Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a constituency where census data tells us that 20,000 residents are under the age of 18, school spaces are top of mind. Given that many attending the recent rally had advocated for over a decade for the high school to be built, what are the next steps in the process to ensure that design funding is delivered, and what should residents expect to see?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we can see that there's a fast-growing population in the elementary and junior high, so it's inevitable and necessary to build this high school. It takes between 38 to 48 months to go through the entire process, but the process has started now, drawing the blueprints, getting a design that is not just functional but is meeting the needs of students. It will be a wonderful, positive addition to the neighbourhood and is all part of what we're planning to do with this project.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, having attended the school funding announcements in spring 2017, it was good to hear that an elementary school was approved for Coventry Hills, providing a designated school closer to home for hundreds of the community's five- to nine-year-olds. In addition, this new school eases capacity pressures on other schools in the area. Given the school's importance to the community, to the Minister of Education: is there an update on the construction progress of the new elementary school?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, Coventry Hills elementary school is in its design phase right now and will go to tender, and construction will start straightaway after that. We know how desperately we do need these schools across the province. We're in the midst of the biggest infrastructure build in the history of the province. As an indication of the sense of optimism and hope for the future, people are settling down, having kids. We're building schools to meet that need, to make life better for Albertan families.

Thanks.

Parents' Rights

Mr. Fildebrandt: Those of us who are moms and dads know that we love and want to protect our children more than any government bureaucracy ever could. Children have fundamental rights and freedoms, but we recognize that until they're adults, parents are the ultimate authority over children. Government is not. I believe that government should only take away that authority in very specific cases like abuse or neglect, but this government has on occasion gone much further, like social engineering. Who does this government believe is the ultimate authority over our children, government or parents?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we work closely with parents every step of the way to ensure a strong education. It's absolutely necessary. That contract between providing education through our government and the relationship with parents is absolutely paramount and foundational to everything that we do.

Do you know what else is foundational? It is to make sure that you actually put some funds into running those schools. By making 20 per cent cuts to schools, not building schools over the last 10 years or more, you know, we've seen that contract being broken. It's been put back in place with this government.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fildebrandt: As the ultimate authority over children parents have the fundamental right to know what their children are being taught and are facing medically. There are reasonable exceptions to this, however. Does the government agree with this statement, but if not, what exceptions would he make?

Mr. Eggen: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, certainly, that contact between family and school is paramount, and we recognize that. We make sure that we are in communication every step of the way. If there are issues around safety and security or medical things, for example, then of course that communication is always, always there.

When people try to somehow convolute this idea and somehow put it onto GSAs and outing kids that join a GSA, that is unacceptable; it's objectionable. It puts kids at risk, and it's dangerous as well.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Politicians on all sides inserting themselves between children and parents serves nobody well. Clearly, there must be a middle ground between requiring parental consent for removing an ingrown hair and stripping parents of their right to raise their kids as they see fit. Let's roll back the politics a bit and provide Albertans with clarity. Would the government agree to form an all-party committee to draft a parents' and children's charter of rights and responsibilities that we can hopefully all agree on?

The Speaker: Hon. members, again I must attempt . . .

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker . . .

The Speaker: Hon. minister, just a moment.

Mr. Eggen: Sorry. Go ahead.

The Speaker: . . . just to remind everyone about those elongated preambles. Be conscious of that, everyone.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, you know, conflating this idea and outing kids that join GSAs. I think the vast majority of Albertans agree with our position. Bill 24 is designed specifically to protect and create safe sanctuary for a very vulnerable position and very vulnerable children. Even just having this discussion in resolution, words on paper hurts. That hurts kids. It compromises their position, and it rolls back the very good work that we've done over these last weeks and months and years to create safe and caring environments for children.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Electric Power Prices

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have enjoyed some of the lowest cost electricity in North America for a very, very long time, and now the NDP plan to force wind onto the market, driving power bills up, and to use the carbon tax to subsidize wind if the price drops below the average of 3.7 cents per kilowatt hour. It's 3.1 cents today just to be clear. Will the minister explain: why is the NDP making families pay to keep wind farms from going bankrupt?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we're focused on the right priorities for regular families like ensuring the power bills are affordable and predictable. You know, many years ago — there are several years that I cited last week — the power price was more than a hundred dollars. Today it's low, and there's a reason. We need more investment, but we also got a very good price on our first auction, 3.7 cents, which was highly competitive, one of the best in North America and indeed the world, and we're very proud of that.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. But today the government is subsidizing at 3.1 cents just to be clear. Given that, Mr. Speaker, the NDP plan to protect families is to subsidize everyone's power bills above 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour and given that the NDP plan to subsidize wind farms when the price drops below 3.7 cents per kilowatt hour, again which is today, will the minister table the electricity price forecast I'm sure her department has prepared in order to have come up with these subsidy decisions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, 2001, 2002, 2006, 2007, 2013 were all years when the pool price for electricity was more than a hundred dollars. We're fixing a broken system that we inherited from the previous Conservative government, who favoured backroom deals with their partners rather than thinking about regular Albertans. We're getting rid of those backroom deals. We're standing up for Albertans, and capping prices is one of the ways we're standing up.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I think I would respectfully disagree that the PPA situation has severely broken this situation.

The Market Surveillance Administrator still lacks a permanent head and given that the Market Surveillance Administrator is critical to ensuring that families are not being gouged by the wind generators spiking electricity prices — the surveillance administrator is a competent watchdog — is it true, Minister? Can you please tell Albertans that when you are able to put this Market Surveillance Administrator together, they're not going to be some ideological NDP pawn with no real power?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The role of the MSA is critically important, and we are, as the member says, in the process of finding a new MSA. But our government's priority is standing up for regular Albertans and making sure the power bills remain affordable and predictable. That's why we're capping prices. That's why we're introducing a capacity market. Albertans for too long have had this up and down roller coaster that we do not need anymore. When I cite those years – 2001, 2002, 2006, '07, and '13 – I wonder what their explanation is for why those prices were so high?

Provincial Debt

Mr. Barnes: Forty-two thousand dollars are the taxes a 16-year-old Albertan will pay over their lifetime just to pay the interest on the NDP's debt. That's on top of additional income taxes. Fifty thousand: that's the debt burden that a 31-year-old Albertan will pay during their lifetime on just the interest, again, plus higher income taxes. To the minister: how do you consider it fair that Albertans that may go their life without paying interest on their credit card balance each have to pay you $42,000 in interest?

Mr. Ceci: You know what I find extremely fair, Mr. Speaker? The fact that Albertans today are getting the services and programs they need. When they go to a hospital, there's a hospital there. It's not blown up like in '97, when the General was blown up. If they want to get an education, they can get an education. Albertans aren't having to wait with an infrastructure gap that those people caused, that we're fixing today.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, a recent CBC article highlighted the stark reality of the Premier's managed decline of Alberta's economy. Today only 55 per cent of young men have jobs. Forty-five per cent without work is staggering, a crisis. To the minister: how can you possibly say that everything is fine when a huge sector of our young population does not have employment, the opportunity to build a future, and when they do return to work, they face a wall of NDP interest and NDP debt?

Mr. Ceci: You know, those same young people, Mr. Speaker, had they been under the control of that side and that government, would have faced Alberta Works cuts, like happened in 1993 to '95. Albertans were left to drift because that side wanted to balance the books. That side wanted to get rid of the debt, but they left an infrastructure debt. They don't talk about that. What we talk about is supporting Albertans, making sure they have the supports and programs they need, and helping to build a better future at 4.9 per cent GDP growth. What did you guys do? Nothing.

The Speaker: Hon. member, caution about the preamble, okay?

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that the U of C and the CBC reports talk about young Albertans being more likely to be unemployed and they're facing the prospect of having to pay tens of thousands of dollars over their lifetime of NDP interest and debt – that's on top of your already higher taxes – to the minister: how do you expect young families to pay for their education, support their communities, start their families, and still be able to repay billions of dollars of your interest and billions of dollars of your debt?

Mr. Ceci: Well, that's a lot of stuff to do, Mr. Speaker, but I'm so glad this side, the NDP government, is doing that work and the Conservatives are not because we know what they would do. They would slash, cut, and fire. We're not doing that. You know, the Leader of the Opposition's record while in Ottawa – I shared it before – six straight deficit budgets, $56 billion in one year alone; $309 billion in interest payments; and $145 billion to our national debt. That's no record that we want to follow. We're going to put our own course forward, and it's a great course.

Pipeline Approval and Construction

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, when this NDP government's close friend and federal ally Justin Trudeau imposed upstream emission requirements on the Energy East pipeline project, this government went dead silent. As a result, Trans Canada has decided not to proceed with that investment. My question to the Minister of Energy is very simple. Will you launch a court case against Ottawa for interfering in provincial jurisdiction, and if not, why do you refuse to stand with Albertans?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we are working to get a pipeline to tidewater, and we will succeed. We've never been as close as we are right now in securing access to the west coast. If you want to talk about interference, the members opposite, who continue to out gay kids, attack our teachers, make our schools feel unsafe: frankly, you folks have a lot of explaining to do. We will stand with everyday Albertans to do exactly what they want, which is to be a government that's on their side.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that we are just 24 days to Kinder Morgan making a decision to proceed or not to proceed with the Trans Mountain pipeline, when was the last time the government of Alberta or the Market Access Task Force spoke to Kinder Morgan to encourage them to proceed with the pipeline expansion project?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, our Premier and our government are focused on the priorities of Albertans, which is fighting for pipelines. We have two approvals. We're working very hard with folks like industry, the task force, Albertans, anybody who is supporting. We're happy to say that daily and weekly the support for this pipeline is increasing, and we're going to keep working hard to increase that support. That pipeline will be built.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that there are alternative pipeline routes proposed to tidewater, including Eagle Spirit, Foothills via Alaska, the Mackenzie valley, and even the port of Churchill, Minister, what have you done to encourage commercial investment into these alternative routes under the existing regulatory regime before your friends in Ottawa kill those projects as well with their bills C-69 and C-48?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. You know, there are many pipeline projects in this country and indeed in this province, and we're working with all our proponents who come and meet with us, or we meet with them about them. But to be clear, the closest one to tidewater right now is the TMX, and that's the one that we're putting full efforts on. We've been doing that since we were elected. We're going to continue to do that. We're working every day. I still fail to see why this opposition wants us to fail. We're not letting it fail. We're on the side of Albertans, we're on the side of the energy industry, and we're not going to stop until that pipeline is built.

The Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary-East.

Health Facility Construction Projects in Calgary

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I speak with constituents, especially those who work in health care, they often bring up that hospital infrastructure is something that's been neglected over time under previous governments. I'm excited about the improvements this government has made by investing in the Peter Lougheed maternity and NICU and by committing to build the new Calgary cancer centre. Can the Minister of Infrastructure update us on the progress of this crucial new facility?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Well, the project is on track, and we are happy to see a bustle of activity on the site. The shoring is completed; excavation continues. The installation of the tower cranes has actually been under way already. One of the great things about this facility is that when it's done, it's free. It's free because we believe in public health care. Unlike our friends across the way, who spent the weekend crafting policy that would see folks pay for something like this, when folks who have to use the Calgary cancer centre have to use it after it's built, they're not . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms Luff: Given that all of us are touched by cancer at some point in our lives and that Albertans expect world-class care and given that the Calgary cancer centre will be so much more than just a "fancy box," can the minister tell us what this project will mean for Calgarians?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, this project, really, is going to have 160 outpatient beds, operational and clinical support services, a clinical trials unit, research laboratories, systemic and radiation treatment services, more than 1,500 jobs. Unlike the folks across the aisle, who characterized it as a "fancy box," the folks who know this sophisticated project know that this is life-changing cancer treatment here in this province that we can be proud of. The folks across the way would privatize it all.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the previous government had a record of literally blowing up hospitals in Calgary, to the same minister: what is this government doing to invest in the health facilities that Calgarians need?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, certainly, our capital plan has $4.6 billion for health facilities, and we think that's pretty important. The Foothills medical centre, $528 million in upgrades to their emergency room; the Peter Lougheed Centre, $82 million in consolidation, renovation, and expansion for women's services – we believe in women's services; unlike the folks across the aisle, who talked about feminism being the F-word at their convention, we actually think it's important to invest in women in this province – the power plant expansion, the Foothills medical centre, a total cost of $52 million; the complex continuing care facility in Calgary . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Carbon Levy Economic Impacts

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, earlier this session I asked that our dedicated school bus drivers be exempted from the NDP's crippling carbon tax. Diesel and gasoline have now hit near-record highs of upwards of $1.30 per litre. Minister, will you agree to cancel this disastrous tax on Albertans just trying to provide a much-needed service?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, our schools and school boards have been working very closely with myself and my ministry to ensure that we have the transportation needs met every step of the way. You know, the best way by which we have done that and have an agreement on that is that we have been funding properly the school system over the last four budgets in a row. I was just with Chinook's Edge on Friday, and they were very pleased with all of the work that we're doing. We're working very co-operatively, and that's the way you do it. You don't do it by trying to pick fights. You do it through co-operation.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we continue to hear from volunteer organizations, shelters, food banks, and seniors' support groups about the harmful effects of the carbon tax on their operations, to the minister of environment: will you please just scrap this carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, our priority is to ensure that we've got stable, predictable funding for all of our social services, which is why we have done exactly that for the family and community social services funding to municipalities, funding to social housing and other things. That's our priority, building this province, unlike the priorities from across the way, which are outing gay kids, privatizing health care, cutting education funding, attacking teachers, cutting taxes for the very richest among us. We're working for Albertans. They are working for the extremist parts of their party.

Mr. Hanson: Mr. Speaker, there's nothing that affects every Albertan like the carbon tax. Given that the NDP carbon tax has not resulted in any of the desired outcomes such as social licence or any measurable reduction in GHGs and given that the only measurable result is the negative effects on investment in our province, Minister, will you do all Albertans a favour and just scrap the tax?

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, the fact of the matter is that we have two pipelines approved. That's a fact. The fact of the matter is that we have country-leading economic growth, and we also have diversification happening. Those are facts.

Now, the folks across the way are not interested in facts. They don't care about the fact that GSAs save lives. They don't care about the fact that privatizing health care will be so hard on working people in this province. They don't care to build and maintain the great standard of living and make life better in this province. All they care about is appeasing the extremist parts of their party. That's what we saw this weekend.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's economy and families will pay for the NDP debt for many years to come, and youth will be most burdened. U of C's School of Public Policy calculated the lifetime per-person cost of interest only on the debt projected for 2023. For those 16 to 25 each will pay over $42,000; for those 26 to 35 each will pay the highest, $50,000. This is extra taxes for interest only on your debt, Minister. Why have you burdened Alberta's youth in this way without their consent?

Mr. Ceci: It feels like déjà vu all over again question period wise, Mr. Speaker, but I can tell you that we had a choice, of course. When the price of oil collapsed, we had a choice of slashing like that Conservative side would have done. They would have slashed programs and services and left Albertans adrift and to figure it out on their own. We chose to have the backs of Albertans so that through the recession they had jobs by greater investment in our capital plan than ever before. Ten thousand Albertans kept working, and their businesses kept employing them because of our capital plan, that helped Albertans out.

Mr. Orr: Minister, given that small businesses are the economic engine of this province and most are family owned, but now every family of three will be forced to pay well over a hundred thousand dollars of interest on NDP debt, and given that this will be a huge obstacle in starting businesses and consequently even a larger drag on future economic growth, have you given any consideration at all to how the interest burden is going to stall our economic engine and restrict recovery even more?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, the opposite would stall our economy and the recovery. We grew 4.9 per cent. We led the country in GDP growth. We're going to be among the leaders in 2018 and 2019. We know small business confidence is up. BDC says that small-business confidence is up in Alberta. Thirty-five per cent of small businesses are looking to hire more staff, and 73 per cent say that they'll invest more in their businesses in 2018. This is going in the right direction. The opposition, the Conservatives, want to take us back to 1950. Ozzie and Harriet were here; now we've got Rachel here.

Mr. Orr: That's kind of rich from a minister who wants to take us all to Ontario and invite us to be one of them.

Minister, given that you have misled Alberta families and are already blaming everything except your own reckless spending and given that if families were to actually make equal interest and debt repayments – in other words, paying twice as much – it would take 24 years for each person to pay back $80,000 to $100,000 of interest and debt, do you know anybody who seriously wants to spend the next 24 years of their life to pay $100,000 of their earnings for your debt?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you for the question. You know, we'll carefully find savings and cut out the Conservative waste that has been left here by that Conservative side. We've done a number of things already. At Q3 I had a $1.4 billion reduction in the budget in the overall spending in that year, and that was as a result of investments turning a greater profit and of finding more Conservative waste to cut out of our budget. We're going to keep doing that because that's in the interest of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Farm and Ranch Worker Safety Regulations

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On November 17, 2015, the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act was introduced by the Minister of Labour. It was a highly contentious bill due in no small part to the complete lack of consultation by this government. This bill received royal assent on December 11 of that same year. Bill 6 has caused enough uncertainty amongst farmers and ranchers. Minister, will you continue to keep them in the dark about your government's next steps?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm incredibly proud of the work that our government has done to ensure farm workers in Alberta have access to the same rights and protections that farm workers across the country have had for years. We promised Albertans that through this process we would consult with farmers, ranchers, working with the community as we implemented recommendations from technical working groups that had membership from the farming and ranching community, those who understood what things were like in that farm and ranch environment and could provide good advice to government. We've been looking at the technical working group recommendations. We've also listened . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that farmers are once more in their fields seeding and calving cows and given that it's been two and a half years since this bill's introduction and given that we still hear from farmers who have no clear idea of what those regulations will look like, to the minister: can Alberta farmers and ranchers expect further consultation and/or clarification?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We will continue to work with the farming and ranching community as we move forward. Specifically, we worked with the technical working groups, and then we posted the results of the technical working groups for the farming and ranching community to review. We extended that consultation to give people extra time to continue to work with us. We are working with the ag coalition, and as we look to implement regulations, we will again communicate and consult with the farming and ranching community.

Mr. Strankman: Again, Mr. Speaker, given that in the 2018 throne speech the word "agriculture" was not even mentioned and given that this government's record of dealing with the Alberta farmers and ranchers – be it Bill 6 regulations, water licences, or timely wildfire emergency responses – has been less than stellar, what my peers in agriculture would like to know from the minister is that given how contentious some of these regulations can be, will Alberta farmers and ranchers be given an opportunity to see a draft of the OHS regulations and provide additional feedback before these regulations come into force?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We were very pleased to take the recommendations from the technical working groups and make those public so that we could get feedback directly from those in the community. That consultation wrapped up very recently, and I'm very excited about the number of responses we received as well as the help that we've received from the ag coalition to make sure that we're getting this right. We are still on track to have these rules and regulations in effect later this year, and we will continue to work with Alberta's farmers and ranchers to get this right.

Thank you.

Crown Prosecutor Practice Protocol

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the Justice minister triage protocol has been in place for more than a year. When she introduced it, she said that it was necessary to ensure that serious crimes were not dismissed due to court delays. However, in the past year we have seen accused murderers and alleged perpetrators of sexual assaults walk free. Minister, for the sake of public confidence in Alberta's justice system will you commit today to review your triage policy?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, it's always our policy at Justice to continue examining our policies as we move forward. In the wake of the Jordan decision we had a choice to make. We had to respond to ensure that cases were not being lost in court. Some of those had been in process for quite a long time, and there was nothing we could do about them at this stage, but we had to make sure that cases going forward had the best chance. We made policy changes, and we've also been investing in our system. If the members opposite are so worried about it, perhaps they should have voted for the budget.

Mr. Taylor: I wonder if they're issuing get-out-of-jail-free cards.

Given that other provinces have chosen to clear court backlogs by investing in the justice system rather than implementing a triage system that encourages the Crown to drop criminal charges and given that the minister originally indicated that she may abandon the triage system once court backlogs dwindle – Minister, it's been a year – has the triage protocol become a permanent policy of your government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Like those other jurisdictions, we have chosen to ensure that we are supporting our justice system and supporting our victims of crime by investing in the system. We've made investments in all aspects of the system from the office of the Chief Medical Examiner to policing to Crown prosecutors to courts and to court clerks. I wish the members opposite would support those decisions.

Mr. Taylor: Given that the objective of the triage protocol is to ensure "that serious and violent crime is given priority and prosecuted effectively" and given that I became acutely aware of the triage protocol after the tragic death of two young constituents and that most Albertans have no idea that some serious criminal cases are now not being dealt with to the fullest extent of the law, Minister, how can you continue to justify your triage protocol to Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our triage policy is absolutely clear that it intends to prioritize serious and violent cases. The allegations coming from across the way that it's not serious when someone has a fatality on the highway is absolutely untrue. We think that those matters are serious. Those are exactly the matters that we attempt to prioritize, and any allegation to the contrary is just absurd.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Support for Seniors

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My home constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville is a unique community of many new families as well as long-standing generations of farm families. Our needs are diverse and unique. To the Minister of Seniors and Housing: how are you continuing to support seniors, that have built Alberta?

The Speaker: The Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Seniors are vibrant members of our province, and we're committed to supporting them. I have travelled all across this province and met with many, many seniors, and I know they want to age in their communities, close to their loved ones. One of our core programs, the Alberta seniors' benefit, provided financial assistance to more than 150,000 seniors last year, and that's just one example of the many programs we have to make life better for seniors.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the commitment that our government has shown to support seniors and the significant investment in programs that they rely on, Minister, what else are you doing to better the lives of seniors in Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, again, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know seniors across the province want to stay in their communities as they age. That is why our government invested $250,000 in planning funding for Heartland Housing Foundation. This funding helped the town of Fort Saskatchewan plan for a growing seniors' population. And we are helping seniors who need housing right now by opening the new Beaverhill Pioneer Lodge in Lamont. These investments show our government's commitment to protecting vital public services seniors count on.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, and thank you to the minister for investing in building the Beaverhill Pioneer Lodge.

Given the challenges that our economy faces as it begins to recover, many seniors are still having trouble making ends meet because of living on a fixed budget. To the Minister of Seniors and Housing: how are you ensuring that seniors are not left behind in this recovery?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you again, Mr. Speaker, and I'd like to thank the member very much for her advocacy on this issue. Our government invested more than $3 billion in seniors' programs last year. In Budget 2018 we maintain stable funding for seniors. We increase funding for the seniors' home adaptation and repair program. The opposition's reckless plan would give big tax giveaways to those at the top and cut the support seniors depend on. Our plan is focused on helping the economy grow and diversifying while protecting the vital public services Albertans count on.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, earlier today the Deputy Premier and Health minister in response to some questions to the Premier about health wait time increases went on with continuing to campaign to be the Official Opposition and just with partisan rhetoric. We're talking about a serious issue. Wait times have drastically increased under this government's watch. People continue to die, sadly, in queue in our province while this minister has completely failed to follow through on her promises to them on wait times. Minister, why have you failed, and what are you doing about it?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, just to reiterate what I actually said, I said that we are working to make life better, and we're among the best in the country on things like hip fracture repair, knee replacement, and radiation therapy. Our 17 stroke treatment centres are the best in Canada and among the fastest in the world. But that's not good enough. On this side of the House we want to make sure that all health care wait times are shorter. We're working to make sure that it's for every Albertan, not just those who can afford private, two-tiered, American-style health care like the members opposite are proposing. We are fighting to make sure that everyone in this province has quality health care, and we won't let you guys move forward ramming privatization, two-tiered health care, and deep cuts on the public system.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister said earlier that she was proud of the wait times and that still will not stand up in this Assembly and even attempt to try to answer a question – now, I get it. I would be ashamed of this record, too, if I was this minister. This minister is responsible for seeing an increase in wait times, something like heart valve surgery going up by 6.5 weeks. This costs people their lives. This is serious business. So can the minister drop her rhetoric, stand up, and explain what went wrong, how she has so terribly failed on this file, and how she's going to fix it?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, in Budget 2018 the government proposed a $40 million increase to reduce wait times for surgeries like cancer surgeries, hip and knee fracture replacements. What did the members opposite do? They voted against that very budget. On this side of the House we are fighting to make sure that we have quality public health care, that everyone has access regardless of how much money they have in the bottom of their pockets. And what did you spend your weekends doing? Promoting private, two-tiered, U.S. style health care. Those ideas aren't the ones that are going to be guiding us on how to make life better for Alberta families. We're going to be doing it by investing in services that families count on.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this side of the House fully supports public health care.

But it is interesting to see the Deputy Premier stand up and continue to do the same thing. She cannot answer the question on how she has failed so miserably on this file. Wait times went up under her watch. It's a question of outcomes, not a question of spending. This minister and this government have failed on this file. Why? How are you going to fix it? Stop hiding behind the rhetoric.

Stand up and tell us what you're going to do because Albertans won't put up with this anymore.

Ms Hoffman: Well, Mr. Speaker, if they believe in public health care, why did they just pass resolutions on the weekend to privatize health care? You guys need to get your story straight. You can't say one thing on Sunday to your base, that's pushing for extreme cuts, privatization, two-tiered health care, and another thing in this House on Monday and think that we're not going to hold you to account. On this side of the House we have effectively reduced wait times for hip fracture repair, knee replacement, radiation therapy, stroke treatment. And that's not enough. That's why we put $40 million in the budget to help to reduce it in other areas. Those guys voted against it. They keep voting to privatize, outsource, and bring in U.S. style health care, and we're not going to allow that.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this might be a good time for a 30-second break, and then we will go with the next member's statement.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Long-term Care Beds

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This NDP government promised to build 2,000 new long-term care beds over four years. The Ministry of Health confirms that over 1,600 beds the government is taking credit for were already under way with the previous government's ASLI program. Only three true long-term care facilities have been initiated by the government of Alberta, at least in political promises to date. They are Edmonton Norwood, 145 new beds and another 200 replacement beds, to be clear; Bridgeland for 200 new beds; Fort McMurray Willow Square with 144 new beds.

The Calgary and Fort McMurray projects will cost $241 million to build 344 beds. The Alberta Continuing Care Association notes that if the ASLI funding model had been used, this money could have resulted in the building of 3,700 beds, 10 times as many. Two combined acute-care and long-term care facilities opened by the government were started by the previous government: in Edson, 100 beds; in High Prairie health complex, 100 beds. And, of course, the Grande Prairie hospital was started before, with 176 new beds. ASLI funding funded an average of $65,000 per bed but is never even considered now by the AHS.

Site-based home care could be provided from new purpose-built seniors' apartments with sprinklers and barrier-free access. They would have no capital costs, no wait time to build. This could serve many more Alberta communities and suburbs instead of only Calgary and Edmonton. Also, the Health Quality Council of Alberta finds that private, public, and not-for-profit deliver the same care. Ownership doesn't change that. Operating costs for site-based home care are often much lower than for long-term care at $150 a day or acute care at $1,100 to $1,500 a day.

Mr. Speaker, with only one year in this elected term to go and fewer than 900 new beds in the works, when will this government change course or just admit that the promise of 2,000 new beds is indeed a broken promise?

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of an article from Maclean's magazine about the demolition of the Calgary General hospital, entitled When a Hospital Dies. I made reference to that demolition in question period this afternoon.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of a column from the CBC entitled Still No Money for Deerfoot Trail after "Affordable" Fixes Identified.

The Speaker: The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table two reports. First of all, from the CBC: Why Young Men Are Being Left out of Alberta's Economic Recovery. I have the five reports that, sadly, explain how, since this government was elected, the number of unemployed men is up to 45 per cent of the workforce between 15 and 24 years old. What a shame that is.

My second report is Fiscal Policy Trends, from the University of Calgary. It clearly explains, Mr. Speaker, the burden of the interest and debt that this NDP government and this Finance minister are placing on our next generation.

Thank you.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I rise to table five copies of the pamphlet the NDP government has sent to the mailboxes of all Albertans announcing subsidized electricity for all. Thank you.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 203

Long Term Care Information Act

[Debate adjourned April 30]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any hon. members wishing to speak to this bill? The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today in the House to speak on Bill 203, Long Term Care Information Act. Bill 203 was introduced by my colleague from Red Deer-North. This bill will create a registry accessible to the public to disseminate information on each long-term care facility in Alberta and ensure that it's regularly updated.

Now, as the population is aging, thousands of Alberta families are going to have to start making important decisions on their care and the care of their family members. This is something that every family has to go through. Of course, most seniors I know would prefer to stay in their homes as long as possible and, of course, have medical care provided in their homes. This would help clear up spaces in our long-term care facilities and help seniors live where they want to live. However, there comes a point when a family has to sit down and decide when it's time to move to a facility with greater care. It can be an overwhelming experience just trying to compare all the different facilities and all the options they provide.

There are many factors to consider, everything from cost to availability to personal care options, which brings us to the bill before the House, Bill 203. Bill 203 would put all the information on long-term care facilities into an easy-access registry that could help seniors and their families make very informed and important decisions. The information that this registry would include would be, of course, the name and contact information of the operator of the facility; the type of facility; the total number of residents; the description of the intake process; obviously, services provided by the facility; accommodation charges; and other information. Can you imagine a senior and their family trying to gather this information on their own?

As I mentioned before, it can be a very time-consuming process, looking at all the different long-term care options. Now, having all this information readily available could save families time and could help give them peace of mind in what could already be an extremely difficult and a very stressful situation.

The registry would also enable seniors to make their own choices for long-term care facilities if they're able to do so and without having one chosen for them by a continuing care placement co-ordinator. Now, this would give independence to seniors, which is something I believe they actually seek.

Furthermore, such a registry could help to decipher all the information present and allow potential residents to give input into the system. This could allow for the registry to potentially find the best fit for seniors who are seeking a long-term care facility.

Now, that being said, I don't think I have to go any further into the merits of such a registry. However, similar resources already exist in various formats available online. On the government of Alberta website exists a list of all the long-term care facilities funded by the government of Alberta. This data set already includes much of the information that this bill seeks to put within a registry. Further, the Alberta website has a searchable website where people can search for continuing care facilities throughout Alberta. With this, it is important to ask: will this bill potentially be redundant, or will this bill in some way expand the information that is available to Albertans? Will this bill increase the frequency that this information is updated? One would hope so.

As my previous points have indicated, this bill does have a lot of good points and does do a good deal of service for Albertans. I do question the redundancies, however, as I wouldn't want to have an increase in bureaucracy and cost if we're forcing multiple different government employees to be publishing the exact information. Or is it the case that this bill would just possibly be replacing previous online resources that are currently available? As I'm not a fan of duplication of process, especially in government, I would hope that multiple different government websites are not all providing the exact same service. That would be quite wasteful, especially in times when we're already facing an $8 billion deficit.

Further, Alberta Health Services already has the ability to create the website without passing legislation. It is ultimately unlikely, with the large Health budget, that there's not been the capacity to get this done. I believe that the Department of Health, with the Health budget, and Alberta Health Services have sufficient IT departments and resources – I'm pretty sure they do – to be able to provide this on their own without legislation. Again, I don't have an issue with the ideas behind Bill 203, but I don't want to create redundancies.

Further, it is important to note that there are other pressing issues facing long-term care in Alberta. Now, we might recall that the Auditor General in the 2017 report identified many issues with long-term care in Alberta. These include a recommendation to create a system to periodically verify that facilities have a sufficient level of staff every day of operation and to "develop a system to periodically verify that facilities [provide] the [correct] care every day by implementing individual resident care plans and meeting basic needs of residents.” I think these issues are a higher priority than the content of Bill 203 such that I believe that if a private member’s bill on long-term care was introduced, the issues that were mentioned by the Auditor General should have been addressed.

As mentioned earlier, if information on long-term care facilities is already available online, then why would we need to introduce this bill to potentially duplicate resources and services? With the issues facing residents in long-term care facilities, our time as legislators should be used to address these issues raised by the Auditor General and other issues that are being raised by our constituents regarding long-term care.

In closing, Madam Speaker, Bill 203 is a beneficial piece of legislation that can aid seniors and families in making decisions on long-term care facilities. However, this is likely a duplication of service that is already provided. I think that’s something we need to consider. While the goals of this bill are good, it is important that this government realize that there are many issues additionally in long-term care that they could be addressing, as per what was stated, as I said earlier, in the 2017 Auditor General’s report. Potentially, maybe Bill 203 could have included some of that.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to speak to the Long Term Care Information Act and the long-term care system in Alberta. This is about people being able to make informed decisions and understanding that folks that are in these particular situations need to be informed and need to be brought into the conversation.

In concept, the bill looks very good. There are a few things, of course, that I’m concerned about, that I’d like to chat about a bit, but the concept of the bill is quite beneficial and, hopefully, will move the health care system in the right direction. Having said that, though, it’s similar to what the member had said with regard to the AISH bill. You don’t want to ever make these decisions without making sure that the stakeholders that are impacted by this are fully informed and that they’re part of this discussion. That’s one of the things, I think, that needs to happen as we go forward, that their decisions are fully informed and that they’re able to participate and that we understand that folks that are in this particular situation are the ones that need to make these right decisions for themselves.

I wanted to understand, too. I have a question: how were people getting this information before? I mean, obviously, we support efforts to improve long-term health care, improve access to information, but is this bill actually giving a solution to that, or is this a redundant part of the information, that already exists? It seems to me that this information is already available.

Long-term care facilities. The potential user of the registry will only have a portion of the information available to them. Why is that? It seems interesting, for lack of a better word, that the importance of putting this bill forward is to make sure that people have access to information, but then they’re not allowed to have the full information, Madam Speaker. That seems to defeat the whole purpose of the registry. If somebody could maybe answer that for me and explain why that is being left out.

I would suggest that more information is better. As I understand it, I mean, if you read the name of the bill, the Long Term Care Information Act, the assumption would be that information is available, right, Madam Speaker? Like, that would be the assumption, but it seems to me that the information is going to only be what it is – I’m not sure. It’s a little bit broad. So I would like some clarity and some understanding on how the potential user of the registry will be able to access that information. And if my understanding is correct, if only parts of this information are accessible: why?

The whole point of the bill is to enable access to information. The government had said this on several occasions, about it being a one-stop shop. Well, if the registry itself doesn’t contain all the information and the person who is requiring that information then has to go to the larger registry to find out the rest of the information, this is very complex and complicated. My assumption is to make this easier for people to have access. Again, I have to restate that we already have access to this information. As I understand it, the thing is that they’re going to have to extensively research other pieces of information that are not going to be accessible to them in this particular piece of information. So why do that? I’m certainly not against the bill. I just don’t understand the premise of the bill if the bill is actually stopping access to information, which is what it’s fully intended to do in the first place. I think it’s a really simple question.

Then we’ll be seeing a list of facilities and the criteria laid out in the bill. What will that look like? How is the government going to list facilities and criteria? Is this something that is looked at just like looking on a hotel website, where they show pictures of it and what the rooms look like and various amenities that are available, sort of like a sales pitch for this place? Or is it just basically, “Here’s the facility. Here’s what you have,” and then there will be a government standardized application form built into the website? Do I understand that correctly? How does that work? What is the list of criteria? Or, again, is the government expecting the user to sift through that? I mean, then you’re going to have to get a whole other app to put together for this in order to be able to sort via cost or via whatever it is, whatever the criteria is for this. It would be interesting to see because there is absolutely no idea of how this application will work.

Again, I’m not against the bill. I just find this extremely redundant, and I have no understanding of how the application will be. So if the user is required to sift through the information, that person, then, I believe – I mean, they’re obviously wanting to be able to make their own decisions, but if the government is making it more difficult for the user to find the information, I’m not quite sure what the purpose is. Maybe I’m misunderstanding this. If I’m wrong, that’s just fine. I’m sure it can be explained very, very easily. However, how is a person supposed to determine the best fit for themselves if they’re required to sift through the information?

We’re not sure what that’s going to look like or how that application will work or how people will understand what that is. Are they expected to go and view all of these facilities before they go in there? What if they’re not able to do that? These are all questions that need to be asked in terms of being able to sort through and sift through all of this information. As you can imagine, I mean, all of us have probably booked a trip online before, and that’s minor compared to this. This is a person’s life and where they’re going to be spending their time for the rest of their life. However, all of us have done this online before, and there have been times where you’ve looked at a facility and everything is there, and you show up and it’s not what you expected. That happens sometimes. Of course, that’s our choice to go online and do those things. We can hire somebody to do that as well, but if you’re like me and you go online and you spend hours and hours and hours trying to find where you’re going to go, it’s not always what you expect it to be. It’s my responsibility to find that out.

However, the government is trying to supposedly make this easier for people, but it looks to me, upon reading it, that they're going to have this massive amount of material to go through and sift through based on the government's criteria and what they deem to be a certain particular thing because there is no information about what that looks like. Then a person is supposed to make that decision based on the criteria that the government has depicted at that point in time. I think that we just have to be careful about how that goes and what that looks like. I'll be very interested in hearing from the government's side about what that will look like.

I mean, obviously, we would like our seniors to get the maximum benefit from this. My assumption is that the government is actually trying to make this easier for our seniors, but as you can see, there are things that actually could make it more difficult. You want to get the most value that you possibly can from this registry. You want to make sure that maximum value also has maximum information and that it's easily accessible and that they don't have to go to another site to be able to find out the information that's not on this one because the registry will only have a portion of the information. I think it would be a very easy fix for the government to look at just adding this in to what's maybe already there. But pulling this apart and making another registry may not accomplish what the government's intent is. Just as a suggestion.

I just have a question, too. You know, this is an initiative through the Ministry of Health. Having access to that information is so important for seniors who have made the decision to move to long-term care. Is it required in legislation to do this? Is the bureaucracy necessary in order to create this registration, Madam Speaker, or is there some way that this can be incorporated into what already exists and then have it laid out specifically for seniors to make it easier for them? It's just a question. I mean, right now . . . [Mrs. Aheer's speaking time expired]

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I don't know if anybody in here or everybody in here has searched for a facility for an aging parent. My parents wanted to live in their own home until they died, and we were certainly prepared to support them to do that. I had somebody come into my office, and they came in and started to talk about looking for long-term care for a parent. I thought I was listening to the details of my own family's story when this person talked to me.

My dad passed away before my mom. He did stay at home, and he died at home in his own bed. However, my mom was by herself. We realized that for the 14 years after my dad died, she was slowly starting to deteriorate. When she offered me a cup of tea and turned the electric kettle on and then took the tea bags and put them on the burner and turned the burner on, I knew we had a bit of a problem. My sister and I talked about it, and then my other siblings talked about it.

Initially we were able to secure two home-care workers that came and broke the week up between the two of them so that they were there with her. However, we knew that that wasn't going to last for a long time because her care required more than they were able to give her, so my siblings and I were looking for facilities. Now, what we had to do was go out and visit every facility to see what it provided. Could we perhaps convince our mother that that's where she needed to be? Well, that's not an easy thing to do. Certainly, we spent – well, I shouldn't say we. I did a little time, but my other sister spent most of the time looking. She didn't just look in my mom's hometown; she looked in areas around each of our homes because we lived in different areas. What would be the best fit for Mom?

Well, Mom woke up one morning and slipped on the floor and broke her hip. She had to have surgery. After the surgery her hip healed fine, but she never really came out of the anaesthetic. It meant that we needed to find a place fairly quickly, and she was being kept in the hospital until we could find a bed for her. Now, as I said, there was a lot of time spent looking, and eventually she was moved out of the hospital into a facility that, in fact, we weren't very happy with. In the long run it was a good facility and they provided good care to Mom, but it wasn't a place that Mom would have wanted to be. She didn't have a garden that she could sit in and look at her flowers. It didn't have many of the things that she needed.

