plate? Standing in this House over and over and saying the same thing is not going to help, so what will this minister do to make sure that her ally Justin Trudeau will take action to get this pipeline built?

Ms Hoffman: You know what, Madam Speaker? I wish that we didn't have to. We had 10 years with conservatives in this Chamber, 10 years with conservatives in Ottawa, and they failed to get a pipeline to tidewater. But you know what? On this side of the House we're working strategically. We will impose the natural consequences. You want to make life hard on Albertans? We can certainly do the same for British Columbians. We don't want to, but we're willing to do that, and because it's in the national interest we have the means to do so. That's why we'll be tabling a bill in the coming days, and we'll be very happy to discuss that and, hopefully, get unanimous support from this House to make sure we get this pipeline built. Don't you dare count Alberta out.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

2:30 Long-term Care Facility Construction in Wetaskiwin

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. My constituency of Wetaskiwin-Camrose is quickly growing and, therefore, in need of various infrastructure projects. In 2015 our government committed funding for a long-term care facility in the constituency that had remained unfunded for decades under the previous government. Can the Minister of Health please provide my constituents with an update on the status of this facility?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I was very proud to announce funding for the Wetaskiwin project, which will bring badly needed dementia care spaces to the central zone. I'll be happy to stand with the member at the doors this summer when we open the facility. We see what happens when government prioritizes cuts over care. We had a choice. The members opposite keep calling for cuts. On this side of the House we're building. We're building safer communities and safer spaces for people living with dementia.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Again to the Minister of Health: can you please provide my constituents with details about this facility, which will help free up acute-care beds in the general hospital? How many beds are expected, and what services will be provided?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. The facility will have 82 dementia care spaces, supportive living for dementia, and there will also be additional suites for those who are living independently. This is one of the kinds of projects that enables couples to continue to stay together even when their care needs change. Full-time care and additional nursing support will be available to meet the needs of the residents, and it also has amenities in the home, including fresh food that will be prepared on-site. I'm very excited for this project and to bring this space to Wetaskiwin.

Mr. Hinkley: To the same minister: how will the community be made aware that this project is funded by taxpayers?

Ms Hoffman: When we approved the project, we committed funding of $3.65 million through an ASLI grant, Madam Speaker. We are counting on the member to help us celebrate the good work in the community that this government is doing in partnership with him as a member of our government. Projects such as these are just the beginning of our government's plans to build 2,000 new long-term care and dementia spaces in the province. The members in the Official Opposition and other oppositions have no such plans. They plan to drastically cut services, returning to the days of Ralph Klein. We saw an 88 per cent reduction in the number of long-term care spaces. That's their plan: cuts. On this side we're building, and we're protecting our seniors.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Now, a few minutes ago the environment minister claimed that they're just so close to getting the pipeline built because of the carbon tax. Apparently, she was using last week's speaking notes because as of this weekend the company building it put tools down and said that it's over until either her government or the federal government does something. What's it going to be, or might it be both?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. We are doing three things. We are using our legal means, we are backing this pipeline and ensuring investor certainty, and we are introducing legislation in the coming days that will allow us to restrict our product. Now, I do not often agree with the members opposite, but on one thing we do, and that is that the federal government needs to step up. There have been a lot of words from the federal government, but they have the same tools as we have. They, in fact, have broader tools than we have, and it is time for them to use them.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. When they're desperate, they sound more like our leader.

Now, the Energy minister also said that she scored 14 goals, and I congratulate her for that. But I've got a news flash for that minister. Given that they're a goal behind at least because Kinder

Morgan decided to put tools down yesterday – they're not in the lead with 14 goals; the other team has got more – Minister, what are you going to do to change the score to get ahead so that we can get the shovels going again?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We are confident that we will continue to win in court, we are confident that we will be able to move forward with ensuring investor certainty, and we are confident that the people of British Columbia will listen when Alberta brings in legislation to restrict product. But it is time for the federal government to act. It is time for the federal government to stand up and ensure that we are acting as a nation, not a series of self-interested villages. It is time to get this pipeline built.

The Deputy Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that the minister is now taking our side more and more with every answer she gives and given that the Energy minister is behind even though she said that she scored 14 goals and given that we're where we are now because of the combination of the Alberta government and the federal government, that have sat where people sit rather than getting action on this pipeline, what will the government do to actually get the federal government moving? And please don't beg. Make it something serious.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll tell you what we won't do. We won't be taking leadership lessons from a caucus of people who are going to hide from a vote on women's reproductive rights. We will not do that. You know what else we won't do? We won't hide from taking climate action because that's what Albertans and Canadians expect. You know what else we won't do? Brutal and ideological cuts to front-line services. You know what we will do? We will ensure that the federal government steps up to get this pipeline built.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Provincial Spending

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. At Finance estimates we learned a few things. To paraphrase the minister, Alberta's government, not including Health and Education, is, quote, the smallest public service bureaucracy in the country. Unquote. Unfortunately, that's not how it works. When we look at the facts, Alberta has the most expensive public sector per capita outside of Newfoundland. To the minister: what is your plan to address Alberta's efficiency gap, or will you just continue to forget to include most of your own government in your calculations?

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. I'm very happy to respond to the accusations by the member opposite by putting some facts on the table, and that includes: please refer to the CIHI data, which shows very clearly that Alberta does have the leanest in terms of supervisor to front-line worker ratios in our country. We, of course, want to find opportunities to continue to find more efficiencies, but you can't fire every single person who is helping to run the system and expect it to get better; you can't blow up hospitals and expect the system to get better; you can't propose cuts that would hurt the people of Alberta and expect it to get better. On this side of the House we're protecting the front lines, and that is something we're very proud of.

Mr. Barnes: Given that the Minister of Finance says that a key component of his government's path to balance is controlling spending growth and given that the best predictor of future behaviour is past behaviour – and that's where again this minister falls flat – and given that since taking office in 2015, the minister has tabled three budgets and has overspent his expense target by nearly a billion dollars on average each time, to the minister: why should Albertans trust you that this time you're serious about controlling your wild spending?

Mr. Ceci: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think they should trust me over the member over there. I've tabled four budgets, not three. So if you can't count the number of budgets and it's fewer than this hand, then you've got some issues. We have bent the cost curve on operational spending far better than that side did, and we're going to continue to do it going forward.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, a debt of $96 billion by 2023. His legacy is a debt of $96 billion by 2023. That will mean that every man, woman, and child in Alberta will each owe $23,000, or put another way, each family of four will owe over a hundred thousand dollars and $3,000 in annual interest expense. To the minister: $96 billion in debt that you have no intention of paying back. Albertans are terrified. What kind of damage are you doing to our economy and to our children's future?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. Well, the damage is 4.5 per cent GDP growth in Alberta in 2017, and we will lead, among the leaders in the nation, again in 2018 and 2019. You know, the debt I'm leaving is that 20 new schools in 2018 will be built; hospitals, the Calgary cancer centre, the new Edmonton hospital; transportation throughout the province. Those are pretty good things to leave Albertans for the future.

Power Purchase Arrangements and the Balancing Pool

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, in mid-March the Energy minister informed this House that there would be no impact to Albertans when asked about the cost of the power purchase agreements. Then on March 26 we learned in the NDP budget that the losses to the Balancing Pool are $1.96 billion at least. That's the kind of impact that hurts Albertans around the supper table or families just trying to get their kids to soccer practice. To the Minister of Energy: why did you say one thing when your own budget documents reveal another? Which one is correct?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we are focused on changing a system of electricity in Alberta that was broken by the previous government many years ago under deregulation. We've committed to Albertans that we're going to replace our grid with 30 per cent renewable electricity by 2030. The remainder will be about 70 per cent natural gas. In this transition we've done a number of things to make sure that prices are stable and predictable and that we have a secure grid moving forward.

The Speaker: Let's try and contain the dialogue back and forth on each side.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister had said that there would be no impact to taxpayers but now, in fact, we know that only part of the total loss to Albertans is $1.96 billion, I have another question. What are the total losses, all the costs associated with this NDP-made debacle, including all legal fees, announcements, any other associated costs with this mess that the NDP has created?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the whole way that the Balancing Pool system worked, in fact, until we began to change it, was on spikes and unpredictability in the system. If we hadn't acted, consumers would be facing much higher charges on their bills because of backroom deals that were made many years ago by the previous governments. Instead, their charges are 78 per cent lower than what they would have been had we not acted. We're talking about an average of about . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given that I asked about the total number of losses that this minister's decisions have cost Albertans and given that, clearly, the minister chose not to answer or doesn't know the answer, I wonder if someone in the government is willing to contact the Auditor General and ask for some assistance in this matter so that all Albertans can know the full cost and impact of their poor decision-making, or perhaps I should contact the Auditor General.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we took action to protect regular Albertans from price spikes, as I mentioned, which was a feature of the previous system. That side, the Conservative side, would go back to a broken system that continues to cost Albertans lots of money. That side, the Conservative side, continues to defend the backroom deals that were a feature of the deregulation. On this side we're not taking that. We're negotiating responsibly and giving the Balancing Pool the tools they need, and we're creating a system that's going to be stable and predictable for years to come.

Federal Response to Pipeline Opposition (continued)

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, a few minutes ago I asked the Premier if she would join with me on calling Prime Minister Trudeau to consider suspending certain transfers to the B.C. New Democrat government given their failure to respect the Constitution and the rule of law. I'd like to ask the Premier or the minister whether she has asked for transfers to be suspended simply with respect to the pan-Canadian climate framework or federal transfers to the B.C. government more generally?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. We certainly understand that British Columbia has a position. They have in turn created some uncertainty and challenges for this province, and in terms of natural consequences the natural consequence would be that we find ways to do the same to them. We also call upon the federal government to find ways to ensure that the national interest is the priority. That, certainly, is one of the tools that we've discussed with them. We will continue to have respectful discussions with them, come up with the right action because we know that this project is in the national interest. The feds know it, and they need to act with us.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess I thank the minister for the non answer, but could somebody in the government please tell us whether they believe that the federal government should withhold transfers to the B.C. government to send a message about their violation of our Constitution: from transfers generally, from infrastructure transfers, or simply from the $30 million involved in the pan-Canadian climate framework?

Ms Hoffman: I was happy to answer the question the first time, and I will again. Mr. Speaker, we have three different tools at our disposal. One is making sure that we take a public interest, should it come to that, in the pipeline. Two is making sure that we are interveners in fighting for this court case as we move forward. In 14 out of 14 court cases we have been successful. Three is about doing some reciprocal financial responsibilities on the province of British Columbia. All three of those tools are available to the government of Canada, and we call on them to consider using them as well.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, just two days ago the Trudeau government signed a $4.1 billion agreement with the Horgan New Democrats for infrastructure funding notwithstanding the Victoria government's violation of our Constitution and the rule of law. Will this government join with me in asking the federal government to suspend that transfer unless and until B.C. actually respects the rule of law and our Constitution?

Ms Hoffman: We have talked about the tools that are at our disposal, Mr. Speaker. Those same tools on a different scale are also available to the federal government. We do call on the federal government and have called on the federal government to employ those tools as well. We know that this project is in the national interest. We know that it's in British Columbians' interest, Albertans' interest, and all of our interest. That's why, the federal government, we've called on them for months to step up, do the right thing, and take action on this. We will continue to do our part to get this pipeline built, and we call on the feds to do the same.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Indigenous Offenders

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Across Canada and here in Alberta we know that indigenous incarceration rates are disproportionately high. To the Minister of Justice: how is this government working to proactively address the root causes of crime and support rehabilitation for indigenous inmates?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member is correct. The number of indigenous people who are incarcerated in provincial facilities is disproportionately high. This is an issue which continues to exist across Canada. We know that this is a problem with complex drivers, and it requires a comprehensive and co-ordinated response across all levels of government. To help address this issue and ensure that offenders don't reoffend, we must ensure that we continue to fund adequate health supports, adequate housing supports, and many other supports throughout government.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When an indigenous person is convicted of an offence in our court system, to the same minister: what tools do the courts have to take into consideration the unique and historical circumstances during sentencing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One of the tools the courts have at their disposal are Gladue reports, which are an important resource that courts can draw on to consider the circumstances of an indigenous offender. I'm pleased to note that 91 per cent of our Gladue reports are completed within six weeks as allocated by the courts, and that number continues to go up.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what culturally appropriate programs and supports are in correctional facilities for incarcerated indigenous people?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have seven aboriginal program co-ordinators in Alberta who work in both adult and young offender centres. Some of those program topics include domestic violence, loss and grief, indigenous parenting, indigenous wellness, art programs, and cultural awareness. We also have spiritual ceremonies that are offered, including smudging, pipe ceremonies, elder one-on-one sessions, sweat lodge ceremonies, drumming, and healing talk circles. It's important that we continue to support these programs so that we can ensure that we're not seeing the recidivism rates.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Carbon Levy and Police Service Expenses

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Police services are dealing with a double fiscal hit with the legalization of marijuana and the perennial increases to the carbon tax. The minister has said that police need to be out on the streets and the roads of Alberta, yet increasing costs hamper that goal. While the province cannot stop the legalization of marijuana, it can stop collecting the carbon tax. Minister, are you not concerned about the way this tax is eroding the ability of police to protect Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member has noted, we aren't able to change the legalization of cannabis, but moving forward we continue to work with our police partners. Every time we've had conversations where they have asked us for tools to increase their efficiency, we have worked with them on that. Certainly, we've introduced a bill to ensure that rather than writing warrants for minor C-Train tickets, they're out on the roads. We have recently introduced funding to ensure that there are more civilian officers within the RCMP to get officers back out on the roads. We'll continue to do that work.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, given that the carbon tax has added 6.7 cents to the cost of gas to fill the tanks of police vehicles and we do not know where those tax hikes are eventually going to end and given that out of necessity police have to run their vehicles for most of their shifts if they are to be out on the roads protecting the public, Minister, your government is forcing police services to pay the carbon tax rather than hire more officers to respond to emergencies. Why are you letting this happen?

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're obviously deeply committed to ensuring that we have RCMP officers and police officers in municipalities throughout our province. I might point out that if the hon. member is so concerned about costs going to police, perhaps their side ought not to have voted against the supplemental estimates that sent an additional $18 million to the RCMP.

Mr. Ellis: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that a freedom of information request to the Calgary Police Service indicated that the carbon tax will cost $422,000 in 2018 and given that that's the equivalent of three specialized detectives that the Calgary police would like to hire for their sex crimes unit, which has high caseloads currently, Minister, will you ask the Finance minister to exempt police services from this hurtful carbon tax so they can focus on protecting people rather than cutting budgets?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One of the things that our police partners have been absolutely clear about is the fact that there are many problems facing Alberta society these days that cannot be solved with enforcement alone. As our understanding continues to move forward, our police partners have asked us to ensure that we're continuing to invest in housing supports, in mental health supports, in all sorts of supports that would be cut if the hon. members opposite were in government.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds we'll continue with Members' Statements.

Members' Statements

Vimy Ridge Day

Ms Goehring: Mr. Speaker, 101 years ago today Canadian Armed Forces waged Canada's most celebrated war victory, the Battle of Vimy Ridge. The capture of this German stronghold near Vimy, France, cost Canadians dearly; 3,598 lives were lost, and 7,000 were wounded.

In this defining battle the Canadian Corps distinguished themselves by employing state-of-the-art techniques, including donor-to-patient blood transfusions. It was the first time all four divisions fought together. They came to be regarded as an exceptional force by both Allied and German military commanders. Some 45,000 Albertans served overseas in World War I, the highest percentage of any province.

Among Albertans tending to the wounded during the First World War was a remarkable woman, Roberta MacAdams. She left her career as a dietitian in Alberta to join the war effort and became the Canadian Army Medical Corps' only dietitian. From the Ontario military hospital in Orpington, England, she oversaw the production of more than 6,000 meals per day for patients and staff.

While the war waged overseas, women claimed a victory in Alberta. In 1916 the Alberta equal suffrage act extended the vote to women. A year later the Alberta Military Representation Act passed. It gave Alberta soldiers and military nurses overseas a separate constituency.

After being convinced to run in the Alberta 1917 election, Roberta MacAdams won. She and Louise McKinney became Alberta's first elected women. MacAdams' World War I experience influenced her so deeply that her first piece of legislation was an Act to Incorporate the Great War Next-of-Kin Association.

Much has changed since that day on Vimy Ridge, but two characteristics remain the same. Our Canadian Armed Forces are distinguished world-wide, and inspired by pioneers like Roberta MacAdams, Albertans come together to care for each other.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Vimy Ridge Day

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to commemorate Vimy Ridge Day, which marks the beginning of the Battle of Vimy Ridge on April 9, 1917. On that day 101 years ago four divisions of Canadian soldiers coming together for the first time as a united fighting force were ordered to do something that no other allied force had accomplished in the First World War. They were ordered to take Vimy Ridge, and take Vimy they did, but not before 10,000 of their brothers in arms were killed or wounded in action. But that's not the real story of this battle. The real lessons of Vimy Ridge are about courage, honour, and resilience in the face of adversity.

Most of us here today were blessed to grow up far removed from the life-and-death struggles of war, but we know that battles come in many forms, and every generation faces new struggles. The ability to remain resilient in the face of adversity is not a gift; it is a skill, a skill that must be learned.

Today, on Vimy Ridge Day, I rise to offer my personal thanks to those who teach these vital life lessons, from the schools who participate in programs like No Stone Left Alone to the Royal Canadian Legion volunteers who organize Remembrance Day events, to the Vimy Foundation, whose mission is to preserve and promote Canada's First World War legacy, to all the Canadian Forces veterans who offer a personal perspective to today's youth.

When we embrace our veterans' legacy, we commit ourselves to ensuring our society remains strong and free. We do so confident in the knowledge that, when necessary, every single one of us is capable of summoning courage, living with honour, and acting with resilience in the face of great adversity. Time marches on, but to me there are no more important lessons we can pass on to the next generation.

On this Vimy Ridge Day let us rededicate ourselves to fulfilling that most sacred duty for the next 100 years. We will remember them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the U of A, Augustana campus in Camrose . . .

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'd like to recognize the Government House Leader first.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would respectfully request unanimous consent of the House to continue with the Routine until it's concluded.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. member.

Reconciliation between Indigenous and Nonindigenous Peoples

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the U of A Augustana campus in Camrose and instructors Megan Caldwell, Daniel Sims, and Trina Harrison for offering the truth and reconciliation course building capacity for reconciliation. I was fortunate to be one of their students during the past year.

I am proud to say that our government is implementing many of the calls to action from the Truth and Reconciliation Commission which we studied. We recognize that the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples is the framework for reconciliation. We are committed to addressing the number of children in care. We are supporting and funding indigenous language programs. We are consulting thoroughly on matters pertaining to First Nations. We are revising the Alberta K to 12 curriculum to better reflect the history and legacy of indigenous peoples in this province.

This includes a major program of crosscultural teacher training. As an example of how well this can work, Ermineskin junior high in Maskwacis has hosted two schools, one from Lacombe and one from Camrose, for full-day cultural enrichment activities. STAR Catholic, one of my school divisions, has taken progressive actions supporting cultural sensitivity for teachers.

Throughout this past year our government has helped indigenous communities and organizations cut greenhouse gas emissions, reduce energy bills, and create jobs through our indigenous climate leadership programming. We have signed significant protocol agreements with the Treaty 8 First Nations and with the Blackfoot Confederacy.

Personally, I have a private member's bill in the works to fulfill call to action 17, "to enable residential school Survivors and their families to reclaim names changed [and taken away] by the residential school system," and acknowledge the indigenous languages of Alberta. This is an exciting time in Alberta's history for both indigenous and nonindigenous peoples. Together we can create our future. [Remarks in Cree]

Rotary District 5370

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, for more than 110 years Rotary's People of Action have used their passion, energy, and intelligence to take action on sustainable projects. From literacy and peace to water and health, they are always working to better our world. As we near the two-year anniversary of the wildfire that devastated Fort McMurray, we cannot reflect without acknowledging the contributions that individuals and organizations have made.

Rotary District 5370 encompasses most of central and northern Alberta as well as parts of Saskatchewan, B.C., and the Northwest Territories. Fort McMurray fire relief has become one of the largest fundraising projects in Rotary history. Donations poured in from all over Canada and the U.S. and as far away as the Caribbean and the United Kingdom. When all was said and done, the foundation had collected $1 million for the relief fund that is providing much-needed programming to my community.

Charitable foundation president, past District Governor Julius Buski said it best: it's heartening to see such an outpouring of care and concern at a time of crisis. The Fort McMurray public school district was able to hire a mental health therapist to work with students recovering from the wildfires. Stepping Stones Youth Services was able to add an outreach worker to identify youth at risk on the streets. L'école St. Paul was able to replace all the library books destroyed during the fire.

Mr. Speaker, while we know all of the great work that Rotary International has done, the generosity shown to my community during this time of crisis bolstered my respect for Rotarians. We as Canadians can live in comfort knowing that we have caring and giving organizations such as Rotary in our neighbourhoods. On behalf of my community I'd like to thank the Rotary District 5370 Charitable Foundation and all those who contributed to the charity fund.

Thank you, and God bless.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

UFA Centennial

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If you've driven anywhere in Alberta, you've likely seen a UFA, the big orange store awning, the sign, and the orange gas pumps. But when you step in the door, you see everything they do: ag retail business, oil and gas, seed sales, building and fencing supplies. Better yet, you meet folks like Darrin, who manages the Fort Saskatchewan location, has 31 years with UFA, and likely knows your name.

This April 13 marks the 100th year of the United Farmers of Alberta incorporation. With a history that long, they have had significant influence on our province, including at one time forming government. Early days of political work saw the UFA elect two of their female members to our Legislative Assembly: Louise McKinney in 1917 and in 1921 Irene Parlby, two of our Famous Five.

Mr. Speaker, in 1918 farmers and ranchers faced increasing operating costs due to politics, an oil boom, a land rush, and World War I. The UFA realized that the most effective way for co-operatives to purchase goods would be to act as a central purchaser. This meant that UFA needed to evolve from an advocacy group to a business. Alberta Premier Charles Stewart's administration introduced Bill 9, and on April 13, after receiving royal assent, the UFA was able to officially do business. Pooling orders, farmers and ranchers were able to negotiate prices and save money by purchasing the capacity of an entire railcar.

Mr. Speaker, there are few businesses still around that made up the foundation of Alberta, and it speaks volumes that they are co-operatives. In UFA's own words: "In a co-operative, members own, control and benefit from the co-operative." Jobs stay local, community investment of over a million dollars a year stays local, profits remain local, and decision-making is local, member owned and member driven because members get a vote. That is economic democracy, and a strong democracy is at the heart of a strong Alberta now and into the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Darcy Haugan

Mr. Cooper: From September 27, 1975, to April 6, 2018, was the time that Darcy Haugan, the former head coach of the Humboldt Broncos, had on Earth, 15,532 days, or 42 years, six months, and 10 days. Mr. Speaker, a life well lived. Though it ended in the most horrific and tragic of circumstances, it is the living that I know Darcy would want us to focus on, the dash between 1975 and 2018.

Darcy was a man of character and integrity, fuelled by his passion and faith in Jesus Christ and his love for his family. I was speaking with Darcy's sister last night and asked her: what are the things that you want the world to know about him? She said: he was a hero, not because of any single heroic act but because of the hundreds and hundreds of daily selfless acts of putting the needs of others ahead of his own and encouraging them to be their best; he loved those boys that played for him so much, not just on the ice but off the ice as well. On the back of his pickup truck it read: character builds success. He lived that saying, Mr. Speaker, and today so many young men from all across our country live it as well because of Darcy Haugan.

Darcy loved his wife, Christina, and his boys, Carson, 12, and Jackson, 9. He led by example, displaying character in everything he did. Darcy's legacy will live on in the lives of those young boys. They are leaders in their own right. Friday night Carson prayed: Dear God, we don't know why this happened, but we're still going to trust you, and I know, God, that dad would want us to. Such wisdom.

Darcy Haugan: a life well lived. Darcy made the most of his dash, the 15,000-plus days that he had on Earth. I hope that we will use our dash to be just a little more like Darcy Haugan.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices and in accordance with section 4(5) of the Election Act I would like to table five copies of the following report: Report of the Chief Electoral Officer on the December 14, 2017 By-election in Calgary-Lougheed. I would note that this report also includes a summary of the use of new equipment and procedures tested in the by-election and recommendations for legislative amendments. Electronic copies of this report will be provided to members.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 42 I'm rising to provide notice that at the appropriate time later this afternoon I intend on moving the following motion:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government of British Columbia to put the country first and to cease its attempts to harass the Kinder Morgan project. And be it further resolved that the Legislative Assembly support the government of Alberta's efforts to demand concrete steps from the federal government to enforce its decision that the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion is in the national interest and ensure it is constructed in a timely fashion.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to provide notice that at the appropriate time I will move the following motion today:

Pursuant to Standing Order 30 be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the need to discuss the failure to ensure the construction of the Trans Mountain expansion project given the recent announcement by Kinder Morgan to suspend nonessential spending on the pipeline until May 31, 2018.

I have the appropriate signed motion here for Your Honour.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Bill 6

Gaming and Liquor Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege for me to rise today and introduce first reading of Bill 6, amendments to the Gaming and Liquor Act.

Mr. Speaker, our province continues to prepare Alberta for legalized cannabis this summer by putting in place elements of a system that will keep the safety and security of Albertans at the forefront. These amendments build on legislation passed last fall. They are practical changes that will modernize the Gaming and Liquor Act and better prepare the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission for its expanded mandate that will include cannabis. We continue to work to establish a system with rules that effectively and clearly protect Albertans.

I ask that we move first reading of Bill 6. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a first time]

Emergency Debate

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we have two notices on the table, one of them being under Standing Order 30, and one being under Standing Order 42.

I would call upon the Leader of the Official Opposition.

3:10 Trans Mountain Pipeline Construction Suspension

Mr. Kenney: Thank you. Pursuant to Standing Order 30(1) this morning at 9:15 I provided your office with written notice of this proposed emergency motion. As you know, in the sixth edition of Beauchesne, section 390, urgency means

"‘urgency of debate’, when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the House do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and the public interest demands that discussion take place immediately."

Mr. Speaker, I cannot think of a matter that this Chamber has dealt with in the last three years, if not in recent Alberta history, that is more urgently in the public interest.

The Trans Mountain pipeline expansion project itself directly represents a capital investment of $7.4 billion, an estimated 15,000 construction jobs, and 37,000 direct and indirect and induced jobs per year of operations. But more than that, Mr. Speaker, given the federal veto of the Northern Gateway pipeline, given the federal government's successful effort to kill the proposed Energy East pipeline route through regulatory changes through the National Energy Board, and given the continued delays in the construction of the Keystone XL pipeline to the United States Gulf coast, we are now left with only one viable direct coastal pipeline, that proposed by Kinder Morgan, the Trans Mountain expansion.

Mr. Speaker, right now we as Canadians are exporting our crude oil to the American market at roughly $35 per barrel. The Americans are exporting their crude to global markets at over $60 a barrel. That differential represents over the long term potentially hundreds of billions of dollars of value for the Alberta economy and tens of billions of dollars of energy rents and other revenues for the Alberta treasury.

Just yesterday – yesterday – Kinder Morgan Canada announced the suspension of any nonessential spending on this project as they review it between now and May 31. This is eerily familiar to the decision of TransCanada PipeLines to suspend their application for Energy East on September 7 of 2017, which resulted in the subsequent October 2017 decision to cancel that project.

Mr. Speaker, if Kinder Morgan's concerns, its profound concerns, about the elevated risk for shareholders proves to be true, if they conclude that they cannot get . . .

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order.

Point of Order

Standing Order 30 Motions

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the hon. member, Standing Order 30 permits debate on matters relative to the urgency of debate and not on the matter itself – that is section 30(2) of the standing orders – and I believe the hon. member is straying into debate on the matter he wishes to debate should this be accepted.

The Speaker: Hon. member, do you have another point of order?

Mr. Nixon: No. I'm responding to the point of order. The Government House Leader is in fact correct that it's important that we discuss the urgency when we're using Standing Order 30. Where I disagree with the Government House Leader is that the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition is discussing the urgency. He's clearly articulating the urgent need of this situation with this pipeline through B.C. and the actions, particularly of this weekend, in regard to Kinder Morgan having to stop construction on that project. That is the urgency. He's in the process of establishing that urgency. I see, Mr. Speaker, that you were listening to him eagerly, which I think is great. I think the Government House Leader should pay attention to the Leader of the Opposition, and he would understand the urgency of the problem if he did.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, I do hope the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition will get to the matter soon. I tend to agree with the Government House Leader.

Please proceed, I will suggest, accordingly.

Debate Continued

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe I was addressing the urgency of the matter. The matter is so urgent that the hon. the Premier yesterday held an emergency news conference at 4:45 on a Sunday evening, cancelled her planned trip to New York City, and described this as an emergency herself. So I believe even the government – I don't believe. I know the government has publicly acknowledged that this is an emergent situation requiring the emergent attention of members of this place and action by relevant governments.

We are bringing this forward at the earliest opportunity following the emergency decision by Kinder Morgan, seeking an opportunity for all members to enter into debate on this issue. It is not only an emergency in terms of the time frame but could not be of more profound consequence for the Alberta economy and the public business with which we deal in this Assembly. Mr. Speaker, I submit to you that if this does not qualify as a subject matter for emergency debate under section 390 of Beauchesne, then nothing will ever qualify as a subject matter for emergency debate.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that there is here a prima facie case that this motion deserves the emergency attention of the Legislative Assembly, and I hope that you will rule accordingly.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'd like to address the question of whether or not this qualifies under Standing Order 30. First of all, I do believe that all members of the Assembly are in agreement that Kinder Morgan's statement yesterday was extremely regrettable, that it will have impacts that will be felt throughout the province and, indeed, the entire country. I agree that this is a very urgent matter that warrants significant discussion by members of this Chamber. So we are prepared to set aside regular business in order to debate the matter.

However, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that Standing Order 30 is the most appropriate avenue. Today during Notices of Motions my colleague the hon. Minister of Energy provided notice of a government motion dealing with this matter. I strongly believe that a debate and, more importantly, a vote on this important matter is of significant consequence. As members know, no vote takes place at the conclusion of debate on a Standing Order 30 application.

To quote from Beauchesne's, paragraph 390:

"Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but means "urgency of debate" . . .

This is the most important part, I think, Mr. Speaker.

. . . when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the House do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and the public interest demands that discussion take place immediately."

House of Commons Procedure and Practice makes the point at page 693, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm going to need the quote, the first one, prior to the one you're about to mention.

Mr. Mason: Yes.

The Speaker: What was that number?

Mr. Mason: This is House of Commons Procedure and Practice at page 693, Mr. Speaker. It says:

The Standing Orders give . . . discretion to the Speaker in deciding if a matter should be brought before the House for urgent consideration, [and] certain criteria must be weighed. The Speaker determines whether a matter is related to a genuine emergency that could not be brought before the House within a reasonable time by other means.

That is a component – a key, essential component – of the definition of urgency of debate. Not only does it have to be an urgent matter; it has to be a matter for which there is no other opportunity that is afforded to discuss the matter.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would submit that my hon. colleague the Minister of Energy has introduced a government motion under Standing Order 42 that deals with this matter, in fact, in a way that I believe is more positive and will benefit the provincial position much more than the Standing Order 30 that has been suggested by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. Therefore, another opportunity to debate this matter has been afforded by the government in the notice of motion that we provided under Standing Order 42.

Mr. Speaker, it's my contention that because there is another avenue during which the matter can be debated – notably, the motion to which I have referred – this matter does not fit the procedural requirement to be considered under Standing Order 30, and I would respectfully request that you rule so.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:20

The Speaker: Hon. members, a Standing Order 30 application provides that "the Member may briefly state the arguments in favour of the request for leave and the Speaker may allow such debate as he . . . considers relevant to the question of urgency." It is the role of the chair to rule on whether or not the request for leave is, in fact, in order, as both members have outlined. Hon. members, the chair is prepared to rule on whether the request for leave for this motion to proceed is in order under Standing Order 30(2).

The Leader of the Official Opposition has met the requirement for providing at least two hours' notice to the Speaker's office by providing the required notice at 9:14 this morning. The motion reads as follows:

Pursuant to Standing Order 30 be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the need to discuss the failure to ensure the construction of the Trans Mountain expansion project given the recent announcement by Kinder Morgan to suspend nonessential spending on the pipeline until May 31, 2018.

The relevant parliamentary authorities on this subject are pages 695 to 704 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, third edition, and Beauchesne's 387 to 390.

We are now in the Fourth Session of this Legislature. Most if not all members have had the opportunity to hear previous applications under Standing Order 30. The role of the Speaker in dealing with these requests is to determine whether or not the member should be granted leave to move the member's motion to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance.

The oil and gas industry plays a vital role in Alberta's economy. Yesterday's announcement by Kinder Morgan presents another hurdle in the progress of the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion. Hon. Government House Leader, I recognize that, under Standing Order 42, in fact, it is the government's intention to bring the matter forward for discussion. The dilemma I have with the argument you're making, however, is that it is subject to a unanimous vote of the House, and that makes it difficult for me to agree with the points.

It seems to me that on this matter there's a general consensus about the importance of this matter, but in this particular instance I feel the need to proceed. It would be difficult to find that the request to adjourn the business today would not be in order given the importance of the oil and gas industry to Albertans and to the Alberta economy. Accordingly, the chair finds that the request for leave is in order.

In accordance with the procedure set out in Standing Order 30, members will now be given the opportunity to voice their support or opposition to the motion. The rules governing the procedure once the chair finds the request for leave to be in order are as follows. Standing Order 30 requires that the question be put to a vote of the Assembly. If there are any objections to the question, then the chair will ask those members who support the motion to rise in their places. If 15 or more members rise, the debate will proceed, and each member who wishes to speak will have 10 minutes to do so until all who wish to speak have done so or until the normal hour of adjournment. If at least five members rise but fewer than 15, the question of whether the member has leave to move adjournment of the ordinary business is put immediately, determined by division. If fewer members arise, the debate will not proceed.

Could I take one moment for the sake of the House and consult with the table officer.

Hon. members, shall the debate on the urgent matter proceed? All those in favour, please say aye.

Some Hon. Members: Aye.

The Speaker: Those opposed, please say no.

Some Hon. Members: No.

[Several members rose]

The Speaker: We exceed the 15 members, and I think we proceed to debate on the matter.

The opposition leader.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the wisdom of your ruling in this respect. What's my time limit here? Can I get clarity? I think the Clerk indicates 10.

The Speaker: Ten minutes.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you. It takes me 10 minutes to clear my throat. I'll do my best.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your recognition of the urgency of this matter. As I said yesterday, Canada is broken if this pipeline project is killed. Canada was founded on the promise of an economic union. That was the motive reason behind Confederation 151 years ago. When the Fathers of Confederation from the founding four colonies gathered at Charlottetown and Quebec City, their primary, overriding goal was to create a free trade zone that would strike down economically destructive tariffs and barriers between the various colonies of British North America. Their dream, their vision became this great dominion in 1867 and then expanded with the creation of the other provinces, including Alberta in 1905.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

When this province was carved out of the Northwest Territories, it was with the promise for the hard-working, industrious people of Alberta – the merchants, the farmers, the miners, and the trappers – to benefit from the ability to sell their products throughout the Dominion of Canada. Essential in the agreement of Confederation was, under section 92, the definition of federal jurisdiction over interprovincial infrastructure, which was further clarified in subsequent amendments, which effectively means today that the federal government has unqualified jurisdictional authority over the regulation of interprovincial pipelines.

Now, Madam Speaker, we know that here in Alberta we are blessed to be the custodians of the world's third-largest accessible oil reserves. Those reserves, if they were to be commodified at current global Brent prices, would have a notional market value of over $11 trillion. Eleven trillion dollars. For a country that has over $1 trillion of cumulative public debt and unfunded liabilities, imagine what trillions of dollars of future wealth could do to help us maintain our standard of living, to pay for our future pension obligations, for our unfunded health obligations, for the quality of life that we dream of for future generations.

Madam Speaker, in recent decades the remarkably brilliant and innovative industry headquartered in Alberta which has turned that raw resource into wealth, into royalties, into jobs, into businesses, into vibrant communities has managed to increase our production of oil and gas by orders of magnitude. Just a few years ago we were producing merely roughly 800,000 barrels per day of Canadian crude. By next year we're on track, I believe, for 1.6 million barrels per day of production, and some projections have us on track with current capital investments and the current rate of exploration for some 3 million barrels per day within a few years. So that is more than a tripling of our production capacity. But that production is only valuable if we can sell it and if we can sell it to global markets at global prices. As I said earlier, less than 5 per cent of Canadian crude is exported to countries other than the United States.

Energy, by the way, Madam Speaker, is by far Canada's largest export product, by multiple orders, actually, Alberta's largest export product. Well, 95 per cent of that which is exported is exported to one buyer only, the United States, so we have what is called a huge price discount. Now, some people have quantified this as costing us some $20 million a day. Imagine if that situation should continue year upon year upon year. We would be stranding, we would be assuming an opportunity cost of eventually hundreds of billions of dollars, and the Alberta treasury would be losing tens of billions of dollars in potential revenue. That is why the market has for the past decade been pursuing possible coastal pipelines.

Now, there's been an expansion of continental pipelines within North America, as mentioned in question period, in the past 12 years. We've seen the permitting and completion of four major pipelines within Canada and North America, that did double our capacity to ship oil.

Then, Madam Speaker, Enbridge proposed the Northern Gateway pipeline to Kitimat, the B.C. northern coast, but that project, which was approved by the federal cabinet to which I belonged, was subsequently vetoed by the NDP's close ally Justin Trudeau. Then the same ally of the NDP, Prime Minister Trudeau, killed the Energy East pipeline, proposed by TCPL, which would have achieved the dream of energy independence for Canada. They did so by getting the National Energy Board to change the rules of the game midstream, as reflected in the August 23, 2017, interpretive bulletin of the National Energy Board requiring that TCPL assess its project based on up- and downstream emissions. Then, of course, there have been delays on the Keystone XL pipeline to the U.S. Gulf coast, primarily because of President Obama's seven-year delay and ultimate veto, which this government did not protest.

Madam Speaker, now we find ourselves in a situation where the only remaining approved pipeline that could be built in a reasonable period of time and get us a fair global price for our products is the Kinder Morgan Trans Mountain pipeline expansion, but yesterday that company announced a suspension of future investments. Now, this should not come as news because on November 14 Kinder Morgan in an application to the NEB for an omnibus permit said that "faced with unreasonable regulatory risks due to a lack of clear processes to secure necessary permits . . . it may become untenable for Trans Mountain's shareholders . . . to proceed."

Then on December 4 Steven Kean, the CEO of Kinder Morgan, said, "Unfortunately, the scope and pace of the permits and approvals received does not allow for significant additional construction to begin." And then on February 7 Ian Anderson, the chair of Kinder Morgan, said: investor patience is a whole different matter; it's not lost on us that there are still obstacles. Then on February 21 Kimberly Dang from Kinder Morgan U.S. said: we're going to spend at a reduced level from a full-throttle push towards completion until we have more clarity and we're sure that we can compete with what we started. Then yesterday, Madam Speaker, Mr. Kean said: a company cannot litigate its way to an in-service pipeline.

So we've seen this coming. I've been predicting this, Madam Speaker. This is the result of the death-by-delay strategy of the New Democrats in B.C. — the New Democrats in Vancouver, the New Democrats in Coquitlam, the New Democrats in Burnaby — and their New Democrat allies on the political left across the country. Yesterday is exactly what they wanted.

We cannot let this stand, Madam Speaker, which is why for nine months I have been calling on this government to have a real fight-back strategy. To begin with, I called last July for symbolic measures like the wine boycott. I called for safety inspections of B.C. product passing through Alberta. I said that we should be prepared to consider tolling B.C. gas that goes through Alberta pipelines to U.S. markets if they seek to block this energy pipeline and violate that Constitution to which I refer. I've said that we should be prepared to do what Peter Lougheed did in 1980 in being prepared to turn off the taps of the shipments of oil that currently fuel the Lower Mainland economy.

But the government first mocked and ridiculed every one of those suggestions, then reluctantly began rhetorically repeating this message, brought in a wine boycott, that they then promptly repealed when they declared victory even following a . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to speak about our most important industry and about our government's actions to deter attempts by the B.C. government to interfere with the Trans Mountain pipeline as well as our efforts to demand concrete steps from the federal government to enforce its decision on the project and to get this pipeline built.

You know, I'm always happy to talk about this industry. It's an industry I love very much. I say this both as the Energy minister, of course, but also as the MLA for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, which I am proud to represent. It's a region that is one of the heartbeats of Alberta's energy sector. I have many ties to this industry that run deep, including countless family members, friends, and neighbours who depend on this industry, and when I say neighbours, I really mean the people of northwestern Alberta, which also includes northeastern B.C. Many folks on the B.C. side of the border work in the sector in Alberta, on our side, and we have a common understanding of the value of oil and gas in our communities. That's yet another reason why the B.C. government's actions are so hypocritical. To oppose the growth of one of the province's energy sectors while trying to grow their own with LNG is particularly hypocritical.

That's why we're here, to have an important conversation about supporting this government's actions in this dispute with the B.C. government as well as our government's actions toward the federal government and to take concrete steps to ensure that the Trans Mountain pipeline project does get completed. We've been clear all along, Madam Speaker, and Albertans have been clear as well: this pipeline must get built. This is about tens of thousands of jobs for hard-working families, it's about billions of dollars in investment in our economy, and it's ultimately about having a better life, with better schools, roads, hospitals, which we owed a lot in previous times to our gas and oil sector.

We've come a long way. In fact, we've done more to promote pipelines and deliver results in three years than the Conservatives did in 44. Enbridge's line 3 pipeline is well under construction. Keystone XL has the commercial support to proceed, which took a major boost from our government and Premier Rachel Notley. Through our efforts on Trans Mountain we are closer than ever to breaking the land lock and finally getting top dollar for our resources in world markets. It's clear that our government has been fighting to get this long-overdue pipeline built and approved.

On the flip side, we have a Conservative leader that's more interested in grandstanding and promoting himself than getting pipelines built. This Conservative leader claims to be a pipeline champion, but where was his advocacy when he was in Ottawa? During his 20 years in the House of Commons he barely spoke about the projects he now takes credit for. He even had the audacity to go to Ottawa not too long ago and tell a room full of Doug Ford's friends that Ontario is the heart of Canada's economy. Would he tell that to hard-working people in the oil sands? What about the shale gas drillers up my way in the Peace Country? What about downtown Calgary? The heart of Canada's economy is right here in Alberta, and that's why our government will do whatever it takes – whatever it takes – to support our industry and the hard-working people of this province.

When it comes to the legal disputes over this pipeline, I think Alberta will have a good shot at cracking the Blue Jays' lineup because we're batting a thousand so far, 14 out of 14 important and decisive legal challenges. The courts threw out B.C.'s last case without even hearing it, not to mention that the last time the B.C. government tried to overstep its legal and constitutional authority, we took bold action, and they backed down. When the city of Burnaby tried to block the Trans Mountain pipeline in court, we intervened, and we won, and we're confident we will continue to win. Let's not forget that if it wasn't for our climate leadership plan, there would be no approved pipeline to the coast to fight for.

But, that said, it's time for the federal government to step up. It's time for them to follow our lead. It's time for the federal government to defend Alberta. It's time for Ottawa to go to bat for working people of western Canada. During the auto crisis Ottawa intervened to help the workers in Ontario with concrete action. When the aerospace industry needed a bailout, Ottawa stepped in for those workers in Quebec and took concrete action. Now the energy industry needs the feds to have their back, and we call on them now to act: we need you to act, and we need you to act quickly and decisively. The federal approval of a pipeline project must be more than just the paper it's written on.

That's not all we have to say, Madam Speaker. To the west of us Premier Horgan believes he can harass the project without economic consequences for British Columbia. On that, he could not be more wrong. Albertans have told us to do whatever it takes to get this pipeline built, and we are doing just that. We will make B.C. feel the economic pain for its decisions. We're introducing legislation in the coming days that will allow us to restrict the flow of refined product into B.C. Invoking this would be similar to the bold action taken by Premier Peter Lougheed when our energy industry was under attack in the past. We are not hesitating to do this again if the B.C. government continues on its present course. It's important that B.C. and the country know that we will do whatever it takes to make sure our constitutional rights are respected as partners in our Confederation.

Further to that, Madam Speaker, we're prepared to do whatever it takes to get this pipeline built. You know, the B.C. government thinks they can harass investors and managers of Kinder Morgan. They think they can harass them into giving up and killing this project. They are wrong on that front as well. The Premier said it well yesterday: "The government of B.C. feels they can mess with Texas... [but] they cannot mess with Alberta." If we have to, Alberta is prepared to take a public position in this pipeline. That means Alberta is prepared to be an investor, and if we do take that step, I don't think we have to say that we will be a significantly more determined investor. Never count Alberta out.

I've been asked before if I'm angry. Am I disappointed that this project isn't completed yet? You know what the answer is, Madam Speaker? Above all, I am more determined than ever. This has done nothing but strengthen my resolve and the resolve of this government. We will get this pipeline built.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the Leader of the Official Opposition for bringing forward this motion today to give us an opportunity to speak on behalf of our constituents on such an important issue, I would argue probably one of the most important issues that our province is facing right now.

It was interesting for me to hear the comments from the Energy minister just a few moments ago in talking about this motion and talking about the situation that's taking place with Kinder Morgan and pipelines in our province. I would submit to you, Madam Speaker, that the presentation by the hon. Energy minister is exactly the reason why we needed this emergency debate. It is pretty clear to me, in listening to the comments from the Energy minister today and also hearing similar comments in question period today, that this NDP government clearly has no clue what they are doing. They are in denial about the serious situation that we're facing. They continue to bring forward half measures at best, and I think that's even being generous, because I think they're not bringing forward any measures at all to be able to take this forward.

You know, the opposition – the Leader of the Opposition, opposition MLAs, and the opposition caucus as a whole – has been bringing forward this issue and the concern about where we could end up with this government for a couple of years, saying that, unfortunately, we thought that we were going to end up exactly where we ended up yesterday, with this project basically hanging on by a thread, and that the NDP colleagues of the members across the way were going to continue to kill this project by delaying it. Over and over we brought that forward, and all that happened for the first part of that was that we were ridiculed and made fun of by the NDP government, the Leader of the Opposition in particular but all of us. There are lists. There's not enough time to go through all the comments, Madam Speaker, but as you know, we have quoted those comments many times from the Premier and our NDP colleagues across the way essentially making fun of us or belittling us for saying that this was going to be a problem.

Then, Madam Speaker, we got through Christmastime and into the early new year, and the opposition started asking to be able to come back to the Legislature as soon as possible so that we could debate this very issue because we felt that it was a problem. In February Kinder Morgan indicated that this was the direction that they were going to end up in, that this is where they were probably going to end up having to be because there was no stability for their investors. They did that, I believe, on February 21. On February 22 the Premier then removed her symbolic wine ban, the day after Kinder Morgan first gave us a warning that this is where we were headed, and continued to ridicule the opposition for asking for an emergency debate in this place.

Then, all of a sudden, when we came back to this Chamber for the first time, in fact, the very first sitting day after the throne speech, this government finally brought forward a motion in this Assembly, a government motion asking for the unanimous support of this House to make a clear, symbolic symbol to the government in B.C. and the government in Ottawa that we won't accept this behaviour anymore. So they came drastically over to our side of the argument, which is great, and passed that motion, and then they did nothing.

We brought up an amendment at that time saying that this is not enough, that we need clear action. The members across the way voted that amendment down. They voted it down, brought forward a symbolic motion from this Assembly, and then did nothing else again for several weeks. At the time that I spoke on that amendment – I was the one who moved the amendment to the government motion, Madam Speaker – I said that Albertans can't afford to wait anymore, that it's not enough for us to pass this motion. I said that several weeks ago, that we have to take concrete action provincially and expect our federal government, in particular the Premier's close ally Justin Trudeau, to take action on this file. The government voted down the amendment, left this place with a symbolic motion from all of us – I was happy to vote for it – and then did nothing.

Then we fast-forward to now, Madam Speaker, and we all saw Sunday afternoon the terrible news that this project is now hanging on by a thread, just like we predicted.

You know, the Energy minister and the Deputy Premier often stand up and say that we are rooting against this project. We're not rooting against this project; we're rooting for this project. But we're telling the government, because it's our job, that you have a problem. You have a problem, which means that Albertans have a problem, and we need to take action to be able to save this project. But they don't take any action. They continue to come back to this place. In fact, today they tried yet again to bring forward a motion that was symbolic and very, very similar to the last motion that was passed by this Chamber. They continue to ask this side of the House to give them a blank cheque on this issue though they have shown no capability and no serious action to be able to deal with it.

That's why this is an emergency. This government is in charge right now. They want to talk about the CPC pipeline record and spin that. That's ridiculous. What Albertans want to hear about right now is what this government is going to do right now. Throughout question period today ministers and the Premier stood up and said that they were going to use every tool in the tool box, and then when this side of the House asks simple questions about what those tools are, when they can expect those tools to be used, and how that will work, they just stand up and grandstand again and say that we'll use every tool in the tool box. Well, why would we as an opposition trust that? I would submit to you, Madam Speaker, that we would be irresponsible to continue to trust that given this government's actions on this file.

We know that the Premier in the past has met with the Premier of B.C. and that the Premier of B.C.'s own words are that the Premier of our province did not even try to persuade him on pipelines. We know that as early as yesterday the Premier was still saying compliments to Justin Trudeau, her close ally, on how he has handled this pipeline issue, still standing up for him despite the fact that he has completely abandoned what he said that he would do on this issue. He has refused to take concrete action as the Prime Minister of Canada to defend the constitutional rights of this province, he has refused to point out the national interest of this important project, all while this government sits there on their hands, over and over bringing symbolic motions to this place.

This is an emergency, Madam Speaker. Action must be taken now. It should have been taken months ago, when it was first brought up by people on this side of the House. The reality is, though, that that ship has sailed, so now the government must take action, not continue to come back to this place and tell us that they're going to use every tool in the tool box. What tools are they going to use? The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed has brought forward many concrete ideas. Sadly, that side of the House, the government side of the House, continues to disregard them and sometimes even makes fun of the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed for bringing forward those ideas. Well, at least he's bringing forward ideas. At least he's bringing forward concrete steps that we can take right now to stand up for our rights as a province, to stand up to Justin Trudeau in Ottawa, to stand up to the B.C. government and say: this is wrong, what you're doing.

Instead, what we're getting from our government, what Albertans are getting from the current government of the day are just words over and over and over. Last week in this Chamber ministers and the Premier stood up over and over and declared victory yet again for this pipeline. Victory for this pipeline. Then we went home to our constituencies for the weekend, and we found out that there is no victory, Madam Speaker. There's no victory. In fact, we are almost about to lose this project. The Minister of Energy stood up in this House and had the nerve to say today that they're battling a thousand on this issue. They're losing on this issue. It would be comical if it wasn't for the consequences that are happening to Albertans as a result of the incompetence of this government on this file, to stand up in this House and continue to say that you have this under control when you don't, to stand up and say that you have declared victory when there is no victory.

Why will this government not take concrete action to stand up for this province? Why will they not go down to B.C. and say to their close NDP colleagues, whether it be to the Burnaby town council, the NDP mayor for Burnaby, the NDP government, the NDP opposition inside Ottawa, or their close, close ally Justin Trudeau – why will they not go and take concrete action against those governments for Alberta? Why will they continue to come to this place and say that everything's okay when it's not?

That's why this is an emergency. Albertans cannot afford for this government to continue to delay and delay and delay taking action on this important file. Albertans expect this government to do something about it. I can tell you that we hear about it every day. They expect this government to do it. They don't trust this government. You know, I don't care about the consequences to this government politically. I think this government politically has destroyed itself already. But I do care about the consequences for the people of Alberta.

With my last 30 seconds, Madam Speaker, I will call on the government to do the right thing, finally, for the people of Alberta, do what they were supposed to be doing the whole time: stand up for this pipeline, take concrete action on behalf of the people of Alberta, and make sure Justin Trudeau and Mr. Horgan inside B.C. know that this is unacceptable and that we as Albertans won't put up with it anymore.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to speak to this motion on this pressing matter that is indeed in the national interest. As has been indicated, there are several tools at Alberta's disposal. We can and we will make B.C. feel economic pain to reciprocate where they are hurting our economy and indeed their own economy and indeed the economy of all of Canada with this ongoing belligerence and harassment of a project that has been determined to be in the national interest. We will introduce a bill in the coming days that allows us more tools on that in order to restrict energy flows. There are other tools in our tool box, and unlike the tools of the province of British Columbia, ours are real.

That leads me to the second course of action that this province can and is taking, and that is asserting appropriate jurisdiction and asserting the national significance of this pipeline project in the courts and using other legal means to do so. As has been indicated, we have been successful in those assertions so far, and we will continue to make that case where appropriate, Madam Speaker.

Third, we will take a public position in this pipeline, Madam Speaker. We will invest in this project to give our industry confidence, and we will ensure that this pipeline gets built. We will not tie ourselves to the actions of other levels of government when it comes to making the appropriate investment to get this project built, because it is in Alberta's interest. Our government has determined that that is the right thing to do for the people of this province and indeed the people of Canada.

The fact of the matter is, Madam Speaker, that the federal government can and should do all of these things as well. They should impose economic pain on B.C., they should take the lead on fighting in the courts, and they, too, can invest in the Trans Mountain expansion project to ensure that the national interest is upheld. We continue to call on them to do so, and I for one am beginning to lose my patience. I believe that it is time for the federal government to stand up. I know that all of my colleagues on this side of the House share that view. It is time for western Canadian working people to benefit from the same kinds of interventions that the Ontario auto industry has benefited from, that the Quebec aerospace sector has benefited from. It is time for national leadership. Nothing else will do at this point. It's time for more than talk. It is time to in fact emulate the province of Alberta when it comes to action.

Our climate leadership plan will cut emissions drastically. We have taken action on climate leadership, Madam Speaker, a projected 30 per cent reduction by 2030, in a province where we were told for a generation that it could not be done, to take climate change seriously. This government took on the biggest challenge of our generation, and we will succeed. Ignoring climate change and letting emissions increase would have brought us above 300 megatonnes by 2030. That is despite the federal targets articulated by the government that the hon. member opposite, the Leader of the Opposition, sat in. He sat on his hands on climate change, just as he did on pipeline approvals. That is despite their targets, that they articulated but then did nothing to achieve. I am sensing a theme here with respect to the federal government. Instead, with our $1.4 billion investment into innovation, recycling the funds from the climate leadership plan, investments that the members opposite would cancel, we may go as low as 222 megatonnes, and that will keep dropping.

Our carbon competitiveness regulation, that the members opposite have pledged to repeal, will cut emissions by 50 million tonnes by 2030. Our investments in energy efficiency, that the members opposite have pledged to repeal, have not only saved Albertans money; they've avoided 3 million tonnes of GHGs. Over the life of the products and programs that we've put in place already, Albertans are going to save $300 million. That is money that the members opposite, the Conservatives opposite, with their lack of action on climate, would reach into Albertans' pockets and take from them.

Madam Speaker, we moved forward with the climate leadership plan because we knew that it would secure us market access for our products by securing us pipeline approvals in the first instance. Why was that so important to the people of this province? Because we were in the midst of a recession that hurt Alberta families. We were relying on one product, one market, one price. Successive Conservative governments, both federal and provincial, drove us into that economic dead end, and it ended up in so much suffering for families across this province, in resource communities and elsewhere.

With the pipeline approvals and the climate leadership plan we are finding ways to diversify the economy, Madam Speaker. We've got those pipeline approvals in place. We are also taking action on the petrochemicals diversification program, the partial upgrading program, the renewable energy program so that Alberta can be an energy province in every meaning of that word and we can get full value for our products across the value chain.

Madam Speaker, I made reference earlier to comments from Kinder Morgan on the subject of climate leadership. The fact of the matter is that the investor certainty that is provided by a thoughtful and cautious carbon pricing framework is exactly what the industry in this province is looking for. On carbon pricing, for example, I will quote Kinder Morgan Canada president Ian Anderson.

We're encouraged to see this positive step forward and commend the hard work of all involved. The collaboration of industry, the Government of Alberta, First Nations leaders and environmental groups helps pave a path forward and provides important clarity to policy and direction for the entire industry.

Madam Speaker, it's exactly that kind of investor confidence that we have been able to achieve.

Who else understands that the environment and the economy go hand in hand? Certainly, the president of Kinder Morgan Canada does. Who else? Who else is actually doing something to reduce greenhouse gas emissions while growing our economy? Here are some names. Steve Williams, CEO of Suncor, in a statement when we made our climate leadership announcements:

Today we reach a milestone in ensuring Alberta's valuable resource is accompanied by leading carbon policy. It's time that Alberta is seen as a climate, energy and innovation leader.

Murray Edwards of CNRL: Alberta wins at today's announcement. This is November 22, 2015. It's a "significant step forward for Alberta" and for the industry. The Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers:

Alberta's Climate Leadership Plan provides direction that will allow the oil and natural gas industry to grow, further enhance its environmental performance... and is expected to improve market access to allow Canadian oil to reach more markets.

We agree, Madam Speaker. In this context the provincial government has taken action on climate leadership, on getting full value for our resources, on accessing markets. Our industry has taken leadership. All of those folks that are shipping bitumen in the Trans Mountain pipeline? Those are companies like Suncor and Cenovus, who have endorsed the climate leadership plan. They understand that environment and economy go hand in hand, and they also understand that action is needed, as we understand, and we agree. We agree that the national interest is in taking action on climate while also taking action on getting a better price for our energy products.

It is time for everyone else who has sat on their hands and not taken action. It is time for the federal government to step up. It is time for the folks across the way to finally admit that climate leadership goes together with accessing a better price for our existing energy resources and stop cheering for Alberta to fail and start cheering for the fact that the environment and the economy go together in the 21st century, and it's up to all Albertans to make that a reality.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I share the frustrations of the members opposite. I am tired of words from the federal government, and they need to use the tools in their tool box. B.C. may believe that they can mess with investors in Texas, but they did not count on how tough this government is and, in particular, how tough the Premier of Alberta is. We will get this pipeline built, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to this very important issue, to speak for my constituents up in northeastern Alberta, you know, especially the oil and gas industry, Lac La Biche, St. Paul, Elk Point, even Glendon, Bonnyville, Cold Lake. We've got a lot of First Nations up there.

I was very interested in hearing how often the member opposite used the word "action" because I understand that the two books that sit on Premier Horgan's desk are An Action a Day and the Leap Manifesto, so she may be helping him along to encourage the Horgan government in opposing this pipeline.

You know, when I talk about the folks up in northeastern Alberta, I'd like to talk about the taxpayer-funded advertisement that's on the radio lately about telling everybody how wonderful it is here in Alberta. Well, you're not talking to the folks up in my area. We could go and talk to companies like Shamrock Valley in Elk Point or Primco Dene or Seven Lakes or the Region One Aboriginal Business Association up in Lac La Biche. We've got people up there that are working for a lot less, those that are working. Companies are doing their best to redistribute jobs and cut back hours and job-share. Some companies are going to seven days on and seven days off so that they can run two full crews and give everybody at least a little bit of money to help them pay their bills.

You know, when oil prices first fell, the major oil companies up in the area – MEG Energy, Husky, CNRL, and Esso – all went out to their contractors and said: look, we need to tighten up our belts a little bit to get us through this recession. They took a number of cuts, those companies, and they had to pass it back on to the employees. This is why this pipeline is so important. We've seen the increase in oil and gas prices, especially oil, but we now have this bottleneck. It doesn't matter whether the price of oil gets up to $70 a barrel. If you can't sell it, if you can't get it down the pipeline, it doesn't mean a whole lot. So we really do need this important pipeline. That's why this is an emergency all over, for this province especially but also for all of Canada.

Now, when the price of oil dropped, all these companies actually sat down at the table with CNRL, Esso, and Husky and said: okay; we're going to cut back our rates. Especially, I want to talk specifically about the fluid haulers. A lot of these guys are independents. There are a few bigger operators in the area, but a lot of the other ones are independents. They're at the stage right now where they are ready to hand their keys in because they can't make their payments. The rates have cut so low. The price of fuel has gone up. The carbon tax is kicking them in the butt as well, and they're having a hard time making ends meet.

Now, years back, when guys would get into this situation, some of the bigger players would, you know, quite happily buy out their trucks for them and take up their routes, put them on at an hourly rate just so that they wouldn't lose everything and they could keep on going. But the situation we're at now is that even the bigger players have cut back so much that they can't afford to buy out these smaller guys. They're coming to them hat in hand, saying: can you take over my truck and put me to work? And the guys are saying: "Sorry. We can't do it. We're actually cutting back on our trucks as well." We're in quite a bit of a different situation here.

That's why we really need to get rid of this bottleneck. We've got a lot of wells that are being shut in right now. Tank farms are at capacity. We need to get a lot more movement. I mean, it's going to be a while down the road getting this pipeline going and getting the oil flowing down, but we have to concentrate on pressuring not only the B.C. government but the federal government as well to step up and get this over.

I want to get back to, you know, our relationship with British Columbia. Years back when the pine beetle epidemic first hit, I don't recall whether Alberta shut our borders to B.C. lumber. I don't think so. I think we actually sent biologists over there to help them try and discover what the problem was and how to deal with it. So I'm really dismayed that this NDP government in British Columbia has taken this stance when it comes to our Alberta oil. We need to, again, work with the B.C. government and the federal government and get this blockade, which is basically what it is, a blockade to our industry, off the books.

We need to support our companies here in any way we can, and if that means quashing a ridiculous carbon tax to help them through this tough time, maybe that's what we need to do as a provincial government. We're always talking about what the federal government can do and what the B.C. government can do. What about what our own government can do? Stand up for our Alberta companies and cancel the carbon tax. That would really be helpful.

Like I said, in northeastern Alberta we've got a lot of companies, a lot of communities that depend on oil. We've got Cold Lake First Nation. We've got Métis settlements up there, Kikino, Buffalo Lake. They all have a lot of private companies that are working in the oil field. They all depend on it. I mentioned the Region One Aboriginal Business Association. I'm sure that if somebody from the government went and talked to them about how fluffy and wonderful things here in Alberta are, they're going to get a little bit different story than the advertisement that we hear on 630 CHED and other radio stations.

Again, do we want to get into a fight with British Columbia? Well, I wouldn't like to see that. I think it's probably going to come to that. You know, one of the things that we could do is ship in the oil lines. In the pipelines that we do have, we ship a combination of raw bitumen and refined products. Maybe we can just restrict that to raw bitumen. I know that between 50 and 60 per cent of the refined products that British Columbia uses come through that pipeline from Alberta, so that may be one way to penalize them if it comes to that. People have talked about stopping trucks at the border. Do we really want to see that happen? I don't think so, but I guess that's something that we could look at.

In the meantime I think we need to do whatever we can to support our industry here while this all takes place and comes to fruition and do whatever we can. Like I said, I think a really good place to start with that would be to cancel the carbon tax and give some of these folks a break.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I much appreciate the opportunity to talk about this very important matter before us here in the House, a matter that's not only important to us here but, of course, to people throughout the province of Alberta and indeed throughout the country of Canada. I think it is important that we make sure that we frame this conversation in a way that makes sense. In the beginning I think there are some things that we can agree on, and that is, first of all, that probably without exception in the House we all believe that the Kinder Morgan pipeline must get built. It must get built now, and it must get built with the full support of the country of Canada, including all of its provinces. We have a good starting place there.

In addition, we all agree that this government and the federal government must take action to ensure that happens, and indeed we are. We have introduced a motion into the House. We'll be introducing a new bill subsequently that will allow us to take new action in order to ensure that the province of British Columbia acts in accordance with the rule of law and acts as a member of this great country that we call Canada and not as an independent body that somehow is not attached to the rest of us. We know that we're taking strong action here in the province of Alberta, and we have already worked very well behind the scenes to ensure that things are in place for us to take the best action and have indicated that to the province of British Columbia.

We also, I think, agree that the federal government needs to step up. It is with surprise that I find myself agreeing with the members opposite in this House in my level of frustration with the federal government and their lack of what I would say is required leadership in order to move us on. We in this House are calling for the Prime Minister and the federal government ministers to step up, to take action, to be adamant, to be clear, and to enforce the rule of law in this country. So good starting place. Lots of stuff for us all to agree on.

But I'm also standing here as the Minister of Indigenous Relations, and I want to bring into this conversation a voice from the indigenous people in the province of Alberta. This is a place where, I'm afraid, we're going to diverge on this side of the House from the comments being made on the other side of the House. In fact, the previous speaker just made comments about quashing the carbon tax and, you know, going against the very thing that I think that we need to ensure that we are doing if we are truly to stand on firm ground when we demand and when we expect that the Kinder Morgan be built and be built for the betterment of all Canadians. That is something that I think you've heard me say in this House before, that the indigenous people are clearly behind the Kinder Morgan build.

In fact, I have a couple of letters that I'd like to read a few pieces from to reinforce that. For example, Chief Ron Kreutzer from Fort McMurray No. 468 First Nation says:

The Kinder Morgan Trans Mountain Pipeline is essential to the viability of the economic engine of Canada, the Alberta Oilsands. Fort McMurray #468 First Nation relies heavily on the responsible development of the Oilsands to provide the necessary economics to be a self-sufficient Nation for the next seven generations.

Clearly, this nation is in favour of the Kinder Morgan pipeline.

As well, I have a letter here – and I will submit these letters to the House when the opportunity arises – from Chief Arthur Rain, who is the chief of Paul Band First Nation, just west of the city of Edmonton, indicating:

Paul First Nation submits that the development of the Trans Mountain Expansion Project supports the sustainable growth of First Nation Communities who choose to engage and capitalize on the many benefits put forth by Kinder Morgan Canada Inc. as well as the multiple levels of government which support the project.

We as a Nation have assessed the environmental impact of this project and also share the concerns of our British Columbia First Nation Communities. That said, we are confident that Kinder Morgan Canada Inc. also shares our concerns and will work diligently to protect our environment and manage this project with minimal impact; after all it is their environment as well.

So, again, clearly in favour of the Kinder Morgan project. In fact, I've spoken to many chiefs around the province and have received widespread support, from as far north as I can go in this province to as far south as I can go, for the Kinder Morgan project. However, you'll notice the last line of Chief Arthur Rain's note. He said that he is confident that Kinder Morgan will take care of the environment, finishing his note with "after all it is their environment as well."

Thus, we are at the point where our side differs substantially from the opposition. The First Nations people remind me on a regular basis that moccasins come in pairs, that it makes no sense to have a moccasin on your left foot and then allow your right foot to drag through the snow or drag through the mud. You need to have a moccasin on each foot. As a result, any attempt to separate economic development such as the Kinder Morgan from responsible maintenance and care of the environment is foolishness. It's the kind of foolishness that is demonstrated by a young child who slips on one shoe and then runs out into the backyard only to find himself knee deep in mud. This is the kind of foolishness that we need to address.

The only way for us to ensure that we are taking a morally responsible stance with regard to Kinder Morgan and to make sure that we are defending Kinder Morgan in the way it needs to be defended is to be able to stand in this House, to stand in this province, and to stand in this country and make the declaration that while we are in favour of the economic development potential not only for all of Alberta and all of Canada but, more specifically, for the indigenous communities in this province, we must do so from the moral position that we will not allow the building of the Kinder Morgan to become devastating to our environment, to put us in a place where we cannot care for the world that we intend to pass on to our children.

As a result, we have a number of other statements about how important it is that we have a carbon levy in this province, that we act in a responsible way to take care of the environment. Rather than getting rid of it in order to support Kinder Morgan, as was just previously suggested, the indigenous community is very clear that the only place that you can stand solidly in order to support Kinder Morgan is a place in which you are taking care of the environment and ensuring that you are wearing a moccasin on both feet.

For example, Grand Chief Rupert Meneen from Treaty 8 indicated that indigenous peoples are seeing the effects of climate change first-hand.

We need to address climate change right now and Alberta is making important strides towards addressing this pressing need. These programs are an important step in ensuring Indigenous peoples are involved in matters, like climate change, that directly affect our lives.

Full support for our carbon levy and for our indigenous climate leadership program that is funded wholly from the carbon levy. I'm afraid that Grand Chief Meneen will be in danger of losing all of his support for all of his environmental programs should the wishes of the opposition come forward and result in the cancellation of the carbon levy, a complete contradiction to what it is that the indigenous people are asking in this province.

Another interesting quote is from Audrey Poitras, the president of the Métis Nation of Alberta. She indicates:

We are pleased that Alberta is investing in Indigenous peoples to address climate change in our communities. The programs announced by Alberta today are one step in supporting those most impacted by climate change and setting the foundation for empowered communities leading climate-change initiatives.