However, I've had a number of discussions with my colleague from Red Deer-North about the things that we asked in every facility. In fact, there were a couple of questions that are here that when we asked those facilities, they didn't provide an answer to us. It was the question about the results of inspections. We couldn't get an answer. However, if this is necessitated by this bill, as it is, this would be on the website. I would have to say that being able to go in and access a database that has every bit of information about those facilities that we could consider would have made this a lot easier. In fact, my mother could have participated in this part of it before she had had that surgery.

Ultimately, my mom went to a facility that she had no say in, and in fact we weren't as happy as we would have liked to have been when that facility was chosen for her. However, I can certainly go in and look at all of this so that my kids will not have to do that for me. I can go in, and if at some point I'm going to have to go into a long-term care facility, then I will have that legwork done. In fact, they may go in on the website and be able to verify the things that I've provided to them.

I kind of liken this to buying a car. Years ago, when I bought my first car, my dad and I had a conversation about what I could afford, what kind of a vehicle would be a good vehicle for me to get around, to go to work, to do whatever I had to do. Again, the way we did it was that we went from car dealership to car dealership to car dealership and took those vehicles out for a ride. Now I can go in and I can put the parameters for what I want into the computer at a dealership, and they can come up with the car that I want to get, they can come up with the price, and they can meet all those parameters. For me, I find that this bill actually addresses that, and it would have addressed it had that been in place when my mother needed to go to a facility.

I stand in absolute support of this bill, and I thank the Member for Red Deer-North for bringing this bill forward as her private member's bill because I know from our conversations that many of her constituents have also talked to her about this, as they have in my constituency.

Thank you very much. I stand in full support of this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's actually a real pleasure for me to rise to . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I just need to verify. Have you already spoken on this bill?

Dr. Turner: Oh, I apologize.

The Deputy Speaker: You have spoken already on this bill.

Dr. Turner: I'll wait for Committee of the Whole.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other member who wishes to speak? The hon. member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and speak to this very thoughtful private member's bill brought forward by the Member for Red Deer-North. A number of reasons, personally, that I'm very pleased to rise in support of this piece of legislation stem from my lengthy career as a real estate agent, when in many, many cases the reason for sale of a property was that the client, the seller, was entering into a stage of life where they needed long-term care. They could no longer live in their own home, either one or both of the owners. Quite often it was the one surviving owner of the house, and that necessitated, as it often does, that the real estate agent get involved in family discussion on providing services that are needed to house in long-term care the surviving tenant of the property that's going to be sold. Very often as a service to clients, of course, real estate agents will apprise themselves of all different types of information that is going to be helpful to get their client to move into the next suitable property, and in this particular case it's to find and be apprised of what options there are for long-term care for that client.

Numerous times we would as real estate agents consult with each other in our own brokerages and talk about places that we happened to know of or had happened to situate past clients in and had good success with. Notwithstanding the fact, as some members have pointed out, that there's a list of long-term care facilities on the government website and that there might have been a list of such facilities in publications such as those put out by SAGE, the Seniors Association of Greater Edmonton, there was always a question as to whether or not they were totally comprehensive, accurate, and up to date. The requirement wasn't there that the existing facilities actually had to register.

That's a small gap in the legislation, and that is served by this private member's bill. That's what private members are responsible to fulfill. When they discover a small gap in legislation that can be satisfied with a change in the rules and governance, then this is what a private member's responsibility is to do, and I think the Member for Red Deer-North had done just that in this case. She's found a need that families have and professionals such as real estate agents have when an individual who's no longer able to live independently needs to find the most appropriate long-term care facility and has to rely on information that might be incomplete.

I know that, for example, when discussing with colleagues in the office about situating an individual in a certain long-term care facility that was close to home and accessible by relatives and had the right type of services available, somebody else would pipe up and say: hey, did you hear about this one? And we hadn't, so it was not completely comprehensive, and it left one wondering if we had actually been able to give the right advice to that particular family. This piece of legislation addresses that risk of perhaps not having all the information at hand for a family to be able to make the correct and fulsome decision to situate that family member in the most appropriate long-term care facility. It does address a niche that was a gap in the information that families, I think, deserve to have when they're making that decision.

It really makes a huge difference in the life of an individual who's going into long-term care to get it right the first time. If indeed a person has to go through and switch long-term care facilities after they've lived in one for a while, one that was chosen by family members in consultation with anybody they could find who would let them know about facilities that were available, only to discover subsequently that there was a better option that existed that they didn't really know about, that would have prevented the necessity of a secondary transitional move, that's a really unfortunate situation to find oneself in. It's difficult for particularly the elderly to face significant changes in their life.

A move is one of the most stressful things that a person can go through. Secondary to loss of a spouse or a divorce, moving is the third most stressful life event that a person can go through. That's something that I dealt with every day of my life as a real estate agent. So if we can avoid a situation where an elderly person has to move a second time because family members discover that there's a more appropriate facility that they could have selected had they known about it, that's a huge, huge benefit to the lives of seniors and their families that is addressed by this private member's bill.

I really am pleased that the Member for Red Deer-North has brought it forward. It may not seem to be a huge cog in the wheel of life, but when it's your mom or your dad or your grandparents who are facing that decision as to where they will live in the waning years of their life to get the best care and also how they can situate themselves close to family members who are assisting and visiting and monitoring and overseeing that family member's care, those are hugely important logistical decisions and, I would say, health as well as mental health decisions not only for the person receiving long-term care but for those caregivers who are undertaking responsibility to make sure that their parent, their loved one, their aunt, their uncle, whoever the individual that they're caring for might be, is indeed making the best decision the first time to avoid a possible secondary move, which is totally upsetting and unsettling, particularly for individuals who are seniors and no longer exercising independent decisions and feeling that loss of independence as a debilitating experience.

To have to go through it a second time is really something that should be avoided, and I think this bill goes a long way to addressing that. One of the consequences of it is that you'll have seniors or individuals needing long-term care in a facility that is the most appropriate facility available at the time given that they would have access to an up-to-date resource of facilities that exist throughout the province.

I applaud the efforts of the member for responding to this need and addressing the concerns of families who are under enough stress as caregivers already that they shouldn't be given the burden of possibly having to make this decision twice. I fully support the legislation and the private member's focus on the concerns of her constituents as well as the benefit to seniors that this legislation provides, those individuals who built our province and deserve our absolute respect and attention when it comes to making sure that the actions of government make their life easier.

That's, of course, a focus of this government, whether it's long-term care for seniors or any other health aspect of a senior's life. We definitely respect and recognize the contribution of our seniors to the province and its well-being. I for one am, of course, above the certain age that is going through a similar process myself, having done so with grandparents and now with parents, a surviving mother. That is something that I face daily, the question of keeping my ailing mother in her own home, which she's been able to do so far with the help of a live-in caregiver. But, you know, at some point it may be possible that that type of an in-house caregiving situation doesn't meet her needs. So definitely knowing exactly what long-term care facilities might be available when that time comes for us as a family to make a decision and make a choice is going to be essential. I can't imagine how regretful I would be if we indeed made a decision to place my mom in a long-term care facility and then found out that there was a better option, that we didn't know about, that we might have known about had this registry existed.

I really look forward to the establishment of this registry. That component of it I think is really important and will be a very helpful and welcome service for families such as my own which are in the midst of making those decisions for a loved one. I applaud once again the efforts and thoughtfulness of the Member for Red Deer-North and look forward to passage of the legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: I'd like to invite the hon. Member for Red Deer-North to close debate.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am very happy to rise today and speak to my bill, Bill 203, the Long Term Care Information Act. While crafting the bill, it was very important to me to look into what other jurisdictions were doing regarding the availability of long-term care information. I was pleased to see that other provinces had put in place similar resources to what I am proposing in my bill. While the context of information varies from province to province, there are plenty of examples of provincial governments supporting people investigating long-term care options. British Columbia, Ontario, New Brunswick, and Newfoundland have comprehensive sites that include all types of continuing care facilities.

However, it is important to note, Madam Speaker, that those accessing these websites need to have a strong understanding of the language used in order to differentiate between the types of care offered. Inspection reports are available within some regions by way of an extra link, as is the case with B.C. and Ontario. However, this information varies as well. Currently Saskatchewan is revamping its website, taking the responsibility of providing this information from regional health authorities and placing it with the provincial government. In Manitoba, P.E.I., and Nova Scotia there are listings, but they encompass all aspects of health and not just long-term care. As a result, they do not necessarily make it an easy, one-stop shop model.

I'm proud to say that this bill can provide consistency, accuracy, and information that enables those searching to have the majority of their questions answered through the information provided. From the crossjurisdictional research we can confirm the importance of having this information available within a one-stop resource and that the variety of approaches serve as an interesting sample of the ways we could potentially approach this issue in Alberta.

Madam Speaker, this bill serves to support a framework that enables Albertans looking into long-term care to identify the qualitative information that is available immediately. This bill serves to provide the basic contact information, operator and facility type, total resident capacity, additional services and fees, inspections and results as well as establishment. Additionally, it makes it a requirement that this information be updated regularly to ensure the integrity of the information is accurate. This bill will also ensure the government has the flexibility to include additional information that Albertans deem necessary and require. Transparency regarding inspections and outcomes also serves to provide opportunity for corrective measures to be implemented and addresses systematic gaps that hinder compliance.

My Long Term Care Information Act is aimed at easing the stress and streamlining information required when a loved one is determining which long-term care facility best serves their needs, and that, Madam Speaker, makes life easier for Albertans. As individuals choosing our forever homes, our needs are a priority in making the best decision, and having that information available in one location enables and empowers the right decision-making process. I have done the research, spoken to governing agencies as well as enlisted the feedback from constituents, and there is strong support for a resource that provides ease of access to this information. As I mentioned, this bill speaks to certain criteria required to build this resource, but that does not mean that more information cannot be provided.

My Long Term Care Information Act will establish transparency regarding space availability as well as maintain acceptable standards of information, but what it also does, Madam Speaker, is to provide the information within one stop. That supports transparency, and this is what Albertans are asking for.

While there are numerous items that this website can disclose, Madam Speaker, it is important to remember that availability of specific items such as dietary issues can also be addressed within the forum of the resident and family council body.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:31 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed, I've had a request to revert to Introduction of Guests.

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly one of my constituents, Jim McIndoe. Mr. McIndoe is a University of Calgary graduate who spent 40 illustrious years in the oil and gas industry, mainly on the exploration and production side of the business. He started and sold four exploration and production companies during his career before retiring as CEO of NuLoch Resources. He continued as a director for NuLoch after it was sold to an American company in 2011. Since then he has been involved in various private enterprises and enjoying retirement. Mr. McIndoe is married with three children and six grandchildren, and he is joined today in the gallery by his daughter Leanne Kidd.

Mr. McIndoe is with us to listen to the debate on adverse possession because, as I will note later, he is a victim of this legislation and ended up losing over a thousand square feet of his residential lot because of adverse possession. I'm sure he never thought he would be a relative expert on this subject. He has been a tireless ally in bringing this legislation forward, and I hope that we are able to pass Bill 204 as it will prevent a situation like Jim's and all of the stress and loss that he suffered through that process, and hopefully we'll be able to make it never happen to another constituent of mine and yours ever again. I would now ask that Jim and his daughter Leanne Kidd please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Land Statutes (Abolition of Adverse Possession)
Amendment Act, 2018

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today to introduce Bill 204, the Land Statutes (Abolition of Adverse Possession) Amendment Act, 2018, into second reading. As heavy-handed as it may sound, the phrase "possession is nine-tenths of the law" may be true. In fact, it is true in today's Alberta after just 10 short years of possession. Or maybe it's just a case of: what's yours is mine, and what's mine is mine with respect to current Alberta law.

Bill 204 seeks to remove all reference to the legal doctrine of adverse possession, commonly known as squatters' rights, from Alberta's legislation in order to ensure that it is no longer grounds for claims, de facto legal seizure of land from the registered owner, who, in most cases, is just another good neighbour unaware of this outdated, archaic legislation.

In fact, as I just mentioned, joining us in the House today is one of my constituents, who in a recent adverse possession judgment, in Moore versus McIndoe, lost approximately 1,000 square feet of a suburban residential lot without compensation to such a claim and after thousands of dollars in legal bills fighting for what he felt were principles of fairness and reasonableness. Indeed and sadly, the outcome was not in his favour given current legislation, and in the application of law and administration of justice in this case, Madam Speaker, I ask you if that is justice.

Again, adverse possession in Alberta enables a trespasser who is occupying land without legal title for a period of 10 years as identified by surveys, land registration, and title, as reflected in our adopted Torrens system of land registration, to be recognized as the legal owner, indeed, a legal seizure under current law of somebody else's registered titled land.

Madam Speaker, I am proud to be bringing this bill forward today, following on the good and principled work of past and current members of this Legislature. In fact, as previously introduced, we have the former Member for St. Albert Mr. Ken Allred – I see he's joined us in the members' gallery – with us today, and of course the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod sits with us as my colleague in this House. What is the history with respect to attempts to address this issue? MLA Allred's Motion 507 was agreed to on November 28, 2011. MLA Allred's private member's bill 204 was passed unanimously on second reading on March 12, 2012. MLA Stier's Bill 204 was introduced to this House in 2017 in the Third Session of this Legislature. Now, again, ironically, in 2018, yes, another Bill 204.

I'm honoured to bring this bill forward on the strength of the past efforts of our legislative colleagues because I truly believe that adverse possession has no place in Alberta legislation in the future. If passed, Bill 204 would ensure that adverse possession would no longer constitute a legal basis for possessors to seize land without compensation and to take title of land that they have never paid for nor has ever legally belonged to them prior to exercising such a claim. Yes, that could be your good neighbour or in the rare case, that could become the not-so-rare case, as we now see in urban and suburban Alberta – often we think of this in rural terms, but the person who does not subscribe to your expectation of the good neighbour policy might be that neighbour that you face and purely because your fence was not on the survey line when it was built 10 years and one day ago.

Yes, currently in Alberta if a person possesses that land that does not belong to them for 10 or more years, so that 10 years and one day, they may legally claim title to the property, which in my mind clearly flies in the face of Alberta's very efficient land titles system, with its accurately marked boundaries, well-surveyed land titles, and the expectation of validity of commonly referenced real property reports, of which, I would suggest, any Alberta homeowner is quite familiar from when they've purchased or sold a home. Indeed, most would argue that this is conclusive proof of a registered owner's interest in the land.

Further, the government as owner and operator of the land registry guarantees the inviolability of current certificate of title as an accurate record of registered interests. I think we would all assume that that is the case. Madam Speaker, I believe and I'm encouraging the members of this House to agree that this is how it should be to allow peace of mind and certainty of title to all Albertans who have worked hard to become proud land- or homeowners. Historically land tenure in England, from where we inherited adverse possession, was based on boundaries indicated by general markers such as hedges, fences, ditches, probably a few castles in the middle. This is known as a general boundary system. As such, it was difficult to determine with precision the true boundaries of a plot of land, and property disputes were therefore common. Given that context, Madam Speaker, it is easy to understand why England established the doctrine of adverse possession, but in Alberta we adopted the Torrens system of land registration. Under the Torrens system the title to land in Alberta is registered and guaranteed by the province – registered and guaranteed; I'll repeat that – based on accurately surveyed parcels prior to the grant of title by the Crown. That sounds to me like ownership.

To this day the extent of a person's title is determined by those surveys, a measure which quite reliably protects landowners from such unjustified and inexplicable loss of property, as I'm sure Mr. McIndoe would be more than happy to share with members of this House if they so choose. Reliance on this well-established, government-administered land title registry system has avoided countless property disputes between neighbours, and in cases where disputes arise, landowners can easily resolve the problem by verifying the original survey.

As we can see, Madam Speaker, the principle and issues that adverse possession was meant to resolve in jolly old England never actually existed in Alberta. To this day the doctrine does not offer any real benefit to everyday Albertans. In fact, it has caused a number of difficult legal challenges over the years. In 1965 the city of Calgary lost numerous plots of land to an adverse possession claim, and in 1993 irrigation districts also lost land in two adverse claims. This Legislative Assembly subsequently amended legislation to ban adverse possession claims against municipalities and irrigation district lands. Such amendments made abundant sense under the circumstances to protect those parties from spurious claims. By passing Bill 204 and abolishing adverse possession completely, we will afford that same protection to all Albertans.

Similarly, Madam Speaker, an action for adverse possession in 1948 deprived a landowner of some significant improvements on the land, which resulted in an amendment to the Land Titles Act, which is now entrenched in the Law of Property Act under section 69, which is very beneficial to Albertans and, in fact, has been duplicated in other provinces. Section 69 of the Law of Property Act enables a landowner who has mistakenly built lasting improvements on a neighbour's land to lay a claim to that land so that they do not lose their investment or assets. The legislation requires the occupier to pay fair and just compensation to the true landowner in keeping with the spirit of the law while protecting both the legal owner and the land of the neighbour who may have built on that in good faith. So we do have protection for unusual circumstances by abolishing adverse possession.

Section 69 of the Law of Property Act adequately addresses problems of building encroachments among other similar issues that may arise from time to time, so that protection is afforded by section 69. Knowing that section 69 in the Law of Property Act is in place, we can rest assured that the abolition of adverse possession will certainly not leave a gap in our legislation. Instead, it will make room for more modern and relevant laws to protect Alberta landowners and bring us in conformity with all other Canadian Torrens jurisdictions that currently ban adverse possession.

Madam Speaker, perhaps it is finally time – and maybe three times will be the charm for Bill 204 – to pass these measures in the abolition of adverse possession once and for all in Alberta. This in turn will further support the integrity of the registry system and the reliability of the title record and would serve to protect the land- and homeowners I believe it is intended for and the rights they believe they hold with respect to private property.

Madam Speaker, you can think about this in an urban setting. Again, we think of this in a rural setting. But what if you own a 25-foot piece of land, an urban infill here in the city of Edmonton? You build a fence on the north side, and it's six inches on the wrong side, inside your property, and you build one on the south side, and it's six inches in. Now you actually have a 24-foot lot. Well, actually, at that point in time you do not meet the setback regulations when you build a home on that. So if push came to shove, you could actually be told that your house is not compliant.

These are the kinds of issues we could face, and we could face thousands of adverse possessions across this city and across this province because fences have been in the wrong place for 10 years and a day. That is not right, Madam Speaker. In that light, I ask you to support Bill 204.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to Bill 204? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak in support of Bill 204, Land Statutes (Abolition of Adverse Possession) Amendment Act, 2018. I want to thank my colleague the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for the leadership he has displayed in introducing this bill. He's allowing all of us in this Chamber to end an unfair practice that over decades became law through our common-law system. He is also allowing Alberta's United Conservatives to end the NDP's practice in committee of burying progressive movement on this issue.

Madam Speaker, if any one of us walked out on the street today and told the first person we came across that someone could set up on their land and then after 10 years it would become theirs even if it's been in your family for generations, they would not believe us. They would think that we're talking about some old bylaw that was on the books but everyone ignored. In fact, that's not true, and I can provide a recent example of how challenging it can be.

You know, Madam Speaker, I'll tell a little story about something that happened right in my community and not that many years ago. There was a fellow that owned quite a bit of land there, and one of his quarter sections had an old shack on it, and a struggling family moved into that shack and happily lived there for quite a while. The landowner was okay with that because he thought he was helping this family out and doing the right thing, and everybody lived quite harmoniously and peacefully for quite a few years.

Nine years later he became aware of this adverse possession. Luckily for him, he found out about it in nine years and not 10 years. The sad part was that, obviously, the family that moved into the shack was well aware of the adverse possession, and the landowner couldn't get them to move out. The guy even told him: well, in a year from now this is going to be my land, anyway. He had no choice. He got the police involved because he couldn't get them to move off his land. Actually, when the police went out there, it ended up being a standoff with weapons and firearms, and there were young children in the house. He eventually let the children and the wife out, and most of the day they had a standoff.

Eventually they did get the guy to give in, and they arrested him and took him to jail. Of course, the guy wasn't in jail that long. He got out, and the family lived there throughout the whole time he was in jail. I'm not saying anything, Madam Speaker, but for some reason mysteriously that house got burned down one night, and I guess the problem was resolved. Why would we force people to have to come to do these things?

With this legislation now I'm sure that that fellow would have been happy to let that family keep living there. They could still be living there today, but because of the laws that we have, he wasn't able to do that. Hopefully, we'll get support to pass this legislation here today, and things like that won't have to happen again.

Madam Speaker, to abolish adverse possession, or squatters rights, as it's often better known, has gone on far too long. In recent years we have found opportunities to take steps that delete it from our statutes. We came close with a former colleague, Mr. Allred, the former Member for St. Albert, who is here today observing. I know he worked long and hard to get this done. He came really close. He introduced the motion, it passed first and second readings, and then it died on the Order Paper, Madam Speaker. So it came close once.

Then in 2014 it came up again. The Property Rights Advocate recommended abolishing adverse possession by resurrecting Mr. Allred's private member's bill, but nothing happened.

In 2016 Conservative members of the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship sought to support the Property Rights Advocate with another motion to abolish adverse property rights, but the NDP members used their majority to send it to Justice for a review. And what happened next? The information we received was that the Alberta Law Reform Institute is "currently developing its work plan for this project.” So here we are – what? – three years later, and they haven’t even got a work plan started yet. Madam Speaker, that information was provided to the committee after the fact because Justice could not answer the question in committee.

So what did we learn? Years after the Resource Stewardship Committee provided clear direction to start the work to abolish adverse possession, the department was still developing its work plan. Does that even make sense? Who is accountable for this issue being shelved? It’s not the bureaucrats. They take their orders from the minister. So we can only presume that the minister is choosing to ignore the all-party committee’s recommendation.

In October 2017 the Resource Stewardship Committee gave another strong push, this time suggesting that the Legislative Assembly review adverse possession and other property rights issues, but the government members had other plans. They once again used their majority to put forward a motion, which we were unable to change, directing the government to do the review. This was seven months ago, and as expected, the NDP has simply buried the issue.

Madam Speaker, that is why I’m so pleased to see the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek bring forward Bill 204. Once again we’re going to give this a try, and hopefully with the co-operation of all members in the House we can maybe be successful this time. We can do it here in the Assembly in quick order. As I mentioned at the outset, should the average Albertan learn about this law, they would be shaking their heads if every member of this Chamber did not simply vote in favour of it today.

Madam Speaker, Alberta’s United Conservatives have fundamental respect for property rights. We work tirelessly to ensure that the right of all Albertans to freely own, enjoy, and exchange property is protected. Our commitment to this principle will never waiver. You know, it just seems like common sense to me. This shouldn’t be that hard to do, and it’s been tried quite a few times.

I know that a lot of the members on the opposite side aren’t rural. I know there are a couple of rural members over there. It’s hard for somebody living in a city to understand. You couldn’t even imagine if somebody moved into your backyard in the city and squatted there in a tent and stayed there for 10 years and all of a sudden said that it was their land. Like, you can’t even imagine that happening. But that’s what’s happening in rural Alberta. It doesn’t make sense, but hopefully, you know, through this member’s bill here today we’ll have support in this House and finally get this archaic law removed.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It’s a pleasure to get up and speak to this private member’s bill. Of course, that private member’s bill was in this House previously. It’s always good to debate private members’ bills in this House because they come forward from members who are very passionate about the particular topics that they bring forward.

I listened to the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek’s opening and the rationale for the bill. Of course, I myself and the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek both represent urban ridings in Calgary. His is a little bit more suburban than mine, but, you know, the same sort of issues apply. I agreed with him when he talked about issues about when you have infills, like when you have a fence on one side that’s slightly out or a fence on the other.

In my riding of Calgary-Currie the original houses in certain parts of that area were built as early as 1910, 1920, and since in Calgary you could build a garage in your backyard with no building permit for many of those years, there are many garages and fences that have been built over the years, perhaps, without proper surveying. So the hon. member’s point is taken, that even in an urban context, for a person with a piece of land, this piece of legislation on adverse possession may be relevant.

It’s quite interesting. There are multiple pieces of legislation that this has touched. As I understand it, the argument from the hon. member is that there are pieces of legislation to deal with scenarios where, say, for example, I built a garage in my backyard and just perhaps had a couple of inches in my neighbour’s yard due to a surveying error – or perhaps the house was even bought that way – and to deal with how the neighbours can deal with that and perhaps have some compensation there.

You know, I think this also counts if there’s a problem for real estate agents as well. Of course, he mentioned real property reports. Those are always quite good. I myself, having been in the house-hunting process for a while, you know, often look at pieces of property where there’s a shared driveway between two pieces of property. Instead of having a traditional driveway up to a garage in the front of the house or a garage in the rear, there’s actually a driveway between the two houses, which means, of course, that that driveway is half on somebody’s piece of property. That real property report is always quite interesting because, depending on where the houses are positioned, if one person or another wanted to put a fence on that driveway – I don’t know very many cars that are four feet wide, so that would potentially be problematic. I think it speaks to the importance of making sure that there are agreements between neighbours in this particular regard, specifically on how to deal with that when it comes to compensation.

I have to admit that this is something that, previous to this, I hadn’t thought much about. I know that our rural members, you know, from the story the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti brought up, do hear about this a lot more often. I have to admit that in my office it is something that no constituent has ever asked me about. That’s not to say that in the future they won’t, but through this debate I’m aiming to try and see things from both sides, for what may be pros for this, what cons there may be.

As we know, in this House several members always like to use the phrase about wanting to make sure that we examine these bills thoroughly to watch out for unintended consequences. You know, I think the history of politics in general, whether it be in this province or Canada or even at a city level, is rife with well-intentioned people who have missed something or didn’t see a particular outcome of what the legislation would do. You do something over here to fix a problem, and it creates problems a couple of pieces of legislation and regulations over, where it has a totally unexpected outcome.

You know, I think the hon. member made a very compelling case on the reasons for his bill. I can’t remember if it was the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek or for Grande Prairie-Wapiti who was talking about how, of course, this has come forward in the Resource Stewardship Committee. There was a suggestion that perhaps the issue is being buried.

I know that out of those motions that came from the Resource Stewardship Committee, the government requested expert analysis from the Alberta Law Reform Institute. They began that work in the fall of 2017. Of course, the Alberta Law Reform Institute – I’m probably just going to call it ALRI from now on so I don’t trip over that. You know, we went out and asked them for advice when this bill was introduced, and they told us, “While considerable work has been done, we are not yet in a position to make preliminary recommendations and to put those out for consultation with stakeholders.” The institute went on to say, “To exempt claims to recover possession of land from the operation of the Limitations Act would be a significant change to Alberta law and one that should not be undertaken without thorough review.”

I don’t think the member who proposed this bill would disagree with that statement as, of course, it would be a major change. I haven’t had a chance to hear a fulsome debate. My first thoughts would be to let the ALRI complete their work to see what comes out of those changes. I know, of course, that this would touch on several areas. You know, we want to make sure this isn’t touching any other pieces of legislation.

I know the Wills and Succession Act, which came into effect in 2012, is an example of viable legislation that came from the ALRI. The ALRI’s work on reviewing adverse possession, you know, I believe, also included a review of private members’ bills that were brought forward in the House, and I believe it was a private member’s bill that was previous to this one here from Calgary-Fish Creek. They are actually reviewing approximately 50 Alberta cases that have been mentioned in adverse possession cases since 2000 to consider how these cases fit in with historical case law in this area and whether amendments to the Limitations Act would have led the law to go in a different direction if a piece of legislation were to pass. The work also includes a look at other jurisdictions and their dispute resolution mechanisms that act as a substitute for adverse possession. I believe the hon. member mentioned that in his opening statements.

Discussion of adverse possession, you know, usually focuses on boundary disputes due to human occupation intentionally, as was the story from Grande Prairie-Wapiti, or, of course, by human error. As we know, in our suburban areas sometimes people build garages and wells and such without doing a survey first, and sometimes as a result stuff happens. But there can also be natural boundary changes where no person is at fault for trespass, and I would think that the law would need to accommodate both instances.

Abolishing adverse possession, just from my research on this, may require amendments to various pieces of legislation, including the Law of Property Act, the Land Titles Act as well as a review of related legislation such as the Municipal Government Act and the Public Lands Act to ensure, as I mentioned previously, that there are no unintended consequences. You know, my understanding is that that is part of the work the ALRI is undertaking. Transitional issues, of course, would need to be considered such as how to deal with existing rights and claims of owners or occupiers that would perhaps currently be in progress at that time.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It’s a pleasure to rise and speak to the bill this afternoon. I’m a little bit surprised, to be totally up front with you. Of course, I’m always up front with you, but I’m very, very shocked to hear my colleague from the other side of the world, by the sounds of things, express such concern about the potential of the unintended consequences and how this really isn’t an issue in the city but more so in rural Alberta when my colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek has a constituent who – I don’t know if you were following along at home – is from the city and not, in fact, from rural Alberta. I think that if the hon. member from across the way was listening, he would have heard that this individual, at significant cost, lost 1,000 square feet of his urban property.

This is not just an issue that affects rural Alberta but, in fact, affects urban Alberta as well. While I can appreciate that the member perhaps hasn’t had any of his constituents who have come in and addressed this issue specifically with him, this is a significant issue. Madam Speaker, the very interesting thing about this particular piece of legislation is that while it may not be a widespread problem, although it is certainly larger than people would expect it to be, for the people that it does affect, it has a significant and negative impact on those people.

We have fallen drastically behind many other jurisdictions on this issue of adverse possession, and it is outrageous that the government continues to drag their feet on this particular issue. You know, I think, Madam Speaker, this government has had such a lengthy record of doing one thing and saying another. Today, by all accounts, it certainly sounds like the government members are going to blame the ALRI and say: we need to wait for them to complete their work.

Madam Speaker, for extended periods of time members of this government used to claim that they supported property rights, so much so that in the much-celebrated platform of the NDP, which, I might add, had a few small challenges in it, including when they anticipated that the budget would be balanced . . .

An Hon. Member: It didn’t have a carbon tax.

Mr. Cooper: The other small challenge that they may have had was that they didn’t include significant things in it like, say, the single largest tax increase in Alberta’s history in the form of the carbon tax, but don’t worry about those small, little challenges.

Members of that government and, in fact, the Premier herself as well as the Minister of Transportation, the Government House Leader, at one point in time had a commitment to property rights, so much so that they wrote it into their platform in the form of 5.30: “We will strengthen landowners’ rights.” Madam Speaker, you’ll remember that the hon. member from Wetaskiwin, in his very first opportunity to bring important business before the Assembly, brought a motion on property rights. What has happened since then from this government is exactly nothing. We’ve heard them talk, talk, talk, talk with no action. What we have in the form of this NDP government is a government that says one thing and does another, and that is exactly what’s taking place this afternoon in the form of property rights.

Madam Speaker, I am confident that you will remember that during the debate around Bill 204, that was moved by my colleague for Livingstone-Macleod, the Government House Leader, the hon. Minister of Transportation, rose in his place and expressed significant support for this particular clause, the removal of adverse possession from the law in the province of Alberta. Now, that particular piece of legislation did a number of things, which, I might add, the government used to pretend that they supported. That was fair and equal compensation and a whole bunch of other issues that were particularly associated with Bill 28, Bill 50 – anyway, I’m sure that you are very aware of all of these things – that many people from all across the province had significant concerns about at that time. So my colleague for Livingstone-Macleod endeavoured to correct a whole bunch of those problems that still exist today.

The Government House Leader, to his credit, rose and said: “Listen, a number of these clauses” – I’m paraphrasing here – “are problematic, and we are unable to move forward on them at present, but we do support the removal of adverse possession.” He went so far as to say that if this particular piece of legislation was only a piece of legislation on adverse possession, in fact, he would potentially encourage private members of the government to then support that piece of legislation.

So what do we see? The member from Foothills addressing that exact problem. Peeled back from the legislation are all of those other significant concerns that many members on this side of the House still have. Sometimes, Madam Speaker, you know that politics is the art of the possible, so he, the wise young man that he is, in addressing significant concerns of many people from all across Alberta, rural or urban, brought forward to the House today a very reasonable piece of legislation that is possible.

Yet it sounds like government members are going to hide behind Bill 204, Bill 201, committee delays, and now the Justice department, who has done absolutely zero in terms of reporting back to the Legislature on the good member from Wetaskiwin's response on his motion. Now they're saying: oh, well, we've kicked the can down to the ALRI, and we should just really wait until we get feedback. Well, I don't understand what's better feedback that members on that side of the House need to receive than from the Premier, who has supported this in the past, from the Minister of Transportation, who as recently as just a couple of sessions ago supported the importance of property rights.

Again, it blows my mind how the government can be such a say one thing, do another government. They say that property rights are important, but their actions indicate to rural Albertans, to urban Albertans, who have these significant concerns, that they don't want to do anything about property rights, and it is my belief that that's exactly what we're going to see on this piece of legislation today or whenever it should pass second reading or likely fail at second reading, whether it's this week or next.

It is more than just a little disappointing because, I believe, Madam Speaker, Albertans actually were hoping for something different from this government, but what they are getting is more of the same. That's a government that implements the largest tax increase in Alberta's history without telling anyone about it prior. When they've said that they want to do something, their actions are the exact opposite. This isn't what Albertans expect of this government. It's one of the many reasons why the outstanding constituents of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, when they come to my office to express their displeasure with this government, are so anxious for the opportunity to send a Conservative government to Edmonton. One thing that the constituents of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills have been clear with me about is that this government hasn't listened to them, and they certainly, it appears, are not listening to the good folks who are in the gallery today who have their concerns.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to rise and speak to a bill that is the subject matter of my career's work in the real estate industry, and I do take some exception to some claims from members opposite that this caucus is not respectful of and not defenders of property rights in this province. You won't find a more committed defender of private property rights than this member speaking right now, having spent 30 years in the real estate industry defending those rights and establishing those rights for my clients. I'm really very happy to see the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek speak so eloquently in defence of our current Torrens land registry system because it is indeed, truly, the best system of land registration in the world.

Originally established in Australia, actually, it is a system which ensures that title is indefeasible, and that's one of the principles that is enshrined in the Torrens system. While the members opposite I think rightfully suggest that adverse possession is an affront to that indefeasibility, I think that we still need to respectfully follow the processes in place right now to ensure that the ALRI finalizes its work so that in making a determination as to which direction to go on this issue, we can make sure that there's an adequate dispute resolution mechanism in place.

I know that the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek did identify that, in his opinion, the dispute resolution mechanisms were sufficient already should this bill proceed and the legislation be adopted, but I think the process by which we've invoked the services of the Alberta Law Reform Institute is one that we should follow. I know it's time consuming and it has taken a bit more time than one would have hoped, but it's a situation that I think we should approach carefully, because I know that the land registration system that the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek speaks so highly of is one that we should protect and even consider strengthening over time.

For those that don't really know about it, I'll just briefly say that the Torrens title system operates on the principle of title by registration, granting the high indefeasibility of a registered ownership rather than the registration of title. The system does away with the need for providing a chain of title, as is common in many jurisdictions even in Canada or particularly in Quebec, which comes to mind, where you have to sometimes go to different parishes to find actual physical documents of title deeds to verify title and verify the subsequent sales of the property, one after another, to actually show that that chain of titles belongs to you rightfully and that you actually own the land.

The Torrens system does away with that need to prove a chain of title. The state, the province in this case, guarantees the title, and it's usually supported, as is stated, by a compensation scheme for those who lose their title due to private fraud or error in the state's operation. In most jurisdictions there are some portions of land which are still unregistered, but the Torrens system has three basic principles that it works under. The mirror principle: the registry reflects or mirrors accurately and completely the current facts about the title to each registered lot. This means that each dealing affecting a lot such as a transfer of title, a mortgage or discharge of the same, or a lease, an easement, or a covenant must be entered onto the register and so be viewable by a relatively inexpensive online search. That's one of the beauties of our Torrens system registration and the SPIN 2 government of Alberta website, that it's easily accessible at fairly low cost to individuals wanting to verify what the title registration is actually on a particular parcel of land, and it's government guaranteed.

That system is something that I think is under attack in other parts of Canada, where there is consideration to actually privatize that situation, the land registrations service. I think that in this province we can tell the world that that is a system of government land registration that we're going to protect here because it is fundamentally a right of Albertans, one that is enshrined in our human psyche in this province, that private property is sacrosanct and that registration of that private property should be held in public hands and not disseminated to a private company that may not have the same guarantees or the same abilities to guarantee the privacy of that information and the accuracy of it and the verifiability of that information.

So I'll always defend the Torrens system of land registration that we have in this province and the SPIN 2 accessibility to that information that we have on that government website. I really hope that we as a government will look to perhaps register other things within that SPIN 2 system that could rightfully belong there and be accessible to Albertans, whether it be, perhaps, vital statistics or other government information that we want the public to have ready access to and to have good verifiability at a reasonable cost and hopefully in the not-too-distant future on a 24/7 basis.

The Torrens system of registration is something that we're very, very fortunate to have in place here in Alberta. Most jurisdictions in the world would give their eye teeth to have the public registration of land title established in the way that we do in Alberta. Other jurisdictions, I believe Saskatchewan as well, operate under the Torrens system, British Columbia, too. It is something that we should always do our best to protect.

There's another principle in the Torrens system of land registration called the curtain principle. It says that one does not need to go behind the certificate of title as it contains all the information about the title. This means that ownership does not need to be proved by a long, complicated document that is kept by the owner, as in a private conveyancing system, that you'll find in the United States, where title deed companies will search title. It costs quite a bit of money, in a lot of cases, to actually go through successive documents, that may or may not be properly stored and accessible, to prove that you have the right to sell the property and that you indeed own it and can convey title to a new owner. There's a title deed insurance situation that takes place there that may protect the buyer, to compensate them in case of defects in that chain of evidence. But here the guarantor is the province. The state guarantees the veracity of title, so all the necessary information regarding ownership is on the certificate of title.

As indicated also by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, the indemnity principle, the third principle of the system of land registration we have in Alberta, the Torrens system, provides for compensation of loss caused by private fraud or errors made by the register of title. That situation is in place and is one that we should protect forcefully and never let go because once it's gone into private hands, it's gone forever. It's a real jewel, that we have the public system of land registration in Alberta.

The thing that we want to make sure of when we do look at the piece of legislation at hand, the private member's bill, is that before we decide upon whether or not to go ahead with it, we must make sure that the dispute resolution mechanisms are fully in place. I can think of situations many times over where there were difficulties with structures, in particular, on a piece of property that I had listed for sale or that a client of mine was looking to make an offer on or perhaps had even made an offer on subject to verification of compliance and so forth.

Most of the issues that you find, as the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti alluded to, are more rural situations. But what I do take a bit of an exception to is the allusion that perhaps urban members don't have the facility to comprehend what the rural situation might entail. In fact, many of the rural situations that a real estate agent or a land sale might encompass are fairly straightforward. They usually involve somebody having made a mistake.

One situation in particular I dealt with not too many years ago was a situation where an individual property owner had an acreage property and wanted to sell the property, list it for sale. He actually just let it slip that there was a well on his property. I thought that, well, maybe this was one of those abandoned well situations, like a water well that was no longer in use on an old homestead. But, no, it was a real well.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 204, the Land Statutes (Abolition of Adverse Possession) Amendment Act, 2018. I'm trying to learn more about this bill, and I was paying attention to hear from my colleagues on the other side if there was any reason why they oppose it. I haven't got there yet. I didn't quite understand whether they support it or oppose it. But I rise to speak in support of this bill, particularly when my fellow Calgarians are sitting in the gallery and want to listen to both sides of the aisle, the reasons why they oppose or support. I haven't heard that very clearly from both NDP members who spoke prior to me.