You see how she very carefully ties two things together, that they consistently do in the indigenous community, economic development for empowering communities based on the full commitment to climate change initiatives that take care of the environment. This is the kind of complex, thoughtful, multigenerational thinking that comes out of the indigenous community naturally and routinely, and this is the kind of thinking that we need to ensure that we are invested in in this province in order to ensure that we can take a proper stance in committing ourselves to projects such as the Kinder Morgan.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. The Alberta Party supports pipelines. They are the safest, most environmentally responsible means of transporting oil. The Kinder Morgan pipeline is good for Alberta, it is good for B.C., it is good for Canada, and it is good for the environment because by getting more Alberta crude to market, we displace more barrels of higher carbon crude that come from other jurisdictions, most notably Venezuela and Nigeria.

This is a fact that Alberta's NDP have not bothered to make known to our friends in British Columbia or to the rest of the world. It is one of the many, many, many ways that the Alberta NDP have let down the people of Alberta on this file and so many others, which is why the Alberta Party and I are incredibly frustrated. The NDP have been whistling past the graveyard while a vocal minority of people have started marshalling their forces against this project, and this goes back years. This is not a recent thing. This goes back years. This Alberta NDP government has done on the Kinder Morgan file what they do on everything else. They've crossed their fingers and simply hoped that everything goes well. Well, it hasn't gone well, Madam Speaker. It hasn't gone well.

When I think about the situation with Kinder Morgan, I think about what happens in other parts of this country. When Bombardier proposes to build a factory in Quebec to build airplanes or snowmobiles, well, no one says anything. The factory gets proposed, the factory gets built, and things go into production. When a car factory in southern Ontario is proposed, it is seen only as a good thing. Oh, but there probably is some federal and provincial subsidy money that ends up going to those factories as well. They're celebrated for the jobs they create, for the economic activity they're creating.

But what do the products in those factories consume? How do you make those products go? How do you make an airplane fly? How do you make a snowmobile go? What do you pour into the gas tank of a car? It's oil and gas. These are the things, this dissonance, this disconnect between the supply side, which is what we're focusing on here, and the demand side. It seems okay that we can build these things in eastern Canada, but the province that produces the oil and gas to make these things go: well, we're apparently the ones who are to blame for all the problems. That is not to mention the obvious and gross hypocrisy from provinces that would dump millions of litres of raw sewage off of Montreal or Victoria, who claim to care about the environment but will only fight against Alberta's projects, projects that are to the benefit of their neighbours and, clearly, in the national interest.

So it is profoundly frustrating, and it is shameful that Alberta's NDP have let it get to this point. It is on this government that we have been allowed to get to this point. It is on you. You could have done more. You should have done more, and you didn't, and here we are. Now they're proposing to backstop the pipeline with Alberta taxpayer dollars. Pretty remarkable. They don't seem to be very good negotiators because in any negotiation I've been in, the first thing you do is not to offer money. But here we are. We seem to be through the looking glass on this.

One school of thought is that one of the reasons the NDP may want to take an equity stake in this pipeline is to have standing in court to sue the government when the pipeline fails, to sue the government of B.C. for damages when the pipeline fails. Well, that presumes that the pipeline is going to fail. It makes me wonder if they know something that the rest of Alberta doesn't know.

If we're going to put Alberta taxpayer money into this project, we should absolutely demand that the federal government make an equal or greater investment in the project as well so that the federal government can finally, once and for all, put their money where their mouth is. All we've heard from the federal government are empty platitudes, words. No action, just words. I like the words that they're saying; I just don't believe them. We need the NDP government here in Alberta to stand up for the province of Alberta, to lean hard on the federal government to do their job to make sure this pipeline gets built, and to, heaven forbid, actually follow the rule of law.

This project was vetted and reviewed over and over and over again. Stakeholders were consulted. Indigenous peoples were consulted all along the route. People have been consulted. The environmental impacts have been studied. The spill response has been considered for the coastal waters off of B.C. And I'll note that the pipeline, that's been in operation for 62 years, has had no spills in the Pacific Ocean. Those tankers have been travelling through those waters without GPS, without double-hulled tankers, without the technology that we have available to us today with no incidents. So the simple fact is that the risks to the marine environment in B.C. are negligible.

The people of British Columbia have been told that the risks are imminent, that the minute this pipeline goes into production, that's it for the fishery, that's it for tourism because disaster will abound. Well, it simply isn't true, Madam Speaker. It is simply not true. But this government has not been near forceful enough in making that factual case to the people in British Columbia, not talking about how we are aligned with the people of British Columbia in their desire to address climate change, that this pipeline will help address climate change by reducing the carbon footprint of crude oil that is consumed by the growing demand around the world. Those are the cases that need to be made.

You know, the minister of environment in her comments said that this project is in the national interest, but at the same time they won't compel the federal government. They won't lean on the federal government to ensure that if Alberta is going to be making an investment in the pipeline that the federal government makes an investment in the pipeline. Well, if this project is in the national interest, the federal government should also step up, put their money where their mouth is. Not just empty rhetoric: put their money where their mouth is and take a stake in this project.

It also raises another troubling question. Does this mean that any energy project in this province, of any size, is going to require government intervention, going to require a government investment? Well, maybe that's what this NDP government has wanted all along. Maybe they want the government to be investing in Crown corporations and developing oil and gas and not allowing the private sector to do what it does best, that is to invest, not creating an attractive investment plan, actively pushing away investment because they want a government-first model. Is that actually what's going on here? Because that is a substantial risk that I see. In the banking world they call it moral hazard. It's the too-big-to-fail problem. Why would private investors put their money up when the government is going to do it for them? That's a huge concern of mine, Madam Speaker.

Now, I believe that Alberta needs to do whatever is necessary to see this pipeline put into operation. Unfortunately, the NDP have put us as a province in a position where we may have no choice but to invest in this pipeline. If that's the way it needs to be, then so be it because it is absolutely in the interests of the province of Alberta to see this pipeline built.

Let me be as clear as I can be. The Alberta Party wants the Kinder Morgan pipeline to succeed because it is in the interests of not only the people of Alberta, but it's also in the financial interests of the people of British Columbia and in the interests of the environment and in the interests of our entire country. That is a case that has not been made strongly enough. The Alberta Party wants to see this pipeline succeed, but we also want to see the Alberta NDP stand up to the federal government and especially stand up to their comrades in the British Columbia NDP. They have not done enough to advocate for this pipeline. It must get built, but if it does eventually get built, it will be done in spite of what the Alberta NDP have done, not because of.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. You know, here we are today with an emergency debate on “the need to discuss the failure to ensure the construction of the Trans Mountain expansion project.” Failure to ensure the construction of the Trans Mountain project: well, I disagree with that. We have taken concrete action to ensure that this project will go through. What are some of those actions? Fourteen out of 14 wins when it comes to court challenges. We’ve been willing to invest in the pipeline if needed. We have put down a hard cap when it comes to oil sands emissions, so we’re taking concrete environmental action to get this pipeline built. We’ve banned B.C. wine, and we have been clear that we are willing to do it again should it be needed. Our Premier as well has been clear that if B.C. continues to harass our projects, B.C. will feel economic pain. I would call that action.

When it comes to the environment, Madam Speaker, this new pipeline, the Trans Mountain pipeline, when built, will add 590,000 barrels per day of capacity to get our product to new markets in Asia and beyond. That works out to approximately 826 railcars a day. So to those in B.C. and elsewhere who would see this pipeline fail: how much extra emissions would those 826 railcars a day add to our air, that we all breathe? How would it be if those railcars have to go along the Fraser valley, hung off the side of mountains? How safe is that? That is not to say that I don’t trust the railways and their maintenance; I’m sure they’re very good at it. But the safer way to get our product to market is through this pipeline. Let me say that again. Pipelines are the safest option to get our oil to market.

Now, there are those who sell bottom-shelf books from Toronto: the opposition is secretly hoping that their views will win for political reasons. In fact, the former Wildrose even admitted that it was their worst-case political scenario if our pipelines got built to tidewater. These authors push an economic unicorn version of diversification that’s, frankly, snake oil, Madam Speaker. If I want snake oil, I’ll buy local from the local UCP office. You know, they take offence often when we call them out on this, when we say that killing the carbon tax would in fact hurt our options to get this pipeline built to market.

You know what? We do need diversity, but we cannot diversify a ghost town by shutting down our oil and gas industry overnight. That is not the way to move forward. That would put hundreds and thousands of Albertans out of work. That is not the way forward, and that is most definitely what we are not doing on this side of the House. To those who are concerned about the environment who say, “Hey, you should perhaps diversify the economy,” I say, “Have you not been paying attention?” We have diversified our economy and taken concrete steps to do that, in fact, Madam Speaker.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

With Bill 1 we had incentives for partial upgrading of our oil industry right here in Alberta, creating good, well-paying jobs for Albertans in Calgary and Edmonton and beyond. In fact, in our Bill 2 we had the Alberta investor tax credit to provide investment for Alberta businesses, whatever new and exciting innovation they may be working on. We had the capital investment tax credit, which, I know, Seven Generations Energy, which is based in Calgary, used for a new processing facility in the Montney-Kakwa River area. And, of course, there’s our new interactive digital media tax credit, which will allow us to be competitive with B.C. I have seen what that tax credit has done in B.C. to encourage the new media industry, whether it comes to games, programming, or other such diversification and IT investments.

Then, of course, there are our green energy projects. You know, Madam Speaker, of course, we’re really good at building stuff here. I’ve seen, from when I sold diesel generators to oil and gas drilling rigs, the great work that those did. With green energy we have the cheapest renewable energy project price of anywhere in Canada, and that was thanks to the hard work of our Energy minister to do that. We’re going to be having another renewable energy auction in the near future, where I expect we will continue to see the cheapest prices for renewable energy of anywhere else in Canada, and that is because we are taking the right path forward. We are taking a bold path forward to diversify our economy and to diversify our energy sources here in Alberta. When we do that, Alberta wins, and we win with more jobs for Albertans.

You know, Madam Speaker, I deeply believe in our province and the people in it. I deeply believe in our ingenuity and the new and exciting technical advancements that those ingenious Albertans will come up with. Each rig, each service truck, railcar, wind plant, new valve, vessel, whether it be games, programming, and new tech, each of these means businesses and jobs for my constituents in Calgary-Currie, in Calgary, in Alberta, and beyond.

We’ve been clear that we need Ottawa to step up. An approval for a project in Canada must be worth more than the paper it is written on. You know, I often hear the criticism in the House today that we’ve done nothing. Particularly, the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre says that we’ve taken half measures. Well, I do not agree, Madam Speaker. The opposition likes to cheer against us, saying that investment is leaving this province. Again, I disagree. The constituents in Calgary-Currie see the expansions and the investments in the oil and gas sector right here: a $2 billion expansion by JACOS; Cenovus and CNRL are increasing production. I could go on.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

But I want to talk about even a local company whose vice-president, George, is based and lives in Calgary-Currie. Gen III Oil company, for those of us who drive the QE II, is retrofitting the Bowden oil refinery to take recycled oil and turn it into new products. It’s only the third plant like that in Canada. While doing it, he is taking advantage of our investor tax credits right here in Alberta.

To conclude, Madam Speaker, we are taking concrete action. We have a perfect record when it comes to court challenges, 14 out of 14 wins. I say to the people of B.C. that we are willing to take a public position, increasing investor confidence in this pipeline, and we ask Prime Minister Trudeau and the federal government to do the same. Lastly, because here in Alberta the residents of Calgary-Currie, the residents of Calgary, and the residents of Alberta will not accept B.C. continuing to harass our economic interests, B.C. can be assured that if they should continue to do that, we will make B.C. feel economic pain.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I’m very honoured to be able to speak to this today. I have so many things I want to say. I’m going to start at one particular point. I want to speak about the national interest. There are so many things we can speak about national interest. We can speak about the dollars, we can speak about the essential nature of what this means for the national interest in the hundreds of billions of dollars. For the average person you say the word “billion,” and it kind of flies over their heads; it certainly does over mine.

But if you look at it from the point of view of national interest, what does that mean? That means families and jobs and protecting the vulnerable and prosperity and national unity. That’s what pipelines represent for me. I look at it from the perspective of so many different things but also our responsibility for excellent resource development, something that we are proud of.

I think the most frustrating part of this discussion for me is that, you know, we’ve been at this for three years. I’m very, very happy to see the government MLAs get on board with this because I have all sorts of quotes all over here. I’ve been researching all day things that have been said in the past and all of that, and we can talk about that.

One of the things that resonates most with me, especially because this was just close to when we were first elected, having been a proud Albertan, having been born here: my father is in the oil and gas industry – he’s a chemical engineer – so I grew up with all these guys, wonderful, wonderful salt-of-the-earth people. I remember watching the Premier on TV calling us embarrassing cousins. I remember thinking to myself: who is she talking about? I thought, after that passed: okay, that’s not going to happen again. We know there have been lots of other things. There have been so many attacks on Albertans, direct attacks, direct attacks on one of my constituents, who owned Bears Den, direct attacks on, like, actual Albertans, people who are living in this province, making a living, creating jobs for people. And those are not just the only two times. I mean, it just keeps coming up again and again.

I need to reiterate something. When the climate action plan came out and the carbon tax, the Premier was on her way to the United Nations to talk about climate action plans. They needed to be ready. They needed to have something to present. But I think the worst part of that and the most frustrating thing for me is that never once in any of the discussions or anything that I read ever in those things did the Premier or the environment minister stand up for Alberta and say: “No, no, no. You can’t call us dirty oil. We are responsible resource developers in Canada. We’re the greenest and cleanest, the best by far. In fact, if you actually want to change the environmental footprint in the world, you should only be producing in Canada.” Where was that? I mean, I was newly elected at that point in time, and I understood that.

Where was the language going against the European Union and other countries that are actually oil developers that are actively working against our own industry, helping to keep us landlocked here? Where was our Premier at that time and our Minister of Energy and our minister of environment, saying: “Oh, no. Actually, Canada is the best in the world. You should be following our example.” Instead, I mean, heaven only knows how much prosperity we’ve lost by the delays in the pipelines and the cancellations of others.

But more than that, think about this, Madam Speaker. How much carbon leakage has happened? How much has been produced in other countries that don’t produce as ethically as we do, that don’t care about the environment as much as we do? That is a direct result of this government and their friends in Ottawa. They can take complete responsibility for that.

Where other governments may have faltered, where we have failed in the past is absolutely no reason for this government to be able to stand on their chairs and yell that we’re no good at what we do. You start with the argument of: we are the best, and how do we get better? You start with the argument that nobody else produces better in the world than we do – ethically produces – and our quality of air and life and prosperity here, and then you go to what we can do better. You start with the fact that we have a population of people here who are tolerant and kind and loving and understanding and care about their environment. You start there, and then you go to what you can do better. These are the things that leadership does.

You do not take the people whom you represent and literally throw them under the bus in order to manifest a climate action plan that is ideologically driven and does not change the environmental footprint here in this province. It is not changing behaviour. It is not changing. Especially in our rural communities our folks still have to drive to work, they still have to drive their combines, they still have to do all of those things that are miles away compared to people who are in the cities. They’re just paying more for it.

I wanted to talk for a moment about one particular issue that’s been brought up, especially yesterday, about the public position. The minister of environment just went on the record saying: we are going to put public dollars into this, and we’re going to support this pipeline. Okay. Well, the interesting thing about that is: okay; because what choice do we have now? I’m curious how we got to that position when they’re privately funded. The pipeline companies were going to put all of that money there – $8 billion, $10 billion, whatever it was – with the go-ahead of government, with the acknowledgement of the First Nations, making sure that everybody was working together.

We had private-sector investment until yesterday. Yesterday everything changed, and now the government is saying: we’re going to rally, and we’re going to put public dollars in it. Well, I really don’t know what choice we have at this point to save this pipeline, and now guess who’s on the hook for that. The taxpayer.

Congratulations, folks. Congratulations. You just took something that was private sector, Madam Speaker, fully funded by the industry, and now you’ve put it on the backs of the taxpayer. And the taxpayer – do you know what? – they’re going to look at this, and they’re going to say: “We don’t have a choice. What else can we do?” It’s been fumbled so badly by the NDP and by the federal governments that now the only people that can save us are our taxpayers, who are already suffering, I might add.

I mean, if the pipeline can actually get built, that would be amazing, because at least these folks will see this return on their investment. But in the meantime there is a whole load of hurt that is already happening to our citizens, and now we expect them to ante up with dollars for pipelines that would have been funded outside of the public sector until yesterday. I would really love somebody to explain to me how that is a win on our side.

I’m going to be going back to my constituents and writing articles going: “Well, congratulations. You’re going to have a stake in the pipeline because you’ve got to buy it back now. In order to be able to get the prosperity that you deserve and that you own and that people have been fighting for for you, you have to now buy it back. Not only by social licence – no, no, no – and the carbon tax is not enough. Nope. Now you also have to put your tax dollars into it because the government messed up.”

How is that a success, Madam Speaker? I don’t get it, yet at the same time I’m completely handcuffed by the situation because personally I don’t know what else we can do. If we don’t invest at this point in time, they’re going to pull out. Do you blame them? As the leader has said, this is a death by a thousand delays.

Another thing I wanted to bring up is that we had Ms Berman and Ms Mahon on the oil sands advisory group. I was reading back into my notes, and I thought this was entirely compelling. I remember the Premier saying that Ms Mahon and Ms Berman were only brought onto the OSAG panel to just talk about the oil sands. But did you know, Madam Speaker, that they were fund raising against pipelines while they were here? Not only that, they were fighting against site C, which, as I understand, may be a big factor in all of this because the government has been making deals for hydro. On top of that, while they were doing that, they were actively saying outside of this House that there was no reason for them to support . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I come from a pipeline family. Growing up, I watched my dad work all across Canada making sure all Canadians could benefit from our Albertan products. We followed the TransCanada pipeline to Ontario. We learned about shutdowns at Sheerness, Genesee, and Fort McMurray. We watched pipelines being built, wrapped, and put in the ground as far north as Fort St. John in B.C.

Madam Speaker, I also remember the recession of the '80s and again in the '90s. The boom and the bust of the oil economy affected every Albertan, none more so than the families dependent on the industry: long wait times when I broke my arm, class sizes that just got bigger, and the incredible stress on families. This, of course, was not made any easier on these families by the devastating cuts to health care and education during the Klein years, when we as a province accumulated an 88,000 nurse deficit, which our health care system is still trying to recover from today.

My father lost his job in 2014 like many others in the oil patch because the previous government refused to put any serious thought into diversifying our economy, and despite having both federal and provincial Conservative governments for years, the pipelines the opposition is touting, not a single one gets our product to diversified markets.

Albertans will continue to stand united behind our oil and gas industry in the need to see a new pipeline that gets our Alberta products to the coast, which is long overdue, and the people I talked to in Stony Plain are tired of getting a discount price for our resources.

Madam Speaker, on November 3, 2017, I was invited to help officially open Wabamun Common in the village of Wabamun. Patrick Hanrahan from Kinder Morgan, Jack Latham, representing the Wabamun and district seniors' society, and I all joined Mayor Charlene Smylie for the ceremonial ribbon cutting. Mr. Hanrahan presented Mayor Smylie with a cheque for $125,000 as part of the Trans Mountain pipeline legacy project, the Wabamun seniors also presented a cheque as part of their $28,000 commitment to the project, and the remaining costs of about $167,000 were being funded by a grant through the MSI funding.

Wabamun Common Project is a very exciting project for our community. It will tie our downtown core together and will improve the look and feel of the heart of Wabamun. It will be a welcome addition to our fabulous visitor amenities and it meets many of the goals put forward in the Municipal Development Plan (2010).

said Charlene Smylie, the mayor of the village of Wabamun.

Along with the removal of a number of overhead power lines and addition of trees and greenery, the Common will improve public parking and pedestrian access into our busy Senior Centre. The most exciting part is the addition of the public square which can host street musicians, artists and local events such as our Christmas Light Up. We greatly appreciate the funding support of Trans Mountain, the Wabamun Seniors Society, and the Province of Alberta.

Trans Mountain is supporting communities in my riding. They have contracted for a laydown yard in Enoch Cree Nation as well. This will help Enoch build a new light and medium industrial area, which will attract other industries to their space. The new jobs on the line support the local economy in many of my communities. Workers need hotels to sleep in and food to eat while they're away from their families. The Trans Mountain expansion project was proposed in response to requests from oil companies to help them reach new markets by expanding the capacity of North America's only pipeline with access to the west coast.

On this side of the House we will continue to fight for our pipelines, hard-working Albertans, and communities being supported, like those in Stony Plain. We know that the safest way to transport our product is through pipelines, the best way to access new markets is through pipelines, and the best way for our grain producers to be supported is for us to move our oil through pipelines, because, Madam Speaker, our grain producers need to move their products on the rail lines, and right now the capacity is being used for transportation of oil. So to support our farmers, one of our other top industries here in Alberta, we need to support our oil moving through Trans Mountain, and we're calling on the federal government to follow our lead.

The legislation that we will be introducing in the coming days will allow us to restrict product being shipped. We stand on our record with respect to the 14 out of 14 court cases we have won in regard to Trans Mountain, we will take a public position on the pipeline if necessary, we will invest in Trans Mountain to give our industry and investors confidence that this project will be built, but it's time the federal government steps up and defends Alberta and the working people here in western Canada in the way they have for other industries, like the Ontario auto industry and the aerospace sector in Quebec. The federal approval must be worth more than the paper it's written on. These shippers have made significant 15- and 20-year commitments that add up to roughly 80 per cent of the capacity of the expanded Trans Mountain pipeline.

Madam Speaker, our plan is working. There is so much good news in the energy industry. We're diversifying our energy economy, and we're creating good jobs. For example, Crescent Point Energy just announced that it's buying a huge stake in Alberta's east Duvernay, 142,000 hectares of drilling rights. They chose to invest here in Alberta because the climate we have enabled as a government gives them confidence in their investment.

ConocoPhillips is selling land in Texas and buying up thousands of acres of land in the Montney shale play here in northern Alberta. Suncor recently filed an application for a massive new oil sands project, that could create hundreds of good jobs and billions of dollars of new investment here in Alberta. Chevron is increasing spending in the oil patch, investing up to a billion dollars on the Duvernay shale basin. Cenovus and CNRL increased production last year. CNRL is now considering adding a 40,000-barrel-a-day expansion at Horizon. Last fall we celebrated a $2 billion oil sands expansion project by JACOS, which means good jobs for Albertans. Things are looking up. Earnings are up, investment is up, and drilling is up here in Alberta.

Madam Speaker, I'd like to read from an article. I'll table this tomorrow. It's called We're in Crisis Mode Now: Energy Sector Fears Investor Exodus as Trans Mountain Pipeline Stalls.

Major Canadian oil companies fear an investor exodus as Kinder Morgan Inc. signals there are less risky pipeline projects it can invest in than the troubled $7.4-billion Trans Mountain project through British Columbia.

Kinder Morgan Inc. announced late Sunday that it would suspend all non-essential work on the pipeline until the federal government intervenes in the spat that has pit B.C. against Alberta and Saskatchewan. The company said it needs certainty the project will not face endless delays from B.C. in order to proceed and gave an end-of-May deadline.

The announcement immediately sent shockwaves through the domestic oilpatch.

"If we don't understand that we're in crisis mode now, we've got to get there pretty quickly," Canadian Energy Pipeline Association president and CEO Chris Bloomer said Monday of the pipeline fight.

Bloomer also repeated warnings from the Royal Bank of Canada last week that capital is fleeing Canada "in real time," and said reputational damage from this pipeline fight will only exacerbate the situation.

"The bottom line on the energy sector is that it relies on capital. These are huge projects that rely on being able to source, at a reasonable cost, capital. These companies need to have shareholders, they need to have lenders," Bloomer said.

Kinder Morgan Canada Ltd.'s shares fell 13 per cent on the Toronto Stock Exchange Monday to the news its parent company was pausing spending on the project and threatening to redeploy capital elsewhere. The S&P TSX Capped Energy Index fell 0.3 per cent on the day, taking its year-to-date decline to 5.4 per cent.

"We expect to continue investing but it has become clear that this particular investment may become untenable for a private party to undertake," Kinder Morgan Inc. president and CEO Steve Kean said on a conference call.

Kean said $1.1 billion had been spent on the $7.4 billion project to expand the delivery of crude oil from Alberta to the B.C. coast so far. The company had previously said it was spending $30 million per month, but will now scale that spending back.

"We're going into a very high spend. We don't want to kick the can down the road until we have another $2 billion in the project," Kean said.

Energy companies and industry groups warned the delays are hurting local companies.

"The project is critical to Canada and the future of its oil and gas industry, which contributes billions of dollars to the national economy each year and is one of the country's single largest job creators," Cenovus Energy Inc. president and CEO Alex Pourbaix said in a release.

"If the rule of law is not upheld and this project is allowed to fail, it will have a chilling effect on investment not just in British Columbia, but across the entire country," he said.

Oilsands producers like Cenovus signed up to ship oil through the expanded Trans Mountain pipeline and have struggled to attract investors because Canadian crude barrels trade at a discount to U.S. oil and because Canada's existing export pipelines are full.

The Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers forecasts Canadian oil production will grow from just under 4 million barrels per day to 5.1 million bpd by 2030, outstripping available pipeline capacity.

"We are already seeing . . ."

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed with debate, I've had a number of requests to seek unanimous consent on a matter. I don't believe we have a precedent in this House for this matter. However, we still have another hour of debate and everybody feels a need to be energized. The situation is that we did not call Orders of the Day before proceeding into the emergency debate; therefore, we technically cannot bring coffee or soft drinks into the House unless by unanimous consent we choose to waive that process. [interjection] I can see that everybody really needs some coffee.

Mr. Mason: This is a matter of urgent and pressing concern.

The Deputy Speaker: Given that it's a matter of urgent and pressing concern, I will seek unanimous consent to waive that process. I will ask one question: is anyone opposed? All right.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: You may enjoy your coffee and soft drinks. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

5:00

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Go ahead. Get your coffee, if you need it. You'll need it after you hear me. Popcorn, too.

The Liberal caucus has supported the need for this secondary pipeline to the west coast to enable Asian markets for our oil, but given the dimensions of this issue I feel compelled as maybe one of the senior people here to inject a note of caution in this debate, especially with the government's eager entry into financial partnership. When I hear words from the Premier, quote, that we will do whatever it takes to build this pipeline, end quote, I get worried. Pipelines are clearly the safest way to transmit fossil fuels. There will continue to be a need for fossil fuels for decades to come. The climate initiatives that this government has taken are indeed progress and allow some degree of acceptance across the planet as well as in Alberta for the continued development of the oil sands, but an important balance is needed to respect current and future generations with respect to jobs and the economy.

I also feel very strongly on the need for the federal government to step up and do its part here and not allow this to unravel into a serious division across this country that begins to fester on a number of different fronts quite apart from the oil and gas sector.

The minister and the Premier today have stated that this government will do whatever it takes to build this pipeline. End quote. This troubles me in a province where there is global uncertainty about the full costs of extracting bitumen. We already have close to $60 billion of debt, where projected royalties are less than $2 billion in the next year from bitumen, where there is indeed in this province a continuing growth of greenhouse gases despite a commitment to reduce greenhouse gases by 2 per cent each year. There are the increasing liabilities in the oil sands for cleanup costs, which this government says that it's negotiating with the companies to get a security deposit to ensure that Albertans will not be on the hook for the cleanup costs. So I'm calling for some caution in this enthusiastic proposal to jump on the pipeline bandwagon with what appears to be a blank cheque.

Anyone listening to the enthusiastic support on the other side would perhaps be forgiven for bringing up visions of the Gainers fiasco in the '80s, NovAtel, magnesium Canada in High River, the Lloydminster upgrader, tremendous costs to the public with no returns on the investment, all of which appeared to be good investments at the time, touting all the benefits, as this government continues to do, including, of course, the unspoken political benefits of getting this pipeline. The absolute dependency of this government on getting this pipeline through at the risk of losing the next election raises some questions about the ingenuity here. I must caution this government to become a little less zealous about using whatever public money is needed. Albertans must be consulted before taking on yet more debt.

Albertans deserve a full cost accounting of what we are currently doing in the oil sands. That was the nature of my amendment in the last debate, that we had a week or so ago. Pipelines, yes, but not at any cost. Surely, we have to think about long-term implications for not only the industry but our children and future generations.

Madam Speaker, I needed to raise those questions. I expect that if this government is going to make deals with pipeline companies, they will be completely transparent with us in the Legislature and with Albertans in general, that we will understand the full risks, the nature of the relationship, the full costs, and that they will listen to Albertans about what risks they're prepared to take, considering all the uncertainties around this very important decision and the important national interests at stake here. Albertans deserve to be right at the table before any ratification of investments in pipelines, especially in relation to bitumen.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm really thankful for the opportunity to stand and speak on behalf of this caucus and why the Trans Mountain pipeline means so much. You know, I think that the members across the floor often like to imply that the members on this side of the House don't understand the industry, aren't a part of it, aren't impacted by it, and really aren't actually genuinely supportive of the Trans Mountain pipeline, so I wanted a chance to stand and make it clear that that is absolutely not so. Obviously, other members of this caucus have spoken passionately about their own connection to the industry, but I wanted to have the opportunity to do the same.

You know, first of all, just to talk in general about something that I think most of us all know but is worth reiterating, is how important the Trans Mountain pipeline is to this entire country. Madam Speaker, most people in B.C. understand that. It's really unfortunate that the leadership in B.C., Premier Horgan and his team, are making this choice given the fact that the people of B.C. understand how important this is to workers, how important it is for jobs for Canadians, how important it is for the Canadian economy.

But, Madam Speaker, this isn't just about all of Canada or even all of Alberta, to me. This means so much to the riding of Lesser Slave Lake. I mean, coming from the community that I do, the well-being of the communities that I serve is very deeply rooted in the well-being of the oil and gas industry. You know, the importance of the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion to the people that I represent can't be overstated. In fact, for years my own well-being and the well-being of my family financially was dependent upon the work of the service truck that was sitting in the driveway. I certainly have long had deep connections to that, as do many of my friends and my family and the people that I serve within the community.

Obviously, the number of jobs that the oil and gas industry brings to this province is tremendous. The number of dollars that it brings to our economy is tremendous. Getting this pipeline built is essential to ensuring the health and well-being of that industry. The billions of dollars that it will bring into the economy right across this country: those dollars will end up in the pockets of people like the people that I serve. It will make sure that they have jobs and make sure that they can continue to take care of their families. So, Madam Speaker, I'm tremendously passionate and invested in making sure that this pipeline expansion is successful because, truthfully, the oil and gas industry is the heart of the economy across this country.

Madam Speaker, it's not just for the jobs and the economy but also because it is the safest way to move oil, and I'm not the only one who has spoken about that in the House today. You know, I have a railway running not very far from my house, and I certainly would much prefer that grain run in those cars, grain that needs to leave farmers' fields and get to market, instead of oil having to be in those cars, not only because it's the best thing for the economy but also because I live in fear of what transporting oil in rail cars means and the safety issues that that poses to people in our communities here across this province and within the province of B.C. Those are the messages that we've been sharing with the country, with the people in B.C. since having been elected and as we've talked about the importance of the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion.

I'm so proud of the leadership that Premier Notley has shown in this, and our own Minister of Energy as well, in terms of speaking up on behalf of the industry. Certainly, I think we all in this House know that Canadians in general have never understood how important the industry is to this entire country. I think there has been an opportunity to speak to that for a very, very long time. We've been busy doing it for the last three years, but there is a history far longer than three years as to why Canadians have not understood the importance of the oil industry to this country. Again, I've been very proud to watch as our Premier has spoken on behalf of the industry across this continent.

What I've not been proud to see is watching over and over again the opposition gleefully cheering for the demise of this pipeline expansion because it mattered enough to them politically that they were just hoping to see this side fail. Madam Speaker, instead, we will continue – continue – to invest in Albertans and continue to invest in doing everything we need to do to move this forward one victory at a time, moving steadily forward. You know, any kind of war is won one battle at a time, so we keep on, as opportunities come forward, continuing to fight for the pipeline on behalf of Albertans. We will continue to win. Albertans are counting on us to make sure that happens, and we will not let them down.

As has been made very clear, we will not hesitate to use every tool we have at our disposal to do so, obviously, including ensuring that we move forward with serious economic consequences for B.C. You know, Madam Speaker, as I said, the average person in B.C. wants this pipeline to happen as much as we do, but we need to make sure that the leadership of B.C. understands the full implications of the decisions that they are making right now and the choices that they are making.

We will do whatever it takes, including investing in the pipeline. Madam Speaker, the opposition would like to think that investing in that pipeline would be a bad thing, but I certainly see that if we had that opportunity, that would be an investment in Albertans, an investment in jobs, an investment in the economic future of this province and making sure that there was an investor in that who was deeply committed to the success going forward.

Madam Speaker, I've spoken about this government and the choices that we are making and will continue to make as we go forward. I think we are all very clear – but I will say it again – that it is time for the federal government to step up to the plate on this one. The working people of Alberta need them to defend Alberta, to defend the energy industry, to finally recognize and acknowledge and step up and tell all Canadians, the people of B.C. and right across this country, how essential the energy industry is to this whole country and how important the Trans Mountain expansion is to ensuring the viability of that industry.

You know, as our Premier said, the federal approval of this project must be worth more than the paper it's written on, Madam Speaker, so we are all calling on the federal government to prove just that, that it was not just a check mark on a piece of paper, that it was an approval of our federal government to support a project that is essential to the well-being of this country. It is time for the federal government to stand up for this country and for the economy of this country. This is not just about Alberta; it's about ensuring the well-being of all of us.

Regardless of the federal government and the steps that they take, we will continue to do whatever it takes. I think it has been stated very clearly, but I will say it again. This pipeline will be built.

The Deputy Speaker: I will recognize the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker, although I do look forward to hearing the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner very soon.

I want to thank all members on all sides of the House for their comments so far. I think that a lot of this debate has been mostly productive, but it's so easy to fall into the usual partisanship in this place. We have very different opinions. You know, I think the government is generally wrong about even the time of day, and they would tend to think the same about what I have to say, but there are a few things we have in common, and we should do our very best to focus on them. Not that I will entirely, but I will do my best.

Last week I had a sort of meet-and-greet for constituents in Strathmore at the Roadhouse, and I had some constituents I actually hadn't met before come up to me. The husband of this very young family works in the oil patch. He's the kind of guy that you could just tell is proud to be a part of the patch, and he kind of represents that ticket to a life that a lot of us here don't truly appreciate. The oil patch isn't just suits in downtown Calgary. It's young men and women, sometimes, who didn't come from a fortunate background, and this was their ticket up. All too often you see it blown on three snowmobiles and a Ford F-350, but it's their ticket forward. It's their ticket up the economic and social ladders. You could tell that he was just proud. He just has got no time for those who think that it's somehow wrong to be in the oil patch.

His wife – they've got a very young child, about four or five years old at most – stays at home, and she has a small business that she runs called Low Class Oil Trash. They make a lot of really interesting swag for people to wear from the oil patch and oil patch families. They made me a nice custom sweater. It was a really nice gift.

That's on the Strathmore side. In Brooks we've got OPHOP, Oil People Helping Oil People, a grassroots group of really good people who've tried to come together and find support for people, oil patch families, during the downturn. They're not as busy right now as they were before, which is great news, but they are oil country proud.

A lot of people look down on it. You know, some people, left-coast types, look down on it as evil. Some people even in Alberta might look down on it as beneath them. But this is the ticket up the economic and social ladders for so many people.

Now, people change their minds on issues, and I mean this genuinely. People on both sides of this House have changed their minds on issues since we were elected. I have changed my mind on some issues, I know that many members in the UCP have changed their minds on some issues, and I know that members of the government have changed their minds on some issues. That's a good thing. It demonstrates maturity. It demonstrates evolution. We stick to our principles. I still think you guys are nuts, but you've stuck generally to your principles on the values of the NDP.

But some of the NDP's positions on the oil sands and pipelines have changed, and that's a good thing. I actually commend you for that. I'm not going to rib you about it, and if some of you are looking at me – and I actually applaud you. This is a good thing. Now, I've changed my mind. Social issues have moved into the top hundred issues for me now. We evolve, and this is a good sign. Of course, we're going to rib each other if you've changed your mind. It's a fine line between a flip-flop and an honest change of perspective, but I'm going to give members of the government side of the House here the benefit of the doubt and say that it was an honest change in perspective.

Now, the anti oil sands activists, though, people who have changed their minds, though, have wielded a double-edged sword. For a long time many people who were the against the sands and development and pipelines in Alberta said that Alberta had a bad environmental record, and they handed our opponents a tool. They handed them a sword to hurt us with. Even though opinions have changed, we're now getting the other side of the blade. It's a double-edged sword, and it's hurting us now, but we are all ostensibly on the same side.

I have to say that the minister who spoke just before me – I have to take issue with some things. You know, she said that the opposition wants the government to fail. I have to say that I believe, for the most part, in people's good intentions here. I don't believe that the NDP imposed the carbon tax as some evil socialist tax plan although there's a part of me that might think so. But, for the most part, I believe that it was a genuine effort on their part to win social licence from pipeline opponents. I believe it's failed. I believe it was always going to fail, but from their perspective I think it was a genuine attempt to win those folks over.

Just as I'm willing to accept your best of intentions on what was meant by that carbon tax to earn social licence, I'd ask that you would also accept that probably every member of the opposition, in all parties and independents, wants these pipelines to get built. We do not want the government to fail even if we think that your plan is not well thought out. We should accept the good intentions, and we should accept the best of intentions stated by people here. I think we would go some way in serving all of our constituents better if we did.

Now back to the part where I actually have to really criticize you, but I'll try to do it in the best, most constructive way possible. The carbon tax and the vast so-called climate leadership plan, with a host of regulations and new laws, were intended to win social licence. The Premier believed that only Nixon could go to China, and she was Nixon. Because she came largely from that movement – she had worked as a senior staffer for the B.C. NDP; she knew these people well; they were friends and colleagues, fellow-travellers in the NDP nationally – she believed that she could be Nixon going to China and win them over if she did these things. I genuinely believe that she thought she could. Maybe she still can. I really think the chances of that are becoming slim to none. She, I think, is in genuine shock and disappointment right now – and I feel for her – that her efforts to win social licence from fellow-travellers, at least from the past, have not worked.

What have the carbon tax and the whole array of new regulations and laws against our oil industry done? Global temperatures have changed by zero as a result. Radicals converted from antipipeline to pro pipeline: zero. Pipelines built to date: zero. Respect earned from opponents in other parts of the country: zero.

When Alberta entered Confederation, we didn't do so as the four original provinces. We were not one of the established colonies in British North America. We did not come as Upper or Lower Canada, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick. We did not have a chance to negotiate for the best possible deal. We came first from Rupert's Land into the North-Western Territory, and then we were constituted as a province. There was no negotiation with the federal government. We were simply granted status. We moved from an official colony to, effectively, a colony with a few Members of Parliament.

But in many ways I believe we are still treated as a colony. For one, we don't have the numbers to be the most electorally important part of the country, but we are still the fourth-largest province and growing. We have 4 million people in this province but a Constitution which was designed to advantage the provinces that negotiated their way in: the four original provinces, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, and British Columbia. It advantages those provinces that negotiated their way into Confederation. With 4 million people, we have just six Senators. Atlantic Canada, with half our population, has 30. Now, that is an institutional problem with Alberta's place in Confederation. Any federation in the world, any real federation . . . [Mr. Fildebrandt's speaking time expired]

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my privilege to rise in the House today to give the viewpoint of Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater on this very, very important debate. In fact, I think this is debate that you're going to be finding in Canadian federalism textbooks for many, many years hence. [interjection] That's correct. So I'm speaking mindful of that, that one day someone might be writing their dissertation based on part of what we're saying today. We're speaking for the record.

But, of course, we're also speaking for something that's of critical importance to, I think, all of our constituents. This is something that definitely I've heard loud and clear from the residents of the riding that I have the privilege to represent. What's kind of unique about this is the level of consensus that I'm seeing, you know, from different people: from farmers, from ironworkers, from shopkeepers, and definitely from drivers, and the list goes on. How many times I've had people come up to me and let me know just how much they appreciate our Premier standing up for Alberta and give their best wishes to make sure that this happens: I mean, I could not but support this with such a level of concern and need for it.

Why do people see this as so important for Alberta? Well, I mean, I think that we're all aware that this has been a long-standing issue for our province, how to be able to develop and deal with the discount that we're forced to take on bitumen. It's ebbed and flowed, depending on global markets, but it's a problem that really hasn't resolved itself yet, and it's a problem that's only going to be getting worse with more and more American tight oil coming on stream. You know, the old model of shipping our bitumen south is just not going to work for us anymore unless we're willing to take this sort of deep discount.

What does that deep discount mean? Well, of course, it moves the profitability factor of new fields, which means we're going to be slowing down a lot of investment. There'll be a lot of stranded resources up there. Of course, what does it mean for us as a province in terms of, you know, money to support our health care, money to support our schools, money to keep our roads intact? And on it goes. I guess I don't want to belabour that point. I think we're all in agreement with that.

What do we have to do here? Well, somehow or other we need to get the B.C. government to wake up. They need to wake up, you know, to understand that actions have consequences and that one of those consequences is that if you're going to work to saw off the branch of the tree that you yourself happen to be sitting on, those consequences might end up being fairly drastic.

I think that sometimes some of the politicians in B.C. are suffering from a point of view kind of similar to what George Orwell talks about in The Road to Wigan Pier, which is a story that he wrote back in the interwar years, how a lot of British politicians at that point were very much hesitant to get involved in Europe.

There was a very, very strong pacifist movement. George Orwell made this quip. He called it one-eyed pacifism. One-eyed pacifism is a type of pacifism that a country can have when they have a really strong navy and they think that they're not going to be facing any negative consequences because of their action.

I think that there are too many in B.C. that have sort of a one-eyed environmentalism in the sense that they haven't really thought through the consequences their actions have. They haven't really looked closely at this pipeline. They believed the first story that they got about it – unfortunately, some of these stories went out quite a long time ago; as one of the other members alluded to, this isn't a new issue – and that was the story that it's dirty oil, that Alberta is an irresponsible producer, that we can't be trusted, and that as a consequence, you know, if they allow this expansion to go through, we're going to be poisoning their coastlines and probably laughing at it, too, right? I mean, that's just sort of the idea sort of in the background.

Of course, that's fundamentally untrue. It's never been true and even less so considering the robust climate action plan we put in place and all the other great work we've done to make Alberta even more of a global leader in safe oil. Sometimes people need to get a little reminder just to sort of help focus their thinking.

I think that it is time, you know, assuming that the federal government – and I'll talk about that a bit later – doesn't step in and step in in a big way, that we kind of give these people an idea that: yeah, actually, you are still pretty heavily implicated in the resource economy, and you are just as dependent on this resource as the rest of us. I think that if we take some actions that way, where they can see what the actual economic costs of decisions are, they might look at those decisions a little more carefully. I think that when they do so, they will see that, as many of the members have brought up already this afternoon, this is a very responsible project. In fact, there would be fewer risks involved for pollution than with the status quo. I mean, railcars as a way to transport bitumen are definitely not the preferred way to do it.

I've been recently reminded about that myself in that just this past fall we had a derailment in Sturgeon county of some of these tanker cars. You know, our rail lines go pretty close to neighbourhoods. I mean, there's a risk that's involved with that. It's a type of risk that we wouldn't be facing had we had more pipeline capacity, so that is definitely something that needs to be taken into account. I think that anything we can do to help people out there revisit their preconceptions and their misconceptions is all to the good.

Now, do I think that this is the preferred way to go about things? Of course not, and I think it was totally legitimate that, you know, we worked so hard to dispel a lot of those misconceptions previously. Hard we did work, and I think we did win a lot of goodwill in B.C. I think that in big parts of the community we have changed the conversation. There are responsible people across the country that have rethought our industry and are working in our favour.

I just want to go back for a moment to some of the comments that the Member for Calgary-Elbow made, where he criticized us for basically sitting on our hands and doing nothing in order to advance this project. I was a bit nonplussed by his statements because, of course, it's been very clear, you know, from the approval that if we hadn't actually put in a robust climate change plan, we wouldn't have the approval in the first place. We wouldn't even be having this discussion right now because the project would have long been dead in the water. So it's the actions we've taken to date that have brought us to where we are today, which is where we still have, I think, an excellent chance of getting this through. I'd say better than that because I think we're going to make sure that this happens. This wouldn't have happened without a lot of the work that we've done. I think that should be important to put on the record.

Just speaking to the relevance of the federal government, I think that for the federal government it's about more than a pipeline. It's about more than the share of the resource revenue that they're going to be getting by this going through. I think it speaks to their fundamental relevance as a national government. I mean, the point of federalism is that we do have a central power that is able to actually resolve these types of situations for us. Otherwise, I mean, Confederation becomes pretty problematic, especially for provinces like Alberta, where we're landlocked and we desperately need to have access to coasts in order to succeed.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Madam Speaker, thank you for recognizing me and allowing me an opportunity to be able to stand in support of this motion by our hon. leader. The question that I have is: how did we get here? How did we get to this point where it's a five-alarm fire and now the government is scrambling? This is truly what's happening.

You know, as I looked at the last election, the Premier sells hope and change like nobody I've ever seen. You've got to take your hat off to her for winning that election. The problem is being able to actually deliver on that hope and change. The value of this whole concept of hope and change is: can you deliver? Can you actually deliver the goods and win the next election? Unfortunately, what we've seen, Madam Speaker, is anything but that. We've seen polling numbers completely dive for the NDP, and it's an indication that they are not delivering on the promises that they made to Albertans.

Now, in regard to this issue of Kinder Morgan I've been listening to a lot of talk, and I've heard from the government side the statement, "We will do whatever it takes to get this pipeline built" so many times that I've committed it to memory. I'm sure that the minister would agree that a laser-focused message from her and her members is critical, yet Albertans, pipeline companies, and investors see anything but a crystal clear message. The message, at best, is ambivalent.

I'm going to just give them a little hint – and I've given this hint before – that if they want to create a crystal clear message to investors, to Albertans, to people in B.C., to even the Prime Minister of Canada, they need to change their constitution. I'm once again going to submit this as a very important point for the NDP to be able to help everybody believe, because really what's at stake here is their credibility. Are they for a pipeline? Are they not for a pipeline? Are they for oil and gas? Aren't they for oil and gas?

Look, I've brought this up at least three times, so I haven't actually given them fair warning about this issue. Let me just read this to you again. This is found, again, in the Alberta NDP's constitution, appendix C. "Meeting human material needs must not use more of Earth's resources than can be renewed within each generation." The problem with that statement, Madam Speaker, is that it sends a message to anybody in the oil and gas sector that we are not open for business in Alberta, that we will not condone any kind of action that will burn fossil fuels. That's exactly what that says.

Now, if they were truly, as I'm going to quote once again the minister and many of the other people on that side have said: we will do whatever it takes to get this pipeline built – all they have to do, one very simple thing, is just to change that part of their constitution to clear up some of the misconceptions that, obviously, that message is sending. But perhaps that's the reason why former people that they have appointed to government boards are now chaining themselves to pipeline projects in B.C. or being arrested in B.C.

This is, again, another very difficult thing for the NDP. This is the problem they're facing. They've tied the success of the climate action plan, its ability to buy social licence, to the success of building the Kinder Morgan pipeline. Now, because they've done that, over the past few weeks, as the reality of the situation has started to sink in, you can almost see a desperation on their faces because they have completely tied their success, of being able to sell to Albertans, because we're in an election year, Madam Speaker, that they are going to be able to provide jobs, get this economy roaring again, to the success of the Kinder Morgan pipeline being built. If it doesn't get built now, their whole credibility goes out the door, and now we're starting to see a complete panic on the other side that it's not going to happen.

Then we keep on hearing: we will get it built. Look, you can say those words – and I absolutely do hold that it could be built – but the words are not going to get it built. What's going to get it built is credibility by this government. That's what's going to get it built. But they've lost their credibility, and now they're trying to make up for that loss of credibility. We have investment – according to the Conference Board of Canada $36 billion fled in the first two years of this government being in. Why did they do that? Why did they leave? They left because they don't trust that the NDP aren't going to change the rules. Unfortunately, the federal Liberal government is following suit, and this is why Energy East was cancelled.

When businesses come in to take a look at whether they want to invest in a jurisdiction, they go in and they say: these are the playing rules; as we play the game, we hope that the umpire is going to keep the rules the same. Unfortunately, the umpire has changed the rules, and we lost Energy East. We're in the same situation now. Because the NDP did not campaign on a carbon tax and because of the uncertainty that that has cast into the market, the markets have said: we're not investing here. This isn't the first time that this has happened in a province. We've seen the same thing happen in B.C. We've seen the same thing happen in Ontario. We've seen the same thing happen in every province that has given a chance to the NDP, Manitoba as well.

Now, it's good to see the NDP government finally starting to get animated about this, but it's an indictment against them because a true leader wouldn't have waited until it's a five-alarm fire before taking action. Once it's a five-alarm fire, the risk of burning down the house is very, very high, Madam Speaker. A true leader would have acted on the issue when it was a one-alarm fire, and they would have acted decisively. Unfortunately, rather than acting decisively, this government continued to belittle our leader about the ideas which they are now embracing, belittled the leader when it was actually time to get it done. Because of that, this thing has completely blown out of proportion to a five-alarm fire, and we're now in a situation where we're now talking about trade wars. We're now talking about corporate handouts.

This pipeline was going to be fully funded by the private sector. That's a great situation to be in. It's a complete hundred per cent benefit to Albertans and to the government, yet they've messed that up. Again, this is an issue of credibility, and because the credibility issue is in front of the electorate in the next election, the NDP is starting to panic.

The other point that needs to be pointed out: you know, I don't think the NDP actually recognizes the gravity of the situation. On the one hand, the NDP is going into an election, and they need to get this built; on the other hand, the federal Liberals are also going into an election next year, and they don't feel like this is a vote-rich environment for them. I think that Justin Trudeau is sitting around 11 per cent in this province whereas they have a vote-rich opportunity in B.C. No wonder Justin Trudeau is sitting on his hands and not doing anything. This is a political issue for him.

But my recommendation to the government is that you need to take that off of the table. You need to make sure that the federal government realizes that the pain of losing this pipeline, the pain of actually hurting Alberta's economy, is going to be way worse than the pain of losing some of the fringe voters in B.C. This is the messaging that the NDP government needs to start saying and speaking ad nauseam so that the federal Liberals recognize that this is going to be a big problem for them. This isn't just a problem for B.C.; this is a problem for the federal Liberals as well.

Madam Speaker, I hope that this government is serious, that they have had a change of heart, and that they're willing to actually make solid, concrete action to get this done.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know what? I'm this bizarre person. I'm going to tell you why I'm this bizarre person. I'm this bizarre person because I'm one of the few people in this House who can say that he was born and raised Calgarian. I'm one of the few people, maybe one of the only people, who can say: I'm a second-generation Calgarian [interjections] Fourth, I guess. Anyways, I digress.

The thing that's unique about this is that not a lot of people have seen the evolution that has come of Calgary over that time. When my father was born, there were a little over 100,000 people living in that city. When I was born, there were a little over 600,000. We are now at 1.3 million and counting, and that success is driven by the success of our resource development and our petroleum producers.

Now, with that being said, I want to provide some clarity for the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. I can tell you, you know, that my first campaign was in 1986. My mom was pregnant, with me in her womb, and I can tell you one thing, that she was a strong supporter of resource development, as are all the members of the NDP caucus here in this House. I can tell you another thing, that historically our party has been a strong supporter of resource development. My great-grandmother, who served on the Swift Current EDA within the Saskatchewan CCF, was a strong supporter of pipelines and resource development, as was my great-uncle, who served as an MLA with that party and was a strong supporter of sustainable resource development and pipelines in that province. I reiterate this point, that it is in our nature to do so, and to be frank, I would not sit here as a member of the Alberta NDP in this House if they did not support pipeline development.

Now, going back to 2015, I heard many things at the doorsteps. While I won't dig deep into them, whether they were schools, the cancer centre, the ring road, et cetera, one of the key things that I heard at the doorstep from many of my constituents was about supporting resource development, about supporting pipeline development because it is the bread and butter on which we live in Calgary. I heard many key points, but one of the things that I heard was the need to get Trans Mountain built, the means to get that pipeline done and get the deal started. And one of the key things I heard from a person who lived in Midnapore. This resident in Midnapore was very involved with an oil and gas company, and he said: the federal government has messed up the Northern Gateway so much that I know that project is not going to move forward; that is why we need to build Trans Mountain.

Now, we have that focus. We have that focus to get that approval. To be frank, while I do hear some heckling coming from the opposition bench, and I will digress, the fact of the matter is – and there are a couple of things that I will speak of here. Obviously, it's the focus of my constituents, but the other thing is talking about the national interest. We see tremendous generosity that comes from our petroleum producers and our oil and gas companies, our engineering companies. I have the fortune of having the Fluor office in my constituency, and their success is one of those in which we see them give back to the community in tremendous ways. It was remarkable to see them at the Hull homes area to build a greenhouse for the youth that are currently residing in that area.

It's that sense of community. It's that sense that we see whenever the cards are down and we're dealing with each struggle, and one of the first to jump up is the oil and gas sector. I had tears rolling down my eyes when I heard the story of Suncor and how, at the end of the day, they were one of the first to jump up there and give their runway space, house people when we had the Fort McMurray fires. They're the ones who give back first, and it is important and it is in the national interest for us to take care of them because they were taking care of people from all walks of life, from all over this country. To be frank, we're very interdependent.

You know, I reflect on the stories that happened when we had the automotive industry crash. One of the things I heard that was remarkable was that Ford didn't take a bailout, but Ford didn't criticize those who did take the bailout. The reason why they didn't was because they realized how interdependent the automotive sector was because there were specific companies that made parts for cars for all three brands. They recognized that if one car company went out of business, that company that makes that part might suffer as well and they might not get the best demand.

The thing that we need to recognize as a country is that we have amazing technology based here in Alberta. We have amazing technology from across the country. We have amazing companies that do work in multiple sectors. I know many an individual who works for a tailings pond company. They do work in northern Alberta for the oil sands. But do you know where they also do work? They do it in British Columbia for mining. I can only envision that if they had struggles in the oil sand projects, if their work was starting to dry up, would they still have the capacity to do that tremendous work in northern B.C. in the most safe and sustainable way possible and do it with the most affordable mechanism while continuing to employ Canadians?

Now, I've been very fortunate in my life to have a chance to really travel across this country. When I was a student, I had the chance to go to Ottawa. One of the first things that was said to me when I was in Ontario studying in postsecondary was: "Why are you here? Alberta is the heart of Canada's economy. Everyone leaves Ontario to go and work in Alberta." Sadly, the one thing I said was, "Well, tuition is cheaper out here" – at the time it was; it's not anymore – "but I will be back." And I was back.

I've had the chance to be in many provinces. I've been to Manitoba and chatted with an individual who works for a real estate firm. That firm has property here in Calgary. They are dependent on the success of our oil and gas sector and on this pipeline being approved to be successful.

I met a person from Quebec, and between two beers we had a remarkable conversation. This individual used to be a sovereignist. He used to support separatism until one day he came to Alberta and saw how remarkable this province was and how open and welcoming it was and how much he was able to succeed in his travels. He had only been back in Quebec for a couple of weeks, just to visit family, but he is one of those individuals that comes and supports our oil and gas sector.

The reality is – and the Premier has reiterated it – that every school, every hospital, every road can be attributed to the support that we give to our oil and gas sector because when it's successful, Canada is successful.

Now, I've had an opportunity to go to B.C. as well and talk to many individuals there. The fact of the matter is that the overall consensus that I'm getting from people in B.C. – I was in Victoria at the time – is that they support this pipeline development and that there are fringes out there that are working on misinformation and are really working hard to try to derail this. We right now are working against a strong voice, and we will continue to work hard to get this pipeline built. We have seen that with our court cases, with the 14 out of 14 that we have won.

The fact of the matter is that we need the federal government to step up. The fact of the matter is that we need them to utilize the tools that they have and their ability to get this pipeline built. The one thing that I want to continue to see, the one thing I want my kids to see, my constituents' kids to see is the ongoing growth and success of our resource development. It is what has made Calgary such an amazing city to live in. It is what has given me some amazing benefits. It is what made me successful when I was a business operator. It is what has made multiple members of my family successful as they have worked within that sector. You're hard-pressed to find anyone in this province, anyone, to be frank, in this country who doesn't owe the sustainable resource development that we have in this province for their success as well.

I feel very fortunate to be part of a government that has a strong focus, that has historically had a strong focus and history of supporting resource and pipeline development. As long as I sit in this chair and I stand in this place, I will continue to stand up for pipeline development, to stand up for diversification of our economy, and to stand up for my constituents and Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this emergency debate. I keep a clock in my phone. It's a countdown clock, and right now it says 413 days, 2 hours, 5 minutes, and 14 seconds, and that's until the next election. That's important. That's the next time Albertans get to choose a different government if they want to. I don't know who they're going to elect then, but here's what I do know. We don't have that long to wait to get a good effort to get this pipeline built. That I'm really sure of, which is why it's important to have this debate today to push the current government to actually do their job, take some action, push their very close personal friend Justin Trudeau to do his part to get something done.

You know what? I think maybe they're starting to wake up to that reality. We actually heard just a few minutes ago the Environment minister say, "I... am beginning to lose my patience." Well, Madam Speaker, the minister should have lost her patience months ago. Months ago. She should have finished losing her patience months ago, not just start to lose it today. That indeed is indicative of the lack of action and the lack of priority and the lack of urgency that this government is putting into getting this pipeline built.

You know, it's also a good thing that we've got the new leader of our party because the government is actually starting to wake up because of that. As he arrived, there's been a pattern. You know what? Our new leader makes a suggestion. The government dodges and denies that it's a good idea. Then they move into ridiculing his idea, after which point they move into adopting the exact idea that he has proposed, trying to take credit for it and then sitting on their hands and hoping nobody notices. Then he comes up with another idea, and they start dodging and denying, moving into ridiculing, and then they go on to adopting the exact idea and trying to take credit for it, after which point they sit on their hands again, and nothing happens.

Now, they say that they are wanting to push the federal government, but they will not criticize Justin Trudeau. They won't. I wish they would stand up for Albertans instead. They will not criticize the one person that could actually make this go away by actually exerting the authority that the Prime Minister and the federal government have. And the Prime Minister has a majority. Our folks across the aisle will not say a word to offend that Prime Minister, although right now that would be doing their job. That would be the most important thing that they could do to get that person's attention that could actually get this pipeline built, yet our friends in the NDP government refuse to offend their good friend Justin Trudeau in favour of letting Albertans' most important economic issue, perhaps in the history of Alberta's existence, languish instead of offending their close personal friend. That is a big problem.

You know what? They have after the fact taken some of our leader's advice. They put the wine ban in place. Of course, they cancelled it at the very first opportunity. You know what? They've won some court hearings. I'll give them credit for that, 14 for 14. You heard them say it all day long today. But they will not realize they're losing. If you score 14 goals and the other team scores 15 or more, you're losing. They haven't got it through their heads. They're taking victory laps.

The other thing that finally, I think, helped them wake up is the fact that Kinder Morgan pretty much put this thing on life support on the weekend. Now they're waving their arms up. They're going to have an emergency cabinet meeting tomorrow. You know what? They should have had emergency cabinet meetings every week on this thing for months now. They haven't actually paid attention to what's going on.

You know what? Now they're actually talking about cutting off energy to B.C., something that our leader suggested a long time ago. Again, they went through the process: they dodged, they denied, they ridiculed, and now they're thinking about adopting it and taking credit for it.

Well, you know what, Madam Speaker? If they want to get re-elected in 413 days, 2 hours, 1 minute and 13 seconds, they should actually start adopting all of our leader's ideas because that will make them a lot harder to beat in the next election. You know, they might even have a chance if they would take more of our leader's ideas because those seem to be the only good ones that they've had so far, although they've done their very best to deny those ideas. When they finally come around to accepting them, Albertans then say: wow; they're doing a good job. And do you know what they force us to do? We say: wow; they got that one right.

My advice for the government in the 30 seconds or so I've got left is: "You know what? If you actually listened to more advice from our leader, stop denying it, do it in the first place, maybe Albertans would start to take this government seriously. Maybe we'll get a pipeline built before we've got to wait another 413 days for a new government, which is too long for Albertans. You shouldn't make them wait that long."

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2) the House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 1:30.

Legislative policy committees will convene this evening and tomorrow morning for consideration of main estimates. This evening Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates for Energy in the Rocky Mountain Room, and Alberta's Economic Future will consider the estimates for Culture and Tourism in the Parkland Room.

Tomorrow morning Alberta's Economic Future will consider the estimates for Labour in the Parkland Room, and Resource Stewardship will again consider the estimates for Energy in the Rocky Mountain Room.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, April 10, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us be grateful for that which unites us. Let us be understanding of that which sets us apart. Let us always be mindful that we are here to address and serve the needs of others first.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

Ms Jabbour: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce through you to the Assembly some special guests of yours that are seated in the Speaker's gallery who will be at a special screening of Indian Horse tonight at the Pehonan Theatre in the Edmonton Federal Building. The film Indian Horse is based on the book by the same name by Canadian author Richard Wagamese about the residential school experience in this country.

First, I'd like to introduce Edna Manitowabi, who plays a grandmother and elder in the film but who is also professor emeritus at Trent University, specializing in courses pertaining to indigenous culture and knowledge. As well, we have an Alberta actor from Frog Lake, Tristen Marty-Pahtaykan, who in addition to his role in Indian Horse has continued to develop his career on the national-international stage. Accompanying Tristen are his friends and family, Lyle Pahtaykan, Donald Cross, and Sharon Cross. I'd also like to introduce Carrie Wolfe, whose work with the Speaker's office made this screening tonight possible. I'd like to invite all of you to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome, and thank you for coming.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a former constituent of mine, Mr. John Cowan. John lived in Alberta for 23 years and is currently working in the technology industry in Winnipeg. John is the oldest brother of one of our pages, Jordan Cowan, and is here today to see her in action. I would ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly guests here today from the Canadian Obesity Network: Dr. Arya M. Sharma, scientific director; Dr. Ximena Ramos Salas, managing director; Marty Enokson, chair of the public engagement committee; and Alex Schwarzer, also on the public engagement committee. The Canadian Obesity Network is Canada's leading obesity organization and is made up of health care professionals, researchers, policy-makers, and people with an interest in obesity. I want to thank them for all of their work and ask them to now please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the House several members of the Health Sciences Association of Alberta. They work as individuals in a pivotal mental and physical health well-being role. It's my pleasure to introduce addiction counsellors Katie Borek and Sheri MacMillan – maybe they can stand while I introduce them so people can recognize them – child life specialist Melanie DeCillia, mental health therapist Scott MacDougall, residence counsellor Jackson Boikai, and mental health therapist Renata Logan. Please welcome them to the Legislature.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Mr. Kris Barker. Kris is a resident of Edmonton-Gold Bar and a passionate Conservative. Mr. Barker has served our community and our country as a decorated soldier, having served for 12 years in our military, including three overseas tours in Bosnia and Afghanistan, where at one point he was injured on our behalf. I'm glad he's on our side and glad he could join us today. I would ask Corporal Barker, retired, to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Children's Services and Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you some dedicated lab assistants and lab technologists, all of whom are members of the Health Sciences Association of Alberta. Laboratory services impact over 70 per cent of health care decisions. These health care professionals work around the clock to provide accurate and timely results vital to the medical care of Albertans. I'd ask Elvira, Neena, Rutchel, Ayed, Yvonne, Rosemary, Heather, and Shannon to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions this afternoon. It is my pleasure to introduce to you some more members from the Health Sciences Association of Alberta. HSAA represents roughly 25,000 caring health care professionals from across the province, working hard every day to keep all Albertans safe and healthy. We value your contribution and thank you for your service. I'd now ask Leanne, Nancy, Shannon, Neil, Donna, Nicole, Laurel, Sarah, Susan, and another Nicole to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Payne: For my second introduction I'd also like to introduce some of Alberta's dental hygienists during Oral Health Month. They educate and empower Albertans of all ages to take good care of their mouths, teeth, and gums to help benefit their overall physical and mental well-being. Thank you to all the dental hygienists who help us to keep our teeth and gums healthy and clean so we can enjoy a better smile and improved quality of life. I'd now invite Margo, Alysha, Jacqueline, Marthe, Kelly, and Paulette from the College of Registered Dental Hygienists of Alberta to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Ken Goosen of GlobalFest. GlobalFest is Calgary's second-largest festival, after Stampede, and brings thousands of people to my riding of Calgary-East every year for incredible fireworks displays and multicultural performances. GlobalFest also works throughout the year providing human rights education and arts programming in Calgary and around Alberta. If Mr. Goosen could rise and please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I have three introductions. The first is a group who are here from the Health Sciences Association of Alberta. We are committed to assisting EMS with resource issues through a greater emphasis on paramedic integration, community-based care, and reduced wait times for EMS crews in emergency rooms. These folks are certainly partners in making that work happen, so thank you for your advocacy and partnership in making life better for Albertans. I'd invite Nathaniel, Karli, Deanna, Brian, Michael, Jason, D.J., Marlys, and Shawn to rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, my second of the three introductions today is Violet Kully and her family, who are seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask that Violet rise while I talk about her for a moment. She is turning 85 today. Show it off, Violet. She is a mother of three and baba to five. I have the pleasure of working with her favourite daughter-in-law, Tracy. She hails from the New Kiev, Mundare area, where she spent 73 years farmsteading. Violet has a huge heart and spent over 50 years of her life giving back to the community through volunteerism, contributing to local and provincial hospital auxiliaries, and has been a devoted volunteer, giving countless hours to those in need and visiting them in hospital. She's also the director and president of St. Basil's Ukrainian women's church league, and she rolls some of the best holubtsi there. I'd invite Violet – thank you for standing – and, please, your family as well to rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

1:40

My final introduction today, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you Kaelyn Anderson, who is seated in the members' gallery. Kaelyn as well please rise. You are a fierce young activist who's passionate about indigenous and women's rights. She comes from a political family on both sides. Her kokum was a member of Indian Rights for Indian Women, which fought for women to regain their treaty rights. She plans on doing gender studies and native studies at the University of Alberta. I'd invite her to receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, any other guests today? The Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members some members of the Health Sciences Association of Alberta executive board and staff. HSAA represents approximately 240 different health sciences disciplines, many of whom are obviously here in the House today. Through your hard work and commitment HSAA continues to support a large community of front-line workers, who provide essential services for all Albertans across the province. Thank you for your advocacy and your partnership. I would like to invite Mike, Trudy, and Jerry to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Obesity

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many people who know me have recognized that I've lost a considerable amount of weight over the last year. Legislature security staff joke with me that I'm one of very few MLAs to have actually lost weight being an MLA. We have a good laugh about it.

However, Mr. Speaker, obesity in Alberta is not a laughing matter. There are approximately 648,500 adults living with obesity in this province. Individuals with obesity experience weight bias and discrimination in a number of ways. This discrimination impacts the health and well-being of individuals with obesity beyond any physical obesity-related impairments that they may have. Sixty-three per cent of children with obesity face a higher risk of being bullied, 54 per cent of adults with obesity report being stigmatized in their workplace, and 64 per cent of adults with obesity report experiencing weight bias from health care professionals themselves.

The World Health Organization recognized obesity as a disease when it was established in 1948. However, the same cannot be said of all different orders of government in Canada. For example, anti obesity medications are not covered by provincial public drug benefit programs or any of the federal public drug benefit programs. The number of bariatric surgeries in Alberta has continued to rise steadily in the last six years. However, it's still the case that not everyone who is eligible for this surgery is able to access it.

Mr. Speaker, we can all agree that we need to focus on addressing this very important issue, and for that reason I invited staff and community members of the Canadian Obesity Network here today to the Legislature. I'm counting on all members of this Assembly to become informed on this issue and to meet with their constituents who have the experience of living with obesity. By working together we can help the many Albertans who need help on this matter.

Thank you.

Humboldt Broncos Bus Crash

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, it's with a heavy heart that I spend a few minutes talking about the tragedy in Saskatchewan. As we all know, late Friday night a bus carrying the Humboldt Broncos was involved in a horrific crash. Coaches, staff, and players lost their lives pursuing a dream they all shared.

As any western Canadian knows, it isn't uncommon for kids and parents to travel hundreds of kilometres to get to hockey games during the long winter season. Hockey is a sport that unites us, from peewee to the juniors to the NHL and the Olympics. Hockey brings us together like nothing else. It is a source of community, of national pride. For any of us here who have ever spent any time in a locker room or on those long bus trips to the next game, those are memories that remain indelible in our minds forever. You become as close as family to the players, to the coaches, and to the parents that you are fortunate enough to know as billets. Tragically, these young lives were taken away far too soon.