Madam Speaker, I was born and raised in India. There were lots of civil cases on property rights. I was sitting here and wondering. You know, I came to Canada thinking that here there is no chance that someone else can claim your property. It seems that it's a reality based on the examples given by both the members for Calgary-Fish Creek and Grande Prairie-Wapiti. That scares me to death. That means that my hard-earned money, that I put into investments in acquiring properties here, also might be at risk of being lost. I mean, that makes me think twice, to do even more research on that, which I'm going to do.

But today I want to talk about a few examples. The way I understood it is that in the past when people came early and if they stayed on the Queen's Crown land for 10 years, then it became theirs. But now adverse possession, better known as squatters' rights, where Alberta, you know, ran into trouble, also applies to private property. I didn't know that till the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek informed us, me particularly; others might know. Madam Speaker, just think of all the NDP world travellers scrambling to set up tents on the lawns of the homes of NDP members of the Legislature in order to ensure that in 10 years the lawn belongs to the squatters. How do they feel about that?

In 2012 former member Ken Allred – I think he was from St. Albert – brought forward a private member's bill which would have abolished adverse possession, and the bill received second reading and died on the Order Paper. In 2014 the Property Rights Advocate recommended that adverse possession be abolished. They made this recommendation because, in their view, abolishing adverse possession would strengthen the integrity of the land registry system and the reliability of the land title records. The 2014 report suggested introducing and passing the legislation previously brought forward by Mr. Allred.

In February 2016 the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship reviewed the 2014 report from the outgoing Property Rights Advocate, Lee Cutforth. Like the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti mentioned before, the NDP used their majority on the committee to refer the matter to the Department of Justice. We are not aware of any review having ever been initiated by the Department of Justice.

Would the Minister of Justice like to have some squatters on her property? I don't think so. But why is she wavering on this bill? We don't know. The government of Alberta has this beautiful building in downtown Calgary called McDougall Centre. If memory serves, I think a camper trailer can get pulled onto that lawn, too. It's big enough.

In February 2017 the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship again revisited the recommendations from the Property Rights Advocate, and the committee recommended that the government should abolish adverse possession. A motion was unanimously passed by the committee recommending that the government introduce legislation abolishing the common-law doctrine of adverse possession in Alberta and all statutory references supporting adverse possession in Alberta legislation. To date this has not been acted upon by this NDP government.

That's why we are here today with Bill 204. The Official Opposition is here to help the government. In their election manifesto they said that they support property rights. When they became government, they forgot about that, so we are here as the Official Opposition to remind them and help them to act on what they said they would do.

Adverse possession is an archaic law which needs to be abolished to protect the rights of property owners in Alberta. This is not the era of Rupert's Land, with the North West Company and the Hudson's Bay Company trading furs where the property title didn't exist. I know the Member for Edmonton-McClung, who happens to be the subject matter expert, is trying to educate us . . .

Mr. Gill: No, he's not. He's a realtor.

Mr. Panda: Yeah, but it seems he knows something about this. But he still didn't convince me that squatters can, you know, claim the property of private owners.

We're now the modern province of Alberta, with proper laws and a proper land title registry, which we agree with him on, and allowing an individual to intentionally or unintentionally possess the property of another individual without compensation for the original owner flies in the face of basic property rights. As I said, Madam Speaker, that really scared me, that in a western democracy like Canada it can happen. I couldn't imagine that.

This is an issue that spans the urban-rural divide. It's not urban-rural. The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek mentioned about what happened in Calgary in an urban area, too. We know of the people parking trailers in the yards of rental properties, and the landowner cannot evict the people living in the trailer or remove the trailer from the lot. It's time to abolish adverse possession. What would the Premier do if a tent city decided to set up on the south lawn of the Legislature and claim squatters' rights? It's a possibility. If we don't act on this, anybody can take advantage of that. We have seen tent cities set up in cities around the world, even in major European cities, in very public areas and common-use parks in the heart of those cities. You can be sure adverse possession has been extinguished to present land claims in those countries. Do we still need adverse possession here? It invites tent cities to form in public areas where we don't want people living; we want common-use space.

Madam Speaker, I would actually thank my colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek for bringing in this Bill 204, Land Statutes (Abolition of Adverse Possession) Amendment Act, 2018. It's time to do the right thing and end squatters' rights in Alberta. It's time that we protect property owners and protect their rights.

The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills talked about the Government House Leader and the Premier, that in the past they said that they'll stand up for the rights of Alberta property owners. This is the time, then. They have to put their money where their mouth is. He also illustrated the NDP election manifesto, where they said that they'll protect property rights. Here is your opportunity. I ask all members, on both sides of the aisle, to support this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to thank my colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek for bringing this important bill forward to this House. It's my pleasure to be able to speak to it.

Back in 2015, during the campaign for the election, I was in a debate with some other colleagues, and it was a question-and-answer period. A question was asked about squatter rights. I knew a little bit about squatter rights. I hadn't heard of specific examples, but they talked to us about this situation where an individual had nicely given a neighbour some land to be able to use. It wasn't a lot, but it was some land that they just lent. After 10 years they had tried to figure out some stuff, compensation, being able to work it out, but what happened was that the two gentlemen weren't able to work out some kind of a compensation package. This actually hit the news, that the squatter, as I guess we would call him, decided that they had been there for 10 years and deserved it.

What's interesting about this case is that they asked: what would you do if you were in government? There was an NDP person there, someone from the Alberta Party, someone from the PC Party, and someone from the Wildrose Party. I happened to be the last person on this panel. From each one, as they were asked the question, the answers were: well, you know, we would have to take a look at the situation and really study it closely, and we'd have to figure it out. This is what I've been hearing so far from the government side of the House, that we'd have to take a look at different aspects and the different nuances of the situation and find out – you know what? When it came to me, Madam Speaker, I said: absolutely, we need to get rid of this law.

This is a terrible law because the reality is that – and it was actually stated in this article, and I brought it here today so I could kind of review it – the person who owned the land was paying the property tax on it. This was not a rich farmer. This wasn't a rich person. The person actually paid hard-earned money to buy this land, which I believe was about 10 acres, and paid taxes for this land over the 16 years that they had owned it, and 10 of those years happened to be with this person that they just out of the goodness of their heart decided to let use, and this person took advantage of it, Madam Speaker. Took advantage of it.

Now, since this time there was another situation that came up. Another guy came into my office, just probably about six months ago, and he said: I have this guy who's in one of my rental properties; he's decided to build a little squatter cabin on a flatbed trailer, and he won't leave, and he claims squatter rights. Now, he wanted to be closer to his ex-girlfriend, that actually had left the premises. But because he had been there not more than 10 years – I guess he didn't really understand the full extent of the law, but he was claiming that he deserved because of squatter rights the right to be able to stay in this location. This landlord had the opportunity to bring the police even to try and escort him off. He used the plea: I have the rights under squatter rights; you can't do anything to me. Now, luckily, this landlord was able to take him to court and $127 later was able to evict him.

The problem is that there will be people that are using this adverse possession law to their advantage even when they don't deserve it or even though the law doesn't apply to them. This ambiguity is really setting a bad precedent in helping people who have not actually earned something to be able to have it. This is the sort of thing that drives Albertans crazy.

The other thing that I wanted to just quickly say, Madam Speaker, is that it almost seems in this situation that, you know, if it didn't happen in my backyard, then I don't really care about it. That's almost like what I'm hearing from the members opposite: it doesn't really matter; it didn't happen to me. But you know what? I can guarantee you that if it had happened to them in their own backyard, I question whether or not they would be standing on the side they're standing on. I highly doubt it. In fact, I would imagine that they would be fighting against the squatter rights law. They would say: "You know what? This is unfair. I worked hard to be able to buy this property. It is mine. I've paid taxes for it. I should be able to have and use that land." Instead, what we're hearing is this idea that — you know what? — we’ve got to check these nuances out; we’ve got to check this out. Meanwhile people are still using this plea of squatter rights.

I wanted to bring those two cases up. The court case actually went in the favour of the squatter for the 10 acres. In the other case they were able to work it out where, you know, the landowner was able to get rid of this guy and he couldn’t use the plea of squatter rights.

So I am very much in favour of this private member’s bill, put forward by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, and I would hope that just common sense would dictate the way that members on both sides of this aisle will vote on this and that they would ask themselves, first of all: if it was me, if I was the one that this was affecting, how would I vote?

With that, thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I’ve been actually anxiously hoping that I would be given some time to speak to this bill.

I was actually really intrigued by the debate that was initiated by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and then followed through by members on our side as well as the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, but I have to say that I was dismayed at the comments of the Member for Calgary-Foothills. I have rarely heard in this institution a less reasoned and logical presentation. I mean, the idea that somebody could set up a food truck or a tent on the grounds of the McDougall building in Calgary and, just by being there for 10 years, assume possession just is preposterous. I mean, within 10 minutes the Calgary Police Service would be there hauling away the trailer or whatever it is.

The same would go for the suggestion that that would happen here on the Legislature Grounds. I mean, really, come on. I don’t know how many thousands of dollars this hour of debate is taking, but to consume it with that kind of drivel is really, really, really beyond the pale. I don’t care if the member didn’t grow up in this environment and understand the purpose of the Torrens land title system, but let’s get real here.

The other thing that amazes me is that those folks across the way, who have two legacy predecessors, the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta and the Wildrose Party of Alberta, have joined together in this so-called United Conservatives, but they really are the same thing as those legacies. Just talking about the Wildrose, I mean, scratch a Wildrose, and you’ll find a Socred. Those Socreds actually were in power from the time of Aberhart, in the ’30s, until Lougheed took over in I guess it was the ’70s.

Dr. Turner: In ’71. Thank you.

It was before I got to Alberta, but, you know, I have so-called enjoyed a Conservative government in this province since I came here, in 1977, and I am very happy to be now governed by folks like our Government House Leader and our Premier, who have a real appreciation for property rights and for the rule of law and a respect for institutions of this government such as the Alberta Law Reform Institute.

Now, the Alberta Law Reform Institute is looking at this problem, and it’s taking them some time, but that Law Reform Institute is also doing lots of good work for us Albertans. For instance, it’s looking at informal public appeals. With all of the interest now in GoFundMe campaigns, the Alberta Law Reform Institute is actually helping the government set up the framework in which these informal charitable appeals can be made and how we can make sure that they are being run in the proper way.

The Alberta Evidence Act, a pretty important piece of legislation: that’s also before the Alberta Law Reform Institute. And we have a lot of interest in nonprofit corporations. I guess that would tie into the informal public appeals. It isn’t as though the Alberta Law Reform Institute is sort of wasting its time and forgetting about this very, very important issue.

The other thing. I’m not a lawyer, and I certainly don’t have the experience of my colleague . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt you, hon. member, but the time for consideration of this item of business is now concluded.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Fiscal Management Policies and Practices

503. Dr. Starke moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to amend its fiscal management policies and practices and introduce any necessary legislation to ensure that revenue from fees, levies, specific taxes, and fines goes directly to support the program and service areas requiring those fees, levies, specific taxes, and fines to be collected and is not deposited into the general revenue fund.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It’s my pleasure this afternoon to introduce debate on Motion 503. What does all that mean? Well, in Motions Other than Government Motions we can have an open discussion about a number of different topics, and in this case the discussion is going to be about taxation.

Now, there’s always been a lot of discussion about taxation going back through history, and the arguments continue to this day. We have to ask ourselves questions like: why do governments levy taxes in the first place? What about fees, levies, fines, and other sources of government revenue? What is their purpose? Should taxes and taxation policy be used as a lever to change human behaviour, and is that indeed effective in doing so?

To focus today’s discussion, I want to look at one of the fundamental challenges we face as legislators today, and that is that people don’t like taxes. Now, it’s been said that the only popular tax is the one that someone else has to pay. One of the reasons that people don’t like taxes is that there is a disconnect between the payment of the tax and the benefit derived. We live in a transactional society where we regularly exchange funds for a specified good or service. We make many decisions about those transactions, choosing, for example, to purchase an item with a greater perceived value and being prepared to pay more for it.

But taxes don’t work that way. We pay taxes in a wide variety of ways, but the connection to what we receive as citizens in return for those levied funds is tenuous at best. This is especially true when the revenue from taxation is not earmarked for specific purposes; rather, it goes into general revenue.

Now, there is a widespread belief that as elected officials we are not faithful and trustworthy stewards of those funds. Anyone who has been placed in a position of public trust and trust over the public purse should exercise that duty as a sacred trust. In fact, 200 years ago the fifth president of the United States, James Monroe, said to the joint houses of the U.S. Congress: “To impose taxes when the public exigencies require them is an obligation of the most sacred character, especially with a free people.” People just don’t talk that way anymore. It’s a shame.

We have all heard the examples of wasteful expenditure, and it is completely understandable that the taxpayers who have contributed to those general revenues are upset. We should all be. It has prompted us to introduce various safeguards and accountability mechanisms in an attempt to eliminate these cases of imprudent spending. But even in these instances taxpayers have reason to question the stewardship of those dollars. The recent investigation by the federal Auditor General, Michael Ferguson, into Senate expenditures found some 30 instances of inappropriate expenditures totalling just under $1 million. Now, that's certainly serious and should not be minimized in any way, but the cost of the two-year audit to find those expenditures was some $23.6 million. Canadian taxpayers shelled out $24 for every dollar of inappropriate expenditure that was uncovered. Now, the mechanisms that we put in place to monitor the spending of taxpayer dollars all come at a cost. While there is a perception that these mechanisms will save the taxpayer by curtailing wasteful or inappropriate expenditure, they often end up costing more than they save.

So what am I suggesting? Some of the taxes, levies, fees, and fines that the government collects are related specifically to a purpose or, at the very least, those that pay the taxes can be connected to a related expenditure. For example, the tourism levy, what some people call the pillow tax, is a 4 per cent charge added to your hotel bill when you stay in a fixed-roof accommodation anywhere in Alberta. Now, when it was first devised, in 2005, the intent was that the levy would be used to fund the promotion of tourism in Alberta, and it did. For many years every dollar collected by the tourism levy was reinvested into the promotion of Alberta as a tourist destination through Travel Alberta and the tourism ministry. Not a single penny of taxpayer dollars went to pay for tourism efforts in Alberta, and the ministry was indeed self-funding. Since about 50 per cent of the tourism levy was collected from nonresidents of Alberta, we had devised a way to have those visiting our province help to further promote it as a tourism destination. Now, this model was so successful that it became a template for nearly every Canadian province which now has a similar tourism levy in place.

Sadly, the current government has chosen to siphon revenue from the tourism levy into general revenue. Some 30 per cent of the levy now flows into government coffers as general revenue, and despite its insistence that this government supports tourism as a key driver of economic diversification, this government has cut funding to tourism in each of its years in office.

Now, my argument is simple. Take the full amount of the tourism levy and use it to fund the operations of the tourism ministry and Travel Alberta. Given that every dollar spent in this way used to return $19.50 to the Alberta treasury in various other forms of revenue – and we don't know what that number is now because they've stopped measuring it – that would seem to be a good investment.

Well, let's look at another example. The Alberta government collects just under a billion dollars annually in tobacco taxes, and we know that these tobacco-related costs to our health care system number in the billions of dollars every year. Yet Alberta Health spends only $4 million each year on tobacco reduction initiatives. That's less than half of 1 per cent of tobacco tax revenue. If we were to specifically earmark, say, 2 per cent of tobacco tax revenue to a robust tobacco reduction strategy, which we actually already have in place if this government would ever get around to proclaiming and acting on it, just think of the kinds of savings in both reduced human suffering and lower health care costs that we could glean.

Sometimes it's a matter of more closely tying revenues that already exist to existing expenditures. For example, the government collects $1.4 billion each year in provincial fuel excise taxes. Now, according to Budget 2018 numbers the Ministry of Transportation is investing some $1.2 billion in capital projects this year. If those two numbers were more closely tied together and it was clearly explained that the excise taxes are going to fund capital expenditures on roadways and bridges, I would suggest that the acceptance level would at least rise to a level of begrudging. But as it is currently, I hear the complaints every day.

Madam Speaker, there are many other examples, from camping fees in our provincial parks, which are far too low, to fees charged for basic services from our registry offices, where our government takes in revenue but that there is little or no connection to the cost of the service provided. Every time we charge a fee for a service that does not cover the full cost of providing that service, that service is receiving a subsidy from the taxpayer. Unless we can establish that providing that subsidy is in the greater public good and is therefore worthy of support from general revenue, we should seriously consider changing the fee structure to move more toward a cost-recovery model for providing that service.

Now, what this motion suggests is that we establish a more direct link between the fees, charges, levies, and taxes that Albertans pay for the services that we require. Albertans do care about this issue. Just look at their reaction to the government's recent announcement that, contrary to what had been promised before, the additional $20 per tonne in carbon tax that will be levied starting in 2021 and again in 2022 will now go into general revenue. Whatever happened to the promise that every dollar collected would go either into rebates, tax reductions, or initiatives to combat climate change? Your attempts to call the last $20 of the carbon tax as the federal tax while the first $30 was the provincial carbon tax: well, Minister, nobody is believing you.

There will always be a need for funds to flow into general revenue, and the government has many sources of revenue that would qualify. We have $11 billion in personal income tax, $4 billion in corporate income tax, roughly $3 billion in investment income, and $4 billion from nonrenewable resource revenue. Interestingly, that totals $22 billion, roughly the same as the Health department's 2018 budget. So the next time you're having a coffee shop discussion with folks about provincial spending, you could point out that the Health department, roughly 40 per cent of our government's budget expenditures, would take every penny in income taxes, both corporate and personal, resource royalty revenues, plus investment income. The question then becomes: what do we use to pay for the other 60 per cent? The total list of revenue sources can be found in our budgetary documents.

Madam Speaker, if taxes are indeed a certainty – and as Benjamin Franklin said, the only two certain things in life are death and taxes – and if we are to be good and faithful stewards of not just tax dollars but of all of the funds entrusted to us by Albertans, I think it behooves us to make the best possible use of those funds to minimize wasteful or unnecessary spending but also to demonstrate clearly to the people of Alberta, where possible, the connections between revenue and expenditure.

I look forward to the debate.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I also would like to rise on this topic and thank the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster for bringing this forward for discussion. I do rise today, however, to speak against this motion. Our government is making life more affordable for Albertans across a number of ways.

We've done work over the last three years to reduce costs for Albertans where possible.

Some of those examples, Madam Speaker, where we are doing that, reducing costs and therefore utilizing tax monies in other ways to address the needs Albertans have, are that we're reducing costs in school fees, for example. We reduced that to ensure that Albertans could afford to send their kids to school to receive world-class public education, something we gladly as citizens want to know that our tax dollars go to in terms of enhancing the education of our children.

In addition, we've grown Alberta's tax advantage over the next lowest taxed jurisdiction. Now that advantage stands at $11.2 billion over the province of British Columbia. If we were to have the same taxes as B.C., all Albertans and their corporations, companies both small and large, would have to pony up another $11.2 billion. We have kept the tax advantage in this province strong by making sure that we are not the highest taxed jurisdiction in this country and among the lowest by $11.2 billion.

We've also done incredibly good work at bringing down the cost of government, Madam Speaker. There was a tremendous amount of bloat in the system as a result of the 44 years of Conservative rule, and we have cut salaries for Alberta's agencies, boards, and commissions and the perks that those CEOs, in many cases, would have received. We've cut perks like golf memberships that were simply out of line with the expectations of Albertans and what they expect their public servants to receive in compensation. We froze management salaries, political salaries, MLA salaries, and those last two, political staff and MLAs, were frozen immediately upon this government being put in place. That will last until the end of this term. We've achieved several practical labour agreements with teachers, nurses, allied health professionals, and others.

Specifically to this motion and why I want to note that it's out of step with every provincial jurisdiction in this country is that Alberta's tax revenue collected and investment policies are in line with provincial legislation and Supreme Court decisions. This includes ensuring that compulsory fees reflect the cost of providing certain services, and we have done that and are onside with that.

Certain ministries levy fees for various things, and others do not, Madam Speaker. If the government were to place restrictions or parameters on funding from specific revenue streams to fund only specific programs or services, there would be far less money for vital public services like health care and education, where we don't levy a great number of fees. They are paid through the general revenue fund for the most part, and that is aligned with identifying what the needs of those areas are and then providing monies for them.

I'm deeply concerned that shifting to the model proposed by this speaker would encourage more fees to be levied to cover costs and increase costs for Albertans. That would not make life more affordable for Albertans, Madam Speaker. This motion would shift government's incentive from providing high-quality services to increasing or creating fees to provide for those services.

With regard to our fiscal accountability and transparency, Madam Speaker, our approach to budgeting certainly receives high marks from the C.D. Howe Institute. For the third year running, Alberta has received a consecutive A plus rating for its fiscal accountability. Under the three final terms of the previous government, which some members on that side were involved in, they received a B and two Cs. Our rating is three A pluses. The previous government in '14, '13, and '12 received C, C, and B.

I'm proud of the work we've done to ensure fiscal accountability and transparency when we release budgets and quarterly reporting and other ways that government provides updates to the budget.

Albertans expect such transparency from their government, and I'm pleased to say that we've been able to deliver, thanks in very large part to the excellent work done by the public servants in the Treasury Board and Finance department and across government by the SFOs.

Again I'd like to thank the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster for bringing this forward. I won't be supporting it because it would reduce funding that goes to many vital programs and services that Albertans rely on.

With regard to the pillow tax, or the hospitality 4 per cent charge, that was changed by the previous government. We have not made the change to any of the kinds of things that were brought forward.

I want to also say that we're going to continue to be the fiscally transparent government that we have shown in the last three years, far different than the previous government, where they separated everything. They had savings, they had investments, they had operational spending, and they were offside with our own AG as well. He kept saying that they don't consolidate their budgets, that they're going the wrong way. We've changed that. We're onside with the AG as well as, of course, the C.D. Howe Institute.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. First of all, I want to start by thanking the hon. member, my hon. colleague from Vermilion-Lloydminster, for bringing forth Motion 503. I will absolutely be supporting it. I like so much about the direction of this motion, that would like to help the government.

Let's start with a little bit about the situation we're in, why some more value for tax dollars is essential, and where we're at with spending, debt, and taxes. Of course, this government immediately upon being elected increased our corporate tax 20 per cent. Madam Speaker, when I talk to oil and gas companies and good agriculture companies and other companies around the province about the hardships and the layers and layers of burden that this government has added with labour changes, with caps on emissions, with carbon taxes, more often than not it comes back to how that 20 per cent increase in the corporate tax did more to drive investment and to drive jobs out of Canada, out of Alberta. The lack of accountability, the lack of foresight as to where this government is going is connected to that.

When Albertans realize that this government has gone from $13 billion in debt three years ago to $56 billion in debt today, headed towards $96 billion or a hundred billion by 2023 – personally, I think that's a low estimate. We've seen the Finance minister three times, when he's had a complete budget cycle, be a billion to a billion and a half dollars over budget. How will that continue?

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster spoke very, very well about the tourism levy and the fact that initially it was targeted to help the industry, and now a huge, huge percentage of that is just dumped into general revenue. Madam Speaker, that reminds me of the Taxpayer Bill of Rights, number 6, where taxpayers "have the right to complete, accurate, clear, and timely information" – complete, accurate, clear, and timely information – as to where their money is going. Of course, they're not receiving this when it's dumped into general revenue.

That reminds me probably of what I've heard the most in six years of sitting in this House. With Alberta Health Services and Alberta Health now at $22 billion, taxpayers wonder: does anyone in the government, does anybody in Alberta Health have any idea what services cost us? All we know is that it goes up annually between 4 and a half per cent and 6 and a half per cent. At the same time tax revenue is declining because of the NDP's managed decline of our economy because of their increase in tax rates.

Madam Speaker, I believe that if this government were to adopt the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster's Motion 503 and actually implement it, this discipline could actually spread into some cost control as well and add some value and effectiveness measures to where these hard-earned tax dollars go. When it doesn't happen, it builds frustration. Hopefully, it doesn't build too much noncompliance, because Albertans are good people, but certainly what it does build is people looking for tax efficiency, people looking to make their investments outside of Alberta, where they know what future tax rates are going to be, where they know what future spending is going to be, where they know that there'll be more certainty in their return on investment.

It's important to get this right right now when we look at the environment that we're in. This government brags continually about how we are still, you know, the lowest taxed jurisdiction in Canada even though they've changed that considerably, even though what we're facing today is an American government that has reduced corporate taxes by 40 per cent – 40 per cent – at the same time that they've increased them by 20 per cent. Where is that going to lead investment to? What is that going to make happen? When capital has the ability to be placed anywhere around the world to create jobs and create wealth that governments and programs can tax, when this is what the real world is – when investors and wealth funds in the real world, Madam Speaker, have the option of deciding where they invest, they look for consistency, they look for return, and they look for certainty.

Madam Speaker, that leads me to this government and their carbon tax. We all remember when we were told time and time again that it was revenue neutral. That was the weirdest, most incomplete, most inconsistent definition of revenue neutral I have ever seen. Time and time again we've heard in this House and around Alberta how much hardship this tax has caused. We have seen and heard, of course, senior citizens associations that have difficulty, school boards that have to rob Peter to pay Paul because of higher transportation costs, municipalities that are faced with higher taxes. Now we know, as we've heard in this House many times, that when Justin Trudeau says that in 2023 it's time for the tax to be raised 67 per cent, the fallacy of revenue neutral is completely thrown out the window by this NDP government, and 67 per cent of that increase is just going to be dumped into general revenues.

Madam Speaker, it's no wonder taxpayers out there are concerned about value for their tax dollars. It's no wonder they're concerned about big debt and big deficits. It's no wonder they're concerned about future generations. My goodness, the report I spoke about today in question period by the University of Calgary: can you imagine being 33 or 35 years old and knowing that already in just three years your share of the interest on the debt that this NDP government has run up is $50,000? That's a truck. That's a down payment for a house. That's charitable giving to help your community, to go somewhere where Albertans have been great givers. Instead, it's dumped into the highest spending per capita government in all of Canada, where citizens know, with health care as an example, that access to a waiting list is not access to health care.

Madam Speaker, I look at younger people, the people 16 years old, and they're faced with a $42,000 tax bill just on the interest, and that is before we consider that this government and their ally

Justin Trudeau have raised personal taxes to as high as 49 per cent. Can you imagine how much wealth creation that's driven out of Alberta? Can you imagine how much of that money is now being invested in another country, in another jurisdiction, that we could have taxed for health care, that we could have taxed for education, that we could have taxed for the needy in our society and those that need a temporary hand up?

Madam Speaker, I'm going to close with, you know, that this government has shown time and time again that their preference is to do things based on ideology, whether it's own laundry services publicly, long-term beds, rather than to respect how hard many Albertans work to create jobs, to create wealth, and how much risk...

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to rise and discuss the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster's Motion 503. I'm pleased that the member has brought forward this common-sense motion and hope that the government does take this to heart.

As I took a look at the motion, there are a lot of, in my opinion, good, best-practice ideas in there. The one part, though, that I actually am not sure of in terms of logistics, to be able to make it work, is not depositing it into general revenue funds. I think you could still probably take it and you could deliver it into general revenue funds, but you'd have to make sure that you know where the money is going to, where it's coming from. I think you could still work that same way.

Other than that, I think that this is a very common-sense motion that asks the government to think about the idea of best practice and, more importantly, to think about the concept of transparency. Now, even though this government thinks that everything they're doing is transparent – and the Finance minister did get up and say that they've received better grades for the work that they've done in terms of the transparency, and I applauded them for that. I think that's very important, and Albertans are demanding that at this point.

The carbon tax, that the NDP never campaigned on, is a good example of the very need for this type of transparency, that needs to be resolved. The Auditor General insinuated that there's a lack of accountability and oversight when it comes to the carbon tax. In the February 2018 report it states that "it does not clearly state the expected and actual cost of the overall CLP, and it does not state for each program the expected cost needed to achieve those reductions." This is unacceptable, and there needs to be more transparency and accountability for taxpayer dollars.

If the government wants to collect their levy, as they call it, then these taxes should be benefiting the programs directly. The money taken from these programs in the form of the carbon tax is really money that has been redirected to the programs that has been taken from the taxpayers in some form. The government then takes taxpayers' money from these programs and calls it a carbon levy and then plans to deposit it back into the general revenue. A good accounting trick, but let's be honest here. Albertans are not being tricked at all.

In a CBC article from January of this year entitled Carbon Taxes Might Not Change Consumer Behaviour, But They Sure Will Feed Government Coffers it talks of how "the governments requiring [Albertans'] money won't call it a tax." I understand the problems with them calling it a tax, but it is. A tax is a tax. Whether the government wants to call it a tax or call it a levy, this needs to be resolved here and now with this motion. I believe that the government should put their money where their mouth is and show Albertans today that they want to appear open and accountable to Albertans. This motion is a great first step, but we would like to see the government go one step further and provide Albertans with fuller disclosure of the taxes that they are charged.

I've talked with constituents and stakeholders for the past three years, and I have heard that they are tired of the ever-increasing taxes, specifically the taxes on businesses and the carbon tax, that have hit everyone hard and have hurt families in every wrong way. Albertans understand that there is a need to support the programs and services they rely on, but what they are not in agreement with is a double-taxing situation that the programs and services are facing and the lack of accountability and transparency. Albertans deserve to know exactly where their money is going, and we believe that governments need to be held accountable to the taxpayer. Albertans not only deserve to know but have repeatedly questioned the government on this matter, to no resolve, I might add. I believe that this motion is the beginning of a promise to restore confidence in how programs and services are run in the province and to give hope for a brighter future.

Even in the federal Taxpayer Bill of Rights it says that it is every person's "right to complete, accurate, clear, and timely information." Madam Speaker, Albertans have a right to complete, accurate, clear, and timely information regarding where their tax dollars are being spent. Not only that, but in that same document it says that it is every person's "right to expect [the government] to warn [the people] about questionable tax schemes in a timely manner."

Madam Speaker, even though this motion could possibly increase red tape and regulation, it seems to me that this would be a sure step in the right direction. Now, as you know, I presented a private member's bill, that was defeated, to reduce red tape. Once again, though, the concept here is: what is reasonable for Albertans? I believe what is reasonable for Albertans is to have that transparency. I believe that if they knew where each of those tax dollars are being spent, there would be a lot more hue and cry from Albertans.

Alberta has a number of taxes, levies, fees, and fines that are all collected for a specific purpose. Without passage of this motion, there is nothing in legislation that would require the NDP government to actually direct the revenue from these taxes, levies, fees, and fines back to the programs and services that Albertans have spent their hard-earned dollars on. As a matter of fact, to direct them back into general revenue is a government who is trying to play catch-up by essentially double-billing Albertans. Taxpayers need these programs and services and do not want the government using these funds just to catch up on the debt that they have incurred while they have been in office. This is a reckless use of taxpayers' money.

It is my wish that all members of this Assembly would support this common-sense motion and get the ball rolling by redirecting the taxpayers' monies to the programs and services they are in need of rather than catering to an ideological position and creative accounting practices.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers to the motion?

Seeing none, I'll invite the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster to close debate.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and I'd like to thank everyone who spoke in the debate today for their comments. You know, I do want to say that the intent of the motion today was to open up a discussion. I appreciate the comments from the Minister of Finance. Actually, I have to say that I'm not surprised by those comments because they very much mirror the comments that were made by his predecessors, that were part of our government, who defended the current practice, based to a certain extent on advice from the folks in Treasury Board and Finance, as he said, and also defended it based on what's done in other provinces.

You know, I understand that. Life is easier when you can basically just take all the forms of revenue, put it into one pool, and then divvy it out accordingly. I get that, and I appreciate that that's a practice that he would defend. But the people that don't defend that practice are Albertans. The people that don't defend that practice or at least like the idea of some of what is being called for in this motion are the Albertans I talked to. Albertans would like to see some degree of logical linkage between what they pay to the government – and in some cases, that payment is very begrudging; in other cases, it's more willing – and what they receive back from the government.

I think it's fair to say that most of us don't particularly enjoy paying taxes. The day that our property tax bill arrives on our home we don't say: "Fantastic. My taxes arrived." Most people don't, but most people do appreciate that taxes are necessary in a civilized society to provide the services that we call government to provide for us. Now, there's obviously a debate as to what level of services should be provided. Some people feel there should be more. Others feel there should be fewer.

My argument is that as long as we're going to have these services, they should be delivered in such a way that they provide value to those who are paying for them and they should also provide quality to those who are receiving them. I think one of the things that's important – and I provided services to people in my business for close to 30 years. One of the things that I was always prepared to do was to justify the cost of the service and explain why there was value.

My concern and the reason for bringing forward this motion – and I'm not saying that every last service that government provides or every last fee the government charges has to immediately be linked to a specific service. I am saying: let's look for opportunities where we could do that to demonstrate and to help better inform the taxpaying public about the linkage between what it costs to provide a service and the payment that is being asked for, whether it's in the form of a personal or a corporate income tax or a fee or a charge on things.

I mean, there are many examples, sadly, Madam Speaker, where the fees we're charging are woefully inadequate. I'll give you one. You know, this is my bad. I was the minister of parks for a while. What we charge to camp in our provincial campgrounds is scandalously low. It's scandalously low. It's much lower than what is being charged generally in similarly equipped private campgrounds. Because it's been so low, we haven't been able to reinvest funds into the upkeep and modernization of those campgrounds.

You know, that's just one very small example, but for the quality that we're providing people in those campgrounds, for the quality of the site – we have absolutely gorgeous campgrounds in our provincial parks – sadly, some of the services that we are providing in those campgrounds have fallen behind simply because we have not reinvested. Part of the reason is that our provincial campgrounds, our provincial campsites have about a 33 per cent cost recovery. Other provinces recover fully 100 per cent of the cost of operating their campgrounds, and I think, actually, contrary to what the Minister of Finance said, the services they provide in fact are very high quality, higher quality in some cases than what we can provide.

Madam Speaker, my intent in this debate was not to have some partisan discussion about what taxes are good or what taxes aren't good. My intent in this was to encourage members to look at the possibility or the feasibility of providing a closer connection, for the benefit of taxpayers, between the services that they receive and the taxes they pay. Simply that. I will tell you that most Albertans that I talk to also agree that that would be a good idea, and I would encourage members to support this motion.

[The voice vote indicated that Motion Other than Government Motion 503 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:40 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, May 8, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Hon. members, let us each reflect or pray, in our way, about our loved ones and friends. Think about a time when one of them or ourselves experienced emotional anxiety or pain. Let us remind ourselves that while we all have mental health, there are many times when we and our loved ones experience mental illness as well. Why do some illnesses get treatment while some others get judgment?

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 97 grade 6 students from A. Blair McPherson school in the beautiful constituency of Edmonton-Mill Creek. They are accompanied by their teachers: Ben Maklowich, Holly Paranich, Hayley Sylvester, and Christie Jedelee. I would now ask that they all please stand and receive the warm traditional welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups today?

Seeing and hearing none, the hon. Minister of Transportation.

I'll go to the next one.

Mr. Mason: Please.

Mrs. Aheer: Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you a powerhouse Conservative woman and my friend, Laila Goodridge. Last week Laila won a hotly contested nomination for the United Conservative Party in Fort McMurray-Conklin. She's got some big, big shoes to fill, but we are confident that she can fill them, and we are so looking forward to the day when she will bring her years of experience to our UCP caucus here in the Legislature. I would ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: I'm ready, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly two constituents of mine who are visiting the Assembly today. Austin Mardon holds a master's degree in both science and education as well as a doctorate in geography. He was elected to the Royal Society of Canada for his academic work in 2014. Dr. Mardon was diagnosed with schizophrenia at the age of 30 and has contributed an impressive body of work on behalf of mentally ill persons since that time. This work has earned him many awards, including the Order of Canada in 2007. He is currently an assistant adjunct professor at the University of Alberta.

Catherine Mardon, his spouse, was born in Oklahoma and earned degrees in agriculture and law there. She also earned a master's degree in theological studies from Newman Theological College. Catherine suffered an accident which left her disabled, and she has advocated strongly on behalf of persons with disabilities, earning a true grit award from the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta's Circle on Mental Health and Addiction in 2016.

I would ask Austin and Catherine Mardon to please rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to introduce to you and to all members here an old friend, Les Hagen. He's the face of and executive director of Action on Smoking & Health. I think he's been around for about a hundred years, Les? No, 40 years. Tobacco is still the leading cause of avoidable death, disability, disease. Les is seated in the public gallery, and I'll ask him to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature. Thanks, Les.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you Shiva Dean, who is the vice-president of corporate operations at Northlands. He's been there for three years and was operations lead during the Fort McMurray wildfire evacuation two years ago. He's joined today by his wife of 20 years, Lisa Dean, who works at Champion Petfoods, and their three children: Nathaniel, Surya, and Joshua. Mr. Dean is also joined by his mother, Sandra, who is visiting from Ontario. They're here to view our proceedings in the House, and I want to thank them for taking the time to come and visit today. I would now ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to the House three Albertans. One has already been introduced, actually, by our deputy leader. Laila Goodridge is the candidate for the United Conservatives in Fort McMurray-Conklin. She's joined as well by another 30-year-old candidate who won a hotly contested nomination for the upcoming by-election in Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, Devin Dreeschen, who is a farmer with a great deal of experience in public policy and in government service. We congratulate him and wish him well. In addition, I'd like to welcome Erika Barootes, who just won the hotly contested election for the presidency of the United Conservative Party, a strong, young Edmonton woman committed to public service. We think that these three fine young Albertans represent a new generation of leadership.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First, I'm honoured to introduce special guests who are with us to celebrate Mental Health Week. They are seated in the public gallery. They're a group of committed, passionate mental health therapists with the Alberta Health Services school-based team. The team provides specialized intensive mental health services for students in Edmonton schools. I want to say thank you to them for improving the quality of care for young people, for school staff, and for families. I ask that Rachelle, Erin, Helen, Allison, Nisha, Karen, Angela, Kirsten, Eileen, Teresa, Gabriel, Carla, Amanda, Marcy, and Christina rise and receive our warm welcome and our appreciation for all your service, please.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, if I might, I have a second introduction, and that's to introduce members of the Alberta Public Health Association who are seated in the public gallery. This association has been working hard to improve the health of Albertans through advocacy, partnerships, and education for 75 years, and I congratulate them on this milestone. I'm inspired by their dedication to advocating for public health, and I thank them for their commitment. The members here today include Lindsay, Angeline, and Aslam. Please rise and receive the warm welcome and gratitude of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you guests from the Canadian Mental Health Association's 211 and the Distress Centre joining us today during Mental Health Week. The 211 is a 24-hour information and referral line that helps connect people to social, health, and government programs and is there to help when someone is in distress. This year's theme for Mental Health Week is Get Loud. This means speaking up to stop the discrimination and the stigma that usually go hand in hand with mental illness. Tell everyone to get loud to maintain positive mental health. I ask that Stephanie Wright, Patricia Skagen-Emokpae, Bronte Diduck, and Stephanie Chard please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Adam McDonald. Adam has walked all the way from Fort McKay, starting on April 30, and, sir, he's making his way to Prince Rupert. Why is he walking? He's trying to bring attention to the fact that we have many, many issues dealing with missing and murdered indigenous women, and he hopes to bring attention to this very subject. Sir, if you would please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. Gagan Singh. He's a certified environmental professional, and he's licensed with the Canadian Environmental Certification Approvals Board. Gagan's professional career spans over 13 years, and he's successfully given consulting services for the climate change policy and carbon offset regimes, sustainability and environmental policy and legislation, energy efficiency and conservation, natural resource management, and solid waste management. He also happens to be a new member of the Edmonton-Ellerslie EDA, and I'm proud to call him my friend. I ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other guests today? Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and to all members of the Legislature seven individuals. I would ask that they stand as I mention their names. First, three very important ladies in my life: my wife, Barb, whom you have met before, and with her today is one of our five children, Laura, and one of our seven grandchildren, Annalise. Laura and Annalise are visiting from Langley, British Columbia, where our son-in-law is stationed as an RCMP officer. Yes, they are from B.C., and, yes, they are very much in favour of the Trans Mountain pipeline project. With them are friends visiting from Munich, Germany: Julia and Torsten Schuster and their children Julius and Pauline. Julia and our daughter Laura became very good friends while completing their master's of business degrees in Maastricht, Netherlands, and they continue to visit back and forth and will remain friends for life. I ask that the members would please give them the traditional warm welcome of this Legislature.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you may not have seen that, but she was waving to you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

United Conservative Party Tax Policies

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This weekend conservatives of all stripes gathered in Red Deer to celebrate and debate their shared passions for homophobia, health care privatization, attacking women's rights, and, one of my personal favourites, big tax giveaways for millionaires. You know, I wish I could say that I was surprised, but it's just so predictable. The actions of the UCP this weekend show Albertans loud and clear exactly whose side they're on, and it sure isn't the side of everyday Albertans.