A community and a province now mourns. Humboldt is a small town, like so many others dotting the prairies, a farming community that loves its junior team. This tragedy hits very close to home for me personally as a father, a volunteer firefighter, and someone who is deeply rooted in his community. Hopes and dreams ended in an instant on Friday night. Lives are forever shattered, and it will take time to heal the deep wounds. Mr. Speaker, I'm heartened by the outpouring of support from people across North America and beyond, from our own Premier to the Prime Minister to the President of the United States. We all share the community's grief. This week we are all Humboldt strong.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Holocaust Remembrance Day

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today to recognize Yom ha-Shoah, Holocaust Remembrance Day, this year to be recognized on April 12. The Holocaust was one of the most shocking and horrible parts of our history as humanity, and to forget the suffering and death inflicted on the Jewish people would be dishonouring their memory. In commemorating Holocaust Remembrance Day, we remember not only those of the Jewish faith that died but the many others who died during that conflict because of their beliefs, race, disabilities, or sexual orientation.

We have to remember that the Holocaust did not begin with murder. It started with words, with a narrative of hatred that allowed the political leaders of the time to encourage their citizens to attack fellow citizens. Respect and tolerance are a nonnegotiable need for peaceful society today.

The Jewish community in Alberta is a vital and active part of our society. The countless contributions they have made to our communities, to our province, and to our way of life are known and appreciated by all of us. I have had the privilege of getting to know Holocaust survivors in my riding and listen to their personal stories. They are an inspiration for all of us. Holocaust Remembrance Day is being commemorated in my constituency at the Calgary Jewish Centre and Beth Tzedec synagogue.

By staying vigilant against racism, violence, hatred, and persecution, we honour those who suffered and were lost. May their memory live forever through our actions and thoughts, and may such a tragedy never be repeated.

Thank you.

Rural Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, over the years several significant reports have been conducted on the administrative and operational problems in the rural ambulance system, including that of the Health Quality Council of Alberta, the Rural Health Services Review Committee, the Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, the central Alberta municipalities group, and the southern paramedics that produced the suburban-rural EMS deployment review. Common operational problems in each report included repeated complaints of ambulances and paramedics needlessly being tied up for hours in emergency departments; critical time wasted on nonemergency, taxilike transfers; flexing of units into other communities, leaving no local coverage; units not being returned to their home regions; and faulty centralized dispatch protocols.

Despite years of the very same complaints these same issues continue to plague the system today. Rural residents, elected officials, EMS paramedics, and patients across Alberta continue to feel the impact and are extremely worried about this failed system. In fact, in the fall of 2017 a number of Alberta paramedics came to the Legislature to seek remedies to these obvious operational problems, with no positive results.

Mr. Speaker, the solutions are known. These problems are easily fixed. It's time the minister admitted that resolving these operational problems is the very key to solving this broken ambulance system. It's time we discontinued holding ambulances and paramedics in our ERs and set up instead a proper receiving system. It's time to ensure we stop the practice, where possible, of using ambulances as taxis. For rural areas it's time to give our paramedics the resources they need, stop the practice of using rural ambulances for nonemergency transfers, and ensure that rural ambulances are released from emergency rooms within no more than an hour and that they are not flexed elsewhere but instead are mandatorily returned to their home regions.

These are the solutions that United Conservatives will continue to advocate for, Mr. Speaker. We will fight tirelessly to put Albertans first and fix these crucial ambulance problems once and for all.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Construction Suspension

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, why did the NDP government lift its wine boycott in British Columbia even after the New Democrat allies in Victoria doubled down in the fight against Kinder Morgan?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We temporarily lifted the wine ban because the government of British Columbia agreed with the terms that we set out with regard to controlling the product that was in our pipelines. We've made it very clear, the Premier has made it very clear that this is a temporary lift. We will continue to pressure.

We have three fronts that we're working on, Mr. Speaker. One, of course, is making sure that we protect the project, that needs to move forward in the national interest. If it comes to it, we will buy that pipeline and we will make sure that it gets built. Two, we're fighting in court, and we will continue to do so. Three, the people of British Columbia: the government of British Columbia has caused pain to Alberta families, and if we have to, we'll do the same in British Columbia.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, if the government of British Columbia agreed that they didn't have jurisdiction to stop the pipeline, why did Kinder Morgan just suspend the pipeline? Yet again this NDP government got it completely wrong, fumbling the ball from the beginning.

Next question, Mr. Speaker. Why did the Premier declare victory on the Kinder Morgan pipeline last week after one legal decision with many more yet to come? Why did she declare victory when the pipeline is now on life-support?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, let me put the record very clear. The Premier has said that we will do whatever it takes to get this pipeline built. Don't count Alberta out. I know that the members opposite keep trying to do that. They keep trying to say that this is destined for failure, but it's not.

We have three fronts at our disposal. Those include the people of British Columbia. Their government has caused pain to Alberta families. We can certainly do the same, and we've put a bill on the Order Paper that enables us to do that if it comes to that. We're fighting in court, and at every turn we have won. We also are willing to give industry that confidence. If it comes to it, we will buy this pipeline. We are moving forward, full stop. We call on the federal government to do the same.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, they're moving backward, full stop. Maybe the Deputy Premier didn't get the news release on Sunday, but the pipeline project has been suspended. Our critical economic future is hanging by a thread thanks in part to the incompetence of this government. I ask again: why did the Premier tell this House just a week ago today that there was a, quote, decisive victory in the fight for the pipeline just five days before it was put on life-support?

Ms Hoffman: Well, Mr. Speaker, 14 times we've gone to court, and 14 times we've won. Yes, the Houston investors have made a decision that they've announced will come into effect at the end of May. That definitely sends a really clear sign to the people of Canada that this project is at risk. That's why we will not back down. That's why we're investing and making sure that this pipeline goes forward. If it means that we have to buy the pipeline and we have to move it forward ourselves, we will because this matters to the people of Alberta more than the petty politics of the members of the opposition.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Provincial Response to Pipeline Opposition

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, it sounds more and more like the NDP is living on an alternative planet here. The pipeline was suspended on Sunday. These 14 so-called court victories are immaterial to the opponent's strategy of death by delay, of creating uncertainty, which led to Sunday's disastrous announcement. So what specifically, not general, vague talking points, specifically, is the government of Alberta calling on the federal government to do to ensure the construction of the Kinder Morgan pipeline?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've said it before, and I'll say it again. We have three tools at our disposal. One is making the people of British Columbia feel the economic pain that their government is making the people of Alberta feel. We don't want to move forward with that. Of course, we want our pipeline to go forward, we want affordable gas prices for the people of British Columbia, but we certainly have the ability to slow down the taps. We will after we consider the bill on the Order Paper. If it comes to it, we will do that, and we would call on the federal government to support us in that. Two, we've gone to court. We've taken intervenor status. We call on the federal government to support us in that. Three, we will take a public interest. We will buy that pipeline if that's what it comes to, Mr. Speaker, and of course we call on the federal government to do that. They also have other tools at their disposal, including some financial implications to the people of British Columbia, and we compel them to use those as well.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier said that she has called on the federal government to withhold funding from B.C. for the pan-Canadian climate framework. That's a whopping $30 million. But a week ago Justin Trudeau's Alberta Minister Sohi signed a $4.1 billion cheque for the Horgan New Democrats for infrastructure. Will this government agree with me that that money should be withheld from the B.C. government until the pipeline is built?

Ms Hoffman: We will defend Alberta and the working people of western Canada, Mr. Speaker. Now that the energy industry needs Ottawa to step up, we call on them to act. Of course, members opposite know a lot about Ottawa ragging the puck. Their leader sat in the House of Commons for about two decades and barely even mentioned the pipeline. The Harper government never came close to building a pipeline to tidewater. We are closer than we have ever been, and we will not relent. We will move forward on those three fronts and call on the federal government to join us.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, we're closer than we've ever been to the prospect of no pipeline, with their ally Justin Trudeau cancelling Northern Gateway and killing Energy East, surrendering to Barack Obama on Trans Mountain, and now doing precisely nothing on Trans Mountain. Again I ask: will the government call on Prime Minister Trudeau to withhold the $4.1 billion in infrastructure payments to B.C. unless this $7 billion of private infrastructure funding is allowed to complete the Kinder Morgan pipeline? Will they join with me in calling on the federal government to do that?

Ms Hoffman: I know that the member opposite wants to spend his time in Ottawa, or so it appears, because all of his actions here are called on Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, we have three tools in Alberta's tool box, and we are using them. First, we have the ability to bring on some economic consequences to the people of British Columbia because they've done exactly that to the people of Alberta. Second, we are fighting in court, and every time we've gone to court, we have won on behalf of Albertans. Third, we will invest in the project if that's what it comes to. We call on the federal government to use those same tools. They have them. They have a lot of tools in their tool box. You had them when you were in Ottawa. I wish you would have used them then.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, apparently she didn't hear the president of Kinder Morgan say that the company cannot litigate its way to building a pipeline in the context of this uncertainty.

Federal Response to Pipeline Opposition

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, this government's strategy has been to hitch its wagon to Justin Trudeau and not question a single thing that the federal government has done. They haven't questioned cancelling Northern Gateway, killing Energy East, surrendering on Keystone, or Bill C-69, which will kill the prospect of any future pipeline approval. Will the government now join with me in asking the federal government to withdraw the antipipeline federal Bill C-69?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we have tools within our means, and we are certainly using those. We call on the federal government to use them as well. We believe in the three fronts that we're fighting this on. Of course, court is one. We have to call on the courts to help us move forward through this legal process. We compel the federal government to join us in those calls in court. Two, we have economic implications that can be done to the government of British Columbia and the people of British Columbia if it comes to that. We don't want to do that, but they have had the same implications on the people of Alberta. That's why we need to make sure that these tools are at our disposal. Three, Mr. Speaker, nothing will stand in our way. We need to get this pipeline built. The people of Alberta have told us that, and that's why we'll move forward with public investment if that's what it comes to.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
First supplemental.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a week ago the Trudeau government signed an agreement to transfer $4.1 billion, discretionary dollars, to B.C.'s Horgan government for infrastructure. Does the Deputy Premier think that that reflects seriousness on the part of the Trudeau government to get Kinder Morgan built, or does she believe that the federal government should have made construction of the pipeline a condition of that infrastructure agreement with the Horgan government?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, in terms of what we're doing to move forward in getting this pipeline, because that needs to be our number one call, we're making sure that we're acting on these three fronts. Of course, later we will be introducing legislation that will enable us to increase the price at the pump if that's what it comes to. This is a natural consequence of impacting jobs in Alberta, hurting Alberta families. I don't think that if I lived in British Columbia and knew that that was coming down the road, I'd be very happy with my government for putting Alberta in a position where they had to do that. Of course, there are other financial measures that the federal government can take, and we call on them to consider doing that. We think it's important that the national interest move forward and that they be held to account.

Mr. Kenney: Turning off the taps, Mr. Speaker. That's a great idea. I wonder where they came up with that one.

Let me ask once again. The federal government just signed an agreement a few days ago to transfer 4 billion tax dollars to B.C. for infrastructure. This is not actually a difficult question. The government here says that they'll do anything to fight for this pipeline. Here's something: how about calling on the federal government to pull that money back until the pipeline is completed?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We certainly have called on the federal government to take financial measures to make sure that the British Columbia government knows that this is a serious project in the national interest. This isn't just about a project that's going to help Alberta families; it's going to help British Columbia families and families across our country. We certainly do call on the federal government to act on that front.

That isn't the only front, Mr. Speaker. We also call on them to make sure that they're supporting us in our legal actions as we move forward as well as working with us to make sure that if it takes public investment to make this project happen, they step up and join us. They have a number of tools at their disposal. But no matter what they do, this government will fight for that pipeline.

The Speaker: Thank you.

2:00 Pipeline Development

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, yesterday in estimates the Minister of Energy responded to questions about the future of Kinder Morgan by saying that Alberta only needs two of the three major pipeline projects currently happening to get built. But let's be clear. The Trans Mountain expansion, the Enbridge line 3 expansion, and Keystone XL are all crucially important – and we believe that in the Alberta Party caucus – but only one of them connects to Canadian tidewater. To the Minister of Energy: why are you hedging your bets on pipeline construction now, or would you like to correct your comment?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I'll start, and perhaps my colleague the Minister of Finance will help me as well. When I made that comment about the two out of three pipelines, that's just really a mathematical exercise of the capacity, but it doesn't address the strategic focus which we have. We know that we need more markets in Asia, and we know that strategically the Trans Mountain pipeline is extremely important. So it's kind of two different things, but one is just on the capacity issue itself. We know that two out of three will work, but strategically we need Trans Mountain.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fraser: Assuming the government is still committed to getting all three pipelines built, the exchange yesterday revealed something important. We have asked the government about what their backup plan is for a path to balance without the increased revenue from pipelines. They refused to answer but made it clear yesterday that at least they've considered the possibility of not all three projects getting completed. Clearly, you have an idea of what these pipelines are losing for your budget and the bottom line for Albertans. To the same minister: will you be open and transparent and share that information in this House?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I just have to turn to page 104 in our budget book, our fiscal plan. You can read there the importance of market access, and you can see where the pipelines and the capacities take away the oil and bitumen from Alberta and get it either to tidewater or down to the United States and the Gulf coast. Of course, our path to balance is not contingent upon the revenue from all of these pipelines, but we're confident they all will be built.

Mr. Fraser: The Premier and the Deputy Premier have talked about buying an equity stake in Trans Mountain. Today she said that if Kinder Morgan decided not to continue the project after May 31, she would have the province buy it outright, which is a good idea if there's a proper return on investment for Albertans. The problem is that we have no idea what the final price tag of that project is. To the Minister of Energy: how can your government commit to buying this pipeline when you don't even know the full cost, and if you do know, will you table that information in this House?

Ms Hoffman: What we know, Mr. Speaker, is that tens of thousands of jobs and millions of dollars of public interest are at stake if this project does not go forward. Albertans have been very clear: don't take no for an answer. That's what our Premier is doing. She's stepping up. She's making sure that we have the three fronts that we are fighting on: one, ensuring that British Columbia knows the impacts of saying no; two, making sure that we pursue this through the courts as a partner; and three, making sure that if it comes to having a public stake in this so that we can push forward the way that investors should and could that we have the ability to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

French Language and Francophone Education

Ms McKittrick: Merci, M. le Président. The federal government recently announced a new action plan on official languages. One of the key strategies is to support bilingualism through investing in second-language teacher recruitment strategies. I know from my discussion with Canadian Parents for French and many school trustees and administrators that there is a challenge in the ability to recruit French immersion and French as a second language teachers in Alberta, especially in rural areas. To the Minister of Education: how are you going to make sure that increased federal supports for French immersion and French as a second language teacher recruitment benefit all Albertans who want their children to access these learning opportunities regardless of . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.
The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. Our government believes that every child in Alberta deserves a chance for success and a chance for francophone and French education regardless of where they live here in the province of Alberta, whether it's in a rural area or an urban area as well. We know as well that our francophone population here in the province has increased by more than 40 per cent in the last 20 years and that enrolment in francophone schools has gone up by more than 200 per cent during that same time. We're encouraged that the federal government is making an investment in francophone education across the country, and we just want to make sure that the federal government . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Merci. The federal funding and action plan are helpful, but I was wondering: what action specifically is the Ministry of Education taking to support the desire of Albertan parents to have their children attend French immersion or FSL programs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for the question. We have more than 240,000 self-identified francophone people here in the province of Alberta. It's growing very quickly. We are building a new curriculum in all subject areas and in all grade levels, and we're doing that in both official languages simultaneously and working together very closely with the francophone community. Some of the curriculum in this province is more than 30 years old. It's way overdue for an update, and it's way overdue to do it in both of our official languages. We're working very hard together with francophones across the province to make this happen.

Ms McKittrick: Alberta's conseils francophones also benefit from federal action strategies. I know that the minister had some very tough decisions to make in the capital plan for new school projects, so the two new schools announced for the francophone school boards are an indication of the importance the minister places on them. Again to the Minister of Education: given your interests what are you doing to ensure that Alberta students can access francophone education?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we have worked very hard to ensure that we build schools. We have more than 200 school projects on the go across the province at this time. We've put more than a billion dollars into the education system that wouldn't have otherwise happened from the previous government. With these schools we are making sure that we meet the needs of francophone education and French immersion education every step of the way. It's a rapidly, exponentially growing part of our education and school population, and we will make sure that we meet the needs of francophone education here in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Recycling

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is a laggard in recycling, landfilling more tonnes per capita in this province than any other province in the country. Since China has notified the world that they'll no longer accept recyclables, it's urgent that we update our laws and further diversify our manufacturing economy and jobs. In other provinces there is provincially co-ordinated recycling, with costs borne by the industries that produce the packaging, called EPR, extended producer responsibility. To the minister: will you meet with the Recycling Council of Alberta and discuss the tremendous opportunities and environmental benefit of a more modern recycling program in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is quite right. There are a number of challenges associated with Alberta's recycling system as it is currently structured, and part of that has been amalgamating the Alberta Recycling Management Authority with the Used Oil Management Association so that we can get the governance right and we can make sure that we don't have too many agencies, boards, or commissions overseeing these matters.

As for the suggestion of extended producer responsibility, it's a good one. That is why, for example, we are consulting with the agricultural industry right now on an EPR model for agricultural plastics. I'll have more to say in the supplementals.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, it's been almost 10 years since this province committed in its environmental, Canada-wide action plan to EPR. Here we are 10 years later. It's policy that costs us nothing and brings up to $70 million to this province. What gives, Madam Minister?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is quite right. EPR is a good model. It is not the only model. We inherited a number of different structures and governances for recycling, so that's why in the first instance we're going to amalgamate those two associations and realize some efficiencies there. We're going to work with municipalities and hear from them. They have been writing to my office, and I think that's a good thing because it's a priority for them, too. We're going to make sure that we work with the Recycling Council. My office has met with them.

I'll assure the hon. member that I have a meeting with them I think in the coming week.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, Alberta is the only province west of Quebec that places the full costs, risks, and liabilities associated with curbside recycling on the municipalities and the ratepayers. When will you provide the leadership that's needed with the AUMA and RMA, who have called repeatedly for this EPR, extended producer responsibility? When?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the hon. member is quite right that Alberta is a laggard when it comes to other provinces and territories, and the hon. member is quite right that this does place a burden on municipalities and that the province does need to step up with a more fulsome framework. That's why we need to do a bit more consultation. That's why we've moved forward with the agricultural plastics. We'll have more to say throughout 2018.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Adoption Regulations

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Adoption is a gift that turns dreams into reality for adoptive parents, which is why I was so honoured to receive unanimous support for Bill 206, the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement (Adoption Advertising) Amendment Act, 2017. We all agreed that it was important for government to put into place regulations around having both parents registered with formal adoption agencies in order to protect kids, amongst other things. The government never gave a timeline, during or after the debate, for these regulations. Could the minister please update the House on this timeline?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the member for bringing forward her private member's bill. Adoptive families play a critical role in providing safe, loving, caring homes for so many children who need one. We work closely with communities and families to support adoption when it's in the best interest of a child, and we will be engaging with young people, families, adoptive parents, and organizations on the adoption process and looking for improvements.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Minister, given that families are waiting anxiously to see this process of adoption eased through Bill 206 by putting their profiles online and given that families right now are waiting approximately two to three years for a child and given that adoption rates are dropping and wait-lists are creeping up, why is the government stopping Albertans from completing their families by not completing these regulations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are so thankful for the hundreds of families who step up for these kids and show us what community truly means. That means engaging with them, engaging with young people and with families and with organizations who are involved throughout the adoption process to talk about what needs to happen as we go forward and what improvement looks like. Obviously, there are different thoughts on it, and we consider it very valuable always to do consultation and talk to Albertans about what they want to see as we make changes going forward.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Minister, given that adoption is an extraordinary gift to families that may not otherwise be able to have children and given that parents have been contacting my office, inquiring when Alberta is actually going to catch up to other provinces – we have jurisdictional information to share here with other provinces, Mr. Speaker – by allowing families to post their profiles online, Minister, when will you be proclaiming this legislation? Please explain the holdup.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly can say that we share her commitment to ensuring that the adoption process gives both children and parents the best possible outcomes, which is why after further consultation with adoptive parents and stakeholders I will be happy to provide an update to the member.

The Speaker: Calgary-Hays.

Federal Impact Assessment Act

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are rallying in Calgary today to support our natural resources. Rather than show support, the federal Liberals have introduced Bill C-69. If this legislation is passed, the Canadian Energy Pipeline Association has said, "It is difficult to imagine that a new major pipeline could be built in Canada under the impact assessment act, much less attract energy investment to Canada." To the Minister of Energy: have you read Bill C-69, and are you unhappy enough with it and what's in it to have complained to the federal government about it, and when did you do that, please?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I have reviewed the draft legislation as I did the discussion papers that came out last summer. That is why last summer we wrote to the federal government. The hon. Minister of Energy and I wrote jointly, expressing our concerns with what was in that draft document. We have further communicated with the federal government around things like timelines, the preplanning stage, the project list, and the application of the Alberta climate leadership plan with respect to the strategic assessments. There are some specific things that we would like to see in that legislation, and we're hopeful we will see them.

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. I thank the minister for that answer.

Given that a report released yesterday by GMP FirstEnergy states, and I quote, we suspect we will see more oil sands divestitures from foreign companies in coming years, and given that we need this investment to fully develop our natural resources to provide jobs and fund services needed by Albertans, again to the minister: what is your government doing now to continue to fight off the damage that Bill C-69 will do?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is working closely to protect jobs today and for decades to come while ensuring that we have an appropriate environmental assessment process in place that instills both investor confidence and the confidence of Canadians. That is what that assessment process must grapple with at the federal level. We need to make sure as Albertans that it appropriately takes into account our regional planning exercises as well as the climate leadership plan, that the preplanning stage is accompanied by appropriate timelines. We got legislated timelines in the other pieces, and that was a victory on our part. There is more to do, and there's no question that we're doing it.

Mr. McIver: Well, now I have to thank the minister twice for those answers. Thank you, Minister.

Given the importance of the resource industry to Alberta's economy and given that Suncor's CEO recently said that other jurisdictions are doing much more to attract business and that Canada needs to also do much more to up its game, again to the minister: have you taken the advice of Suncor's CEO, and what will you do to raise our game?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One of the things that we have done to repair our international reputation is that we brought in an oil sands emissions limit, something that the Suncor CEO supported. We have also brought in a climate leadership plan with a number of different aspects, something that the Suncor CEO stood on the stage with the Premier and me on November 22, 2015, and supported.

Now, there is more to do. There is no question. There's a role for the federal government in terms of getting their environmental assessment right, in terms of getting their navigable waters and other environmental protection legislation in terms of finding the right sweet spot. We are making sure that Alberta is represented . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Carbon Levy and Small-business Costs

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, it comes as no surprise that this government is not making lives better with their crippling carbon tax. In fact, things are tough for school boards, nonprofits, households, and especially small businesses. In Provost a local businessman, Pak Wong, was recently featured in the local paper. The article outlined that the business is now paying $900 in carbon tax each month this year. To the Minister of Energy: why did your department fail to do a proper socioeconomic study on how this punitive tax is going to affect small businesses . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Certainly, on October 31, 2016, we did release an economic impact assessment of the climate leadership plan as well as pipeline approvals. That was before the federal approval. In addition, what we did was that we ensured that we cut small-business taxes by a third. We exempted upstream oil and gas from the carbon levy until 2023. We also brought in a number of different incentives around methane reduction . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Taylor: Given that this business chose natural gas as both an ecological and economical way to run a cogeneration system and given that the carbon tax hike has added to his cost of producing electricity, Minister, this business did everything right and is still being punished through your government's crippling tax. How do you expect Mr. Wong and other job creators to survive and continue to support Alberta's economy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, as I indicated, small-business taxes have been cut by a third. That's some $40 million in carbon levy revenues that have gone towards the small-business tax reduction. We also exempted small and medium-sized Alberta oil and gas facilities from the carbon levy, saving both large and small oil and gas companies who operate those facilities more than $2.5 billion over that period. We have phased in the carbon competitiveness incentive, and the large emitters will get $400 million of savings in the first three years of those regulations. We've provided between $1.5 billion and $2 billion of free carbon offsets to companies investing in methane reduction technologies. And we've ensured that . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Taylor: The carbon tax hike of $900 a month is greater than what he's getting in the business tax reduction.

Given that the recent increase to the minimum wage coupled with the increase in carbon tax have harmed this business's bottom line by approximately $50,000 and given that he's already been forced to cut his business hours and given that these policies do nothing but harm small businesses, Minister, Mr. Wong would like to know: how do you think he's going to recover from those expenses and this major blow to his business?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would be pleased to follow up with the member and discuss his constituent's specific concerns at the conclusion of question period today.

2:20

Carbon Levy

Mr. Loewen: This government brought in the largest tax increase in Alberta's history, a tax increase that was not mentioned in their election campaign even though they produced budget forecasts but no mention of the income or expenditure of the carbon tax. This tax came in only months after the election. Can someone in government please come clean with Albertans, admit that they knew they were bringing in this tax during the election but would not tell Albertans, knowing that they would not have been elected if they had?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for the opportunity to respond to the misdirection on the other side. What we did say in the election platform was that we took climate change seriously and that we would take meaningful action to address that. In the months very shortly following our election, it was very clear that we were facing an opportunity during a very difficult downturn where we had to make a decision. We could either cut and move forward with the same strategies that the electorate had rejected or we could move forward, doing things differently, protecting essential public health services, taking climate change really seriously rather than occasionally paying lip service and occasionally funding films that fight against it.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Loewen: Given, Mr. Speaker, that that is true misdirection when the Deputy Premier gets up and says that it was in their campaign literature but actually wasn't and given that the Premier was all too happy to shake Trudeau's hand and agree to increase the carbon tax and thanked him on behalf of Albertans for his leadership in this regard, showing that when Trudeau says, "Tax," the Premier asks, "How high?" and given that we now have learned that the Premier has broken her promise that the carbon tax would not be used for general revenue, will the Premier just admit that the carbon tax was all about tax and had nothing to do with carbon?

Ms Hoffman: We did say in the platform that we would take meaningful action to address climate change, Mr. Speaker, and we stand by that. It became very clear that the best way to do so was through market mechanisms, something that the members of the opposition in the past have been big advocates of. They, in fact, had brought forward a price on carbon for the heavy emitters previously. It just wasn't one that would cause meaningful change or action in the province of Alberta. We moved on that in a way that we would take the opportunity to have additional revenue to support Albertans, to make sure that 30 per cent of our energy comes from renewables by 2030 and that we get our pipeline approvals, which we've gotten. Now we need to get that pipeline built.

Mr. Loewen: Given that the Premier calls the economic downturn an opportunity and given that the government has talked a lot about the economic pain that it will inflict on B.C. over the pipeline dispute and given that this economic pain will be created by increasing the price at the pumps in B.C., why is increasing the price that B.C. pays at the pumps called economic pain and the carbon tax raising the price at the pumps for Albertans called making life better?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We brought forward a price on carbon as part of our comprehensive climate leadership plan, and it was that plan that got the federal approvals to get our pipeline to tidewater. Now, the federal approvals are definitely a step in the right direction, but they need to be worth more than the paper they're written on. That's why we're fighting on three fronts, and we call on the federal government to join us in doing the exact same thing. They have tools in their tool box that, certainly, we could really use in getting this pipeline to tidewater, and we call on the federal government to join us in that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Cannabis Use in Affordable Housing

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The upcoming legalization of recreational cannabis use in Canada has prompted property managers to examine their policies about tenants' cannabis use for both recreational and medical purposes. One constituent who uses medical marijuana and is a Calgary Housing resident told me that the city of Calgary will prohibit pot use on their properties even for medical purposes. What will the Health minister do to ensure that my constituent can continue to receive quality-of-life benefits from medical marijuana in Calgary Housing?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We do know that as we move forward with the federal decision to legalize cannabis, there are a number of decisions that need to be made. A number of people throughout the province live in communal buildings, whether they be apartments, whether they be supportive housing. As we move forward, we'll be having those conversations with those individuals. We have given the landlords the mechanism to be able to make those decisions for the safety of other folks in the building, but if the hon. member would like to follow up with the specific concerns of that constituent, myself or the Minister of Seniors and Housing would be happy to speak with her.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms McPherson: Thank you. I appreciate that.

Given that there are tens of thousands of Albertans who rely on accessible housing, at least some of whom also rely on medical marijuana to address health issues and, doubtless, many more who might consider medical marijuana with their health care providers, what direction can the ministers of Health and Municipal Affairs provide to ensure that Calgary Housing Company and other municipally owned housing providers do not force patients to choose between their health and their homes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. As we know, there are a number of complicated issues that have been raised around this file, and this is just one of them. Municipal governments are another order of government. Ultimately we have given them the power that they requested to make decisions in a number of areas, and we're going to respect their ability to make those decisions.

In terms of provincial housing facilities, Mr. Speaker, obviously we'll have to have those conversations, but we do need to consider not only the health and safety of individuals using cannabis but the health and safety of other individuals who live in the building.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms McPherson: Given that there are tens of thousands of Albertans who rely on housing in senior communities, supportive living, and long-term care and who may benefit from medical marijuana, what are you doing to ensure that they can use medical cannabis when living in housing provided by nonprofits and other organizations that are funded at least in part by provincial and other public money?

Ms Ganley: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, as we move forward, we do know that there are a number of conversations to be had around this issue. Ultimately buildings that are owned by folks other than the province: those private property locations are free to make their own decisions, and we're going to respect those decisions. Certainly, I understand that the federal government will have more to say on the legalization of products other than smoked products, but there is a very delicate balance to be struck here. There is the health of the individuals who seek the use of medical cannabis, but also there's the health of other individuals who live in the building who may not want to be exposed to smoke.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Livingstone-Porcupine Hills Recreation Management Plan

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, when the NDP announced the creation of the Castle provincial park in 2017, they promised off-highway vehicle, or OHV, users access to the Livingstone-Porcupine Hills area. Then just last month the minister released the Livingstone-Porcupine Hills draft plan, which appears to have eliminated approximately 70 per cent of OHV trails. To the minister: how do you possibly expect the recreationists from the Castle combined with those already using the Livingstone-Porcupine Hills area to have proper use of facilities when the capacity has been so enormously reduced?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member is quite right that when the Castle park was established, we found 1,800 stream crossings in that area, in the headwaters, where we have a number of species at risk, including some native trout, and 35 bridges for all those stream crossings. In the Porcupine Hills we found about 3,800 stream crossings. Clearly, we needed to undertake a planning exercise. There's no question about that. It was the member's own constituents who asked me for that planning exercise. I will never forget being at a town hall meeting – well, it was a community hall – with a whole bunch of people . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. Thank you.

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, given that the draft plan announcement last month was poorly communicated, in my opinion, and has only allowed public consultation now for 30 days for the Livingstone-Porcupine Hills plan and given that the minister eventually extended the consultation period for the Castle provincial park, to the minister: why won't you overturn this ill-advised decision and hold a full series of open houses for proper public input, just like the Castle at the end, with at least a 90-day consultation period?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I've been hearing from the hon. member's own constituents in the Porcupine Hills and in Livingstone. These are ranchers, these are people who have grazing lease permits, these are people who are private property owners, and they've asked us to undertake recreational planning. This has been years in the making. The member's own colleagues from the old legacy party, you know, studied this problem for a generation and did precisely nothing. It was his own constituents that begged us to get control over this. The runaway use of vacant public land was getting in the way of people's right to make a living, and that's not okay.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Stier: Well, Mr. Speaker, it doesn't sound like she wants to extend the limit.

Given that the latest plan for the Porcupine Hills would see OHV access reduced by nearly 70 per cent and given that there are only 30 days, less now today, the minister is once again failing to engage with Albertans. Will the minister admit that she made a mistake trying to bulldoze ahead with this ill-conceived plan before first consulting with the people being impacted?

Ms Phillips: Well, let me tell you about consultation, Mr. Speaker. Last summer I did a tour of the Porcupine Hills area with a number of the member's own constituents, and then I went into a community hall where there were about 50 people or more. I took my kids, in fact, and my kids devastated the snack table while I heard from his own constituents about how we needed more enforcement, better planning, and an actual thoughtful approach to recreation. It's his constituents that asked for this. I'm very confused as to why he doesn't want to represent them now.

Fisheries Management

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, families in my constituency will now have less access to fish for their families. On April 1 Dolberg Lake, a lake stocked with rainbow trout, changed from liberal harvest to quality harvest, essentially turning it into a trophy-only lake. The environment minister assures us that she understands the importance of fishing opportunities to communities. It should be expected, therefore, that if changes to the fisheries management objectives are being considered, the local community would have input into that decision. Minister, have you ensured that robust consultation with local stakeholders was performed before the regulations changed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, fisheries decisions get changed every year because we monitor the populations and we make science-based decisions. We make those decisions based on the work of the regional staff, the folks who are out there every day protecting the environment and making sure that there is something to fish and something to hunt. Around here, on this side of the House, we take the best advice coming from those hard-working folks in Environment and Parks and make sure that our rural and northern communities have access to those kinds of great tourism and other economic development opportunities.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, local families have relied on this lake for food and recreation for generations. They are now on the outside looking in. The lake has turned into a trophy lake. Given that the minister relies on a science-based approach to fisheries management and given that this change in the fisheries management objectives to quality harvest status would require extensive stakeholder engagement, will the minister reverse these regulations if it is shown that a robust consultation with local stakeholders was not properly performed to inform her science-based decision?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I guess I shouldn't be surprised that from across the way there's sneering when we say the words "science based." There has got to be something to fish, there has got to be something to hunt, and that's why year over year we update our fishing and hunting regulations to make sure that they are appropriately managing the populations. We have in fact expanded walleye opportunities in many lakes after decades of mismanagement from the member's own colleagues, who did nothing. We have seen a recovery in some of those populations, and we've expanded the opportunities. We'll continue to do so.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, this is not a question with regard to population of fish in a lake. This is a lake stocked with rainbow trout.

Given that fish and wildlife officers are the individuals that Albertans rely on to patrol and enforce these regulations and given that these individuals are boots on the ground that can help inform the minister's decision and given that last week the minister said that she'd ensure stable, predictable funding for our fish and wildlife officers, could the minister please explain why this government has decided to close the Swan Hills fish and wildlife detachment, a detachment right in the centre of a very large fish and wildlife area?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I guess it's a spend day coming from the members opposite, that it's fine to cut the budget if it's somewhere else but not in their own areas. The fact of the matter is that we have robust enforcement personnel across the province between park rangers, conservation officers, fish and wildlife, and others. We have in fact changed the way that we operate some of our enforcement on the ground to make it more responsive to the needs of municipalities and others who have begged us for action on this file, and we will continue to do that work.

DynaLife Medical Labs

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, recruitment processes must be fair, open, and transparent for vendors to trust the system. Albertans must have confidence they're receiving value for their tax dollars. Part of convincing vendors and Albertans that a procurement was done properly is hiring an independent fairness adviser to offer an opinion that the process was defensible. To the Minister of Health: expanding on our previous DynaLife tablings, given that the appeal panel disagreed with the AHS adviser, who said that the process was fair, should the government release the adviser's opinion since they are defending that the process was fair?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll be happy to get further details. I think the member is referring to the decision around the provincial lab system. [interjection] Thank you. Definitely, when we were elected, we made it very clear in our platform that we were going to end experiments in privatization in public health care. We're proud of the fact that we did that. We're proud of the fact that we're moving forward with a public lab here in Edmonton and that the members of the audience who are here from HSAA will be able to continue working in public health care rather than being privatized and outsourced, as the members opposite are proposing.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, given that she's ultimately accountable for Alberta Health Services, to the minister: would she order them to release the fairness opinion upon which it was publicly relying to prove that the procurement was fair, and thus has waived any potential privilege, or is she powerless to do what is right in regard to that DynaLife contract?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I am very proud of the fact that we took the opportunity, when we formed government, to act on the values that we ran on in that campaign, including moving forward on protecting these public jobs and public health care, something that we're incredibly proud of. After 50 years of medicare we're not going to let Conservatives across the aisle bully us into outsourcing and privatizing important public health services, including having the diagnostic tools we need for public professionals to be able to assess health care needs and for physicians and others to provide excellent public health care.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, does the Minister of Health understand the inherent unfairness in Alberta Health Services saying that a process was fair yet refusing to order it to release an opinion that it touts as proving such fairness?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, does the opposition understand that this side of the House believes in and supports public health care? We think that it shouldn't be what's in your pocket that drives your health access; it should be your health needs. That's why we're incredibly proud to have a government that stood up instead of pushing for the deep cuts that members opposite are advocating for. We're building. We're building a public lab. We're building a Calgary cancer hospital. We're building in Fort McMurray, for example, a long-term care facility that Conservatives promised and failed to fulfill. On this side of the House we're standing up, we're investing, and we're building the public health care services that we all deserve.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Front-line EMS workers are a critical part of Alberta's response to an emergency. I've heard recently from the Health Sciences Association of Alberta that they are concerned about having enough staff and resources to ensure that EMS personnel are on the scene when Albertans need them most. To the Minister of Health: how is Budget 2018 supporting our EMS first responders?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for his tireless advocacy for EMS and for the services that these members provide in our community. I want to celebrate the HSAA members who are here in the gallery today as well. Our government has heard their concerns, and we've acted. That's why we've budgeted $456 million for ambulance services this year, an increase of $23 million over what's forecasted for this current fiscal year. I certainly hope the members opposite will show some support for front-line service providers by voting for that budget.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is imperative that EMS workers are able to get to an emergency situation in a timely fashion. To the same minister: how will this funding help support EMS staff to respond quickly when there is an emergency?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These new investments will go to support front-line services. Albertans will see more EMS stations, places to respond to emergencies, more ambulances on our roads, and more paramedics to staff them. The members opposite repeatedly ask about EMS supports in their individual communities while at the same time calling on us to make reckless cuts that would impact public health care. I'd ask them: which ambulances in your communities are you prepared to cut or leave people waiting? I'm not willing to do that.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: when can front-line EMS staff start to see these changes take place?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're working with Alberta Health Services to determine very specific locations for these investments. Last year EMS workers saw new power stretchers in AHS ambulances. This year they'll see mental health supports expanded as well as more front-line EMS services added. We know that when we make it easier for emergency workers to do their jobs, they make life better for Albertans by improving our health and safety. This government is doing that work, and we will always fight to improve and protect public health services. I'm proud that we're in government and have the ability to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Health Minister's Remarks

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today in question period the Deputy Premier referred to the economic downturn as an opportunity to bring in their ideological agenda, the same minister who referred to Albertans as sewer rats. Does she really think that 200,000 Albertans that have lost their jobs under this government's watch are just an economic opportunity?

The Speaker: Hon. member, do you really believe that the tone and substance of your question is going to contribute to better public dialogue in this place?

Mr. Nixon: Absolutely.

The Speaker: You do?

It was such a nice day, too, so quiet in here. Let's all avoid getting it warmed up again, please.

The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When I said "opportunity," what I was referring to is the opportunity to either move with deep ideological cuts or the opportunity to build a better Alberta. When I did say that word, certainly, in the sentence, I can understand why you misconstrued what my intent was. Certainly, fanning the flames isn't my intent. My intent is to build a better Alberta, one that believes in and finds ways to support Alberta families, support public health care, support a good environment, and support good jobs for future generations.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the problem with this government is that they don't want to be accountable for what they say. They want to hide behind it. The minister did call my constituents sewer rats, but further to that, she did say that people who've lost their jobs in this province are an economic opportunity for her ideological agenda to bring in the carbon tax and the ridiculous climate change plan this government has brought forward. Will the minister stand up and apologize to the over 200,000 people who've lost their jobs under this government's watch? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member knows that I intended to do no such thing. I apologized immediately for the wrong choice of words, and rather than continuing to try to create slander and misconstrue my intent, I would ask that he accept that apology. I know he walked out of the House the first time I gave it because he didn't want to hear it, but I genuinely apologize for choosing the wrong words. That wasn't my intent. In no way was I referring to the people of Alberta. This was a long time ago. We are fighting to make sure we have a better Alberta, that we're standing up for the people of this province, that we're getting our pipeline to tidewater, and I'm proud of our record.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, we do accept the apology for calling Albertans sewer rats, but what we wanted today was a clear apology for saying that the 200,000-plus people that are out of work in this province under this government's watch are an economic opportunity for this government's ideological agenda. I will accept the minister's backhanded apology there for that, but in the future will this government start taking these issues seriously and start realizing that the things they say have an impact on the people of this province?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We are proud to have a strong record of standing up for the people of Alberta. We are proud that in the middle of a downturn, instead of cutting and making things worse by laying off nurses and teachers and lab techs and paramedics, we are building. We're building an Alberta that's protecting one another, that's getting us a pipeline to tidewater, and we will let nothing stop us in our tracks.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've had a request for unanimous consent to introduce a late guest.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of talented Agriculture and Forestry staff that have been working hard these past several months on Bill 7, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act: Eileen Kotowich, Christine Anderson, Keri Sharpe, Shauna Johnston, Jaclyn Schmidt, and Stuart Elson. I would like to express my gratitude for the time and effort they have put into this bill. I would ask you all to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

NDP and Pipeline Development

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've heard a lot of rhetoric from the opposition bench about the stance of the NDP on pipelines. It's obvious to me that they don't know their history and that they are sensationalizing the subject for political gain. So allow me to share a bit of our party's proud history.

Mr. Speaker, my great-great-uncle, Tom Bentley, was elected as a Saskatchewan CCF MLA in 1949. He worked with Tommy Douglas's government to help make life better for the people of Saskatchewan and Canada by developing social supports like medicare and was a strong proponent of resource development. In fact, it was the NDP that led the charge on resource development in Saskatchewan. The Douglas government was supportive and aided in pipeline and oil field development and protected land rights in the process.

I am proud to follow in the footsteps of my great-great-uncle by supporting important services that people rely on. Like my great-great-uncle and the NDP of the past, I will continue to stand up for Alberta jobs through the development of pipelines, including Trans Mountain, because it's in our party's nature to do so. Our government has done a tremendous amount of work with the industry to support an environment to ensure that when people buy our product, it is the cleanest one possible, by capping methane emissions and investing in renewables with partnership from our industry.

Failing to support projects like these and endorsing radical ideas like the Leap Manifesto could be devastating to our resource sector and could destroy well-paid jobs for Alberta workers. I believe my counterparts in the Saskatchewan NDP recognize that, and to them: thank you for supporting the fight for pipeline development.

And to the members of the B.C. NDP caucus, who I am sure speak the praise of Tommy Douglas regularly, I want you to rethink your position and to ask yourself: what would Tommy do? Mr. Speaker, it is at the heart of the NDP's history and policy to support sustainable and environmentally responsible resource development, and that includes pipelines, period.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Federal Energy Policies

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sometimes you just have to give your head a shake. Recently it came to light that the government of Canada has created an uneven playing field against Alberta and in favour of foreign oil importation. Presently eastern Canada imports around 600,000 barrels a day from foreign nations, primarily the United States and the dictatorship oil. Prime Minister Trudeau vetoed the Northern Gateway and killed the Energy East pipeline by changing the approval process to include upstream and downstream emissions, yet foreign oil is not held to these same standards.

The federal government has created an energy playing field that tilts towards countries like the United States, that sells us their energy products at world price while buying Alberta energy products at the western Canada discount price, roughly half the price. This makes even less sense when you consider that the Canadian Energy Research Institute has calculated that if imported oil was replaced with Alberta oil in the east, there would be a 6.2 per cent reduction in carbon dioxide emissions.

While these stringent pipeline regulations are unfairly placed on Alberta's oil, Quebec is able to open a cement factory that produces 2 million metric tonnes of CO₂ per year, more than most Alberta oil sands projects. Furthermore, the factory was exempt from any environmental review and is without regulation of its carbon emissions. This farcical fiasco of unfairness continues when we realize that Alberta, even though we've gone through a terrible recession, still continues to subsidize Quebec through equalization payments.

And now Kinder Morgan has suspended operations on the Trans Mountain line because of delaying tactics by radicals of the socialist, environmentalist, or liberal denomination determined to trap Alberta's valuable resources in the ground, hurting all Canadians. Like I said, sometimes you just have to give your head a shake.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices I'm pleased to table five copies of the committee's report recommending the appointment of Mr. Lorne Gibson as Election Commissioner for a five-year term. Copies of this report are available online through the committees branch.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the appropriate time I intend to move the following motion pursuant to Standing Order 42:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to immediately take steps to repeal the carbon tax and withdraw its support for the pan-Canadian framework on clean growth and climate change given the failure of the government of Alberta and the federal government under Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's leadership to ensure the construction of the Kinder Morgan Trans Mountain pipeline expansion.

I have the appropriate number of copies for the page, Mr. Speaker.

2:50 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table five copies of an article called Bubble-Zone Freedom from Liberty Magazine, September 2000 edition. It quotes the member of the Official Opposition: "Despite Jason Kenney's attempts to shine a spotlight on what he calls 'the most gross systematic violation of any group's freedom of speech in Canada'," where he is referring to bubble zones.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a piece called 'We're in Crisis Mode Now': Energy Sector Fears Investor Exodus as Trans Mountain Pipeline Stalls, which I referenced yesterday during the emergency debate on Trans Mountain. It speaks of the oil and gas executive praising the Premier's "willingness to directly invest to see the project through, adding there's a business case for Alberta," and they call on Ottawa to take decisive action. I have the appropriate copies.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite number of copies of letters, that I referred to in my speech yesterday and during the emergency debate, from Paul First Nation and from the Fort McMurray First Nation as well as the government release that included the information from the Métis Nation of Alberta's Audrey Poitras and from Grand Chief Meneen which indicates the support for the pipeline as well as the support for the climate leadership initiative, which inevitably go together.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies here of the Canadian Energy Pipeline Association submission to the Parliamentary Committee on Environment and Sustainable Development in regard to Bill C-69. I referred to it in my question today and furnished the minister with a copy.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to table five copies of a letter from Dale Wells, aged 79, called, My Autumn Lodge Experience. He says:

I moved into Autumn Lodge. I truly enjoyed life there and the area [and] friends that I got to know.

Then the lodge closure situation evolved and the decision to move elsewhere by October 15, 2017, or lose the moving "perks" that ... [were] offered.

He goes on to say:

I really do miss Berwyn and my friends. I truly do wish that I could move back to Autumn Lodge in Berwyn.

Signed: Mr. Dale Wells.

The Speaker: Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the course of consideration of estimates for the Ministry of Culture and Tourism last night there was some confusion about who is receiving the minimum wage in Alberta. The minister stated that the majority of minimum wage earners are single mothers. I am going to table five copies of information from the Ministry of Labour that shows that, in fact, single parents with children constitute 18,200 of the 292,400 minimum wage earners in the province, or 6.2 per cent.

The Speaker: If the House would just give me a moment here.

Motions under Standing Order 42

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, a very brief statement.

Provincial Climate Change Strategy

Mr. Nixon:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to immediately take steps to repeal the carbon tax and withdraw its support for the pan-Canadian framework on clean growth and climate change given the failure of the government of Alberta and the federal government under Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's leadership to ensure the construction of the Kinder Morgan Trans Mountain pipeline expansion.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The motion that I am moving I already read for the record when I gave notice of it, so I will not read it again. But to be clear, it has this Assembly calling on the government to remove the carbon tax and to withdraw support for the pan-Canadian framework on clean growth and climate change.

Mr. Speaker, the reason that we move this before this Assembly today is that it's clear, given the developments in the situation with Kinder Morgan, that the promise that the NDP government said in regard to bringing forward the carbon tax and joining that framework has not been completed. It is no way helping towards that end goal of that pipeline, and as such it's time for this government to stop punishing Albertans and to remove this ridiculous carbon tax.

The Speaker: Members of the Legislature, we require, I believe, unanimous consent to proceed with the request by the hon. member.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 5

An Act to Strengthen Financial Security for Persons with Disabilities

[Debate adjourned April 3]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to get up and speak on Bill 5. You know, I'd like to just take this quick moment to thank the independent members of this House who, during the course of my private member's bill, Bill 211, from our previous session, took the time to take my briefing on that particular bill and this bill here, which, of course, is sort of a direct descendant of that. Without any political hyperbole, I got an e-mail in my office literally every single day or a call or met somebody on the street when that private member's bill, Bill 211, failed last year, and those people were saying: "How can we get this bill done? Allowing Henson trusts is important to me. It's important to my family. We need to be able to get this done."

That is why I am so extremely happy and grateful that our Minister of Community and Social Services decided to take up the cause and introduce Bill 5, which builds on the work of my private member's bill. I would also like to thank the support of my colleagues in the caucus in order to get this bill to the stage where it's at right now. You know, I'm so happy that we have a Minister of Community and Social Services who listens, whether it was when we were dealing with PDD standard 8 – when the community came out and said that this was not the correct way to go, the minister listened – when it comes to the supports intensity scale and the fact that that needs to be eliminated. Again, I'm so proud to be part of a government and a ministry that listens to those concerns.

You know, even last week, Madam Speaker, we all got up and applauded the Paralympians who were in our gallery and put them up there and said: "Look at what you can do. Look at the great work and spirit of competitiveness." Throughout Alberta there are individuals who are persons with disabilities that also say: "Look what we can do. We are like you. We want to be out in the community with you."

That is something that this bill in a small part will help with because, frankly, those who are on AISH have this extra requirement when it comes to inheritances that no other province imposes on persons with disabilities, and that's something, Madam Speaker, that we needed to fix. It was a problem that I saw. It's a problem that members of my caucus saw, and it's a problem that our hon. Minister of Community and Social Services saw, so I was happy to be able to have this bill come forward.

We should talk a bit about the bill. You know, I went out and did consultations, which I've talked about at length before in this House, and from those consultations there were three key things that came out. The first part was to amend schedule 2 by removing section 1(4). What that did is that that allowed a director of AISH to, at his or her discretion, decide whether or not a trust or an inheritance would be or would not be considered part of an AISH recipient's total assets, which creates a massive amount of uncertainty for families, for relatives who would want to leave some money or some assets to a loved one who happens to be on AISH. That, Madam Speaker, is something that I, as somebody who's not on AISH, doesn't have to worry about should, say, for example, my parents pass away. That is fundamentally unfair, and that is something that the community said loud and clear that we needed to fix. This bill, Bill 5, fixes that, and I am extremely happy that that is in the bill.

The second of the three things that came out clearly in the consultation was that in order to have clarity, the amount of money that could potentially be in one of these trusts had no limit. However, when the money came out of that trust, it would be subject to the normal rules of AISH, which allows for flexibility going into the future for perhaps any future changes that may happen. It also allows you, Madam Speaker, to minimize abuses that might possibly happen in the system.

This was something that was the preferred way of the people we consulted that they would like to see this done. During the course of the consultations we heard from everyone. We heard from self-advocates, AISH recipients themselves as well as their parents, and as well from the accountants and lawyers who specialize in setting up these trusts and working with individuals in the AISH system.

Lastly, Madam Speaker, this is all fine and good if you have, for example, a parent or relative that passes away and that parent or relative has thought through that this money would go into a trust to help an individual on AISH. But, as we know, not everyone who is a recipient of AISH started off on AISH. You know, some people, whatever their disability or affliction may be, sometimes that comes up later in life due to medical issues or sometimes from an accident, which means that sometimes a parent or relative might have not had to think through the ins and outs of the AISH system when planning their estate.

The third part that came out during the consultations was, as they termed it in the consultations, a wills done badly clause. That is perhaps not the correct term we're using in the bill, but that is essentially what it is. What that says is that should an individual on AISH receive an inheritance or similar inheritancelike windfall, they have a full year to decide whether they want to take that asset just as it is and then have whatever adjustments to their AISH that comes with that or, if they so choose, are able to put it in a trust themselves to be able to use it to save for their future and to use it to make their life better. The key part of that is that they have the choice to plan for their financial future as best they can.

You know, I'd like to think thus far in the House that we're slowly moving towards support, at least at this stage of the bill, for Bill 5. As the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills had pointed out previously in debate, I think we have a bit of a common cause in this, Madam Speaker, to make sure that individuals on AISH and persons with disabilities are treated equitably. This part of the AISH legislation in particular perhaps comes from a different period in time, and that is why I'm so glad that, again, we have a minister and I'm part of a government that was willing to take action to correct this.

I'm just going to take a moment. I believe this question came up previously about what happens with these trusts. What happens if a trustee of the particular trust decides to go rogue, for example, Madam Speaker? In fact, that particular concern is well covered in trust law. Families fighting over trusts and inheritance is something that is as old as, you know, the legal profession, so it is a well-worn area of legislation. There are clear guidelines for trustees, whether that's a family member or friend or a trustee law firm that's doing it. There are very clear rules around that in other pieces of legislation. Although asked about it during the consultations, that particular point was not considered to be a concern during the consultation process.

Madam Speaker, I just want to end on a real positive note. This bill, as I mentioned earlier: there is not a day that's gone by where somebody doesn't e-mail my office or talk to me on the street that we need to get this done. This bill, Bill 5, will most definitely make life better for Albertans. It will help ensure that Albertans with disabilities are treated fairly and will support families that are planning for their children's future. I want to thank all of the self-advocates, families, staff that advocated for these important changes both to me during my private member's bill and in the past as well.

I encourage all members of this House to support this important bill at second reading, and I look forward to the continued debate and support of members in the House going forward on this particular bill.

With that, Madam Speaker, thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the member who just spoke. I, too, am very proud to be part of a government that is responding to the needs of Albertans. I, too, have had many constituents come to me with questions about when we were going to get to the point that we could protect families and disabled Albertans in this way.

My question to the member relates around some of the consultations that were done, one of which was well attended here in Edmonton in the Federal Building. At that consultation there was actually a lawyer who spoke about the benefits of this, and I wonder if the member could further expand upon what information he has received from the trust specialist lawyers.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, my apologies. I didn't realize you were speaking under 29(2)(a). I thought you were speaking directly to the bill.

Dr. Turner: It is at 29(2)(a).

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. Then go ahead. We'll just back it up to 29(2)(a).

Go ahead.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, for your indulgence on 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud is correct that we actually had two series of consultations in Edmonton as well as in Calgary, and I also went to smaller rural centres across Alberta, including Lethbridge and Medicine Hat, because I wanted to make sure that Albertans had a chance to bring forward their thoughts on this no matter where they lived.

Speaking to the member's question, what that particular lawyer said – Mr. VanderLeek, who was introduced in the House and was involved in consultations as well – is that because of the schedule 2, section 1(4), that was in the AISH regulation, where a director of AISH could decide or not decide whether a trust was included as an asset, it provided a large amount of uncertainty for him as a lawyer that would have to advise families who are trying to set up their estate to help the individual on AISH so that individual on AISH could either use those funds for when they eventually age out of the AISH system or be able to use those funds for perhaps a better medical appliance to help them, whether it be a power wheelchair or something else, or perhaps a little bit of extra care just to pay for maintenance for, you know, a car or their apartment or place of residence. Madam Speaker, it was so hard for him to do that because he could provide no certainty.

If you're a parent, after being able to have your child, the worst thing that you want to see for your child is that uncertainty. When you pass away, you want to know that they're going to continue to get the care that they need and deserve and will continue to be contributing members of society. As a parent you want to be able to leave behind whatever you can in your estate, no matter how big it is, to make sure that that goes to help your children. That is something, Madam Speaker, that you just couldn't do without these changes, and that was a problem.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was really, really pleased to see that we're debating Bill 5, and I hope to see passage of the legislation. I did want to know if my colleague from Calgary-Currie contemplates educating members of the Alberta Real Estate Association and the Alberta Mortgage Brokers Association on the fact that, should the bill pass, individuals who are on AISH will be able to therefore actually purchase a property and qualify using funds that come from the trust that was bequeathed to them. I know in my past experience as a real estate agent that I was able, after many, many months of negotiations with the assistance of a caregiver who was knowledgeable with the AISH regulations, to allow an individual client of mine to actually make a purchase while maintaining AISH payments. But it was really difficult, and many lenders were really unaware of the fact that this was a possibility, even though remote at that time.

With this legislation's anticipated and hopeful passage, I'm hoping that there might be an education piece so that members in the real estate industry, both members of the Alberta Real Estate Association, the realtors, as well as the mortgage lenders from Alberta Mortgage Brokers Association, will be aware of their abilities.

The Deputy Speaker: We're back on the main bill. The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just first want to take an opportunity to thank from the bottom of my heart the Member for Calgary-Currie. I was privileged enough to attend two of the open houses that he had in the consultation, and the member has just displayed excellent vision in terms of his consultation and going forward, and I actually learned a lot.

My youngest has just recently applied for AISH. With the information that the member had brought forward and all of the consultation and everything I learned at those things, I actually went into that meeting quite informed. So I want to thank you so much for that. The timing was ideal. But, also, the member, Madam Speaker, just went into it with such a great deal of passion and thought, very conscientious. There was a lot to learn. It's a very complex and convoluted set of rules and regulations. Again I wanted to commend you for your excellent work, and I'm very glad to see this bill come back again.

One of the things I wanted to also mention. As a parent when you're going through this, one of the things I was also going to mention maybe to the member, Madam Speaker, is that part of this could also be on – I'm not sure within the law where this would fit in – the education of wills in general. I'll talk a little bit more about your wills gone badly piece, which I think is aptly named, personally. I think it speaks to the public. I think it says exactly what happens there.

But when you go forward with a will and when you're doing trusts and all these things, again, it's extremely complex. There are a lot of very talented people that are able to help us through these things, but it's extremely emotional, and you're looking forward to a time when you're not going to be here and when you may not be able to help out. Especially when you have a child that is vulnerable or has a disability of any sort, you want to make sure that that person has the right people looking after them. Sometimes with the nondiscretionary funds or whatever, depending on the decision that you make with those things, the people that you're putting into place are equally as important as the fund itself. Again, I think the member did an excellent job of concluding those things and bringing that information for us, so thank you so much for that.

I just wanted to be clear. There have been a lot of questions, too, about how these trusts work and all of this, especially with regard to AISH. We have a lot of issues with AISH in that money gets clawed back from AISH recipients for a lot of different things. Again to the member, you did a very good job of making sure that this wasn't going to happen. Sometimes CPP can claw back AISH. There are other things.

We have a person who works for us who is on AISH and then also gets his medication covered. Minimum wage, actually, believe it or not, bumped him up to a point where it actually clawed back either his medication or his AISH. He had to pick. There was no way that we could compensate at the work site for the amount that was being clawed back. Hopefully, those kinds of things are being dealt with. It's one of the consequences of these kinds of things, so I'm very grateful that the member took those kinds of things into consideration with this legislation. It was very thoughtful.

Trusts rarely serve as income, right? They are put there in order to – and like the member had mentioned, there are all sorts of things that happen in life, whether that's the purchase of a house, school. There are a lot of other things that these trusts can be used for in order to enhance the life of a person that is challenged with a disability of any sort. There are a lot of people who don't understand the difference between having that AISH payment and what that trust does, and there are a lot of questions about that. I get at least one or two a month, too, coming through and asking those questions. This legislation very nicely clarifies the difference between those trusts, how they're implemented, and the impact or lack of impact, hopefully, on AISH.

Of course, the member had already mentioned it as well, but I think it's worth saying again that we're one of the very last provinces in Canada to exempt trusts. It's important to understand that having those benefits revoked or clawed back due to inheritance could very much negatively impact the well-being but also the value that a person puts on themselves when they're receiving these funds. It's a part of being able to live independently, and for a lot of these folks that ability to live independently completely alters the way they see the world and see life. So this is really an important piece of that, and it's nice to see that this legislation will catch us up to where we need to be in terms of where we are in the country in financial protection.

Also, if you have two children or three children, the nice thing about this is that that trust fund can be specifically put towards a child with disabilities. So if there are concerns about all sorts of things that can happen when you pass away and dollars are being distributed and all those kinds of things, it's very protected to make sure that the child with disabilities and the child that may not have disabilities can have their dollars going the way that they need to.

Again, for the quality of life for a person that is challenged with disabilities, there is a lot more money. Like the member had mentioned, that could be a motorized wheelchair or that could be that you need ramps put in your home or that you have to live in a bungalow or that you have to have a person living with you for the rest of your life. These are really important things that allow families to be able to put money away to make sure that when we're not here to oversee that, those things are taken care of for our adult children.

I wanted to highlight the importance of the one-year grace period that the legislation put forward. My favourite term: the will was handled badly clause. This is an excellent part of this legislation because life is unpredictable, and this takes that into account. You know, in a perfect world all of us would have time to make sure our wills are intact and that we've done all of these things and can see the future and imagine what's going to happen. In the busy, busy world that we live in, you always think that you have more time and that you're always going to have the ability to do that. As we know, this doesn't always happen; therefore, we end up with situations where money may not have been taken care of for our disabled family members. It's so important to ensure that for these recipients whose parents haven't had that opportunity or that forethought to plan for what happens after their death, there is time to navigate this complex legal maze and the financial system so that those inherited funds move into that exempt space, into the discretionary and nondiscretionary funds. It's a very thoughtful measure, extremely thoughtful. When you're in grief and you're navigating those waters, it just gives a little bit of time to breathe and figure out how to do this. Thank you so much to the member for doing that and for having the forethought to put that in there.

There's another thing, too, and the member may have mentioned this. There is a difference between discretionary and nondiscretionary, and there are a lot of questions that come up about this. Again, because it is quite convoluted, I think that along with the package of what comes along with this, we want to make sure that our families understand the difference. The Henson trusts, which is where this whole discussion started, are the discretionary trusts. The beneficiaries of discretionary trusts generally don't have any control over their assets or how they're actually distributed. It's a really, really important piece because there are people that may not have the capability of overseeing those trusts, so that appointed trustee is going to be one of the closest people to your heart, one of the most important people in your life as you move forward because that trustee will manage those funds and the assets for the beneficiaries and actually have full decision-making power.

Then for the nondiscretionary funds the trustee doesn't have full authority on how the trust assets are distributed or paid out. So in some cases the beneficiary may have partial control over distribution. Again, it might depend on whether that nondiscretionary fund kicks in when a person is 18 versus 24. I know that in ours we have it sort of progressive, as our adult children get older, based on their ability to see the world and understand finances and all these kind of things, the control over the distribution of those assets that are held in trust. In other cases the trustee is simply required to distribute the assets and income according to some predetermined instructions. Again, it's a very, very thoughtful and profound way to look at how you are putting the future together for your children.

I think my interpretation of nondiscretionary funds or trusts is correct. We just went through this process ourselves. I want to just make sure. There were one or two things we sort of bumped into going through the process, so I just wanted to bring those up. If a person, a young adult or an adult with cognitive disabilities, is on AISH and let's say that I was to die before I could stipulate the terms of that inheritance that I'm leaving that child or to establish that trust, is there a scenario where my child could be put in a position where they're the ones that are setting up that nondiscretionary fund? This is a question that came up in actual negotiations, so something to think about, I think, in the regulations. I'm not even sure if regulations is the correct place for that, Member, but something to think about. Then appointing the trustee and stipulating the terms for how that money should be spent, something that came up during our consultations, literal consultations because we were actually trying to figure out how it worked.

In the case where a beneficiary is physically disabled but has all of their mental faculties in place, this is very positive because in a lot of those cases those folks are completely as capable as their parents or whoever, when receiving that inheritance, of making financial decisions. But if there is a person that has limited capacity with those kinds of things, we just want to make sure that that individual is not going to be necessarily making the financial decisions. Of course, this is up to the family in that situation, but it is a spot that I think may require a little bit of tweaking and understanding just because we do not want our family members being taken advantage of, obviously, when we're not here to oversee the situation.

I just want to make sure that there are specific measures put in place to recognize the special scenarios of somebody who may be cognitively disabled, that that is protected and that there is financial counsel in place for them for the future should they not be able to do that. I know that there are public guardians that the office can call on for a review to determine capacity; however, the concern is about the fact that if the individual doesn't have a support network, you know, they could really fall through the cracks here. Something to consider.

When we're talking to friends and family – of course, we have a network of friends and families that are dealing with these things all the time. This is about something that AISH workers could want to catch. We were informed that with AISH caseloads, it is highly unlikely that an AISH worker would have the capacity to intervene in these circumstances. Are we going to rely on kind outsiders to make those decisions? They might have the wherewithal and the knowledge and the assistance of the public guardian's office, but I'm just not sure that we want to leave that to chance.

The other issue that I had again is just a thought here. We were excited to find out about the new disability advocate. Would they be able to track that and intervene? Is that something that the advocate would possibly be able to participate in simply because the advocate would intervene with lawyers and accountants and all that kind of stuff? I'm just asking the question.

Then the other thing that I wanted to ask about is that this legislation of exempting trusts only applies to AISH legislation. We're all aware that AISH is monthly income. It's barely enough to live on, and AISH recipients need to stretch their dollars as a result. Many AISH recipients are also involved with various other social benefit programs – this is what I was talking about before – such as subsidized housing. Has the government considered the implications of limiting exemption trusts for the AISH program alone? If I'm receiving AISH and benefiting from another social benefit program and I receive an inheritance in the form of a trust or transfer and those funds go into that trust, I may keep my AISH thanks to this legislation, but if I'm no longer able to access those additional social benefit programs, I may still be negatively impacted. Just something that I'm wondering about because, again, trust funds aren't usually used to live off of. They're just for special circumstances.

The biggest question I have is about individuals who have already been rejected by the AISH program for receiving a trust in the past. We've had a couple of questions about this in our office, so that's why I'm asking. We know that applying for AISH can be a lengthy process. I mean, it's life altering for some people when they're rejected. What will happen to past applicants of AISH that have been denied access to the AISH program based on inheriting a trust? Will the government be contacting them to reapply? I don't know how that process is going to work. I haven't really been understanding what to say to the folks that have been calling me, so that's why I'm asking.

As I have said, I'm very pleased to support this legislation. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any others wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm quite pleased to make a few comments about Bill 5, An Act to Strengthen Financial Security for Persons with Disabilities. I applaud the Member for Calgary-Currie for his good work in this area. I've been meeting over the years with people like Bruce Uditsky of the disabilities group in Alberta – very passionate and articulate and effective leadership is provided to the disabled community – of course, the parent of a disabled child. He's taught me a lot about what's effective and what's not helpful for many of these folks.

This bill proposes to establish a trust of any value for the family member who's receiving AISH benefits without affecting their AISH eligibility. In practical terms the change means that an inheritance or financial gift placed in a properly prepared absolute discretionary trust is not the asset of the child and will not affect provincial benefits, as I understand it. To be clear, the treatment of trust income, however, is not changing, and this may affect the level of an AISH client's monthly living allowance, as has been discussed. Under the proposed changes disabled Albertans who receive an inheritance or a financial gift will be granted a one-year grace period to invest the money in an exempt asset like a trust fund or a registered disability savings plan.

The AISH program provides a living allowance of about $1,588 a month, health benefits, and supplementary benefits to eligible adults with a permanent disability. Under current law Albertans with assets totalling more than $100,000 are not eligible to receive AISH, although there are exemptions for such things as principal residence and a vehicle adapted to the persons with disabilities. AISH benefits end at 65, and that, of course, is the big reason and the need for this as well as the fact that when the parents of a disabled person die and are no longer there to support the individual, there is a clear need that would fall to the public purse if it was not there. There are close to 62,000 Albertans receiving AISH benefits, and the age, residency, and financial and medical situations are considered when determining eligibility.

It's clear to me that this is a step in the right direction and clear to many Albertans who need this help. It's those Albertans that most urgently need the government to also take the next step and index AISH payments. It's been several years now since AISH benefits were increased. The most common concern that I get expressed to me in my constituency when I meet with AISH folks is that this government hasn't at all indexed the AISH payment. That would go a long way to securing their stable livelihoods as well.

This allows us to do something that we haven't done before, and it's going to have a significant impact. I applaud the government for this change. It will not be without cost as more disabled Albertans will now be eligible for AISH benefits. We know that Budget 2018 is increasing the AISH program by $62 million from the 2017-18 forecast to address expected caseload growth, so one question I had was: how much of that caseload growth is directly attributable to this legislation, and how much reflects population growth? In other words, how many disabled Albertans will this change actually impact? I haven't yet heard that discussed.

With those questions, Madam Speaker, I'm pleased to give my support to this in second reading and look forward to the final discussions and vote.

3:30

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I wanted to speak to Bill 5, An Act to Strengthen Financial Security for Persons with Disabilities, because as I thought about it, I was thinking about the various people with various levels or areas of disability and why a bill like this would be important for them. AISH is a good support for people who are severely disabled, and it makes it possible for many people, people I know, to be able to live independently. But often it's just barely enough, and there's not that kind of financial security that you would often have if you were able to work and save for yourself. This is a way for parents to be able to provide some security, a foundation of knowing that they will have adequate resources to be taken care of as they go through life and after their parents pass on.

I was also thinking about people who become disabled not as children. Even there, having an inheritance, say, from a relative as they're older could really make a huge impact in a positive way in their life but not if it would interfere with them accessing AISH.

AISH is so valuable because it's a program that provides health benefits – dental, optical, prescription drugs – as well as many of the other costs of living. For a number of people I know with mobility issues due to some disability or other, all the mobility aids are vital. A friend of mine has a lift up her six steps, from the sidewalk to the front door, that was broken one time, and she was housebound for several weeks until it got repaired. There was no other option. Things like that can be expensive, and they're absolutely necessary, as are prescription drugs. I know someone with schizophrenia for whom the drugs are absolutely essential, and they're expensive. It's just something that on his own he would be hard pressed, if at all able, to afford. So you get a lot of instances.

Having that is important, but having the extras that are provided or would be made available by having income from a trust makes a huge difference. Again, I'm talking about people just because I know a number of people who are getting AISH support. A gentleman who became disabled in middle age is raising a teenaged child, and AISH is enough to keep them both alive and with a roof over their heads but not much else. So when the child, in grade 10, would like to go on a school trip, it's hard to find the money for that. In order to afford that, it would mean giving up something else which is most likely essential.

I think this is a very good bill. As was mentioned before, we are the last province in Canada, I believe, to have this exemption put into place for people who are living with disabilities. I think it's really important. It's so important for the people that will benefit from it and for the parents who will be able to make provision for their children while they're alive. I know a few people like that, too, and this is just something to really make life easier and less worrisome for them all.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Community and Social Services to close debate.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to thank all the members that spoke today and shared their thoughts for their support of this legislation. I would also like to thank the cosponsor of this bill, the MLA for Calgary-Currie, for his commitment and work to bring forward these important changes.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Our government believes that Albertans with disabilities should have access to the same opportunities for stability as other Albertans and should be able to plan for their future. Self-advocates, families, and those receiving these benefits have told us that trusts are important tools that make a positive difference in the quality of life of Albertans with disabilities and that these trusts shouldn't negatively impact an individual's eligibility for AISH. They also said that individuals need time to make financial decisions about an unanticipated inheritance or nonincome sum. We have listened to these voices, and we are taking action.

We want to reverse the wrong that was committed when the trusts were prohibited by the previous government in the 1990s. That is why this act exempts both discretionary and nondiscretionary trusts from the determination of AISH eligibility. It also provides a one-year grace period so that individuals have proper time to think through and make financial decisions that work for them. Through this and other actions we want the community to know that we are dedicated to working with them collaboratively, openly, and positively to make life better for Albertans with disabilities.

I look forward to a further discussion of this act in Committee of the Whole, where there will be a chance to discuss and address the specific issues that were raised by hon. members who spoke today.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a second time]

Government Motions

Provincial Fiscal Policies

13. Mr. Ceci moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Adjourned debate April 3: Mr. Westhead]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion?

Seeing none, I will now call the question.

Oh, the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you for that extra look around the Chamber, especially, Madam Speaker. Fiscal plan and Budget 2018: five words come to mind right away. The first word is "debt," $55 billion of debt today, headed towards $96 billion before this Finance minister and this government even consider balancing a budget. That's $96 billion of debt that our taxpayers have to pay off. Albertans have to accept fewer services and a burden on the next generation. And what a burden it is. It's a burden of $1.9 billion this year, $1.9 billion in interest, headed to $3.7 billion of interest in 2023-2024 before this Finance minister, this government even try to balance a budget, even try to stop kicking the can down the road.

The next word I think of is "inefficiency." In just three short years this Finance minister and this government have increased spending 16 per cent at a time that 175,000 Albertans are unemployed, over 45,000 Albertans have left the workforce permanently. Maybe the stat that is frightening is, as an economist put out last week, that 45 per cent of young men between 15 and 24 years of age cannot find work. So when Albertans, as they always have, become strong again, efficient again, and get back to work, their reward will be paying off $3.7 billion of interest annually and $96 billion of debt.

The ineffectiveness, the next word, of so much of the government's spending: the number of constituents, Albertans, that come to my office and talk about waiting times in our health care, inability to access the government program that they want. When you couple that with the highest per capita government spending next to Newfoundland, it makes one shake their head.

Madam Speaker, what I really worry about, though, is this Finance minister's and this government's permanent disregard for the debt that they are putting on the backs of Albertans, for the debt that they are putting on our economy, and for the interest – the interest – that hard-working Albertans are going to have to pay off permanently, $1.9 billion this year and $3.7 billion by 2023. And it surprises me. When I talk to Albertans, Albertans know what interest is. It costs us services. It takes away our tax dollars, so we can spend less on our families and in our communities, and it's a transfer of wealth from everyday, average, hard-working families to rich bondholders, to rich corporations, to rich organizations.

At first it surprised me, coming from the NDP, but then I saw how they structured the carbon tax, and I realized it's no surprise. The past emissions tax had big corporations paying carbon tax or becoming environmentally better or becoming better at reducing their emissions. The big companies were the ones paying the carbon tax. Madam Speaker, now it's every Albertan. Every Albertan. When they pull up to the pumps and see that a litre of regular is $1.25, they know that it's they who are pulling the burden of this government on their backs.

Madam Speaker, a good financial plan is a road map. It should be a map that shows us exactly the choices that we're making today, how they will affect our future. Well, the hon. Finance minister's road map shows a future of at least $96 billion in debt, annual interest expenses of $3.7 billion, a 67 per cent increase in carbon tax, following his ally Justin Trudeau, just to start covering some of the high per capita spending. Part of this budget even is all-in on our resource economy, counting on the Trans Mountain pipeline in later years to help balance the budget, making this government more reliant on nonrenewable resource revenues than in the past.

Madam Speaker, where this government really failed is in being unable to achieve its three highest priorities. It outlined those priorities as protecting public services, returning to balance, and diversifying the economy. Albertans know that the $1.9 billion in annual interest, $55 billion in debt just today mean that every single priority that we have for our families, for our communities, for our seniors, for our needs from government is going to be in jeopardy. That's $1.9 billion. Every single Alberta family is deep in debt for what their government has done, but where this hits home to me is when you realize that $1.9 billion is greater than something like 19 out of 24 of the government departments.

I get a lot of people in Cypress-Medicine Hat that are concerned about seniors and housing for seniors. When you see that this government is spending $700 million on Seniors and Housing, approximately a third of what we're paying to bondholders around the world, it makes one fully aware of how interest is going to crowd out all of the other important priorities of Albertans and how this government's lack of ability to control spending, how this government's desire to transfer money from average, hard-working Albertans to rich bondholders is going to have severe consequences.

Madam Speaker, that's not all. I'm just reading today that next time the Bank of Canada meets, most business leaders in Canada are expecting yet another increase in interest rates. I believe that that'll be the third one in the last little while. Not as bad as the six credit downgrades that our Finance minister and the NDP government have had, but can you imagine, for every quarter, half-quarter, half-point or point increase in the interest rate, what this is going to do to the services that we all so much want to provide for Albertans or to that money that needs to be left in Albertans' pockets so we can take our families to movies, we can take our families on vacations, we can help our neighbours, and we can help our communities?

Madam Speaker, this government's addiction to debt and interest is going to crowd out so many of the things that are important to us.

At the same time, we've changed our utility market, where we're already paying over the 6.8-cent guaranteed cap. In the government budget I believe it was $80 million for having the taxpayer subsidize the ratepayer, and here we are in the first month doing it. We saw the Finance minister come back and ask for an extra $1.5 billion. His average three years in a row is $1 billion that he's come back and asked for – he's been that far over budget – a billion dollars that we could leave with families and communities instead.

But can you imagine if the government miscalculated their capacity market and that $80 million turns into $300 million or $1 billion? Madam Speaker, everywhere I go, people in the electricity generation business tell me that they're terrified that this government has exposed us so much to natural gas electricity generation. What if the cost of gas goes to six bucks? Can you imagine? Can you imagine if our Alberta families and communities get hit with that double whammy at the same time as these tax increases, at the same time as these exponentially growing interest and deficits? Albertans are strong, families and communities have been strong for over 100 years here, but this is a time of great concern.

Madam Speaker, we've also seen how this government and its big spending has destroyed investor confidence. Investors know that today's $55 billion deficit, 2023's $96 billion deficit is just a future tax on wealth creation, on job creation, and on the good, hard work that these people do and the risks that they take. I've seen numbers from $30 billion to $80 billion that this Finance minister and this NDP government have driven out of Alberta. Whatever number it is, that is tens of thousands of jobs, that is thousands of dollars of wealth, and that is thousands of dollars of opportunity for people to earn money to take care of their families and communities.

Madam Speaker, I'll say it again. This government's number one priority of protecting public services: they have been a disastrous failure at it. The interest cost is going to eat into every important priority of all Albertans: $1.9 billion this year, somewhere around 2 and a half billion dollars next year, somewhere around $3.7 billion just four years from now. That's before interest rates rise again, and that's before this Finance minister gets his credit downgraded again. This government, this Finance minister have jeopardized every single Alberta family.

Return to balance was the second top priority. Madam Speaker, we all know that words do not pay debt. What we've seen is a government and a Finance minister in three years add $42 billion to the debt legacy of Alberta. They took it from $13 billion to $55 billion, headed to $96 billion. If some of his assumptions happen – and we've seen from the past, with his inability to balance a budget, his willingness to go $1 billion to $1.5 billion over budget every year, that it will happen again – if this path continues, balance will not be seen. A permanent wall of debt of $100 billion will forever rob our families and our kids of the services that we desire.

Madam Speaker, I also want to talk about the deficit and how it's presented. A good financial plan is clear. Well, this financial plan is not clear. Yes, this Finance minister and, yes, this government had to borrow $8.8 billion on their credit card to pay for the groceries, to pay for this year's operating expenses. You have to look in greater detail, but what's in the budget is that they also borrowed $6.4 billion – $6.4 billion – for capital spending, a $15.2 billion shortfall, an incredible number that some wealth creator, some job provider, some hard-working Alberta family has to pay someday.

Here I want to pause. Yes, it's important to get value for money. Yes, it's important to have a priority list so we all know when Albertans are going to get the roads and the infrastructure and the services that we all equally deserve. But the first sign of where we're headed with interest robbing the priorities of all Albertans is that $600 million cut to Transportation, $600 million less. That will start to magnify. We'll start to see that throughout. As I mentioned, not only is interest approximately three times what we're spending on Seniors and Housing, but it's more interest than we're spending on the Justice and Solicitor General department, and, maybe most shamefully, we're paying $400 million more in interest than we're paying for Children's Services next year.

I look at what this government has done and I look at where we're at today, and I wonder how in the world this government thinks that they're ever going to balance the budget and correct things. We've seen this government raise all tax rates: a 20 per cent corporate tax increase; increasing personal taxes; the carbon tax, the biggest hidden tax grab in Alberta history.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you. Madam Speaker, I do appreciate what this member has to say. I have to say that it is distressing to hear that the carbon tax is one of the biggest hidden taxes in Alberta's history. I would wonder if he can continue down that thought line and please explain how it is that this carbon tax is going to affect the average Albertan.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, hon. colleague. I think of my constituency first, my hard-working people that I'm very grateful to represent. Irrigation farmers come to me and say that it's costing them up to $2,500 a month for their pivots just in carbon tax. It'll mean hiring fewer hired men. It'll mean fewer holidays for them and their family. It'll mean less ability to repair their balance sheets.

I think, you know, that in Medicine Hat we're about 40 miles from the Saskatchewan border. For years and years when my friends or relatives would visit me from Saskatchewan, they'd limp into Medicine Hat with a gas tank right on E, right on fumes because our gas was so much cheaper. They wanted to share in the Alberta advantage. And, hon. colleague, I'm embarrassed to say that now people are filling up in Maple Creek or Swift Current because it's quite a bit cheaper because of not having the carbon tax.

When the NDP government's own expert said that carbon leakage was going to move industries and move jobs to neighbouring jurisdictions that didn't have a carbon tax, he got that exactly right. He got the fact that investment is being scared out of Alberta. Everyday Albertans, working families are seeing first-hand how it is hard to make ends meet, how it is hard to have enough left over to send a child to university, to have a person in sports or dance, and they are doing what they can to make ends meet and keep the Alberta economy stronger.

You know, the other area where this government totally failed was in their third goal, diversifying the economy. The Premier stands up consistently about how they're going to diversify the economy away from nonrenewable resources. Of course, now we have this effort to get the Trans Mountain pipeline. I am certainly cheering as loud as I can, as all Albertans are, for her to be successful in this, but we can't forget that when she was first elected – I call it the apology tour – she ran around Canada, she ran around North America apologizing for the Alberta oil and gas industry, the industry that had provided billions and billions of dollars of wealth . . .

Mr. Cyr: Embarrassing cousins.

Mr. Barnes: Embarrassing cousins.

. . . thousands and tens of thousands of jobs, Madam Speaker, and had been such a great environmental producer in a strong, socially conscious jurisdiction. We felt the need to apologize for it. Well, I have never apologized for our strong industry. It's amazing the value-added that our men and women in the oil and gas business can do at tremendous risk, tremendous cost, pulling oil or gas out of the ground, and what they can do with it in terms of value-added, all the way to running our cars, our homes, and the industries that it provides.

But let's not forget that now in this budget this government will be 16 per cent more reliant on nonrenewable resource revenue than we were before, another perfect example of how this government has failed. The stated goal was to diversify the economy. They ended up driving billions and billions of dollars of private investment out of Alberta. Investor confidence is at a low. Investor confidence is very, very shaken, driving tens of thousands of jobs out at the same time. As a result, here we are today more reliant as a percentage on nonrenewable resource revenue than we were before. Just another failure of this government.

Hon. colleagues, I'll sum this up. This Finance minister, this government had three stated goals . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Budgets are about choices. They're never a simple exercise, but they tell Albertans what your values are. The values of the Alberta Party are very much in the spirit of not just simply opposing everything the government does reflexively because the government has done it but making sure to hold the government to account, which is an important job of opposition, not simply opposing for the sake of opposition but proposing ideas. That's a core value of the Alberta Party, and I think Albertans very much appreciate that style of politics. I think it's something that's been missing in this province for too long.

While I certainly will offer some critique of this government's budget, the first thing I'm going to do is that I'm going to talk not about what the government has done wrong; I'm going to talk about what the Alberta Party would do differently. How would we approach the fiscal challenges facing our province? How would we craft a budget that is going to be optimistic, that's going to speak to the opportunities that exist in our province? Make no mistake; there are tremendous opportunities in this province. Alberta is a remarkable place to live. We have the highest quality of life of almost anywhere in the world. We have some of if not the most innovative, entrepreneurial, caring, remarkable people anywhere in the world.

A lot of that strength comes from the diversity of this province, and that is something that we believe must be leveraged and tapped into, appreciated and celebrated, diversity of all kinds. We need to find pathways for indigenous people to participate much more fully in society and community, to address some of the terrible inequities that have happened through time, to realize the opportunity that comes from unlocking that talent that exists within indigenous communities, that exists within communities of new Canadians, that exists within communities of people who have been here for a long time. There are opportunities in this province that are not, unfortunately, being fully realized.

One of the first things the Alberta Party would do to recognize and realize those opportunities is that we would invest more in K to 12 education than this government's budget proposes to. That is a value that we hold dear, that we are going to educate a capable, diverse workforce that is not only prepared for the 21st century but is going to create the 21st century, that is going to create the jobs of the future right here in Alberta.

The other thing the Alberta Party believes in is the power of "and." While we believe we can create the next economy right here in Alberta, we also believe that we can and should have a strong oil and gas sector in this province. Although the world is changing around us, we absolutely must get our products to tidewater. We absolutely must find a reasonable regulatory structure that ensures that Alberta develops our oil and gas properties, our oil and gas assets, responsibly, which we have always done in this province, but we do so in a way that has a minimum of red tape, that attracts investment back to Alberta, that does not see the capital fleeing to the United States and other jurisdictions as it has, that we create an attractive investment climate in this province, that we ensure that the people will be investing in Alberta, creating those jobs in Alberta, like we've done in this province for so long so successfully.

Other choices we need to make: the Alberta Party would find ways of ensuring our health care system is far more efficient and effective than it is. Our Health budget takes up nearly 50 per cent. Health spending in this province takes up nearly 50 per cent of every dollar spent in this province. That is far too high, and those costs continue to increase. We would find efficiencies within the public health care system by ensuring, first and foremost, that front-line personnel feel that they have a stake in making the system better. For too long it's been a top-down, closed culture that does not welcome innovation. One of the most important things we can do is reform AHS culture to make AHS more receptive to innovation in service delivery.

The Alberta Party believes too many patients are being treated in acute-care facilities when they would be far more comfortable in communities in more appropriate settings, and they would have better health outcomes. They would be closer to home, closer to their families, and it would save us money. That must be an imperative. There's far too much duplication and overlap between AHS and Alberta Health. That not only costs money to simply physically run, but it slows down the pace of change, the pace of innovation. It slows down adaptiveness and responsiveness, and the people that I talk with in the system are profoundly, incredibly frustrated. They have gone into health care because of the emphasis on that second word, "care." It's a caring profession. They want to make the system work. They have a stake in making the system work, but far too often they feel beaten down. They feel dismissed. They feel that they can't have the impact that they want, they can't bring the changes that they want because the system just simply holds them back. The duplication and overlap between AHS and Alberta Health has a big impact on that.

We would reform EMS dispatch to ensure that paramedics are not stuck in emerg waiting with a patient and that those paramedics are instead on the roads where we need them, providing the services that Albertans rely on, those remarkable people who are looking out for us in our most desperate times. They're not stuck in emerg, but they're out on the road doing the work that we need them to do.

The Alberta Party would review unfilled positions within AHS management structure and make sure that money is not being spent simply holding a position. We'd focus on wellness, on mental health, on long-term care, on chronic conditions like dementia. We would bring in a proper dementia strategy, not just some headlines and some rehashed announcements and reannouncements. We would genuinely and truly listen to people in communities, those with dementia, their loved ones and caregivers to make sure that we get it right on these important, important areas.

Speaking of another important area, AISH and PDD. The Alberta Party would not only index AISH payments to the cost of living;

we would make a one-time catch-up payment. AISH has not been increased in this province since 2012, and that is probably one of the most surprising and profoundly disappointing aspects of not just this budget but of all three previous budgets this NDP government. This government, that is supposedly there for the less fortunate, for the people who in our community we need to ensure that we are looking out for, they have let those people down. The most tangible example of that is the fact that AISH funding has not yet been increased, and I'm afraid that as we head into an election year, this is the kind of thing that we can expect to be made as part of an election platform.

I was always taught to do the right thing because it's the right thing to do. Increasing funding for AISH is the right thing to do. It was the right thing to do in 2015 and '16 and '17 and '18, and just because none of those years had an election in them, it didn't mean that you shouldn't have done that. That's one thing that the Alberta Party would do, catch up AISH funding and index it going forward.

We would focus on social innovation. We would partner with the not-for-profit sector and ensure that they are partners with the government in innovative and cost-effective service delivery. This is an area where we have a strong sense of volunteerism, we have a remarkably robust not-for-profit sector, and we have opportunities to innovate in how we make those services more efficient. The government should be using its role as funder to compel some efficiency within that system, within that structure.

There are multiple disconnected government agencies. Not-for-profits I talk with are profoundly frustrated at the stovepipes that happen. They work to specific granting envelopes, and even if those don't make a lot of sense, they do what they need to do to keep the lights on. We need a more flexible, more innovative funding model to ensure that not-for-profits can deliver the services that Albertans deserve.

Seniors' housing. You know, one of the most remarkable things I learned in the estimates process with Seniors and Housing was that the vaunted $1.2 billion, five-year investment in affordable housing in Alberta has just kind of quietly become a seven-year investment. That's 40 per cent longer. How many Albertans will not be housed in affordable housing because this government has dragged its feet in rolling out what should be a compelling project? My guess is that they've done that because they want to take a government-first model and not work with not-for-profits, not work with private delivery agencies. There's no good reason to do that beyond pure ideology and a world view that says that you think that's a good idea. Well, it isn't. We had a model in this province that has worked incredibly well for a very long time, and this government has arbitrarily gone away from it, which has caused people to not be housed in affordable housing who badly, badly need that housing. Seniors' housing is another area where we have that similar problem.

We've talked about indigenous peoples. Through our work with the child intervention panel I know that there is some work going on there. There has been some increased funding and we very much applaud that, but we want to make sure that we are clear here in the Alberta Party that we absolutely support Jordan's principle. It should be the role of the provincial government to ensure that services are provided to children, services are provided to people who need those services when and where they need those services, and if there's a jurisdictional fight to be had, it is our job as the government to manage that on their behalf. Our job is to manage the complexity. If we need to go fight with Ottawa for funding, we fight with Ottawa for funding. We don't put that on the people of Alberta.

On the climate change file, making climate leadership work for Albertans is very important for the Alberta Party. We have been very clear that we believe in a properly executed carbon tax. We think that can work. The Alberta Party believes that climate change is real. We believe it is human caused. We believe it is a problem that needs addressing. But we also see the opportunity in addressing climate change in this province. It is not simply a matter of having a few headlines, of creating a carbon tax, and then looking to our west and saying: "We have a carbon tax. May we please have a pipeline?" Clearly, that hasn't worked.

The purpose of having a carbon tax is to ensure that we have the resources we need to innovate. The purpose of that is to shift behaviour and ensure that we have created a framework where innovation can happen here in Alberta, and I firmly believe it will be Alberta companies and Alberta technologies that we will sell to the rest of the world. Here in Alberta we can solve the problems that our world has as it relates to climate change, and that creates market opportunity. Unfortunately, we have a government that's looked at it as a simple cash cow, as a source of revenue, and they've unfortunately, I think, really soured Albertans on what can and should be a very potent policy tool. We saw a group of economists just recently talk about how a well-structured carbon tax can work. We need to move it to revenue neutrality, not as a cash cow. These are the opportunities that exist on the climate change file, but unfortunately this government has let us down.

Now, I'm going to spend the last couple of minutes here that I have not just talking about what we would do differently. One of the great concerns I have with this particular budget the government has brought forward is that so much of the so-called path – and I don't know if Hansard will be able to capture my air quotes when I say "path to balance." My grave concern is that so much of that path to balance is based on ifs: if we get a Kinder Morgan pipeline built, if that pipeline is built on time; if we get Enbridge line 3, if that pipeline is built on time; if corporate income tax increases; if personal income tax increases by 40 per cent; if oil prices go to $75; if we turn 3 and a half billion dollars of nonrenewable resource revenue into 10 and a half billion dollars of resource revenue; if this government actually sticks to their very own budget that they put out, which, by the way, you haven't to date at any time. That's an awful lot of ifs. I think I'm running out of fingers on two hands to count up the number of ifs. There's too much risk. Even if you actually achieve all of those things, we still find ourselves with $96 billion in debt at the end of the day.

In the last minute I just want to read some questions, and perhaps I'll have an opportunity under 29(2)(a) to talk about some of what I heard at a budget town hall that I held in Calgary-Elbow here on the weekend. Just while we're talking about some of the challenges with the carbon tax, one of my constituents asked me to ask the government on her behalf – and I will do this now – how the carbon tax is allowed to be a tax on a tax, how it is that we're allowed to have GST charged on top of the carbon tax. This is a source of great frustration. This is someone who tells me that she doesn't mind action on climate change but had grave concerns about the way this particular government has rolled out the carbon tax. So on her behalf I ask that question to the government.

My concerns are that even if this government actually achieves all the things it says that it's going to do – and while I'm cheering for all those things to happen, I really have my doubts that they actually will – we'll still have $96 billion in debt. Even if only one of those things goes wrong – and, by the way, as we've obviously seen here recently with Kinder Morgan, we already know that one of those risks has been realized – then we're looking at well in excess of a hundred billion dollars in debt. That is something we and our children are going to have to pay back. That leads to upwards of $4 billion a year.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just want to acknowledge the Member for Calgary-Elbow for coming up with a shadow budget for four budgets in a row. He's done a remarkable amount of work, and it shows he knows this topic really well. I'm wondering if the member has any sense of what the impact of the shadow budget would be on future generations in contrast to the current budget as it's proposed.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I really appreciate that. You know, one of the things our shadow budget would do is that we would spend more money on capital investment than this government would propose to spend. When we have an infrastructure deficit in this province like we do, there are badly, badly needed schools, not just new schools but refurbishing existing schools; health care facilities, and not just large-scale hospitals although, of course, that's a huge part of it; seniors' facilities of all different levels to ensure that we can move people out of hospitals so they're in communities closer to home and in accommodation that's more appropriate for them and that we're saving the money that we need; that we're investing in affordable housing; that we're investing in transportation and infrastructure; that we're investing in transit; that we're investing in flood mitigation. These are things that matter very much to the people of Alberta. The way you do that, Madam Speaker, is you set your priorities, and you ensure that the operational side of spending doesn't get out of control, unfortunately, like this government has.

I will take this opportunity to ask some questions and just share some of the dozen or so comments that I asked my constituents to write down when we held a town hall in Calgary-Elbow this past Saturday. We had about 20 or so intrepid souls come out in the snow and sleet to talk about the budget. What struck me was the interest that that group of constituents had in ensuring sustained, high-quality, efficient, and effective public services. That was the message I heard loud and clear. Equally, they understood that to do that, we need to be able to pay the bills. They were willing to make sure that as long as the services that were provided were high quality and efficient and effective, they're willing to pay fair value for that.

Some of the questions. This, I think, ties to the shadow budget that we have brought in and to the question the member asked. Point 1 is to ensure a civil and respectful dialogue and climate in government. Well, that isn't always possible in this place, Madam Speaker. Politics has been known to break out in this place. But I do hope that a core value of the Alberta Party that we demonstrate is raising the level of debate, not just opposing for the sake of opposition but proposing ideas.

There was a desire for sustainable funding for schools and that we ensure that we maintain reasonable class sizes while addressing the increasing complexities of our student population with a specific focus on mental health. That's something we believe very much in. It's a very, very important area of emphasis for us.

A constituent felt it was very odd to have a carbon tax on schools, giving a school board a budget and then taking a portion of it back for a carbon tax, money that really should have gone to students. Should that not be exempt? Yes, in my opinion, it should be exempt, and it's an oversight and a shortcoming of the way this government has rolled out the carbon tax.

How can we speed up strengthening indigenous peoples so we're not continuing to waste the tremendous human potential in indigenous communities? Again, a very, very thoughtful comment and something that I referenced earlier.

How do we not just provide health care services, but how do we catch up on wait times and address the health system backlog for better outcomes and long-term cost savings to the system? Invest now to catch up on that backlog. Make sure that those wait times are cut down.

How do we better educate industry about public and regulatory expectations so investors know what they're facing in a predictable way? Make sure that we reduce red tape and have clarity within the regulatory process of all kinds as a part of the grand bargain to make sure that we attract investors.

How are we reducing administration in health, education, and other areas to spend more money on the front lines? An absolutely essential question, especially in health care.

Someone asked about climate change. The question that was asked by my constituent: what percentage of climate change is due to anthropogenic activity? Of that, how much is discretionary?

Someone asked whether we would consider a PST. That was a question that was asked. The comment was that they were willing to pay fair value for high-quality public service.

How are we preparing young men for adulthood? How do we make sure that . . . [Mr. Clark's speaking time expired]

I ran out of time.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm happy to rise, and I would like to propose that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 7

Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry, forestry and agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Either/or, Madam Speaker. Thank you very much. It is my pleasure today to move second reading of Bill 7, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act.

I'm seeking the Assembly's support for a plan to help strengthen Alberta's local food industry. This legislation is an opportunity for our government to help the local food sector realize its full potential through a more focused and deliberate approach. Supporting sustainable growth in the local food sector includes leveraging existing programs to address barriers and strengthen the ability of local producers and processors to succeed, introducing legislation to raise the profile of the local food industry and strengthen consumer confidence, and exploring additional opportunities to address challenges. Alberta and Saskatchewan are currently the only provinces that have not implemented a local food strategy.

There are several key points in this legislation which directly reflect feedback we received from local food stakeholders through our engagement processes, including how local food should be defined, setting standards for organic food, designating a local food week, and creating a local food council.

Setting standards for organic local food means that we intend to adopt the Canadian organic standards. Organic producers who are exporting internationally or even across provincial boundaries already have to comply with these standards to market organic food, so we are just levelling the playing field for all producers. Essentially, we are saying that in order to use the word “organic” to market your products, you have to have organic certification. Simple as that. This brings local producers in line with existing federal standards, so we are closing a regulatory gap and giving consumers consistent assurance of the expected standards the producer is meeting when consumers are purchasing any organic food products in Alberta.

The next initiative in this legislation, designating the third week of August as Alberta local food week, gives us an opportunity to celebrate and promote local food in our province. Local food week is a great fit with the established Open Farm Days initiative to really help build awareness and draw more attention to local food. Open Farm Days is an annual cross-ministry and industry partnership that celebrates local producers and gives Albertans a taste of where their food comes from and how it is produced. Farmers and ranchers invite their urban and rural neighbours to stop in for a visit to share stories, see demonstrations, and learn more about the farmers who grow their food. Some of Alberta’s most talented chefs in rural communities also host a memorable series of farm-to-table culinary events around the province using Alberta farm-fresh products. Open Farm Days is in its fifth year and has grown each year, reaching over 100 host farms with a total of 20,000 visitors last year. This summer we hope to celebrate Alberta’s inaugural local food week, and, of course, everyone is encouraged to join Alberta’s farmers and ranchers and chefs as producers open their gates on August 19 and 20 for this year’s Open Farm Days.

This act also establishes a local food council. This council will be representative of Alberta’s local food sector, including large, medium, and small producers and processors. They will provide advice and report on provincial policies, programs, pilot projects, or initiatives to support the continued growth and sustainability of Alberta’s local food sector, including potential barriers and challenges for local food producers and local food processors, specific challenges faced by small producers and processors, local food aggregation and distribution, how to increase consumer awareness and access to local food. This advisory board will provide fulsome guidance and a thorough report on the current state of local foods in Alberta as well as its challenges and the many opportunities in this sector.

Continuing to support the growth of this industry is an important step in achieving our government’s economic diversification and job creation goals. This legislation will help create opportunities to promote the local food industry, enhance consumer awareness and education, and reinforce consumer confidence. Food and beverage processing is one of the largest employers in our province’s manufacturing sector, with record sales of $14.6 billion in 2016.

Consumer interest in and demand for local food continues to grow, making this an important market opportunity for rural sustainability and for Alberta producers and processors. In Alberta local food sales and direct-to-consumer channels such as farmers’ markets and farm retail have more than doubled since 2008 and exceeded $1 billion last year. Alberta has a vibrant farmers’ market industry, with both public markets and more than 130 Alberta-approved farmers’ markets contributing more than $850 million in 2017 to the growth and diversity of our provincial economy.

A great deal of innovation in food is coming from start-ups who are capitalizing on shifting consumer preferences. Our government already supports these efforts through policies, programs, grant funding, risk management programs, and research. For example, my ministry’s Leduc Food Processing Development Centre provides business incubation support as well as scientific support for recipe refinement and scale-up.

Initiatives such as the successful Alberta small brewers development program have also helped local craft breweries expand their businesses and invest in new product development. Agriculture and Forestry’s Explore Local program supports Alberta’s direct-to-consumer food producers and processors by delivering events, research, resource development, education, coaching, mentoring, and advocacy.

Alberta is the only province in Canada with a government-led approved farmers’ market program that serves as a valuable business incubator to provide business growth opportunities for community-based businesses to make, bake, or grow the products they sell. One of my favourite stories that has been a real success in Alberta is the Little Potato Company, those little bags of potatoes you can get at Safeway or Superstore. They were a farmer and daughter operation out of the back of a truck at a farmers’ market right here in Edmonton. They now employ more than a hundred people in the city of Edmonton and have expanded to the state of Idaho and the province of PEI as well.

Small and medium-sized businesses throughout the program can also access programs like the community and regional economic support, CARES, program, which can provide training for businesses entering the organic growing sector, improve agrifood processing capacity development, establish mentorship programs, encourage local spending and opportunities for value-added processing and manufacturing in Alberta.

In developing this draft legislation, we engaged with several other ministries and numerous external stakeholders to get feedback in the early stages of developing our proposal. I’m also thankful to the MLA for Strathcona-Sherwood Park for her hard work and input on this important initiative. We heard from people representing a broad cross-section of producers, processors, industry groups, indigenous peoples, and municipalities. All the feedback we have received to date was taken into consideration during the development of the proposed Supporting Alberta’s Local Food Sector Act. There are nearly limitless opportunities to build on this legislative platform and continue to celebrate and raise awareness of local foods in Alberta.

I look forward to our debate of this bill in the Legislature, and I anticipate it will spark some important and exciting conversation about local food amongst my colleagues here. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I’d like to move to adjourn debate on Bill 7.

[Motion to adjourn debate lost]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members that would like to speak? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thanks, Madam Speaker. It’s an interesting day in the Chamber today. Thanks for the opportunity to speak to agriculture, one of my most favourite things, and also to speak to Bill 7 and expound on some of my thoughts. It’s very interesting. We’re talking about Supporting Alberta’s Local Food Sector Act. This bill has the primary focus to standardize the use of organic labelling and certification. This will ensure that any food products grown and produced here in Alberta will comply with current CFIA standards in labelling and certification. Currently there is no one threshold for products produced locally for sale within Alberta. This would strive to make a uniform minimum standard within Canada. Outside of Canada, in the U.S. they have a completely different standard than this, so that’s somewhat problematic.

I understand that the overall purpose of this act will be to encourage the development and success of the local food sector throughout the province and to regulate agriculture products that are produced or processed in the province and marketed and sold as organic products, again, within Alberta. It is intended that this would be achieved primarily through three parts of this act, starting with establishing local organic standards, the creation of a local food week to coincide with Open Farm Days in August, and, finally, this act proposes to establish a local food council.

I will start off with the first part, establishing local organic standards. This, I guess, closes a loophole or a shortfall in existing legislation. As I understand, previous to this products sold within Alberta had no established common criteria for organic labelling or standards. However, if you exported these same products outside of Alberta, you had to comply with CFIA standards for labelling and certification. Going forward, the CFIA standards will have to be met within Alberta in order to use the term “certified organic” on these products. This puts us into the same standard as other jurisdictions. The hon. minister has talked about Saskatchewan, but I also believe that Quebec may have a weakness there. Now, that’s not necessarily a bad thing, to have a minimum standard. But let’s face it. If I was building bicycles in my garage, they would have to meet certain safety standards set out by the Canada Safety Council, and this appears to be much the same idea.

Now, all of this doesn’t mean that I may not have some concerns, though, and I hope that through debate and through questioning those can be alleviated. I have reached out to several producer groups about this issue, and I continue to wait for feedback. Concerns that have been raised to me are: is this in any way taxpayer funded? By that, I mean that if a local producer wants to get certified and is willing to comply with the process, will the cost be simply part of their business model and covered by said producer in its entirety, or is it entirely covered by the government? Do we know for sure how much this certification costs, and is there a fee continuing on after being certified and approved or associated with a certified organic label? Madam Speaker, the question also begs: how long does this process take, and is there an overbearing bureaucratic process involved?

I understand the heartfelt intent of this legislation, and we’ve dealt with this and discussed this in the Chamber before. These are important questions that some folks want answers to, and that’s part of this parliamentary process. Madam Speaker, as you well know, sometimes the devil is in the details, and wordage going forward is absolutely critical and important.

Speaking of these details, another small issue came up in the brief time we’ve had to consult about this bill with some stakeholders. It’s been brought to my attention that in the act, especially on page 4, under application, 3(a), it seems to have consequences, possibly unintended consequences, that far outreach what the bill is purported to be. This section talks about, in my interpretation, Madam Speaker, all agricultural products, and I would quote from the bill.

- 3 This Act applies to
 - (a) agricultural products produced or processed in the Province.

Now, that’s a wide-ranging commentary because we also have commercial production within the province. It does specifically talk about organic products produced or processed in the province. So, Madam Speaker, that’s somewhat a bone of contention. Given the mistakes that the government has made in the past on rural issues, I believe that it’s fair. I’m witnessing the minister making notes in that regard, and I think that’s fair. Whether we have a legitimate complaint or not, I think it’s our role, our duty, our responsibility to Albertans to get clarity on this.

Madam Speaker, why does an act that purports to be primarily about organic labelling and certification include subsections (a) and (b) which separate organic products and all others? Why would the distinction be needed? If it’s a needed distinction, I’d argue that subsection (a) may not provide an accurate distinction. On our farm we grow and distribute products that go to commercial food use; i.e., a maltster. Now, those are commercial food products. Would we still, with that interpretation, need to be certified, need to be qualified to do this?

As a Conservative I always tend to focus on things like red tape, bureaucracy, and extra costs. This bill is no different. I can’t help but wonder why the need for the formation of a local food council to provide a report no later than 12 months after the establishment of said council “containing advice and recommendations regarding provincial policies, programs, pilot projects or initiatives to support the continued growth and sustainability of Alberta’s local food sector.” Madam Speaker, the market does that.

Now, on the upside, I find it refreshing that there is a drop-dead date to this council, and for that the minister is to be commended.

This government made it a priority to review ABCs in Alberta and find efficiencies, and again I commend the minister and the government for that. I have to ask: why couldn’t an existing group be tasked with this project? Why not use the Alberta Food Processors Association, for example? They handle commercial and organics. Why the need to create something else from scratch? Wouldn’t there be a more efficient and effective way of doing things? But, then, government funding seems to be unending. Wouldn’t it save the need for ministerial appointments? Was that explored or rejected? We have no understanding of whether it was or wasn’t. Why didn’t the minister commission a white paper? In previous governments the minister would go out and voluntarily seek public opinion to create a white paper of opinion from voluntary participants going forward. These are all legitimate questions that need to be answered, Madam Speaker.

As I mentioned earlier, the devil is in the details, and there are some details that are a bit troubling in their vagueness. Now, I already talked about section 3(a), and I need to point out an issue that arose from discussions amongst members about section 6(a), the certification program. This clause gives the minister extraordinary powers to establish “a certification program for agricultural products other than those certified as organic.” Madam Speaker, I just gave the example of our farm, where we deliver products to a human food-use facility. Could it be interpreted that we, too, would have to have a certification program because it’s going to a food-use facility? It’s not specifically defined in the terminology in the legislation presented to us. This is worrying.

For what reason does the minister need this power or the unelected regulator enforcers? Why are we discussing certification of nonorganic products in this bill purported to be about standardizing the Alberta regulations to coincide with federal CFIA ones? CFIA, Madam Speaker, is a high standard. I’ve been to facilities where people gather eggs in the small community of Nobleford, in southern Alberta. They voluntarily inspect the food that they receive and sell it as CFIA-qualified inspected.

Madam Speaker, I’m afraid that this is going to cause some issues with farmers. As a group this government hasn’t exactly endeared themselves to rural folk over their time in power, and I don’t think this clause will help that opinion. I stood in the Chamber during the debates over Bill 6, and I fully hold witness to that.

Will the minister be asking us to just trust that this clause won’t be used to bring in other standards on all agricultural products? That could be raised. Again, the devil is in the details. Are we going to be required to certify all the grain we grow? It’s not specifically written. I know some members have joked across the bow about the precursor to the Alberta Wheat Board. I know I would perceive that to be completely hilarious, but the wording doesn’t preclude that.

Does the certification include how many cattle or hogs are raised, or is this simply a clause used to enhance a standard marketing ploy, perhaps a made-in-Alberta standard? That is to be expounded upon.

Whatever the purpose, the vague way it's presented, the very obtuse language, makes us wonder what the end game is here. The wording is ambiguous, Madam Speaker. I understand that consultation takes time. I can't help but wonder. I would like to see a list of the groups that have been consulted. We've reached out to our own groups, including the beekeepers association of Alberta. I mean, we've got this bill, and the way this bill reads now makes me take a pause and really consider what the unintended consequences may be.

Madam Speaker, I look forward, with great respect, to learning the answers to my questions and those that are brought up by my colleagues because I see the minister studiously taking notes in regard to my questions. With that, I would close my comments for now, and we'll move forward as we go forward in further debate.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise today on Bill 7. As the minister said and as members of this House know, the local food system in Alberta is extremely important to a lot of consumers, and it is also an important part of our economy. I think that's why we're here today to have this conversation. In a lot of ways it's a unique day to have a conversation about a regulation that is actually asked for by farmers. You know, it's not often that that happens.

I can definitely table these tomorrow, but I know I have letters here from Alberta milk producers that describe the gap as a regulatory gap. One of the impacts that they told me about and that you hear about is that you go through all of the certification of becoming organic, but then what happens is that you can't export the product because you have no certification that says it is that. It's because when that regulation went through on a federal level, it wasn't implemented in Alberta. So since 2009, Madam Speaker, they've been asking for us to bring in the ability for them to say: listen, if I do the work to have an organic farm, I want to be able to demonstrate that and I want it to be able to mean something when I export my products. I think that's what we're able to capture.

You know, I have letters that I'm happy to table as we go forward this week, Madam Speaker, from Alberta milk producers, the Egg Farmers of Alberta, Homegrown Foods, Highwood Crossing, the Organic Box. I think it's because they see the importance of reducing barriers in the capacity to export the amazing products that are being delivered in Alberta. That's one aspect of this bill, and I think that it shouldn't be confused with a different section of it.

This bill isn't solely about organics. It's talking about how to support the local food system in Alberta. The local food system in Alberta isn't solely comprised of the organic section. We all know that, so it shouldn't be confused as such. That's why the section noted by the previous speaker, who asked why it encompasses other folks outside of the organics, is because one section talks about how we can support local producers, processors, and farmers in connecting with consumers and how we can connect them with the ability to build a stronger local food system.

They just look at those issues, and they look at it over a reasonable timeline, which is a year, Madam Speaker. Not only that, it also describes the ability to have a council that has a broad spectrum of opinions from large, medium, and small producers. I think that there's an absolute value in that because it is hard to understand how to support the large spectrum.

I think that there is something even more so that becomes important – and I've had this conversation with many producers and supply management when they visit the Legislature, Madam Speaker – the ability and the importance of talking to consumers. I think that something we'll see growing over time is the interest that modern consumers have in where their food comes from.

One of the fears that I have is that people will make all of the decisions as to what food they will choose to eat and why because of some documentary on Netflix. A lot of the young generation that are informing themselves about local food and where your food is coming from are looking for that information, and they're maybe not finding it in the same place that we would have before. They go to the media streams and the information sites that they go to now, and a lot of those don't encompass what the Alberta food system is. I think that we miss out on something when we don't know the information applicable to the area that we are purchasing from.

I think that there is a great value, and I think that that's where the common cause is in this. Whether you're a small, medium, or large producer, your ability to create a connection and build consumer confidence is extremely beneficial. The government does have an ability to look at what the barriers are in being able to do that, to be aware, to be able to know what your competitive margins are.

I think that when we talk about that, that's why it's important to look at one section of it, meeting that regulatory gap, which is the fact that the organic certification wasn't happening in Alberta. Anyone could use the word "organic," and it basically can be used. There are a lot of examples within farmers' markets where people actually just started trying to verify it themselves and in a very informal sense started acting as their own regulators so that people coming to visit that farmers' market could verify that it was organic. That's not necessarily what you want to do. That doesn't build consumer confidence. Knowing that the word that is being used is expressing a very specific thing that consumers know is helpful.

Then the second section talks about how we can strengthen our Alberta food system. That's where it's broad, and it's meant to be broad because our food system is broad. We have small, medium, and large. It doesn't need to be focused on just one area in order for it to be effective. In fact, you don't want it to do that. I think that's where sometimes we go into conspiracy theories as to what that could possibly mean. But I think that when you look at the intention of what we're trying to achieve here, which is to look at the ways that we can build consumer confidence, support our networks, identify barriers, if it's for small producers, there might be different barriers than for the large ones. If we can identify those and leverage strengths within our community to help support them, that's something that can happen.

I think that an integral part of the role that government can play in strengthening one's economy is looking at that information, taking that all in, and moving that forward. I think that there is an important role that government has to play in allowing for a space to have further conversations. That's why I don't think that this conversation ends here. When we look forward, in fact, if the Legislature decides to pass this bill, Madam Speaker, you have 12 months to get feedback from a whole bunch of different groups, to have those conversations, and to be able to give a back and forth as to what is the best way that we can support our food system in Alberta. I think it's a conversation that transcends urban and rural, and I think it's an area of commonality that is extremely important because I have yet to meet families that don't think about the kinds of food that they eat.

I think that's something that Albertans are proud of. Albertans are very proud of the beef that we have here, of the best steaks that we have in Alberta. We need to continue to be proud of the various things that we produce and to be able to connect Alberta Open Farm Days, the concept that has already been there, with the idea of how we can support and engage people on a local food system. It's kind of a natural merger of where we need to progress to. Why do we want these people coming together, and what are the strengths of local food? It's the relationship that people have with their farmers. That's what research will tell you over and over again. The strength in local food is that relationship with the farmer, that relationship to understand where your food is coming from.

As we move into a more urban environment, we also see the impacts of what the distance has on children. Kids in urban centres that haven't seen, you know, where their food comes from make those comments that are kind of funny but are really a sad statement of how disconnected we can get, like when they say, "Where does a carrot come from?" and then say: the grocery store. Right? We need to make sure that we're developing mechanisms to connect urban and rural.

One of the natural things that has always and for all of history joined us together is food. I think there's a very little group of people that would argue that food hasn't always been a way that we have come together. When we talk about farm days and when we talk about, "Let's expand that and make a way of looking at how we can bring together a local food week," that is a place of strength for this government but also for the community and also for the economy. It brings the capacity to have conversations that are not as easily related in reports.

I know I read a lot of information from the milk producers or the beef producers. There is a lot of really great information. A lot of times it happens in infographics. You know, I have access to it because I'm an MLA, because I talk to these folks, and because I have these conversations. But I know my friends that are interested in that information, that maybe are in university or working, when they start looking this information up, they don't know where to go. So I think that if we find places to bridge those connections, we really provide an avenue for Albertans to come together whether you're from an urban area or a rural area. I think that there are so many places we can benefit from.

I really believe that one of the best things that could have happened was a few years ago, when I stood up in this House and I talked to the Alberta Local Food Act, which was a different bill. I think it's very important to distinguish it as a different bill because it is. One of the major things that I had hoped to accomplish then was to have a conversation about local food, to have a conversation about how to move that forward. I think that since then – and I think that's why it's important to distinguish that this is a different bill than what that was – you have those conversations.

We're able to go out and talk to people about what can support small and medium and large producers, what can support the consumer that's interested in these things, what can support farmers' markets, what can support, you know, the supermarkets that are having an organic section, what can be put in place, and also talk about what is achievable within the fact that we're in fiscal restraint and that we can't just be able to put money in supporting all of these different programs. I think that this is where leveraging things that are already in place, broadening it, is something that is extremely important. I'm proud to know that the minister of agriculture took that on and had those conversations. It really means a lot to me, but I know that it means a lot to a lot of different people.

From the very start when this all started, I knew that local food is a conversation that's not going away. It's a conversation that will inevitably be part of our culture, and I think that's partly to do with the fact that we've never had so much information at our fingertips than we do now. Why would that be different when it comes to the food that we eat every day? Why would the consumer that gets to review absolutely every product that you buy not want that kind of information about the food that they're bringing to their tables, to their kids? They provide so much effort on so many levels to make sure that they're going to the best schools. You're able to have an avenue to have these conversations about how we can support a changing generation in being interested and being interested in a productive way.

I think that's the distinguishing feature of when we get solely educated based on documentaries on Netflix about what the food system is versus actually getting together and talking to a farmer, visiting a farm, and seeing where that food comes from. It gives you a completely different experience. I think that's one goal that Albertans would be in line with of really having for their kids, having for their families, but also having for the food that they bring to the table. I think that's where we're going to have to continue having this conversation.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I know that there's been a lot of work at the different levels of making sure that there are programs about what it's like to deliver the food to that table. There's a different experience based on whether you're a small producer, medium producer, or large producer, right? When you have the capacity to be a large producer, you also have the capacity to have a large market that you depend on in order to make sure that your farm is sustainable. The same isn't true for smaller ones. Whether one is the best or not, it's important to make sure that we're actively thinking about what the impacts are. I think that the minister of agriculture has taken leadership on being engaged on those issues, and I applaud him for his efforts in doing so. I think that it's something that we need to continue doing.

There are lots of volunteer groups, agricultural societies that incorporate into their sustainable programming things like being able to make sausages, you know, and people bring their products there. They have a commercial kitchen that they're able to rent out, and that's part of the thing that makes their agricultural society sustainable. When we talk about that, that is integrated into our food system. We should know what those impacts are. We should know what we can do to leverage those kinds of tools to not just support the producers but support local volunteer organizations, that are incredibly powerful, impacting our economy and our communities.

Madam Speaker, this is something that I think we can get a lot of similarities on.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? Go ahead, Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yes. I enjoyed the comments by the minister immensely – no; the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park. [interjection] Well, soon maybe, or maybe not.

But the question to the member, you know, is about the literal interpretations of the legislation that we have in front of us. It says in here:

- (a) "agricultural product" means
 - (i) an animal, a plant or an animal and plant product,
 - (ii) a product, including any food or drink, wholly or partly derived from an animal or a plant.

Madam Speaker, it doesn't include a valuable sector, an organic food known as honey, because bees are not a plant or an animal.

Part of what my comment is, Madam Speaker, is that I'm able to sell my product directly to a maltster because of a freedom that was achieved in 2012 from legislation that was created in 1943. Part of the reason that we're able to have the freedom that we have now in this country to have craft beers and microbreweries, north of 70 microbreweries in Alberta to my understanding, is because of the freedom that was created in 2012 from legislation that was created in 1943, federal legislation. That is why I may sound somewhat significant or distinct or trying to be as concise and as accurate as I can in the definition.

To the member opposite: could you explain to me how this legislation would relate to people who produce honey?

The Deputy Speaker: Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think that one of the interesting parts of any kind of local food discussion is the definition, and it is the part where absolutely every single local food discussion starts. It sometimes cannot even go anywhere else because people can't decide: well, you know, I produce it here, but maybe part of it goes to B.C. It's one of the reasons that it had to be brought. I think that there is definitely an intent here to make sure that we are looking at how we can support the food system, and we know that there are always limitations in the definitions of local food. That's always the case because in some instances you can define it as having to be produced, processed, and completely made in Alberta, but then you lose a big sector of the organization. Definitely, I know that it's been a discussion. I don't have the answer for the member as to specifically how it impacts honey.

What I do know is that our government is really committed to making sure that we are listening to those of you that are wanting to strengthen our local food system. That's why we're creating a council, to have to these discussions. It's not just a partisan conversation but an ability to have the discussions on an overall level. There are very few ways that you can try to bring in a definition that isn't at some point going to take someone out. I think that's part of the fact that you are trying to talk about your local food system, but you're also talking about the processors, you're also talking about the transportation routes, and you're also talking about the fact that they travel. You know, that's why I call it a system more than just the sector, because it's one that has to be worked on together.

One of the difficulties when it comes to researching the smaller ones is that you can't actually publish a lot of information about the smaller ones because it's too identifiable to know which farm you're talking about because there are probably only a few of them. It becomes harder to generalize that information and to make it into policy to support them. I think that's where we come into a strength of talking about the issue as a whole, to build a comprehensive kind of full-spectrum support of how we can step forward in this discussion.

One of the recommendations that I'm sure the council can explore is: do we need to encompass these different areas? I can actually clear that up. Part of the bill actually brings in a local food council, and that council is made up of folks from small, medium, and large producers. It's also processors. It's also the folks that run farmers' markets. It's a large spectrum of people, and I think they have the discussion as to how we can support these groups of people. I think that's where we talk about why the legislation talks to their mandate.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to Bill 7? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a privilege today to stand and speak to second reading of Bill 7, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act. At first blush a lot of folks maybe were thinking that this would be a rehash of Bill 202, that we had seen before, just under a similar name and similar title, but I am glad to see that it is not. But I do have some questions and I do have some concerns on how we proceed forward.

The Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park just alluded to the intent of the bill, to serve good, but we also have to recognize that there are risks in everything that we put forward, and interpretation can lead to different results from the intent. We try and produce legislation here that is as all-encompassing as possible and to take into consideration all possible results before we approve legislation and move forward with legislation.

You know, the bill is titled Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act, and I guess the one thing I would ask, then, is: what is the government's role in that? We have to ensure that government is doing what is necessary to serve their citizens in a way that does not interfere with the ability of the citizens, the industry, and others to continue to reap the rewards of their opportunity and continue to produce and process agricultural products meant for consumption in a way where they're able to produce it and process it in their specific manner, that would be able to be marketed to others.

You know, we look at Bill 7, and it's divided up into three main parts. The first part, part 1, is regarding local food. With that part, it's a recognition of Alberta local food week. I think that's good. That can't hurt. It's identifying the importance of local food and brings awareness to industry and producers and processors and retailers that are involved in local food, the food that we are able to consume as Albertans. So I don't see where that can potentially cause any unforeseen circumstances.

Then we move to the local food council, and when we start to move to the local food council, there's a need to get a full understanding of the intent of the council. It may be good, but we have to allow ourselves to recognize that there's potential for results that are unforeseen, that could create difficulty in our marketplace and could create difficulty for individuals to have opportunity and to be able to search out their opportunity.

I look under Local Food Council, that part of it. The council is to provide a report containing advice and recommendations regarding provincial policies, programs, pilot projects or initiatives to support the continued growth and sustainability of Alberta's local food sector, including the following matters:

- (a) potential barriers and challenges for local food producers . . .
- (b) local food aggregation and distribution;
- (c) risk management tools.

These are all good.

This is essentially where the minister is looking for a report, but then, at the end of the day, the report is left in the hands of the minister, for the minister to make regulations, and that's where it becomes concerning that the minister is then in ownership of the report. Are we sure that we're getting the outcomes from the report that are going to ensure that the government is involved in the role that the government is meant to be involved in, which is, in my opinion, to ensure that we have food product and agricultural product for consumption, to ensure that that's a safe product for consumption by Albertans?

One thing: 5(f) is "certification opportunities for local food producers and local food processors." I would have a little bit of difficulty with going along with the open-endedness of that. I'm trying to understand why they feel that those opportunities are possibly not there at this time.

The second part of the bill, organic agricultural products. The Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park mentioned that the dairy group was lobbying towards recognition of organic standards within Alberta so that they can export their product. Well, the dairy industry cannot export their product regardless of the recognition of organic. The dairy industry is a supply-managed industry, so there is no opportunity for them to be able to export their product.

This type of certification that's being looked at here appears, to me, to run in line with CFIA certification. We have to ask ourselves: what is the industry, whether it's dairy or any other organic production, expecting government to actually take a position on here? Are they expecting government to be there to enforce the regulations that are put forward? When we take a look at organic foods compared to nonorganic foods, is it the government's role to decide whether one is safe and one is not safe? Yes, but if the government decides that they're both safe, then we look at the fact that we are able to allow production of those products without having to spend taxpayers' money to protect the brand of one product versus the brand of the other products.

We also have to be very careful. You know, we have it separated into two parts in this bill, local food and organic agricultural products. I believe the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park was also on a couple of occasions not necessarily stumbling but mixing the two together as if they're one in the same. That would not be accurate, so I think we need to recognize that that is a risk also, where it's looked at as if this is a bill on local food, but it's definitely a bill on local food and the organic brand part of the food sector in Alberta.

You know, full disclosure here, Madam Speaker. I am a grain producer. I have in the past also been a beef and pork producer. I've been involved in agriculture all my life. I am glad to see a bill like this come forward and a recognition of the importance of agriculture within the province of Alberta and what it provides for the province of Alberta.

We are very fortunate, and it's described in the beginning of the bill here, in the preamble. The preamble recognizes that "a thriving local food sector continues to build on the strengths of the Province's agriculture and food industry, which includes a highly productive land base." We in Alberta and throughout Canada need to recognize the blessing that that is for not only us but for others throughout the world. That productive land base allows us to provide a diversity of crops, livestock, and other agricultural products. That land base is producing products that are far beyond the ability of Albertans to actually consume. Some of that product will be consumed here; some of the product will need to be exported.

You know, a lot of product that we currently consume as Albertans that's purchased at the local supermarket is locally produced. Is there a necessity to promote that? Possibly, but I think we also have to recognize that there's a critical point in time where there are supermarkets and individuals working together at this current time that are retailing local food through their systems and that have developed good relationships and have spent the time to do that. We want to ensure that we don't get in the way of them being able to do that.

As with many things in government, we have to recognize that we don't want to interfere with what's already a good thing. People have invested time and energy and dollars to develop the ability to market their product as a local product.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 19(1)(c) we must move to the next order of business.

Hon. members, yesterday the vote pursuant to Standing Order 19(1)(c) was postponed due to the emergency debate. Therefore, this afternoon I must put the question on the following motion for consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's speech.

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Sweet moved, seconded by Mr. Malkinson, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Motion carried]

Address in Reply to Speech from the Throne

15. Ms Larivee moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne be engrossed and presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor by such members of the Assembly as are members of Executive Council.

The Deputy Speaker: This motion is debatable. Are there any members who wish to speak to this?

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader to close debate?

Ms Larivee: Yes.

[Government Motion 15 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, prior to moving to the next order of business, I've had a request for unanimous consent to revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you my sister and my niece Gwen. My sister is a devoted New Democrat and a fierce feminist, and she's also here to watch the debate on Bill 9. My niece Gwen is also a devoted New Democrat and is a Premier in training. I'd like to ask the members to give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading (continued)

Bill 9 Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier and Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise to move second reading of Bill 9, Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act.

This legislation will help women in Alberta access abortion services without fear of interference, harassment, threats, or intimidation. It will also protect doctors and other service providers. Our goal is to stand with Alberta women to ensure that they feel safe when making health care choices. Madam Speaker, abortion has been legal in Canada since 1969 – that's nearly 50 years – and it's been nearly three decades since the Morgentaler decision was rendered by the Supreme Court of Canada. Generations of women have legally been allowed to access abortion procedures without restriction, but in Alberta the reality is that women who want to exercise their health care choice still face safety and privacy concerns. Let's be clear. This is not about freedom of speech. It's about ensuring that Albertans can access health services without being bullied.

The Kensington clinic, in Calgary, and the Woman's Health Options clinic, in Edmonton, have reported an increase in protestor activity. At Kensington they've reported a doubling of protestors just in this last year. The 40-day campaigns were organized to target women and staff each spring and fall. Last week I met with staff from both clinics. They talked about patients being physically blocked as they tried to enter the clinic. They talked about yelling so loud that it could be heard throughout the concrete building. They talked about protestors banging on car windows or blocking their doors so that patients couldn't exit their vehicles. They talked about patients so agitated that staff had to calm them down when they entered the building. They talked about patients who do not show up because they're too scared for their safety. It makes a difficult day even more difficult, one of the doctors told me.

One of the ironies here is that some of these women desperately want to be pregnant. For reasons beyond their control they haven't been able to carry healthy pregnancies to term. It adds insult to injury for these women to have to listen to strangers shouting at them.

The same doctor talked about her own unease outside her workplace. Every day she rushes to get in her vehicle and away. If she stays in the parking lot, she risks being watched, photographed, approached by a stranger hoping to intimidate her. Photography has become a new favourite bullying tactic in recent months. Staff tell me this. "Bullying" is the key word here because a bully preys on the fear of the unknown.

Madam Speaker, these clinics currently rely on court injunctions to keep protestors at bay. These injunctions were put in place years ago and have had to be repeatedly amended at the expense and time of these clinics. It's costly to go to court, and these injunctions have proven to be a very limiting tool. Even with injunctions, protestor activity is on the rise. Today's protestors know that consequences don't exist. Police simply ask them to leave. They may. They regularly come back the next day. Or they can leave before the police even arrive. Stronger measures are needed.

Bill 9 names this for what it is, a public health and safety issue. It demonstrates the government of Alberta's commitment to safe and timely health care and to removing barriers for vulnerable women. This legislation would be enforceable across Alberta. It would also be flexible. It could be used to protect pharmacies or the homes or offices of doctors or other service providers.

My cosponsor will talk you through more of the details, but I'll give you a basic overview of this bill. Access zones would be established around the Kensington clinic and Woman's Health Options. Inside these zones patients and staff would be free from interference and harassment. They would be protected from being blocked, coerced, or threatened. Family and friends accompanying their loved ones would also be protected. Just imagine that someone you know makes this choice. You want to be there for them. You have to watch your daughter, your sister, your friend be called a murderer by a complete stranger.

The bill protects women and staff from unsolicited photos, videos, or other recordings inside the access zone and protects them from third parties distributing or using these photos or recordings. It protects doctors and service providers from worrying about whether protestors will target their neighbours and friends to try to bully them into not providing abortions.

This legislation includes fines and potential jail time. The need for real consequences is something we've heard repeatedly from these women. The penalties are meant as a significant deterrent, and it's my hope, Madam Speaker, that police never have to use these as a tool of enforcement.

I am proud to introduce this bill today because I believe that Alberta women should feel safe when making choices about their health care. We heard yesterday that the Leader of the Opposition does not agree. He does not believe the women who say that this is a problem. He doesn't believe those women. He does not believe that they are subjected to bullying and that the current injunctions that are in place are ineffective. He has clearly not been listening, Madam Speaker, not listening to the women who've publicly said that this is going to make a real difference in their lives, not listening to the other provinces, like Ontario, Quebec, Newfoundland and Labrador, which took similar steps in recent months, not listening to British Columbia, who had to act on this almost two decades ago. I am disappointed but not surprised given the opposition leader's track record on women's choice.

But let's be clear. By failing to say yes, he is saying no, saying no to these women who are asking for some dignity, some respect, and some space to access their doctors' offices. By failing to say yes, he's turning a deaf ear to shouts of harassment and to bullying. By failing to say yes, members of the opposition can't simply change the channel. You can't opt out of this problem. It's not too late to consider a simple question before you here today. Are you going to stand up for women? Or another question: as a member of this Legislature, are you going to protect vulnerable people? This is about freedom from intimidation tactics that rely on shame and stigma as well as fear.

On this side of the House we're committed to standing up for Albertans, we're committed to saying no to bullies, and we are committed to helping Alberta women make their own choices about their own health care.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today on behalf of my colleagues and Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition to speak to Bill 9. I must admit that I'm rather saddened to be standing here today debating this piece of legislation. I'm disappointed to see my hon. colleagues on the government side of this House play such an obviously cynical political game with such a sensitive issue. I am disappointed to see this NDP government politicize and reignite a deeply divisive debate. As the Edmonton Journal's Paula Simons recently said during her podcast: it pains me to think we are going to make this into a political football. While this bill does not officially seek to reopen the abortion debate, it appears that the NDP is trying to do just that. Ironically, the NDP is trying to do exactly what they frequently accuse their opponents of.

Why have they done this, Madam Speaker? A desperate, floundering government in the final years of its mandate is trying to score a few cheap political points by painting the opposition and its supporters as fundamentally incompatible with women and women's rights. They have deliberately created a situation where personal views on deeply personal issues are publicly adjudicated, and those who fall on one side of the line are shamed by their own government. We have seen this time and time again from the NDP. You don't agree with the carbon tax or the climate leadership plan? Well, you must be a climate denier. You think the government should be doing more to control costs? You must want to blow up hospitals and fire all the teachers. You want to protect school choice and parental rights in education? Well, you must not care about vulnerable kids.

We recently saw the government's allies the Trudeau Liberals play a similarly cynical game with the summer jobs program, for which the federal government was rightly called out.

Now, if you don't agree with what many see as an attempt to curtail Albertans' right to free speech and peaceful assembly, the NDP say that you must condone the harassment and intimidation of vulnerable women. Madam Speaker, that's a ridiculous notion. Alberta is a diverse place, including diversity of opinion, and that's a really good thing. It is high time that this government dispensed with the false choices and straw-man arguments and started defending its policy decisions on their merits. Instead, we see the NDP working overtime to instill fear in Albertans because it knows that its failed economic agenda is deeply unpopular with voters. Shame on them. It's a desperate move by a desperate government. In fairness, though, I understand why the NDP doesn't want to discuss their $97 billion debt or their failing energy strategy. I understand why the NDP is trying to distract Albertans from the current headlines.

Madam Speaker:

Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:

- (a) freedom of conscience and religion;
- (b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression . . .
- (c) freedom of peaceful assembly; and
- (d) freedom of association.

Now, that's not my opinion. That's directly from the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, for those opposite who might not be aware.

However, we do not have the right to harass and intimidate others as we exercise those rights. We agree a hundred per cent with the Minister of Health when she says that the harassment and intimidation of vulnerable women are completely unacceptable. Harassment is already part of the Criminal Code of Canada. There are other parts of the world where this is more of a common phenomenon, which isn't to say that it hasn't happened at all in Alberta. Again from Paula Simons: I remember when there used to be really nasty protests outside of clinics; that hasn't happened in a very, very long time.

We've heard troubling anecdotes from staff at each of Alberta's two main clinics, and we agree that this behaviour is wrong and it should not be tolerated. That's why there are long-standing court injunctions in place to keep protestors at a distance. We expect the police to properly enforce the law. These court orders, combined with existing laws that prohibit harassment, have worked to keep this behaviour to a minimum for almost two decades.

Madam Speaker, any law that we pass in this Legislature must balance the objective that it is trying to achieve with the protection of our Charter rights and freedoms. We all have a responsibility as MLAs to defend the Charter rights of all Albertans, even those we disagree with. As a party rich with history of protest I truly hope that the government has considered these implications, but many have expressed concerns that the government has not. Yes, women entering and exiting abortion clinics absolutely have a right to do so free of intimidation and harassment, but citizens also have a right to express peacefully their opinion as it relates to abortion, even if some don't want to hear it. Bill 9 impacts one's ability to do so. What's more, it offers no more protection than the existing court injunctions do today.

5:30

But like I said earlier, Madam Speaker, that wasn't really the intent of this bill. The intent all along has been to draw this side of the House into a debate on an incredibly contentious social issue and claim any opposition to their flawed legislation as sinister. The NDP is trying to pit Albertans against Albertans. Well, I will not take this bait. I will be abstaining from voting on Bill 9. I know that the reasons for being on one side of this issue or the other are complex and deeply personal, and it's not up to any of us to judge Albertans for their personal beliefs, especially if those beliefs are expressed peacefully and in accordance with the law.

In closing, Madam Speaker, let me leave you with this quote from Evelyn Beatrice Hall, who famously wrote: I disapprove of what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Thank you, Madam Speaker. That was really hard to hear on my end. I am offended by these comments. I'm offended as a woman. Not only are these comments hurtful to me; they are hurtful to all women in this province. I believe that the Member for Airdrie should apologize to all women.

Madam Speaker, I'm here to talk about Bill 9, and I'm here to talk about why it is needed, why it is long overdue, and why our government is finally acting on this. This is a piece of legislation that has been ignored for the past 44 years. In fact, I actually arranged a tour of Kensington clinic in Calgary with government members here, and they said to me that staff were saying that we were the first government to ever step foot into that building, to even look and see what they do. You know, I was happy to go, and I found it really informative and educational. We had a really good discussion about what's needed and what our government can do to help. This was one of the things that they said: we need to expand the bubble zones so that women don't feel intimidated when they're accessing their legal right. It's not fair to these women, who are in a tough situation. No one wants to get an abortion, but sometimes it's needed, and it's not anyone else's business but their own.

You know, I am proud that our government went to that clinic and actually educated ourselves and did something. Now we are actually putting in change; we're doing something about it. That's why I'm so proud to be part of this government. Because we listen to Albertans. We don't make excuses like the Official Opposition, using freedom of speech to get out of it. I'm offended by that, Madam Speaker, and I wanted to get that on record.

I'm going to get to the bill now. I rise to speak to Bill 9, the Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act. This is an incredibly important piece of legislation. Doctors, staff, patients, families, and friends of people accessing abortion services have been speaking out about the harassment they face. As the Minister of Health has outlined, these concerns deserve a response, and I am proud to see this legislation, which enacts the most stringent consequences for those seeking to interfere with women's rights to access health care services.

Bill 9 establishes a 50-metre access zone around Kensington clinic in Calgary and Woman's Health Options in Edmonton. These access zones protect women and their families as well as staff, doctors, and service providers from intimidation, interference, and harassment. No one can try to deter a patient from accessing abortion services or demand that a physician or service provider not provide or facilitate abortion services. The bill bans unsolicited photos, videos, or other recordings of patients, physicians, or service providers both inside and outside an access zone. To protect patients and staff, it would be illegal to use these kinds of photos or recordings to prevent someone from accessing or providing abortion services.

This legislation also protects patients and doctors outside of access zones in Calgary and Edmonton. Doctors and providers would be protected from being repeatedly approached, accompanied, or followed with the intent of convincing them not to provide abortions. That includes medical professionals already providing abortion services or those who may do so in the future. Threatening conduct against doctors and staff is out. It would also be illegal to harass a doctor's neighbour, friend, or family member to try to influence their willingness to provide abortion services. It would be illegal to repeatedly send unwanted communications via phone, mail, fax, or electronic means.

Finally, the legislation also includes potential protection for homes of doctors and service providers as well as offices or pharmacies. As pharmacists now can dispense Mifegymiso – sorry if I'm pronouncing that wrong – a drug used to perform medical abortions, we want to ensure that the legislation allows for future protections if they are needed. Through regulation, on a needed basis, a doctor's home could be protected by a 160-metre access zone. An office could be protected by a 20-metre access zone.

This bill also includes provisions dealing with injunctions, actions for damages, arrests, and the use of survey documents as evidence in court.