For too long the richest Albertans and wealthiest corporations weren't asked to pay their fair share. Every year ordinary families were asked to do more with less, and in a province that's as rich and as diverse as Alberta, that's simply unacceptable.

Now, just when things are looking up and everyday families finally have a government that supports them, the Conservatives want to rip the rug out from underneath them and send Alberta back to the Dark Ages. Their plan will see everyday working families having to pay more for the services that they rely on while those at the very top, the richest Albertans and wealthiest corporations, all will get a $700 million tax giveaway. Their plan means deep cuts to things like health care and education just so Conservative insiders and the top 1 per cent can afford an extra round of golf on the taxpayer dime. Albertans have seen this all before, and they rejected this vision and sense of entitlement in the last election.

Mr. Speaker, we're not going to let that happen. Albertans deserve better than an opposition who's only focused on making things easier for their rich friends and insiders. While it's clear that the Conservatives are out of touch with the priorities of everyday Albertans and are only interested in themselves, I'm very proud to say that our government has the backs of ordinary working families across this province, and we will never stop fighting to make life better and more affordable for all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the member opposite is looking for the Dark Ages, he could find it in the socialist Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela.

Aga Khan's Diamond Jubilee

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, this week Alberta is privileged to be welcoming His Highness Prince Karim Aga Khan as he visits our province as part of his diamond jubilee visit around the world to celebrate his 60th anniversary since becoming the 49th imam of the Ismaili Shia Muslim jamaat.

Mr. Speaker, I'm honoured to have known His Highness for many years. As the federal minister for multiculturalism I was responsible for the Global Centre for Pluralism, a partnership between the federal government and His Highness the Aga Khan, which is offering Canada's successful model of pluralism to parts of the world riven by conflict. This is just one of so many examples of how His Highness and the Ismaili community have contributed to Canada. Indeed, I was honoured while being minister of citizenship and immigration to declare His Highness an honorary Canadian citizen.

Mr. Speaker, Canada was very blessed back some 45 years ago to receive tens of thousands of Ismaili refugees from racism, primarily from east Africa, who came to this country with nothing but who, with the moral support and guidance of the Aga Khan, have managed to go to the very top of Canadian and Alberta society in every domain: in business, in the arts, in the academy.

Mr. Speaker, while we welcome His Highness to Alberta, we join with him in celebrating the innumerable successes of the Ismaili community in Alberta. Alberta can be proud to say that we were the first province to elect a Muslim to the Parliament of Canada right here from Edmonton, an Ismaili.

Mr. Speaker, happy diamond jubilee to His Highness and to all Alberta Ismaili Muslims celebrating this happy occasion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Aga Khan's Diamond Jubilee

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my distinct honour today to rise to welcome His Highness the Aga Khan to Alberta as he prepares to visit Calgary on Thursday. Albertans congratulate His Highness on the occasion of his diamond jubilee. For 60 years as the spiritual leader of the Ismaili Muslim community His Highness has dedicated his life to improving the quality of life of people around the world. His global institutions exemplify the values of pluralism, commitment to education, gender equality, access to quality health care, and building community and civil society in the countries in which they have a presence. Members of the Ismaili community are active leaders in civil society and contribute to Alberta's social, cultural, and economic landscape.

I am proud to work closely with the Ismaili community here in Alberta, a community that sees diversity not as a weakness but as a strength, a community that strives to build an inclusive society, a community dedicated to fostering a pluralistic society and a commitment to helping the most vulnerable amongst us.

This year the Ismaili community in Canada has surpassed their pledge to engage in 1 million hours of voluntary service to improve the quality of life of fellow Canadians. Right here in Alberta over the course of the diamond jubilee year the Ismaili community in Alberta has contributed over 350 thousand volunteer hours.

As His Highness the Aga Khan said: we have a duty to leave the world a better place. This quote is something I take inspiration from every day and something I try to live up to in the work our government is doing to make a more inclusive and caring Alberta, where no one is left behind.

We thank His Highness for the gift of the Aga Khan garden, Alberta, and hope that he will be able to join us to enjoy this magnificent celebration of peace and hope once it is completed in the coming months.

On this joyous occasion we welcome you, Your Highness, to Alberta, and on behalf of all members of this House we wish you diamond jubilee Mubarak.

Oil and Gas Transportation to Tidewater

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, when it comes to supporting and encouraging pipelines to tidewater from Alberta, the NDP have an abysmal record. We have the video of the Premier before election day in 2015 withholding support for the Northern Gateway pipeline. When the federal government invaded provincial jurisdiction to mandate that the National Energy Board examine upstream emissions on the Energy East pipeline, the NDP rolled over and failed to defend the Constitution and the pipeline. Continuing to sell our product at a discount to only one customer is not common sense. With countless attempts at obstruction by the NDP's fellow travelers, we must fight to move our product to tidewater.

There is the proposed indigenous-owned Eagle Spirit pipeline to a terminal near Prince Rupert, or we could negotiate with CN Rail for access to their 100-metre right-of-way. It would be easy, with one landowner all the way to the Pacific. But if Trudeau's tanker ban interferes, we can build a pipeline or a railway to Alaska and ship via the Trans-Alaska pipeline system, which is running at the minimal capacity. Then there is the possibility of going east. Forget about Ontario and Quebec. Let's fix the railway and move the product via Churchill. The tank farm sits ready and waiting to move product to Europe, with shorter sailing times over Thunder Bay.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta ingenuity, hard work, determination, and a can-do attitude will ensure that new markets and tidewater access will be achieved for Alberta in spite of the NDP's and Trudeau Liberals' actions speaking louder than their words. If there is a will, there is a way.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Carbon Levy Increase

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I was in Ottawa to represent the majority of Albertans, who oppose the carbon tax. They oppose the NDP's carbon tax and the proposed Trudeau tax, that would raise the rate here by 67 per cent. We heard at the committee I appeared at that carbon taxes can actually be progressive if they have generous low-income tax credits. Now that this government has decided to stop increasing the rebates as the rate goes higher, will the Premier not admit that the carbon tax will become increasingly regressive in impacting low-income Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased that the member opposite has recognized that, in fact, the climate change leadership plan includes a progressive element to the work that we've done. That's a fundamental commitment that we made. We wanted to ensure that it didn't have a disproportionate effect, that it wasn't a flat tax, like the flat tax that the members opposite are proposing to reinstate as a result of their interesting convention on the weekend. While I appreciate that the member is concerned about progressive taxation as it relates to the climate leadership plan, I suggest they should . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, that talking point might have been fine for the first $30 of the NDP carbon tax, but it no longer works for the next $20, as they raise it to $50 a tonne, because the government has admitted in their budget that there will be no additional rebates to offset a higher rate. Again I'll ask the Premier: will she not admit that by failing to increase the rebates as the tax goes higher, low-income people will continue to pay more for the energy they consume simply to live normal lives?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, in fact, most people will talk about the fact that a carbon levy like the one that we are bringing in actually is progressive even without the rebates because it is, in fact, higher income earners who actually burn more carbon. The progressive nature of it continues regardless although we will continue to look at other ways in which we can enhance that.

Mr. Speaker, it really is rather rich for the member opposite to be suggesting this when his party just passed a plan to give the top 1 per cent of Albertans a $750 million tax cut. I mean, I think they should really figure out . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: For the record, Mr. Speaker, high-income Albertans are actually paying less now than they used to. Income tax revenues are down since the NDP raised the rates. That's what happens when you disincentivize economic activity.

Mr. Speaker, the experts on the panel that I appeared at in Ottawa yesterday talked about how carbon taxes can be great in that they replace so-called costly regulations. Interesting idea. Could the Premier please identify a single environmental regulation that her government has repealed as a result of the introduction of the carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our carbon levy works together with a whole other plan to reduce our emissions. That's what we need to do as responsible stewards of the environment, and it's also what we need to do to get a pipeline to tidewater, something which, the members opposite will recall, they were unable to do after nine years. The reality is that our climate leadership plan is focused on getting a pipeline built, a pipeline that will fund education, health care, all those things that the members opposite appear to be not quite as much in support of now as they were right before last weekend.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Carbon Levy Provincial Debt

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has again invoked the notion of social licence, that if we punish Alberta consumers for heating their homes and driving to work, we'll somehow get a pipeline built. Could the Premier please tell us if she can identify a single provincial government, municipal government, political party, First Nation, or environmental organization that has gone from opposition to coastal pipelines to support for coastal pipelines as a result of the NDP carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I can do is talk about our ability to talk about a responsible climate leadership plan and a cap on emissions and all the things that go with the incredible work that the province of Alberta and industry in Alberta are doing to meet our responsibilities and how that has been part of the conversation we've had across this country and in B.C., where support for Kinder Morgan is well over 50 per cent and has grown at least 20 per cent in the last six months, and it's because of the good work that we have been doing here in Edmonton and with industry. We believe in making progress on this file, and I'm very proud of how it's been working.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Kenney: Well, I'll take it from the Premier's failure to answer the question that there is no organization that's moved from no to yes on pipelines as a result of the carbon tax.

Mr. Speaker, in Ottawa yesterday I also heard from carbon tax proponents that they can be revenue neutral when there are offsetting cuts in other tax rates to make up for the higher government revenues coming in from carbon taxes. Could the Premier please identify what tax rate she cut to ensure the revenue neutrality of Alberta's NDP carbon tax?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, what we did was that we cut the small-business tax rate to 2 per cent, so that worked out well. You know, I know the member was in Ottawa rigorously fighting against any effort to combat climate change. Here's another thing that the member said when he was in Ottawa just a couple of years earlier. It's a good one: when it comes to pipelines, no project is a national priority. That's what he said then. Say one thing and do another: it reminds me very much of the UCP convention that we saw on the weekend. Despite what the UCP says, behind the curtain things are a lake of fire.

Mr. Kenney: Because all of those pipelines are a priority.

Mr. Speaker, the University of Calgary's economics think tank, the School of Public Policy, has released a report showing how devastating the massive increase in the public debt of this government is for future generations. They found that a 16-year-old in 2023 can expect to pay the equivalent of $42,000 over her lifetime in additional personal income taxes to pay the interest on the public debt. Is the government proud that they're going to force a young Albertan to pay $42,000 to bankers and bondholders for their debt?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What we are proud of is that young Albertans, as they leave school, will not be spending $45,000 in the first four years after they leave high school to pay for their postsecondary education, and that's because we made a decision to freeze tuition and to maintain funding in our postsecondary system because we know that that is fundamental to supporting our young people, and it is also fundamental to growing our economy. We're going to invest in the future. We are not going to try to cut our way to prosperity for the top 1 per cent.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Provincial Debt

Mr. Kenney: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, does the Premier not understand that today's deficits are tomorrow's taxes? Has the government conducted any assessment of the long-term transfer of wealth from future generations to today's generation because of their massive deficit spending?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, what we have said – we made a choice when we were elected. We made a choice that we would not make a bad situation worse. We would not follow the recession. We would lead the recovery, and as a result things are starting to look up. Not all, but they are starting to look up: 90,000 new jobs, leading the country in economic growth. This is how you work your way out of this kind of problem. You do not cut your way out. You do not make Albertans pay for the mistakes of generations past, and you do not give tax breaks to the top 1 per cent.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, shortly after the budget I asked the following question. I didn't get an answer then. Perhaps the government has been able to do their homework since. Could the government tell us: how much do they plan to spend on interest payments to bankers and bondholders as a result of the $96 billion debt included in their budget?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I've answered that question in the past, and that is fine. It's interesting. When it comes to doing one's job, one of the things that official oppositions often do is introduce a shadow budget, and they talk about what they would do differently to deal with the fiscal pressures that are facing this government, that are real. But they never did it, and they said it was because they wanted to wait for their membership to tell them what to do. Now they've decided that they're not going to listen to their membership. They're going to write their own policy. I'm wondering if the member opposite is now prepared to tell the people of Alberta what he would cut to make things different.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, according to this University of Calgary study almost half of the burden of higher taxes as a result of the NDP's debt will be borne by the 16- to 35-year-old age group. Those over 65, on the other hand, will pay less than 3 per cent of the total tax burden. This constitutes an intergenerational transfer of wealth. I'd like to ask the Premier. Does she think that it is fair, just, or progressive to transfer wealth from future generations to pay for our overspending here today?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that transferred debt to future generations was the failure of the previous Conservative government to invest in infrastructure, for instance. We had an infrastructure debt and deficit which was gargantuan, which regular Albertans paid the price for each and every day when they tried to access the services that they and their families relied upon. That kind of management doesn't work. It is time that we not have our teachers wake up in the morning to check the price of oil to see if they're going to be able to go to work to teach our kids. We can do better, and that's exactly what we're doing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Violence Prevention

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every Albertan and indeed every human being deserves to live and work free from violence or the threat of violence. Lately I've seen a disturbing rise in the number of threats directed against female politicians. Whether they're being threatened because they hold differing political views or have spoken about their Me Too experiences or simply because they are women in public spaces, it's wrong and we need to do more to stop it. To the Minister of Justice: do the police and the justice system have the resources to identify and prosecute threats of violence and to support the targets of those threats?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Of course, it's absolutely critical to our government and to our policing partners as well to ensure that every person across Alberta is able to feel safe in their homes, in their communities, regardless of their gender. We absolutely continue to work with our police partners to ensure that they have the resources necessary to service all different communities because this is absolutely a critical issue for both us and them.

Mr. Fraser: Threats of violence are disgusting enough, but we recently saw in Toronto what can happen when the kind of hate that motivates these threats is allowed to fester. Ultimately, the people responsible for these acts are the people who commit them. We need to ask ourselves, though, if there is more that we can do to prevent online hate from becoming a real-life tragedy. We can try to stop the radicalization of these men through measures like community intervention or, if necessary, police intervention. To the same minister: is your government working with the police, federal and municipal governments, and community leaders to intervene before the violence escalates to physical violence?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the incredibly important question. I could go on for considerable length about this one. We do work with police, with the ASSIST team, to ensure that we're assessing threats throughout the province. Another really important portion of this is ensuring that we're investing in those community resources so that all members of our community have access to the services they need, including mental health services, when they need them and including the ability to access other members of the community so they can feel like part of the community, which helps a lot with this radicalization.

Thank you.

Mr. Fraser: I've spoken about it before, but I want to be very clear. What we say in this Chamber matters. Our tone, our words, and the example that we set for Albertans plays a role in fostering or preventing expressions of hate or threats of violence. I commend all sides of this House for speaking out against violence, but this isn't an issue that we can afford to stop talking about. We must be sure that Albertans know that there is no place for hate in this province. To the Premier, respectfully, I'm asking for a nonpartisan answer. Will you work with us as legislators to establish an all-party committee so that we can address this on an ongoing basis?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I have to say that one of the things that I think speaks most to my heart about this side of the House is how many women have been involved in this government to make sure that we create laws, that we create an environment, and that we create a culture where women are respected in every workplace. I have to say that part of that starts with the tone at the top with our Premier, who made sure that we had 50 per cent of the people on the ballot as women because 50 per cent of Albertans are women. When I hear other members of this House refer to things like feminism as the F-word, well, I guess that's better than when they called it cancer, but I do have to say that I will not back down. I will keep fighting for women. You're certainly welcome to be part of that, but we don't need an all-party committee. We need a government that's on the side of women, and we've got it.

The Speaker: Hon. members, just again, many times I've mentioned it, but we're about to move to question 5. There are no preambles under our standing orders that we've discussed here. As we move forward, please act accordingly.

The Member for Calgary-Klein.

Tax Policy

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the first things we did as a government was to reinstitute a progressive tax in Alberta. My constituents would like to know: what has returning to a progressive tax meant for the government and for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Progressive tax is what exists in every province in Canada, and the federal government as well uses a progressive income tax system. We are simply asking those who make more money to pay a little more to support the vital programs and services in this province. A progressive tax results in more stable revenue for government to fund those important programs and services while building the infrastructure like schools, hospitals, highways, and bridges that all Albertans need and rely on.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the UCP convention over the weekend the party's membership voted to return Alberta to the flat tax, one of the many regressive policies introduced at the UCP blast from the past. To the same minister: why has this government chosen to move away from the flat tax of the previous government?

Mr. Ceci: That was a proud moment, when I moved away from the flat tax in June of 2015. Returning to the flat tax benefits only Alberta's wealthiest to the tune of a $700 million tax cut for the richest 1 per cent in Alberta. That's people making over $300,000 a year, Mr. Speaker. Albertans just get stuck with the bill. Regular Albertans will pay it through cuts to our kids' classrooms and longer ER wait times. While the members opposite want to fight for those at the top and their friends, we stand for Albertans.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that getting rid of the flat tax has benefited Albertans, what effect would reversing this policy have?

Mr. Ceci: It would be devastating, Mr. Speaker. The UCP's plan to blow a $5 billion hole in the budget with no plan to pay for it will only make the problems in this province get worse. On the flat tax specifically they would have to cut nearly the entire budget allocated to the children's intervention ministry, or they would cut the entire budget allocated to home care for our elderly. Either way, Albertans lose, and the UCP and their rich friends and insiders benefit.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Tobacco Reduction and Industry Lobbyists

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The framework convention on tobacco control is a public health treaty prohibiting the signatories, including Canada and Alberta, from meeting behind closed doors with tobacco lobbyists. In opposition the ND caucus railed against insider lobbying by tobacco companies, and now they do continue to bring about the multimillion-dollar lawsuit against big tobacco. It's surprising, then, that now the NDP government appears to be welcoming these lobbyists, including the Premier's former press secretary Sally Housser, into its backrooms. To the Premier: how many times has she met with lobbyist Sally Housser in the last year, and what was discussed?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms. Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me be perfectly clear. My understanding is that with the exception of one former staff member in the Health minister's office who met once inadvertently, there have been no meetings with tobacco lobbyists on the matter of tobacco by anybody in our government.* We are committed to making progress on reducing tobacco use across this province. That is why we banned the use of menthol cigarettes soon after we got elected, and we will continue to work very, very hard on that matter.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have reliable sources that say otherwise. I'd like the Premier to tell us in which other departments tobacco lobbyists have met with her members and table the subjects, the places, the dates, and the times of those meetings in other departments in your government.

Ms. Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I will say is that it is a bit disturbing the kinds of suggestions that are being made without any kind of evidence behind them. What I can tell you is that as far as we can tell, there was one inadvertent meeting very early on in the mandate, and it has never happened since. For people to make suggestions like that is not very responsible, quite frankly, and I expect more from the member opposite. The reality is that there is nothing to table because we've been following the rules, and we always follow the rules, and we have not been meeting with tobacco lobbyists.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government continues to stall on the implementation of the 2013 Tobacco and Smoking Reduction Act. Some provisions will be dropped soon if this is not proclaimed. Why are you delaying, and when will you fully implement the tobacco legislation that we passed almost five years ago?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms. Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm really proud that over the last few years Alberta has introduced tougher tobacco laws, making it possible for us to move more swiftly on reducing tobacco use, and we've seen success with our youth. We've seen reduced revenues for tobacco sales as well, which speaks to there being fewer people purchasing tobacco, and cigarettes have minimum package sizing, et cetera. And as the Premier said, we did ban menthol and received a reward from Smoke-free Alberta for that, that we're very grateful for. We understand that there is more work to be done on some other areas, including vaping, and that's why we're working with the federal government to make sure that we're compliant.

Midwifery Services

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, women in this province are increasingly seeking the services offered by midwives. Midwives play a valuable role in supporting the health of mothers and their babies. Not only that, but midwifery helps save the system costs associated with low-risk births. Minister, the opposition has been advocating for years for women to have better access to this service. Will the government finally remove the cap restricting midwife access so that more women can make use of this cost-saving measure?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Well, thank you so much, Mr. Speaker and for the question. Today they're advocating for increased expansion of services. Yesterday and probably five minutes from now they'll be advocating for more cuts to health care. I'm sure glad that we have a government that's working to expand funding and increase the number of courses of care. Every single year this government has increased courses of care by 400. That's 400 women who are getting the support, 400 families who are getting the support, 400 babies or more sometimes who are getting the support when they are exercising that right to choose. We are excited that we are supporting this instead of moving for deep ideological cuts like the members opposite.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, it's a pretty sad day when the Health minister doesn't know that this is a cost-saving measure. Given that women all over this province are giving birth and given that the Associate Minister of Health agreed with the Official Opposition last year that midwifery has the possibility of actually helping to save dollars in the system – tell your minister – Minister, last year you brought forward what you described as a stable model, yet wait-lists are still increasing. Will you finally take our advice and remove the cap?

Ms Hoffman: Well, as we've seen, Mr. Speaker, I respect the fact that women are increasing their right to choose a midwife, and we support that expansion. The arguments around financial are arguments that, frankly, are one part of this question but aren't actual sound and scientific evidence. While I appreciate that there is the possibility that women are potentially having home births and if there is an OB who is not working at the same time, there could be savings, in actuality often we've seen that there are increases. But that isn't what's driving this. What's driving this is making sure that we support women in exercising their choices around their birth plans.

Mrs. Pitt: I'll table evidence later, Mr. Speaker, that shows substantial savings by using midwifery.

Given that more and more women are finding that this service is valuable and supply is just not meeting the demand and given that pregnancy is nine months and women really can't wait, Minister, when will you finally remove the cap and make this service a priority for women in our province?

Ms Hoffman: Well, Mr. Speaker, we saw what happened when the now Official Opposition was in government and they removed caps on things like daily dispensing fees. We saw seniors have to pay out of pocket every single day to get their prescriptions refilled. Sometimes people say: well, if they're not seeing a doctor and they're seeing a pharmacist instead, maybe the costs will go down. That isn't what's driving decision-making in this. What's driving it is ensuring that we get women the care they need. We're working to expand that by 400 courses every year. We certainly appreciate that there is potential in some situations for there to be cost savings, but we also know that that can't be the only driver, because we're not going to lay off nurses and ob-gyns to offset these costs. We're going to continue to expand access, and that's why we have.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Crown Prosecution Practice Protocol

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In October 2016 the Justice minister unveiled her triage policy, and I quote: we had to respond to ensure that cases were not being lost in court. Unquote. In the following six months the Crown abandoned 200 criminal prosecutions. Minister, another 14 months have gone by. What is the total number of charges dropped to date, and what does this say about the minister's triage policy?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member has alluded to, in the wake of the Jordan decision it was absolutely necessary for the government to respond. We've responded to that in two ways. The triage policy enables us to ensure that the cases which we are dropping tend more towards the low end of the spectrum rather than serious and violent, dangerous offences to ensure that we're using the justice system most effectively. The second way we've dealt with that is by investing in the justice system. I wish the opposition members would support that investment.

Mr. Taylor: I'd still like to know what that number is.

Given that the total number of criminal charges abandoned since the fall of 2016 is likely well over 500 by now and given that if the minister's triage policy has not cleared the court backlog in almost two years, it has failed to do its job, Minister, are you willing to make the changes needed to ensure that the triage policy works?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, as the member is no doubt aware, the population of the province of Alberta continues to expand. What that means is that there continues to be a higher demand for services as we move forward. Because the justice system had been underfunded for decades under the previous government, we suffered from a serious backlog in terms of funding to different areas of the system. We're addressing that, again, in two ways, by making sure we're using the justice system in the most effective possible manner and by making sure that we're funding the things that we need to fund in order to make it work efficiently. We'll continue to look at that as we ...

The Speaker: Thank you.

Second supplemental.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It doesn't sound like the triage protocol is actually working that well. Given that the minister said yesterday that her triage policy "intends to prioritize serious and violent cases" and given that every time an alleged murderer or sexual offender walks free, it hurts Albertans and shocks Albertans, Minister, will you please either provide us with evidence that your triage policy is working or come up with a solution that works for all involved?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's quite clear to us that every time a matter isn't adjudicated in court, every time someone walks free without the victim or the family of the victim even getting to see a day in court, that hurts all Albertans, and it hurts the justice system in that perception as well. That's why we have brought in measures to ensure that the justice system is able to focus on those serious and violent offences. When the Jordan decision came down, the system had been underfunded for so long that we were too far behind to catch up with just resources. We're also ensuring that we're putting additional resources in. It's pretty rich for them when . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Electricity Regulated Rate Cap

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, Albertans received a mailer telling them that the NDP government will cover them when the market price for electricity exceeds 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour. Today at the Public Accounts meeting the assistant deputy minister confirmed that the NDP government paid $9 million in April 2018 to cover higher prices. To the Minister of Energy: why do you force taxpayers to subsidize the electricity bills of ratepayers to cover up your failed ideological policies? Taxpayers and ratepayers are the same.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we are changing the system. It's a holistic change because the system that we inherited was broken. As we go through the stages, it's important to help educate Albertans on what those changes are, what they will look like. One of the promises we made was capping rates at 6.8 cents should those rates rise above that, and it's important for Albertans to understand how that rate cap is going to work.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that the Energy department's 2016-17 annual report says that the cost of subsidizing all of the power bills is currently unknown, yet the NDP have budgeted $74.3 million this year to cover the electricity costs over and above 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour, how would the NDP government know that $74.3 million would be enough to cover higher electricity prices since they don't know how much it will cost?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we look at forward prices. We take in a lot of information from third-party sources to look at the trends for electricity going forward. That's one of the ways we come up with that. I would take exception that we don't know the costs. The costs are actually in our budget projections. All they have to do is open up the budget and have a look.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister didn't know who Neil McCrank was during the budget estimates and given that Neil McCrank sued the government for maligning his reputation and that with McCrank being under indemnification, the AUC ended up paying his legal fees, Minister, how much did this lawsuit cost taxpayers, and did you admit the mistake and apologize? How much did you settle for?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, all of that information is publicly available. You just have to look either on our website or in the budget projections.

But I have to say, you know, last weekend hearing about the plans to abolish the carbon levy, last night's discussion about the capacity market, things we're looking to change, that industry wants to know what your take is on the capacity market, because they're very worried.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Athabasca University

Mr. Piquette: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Athabasca University provides Albertans with a high-quality university education no matter where they live. In my riding it is also a pillar of our community, providing high-quality jobs and educational opportunities. The staff of AU and the greater Athabasca community are grateful for the support our government has provided to keep the university strong in Athabasca. However, recently there have been concerns over professional jobs being lost to big urban centres. What is the government doing to make sure that Athabasca University is sustainable and that jobs in Athabasca are protected?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. He's been a powerful advocate for Athabasca University and the town of Athabasca. We're proud of the work that we've done to put AU back on track and to keep it in the town of Athabasca. We commissioned a third-party review, written by Dr. Ken Coates, and we've been working with AU to implement its recommendations. We've made clear that as progress is being made, jobs in the town of Athabasca must be protected. The Coates report calls for enhancing the role of Athabasca University in Athabasca and states that "AU should be able to maintain if not expand the size of its operations in the Town of Athabasca."

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that under the previous Conservative government there were grave concerns about roller coaster funding and the long-term financial sustainability of AU, what has the government done to provide financial stability?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, we know that one of the favourite Conservative pastimes was making cuts to postsecondary education, and that made the problems at Athabasca University worse. We've been proud to increase our funding by 2 per cent for our universities and colleges every year that we've been in government, including at Athabasca University. We were very pleased to see that the financial reports from AU last year were positive, and thanks to our support, they are now on much more stable financial footing. If the Conservatives ever got the chance again, they'd make more cuts and undo the progress that we've made at Athabasca University.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Coates report provides a way forward for Athabasca University to thrive in the years to come, what is the minister doing to make sure that the third-party report is being followed through on?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're working closely with Athabasca University's new president and board chair to see this work through. AU has been consulting and recently presented a strategic plan, which outlines a path forward and clear goals and objectives through 2022. I'll be visiting Athabasca in the coming weeks and providing further updates on our government's support for Athabasca University, and I look forward to having the hon. member there with me.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Carbon Trunk Line and the Sturgeon Refinery

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is the potential for benefit to Albertans from our investment in the Sturgeon refinery, but there are also substantial risks. Earlier today in Public Accounts I had the opportunity to ask the Department of Energy about one specific risk, and that is the status of the Alberta carbon trunk line. Now, you'll recall that this project is meant to support enhanced oil recovery while sequestering carbon. Unfortunately, we learned that this project still does not have financing and still does not have a start date for construction. To the Minister of Energy: what happens if the Alberta carbon trunk line isn't built by the time the Sturgeon refinery starts full operations later this year?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the carbon trunk line is part of that project. You know, we work with the North West upgrader. We're looking forward to the opening of that refinery. It's going to be a good project for Alberta, and we'll continue to monitor the results as we go forward.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's about the furthest thing from an answer that I've seen in this House for some time, and that's saying something.

Mr. Speaker, in my risk management days we used to say that a problem is when a risk becomes a reality, so I'd say that the minister, unfortunately, has a problem on her hands. Given that the Alberta carbon trunk line was an integral part of the original business case for Alberta's investment in the Sturgeon refinery and given that the project not only hasn't gotten started, it hasn't even secured financing, to the Minister of Energy one more time: if the refinery is forced to emit carbon instead of capturing it, how much will they pay in carbon tax, and does that affect the return to Albertans from this investment?

The Speaker: Hon. member, you're going to have a second supplemental. Maybe you didn't hear at the beginning. I found a thread, a number of preambles in that question. So when you get the next chance, please reduce them.

The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we've been clear. We have two projects right now, the Shell Quest project and certainly the North West upgrader project. We've been clear that we would continue with those. They were both continuing contracts from the previous government. I can assure the member that I'll get him some specifics. I don't have those specifics before me.

We're looking with interest at the costs of carbon capture. We do know that in places like Saskatchewan the cost is about a hundred dollars a tonne. We're doing many projects here for far less than that, and that's good for Albertans, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given during estimates we learned that the price of the Sturgeon refinery has gone up yet another $300 million, to $9.7 billion, and may go further over budget and given we still don't have a date for full-scale production and given the likelihood of additional costs from the carbon levy, from delays to the Alberta carbon trunk line, one more time to the Minister of Energy: if the Alberta carbon trunk line is delayed or never built, will that tip the scales for the Sturgeon refinery from profit to loss?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I promised before, I will get back to the member on that matter. I don't have the facts before me.

But I do know that the North West refinery is slowly ramping up. It takes about a year. So far it's been successful. I've seen examples of low-sulphur diesel, which is going to be good for us. Again, we are looking, with interest, at the two carbon capture projects, and I'll have more to say once I find out some more information.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Seniors' Housing

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the Member for Stony Plain said, "We know that people are healthier – physically, mentally, and emotionally – when they can transition into care in their own communities." The Health minister, in response, said, "We are committed to helping Albertans lead healthy and safe lives in their homes and in their communities." And just yesterday the seniors minister said, "I know they want to age in their communities, close to their loved ones" and "I know seniors across the province want to stay in their communities as they age." If the minister and this NDP government really believe this, what happened to the Berwyn Autumn Lodge and their ability to age in their community?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member mentions the Member for Stony Plain, I want to make sure that she knows that our thoughts are with her today as she undergoes this battle.

I had the opportunity of visiting the Autumn Lodge with the local MLA, the Minister of Energy, just before Christmas and had a lovely visit with some of the residents there. We also worked to make sure that the housing management body knew that there were some additional supports that we could put in place to help them protect that facility if that was their priority. They chose to exercise their own choice on that matter, Mr. Speaker, but we've certainly worked to try to support it through the housing management body.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Loewen: Likewise, our thoughts are with the Member for Stony Plain.

Given that a seniors' facility, owned by the Alberta government, in DeBolt was closed due to a creek bank sliding near it and given that seniors were moved out, some of them right out of the community, and given that this issue has been going on for two years – and I now understand that the ministry just came up with half a solution by saying that they might cover moving and renovations of the buildings – and given that there's no word yet on the acquisition of the land needed, what the community needs to know is: who's responsible for purchasing the land, and will the seniors in DeBolt be able to access the same opportunity to age in their communities as they did before?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, and we appreciate the question. It's certainly one that we've been asking with the housing management body. We respect their local authority over this matter, Mr. Speaker. We've given them resources to consider how they might be able to support movement or transition for those individuals who are impacted, but certainly we respect the fact that the housing management body is the one making this decision. We've been working to try to give them tools to enable them to make the decisions they feel are best.

Mr. Loewen: Given that the DeBolt facility is actually owned by the provincial government, not the housing management, but given that there have been seniors' facilities shut down and that this government keeps talking about the lack of seniors' facilities, how are you going to make up for the shortfall due to the aging population along with the stress of existing facilities that are shutting down?

Ms Hoffman: The member is right to note that there is significant stress and deferred maintenance in this province because we saw that happen over many, many years of budgets being cut any time the price of oil dropped, people being laid off, and we are working diligently to try to address that massive backlog of deferred maintenance, that we've inherited from decades of Conservative governments, Mr. Speaker. We're investing in affordable housing, including affordable housing for seniors in lodges. We've got the biggest investment in that in more than a generation, and we're proud to do that. I wish the members opposite would vote for it every now and then instead of just asking for more resources and then voting down every single budget.

Hospital Helipads

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I received an e-mail from a constituent in Westlock. Last year he observed for months on end as the work at the hospital helipad went on and on and on. "They could have built a whole hospital in the time that effort took," he said. Apparently, the helipad at the Westlock hospital is still not operational, putting the lives of my constituents at risk when they need to medevac to Edmonton or be brought in from an accident scene. Can the Minister of Health explain what is holding up this critical life-saving facility?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With regard to this specific helipad I'll have to get back to the hon. member, but I can tell you that I am aware of two that are undergoing some significant renovations. This is in line with changes that have been made by Transport Canada around helipads. There is a backup plan always, any time they have to decommission one and do renovations or build a new one, to use an adjacent facility, which would sometimes mean a nearby field or a nearby airport. With regard to this very specific one I'll have to get back to the hon. member, but please do know that it is our priority to ensure patient safety, no matter what.

Mr. van Dijken: Given, Mr. Speaker, that there is about $7 million left in this now six-year program of $26 million and given that hospitals around Alberta have had their helipads compromised during a repair schedule that was supposed to be done three years ago, can the minister assure this House that the delays in repairs are over and the hospital helipad work will conclude this year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, that is our hope, but of course patient safety needs to be the number one priority. We need to comply with Transport Canada regulations around these, and I don't control the inspectors who do the final sign-off. Certainly, our goal is to ensure that we have helipads close to health facilities, close to where residents are throughout the province. We are investing in this, and we're committed to ensuring that we have safety throughout our province. We're expanding investment in EMS services as well. On this side of the House we're investing in the health care services that Albertans count on.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that the Fort McMurray hospital used to just land the medevacs in the parking lot and since the order came down medevacs in Fort McMurray as well as in Westlock have had to land at the airport and take an ambulance downtown, losing critical time, when will Westlock and Fort McMurray be able to land their helicopters back at the hospital to help save lives?

Ms Hoffman: Well, thank you very much for the question. Again, Transport Canada changed some of their regulations around where helicopters were allowed to land and how they had to be provided safely. Certainly, we understand that you may have some questions for folks in Ottawa. I understand that your leader likes to spend time there. Maybe he can ask them on your behalf. On this side of the House we're working to comply with the safety in parameters to ensure that people, no matter where they live in the province, can be safe, can be transported safely. On this side of the House we're investing in health care instead of pushing for deep ideological cuts, just like your membership voted for on the weekend.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Wildfire Season Preparedness

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've arrived at two years since the fires ravaged Fort McMurray. Although we recall the mismanagement of resources that occurred by the government and the ill-preparedness, we now have concrete numbers that show a $20 million reduction in firefighting supplies, services, and equipment before the fire. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: how can you defend that to the people of Fort McMurray that lost everything?

The Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and for the member's question. You know, without a doubt, protecting Alberta's communities and citizens is a top priority. That's why we continue to invest in forest fire fighting equipment, in people, in contractors, why we've made changes to legislation to ensure that our communities stay safe, why we've tripled the investment in FireSmart so our communities right across the province stay safe. We'll continue doing that good work.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, fire season is here, and there are already fire bans appearing in parts of our province. On May 3, 2016, the Premier said that this government was ready. In Fort McMurray there are still 2,700 outstanding claims on insurance two years later despite our NDP government being prepared. What assurances do Albertans have that this government is prepared for another disaster?

The Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I stated on the first question, you know, this government is committed to the protection of Alberta's communities, protection of our forests, protection of infrastructure, protection of our citizens, and that will continue. We've taken steps. We've taken all the recommendations on the Flap Top Complex, for instance. All those recommendations have been implemented. We're looking at all other recommendations that have taken place in reports for the past years as well to ensure that we do everything we can, and we will continue to do so.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, last year I was given confidential information that during the opening day of the fire the command centre had been locked out of the computer and was unable to contain emergency codes. Given that the computer had to be reset by someone in Edmonton, to the minister: what actions have you taken to ensure that this type of incident does not happen again?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I was just up in Fort Mac, actually, a couple of weeks ago – and I did see the member there – to see some of the things that were happening, the growth, the building. There's still a lot to do. A lot of houses need to be rebuilt. But one of the things: after every single disaster that we have in this province, we do a postassessment report. We had 21 recommendations come from KPMG. A lot of those have already been fulfilled, and a lot of that centres around communication, which is key in these kinds of instances. Also, I put a bill to the House where I talk about communication and understanding roles and responsibilities of local officials on the ground, where the hand-off is from local officials to us.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Edmonton LRT Valley Line West Leg

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The proposed west leg of the valley line LRT is a critical piece of infrastructure for residents of Edmonton-Meadowlark and all of west Edmonton. On March 23 Edmonton city council finalized the LRT plan, with a majority of councillors supporting it. To the Minister of Transportation: has the city of Edmonton submitted their finalized proposal, and when can we expect to see a formal agreement with the province?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'd like to thank the member for the question. Our officials in Transportation have received a draft business case for the west valley LRT project from the city of Edmonton. We're currently in the process of reviewing that. You know, I want to say that our budget includes an investment of $3 billion, split between Edmonton and Calgary, for LRT projects over the next 10 years. I want to assure the House that we're committed to bringing this form of clean, efficient transportation to both of our major cities.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Recent changes to the design of the west leg of the valley line have increased the original proposed costs of the project. Will this have any effect on the city's ability to get the funding they require?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. We have a great working relationship with the city of Edmonton on this, and we're committed to working with them to finalize the details. I want to assure the House that the financial commitment that the government has made to the city of Edmonton and the city of Calgary will stand, and I'm sure that they will be able to move ahead on the construction of this line with the funding that we provided.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Minister. Once again to the same minister: if your department accepts city council's proposal, how soon can we expect to see this project ready for procurement?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to indicate to the hon. member that while the government of Alberta is prepared to provide significant funding to both Edmonton and Calgary for their LRT projects, these projects are their projects, and the schedules are determined by those cities as they move forward. I'm sure that the city of Edmonton will be able to move this project forward in a timely fashion, and we're there to support that.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to follow up on good questions put earlier by my colleague from Airdrie to the Minister of Health. I believe that all members recognize the great services provided by midwives to women giving birth and that often this can help to save the health care system funds and provide more options to expectant mothers. Because I'm new here, I must confess that I don't understand why there's a cap imposed by the government with respect to midwifery. Could the minister please advise why, and how can this be changed to increase access to this efficient option for childbirth?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question, the opportunity to discuss the way the Health budget works a little bit. We do have some folks who are fee-for-service. We do have some folks who are salaried within Health. Certainly, within midwives, midwives are paid on a course of care, so they are paid, essentially, a fee for service, but the reason why we have a budget is to ensure that we can give certainty to those midwives that they will have opportunities to engage in those courses of care and that the government will be in a position to pay for it. We certainly appreciate the important role that midwives play and are proud that we've expanded the number of courses of care by 400 every year over the last four years.

Mr. Kenney: Given that I appreciate the minister's thoughtful and substantive answer, Mr. Speaker, what could be done to increase access to this important service so that women who would like the assistance of a midwife in childbirth can have access to that?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for speaking in this House about women's choice, women's choice around accessing the type of health care provider that they choose to be able to support them during that period of their lives. We are certainly pleased that on this side of the House we've increased investment in health care every single year, that we are planning on hiring more health care workers, not laying them off and sending them onto the streets, and that we honour the women who are exercising their choice around midwifery services by increasing funding in this area every year.

Mr. Kenney: I'm not sure that was an answer, Mr. Speaker, so would the minister please consider lifting the cap on midwifery services to ensure greater access for Alberta women to midwives for expectant mothers?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question and the proposal. We certainly are interested in ensuring that we have a well-funded health care system throughout Alberta. We've got a very good working relationship with the association that represents midwives, and I think they appreciate that during an economic downturn, rather than repeating mistakes of the past, bringing deep cuts to health care, we've increased opportunities for midwives and for women to choose a midwife. We respect the fact that this is a choice women are making. Every year we've increased it by 400 additional courses of care. We have a government that's stable, and we're working to expand those opportunities for women instead of moving with rash ideological cuts. I appreciate that they want lift the cap, but where would they cut...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. Thank you.

Hon. members, we'll proceed in 30 seconds.

United Conservative Party Candidate Selection

Mr. Fildebrandt: Some of my colleagues here will know that I've fallen back into the bad old habit of smoking. Over the last week I made the decision to quit, though. For those of you who know me well, old habits die hard. There are some times in life when you need to know when to quit, like smoking, and I'll admit, to those who have seen me hidden by the east entrance, that I haven't always been successful.

But sometimes in life knowing when not to quit is even more important. When Albertans have their backs up against the wall, we don't tuck tail and run. We put our heads down and charge like a bull at the Strathmore Stampede. When I was told that I would not be allowed to run in my own constituency because of affirmative action gender quotas, I didn't quit, but when I was told to just keep quiet and keep my head down until all this passed, I did. It wasn't in my character to do so, and it was a mistake. I allowed the scheming backroom operators to dictate my behaviour as they are now dictating the behaviour of others.

I was the first member of this House to call for the unification of conservatives, but I'm honestly not sure if history will judge that to have been the right thing to do anymore. Conditional for supporting unification was the grassroots guarantee that local members would select their own candidates and that members would set the policies of the party. If you believe in democracy, then you accept that you lose a vote sometimes on policy or on your hand-picked candidates.

I can't be whipped. As long as I've been an MLA, I have always voted freely and have broken with the party whip on more than one occasion. One of the things I'm grateful for right now is that there is no party whip telling me how to vote or even not how to vote. The only people who get to tell me how to vote are the people of Strathmore-Brooks. Party backroomers may have stripped the members in my constituency of the right to vote for the candidate of their choice, but they have not stripped me of my voice to say: I don't quit.

Rail Transportation Backlog

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, it's certainly not news that Canada has a serious issue with shipping via rail, and that problem has been coming to a crisis point for several years. Recent reports indicate that not only grain and energy producers are having a difficult time with the critical shortage of rail cars, but it's also severely impacting the forestry industry.

As the minister noted in this House, he has heard from forestry stakeholders that the mills are having difficulties getting their products to customers. They're having to take extraordinary measures to avoid unplanned shutdowns. Now, that's not good news for anyone. In fact, last winter only one of the companies surveyed got more than half of its cars on time. All other mills were under 50 per cent, with the worst-off mill only getting 14 per cent of the cars they ordered.

Now, how on earth can a company function effectively if they can't get the majority of their products to their consumers? Without access to rail, companies are incurring ballooning costs due to warehousing their inventory and hiring more and more trucks to prevent inventories from piling up at mills and warehouses. Mr. Speaker, these companies need to get their products to market, many of which have already been paid for.

This is a crisis not only for the energy sector, but for forestry, agriculture, and numerous other sectors that count on railways to ship their goods. While it's understandable that weather can cause havoc upon the prairies, especially in the winter, the lack of infrastructure such as engines, grain cars, flat decks, and even staff to run them – all need investment to curb this problem. After all, our two major rail companies have been operating in this climate since the 1900s, so I'm sure they've learned a thing or two about prairie winters.

Mr. Speaker, we are at the tipping point here, and so far all of the Band-Aid solutions by government and industry are falling far short of solution, especially for the forestry industry.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Bill 16
Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure
Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce Bill 16, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. Amendments to the act will ensure electoral fairness by requiring that all election campaigns are subject to the same spending limit. We are acting in continuation of what we've been doing from day one, making sure that ordinary Albertans decide who represents them, not private interest groups or big money.

If passed, Bill 16 would guarantee a level playing field by ensuring that associated parties cannot circumvent the statutory spending limit rules to support the same candidates but also increase transparency by enhancing reporting requirements. Our government continues to act on our commitment to ensure that our electoral system is fair, accountable, transparent to all, and these will help to preserve the fairness and integrity of Alberta's democratic electoral system.

So it's with pleasure that I would like to move first reading of Bill 16.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a first time]

2:50 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The President of Treasury Board and Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of the C.D. Howe Institute's report entitled The Numbers Game: Rating the Fiscal Accountability of Canada's Senior Governments, 2018. This report shows a huge improvement in Alberta's fiscal accountability since our government took over. In its final three years the Conservatives received a B grade and two C grades. I'm proud to say that Alberta received its third consecutive A plus grade for fiscal transparency under this government. I'm very proud that we've improved this rating of transparency and accountability dramatically from the opaque budgeting of the Conservative government, one the Auditor General couldn't even get his head around. Here are five copies.

The Speaker: Are there any other tablings, hon. members? It appears not.

I believe, hon. members, we are at Orders of the Day.

Orders of the Day
Government Motions

Election Commissioner Appointment

16. Mr. Mason moved:
 Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur in the report of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices tabled on April 10, 2018, Sessional Paper 67/2018, and recommend to the Lieutenant Governor in Council that Mr. Lorne Gibson be appointed as Election Commissioner for a term of five years commencing May 15, 2018.

[Debate adjourned May 2]

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On a point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order?

Mr. Mason: If I may, yeah. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to briefly correct a misstatement that was made by me when this matter was under debate last week. At that time I indicated that the position of Election Commissioner is already covered under the sunshine list provisions of the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act.* That is not correct. I was misinformed on the matter. Due to an inadvertent omission this position was not added to the list of independent officers covered by that act. That was an oversight which, I should inform the House, we mean to correct through the miscellaneous statutes amendment act, and those changes would be brought forward in this sitting.

I can further advise that no contract has been signed by Mr. Gibson, and there is therefore no contract to disclose. If and when a contract is signed, Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to discuss the matter of early disclosure, not only with Mr. Gibson but also with two other independent officers who, I should note, have been appointed by the House without a similar request being made.

The Speaker: Hon. member, that is a unique kind of point of order. I understood that we would not raise that until the end of the debate; nonetheless, it has been said, and we'll adjust accordingly.

I believe we're on Motion 16. Who wishes to speak to the motion? The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As always, it's a pleasure to rise in the House and to speak to Motion 16. I mean, we've been very clear on this side of the House on our impression of this process. I have to say that I haven't had the privilege of being on a selection committee before this time. I actually really, really enjoyed the process. It was very interesting. There was a tremendous amount of information and great discussion that comes to the table. It's always, really, a huge privilege to be able to be with members and find out their particulars on what they believe to be true about a particular situation. You learn a lot about each other.

Again, I would like to acknowledge the chair and his ability to manage this particular committee as there was a lot of very passionate and robust debate about this particular position. Just to restate for the record, Mr. Speaker, this side of the House, the opposition, made very clear statements towards the lack of necessity for a commissioner to be appointed through debates on Bill 32.

I'd like to also make a couple of other things extremely clear. We felt that there were other people that would have better fit the position. Having said that, no matter who had filled the position, Mr. Speaker, we would have been asking for the exact same amendments, the exact same amount of transparency, and we would have still altogether, no matter who had been chosen, remained with our original stance, that we believed that the commissioner was not necessary from the beginning, being that we were told straight out that the commissioner position was already being handled extremely well, as it was originally, through the officer.

I just want to clarify that because the government has tried to make a point that this is personal or that we are just attacking one particular person. I want to make that very, very clear, that that is not the case and that, again, no matter who had been chosen in this particular situation, we would have very much backed our original decision on this side of the House that the Election Commissioner position was not necessary given the fact that we had been informed in committee that the particulars of this particular situation were being handled very well as they are. Just to be clear with that because of the government wanting to take a personal position on this or saying that we are having a personal issue or a personal position with this person: that's not the case.

We've said on many occasions that he's extremely qualified, that there are obvious, you know, reasons that you would choose this person under normal circumstances, but because of historical issues with previous governments and those concerns, which we raised over and over again, and considering, too, that the government actually takes responsibility for the people that are handled here – interestingly enough, in discussions I was asked if I was concerned, if I was concerned about this commissioner being chosen. I found that to be a very interesting question. Why would I need to be concerned about an officer of the Legislature? I don't know, Mr. Speaker. Should I be concerned? This is a question that was asked of me, if I should be nervous or concerned or worried about this particular person. It's an interesting question, isn't it?

I put it to the Legislature that I don't believe that any of us should be concerned. I don't believe that an officer of the Legislature should have any more power than what is designated in their role to do. As I understand it, with this role the commissioner will be investigating situations and, quite frankly, is going to be investigating situations – I mean, I can speak for rural. I've never run in a city riding. In rural ridings many, many, many times we have humungous areas to cover. Quite often it's our families and our husbands, wives, our children – in fact, on my CA I have my husband and my son. Initially, it was my husband, my son, and my sister-in-law, along with three members that were from the original party, that started that CA. Had they not supported me and supported the desire to go forward, we wouldn't have had a constituency association, let alone being able to support me going forward with my election campaign.

I can't begin to tell you how important – and I'm sure everybody here can understand that. We're so, so grateful for the support that we receive on any of our individual campaigns. These moms and dads and husbands and wives and kids that are all involved are the ones that could potentially – they are going to be the ones under investigation. This is a really, really sensitive issue, and based on what we saw with many of the other applicants coming forward, we saw that sensitivity. We understood that. That's at least my interpretation. Of course, you'll have to take my word, Mr. Speaker, and my lived experience on this and my anecdotal experience, which doesn't take away from any of the anecdotes that other members in the Legislature would present because theirs are as valuable as mine. I'm not trying to overstate that. I just want to make clear where my position comes from.

The Chief Electoral Officer had made it very clear that he was extremely capable and that his office was capable to handle all of the work that was coming his way. Even with that, the government pushed through Bill 32 in order to create this position. It was quite reckless in the aspect that it was forced through the Legislative Assembly Office, and it was a job posting that was “composed.” That is a very interesting word. It's created. It's an evolved position.

An interesting piece of this, I'd like to add, is that never – it's funny because when Lorne Gibson had the Chief Electoral Officer position before and his contract wasn't renegotiated, at no point do I ever recall any talks about the need for a commissioner. We always talked about officers. We always talked about that role. Interestingly enough, Mr. Speaker, the idea and the objective of commissioner never came up. It's interesting now that that's the role that's being applied for. Interestingly enough, we're here with a composed job for a commissioner. I just find it an interesting intersectionality of information.

The other thing, too, that we've spoken about at length, is that the job posting for this was done over Christmas. Mr. Speaker, in any situation why would a government make a posting over a holiday? I don't understand the logistics of that. I don't understand the logic. I don't understand how there's any relevance to posting it then. There weren't enough people that responded, so then they had to rush back in and do another posting. There were people here that had to come back in to make certain deadlines. They had to come in over the Christmas holidays. That's an amazing staff. Congratulations and kudos to the folks who did that because that's a lot to ask. I know that as MLAs we're all on all the time. It doesn't matter when we're home, whether it's Christmas or Easter. I mean, we're all on all the time, but that's the decision that we've made being elected officials, being public officials.

But to create a brand new position – and Mr. Speaker, the position was created in less than 48 hours – and then decide to open it during Christmas? I just don't understand it. It was more expensive to run it over Christmas. It was $20,000. We actually advised the government not to do this. There was a huge rush, which we don't understand. I still to this day very much don't understand.

So in respect to that, I would like to make an amendment.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we now have it distributed. An amendment is proposed. We will be identifying it as amendment A2.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, sir. I would like to move that Government Motion 16 be amended by striking out “a term of five years commencing May 15, 2018,” and substituting “a term commencing on May 15, 2018, and expiring 12 months after polling day for the next provincial general election in Alberta.” The reason for this, Mr. Speaker, is that this aligns with the Chief Electoral Officer. He has similar wording in his contract, so it'll align with that. There is absolutely no reason for the commissioner's contract to go beyond what the officer's contract goes to.

Basically, Mr. Gibson is supplementing and, in some ways, quite redundant in his position to the officer. The suggestion would be, Mr. Speaker, that that job and the contract should align with the officer. It makes complete sense. There's absolutely no reason – the whole reason to have these folks here is to help us through the election period. The work has already been done. Mr. Gibson has already been hired, so we would like to make sure that taxpayers get the most for their dollars and that Mr. Gibson is hired for a term that aligns with the electoral officer, which would make for a very efficient use of his time. I'm quite certain, based on Mr. Gibson's history and who he is and his obvious ability to do his job, that one year will be more than enough time to give him what he needs in order to finish up any concerns or outstanding issues that he may have had during the election.

As I've stated previously, there's been some interesting conduct with regard to this particular situation. This process was so rushed. The process was definitely one-sided. The process could have led to a mutual decision about a person. It would have been very, very easy to have a vote that was more consistent with the feel of all of the people that were part of the committee. We had an opportunity also to look at – we want to make sure, Mr. Speaker, especially because this is a new position and we're not quite sure how the position will work out. I think it's better to err on the side of efficiency so that Mr. Gibson, when he comes in to set up his office, is given a very clear set of rules on the way his job will go so that he is able to make the most use of his time while he's here to benefit Albertans. It is their taxpayer dollars that go toward paying for this position. Because it's a brand new position, I think that we owe it to ourselves to see how that position goes.

If Mr. Gibson is hired back to do the job afterwards, his contract can be renewed at any time after that 12 months or during that period, I'm certain, with the committee getting together again to renew his contract. I'm sure the government is quite certain that this is the person for the job. I'm sure he'll do an excellent job. I'm not quite sure why we have to extend it to the maximum, Mr. Speaker. I think it would be better if we bring that down, get his work done, and then we have an adequate amount of work to be able to look at to see how that contract should be renewed. Should the contract need to be extended for any particular reason, it would be worth while to look at renewing his contract should that need to happen.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, it would align with the election, which makes the most sense. If the election would be in 2019, he would stay for 12 months after that election to finish up any particular work that he would need to do at that time. Based on Mr. Gibson and his very, very excellent resume I'm absolutely sure that he would have no problem getting this done. He seems, based on his resume, extremely efficient. He gets his jobs done on time. And I think that, with anything, efficiency happens when we give structure.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View?

Seeing and hearing none, we're dealing with amendment A2. The Member for Calgary-Currie on the amendment, correct?

Mr. Malkinson: That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Malkinson: Mr. Speaker, amendment A2 is seeking to shorten the term of Mr. Gibson's appointment to 12 months after the next election. That would mean there would be a term of basically two years, you know, assuming the election happens according to the time of the next expected election.

Now, how I would interpret this, having watched this whole process, Mr. Speaker, from the beginning – I just got a note from the Clerk that we started debating this motion on May 1. We are currently at May 8. This is a clear attempt, I think, for the opposition to fire Mr. Gibson even before he has a chance to meaningfully get the office set up and started. It is a clear attempt to frustrate this process.

I'm going to leave that aside for a moment and talk a little bit more about the amendment itself. Twelve months after the next polling day, Mr. Speaker. Now, elections tend to be when perhaps electoral issues, whether it be perhaps bad behaviour by a third party or by political parties, tend to come to bear, during an election. I'm not casting shade on any third party or any particular political party, but historically that's when elections tend to generate the most complaints, that Mr. Gibson would potentially be investigating. To say, "Oh, you're going to have go up for review in 12 months," when the government of the day might be under investigation at that time, perhaps seems like a bad idea and goes against the spirit of Mr. Gibson's position.

I think this amendment is an extremely bad idea. I ask the members from the opposition why they continue to frustrate the process, Mr. Speaker. We have already seen multiple news articles that say this idea that, you know, perhaps there were some problems with how he was not appointed the previous time. I think I would be happy to talk to the members previous on that.

But I think I'm going to leave with one question for the opposition on this amendment: when will you stop frustrating the process, when will you stop filibustering the process, and when you will pass this motion so that Mr. Gibson can start the good work to protect our democracy?

I will be voting against this, and I encourage everyone in this House to stop this ridiculous filibuster and get his appointment approved.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View. Is it on 29(2)(a)?

Mrs. Aheer: Yes, sir.

The Speaker: Go ahead.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Oh, there were lots of words: filibuster, frustrated, fired. I'm going to deal with all of those. First of all, nobody on this side has said anything about firing Mr. Gibson. Absolutely not. I love the assumption that we're going to be in government, though, so thank you so much. I love even more the assumption that we would fire Mr. Gibson because we might be in trouble. What did I just say to you? There are accusations that I should be concerned about? What should I be concerned about? Can somebody in here tell me what I need to be worried about? I will go over all of my – I don't know. If you have some concerns for me, I would love to know about them. Please list them and send them my way. If I can avoid a run-in with the commissioner, I'd prefer that.

Secondly, the reason, Mr. Speaker, that we have democracy and filibustering is for robust debate, and I think the only thing that's frustrated is the member, to be quite honest. I don't think we're frustrated over here debating this. I'm sorry that you're frustrated. That's not something I can help you out with.

However, we will continue to do what we were hired to come here and do, which is to filibuster this issue until we understand and make sure we've made every single point on this side about our concerns. To be clear, when the Election Commissioner is hired, if for some reason there's a concern about his work or anything like that, guess what? We have an officer who is actually completely competent and very able to continue on with any concerns.

I find it interesting. The member across obviously likes Mr. Lorne Gibson very, very much and has said on many occasions that he's completely capable, and now he's basically saying that Mr. Gibson is not capable to finish his job 12 months after the election cycle. Honestly, if there are concerns or if a government, for example, is under question about particular situations and they can't figure that out within a year, we have trouble, Houston. We need to figure that out sooner.

Mr. Speaker, to be clear, we will filibuster on this side until we feel that the debate has been handled appropriately and we have done our job on behalf of the taxpayers that have put us here.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much. I find it interesting that, you know, all of a sudden the members opposite have a sudden enthusiasm for the democratic process when over and over again they walk out on the vote on Bill 9, an important issue for women in this province. If anyone is not doing their job, I would suggest it's the hon. members.

But I will get back to some of the comments that were in here before. What I said, Mr. Speaker, was that to have the term expire 12 months after an election means that there would potentially be investigations that would be in progress. I think, to anyone who's listening to this debate right now, one could logically see why that might potentially be a conflict of interest, to have the government of the day have to perhaps have a different Election Commissioner because the one that they would have currently might be investigating them, and the government of the day might not like that. One of the reasons why Mr. Gibson is an incredible candidate for this position is that he has a long, proud history of speaking truth to power. That is why this amendment is an amazingly not good idea.

I ask again the hon. members why they keep filibustering what should be a simple appointment. To say it's because they've suddenly found righteousness for doing their jobs – perhaps I look forward to, you know, introducing them back to the House when we have a vote on Bill 9. Hopefully, they will stand up for their constituents then.

Now, they're going to go on and say: oh, the position is perhaps redundant. They're fair to say that, but that bill has already passed, and I think the ship to debate on that has passed, Mr. Speaker.

I know that they're going to talk about how there were other experienced candidates, and I would say to that, in fact, that he is the most experienced candidate. That is why the majority of the members on that committee voted for him to be the candidate, Mr. Speaker.

Some say that there's a cloud around him. Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm happy in a future 29(2)(a) to go on a very loud history lesson on how the previous PC government was making partisan appointments. I think we could all see why that would be a problem if we're going to have fair and open elections, that we have the government of the day appointing returning officers who are partisan. I mean, of course, members of the UCP: although a new name, a good majority of them are from members of the previous PC Party.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any other members who would like to speak to amendment A2? The Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for allowing me to speak on this very important Government Motion 16. You know, the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View's amendment: I think it's very simple, changing the term to 12 months after the next election.

As the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View already said in her comments, the government side fought tooth and nail to have this person selected. Like, you should have been there. I think the committee was more furious and feisty than the movie 300, Mr. Speaker. I'm not even making this up. This was, like, predetermined: this is the person we want, he's our candidate, and we're doing whatever we can to get this person in. That was the intent of that search committee. I had the honour to be in the search committees for the Auditor General and Ombudsman, and in those two search committees the members from all parties worked for a common goal in a nonpartisan way to have this person selected so that the person can do their job to serve Albertans, but this was clearly not the case here.

They're talking about, like, how amazing this person is, and we don't deny that. Of course, this person brings a lot of experience, Mr. Speaker, but I said that. I quoted that in the committee. He also brings a lot of stigma, a lot of baggage. When the government is trying to create this new office, we need a fresh start. We need a noncontroversial person. Why we have to have this person as soon as this person gets selected – and I have nothing against that person, Mr. Gibson, and I think he has, you know, served the public, and that's great.

For the government member to ask our Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, "You guys must be concerned," I find it, like, very offensive, actually. Why would we be concerned? We're not concerned with Mr. Gibson. We are however concerned with the intention of this government. The Chief Electoral Officer, Mr. Glen Resler, on the public record – and, Mr. Speaker, I think I'm saying this for probably the 10th time – said that his office is totally capable of handling all the inquiries, all the problems, all the issues, so there's no need to create a new office.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, this government wants to believe that they're fighting for Albertans and their families. This office is going to cost $1.5 million plus the office expenses and whatnot. On top of that, they will not disclose his salary. This doesn't even pass the smell test. [interjections] It's easier to heckle. You can heckle after 2019 all you want because that's all you'll be doing.

The Speaker: Hon. members.

Mr. Gill: It hurts. The truth hurts, Mr. Speaker. We don't heckle, so let me talk.

Funny thing. I was having a conversation on a side note yesterday with the Government House Leader, and you know what I said? I said: it must be really hard for you to do your job because your members will not listen to you. Yesterday. You can probably talk to him.

We have a job to do, Mr. Speaker, to defend people. Did you see that? They think this is a joke. Over 4 million people are depending on the decisions that are made in this House, and they think it is a joke.

An Hon. Member: Do you see me laughing?

The Speaker: Hon. member.
Please proceed.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that I'll try to speak to the amendment.

You know, as I said, the temperature was very high in the search committee, and it was told by all members that this person is like a godsend. If he is that good a person, I think he should be able to do his job. He should be able to handle all the complaints 12 months after the election. Don't you think that's a reasonable amendment? I think it's a reasonable amendment.

Now the government is not willing to disclose his salary. That was the whole idea of this bill and this office, to be more transparent, take the black money out of politics, so let's do that. Let's take the black money. Let's be transparent. Let's tell the people who are paying our salaries. Let's tell Albertans, who are paying this office and the whole set-up. You guys can heckle all you want after the next election, I'm telling you, but this is the serious thing. Let's tell them that their money is going towards this office. Why do we need to hide it from Albertans? I don't understand.

I think we should support this amendment, and if there's any issue, let's try to talk about the issue, how we can make this bill stronger and this office more transparent. I think that's the real job we have at hand, not to do a personal attack and heckle and, you know, all those things. We're here, and we have a duty to perform. Let's do our duty to the best of our abilities, and let's see how we can work together and how we can make this land a better land. How can we serve our people in a better way?

We have a bill which has passed. That's okay. Let's work together to make this office a better office so that the officer, Mr.

Gibson, can perform his duties without any interruption, without any political parties, no matter who is in the government. I don't think there are any objections to that. There shouldn't be any objections to that. Why are we not doing this? I don't know.

I mean, like, from the beginning of this search committee, when the advertisement was done during Christmastime, the government members were warned, Mr. Speaker, that it's only 48 hours and that this advertisement in the local media, wherever this advertisement was going to go, was not going to attract enough coverage. I don't know. Some people are saying that they just wanted this person, so they already knew, it's safe to assume. I don't know that that's why they advertised during the holidays, so that nobody else would find this ad. I don't know. But we're past that point.

Since we've passed the point, I think we can make this a stronger bill. We can make this office a stronger office, be more transparent, what this government intends to say every time. They claim that. So why are we hiding from Albertans? If this person is that great that he's so capable, he should be able to perform his duties unless the government has a crystal ball and they see that, like, there are going to be so many complaints in the next provincial election that this person will not be able to handle that. I don't know.

Look at this, Mr. Speaker. Where is the Government House Leader? I feel bad for the Government House Leader. Honestly, I do.

Anyways, I ask members from both sides, I think: if they believe in transparency and if they believe in serving the public, which they always claim every time they open their mouths, especially when they're not heckling, let's support this amendment. Let's make this office a transparent office and give Mr. Gibson all the tools that he needs to get his job done, to do his duties. However, when we don't need him, we don't need to keep him in his office.

Anyways, I'll ask every member to support this amendment. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, just to remind you – I didn't want to interject – we do not refer to whether there's any member in or out of the House. For the future I would remind you of that.

Mr. Gill: Appreciate it.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Barnes: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank my hon. colleague for standing up and talking so passionately about a procedure that could have been straightforward, that has obviously gone so sideways, with money being wasted, things not being full and transparent to the taxpayer. What I'd like to ask the hon. member – I know, from his past life and experience in business, that two things here seem really, really odd to me, that the officer's contract, a full five years, goes past the Chief Electoral Officer's contract, who he'll be working closely with. He's obviously stated that he felt his department could have done the job. So how does it seem appropriate and practical that the new five-year contract goes much longer than the existing commissioner's contract?

Secondly, we saw and heard how the government just threw away $20,000, totally being unwilling to listen to the Official Opposition members on the committee that spoke clearly: let's get as much value for taxpayer dollars as we can; let's make our time and our staff's time as productive as possible.

Now here we are with a five-year term. It appears to have no probationary period, no out clause for the employer. It seems to me to be a bad protection for the taxpayer, you know, those people that stand in northern Alberta on December 15 and January 15 and loyally and faithfully pay their taxes to help fellow Albertans. In your experience, is it standard business practice to give a five-year contract with no means of review or changing it or escape if necessary? Is this something that is a standard business practice?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. You know what? It's actually a very good point, and we did this bring this concern in our search committee meeting. The bill allows for this office for a term of five years. However, I mean, in any business model – like, in my previous life you would never ever have something like this, as concrete as this, without any probation, without any respect, for the lack of better words, for the taxpayers, who are sending us here. I think it throws all those things out of the window, five years without any clause.

3:30

Mr. Speaker, you probably remember this. I know my PC colleagues are probably going to hate me for this. Do you remember when we had the previous government, and Alberta Health Services – remember the cookie guy? You remember, right? And he was eating. It was, like, Alberta Health Services or – I don't remember. They changed so many times. They centralized, then decentralized. He was eating a cookie, and the media asked him a question, and he said, "Can't you see I'm eating a cookie?" or something like that. It was, like, back in the day. That is disrespectful towards the taxpayers.

My statement is going to be played, I guarantee you, when this person is going to be – people are going to say that this was a waste of the taxpayer's dollar. Sir, I say that with all humility, because we could have done such a better job. It is not a laughing matter. That's respect for the people who wake up, who do night shift, who pay our taxes. It is their money, sir. This is not a laughing matter. It is a laughing matter to you.

Mr. Westhead: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted. What's the point of order, Banff-Cochrane?

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, under 23(h), (i), and (j) the member opposite is ascribing motives to members on this side that are just simply false. It's become a pattern of this particular member. I think he ought to portray the actions in this Legislature accurately. He's not doing so, and I would ask you to ask him to stop.

The Speaker: The party whip for the Official Opposition.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened carefully, and the hon. member that spoke on the government side didn't say what motives the Member for Calgary-Greenway was ascribing, so I don't know how there's possibly a point of order. There's probably a disagreement. For my part, I would, with your permission, advise my colleague to address his remarks through the chair.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I think the point of order being raised: you might be getting awfully close to that, hon. member. But I reminded you a few minutes ago to speak through the chair. You engaged in finger pointing and dialogue with the other side of the House. You then again did it. So please (a) be conscious of the comments that you're making, and (b) speak through the chair.

I think you have a few minutes left.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will definitely speak through you, sir.

Debate Continued

Mr. Gill: Going back to the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, you know, the crux here, Mr. Speaker, is the respect for the taxpayer dollar. Like, will any businessperson make this kind of a deal? That was his question. No. This is a bad deal for taxpayers to have. That's the real issue here.

The Speaker: We are on amendment A2. Are there any other members? The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege. You called it amendment A2 to Government Motion 16, as introduced by my colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View. I will be speaking in favour of this amendment. I do believe it's an amendment that's worthy of consideration. Essentially, the amendment reads: to strike out the portion in the motion that reads "a term of five years commencing May 15, 2018" and substitute "a term commencing on May 15, 2018, and expiring 12 months after polling day for the next provincial general election."

You know, Mr. Speaker, I was fortunate enough to be part of the search committee for Election Commissioner as well as for Ombudsman and Auditor General, and I believe that the work we do on search committees is on behalf of all Albertans in the best interests of all Albertans. In that regard, the member opposite from Calgary that spoke just a little earlier with regard to his concerns that possibly the opposition is frustrating the process – you know, we have not even had all of our members have the ability to speak to the motion, and already the members opposite are considering that we are frustrating the process. I would disagree, and I would suggest that the process is an important process to allow Albertans to be the judge, to allow Albertans to see what is going on, and to get the information. Let Albertans be the judge.

I believe that the search committee, the search that the Leg. Offices Committee began and went through, was a rushed process, much like the member opposite is now trying to rush the deliberations on Government Motion 16. I believe it was done in a fairly reckless manner, and we've heard many of the other members here talk about that and how things were rushed against certain recommendations to the committee with regard to advertising during the holiday season, with regard to building a job description in a very short period of time. I have concerns with that.

But speaking to the amendment, we're looking at working on a term that would be in conjunction with an election period. To end the term of the Election Commissioner a year after the general election would allow the Election Commissioner to do the investigations and all of the work that needs to get done and then to have the term end the same as it is for the Chief Electoral Officer and to be considered for reappointment. I do not believe that this amendment is offside in any way. I believe it would give the Election Commissioner ample time to do the investigations necessary and to file reports. Let's face it, Mr. Speaker. The Election Commissioner's work in years 2 and 3 after an election is probably very minimal, so we can take a look at this and see that to end it a year after appointment or after the next general election is very reasonable.

When the member from Calgary spoke with regard to the opposition frustrating the process – the process started on May 1, the motion was introduced on May 1, and now here we are on May

8. Well, I would suggest that we have not been deliberating for a whole week on this motion. We have had very limited time dedicated to Government Motion 16.

I do believe that Albertans expect us to ensure that we do a thorough review of the work that's being done. It is our role as Official Opposition to ensure that Albertans are fully informed, and I have concerns when members from the governing party are complaining that we're frustrating the process when the process is in place to protect the people – that's the people of Alberta – and that's to allow the people of Alberta to be the judge. If the people of Alberta will judge that we're frustrating the process, so be it. That's on us. If the people of Alberta will judge that the government is operating in a manner that is irresponsible, does not necessarily match with what would be considered good business practice, good planning, then I think that's on them.

This appointment by this committee was not a unanimous choice – that's very clear – so we can expect to have further discussion when we get into this House to discuss this appointment. I believe that that's what Albertans would expect of the Official Opposition.

We need to consider what a five-year term would entail. A five-year term, if started on May 15, 2018, with an election expected in May 2019 and then, four years after that, an election in May 2023, I suppose: in the election of May 2023 the Election Commissioner is right at the end of the five-year term. It seems completely unreasonable to me. It does not seem reasonable to have a term end for your Election Commissioner right in the middle of what would be the very busiest time of that commissioner's job description, their duties. It could land up pretty much right at the same time as the next election after the 2019 election, the election of 2023.

You know, elections can be called early. I understand that. But the reason that we discuss at committee and we discuss here with regard to ending the term a year after the general election is to highlight the fact that there was a good reason that governments in the past had decided to end a term of the Chief Electoral Officer a year after a general election. Why would they make that decision? Because, I believe, it makes good practice. If you end a year after, it gives you time then to do another search. If the individual would retire or if the individual was not reappointed, it gives you time to do the search necessary to fill that position again before the next election.

I believe that's an important process, that Albertans will understand that, yes, a five-year term really doesn't make sense with regard to this position. A five-year term and having the commissioner's reappointment needing to happen right in the middle of an election process, pretty much right when the next election would need to be scheduled, do not make sense, and everyday Albertans understand that. I'm not sure why members of the governing party do not understand that. They continue to move along and move along in a manner that for some reason seems to work in the favour of this individual.

Five years was the maximum term that was allotted or allowed under the legislation. The committee was – essentially, in the advertisement we put out the range of salary that would be allotted to this individual and also that it would be up to a maximum of a five-year term. I don't understand why the government, members from the governing party, would make a decision to go to a full five-year term, the maximum term allowed under the legislation, for an individual that's just beginning in the first-year process. I could maybe understand, if they had been in their office for two years or three years and everybody was very happy with the performance of this individual, possibly looking at a five-year term.

But to look at a five-year term before any work has even been started or accomplished or the like concerns me, especially since the five-year term with this position, Election Commissioner, lands us up right in the middle of what would be considered probably the next election after the 2019 election. I do not believe that that's in the best interests of Albertans.

I am here to work on behalf of Albertans and to provide common-sense solutions to the ideas that the government is putting forward and, at the same time, hope that the members from the governing party see the sense in those common-sense solutions. I believe that this amendment, amendment A2, to end the term a year after the next general election aligns with what we would expect for the Chief Electoral Officer and makes perfectly good sense. To end it 12 months after the next provincial election allows us to recognize that the work that's necessary to get completed, the investigations that are necessary to get completed on the previous election could get done. The reappointment could happen or not. The individual could retire. That would give this Assembly the opportunity to take the time necessary to find a replacement before the next election cycle starts.

I do not want to be in a situation, in a position where we are almost forced to reappoint an Election Commissioner right in the middle of an election cycle. I do not believe it's in the best interests of Albertans to be in a position where we have to make a decision one way or the other during that period of time, so I think this is a very reasonable amendment. I think we can all agree that the work that the Election Commissioner will have can be wrapped up in a year's time and that there would be a very limited number of complaints that would be coming forward in year 2, year 3, after an election. Therefore, there would be very limited work there. We would not have to rush the process and all of a sudden be forced to go: okay; now we need an Election Commissioner. If we are caught in a position where the individual retires, is not reappointed, we're rushed into the process of finding another individual, and that does concern me. It concerns me how this has been rushed at this time, and that gives me concern about the process that we will be faced with in 2023, at the end of the five-year term.

Madam Speaker, I do not believe that we should move forward with a five-year term. I believe this is a perfectly reasonable amendment. I believe Albertans would judge it the same, that this is a perfectly reasonable amendment, and at the end of the day I would like to do what Albertans would see as the most reasonable. I do not believe that Albertans would see it being reasonable to have this position end right in the middle of an election cycle. We are likely into another election by May 2023, and here we are: we have no Election Commissioner. To me, that's poor management. To me, that's poor decision-making. To me, that hangs on this government's decision at this time to move in that direction.

I believe it's a very reckless decision. I believe it's a decision that's not in the best interests of Albertans, so I need to try and understand: who is it that gets the best interests from this decision for a five-year term? The only person that I can see that gains from this – let's say that there are possibly two groups. Maybe the government gains from this. I do not know. But, at the end of the day, with the five-year term being the maximum term that was allowed in the legislation, it seems to favour the candidate, seems to favour the individual that's been appointed to this position. Is that fair or not? I can't judge that at this time – I would leave that judgment till after the work is performed – but at the end of the day I believe that Albertans would recognize that to have a five-year term and to put a decision on an Election Commissioner at a point in time where we have the next general election likely to happen is concerning.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'd like to thank the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. He does raise some interesting questions and, actually, doubt. He had me thinking that it is peculiar. It is peculiar that you have a five-year term that, you know, would start on May 15, 2018, and potentially end in May 2023, which would be smack dab in the middle of an election unless the government has no intention of calling an election in May 2019. Then that raises a doubt as to the possibility that this government has no intention of calling an election in May 2019, and therefore that would change the possibilities and the timelines as set forth.

I mean, surely, this government cannot be that naive, that in 2023 you would have a role, that the Member for Calgary-Currie said is such an important role – and I have already questioned in this House the duplication and the words from Glen Resler, the Chief Electoral Officer, who indicated that this is a role that he questions and that he and his office already can do. So I raise this to the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. Is there certainly a possibility that the government has no intention of calling an election in May 2019 and therefore would skew the timelines, as indicated by the hiring of this individual?

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to my colleague from Calgary-West for recognizing the peculiarity of having the five-year term ending in 2023. With regard to the government not calling an election in 2019, I would suggest that it would be a fatal mistake by the government to move in that direction. I believe that would be something that would definitely upset Albertans, much like the early call of 2015, I believe, upset Albertans. It was politicians that were moving, not necessarily in the best interests of Albertans, and thinking that they knew best, but Albertans decided that, no, it was not in the best interests of Albertans. I would suggest that if that's what the government is considering and that's what allows the five-year term to make some sense, that's one thing.