As the Minister of Health pointed out, these penalties are meant as a deterrent. For the first offence an individual could be fined up to $5,000 or sentenced up to six months in jail or receive both a fine and jail time. Other offences: those fines increase up to $10,000, one year in jail, or both a fine and imprisonment. Separate penalties for corporations are included because the distribution of images or recordings taken in the access zone might be carried out by a corporation. A corporation could be fined a maximum of $25,000 for a first offence, which would increase up to $100,000 for other offences. It is also possible to be prosecuted as an individual while acting for a corporation.

These are real consequences, with teeth, but they are equally balanced by the consideration for the Charter-protected rights to free speech that every Canadian has. We care about these very important rights, Madam Speaker, but they must be held in balance with each person's right to access health care without restriction or interference. I believe this legislation strikes that balance, and I urge all members of this Assembly to support this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the bill? My apologies. I was looking on the wrong side. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

5:40

Ms McPherson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I understand that it would be difficult to see me on this side of the House right now.

I'm really proud to be able to stand and provide an opposition perspective on this particular bill. I think Bill 9 is an important bill,

I think Bill 9 is a necessary bill, and, if anything, I would urge the government to go even further with this bill.

This bill establishes a bubble zone, a safety zone of 50 metres, around the establishments that do provide abortion clinics and other reproductive health services to women. There are two right now in Alberta. We have one in Edmonton, Woman's Health Options, and we also have the Kensington clinic in Calgary. As the Member for Calgary-Bow was talking about, I also participated in the tour of that clinic. It was very concerning to me that people think that it's okay to try and prevent women from accessing legal health care. I can't imagine any other circumstance where people would think it was okay to protest somebody seeking health care. If I was going to go for a bypass, if anyone was going for a bypass, I don't think anyone would think it was okay to have protestors outside of the hospital saying: "No. I'm sorry. You can't have a bypass today. Think about what you're doing."

The bill also has provisions in it that prevent, essentially, institutionalized protests against abortion, which I think is really important. This goes further than other bills, and I think that that's a really smart move on the part of the government.

Things that I would like to see enhanced. I know it's not directly in this bill, but not all women in Alberta have equal access to reproductive health care, and not all women in Alberta have equal access to abortion services. I know that some of that has been improved with the introduction of the very difficult to pronounce medications that do help with this procedure. But it is, honestly, my sincere hope that at some time in the future every woman in Alberta who requires an abortion has the unfettered, unbullied, unintimidated access to be able to seek an abortion.

I also want to talk very briefly about the medical professionals who provide these services to women. These are people who are dedicated and incredibly caring. They care about women's health, they care about women's well-being, and they have respect for women. That's why they provide the services that they do. I know there are jobs that some people do, like firefighters or paramedics, where they understand that there are inherent risks to their lives in providing those services to our communities, but I don't think that doctors and nurses and other health care professionals who are providing health care, legal health care, to women should be afraid to go to work. They shouldn't be intimidated. They shouldn't be discouraged from providing legal health care to women.

Somebody earlier had talked about having deeply held personal beliefs that prevent them from taking certain actions. While I have a great deal of respect for people's deeply held beliefs, nobody has ever been compelled to have an abortion, to my knowledge, in Alberta. There may be some cases outside of the auspices of this particular legislation, but this is a health care procedure that women seek because for whatever reason they find it necessary. I had an abortion when I was a younger person. What I did was that I went and I talked to my doctor. Those are the only two people that should be involved in this conversation regardless of what anyone else's beliefs are.

I think that at the root of the protest against women seeking abortion services is a mistrust of women. I think that people don't believe that women are smart enough or empowered enough or deserving of being able to make decisions about their health care by themselves with their doctor. It's no one else's business. For these reasons, I am very happy to support this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to the member for her comments. There were a few things that were said by a previous speaker that I want to set the record straight on and take this opportunity. Feel free to elaborate, hon. member, in the time remaining.

Number one, this is not the same as the current injunctions that are in place. It's not the same for a few reasons. The current injunctions don't apply to public property like streets. They don't apply to the roads. They don't apply to the sidewalks. I've had women tell me that somebody will stand on the sidewalk, because the injunction doesn't apply to the sidewalk, right up against their car door, so they can't open their car door. Or they stand on the sidewalk, blocking the access so that women going to their doctors' appointments feel that they have to go through the mud puddle and the grass to get to their doctors' appointments.

These are the kinds of changes that this legislation will make to the physical space. It'll also be 50 metres, which is a greater space of protection than the injunctions. But the main thing that they said is that an injunction without any enforcement mechanism, without any teeth isn't worth the paper it's written on. So by actually giving some tools to law enforcement to actually be able to enforce the rules that are in place, rather than going and saying, "Please move on" – somebody may or may not move on, but there's nothing to compel them to respect that direction from the officer on future days.

I do want to say to the previous speaker that what was said doesn't reflect reality. I also certainly welcome the hon. member to respond to that.

One other thing I wanted to mention is that aggression is something that was mentioned by the women who've approached me, saying that they'll be with their spouse, going to get this procedure done. Their spouse feels really awful for them and is there to support them, and then they are called a murderer or a killer or, you know: it's not too late to change your mind. It actually creates greater aggression between the spouse, who's there to support their loved one, and the people who are on the streets yelling these things.

Your remarks with regard to both those factors would be appreciated. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Injunctions, I agree, aren't effective. They aren't doing the job. We've seen protestors escalate their behaviour. They are finding the boundaries of the injunction, and they're taking advantage of that. It is incumbent on a government to protect everybody. People who disagree with abortion procedures are certainly welcome to make their voice known in other ways, but to interfere with somebody who is seeking a legal health care procedure or advice even is unconscionable. For those reasons, that's why injunctions aren't enough.

I think aggression towards women, regardless of how that's expressed, during protesting against women who are seeking abortions is at the root of why people go out. It is a disdain for women, it is a disrespect for women that seems to motivate these kinds of actions. I can totally understand somebody not agreeing personally with seeking an abortion. I would say: please, don't ever seek an abortion; don't do that. I don't think anybody would ever compel them to.

Our country has decided that this is a legal procedure and that women are able to make these decisions on their own, of their own accord, and for these reasons, yeah, aggression should not play into them seeking that kind of a procedure.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for this opportunity to speak on this important legislation. Often this place gets called an echo chamber. I can't imagine why.

The member from the Official Opposition continued to ask us: "Why now? Why would you do this now? Why would you bring forward this legislation to protect women trying to get reproductive health care?" Well, why now? Because it wasn't done in the '70s or the '80s or the '90s or in 2000 or 2015. So it's time. It's overdue. It is long past due.

You know, it's kind of interesting to hear the new world view from across the way. If the view doesn't have the name Justin Trudeau or job-killing something, it just doesn't seem to fit.

But I'll tell you why I think this is so important. Just last summer – and I'd sort of forgotten that this was a problem because driving by a clinic or a place where women can obtain these services isn't on my normal route anymore. I drove by and actually saw a person being really loud and moving a sign around. I saw him going after a woman pushing a stroller. So I stopped, and it just clicked: oh, my gosh; this is where the clinic is. I pulled over and took a photograph of this. It was horrible. This woman was clearly trying to make her way into this clinic or to see a doctor or a provider. This person was holding this gross sign right in her face, and there was a baby in the stroller. Of course, people were driving by and watching this. I thought: this is so ridiculous. This is so ridiculous. Not to mention that people have died from the violence by the people who just don't agree with a woman's right, a woman's human right. They have killed physicians that do this procedure. They have vandalized and torched clinics that offer this procedure to women or support women in this way, and it just continues.

All we're trying to do here today is to say that it is not okay to harass and intimidate women as they exercise their absolute right to obtain health care. And what do we get accused of? We get accused of playing politics. That's baloney. That's absolute baloney. This is about: finally, we're getting to it. Finally. Just like so many other pieces of legislation, it's about: finally, we are getting to a place where we're having this conversation. It's not about what you believe or your religion. It is about protecting a woman's right to choose her health care and to get safe health care without abuse and intimidation, and it is not up to the provider of the clinic to pay the money, to spend the time to get an injunction. That's ridiculous.

A couple of years ago I had a little taste of what it was like to be the target of somebody's belief, thoughts about abortion, about women's reproductive rights. Maybe it was because I was on vacation and really relaxed and not following the whole Alberta Legislature Twitter feed. You know, it was right around the time the leader was running or had made his intentions clear to run, and one of my concerns following federal politics here in Alberta has been just the positions of different federal politicians around women's issues. That's something that has always been important to me.

So I asked a question about what his stance was and then proceeded to offer some personal information. If I could roll back time, I don't know that I would do that because the hate and the abuse and the threats and the most disgusting, vile things that came my way were just mind-boggling. Those were anonymous people that were safe behind a computer screen firing this disgustingness at me, and it just made me think about what that was like for that woman with the baby in a stroller, just pushing it to a clinic just trying to get some health care and that this man was able and allowed to do what he did, where this wouldn't be allowed anywhere else.

That's why we're doing it. That's why we're finally, finally, finally doing it, and I am so pleased to be able to support it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Hon. member, under 29(2)(a)?

Ms Fitzpatrick: Not under 29(2)(a).

The Deputy Speaker: Any others under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my honour to stand in support of this bill, a bill which at its essence I have fought for during my entire adult life. I see this bill from many perspectives but two in particular. The first is that every person in this province should know that they are safe, whether that's in going to work, whether that's in going to school, or whether that's in going to a clinic for medical attention.

Perhaps the following might give a graphic of the reality that women live, a double standard in which women have lived most of their lives, a reality which encouraged me to the activism on this issue. I might stand outside an adult entertainment business with a sign that berates men for their choices inside this establishment. However, to access this business, they actually don't have to go to that business and go through a gauntlet of protesters calling them perverts or sex addicts or something like that. However, a woman who is accessing a medical procedure to terminate a pregnancy or to get birth control for whatever reason has been and continues to be subjected to threats which are far worse from protesters, who are trying to impose their value system on them.

The second is from a perspective near and dear to my heart, and that is choice and bullying. In 1974, '75, and '76 I did not choose to be pregnant, but I was. Once I knew that I was pregnant, I took extra care of myself. I ate healthy, as I always did. I exercised, as I always did. I wanted those pregnancies to go to fruition. I did not get to fruition on two of those pregnancies, not by my choice. Both of those pregnancies were finalized with a D&C after the fetus succumbed to the violent abuse from my ex-husband. A D&C is the same procedure as an abortion. The 1976 pregnancy was completed but with an awful lot of duress as I worried day in and day out whether my ex-husband would come home in a rage and attack me again. In fact, he did come home three and a half weeks before my daughter was born and he attacked me, so I worried in that three and a half weeks. I kept feeling my stomach for movement, to feel the heartbeat, and I worried that I was going to lose that baby as well.

When she was born and I knew she was okay, I had asked the doctor to do a tubal ligation, to tie my tubes. I could not do that without my ex-husband's permission. He gave that permission, but then he withdrew it at the last minute. Fortunately for me, that procedure was already completed. Those pregnancies were some 40 years ago, a different time, a time when women found themselves with no-choice pregnancies, and the only way to protect themselves was to seek a back-alley, unsafe termination of that pregnancy. I support this bill because I see the bullying, controlling, harassing behaviour being openly displayed against women seeking medical attention for termination of a pregnancy at clinics or against medical staff who perform medical procedures.

I am appalled that anyone would think that they have the right to impose their value system on another when they have no idea what it is or what's happened in this particular case or on this person who has to make a choice such as this. This is my body. This is my choice, nobody else's.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 4(2) the Assembly stands adjourned until tomorrow at 1:30 p.m.

Pursuant to the 2018 main estimates schedule the Legislative Policy Committee on Families and Communities will convene tomorrow morning to consider the estimates of Health in the Rocky Mountain Room.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, April 11, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us reflect and/or pray, each in our own way. As we contemplate and prepare for our deliberations and debates, let us be mindful of the footprints we are creating today and in which others will walk tomorrow.

Statement by the Speaker

Mourning Victims of Humboldt Bus Crash

The Speaker: Hon. members, in keeping with the support Albertans are providing to those affected by the tragic bus crash involving the Humboldt Broncos and in recognition of our national grief, tomorrow, April 12, I will allow Members of the Legislative Assembly to wear sports jerseys of any type for the duration of the day's proceedings. As a statement of this Legislature's compassion, I would encourage each and every one of you to do so.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on your behalf to introduce to all members of the Assembly Mr. Joe Versikaitis. Mr. Versikaitis is a photographer and portrait artist who concentrates mainly on the art of sport. His passion for revealing the intricate relationship between a person and their sport is evident in his highly acclaimed work. Born in Venezuela, Mr. Versikaitis moved to Alberta, where he studied at Medicine Hat College and later earned his degree in computer graphics and dynamic media in Calgary. Mr. Versikaitis now resides in Calgary with his wife, Michele. He is seated in your gallery, and I would ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome, Joe.

The hon. Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you a group of advocates from the Parkinson Association of Alberta. Today is World Parkinson's Day, which is a time to raise awareness about the disease, to build understanding about its impacts, and to educate patients, caregivers, and professionals about the condition. I send a warm thank you to the Parkinson Association of Alberta for their work in supporting Albertans affected by Parkinson's and helping them live full and happy lives. I was pleased to meet with the delegation before the proceedings this afternoon and to hear a little bit about the latest research in Parkinson's. I would ask that John Petryshen, CEO of the association, along with other board members, staff, volunteers, and families please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members in the Assembly a very proud member of team Edmonton-Decore,

James Paull. James is a proud father of three wonderful children and is a long-time NDP supporter and a volunteer for several of my colleagues here in the House. He's also a local drag queen and an antique transit bus collector. I'm very proud to have him as a member of my team even though he is a Leafs fan. I would now ask James to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: I'm just wondering where you keep the buses.

Members' Statements

YWCA and SPCA in Banff-Cochrane

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, the constituency of Banff-Cochrane is full of people who are just as inspiring as the impressive landscapes that surround them. I recently attended two fundraising events for equally worthy causes. The YWCA Banff does incredibly important work helping women and families in the Bow Valley. A few weeks ago they held their annual VineArt gala fundraiser at the beautiful Fairmont Banff Springs Hotel. Proceeds from the event go towards maintaining the Bow Valley women's emergency shelter program. A recent funding announcement from our government means that they can hire a second full-time staffperson for their harmony project, which provides direct supports to victims of sexual violence.

Our government also helped cover the costs of renovating their bridge house project, a home for survivors who are prepared to transition from an emergency shelter to a supported, independent living arrangement. This project was made possible by the support of a wide cross-section of the Bow Valley community, including tradespeople and church officials at St. George-in-the-Pines.

While YWCA Banff provides essential supports to women and families, the Bow Valley SPCA provides supports to our furry family members. Last weekend I attended the SPCA's Paws 'n' Paints fundraising event at ArtsPlace in Canmore. Participants took part in art classes to paint animal statues and portraits and make clay pet bowls.

The Bow Valley SPCA provides the community with an adoption centre that follows a no-kill, no-cage philosophy. All dogs and cats are housed in rooms rather than cages or kennel runs. This reduces the stress of being housed in an adoption centre.

I'd like to thank YWCA Banff and the Bow Valley SPCA for the work they do every day providing such important services to the community. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Decorum and Civility in the Assembly

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Abraham Lincoln was credited with saying, "Nearly all men can stand adversity, but if you want to test a man's character, give him power." As time passes and the landscape changes in the Alberta Legislature, my comprehension of Lincoln's statement has become clearer than ever.

When the United Conservative Party leader was recently elected, he was prepared to try and set a new standard for the Official Opposition in the Legislature. He did so with the intent of representing Albertans with dignity and respect. As members of the opposition it is our civic and moral obligation to every taxpayer in Alberta to question the government on their policies and actions to ensure that Albertans get the most from their representation. In that pursuit there are rules of engagement. These standing orders are intended to maintain decorum and civility in the Legislature as well as direct the proceedings in an orderly fashion.

A good friend once told me that bullies can present themselves in various fashions. Some are subtle, and others are not so subtle. We've all experienced forms of bullying throughout our lives both as children and adults. There is no place for this behaviour in this Legislature. This subject has justifiably been brought to the forefront in recent years in the political arena. As we've seen, there is a difference between respectfully presenting authority and condescendingly presenting authority in the course of debate.

Last week in the Legislature during question period the condescending presentation brought from the government towards the MLAs for Chestermere-Rocky View and Calgary-Foothills reached a new and disappointing low. The point is that this NDP government has the responsibility and honour to represent all Albertans, as do all members of the Legislature. We owe it to the Albertans that we represent to raise the level of discussion and debate to a respectfully productive level. The UCP caucus is committed to delivering on that responsibility and to showing Albertans that we have the dignified character to represent you in a manner . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, thank you.

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Hinton Cougars

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The cougar monument is the town of Hinton's 60th anniversary legacy project. Ever since the now iconic image of a cougar reclining on the Welcome to Hinton sign surfaced years ago, the cougar has become an unofficial mascot for the Hinton community.

In 2014 local resident and craftsman Roger Roy pitched the idea of making the cougar the official mascot by creating a statue in a public place. Roy searched out options for the cougar monument and found that the most fitting, considering he had long-standing ties to the timber industry, was a wood carving. One of the best purveyors of such carvings is Pioneer Log Homes, also known as the Timber Kings. The Timber Kings are famous for their log home builds around the world.

On October 27, 2017, while my staff and I watched, the cougar statue was installed at the Green Square. The arrival of the cougars in Hinton was then broadcast during an episode of Timber Kings on HGTV. The carved wood statue of a mother cougar and two kittens is set within a background meant to represent the Rocky Mountains. This monument is located in a place of pride near the Hinton tourist information centre on highway 16.

Visitors from all over the planet are stopping by. Politicians from across Alberta and other notable folks have begun stopping to have their pictures taken with our celebrated Hinton cats. These pictures are finding their way onto websites, Facebook pages, newspaper and magazine articles, and all over the World Wide Web.

So come to Hinton, and see our cougars when you're there. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Official Opposition Leader's Educational Background

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to address some troubling behaviour. Recently the Member for Banff-Cochrane has been openly mocking the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition for — get this — not having completed a university degree. Yes, apparently this member thinks the hon. Leader of the Opposition is underqualified for his position as a result, never mind that he's got over 20 years of experience in Parliament, including as minister for three federal departments, and that he's more knowledgeable on most subjects than any of us in this room.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a degree is admirable but not the only path to a successful career. Ask any LPN, rig hand, power engineer, welder, graphic designer, administrative professional, firefighter, or paramedic whether they are unqualified for the lack of a degree. In fact, I think most diploma and trade certificate holders would take offence at the member's suggestion that someone like the Member for Calgary-Lougheed deserves any less respect for not having a degree.

I myself did not pursue a university education, Mr. Speaker, yet I've had a successful career as a meat cutter, or butcher if you prefer, and then later in business before beginning my second career as an elected representative. I didn't need a degree to represent Calgarians on city council, the constituents of Calgary-Hays as their MLA, or Albertans as minister of Transportation or Infrastructure or Labour. To suggest that those of us who chose a different path are somehow second-class is unfair and arrogant.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Member for Banff-Cochrane, when he made his comments, meant to smear the 80 per cent of Albertans without a university degree or just the Member for Calgary-Lougheed. There are many paths we can choose when it comes to our education that are all legitimate. To suggest that anyone who has chosen a path that doesn't include university is somehow less or unqualified in this House is not only wrong. It's offensive. But that is the level of contempt for everyday Albertans that we have sadly come to expect from the NDP.

Mr. Speaker, the member owes the Leader of the Official Opposition and, indeed, 80 per cent of all Albertans an apology.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Sikh Society of Calgary

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The various communities in my riding of Calgary-Bow represent a diverse and vibrant population. The Sikh community has played a vital part in shaping the social, economic, and cultural fabric of Alberta. April is recognized as Sikh Heritage Month in Alberta. It is also significant as it marks the celebration of Vaisakhi. For Sikhs in Alberta and around the world it begins the new year and the start of a new harvest, and Vaisakhi honours the formation of the Khalsa and the birth of a code of conduct for Sikhs to live by.

Mr. Speaker, I highlight the Sikh community in my riding and, in particular, the Sikh Society of Calgary. The Sikh Society of Calgary has been a pillar of Sikhism in Calgary for over 40 years. As one of the first gurdwaras in Calgary the Sikh Society of Calgary is proud to be an active and steadfast institution promoting and practising the ideals of Sikhism. The Sikh Society of Calgary contributes to the cultural mosaic that is Alberta and promotes an attitude of integration, participation, and community service.

Mr. Speaker, the Sikh Society of Calgary has a rich and diverse history that has been shaped by the early settlers in Calgary since the early 1900s. The gurdwara was built in 1978 through the dedication and determination from the pioneer Sikhs in the Calgary area.

In participating in many events at the gurdwara, I have been heartened by their generosity not just to myself but to the wider community. Vaisakhi celebrates the fact that humans are given the spirit and opportunity to live lives of courage, sacrifice, and equality. I know that I can collectively say that we appreciate the hard work of the Sikh community in helping to strengthen our province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has suffered the worst recession in generations, and this NDP government must own it. Instead of providing stability and hope, they made the recession worse than it ever needed to be. How? By going down a path of risky ideological experiments, costing Albertans billions and saddling the next generation with massive debt.

From the start, in the midst of a recession, they imposed higher corporate taxes, higher personal income taxes, higher gas taxes, and even higher insurance taxes. Then on June 25, 2015, the environment minister proudly proclaimed an increase in the specified gas emitters regulation from $15 to $30 per tonne. As a result of this change, the power generators began to dump their power purchasing agreements. The decision to crank up the SGER is costing Albertans over $2 billion. On top of that, the NDP's plan to shut down coal power early is costing Albertans another $1.36 billion. Then in November 2015, while the Premier was campaigning in downtown Toronto, she announced that a carbon tax was on its way. It would have been nice if she would have told Albertans first. The largest tax increase in Alberta's history, and the NDP never even mentioned the carbon tax in their campaign platform. Their job-killing carbon tax is all economic pain with no environmental gain. It is just another tax directed at increased spending.

These reckless tax-and-spend policies have us on a path to $96 billion worth of debt, have created instability and a loss of hope, and have driven over $35 billion worth of investment away. Yes, Mr. Speaker, risky economic policies of this NDP government have made this the worst recession in generations, and they will own it in 2019 at the ballot box.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to provide notice that at the appropriate time I will be moving the following motion in accordance with Standing Order 42.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government of Canada to delay its planned $4.4 billion infrastructure funding award to the government of British Columbia until the B.C. government ceases its efforts to obstruct the Trans Mountain expansion project.

I have the appropriate copies for the page.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Bill 11

Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2018

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce Bill 11, the Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2018.

Amendments to the Lobbyists Act will inspire more confidence in the policy-making process by lifting the veil on more lobbying activity in Alberta. Albertans will have more access to information about what discussions are taking place because those being paid to influence government would need to register more of their activity. Lobbyists are currently required to provide information to the Ethics Commissioner of Alberta, who is responsible for maintaining and administering a registry of lobbyists that's publicly available. However, currently Alberta allows significant amounts of lobbying activities to go unreported. Our government is moving to change this. Albertans have a right to know who's trying to influence their opinion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a first time]

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Response to Pipeline Opposition

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been 316 days since the Green and NDP parties signed their agreement in British Columbia to use all tools to stop the Trans Mountain pipeline. It's been 267 days since the NDP was sworn into office. Why did it take this NDP government so long to respond with legislation threatening to turn off the taps to the Lower Mainland?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're incredibly proud of the fact that we got the approvals on that pipeline very early in our mandate. Honestly, we thought the approvals were worth more than the paper they were written on. We thought that those approvals, which are very clearly in the national interest, meant that this pipeline would be moving forward very quickly. It seems that there have been a number of delay tactics exercised by colleagues to the west. We certainly have strategies that we can use to expedite it to move more quickly, and we are undertaking those on three fronts. I'll be happy to elaborate on those in future answers.

1:50

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, that begs the question: why did the government think that paper approval was sufficient given that their New Democrat counterparts in Victoria announced last summer, last July, that they would use every tool possible to stop Kinder Morgan? Why didn't they believe their own New Democrat friends over in Victoria?

Ms Hoffman: What we do believe is that the project, that's in the national interest, that got the federal approvals in the national interest, that very clearly demonstrates benefit to the economies of Canadians across this country, would be getting the full weight of the federal government. We can give all of our weight to this initiative. Pain is being inflicted on the families of Albertans by the B.C. government. We can certainly do the same to British Columbia although it isn't our first choice. We can go to court as intervenors. We've done that. We've won every time. We can continue to move forward with a public stake if that's so required. We call on the federal government to join us in that charge, Mr. Speaker, because this project is in the national interest, and you can't count Alberta out.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I'm a little concerned in that answer and some yesterday from the Deputy Premier that there's reference to pain on British Columbians or on British Columbia. Will she not agree with me that the majority of British Columbians support the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion, support environmentally responsible resource development, and that our quarrel is not with ordinary British Columbians but with an irresponsible provincial government and that if we are seeking to impose consequences and sanctions, they're targeted on that government and not the people of B.C.?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll say that the government of B.C. has taken measures and sanctions that have certainly inflicted pain on the people of Alberta. Our job in the province of Alberta is to stand up for those everyday families. I'll tell you that if I was a British Columbian at the pump today in the Lower Mainland paying $1.50, wondering what might happen to my gas prices because of the injustices that my government had been taking in British Columbia, I would certainly be appalled at that government. What we know is that the majority of British Columbians support this pipeline. It's time that their government got on board, our federal government got on board, and put their money where their mouth is.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Federal Response to Pipeline Opposition

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The federal government is negotiating the renewal of $1.3 billion in job-training funding with the government of British Columbia. Will this government join with me in calling on the Trudeau government to withhold those $1.3 billion in federal job-training funds unless and until the Trans Mountain expansion is complete?

Ms Hoffman: We have called on and will continue to call on the federal government to follow our province, Alberta's lead on the three fronts that we have to move forward in this very aggressive strategy, Mr. Speaker, because we won't stop until this pipeline gets built. As we've made clear, the people of British Columbia might see the same kinds of consequences because of the actions their government has taken on the people of Alberta. We certainly would not like to see that happen. We want to work together in the national interest, including getting our products, our good, Canadian products, to their refineries and upgraders in the Lower Mainland. But it can't stop there. We need to get this pipeline to tidewater. We need to expand our markets and stop having our major and only buyer being our only major competitor.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Kenney: Well, I appreciate all of that, Mr. Speaker, but perhaps the minister could try to actually answer the question. I'll restate it. Will the government join with me in calling on Ottawa to withhold the $1.3 billion in discretionary federal job-training funding from the Victoria government unless and until the pipeline is built? Does this government agree with me that that should be used as a leverage point? Do they agree with that or not?

Ms Hoffman: I understand that the member opposite spent 20 years in Ottawa and knows what it's like to rag the puck, Mr. Speaker, but what we have are three very clear and strong tools that we can use to move this project forward. We have the ability to make sure that we control access to our products to the people of British Columbia. We have the ability to go to court, and we have as intervenors. We've done that 14 times. We've been successful, with 14 rulings in favour of Alberta. We can, if it's necessary, take a public stake in this pipeline, potentially buy it outright, because this is in the national interest. We compel the federal government to join us in this. These three steps will make this happen and make it happen quickly.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, let the record show that this government does not support using leverage, actual, real leverage, against the New Democrats in Victoria. I don't know why she won't answer the question. The notion that their court strategy has been successful is rather obviously belied by the fact that the program was suspended on Sunday. The pipeline has been suspended. Will this government join with me in calling on the federal government to withhold the 4.1 billion federal dollars for B.C. infrastructure that were announced last week unless and until the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion is complete?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta, this government of Alberta, will defend the people of Alberta and the working people of Canada on this pipeline initiative. Now it's time that industry needs Ottawa to step up as well. We call on them to act. Of course, the opposition leader never stepped up either; 20 years in Ottawa, zero pipelines to tidewater, yet he wants to be named MVP. I don't think so. We've got our approvals. Now we need to get our product to tidewater. We call on the federal government to help make that happen.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I'm genuinely confused by that response. The government is saying that it wants to do everything to fight for these pipelines. They want to put pressure on B.C. and call on Ottawa to act. Here we have a rather obvious direct point of leverage that could actually get the attention of the Horgan government, by Ottawa withholding the $4 billion in infrastructure and/or the $1 billion in job-training funds as real leverage. If the government is serious about its rhetorical commitment to this, why won't they join with us in calling on Ottawa to use that leverage and withhold those funds until the pipeline is done?

Ms Hoffman: When I was in education for a number of years, Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you that we talked about natural consequences. The natural consequence of not wanting our product to go to tidewater is the natural consequence that we might very well withhold that product from the members of the Lower Mainland. That's not something we want to do. We want to make sure that we have access to international markets and that we keep prices low in Alberta.

But I have to say: talking about withholding job-training funding from the people of B.C., too? Which is it, Mr. Speaker? Does the member opposite think that we shouldn't be hurting the people of B.C., the individuals, or that we should? I have to say that in his strategy I can't tell which way he's trying to move the ball, but on this side of the court we're trying to move it to the tidewater.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, my strategy was calling for Alberta to be prepared to turn off the taps last July, a strategy that this government mocked and ridiculed until they made it their own a few weeks ago. It took them nine months to do so.

Bill C-69, according to the energy industry, will make it effectively impossible to get approval for another major pipeline project ever again if it's passed. Does this government agree with us that the federal Liberals should withdraw Bill C-69, yet another Liberal attack on Canada's energy industry?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I've been very clear that this side of the House believes that we need to stop at nothing to get our pipeline built. The project means tens of thousands of jobs, billions of dollars to the economy, not to mention better public schools, better hospitals. There are three fronts that we are moving this forward on, and we take them very seriously. One is intervenor status, going to the courts. We've won 14 out of 14 times. Two is making sure that if the government of B.C. wants to keep inflicting pain on the people of Alberta, the natural consequence would be that the people of B.C. better get ready because their prices may go up as well. The third one, of course, is that if necessary we will take a public stake in this pipeline. I have to say that those are the three fronts we need to be fighting on.

Mr. Kenney: "Stop at nothing." Mr. Speaker, remember it was John Horgan who a little over a year ago, when he met with our Premier, said that she did not even try to persuade him to support the pipeline. It's this government that lifted its symbolic wine boycott. It's this government that will not support withholding federal transfers for infrastructure or job training as leverage. All that we hear are words. We don't see any actual, concrete actions. Doesn't the government understand that the only way we can get respect for the rule of law and defend our vital economic interests is through action? Will they support us in calling for the withholding of those federal funds?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to set the record straight. This side of the House acted immediately after forming government to bring forth a responsible climate leadership plan that resulted in getting two pipeline approvals. One of those is well under construction to the east, line 3, but that isn't enough. We need to make sure that we get Trans Mountain built to the west coast as well. So we are moving forward full speed ahead. We have three fronts that we're moving very aggressively on, and we call on the federal government to join us on that: make sure that the people of British Columbia know the kind of pain that their government is inflicting on the people of Alberta, and make sure that we have a public stake in this if that's what it takes, because this project is not to be negotiated.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Public Purchase Proposal

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that it's nice to see the opposition benches so nice and full today.

Over the past few days the Premier has mused about buying a stake in the Kinder Morgan pipeline, up to the point of purchasing the entire project. The Deputy Premier has doubled down on that again today. I'm glad to see that the province is willing to do what it takes to move this important project forward, but I am concerned that the Premier has painted us into a corner. This morning federal Finance Minister Bill Morneau said that any talks about investment should be held behind closed doors. To the Premier: why have you been so open about your negotiating strategy? Are you worried that you have weakened our bargaining position?

Ms Hoffman: Not at all. We want to make it very clear that this project is in the national interest. Albertans want to make sure this project goes forward, and they want a government that's fully behind it, Mr. Speaker. Our message to the government of B.C. is that we will not back off. We are a determined – determined – investor, and we need to think like investors. We certainly do. We are the owners of these resources. We need to get them to tidewater, we deserve the very best price, and we will not stop until that is the case.

Mr. Clark: Well, I'd sure love to play poker with this government, Mr. Speaker. I think it would turn out pretty well on this side.

My concern is that the government has jeopardized Alberta's negotiating position for the sake of a quick-win headline. Again, I am broadly supportive of doing whatever it takes to ensure that the Kinder Morgan expansion project is built, but I am genuinely worried that this government has overplayed their hand. To the Premier: is there any scenario where you will take a lesser stake, or are we boxed in already and committed to buying the entire project?

Ms Hoffman: I want to invite the hon. member to play poker with myself and the Labour minister. In fact, we'd be happy to take that call.

I have to say that the Trans Mountain pipeline is in Alberta's interest, and Alberta's government is acting in its interest. You know what? We're not going to let the investor board from Houston threaten our national interest and threaten our getting the very best price possible. We'll make sure that we do so in a respectful way, Mr. Speaker. But we've said: mark our words; this pipeline will get built. Mark our words: this pipeline will get built.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the number one focus must be to get Alberta's products to Canadian tidewater, and the Kinder Morgan expansion is our last chance. As much as bringing the government of Alberta on as a, quote, more determined investor may help, it is useless if Ottawa doesn't also do their part, which they seem to be more than happy to do for Bombardier or for southern Ontario car plants. To the Premier: will you commit to investing in Kinder Morgan only if the federal government is also going to buy a stake?

Ms Hoffman: Well, that sounds like a proposal to box us in, Mr. Speaker. We certainly call on the federal government to join us on the three fronts, becoming a public investor, should it come to that. Buying the pipeline is, of course, one of those; the second one is joining us as intervenors in the court challenges, that are continuing to be successful for the government of Alberta; and three is making sure that the province of British Columbia knows the kind of pain they're inflicting on Alberta, by joining us and reciprocating that same behaviour on the people of British Columbia. While that isn't our primary hope – we hope to get the pipeline built – we need the federal government to be partners, and we call on them to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Electricity Capacity Market System

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is one of only two places in North America that still operates in an energy-only market for electricity, where power producers are paid based on fluctuating prices. I have heard from members opposite that moving from an energy-only to a capacity market for electricity will discourage investment from power producers. To the Minister of Energy: how is a shift to a capacity market encouraging investment in the energy sector?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we're focused on the right priorities for regular Albertans like ensuring that energy bills are affordable. Since electricity was deregulated under the Conservatives, Albertans have been exposed to a price spike roller coaster for a number of years, and our current market, which was designed, is built on that volatility and discourages investment, in fact. We're fixing this with common-sense reforms, reducing those spikes and uncertainty, and we're building a system for now and for the future because that's what we do as a government. We have Albertans' backs.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How will the shift to a capacity market affect the electricity bills of all Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, at every step of the way in this process to make a better electricity system, it's about making life affordable for Albertans. Our shift to a capacity market is to a system that'll be more reliable, more sustainable, and more predictable. Once it's fully implemented, in 2021, it's going to provide Albertans with more stable, predictable prices. A capacity market is a proven system. It's widely used in many jurisdictions. It does encourage competition, innovation, and private investment. The deregulation policies of the previous government were not helpful. This . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we know how price spikes and volatility affect prices on electricity bills for consumers, how will a capacity market protect Albertans from price spikes and volatility in the electricity market?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're focused on the priorities of regular Albertans, and we're focused on ensuring that energy bills are affordable. That's why we've capped the energy bills of families, small businesses, and farms from those price spikes. It's clear that this government has the backs of Albertans, something that backroom deals in the past did not for regular Albertans. Under our plan everyday Albertans are protected from the market crisis. Once it gets to 6.8, our cap comes in. This is about saving Albertan families money.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Alternatives

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are united in their support for the expansion of the Trans Mountain pipeline. Unfortunately, vocal and very active opponents of this project are creating great uncertainty, that jeopardizes the project moving forward. Now, while I do not doubt the sincerity of those who insist that this pipeline will be built – and I certainly hope they're right – even they must know that there is a risk that Kinder Morgan will shelve the project. To the Premier. Good business practice dictates that we have a plan B. Does the government have a plan B, and if so, what is it?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, when our country joined Confederation, many provinces said that we need to get a railway from coast to coast. That happened, and the same thing needs to happen with our product to tidewater. That's why we are moving on the three fronts to ensure that our pipeline to tidewater gets built, because we won't take no for an option. We need to be responsible. We need to act like investors. Investors make sure that they have multiple buyers, and that's why we will take a public stake if it comes to that.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's been a lot of talk about tools and tool boxes in recent days, but forgive me if I want to bring our focus back to the project at hand. If the Trans Mountain expansion is cancelled, all the tools in the world aren't going to revive it. Given that any prudent plan includes developing a contingency in the event that plan A runs into problems and given that a number of alternatives to Trans Mountain exist and that they could in fact provide us with leverage in our negotiations with B.C. and the federal government, to the Premier: what discussions have been held with the proponents of the Eagle Spirit pipeline?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for the question. I'm going to stay on Trans Mountain, which I think was the thread of the first question and the supplementals that relate. What I do want to say is that the Premier is meeting this afternoon with the federal Finance minister. This is an important meeting for us, and it's important to all Canadians because this is a project in the national interest. Of course, there will be some cost if this does become public ownership or a public stake, but it has the ability to generate billions of dollars in public revenues for the people of this province, to get us the right price, and to make sure that the country has good access, a reliable port on Canadian tide to make sure that we can access those international markets.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting that the minister mentioned railways because there are two other plan B proposals that offer intriguing advantages to both northern Alberta and Canada's northern territories, and they involve the construction of a railway from northern Alberta to Alaska. Given that the benefits of such a proposal include the capacity to transport not just bitumen but also agricultural, mineral, and forest products to Asian markets through the port of Valdez, Alaska, to the Premier: while the fate of Trans Mountain is in the hands of those seemingly unwilling or unable to help, will the government aggressively pursue alternatives like the G7G railway?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I have a whole division in my ministry on market access, that includes rail, pipelines, and that. The Minister of Economic Development and Trade and myself have met with the G7G folks. It's in its concept stage, but it's not out there that that's a possibility. Right now Trans Mountain is much further ahead. We can use both, but right now we have to focus our efforts on Trans Mountain as well. That pipeline will get built.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Barnes: This government is responsible for our swiftly falling competitive tax advantage. According to a recent CBC news story, "Albertans . . . spend more than people in other provinces on fuel." The reason we pay so much for fuel? In a word: taxes. Alberta has the third-highest provincial fuel taxes in Canada, a staggering 19.7 cents per litre, and a 67 per cent NDP carbon tax increase looming. To the minister: are you proud of your record-setting tax increases?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know what? I'm very proud of the work that the Finance minister has done ensuring, in our budget, that not only are we protecting the public services that Albertans rely on; we're also staying focused on diversifying the economy, something the opposition doesn't believe in, as well as supporting our job creators while also outlining a path to balance. What I will say to the member opposite: Albertans pay $11 billion less in taxes than the next lowest jurisdiction, their besties in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Barnes: Given that this Finance minister's goal is $96 billion of permanent debt and given that interest payments will hit nearly $3 billion by 2021 as per his three-year outlook, assuming no more credit downgrades, so much money that it could build every single highway, bridge, hospital, and school in the province that year, to the minister: do you truly believe that the path to balance involves sending twice as much money as the entire Justice ministry to line the pockets of Bay Street bankers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'll say a couple of things. Number one, the reason Alberta's economy is looking up and that we are moving into a recovery is because of a number of factors, two of those being the historic infrastructure build that our government decided to invest in at a time when infrastructure was sorely needed, because the previous governments failed to adequately invest in our schools, our hospitals, our roads, our bridges, and our trade corridors. The other reason is because of our climate leadership plan, which got the approval of the Trans Mountain pipeline. These pipelines will get built, and we're going to do whatever it takes.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, the largest tax hike in Alberta's history was supposed to get the province some much-needed social licence to build those pipelines. Given that Alberta families have paid the price for this through higher unemployment, underemployment, and price increases and given that zero value has been received after Albertans have paid dearly for social licence, would the Premier please ask her ally Justin Trudeau what his return policy is for this defective social licence, or is she prepared to double down on her managed decline of Alberta's economy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll tell you one thing. Our government is not about to take advice from the Leader of the Official Opposition, who spent 20 years in Ottawa and got zero pipelines to tidewater. The other thing that I find very rich – and I'll enlighten the member opposite – is that in Ottawa the Leader of the Official Opposition, when he was part of the Harper government, ran six straight deficit budgets, a $56 billion deficit in a single year. He added $145 billion to the national debt. Now, he's no math wizard, so don't be fooled.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, a growing number of Albertans are feeling totally let down by this government. Not one full-time job was created last month, yet the carbon tax is increasing. They are failing on the carbon tax, and they are failing on the budget. The NDP won't stand up to their friend Justin Trudeau, who took a personal day during the Kinder Morgan crisis, for Albertans. People are frustrated. They are outraged. Minister, you and your bestie Justin Trudeau created the problem. What are you going to do to fix it?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know what's interesting? The members opposite want to cut taxes for the top 1 per cent earners in Alberta and at the same time still balance the budget and somehow not impact front-line services. His budget is either a storm of fairy dust – he's either deeply misinformed or intentionally misinforming. Which one is it?

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, this government isn't interested in helping anyone.

One thing has become all too clear . . .
said the Calgary Chamber of commerce recently,
. . . government policies are making it harder for them to succeed.
Governments are layering on costs, making it increasingly difficult to run a healthy business.

Minister, will you at least recognize that your policies are damaging Alberta, and will you stop pursuing your very expensive ideological agenda?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I'll enlighten the member on is the fact that jobs are up in our province, 90,000 new full-time jobs, mostly in the private sector. Our growth is up, exports are up, manufacturing is up, wages are up, and housing starts are up. Now, having said all that, I've been travelling the province talking to chambers of commerce and small-business owners, and we recognize that not all of them have felt the economic recovery. That is why our government tabled a budget that is built on supporting the recovery so that it is built to last for future Albertans, future generations.

Mrs. Pitt: "They blew it," Mr. Speaker. Even though I agree with those words, they aren't my own. They are the words of economist Trevor Tombe in response to the NDP's disastrous budget. Now, given that this government is putting Albertans on the hook for more debt each and every day, less of their taxes are going towards services, and more of their taxes are going to service our debt and given that Albertans are hard-working and that they don't want any of their income to be going to bondholders and foreign bankers, would this NDP government stop kicking Albertans when they're down, stand up for us, scrap this ridiculous carbon tax, and give us some plan on how to get back to balance?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the members of the opposition would actually completely kill the Trans Mountain pipeline. They would kill our economic recovery with their ideological cuts all over the place. Our government is investing strategically in critical infrastructure, in public services. We're also supporting the job creators in this province. Our two tax credits that we introduced a year and a half ago are wildly successful, and $60 million conditionally approved has leveraged $1.2 billion of capital investment here in the province at a time when it's needed.

Federal Energy Policies

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I have read the Minister of Energy's prior submission on Bill C-48, the Oil Tanker Moratorium Act. Most of that submission was spent arguing the science of naphtha and condensates and asking for the bill to be executed instead of opposing the tanker ban outright. Can we trust this Minister of Energy to stand up and protect Alberta families and jobs in the face of this ruinous Bill C-69 when she chose to try to make Bill C-48 less bad instead of opposing the tanker ban outright?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure if the question is about C-48 or C-69, but I will say that we are in constant contact with the federal government on a number of matters, and the lens with all of those is that we're standing up for Alberta and Alberta's industry interests, and that will always be. You're correct. I've written letters on a number of fronts, and we will continue to do so. My colleague the Minister of Environment and Parks and I are in regular contact because these matters span both our ministries.

Mr. Panda: Given, Mr. Speaker, that when I questioned the minister in estimates yesterday, she and her staff believed that they still had time to make a submission in opposition to Bill C-69 and given that the federal Standing Committee on Environment and Sustainable Development's written submission deadline on C-69 was April 6, will the Minister of Energy join me in defending my submission on Bill C-69?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I've worked with a number of my industry colleagues and stakeholders such as CEPA, and I'm well aware of the issues. Again, my colleague the Minister of Environment and Parks and I have made submissions to the federal government on a number of fronts. Especially with this, we do understand that there are some issues, but at the same time we've been welcome to submit our information and our feedback, and that's what we've been doing. I am somewhat puzzled why you guys are so obsessed with the federal government and what they're doing. Maybe that's where you need to be instead of across the way. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Panda: We are not in bed with the Trudeau Liberals, for sure. Given, Mr. Speaker, that the federal Trudeau government will shake up the National Energy Board with Bill C-69 and given that the Canadian Energy Pipeline Association says that it is difficult to imagine that a new major pipeline could be built in Canada under C-69 and since the minister of environment said yesterday that she wrote her Trudeau friends last summer about specifics they want to see in C-69, will the minister outline those specifics and table her letters sent to Ottawa?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The first thing I'll say is that everyone, at least on this side of the House, knows that this minister doesn't have any friends.

Second of all, I believe we tabled that letter, and if we didn't, we'll table it afterwards, because we've been very clear on what we've been asking the federal government for on this particular piece of legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

2:20 Agricultural Environmental Programs

Mr. Piquette: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. No one cares more about the environment than our agricultural producers, who are always looking to decrease their environmental impact. That's why I know that many were pleased to see this government expand its funding to the agricultural sector under the climate leadership plan by over $80 million over the next four years. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: what have we learned from the last round of funding that has prompted this expansion?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Yes, undoubtedly, we know that climate change is having a serious effect on our environment. This is leading to more extreme and unpredictable weather, and farmers are very vulnerable to that, which is why I'm proud we're taking action on climate change. I think we have learned just how necessary these programs are and how valuable they are to producers because they have been so highly subscribed to. Through the climate leadership fund we were able to top up the program again, by an additional $21 million, to help farmers make their operations as efficient as possible.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that farmers are always looking to decrease their input costs, how will this money help save money for farmers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. On-farm efficiency programs don't just help farmers, but they contribute to the fight against climate change. As an example, Susan and Evan Schuurman from Schuurman Dairy farm have said:

The energy-efficiency programs offered by the government gave us the incentive to move ahead with installing solar power on our operation . . . We have found that by investing in solar power we have been able to lower our dairy operation's power consumption by over 60 per cent.

Efficiency and sustainability from a business perspective has always been important for producers, and when I talk to producers across the province, they realize that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I've already heard from a number of interested constituents who would love to participate in this program, to the same minister: how can farmers apply for funding this time around?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, I encourage all farmers interested in ensuring they have the most efficient systems possible and those interested in generating their own power to visit the Agriculture and Forestry programs and services web page. We have many programs to choose from. If any farmers have questions, they can speak with one of our department's experts at 310-FARM. This government believes in programming and a public service that supports communities and small businesses, not reckless cuts that would leave Albertans behind.

Rural Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, with the recent announcement of new funding to the AHS ambulance system, details regarding the key changes specific to rural operations have yet to be disclosed. Several key, obvious problems must be addressed. Enormous delays for paramedics in emergency departments is number one. Plus, nonemergency transfers, flexing of units into large cities, and faulty centralized dispatch all must be remedied immediately. To the Health minister: what changes, if any, to these problematic rural ambulance operations will be made with this new funding?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. It is certainly our priority to make sure that no matter where you are in this province, you have quality, timely access to emergency first responders. We are very proud of the fact that we're increasing EMS funding in this budget by $23 million. I hope that the members opposite will support us in the budget that is going directly to front lines. AHS is developing their plan should our budget be approved, and then we'll be able to share that publicly with all Albertans and members of this House.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Rural Health Services Review Final Report clearly indicated that the rural EMS units must be treated differently in terms of hospital wait times and mandatorily released no later than one hour after arrival and given that the same report clearly indicated that these rural units should be returned to their home community directly rather than being flexed and diverted elsewhere to prevent coverage gaps in the local communities, to the minister: with the new funding, why can't these crucial rural operational problems be addressed now?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that those were some of the recommendations that were heard from folks in the community, and I certainly heard the member's statement yesterday in this House. I have to say that having hard and fast rules about being returned to community – I know no first responder who, when they got called to go to the terrible accident that was happening in Saskatchewan, would want to go back to their community instead of going and running to the call to help those young men who were dying on the side of the road. It's important that we increase funding, that we increase services, that we increase opportunities throughout this province, and that's why we're bringing forward a budget that does just that.

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, given that that same rural health report clearly identified that rural EMS units and their highly trained paramedics' valuable time were being wasted when taxi-style nonemergency transfers, doctors' appointments, and transport duties were assigned to them and given that, instead, the obvious solution to that problem is to return to an auxiliary transport system for that need, Minister, with the new funding, why can't that crucial rural operational problem be addressed now?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Every year since we've been in government, we've increased the number of nonemergency transfer vehicles because that's the right thing to do. But it's also the right thing to do to make sure that we are increasing the opportunities for front-line paramedics as well through having more first responders available throughout this province. That's why we're bringing forward a budget that has a $23 million increase, that's why we're expanding the community paramedicine program so that transfers don't need to happen unless they're actually required, and that's why we're increasing the number of long-term care and acute-care spaces in this province so that those patients have somewhere to be, instead of moving for deep ideological cuts, like the members of the opposition call on us to do every day.

Health Care outside Large Urban Centres

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, this government is investing in community paramedics. These paramedics will provide medications and supplement other aspects of home care. In our two largest cities citizens can access the abundance of labs, diagnostic imaging, and specialists at a health or allied health facility in mere minutes. They have public transit, taxis, and Ubers available to all, not to mention a bunch of rural ambulances. To the Minister of Health: why did you choose to have this initiative in the two largest cities?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This program did start in the two largest centres in the province, and we've expanded it throughout the province. I'm sure the associate minister can elaborate on that in her subsequent responses. It's important that we have this service available throughout our province. We want to have it in a hub and spoke model, and that's why we have expanded it to communities, including Camrose, for example. We are very proud of the fact that it's going to reduce wait times, it's going to provide more prompt response, and it's going to mean that patients are getting the care in the right place.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, nurse practitioner investment is also terrific as they do help supplement the existing professionals, ensuring citizens get timely support. The community of Vulcan is fighting for additional locum spaces to supplement their physician support. A nurse practitioner might have helped this community. Minister, why did you focus your nurse practitioner investment in the cities, where people have an abundance of physicians relative to the smaller cities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We are very proud of the demonstration projects that are under way to make sure that we increase opportunities in primary care. We also have nurse practitioners throughout the province in a variety of other communities. We've actually just recently posted I think it's two for Wabasca, which is certainly not one of the largest communities in our province. We want to make sure that we have the right health experts throughout our province instead of moving forward with deep, drastic ideological cuts, like the members opposite propose, and privatization. We're investing in important front-line service providers, including nurse practitioners.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, these initiatives would provide most benefit in areas where people don't have immediate access to health, as in communities that are not Edmonton and Calgary, and given that the plans released by the minister have a very urban focus, again, why aren't you putting more resources to the rural, where it will make a very big difference?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, it's so interesting. These guys will tell us that we need to cut, cut, cut, and then when they have a chance in question period, they'll pretend that that's not the case. They are always arguing for us to make deep, drastic cuts. I understand that they want to blow up hospitals in Edmonton and Calgary, like they did in the 1990s, but on this side of the House we're going to protect all Albertans. We're going to make sure we fund growth, we're going to keep communities stable, and we've proven that through the last three years, the last three budgets. You guys don't even have a draft budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Electricity Power Purchase Arrangements

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government's action of increasing the specified gas emitters carbon tax in 2015 made the power purchase agreements more unprofitable, triggering the exit clause. Then the agreements fell into the Balancing Pool's lap, which forced them to pass it along to electricity consumers, which are everyday Albertans. Why does the NDP government continue to slag the Alberta Utilities Commission and Neil McCrank, the former head of the Energy and Utilities Board, and blame everything on the unfounded nefarious agreement for what is, in reality, NDP incompetence?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, just over a year ago we took action to protect Alberta families. We've settled the PPA disputes with all the companies, and we've provided a loan to the Balancing Pool. If we had not acted, consumers would be facing much higher charges on their bills because, again, it goes back to the backroom deals of the previous Conservative governments. Instead, because of our actions, average charges in the next year will be 78 per cent below what they would have been had we not acted.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Well, that's costing Albertans approximately $73 million a month.

Given that according to documents filed in the Court of Queen's Bench, the province has said that the minister only became aware of the "or more unprofitable" after the fact – evidently it wasn't communicated to the ministers – and that when asked, the Deputy Premier said that they were not aware that raising the carbon tax could trigger the exit and that this information was not in their transition binders when there were elected – uh-oh – why did the minister not consult with the industry, when this "or more unprofitable" clause was widely known, before making the decision?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, in pretty much everything we've done since we've taken government, we have consulted with industry. We've consulted with Albertans, environmental groups. We've gotten all kinds of input on the climate leadership plan, on the modernized royalty framework. We continue to do so all the time, and we absolutely got good advice along the way. We will continue to do that.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Minister, given that Bill 16, An Act to Cap Regulated Electricity Rates, allows the minister to change the rate of 6.8 cents, which is double what the actual rate is right now, without seeking the consent of the Legislature and given that the regulated rate option that is now set by the government used to be set by an independent body, the Alberta Utilities Commission, and given that the Calgary Chamber of commerce has said that the government's lawsuit sets a devastating precedent that will erode public trust, how, Minister, do you expect Albertans to have any confidence in this government given the mishandling of the PPAs?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, first of all, I would say that we are not setting the rate at 6.8 cents as the price for electricity. That is the cap that we have set should prices rise. To be clear, they are not there now, and if you're in a contract, you may pay less. It all goes back to the backroom deals that the previous government made and completely destroyed our electricity system in doing so. We are going to 30 per cent renewables by 2030. The rest will be natural gas. We are changing our electricity market. We're encouraging investment. Our first reps proved that.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

DynaLife Medical Labs

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to explore the DynaLife panel appeal decision we tabled last week to remind the House that the panel found that the decision by Alberta Health Services toward a $3 billion lab services contract to provide it with no facilities in Alberta or Canada breached its duty of procedural fairness in the RFP process. The evaluation methodology and process raised doubt as to the validity of the award. Many aspects of the RFP process were not transparent, and there was an opportunity for bias and favouritism to influence the evaluation. To the Minister of Health: was she aware of these concerns regarding the DynaLife award, and did she consider them to be of a serious nature when she made her decision to cancel the award to the preferred proponent?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We made it very clear during the election campaign that what we weren't going to do was continue in experiments of privatization as the previous government had. As a result, we put a cease to the privatization of lab services for Edmonton and north. We thought it was important that we look at evidence and make a decision that would best serve the people of Alberta. I'm incredibly proud that we've moved forward with a public lab and that it will be built here in the city of Edmonton. This will mean good jobs for the people of this province, instead of privatizing and outsourcing them for people living elsewhere.

Mr. W. Anderson: Not the answer we were looking for, Mr. Speaker.

My second question to the Minister of Health: given that the minister cancelled the award, did she have concerns regarding the manner in which Alberta Health Services, her ministry, had conducted the procurement process?

Ms Hoffman: I understand it's not the answer you're looking for. The answer according to your leader and your policy manual, that's to be considered here in a couple of weeks, is more privatization, Mr. Speaker, more layoffs, more reductions, more two-tiered health care, American-style health care. That's not the answer that Albertans deserve. Albertans have made it clear in the past, and we are standing up for the public health care services in this province because what's in the bottom of your pocket shouldn't drive your access to health care. We all deserve quality health care. Your colleagues just asked me to invest more in rural Alberta. We're investing in the people of this province because we know it's important, and we're not going to be driven to privatization through your ongoing calls and efforts.

Mr. W. Anderson: May I remind the minister that our leader wasn't here when you cancelled the contract and let us know.

The third question is: if it was determined that Alberta Health Services demonstrated a pattern of such behaviour, what would you have really done?

Ms Hoffman: Well, the good thing is that we don't have to answer these kinds of hypothetical questions because the truth is that we took government on a platform that included stopping experiments in privatization, which I know is what the members opposite are calling for. We stopped that privatization. We're investing in a public lab. We're protecting those workers. We're protecting Albertans' information. We're making sure that these important tests, which drive about 70 per cent of the decisions in the health care system, are done by the people of Alberta in a public model, and I couldn't be more proud of that.

School Equipment Funding

Ms Luff: Mr. Speaker, I'm passionate about equity in education. The fact is that many public schools rely on parent fundraising councils in order to buy things like Smart boards, new sports equipment, and furniture. Given that there is often a discrepancy in a school's ability to fund raise depending on where the school is located and the number of parents who have time for such endeavours, this can put some schools, like many in my riding, at a disadvantage. What is the ministry doing to ensure that all public schools have the same level of access to technology, supplies, and specialty teachers?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. We all know that our schools and our school systems have been underfunded for a very long time. That's why our government has put almost a billion dollars more into the system over the last three years than would have happened with the previous government. You know, that has resulted in at least 3,600 new positions in terms of teachers and support staff.

We also introduced, Mr. Speaker, the $75 million classroom improvement fund. This is a way by which we can move and make decisions around improving the classroom conditions for students in all schools, in all school boards across the province. So we're going to continue to work hard on it and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that St. Peter school in Penbrooke has had to tear down its playground due to safety concerns and given that we are providing new schools with playground funding and given that no school should have to fund raise for a playground, what opportunities are available to finance this playground?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We knew, as we had more than 200 new school projects that we were involved in, that it was important to include some funding for school playgrounds with those new schools. It's a great time to do the levelling and do the process that's necessary to put a playground in place. So we have for new schools a $250,000 grant. People can still fund raise to supplement that as well. And for established schools and school playground programs there is the Culture and Tourism community improvement grant that can be applied for, that can help to build and replace playgrounds.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that schools often rely on these CFEP grants to buy a litany of things from band uniforms to computers and given that these grants require matching funds, what is the department doing to reduce schools' reliance on these Culture and Tourism grants for things that many would consider essential?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we are aware that there's more work to do in regard to strengthening our public education system in schools. You know, we have more than 200 school projects that are being built in every corner of the province. As well, we reduced school fees considerably, more than $54 million to reduce school fees both last year and again this year.

As well, we have introduced an exponential growth in our school nutrition program. We now are feeding more than 30,000 students every day with a nutritious meal across the province.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, will the government agree with me, given that the provincial government has indicated a willingness to risk tax dollars to ensure investor certainty on the Trans Mountain pipeline, that we ought not do so unless the federal government also participates financially to ensure that Ottawa is fully committed and engaged, with skin in the game, so that it's not just Alberta taxpayers who are left holding the bag? Will they agree with me that Ottawa needs to match what Alberta might do to ensure the construction of the pipeline through a public investment?

Ms Hoffman: I have to say that we are not going to stop, Mr. Speaker. We're going to fight to get this pipeline, and we're not going to box ourselves in by putting forward demands like that. We thought that the Leader of the Official Opposition said that he supported the Premier in her call to make sure that this pipeline went forward, including public investment if that's what it came to. I know the people of Alberta, certainly, are saying that we can't stop at any cost. This is an important infrastructure project for the people of Alberta.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, the reality is this. It's only the federal government that can use its constitutional authority to ensure the construction of the pipeline. I agree in principle and, regrettably, that we may need to financially backstop the investors, but given that the federal government has done nothing yet to ensure the construction of the pipeline, why does this government not use this as leverage and insist that they come to the table with dollars as well? Why are they prepared to take risks that Ottawa is not going to take to ensure the construction of the pipeline?

Ms Hoffman: Well, my biggest question is: why didn't the member opposite, when he was in Ottawa, take some investment or even some interest in this project, Mr. Speaker? Because I have to say that spending 20 years in Ottawa and failing to get our product to tidewater, to me, is mighty disappointing.

We've been stepping up at every step along the way, and we will continue to do so. We've been working at this for three years. It's time that we up some of the additional pressures and that Ottawa do the same. That's why we're calling on the three fronts, including them stepping up to support us with public investment. But, Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to say that we're going to sit back on our hands and let Justin Trudeau make decisions for the people of Alberta. This product is too important. This pipeline is too important to do that.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Kenney: Well, given that this government has done nothing to criticize Justin Trudeau's veto of Northern Gateway, his killing of Energy East, his surrender on Keystone, and his total inaction on Trans Mountain, why will this government not join with us in insisting that the federal government help clean up the mess that their inaction has created by helping to ensure the construction of this pipeline through its financial participation if necessary? Why do they keep giving a political pass to their close ally Justin Trudeau, Mr. Speaker?

Ms Hoffman: My allies are the people of Alberta, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that I will not stand down from standing up for them. I know that when the member was in Ottawa for two decades, he got an approval by ramming through and disrespecting the process that, certainly, was far different with the Trans Mountain pipeline than it was with Northern Gateway. I wish they would have done that properly. I wish they wouldn't have set that project up for failure. But you know what? On this side of the House we're committed to working through the appropriate channels. We have an approved pipeline. We have 14 appeals that we've won. It's time that the federal government stood up with us and made B.C. realize the impacts that they're having not just on the people of Alberta but all Canadians if they continue to delay.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, if I might, I would just like to remind all of you that after question 5 in Oral Question Period, we have a practice and a standing order about the use of preambles. I would encourage you when you're asking supplemental questions after that time to avoid the preambles.

Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I rise to table five copies of the government of Alberta's submission to the federal Standing Committee on Transport, Infrastructure and Communities on Bill C-48, better known as the tanker ban, in which the Minister of Energy argues to make the bill less bad and calls for the bill to be executed.

My second submission, Mr. Speaker, is five copies of my submission to the federal Standing Committee on Transport, Infrastructure and Communities on Bill C-48, again, the same tanker ban, in which I diligently oppose the tanker ban on national constitutional grounds.

My third submission, Mr. Speaker, is five copies to the federal Standing Committee on Environment and Sustainable Development on Bill C-69, An Act to enact the Impact Assessment Act and the Canadian Energy Regulator Act, to amend the Navigation Protection Act and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, in which I vigorously oppose this federal bill. I would invite the Minister of Energy and the Minister of Environment and Parks to also table their opposition to Bill C-69.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of the affidavit of Peter T. Sekulic to the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta in Peace River under the applicant Northern Air Charter, with respondents Alberta Health Services and Can-West Corporate Air Charters.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand to table five copies of a letter received from Mr. Bill Rowe regarding the Berwyn Autumn Lodge. He says: "I am extremely disillusioned, disappointed, frustrated and angry since the announcement of the lodge closure . . . Because of the closure, my wife and I are separated after over 65 years of marriage." He goes on to say: "I was told that if I didn't like the situation that I should 'just leave'."

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Ms Ganley, Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, pursuant to the Statutes Repeal Act a report, undated, entitled Alberta Justice and Solicitor General Statutes Repeal Act 2018 List.

Motions under Standing Order 42

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Provincial Advocacy to Federal Government on Trans Mountain Pipeline Expansion Suspension

Mr. Nixon:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government of Canada to delay its planned $4.1 billion infrastructure funding awarded to the government of British Columbia until the B.C. government ceases its efforts to obstruct the Trans Mountain expansion project.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on the motion that I gave notice that I would be moving earlier. I will be brief. I will give you a few facts that I think will help members as they determine how they will vote on this motion.

First, is that the Premier a few days ago indicated that her government may be open to asking the federal government to stop equalization payments or infrastructure funding going to B.C. till the Trans Mountain is done. Then under questioning from the Leader of the Opposition, it turned out that was probably primarily around the pan-Canadian framework, which is $30 million, which is really just a drop in the bucket with the numbers that we're talking about.

So today the opposition is giving the government a chance to be able to stand up and say very clearly to Justin Trudeau that we expect him to take action, including stopping payments like this $4.1 billion, until B.C. respects our constitutional rights and stops hindering Kinder Morgan from being able to put in that pipeline.

To be clear, Mr. Speaker, a vote against that is a vote for Justin Trudeau.

The Speaker: Having heard the motion, all in favour, please say aye. Those opposed, please say no.

Hon. members, the daily Routine is now concluded.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a point of clarification. Did that motion carry or not? You didn't say anything.

The Speaker: I'm sorry. I indicated that the motion did not pass.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 1:30 p.m.

The legislative policy committees will convene this afternoon and tomorrow morning for consideration of the main estimates. This afternoon Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates for Transportation in the Rocky Mountain Room, and Alberta's Economic Future will consider the estimates for Economic Development and Trade in the Parkland Room. Tomorrow morning

Alberta's Economic Future will again consider the estimates for Economic Development and Trade in the Rocky Mountain Room, and Families and Communities will consider the estimates for Service Alberta in the Parkland Room.

Now the House is adjourned.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

I wonder if we might pray or contemplate, each in our own way. Hon. members, I look in this Chamber today and see unity in support of our eastern neighbours in Saskatchewan. As a nation we call Canada we continue to mourn the loss of the woman and men of the Humboldt Broncos and have found ourselves holding loved ones closer this past week. As stories emerge of individual acts of heroism, I'd like to take this opportunity to encourage all of you to speak with your families and consider signing the universal donor card on the back of the Alberta personal health card. This action can lead to the utmost gift, the opportunity to live.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three grade 6 classes from the great town of Rimbey, up in Ponoka county. I had the pleasure of visiting with all these grade 6 classes a couple of months back. I can tell you that they sure know their stuff. They even taught me a few lessons on parliamentary democracy, which I think is great. I would ask them all and their chaperones and their teachers to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an absolute honour, pleasure, and joy today to rise and introduce some very bright, young up-and-comers. It won't be very long before one of them has my job, I'm sure. They are members of the Kneehill Christian School. There are 34 of the fine young constituents. They are accompanied by Miss Terri Miller. I invite them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other school groups today, hon. members?

Seeing and hearing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you. I rise today on Yom ha-Shoah, or Holocaust Remembrance Day, to introduce three leaders in the Edmonton-McClung community who have worked to ensure that we never forget the enduring lessons of the Holocaust. I would like to extend my thoughts and prayers to everyone observing Yom ha-Shoah. Here today is Gillian Horowitz, whose diligence on the Edmonton Holocaust committee led to the memorial to the Holocaust which stands on the Legislature Grounds today. Rabbi Daniel Friedman and his wife, Rabbanit Batya Friedman, of the Beth Israel synagogue, who I will speak more about later today, are also in attendance in your gallery, Mr. Speaker. Accompanying them is my beloved chief of staff, Ashley MacInnis, without whom I would not be able to operate, who makes me look good every day. I'd ask them all to please now rise and receive the warmest reception of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly some of my long-term friends and supporters who are visiting the Assembly today. Harry and Jan Kuperus have lived in the Highlands area since 1992. I first met them when they came out to help the campaign in the by-election that first elected me, in 2000. We've been friends ever since. They've served on my constituency executive. They're both extremely active in the community, and they have five children and 11 grandchildren. Two of those grandchildren, Harrison and Jonathan Peebles, are with them today. I understand that Harrison will be attending Eastglen composite high school next year, and Jonathan will be attending Highlands junior high. In this way, the family's history in the area is going to continue. I'd now ask Harry and Jan and their grandsons Harrison and Jonathan to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mrs. Schreiner: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my daughter-in-law Jessica Schreiner. Like all members here, I could not do this job without the support of my family. Family is not just our personal cornerstone; it is that of our great province and our communities. It is my pleasure to acknowledge the tremendous joy that Jessica brings to our family each and every day. I ask that Jessica now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, you had an invitation today?

Mrs. Aheer: Yes. Thank you. Sorry. Could you move on to the next one, Mr. Speaker? I'll just get myself organized.

The Speaker: Are you asking for unanimous consent?

Mrs. Aheer: Just give me two seconds.

The Speaker: I'm giving you two seconds.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. I'm good. I can do this.

I would like to take a moment to introduce a very, very good friend of mine. He is a huge support for special needs, works with the hub and the Sinneave foundation. John Seigner, if you could please stand and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Bill 9

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that as legislators it is our privilege to represent our constituents and their concerns in this Legislature, which is why I've been fairly disappointed that my colleagues across the aisle have been hiding from an issue.

Let me start from the beginning. Earlier this week the Leader of the Official Opposition was very clear that he would be abstaining from a vote on the bubble-zone legislation, which should not come as a surprise. In the past he has certainly been very vocal about what he thinks about women's right to choose. But he took it a step further. He said that the only reason that we would move forward on bubble-zone legislation that protects women is for political gain. It's cynical, it's shameful, but, worst of all, it demonstrates that the Leader of the Official Opposition and his caucus don't want to hear the concerns that Alberta women have raised. He's been very clear about how he feels about women's right to choose, so why wouldn't his caucus follow his lead? It's disappointing that the Official Opposition leader and his caucus refuse to listen to those concerns, that they are absent on this issue. Honestly, I'm embarrassed for them.

Let me tell you why we're introducing this legislation. The answer is simple. We need to stand up for Alberta women when they ask for help. Across the country and in other jurisdictions they're introducing bubble zones. We heard from clinics here in Alberta that protesting has nearly doubled this year, and so have threats of violence. We cannot wait for something terrible to happen to make this change. This is serious. That's why we're doing this now. So while they sit with their leader and ignore social issues, we'll be standing here with Alberta women.

The Speaker: Hon. members, let's think about the future.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Holocaust Remembrance Day

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Elie Wiesel, the great chronicler of the Holocaust, said:

Remembering is a noble and necessary act. The call of memory, the call to memory, reaches us from the very dawn of history. No commandment figures so frequently, so insistently, in the Bible. It is incumbent upon us to remember the good we have received, and the evil we have suffered.