Also, with regard to the Chief Electoral Officer and the comments that the Chief Electoral Officer has made in the past with regard to doing these investigations and being able to handle them within his office, you know, there may be duplication here, absolutely. I believe there probably is. The position of Election Commissioner: it is possibly not necessary for it to be an office outside of the Chief Electoral Officer. But I don't believe that that's necessarily what we're needing to discuss here. It is what it is. We have the legislation before us. The term falls within the legislation. But I believe that it is somewhat reckless.

What I like about this amendment is that it allows us to recognize that if the government decides to call an election later, it still would allow that position to end a year after the next general election. So if the government decided to delay the election possibly one more year – I'm thinking that that's a possibility – if they decide to have the next general election in 2020, then I guess the term for this commissioner would end in 2021, so it would be a three-year term.

That's the beauty of the amendment that's before us. It recognizes that general elections come and go. They're not necessarily, in Alberta under the current legislation, going to land at a very prescribed time. The amendment allows us to recognize that, and we can have the term end 12 months after, recognizing that the commissioner needs to finish his work, needs to do what needs to get done, to do the investigations and get it done.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to speak on Government Motion 16 and on the amendment that the term would commence May 15 and expire 12 months after polling day for the next provincial general election in Alberta.

Well, Madam Speaker, here's an interesting thing. I'm probably not the only one in this House that's looking forward to the next election. There could be members, as far as I know, on all sides looking forward to the next election. But here's where it's relevant to the discussion today, if you don't mind. I have a countdown clock in my phone, and according to that, there are 384 days, four hours, four minutes, and 19 seconds till the close of the polls in the next election.

The reason that's relevant to this discussion is because the time and date that I chose for that was the last Monday in May next year. We've heard the Premier – and I believe the Premier – say here in the House several times before that she intends to honour the law about when the election should be called. I believe the Premier when she says that. Now, elections don't have to be called on a Monday – I understand that – but they usually are. That, indeed, is the last Monday within the legislative time frame. I don't think the time that I've said – well, only the Premier gets to call the election, nobody else, and that's also how it should be.

Again, getting back to the point, the Premier has made it clear that she intends to follow the election law and has, rightly so – I don't blame her – taunted us a couple of times, saying, “You see what happens when you don't follow the election bylaw?” as the previous government didn't. If I was the Premier, I think I might taunt the previous government and those people attached to it about that very same thing, so I would say good on the Premier for so taunting when she has done so.

This does actually connect very directly to the discussion that we're having here, Madam Speaker. It's relevant. Four years after that, again according to the legislation that's in place right now for the time frame to call an election, would be March, April, or May – wait for it – in 2023. At this point, which is really what makes this amendment completely reasonable and sensible, you would actually be looking at finishing the terms of an important part of the electoral preparation team essentially right after, right before, or right in the middle of the next election cycle.

Now, I'm not a cowboy, and I admire those that are. One of the sayings that I've heard cowboys say is that you don't change horses in the middle of a stream. It would be potentially changing horses in the middle of a stream to swap out an important part of the electoral team right before, right after, or right in the middle of a general election. That is not in Albertans' best interests. I don't care what party you're with; there's nothing partisan about what I just said. I think all the folks watching at home, all six of them, might say: yeah, that makes sense. I wouldn't be surprised if members on all sides of this House were thinking: yeah, wait a minute; that actually makes sense, too. That is indeed swapping horses in the middle of a stream. Not a good idea.

Again, if we're to take the Premier's word, which I do – I'm not doubting it; I believe in her a hundred per cent on this – when the Premier says that she'll call the election within the time frame provided for in the legislation, then that makes it incredibly reasonable to support this amendment.

Further, as has been pointed out by several of my colleagues, the date picked here, if I heard them correctly, would co-ordinate with the time that the current Chief Electoral Officer's contract is up, and if they're going to work together as a team, then why wouldn't you have some co-ordination between their contracts? I would say that with the contract with the current Chief Electoral Officer ending 12 months after the election, it is a completely reasonable time. There's always some accounting to do, some cleanup, some filing of paperwork, some chasing down of successful and unsuccessful electoral candidates to make sure they file their paperwork and get it in and all that kind of stuff and even chasing the ones down that don't get it in on time to get them to do that. With the current time, it gives those people in charge a full year to mop up all the paperwork – all the details, all the after-the-election reporting – after another election, a whole year.

Let's be clear. I think most Albertans would say – and whether they do or not, I do – that one would hope that the vast majority of if not all that paperwork would be mopped up in three or six months. But, making allowances for unexpected circumstances, making allowances for human frailty, making an allowance just for people leaving things to the last minute, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera, a year seems completely reasonable. That's what this amendment says: let's do something completely reasonable in line with what we've done up till now. Something completely reasonable.

Again, you know, leaving aside just for a second that the current Chief Electoral Officer thinks this position is not needed, not my interpretation of his words but his words on the record – we'll get back to that later – nonetheless, if the government is to go ahead and spend whatever amount of money they're going to spend on a position that's not required according to the Chief Electoral Officer, why would you add an additional complication by having the contract ended right before, right after, or right in the middle of a general election? It's silly. That's a polite word, “silly.” I think that's parliamentary. I wasn't trying to be provocative with what I'm saying, but from a common-sense standpoint it seems silly, Madam Speaker.

At some point perhaps we'll hear people from the government side talk about how it's a good idea to have a contract end right before, right after, or right in the middle of a general election. I would be highly entertained and interested to hear whatever logic springs forth to support that position. I will eagerly anticipate that. But between now and then I think it's important that we just try to do what common sense dictates, and common sense dictates that we don't change horses in the middle of a stream. That's what this amendment says. That's why I'm going to support it, and that's why I would politely suggest that all other members of the House support it, too, because we seldom get something that comes along that makes such complete sense in such a nonpartisan way as this amendment that's before us right now.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), the minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It sounds like we can look forward to a number of amendments on this particular matter before the House. I have a couple of questions about that, this one in particular.

Madam Speaker, it's helpful to remember how we got here. There were a number of questions around transparency with respect to elections as matters unfolded for 44 years, and there remain a number of questions. The reason for that is that there's an awful lot of dark money sloshing around Alberta politics still in the form of political action committees, which is why we had to take action on those matters, and there's still a studied attempt to obfuscate coming from Conservatives, because clearly they haven't learned anything. The leader of their party still refuses to disclose his donors to his leadership. One wonders if it is because he is ashamed of some of the foreign interests or other groups that do not share mainstream Alberta's values that have perhaps donated to his leadership.

In any event, we are now in the situation where we have hired someone to undertake some of the work that was long overdue in Alberta's election process and, in fact, undertake some of the work that Mr. Gibson, prior to Conservatives' firing him the first time, is now legally mandated to do. It doesn't at all surprise me, Madam Speaker, that now we have Conservatives proposing an amendment to fire Mr. Gibson a second time. What we now have is Conservatives who don't want to have a public conversation about who funds their leadership campaigns, who are running from any mention of the dark money sloshing around their party in the form of political action committees as they not only potentially import foreign money to manage their affairs but also import tactics from the United States with respect to these political action committees. Now we have a proposal to fire Mr. Gibson earlier, like they did the first time, as I said, for doing his job, which is exactly why Conservatives fired Mr. Gibson in the first place. The first time was for doing his job. Quite frankly, that's why Mr. Gibson was the first choice of the majority of the all-party committee, because he did his job. That is why Conservatives don't want him in the chair again.

Madam Speaker, I guess my question is: how many more of these amendments are we going to have? How many more proposals to fire Mr. Gibson is this Legislature going to have to entertain from Conservatives because apparently firing him once, the first time, wasn't enough?

Second, could Conservatives then go on the record and commit to a position where they would, if given the chance, fire Mr. Gibson prior to his term being finished? I'd like to hear them go on the record and commit to firing Mr. Gibson a second time for doing his job because once wasn't enough when he stood up for transparency and accountability and the integrity of the democratic system, when he stood up to Conservatives the first time.

The Deputy Speaker: Calgary-Hays, do you wish to respond?

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. The hon. minister would do well to take lessons from her Premier, who did the taunting about calling the election early and didn't go off on a bunch of sidetracks that are completely inaccurate, starting with the fact that my understanding of the gentleman's contract was that he finished it the first time around and, as best I could tell, got paid for every day he worked. Where I come from, I don't call that getting fired. It's just the way it is.

Anyways, the fact is, Madam Speaker, they intend to give this person, who is newer than the current Chief Electoral Officer and who the Chief Electoral Officer says isn't needed, a longer tenure than the current Chief Electoral Officer, who is doing a very good job. They intend to have this person's term come to an end in the middle of a general election for the people of Alberta. I can't think of anything less responsible than the timing the government has chosen. I know they're a little embarrassed about being corrected on that.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. Well, I was an original part of the committee that was disbanded at some point in relation to electoral reform, but I did have some conversations even after I left the committee. Only in most recent days, after the considerations of this new commissioner, did I speak with others across the country about the role of this new officer. Indeed, I've spoken to at least one Chief Electoral Officer in the country who found it surprising that it was necessary to hire a totally separate Chief Electoral Officer and that he was full-time because the indications that this experienced Chief Electoral Officer had around these issues were that it certainly wouldn't be a full-time position. It raised the question about: why not start small and see what is necessary, consider a part-time position, if at all?

Given the comments that we've heard from our own Chief Electoral Officer, it does raise serious questions about an extra expense and potentially a political motivation around hiring a man who has obviously had challenges with the process at some level. I don't know all the details of his lawsuit, but it was certainly a concern for me at the time that he appeared to be scapegoated by the previous administration. That was of some concern to me, the reasons. I felt that that election had serious problems with it and that as much responsibility lay with the previous government as it did with the Chief Electoral Officer, so I wasn't surprised when the lawsuit happened.

But to the point of this amendment, it strikes me as eminently reasonable to consider a year and see what the importance of this position is, see how relevant it is, see how essential it is to spend quite a lot of money. You're talking over a couple of million dollars to house him in the office and all his ancillary expenses. At the very least, he should be hired on a part-time basis, and he should be given a shorter term limit, in my view, to see the extent to which the work demands this extra support system.

Again, our own Chief Electoral Officer has said that he could probably handle that within the expanded role that he has and the expanded staff he has under the new elections financing act that was passed here. I'm a little bit surprised at the resistance across the way in looking at this position in such a long-term way when there are serious questions about the need for a full-time person and signing a five-year contract. We're talking about millions of dollars that could be spent elsewhere.

I will be supporting this amendment for the reasons I've given, including an authority across the country who says that he's surprised at why you would be hiring a second Chief Electoral Officer in a full-time position for a five-year period. He just gave me those very frank comments without knowing any of the background of this, so I think the government should take a second look at this and see about the public interest, about the fiscal responsibility issue, and indeed about a position that hasn't really proven itself necessary.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was very interested in the member's comments, particularly when he talks about hiring a second Chief Electoral Officer. To the member, you know, I wonder how he would feel if, for example, the people of Calgary-Mountain View selected a second MLA while the hon. member was still doing his job. I wonder if the member could comment about if the government appointed a second environment minister while the first environment minister is sitting there and what kind of a message that would send to the current environment minister. I would think that that would be a very negative message and one that would not give the person with the current role, whatever that role happened to be, a lot of confidence that their employer had confidence in them.

To me, hiring a second Chief Electoral Officer when you've already got a Chief Electoral Officer seems very disrespectful. Certainly, in our party there's a deputy whip, you know, but if they selected to put a second whip in place, I would start to wonder whether they thought I was doing a bad job. Now, they might think that. They might think something else. But, honestly, I'd have to say that that's a thought that would come to my mind right away. To the member, I just wonder about how respectful it is to the current Chief Electoral Officer to essentially hire somebody to do the same job that he's already doing when he's taken the time out of his life to go to a committee and say that we don't need this position and that it's duplicating what he's already doing. If your job is to count buttons at the button factory and you get all the buttons counted every day and they hire a second button counter, the first button counter might think: "Wow. Maybe they don't think that I'm doing a good job of counting the buttons. Maybe I'm on borrowed time. Maybe they're going to get rid of me."

To the hon. member, I hope you'll talk about this. I'm going to give him some time to stand up and talk about it. In this light, when elections are so crucial and democracy is so crucial, to actually rock the confidence of your Chief Electoral Officer by hiring someone to shadow that person when he's already said that that's not needed: clearly, it just seems like a recipe, potentially, for anarchy. I just wonder what the hon. member would think about that. I'd like to give him an opportunity to comment on hiring a second person. Particularly, on top of all of that, when the government is already running $8 billion and $9 billion a year in deficits, why would they hire a second person to do a job that's already being fully done?

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you for the question. Indeed, I am concerned at what the morale in that office would potentially be by disregarding the advice of our own Chief Electoral Officer and hiring somebody that may or may not fit into the culture of the current Chief Electoral Officer. But more to the point, when we're still exploring the need for this, why not give it a shorter term and at least assess the extent to which a full-time, separate office is needed here in the interests of fiscal responsibility as well as the issue that's been raised? How do we divide up the work in that office if we have two chiefs, and what will some of the implications be for his staff and the other commissioner's staff? It does raise serious questions about how quickly we're moving to that commitment, a five-year commitment, and some of the challenges associated with that.

I don't think it's too late to pull back a little bit and then to review the contract at least. It may be that we're committed to a contract, but I would hope that we would review things at the end of a year and decide: first of all, is it needed; secondly, is it full-time; and thirdly, what kind of a job is this delivering? So I would hope the government would think about it again.

It's not something that I have a particularly vested interest in. I'm speaking on behalf of Albertans, who want to see a responsible electoral process, who want to see some reform. I applaud the government for bringing in the financial limits, some of the important, important work that was not done by the previous government.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to rise in the House today to speak to Motion 16, the appointment of Lorne Gibson as Election Commissioner, and specifically to amendment A2, put forward by my colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View, that talks about the fact that the proposal is for a term of five years commencing May 15. The amendment is seeking to reduce that to "expiring 12 months after polling day for the next provincial general election in Alberta." I think that the Chief Electoral Officer's contract reads in somewhat that same kind of language, so this would align, certainly, with that.

Now, there has been a minority report put forward by four members of the committee, which has been made public, so I will refer to that from time to time as I continue. I can certainly table the document if required, but I am sure that that has already been done.

On April 5 the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices passed a motion recommending that Mr. Lorne Gibson be appointed as Alberta's first Election Commissioner. Now, I am not a member of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, so I wasn't there to witness the vote or the discussion that took place when the motion was created or the discussion before, but I understand that the motion to appoint this individual to the new position was not unanimous and did not have all-party support at the committee.

Now, I understand that members of this committee have been involved with a few other search committees over a period of time and that in those cases all members had a very good working relationship and, most importantly, were in all of those instances, at least, able to come to unanimous support. If we consider the position of the Auditor General or the position of the Ombudsman, I think it was clear that it was all-party support. I believe there was some good communication between all party members, all voices at the table were heard, and there was more of a robust discussion that led to a unanimous decision in those cases. I guess what I would say is that there was nothing partisan like what happened in the proposal to appoint this elections officer.

Madam Speaker, it appears that from the outset of this committee, that started deliberation on the choice of Election Commissioner sometime back in December of last year, it became apparent to some of the members of the Legislative Offices Committee that the members that represent the majority of the committee were ready to move ahead in a way that seemed to the opposition members somewhat hasty and somewhat jumbled. This particular search seems to have raised the eyebrows of some of the committee members that do not sit on the majority side of the committee. Those same members have suggested that they were less than satisfied or somewhat disappointed in how the majority members conducted themselves through the entire search process in this particular case.

Now, part of the minority report talks about what the four members of the Official Opposition were witnessing while the search for this new position was going on. Now, it talks about how the government members required, by use of their majority, the standing committee to compose a job posting and a position profile for a brand new position at the Legislative Assembly of Alberta and to complete that task, what some would consider, I'm sure, a laborious effort, in 48 hours and, within that same time frame, determine to open the competition for this position during a time of year that certainly everyone here celebrates their Christmas holidays.

Now, all of that was done with direction from, once again, the majority members of the committee while the opposition took a strong stance suggesting that these actions would be a waste of money and would put undue strain on support staff. Now, that may seem a little bizarre, but deciding to open the competition during Christmas holidays, which required an expensive run of print advertisements, of course, at that time of year, necessitated the need for an officer of the LAO to come into the office during their holidays in order to make deadlines so that their advertising could be put out to the public.

Now, I can imagine asking a member of the LAO to come into the office to complete such a task at such a bizarre time of year would be somewhat, I guess I would say, difficult. I dare say that the employee of the LAO may have had a few ideas as to what his Christmas holidays were actually for and that they did not include coming back into the office to open a competition for a new position at the Legislative Assembly or to take care of a run of print advertisements.

Then, once we got into January, the committee was asked for an additional $20,000 for a second run of print advertisements. It became apparent as to why they needed that. It was because it appeared that not enough applications had been received within the proposed time in the original advertisements. Even as a member that doesn't sit on the committee, I can see why. The advertisements were sent out during Christmas holidays. What was the rush? I wonder. This couldn't wait for a week or 10 days until after the holidays were over and everybody came back to work as the due course? This committee spent an additional $20,000 because of this seemingly horrible rush to get the advertisements out to the public at a time when they were spending time with their families and not reading the paper, probably. It makes no sense to me, Madam Speaker.

Now, we already put an amendment forward here last week to make this position's salary public, and that was defeated by the majority of the House. We've seen a range that was made public, but the committee won't allow the actual salary for the new position to become public. I guess all the talk from this side of the House when the amendment was put forward that was about transparency and accountability is something that this government would like people to believe that they believe. I'm sure they would like us all to believe that. I think Albertans deserve to know what the salary is. It fits within the sunshine list rules, but government determined that we weren't going to go there, that we were not going to let Albertans know that information.

But, Madam Speaker, that was a different amendment. Today's amendment is to amend the motion to end the contract of the Election Commissioner one year following the completion of the next general election in Alberta. This would allow the position to complete all tasks that were incurred as a result of the election, give time to create a report as a result of the election and report back to the appropriate authorities. Considering some of the things that went on in that committee, that to some may seem less than above board, it seems to me like a perfectly legitimate amendment.

Let's just get back to how we got to where we are today. When a committee takes the job of considering employment for a newly created position, certainly a position as important as Election Commissioner, which, according to the government, will root out dark money, which, of course, came along with the passing of Bill 32 in December, it seems that the committee charged with this serious task should move forward in a nonpartisan way. It seems to me that such an important posting would demand co-operation of the members from both sides of that committee. I mean, after all, we are all supposed to be working for Albertans, I believe – I think that's right – in the best interests of Albertans. I think that's right, too. I mean, after all, the committee was really tasked with doing a search for a competent applicant that could handle the chore of Election Commissioner.

I'm not saying that the proposed commissioner isn't qualified. I'm not saying that at all. I don't think any of the committee members from the opposition side ever stated anywhere along the way that Mr. Gibson was not qualified for the position. I think it's been stated in this House many times that he certainly has the proper qualifications. I understand that there were other strong, qualified candidates that made submission as well, that, in some members' minds, would have made good election commissioners as well.

When we hear that in the past there were no issues on the committee when selecting applicants in other searches and when we hear that the majority government members pushed hard to put forward a person that not all members of the committee saw as possibly the best choice, which, as I say again, was not a problem for the committee in the selections of the past, well, it kind of makes me wonder why. It makes me wonder why things became partisan all of a sudden.

You know, sometimes it takes a little or a lot of intestinal fortitude to work together with someone who sees things differently. The job of any committee that I ever sat on was to come to a consensus. Of course, most of the committees that I sat on in the past were nonpartisan in nature. But when we have seen that in the past this committee was able to put partisan ideas aside to come up with candidates that the committee could truthfully say were selected unanimously, well, Madam Speaker, that seems to go against everything that we have been talking about with regard to Motion 16. From what I can see, the majority of committee members weren't interested in working together with other committee members. It seemed to have strayed from what the committee was able to accomplish in previous searches.

Madam Speaker, it should concern all Albertans when a standing committee of the Legislature is given the task of searching for an officer of a new position and there is this kind of disagreement and irregularity, I guess is how I'll say it, from the majority members of said committee.

I'll just talk for a moment about the individual whose name was put forward here. As has been stated, I don't think there's any question that Mr. Lorne Gibson is certainly qualified for the position. This posting would not constitute the first time this individual has worked for the government of Alberta. He previously served as Alberta's Chief Electoral Officer. His job, of course, was to oversee elections between 2006 and 2009.

Now, in 2009 Mr. Gibson's contract with the government was allowed to expire. That was one year after a provincial election. Now, Madam Speaker, it appears that there was some sort of falling out, I would suggest, because two years later Mr. Gibson filed a lawsuit against the provincial government and the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. The lawsuit claimed that he had been terminated without cause and that his termination had been politically motivated. Mr. Gibson was claiming a large amount of money in compensation, but as it turns out, a judge dismissed the case and found that his employment had terminated when the contract expired as a natural course.

Now a committee of the Legislative Assembly has chosen to hire this man that, shall we say, carries a little baggage with him. Not only that, Madam Speaker, but the Chief Electoral Officer, Mr. Glen Resler, reminded the committee that he had not had a chance to comment on the bill that actually created the position of the Election Commissioner.

Now, the Chief Electoral Officer has been held in high regard throughout this province and has done his job very ethically. I don't think that there would be too many that challenge that statement. He has served the electoral process in Alberta well.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The member was making some important comments here in terms of the process that led us here to this amendment, and I was quite taken by some of the clarifications that he gave. I think that at one point the environment minister had said that the gentleman was fired before. Of course, there was a judge that said different after a court case. So I think there is an important clarification for the House that I didn't want anybody to miss, because the hon. member did make that.

Another thing that I think the hon. member made a good point on in his remarks is about the fact that the current Chief Electoral Officer was not given an opportunity after all these years of service to even comment on a piece of legislation to create a job that completely shadows his own. It seems incredibly disrespectful. I certainly hope that the government doesn't get accused of constructive dismissal over hiring somebody for the exact job that somebody already has and then giving him a contract for three, four years longer than the person currently in the job. It seems incredibly, incredibly, incredibly disrespectful to the current Chief Electoral Officer. Incredibly disrespectful.

To the hon. member that was just speaking, when you add all this up with the fact that the government was in such a rush to be that disrespectful by putting the ad in over the Christmas break, and essentially the government majority on the committee forced it through the House when there wasn't consensus on the committee – Madam Speaker, I'll talk about this with a little bit of context. I was on the committee that hired our Clerk. I have to say that we worked in very close and co-operative means with members on the government side, and to the ones on this committee I would say thank you. We didn't agree every day on everything, but when we finished, because it was such an independent officer of the Legislature, that needs to support us all equally and not be biased in any way, I think that was a pretty good result. Again, I'll compliment members from our side, and I will most certainly compliment every member from the government side for working together co-operatively on such an important thing to come up with a consensus.

To the hon. member: do you think it's as disrespectful to the current electoral officer as I think it is when they do something over the Christmas holidays to rush this thing out, when they don't even ask the current electoral officer about the legislation that's before us now, to give the new person with exactly the same job a contract four years longer than the current independent officer that we have? There's quite a bit of negative evidence here towards the government's motivations.

I'd ask the hon. member for his thoughts on that. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Schneider: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-Hays. I don't think there would be any question that if I was the electoral officer, I'd be wondering a little bit about what the government was up to if they were hiring somebody that was actually trying to just about shadow the job that I was doing and was given a contract that was longer than the one that I had held. I know that Mr. Resler stated, you know, when he was asked to present to the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices in regard to election investigations, for instance, that he actually had no issues handling current complaints that came into his office in regard to investigations. He made it very clear that he was able to handle all of those complaints in his regular duties as Chief Electoral Officer.

I mean, let's just hold it for a minute. The Chief Electoral Officer made it clear that he had no problem or issue handling current complaints that come through his office with regard to investigations. I'm not sure if we're expecting more complaints and if that's the reason why we would hire somebody that actually almost doubles what the electoral officer is doing. If the man who's doing the job is well respected and has been doing the job well, it makes you wonder why the position is needed at all. Madam Speaker, it seems . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to talk about the amendment to Motion 16. I have it sitting here in front of me. I have to say that what the amendment is trying to do, for those that just are logging in, is to take a guaranteed term of five years and say that the term for this newly created position, the Election Commissioner, should line up with the election date, like the current Chief Electoral Officer's position.

Now, I believe that this is quite reasonable. I do hear the concerns that the government is saying here. They want to make sure that they are able to find a qualified candidate. It's going to be tough to do if we only offer them potentially a two-year term. Fair enough. If he does a good job, though, he will get renewed for another term. That is how this works. What we're saying here is that the problematic part of this, going with a fixed term, is that it is possible for that term date to end in the middle of a general election. Clearly, that would be problematic.

Now, if we look at this right now, we're sitting in May. We're looking to create this position, it looks like, on May 15. What we're seeing here is that this position will go five years; that is, to May 15, 2023. Now, what we're seeing here is that if we look at the next fixed election date, that is going to be held in the spring of 2019. So if you add four years from that, that's 2023. These dates are lining up, so this is not idle speculation. We literally have the Election Commissioner's term ending most likely in the middle of a general election or even just after an election.

Now, here's the thing. When an election is called and the writ is dropped, we have no MLAs sitting in the House, which means we have no committees formed, which means we have no ability to be able to deal with an extension to this gentleman's term. What we've got here is that it is important that we have stable, transparent, and reasonable elections.

Now, this gentleman in 2008 had some issues with the election and then came in after the election with important changes to the Election Act. Why would this gentleman even want to go through that process again of having a terrible election during his term of office?

Let's move on to the fact, too, that when this gentleman last held a position as the Chief Electoral Officer, his contract ended. Now, what we've got here is that we had a legislative committee use a majority and not renew his contract for another term. What this individual did was that he sued the government, saying: wrongful dismissal. What happens to us if his term terminates and this individual sues the government in 2023? This is reasonable. This is not speculation. This has happened already once. Alberta is dealing with an election, and now we're dealing with a lawsuit happening with our Election Commissioner. This is very problematic for whatever government is looking to take office.

When you bring forward an amendment that says, "Let's line this up with elections," that's reasonable. Again, if this individual does a good job, his term will most likely be renewed. I don't believe that anybody on my side has said that this gentleman is not qualified. He has been clearly picked by the majority of the committee. There was clear, clear concern about his potential lawsuit against Alberta, but our caucus has been saying that it appears that he has the qualifications to do the job. So if we make this 12 months after this next election, he shouldn't have a problem with an extra term. That's the key here, that they keep saying that he was fired. That is completely false. It is completely false, and a judge ruled that false. It is important to make the distinction that when you say that in this House, you're actually doing a false statement.

Now, what we're seeing here is that – I'm going to use an example for those that don't quite get this because I understand that this could be complex. Let's say that you file your taxes on time every year. April 30: you file your taxes. It makes sense that if you're deciding to choose an accountant, you're not looking for that accountant after or on April 30. That just makes sense. If you were dissatisfied with your accountant for whatever reason – it could be that you didn't like his hair that day – what happens is that . . .

An Hon. Member: Yours is excellent.

Mr. Cyr: Oh, thank you.

. . . you would complete the tax return, and then you would start the process right after the taxation year to find yourself a new accountant.

This is what we're trying to do with this amendment. What we're saying is that an election is held and the Election Commissioner has got 12 months to wrap up his cases, which is very reasonable. It's unbelievable if it took longer than 12 months. If he's got the odd case, it is likely that either he will be renewed to move forward as the commissioner or the new commissioner will be able to deal with that single case or, well, a few cases that are left.

What we've got here is an individual that is being treated differently than our Chief Electoral Officer. That brings the question: why is he being treated differently? Why is he being treated better? I understand that the government is committed down this road. I also understand that the Official Opposition filed a minority report against the hiring of this individual. It was very clear that there was clear contention regarding him, the opposition versus the government. It appears that this process was very clearly rushed. We're rushing the process, and then what happens is that we're treating him differently than our other elections officer. Why are we treating him any differently than our CEO?

It does appear to be the potential for favouritism. This is the stuff that we see when governments bring forward individuals that they choose and they say: "You know what? We're going to push him through the system. We're going to use our majority, and we're going to get this done." You know what? That rarely works well. We've seen this repeatedly. When you go and you try and force a system, usually this ends poorly. I will say that again.

You know what? I have been on the Auditor General search committee. We have just gone through this process. I have to say that our Auditor General, who has decided to retire, was a remarkable man. Mr. Merwan Saher: remarkable man. He decided that he wasn't going to renew his term, so this wasn't even that the government let his term lapse. What they did was that they started the search committee. Then what we did was that we got together as caucuses and were able to discuss the best person. We didn't rush the process. We went out with advertising across the country. We even went international. That shows you how committed we are to ensuring that our Auditor General is the best possible person to bring accountability to Alberta. You know what? Did we agree on everything? No. But I will say that we did come out with consensus. That is a functioning committee. That is a functioning search committee. But when you have a committee that appears to be rushed, that clearly isn't a functioning search committee.

Now, what I would like to say is that it's important to understand what our current Auditor General does. Bear with me here. I've got the website open for Elections Alberta. He's got his mandate here for Elections Alberta, and I think this is important.

Elections Alberta's mandate is to:

- administer open, fair, and impartial elections;

That's good.

- provide stakeholders with the necessary information and means to participate in the democratic process;
- provide support to election officers to ensure impartial service delivery;
- serve in an advisory and regulatory role to achieve compliance in electoral finance activities;
- provide the public with disclosure through the publication of reports and financial statements;
- embrace partnership opportunities and innovative ideas by adopting best practices and new technologies from the service, business, and election communities; and
- support a positive, respectful, cohesive and self-rewarding work environment where individual aspirations can be achieved.

Wow. That office seems to know what they are trying to achieve. I believe that it showed that it worked well in 2015. If it didn't work well, there wouldn't have been a government change, because it was clear that the people of Alberta wanted change.

We've got an elections office that appears to be functioning. It appears to be doing what it's tasked to do. It appears to have a good vision. It appears to be following its mandate. So when you ask me for a five-year term for an Election Commissioner, I am saying, for one, that our Elections Alberta CEO, the Chief Electoral Officer, seems to be doing his job, but you disagree. You created a new office. Fair enough.

What I would like to say is: let's treat them the same at least. Let's at least give them the same terms. Let's at least make sure that we have some consistency because I will tell you that we'll have two people that will find working together almost impossible because they don't have matching terms. That seems problematic. We're going to have them competing with each other or unable to work with each other, figuring out where each other's boundaries are. That seems to be the big concern that I've been hearing from my colleagues. We need stability when it comes to our elections. We need to consider the fact that a five-year term isn't the way to do that.

When you start talking about us picking on Mr. Gibson, I wholeheartedly disagree. This is a good amendment. This gentleman, if he does his job, could have a 20-year, 30-year career with us. The only thing that would prevent that is if we have turmoil, which we already saw in the 2008 election.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I've been listening, of course, with a great deal of interest to the member's comments. A decent amount of them, of course, centre around this cloud, the fact that, you know, he was let go or fired, perhaps, as some might describe that. I was hoping to provide a little bit of context and then ask a question to you, hon. member.

I'll just do a quote here from a Graham Thomson article to have a little bit of background about where that cloud came from. The article says:

He poked, prodded and embarrassed the PC government-of-the-day by pointing out serious shortcomings in the 2008 general election, where 27 per cent of voters were left off the list and some people waited hours to vote.

Gibson complained he couldn't conduct a proper enumeration of voters because of Alberta's bizarre, antiquated and unfair practice where the PCs controlled the system of nominating returning officers for each riding. Yes, you read that right. The PCs, through cabinet, controlled who would be the chief ballot-counter in every constituency. It was the stuff of banana republics.

Gibson made 182 recommendations . . .

which I have right here,

. . . to improve the system, including allowing the chief electoral officer to appoint returning officers. The government eventually adopted many of his suggestions a few years later, but Gibson had proven to be such a thorn in the government's side that in 2009 PC MLAs voted not to renew his contract, effectively firing him.

Madam Speaker, I'm sure that I will have a chance to table that in the Legislature tomorrow for all members.

Now, let's have a look at what some of those recommendations mean. If anyone is interested, I am looking at the Report on the March 3, 2008 Provincial General Election of the Twenty-seventh Legislative Assembly. For those of you who are looking for a copy from our library, which is open at this late hour, this is – wow, that's a really long item ID. I won't read that into the record, but if you ask our librarians downstairs, they will be able to find this for you.

It starts off that one of the chief recommendations, to provide that full context, is this:

Returning Officers who manage enumerations and elections are currently appointed by Order in Council. When the Writs of Election are issued, Returning Officers appoint their assistants, the Election Clerks, to support them throughout the election period. The Election Clerk is the Returning Officer's primary support during the election period and may be requested to fulfil the responsibilities of the Returning Officer if [they are] unable or unwilling to act. When this occurs, there is a strong probability that the Election Clerk could be called on to act with minimal notice, so it is essential that the Election Clerk is qualified to act, should the need arise.

Now, the key part is in the next sentence here.

Returning Officers and Election Clerks are the most visible election officers during an election and, therefore, must be perceived by voters, candidates and the political parties to represent an electoral system that is fair and impartial. Their independence in both fact and perception helps to assure the public of the integrity of election administration within the province.

That line and the recommendations that came out of it – you can keep reading in the report from pages 63, 64, 65, and so on. It goes on to around page 130-ish. There are a great deal of recommendations there from the officer that caused such a problem for the government of the day that they decided to not renew his appointment, which effectively fired him. That was the interpretation from the media and the opposition of the day, that that was in fact what was happening.

My question to the hon. member is that, you know, if he feels that there's such a cloud, the cloud is that he spoke truth to power. If that is a problem, why is it that he has issues with a person who's got a demonstrated record of having spoken truth to power, has a demonstrated record of speaking up to the government of the day to ensure that elections are run fairly? I wonder why he's doing that. Or is he, like his government colleagues, going to continue to needlessly filibuster Mr. Gibson's appointment to prevent him from getting to the good work of making sure that our elections are fair? Those are the two questions, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Cyr: With these last 10 seconds I have repeatedly said that he's qualified for this job, sir – repeatedly said that – so to say that I'm putting a cloud on this man's career is completely incorrect.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Here we are again. You know, I actually have quite a few questions for the Member for Calgary-Currie, although I know and I understand that I'm not in that opportunity to ask those questions at this time. Certainly, things were going through my head at the time when he was speaking. A question I would, if given the opportunity, ask him, of course, would be: are we going to take the word of a journalist in an article, or are we going to take the word of a judge in a court ruling? This certainly is something that pops into my mind. A contract that wasn't renewed is not somebody who is fired, but I guess that's something we will obviously agree to disagree on.

I will stand up here, though, in front of you, Madam Speaker, to of course support this amendment, a term of five years commencing May 15, 2018, and substituting "a term commencing May 15, 2018, and expiring 12 months after polling day for the next provincial general election in Alberta." As many of my colleagues have stood up for here already, something that is a very reasonable amendment.

I've already brought up during one of my opportunities that it certainly raises some questions, and it is curious. It provides doubt as to why the government would have a contract that would potentially end in the middle of an election cycle, that would be May 2023. As my colleague and friend from Bonnyville-Cold Lake rightly pointed out, during an election none of us are MLAs, so there is not an opportunity or an ability to rehire somebody if that contract was to end in the middle of, again, an election cycle.

As I discussed with my friend from Calgary-Hays, you know, this is something that would be chaos. I mean, again, if we have a position that is supposed to be so critical – so critical – why would we have it end in the middle of May of 2023, which would throw an election cycle into sheer chaos? Like, this is not what I would believe to be a wacky, crazy amendment, Madam Speaker. This is a very reasonable amendment. I think that some of the arguments, of course, that are being made are reasonable arguments. It does not make sense for this contract to end in May of 2023.

It raises questions. It raises doubts. It raises the question: is the government – you know, we have to believe what the Premier has said, that she's going to abide by the current legislation and that they are going to have that election in May of 2019. I can tell you on behalf of my friend from Calgary-Hays that not doing that will have some severe and negative consequences.

Mr. McIver: As we learned.

Mr. Ellis: As we learned, right?

You know, again, it raises doubt. Is this government going to have this election in May of 2019? Are they planning on extending it, or are they planning on bringing it forward? I don't know. But certainly it does not make sense for this individual's contract to end in May of 2023.

Then, you know, we talk about much that has been brought up about Mr. Resler, the Chief Electoral Officer. Nobody has had any disparaging comments to say. I believe that everybody believes that the work he does is important. I believe there is much respect for Mr. Resler. Again, we talk about the feelings of that individual. I think it's very important. Let's think about that. You have a gentleman that is supposed to be working alongside what, again, has been pointed out to be a very important position, the Election Commissioner. Well, you've just hired somebody to do a job that is similar to the one that he's already doing. He's already indicated to the committee that his department can do that job.

Again, it brings us back to duplicity. Why are we spending money on a position that really can be done by somebody that has already said that they're able to do the work that needs to be done? Nobody is disputing that the work needs to be done but is questioning why we are spending whatever that amount of money is. I've heard various reports of a couple million dollars, I think, and somebody can certainly correct me if I'm wrong. Certainly, that is a concern, that we are going to be wasting money on a position that's already going to be done or could be done by Mr. Resler and his staff, right?

Another point here. You know, let's assume that this amendment is going to go through, Madam Speaker. Let's assume that it's going to go through. Although the government appears to have indicated that they're not going to support it, let's just assume that it's going to go through. I think it's very reasonable. I think back to the career that I had working for an association which we call the police union. I mean, even as a police officer after 18 months they reviewed whether or not they were going to keep me. If I was doing a good job, if I was serving the public in the way that was asked of me in the contract that I signed with the city of Calgary, then, of course, they would continue to hire me for the X number of years that an individual chooses to stay with that particular department.

To take a look at this one year after the election: I don't think that's unreasonable. I think that, you know, Mr. Gibson, if he's working hard, he's doing a good job, he's showing value for his work, then, sure, he'll likely be reappointed, which happens with many other departments, with many other services, with many other unions. It's very, very important, right? You can't just give somebody – again, as one of my colleagues pointed out, even in the private sector it's very unusual to just hire somebody for a five-year period of time with really no checks, no balances, not really much of anything.

You know, again, Madam Speaker, I think what's really going through my head, that I just can't seem to figure out, is why this contract is ending in May of 2023. It just does not make sense. I have to question: was this just naïveté from this government? Did they just not notice? This government has been commonly known over the last several years as the government of unintended consequences. What would the unintended consequences be of an individual that is going to end his contract in the middle of an election cycle, in 2023? Does that mean that Mr. Resler is going to have to do the work that he's already indicated he can do? That's a good question. That's assuming that he, of course, gets rehired. His contract may or may not end. I mean, these are questions that I think we all have.

You know, Madam Speaker, I have to bring this up. I brought this up during one of my first talks on the main motion itself, and it has to do with the confidence, the overconfidence, the arrogance. I know I brought this up, and I'm not meant to be a broken record in this particular case, but I sat and I watched – I watched – the arrogance, the Member for Calgary-Hays and myself. We saw it. We saw it, and those people are no longer here. Here we have it again, just going to force stuff through.

I know. I've talked to people that were in the previous government, Madam Speaker. They got their marching orders from the person at the top that says: you will hire that person no matter what anybody says. I see the threads, the common threads. I wish the government would see those threads, but they don't. That's very, very, very sad, really, to see. We have four individuals from the previous government, that sat over there, and they watched. I'm watching them make some of the same mistakes, the same mistakes that my colleagues were making when I was just new to this Legislature.

But who am I? I'm not part of the government. I'm part of the Official Opposition. I'm here to offer my opinion, to represent the people of Calgary-West. Certainly, you know, the government can choose to listen to the Official Opposition or not. That's fine. We've seen what happened in 2015 with a government that chose not to listen to, maybe, recommendations from the Official Opposition on that side, from members of the parties that sat over there, the Liberals who sat over there, the NDP that sat over there. I sat there. I watched. And maybe – maybe – for this government, if they choose to listen to this recommendation, to maybe listen to a few recommendations, there might be some opportunity. There might be some opportunity for the future.

I want to talk maybe a little bit here about Mr. Resler and talk a little bit about how he would feel, of course, when you have an individual who comes in, even though he has indicated the he can do the same job, that his department can do the same job. Mr. Resler has witnessed this government giving the new person, who would be the Election Commissioner, Mr. Gibson, a large extension past Mr. Resler's existing contract. I certainly would like to know if the salary is similar, but they're not disclosing how much Mr. Gibson is making. That certainly brings into question an opportunity for Mr. Resler to maybe feel even worse if that's even possible. You know, I think that it is very unfair for Mr. Resler. I think it's unfair for his department.

Now, what I would like to see, of course, is that if Mr. Gibson is indeed hired, which I believe he is, to go through the process – my understanding is that he hasn't signed a contract yet. When he does, which seems like it's going to be the case, although I hope that this Legislature listens and this amendment goes through so that there is an amendment to that contract, I think it's very important for all Albertans and for everyone in this Legislature that if they are going to be working together that these two individuals work together as a team, that they're going to work cohesively, and that there will not be any barriers between them because both of them are providing a vital service to the people of Alberta for a fair and open and transparent election.

Madam Speaker, you know, I get to listen to always being accused of having rich friends, but I'm a very simple police officer. I'm a working guy. My friend from Calgary-Hays is a butcher.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you. You know, I have to say that it's important to hear that a lot of us have occupations outside of politics. The thing is that that gives us this life experience of being able to see some concerns as they arise. Some of us can take those life experiences and put them towards, in this case, a motion, an amendment that's coming forward.

You know, when I hear the Member for Calgary-West state that he is using some of his experience through law enforcement and how it relates to a decision we're making in the House, I think there's value in that. I truly do see value in that. What happens here is that if we were to start to go down this road and start going with mandatory terms for our officers or accountants or, in the case of Calgary-Hays, butchers, you can see that this could be problematic if it's not structured correctly.

What would be the ideal time, do you think, Member for Calgary-West? Do you think that it's a year after the election date? Do you think that we could have ended it on the election date like what the NDP are planning with 2023? Do you think that the ideal time would be before the election date by a year? What do you think would be the appropriate time for it?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you to the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. You know, my opinion on this, I guess, would be consistent with what I'm seeing in this amendment to this motion. I believe that it is very reasonable to have this term end a year after the election. You know, as indicated by my friend from Chestermere-Rocky View, it gives a year for somebody to clear up any sort of issues or abnormalities or just work that may need to get cleared up, which is a lot of time. I know my friend from Bonnyville-Cold Lake is an accountant by trade, so he certainly has more experience than I do when it comes to clearing up work on a desk. In my previous career my work was in a car – that's where my office was – so I certainly can appreciate what he is saying.

You know, to have any sort of change – again, we assume that we have these two positions that are going to come forward here. To have them begin or end close to the important election date I think is hugely problematic. I think that it would cause potential chaos in the system. So to have a review, if you want to call it that – I mean, we called it a probationary period, as I was indicating, as part of the union that I had previously belonged to – to have that at a time that is a year past the election date I think is extremely reasonable. I think that would provide a sufficient amount of time for Mr. Gibson to clear up any of the work that he needs to do, and as I've already indicated, if he's working well and he's doing a good job and he's providing value to this Legislature and, more importantly, to the people of Alberta, then there is really no reason why whoever is the government at that particular time would not renew his contract.

It is absolutely peculiar, as has been indicated here in this House already today, why you would have a contract that ends literally at a time that we can only assume is in the middle of a writ period, in 2023, unless there is going to potentially be some alternate date that is going to come up in 2019. That's the only reasonable conclusion that one can extrapolate from the information that we're being provided here, that are we really – I think that's the question.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Madam Speaker, thank you very much. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak in favour of the notice of amendment. I'm grateful to my colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View that she proposes that Government Motion 16 be amended by striking out "a term of five years commencing May 15, 2018," and substituting "a term commencing on May 15, 2018, and expiring 12 months after polling day for the next provincial general election in Alberta."

Madam Speaker, two or three overriding general observations to start with. Honestly, I'm surprised we're here, when the electoral officer said that he could do the position with his staff, with his mandate. Of course, the Official Opposition stood up and conveyed that as well as our committee and our dissenting members. We expressed the savings. Sometimes smaller departments and fewer employees are better for focus and actually doing the work right.

Certainly, we believe in trusting our experts. We believe in local decision-making. My goodness, 87 of us miles away from this House certainly cannot make better decisions. That being what it is, of course, the government, in the same heavy-handed manner that they handled the committee, refused to listen to that and voted that down.

Now our electoral officer, faced with not being listened to, rebuked at that point in time, is looking at a situation where the government chooses to give the new person a contract, the Election Commissioner, four years longer than the person he'll be working closely with. And you know the potential amazement and the potential problems that could arise from that.

You know, Madam Speaker, everyone makes mistakes, and some mistakes are easy to correct. We spent some time talking about this bill a week or so ago, trying to advocate for the taxpayer, advocate for the people of Alberta to ensure that the wage would be on the sunshine list earlier, quickly, so that we could have more sunlight to clearly show Albertans maybe some of the intentions, maybe some of the reasons, and maybe some good things as to why the government was going to do that. Of course, two or three hours ago the Government House Leader stood up and apologized – and rightfully so; he handled it very well – and said: I made a mistake; we're going to correct it. Easy to correct. Thank you, Government House Leader, for doing that.

But, Madam Speaker, if this is another mistake by the government, if this is yet another mistake with a five-year term, after hours and hours of Alberta's loyal opposition standing here, highlighting this, showing all the pitfalls, respectfully, and making great amendments to reduce the exposure for the taxpayer, to reduce, you know, maybe some friction and some problems that our electoral officer may have, and of course not getting a response, not getting a positive movement from the other side – it was easy three hours ago to stand up: I made a mistake, and I'll correct it. One, two, three, or four years from now it may be a heck of a lot harder to stand up and say: I made a mistake. The NDP government made a mistake, and we need to correct it.

Again, I think back to the families and the communities in Alberta. Unfortunately, a lot of them are struggling with high taxes, with high utility rates, making much less than they did. This government owes it to every single one of them to get as much value for their hard-earned tax dollars as possible and, wherever possible, to leave them as much money as possible so that they can care for their own families.

This committee threw $20,000 away over Christmas even though every single opposition member on the committee stood up and said: don't do it; don't do it; do it right the first time; get it right the first time. But in reckless fashion, with a lack of regard for taxpayer dollars and a lack of regard for getting the process right the first time – Madam Speaker, maybe I'm wrong. Maybe it was just inexperience. You know, maybe it wasn't a fast movement towards a predetermined decision. Maybe it was just a $20,000 mistake that somebody who's out working tonight, a first responder or a nurse or somebody standing on an oil well, has to pay for us. Maybe it was just a mistake. Maybe it was just inexperience.

Again, maybe this is a mistake, too. I absolutely believe it's a mistake. I absolutely think that when we have our electoral officer say that the position is not needed and tell the people of Alberta that he can do the job and save us money. Now the government is forcing this on him, on us with a five-year commitment. Of course, we know the range that the hiring had to be at, I guess, from the orders and the prescription that was out there, but Albertans don't know what it's going to be, and it'll be over a year until we do. This may end up being a very, very costly mistake, again, caused by a lack of respect for how hard people actually have to work to earn tax dollars.

I want to come back to, you know, some of the words I've heard while I've been sitting here listening for two hours: reckless, irresponsible, rushed, no transparency, waste. Five of the things that I've heard the most are reckless, irresponsible, rushed, waste, lack of transparency. This thing is a mess. This thing has been a mess from start to finish in a government-dominated committee. Again, not knowing how so much, you know, advice from – start with Mr. Resler, an excellent officer for the people of Alberta, an excellent reputation. In my six years it's all been good. For his advice to be so totally disregarded absolutely leaves me speechless, hopefully not for the next 10 minutes, but . . .

Mr. Mason: It's a figure of speech.

Mr. Barnes: I see.

Madam Speaker, it's amazing. That's one of the reasons why this government should back up now. This government can put the brakes on. We have a top top-quality officer with top top-quality staff who's saying: we can do the job.

So okay. It's the government's decision. They're the majority. They're forcing their will on the people of Alberta and on the Official Opposition. But it does give us some time. Madam Speaker, it gives us some time to change the terms of the contract, to go back to the other individual, which I believe is Mr. Gibson. Hiring people is a two-way process, the employee and the employer. And we are representing the people of Alberta, again, the people of Alberta that tonight will be saving somebody's life on a nursing ward, creating tremendous wealth and providing jobs, you know, 50 miles from the nearest community standing on an oil well.

I spent a little bit of time on Twitter earlier today, and my goodness, I'm already seeing in Cypress-Medicine Hat ranchers that are praying for rain. They need it instantly or will be faced with selling top-quality breeding cattle that they've nurtured and improved, feeding Albertans and feeding the world for tens and tens and hundreds of years. These are the people that are paying the taxes. These people are why we're here.

Madam Speaker, when I read words in this dissenting opinion from my four caucus colleagues – and I thank them for their work and their courage, my colleague from Airdrie, my colleague from Calgary-Greenway, from Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, or BMW as I heard the other day, and Chestermere-Rocky View – here are some of the things that they said in April 2018.

We have long been disappointed in how members of the government caucus chose to conduct themselves throughout the entire search process . . .

Well, I think we can add to that: through the entire amendment process in the Legislature.

. . . in a reckless fashion by forcing the Legislative Assembly Office to compose a job posting and position profile for a brand new position in less than 48 hours, and deciding to open the competition during the Christmas holidays.

This is probably an appropriate time for me to tell everyone about how on the Christmas holidays I took my three boys and their three girlfriends and my wife down to Cancún and what a great holiday we had.

But how many quality people that would have been eligible for this job were doing the same somewhere with their family, somewhere with their friends, somewhere where they weren't able to reply? You know, Madam Speaker, I don't and the Official Opposition doesn't take any pride in being able to say: I told you so. So this NDP government had to then take $20,000 out of Families and Communities' pockets, an additional $20,000, for a second run of print advertisements and maybe end up with where they were headed all along.

The last sentence of that paragraph really concerns me. "We also took issue with being strong armed by government MLAs." We get it. They're the majority. They have control of the Legislature and all the committees, but, Madam Speaker, that is not how you lead. "We also took issue with being strong armed by government MLAs who would declare that a consensus had been reached on issues in camera and would try to force votes with little to no discussion." Little to no discussion, stacking the deck with the majority of the members.

Of course, we've heard some of the past history of the candidate, and we've also heard from many people on the opposition side that the candidate is good and there appear to be a lot of reasons that he should be hired. Of course, what this debate is about is the terms and the process. We've heard many, many people stand up and talk about how a five-year term may collide directly with this next election, not the one that Albertans hope to have March 1 to May 31 next year but the one that may fall four years after that. If this servant of Alberta is doing a good job five years from now – and I hope he is – does that mean a 10-year contract five years from now? It will be right in a very, very delicate time zone. Madam Speaker, we can correct this problem now.

You know, I also understand that Mr. Resler, our elections officer – the expiry of his contract matches what my colleague from Chestermere is proposing, 12 months after the polling day for the next provincial general election. Twelve months after the polling day. As has been stated many times on this side, if there are a few little things to organize or, let's say, a minority government is in place in a year and . . . [Mr. Barnes' speaking time expired]

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, I have to say that I have an incredible respect for my colleague from Cypress-Medicine Hat. I have to say that when I first became an MLA, he was very helpful in trying to guide myself and a lot of my colleagues through the process. I'm also thankful for the other, in our case, Wildrose MLAs that had gone through the purge, if you will. [interjections] I'm sorry. I wasn't meaning to be funny. But what I will say, though, what I'm trying to bring up here, is that the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat has been at this for a while. He's seen search committees. He's seen committee work. He's also one of the most respectful men of this Legislature when it comes to our committees.

So, you know, when we see something happen like what happened with this search committee, when we've got contention on this committee, I'm just curious. It seems like the government is saying that all we're out to do is to get this individual. I don't believe that the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat is out to get Mr. Gibson. I do believe that he's asking reasonable questions. I think we've got a reasonable amendment before us. Why are we not lining these up?

I would like to hear from the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. You've been through committees. It would be great to see maybe the House leader from the government side even speak on this, on how he sees committees work. It's the experienced parliamentarians that we've got here that we should be looking to to improve. They've been through the process longer. I've been here for three years. I do believe that we can always get better at what we're trying to do. It comes to compromise.

Will you speak on other committees that you've been part of, sir, and do you see that the committee that we had, the search committee for this new position, is problematic?

The Deputy Speaker: Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you for that. I greatly appreciate it. Just quickly, the first thing that came to mind was that when I was fortunate enough to be elected in 2012, one of the first committees I was on was Resource Stewardship. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity at the time was our chairperson, and I think back to what a great job she did. I guess it's fair to say that there were many things that were on that committee that, when it came to my inexperience, I was as green as grass in many ways. She started to bring in people that presented to us about indigenous peoples' rights and their way of life and how that would be impacted by hydro developments and lots of the proponents of it and the people that were going to be affected. My goodness, I learned so much, and it was so respectful, and it was just a great opportunity to put things forward.

Then the next step was the bullet train between Calgary and Edmonton. She brought in a lot of people that wanted to talk about how that was going to happen. It was an amazing, amazing educational experience to hear that there are only one or two of them in the whole world that actually pay for themselves. Of course, they're in centres of 10 million and 20 million people. Probably the thing that was the easiest for me to remember was that because this train was going to be going 220 miles an hour, if it even hit a rabbit, it could derail the whole train, so it was totally crucial to have these fences and guard it and make sure nothing like that happened. It was a real opportunity to share information and learn.

You know, I even remember at one point the Wildrose legacy caucus – I can't remember exactly what we were talking about at the time, but there was talk of a dissenting opinion on something. I remember the committee pulling together and talking about it and working it out. Because it was a step away from where we were actually making laws and . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Mr. Mason: Well, the hon. member asked me a question. Unfortunately, my colleague used all the time, so he has learned some things since he was first elected, in 2012.

The question that was asked is: what is my experience of committees? Well, my experience of committees is that you have discussions, you have an agenda, you debate the issues, and you reach a consensus if you can. If you can't, you take a vote, and whoever has the most votes wins. Then the matter is settled.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) any questions or comments?

Mr. Cyr: Well, thank you for that, sir. I do appreciate you getting up. You know, I do say that it was great to see that you, I believe, got a 10-year pin. Was it you that got a 10-year pin?

Mr. Cyr: I apologize. A 15-year pin. We do have some very experienced parliamentarians here.

Now, as the minister has been in opposition and he has been able to feel when government uses its majority to push something through a committee, is it not frustrating for you to see something like that happen, to not even try to come to some compromise, sir? I truly believe that working on compromise – and as I said before, with the search committee for the Auditor General, it didn't mean that we agreed on everything, sir. But we were able to come to compromise, and I believe we picked Mr. Wylie. He is going to be the best Auditor General we have for Alberta going forward. You know what? I think that process worked.

To the minister: do you feel that it is appropriate that we are pushing things through these committees very quickly and, in this case, that we had missed the fact that a five-year term is not appropriate for this man? Thank you, sir.

Mr. Mason: Well, Madam Speaker, I wasn't a member of the committee, but I have indeed served on many committees. I've often found it frustrating, to be sure, but I've also found that when I had some good, constructive points to make, they were often listened to with sympathy and occasionally incorporated into the decisions of the committee.

But one of the things that I recognized, whether I was frustrated or not, was that we have certain principles of democracy that we operate in this House, which is based on debate and votes, and that that is how decisions are made in this place on bills, on motions, on all manner of things. The proportion of seats on committees is equivalent to the proportion of seats in the Assembly, which is in fact determined by a free vote of the electors in an election. Ultimately, refusal to accept the decision of the majority after fair debate really amounts to a rejection of the choices that have been made by voters and is not in its essence democratic. I would urge the members opposite to recognize that we operate under certain principles of democracy in this place and in our society and to respect those.

With the greatest of respect to the opposition, we need to move on to much more important business of the public. We have pipelines. We have health care. We have an electricity system. There are many issues before this House that need to be resolved. It is the people's business, Madam Speaker, and we need to show respect to the public, that we use our time wisely in this Assembly and focus on the things that are most important to the public as opposed to being concerned about someone who may have in the past brought forward a number of recommendations which quite embarrassed the previous government.

For example, of course, the long-standing practice in this province where the governing party appointed all of the returning officers in every constituency in the province was an outrageous abuse of democracy. In this case, Mr. Gibson, as the Chief Electoral Officer, brought forward recommendations to do away with that, which the government of the day found very awkward. There are many other quite good recommendations that were made, in all honesty, that the Conservative government didn't like. Some of them have been adopted since; most notably, the notorious system of political appointees as returning officers. But there are others that have been subsequently adopted. The awkwardness and embarrassment that it cost the government of the day was in part why they got rid of him and why they're opposing this now, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to speak to this amendment, particularly after the hon. House leader made some comments. I mean, let's be very clear. This motion is to appoint Lorne Gibson as the Election Commissioner. That's what the government motion is. The Election Commissioner, at least as told to me by the government, is an extremely important position. That's what members of the committee said. So I find it interesting that the Government House Leader may not agree with that statement that the committee members are making.

However, we are here, and our democracy is extremely important, Madam Speaker. You know, to say that debating this here today fulsomely is not as important as some of the other business that the government may have would appear to be a little bit confusing to some of the members of the committee and/or to the Government House Leader. I don't really know which is which.

Madam Speaker, also, in addition to government business, there have been a number of opportunities where this government could have – let's say particular to the pipeline legislation, where there's an urgency to get this legislation passed. You know, there would certainly be a willingness from members in the Official Opposition to expedite that process and get that moving through. Certainly, that's not what's been happening with this government.

There have been a number of bills additionally, Madam Speaker, that the government isn't offering debate on. In fact, the Official Opposition has been carrying much of the debate on most of the bills in this Legislature. I would think that the statement about moving on to other business, having more important things to do is not the whole truth.

I know that the people in my constituency of Airdrie are very in tune to this new position that's been created by the NDP government and the process that it's taken to get there. They don't really know much about it. The government refuses to disclose the salary. The Chief Electoral Officer says that this position is redundant because that's what he already does, so in addition to insulting the Chief Electoral Officer in bringing this position – and I still would like to get some questions answered for my constituents in Airdrie, who absolutely deserve to be represented in this debate as we move forward.

Madam Speaker, the amendment that's on the table was moved by my hon. colleague the MLA for Chestermere-Rocky View, who made some really good points in her debate. I particularly agree strongly with this amendment. This is an amendment that's consistent already with the office of the Chief Electoral Officer. There's nothing unusual about what's going on here. It's, in fact, consistent with other things. It's an easy talking point for the government: well, you know, we chose this term because it's consistent with almost exactly the same office in another manner. I don't really understand why the government is treating this new Election Commissioner differently than they are treating the Chief Electoral Officer. I think that's a bit of a concern. Why does the new Election Commissioner have a better contract or a better deal than the Chief Electoral Officer? It doesn't make any sense. I would think the government would agree, being consistent and open and honest and transparent, that they should be treated the same, but they don't, and I would be concerned as to why they think that.

Madam Speaker, there's been a lot of controversy surrounding this whole situation, and this government is trying to make this debate about the person in particular whereas the Official Opposition has a lot of concerns about the process and how we got here in the first place. We've offered a number of suggestions on how to make the government's decision to create the position in the first place and then to hire the Election Commissioner a whole lot better. But they are choosing to, you know, keep things secret and blame us in the Official Opposition for filibustering, which, in fact, is not true. This is the first time I've been able to speak to the amendment, which I think is so important.

I think that Albertans deserve to have this fulsome debate, Madam Speaker. In fact, if the Official Opposition hadn't been offering such good suggestions along the way in regard to this motion, we wouldn't have gotten to a point where we heard the hon. Government House Leader stand up today and say: actually, I made a mistake. "You're welcome," is probably what I would say and what should be said, maybe, because that's an extremely important part.

The government voted down an amendment to make the new Election Commissioner's salary public – right? – and their whole argument at the time was that it will be made public in due course, the way that everything else is made public. That was the argument of the government. It was the only argument of the government, truly. But then we find out that isn't even true. The whole debate isn't even true. I actually wonder if we should reintroduce the amendment. I don't know if there's a process to do that, but I think that the government would probably, certainly, appreciate an opportunity to be able to have a debate on some facts. We have those now, and that's certainly because the Official Opposition has taken the time to do research and to consult with constituents and to be able to come back here and bring that expertise to the House and debate it here.

I know that my constituents in Airdrie don't want to see this Election Commissioner be treated any differently than the Chief Electoral Officer. They don't want that. Certainly not. This is an amendment that would bring those two in line with one another.

Like has been said before, Madam Speaker, if the Election Commissioner does a good job, he could have a very long career. You know, there are certainly some concerns that the contract will run out and the committee at the time won't renew it and that then there'll be another lawsuit against the government, which was not successful the first time. However, there's always a considerable amount of time and money and effort put into these things when one is faced with such legal proceedings.

There are just so many things, right? There are just so many things. It's like, you know, if you have a problem employee, Madam Speaker, or in an interview process. I don't know if you've hired anybody before. I'm fairly certain you have. You're a very accomplished woman. If somebody comes in to see you and they're applying for the job, but you kind of have a, "Why did you leave your last job?" and there's a little bit of uncertainty around the explanation as to why they left their last position, in your head and in your heart of hearts you know that something is off. You also don't necessarily have multiple newspaper articles with additional information that you can refer to. I wouldn't want to speak on your behalf or for you or assume anything, but I would think that sort of in a case like that, you probably wouldn't proceed to the next phase of the interview process.

But that's exactly what happened in this committee, and there's some concern. And the Official Opposition is not the only one with concerns. The members of the committee are not the only ones with concerns, Madam Speaker. Albertans are concerned. You know, this is an individual, an office that will be interacting with the public, that have significant powers that are different from what the Chief Electoral Officer has.

No one here is suggesting that we shouldn't have investigations. I mean, there's always an – the work that the Chief Electoral Officer currently does is extremely important, and I value the work that he's done, the help that he's given to the public, the investigations that he has pursued and made rulings on. There are a number of people that can't run for any elected positions here in Alberta that are clearly listed on the website. Those were investigations that occurred, and there was a ruling that was made on those.

But apparently that doesn't matter anymore, Madam Speaker, so the NDP created another position, another couple of million bucks, saying, "Who cares, right?" It's not real money; it's just numbers, a piece of paper for this government. They created a redundant position that, at best, has been described as part-time. Why don't we see if this even works? What if this isn't something that the government likes after the next election? I suspect they might not because the results are going to be a little bit different than what they think they are, despite their efforts to stack the deck. This government isn't willing to put their money where their mouth is.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Airdrie has the floor, and it's getting awfully noisy back here. If you've got conversations, please take them outside of the House.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you so much, Madam Speaker. I appreciate that. It's hard to put some thoughts together with the chattering, so that was very good. I appreciate that.

I was just saying, Madam Speaker, in regard to this amendment that we are currently discussing to Government Motion 16, to strike out "a term of five years commencing May 15, 2018" and substitute "a term commencing on May 15, 2018, and expiring 12 months after polling day for the next provincial general election in Alberta" that this is an amendment that mirrors the language for the Chief Electoral Officer. It's a position that the NDP government has taken from the Chief Electoral Officer, added a whole bunch of money to and time and whatever and created what is new in the Election Commissioner's pile over here. I don't know why it would be treated any differently. It's the same thing. It went from here to here, right? That's it, but a whole bunch of extra money and time and all that kind of stuff.

I guess I'm having a hard time, Madam Speaker, trying to figure out why this position and this particular legislative officer are receiving special treatment from the NDP government. I think Albertans are going to have a hard time with that, too, but we have an opportunity and the government still has an opportunity, when we vote, to provide the people of Alberta with peace of mind in that no favouritism is happening. You know, this individual works for all Albertans, not the NDP government but all Albertans, and I just don't understand a scenario, Madam Speaker, in which the NDP would not think that that is okay. They make the rules. They can certainly go back to the Election Commissioner and explain that because of the redundancy in the position that has been created, we have to treat everybody the same because that's the right thing to do. I know that the new – I would assume. I mean, I shouldn't assume, but I would probably be safe that the new . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I know that my time is going to be limited, but I'd just like to comment that you mentioned the words "stacking the deck." It seems to be a catchphrase whenever this government deals with anything to do with the upcoming election. I think we talked about it on Bill 32, where the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre used "stacking the deck" a number of times, and there was a little bit of diatribe between him and the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills where they went: stacking the deck, stacking the deck, stacking the deck. It kind of gives that appearance when you look at – you know, they question us as to what we would have against this person being appointed, which he was, so the question it begs is as to: what do you have to gain by forcing and appointing this person? I'd like to remind the government that this person was a man that actually sued the Alberta government and lost.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2) the House stands adjourned until 7:30 this evening.

7:30 p.m.

Tuesday, May 8, 2018

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Amendments to Standing Orders

19. Mr. Mason moved:

Be it resolved that the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta be amended as follows. Standing Order 56 is amended by striking out suborder (2.1) and substituting the following:

(2.1) A temporary substitution in the membership of a standing or special committee may be made upon written notification signed by the original Member and filed with the Clerk and Committee Chair, or through an email communication sent directly from the original Member to the Clerk and Committee Chair, provided such notice is given

- (a) on a business day, not less than 24 hours prior to the meeting for the substitution of the Chair or Deputy Chair, and
- (b) prior to the scheduled start of the meeting for the substitution of any other Member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Madam Speaker. By way of explanation I should indicate that these changes would make it easier for all caucuses to manage unexpected absences from committee duties. Under the current rules 24-hour notice is required for committee substitution. This can make substitutions for Monday meetings as well as Tuesday mornings quite difficult to manage. The change would allow for substitutions to take place up to the scheduled start time of the committee in the event of committee members. The 24-hour notice is maintained in the case of chairs and deputy chairs.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: That's the place, Madam Speaker. Thank you very much. First of all, I just want to thank the Government House Leader for this particular change to the standing orders. It's a good change. It's a change that was a result of some positive conversation on both sides of the House, and it will allow greater flexibility for MLAs to make substitutions at committee meetings.

However, there was an element that we talked about that did not make it into the final motion before the House, and that is the issue of subs for chairs or deputy chairs. The current standing order means that when a noncommittee member substitutes for a chair or a deputy chair, that substitute automatically becomes the chair or the deputy chair for the meeting. Now, sometimes, Madam Speaker, that's not a big deal, but other times to have a chair or deputy chair who is not a member of the standing committee and doesn't know the history of that standing committee can cause some complications.

Therefore, I'd like to propose an amendment to this government motion, which I support. I have the appropriate copies for the pages.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, if you can just wait until I have a copy, please.

Thank you, hon. member. The amendment will be referred to as A1. Please go ahead.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that Government Motion 19 be amended, in the proposed amendment to Standing Order 56, by adding the following after suborder (2.1):

(2.2) Notification of a temporary substitution under suborder (2.1) for the Chair or Deputy Chair may designate an existing Member of the committee to act as Chair or Deputy Chair, as the case may be, and another Member as a temporary substitute.

Madam Speaker, this amendment proposes to allow a chair or a deputy chair, when making a notice of substitution, to effectively divide their substitution. They can choose to make a committee member the chair or deputy chair for the duration of the meeting and also allow a noncommittee member to sit as a substitute. I should also point out that it allows the chair or deputy chair flexibility in that they can still choose a noncommittee member to substitute for the chair or deputy chair.

In case members are having a hard time following this concept, allow me to explain with a little example. Take the Public Accounts Committee, which is chaired by my good friend the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. In the unlikely event he needs a substitute, currently when he is advised that the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills is going to fill in for him, his substitution notice also would make the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills the chair. I see all sorts of problems with that, but I digress, Madam Speaker. This is problematic because the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills hasn't been a member of Public Accounts for the Legislature, so he hasn't received the same level of training as the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake and has less knowledge of what is currently going on inside the Public Accounts Committee.

An Hon. Member: It's too complicated for him.

Mr. Nixon: Yeah. And we also get a little sick of hearing about the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

What we are proposing is that when the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake sends his notice of substitution, it can advise that the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek will be taking over as committee chair and that the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills will be a substitute sitting as a regular member, able to vote on motions but not sitting as the committee chair.

I should also add that the new provision in Government Motion 19 isn't affected and that the chair or deputy chair could still have 24 hours to submit their notice of substitution, as set out in section (2.1)(a).

I hope I can find the support of all members of the House for my amendment, Madam Speaker, and encourage everybody to vote for it.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to the amendment on Government Motion 19? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: I would indeed, Madam Speaker. You know, I'm leaning very heavily toward supporting it except for the scary examples that the Opposition House Leader used. Nevertheless, I'll overlook that and just indicate to all members that I do support this amendment. I think it's a helpful amendment, and it will make management of the committees easier for all involved.

So I urge all members to support this amendment.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any other members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, I will now call the vote on amendment A1 as proposed by the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Acting Speaker: We are now back on the motion as amended. Any other members wishing to speak?

Hon. Government House Leader, would you like to close debate?

Mr. Mason: Yes, please, Madam Speaker. Vote yes.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I will now call the question.

[Government Motion 19 as amended carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Amendments to Standing Orders

18. Mr. Mason moved:

Be it resolved that the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta be amended as follows. Standing Order 7 is amended by striking out suborder (7) and substituting the following:

(7) The items in the ordinary daily routine will be deemed to be concluded at 3 p.m. and the Speaker shall notify the Assembly unless notice has been provided under suborder (8).

(8) The Government House Leader, or member of the Executive Council acting on the Government House Leader's behalf, may provide notice to the Assembly prior to 3 p.m. on that day that the daily routine shall continue beyond 3 p.m.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. This amendment corrects what I believe to be a loophole in the existing standing orders that requires unanimous consent to be granted in order that Routine proceedings be extended beyond 3 o'clock. As you know, from time to time the Routine does extend to and beyond 3 o'clock. This is often a result of a combination of other factors, whether there's been a ministerial statement, how many guests are introduced, and whether there are interruptions to the clock during Oral Question Period.

Members have no doubt seen it from time to time. Upon seeing the clock approaching 3 and knowing that there may be unfinished business, the Government House Leader seeks unanimous consent of the Assembly to extend the Routine past 3. In such situations there is uncertainty for members who may have important members' statements scheduled for that day. There may also be occasions where important legislation needs to be introduced or notice of an important motion needs to be provided.

Madam Speaker, there was indeed an instance in this Chamber in the last few years where unanimous consent was requested but not granted, which thereby impacted the government's ability to introduce legislation. On April 4, 2016, the government had intended on providing oral notice of a bill to be included in the following day's Order Paper, that bill being Bill 5, the Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act, sponsored by the hon. minister of housing. However, Routine proceedings were longer than is normal that day because at the opening of the proceedings the Speaker made a statement regarding the hiring of a Clerk of the Assembly, and brief comments were made by a number of members following his statement in order to welcome the new Clerk to his position. At approximately 3 o'clock the Deputy House Leader at the time sought unanimous consent to extend the Routine. Consent was not granted. As a consequence, introduction of that bill was delayed until the following day.

I think this is an important matter, Madam Speaker. It is possible, I know from personal experience, for the opposition to use a variety of tactics to make sure that the Routine is not completed by 3 o'clock. It can happen inadvertently, just by a combination of factors, but it is also subject to ingenious tactics by skilful opposition leaders. Therefore, it can prevent the government from introducing an important piece of legislation in which there may be some time constraints.

For that reason we are proposing this change, and we would hope that members on both sides would support this. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Olds—for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Perfect. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm glad you got all the towns this time. I don't want to be mistaken for my friend from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. There is a slight height difference. I don't know if anybody has noticed.

Mr. Mason: And width, too.

Mr. Nixon: And width, too. For sure. Thank you to the government for pointing out my width compared to the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

The reason the Government House Leader needs this government motion is because, as he said, one time the Official Opposition hurt his feelings because we didn't give unanimous consent to the government, and it had to delay by one day introducing a piece of government legislation. One day, Madam Speaker.

I would say that it seems a little petty to me to now make a standing order change because of that, but I guess they get to do it. They're in government. I should also add that the Government House Leader continues his government trademark consultation style, which is really where they tell us what they're going to be doing but don't actually listen to our concerns. Now, no surprise there, Madam Speaker, because they're so used to not listening to Albertans' concerns on issues like carbon tax or farmers' concerns on Bill 6.

But I digress, Madam Speaker. In fact, I am even inclined to advise my caucus to let the Government House Leader go ahead with making this unnecessary change to the standing orders. I still kind of don't understand, though. I mean, at the end of the day, previous governments seemed to implement their legislative agenda just fine without this change, but I guess this government needs all the help they can get by changing the rules of the Assembly in their favour. You might even say that they're stacking the deck.

However, before we let the Government House Leader continue to weigh the rules of the Assembly in the favour of cabinet members, I'd like to propose an amendment, and I have the appropriate copies.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. If you could just wait until the table has the required copies.

Please go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Well, Madam Speaker, I move that Government Motion 18 be amended, in the proposed amendment to Standing Order 7(8), by striking out "The Government House Leader, or member of the Executive Council acting on the Government House Leader's behalf," and substituting "Any member."

Madam Speaker, this amendment suggests a crucial change to how the Government House Leader proposes to change the rules. Instead of consolidating the power in the hands of the Government House Leader or other members of cabinet, it allows any member to make the request to extend the daily Routine. It doesn't even stop the Government House Leader from being able to be the one to make that request. On that note, I want to remind all members and particularly the Government House Leader that all MLAs have a role to play in the management of House affairs, and it's not exclusive to cabinet.

I hope the government members support this amendment.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Your amendment will be referred to as A1.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? I will recognize the hon. Government House Leader, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Well, we didn't know that this amendment was coming, so I'm formulating my thoughts here as I go. Now, the Official Opposition House Leader's ... [An electronic device sounded] From now on I'm having overtures when I speak.

This amendment means that any member can extend Orders of the Day. Let's think this through. It is possible, as I've already indicated, for brilliant and insightful Opposition House Leaders to find a way to extend Orders of the Day, potentially, for a very long time, almost indefinitely, by constant use of – and I hate to give them ideas – introductions of guests, you know, points of order, tablings. There are lots of ways to do that. Then the amendment would allow any member to automatically extend the Routine so that Routine could be extended throughout the whole afternoon. It would allow a small minority or even an individual, for example the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, to extend this.

The intention here, Madam Speaker, is to provide an option so that the government can actually make sure that if it has a bill to introduce, it can introduce the bill. That's the only reason for this particular motion to change the standing orders. I think that what the hon. Opposition House Leader is proposing could be fairly dangerous and may have, you know, unintended consequences, and I'm sure the Official Opposition doesn't want to be known as the Official Opposition of unintended consequences. So I suggest that members defeat this amendment.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. A couple things. I think the Government House Leader just did a very good job of proving my point that the intent of his amendment is to consolidate all of the power on this issue in cabinet and/or the Government House Leader, not to share that ability with all members of the House, which was the point of my amendment.

Also, the argument of dangerous. Let's be clear. This Government House Leader brought forward a change to the standing order because he was embarrassed because once this government slipped up and got caught and wasn't able to get a bill forward.

I do ask the hon. Government House Leader on 29(2)(a) if Bill 5, that he refers to as his reason for bringing this forward in this Assembly, did in fact pass the Assembly, or did something tragic happen along the way and Bill 5 was not able to make it through the process as a result of that standing order being utilized? I'd be interested to hear his answer.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to respond? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. You know, the hon. Official Opposition House Leader is a skilled debater, and he has cleverly pointed out that, in fact, the government was able to get the piece of legislation through. However, there have been important time constraints on bills; for example, if we're facing some sort of a court-imposed deadline to make changes to legislation would be one possibility. There are a number of other reasons why it might be very harmful to the province of Alberta and to the government of Alberta were the government not able to give notice of a piece of legislation which is required. That is simply the case.

It is not an attempt to put all power in the hands of the Government House Leader. That, I think, the hon. Official Opposition House Leader would have to admit, is rather a gross exaggeration. It is simply to make sure that if the government wishes to proceed with a piece of legislation and there's a time limit on that, it cannot be held up by mischievous tactics by the opposition. That's all there is, Madam Speaker.

You know, there are many, many tactics that the opposition can use, and I know very well what many of those tactics are. I think the Official Opposition is learning as they go, and after another term in opposition I'm sure that they're going to become quite proficient, Madam Speaker, at some of the tactics that are available. We've been very sparing in terms of changing the rules in order to shift things in this House because we don't wish to shift things, quite contrary to what the suggestions are opposite. We don't wish to shift the balance heavily in favour of the government.

Now, I did have to face a Deputy Government House Leader, Ron Stevens, who called myself and the Liberal House leader to a meeting and read us a long list of changes that severely circumscribed the ability of the opposition to do its job, and then those were put through despite our objections. It actually led to an extraordinary circumstance where, as the NDP House leader, I held a joint news conference with the Liberal House leader, and that was almost unheard of. I think that at that time our relationships with the PCs were much better than our relationships with the Liberals. You know, that shows the extent of the threat that we faced from the PC government.

We've never done anything like that, Madam Speaker. We actually and I personally respect the role of the opposition in this place. It is essential to hold the government to account, and with a really good opposition they will actually put forward alternatives to what the government is doing; for example, perhaps a shadow budget or something like that. You know, the opposition is actually quite necessary.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

I did recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow to go first, and then I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm not generally in favour of this motion, so I'm a bit conflicted on whether or not I'll support the amendment. I'm also not certain whether the term "polishing a turd" is, in fact, parliamentary. If it is not, I apologize and withdraw that term. If it is, then let's keep it in Hansard. But it's there now because Hansard is forever.

Madam Speaker, my concerns with this amendment are similar to the Official Opposition House Leader's concerns. When we get back onto debate on the main motion itself, I will elaborate on those concerns. I'll vote in favour of the amendment. I think that it's at least going to blunt the power that is put in the hands of government.

I guess the question I would have for the Government House Leader if perhaps he'd like to rise under 29(2)(a) and answer the question – you know, beyond the one case of Bill 5 that we had in this term, he's talked about that it could be very, very harmful to extend daily Routine. Potentially there's a bill that needs to be passed very urgently, and somehow the Official Opposition or any other private member would withhold unanimous consent or would propose that we extend daily Routine ad infinitum just for the simple purpose of frustrating whatever this particular bill happens to be. It seems far fetched to the point of just being inconceivable that something like that could actually happen. What seems more likely is that the government is just caught out not well prepared.