Today, Mr. Speaker, the world remembers. We remember the evil suffered by the Jewish people in the Shoah, the effort by the Nazi regime to exterminate from the face of the Earth the European Jewish people in which some 6 million were brutally murdered, murdered in the Holocaust by bullets in eastern Europe at places like Babi Yar, leaving behind hundreds of unmarked graves with thousands, tens of thousands of victims of history's most pernicious and durable form of hatred, anti-Semitism; in industrial killing at places like Auschwitz and Birkenau, at Majdanek and Treblinka, at places like Theresienstadt, all through central Europe.

Mr. Speaker, the anti-Semitism that inspired the Holocaust developed over centuries of European history but reached a frenzy in the 1930s and '40s. Sadly, today we see the phenomenon of the new anti-Semitism even recently in Paris. A Holocaust survivor, one of the few who had been given refuge in Canada during the war, returned to France to live out her elder years in peace and was recently killed in a spasm of anti-Semitic violence.

So today we join with members of our Jewish community in remembering. As Wiesel said, "I belong to a generation that has often felt abandoned by God . . . yet, I believe that we must not give up."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill

Rural High-speed Internet

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is facing a digital divide, and the ability of people in rural areas to participate in the economy is becoming increasingly compromised by issues like slow Internet or no connectivity. More and more services are only or primarily available online, more educational tools are available through the Internet, and more commerce occurs online every year. We're facing a real economic risk if we continue to allow Alberta to fall behind digitally. While rural communities know the importance of high-speed Internet connectivity, many are not well served, and some communities like Olds have established their own Internet services.

We don't succeed as a province until we all succeed, and for that reason I'm very excited to participate in the Digital Futures symposium on April 27 in Pincher Creek, where I'm looking forward to hearing more about the barriers and opportunities rural communities are facing and to talking about upcoming technologies like 5G, which will support applications like artificial intelligence and autonomous vehicles.

All areas of the province must be future ready, with the infrastructure required for these new technologies. We've seen connectivity propel the success of companies like Benevity, in Calgary, and BioWare, in Edmonton, and the positive economic benefits they bring to their communities.

Kids in cities and larger towns are able to do their homework online at home while many of their rural peers are limited to the times they are at school and equipment that's available. Many people in indigenous communities must drive far from home just to get a data signal.

I'm committed to every Albertan having equal access to opportunities that are enabled by having high-speed Internet access, and I look forward to tabling a private member's bill in support of this in the fall.

I invite all of my colleagues in the House to attend Digital Futures later this month.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Vaisakhi

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A highlight of the year in Edmonton-Mill Creek and the rest of southeast Edmonton is Vaisakhi, a historical and religious festival in Sikhism and Hinduism. It's celebrated on April 14 in most places, but in Alberta it's celebrated on the May long weekend due to the fact that April weather in Alberta is very uncertain.

Vaisakhi marks the birth of the Khalsa way of living in the Sikh religion and commemorates the formation of the Khalsa panth of warriors under Guru Gobind Singh, in 1699. The previous guru was persecuted and executed for refusing to convert to Islam under the orders of the Mughal emperor. This triggered the coronation of the 10th guru of Sikhism and the historic formation of the Khalsa, both on Vaisakhi day.

It is also a spring festival, a spring harvest festival for the Sikhs, and an ancient festival of the Punjabis, marking the solar new year and celebrating the spring harvest. On Vaisakhi Sikh temples, or gurdwaras, are decorated, and Sikhs visit and bathe in lakes or rivers before visiting the local gurdwaras and community fairs.

A very important part of Vaisakhi is the Nagar Kirtan, or procession, with the southeast Edmonton procession being a fantastic and colourful event attended by so many people. They estimated it was 10,000 people last year in the procession.

Living in a city with so many diverse cultural and religious traditions and celebrations enriches us all. Taking part in or observing a Vaisakhi celebration is a joyous way to celebrate diversity and the freedom we all enjoy to worship in our own ways and to speak our own languages.

Happy Vaisakhi.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Jewish Community Leaders in Edmonton

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take the time today on Yom ha-Shoah Ve Hagevurah, Holocaust Remembrance Day, to honour a couple who have dedicated their lives to making their communities a better place. Rabbi Daniel Friedman and Rabbanit Batya Friedman have not only been spiritual leaders but community leaders for the last 16 years in Edmonton-McClung. Rabbanit Batya is the director of the Capital Region Interfaith Housing Initiative, an organization that strives to bring an end to homelessness in our city. She has served as the vice-president of the Jewish Federation of Edmonton. She has also run the Matan program for bat mitzvah girls and led women's educational programs. Rabbi Friedman, a recipient of the Alberta centennial medal for service to the community in 2006, is the past president of Edmonton Jewish Family Services and has served on the boards of two Hebrew schools in Edmonton. He is currently on the executive board of the Rabbinical Council of America.

It is of particular relevance as we observe Yom ha-Shoah that Rabbi Friedman was appointed by the government of Canada to chair the national holocaust development council. Its mandate was to have a monument in remembrance of the Holocaust erected on Parliament Hill in Ottawa. That goal was achieved last year, when the monument was erected.

The Friedmans will soon be leaving Beth Israel synagogue to take a post in London, England. Going with them on this next adventure are their five daughters, four of whom were born here in Edmonton. The entire family will be sorely missed.

Rabbi Friedman always knew he wanted to be a rabbi. During a family interview about his father's position with a synagogue in Sydney an eight-year-old Daniel proudly announced that he wanted to be the first rabbi on the moon when he grew up. While he may not be the first rabbi on the moon yet, he has left a lasting impression in our little corner of the world, in Edmonton-McClung, Edmonton, and the whole province.

Thank you very much for your service, and bon voyage.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Alberta Party Policies

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Legislature and I think politics as a whole is far too often all about either/or. Either you believe in building schools, or you believe in strong fiscal management. Either you want a strong health care system, or you want to eliminate the debt. You're either with us, or you're against us. Well, I don't like that word "or." In the Alberta Party we like to talk about "and": environmental protection and responsible energy development, innovation for the new economy and strong traditional industries, quality of life in rural communities and in big cities, opportunity for indigenous people and all Albertans in equal measure, addressing poverty and building a prosperous society, promoting Alberta's interests and building a strong nation.

But Albertans are being told they have to choose. That is not how we built this province. We didn't make Alberta the best place in the world to live by having to choose one over the other or by leaving people behind. We did it by building the most compassionate, innovative, entrepreneurial community in the world based on "and," and we can keep it that way. Albertans do not need to choose between left or right. We can have a strong economy, and we can have a strong society. That is who Albertans are, and that is what the Alberta Party stands for.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Response to Pipeline Opposition

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, 49 days ago the Premier of British Columbia announced another delay tactic in his fight against the Trans Mountain pipeline, referring the matter yet again to court. Then our Premier declared victory, saying: today's decision by B.C. is an important step forward, a victory. With 49 days to go before the deadline for Kinder Morgan potentially to cancel the entire project, I have this question. Why did Alberta's NDP government declare victory in the face of yet another delay tactic by the B.C. government?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the member is being a little creative in his timeline, but what I will tell you is that our government has been very clear, since the very beginning of our time in office, that we need to get a pipeline to tidewater. That's why we were so proud when we got those approvals from the federal government very shortly after we did form government. I have to say that we thought they were worth more than the paper they were written on. That's why our Premier is not relenting. That's why she won't back down, because we need the federal government and the entire nation to put their money where their mouth is and make sure we get our product to tidewater and act like owners.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I'm really confused by the government's position on this. Last summer the New Democrats and the Green Party in B.C. signed an agreement saying that they would use every tool available to stop the Trans Mountain pipeline. Didn't this government follow that development? Didn't they understand that that was the policy of the B.C. New Democrats as of last summer? If so, why did the Premier go to British Columbia and, according to John Horgan, not even try to persuade him to support the pipeline? Those are his words. Is he telling a lie? Why didn't the NDP here take the ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: Again, the member is being very creative with his recollection of history and the timelines that he's putting forward. We've been incredibly clear and steadfast in our commitment to get this pipeline built. We have three tools at our disposal that are certainly more effective than the delay tactics that people used in Ottawa once upon a time, that the member is very familiar with. We are putting economic pressure on the B.C. government by bringing forward legislation that will allow us to restrict the flow of our resources. We are fighting in court and have a perfect record on winning those fights. If necessary, we will invest in this project to ensure it moves ahead. Does the member support us in any of those actions? That's what's going to cause real pipeline development in this province.

Mr. Kenney: The government that has presided over the suspension of the Kinder Morgan pipeline, the cancellation of the Northern Gateway pipeline, the killing of the Energy East pipeline, an American President trying to block the Keystone XL pipeline is going to give Albertans lessons on how to fight for pipelines? I don't think so, Mr. Speaker. The question is . . .

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Mr. Kenney: They surrendered on their symbolic wine boycott 49 days ago. In light of these recent developments will they reinstitute at least that symbolic wine boycott? Will they bring it back?

Ms Hoffman: Well, we did temporarily lift the wine ban because we did get the terms met around not restricting the product that we had in our pipelines, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that I appreciate that the member opposite likes symbolism, but on this side we like action. We are putting economic pressures on the government of B.C. by bringing forward legislation that will allow us to restrict resources. If I were a person in the Lower Mainland filling up today at prices about $1.50 at the pump, I'd be really nervous about what might happen if the B.C. government doesn't get out of the way and move forward on this national project in the national interest. We are fighting in court, we have a perfect record, and if necessary, as I've said, we'll take a public stake in this pipeline because we're not afraid, and we're not going to back down.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Federal Response to Pipeline Opposition

Mr. Kenney: The federal government, Mr. Speaker, has said that all options are on the table to ensure the construction of this pipeline, but then they subsequently took off the table the invocation of the declaratory power of the Constitution. They took off the table even the federal NDP's recommended court reference to the Supreme Court of Canada. They've taken off the table withholding any transfers, as we've recommended, from B.C. I don't know what's left on the table. Does this Alberta government agree with the positions taken by the Trudeau government to remove any leverage from the government of British Columbia in trying to get that pipeline built?

Ms Hoffman: Well, Mr. Speaker, on this side of the House we are moving forward with strategies that will get results, and that's what we've gotten to date. We have never been as close to tidewater in our approval process and our court proceedings and in investment than we are today. But that's not good enough. I know the member spent 20 years in Ottawa and didn't get a pipeline to tidewater, but on this side of the House we're committed to this. We're going to make sure it happens. Feel free to talk about symbolic gestures, but on this side we're committed to action, and that pipeline will get built.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, withholding billions of dollars of discretionary federal transfers to Victoria is hardly symbolic. I can't imagine a stronger point of leverage.

Yesterday the NDP here defeated a motion brought forward by the Official Opposition calling on the federal government to withhold $4.3 billion in infrastructure funds from Victoria until the pipeline is built. Today we'll be tabling a different motion, calling for the federal government to withhold $1.3 billion of job-training funding from the Horgan government until the pipeline is built. Will this NDP government join with us in calling for the withholding of those job-training dollars?

Ms Hoffman: Well, maybe the member didn't hear his question yesterday. It's kind of ironic that he's asking the flip of it today. Yesterday, when we talked about the economic impact of us potentially limiting our flow of products to the west coast and it having economic impacts on the people of British Columbia, he said: no; why would you do that? Today he's asking us to cancel money to get them jobs, Mr. Speaker. I can't tell which side of his mouth he's speaking out of, but it's a good thing it doesn't matter. Our Premier is a very straight shooter. She's fighting for us, and she's going to make sure that this pipeline gets built.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the point is simply this. The government keeps giving us this heated rhetoric not being backed up by anything meaningful, with no meaningful leverage. Maybe they could explain to us: why would they actually oppose the suggestion of the federal government withholding discretionary dollars from Victoria until the pipeline is built? Why should they be able to get 4 billion federal tax dollars for infrastructure when they're blocking 7 billion private-sector dollars for this private-sector infrastructure project?

Ms Hoffman: Well, just to clarify, I didn't say that I actually opposed it. I said that you were speaking out of both sides of your mouth. You're telling us that we shouldn't restrict the flow of product because it could hurt B.C. families, but at the same time you're telling us we should cut their job money? Mr. Speaker, that doesn't make sense. What does make sense are our three plans, our three pillars that we're fighting on. The fronts are putting economic pressure on the B.C. government and the people of B.C., if it comes to that, to ensure our flow of resources; fighting in court, which we have been and have a perfect record on; and, of course, taking a public stake in this pipeline, if it comes to that, because this is in the public interest.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, they are opposed to it because they voted against it yesterday. They defeated this idea, like every other idea.

Surgery and Emergency Procedure Wait Times

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, a new report today from the Canadian Institute for Health Information indicates that wait times are up significantly in Alberta for cataract and joint replacement surgery. Now, that's notwithstanding the fact that Alberta has by far the highest per capita health expenditures in the country and that health spending has increased by 15 per cent in the past three years. Can the government explain, then, why wait times are up for these critical surgeries?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. I, too, am very concerned that not in all areas are we leading the country. We are in a number of them, including if you have a hip fracture, if you need radiation. These are good measures, and we're proud of the areas where we've made significant progress. We know that there are other areas where we lag and where we need to have increased investment. That's why we're putting $40 million in increased funding specifically targeted at these types of wait times. I look forward to seeing if the members opposite will vote for that budget or if they'll call for deep cuts. I have a good idea which one it'll be, but time will tell.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, the minister seems to miss the point. The government of Alberta has increased the Health budget by $3 billion in the past three years, by 15 per cent. We have the highest per capita expenditures in the country, and Canada has one of the most expensive public systems in the world, yet wait times are increasing for joint surgery, for cataract surgery, and other procedures. My question is simply this. Why are we spending more but getting less?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. I certainly welcome you to talk to your colleagues who were in power for 44 years while these trends took place. Maybe you were part of that government; it's hard to tell. But I can tell you that what we've done is different. What we've done is that we have reached really common-sense negotiations with nurses and allied health professionals that are giving stability to the people of this province. It does cost increased investment, investment in things like the Calgary cancer centre, the new Edmonton hospital, to ensure that we have the proper OR time and space to be able to do this. It costs front-line investment. We invest in the people of this province instead of proposing cuts. What do you think 20 per cent cuts would do to wait times?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Kenney: This is the problem with the NDP, Mr. Speaker. They think that health care should be measured by how much is spent rather than the outcomes and the wait times. The wait times are going up while they're spending more. It doesn't make much sense. Even in emergency departments wait times have continued to rise over the past few years according to the CIHI, with the length of stay increasing by 17 per cent from five years ago. Why are Albertans waiting longer in emergency wards when we're spending 15 per cent more on health care? Why?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you for the question. Again, the member continues to allude to these cuts that he's said very clearly in the past that he would be pushing for. Conservatives don't have a plan to improve wait times. The only thing they've publicly cared about is that they want to privatize and cut costs for everyday families. Well, it would actually increase costs significantly. I don't want to wait any longer than anyone else does in this province, but I certainly don't want your top 1 per cent to be able to jump to the front of the queue and for the rest of us to have to sit behind and wait. That's not public health care, that's not good for the people of this province, and we won't let that happen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Infertility Treatment

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fertility treatments are a necessary medical service that some Albertans rely on to grow their families. Alberta's only publicly operated fertility clinic, at the Royal Alexandra hospital, stopped offering non-insured services in February 2018, with patients sent to private clinics, but private clinics in Alberta have sent patients away for their race, their body type, and other backgrounds, often requiring public pressure to reverse their insensitive policies. To the Minister of Health: what assurances can you provide to patients of private clinics that they will not be refused for treatment for nonmedical reasons?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, thank you to the member for the question and the opportunity to respond. Certainly, our heart goes out to anyone who's struggling with infertility. We all know somebody who's been down that road. Like everyone who wants to have a family, we certainly send them our thoughts and our prayers. We are also covering the cost differential between the AHS clinic and the private during the transition of their choosing. There are two hours of access to mental health counsellors that we're providing as well, again, because of the mental anguish. If there are specifics about discrimination and racism, please raise them with me or with the College of Physicians & Surgeons. Certainly, that would be the most appropriate place.

Ms McPherson: With the range of private fertility clinics available in Alberta and the uneven distribution of insured and noninsured services throughout the province and the inconsistent and potentially confusing array of fertility-related treatments and services, with confusing fees that may or may not be covered by public and private insurance, again to the Minister of Health: what will you do to help patients navigate Alberta's increasingly complicated reproductive and fertility treatment landscape?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much to the member for the question. We certainly have been working with all of the families who've been impacted by the noninsured services moving from a hospital to a community-based setting, and we are looking into some specific concerns that they've raised with us. Our office is available. There are also navigators with AHS that are helping individuals through these challenges. We certainly do share our sympathies with them as they struggle with this very difficult, very personal situation, Mr. Speaker.

Ms McPherson: The lack of accessible and affordable fertility treatments in Alberta has driven some families to seek sometimes poorly regulated services abroad, which can generate complications that have to be treated at a greater cost in Alberta. A 2014 report by the U of A estimated that funding well-regulated assisted reproductive technology in the province would result in net savings of up to $179 million in health care costs over 18 years. Can you commit, Minister, to updating the 2014 report with respect to the potential cost savings from funding well-regulated treatments?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. While we currently don't provide IVF treatments, this is something that I know some jurisdictions have been looking at changing. I've been watching with great interest what's happening across our country. While I've seen some jurisdictions increase funding substantially and then claw it back, that to me would be the worst-case scenario. We want to work to develop a sustainable system, support those who are accessing the publicly insured services while working to reduce wait times. I'm happy to continue working on this issue with all women who aspire to be biological mothers in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Agricultural Programs

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was surprised to read in the draft foundational policy of the UCP that they want to end government subsidies to small businesses, including farms, and end government involvement in Crown corporations. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: how do government subsidies to farms and Alberta Crown corporations in a competitive business market actually support Alberta's farmers and ranchers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. AFSC is a tremendously useful institution for the province to support livestock and crop producers as well as food processors. Many agriculture businesses operate as for-profit corporations. Simply put, these two policies combined would mean the end of AFSC and the end of direct government support for incorporated producers, which represent over 7,000 farms in Alberta. Most of these are family-owned corporate farms.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the critical partnership that the government of Alberta has with farmers and producers, what would losing AFSC mean for Alberta's agriculture sector?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. When crops were unharvested due to heavy snow in late 2016, I was able to direct AFSC to streamline their inspection processes. That flexibility would be gone. I was also able to work with AFSC on interest-free loans to producers in the wake of the devastating grass fires in 2017, and AFSC was able to step up with loans to help small businesses in the wake of the Fort McMurray and Slave Lake fires. In short, getting rid of AFSC would hinder government's ability to make life better for Albertans.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta has long-established farms and producers that grow the food that we are thankful to put on our plates, if government were to adopt a policy that ended grants to incorporated farms, what impacts would that have on our farmers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of Alberta's producers are incorporated. This short-sighted policy would mean no grants to those farmers and ranchers, no grants to make their operations energy efficient, no grants to food processors to increase their competitiveness, no grants to help producers access international markets, no grants to small brewers to help diversify the economy, no grants to offset BSE surveillance costs, no grants to farmers with irrigation to help with efficiencies. Once again, these sorts of suggestions from the opposition reveal how out of touch they are with the needs of the economy and rural Alberta.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the NDP government voted against a motion that would call on the federal government to stop sending billions of dollars in transfer payments for construction projects to B.C., some of those dollars from Albertans, until B.C. stops obstructing the Trans Mountain project. The government voted against it. The NDP continually say in this House that they agree that we have to get the federal government to take serious action on this file, but then when given a chance, they stand up and vote with Justin Trudeau every time. So which is it? Actually, on behalf of Albertans: why are you standing with Justin Trudeau and not the people of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know what? There is not a stronger champion for this pipeline than our Premier. She's been very, very vocal that this pipeline will get built. Now, we have been calling on the federal government for real action. We've been calling on the Prime Minister to stand up, to follow our Premier's lead, take action, and ensure that the Trans Mountain goes through. But I'll tell you this much. There is nothing that we will stop at in order to get this project built. It means tens of thousands of jobs, billions of dollars to the Canadian economy. This is in the national interest. This pipeline will be built.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, they're calling on the government, but they're not taking any action. When given a chance, they're voting with Justin Trudeau. Two days ago I moved a motion in this Assembly calling on this government not to raise the carbon tax by 67 per cent until Trudeau took action to make sure Trans Mountain would be built. The government stood and voted with Justin Trudeau again. Over and over the government says in this Assembly that they want the federal government to take action and that they're standing up for Albertans, but when given a chance by this side of the House, they vote with Justin Trudeau every time. Again, why are you standing with Justin Trudeau and not the people of Alberta?

Ms Hoffman: Last time I checked, we were in Alberta, not in Ottawa, Mr. Speaker. I know that the members opposite have a hard time with that. My question is: during the two decades that your leader was in Ottawa with those ideas that he's batting around now, did he sit on his hands, or did he try and fail at them? Which was it? I have to say that we're happy that today he seems to be standing with us in support of this pipeline. When he was in Ottawa for 20 years, did he fight and fail, or did he sit on his hands and do nothing?

The Speaker: Members, remember about the preambles. We're on question 6.

Please proceed.

Mr. Nixon: Well, this government has done nothing at all. They've done nothing. They continue to stand up here and, in fact, deflect now, Mr. Speaker, given that what the minister just did was deflect from the question I asked. Again, you voted with Justin Trudeau in this House twice. Why did you vote with Justin Trudeau and not stand up for the people of Alberta? Are you going to ask the federal government to take serious action to make sure that this pipeline gets built, or are you going to keep backing up your ally Justin Trudeau, with consequences for the people of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll remind the member that we are in Edmonton, Alberta, not in Ottawa, so the Prime Minister doesn't actually sit in this House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of concrete actions that our Premier and our government have taken to ensure that the Trans Mountain pipeline will be built. We will be bringing in legislation that'll allow us to restrict oil and gas that flows to British Columbia. We're fighting and winning in court. We're 14 out of 14. And our Premier has been clear that, if need be, we will invest in this pipeline in some form or another.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Carbon Levy and Pipeline Approvals

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are having a hard time believing that this government has their back. There have been multiple motions that the Official Opposition has moved in this House that will support pipelines, yet the government continues to stand with their bestie Justin Trudeau. Will any of the ministers stand up and please explain to Albertans why they don't have their backs?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know what? As I travel the province and talk to Albertans, ordinary Albertans, workers, whether they're in the energy sector or any other sector, what they say is that they are proud that our Premier is standing up for Albertans. We're standing up for workers, and we're standing up for Canadians. I can tell you that we will not relent until this project goes through. The Premier has been very, very clear. We will see this pipeline get built.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that this government increased the carbon tax by 67 per cent on all Albertans, Albertans aren't feeling like this government has their backs. Why won't this government stand up, take some real action, and scrap their 67 per cent hike in the carbon tax?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, what the opposition is calling for would jeopardize the Trans Mountain pipeline. I thought they stood in favour of it. Now I'm confused. It sounds like they're opposed to it. The Prime Minister was very clear that part of the reason that it was approved – it needs to be approved federally – was because of our climate leadership plan. The two are linked. Because we've taken aggressive action to reduce our emissions, a plan that we came together with industry on, including indigenous leaders, it has led to the approval of the Trans Mountain pipeline. Our government will continue to have the backs of Albertans, and frankly we have the backs of Canadians by ensuring that this pipeline gets built.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mrs. Pitt: Hey, Mr. Speaker, breaking news: Kinder Morgan is backing out of the pipeline.

Mr. Speaker, will anybody please explain to me how the carbon tax got us any social licence and any pipelines approved?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'll explain it again. How the process worked is that our government came up with a very robust climate leadership plan in consultation and working in lockstep with industry as well as indigenous leaders and environmental NGOs to ensure that our plan would take meaningful action but also demonstrate that the environment and the economy go hand in hand. We are the most responsible oil and gas energy producers in the world. We're very proud of that. We're proud of our sector. That climate leadership plan has led to the approval of the Trans Mountain pipeline, to where now we are fighting and will ensure that that pipeline gets built and will protect workers and jobs in this country.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. More than a thousand citizens gathered in Calgary on Tuesday to rally in support of the pipeline, and today Albertans will converge again on the Legislature Grounds. The Premier's teammates Tzeponah Berman, Karen Mahon, Jagmeet Singh, and their best friend, Justin Trudeau, are all on record to phase out our oil and gas industry here in Alberta. Why hasn't the Premier denounced her teammates who want to destroy our vital industry, and when will she admit that the appointment of Karen Mahon and Tzeponah Berman was a brutal and ideological mistake?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know what? With all due respect to the people that the hon. member just mentioned, their positions and their opinions are quite irrelevant. We are continuing to move forward with the construction of the Trans Mountain pipeline, supporting this industry, supporting our oil and gas sector, and supporting the tens of thousands of men and women that will work on the construction of this pipeline. That's who we're listening to. Albertans said to us: get the job done; get this pipeline built. Our Premier is showing real leadership, taking action, and we will get it built.

Mr. Gill: Given that this government put these people on the board and given that Albertans were assured that the carbon tax would buy Albertans social licence to build a pipeline but that it's clear that so-called social licence is an empty term and that we all know that this was just a disguised sales tax, when the Premier met the Finance minister yesterday to discuss the Trans Mountain expansion, did she tell him that the $50 increase in the carbon tax hike is off the table given the news on the pipeline on Sunday, or is this NDP government still going to impose a 67 per cent hike in the carbon tax?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I've mentioned it twice now today. Please, in your next supplemental – and it'll apply to everybody else today – remember that after question 5 there are no preambles.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know what? We've been very clear. We've laid out our financial projections for our climate leadership plan for the next six years, and there is no consideration of a carbon price anywhere over $50. The plan, I'll remind the hon. member, got us approval of two pipelines. Now, the opposition leader wants to go back to the model of the past, one where we didn't even come close to getting any new pipelines to tidewater. Then he went on national television this past weekend and said that it's fine to have an aspirational target and that you do your best. Well, doing your best isn't how you lead. I can tell you that leadership is what we're seeing in our Premier. We're very proud of her. Albertans are proud of her. Albertans stand behind her, and so do Canadians.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier has admitted that she will hike the carbon tax according to the dictates of her best friend in Ottawa and given that a memo from Justin Trudeau's federal department of agriculture indicates that a $50-per-tonne carbon tax will on average cost farmers $3,700 a year, an amount which they say that they cannot absorb, Premier, with no social licence, no pipeline, and no good reason for this tax, how much more damage does it have to do to Albertans before your government scraps this tax? [interjection] This is not a laughing matter, sir.

The Speaker: Hon. members. [interjections] Just calm it down, folks. Just calm it down.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Once again, our government worked very collectively with industry, environmental NGOs, and indigenous leaders to come up with our climate leadership plan, one that really is a model for the rest of the world, quite frankly. We're showing that industry and development and the economy go hand in hand with protecting the environment. These are two sides of the same coin. From that climate leadership plan, the Prime Minister and the federal government have approved the Trans Mountain pipeline. In fact, they approved two different pipelines. We're very proud of that fact. We are calling on the federal government to follow our Premier's lead, to take meaningful action and make sure this gets . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-West.

Police Release of Information on Serious Incidents

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A Calgary police officer was shot last week by a person the police confronted after a spree of violent crimes. The man was found dead in a garage where he was hiding. Fortunately, the constable is recovering from his injuries, but curiously the Alberta Serious Incident Response Team, or ASIRT, has refused to release the name of the deceased man who shot him. Minister, these cases often involve repeat offenders. Do you believe Calgarians have a right to know if the deceased man was out on bail at the time of the shooting?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We believe that every Albertan deserves to be safe in their communities, and that's why we have worked with our partners, with the RCMP and have launched our strategy to tackle crime in our communities. We have put more boots on the ground, we have added resources, and we will continue to work with our partners to make sure that every Albertan is safe in their community.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, this occurrence was in Calgary.

Given that ASIRT has refused to release the name of the shooter and that in making this decision, it cited an interprovincial agreement not to cause trauma to the deceased's family and given that in a contradictory twist the name of the officer shot was made public, Minister, why is ASIRT keeping the name of the deceased a secret? What about the emotional trauma of the police officer who was shot? What about his feelings and his family?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We certainly will release information that we're able to, protecting, obviously, public safety and following the legislation that's in place. Our thoughts are certainly with the officer who was injured and with everyone who goes to the front lines every day and responds to the call of duty and works to protect our communities. We will continue to invest in supporting those folks and giving as much information to the people of Alberta as we can within the parameters of the legislation.

The Speaker: No preamble.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, given not knowing if the deceased man was a violent repeat offender out on bail and given that I have warned this minister and this government that there's a broken bail hearing system and that it is sending offenders back out to continue to commit crimes, eroding public trust – Minister, at this moment you're telling Albertans that it is more important to protect the offender, who shot a police officer, than to restore public trust in the system – will you do the right thing and release the deceased man's name?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our thoughts are with the family and loved ones of the deceased. That was an operational decision made by the police, and they make those decisions on a case-by-case basis. They're the experts. They're the people on the ground. We work with them and provide them the supports so that they are able to do their work, and we will keep supporting them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Alberta Child Benefit

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that child poverty advocates are calling our new Alberta child benefit a game changer and given that many parents have recently received their latest instalment of their benefit payments, to the Minister of Children's Services: how is the Alberta child benefit making a real difference in the lives of children and their families across Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta child benefit is helping families afford winter clothes or to enrol their kids in extracurricular activities for sometimes the very first time. Families earning less than $41,746 per year in net income are eligible to receive the benefit, and those child benefit payments are mailed or direct-deposited in as many as four instalments annually. The maximum annual benefit is $1,114 for families with one child and up to $2,785 for families with four or more children.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that our government wants as many families as possible to be able to access this critical support, to the Minister of Children's Services: what do eligible families have to do in order to receive this critical support?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government wants all eligible families to be able to access this life-changing support. In order to receive the Alberta child benefit, parents must file their income tax returns. This will automatically enrol eligible families for the child benefit as well as other supports that will make their lives better. Throughout this tax season I've been encouraging families across Alberta to file their tax returns, and I ask all my colleagues in the Assembly to let their constituents know about the Alberta child benefit and the tax filing requirement so that no family has to miss out on these amazing opportunities.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many lower income families in my constituency of Edmonton-McClung may not have the resources to get professional help to file their taxes, to the Minister of Children's Services once again: what can I tell my constituents who need a bit of help filing their returns in order to access financial supports?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tax filing can be challenging, and professional assistance can be costly. That's why I'm so happy that lower income families can get access to free tax preparation clinics offered year-round by community organizations. The Canada Revenue Agency website has a list of where these clinics are offered in communities, large and small, across the province, and I encourage members to find out about free clinics in their communities and to let their constituents know about this service.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Trade with British Columbia

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't think it will come as a surprise to many members of this House that Alberta oil and gas is used for a lot more than just filling up your gas tank. There are plastics, petrochemicals, and, of course, asphalt for road building. My question today is for the Minister of Energy. The Burnaby refinery supplies more than just jet fuel to Vancouver airport and gasoline for Lower Mainland drivers. If Alberta restricts the flow of bitumen through the existing Kinder Morgan pipeline, will that also impact their supply of asphalt just in time for road construction season?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. As he rightly pointed out, we use our oil and gas for a variety of different products, and often we add value, whether in this province or in other jurisdictions. So there are going to be a significant number of consequences should we pass legislation to enable us to turn off the taps. There could be consequences for other industries, outside of just filling up at the pumps.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll help the minister. In fact, the Burnaby refinery does produce asphalt, but it is the only such facility in British Columbia that does so.

Given that if they do run short of asphalt in B.C., which comes primarily from oil sands bitumen, they're going to have a tough time meeting their ambitious road-building targets and given that those plans include an expansion of the Trans-Canada highway near Vancouver and a whole lot more, again to the Minister of Energy: if we do restrict flow to the existing Kinder Morgan pipeline, will you also ensure that asphalt exports from Alberta to B.C. are restricted?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I appreciate the hon. member providing different ideas and opportunities on ways that, should we need to continue down this path, we can ensure the project goes forward and that there are real economic consequences for the people of British Columbia because of the position that their government has taken. That is a very interesting point and one which our government will consider.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that it is absolutely clear that trade benefits all provinces and given that B.C. relies on Alberta to ship products but that Alberta also relies on B.C., to the Premier: however this issue is resolved – and I genuinely and truly hope that it is resolved soon – what is your plan to reconcile with British Columbia to ensure that Canada remains a strong and united country?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for his point. I mean, you know, we'll recall in this House that the Premier stood up when she first introduced the wine ban and said that our task force and our government were looking for ways to impose some sanctions on British Columbia, and it was unfortunate that it was the people of British Columbia that would have to feel those sanctions. In the same way, we want, obviously, this pipeline, and we'll do everything we can to ensure that it is built. And it will get built. Moving beyond that, we are committed to building on our relationship. I'm committed to working with my counterparts to enhance trade corridors and ease the movement of goods and services.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Grain Rail Transportation Backlog

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite farmers doing what farmers do best, we are at a critical moment here in western Canada. Farmers have filled grain elevators to capacity and are struggling to get their grain to export. The shortage of grain car movement to west coast ports is critical. Bill C-49 is being debated in Ottawa. Minister, should Bill C-49 not pass fast enough to help this season, does your government or the AFSC have a plan in place to help farmers out should they find themselves in a financial shortfall this planting season?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. You know, he's very right that there's been a backlog in railcars being able to get our products to market, to the port, not just grain but lumber as well, and that is concerning. We've had conversations with the federal ministers concerning agriculture and transportation, about the amendments to the Canadian Transportation Act. Looking there, those amendments will go a long way. It had been held up by the Conservative Senators, but my understanding is that it has passed the Senate now. That's just going to be one tool in our tool box to be able to get past this season. My understanding is that we're a long ways from being able to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Strankman: Given, Mr. Speaker, that over the past few years we have asked many times what Alberta is doing about the grain car shortage and given that our grain cars are nearing the end of their life cycle and given that there once was a time that the Alberta government favoured expanding railcar assets and supporting the expansion of shipping ports such as Port Moody and Prince Rupert, Minister, has your office pressured the Trudeau government to focus on all of Canada's resource industries? Have you communicated this to the Trudeau government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again the member is quite right. Aging hopper cars right across the prairies are a fact, and we need to take, you know, some measures for this. I've had conversations with Minister Garneau and Minister MacAulay, in the federal government, on this issue as well as with the CEOs at CN and CP on what they're doing with their own car fleets. So, yeah, we need all levels of government and industry, not just rail but grain buyers as well, to come together to ensure that we have the hopper cars that we need going into the future.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this is not a new problem and given that four years ago, when the Conservatives were in power, that government ordered CN and CP to double their grain-hauling capacity or face strict fines, to the minister: has your government even bothered calling for a similar measure given the time-sensitive nature of this critical situation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again the member is correct. That was, you know, a temporary measure that was put in by the previous federal government. What this federal government is doing is implementing a lot of those changes into the Canadian Transportation Act, the amendments to that, which is commonly known as Bill C-49. That is going to go a long way, I think.

But we have to keep in mind that, you know, what was perhaps a bumper year 10 years ago is going to be an average year 10 years from now. We're going to have increased production here in Alberta, and we're going to need that increased capacity. We'll continue working with industry and government to ensure that that continues, Mr. Speaker.

Government Procurement Process

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, under existing RFP rules, provisions exist to allow government to amend an already existing RFP for unanticipated issues or because the scope of the work has changed. However, there should be policies that prevent these provisions from being used to alter an RFP to a specific proponent's submission, policies that do not appear to have been in place in Medicine Hat and other constituencies. To the Minister of Service Alberta: please explain the policies that are already in place that prevent RFP changes to promote one proponent's submission over another's.

Ms McLean: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, procurement is a complex matter within the government of Alberta. Part of the procurement policy sits within Service Alberta, and that's with respect to goods and services procurement. Procurement with respect to infrastructure projects, however, would sit under the Minister of Infrastructure. So I would certainly need more information from the member opposite in order to be able to give him specific information if he has a particular project in mind. He seems to have been alluding to something in Medicine Hat, so I would be happy to follow up with him.

2:30

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Minister.

Again to you, please: have you advised these other departments to avoid using similar provisions that may advance one proponent over another, and if not, will you do so?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to procurement there are robust rules in place, and there is a liability that attaches to all of our procurement processes. Whenever we go out to an RFP and we negotiate that process with bidders, there is a government liability should the government choose to do something that the member is suggesting, so that would not be in the best interests of government. No government department would receive legal advice to do that. In fact, we would receive legal advice not to.

Mr. Barnes: Given that fairness and taxpayer value are paramount, specifically to the Minister of Health: does Alberta Health Services include these types of provisions in their RFP proposals, and will you advise Alberta Health Services to stop using these types of provisions in their requests for proposals?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I believe the member is trying to assert that there was some wrongdoing. Certainly, there are oversights around fairness, and also the courts are another area that sometimes is considered. If this is the specific incident that he's talking about where the courts are involved, certainly it would be inappropriate for us to speak to their involvement and any decision until after that time. We respect that we have a responsibility to the public interest to ensure that we get the very best returns for the people of Alberta and have safe care for them as well.

Access-to-information Investigations

Mr. Cooper: In the first three years of this government's mandate we've seen them involved in a slew of controversies, leading to several high-profile investigations. They're under investigation for deleting e-mails about PPAs, under investigation about destroying visitor logs, deleting nearly a million e-mails. For high-profile political interference, Mr. Speaker, you'll know they've been found in contempt. To the Minister of Service Alberta: how do you justify the fact that your government is averaging more than one serious investigation every single year?

Ms McLean: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, we believe that government should be open and transparent, and access to information is no exception to this. It's an important issue that we take very seriously. Certainly, there's always more work to do, and we inherited a system that did not necessarily have the best processes in place in order to ensure that a government can act efficiently and always in the best interests of Albertans. So we've taken action. We've improved turnaround times for FOIP requests. We're proactively sharing more information than government has ever before. We're streamlining processes and ensuring that we comply with all of the rules.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given that they believe one thing and their actions are showing another, because they are currently under investigation for at least four serious challenges that they have created, and given that this government is clearly refusing to accept any ownership or responsibility, to the minister: are these acts of secrecy part of your government's policy like voice mode, or is this just current government practice?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I truly wish that the member opposite would ask me a specific question about government policy so that I could accurately address any concerns he may have. However, there appears to be just an intention to engage in some sort of vague smear campaign.

However, I will say that in terms of any accusations of wrongdoing we are more than happy and eager to comply with any investigations. There will be absolute co-operation from all government departments and officials, and we will be absolutely transparent with the public for all . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given that these investigations require a lot of time and money to conduct and therefore are only held in the most serious of cases that require attention and given that we've seen the severity of these issues in B.C. and Ontario and given that a senior Liberal staffer in Ontario will be spending time in jail for the exact same things that this government is currently being investigated for, under deleting e-mails, how many more investigations can we expect to see from this government, and does the minister expect any of them to end in criminal charges?

Ms McLean: Thank you for that question. Mr. Speaker, I really wish that the member opposite would do appropriate research. If he had done so, he would know, as I do, that the circumstances in Ontario are extremely different from the circumstances for which we are being investigated here. We are excited to be co-operating fully with the OIPC. I would leave it to the OIPC to conduct her investigation and not to the member opposite as he wishes to be judge, jury, and executioner. Everyone here should really accept what the OIPC's process is, undergo that process. They're one to speak as Kenney is intent . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. [interjections]
Order, please.

Hon. minister, there's a time slot here that we all live under. I try to enforce that.

Ms McLean: As if I'm the only one.

The Speaker: Hon. member, can I respectfully ask that you not speak back to me when I'm speaking, please? Do you agree? Is that a yes?

Ms McLean: Mr. Speaker, I absolutely am happy to do that. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Health Care Wait Times

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Access to timely health services is a priority for Albertans in my constituency and for Albertans across the province. A new Canadian Institute for Health Information report came out today, which indicated that for some procedures wait times are improving while for other procedures wait times have been increasing. To the Minister of Health: what are you doing to address these increasing wait times?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Albertans also tell me that they want government to reduce wait times in order to improve quality of life. The member is right. We're among the best in the country and have the shortest waits for things like hip fracture repair, knee replacement, radiation therapy, and our stroke treatment centres are the best in Canada, among the fastest in the world. We need to make improvements in the other areas that were identified, and that's why Budget 2018 is investing $40 million to increase opportunities and reduce wait times for hip and knee surgeries as well as cataract surgeries. We hope the opposition will vote for that budget.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This issue isn't just about investing more money in the health care system; it has to be about better strategies to reduce wait times. To the same minister: are you working on other strategies?

Ms Hoffman: I absolutely agree with the member. Our response to wait times needs to be comprehensive, and a response that includes additional investment is one pillar. Others are innovative strategies to reduce wait times, including centralized registries and allowing more to be done through primary care, with the support of education for those practitioners. As our population ages, we are seeing an increase in need for medical interventions. That's why we're making improvements to those wait-lists, reallocating OR time according to greatest need, and working with physicians around the Choosing Wisely campaign, that doctors brought forward to ensure that resources are used responsibly.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some people think that adding more private medical clinics will help wait times as people who can pay more can jump the line. To the Minister of Health: would this help wait times for Albertans?

Ms Hoffman: Well, maybe for a very select few Albertans, Mr. Speaker. On this side of the House we believe that accessing health care shouldn't be based on how much money you have in the bottom of your pocket or your spending limit on your credit card. We think it should be based on medical need. We know that Conservatives want to make reckless cuts and privatize. Those would mean regular families with children and mortgages would have to wait longer for health care. We know they want to do this so they can give a tax giveaway to the top 1 per cent and put the burden on working families. That's wrong. We stand up for all Albertans and want to make sure that we reduce wait times for everyone.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Scarily enough, since 11:17 this morning there's been a red alert for ambulances going on in Calgary. Even more scary, since 9 o'clock this morning in southern Alberta there's been a red alert call. Front-line dispatchers have told us that today they came in to work with seven serious calls on the screen and no ambulances to go. In fact, an ambulance was dispatched from Vulcan to go to Calgary to deal with a heart attack. We keep asking this minister what she's going to do to deal with the serious ambulance delays, that are costing people, sometimes, their lives. We'd like a serious answer right now on behalf of Albertans, please.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will certainly follow up with regard to the assertions that were made to ensure that we in my office are aware of the details. Usually red alerts are very short term, but nobody wants to be on a red alert for no matter of time. That's why we're investing in increased supports for front-line paramedics. That's why we've brought in this $23 million over last year's forecast. We know that it's important to have increased front-line resources. Our front lines are fantastic, but we need to have more of them to be able to ensure that we have the right resources. I certainly urge members opposite to vote with us on the budget when it comes that time in the days to come.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, we've been talking to this minister about this for over three years. Given that she still has not done anything like that on this issue and given that as a father, as a spouse, as a rural Albertan each day I live in fear that one of my family members may be in danger and no ambulance could come to them, will the minister stop telling us what she imaginarily thinks has happened and what she's actually going to do to get emergency services to our communities?

Ms Hoffman: What we've actually done, Mr. Speaker, is to reduce the use of ambulances doing interfacility transfers. We're building new long-term care beds to make up for the fact that 88 per cent of them were closed during the Ralph Klein cuts. We are encouraging crews to consolidate patients so that fewer crews are waiting in hospital emergency departments. We're expanding the community paramedicine program throughout Alberta, including central Alberta, and we're investing this $23 million in more front-line services. All of this is what it takes to fix, certainly, the kinds of cuts and underfunding that we saw under Conservative governments.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, given that all the minister can do is to talk about 25 years ago and given that's not acceptable to the people of Alberta and given that that certainly doesn't help the people that are in danger right now that cannot get emergency services that this minister is responsible to provide them and given that firefighters, volunteer firefighters across rural Alberta are telling us that this is getting worse and worse and worse and that they're picking up most of the flak, again to the minister: not 25-years-ago policy or those types of discussions, what are you doing right now to get emergency services to the people of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What we are doing is that we're increasing funding for EMS front-line responders. We're using ambulances more effectively to reduce interfacility transfers. We're building new long-term care spaces. And 25 years ago is relevant because the decisions you guys made 25 years ago to blow up the general hospital in Calgary, to close the Charles Camshell, in Edmonton, to cut rural services have lasting legacies. Closing those long-term care beds means that we have people sitting in hospital today that could have been in long-term care getting the appropriate care in community and we could move patients out of the emergency department. This is something that we are really proud to move forward to fix, and we are certainly fixing a number of Conservative problems that were left behind.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to give notice pursuant to Standing Order 42 that at the appropriate time I will move the following motion.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government of Canada to delay its planned $1.3 billion funding to the government of British Columbia through federal labour market agreements until the B.C. government ceases its efforts to obstruct the Trans Mountain expansion project.

I have the appropriate copies for the pages.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Bill 10

An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to table for first reading Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements.

Mr. Speaker, we have heard directly from Albertans that they want to see more programs to help them make energy efficiency upgrades to their homes and their businesses. Many municipalities share government's commitment to advancing Alberta's climate leadership goals and are very keen to provide more options to Albertans to reduce emissions, save money, and help create more jobs in the green energy sector.

We've responded. Property assessed clean energy, or PACE, is a program that will enable municipalities to work with Energy Efficiency Alberta to fund clean energy upgrades to private property and then recover those costs from the property owner through property taxes. If passed, Bill 10 would enable municipalities to pass a PACE improvement tax bylaw. The intention is that Energy Efficiency Alberta will administer the program and work with lending institutions to secure agreements for financing. This program will help everyday Albertans make energy efficiency upgrades so they can save money and reduce emissions, and by making it more affordable for Albertans to make these improvements, this will help create green jobs and stimulate local economies.

This program is supported by Alberta's building industry, by our municipalities, and by Albertans. This government is committed to making life better for Albertans, and Bill 10 does that by helping them make energy efficiency upgrades so they can save money, reduce emissions, and support a diverse, clean energy economy in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to end by thanking all of the staff who are working on this game-changing legislation.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a document where an antichoice organization praises the UCP leader's impeccable antichoice voting record. Given that these are the friends that got him elected, it begs the question of what the opposition leader owes them. Perhaps it explains why he's avoiding the vote on Bill 9.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Earlier today, during consideration of main estimates for the Ministry of Service Alberta, I made reference to the Rural Economic Development Action Plan, which was prepared in 2014. I'd like to table five copies of that for the record.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of a petition put together by constituents in the Strathmore, Hussar, and Standard areas. I won't read the entire thing, but it's about the intersection of highway 840 and highway 564 in Wheatland county and is calling for improvements to infrastructure. This petition was put together before the Minister of Infrastructure – I suppose that job has changed around – before the government acted. These changes have been made, but I'm still tabling it out of respect for the constituents who put it together. This is a particularly important thing to me. My aunt almost lost her life and is still learning to walk again from a crash right in this area. Action was needed, action has been taken by the government, and I thank the government for their action on this issue.

The Speaker: Any other hon. members? Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two things that I want to table this afternoon. One is a letter to a constituent of mine from the Calgary Housing Company regarding their policy on cannabis and the changes in the legislation and what changes will or will not be made to their policies for residents when cannabis is legalized.

As well, five copies of the Calgary Housing Company's briefing note on their cannabis policy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a letter – and I have the appropriate five copies here – from a Mrs. Lena Williamson. She says:

The Berwyn Autumn Lodge should not be closed as there is no lodge replacing it . . . We have our names in the Fairview Lodge, and there were 4 names ahead of ours, so when will we get in?

She goes on to say:

The winter of 2016 there was $100,000 [worth of] renovations done to this lodge, so it's like a new lodge . . . I love this lodge.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I believe we had a point of order today. The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to withdraw the point of order at this time.

Motions under Standing Order 42

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Provincial Advocacy to Federal Government on Trans Mountain Pipeline Expansion Suspension

Mr. Nixon:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government of Canada to delay its planned $1.3 billion funding to the government of British Columbia through federal labour market agreements until the B.C. government ceases its efforts to obstruct the Trans Mountain expansion project.

2:50

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move this motion forward because we had an emergency debate just a few short days ago and we still have not seen any clear action from this Assembly on this issue. This is an opportunity for this Assembly to do two things: one, send a strong message to Justin Trudeau that we expect him to take action and, second, a severe, significant consequence to B.C. if they continue to obstruct our pipeline.

If the government does not support it, again, they support Justin Trudeau and not Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Orders of the Day

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I have a couple of requests for unanimous consent from the Assembly that I would like to start with. The first one is to seek unanimous consent that the House adjourn today at 4 o'clock instead of 4:30. This is to enable members to attend the pipeline rally on the steps of our Legislature.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the members of the House for that support.

I'd like to also seek unanimous consent to proceed to consideration of Motion 17 on the Order Paper. This motion concerns committee memberships of the Assembly. If that's granted, I will move Motion 17.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Committee Membership Changes

17. Mr. Mason moved:
Be it resolved that the membership of the Assembly's committees be replaced as follows:
 - A. on the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future that Mr. Horne replace Mr. Connolly, Ms Luff replace Mrs. Schreiner, and Ms McPherson replace Mr. Clark;
 - B. on the Standing Committee on Families and Communities that Ms Woollard replace Mr. Horne, Mr. Connolly replace Ms Luff, and Mr. Fraser replace Ms McPherson;
 - C. on the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship that Mrs. Schreiner replace Ms Woollard, Mr. Westhead replace Mr. Kleinstuber, Mr. Fildebrandt replace Ms

- McPherson, Mr. Clark replace Mr. Fraser, and Mr. Panda be appointed to the vacant position;
- D. on the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund that Ms Luff replace Ms McKittrick and Ms McPherson replace Mr. Clark;
 - E. on the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices that Ms McKittrick replace Drever and Mr. Sucha replace Mr. Kleinsteuber;
 - F. on the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services that Drever replace Ms Luff, Mr. Westhead replace Ms Jabbour, and Ms Babcock replace Mrs. Schreiner;
 - G. on the Standing Committee on Public Accounts that Mr. Clark replace Mr. Fildebrandt.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. By way of explanation to the House I can indicate that this motion has been made due to changes in the Assembly. We have made attempts to accommodate members, and it has not always been possible. I believe the motion strikes the right balance between the needs of the various caucuses and independents, and for that reason I urge members to support it.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: This motion is debatable.

Any other members wishing to speak? I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I think that most of what the hon. Government House Leader has said is correct. I will differ with him, though, on one point. Although the conversations around these committees did take place – and we in the Alberta Party caucus certainly have agreed with the vast majority of the committee changes and reshuffling – the Alberta Party caucus is a recognized third party in this Assembly, and as such we feel very strongly that we should be included on the Members' Services Committee. I would like to remind the Government House Leader of the time not so long ago when he and the now Premier sat in those two spots right there as a two-member caucus and had a seat on Members' Services.

It is very clear that the Members' Services Committee is a very important committee of this Assembly. Now, while nowhere is there any sort of ranking order of committee priority that I'm aware of, let's just have a clear understanding of what Members' Services is. It is not the no-meet committee. It is something that meets on a regular basis, chaired by the Speaker, that deals with the rules that govern our offices, our caucus offices, our constituency offices, budgets, and the like. It is an important committee that deals with those issues, standing order changes, those sorts of things, very important work. As a party with standing in this Assembly, it feels very odd to me that we've not been included.

I also should say that committee membership is not something that is granted out of the benevolence of government as a favour. It should follow some rules and some history and some precedent. So I would very much encourage the government to remember the time when they were a two-member caucus and were in fact included. I can't help but wonder. The fact that we have not been included perhaps has something to do with – even though I have not been a member of the Members' Services Committee, I have as a member of the Assembly had the opportunity to speak and present to that committee and on several occasions have used that committee and encouraged the members of that committee to bring motions and actually make some changes.

I can think of one of the very first things that I did as a member of this Assembly, pushed for changes to the way MLA living allowance reimbursements worked, to add those two important words, "up to," to allow us to claim less than the full amount of our living allowance should we, in fact, actually have charged less than that.

You'll recall that it's the Members' Services Committee that made the changes that prevent members from claiming their living allowance and then charging that back on Airbnb. That was the Members' Services Committee.

Most recently the Members' Services Committee tried, between the Official Opposition and government, to change what we are allowed to communicate out of our constituencies to make it far more partisan. Now, it was the Alberta Party caucus who noticed that little change in a committee report and raised that and encouraged members of the committee to make that change.

These are the sorts of things the Members' Services Committee does, and to have a member from the third-party opposition not on that committee and unable to move motions, unable to participate, frankly, Madam Speaker, is not, I think, in keeping with good parliamentary practice.

To that end, then, I have an amendment to move, Madam Speaker. I'll wait till you receive that at the table, and then I'll proceed.

The Deputy Speaker: This will be amendment A1.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I will read it, then. I move that Government Motion 17 be amended in part F by adding "Mr. Clark replace Mr. McIver," after "Mr. Westhead replace Ms Jabbour."

Very simply – and I'll just be brief – I've outlined the rationale for why I believe the Alberta Party caucus ought to be included on Members' Services. My rationale for the replacement that we have chosen is that it maintains the balance between the government and opposition members on this important committee.

I would very much encourage all members of the Assembly to support this amendment to Government Motion 17. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Government House Leader.

3:00

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Well, with regret, I can't support the amendment proposed by the hon. member. I will note that we have worked very hard to strike the right balance in terms of the members of the opposition. One of the things, of course, that's changed is the composition and the size of the opposition parties. It's not comparable to the situation to which the hon. member is referring.

I will say that we have proposed adding that hon. member to the Public Accounts Committee, which is a very important committee that deals with the financial accounts of the government as a whole. I'm sure that he's going to bring very valuable insight and make a great contribution to that committee, Madam Speaker.

But, on balance, I think that we've got to the point where we have it right, so I'd urge all hon. members not to support this amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I will be brief. I also will not be supporting this amendment. While I do appreciate some of the comments that the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow made, the reality, first of all, is as the Government House Leader pointed out, I think rightly, in comparing now to when he and the Premier were in a two-person caucus. There is a significantly different-sized opposition in the Assembly at this point. It's one of the largest, if not the largest, oppositions in the history of this province, which changes the equation.

Second, as the Government House Leader said, not everybody can get everything that they want every time. There are only so many committee spots that we can give out. You know, we would probably like some different things ourselves in the motion, but the reality is that we have to come up with some sort of a compromise that works for the Assembly. This is a compromise. The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, that party, will have a member on PAC now, which is a big change.

As such, I would ask all of my colleagues to vote against this amendment, and hopefully we can get on with work today.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: You got it, Madam Speaker. I'm rising to speak in favour of this amendment. While it is difficult to try to replicate the entire composition of the Legislature on a committee basis, it is, in fact, impossible unless we have a pretty even number and a strict two-party system. We have two official parties here, one party that nearly achieves official party status, two independent members who sit as members of a party, and one independent member who is just that. It is impossible to replicate the composition of the Legislature entirely on committees, but we should do our very best. While the Alberta Party does not have official party status – normally we set that at four MLAs – I think they have achieved at least a critical mass enough that they probably deserve to have a voice on each of the committees, including an important one like the Members' Services Committee.

Let's remember that the role of committees is not simply to rubber-stamp everything that's happening in the Legislature. It is to actually get down to business and do work in a more informal setting – at least, we like to have it as a more informal setting – than this place. It's supposed to do the work and then bring what it does, its findings and its decisions, to the Legislature. So if you're going to cut out a significant portion, even just three MLAs from a committee, I think we diminish the ability of a committee to actually get down to the work it's supposed to do and the nitty-gritty.

I would echo that, you know, when the Government House Leader was a member of a caucus of two, he would certainly have taken issue with the idea of being excluded from any of the committees. I know that it was, until pretty recently, the tradition of the Official Opposition to stand up for the minority rights of members in the House and to make sure everybody had a voice.

I have other problems with the overall motion, not the amendment to this motion but the overall motion. I'll speak to the motion itself when we get back to the main motion, but I want to encourage members to support this amendment as it stands.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll keep my comments brief. I think this is a really important committee. It is in charge of a lot of decisions about how things work for MLAs. And I would like to remark that size really doesn't matter. It's what you do with what you have on these committees. It's important to have representation on the committees.

For that reason, I would like to urge everyone in the House to vote in favour of this amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: I did neglect to offer Standing Order 29(2)(a) subsequent to the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, so I apologize.

Did anyone want to take advantage of 29(2)(a) for the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I will take this opportunity to just offer a brief comment. Thank you to my colleague for making that comment. It does give me an opportunity just in terms of the principle of what we're dealing with here, in response to the Government House Leader, as a comment here under 29(2)(a), that while, yes, Public Accounts is an important committee, it's chalk and cheese. It's completely unrelated to the work of Members' Services. Members' Services is something that I think all recognized parties, of which the Alberta Party – I will correct my hon. colleague for Strathmore-Brooks but also thank him for his comments. We are a recognized party within this Assembly and should in fact be put on Members' Services. I think it's, obviously, an important thing. It's not mutually exclusive with membership on other committees.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, do you wish to respond?

Ms McPherson: No, thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: Any others wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the vote.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A1 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:06 p.m.]

Provincial Fiscal Policies

13. Mr. Ceci moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Adjourned debate April 10: Ms McPherson]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, do you wish to continue speaking? No.

Any other members wishing to speak to Motion 13? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for recognizing me, and to members for their time. It's my annual privilege to speak to the government's Budget Address. It won't come as a great surprise to members that I won't be voting in favour of the budget. [interjections] They may be surprised and greatly disappointed, but I'd like to address why they're surprised and help them to understand why I've had this change of heart to not vote for the NDP's budget.

Now, in the 2015 election all the parties put forward what was supposed to be a costed plan for their platforms. I remember I was involved in the Wildrose budget process. I had taken quite a bit of pleasure in doing so. I had regularly put together alternative budgets when I was with the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, and it was not a terribly difficult task. You have to manage expectations and try to find a balance of things. The Wildrose put forward a plan. The Progressive Conservatives put forward a plan. The Liberals, I think, put forward a plan. The NDP put forward a plan, but we all recall that there was a billion-dollar rounding error in it. Now, these things can happen. A billion dollars is quite a bit – it's more than a coffee – but I suppose it can happen. They moved back, in the middle of the election, their balanced budget promise date from, I think, 2018 to 2019. They can confirm with me what their actual original promise was, but they ended up moving it back because they got something wrong.

Then immediately upon coming to power, they moved it back another year and then, a few months later, another year. Now they're finally stating that it's going to be some point in fiscal year '23-24 that they'll get back to balance. By that time, Alberta will have taken on, in a best-case scenario, $96 billion of debt, in a very best-case scenario. That is based on oil prices going up from where they are. Perhaps we'll meet that target; perhaps we won't. But it requires oil prices to go up, gas prices to go up, other tax revenue to go up very significantly. It budgets in that the Trans Mountain pipeline will not just be built but be built on time. I'm sure all members in this House agree that that is something that is a very desirable goal, but it is not necessarily something that we can take to the bank right now. So they've built this on a lot of predications that in a best-case scenario we will have an accumulated debt of $96 billion, and I think that is grossly irresponsible.

Now, the government has choices here. They can continue on the current path, or they can change a bit. Every government, every party has at least in theory a governing philosophy or an ideology behind it, at least in some sense. You know, I think ideologies should be like sailing by the stars. They should be a guiding light to guide you, your set of principles, but if there is an island in the way, you might need to change course a bit. I'm a conservative. I'm a libertarian conservative. I have a set of principles. They are a constellation or a star I can steer my ship by, but if there is an island in the way or a bigger ship coming straight into me, I might be inclined to change course from time to time. Now, that's not unprincipled; that's just being pragmatic and reasonable. The other side, being blindly ideological, is steering your ship into the island because you don't think it should be there. Well, we are beached. We are beached, and we see no sign yet of any attempt to get off the reef.

Now, a day or two before the budget I released my 2018-2019 alternative budget plan. In large measure, you know, I sailed by my stars. I built on the alternative budgets that I did when I was with the Canadian Taxpayers Federation in the way I did it, in the approach. The basic principles behind it were that I don't want taxes to go up and I want spending to be controlled and to limit the size, scope, and role of the government. But there were changes in it. I made changes from the times when I was at the CTF, and I made changes from the times when I was in the Wildrose and UCP because circumstances change. If things get worse, sometimes harder measures are required. If things get better, sometimes you could account for that, too.

The plan that I've proposed took the government's own revenue projection numbers from their previous budget and adapted quarterly updates for it to give us a best estimate on the revenue side, but what I have proposed is that we balance the budget as defined by the NDP by 2019 and balance the full, consolidated deficit by 2020. You know, it's difficult how you account for deficits in this province. We've been debating that for a long time. There is more than one right way depending on what you're trying to measure, but at the end of the day, if we are spending more money than we're taking in, you're running a deficit.

The best general way to account for that is the change in net financial assets, how much money the government is worth on one side and how much debt and liability they have on the other. What to account in the assets and the liabilities is a subject of debate. Pension liabilities or heritage fund assets: these things are subject to debate. But the way it's done in the government's own accounting shows that we will continue to run a decline in our net financial assets. That is our net worth. We will continue to run a decline in our net financial assets infinitely, never ever getting to a balance.

I'll say, though, that even on the operational side, that the NDP has said will be balanced by 2023-24, they still haven't even shown how they're going to get there. They've given only a three-year plan. We used to have five years. We've seen our fiscal accountability legislation watered down repeatedly, beginning in the Stelmach and Redford eras, and now it's to the point where the government doesn't even have to show us how they will balance the budget. They gave a three-year plan, and then they said: another two years after that we'll get to a theoretical balance. They gave no numbers whatsoever.

Now, an economist from the University of Calgary, Trevor Tombe, said in his write-up on the NDP's budget that the alternative budget that I proposed had more detail on getting to a balanced budget "than the government's own numbers." That's outrageous. This thing is, with the cover, about – well, it's not numbered well, but it's not a big ... [interjection] Well, at least I didn't miscount a billion dollars. It's 25 pages plus the cover, but in it there is more substantial detail on proposed spending plans than in the government's own budget.

The government's budget is filled with lots of fluff and words and promises and platitudes but not a lot of actual detail on their plans to achieve what they say that they are trying to do. When an economist says that a mere lonely independent member sitting in Siberia can produce a more detailed financial plan than the government, with a majority caucus, a cabinet, and a Finance department with hundreds of people working in it, then something is clearly wrong. Something is very clearly wrong. You're not showing anybody any plan about how you're trying to do this. You've moved back your balanced budget plan at least four to five times now.

Let's remember that you inherited a long-standing deficit. We've been running deficits since 2008-09. The initial deficit was perhaps understandable. There was a collapse in oil prices. We shouldn't have been in a deficit to begin with because spending had gone up unsustainably before that crash in oil prices, but a small temporary deficit was perhaps necessary. But governments repeatedly refused to take action, and they continued to kick the can down the road year after year after year, saying that it's something else's fault and that, you know, in just one more year we're going to get to balance. The Getty government did the same thing until someone finally took the issue seriously.

Now, I know that the NDP today are blaming health care problems on Ralph Klein. What Ralph Klein did in 1993 is about as relevant to Alberta today as Nero to Italy. You can't keep blaming someone from decades ago for any problems that are today's. Eventually you have to take responsibility and be the government. Perhaps you look forward to being opposition again. I don't know. But you are the government, and you have to take ownership of what you are doing. You are responsible for the finances of this province, and if you're not taking that seriously, you're not doing your most fundamental job.

This is going to have real consequences for people. We are going to be paying $3 billion a year in interest payments, just interest payments. The fastest growing department of the government is debt, paying mere interest on the debt. And paying interest doesn't do anything; it doesn't accomplish anything. Paying interest on the debt will outweigh the vast majority of government departments. It's virtually impossible unless you – it's still outweighed by health care since health care is approaching 50 per cent of the budget. But short of health care and K to 12 education, paying interest on the debt will soon become the single largest department in the government. In Ontario it's already larger than the entire cost of the postsecondary education system.

We've seen what happens when governments don't take this seriously, and there's a reason for it. It's easy and politically rewarding to borrow money today from tomorrow to pay voters today. Money for nothing; votes for free. You can borrow from a future electorate . . .

Mr. Mason: And you end up in dire straits.

Mr. Fildebrandt: The government is in dire straits indeed.

You know, it is politically easy and convenient to borrow money from the future to give nice gifts to the voters of today because there's no pain today for borrowing. The pain comes tomorrow, and our children don't get to vote. There is a role for government borrowing at times for certain projects if they have a measurable earned financial return. In times of emergency, of major natural disasters or war, there is a role for government borrowing, but there is not a role for borrowing on a regular basis, year in, year out, without any plan to stop it.

Now, if members are looking to catch some sleep on the plane or Red Arrow on the way home, I'd encourage you to read a copy of my alternative budget. It should put you down pretty quickly. Or maybe it'll wake you up. Maybe it'll let you know that it is possible.

I think that it is a positive exercise for oppositions to put forward alternative budgets. It's a debate I regularly had and lost when I was a part of the Official Opposition. There are reasons for not doing it. You don't get much attention. You just get criticized for it. Frankly, you have to change it every year because it's not a platform; it's something on an interim basis. So there are valid reasons for not doing it, and I can respect the Official Opposition for not doing it. But I think, on balance, it is still a positive exercise.

I think, most importantly, it's not just showing Albertans that we can do it; we are showing other members in this House that getting the budget balanced is not the end of the world. We've got the numbers right here to show it. We can get government expenditures under control. We can balance the operational budget in two years and the consolidated budget in three years without apocalypse befalling Alberta, and we've got the numbers right here to prove it.

I want to thank members for their time and for participating in this debate on all sides of the House. I'm sure I've converted you all, and you'll be voting against the budget now or accepting amendments to it. If you need a Finance minister, let me know.

I want to thank members for their time and for participating in the debates, and I look forward to debating this in more detail at the next stages. I move to adjourn.

Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 6

Gaming and Liquor Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General I am pleased to move second reading of Bill 6, the Gaming and Liquor Statutes Amendment Act, 2018.

Madam Speaker, in April 2017 the federal government announced that cannabis would become legal across the country in the summer of 2018. That announcement spurred our government to begin developing a system for legal cannabis. We began by asking Albertans what our province's legal cannabis system should look like. We heard from over 60,000 Albertans. Albertans told us that they have four priorities for cannabis legislation. Those priorities are: keeping cannabis out of the hands of children and youth; protecting public health; promoting safety on roads, in workplaces, and in public spaces; and limiting the illegal cannabis market.

Madam Speaker, last November Members of the Legislative Assembly passed legislation that allowed us to begin putting elements of our legal cannabis system in place. That legislation granted authority to the AGLC to oversee our system, and it paved the way for us to begin preparing for the private, licensed retail sale of cannabis. Over the winter we worked with the AGLC and stakeholders to develop regulations for potential cannabis retailers. Those regulations were announced in February, and they provide clarity for potential cannabis retailers while ensuring our system is safe, secure, and effective.

Today I am seeking hon. members' support for Bill 6, amendments to the Gaming and Liquor Act, which continues to build on the work that we've done to date. This legislation would bring further clarity to retailers and to the public about the use and sale of cannabis in Alberta. The proposed amendments would modernize the act as well as the AGLC to keep pace with a growing marketplace that includes legalized cannabis and an evolving liquor industry.

Madam Speaker, Bill 6 includes amendments that, if passed, would provide the AGLC board with the tools it requires to better regulate and enforce rules around cannabis. This includes prohibiting retailers from using names such as "pharmacy" or "medi" or any symbol that has a medical connotation. We want to avoid any linkage between the recreational cannabis market and the potential therapeutic effects of cannabis.

Bill 6 also brings better clarity to the rules around cannabis smoking and vaping. It would explicitly prohibit anyone from smoking or vaping cannabis inside any business or place, not just in cannabis retail outlets.

Madam Speaker, Bill 6 also proposes to strengthen the effectiveness of administrative fines for those who violate the Gaming and Liquor Act or the gaming and liquor regulation. Fines are an important tool in deterring contraventions, and we propose increasing the maximum fine from $200,000 to $1 million. This amount would give the AGLC the room that it needs to properly address serious infractions when necessary.

Bill 6 would also amend the act so that for minor ticketable provincial offences, the court could rely on evidence that a product is cannabis based on its packaging, labelling, or smell. This mirrors our current practice for alcohol and tobacco. This would apply to public consumption, youth possession, consumption in a vehicle, improper transport in a vehicle, and sales to a minor. This would eliminate the requirement to send the substance to a lab for testing. All other elements of an offence would still need to be proven if the ticket is challenged.

Madam Speaker, as I said, the legislation last fall gave the AGLC the authority to oversee the distribution and retail sale of cannabis in Alberta. This is no small undertaking. The inclusion of legal cannabis in the AGLC's mandate requires necessary resources and supports so its board can provide effective oversight and meet the high expectations of Albertans. Bill 6 reinforces support provided through past legislation, and it would create more capacity for the AGLC board to carry out its expanded mandate. This includes increasing the board's membership from seven to nine members and extending the maximum term for board members from nine years to 10 years. In addition, the bill would allow for temporary extensions of board appointments until a member can be reappointed or replaced, ensuring that there is no gap in capacity during transition periods.

Madam Speaker, while the legalization of cannabis was the impetus for developing this legislation, we also saw the opportunity to amend the Gaming and Liquor Act so that it will better reflect an evolving liquor industry. Two final amendments would bring the potential for new opportunities to Alberta's liquor retailers. The first would allow ferment on premises. This means the facility's licence for this purpose could provide consumers with ingredients, equipment, and guidance to make their own beer, wine, ciders, and coolers on-site and then take the finished products home to consume privately. The bill would also allow retailers to blend and infuse liquor products. This is a growing trend that involves infusing liquor with flavouring agents to create specialty drinks, infusing food with liquor, and creating house-aged liquor.

Madam Speaker, the legalization of cannabis represents a major shift for our province and our country. What's not changing are the priorities that were conveyed to us by Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. I hope that members on both sides of this House will support this legislation. I would like to move that debate be adjourned.

Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 7

Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act

[Debate adjourned April 10: Mr. van Dijken speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's always a pleasure to rise and debate the merits of these important bills such as Bill 7, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act. You know, when our caucus first saw this bill, they were reminded of the failed Bill 202, the Alberta Local Food Act. Now, as far as the purposes of both acts go, indeed the wording and phrasing are a little different, but the bottom line of both bills was and is to encourage the development and success of a local food sector or to ensure a resilient, sustainable, and strong local food economy and agricultural land base in Alberta. The fact that Bill 202, the Alberta Local Food Act, a couple of years ago died on the Order Paper now means that, of course, we pore over all the words inside Bill 7, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act. We do that because it really appears to myself and others that there are definitely similarities. That being said, we're dealing with a new bill, and that is what my comments will refer to.

Let's be honest. Local food is something farmers and rural Albertans understand. We understand it as it's part of our lifestyle and was long before it became trendy and niche. Farmers' markets and buying at the gate was a way of life long before it was urban trendy. It was just what it was.

Now, I've listened to what has been said in the House, to the speakers that have spoken to this bill, and I have to share some of those concerns with my colleagues. We've reached out to peers and producers, asking for their input on a bill dropped here on a Thursday and now debated just a few days later. I can only assume that the government has consulted broadly throughout the agricultural industry, with producers, commissions, manufacturers, and sector groups. I mean, I hope they have, because, of course, we have no way of determining that other than by doing some of that ourselves in the time we've been allotted. We hope to hear back yet on some more opinions as I'm sure the members across the aisle will understand if we do our own consultation. After all, as the late, great President Reagan was fond of saying, "Trust, but verify," and we are going to try to verify.

The trouble is that trust is earned, and it has been mentioned before by others that this government's record on consultation is a tad spotty when it comes to rural issues, not that local food is simply a rural issue. I mean that in this broad growing of crops and livestock kind of rural.

My colleague from Drumheller-Stettler has pointed out a few bothersome areas of this legislation that have been brought to our attention, and I think I'm going to continue in that vein as other issues are cropping up with me as well. I start with definitions of this act. For the purposes of this act

"agricultural product" means

(i) an animal, a plant or an animal and plant product.

As well, an agricultural product as far as this act is concerned is also

(ii) a product, including any food or drink, wholly or partly derived from an animal or a plant, [and]

- (iii) a product prescribed for the purpose of this Act as an agricultural product.

Now, the mumbo-jumbo that appears not just in this act but pretty much every act that crosses our desks leaves a lot of room for interpretation, which is why many portions of this act invite several questions and, in fairness, provide some answers as well. There's no question.

My first question arises with some of the definitions. I mean, I get that the agricultural product definition is going to be broad, but I wonder what the definition of "a product, including any food or drink, wholly or partly derived from an animal or a plant" actually means. Does this act include products that contain honey that are sold, organic or not? Will bees be subject to this act or just the food derived from bees? Does that include mead, which is actually a fermented product subject to AGLC standards?

I guess this would include milk, juice, eggs, bread, bacon, and fruit. Basically, my entire breakfast, organic or not, will fall under this act because, as we know, the minister under section 6(a) can make the certification of agricultural products other than organic ones. You know, certification would seem to most, I would surmise, that we will have local foods certified as per the Canadian Food Inspection Agency, those being foods that are sold within the province at markets or at farm gate, and that the local producer would have to become certified at his own expense. Now, I'm assuming that because it says nowhere in the act who pays for the certification of the producer.

All that seems to make some sense to me, but as I read on in this bill, under section 6 we see:

The Minister may make regulations

- (a) establishing a certification program for agricultural products other than those certified as organic products under Part 2 [of this act].

Yikes. That sentence alone tends to scare the devil out of me, let alone stakeholders. This portion of the bill needs a little explanation. This portion of the bill needs significant explanation, actually, which leads me down the road to the next question.

When I go through this act, I notice that under the definition of local food, it actually means "forest or freshwater food." Okay. Freshwater food makes sense, but forest, I'm afraid, doesn't. I'm guessing that there's not a huge market for organic wood shingles or organic Christmas trees, perhaps, but I digress.

People are actually contacting our offices and have concerns, and it's our job to see that these questions are answered and that we hold the government to account for their actions or inactions. That's our job over here, and we're going to continue to do it.

The stated purposes of this act are:

- (a) to encourage the development and success of a local food sector throughout the Province, and
- (b) to regulate agricultural products that are produced or processed in the Province and marketed and sold as organic products within the Province.

To reiterate what others have said about this bill before, why is the wording in certain clauses in this act so vague that it makes them open to such broad interpretation? Why, when (b) talks about organics, are all agricultural products included in this legislation? To what purpose is that?

To get the ball rolling here again, I'm going to move on to the local food councils. As per the bill:

5(1) The Minister shall, in accordance with section 7 of the Government Organization Act, establish a Local Food Council to provide a report containing advice and recommendations regarding provincial policies, programs, pilot projects or initiatives to support the continued growth and sustainability of Alberta's local food sector.

Now, I applaud the minister for ensuring that the members which will be appointed to this council are to be representatives of Alberta's local food sector, including small producers and processors. That portion of the bill seems to make good sense, not that there aren't more portions of the bill that also make good sense. Don't get me wrong here. But that particular portion does give representation on this council to those that are actually involved in growing and taking and marketing food, whatever the definition of food may be.

Now, I guess this does ask another question. The current government has made as much hay as possible, certainly in the last year, with regard to dissolving agencies, boards, and commissions. Now, I'm not going to say either one way or another whether or not that was good or bad. It's not what this bill is about today. But it seems to me that after all of the hoopla about getting rid of ABCs, we've changed the word to "council," and that seems like it will cover off agencies, boards, and commissions with the use of a different word.

You know, a council, according to Webster's, is a body of persons specifically designated or selected to act in an advisory, administrative, or legislative capacity. For some of us in Alberta, changing the word from an agency, a board, for heaven's sake, or a commission to a council isn't necessarily anything different. There's really no difference here between those four words, but I guess it could conceivably be seen as a new word from what we have known for several years as three different words. But once again I do digress.

The food portion of this bill, as it relates to the newly formed council that will oversee risk management tools for local food producers and processors and attempt to provide increased access to local food, does at its best keep the public informed on local food in Alberta and provides certification opportunities for local food producers and local food processors. The part of this council is that it potentially will be dissolved, and a drop-dead date on when that will be dissolved is included. That, for me, was very good news. This so-called council won't be lounging around with not much to do for years and years as we've seen in the past, with the possibility of salaries getting out of hand.

But should I be so tickled? I wonder. Let's examine this for a minute. Section 5 of the bill, which talks about the local food council, has several subcategories, and I refer now to subcategories (4) and (5) of section 5. Section 5(4) states:

Not later than 12 months after a Council is established under subsection (1), which refers to the Government Organization Act, the Council must submit a final report to the Minister providing the advice and recommendations of the Council on the matters referred to in subsection (1), which, once again, I've already talked about here. Now, that subsection is something that I laud and applaud. There is a definite end date for the council. I think we could all agree that that idea is a great move.

When I look down a little further, I see section 5(5), that reads:

The Council is dissolved on the date the Minister accepts the Council's report or such later date determined by the Minister.

Now, that's kind of where it falls off the rails for me. I understand that the minister has to keep a fairly tight rein on how long this council is able to exist in order to achieve the pieces of legislation laid out here. That makes perfect sense. But on one hand, the legislation says that the minister will dissolve the council no later than one year after it has been established; on the other hand, the legislation gives the minister the ability to keep the council in place until said minister sees fit to dissolve the council.

I think, with all that said, Madam Speaker, I have raised enough questions here. I'd like to put forward an amendment if I may. I have the appropriate number of copies here, and I will wait for your approval before I proceed.

The Deputy Speaker: This will be referral motion RA1.

Mr. Schneider: I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 7, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 7, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future in accordance with Standing Order 74.2."

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, on the amendment.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, this particular act that we've got now reminds me so much of the previous act that we had here a year and a half ago. I think it was Bill 202. In that bill, we saw an awful lot of ambiguity and things that we were really, really concerned about, and in this bill, too, we see a lot of wording that is almost exactly the same. I think that the Member for Little Bow has quite a large amount of information, that I don't have possession of at the moment to elaborate on. Certainly, when I read certain clauses of this bill, I saw that they were almost exactly the same in some areas as the one that we saw before. So I would . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but pursuant to the unanimous decision of the House earlier this afternoon to waive Standing Order 4(2), the House stands adjourned until Monday afternoon at 1:30.

[The Assembly adjourned at 3:59 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 4th Session (2018)

Activity to Thursday, April 12, 2018

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sitzings.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Hon. members, let us, each in our own way, reflect or pray on our commonalities and not on our differences. Now more than ever it is time for collaborative work for the good of Alberta and of all of our nations. Let us let our deliberations today be guided by the reminder that we as Members of the Alberta Legislative Assembly have a responsibility to ensure that Albertans, our province, and indeed our nation must always succeed.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. R.J. Chambers.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in order to introduce to you and through you 21 wonderful students who are visiting us today from Garneau school, which is a very old and traditional and long-standing school in the city of Edmonton, in the heart of my riding. They are accompanied by their teachers, Miss Carly Bowman and Mrs. Kristine Peters, and also their chaperone, Mr. Zabaneh. I certainly hope that all members will join me as they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 29 students from the Covenant Canadian Reformed School in Neerlandia. The students are accompanied by their teacher, Corlisa Pietersma, along with their chaperones, Karen Schouten, Marcia Van Grootheest, Benita Dejong, Sharlene Hamoen, Francine Schouten, Mel Hooimeyer, and Jelte Jagersma. I ask that they please rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other school groups?
Seeing none, the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's very much my pleasure to introduce today three visitors: my brother Ervin Carlier from Val Marie, Saskatchewan, and his daughters, my nieces Jeanelle Carlier from Swift Current, Saskatchewan, and Carina Carlier-Sissons from Pincher Creek, Alberta. I would now like my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I have two introductions. It's my absolute pleasure to introduce to you and through you Dr. Ubaka Ogbogu, who is seated in the members' gallery along with his wife and two lovely daughters. Dr. Ogbogu recently has been appointed to the board of directors of the Health Quality Council of Alberta. He's currently an assistant professor with the faculties of Law and pharmacy, and he's a Katz research fellow in health law and science at the University of Alberta. Due to his passion and experience with health policy, we are excited to have him join the excellent HQCA team. To his daughters and wife: I should let you know that in his interview he spoke so much about how proud he is to be your dad and your husband. Please, colleagues, join me in extending the warm welcome. And to your entire family, please rise and receive our warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly members of Nadia El-Dib's family. I am amazed at the strength of this family in the face of incredible tragedy, and I will be speaking more about Nadia today in my member's statement. If Sami El-Dib, Joumana El-Dib, Sali El-Dib, Racha El-Dib, and Jana El-Dib could rise and please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Any other guests to introduce, hon. member?

Ms Hoffman: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In that cuteness I failed to conclude my second introduction. I am honoured to introduce guests from the Elves Special Needs Society, located in the constituency of Edmonton-Glenora, that I have the honour of representing. They're in the members' gallery. Elves is a well-established nonprofit offering one-of-a-kind service to individuals with disabilities here in the capital region since 1973, serving over 450 individuals and their families from the ages of two and a half and up. Elves has dedicated staff and supportive volunteers who provide a caring, inclusive environment. I now invite Vivienne Bartee, president; Barbara Tymchak Olafson; Mieczyslaw Pogonowski; Candace Scheuer; and Eva Glover to please rise and receive the warm welcome and the appreciation of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Nadia El-Dib

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Your kindness has touched more people than you will ever know; you made everyone's day shine; thank you for teaching us the true meaning of strength; you will never know how much I will miss you: these are some of the comments from Nadia El-Dib's Facebook page. A beautiful, bubbly, and kind-hearted girl, Nadia was tragically murdered at just 22 years old on March 25 at the hands of a man whom she knew. This is an unspeakable tragedy, and I can't imagine the loss that her family must feel.

Speaking to her sister over the course of last week, the El-Dib family want Nadia to be remembered as the glue that held her family together, as someone who always had a smile on her face, and as a person who lived her life to the fullest. Nadia was well known for her skill with makeup and her incredible photos on social media. Makeup was something that came naturally to Nadia and something that she had a passion for. She was also just figuring out what she wanted to do with her life. She was in her second semester of a legal assistant diploma at SAIT and had dreams of going on to become a lawyer. One of four daughters, Nadia was close with her family. You can see in family photos and videos just how close the girls were and how much they loved each other.

Nadia's family wants to use her tragic story to bring awareness to the issue of violence against women. They encourage any woman who is in an abusive relationship to reach out for help, but they also want more people to talk about the precursors to violence. They want people to talk about what kind of behaviour isn't acceptable from a boyfriend or a man who is pursuing you. They want friends not to be bystanders but to speak up when they notice things that might be red flags. Nadia's death is a huge loss to her family and to her entire community. Hopefully, this tragedy can lead to the prevention of others like it in the future.

To Nadia's family, on behalf of our government I want to extend our sincerest and deepest condolences for the loss of Nadia, and I want you to know that your government stands with you in your efforts to end violence against women and to ensure that every Albertan can one day live free from the fear, threat, or experience of domestic violence.

Thank you.

1:40 Trans Mountain Pipeline Construction Suspension

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, Canada is in a constitutional and economic crisis over the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion. Today's Liberals in Ottawa are not the nation-building Liberals of C.D. Howe's time, when the TransCanada pipeline was built. But make no mistake. When you're in such a crisis, your reference document is the Constitution, not the Leap Manifesto.

It is the job of the Official Opposition to proactively identify solutions and offer the government constructive, practical, common-sense suggestions. The NDP and Trudeau Liberals reject our suggestions. When the B.C. NDP was sworn in, we called for consequences if they tried to obstruct the pipeline. The Alberta NDP ridiculed us, but then it became a possibility in the throne speech six months later. The NDP rejected our call for an emergency debate in February. Then the NDP ended the wine ban too early. From using the declaratory powers of section 92(10)(c) of the Constitution to withholding the billions of dollars in infrastructure funding, the best the Liberals and NDP came up with is: let's take an equity position.

Meet the NDP's world travellers: Tzaporah Berman and Karen Mahon, now illegally protesting the pipeline; and Gerald Butts, the PMO's principal secretary, previously with the World Wildlife Fund, part of the Rockefeller-backed campaign to land lock the oil sands. Nothing like manufacturing a crisis and then appearing to act as if to solve it. Is it a coincidence that this is happening in the lead-up to an election year?

The clock is ticking. There are 46 days left to clear the political hurdles to give certainty for Kinder Morgan. Make it happen, Premier.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Organ and Tissue Donation

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All Albertans have been struck by the enormity of the tragedy suffered by the Humboldt Broncos team and the families of those injured and killed. Out of that tragedy have come many stories of selflessness and heroism. One story, that of Logan Boulet and family, has resounded around the world. Logan, born and raised in Lethbridge, had recently turned 21. He told his family that he wanted to be an organ donor and he'd signed his donor card. His parents and family honoured his wishes, and six organs were subsequently transplanted. Because of this act, many people are going to be helped. For instance, two Canadians will be able to get off dialysis and lead normal lives.

I want to pay tribute to the Boulet family for setting such a good example for all of us who may have to make the difficult decision to donate a loved one's organs. It's important to remember that the next of kin need to know and appreciate the intent of those who have signed. Logan and his parents have created a legacy which has prompted a massive increase in the signing of donor cards. Over last five days 13,500 Albertans have registered their intent to be organ donors. That's nearly a 10-fold increase.

I also want to recognize another Albertan family for their heroism. Revée Agyepong, 26, of Edmonton, is the first adult in Canada to be cured of sickle-cell anemia. The donor was her sister. Revée had been dealing with the complications from sickle-cell disease since early childhood. Through the efforts of my Edmonton hematology colleagues, the sickle-cell disease had been controlled with frequent transfusions. Now Revée needs no transfusions. The stem cell transplant was done by the Alberta bone marrow transplant program at the Tom Baker cancer centre in Calgary. This team has achieved a first in Canada and continues to provide Albertans with world-class stem cell transplants. The new Calgary cancer centre will incorporate that team.

Mr. Speaker, these events demonstrate the power of family, the benefits of science, and the value of working together to save lives and make life better.

Official Opposition and Government Policies

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, Oscar Wilde said that imitation is the sincerest form of flattery, and if that is indeed accurate, we on this side of the aisle have been the recipient of plenty of flattery as of late. It started off with the leaders of the PC and Wildrose parties talking about how there needs to be a conversation about equalization in this country. We've made no bones about our desire to have a national conversation over this. Now media types and politicians of all stripes are echoing these sentiments.

Over here we've been beating the drum on the rural crime epidemic, holding town halls and having legitimate conversations about this time-sensitive topic. Despite turning us down for the last nine months, including holding an emergency debate, the government appears to have come around somewhat. Although they have yet to engage the public themselves, they are at least starting to engage with us. Lots more work to be done on this topic, Mr. Speaker, but at least they're getting to the starting line.

Now, I guess we should really be flattered over here with the fact that although we've been talking tough about the inaction of the federal Liberals, the constant and flagrant disobedience of the law by the B.C. NDP, and the foot-dragging and backtracking by our own government, it appears that concrete action may be forthcoming. A bill will soon be introduced to provide tough economic penalties with real consequences to the B.C. government, a bill that may turn off the taps to energy products to the west coast, which our leader has been calling for for quite some time. While the name could use some work as Bill 12, Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act, doesn't exactly roll off the tongue, perhaps we can suggest it be called the Official Opposition Suggested This a Year Ago Act. It may actually sell better here in Alberta if this bill is what it was promised to be.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Henson Trusts for Persons with Disabilities

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I want to update the House on the efforts of so many to bring Henson trust legislation to Alberta. Prior to the dissolution of the last session I tabled Bill 211 to make life better for Albertans on AISH. Unfortunately, Bill 211 did not become law. While I was crushed by this, I soon discovered that I was not alone. No politician hyperbole here; truly, every single day for the last 16 weeks I have received e-mails, phone calls, and office visits from concerned brothers, loving sisters, frustrated fathers, and worried mothers from across this province. AISH recipients have come into my office and left me voice mails.

As Laura put it: this was a simple bill that would make a big difference; it would provide peace of mind. Calgarians Peter and Rose considered the Henson trust "essential legislation" that would allow adult children to live with the same dignity as other Canadians. Jon Chang, who has a neuromuscular developmental disability, wrote to tell me that at age 37 he's anxious about how he'll be able to live when he is 65. He and so many others wrote because they want to make this good bill a good law.

I shared these messages with the Minister of Community and Social Services and spoke with eternal optimism for so many whom I have a duty to speak for. "Please be my son's voice," implored Jordan's mother in an e-mail. That is why I am truly thankful to the Minister of Community and Social Services for recognizing and responding to these calls by introducing Bill 5, An Act to Strengthen Financial Security for Persons with Disabilities.

To all who have contacted me, hear this: we are getting it done. And to anyone whom I've ever spoken with – please excuse the car racing reference – we need to keep our foot on the gas; we need to keep moving forward. And to Laura and Glen, Judy, Beverley, Tim and Carol, and so many others who are counting on us to cross the finish line, be assured that we will get it passed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Lacombe Generals and Allan Cup 2018 Hockey Championship

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, hockey is Canadian, maybe the only thing we can agree upon in this House. Saturday night was the Allan Cup, the triple-A men's national hockey championship final game played in Rosetown, Saskatchewan. Speaking of Saskatchewan, may we never forget the tragedy of Humboldt. The Allan Cup was a game played between generals, the Lacombe Generals versus the Stoney Creek Generals from Ontario. The Lacombe Generals, or the Army, opened the scoring but ended the first period down 3-1. They roared back in the second to tie it up. Thirty-four seconds into the third they went ahead. But the Stoney Creek Generals answered with two more. In the last minute Lacombe pulled their tendy but to no avail. Stoney Creek hit the empty net twice to win 7-4.

Still, you have to celebrate the Lacombe Generals. Established in 1999 by five central Alberta guys, their goal was simply to provide a place for men to play competitively after juniors, but soon sponsors, volunteers, and fans started to rally around them. They play in the five-team Chinook Hockey League. Winners of the provincial title move on to the larger Canadian national title, the Allan Cup. This team has amazing chemistry. The Lacombe Generals have won the Allan Cup three times, the Generals have been Allan Cup finalists six other times, and since 2008 they have been in the finals every year except two. This year we won the league championships, the Allan Cup west championship, and we won our provincials, states head coach Sean Robertson. In team points they have been first or second in the league every year since 2001. Lacombe is proud of you, our Generals.

Since 1909 the Allan Cup has been awarded to the top amateur team in Canada. Next year the Allan Cup will be hosted in Lacombe. See you there.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Federal-provincial Meeting on Trans Mountain Pipeline Expansion

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, on the weekend there was a meeting in Ottawa that got us no further, no closer to the construction of the Trans Mountain pipeline. Following that meeting, Premier Horgan said that when he asked Alberta's Premier what her intentions were about turning off the taps, she said, quote: their legislative session is very brief, and they were going to bring in enabling legislation, and they didn't necessarily think they were going to act on it. Why did the Premier say that she's going to bring in legislation but has no intention of acting on it? Why did she give away her hand even before playing it?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Yes. Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me just begin by saying that Alberta is leading this fight, and we are very, very proud to be in that position. We are moving on all fronts, on economic fronts, legal fronts, and financial fronts. I would suggest that the member opposite not take his questions from the newspaper's recounting of someone else's recounting of someone else's recounting of what I said because, let me be perfectly clear, we were very clear with both the Prime Minister and with the government of B.C. that we will take whatever action is necessary to get this pipeline built.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I'm simply quoting her New Democrat friend Premier John Horgan, who said that this Premier indicated to him on the weekend that she does not necessarily think she's going to act on this legislation. Is Premier Horgan accurate in that remark, or are these comments attributed to him misleading?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I said to Premier Horgan very clearly when we were in Ottawa was that while there may be some unfortunate consequential impacts on gas prices in the Lower Mainland as we move forward with respect to this bill, the actions of the B.C. government and the failure of this pipeline to get built costs Canada $40 million a day; therefore, we cannot tolerate this delay any longer. For that reason Alberta is leading the fight, and we will get the pipeline built.

Mr. Kenney: For the record the Premier does not deny that she told John Horgan that this legislation is an empty threat. That would be part of a consistent record because back in December 2016, after our Premier flew to Vancouver, she met with then opposition leader John Horgan ostensibly to discuss the Trans Mountain pipeline, after which Mr. Horgan said that, quote, she had no intention of persuading me. So, Mr. Speaker, is it not true that she talks tough about these things in public but then folds with her friend John Horgan in private?

Ms Notley: Oh, Mr. Speaker, things could just not be further from the truth. What I will say is that I'm not grandstanding just for the sake of creating political divisions and gathering votes. What I will say is that it is a critical time for Alberta and that all Albertans have to present a united front. And I will say, speaking of friends, that it was not helpful to have the Leader of the Official Opposition call the federal announcement of support for this pipeline, quote, unquote, disgusting. I would suggest that if the member opposite wants to help, he should talk to his Conservative cousins and get them onside with getting this pipeline built.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Kenney: For the record the Premier has never denied Premier Horgan's assertion that she had no intention of persuading him to support the pipeline in 2016. She does not deny his claim that she folded already on the public threat to turn off the taps. So, Mr. Speaker, let me ask the Premier this question. In her meeting with the Prime Minister and Premier Horgan on Sunday did she ask the federal government to withhold 5 and a half billion dollars of discretionary federal transfers for infrastructure and job training until the pipeline is built, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, what we have done is that we have worked with the federal government. It is very clear that the federal government is now joining with Alberta to engage in very meaningful, formal discussions to ensure that investor risk is limited or eliminated, and I am confident that that will happen. Meanwhile, Mr. Speaker, the federal Conservatives, the Official Opposition, are calling that action on the part of the federal government, which has the authority to deal with this issue, disgusting. I say again to the member opposite: is he going to tell his federal Conservative cousins to stop it?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I'll have to remind the Premier that it's her friend and ally Justin Trudeau who got us in this mess by cancelling Northern Gateway, killing Energy East, surrendering to Obama on Keystone, and doing nothing in the past two years to ensure the construction of Trans Mountain. Now she seems eager to risk Alberta tax dollars on this project. Wouldn't it make more sense that the British Columbia government should be put in a place of risk by withholding those federal transfers? Why doesn't she join with us in insisting that B.C. have some skin in the game to ensure the protection of our Constitution and our country's economic interests?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Interestingly, what our government is doing is keeping our eye on the ball. There is one government that has the authority to make the decision, which did make the decision, and that is the federal government. We are working with that federal government to make sure that they assert their jurisdiction and get the pipeline built. On that front it does not help to have the federal Official Opposition attacking the federal government for saying that they will support the Kinder Morgan pipeline no matter what. It is time for this fellow over here to get his friends in Ottawa to join with the rest of Canada and get the job done.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I can understand the Premier's desperate effort to spin this complete failure of a meeting yesterday, but the truth is this. Her B.C. New Democrat friends are saying that they are requiring nearly 1,200 provincial permits for Kinder Morgan to go forward, of which only 201 have been approved. What assurance did she receive from Premier Horgan that he will approve the other 1,000 outstanding permits immediately?

Ms Notley: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, someone is playing politics, and it's the member opposite because, of course, Kinder Morgan itself has said that they have no concerns about the rate at which the government in B.C. is issuing certificates. The member opposite fully knows that. Now, the fact of the matter is that the federal Conservatives are saying no to federal support for the TMX. The leader of the UCP is joining with Premier Horgan to call for a Supreme Court reference so that we can further delay the project. Meanwhile we've been leading the fight. The federal government is backing our position. The pipeline will be built, and I would suggest that the member opposite simply join with us in that work.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Provincial Response to Pipeline Opposition Calgary Board of Education Carbon Levy Costs

Mr. Kenney: Astoundingly, Mr. Speaker, the Premier just said that Kinder Morgan doesn't care about the pace of things. Then why did they suspend the project eight days ago? We have only 45 days left before they might cancel this project outright. The international financial community, Credit Suisse just said that they continue to regard the calculus as fraught and that there is no progress to resolving the legal challenges. What specifically did the Premier get from her counterpart John Horgan to eliminate the uncertainty that the federal government has created about this project?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you. I think you've got it confused there. Again, to be clear, what we know from Kinder Morgan is that the things that are causing uncertainty are the potential future legal actions that might occur; they are not the rate at which certificates are being issued. As I said before, the member opposite knows that. The federal government has the authority to move this pipeline along in a timely way that will reassure investors. The federal government is working on exactly that, Mr. Speaker. They are doing that because we have shown leadership. The pipeline will get built.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, on a different matter, we've learned that the Calgary board of education is looking at cutting full-day kindergarten to save a million dollars. It just so happens that the Calgary board of education is now spending a million dollars a year on the carbon tax. Is the Premier proud that her carbon tax is now forcing the school board to cut access to full-day kindergarten?

Mr. Clark: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, none of that adds up, but what I will say is this. First of all, what will not support full-day kindergarten or half-day kindergarten is putting more money into funding private schools. That's the first thing. We won't do it. Those folks over there are suggesting they will.

2:00

Another thing that would cut kindergarten classes, Mr. Speaker, would be freezing education funding at 2015 levels, which is exactly what the member opposite said that he wanted to do. We would never do something so short-sighted. We will continue to stand up for our kids, their classrooms, and their futures.

Mr. Kenney: The Premier questions the numbers I just offered, Mr. Speaker. Happy to table these documents.

According to Investing in the Future, the facilities report from the CBE, Calgary board of education, the NDP carbon tax is projected to cost that board a million dollars, and the administration has now proposed cutting a million dollars in spending on kindergarten. Does the Premier not understand that her carbon tax means less access to kindergarten in Calgary, and given that it hasn't gotten us social licence or a pipeline, will she join us in reconsidering the destructive impact of the carbon tax?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, that assertion is just ridiculous. The member opposite is reaching beyond all sense of logical debate or consideration here. To be clear, our government has raised education funding to keep up with enrolment funding year after year after year since we've been elected. This is in stark contrast to what their predecessors told Albertans they were going to do leading up to the last election, in stark contrast to what the member opposite just said two weeks ago that he would do if he had been in charge in 2015. Thank goodness, for those kindergarten classes, that we are the ones that are still here and still supporting them.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Member for Calgary-South East.

Pharmacy Funding Framework

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The pipeline is crucial to this government and to this province, but at the same time properly investing in health care, equally the same in allied health care, will also do the same for our bottom line. I had a constituent who, being a pharmacist for the past 17 years, wrote to me to express her concern about the changes to pharmacy funding and how that would affect the treatment that she can offer. She mentioned that one patient said that without her help in smoking cessation, he would have just kept smoking and gone on and given up. To the Minister of Health: have you heard from pharmacists who are concerned about your budget cuts and how that will result in fewer smoking cessation sessions and create greater health care costs?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We certainly appreciate the role pharmacists have in supporting the health care needs of Albertans throughout our province. Under this new framework Alberta pharmacists continue to be compensated at rates higher than their counterparts in other provinces. Let's be clear. The only ones proposing cuts to health care are the members on the other side of this House. On this side of the House we're standing up with front-line workers, we're standing up with front-line Albertans, and we're making sure that we have sustainable growth so that they get the health care they need. We'll see what you do when we bring forward our budget for approval in a couple of weeks.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, this minister is the one who just cut pharmacies by $150 million.

The same pharmacist helped a man who was on antidepressant and anti-anxiety medication to slowly reduce and taper off his use.

The man had started the medication after losing his wife, and he thought he'd have to take them for the rest of his life. After working through the reduction plan with this pharmacist, he asked: why hasn't a doctor shown me this before? To the same minister: have you heard from pharmacists who are concerned that your budget cuts will result in less responsive treatment for patients?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, we sat down with the Alberta Pharmacists' Association, the RxA, and worked with them on a tool that helps us achieve savings year over year. But you know what? We're increasing the pharmacy budget by 4.3 per cent because we know that that's important in this province. Instead of proposing deep ideological cuts – I think some members of the opposition talked about 5 per cent across the board – on this side of the House we're working in a strategic way to keep patients as the focus. A 4.3 per cent increase to pharmacies to keep up with growth and increased needs: that's a responsible thing to do. I suspect that members opposite will hopefully join us in supporting our budget.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, the minister cut front-line staff, pharmacists, by $150 million.

Pharmacists are planning another rally this week to make their concerns heard about these budget cuts, like community pharmacists who wrote to me and said that they're concerned about the level of care they'll be able to provide their patients and that the patients will suffer because of it. They're also concerned that those cuts were made without their knowledge or consent. If you haven't heard from these concerned pharmacists, will you be at that rally? Will you take the time, listen to them, and work out a plan that's going to help to better patient care?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I'm proud of the fact that during difficult economic times we decided on this side of the House to protect health care. We brought forward a 4.3 per cent increase to pharmacy services. It was important to us that that go towards the front lines, ensuring that patients have access to more pharmaceutical coverage, smaller copays, and other opportunities. What is true is that we have a 4.3 per cent increase to that line item. We wanted to be focused on patients, and we wanted to ensure that we get the best outcomes, and I'm proud that the RxA sat down with us at the table and helped us reach this reasonable compromise and position.

The Speaker: Hon. members, just for the record I did note a point of order from Calgary-Elbow two questions ago.

Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Long-term and Continuing Care Beds

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A key election promise of our government in 2015 was to create 2,000 additional long-term care beds across the province. To the Associate Minister of Health: how much progress has the government made in achieving this goal, please?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is committed to building 2,000 new long-term care and dementia beds, and we keep our promises. We're well on track to meet our target by 2019. We saw the addition of 800 new spaces last year, and we're investing $49 million in Budget 2018 directly for continuing care beds.

Albertans have to be able to count on care when and where they need it, and our government will always make these services a priority.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What are the continuing challenges to creating these sorely needed long-term beds as soon as possible?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The damage inflicted by Conservative government after Conservative government takes time to heal. We see what happens when they are in charge: firing masses of nurses, blowing up hospitals, and closing thousands of beds. Looking to the days of Ralph Klein is backward thinking, and our government is looking forward. We're investing in infrastructure, we are protecting services, and we will make sure that this economic recovery is built to last.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Woollard: Thank you once again. How will the associate minister and the ministry support public health care as the government moves toward achieving the goal of 2,000 long-term care spaces?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are the party of medicare, and I am so proud to be able to champion public health care each and every day. We have three major public projects on the way in Fort McMurray, in Edmonton, and in Calgary. We have plans to increase continuing care capacity beyond the 2,000 new beds, and we'll be making those announcements before long. I don't see any plans from the members opposite, just the same old strategy: cut, cut, cut.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Public Purchase Proposal

Mr. Fildebrandt: Less than two weeks ago Kinder Morgan had all of the private-sector investment necessary for the Trans Mountain pipeline. They needed no subsidies, no corporate welfare, nothing from government other than to do its simple duty of providing a stable regulatory framework and enforcing the rule of law. This government and its allies in Ottawa have failed at this, and now their answer is to spend billions of taxpayer dollars and buy the pipeline. Investment dollars are not the issue; government is the issue. Rather than put taxpayers on the hook for this government's failed social licence policy, why doesn't the Premier just tell the federal government to do its job?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I think there isn't a person in this room that doesn't understand how important the TMX pipeline is. It's thousands of jobs; it's billions in investment. On this side of the House we're doing what it takes to get that pipeline built. We didn't start the fight, but we're going to do whatever it takes to get this pipeline built. Failure is not an option on this side of the House.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Governments of all stripes have a poor track record at running businesses. This government's failure to read the power purchase agreements cost taxpayers $2 billion to $3 billion, and now they want to buy a multibillion-dollar pipeline. I can see it now: the Minister of Environment sitting on the board of Kinder Morgan, the Minister of Energy participating in the annual shareholders' meeting, and the Minister of Finance pleading with creditors. Does this government really believe that it has the competency necessary to run a pipeline?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, every day that this pipeline is delayed, we're talking $40 million in the Canadian economy that's being lost. We've taken action. We've tried to work with the British Columbia government. We're working with the federal government. We are working every day with industry. I met with industry on Friday to update them on what we're doing. As I said before, on this side of the House we're working every day, and we're going to get this pipeline built.

2:10

Mr. Fildebrandt: Ronald Reagan said: "If it moves, tax it. If it keeps moving, regulate it. And if it stops moving, subsidize it." Things were moving, so they brought in a carbon tax. Things kept moving, so they brought in an oil sands cap. Now things appear to be about to stop, so they want to subsidize it. After a carbon tax, excessive regulations, and now a desire to nationalize the pipeline, the advantages of the oil patch will increasingly only be enjoyed by friends of the government, like in Venezuela. Will this government cancel their plans to nationalize the pipeline?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, to be clear, this pipeline approval was achieved because of our climate leadership plan. Had we not had that plan, we wouldn't even be standing here talking about it today. Again, we have worked in every area we can to get this pipeline. We work with the companies. We work with the shippers. We work with the governments. We're working on all sides to get this done because it is too important to not get it done: $40 million a day being lost, money left on the table because of the differential. We need that pipeline capacity, and we need it now.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would remind each and every one again that after question 5 there is no preamble.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Federal-provincial Meeting on Trans Mountain Pipeline Expansion (continued)

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: given this weekend's meeting that failed to get us a pipeline to tidewater, did you point out the shocking hypocrisy of B.C.'s environmental record while Premier Horgan was lecturing Alberta on ours?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we've been clear all along, back to since we revealed our climate leadership plan, that that was going to be the key for development in the energy industry. You know, my energy stakeholders get this. They know that this is a global trend. Countries, businesses are going to price carbon. They're looking at carbon and how to be competitive. Our climate leadership plan got us that approval. It's going to get us that pipeline.

Mrs. Aheer: Let me try a question in a different way. Given that British Columbia was responsible for almost 40 per cent of the 120 million cubic metres of untreated sewage and runoff water that entered Canadian waterways in 2016 and given that Alaskans have asked the B.C. government to deal with the Tulsequah Chief Mine in northwest B.C., that is leaking acid waste water into one of the richest salmon runs in the region, did the Premier raise B.C.'s shocking – shocking – hypocrisy on the environmental file when she met with Premier Horgan this weekend?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the specifics of the meeting, what I will say is that the Premier was very clear that we need to go forward on this pipeline approval. This approval has been given, and it needs to be worth more than the paper it was written on. She has made it very clear that she won't let other roadblocks be put up in our way. Certainly, I share in concern around raw sewage and Victoria. I know many British Columbians do. The solution, in our mind, is to make sure that we move forward with responsible environmental protections while getting our product to tidewater. We're going to keep moving forward in that direction.

Mrs. Aheer: As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, Premier Horgan is still blocking the pipeline. When we talk about the environmental piece, the excess runoff meets the sewer and gets untreated sewage flowing into the ocean waterways. B.C. dumps billions of litres of raw sewage into their waterways, and it's causing massive damage to the ocean. Did the Premier bother mentioning Calgary? The equivalent here is zero, because Calgary made the determination to separate stormwater and sewer water back in the 1960s. What did the Premier do to defend Alberta's environmental record?

Ms Hoffman: Every day the Premier defends Alberta's environmental record and works to make sure that we are all in a position where the world is excited to receive our products. Of course, we need to get that pipeline to tidewater to make that happen. That's why we're fighting day in and day out. That's why the Premier was in Toronto earlier in the week, that's why she was back in Ottawa on the weekend, and that's why we'll keep moving forward at all stops to make sure that this pipeline gets built. Nothing is going to count Alberta out. You can mark my words.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Police Release of Information on Serious Incidents

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week in this Chamber the minister of community services expressed condolences to the family of a deceased man who shot and seriously wounded a Calgary police officer. The minister did not mention one word of concern for the officer who was shot or for the officer who risked his life to save his colleague. As Mr. Kaminski, the Police Association president, said, the shooter is not a victim. He attempted to kill two police officers. To the Premier: can you please explain your minister's insensitive response?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Of course, I would like to take this opportunity to express on behalf of the entire government our government's condolences for the officer in that incident. I do know that these are often very serious incidents, and we absolutely do take them seriously moving forward. I know that our government supports these officers on the front line and the important work that they do every day.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, given that ASIRT has chosen not to release the deceased shooter's name despite a violent crime spree that would have resulted in serious criminal charges had it not ended in the death of the shooter and given that ASIRT is hiding behind a policy to not cause trauma to the deceased's family without any regard for the traumatized officers and their families, Minister, why are you letting ASIRT keep the name of the deceased shooter a secret?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. I know that there is a lot of interest in these cases. It is ASIRT's policy and has been ASIRT's policy over a number of years to not release the names of people injured or killed in these incidents. I think that the important thing is that we make these decisions based on principle. There is an agreement between these independent investigative offices throughout the country, and they all have the same policy, but we're always happy to consider it.

Mr. Ellis: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that ASIRT appears to have free rein to provide whatever dribs of information it cares to share with the public even in a case where the public has a right to know if a dangerous repeat offender was free on Alberta streets and why, and given that ASIRT's veil of secrecy and the confounding statements made by the minister of community services have shaken the public trust in Alberta's justice system, Minister, will you put an end to this policy of secrecy and release the shooter's name today?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, these cases are very serious, and they do take a lot of public interest. That's why it's absolutely critical that ASIRT be able to complete an independent investigation into these matters so that we can maintain the confidence of the public in our law enforcement. That's why ASIRT does a very thorough job of ensuring that they aren't releasing any information that might prejudice a case, particularly when an investigation is ongoing, and I think the entire public has an interest in ensuring that that's the case.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's interesting that the minister mentioned an investigation. The minister said on the weekend that the Calgary shooter's name must be kept secret because, quote, we need to weigh the transparency against the risk that ultimately prejudices the case. Unquote.

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

Mr. Ellis: Minister, what case are you referring to, the case against the deceased shooter or the case against the police officer who was shot?

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, again, in that interview what I was referring to was the need that we make decisions in the legal system on consistent rules and consistent principles and that those rules apply equally to everyone and to every case. ASIRT investigates very serious matters. As a result of that, there are instances in which they don't release these names — those are most instances — and that is consistent with the policy across the jurisdictions. We're always willing to review our policies, but we do like to make decisions based on principle.

Mr. Ellis: Well, given that three years ago Constable Wynn was shot and killed at the St. Albert casino and that when it was learned that his killer Shawn Rehn was a repeat violent offender who was out on bail, it prompted a full review of the bail hearing system, the one that you challenged in court, and given that if ASIRT had been following the new naming process then, we would never have known about Shawn Rehn, Minister, do you now see why naming the deceased shooter is so important for the sake of public trust?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the reforms made to the system following the tragic death of Constable Wynn were absolutely sort of critical steps moving forward. The government did not challenge the decision in court. We were advised to go to the court and seek a ruling, and that's exactly what we did, and we have followed and abided by that ruling to ensure that we're making the necessary improvements to the system. Again, these cases garner a lot of attention. They are extremely important for the public, and that's why we need to make decisions based on principle in each case.

2:20

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, given that Albertans need assurance that there has not been another major failure in the bail hearing system and given that since ASIRT is keeping the shooter's name under wraps and that the public must now rely on the minister for assurance that the bail hearing process is capable of keeping dangerous offenders off the streets, Minister, it's now on you. For the maintenance of the public trust will you guarantee Albertans here today that the Calgary police shooter was not a violent repeat offender who was out on bail?

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, ASIRT performs an incredibly important function. That function is necessary to maintain the public trust. They are an independent agency that investigates these matters. They work very closely with police services, and this system works incredibly well. I would say that it's the best in the country. I'm not going to interfere with their role. I think it's very important that they be permitted to be an independent investigator because, at the end of the day, it supports the legal system to have that public faith.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Commodity Rail Transportation Backlog

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Market access for our products is one of the top priorities of this government. This is as true for agricultural products as it is for our nonrenewable resources. There were recent disruptions to the transportation system to get Alberta's wheat, canola, pulses, and other products to market via railways. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: how is the minister ensuring that producers' concerns are heard?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The member is correct in saying that grain movement by rail has been a challenge this year. My office has heard from concerned producers throughout Alberta on this issue, and we take it seriously. I spoke with CN and CP Rail as well as reached out to my federal colleagues to discuss this concerning issue. There were some natural barriers that slowed things down earlier in the spring such as poor weather but also delay in Bill C-49 in the Senate, a bill that would benefit Canadian farmers.

The Speaker: The first supplemental.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What will this government do to ensure that this situation is avoided in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fortunately, our discussions with CN and CP have been productive. With the additional resources that have been applied to accelerate things along with improved weather conditions, the railways are returning to a more normal level of service in terms of crews and locomotives. We will continue to monitor the train transportation situation, advocate for the progress of Bill C-49, and communicate with CN and CP, the grain industry, and producer organizations going forward.

The Speaker: The second supplemental.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: what are you hearing from your forestry stakeholders about their transportation issues; i.e., pulp and lumber?

Mr. Carlier: The grain transportation issue appears to be abating, Mr. Speaker, but I've heard from forestry stakeholders that the mills are having difficulties getting their products to customers. They're having to take extraordinary measures to avoid unplanned shutdowns. I've spoken to forestry companies and with the railroads. All have committed to working together to find solutions. This is something that I will continue to keep an eye on and continue to engage with the federal government.

Government Revenue Forecasts

Mr. Barnes: No one in Alberta wants the Trans Mountain pipeline to fail, but yesterday's meeting in Ottawa failed to secure anything. Environmental extremists continue to ignore the rule of law, NDP ally Justin Trudeau is on his way to Paris, and B.C.'s NDP Premier remains as resolute as ever. This pipeline has already seen its completion date pushed back a year, and the project could be soon abandoned, yet this government bet the farm in its budget that not only will the pipeline be built but that it will be completed by 2021. To the minister: how much debt will Albertans have if the pipeline is delayed and your budget is wrong?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the Trans Mountain expansion, as I've said, is an historic achievement. It's going to add tens of billions of dollars in investments and thousands of jobs not just here in Alberta but across Canada, and it's for that reason that we've been working so hard to get this expansion done. When we talk about our climate leadership plan, that's why we got the approval that we did, and we're working hard every day. At the end of the day, the only outcome that's good for Alberta is to get that pipeline done.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that the Premier and her government promised that none of the revenue from the carbon tax would be allocated to general revenue and given that on page 84 of the 2018 fiscal plan it states that "revenue . . . from the federally-imposed carbon [tax] . . . will be used" to cover Alberta's general expenditures, we now know the government wasn't truthful. To the minister: if your government has given Trudeau notice that without a pipeline, there will be no further carbon tax increases, why have you accounted for the carbon tax revenue in last month's budget?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're not going to apologize on this side for making sure that funding is provided to protect the necessary supports and programs like hospitals and schools and services that Albertans require. In 2021, when the carbon levy changes as a result of the federal government, we will use those monies to close the deficit and to invest in the necessary services that Albertans require.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that Alberta has the second-highest per capita spending in the country and that under the NDP we are on track to accumulate $96 billion in debt and given that even a short delay in completing the Trans Mountain will cause this government to miss its path by billions – billions – more and given that higher debt means more money going to Bay Street and not main street, to the minister: how high does Alberta's debt have to go before you begin to tackle your spending problem?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The only spending problem that exists is because that side left too many things undone. There's Conservative waste that we are cleaning up. We have cut salaries and eliminated bonuses for the highest paid executives, that that side put in place, saving $33 million over three years. We've extended a salary freeze to management and non-unions. We have closed the deficit by reducing it by $1.4 billion at the end of November. We're on track.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

School Board Finances

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary board of education has announced that in order to make up a $35.6 million shortfall for the 2018-2019 school year, they're considering cutting their full-day kindergarten program by one-third. The CBE has stated, quote: the carbon tax, increasing utility costs, and the costs of operating our new schools have not been funded. Minister, this is happening on your watch. Does cutting full-day kindergarten by 33 per cent in Calgary represent your commitment to funding education?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, our government believes that every child in Calgary and across Alberta deserves an education that prepares them for success in a fast-changing world, and that's why we've invested in more teachers, new schools, smaller class sizes, and additional learning supports for the students of Calgary. I just want to be clear. By fully funding for enrolment growth, we put tens of millions of dollars more into the CBE than would have been the case under the Conservative government. As well, the Minister of Education has been quite clear that the Calgary board of education should balance its budget without any impact on front-line staffing levels or classroom . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister has stated again today that the provincial funding is appropriate for enrolment increases and given that the CBE has stated that expenses are rising faster than funding and they are looking in every nook and every cranny for savings and given that the CBE has also been quite open about the financial burden the carbon tax has placed on their finances, there seems to be a disconnect between the minister and our largest school board. Again to the minister: who's telling the truth? You or the CBE?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's talk about disconnect for a little bit. The member opposite is concerned about funding for education, but he's going around campaigning on a platform of tax cuts for millionaires and budget cuts in Education. That's a big disconnect that won't result in any more students getting education under their plan. Our government has invested millions of dollars in the Calgary board of education. The Calgary board of education has a pattern of predicting deficits and running budget surpluses at the end of the year. We'll be working closely with the Calgary board of education to make sure that they meet their budget commitments and don't impact front-line services.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that school boards have been pushing the minister for a carbon tax exemption for two years but to no avail and given that the CBE pays over $1 million in the carbon tax per year, money that would be better spent in the classroom, again to the minister: will you work to protect programs like full-day kindergarten without increasing your budget by exempting school boards from the carbon tax?

2:30

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the members opposite will promise to exempt the school boards of this province from the negative impacts of the cuts that they want to make to pay for millionaires' tax breaks. I don't think they are.

Our government is investing millions of dollars to fund for enrolment growth. We've hired thousands of teachers across the province. We've built hundreds of schools, the largest school build in the history of this province. No government has invested in education more than this government today, and we are very proud of our record of supporting students in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Anti Energy Industry Advocacy in Alberta

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans expect their public universities to serve for the betterment of our province. Our universities have played a crucial role in the environmentally responsible development of our oil and gas resources for the benefit of all Albertans. Given this, it was surprising to find out that one of our most prestigious institutions plans on awarding an honorary degree to one of the most extreme voices against the economic interests of our province. Will the minister agree that David Suzuki should not be praised by taxpayer-funded universities?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the member for the question and the opportunity to explain to this entire House that the government has absolutely no control over what universities offer honorary degrees and who they offer them to. I personally don't necessarily agree with everything that David Suzuki says in public, but I do respect his right to say it. Of course, the members opposite continue a campaign of smearing any opponents that they don't seem to agree with, a plan that resulted in zero pipelines to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. Thank you.
The hon. member.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this alarming inclusion of extreme voices has not been limited to our post-secondary institutions and given that Calgary parents were shocked to find out that David Suzuki was paid to lecture Calgary public teachers and given that Mr. Suzuki has a history of making extremely offensive comments, even likening the oil and gas industry to slavery, telling Evan Solomon that it's the same thing, will the Minister of Education agree that it is irresponsible to spread these unbalanced anti Alberta oil views amongst our teachers and students within Alberta?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, I remember a time in the distant past when the Conservatives were a party of defending free speech. In fact, they didn't have to agree with anything that anybody was saying, but they would at least defend the right of people to say it. It's very troubling to me that the Conservatives seem to be intent on continuing on their 10-year-long campaign of bullying anybody that they don't agree with, a plan that resulted in zero pipelines to tidewater being built and has only served to further divide the people of this country.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. member, I wish to remind you that you've got to adjust the question to the government's policy rather than the perspective of some other party. So, please, focus that way.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there is nothing free about a $50,000 honorarium and given that we want to provide young Albertans with a balanced perspective on critical issues facing our province and encourage independent thinking, will the minister agree that the extreme views of activists like David Suzuki should not be endorsed by our taxpayer-funded institutions, and will he commit to providing opportunities for administrators and educators to be presented with information on the immense benefits that our environmentally responsible energy industry brings to Alberta?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's a lot to unpack there. However, I do want to say that it's quite ironic that advocates, so-called champions, of independent thought all parade out of the Legislature when Bill 9 comes to the floor, apparently under the orders of their leader. They're not free to speak their minds at all. It's interesting to me that they demand that our students be taught independent critical thought yet fail to exercise their rights to independent critical thought when given the opportunity when Bill 9 is presented in the Legislature. Perhaps that will change in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Beaverlodge Health Facility Capital Plan

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For 10 years I've been advocating for my Beaverlodge and west county constituents who desperately need a new health facility. We would all like to see this project move along. The project was in the budget for previous years, and now it's not. It's not even on the unfunded list. To the Minister of Health: where is it today in your priorities?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've had the opportunity to visit Beaverlodge and meet with many of the wonderful staff and community members who are part of the community, including Mrs. Doris McFarland, who was a registered nurse at the hospital for many years. I appreciate her ongoing, unwavering support to her community and to public health care. I have to say that it's pretty rich to have this question coming from the former minister responsible for Infrastructure because we know that it didn't get built when he was Minister of Infrastructure. We're continuing to work with the community and wanting to move this forward for all parts of this province. We know that there is infrastructure need in all communities, and we're happy to work with Beaverlodge to move this forward.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in the last few years there was money in the budget for the design of rural health facilities and that included Beaverlodge and given that now those funds are no longer in your estimates at all, to the Minister of Infrastructure: how much money was spent, and is there anything to show for it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're continuing to work with the mayor and community leaders to make sure we have the right plan for community health care for Beaverlodge families. We know that there were many decades with Conservatives in power where health care cuts continued to be the message of the day, but that doesn't reflect our values. That's why we're working for stable, predictable health care for all Albertans through a public model and why we've been able to take some of the outcomes from that early investment in rural health facility design to help streamline processes moving forward.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Beaverlodge project turns up in the Health budget one year and then in Infrastructure the next and then disappears altogether and given that seeing ministers punt it back and forth like a football has made it impossible for the community to determine if there's any progress being made, can one of you please tell the people in my constituency, particularly those in the west county, about the future of the Beaverlodge health facility?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Just to reiterate. I believe it was the hon. member who just spoke who said in estimates last year: "I get it. That's been going on for years, and I'll take responsibility for that, too." We know that there are many needs in the community of Beaverlodge. I was really proud to meet with a number of the folks, including with the Minister of Infrastructure. We had a very productive meeting, made it very clear. Their number one concern, I have to say – and it's because of rumours that they heard under a former government – was that their hospital was going to close. I was proud to say that that is not the case, that we have renovations at the existing facility, including renovations to address flood damage and replace the roof, a nurse on-call system, fire alarms, et cetera, and that we believe it's important for Beaverlodge to have a hospital.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Postsecondary Educational Finance

Loyola: Mr. Speaker, I'm proud of the work that the government has done to rein in spending at agencies, boards, and commissions while at the same time ensuring that compensation is fair and appropriate. I was pleased to see the Minister of Advanced Education's announcement last week of a plan to bring executive compensation at our universities and colleges in line with other jurisdictions in Canada. To the Minister of Advanced Education: how will this affect postsecondary institutions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to take the opportunity to remind the member that it was the Minister of Finance and Treasury Board and me who made that announcement jointly. Our university and college presidents do critical work, but for too long their compensation packages were out of touch with the expectations of Albertans. Postsecondary compensation in Alberta was the highest in the country, and these changes will finally bring these salaries into line with those in the rest of Canada. This savings will mean more money in our classrooms and for our students.

Loyola: Mr. Speaker, before my role in the House I represented staff at the U of A, and I remember all too well the impacts of cuts made by the previous government. Given that students and staff of the university have been standing together to protest across-the-board cuts and major fee hikes proposed by the U of A budget, to the same minister: can you update the House on what action you have taken to address this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's no secret that universities and colleges across the province are still trying to recover from brutal cuts that the Conservative government imposed on them a few years ago. Unlike the Conservatives, of course, our government believes that all Albertans deserve an affordable higher education. That's why we've increased funding to all institutions by 2 per cent as well as provided backfill funding in compensation for the tuition freeze. We expect that institutions will allocate these funds responsibly and prioritize the education of their students and support for staff and faculty. We will continue to work with the university to make sure that that happens.

2:40

Loyola: Mr. Speaker, students need predictability when they are planning for the cost of their degrees. To the same minister: what actions are you planning to address tuition, especially international student tuition?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member hits the nail on the head when he talks about predictability, and I'm very pleased to say that under our government that's exactly what students have been receiving. As part of Budget 2018 we're again providing another year of frozen tuition. That's four years of affordable higher education under our government. Finances should never be a barrier for anyone who wants to get an education, and that's true no matter where you're from. We're not going to balance the budget on the backs of students. We're going to ensure that all students get the affordable, accessible higher education that they deserve, and that includes international students as well.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Bill 12

Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 12, Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act.

Our government is standing up for Alberta and for a healthy Canadian energy sector. The legislation I'm introducing today represents the next step in Alberta's fight to gain better market access and to gain better value for the resources that Albertans own. Mr. Speaker, the Canadian economy is losing out on millions of dollars because of the price differential from what we currently earn for our resources and what we ought to be earning, a gap that the Trans Mountain pipeline would help to address. That's money that should be supporting jobs, families, social programs, and funding our transition to a greener economy. Through Bill 12 we are ensuring that natural gas, crude oil, and refined fuels will only be exported from Alberta if that action is in the public interest of our province and of its citizens. This legislation will provide Alberta with flexibility and leverage to ensure that Albertans are getting the full return on the natural resources produced in our province. Bill 12 would also help to guarantee that there are adequate supplies and reserves of these products for Albertans now and into the future.

More specifically, the Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act will permit the Minister of Energy to require that a licence is obtained for the export of natural gas, crude oil, and refined fuels from Alberta at the minister's discretion. The minister would have the ability to set the terms and conditions of these licences, including but not limited to the point at which the licensee may export natural gas, crude oil, or refined fuels from Alberta; the method by which these products can be exported; limits on the exported quantities of these products; and the conditions under which the export of these products may be diverted, reduced, or interrupted.

The Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act is a crucial element in our plan to defend Alberta's workers, our economy, and our progress on climate action. With that, Mr. Speaker, I move first reading of Bill 12.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present five copies of letters from the Student Transportation Association of Alberta to the Minister of Transportation, where they've been trying to request meetings with him since May of 2016.

The Speaker: The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table two sets of reports on behalf of the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

The first is a document from the Calgary board of education, that he referred to in question period, that clearly shows the astronomical costs of the carbon tax and the consequences to kindergarten education inside Calgary.

The second is another document that he referred to, which shows credit analysis showing that despite even federal government intervention, Trans Mountain expansion will be difficult to go forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a document referenced in my answers to questions in question period earlier today. It is a joint statement from Canadian civilian oversight agencies on the release of names.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I rise to table five copies of the federal waste-water systems effluent regulations, registry of transitional authorizations, that shows that west Vancouver, Victoria, Tofino, Richmond, Nanaimo, Ladysmith, among others, are not meeting effluent quality standards but are trying to.

My other tabling, Mr. Speaker, is five copies of a map of the province of Quebec that shows that a hundred communities continue to dump raw sewage into the waterways of the province. Given that Quebec is now helping B.C. in its opposition to the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion, I found out that in 2015 more than 82.3 billion litres of raw sewage came from B.C., with the city of Victoria continuing to dump directly into the Juan de Fuca Strait because of NIMBY to a sewage treatment plant.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Ms Gray, Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal, pursuant to the Veterinary Profession Act the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association 2017 annual report.

The Speaker: I believe we have two points of order.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Point of Order

Supplementary Questions

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll be brief. Referring to the order of questions in which the Leader of the Official Opposition asked his question, I'll start with a brief citation from Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, sixth edition, page 122, section 414. In speaking about supplementary questions, it says that "the extent to which supplementary questions may be asked is in the discretion of the Speaker."

You yourself, Mr. Speaker, made a ruling on the 7th of December 2016, Alberta Hansard, pages 2401 and 2402, referencing a ruling of Speaker Kowalski from May 12, 2004, page 1390 of Hansard of the day. Speaker Kowalski said, "Now, there's also a tradition we follow here that if an hon. member is recognized, they raise a first question and then they're allowed two supplementals. It has always been understood that supplementals must have something to do with the first question."

On March 30, '98, Speaker Kowalski ruled, on page 1200 of Hansard, that "there is a consistent rule that there should be some flow with the questions and they should be in a similar type of subject."

As you'll recall, the Leader of the Official Opposition – although I don't have the benefit of the Blues, I believe his third main question had something to do with pipelines, and his first supplemental even said something to the effect of, "now changing topic," about the Calgary board of education and something to do with kindergarten. Mr. Speaker, I imagine this perhaps could be from his experience in other Legislative Assemblies or Parliament, but that is not how we do things here in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I won't repeat what the hon. member has said. I concur with his point of order. I would just draw your attention to the statement that says that the supplementaries ought not to have a preamble and the question should flow from the answer that was given to the first question. Obviously, if you're completely changing the subject in your second preamble, you're not adhering to that admonition. I'm referring to House of Commons Procedure and Practice. I know that apparently I have an outdated edition, so my precise page citation will not be correct, but that's generally what it says, Mr. Speaker.

2:50

The Speaker: I noted that one time before, hon. member, but I'm glad to see you've got up.

The hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would point out two things. First, in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, third edition – I think that is the most current.

Mr. Mason: Second.

Mr. Nixon: Yeah. The Government House Leader is stuck on the second edition, but that's okay. He's probably still got the first edition back there, too.

Anyways, in chapter 11 on page 513 it says, under supplementary questions:

By definition, a supplementary question is meant to arise from the information given to the House by a Minister or Parliamentary Secretary in his or her response to the initial question. It is thus posed immediately following the response to an initial question. The same guidelines that apply to initial questions also apply to supplementary questions.

Speakers historically had used their discretion to insist that a supplementary question be on the same subject and as a general rule be asked of the same Minister. However, at the beginning of the Thirty-Sixth Parliament in 1997, Speaker Parent allowed the practice to be modified by not insisting that an additional question be, strictly speaking, supplementary to the main question. He indicated that he would find it acceptable for a party to split a round of questioning between two Members, with each one asking a different question to a different Minister. The practice remains in effect today.

Mr. Speaker, that's one thing that I would like to point out to you. But in addition to that, the argument from the third-party House leader and the Government House Leader is that the hon. Leader of the Opposition's questions were not relevant to the other questions that he asked in his order today. I would submit to you that the government is trying to have it both ways with that argument. [interjections] I know the Government House Leader really wants to chime in again, and maybe he can when I'm done, but for now I have the floor.

They, throughout all of their questions today, have referred to the climate action plan or the carbon tax as the reason that the pipeline is being built as a very relevant topic associated with pipelines, and the majority of the questions that were asked by the Leader of the Opposition today were in regard to pipelines, were in regard to consequences as a result of pipelines and the lack of action by this government on pipelines. I would submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that pointing out the lack of consequences to B.C. while at the same time the consequences to Alberta's schoolchildren, in this case, as a result of this government's failed carbon tax is very relevant.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

In this particular instance I agree that there is a point of order. Just to substantiate that, the first supplementary, I believe it was, started out with, "Mr. Speaker, on a different matter," and it seems to reinforce. I would also point out that the Parent ruling did use the phrase "strictly speaking." I know that in this House I do recall that the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow may have been exactly the victim of that last time, but I did rule on this matter in December 2016, and therefore I would respectfully ask that in the future we keep the supplementary questions related to the main question that any member may be asking.

I believe we have a second point of order. The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I've reviewed my point of order and concluded that I do not in fact have a point of order, so I would like to withdraw it.

The Speaker: That is always nice to hear from you, hon. member.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Bill 202 Alberta Taxpayer Protection (Carbon Tax Referendum) Amendment Act, 2018

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to move second reading of Bill 202, the Alberta Taxpayer Protection (Carbon Tax Referendum) Amendment Act, 2018.

Madam Speaker, as a young chap I used to work a lot in this building as head of the Canadian Taxpayers Federation 25 years ago. In fact, I helped to get the Alberta taxpayers association started, if memory serves me correctly, in 1991. At that time Alberta was facing a fiscal crisis not dissimilar to the one in which we are now engulfed. There were some people in this Legislature and outside of it who were suggesting that the way to deal with the then enormous deficit was through the imposition of a sales tax, and, of course, those voices continue to be heard today.

As head of the Canadian Taxpayers Federation at the time, on behalf of our members and, I think, the vast majority of Albertans, I launched a campaign to ask the that Legislature adopt a bill to be called the Taxpayer Protection Act to require that Albertans would get the final say on any prospective future sales tax. I got a very welcoming ear from the then Premier, the late Ralph Klein, and indeed his government accepted our idea in total and in 1995 adopted a statute that has ever since been on the books, the Alberta

Taxpayer Protection Act, which requires, Madam Speaker, that a referendum must be held before a broad-based consumption tax, a sales tax, can be introduced. It's a good thing, because I suspect we'd have a sales tax from this NDP government were it not for this requirement to go through Albertans first.

Let us be clear, Madam Speaker. Albertans have been consistently opposed to sales taxes. The most recent public opinion poll conducted by Mainstreet in January of 2015 indicated 73 per cent disapproval of a provincial sales tax in Alberta versus merely 9 per cent in favour. That's pretty consistent with public opinion polling on this over the recent decades. As any member who has ever observed this will recognize, PST has come to stand for political suicide tax in this province because Albertans pride themselves on having had this Alberta advantage, on having had lower taxes than other provinces, and having been PST free.

But, Madam Speaker, the NDP recognized this when they came to office in 2015, so they brought in what is in many respects a de facto sales tax by another name. They call it the carbon levy, but it is a tax on the consumption of energy. There is nothing that we consume, Madam Speaker, no service or no good that is not somehow produced or delivered with the use of energy. Whether it's going to the grocery store to buy our groceries: they've been shipped in. Those trucks have had to purchase diesel, which is subject to the carbon tax. Heating our homes: whether it is coal fired or gas fired, that energy, which produces about 90 per cent of the power on our grid on an average day, is subject to very high rates under the NDP carbon tax. If we go and buy a restaurant meal, the cost of heating the restaurant, of delivering the food to the restaurant and many other associated input costs are increased by the NDP carbon tax. And on and on and on.

I just mentioned in question period, Madam Speaker, the $1 million cost increase imposed on the Calgary board of education as a result of the carbon tax, the consequence of which is that they are now looking at reducing their expenditures on full-day kindergarten by one-third.

The impact of this carbon tax has been real and widely felt. I recently visited with my hon. friend, the Official Opposition House Leader. The seniors' centre in his constituency, which is run completely by volunteers, has a modest budget of just $18,000 per year, and they remarkably deliver fantastic programs to keep seniors active in this community notwithstanding their modest budget. But they're now spending 8 per cent of their annual budget on the NDP carbon tax, causing the volunteer directors of that organization to wonder whether they can keep the doors open and the lights on. When they called the Premier's office to raise concerns about this, they were told to do a fundraiser or to raise their membership fees from low-income seniors on fixed incomes. That's just one microcosm of the real-world impact of this carbon tax, Madam Speaker.

Given that impact and given the 23-year-long precedent of the Alberta Taxpayer Protection Act I have tabled this bill, which seeks to broaden the effect of the Alberta Taxpayer Protection Act to require a referendum before a carbon tax can be introduced in the future or before the rate of the current carbon tax can be increased.

Now, Madam Speaker, you might reasonably ask: well, since there is a carbon tax, why would we be talking about a referendum for the prospective introduction of one since it's currently a fait accompli? The answer, very simply, is that one of the key issues that Albertans will vote on at the next election is whether or not to eliminate the NDP carbon tax. The Official Opposition, the United Conservative Party, will in our platform be committed to the immediate repeal of the NDP carbon tax in its entirety. Unlike the third and fourth parties in this place, we don't intend to replace the NDP carbon tax with a different carbon tax.

I must give the NDP credit, though. They do officially oppose the sales tax, unlike the third party, which supports both a carbon tax and a sales tax. So Albertans who want very high taxes will have a choice. They can choose between the NDP or the third party. I don't know where the Liberal Party will end up on this, but they tend to like high taxes. Voters will have a clear choice, Madam Speaker, and if they elect a majority of United Conservative MLAs, I hope and predict that in June 2019 in this Legislature we'll be adopting the carbon tax repeal act.

Now, heaven forbid, Madam Speaker, but at some point in the future beyond that, should a government try to pull an NDP hidden agenda on us again and impose a future carbon tax, they would then be barred from doing so without the consent of Albertans through a referendum should Bill 202 become law. That is why we are proposing this bill.

Also, it is to protect us from future increases because the government has been very clear about this. They introduced their carbon tax without the consent of Albertans, without having mentioned it in their platform. Incidentally, I keep in my desk their platform, Madam Speaker, and on page 24, in the appendix entitled, ironically, Balancing the Books, they projected in this current fiscal year a $25 million surplus, when, in fact, we have an $8 billion projected deficit. In this platform, on which the government members were elected, there are eight tax changes itemized in the appendix, none of which relate to a carbon tax or carbon levy or whatever euphemism you choose to apply to it. Yet five months later the government introduced the largest tax increase in Alberta history. Whoops. It just kind of somehow appeared out of the ether. They just somehow forgot to mention by far the largest tax increase in our history in this document. That was short-circuiting democracy, and we won't let that happen again. That's why I brought forward this bill.

Now, when they introduced that job-killing carbon tax, they did so at a price level of $20 per metric tonne, that applies differently to different sources of fuel and energy, but the general rate is $20 per metric tonne. Then on January 1 of this year, just 10 weeks ago, the government raised that by 50 per cent to $30 per tonne. But they're not done yet because they've committed to raise it by another 67 per cent. Why? Because Justin Trudeau told them to, which is just about the worst reason I could imagine to do anything, Madam Speaker, let alone raise a tax. But they've committed to raise it by another 67 per cent. Not only have they committed to this in some rhetorical way; they've actually baked it into the budget. The budget projections, including the specious projection of a surplus in the year 2023, are conditional upon that 67 per cent increase in the NDP carbon tax with the associated increase in revenues.

They're not done even there, Madam Speaker, when they jack it up to 50 per cent, because as the Premier said on November 30, 2016: we have never outlined that $30 was where it was going to stop; people who talk about effective carbon pricing acknowledge that as time progresses, it needs to go up. Quote, unquote. It needs to go up.

So, Madam Speaker, we know that's their intention. As I've said before, it's the frog-in-the-pot syndrome. They started with $20. They get people used to the idea, without a referendum, without an electoral mandate, without mentioning it in the platform, then a 50 per cent increase, and then a 67 per cent increase. But it doesn't stop there. It's only beginning because their own hand-picked expert who helped to write the carbon tax plan, Professor Leach, has said that a carbon tax would have to be at least $200 a tonne, in addition to other regulations and policies, in order to achieve a reduction of CO₂ emissions commensurate with the Paris climate conference targets by 2030. And Environment Canada, the federal environment department, issued a memo in March 2017 saying that a carbon tax would need to be at least $300 a tonne to achieve the Paris climate emissions targets by the year 2050.

I've made this point before, Madam Speaker, about the disingenuousness of the government's carbon tax policy. If they really believed that they were somehow saving the planet with this carbon tax, if they thought that this was really existential to the future of the planet and the global environment, then they would have the courage of their convictions. They'd just be honest with Albertans and say: "You know what? Everybody, one hundred per cent of the experts, agrees that a $30 or a $50 carbon tax does not make an appreciable difference in emissions." If it did, then emissions in British Columbia today would be lower than they were when the Liberal Party there imposed their carbon tax.

If a carbon tax in this range was effective, then it would have resulted in a reduction of emissions in Australia, but it didn't. In fact, they saw emissions increase but the economy and jobs hurt. As a result, the Liberal government in Australia repealed it.

Washington state voters, in the greenest U.S. state, had a chance to review all of these arguments, and they overwhelmingly vetoed a carbon tax when it was put to a referendum last November.

Madam Speaker, this bill merely seeks to give to Albertans the same right that Washington state voters had to determine whether or not to impose such a tax on themselves, and I suspect they would come to the same conclusion.

The French Socialists, Madam Speaker, philosophical fellow travellers of the NDP and, with the NDP, a member party of Socialist International: they, too, intended to introduce a carbon tax until they looked at the data and realized that it was all economic pain and no environmental gain. So the NDP's brothers and sisters in the French Socialist Party did a one-eighty on their intended carbon tax. Unfortunately, apparently the NDP here doesn't really believe in solidarity with their French Socialist brothers and sisters.

So, Madam Speaker, we have this carbon tax, this hidden agenda. It is a de facto consumption tax. Worse than that, it's actually a tax on tax because their friend and close ally Justin Trudeau imposes his GST on the NDP carbon tax. Maybe that's why he wants them to raise it by 67 per cent because he gets more GST revenue out of the higher, future NDP carbon tax.

Madam Speaker, I've asked the government repeatedly: how high will they go? You know, when do they intend to go to Professor Leach's $200 carbon tax? When do they intend to deliver the Environment Canada preferred $300 carbon tax? Of course they won't tell us, for the same reason they wouldn't tell Albertans about the $30 carbon tax in the last election, because they know as well as I do that Albertans would say no. So I say: what are they afraid of? Why don't they support Bill 202 to allow Albertans to have the final say? The only possible grounds for opposition to this bill are fear of the judgment of the Alberta people. The only grounds on which you could oppose this bill are if you oppose the principle of democracy.

Now, this government had a chance to get a mandate from Albertans on the carbon tax in the last election, but they were afraid. They were afraid of being forthright and honest. That is the same reason why 24 years ago I lobbied the Klein government for a taxpayer protection act requiring a referendum prior to the introduction of a prospective sales tax, because I knew then what every member of this place knows now, in every party, that the government that introduces a sales tax would not be a government that runs on that promise. It would be a hidden agenda in the same way that the carbon tax was.

Madam Speaker, let me just add something. There was a new study that was just produced by a PhD student at the University of Calgary on the impact of carbon taxes on employment, in particular the impact of the British Columbia revenue-neutral carbon tax. Now, to be clear, that was introduced originally about a decade ago as a revenue-neutral carbon tax; there were commensurate offsetting reductions in B.C. income taxes. But the Alberta NDP carbon tax made no such pretense. It was not supposedly revenue neutral.

In any event, this study, which has been done in British Columbia, concludes the following, that the B.C. carbon tax “[increased] the unemployment rates of medium- and low-educated males by 1.4 and 2.4 percentage points respectively. The policy is implemented mainly at the expense of the low-educated.” Mainly at the expense of the low educated. This is a study by Chi Man Yip, published in the Journal of Environmental Economics and Management, On the Labor Market Consequences of Environmental Taxes.

Madam Speaker, the NDP, I think, call themselves a progressive party. I’d like to ask them: what’s progressive about adopting a policy has a particularly pernicious effect on employment for people with modest levels of education, for people at the bottom and the margins of the labour market? The NDP loves to talk about soaking the rich in tax policy. That’s not what the carbon tax is doing. It is a regressive tax that imposes proportionately the largest cost on the lowest income people. That’s why notionally they have a rebate, but that rebate is not helping the 2.4 per cent of young Alberta men with the lowest levels of education, because they lost their jobs and a little rebate cheque isn’t going to make up for no job. It’s not helping the Sundre seniors’ centre, and it’s not helping the Calgary kids who are going to lose their kindergarten because of the Calgary board of education. They don’t get a rebate.

I submit, Madam Speaker, that it is time for this Legislature to embrace the principle of democratic decision-making, as we have done with respect to sales taxes, that we ought to apply the same principle to carbon taxes by supporting this bill. If members vote against it, they will be sending a clear message to Albertans that they do not trust the common sense of ordinary Albertans when it comes to such a critical issue, but I am proud to say that the United Conservative Party will always trust Albertans to make such critical decisions.

I call on all members to support this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It’s my pleasure to stand for a few moments to speak to Bill 202. I can tell you that I am very proud of everything our government has done over the last number of years in order to support two things at the same time, and those are to support both the environment and to support business in this community.

Our job is to stand up for Albertans and our industry by getting real results, and that includes a pipeline approval to tidewater, something that did not happen while the Leader of the Opposition was in a place to do exactly that thing, in Ottawa, for something like 10 years. Why didn’t he get that approval? They were afraid to do the work necessary in order to get things done. That’s one of the things that we are not afraid to do.

Sometimes the opposition reminds me a little bit of the people who can’t keep their eye on the goal line in order to achieve the outcome that they desire because it’s going to take a little bit too much effort. I’m very concerned that they want us to right now run away and give up when things get a little tough in the economy in this province. You know, the fact that they want to throw out all of the work that’s been done to clean up the environment for the next generation because of their frustration about how hard it is to get things done in this province and sometimes in this country is amazing to me.

We’re very proud of the work that we’ve done to promote pipelines to tidewater, something that the Conservative government in this province failed to do over 44 years. Right now line 3 is under construction, Keystone XL has achieved commercial support to proceed, and we’re closer than ever to breaking our land lock with the Trans Mountain pipeline. We’re very happy to have introduced a bill into the House today that’s going to help us to ensure that we, unlike the opposition, can get the job done even though the job is hard. The Leader of the Opposition and his plan to cancel our climate leadership plan puts all of this at risk, including the great pipeline jobs that are out there and the public transit jobs that are being created all across this province using the carbon levy money.

As Minister of Indigenous Relations I really wanted to take a moment to talk about what it is that the opposition is suggesting doing. The opposition is suggesting taking money out of the hands and therefore out of the mouths of indigenous people all across this province. They have suggested that they are going to come in and that the very first thing they’re going to do is that they’re going to raid and attack the indigenous people in this province who have been using that carbon levy money to create new opportunities and to ensure that two things happen simultaneously. I know that that can be hard for the opposition, but you can achieve two outcomes at the same time if you’re willing to put in the effort and if you don’t give up at the first sign of trouble.

In the indigenous community they talk about that as a pair of moccasins, in which one moccasin is the environment, that we need to take care of and we need to be able to pass on to our children in a way that allows them to live sustainable lives, and the second moccasin is the employment that will provide for the economy today so that they can feed their children. One moccasin on one foot is ridiculous. You need to wear both moccasins at the same time if you’re going to take a journey and you’re going to achieve an outcome. That’s what it is that we have done by coupling together the indigenous climate leadership program, that comes from our carbon levy, and the support for the pipeline.

I can tell you that people in the indigenous community have said many times that they support what we are doing with regard to the carbon levy because they say that they have a respect for the Earth and a desire to pass on a clean environment, to tackle the pollution that’s put out there by carbon, to tackle the pollution that’s put out there by the coal plants, because they care about their children.

For example, Gerald Cunningham, the president of the Metis Settlements General Council, said:

Respect for the land is a fundamental value instilled in the Metis people from the day we are born. Our relationship to our land is unique and deeply spiritual – one that casts us as stewards of a great blessing bestowed by the creator. Our land is the beginning of everything. It feeds us, shelters us, clothes us, and in return, we honour it, we protect it, and we endeavor to leave it better than we found it for the next generation.

Madam Speaker, what Gerald Cunningham is telling us is that we cannot support jobs if we fail to protect the Earth, which is the basis of all that we do.

Yet the opposition is planning right now to take this money away from Gerald Cunningham, away from the Métis settlements, away from the Métis Nation of Alberta, away from the 48 First Nations in this province, who have all used this money to create a better world. In fact, just this last year over 124 projects went forward in indigenous communities, all of which will be stolen from them, just like the land has been for many years in this country. They are going to steal that away from them again, repeating the degradation of our history with indigenous people. I can't believe that they're standing in the House to make those kinds of statements.

In fact, there are over 35 communities in this province that are putting up solar panels in this year alone. All of that – the workers that are learning to do the trade, the savings in the economy, the preservation of the Earth, and the reduction of pollution – is going to be stolen by this opposition from the very people who are the primary protectors of the land. I can't imagine: why would they make a decision to do that? Because they only have one thought in mind. The reason why they want to do that is because they have a group of friends, and those friends want to be able to reduce their taxes. It will save the 1 per cent at the very top of our economy $700 million if they follow through with their plan. That's why they want to do it.

They get up and they talk about the effects of carbon levies on low-income people, yet they oppose raising the actual minimum wage for those low-income people. They talk about how we are going to affect the economy in this province, yet they are going to destroy and undercut the school system, the medical system, and the social system in this province, that support all of those low-income people and allow them to live dignified lives.

None of that matters. Only one thing matters. They only wear one moccasin. They cannot keep two things together. What we have now is a very ridiculous proposition that we are going to give up at the first sign of trouble and that we're going to run away from our commitment, that we're going to say: "Oh, the environment is not so important. We just really want to pursue the income that will be allotted to a very wealthy group of people, and that's what we're going to preserve."

I can tell you that on this side of the House we are not going to do that. We are going to build a strong economy. In fact, indeed we have built a strong economy. Last year we had the highest growth in the economy in the country. Last year we built 90,000 new jobs. What we are doing is successful, and they hate it. They hate it because it proves that the decisions that we made were the right decisions.

At the same time, we are also taking care of the people. We are providing the communities in which there is coal reduction the ability to work on developing new industries in their communities. We are allowing First Nations people, who have consistently struggled within our economy, the chance to develop new job skills, to save money on energy, to retrofit their homes, and, of course, ultimately to participate in the energy market in this province.

For the very first time we have a REP system coming forward requiring that First Nations have equity participation in electricity development in this province, the first time that that's happened. They never did that in the Conservative opposition. That totally depends on us having a carbon levy that allows equity participation and encourages indigenous participation.

I ask again: what does the opposition have against success in the indigenous community? I don't understand why they constantly want to undermine and thwart the success that has been built up by the indigenous people. When the Métis people and the First Nations people come to me, they say: Richard, do two things. I can tell you, it's very exciting.

An Hon. Member: Names.

Mr. Feehan: You're right. I apologize.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today to speak to Bill 202, the Alberta Taxpayer Protection (Carbon Tax Referendum) Amendment Act, 2018, that's being put forward by my hon. colleague from Calgary-Lougheed.

Madam Speaker, "democracy" is made up of two Greek words: "dēmos," the people, and "kratia," to rule. The idea in a democracy is that the laws and the rules that bind us together as a community, those laws and those rules that we are expected to obey, the laws that we pass and that we make for this province, should be a reflection of the will of the people of Alberta.

Now, normally in this great province of Alberta we do not practise a direct form of democracy. We have chosen to instead have a representative form of democracy, where the MLAs are elected by their constituents and where those constituents expect that we will go into this Legislature, into this House, and that we will choose to support the vision and the ideas of the people that have elected us, that we will vote on legislation that is consistent with the views of those who have elected us.

We have general elections where political parties put forward platforms and where those platforms are expected to outline the party vision, the vision of where that party wants to go and be directed and where they would take us as a province should they become the government. In a representative form of democracy, Madam Speaker, sometimes the wheels can fall off the vehicle, or the government, so to speak. Sometimes representative democracies can actually be fairly undemocratic when a party makes a clear promise to the constituents and to the people in a general election and then they choose to break it or when they pass legislation that they did not campaign on or where the pieces of legislation that they bring before the House clearly do not represent the support and have the support of the people of the province.

Sometimes, Madam Speaker, the people of this province and the people of a democracy need protection from a government that has forgotten or chosen not to support the wishes of the people. This government has done some pretty unbelievable things in the province over the last three years, and it's damaged our province in the last few years. Their economic policies have led to unprecedented numbers in unemployment. They, through their policies, have created an economy and an economic milieu where investment has often chosen to flee the province, and they have consistently failed to consult with stakeholders, that have a right to have an impact on the legislation that is brought before this House. It's been clear time and time again, as they have brought legislation before this House, that they have failed to consult with stakeholders in any meaningful way.

Madam Speaker, we've seen over the last number of years a doubling of the percentage of the unemployed in Alberta. In 2015 it was at 7.8 per cent, or about 11,600 individuals, and today we're looking at somewhere around 15.6 per cent, or 30,300 individuals, that have been out of work for at least a year or more.

The NDP have failed to consult with Albertans. They failed to consult with Albertans during the election of 2015, when they made no mention of their disastrous carbon tax in their election campaign. Instead, I guess they thought they could save that announcement, that surprise, until they were safely in office. One can only come to the conclusion, Madam Speaker, that they did this because they knew that if they had brought this forward in the last election, they would not have stood a chance of being elected. If they had flaunted that fact, that upon entering office they were going to enter into a carbon tax, the largest tax hike in Alberta history, this would have resulted in a clearly different result in the election of 2015.

Madam Speaker, the NDP's carbon tax: if it didn't break the law, it clearly violated the spirit of the Taxpayer Protection Act. Even though there is no mention of a carbon tax in the Alberta Taxpayer Protection Act, I think that we could say that in the spirit of that act, this has abrogated that act, clearly.

3:30

Madam Speaker, my colleague who has presented this private member's bill, Bill 202, would suggest that we officially add the carbon tax to Mr. Klein's original legislation to protect Albertans from a government that seeks to punish them with this hidden tax without first giving them the right to have their say. Sometimes the only way to restore the concept of the people ruling is to ensure that the government, through legislation, has to go back to the people in a referendum. Referendums allow the people to have the final say through a direct vote. It allows the people and the government, for that matter, to see if they actually have the support of the people on a particular policy. It allows the people to have the final decision as to whether they will support or whether they will reject a piece of legislation. In this case we would suggest that supporting Bill 202 will allow the members of the great society that we have here in Alberta the opportunity to have the final say, and in a democracy that is never a bad thing.

Madam Speaker, I believe that when Albertans are given the facts, they make wise choices. When given the opportunity to consider how a piece of legislation will impact them and whether it takes Alberta into a position that they can support, they do indeed vote in favour of those pieces of legislation. But I would suggest that history is clear that Albertans were not given the information, were unaware of the desires of this government and, therefore, should have the ability to have a say. Bill 202, which requires a referendum before any future carbon tax is hiked or will proceed, is a good thing for the people of Alberta to have a say on.

The NDP has already raised the carbon tax by 50 per cent. We know that they promise a further 67 per cent and that they're doing this, really, just to curry favour with our current Prime Minister. We know that this carbon tax is a tax on almost everything that we consume. It's linked to the carbon that is being produced, and it means that this carbon tax is, in fact, Madam Speaker, a consumption tax or, as some have called it, a backdoor provincial sales tax.

As we have seen over the last three years, Madam Speaker, no one is safe from this tax. This government has given no leeway. It's given no leeway for us to protect the vulnerable in our population or the nonprofits that serve those folks. Even as I stood up today in the House and asked if this government was prepared to provide an exemption for schools on the carbon tax, the answer was clear: no.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to stand to speak to Bill 202, Alberta Taxpayer Protection (Carbon Tax Referendum) Amendment Act, 2018. Bill 202 proposes to amend the Alberta Taxpayer Protection Act to require that a referendum be held and the result announced by the Chief Electoral Officer before a bill can be introduced which proposes to increase a carbon tax rate or impose a new or expanded carbon tax. It was Mr. Klein back in 1995 that brought in the Alberta Taxpayer Protection Act, that currently requires the province to hold a referendum and have the Chief Electoral Officer announce the results before a bill can be introduced which seeks to impose a general provincial sales tax.

Given that there is controversy over the carbon tax across the province, it's quite understandable – in fact, perhaps close to 50 per cent of Albertans haven't supported the carbon tax – that for political purposes the UCP might jump on this as an opportunity, a political opportunity to divide and provoke a tax revolt. I find it disingenuous and difficult to embrace when we say that we believe in climate change and we are going to do things about climate change – and this government has done something about climate change, including a modest but graduating carbon tax that everyone, every business can prepare for and that indeed the federal government has said is essential to us moving in the right direction.

This is about changing behaviour, all of our behaviour since we are all responsible for the climate crisis that we are now in. One of the most significant shortcomings of the carbon tax is that it's hard to see how its purpose for changing behaviour is in fact going to do so when 60 per cent of Albertans get a rebate. One could question whether it's significant enough to incite behaviour change and reduce energy demand and reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Indeed, we know from looking at our greenhouse gas numbers, at least up until the last two years, that they've been increasing by 1 to 2 per cent per year steadily, and it's hard to see any impact so far. But that's not a reason to stopping doing it; that's a reason to graduate it and increase it.

While we have supported the carbon tax, we've had real concerns in the Liberal caucus about where the money is going. That was the struggle that I had in supporting the carbon levy when it was brought in. Now I see that my concerns were realized with this fund now being used for all manner of things, including paying the Balancing Pool, when it was supposed to be used for green energy, energy efficiency, education in reducing our energy use.

Apart from that, though, the Alberta Liberals recognize that the Constitution grants the provinces broad taxation authority. That is what we elect governments for, and they were on pretty firm legal footing when it came to introducing the carbon levy in 2017. The same goes for future adjustments to the levy. In fact, under the new federal carbon pricing system, all provinces in Canada will be required to start introducing a price on carbon. Let's provide what the UCP says they want, some certainty for industry. Let's be clear. Let's not be jumping back and forth from one day, one year, one party to the next, saying that we will provide some certainty or that we won't. There is a degree of certainty now not only in Alberta but across the country that we're going to seriously take on, all of us, in terms of our behaviour around carbon fuels.

Albertans, Canadians in general want to see more serious commitment to climate change than they've seen in the past. Certainly, under the past Conservative government here in Alberta, the charge, I think, an intensity target of $15 a tonne amounted to about $2.50 per tonne of emissions in this province. No wonder it had no credibility and no impact.

To be clear, we do believe in putting a price on carbon. It's absolutely the right thing for Alberta and for Canada to show some leadership in the world. Of course, we don't produce the major emissions in the world, but we have a responsibility for leadership. The NDP approach to reducing emissions, quite frankly, is not entirely the program that we would favour, but it is a step. It's an important step. We need to be consistent about this carbon levy going into the future. Business wants certainty, and there is at least some clarity coming from both levels of government. I'm not eager to see the impacts of passing a bill like this, creating more uncertainty and certainly sending the wrong message to Canadians as well as the international community about our commitment to climate change.

From our perspective, the most credible case for having the carbon levy would be (a) to change behaviour, reduce energy consumption; and (b) to finance a truly revenue-neutral change in the tax mix that would enable the province to reduce personal and corporate taxes, to pay for some things that taxpayers care about and that, in terms of lowering taxes on businesses, would encourage economic diversification to happen much more organically instead of the current NDP interventionist approach, which is creating an unfair playing field and some degree of uncertainty in business subsidies, who gets it and who doesn't.

For all the UCP's lofty talk about the importance of direct democracy, Bill 202 is largely about inciting a tax revolt for partisan political gain. It's a kind of political gain for progressives in the same way that the UCP claims that the abortion bubble zone bill is a trap for Conservatives. Bill 202 is also about trying to bind the hands of the Alberta government and restrict its policy options, which I don't think is ever advisable and no government would accept, especially the UCP. It reduces the Legislature's flexibility in terms of dealing with the changing and evolving realities of our province. The government needs options to allow for timely and effective responses.

I'd remind the House that we've seen Alberta Conservatives previously claim that they were acting in defence of taxpayers by legislating balanced budgets only to have to embarrassingly repeal their own legislation when it became too restrictive and they, too, needed flexibility. So the legislation worked for them, at least politically, until one day it didn't work anymore.

In a way Bill 202 is also about trying to enshrine in legislation with some degree of permanence a key Conservative political principle, that being that low or limited taxation is an end in itself. There's an arrogance in assuming that Alberta is still best served by a single, narrow political approach from bygone days. The simple truth is that many Albertans are concerned about climate change and have become increasingly pragmatic in their approach due to the lack of progress, facts that appear to be lost on the UCP leader, presumably, from all his years in Ottawa.

The UCP has offered no real plan of its own to reduce greenhouse gas emissions other than to float the idea of bringing back the PC-era specified gas emitters regulation, SGER, a half measure, at best, that allowed absolute emissions to continue to increase, as a move that would only see others, large emitters really, pay a levy of sorts. The measure would no doubt find favour in at least some circles, but this, I suspect, would be partly true of those who don't acknowledge the threat of climate change or see themselves as a real part of the solution.

Again, this is consistent with what Environics has told us in their polling, and the UCP knows this, that people tend to support tax scenarios that see other people pay. What this ultimately comes down to is a choice. The UCP can either choose to do what's right for our planet, our children, our children's children or, like successive Conservative governments in this province that frittered away hundreds of billions of dollars in nonrenewable resource revenue, it can choose to do what's in its own narrow, short-term political interest. Sadly, this bill signals that the UCP has chosen the latter.

It has also pledged to repeal the carbon tax if elected. This threatens to set Alberta on yet another Conservative-manufactured collision course with the federal government, one that most legal experts say would be in vain. If the UCP leader believes that climate change is real or deserving of meaningful response, he has a funny way of showing it. Albertans are tired of the arrogance and the antics. They want to see real, broad-based action on climate.

The last point I'd make is that referendums are not without their problems and their costs, not the least of which is that not everyone takes the time to properly, objectively weigh the question at hand. This can sometimes lead to problematic outcomes, unintended consequences. But in terms of cost we know from the recent debate around eliminating daylight savings time that a referendum paired with a provincial election would cost somewhere between $2 million and $6 million dollars while holding a referendum on its own would cost nearly $22 million. I think we need to be asking whether this is a good use of public funds, Madam Chair.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise in support of this private member's bill from the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed. I thank him for bringing it forward. I'd like to, with my brief time, focus most of my comments on some of the comments that I heard from the hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations, the MLA for Edmonton-Rutherford, earlier today. You know, I have to say that in watching that presentation, which was the government's official response, I guess, to the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed's bill, I was quite alarmed. I mean, it was extraordinarily, I would say, hysterical, had very little to actually do with the legislation that is in front of us. Madam Speaker, this is the problem that we see continually with this government and with members in the NDP, not wanting to look at a serious piece of legislation like this that will help Albertans.

You know, the other day the Premier of Saskatchewan tweeted out that a carbon tax does the following: increases the cost of everything for families, including gas, groceries, power, and heat; exports jobs and investment out of Canada to other countries. He says: a carbon tax does not reduce carbon emissions and remain revenue neutral.

The minister who gave that hysterical presentation just a few minutes ago in this Assembly . . .

Mr. Feehan: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: A point of order called. The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Point of Order Insulting Language

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to address this. My point of order is with regard to 23(h), (i), and (j); that is, a comment that

- (h) makes allegations against another Member;
- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member; [or]
- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

I think it's fairly clear that the member's attempts to use an old-fashioned Freudian term to refer to my commentary is clearly outside the bounds of respectful discourse and betrays, you know, a desire to bring the repute of this House to a lower level. I think that he should be chastised for engaging in that kind of behaviour and asked to refrain from it in future.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, do you wish to respond?

Mr. Nixon: There's a lot to say but lots to do today with those comments. First of all, the hon. minister clearly doesn't want to be called out on the ridiculous things that he said in this Assembly. I think that what he said was hysterical. That's the word that I would use to describe that. I would submit to you, Madam Speaker, that this is a matter of debate. If the minister wants to talk about decorum in this place, I suggest that he take some time later on this afternoon to read Hansard and re-examine his behaviour in his presentation and things he says about other members of this House.

With that said, Madam Speaker, I'd like to move on with my speech. If the minister could stop interrupting me, I would appreciate it.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

At this point there is no point of order, but I'd just remind the members of the House: if we can be cautious around what sort of language we use.

Please proceed.

Debate Continued

Mr. Nixon: Thank you. As I was saying, Madam Speaker, in response – this is what I think is important – this minister then said to the Premier of Saskatchewan, democratically elected by the people of Saskatchewan: man, oh, man; Trumpism is alive and well in Saskatchewan; when the Premier can't understand science, he prints demonstrably false statements and hopes to create public mistrust now. Sad.

Mr. Kenney: Who said that?

Mr. Nixon: That's the minister of indigenous affairs, the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

That is what I'm talking about, hysterical, to react that way when we're trying to have a discussion, whether with the Premier of Saskatchewan or with members of the House. The way that he acted during his speech, I would say, is hysterical, but I will move on past that because it's troubling the member.

The point is that all that minister wants to do and all that that side of the House wants to do on this important issue is to talk about issues that have nothing to do with the actual legislation we're talking about here, Bill 202. The minister talked about stealing land from indigenous people, projects that may happen in indigenous communities, that may or may not be happening. I don't know if they are. If they are, I'm sure that's great for those indigenous communities. But the point is, Madam Speaker, that if that has all taken place the way this minister submits, he should be happy to submit that to a referendum by the people of Alberta. He should be happy to pass this legislation to give the people of Alberta, including indigenous people, the right to choose whether or not they want this carbon tax.

I represent three reserves. I'm proud to represent three indigenous communities. I can tell you that when I communicate with those indigenous communities, they're not happy with this legislation or the fact that they have to pay a carbon tax. They're certainly not happy with the fact that this is a tax on everything.

But the biggest thing they're not happy with is that this government, when they campaigned, did not tell them that they were going to bring forward this carbon tax. They kept it hidden. As the Leader of the Opposition submitted in his presentation, the reason that they likely kept that hidden – and I agree with the Member for Calgary-Lougheed on this assertion – is because they knew that it was really just a backdoor PST and that if they went to the people of Alberta with that, the people of Alberta would categorically reject it, because that's simply what more than two-thirds of Albertans are already saying when they hear about the carbon tax.

I'll tell you what the indigenous communities and all my communities that I represent say when they talk about the carbon tax. First, they get very upset about their heating bills. They're upset about their gas bills. They're furious that this government then brought in a $30 carbon tax, that they did not tell Albertans about. Then because Justin Trudeau, the close personal ally of this NDP government, asked them to, they raised it to $50 without consulting Albertans, and then, hidden in this budget, they raise it another 67 per cent. If all the great things with the carbon tax are actually happening and Albertans truly want the carbon tax, this government should be happy to submit it to the people and show the opposition that this is actually what Albertans want. Prove us wrong. The only reason, Madam Speaker, that you would not want to go to the people of Alberta is because the government side of the House knows the opposition is right and that Albertans have categorically rejected this approach. They've categorically rejected it.

When the minister stands and talks about the projects the carbon tax may be buying for certain communities, he does not answer the questions and the points brought forward by the Official Opposition leader with this legislation on the damage that this carbon tax is doing to the social safety net of many places in this province. He ignores the fact, as the Member for Calgary-Lougheed presented, that the Sundre West Country Centre, which is still in danger of closing directly as a result of this NDP's tax – in fact, the social agencies within my communities have said repeatedly, over and over and over, that they are in danger of not being able to provide services to our communities, one hundred and ten per cent because of the carbon tax that this government brought in.

Now, maybe there are more – maybe there are more – Albertans that actually do want the carbon tax, but that's the point. Let's bring forward some legislation that will then let them have a choice. This is important, because while I believe that we will form the next government – and I want to be a hundred per cent clear that it is our intention in bill 1 to remove the job-killing carbon tax and to be able to provide relief to Albertans – the fact is that as we've already seen inside this House, the other parties, including the Liberal Party and the Alberta Party, want to bring in more than just a carbon tax. They want to bring in a provincial sales tax. We have a government here that hides the tax and wants to continue to increase the tax on Albertans.

So it's important that we make sure that the spirit of law that Premier Klein brought in as a result of the lobbying by the Member for Calgary-Lougheed or the good work that he did with the Taxpayers Federation is honoured because that is not what's happening. Now, certainly, 10 years ago or whenever we first brought in that legislation, we weren't talking about taxing air or carbon. That was just not part of the political equation at the time, so it makes sense to update that legislation to make sure that Albertans can have a say in the future. That's all that this legislation does.

If the minister of indigenous affairs actually feels that this carbon tax has accomplished so many great things for his community and for the people of Alberta, he would stand in this House and he would say: "I support this legislation. Let my constituents have a right to be able to decide if they want to be taxed this way." That's all this legislation does. Let the people of Alberta decide if they want this carbon tax. This government and that minister in particular, in my experience, forget who they work for. He doesn't work for the Premier. He doesn't work for the NDP. He works for the people of Edmonton-Rutherford and for the people of Alberta, and the people of Alberta want a say in whether they are taxed this way.

The people of Alberta are sick of paying this carbon tax on every product that they purchase in their daily lives. The kids inside the Calgary school board that are going to see their kindergarten classes be reduced directly as a result of this government's carbon tax want the carbon tax to go away and want to be able to go to kindergarten to the same level as the kids that were before. The swimming pools in our communities: that's actually one of the interesting nonprofits that have been hit the most inside of rural communities because they're all run by volunteers and people that raise money so that kids can go to those swimming pools. Their heating costs went up astronomically, and they're in danger of shutting. They want a referendum. They want to be able to tell this government that this is not acceptable.

This government rejecting and the NDP and its members standing up in this House and saying that there's something wrong with this legislation and indicating that they're going to vote against it – and if they do vote against it, let's be very clear what that means. They are voting against Albertans' – their boss and my boss – right to make a decision on whether or not they should pay a tax. That's it. That is the decision that is before this House, nothing else. If the government truly believes that this is the right way for Albertans to go, they should stand up, support it, and have Albertans show the United Conservative Party that we're actually wrong and that they want a carbon tax. The problem is that that's not what Albertans will say. The members across the way know that's not what they say.

I predict, through you, Madam Speaker, that they will continue through the afternoon to rise and say hysterical, irrelevant things because they have no argument as to why they've been putting this job-killing carbon tax on the people of Alberta. They have no argument for the attack that they've done on our social agencies inside our communities. They have no answers for the senior citizens who are being forced to pay this carbon tax on a fixed income. They have no answers for the seniors in my community that are calling me and telling me that they've had to turn down the heat as a result of their gas bills. They have no answers for the agriculture community on the direct increase in costs in getting their product to a market. They have no answer at all. That is why they continue to force this tax on Albertans, and that is why they're not supporting the Member for Calgary-Lougheed's legislation.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It gives me pleasure today to rise to speak to Bill 202, brought forward by the Leader of the Official Opposition. You know, like many members of this Legislature, I go door to door canvassing regularly in my riding of Edmonton-McClung, and I did so this week as well, yesterday, as a matter of fact, for three hours. I was in a fairly affluent area of the constituency. The constituency has a very mixed economic spectrum, from people who are well below the poverty line to those who are among the most affluent in the province. The neighbourhood that I happened to be door-knocking in yesterday afternoon was one that had homes in the $500,000 to $750,000 range, not individuals who would generally be eligible to receive the carbon levy rebate. I knocked on probably 40 or 50 doors and had good conversations with a number of people.

Madam Speaker, I'm not sure if you can guess how many people in that evening of door-knocking asked me for a referendum, but I'll let you know. It was exactly zero who asked me to go back to the Legislature and demand that a referendum be called to determine whether or not we should increase the carbon levy. I can't imagine a more divisive instrument in our political world than a referendum.

I lived through, as many people in this House have done, referendums on existential matters at a federal level, where we were looking at the division of our country, the loss of Quebec from our country. I happened to be in Quebec for the 1980 referendum debate, the first one, in an immersion program for a month when the debate was taking place, and I can tell you that I had a more difficult experience politically in those formative years, looking at how divisive the debate was up in the community of Jonquière, Saguenay Lac-Saint-Jean, where the leader of the Liberal Party, Bourassa, where Premier Lévesque came. Indeed, Prime Minister Trudeau came to rally the troops in their own defence, in defence of their own arguments. The community was split very decisively. In that particular area the forces for the oui won by 75 per cent, and it was a very, very thunderous and deafening debate between family members across the streets and even within families, where you had divisions that were raised that really, to this day, live on.

So I'm not a big fan of referendums per se. I know that they may have their place in that type of a debate, where it's an existential question, but when we're talking about simply raising a carbon levy, something that's already in place, I really question whether or not that – well, I don't believe, in all honesty, that we should be looking at a question of a referendum to ask Albertans whether they approve of this or not because, as the Leader of the Official Opposition has already indicated in his remarks, Albertans, of course, always have the final say, and they will have the final say, and it will be in a kind of referendum. It will be in a general election. That's where the final say will happen.

I really look forward to that general election upcoming, when they will announce themselves, because I believe that the result that we'll find is one of support for the government policy and a carbon levy. You know, the question that Albertans have asked themselves repeatedly – and I think they've come to a very knowledgeable and expressed conclusion – is the question that I think, maybe, the opposition should perhaps ask themselves to implement as a referendum question. That question, Madam Speaker, is to ask Albertans: do you think climate change is primarily caused by human carbon footprint? Do you think climate change is real? The answer to that question, that you'll get throughout this province, is yes.

I think that the Official Opposition probably misses the mark on a lot of things right now. You know, God love them. If they want to continue on in that vein, far be it from me to get in the way of having them drive their little blue truck back in time with their transmission firmly placed in reverse. They should be careful. That driving with the rearview mirror is going to land you in a ditch. Going back in time, which is something that the Official Opposition seems to really want to do – as expressed by the Leader of the Official Opposition in an opinion piece that was asked of him in the Edmonton Sun sometime ago, his favourite superpower would be to choose to go back in time. Well, he's leading us back in time with these requests for referendums.

I'm not sure how far back in time the Leader of the Official Opposition would have us go. You know, back to the '90s, when shoot, shovel, and shut up was the order of the day or we were blowing up hospitals? Or perhaps back to the 1950s, when indeed we were going full speed ahead, not really caring about the environment, whether it happened to be in our energy consumption or in our agriculture. I can remember back as far as 1968, when I was shovelling coal in my grandfather's basement into a coal furnace. It wasn't too many years after that – it was about that time – when they transitioned that house, that they built in 1947, to natural gas. Even back in that time, in my childhood, Madam Speaker, we recognized the benefits of transitioning to cleaner burning fossil fuels. I think that the Official Opposition is, as I said, really missing the boat when they try to explain to Albertans that the climate change program that we've implemented is going in the wrong direction.

There is a real reason that we've implemented a price on carbon, and that's because it works. But don't take my word for it. Take the word of Mr. Preston Manning, who indicates in this quote that for any economic activity, especially [with] the production of energy, we should identify its negative environmental impacts, devise measures to avoid, mitigate or adapt to those impacts, and include the costs of those measures in the price of the product. It's the idea behind using carbon pricing to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

From, of all people, Preston Manning.

Now, I'm not sure if the Official Opposition leader is going to contest those comments made by Mr. Manning, but I'd be interested to hear how he responds to that defence of carbon pricing from one who would be described I think quite favourably as a leading light of the conservative right. From that perspective, I think that they should really think deeply about where they're going with their movement towards expecting that Albertans are going to back them on a referendum and expecting that Albertans will decide that pricing carbon is something that they shouldn't be doing.

I think that at the doors and the meetings that I have with constituents, almost nobody is questioning the reason for what we're doing. They realize that carbon levies, as has been expressed by other members of the Legislature opposite, are put in place to change behaviours, and that is a measure that is taken by governments the world over and, not only that, but by businesses. Businesses employ the same type of measures. They will increase or lower prices to change behaviours of their customers. Governments, when they do impose or remove taxes, are doing the same thing. I'm not sure why when a business will do this, it's somehow an effective tool, but when a government does impose a tax or reduce a tax, it's somehow a means of imposing their will on a free economy, which they believe should just be left alone to do as it sees fit.

For those reasons, I really believe that the blunt instrument of a referendum should be used only for really, seriously existential questions and that this divisive instrument is totally unnecessary. The referendum that I really look forward to, Madam Speaker, is the one that's going to take place during the next general election. I for one and, I'm sure, all other members on this side of the House join me in eager anticipation because I sure as heck can't wait for it.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a great honour for me to rise to speak to second reading of Bill 202, the Alberta Taxpayer Protection (Carbon Tax Referendum) Amendment Act, 2018, proposed by the Member for Calgary-Lougheed. Since the carbon tax was introduced, Albertans have rejected it from day one and not just because it was sprung on Albertan taxpayers without forewarning and not just because foisting an unnecessary financial burden on Albertans, who are already struggling, is wrong and not even because of the provincial government's capitulation to every ridiculous proposal of their best friend in Ottawa. In fact, there is so much wrong with this tax on every level imaginable that I could go on for hours. Actually, I think all the members in opposition would love to go on on this bill for hours because this is rejected by Albertans on every single level.

Even after exploring all of these contradictory, disingenuous, and unfair aspects of the carbon tax, I still felt a deep-rooted despair that struck at my very core. I'm pleased to tell you that I've figured it out. The sponsor of Bill 202, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, underscored it in his brilliant maiden address to this Assembly last Thursday. Now, I'll mention the date for anyone who has yet to view his inspirational speech. It was April 5, and I believe he started at 3:10 p.m. and ran until the end of session at 4:30. At approximately 3:40 in his address the Leader of the Official Opposition quoted a phrase that has been dear to my heart from the first time I walked into this Chamber. That phrase is right above your chair, Madam Speaker, and is in our coat of arms: Fortis et Liber, strong and free. You have heard me talking about the coat of arms in this Chamber a lot of times. That is Alberta's motto.

You know, the forefathers of this province gave us that motto as a definition of this province and perhaps even as a challenge. Through the first 11 decades since our founding in 1905 legislators have kept Alberta strong and free, Madam Speaker, but I'm afraid that in the last three years, it hasn't been as strong and free. When this government imposes a tax without even consulting Albertans – close to 70 per cent of Albertans rejected this tax – how can they be free and strong?

If you want to point out the most glaring example of a government that's marching to drumbeats that only it can hear – and, of course, the drummer is their best friend Justin Trudeau – it is a carbon tax born in Ottawa and heavily welcomed by our socialist NDP government. Actually, I think, Madam Speaker, that the word “welcomed” is a very soft word for no sooner did Justin Trudeau say that a national carbon tax was on the horizon than did Alberta rush to put its own carbon tax in place. This was despite our economy sliding into a terrible recession. The government did not care about what the state of the economy was; they just wanted to, you know, move forward with their ideology.

In fact, you can likely say that the NDP's best friends in Ottawa provided them with an excuse and false credibility to introduce a tax plan, carefully hidden during their 2015 election campaign, because if this government had introduced this in their election campaign, the chances are that they probably would not have been here.

An Hon. Member: They wouldn't be here.

Mr. Gill: They wouldn't be here. Yes.

But they're wrong, Madam Speaker, for neither they nor their carbon tax have any credibility with the people who matter, Albertans, the people whom we all come here to serve. What we know is that this is a tax that Albertans rejected and that Albertans saw through from the beginning.

Now, let me address the importance of Bill 202, Madam Speaker, the carbon tax referendum act, and explain why I support it so strongly and, as a matter of fact, why all the members on this side would support it so strongly. First of all, I think I must thank the Member for Calgary-Lougheed for showing strong leadership in not only opposing the carbon tax but also in his fairness to doing so through this bill and actually setting an example by giving the authority and power to the people to make a decision, not us making a decision on their behalf when they rejected this carbon tax. This proposed legislation will give this NDP government an opportunity to hold a province-wide vote on the carbon tax.

Why would they accept this opportunity? Well, there are good reasons for doing so. They keep on telling us: "This is not a job-killing carbon tax. This is not an economy-damaging tax. It's not a big deal. Albertans can easily absorb it by making simple changes in their daily lives. Don't eat meat. Take a bus. These are simple changes they can make." That's what the government is saying. If the government is so proud of their mandate, let Albertans decide. I don't think it should be up for debate. The government should be championing this bill.

We, on the other hand, happen to believe that it is a job-killing carbon tax, that it is an economy-damaging and ideological tax. Albertans should not have to freeze in the dark to fulfill this NDP's and Justin Trudeau's ideological tax. That is accomplishing nothing except causing hardship for our citizens. You can see that we're on very different sides of this equation. Bill 202, however, gives the NDP a fair chance to prove that we are wrong. They can send this bill to a referendum. Maybe we are wrong. Let Albertans decide that.

Right now a referendum on the carbon tax, as you know, Madam Speaker, will take place in 2019. Otherwise, there's a general election, where our leader and all the members from the UCP have said that, clearly, we will repeal this carbon tax should Albertans give the UCP a mandate to serve them. But the NDP can pass Bill 202, invite the LG to call a referendum, and let Albertans vote on this carbon tax now. Then when it's defeated through a referendum – because, Madam Speaker, it will be; trust me – they can repeal it themselves and have an election that does not hinge on this hidden tax.

The Member for Calgary-Lougheed has been very clear about his plan for Alberta's carbon tax. It will vanish, and in quick order, after the next election. We all know that he has said that in public on many occasions.

Madam Speaker, this bill is actually doing a favour for this socialist NDP government, and of course it's doing a favour for the very people we are all here to serve, Albertans.

Actually, I would like to cover one more issue regarding this tax, and that is the NDP government's next step to take away the veil that the carbon tax is about carbon reduction. The minister of indigenous affairs was talking about how we don't care about the clean environment and how we're climate deniers.

[The Speaker in the chair]

We have asked in this House to give us the details on how much of a reduction of greenhouse gas emissions there has been after the implementation of this tax, and we have yet to see the numbers. There's no data about it. The people, the scientists, economists, professional people, have said on this very topic that in order to make any difference, the carbon tax has to be close to – what? – $200, $300 per tonne.

Mr. Mason: Is that what you want?

Mr. Gill: That's what you want, it seems like. Albertans don't even want this, Minister. You know that.

To answer your question, sir, why don't we put this to a referendum and let Albertans decide what they want? It's not about what we want. We don't want any tax.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again I'd just like to thank you for coming up to Lac La Biche on Friday. I hope you had a great time up there. It's a beautiful community. Thanks again.

It's an honour to rise and speak in support of Bill 202, the Alberta Taxpayer Protection (Carbon Tax Referendum) Amendment Act, 2018, brought forward by my hon. colleague from Calgary-Lougheed. You know, back in the 1990s the concept of taxing carbon, air, and everything else would have been laughable here in Alberta – and I think a lot of Albertans still think it's laughable – so much so that at that time Ralph Klein, in consideration of taxpayers, passed the Alberta Taxpayer Protection Act. He would ensure that Alberta does not impose a provincial sales tax on Albertans before a referendum is held and everyone's voice has a chance to be heard. As a matter of fact, a younger version of the Leader of the Opposition was president of the Canadian Taxpayers Federation at the time, and he helped this essential law get passed.

Of course, in the '90s no one was talking about a specific carbon tax, sort of like the NDP during the 2015 election campaign. Go figure. Since almost everything else we consume can be linked to carbon, it seems to me that it is, in fact, a tax on everything, or, in other words, a consumption tax. Not only is it in essence a consumption tax but also an ever-growing consumption tax, the largest tax hike in Alberta's history, in fact. By not mentioning it in their 2015 election platform, they managed to circumvent any consultation with Albertans and inflict this tax on families that are already struggling in the grips of what even the members opposite agree is the worst recession to hit us in a generation.

You know, last week I asked a very interesting question, that was pertinent to folks out in my constituency, regarding the carbon tax on school bus drivers. I pointed out that school bus drivers are hauling our very precious cargo every day, and the Minister of Education's answer to whether we could get an exemption for school bus drivers was: well, we're reinsulating schools, we're changing windows on schools, and we're going to save school boards all kinds of money. Never once in the three questions I asked – and I will be asking him again in the days coming forward to clarify – did he actually address the cost of the carbon tax on the school bus drivers. It's ever-increasing. Their insurance is increasing.

I did a very interesting video, that I'm going to have to send to the Transportation minister, on a five-mile bus ride that happened the day I was talking to those school bus drivers about their carbon tax. They were complaining about this one specific road, so I said: well, let's go for a ride. They had a 60-seat bus, and I went and sat in the back seat of that thing. I'll tell you what. I'm a pretty big guy, and I can't imagine being a 40- or 50-pound kid sitting in the back of that bus, because he'd have been bouncing off the roof. Man, it was quite scary, you know, the racket and the vibration on the bus. These are privately owned buses, Mr. Speaker, that these folks not only have to repair on their own but that they have to fuel and oil change and change springs on and all this kind of stuff. What I'm saying is that the carbon tax is just another added expense to them.

Just a couple of points here. The Canadian Taxpayers Federation said in the Calgary Sun on January 12 that 55 per cent of Albertans received no rebate cheque or that it was less than they paid in carbon taxes. The Canadian Taxpayers Federation in the Calgary Sun on January 12 also said that while the NDP claims a family of four will receive $540 in rebates this year, government estimates show the carbon tax will cost the same family up to $613 this year. It's still a negative impact. You have to be a low-income earner to qualify for this rebate, so even that $100 could be a major hit to them.

By the same token here, in the Globe and Mail on January 21 the Laurier centre for economic research said that a significant hike to the carbon price is necessary to achieve emissions targets. A 10 per cent reduction in emissions over seven years would require a $175-per-tonne levy. So the $30 tax that we're hitting Albertans with is absolutely doing nothing, and I think that's been reiterated by many other groups as well.

The NDP's carbon tax is in clear violation of the spirit in which the Taxpayer Protection Act was passed. Again I will mention that they did not include it in their campaign platform. There should be no pride in their managing to get a consumption tax passed without first going through the proper channels and without even asking Alberta families how it would affect them. We've often asked about the economic impact analysis that they've done, but they've never come forth with that because apparently there really isn't one or they don't like the information that it might share with us.

Bill 202, the Alberta taxpayer protection amendment act, will specifically add the carbon tax to the existing act to alleviate any chance that the NDP government or any future government can continue using a grey area as a loophole. Unlike the NDP, we've been very clear from the start: bill 1 of a United Conservative government will be focused on repealing the carbon tax. We see the real effects it is having on families, that are essentially being told to turn down the heat in this apparently never-ending winter. It seems to be snowing out there again today, so we're in the middle of April, and we're far from being out of it.

The NDP is desperately trying to avoid discussing their carbon tax, but voters will finally have their say in the spring of 2019. Although we're confident that Albertans will have their say at the polls this time around, we need to ensure their peace of mind for the future. Years from now we need to make sure that no government will force through a carbon tax without directly asking the voters first. We can't have a repeat of what has happened this time around with a surprise tax and then continuous tax increase after tax increase. A referendum will be mandatory before a provincial government can impose a carbon tax. This is why I'm so pleased to be speaking about Bill 202 today. We want to assure Albertans that they will not be seeing a surprise tax without having any input on the matter beforehand. We've already seen the NDP raise their carbon tax by 50 per cent. Where was the consultation on that? I don't recall any.

Mr. Strankman: Or the benefits.

Mr. Hanson: Or the benefits. Yes, exactly.

Now they promise to further increase the carbon tax by 67 per cent just because their friend Justin Trudeau has asked them to. We know that Justin Trudeau is planning on even further hiking the tax. These taxes are relentless in hitting families where it hurts, over and over, with each increase.

But, Mr. Speaker, this doesn't just affect families. The reason that we like to call it a tax and that the government likes to call it a levy is because if it was a tax, they wouldn't be able to pass that tax on to municipalities. I hear from school boards, municipal governments all over the province, seniors, native friendship centres. The Minister of Indigenous Relations talked about the effects of this bill somehow on solar panels on reserves. But, you know, you forget that there is also a cost to native friendship centres. I usually fill up at my local co-op store and gas bar in St. Paul, and a lot of times I'm standing in line with natives from either Saddle Lake or Kehewin or from the Métis settlements. They're standing there paying for the gas, just like I am. They're paying the tax, just like I am. There's no exemption there for them. They're not seeing the benefit of that.

You know, saying that this doesn't affect them or that they're going to have this wonderful windfall from solar panels – the minister and I have spoken numerous times in estimates and other places regarding the road conditions. Is it going to be a comfort to the parents and council in Goodfish Lake or Saddle Lake this spring when the kids are missing school or they can't get water hauled to some of the residences because of the road conditions but they'll maybe have these nice, shiny solar panels on the council chamber building? It'll be small comfort to them, when you and I both agree that the very most important thing is education for those kids. [interjection] Yes. You're nodding. I'm happy to see that.

Not only that, but it affects food banks – you know, we've talked about trying to get exemptions for some of these folks – women's shelters, volunteer community organizations. Somebody talked earlier about swimming pools. Hockey rinks: everybody knows the importance of hockey to our small communities, as we found out with that horrific accident in Saskatchewan and how it affects those communities. A lot of our communities are centred around the rinks.

Actually, I was at a celebration on Saturday night for the CAP Arena in St. Paul, where they celebrated 35 years. That was a community initiative to get a second piece of ice for kids to practise on. You know, 10-year-old kids were having to show up at 5:30 in the morning for hockey practice before school, so the parents all got together and lobbied the government, lobbied the town and the county, and raised money . . . [Mr. Hanson's speaking time expired] That was a quick 20 minutes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know it's sort of traditional to say that it's my pleasure to stand up and talk about Bill 202, but in fact I'm really disappointed in the new Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition. Basically, this was a great opportunity. This was the first bill that he was bringing forward before this Legislature. I'm sorry to have to use this terminology, but it's really a waste of time. There are so many other things that we could have been talking about during this private members' business, and this is our time. The backbenchers and the opposition get the chance to actually talk about topics of importance to Albertans, particularly to the Albertans in their constituencies. We have had some brilliant private members' bills arising from the opposition, and several of those have actually been a boon to this province and have received the support of all members.

I think the first one that I can remember came from the Member for Calgary-West, the private member's bill dealing with getting some control on pill presses. All of us recognize that the addictions crisis, particularly the fentanyl crisis, is something that basically affects all Albertans. We need to do whatever we can, and this side recognized that that was a good idea coming from the MLA for Calgary-West.

His colleague the MLA for Chestermere-Rocky View also had a very good idea and spent a lot of time researching and consulting on and developing a bill that was really important. This was the adoption information bill; I don't have that name completely correct. I had several constituents who came to my office and said to me – and I won't use my name – “Make sure that this goes ahead because this is vitally important to us. We've been trying to get involved in adoption, and it is very important that we get this bill going ahead.” I am proud that I can say that I stood up and participated in the debate and participated in support of the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, and I am very happy that that bill has been passed.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The third bill that we all agreed to, that came from the opposition, to my recollection, was the bill from the MLA for Bonnyville-Cold

Lake, again a very important bill and, actually, a bill that has some resonance with what we're talking about today. It was the image-sharing bill. In case the opposition doesn't realize what was going on, this bill was looking at a situation where social media could be manipulated for ill ends by reprobates, that we needed to put a stop to. The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake was particularly concerned about the sharing of intimate images. I mean, this goes back to how, say, referendums could be manipulated by people, reprobates that want to use social media in a very inappropriate way to influence an election.

I can tell you, for instance, just to give an example of how that might affect a referendum, to look at the Brexit situation. Look at what happened with Brexit. The leader of the Conservative Party in the House of Parliament of Great Britain thought that she – sorry, it was not a she; at the time it was a he – could call a referendum and sort of get a false approval for this Brexit. It turns out that nefarious conspirators in the social media world, maybe coming from a foreign source like Russia or actually more likely from an American source, from the same types of people that supported the election of the most recent President of the United States – but there are ways that Facebook and other social media can be manipulated, and in fact even the electoral process itself can be manipulated in a referendum.

I bring all this up because, again, it's a waste of time to discuss this. We have been elected in May 2015 to make laws. I can tell you that many of my constituents have told me that they're very happy that this government was elected in May 2015 and that in November 2015 presented our climate leadership plan because they are concerned about the climate, and they are convinced of the evidence that man is creating problems with the climate. This goes back 200 years. It's related to industrialization. It's a process that is scientifically proven despite the suggestions from some of the members of the opposition that the science isn't clear on this. There is absolutely no doubt that the industrialization and the burning of fossil fuels and other activities have led to excessive greenhouse gas emissions, and we as a world need to do something about this. So the Paris agreement was agreed to more than 20 years ago, and Canada is a signatory to that. We need to be doing our part here in Alberta to deal with that.

It is, in my estimation, a complete waste of time to be discussing this today. I would have hoped that the Leader of the Opposition could have come up with something that actually will help Albertans, will help them deal with the effects of climate change.

Madam Speaker, I've been here in this province for 42 years, and pretty well every year and sometimes more than once a year I go up into the national parks of this province and go to the glaciers at Lake Louise, and I drive the highway. I want to just spend a bit of time talking about Lake Louise – or the Columbia icefields are probably an even better example. Go to the Columbia icefields and go to the sort of headquarters there – it's on the other side of the road from the glacier – and you can actually see the signposts that have been put in along the distance, and it's now close to three kilometres, I believe, from the headquarters to the toe of the glacier. This, to me, is incontrovertible evidence that our climate is warming.

Just this past year, 2017, the Arctic Ocean has been open at Christmastime. Unheard of. It's happening. The last 10 years have seen, I think, seven of the hottest years on record, and it's going up. It's going up because of mankind producing too many greenhouse gases. Our carbon footprint is too large. We need to be doing something about this.

So the bill proposes to require a referendum if the carbon levy is to be increased, you know, or if we're going to respond to the federal government increasing the carbon levy, presumably it would have to be approved by that. You know what? The opposition talks about our best friends in the federal government. In fact, the federal government is going to help us get the Kinder Morgan expansion done. They are stepping up.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I will now call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I want to be very clear that the Alberta Party supports action on climate change. We believe that climate change is human caused. We believe it's a problem that needs to be addressed, but we do have great concern with the way that this particular government's carbon tax has been structured. We are supportive in the Alberta Party of a carbon tax in principle. I think that, done properly, it can work well, but this particular government's version of the carbon tax has not been done very well. As a result, they have taken what can be a very effective policy tool and, unfortunately, have caused many Albertans to find themselves opposed to this. Many Albertans that I talk with in my own constituency and elsewhere see nothing but downsides, see nothing but money going out of their pockets, and they don't see a tangible benefit from Alberta's carbon tax. That is what needs to be fixed. Having said that, Madam Speaker, I don't think that a referendum is the best way to go about fixing that.

What I find interesting is that the Leader of the Official Opposition has proposed a bill here which really backs Alberta into a corner. On the one hand, he's arguing that the federal government should use their legislative authority, constitutional authority to make sure that the Kinder Morgan pipeline goes ahead. I agree. We should ensure that the federal government does everything within its power, right up to the very edge of that power, to ensure that a project that has been federally approved and reviewed and is very clearly in the national interest moves ahead. I'm very much supportive of that. But, on the other hand, he proposes a bill that would allow an Alberta referendum to override, in essence, the federal taxation authority as it relates to the increases to the carbon tax going forward, and that to me seems not to add up.

I want to speak a little bit, though, about the concerns that we do have with the way that this carbon tax is structured. My concern is that it is really not an environmental policy. Any pretense of this being an environmental policy went out the window with this last budget, where money is clearly in the future going directly to general revenues without even the pretense of the – I think that "revenue recycling" is the code word they've used in current budgets. By definition, income and corporate taxes are revenue neutral because they all get, quote, unquote, recycled in Alberta. That is not the definition of revenue neutrality by any authority that I know of. I would suggest that this current carbon tax does contribute directly into general revenues, and what's absolutely certain is whatever, I would say, is a mythical path to balance relies heavily on future carbon tax revenues going into general revenues.

If we want to take action on climate change – sorry; just let me make one more point on that. The reason for the need for this government to put the carbon tax revenue into general revenues is because they've been unable to restrain themselves on the spending side in any meaningful way, and they've also been unable to grow the pie, to allow Alberta entrepreneurs to create an attractive investment climate to invest, to create jobs, to generate economic activity and increase tax revenue to allow us to pay for the things that matter in this province. That would be true of energy investments but is true also of broader investments as well. So if we want to take action on climate change, we'd better be ensuring that we're doing something that's effective.

Interestingly enough, this government finds itself in the position of being the single-largest carbon emitter in the province because now they own all the PPAs from the coal-fired plants that still exist. I'm fairly sure that when they were elected, they didn't anticipate that an NDP government would be Alberta's largest carbon emitter, but there you have it.

The Alberta Party is very much a believer, as I said last week in my member's statement, in that great word, "and." We believe we can have a strong energy sector, traditional hydrocarbon oil and gas sector, and we can have innovation and investment in environmental technologies. I think we should look at climate change and the challenge of overcoming climate change, the challenge of overcoming carbon emissions, as not something to be afraid of, not something to ignore, as the Official Opposition I think would do, but as something that is the single-greatest market opportunity in Albertans' lifetimes.

We have the entrepreneurs. We have the innovators, the technology folks, the scientists, the engineers, the welders, the tradespeople. We have the finance people to put the deals together. We have all of the ingredients to allow Alberta to thrive in a carbon-constrained world by creating the technologies of the future that Alberta entrepreneurs will sell to the rest of the world. A carbon tax can be an important part of that because it takes money and allows that investment in those green technologies. It can be Alberta entrepreneurs who drive this if we do it right.

I would argue that we can't do that without a carbon tax, but it has to be done properly. It shouldn't be scrapped; it should be fixed. How would we fix it? We would make it revenue neutral by cutting personal and corporate tax to offset the amount of money that comes in from the carbon tax. We would exempt not-for-profits. We would exempt schools and school boards. We would ensure that home heating is exempted as well. We would fix the rebate system to ensure that people who genuinely are disadvantaged by paying the carbon tax, people who really, truly have to make that choice between putting food on the table and paying their carbon tax would get a rebate. I would argue that is not two-thirds of Albertans, so I would suggest that fixing the rebate system is going to be a huge part of it. They need to make sure that the people who genuinely need help do actually get that help. We'd also ensure that investments are made in green technologies, in making sure that Alberta has an attractive investment climate.

I know that Albertans do want to take action on climate change because I hear from them all the time. The number one issue I hear from my constituents is about the carbon tax, but it's not that they necessarily want to scrap it entirely. They want to fix it. Albertans that I talk with understand the need to take action on climate change. They understand the importance of a carbon tax and doing that, but they want the carbon tax to be effective, not just simply another revenue-generating tool.

I would be very clear, Madam Speaker, that the Alberta Party will not be voting in favour of this bill because we feel that it doesn't address the core issue of fixing the carbon tax instead of simply repealing it. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to rise today in support of Bill 202, Alberta taxpayer protection amendment act, as thoughtfully brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Madam Speaker, it's very clear that the NDP never campaigned on the carbon tax, the largest single tax hike in Alberta's history.

They never even mentioned it, in fact, not once in print or in campaigning during the 2015 election. Since pretty much everything we consume is linked in some way to the carbon tax – we've heard it from other members with respect to transportation, delivery of goods, a tax on virtually everything – it's clearly just a consumption tax and in not a very good disguise, quite frankly.

Madam Speaker, it was Ralph Klein who passed the Alberta Taxpayer Protection Act, which requires a referendum before any move to impose a provincial sales tax of any sort. In fact, it was a young Jason Kenney, as president of the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, that helped the Klein government draft and pass this important law. The NDP's carbon tax clearly violated the spirit of the Taxpayer Protection Act, if not the law itself, but nobody was talking specifically about taxing carbon back in the mid-1990s, and as such the words "carbon tax" aren't currently listed in the law. I would argue it should be to protect the rights and best interests of Albertans.

It is indeed time to change that bill, Bill 202, to specifically add "carbon tax" to the Taxpayer Protection Act, again, to protect the rights and the taxation against Albertans.

We've been clear that bill 1 of the United Conservative government will be the carbon tax repeal act, possibly the summer of repeal, as has been mentioned. The commitment and resolve remain while the NDP continues to not want to have to disclose their fondness for the carbon tax back in the 2015 election. Their fondness obviously predated the passing of this carbon tax. In fact, still they didn't want to disclose that to the electors, to the voters of Alberta, and they desperately tried to avoid discussing that omission today. Voters will finally have their say in the spring of 2019, a de facto referendum, if you will.

The Albertans that I speak with do not share the NDP's fondness for such an insidiously disguised sales tax, but we also need to ensure that no future government of any stripe, even five, 10, or 15 years from now, can force a carbon tax, a sales tax in disguise, as it were, without first consulting Albertans directly. A referendum will be required before a provincial government can impose such a tax if we indeed support this bill.

Bill 202 also requires a referendum before any future carbon tax hike. The NDP has already raised its carbon tax by 50 per cent, Madam Speaker, and promises a further 67 per cent increase because Justin Trudeau asked them for it. And we know Justin Trudeau is planning even further carbon tax hikes beyond that. In fact, it is clear that when this government's political ally Justin Trudeau says, "Jump," the Alberta NDP rapidly respond with, "How high?" without ever thinking to consult hard-working Albertans, that it will most affect.

If the NDP is confident in public support for their carbon tax, the central policy of the climate leadership plan, they should have no problem putting the question directly to voters, Madam Speaker. Given their adamant claims of widespread support we see no reason why this government would not just acquiesce to it but would be keen to prove such bold and principle-laden claims to all Albertans.

Madam Speaker, this government has made the carbon tax and their quest for social licence the crowning jewel of their government despite the fact that they did not mention it once in their 2015 election platform. Did I mention that they did not mention it once during the 2015 election? They have made it key to their social licence strategy to secure approval for pipelines and the development, growth, and viability of our energy sector. How's that working for us today? We have not changed the mind of one opponent of the pipelines through this misguided social licence strategy, very clearly so, and it continues. We hear it in the news already today from the opponents, including Karen Mahon and Tzeporah Berman, who have not changed their mind one iota.

Given that the NDP have touted this legislation as a clear win for Alberta and something that all Albertans benefit from and should support, this misguided carbon tax, it stands to reason that they should be more than comfortable allowing Albertans to vote in a referendum for such taxes in the future. As I said already – and I'll say it again – the carbon tax is the largest tax hike in the history of Alberta, and it has had a devastating impact on everyday Albertans, many just trying to get by day to day, paycheque to paycheque.

So let's talk about the carbon tax and families. At $30 a tonne the carbon tax will cost the typical Albertan household about $667 per year, as reflected in University of Calgary energy economist Jennifer Winter's release, as quoted in the Financial Post on January 3, 2018. At $50 per tonne the carbon tax will cost the typical Alberta household $1,111 per year, also from economist Winter. These are big numbers; these are real numbers. This is the cost to them of after-tax costs, after all the other taxes that they pay, the cost to that household. Madam Speaker, I can tell you that that kind of money will keep a child in a sport. It will help to pay for clothing that they need. It will help to pay for additional school supplies or other activities that they may wish to do.

Madam Speaker, the Canadian Taxpayers Federation noticed that 55 per cent of Albertans received no rebate cheque or that it was less than they paid in carbon taxes. Revenue neutral, indeed. The Canadian Taxpayers Federation also reflects that while the NDP claims that a family of four will receive $540 in rebates this year, government estimates show that the carbon tax will cost that same family up to $613 per year. Who's paying for the cap?

The Laurier centre for economic research shared that significant hikes to carbon prices will be necessary to achieve emissions targets. We've heard that from the Member for Calgary-Lougheed many times. A 10 per cent reduction in emissions over seven years requires a $175-per-tonne levy. Where is that going to come from, Madam Speaker?

The carbon tax has also unfairly attacked the organizations that support our province's most vulnerable. The Official Opposition of the day humbly put forward amendments that would have exempted not-for-profit organizations, but this government callously voted against those amendments. At a time when many Albertans are struggling, this government has unnecessarily taken dollars away from nonprofit organizations – I hear this every day – and from their front-line service providers. Those same funds could be going to feed, clothe, and support the vulnerable or those going through difficult times in many cases due to this government's disastrous, job-killing economic policies.

Let's talk about the carbon tax and the nonprofits. Ray Sharp from Sundre West Country said: the centre is emotionally, mentally, and physically the most wonderful thing for our seniors, but as a nonprofit organization we don't get any rebates; it's financially eating us up.

Leona Bennett, Sundre & District Aquaplex: we're really getting hit hard; it's not just us that are impacted; it's the community as a whole; our little organizations are what keep Sundre going, and without these facilities in the community we won't have a community; because of the carbon tax we had to increase our rates, but we couldn't increase them enough.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under Standing Order 8(7)(a)(i), which provides up to five minutes for the sponsor of a private member's public bill to close debate, I'd like to invite the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition to close debate on Bill 202.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I thank all members who participated in the debate for having done so. It is my hope that members will demonstrate their respect for Albertans by voting in favour of this bill.

This bill, Madam Speaker, is not actually about the carbon tax, nor is it about sales taxes. The bill is not about the current NDP government's policy per se. The bill is about democracy. The bill is about whether or not members of this Legislature have the confidence to trust their constituents to make a decision on a matter of this nature. A bill like this perhaps would not be necessary if it weren't for the tendency of politicians to avoid difficult debates at election time. The NDP avoided such a difficult debate in the last provincial election by bringing forward a platform that was silent on the question of carbon taxes, only to introduce the largest tax increase in Alberta's history.

I've heard members opposite in the course of this debate celebrate the putative merits of their carbon tax. Funnily enough, they won't even call it a tax. That's how lacking they truly are in confidence. They come up with these absurd euphemisms that nobody accepts such as "a levy." One very peculiar speech opposite, Madam Speaker, somehow tried to tie this suggestion that Albertans should have a say on whether the tax should be increased to colonialism and aboriginal issues. That was special, but what Albertans want to know is why that particular minister is opposed to letting all Albertans, including aboriginal Albertans, have a say on whether or not to increase this tax. That was the issue, not desperate efforts to deter and deflect and deny.

I also heard suggestions from some members that the carbon tax is all about environmental policy and that it's essential to help us save the planet. Again, that really is disingenuous because the very same members know, if they're at all serious and honest about this, that all expert opinion, including that of the federal government, Professor Leach, all of the environmental organizations, indicates that the only way for a carbon tax to come anywhere close to achieving, for example, the Paris greenhouse gas emission targets would require a price that is in the range of 1,000 per cent higher than the current tax. This is not an opinion, Madam Speaker; this is an established consensus. I don't know why these members are denying the climate change consensus. Why are they deniers?

If they want to be truthful and honest with themselves and Albertans, they will accept the scientific consensus. I have. In this party we accept the scientific consensus on climate change, which says that the only way a tax or, if you want, euphemistically, a levy can achieve the desired reduction in greenhouse gas targets to actually make a demonstrable effect in global climate would be in the range of a 1,000 per cent increase. Why are they denying that, Madam Speaker? Why do they think that a 30 per cent or a $30-a-tonne or a $50-a-tonne tax is efficient? They know it's not, but they know that that is at the outer limits of the public's tolerance. In fact, it's beyond the public's tolerance, as demonstrated by every poll.

The hon. leader of the Liberal Party, for whom I have considerable respect, said that he thought that about half of Albertans accepted this tax. With respect, Madam Speaker, every single public opinion survey done on this question indicates that at least two-thirds of Albertans are opposed to the carbon tax even after the NDP has spent millions of tax dollars telling Albertans why it's good to punish them. And I'll tell you why Albertans don't buy it. It's because they know that punishing consumers is not an environmental strategy. They understand that forcing seniors to turn the heat down at home when it's 30 below outside, when it's snowing like it is right now, in late April, is not an environmental policy.

Madam Speaker, maybe I'm wrong about this. Maybe, actually, the government is right, and the majority of Albertans do support their policy. Then let them decide. Let them have the say. That's the question. We can have a debate ad infinitum on the putative merits of a carbon tax, but the question is: who decides in that debate? I submit that that ought not be 87 members of this Chamber, let alone a few dozen members of the government benches. It ought to be millions of adult Albertans in whom – you know, I heard these arguments about how divisive referenda are. It's called democracy. A referendum is no more divisive than an election.

I call on members to support this bill.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:58 p.m.]

Amendments to Standing Orders

501. Mr. W. Anderson moved:

Be it resolved that the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta be amended by renumbering Standing Order 52.04 as Standing Order 52.04(1) and by adding the following after suborder (1):

(2) Suborder (1) does not prevent a Legislative Policy Committee from undertaking a hearing or inquiry during the same period of time that a matter stands referred to the Committee by the Assembly if the hearing or inquiry does not interfere with the work of the Committee on the matter referred to it.