I think that this amendment would make what's a bad idea, I guess, slightly better, so I would speak in favour of the amendment. I look forward to having more to say when we get back on debating the main motion.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. What we have here is a classic case of a solution looking for a problem and not finding one. The reason why this amendment is a good one is that the Government House Leader just finished giving zero examples of the government not being able to get their legislation through. He gave one example where they got their legislation through one day later than they would have liked to have, and I'm not even sure that happened because I'm not sure, at the end of the day, because of the way they can put things on the Order Paper or not put things on the Order Paper, whether the third reading was completed at the same time, perhaps even earlier. It takes me back to the fact that the Government House Leader is doing this with exactly zero examples of where it was a genuine problem for the government.

Further, he gave an example where the former Ron Stevens – may he rest in peace – got the Government House Leader in front of media when they paid attention to them. I think he will even agree with me right now that at that point, when the NDP got in front of the media, they owed the government a thank-you card and a bouquet of flowers because at the time I think they had a hard time getting in front of the media, not like now, where they get all the airtime.

But, Madam Speaker, I think the Government House Leader, respectfully, has killed his own argument by giving zero examples where it's been a problem for the government and one example where it was an opportunity for him as an opposition caucus leader or House leader at the time.

And what's further troubling to me, Madam Speaker, because I'm used to being insulted around here, is the fact that the Government House Leader would consider all of his private members as – his word, not mine – dangerous. It's what he just said. The only people that won't be able to do this if he votes against this will be private members, including the government's own private members, which are now considered, in the words of the Government House Leader, dangerous. I think at this point, since the Government House Leader has . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, are you calling a point of order?

Mr. Mason: Yes. A point of order, please, if you don't mind.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. Please proceed.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Mason: Well, under 23(h), (i), and (j) I just want to correct what the member is saying. I never called any member of this Assembly dangerous. I said that it would create a dangerous situation, potentially, where the rules could be used in a way to prevent the Assembly from doing its job. That's the danger that I'm referring to, so I would ask if he would please withdraw those remarks.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. First of all, clearly, this is a matter of debate. The hon. Government House Leader is attempting to use a point of order to clarify his comments. He should probably be more careful with his comments when he gives them. But there are also 29(2)(a) and other ways to clarify the hon. member's comments. If he didn't mean to call his private members dangerous, I think it's probably fair that he at some point will rise and apologize for that misconception. But he shouldn't rise on a point of order which is clearly a matter of debate, and we should move on with the hon. Member for Calgary-Hay's comments.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

At this point, I think it is a differing of opinion. It has been clarified by the hon. Government House Leader.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, if you could please continue.

Mr. McIver: Thank you.

Mr. McIver: Let me say this. While I may agree with the hon. Government House Leader's private members on that side on many occasions, I've never considered them to be actually dangerous because they're nice people.

On that note, and because the Government House Leader has given zero examples – that would be zero examples – where the government didn't get their agenda through, I would finish my debate the same way I started it. This, in fact, is a solution in desperate search of a problem.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will now call the question on the – oh. The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just would like to speak against the amendment. The reason, you know, put forward for this amendment was that there's a contention that this puts all the hands in the power of the Government House Leader or his or her designate. I think that's not quite true because any member of this Chamber has the ability to ask for unanimous consent to extend the Routine past 3 o'clock, so members of the opposition and private members would have the opportunity to request that Routine be extended. Therefore, a mechanism does exist for that to occur, and for that reason I can't support the amendment.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much. I'd like to stand and speak in support of this amendment. I'd just like to point out that the Government House Leader, while he's given zero examples of why this is necessary, that could be substantiated by any major cause of alarm for any of the bills – as was said, it may have delayed it by a day. It may have actually pushed it ahead. But I'd just like to bring to your attention that, you know, we've been trying to get changes to the standing orders from the Resource Stewardship Committee so that we can actually allow the committee to do some work and have been stymied on multiple occasions. We've given multiple examples of why that was necessary and were voted down at every turn by this government.

So I don't understand why we have to change the standing orders on an irrelevant, really, example that was given by the Government House Leader when we have multiple reasons to change the standing orders to allow our committees to do some actual work while they're waiting for reports, and we get voted down at every stand.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Nixon: Absolutely, Madam Speaker. I already spoke to the amendment.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Perfect. Thank you to the hon. member for his comments. I do have a question for him. I wonder what he thinks about the deputy whip's comments that essentially cabinet now has special privileges, with a reduced threshold compared to private members, which he did not refer to in his comments. If opposition MLAs would need unanimous consent, cabinet ministers would not, which is the point of that. I wonder what you think, you know, the private members of this Chamber must feel like knowing that this government continues to come to this Chamber thinking that cabinet is above even their private members. I mean, the Government House Leader has already called them dangerous. Clearly, he comes into this House with a motion to treat private members different, including his own private members. How do you think they feel about that, hon. member?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, would you like to respond?

Mr. Hanson: Absolutely.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the question. You know, as a member not sitting in the Executive Council, I would have trouble, even as a government member, if my voice wasn't considered as relevant as anybody else's in the House. We were all elected by the people of Alberta, and I think that we should all have the same rights and the same say in the House. I don't believe I recall an instance where someone other than the Government House Leader or his stand-in would call for unanimous consent to extend past 3 o'clock at any other time, so I don't understand why we need to change the orders.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. It troubles me. I'm going to speak in support of the amendment because I do believe that what is currently happening here gives me cause for concern. The Government House Leader has proposed a motion – I would suggest it's probably on behalf of Executive Council, so on behalf of the government – to possibly strip the ability for all members in this Legislature to be able to exercise their due diligence in all matters. I do have concern a little bit with regard to the process and with regard to how we are currently moving forward. I believe that there may have been a step in the consultation missed here.

You know, we have a Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing, and conveniently a motion is put before that committee when government feels like it's a good idea. Yet in something like this, which I believe should be brought before the committee for discussion and some consultation, the process gets skipped. I think we can do better. I think we can do better in this House, and I think that good governance would require us to try and do better.

So I'm going to support this amendment based on the fact that I believe it's in the best interests of all members of this Legislature to be properly consulted. If the government can put forward an argument, possibly before the committee, as to why this is very necessary, then I suspect the committee would come before the Legislature here and make a recommendation as such.

But now here we are. We're sitting with a motion from the Government House Leader on behalf of, essentially, Executive Council, I would suspect, and I am not prepared to support the motion the way it is. I believe the amendment will help to improve it.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'd just like to ask the hon. Member for Barrhead . . .

Mr. van Dijken: Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, BMW.

Mr. Hanson: BMW. It gets stuck in my head.

You said that it would be a little bit more convenient to take this to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing. I'd just like him to comment on when the next meeting is because I believe it's tomorrow at 6:15. Maybe it would be a great time to discuss this matter.

Mr. van Dijken: You know, if I said that it's more convenient, I would suggest that possibly it's not more convenient, but it's probably better due diligence and a better consultation process. Yes, we have a committee meeting scheduled for tomorrow evening. I'm not sure that the committee would be able to include it in the time frame that is in place.

Of course, you know, we have committees in place to do this very thing. I do believe that it's necessary to recognize that and that it's necessary to start to move in a direction that these committees be utilized in the fashion that they were designed. The way it's looking is that it's the no-meet committee or what used to be considered the no-meet committee. Maybe that's why it's called that, because in the past it was not being properly utilized. I would suggest that we can do better, and we should do better.

So I would support the amendment to try and put into place the opportunity for the Executive Council, for government, to come before the committee and argue the case and make the case that this is a requirement.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion?

Seeing none, I will now call the question on amendment A1.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A1 lost]

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Acting Speaker: We are now back on the government motion. I would like to recognize the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to beg leave of the House to ask unanimous consent to revert to Introduction of Guests, please.

Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, please go ahead.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my very great pleasure this evening to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the mayor of the town of Vermilion, Caroline McAuley. Mayor McAuley has joined us this evening as I promised her that we would be in for several hours of riveting debate. When you're from Vermilion, that's great entertainment any time. [interjections] No. You've never been to a Vermilion town council meeting, let me tell you.

I should mention that Mayor McAuley is in the city to chair a series of meetings of the Recycling Council of Alberta, that she chairs, and she is certainly very passionate about that as well as many other subjects. I'd like to ask my colleagues to join in welcoming her and giving her the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Welcome.

Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: We are now back on Government Motion 18. Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Why, thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, it's amazing how easy it is to get unanimous consent when one needs unanimous consent. I think the timing of this is remarkable given the topic of the motion that is before us. I mean, I say that with obviously a bit of good humour, but at the same time that is my experience in this Chamber over the last three years, almost to the day. I think that members who have been here longer than I have will tell me that this has also been the experience, that almost invariably when the government requests unanimous consent to extend the daily Routine past 3 p.m., they're granted unanimous consent.

What I'm really curious about is the timing of the changes to the standing orders here. We are now three years into this Legislature, and but for one very small example, which really had no material impact on the government's ability to conduct the business important to our province, the government has decided that now is the time to bring this standing order change. So it makes me wonder why that is. What's cooking? What's coming next week? What's coming this fall such that the government feels there's some risk that a member of the Assembly might not grant them unanimous consent? I wonder. Are they going to introduce a dozen bills in a day and try to steamroll a bunch of things through the Legislature at some point? Is there some incredibly controversial bit of legislation on its way that we haven't been told about? I don't know. I have absolutely no idea.

The other thing that I think it's important for this government to understand is that at some point, perhaps less than a year from now, they may find themselves back on this side. They may find that having made this change to the standing orders is perhaps not in their interest when they do eventually, be it after this election, after the next election, after the election after that, find themselves back in opposition, as every government eventually, ultimately does. Far be it from me to predict the outcome of the next election.

I don't mean to be cynical, but is this something that the government is going to change under the auspices of it simply being a technical, small, niggling little change, use it to their advantage for a session or two, and then, right before the writ is dropped, change it back because they think that perhaps they're going to find themselves on the receiving end of some of that stuff? I don't know what the government is thinking. I do find it suspicious that this is coming up now.

The opposition, as the Government House Leader has said, who has spent a number of years in this very region here of the House very capably using whatever tools he had at his disposal to hold the government to account – sometimes those tools include withholding unanimous consent. I can't see a plausible scenario where the opposition would use a daily Routine filibuster to somehow frustrate the government's ability to introduce bills by perhaps just tabling repeated tablings over and over and over again. Of course, that wouldn't work because it happens immediately after Introduction of Bills, so I can't really see a scenario. I suppose we could come up with several petitions, but that's not very easy. I suppose we could contrive to introduce every single one of our staff members at great length, but I know, Madam Speaker, certainly if you were in the chair, you would never allow us to go on and on like that. Members' statements can only be two minutes long. We have no control over Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees. We could I suppose bring some Notices of Motions. That's very brief, and then we're into Introduction of Bills.

I can't see a scenario where the opposition or some rogue private member on the government side, much as I would encourage you to do so and entertaining as it would be to all of us, could frustrate the ordinary business of the House in any kind of systematic way by filibustering Orders of the Day or by filibustering the daily Routine. It seems incredibly unlikely.

I'm just left wondering why. Why is the government bringing this at all, (a), and (b), why now? This is something that could have happened a year in, two years in. The Government House Leader knows the Standing Orders better than probably anybody in this Assembly with the possible exception of the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. I feel like I'm learning at the knee of the masters as I go on my journey here in the Legislature, but I do wonder why.

So, Madam Speaker, I will not be supporting this amendment. I do question why the government is bringing it, and I would encourage all members of the Assembly, including government backbenchers, to shock the world, break with the government's vote, and vote against this motion.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: When I first saw this motion, I took a look at it because I like to read the Orders of the Day. I looked it over, and I thought: well, you know, I'm just not sure what they're doing. It looks like our cabinet is unilaterally giving themselves power that they didn't have before. From what I hear from the House Leader, that is the case. They are giving themselves power that they did not have before.

Now, I would like to say that unanimous consent that is being used currently, right now, is sort of like a detente. Right now what happens is that if you abuse unanimous consent, it creates problems for both the government and the opposition. I think it's reasonable to say that nobody wants to see that. Now, we may have had a procedural manoeuvre that the government may have been upset with, but that is the exception. That is not the rule of what happens in this House.

What I'd like to say, though, is that the government is clearly stating that by having this additional authority, it can stop the opposition from abusing unanimous consent. That seems strange. What it does do, though, is it gives a loaded gun to one side, and it I guess more or less takes all the weapons away from the other side. What we've got here is a government that can do exactly what the House leader said, which is saying: now we can stop members' statements from happening on the opposition side, but we can get members' statements through the government side. This is important. We need to use unanimous consent to be able to get our members' statements through, where the Government House Leader now has the ability to press their own.

Now, why is unanimous consent so important? Because what happens is that when you abuse unanimous consent, the media understands that. What we're talking about here is the fact that – let's say, for instance, you decide to put a unanimous motion or something forward that says: we support pipelines. We say: let's put through a motion with unanimous consent. And one member speaks against that. That's all it takes with unanimous consent. That member will make it into the newspapers because of the poor choice of the direction they're going. They're more or less going against the people of Alberta. It is breaking this detente, if you will, right now. That is important, and I believe it was intentionally designed this way to create that balance. We are taking the balance away.

The government has not shown there is clear evidence that we are abusing unanimous consent. You saw just recently that we granted unanimous consent. It happens very regularly. If this was a problem, then, absolutely, the government would have to do something about it, but what we've got right now is – let's say, for instance, the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, our House leader, and the House leader of the government get into an argument. This seems strange, but it does happen from time to time. I know that these two individuals respect each other, but let's say that there is an argument. We're bringing a knife to a gunfight when it comes to unanimous consent.

We are no longer going to be able to push through members' statements, and that is problematic. The House leader himself said that it's for Members' Statements that he was doing this, when he said that we could, more or less, block a member's statement and it's private members' business. This is something, and if I'm wrong, then please feel free to correct me. But I am telling you that it is problematic when we break the system, and I truly believe the system was created this way intentionally to prevent this exact thing.

When the government decides that they want to start going and giving themselves additional powers, it is important that we review that. It is important that our House leaders are involved with this together and that they come to a compromise, but it is very apparent that there is no compromise here.

So we moved forward an amendment that allowed any member to move the Orders of the Day forward, and the government voted that down, again, breaking that detente. We were creating the detente. That's what's important here, that you need to create balance within this House. When you abuse the standing orders, that is incredibly, incredibly dangerous.

I would like to say: please vote down this motion. It's clear that it's an abuse. The cabinet should not have this power, and I believe that we need to go on with other business.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Oh, thank you, Madam Speaker. I felt that it was important to provide perhaps some context from our reference texts on parliamentary procedure in this regard. The third edition of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, the 150th anniversary edition, which was just released last year, which is some outstanding bedtime reading for those suffering from insomnia. It might be useful to read the seven-page section from 591 to 598 on unanimous consent because, in point of fact, unanimous consent is a tool. We've heard a lot of talk in this House and other places about the tools in the tool box that can be used. In fact, unanimous consent is a tool that is used from time to time where it makes sense and where it is a useful or a propitious thing to do, whereby the standing orders are set aside for one particular and specific purpose. Or more specifically – and I'm quoting here from page 593 at the top of the page – it states here:

For the most part, unanimous consent is used as a means either of expediting the routine business of the House or of extending the courtesies of the House. During debate, unanimous consent has been sought to extend briefly the length of speeches or the length of the questions and comments period following speeches; [or] to permit the sharing of speaking time; to permit a Member who has already spoken once to a question to make additional comments, and even to alter the usual pattern of rotation of speakers.

Now, Madam Speaker, in each of those cases it reflects a courtesy that is applied to hon. members in order to expedite the work of the House. The standing orders are, in fact, the provisions that are made by the members of the House to govern themselves. What I see in this motion is a desire by the Government House Leader to strip away some of those rules that have been in fact set by members of the House and hand over more power to cabinet and to the Government House Leader. This Assembly does not belong to cabinet. This Assembly does not belong to you folks who sit in the front row of the government, who have tremendous powers in many areas and are called upon not to abuse those powers. In fact, our system has many checks and balances in place to ensure that cabinet does not have the power of abusing the powers that they're given.

However, regrettably, in the course of this motion and in complete wilful ignorance of the seven-page section on unanimous consent in the most recent addition of House of Commons Procedure and Practice we have a situation where the Government House Leader is seeking to shift the transfer of power dramatically in favour of cabinet. You know, for cabinet to have supremacy in the cabinet room and for Executive Council to exercise its authority and the significant powers that are vested in it by our traditions in Parliament is one thing, but here in this place we are all members. We have all been returned by the electors of our individual constituencies. To shift the rules in such a way to provide specific favour to cabinet and to members of Executive Council is not only unfair, but it's completely not in keeping with our British parliamentary traditions.

Unanimous consent is rarely abused. I think that the hon. Government House Leader, who has been here for many more years than I have, will agree that the number of occasions where unanimous consent was not provided under 7(7) are very, very infrequent. Even when they are used, it creates a very temporary interruption in the government's course of doing business.

Madam Speaker, I cannot accept and I cannot support a measure that places more power in the hands of cabinet, that places more power in the hands of Executive Council, when those power are already significant as they stand. This Assembly and the rules of this Assembly belong to all of us, and that includes whether you're the Premier or whether you're a private member representing any constituency in our province. To shift the rules such that that balance of power is upset and that we no longer respect and identify the very clear rules that are in place, I think is a mistake.

I would urge all members of the Legislature to defeat this motion, which I believe would be damaging to our procedures here.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, not many folks other than the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster and the Government House Leader can quote from the good book of parliamentary practice like it was the gospel. I certainly appreciate their ability to reference it like we're at Sunday church here.

A lot of the members in various parties here have made, I think, very pertinent comments that we should take to heart: Calgary-Elbow, Bonnyville-Cold Lake, Vermilion-Lloydminster. They've made good arguments, so I'm not going to rehash what they've said too much, but I'll just add a few thoughts of my own. You know, our rules are evolved from approaching a thousand years of tradition. There is a careful and delicate balance of power that has evolved over that time. Each Westminster Parliament has its own particular quirks and rules and traditions, but we fall in a general tradition.

You know, when I was briefed on this by my staff, I was baffled. I couldn't figure out: what the heck is the government trying to achieve? I had to really think about it. Why would they do this? In my time here I don't believe – someone correct me if I'm wrong – there's been a time since the last election where unanimous consent has been denied, where the government has requested it. Perhaps there's been a case, but I can't remember. Perhaps it was at midnight some point. It's always been granted when asked for. So it's very difficult to see why they would want this unless there is some agenda behind it, and the Member for Calgary-Elbow has mentioned a few of those points.

You know, our traditions here are meant to balance the ability of the government to advance its legislative agenda with the ability of the opposition to hold the government to account and to at least say our piece. I'm still waiting for the day where we'll be able to get enough government backbenchers together with the opposition that we can finally defeat a government motion at some point, but I'm not holding my breath. Perhaps tonight. We'll see.

In the opposition we don't get to win votes. This isn't like the United States congressional system, where the outcome of votes is actually in doubt, where you actually have to bargain back and forth between parties. We don't really have that. All we can do as the opposition is to just have our say, hold the government accountable and have our say. That's not a lot for four years, to have your say. The Government House Leader spent – I'm not going to say how many years; I think I'd be dating him – quite a few years just being able to have his say, and have his say, he did, with every tool at his disposal.

Now, I've regularly been the lone dissenter in this House, something which I get a rather sadistic pleasure from.

Mr. Mason: A masochistic pleasure.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Masochistic. Well, I like to think it hurts you guys, but I don't think it does. Yeah, it's a masochistic pleasure that I get out of being the lone dissenter in this House for the last three years on quite a few issues.

But I've never denied the government unanimous consent. I've been the one dissenting voice many times, but it's always been on issues of policy, where we're voting on amendments or bills. It's never been on a request from the government to seek unanimous consent to reasonably expedite the business of the House. Every time I've been the lone dissenter, it's been on an issue of policy, not just to be a jerk. As much as we can be prone to do that in this business, I think that, for the most part, our better angels control us so that when the government or the opposition request unanimous consent for something that is reasonable, it is always given.

Now, there are a few potential – maybe the Government House Leader can clarify. I do have a more technical question on what some of the repercussions of this could be. Now, Members' Statements is supposed to be before question period, but if introductions go for too long, it's often after question period. We've had a little bit of shorter introductions lately, so we often get to two, three, or even four. Today we got to four, but that still left two members' statements to be after question period. Now, my question is to the Government House Leader, and this is just a technical question that I'd like an answer for: in his opinion, would this mean that if our daily Routine ends at 3 o'clock sharp, any outstanding members' statements that have not yet been made would then be lost?

Now, if that's the case, that is taking away one of the few opportunities that private members, both government and opposition, have to make themselves heard in this place. If that is the case, then you're going to have to come back to the people about what order these members' statements are in. I'm number 5, so I'm pretty worried about what that's going to mean. One of the unintended consequences might be that I'm going to have to figure out a way to filibuster introductions every day if I want to get to my member's statement, and I don't think that would be a reasonable thing to do because we normally operate as gentlemen and gentlewomen in this place, with the best of intentions and respect for one another. That's why we operate on unanimous consent for these kinds of issues. So I hope that the Government House Leader can at least clarify that.

I do believe that this government motion to change our standing orders upsets the balance of power. I hope that they would at least think through what they're doing. But, at the very least, if the Government House Leader could answer my question about what effect this will have on Members' Statements if the daily Routine concludes before members' statements are concluded.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Although I'm not a minister, I would like to ask the House for unanimous consent for one-minute bells on this item.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Government House Leader.

8:50

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I want to thank all members for their contribution. With respect to some of the points that have been raised, first, the Member for Calgary-Elbow asked: why the timing? In fact, this has sort of been in the works for some time, and it was brought forward because we were also bringing forward a couple of other changes to the standing orders. So this was the time that we did it. We'd circulated this, of course, to the opposition for some time, and we have brought it forward now simply because there are a couple of other changes to the standing orders that are being dealt with.

There is not – and you can take this for what it's worth – some conspiracy to introduce some very controversial bills all of a sudden. I think that will be borne out in time. Whether the member believes me now or not, that has really nothing to do with it. It does stem, as I said, from an earlier instance, where unanimous consent to extend Orders of the Day was denied, and the government was unable to give notice, according to the schedule that had been set out, of a bill that it wished to debate the following day. So, yes, it was delayed by a day. The bill was ultimately passed; however, it flagged for us, and me in particular, the potential abuse that could happen.

Now, I know that some members of the opposition have said, you know: it's not really possible to drag things on and block things. But it is. Some other clever former Opposition House Leaders have done it. I'm not going to explain how it's done because I don't want to give anybody any ideas. But it is, in fact, in the standing orders. There are multiple provisions which identify things that the Government House Leader is responsible for doing in this House. Customarily, when the House is adjourned, the Government House Leader is given the authority to move that. I'm not going to give all of the examples, but it is not unusual.

In respect of the comments from Vermilion-Lloydminster there are limitations in the House of Commons Procedure and Practice on the use of unanimous consent, and I don't believe that this fits within the categories of things that he is referring to.

With respect to Strathmore-Brooks' question about how it could be used for Members' Statements, I do not recall in all of the time that I've been in this place where we didn't get through Members' Statements. It's usually the last few items, if it does happen on the rare occasions, on the Order Paper under the Routine that sometimes we don't get to. This would not be a way to shorten in any way the Routine, which would still continue until 3 o'clock. It is an opportunity to extend the Routine in the case that there was some unfinished business that needed to be attended to. That can be accomplished either through any member requesting unanimous consent or, if this is approved, the Government House Leader or a Deputy Government House Leader giving notice prior to 3 o'clock.

Madam Speaker, I'm not surprised that the opposition is not happy with this, but it is the duty of the government to make sure that it can bring forward its legislative agenda, that we provide ample opportunity for full debate and for the opposition to do its job and to carry out its responsibilities. Ultimately, the government has an obligation to move forward its legislative agenda and its budgets in order that the affairs of the province can be properly conducted.

That is apparent in any readings of House of Commons Procedure and Practice or our own standing orders. That's the responsibility of the government, and it is given authority in the standing orders and in the long-standing rules of the Westminster system in order to be able to do that provided that it can command a majority in the Assembly. At the same time, those rules set out the rights and responsibilities of all members and of the opposition, official and otherwise, in order to hold the government to account, and they have many tools with which they can do that.

Ultimately, it comes down to the simple fact that if the government needs on an urgent basis to introduce a piece of legislation, it ought not to be held up by tactics on the other side or by an inadvertent combination of circumstances so that it is accidentally unable to do that. So I feel I have a responsibility to bring these changes, and I would urge all members to support this government motion, Madam Speaker, so that we can amend our standing rules and get on to our other business.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act

Mr. Schneider moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 7, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 7, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Adjourned debate on the amendment May 1: Mr. Westhead]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, are there any members wishing to speak to the referral amendment? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm speaking to support the amendment that's been put forward by my hon. colleague from Little Bow. We're dealing with Bill 7, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act. The amendment that's been put forward before us is:

Bill 7, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

I was just reflecting on some of the things within the bill and also why it would be, in my opinion, a good reason to refer this bill to committee for the committee to look into the good parts of the bill and possibly the negative aspects of the bill. I was able to speak to the bill in second reading and recognized that the bill is essentially – well, it's got a part 1 and a part 2.

Part 1 does have two parts to it. With regard to a recognition of the Alberta local food week, the third weekend in August in each year being proclaimed the Alberta local food week, I don't see that this can create any harm, so I don't know that the committee would have to spend a whole lot of time with regard to that part of Bill 7.

But then we move into the second part of part 1, local food, the local food council. I do have some concerns with the local food council, how it's being essentially structured, how it will be put together, how people will be searched out to serve on this local food council. The local food council is charged with providing a report to the minister, and the minister then is given the task from that report to digest that report and make decisions on how to move forward with reducing barriers for local food producers and how to possibly look at best ways forward for processing food distribution and how to gather it together for food distribution, increasing access to local food, and consumer awareness of local food.

What does concern me about this is that I think we need to hear from a broad spectrum of producers, processors, consumers to get an understanding of their needs and their ideas. We currently have many examples of local food production that have been able to get started, been able to produce in the province and distribute that food amongst consumers through either retailers, farmers' markets, and many other avenues where you can distribute hampers, food baskets off the farm.

I would not be in favour of a government program that would possibly negatively affect those who have already done a lot of work to establish their businesses, to establish their relationships with their consumers, with their wholesaler, with the retailers that they choose. We see or I see that there's potential for that type of a negative consequence with regard to our local food sector that's already been established, so I have some concerns on that, where government interference may not recognize how government decisions on how to proceed, how to best move forward will damage very effective and good working relationships and systems that are already in place. I do believe that if we get too involved with government and government regulation and government systems and red tape that go into these types of programs, we take a risk that we will actually reduce local food availability, and we take a risk that we possibly put in barriers that make it uneconomical for the sector to really thrive and grow and move forward.

We possibly are putting in barriers that might affect one production unit differently than other production units. A co-operative unit might be affected differently than a wholesale or retail type of an arrangement, so I think that when we're in government – like the old saying says, you know: I'm from the government; I'm here to help. Most times people take that as, "I'm from the government; I'm here to help," and they say: "Well, we don't need your help. We just want to be able to be free to do what we're already doing, and we are not willing to take the risk of government programs and plans getting in the way of a very healthy evolution of the local food business."

You know, Madam Speaker, I'm involved with the Outstanding Young Farmer's program as an alumnus. Over the last 20 years that I've been involved with that program, we get to watch more and more production units and different ideas come forward, units from across Canada, young people that are trying new things, young people that are being very successful in trying new things, being very entrepreneurial. I believe that there is a certain amount of natural evolution in the transition from large acreage farms to possibly a little bit smaller acreage farms but more intensive farming practices. Much of this is occurring just from organic growth, where these individuals see an opportunity, they see a need, they see a market, and they decide to start to feed that market.

I recall one operation, when we were developing a local food relationship with the co-operative system in Saskatchewan. This operation was selling through farmers' markets in both Saskatoon and Regina. They were a 60-acre farm that more or less didn't have opportunity because they weren't able to market beyond those farmers' markets. So they approached the co-op, and they were able to build a relationship with a retailer, and it was good for the producer, good for the retailer, good for the consumer. I think that's what we try and achieve, where we can have a win-win-win situation.

It's important that we recognize that in this bill for local food production, once the minister receives the report from the local food council, I believe that it's within a year that the – yeah: "Not later than 12 months after a Council is established . . . the Council must submit a final report to the Minister providing the advice and recommendations of the Council on the matters referred to in subsection (1)," which is essentially on how to possibly move forward.

What does concern me is that we have right now an all-party committee that's in place that could do much of this work. I believe the council is essentially put in place to get much of this information aggregated and brought together and to try to understand what's in the best interest of industry, what's in the best interest of the local food sector. An all-party committee would allow it to be a very open discussion amongst all members within this Legislative Assembly as opposed to a local food council appointed by the minister to provide a report to the minister and then the minister having the ability to put forward regulations, put forward legislation, put forward whatever the minister feels necessary to moving forward on those recommendations. I believe that that's a dangerous road to go down. I don't believe that that's necessarily the best way for government to be involved.

All-party committees are very effective in being able to be very transparent, accountable to the people as opposed to when we have the potential of a minister appointing a council. I don't know how that council – there's no description in the bill to ensure that the appointment to the council is done in a fair and a very transparent manner. Are the people that are going to be affected by this going to have the opportunity to report to the council, to witness to the council, to be part of the council? These types of things concern me, and I believe the amendment to put it before the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future is a good recommendation at this time.

I also am concerned a little bit with part 2, organic agricultural products. When we take a look at organic agricultural products, I'm not sure how that fits in with the Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act. Like, Alberta's local food sector's organic agricultural products are not only consumed within Alberta locally; they're consumed right across Canada, right across North America. They are marketed around the world. Organic systems are in place and CFIA standards are in place to ensure that organic products that are marketed, exported elsewhere in the world meet the CFIA regulations.

I'm a little bit concerned that we're lumping organic agricultural products within this bill. I think the Economic Future Committee would have the opportunity to delve into whether or not that's really a part of local food. I believe that it's a completely separate sector. I would suggest that organic agricultural products is essentially a brand that is being sold in the marketplace under certain guidelines, and there are consumers that are attracted to that brand name, to the name "organic" and that certification. At the same time, is it government's place to put in place the regulations in the monitoring of organic agricultural products? That's a question I have.

You know, I was in the hog industry. We worked on, at the time, implementing a food safety program, a quality assurance program in consultation with the producers so that the producers had input into what was necessary to ensure that we had a quality, safe product. So, you know, we look at it, and I believe that there are a lot of things that are better put before the standing committee to get a better understanding of what the role of government is in this. How are we as legislators, as overseers of our society, to be involved in this in recognizing that we cannot necessarily favour one society over . . . [Mr. van Dijken's speaking time expired]

With that, I move to adjourn debate, Madam Speaker.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 9 Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered in respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to make an amendment to Bill 9, and I have the appropriate number of copies.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, if you could just wait till I have the copies at the table before you proceed, please.

Hon. member, your amendment will be referred to as A1. If you could please proceed.

Drever: Would you like me to read the amendment? Okay. The bill is amended as follows: section 6(4) is amended by adding the following after clause (b): "increasing the dimensions of an access zone set out in subsection (2) in respect of a facility or class of facilities to a distance not exceeding 150 metres from the boundaries of the parcel of land on which the facility is located."

Madam Chair, it is my pleasure to rise today to make this amendment on behalf of the Minister of Health to Bill 9, the Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act. I've been proud to spend my time as an MLA standing up for women and supporting vulnerable women here in the Legislature and when I'm in my riding and every day. I was proud earlier in my career to introduce legislation that protected women fleeing domestic violence. I removed barriers which prevented those women from being safe. One of my proudest moments was seeing that legislation receive the unanimous support of this Assembly because, Madam Chair, Alberta women deserve nothing less than our unanimous support every single day. That's why I want this legislation to have the strength to protect women every single day.

We know that the proposed legislation will help women in Alberta access abortion services without fear of interference, harassment, threats, or intimidation. But in the event that the 50-metre access zone around a facility is not enough, we need to make sure that there is a mechanism in place to increase that distance when it's required. The proposed amendment before us would authorize regulations to be made to increase the size of access zones around facilities from the current 50 metres to a maximum of 150 metres. This amendment would also further align Alberta's legislation with Ontario's access zone legislation, which has the option to extend access zones for a facility by regulation to a maximum of 150 metres.

The amendment is necessary in order to provide flexibility for cabinet to deal with situations where the 50-metre access zone is insufficient. These situations may include protest activity outside of the currently proposed access zone if it interferes with women accessing health services. All Albertans should feel safe when accessing any health care service, including abortion services. The legislation before you will help protect the safety and privacy of women accessing abortions as well as those who provide abortion services.

I encourage all my colleagues to support this bill and the amendment that I put before you today. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I just rise briefly to speak in favour of the amendment and thank the hon. member for bringing it forward and again thank the government for taking action on something that is needed. I would hope that any time we have an opportunity to protect women's access to basic and fundamental health care, we should do so and that they should always have that right without fear of harassment or intimidation.

This is a reasonable amendment that I think ensures that the original intent and purpose of the bill is met. I look forward to hearing, perhaps, from the Official Opposition, but you can be assured that the Alberta Party caucus enthusiastically supports this.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. Of course, I also rise to speak in support of this amendment. First of all, I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Bow for all of the good work that she's done, not just through this amendment but through all of her time here in the Legislature to this date, standing up for the rights of women. You know, it's quite remarkable to reflect on her legacy. She's not as experienced as many of us in this Legislature, and already she has a significant accomplishment to her name for enhancing the rights of women in this province. I know that she will live a long life with a proud legacy behind her, and this only adds to that.

One of the questions, though, that I have for the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow – you know, I'm interested to hear her opinion, hear her conjecture, perhaps. It was with great interest, Madam Chair, that I watched the proceedings of the UCP policy convention on Saturday and Sunday this past weekend, and I noticed that there were some protesters outside of the policy convention hall. Those protesters, oddly enough, were asked to move at least 50 metres away from the door to prevent offending the rather delicate sensibilities of the delegates who were there and may have had their feelings hurt by being confronted with people who didn't share their world view or their opinions on minority rights, for example, or women's rights.

According to the reports and the media those protesters were asked by the organizers of the United Conservative Party policy convention to move 50 metres away from the door of the policy convention, which, you know, struck me as odd, Madam Chair, because 50-metre buffer zones is something that the members opposite have absolutely no opinion on. When pressed, they have absolutely nothing to say about 50-metre buffer zones. It struck me as really strange that on the matter of 50-metre buffer zones around abortion clinics the members opposite have nothing to say, but when it comes to their own policy convention, a 50-metre buffer zone must be strictly enforced.

We see the behaviour from the members opposite all the time. They have their feelings hurt and stand up on points of order and call us on points of order regularly. Of course, they do nothing, Madam Chair, to ever cause us to rise on points of order. Their behaviour is beyond reproach. If there was sarcasm font in Hansard, my previous comments would be reflected by being printed in that sarcasm font.

An Hon. Member: Irony.

Mr. Schmidt: Irony. Thank you. Unfortunately, Hansard hasn't advanced to the point yet where we use different fonts to identify whether or not the speaker was speaking ironically or seriously.

But I digress. My question to the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow is whether or not she thinks that by passing this amendment, she would encourage organizers of future United Conservative policy conventions to ask protestors to not just move 50 metres away from the doors of the convention but now 150 metres away. You know, obviously, we're intent on protecting women's rights, but I certainly wouldn't want to see the rights of protestors at UCP policy conventions impinged. Certainly, 50 metres is a generous buffer zone around a UCP policy convention although, obviously, their feelings can be hurt even outside of the 50-metre zone. There are incredibly sensitive buffer zones around UCP delegates, Madam Chair, and they can have their feelings hurt from 150 metres or possibly even greater distances away.

You know, I was wondering if the Member for Calgary-Bow could speculate, I guess, on what protestors at future UCP policy conventions can expect with the passage of this amendment and whether or not she thinks that that will affect the outcomes of these UCP policy conventions. Will they still pass these horrible resolutions that are intent on outing gay children, intent on impinging on women's rights? Will they still have the ability to go to the microphone and complain about indigenous people taking and taking and never giving back to the province of Alberta? Will we still be able to hear Heather Forsyth call feminism the F-word and barriers to women's participation in the political process as socialist crap? I am very curious if the Member for Calgary-Bow can tell us what impacts her amendments may have on future UCP policy convention protests.

The Deputy Chair: Just a reminder that there is no 29(2)(a) in Committee of the Whole.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. I want to thank the hon. member for moving this amendment on my behalf and say that one of the reasons why this came to me is because there was discussion around how half a kilometre was too big. I have to say that I agree with that. But I think that if we require more than a tenth of that, a tenth of half a kilometre, it's important for us to give us the ability through regulation to be more responsive to some of the issues as they arise. I have to say that 15 per cent of a kilometre I think is an appropriate barrier to be able to expand it through regulation, obviously, ensuring that it never contracts but that if something does happen, we have the ability to be able to react to that.

I want to thank the member for bringing that amendment forward on our behalf and members for contributing to the discussion, those who have, to give us the ability to consider this potential opportunity to create greater protections for women should the need arise.

Thank you.

9:30

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll thank the Member for Calgary-Bow for bringing this forward and participating in the debate. However, I have to disagree with where this is going.

I've always said that I don't think it's unreasonable that we codify in law protections for women accessing abortions, that they're not being harassed or intimidated. These things are already forbidden under the Criminal Code, but I can appreciate the need to want to more specifically tighten the laws up around this. My concern has always been, though, that this is targeting a particular political, social movement, and I don't believe any law should, even if it was targeting a group that I disagree with. I very much do not believe it's appropriate in any way, regardless of your feelings on the topic of abortion, to harass women, intimidate them, film them, any of these things that some folks, however few, do endeavour to do. But all laws are about balance.

My reasoned amendment earlier, to my shock, was not accepted by the government. I did not receive unanimous consent, you could say, for the reasoned amendment to shelve this bill and bring it back this week as a broader bill.

Dealing with the matters of the bill itself here, I think we need to make sure that it is still striking an appropriate balance because however much I may disagree with what some of these folks are doing, there is a difference between quietly protesting with a sign and, you know, yelling at women as they're going in, photographing them. I think we can all recognize there is a spectrum of inappropriateness here. I think it's generally inappropriate to do it, period, but there is a broad spectrum. But if someone is protesting respectfully, as much as you can protest this respectfully at an abortion clinic, if they are by other means behaving themselves, I think we still need to recognize their right to freedom of speech and assembly and not treat them differently than others.

I've believed that at the very least we should limit the size that these zones can be. Now, this amendment from the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow extends this to quite a significant degree, 150 metres. I mean, that's quite a distance for protesting. Again, you don't have to agree with what these people are doing, but they do have a right to express themselves, however distasteful the way they're going about it may be in this particular case.

I've believed that the government's original position here went too far in terms of the size of the buffer zone, so I was prepared to bring forward amendments changing the size of the buffer zone. You'll have to forgive me; I'm a little unprepared for the change of order in which we're dealing with this. Anyway, rather than putting these forward as stand-alone amendments, I'm going to move these as subamendments. I hope that Parliamentary Counsel can bear with me, that we can make this work. If there are any issues, let me know, but I'll be distributing this now.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, if you could just wait till I have it at the table, please, before you proceed.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yeah.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Hon. member, your subamendment will now be referred to as subamendment SA1.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. As I've said, I beg the understanding of members here. These were intended as stand-alone amendments to Bill 9, not as subamendments to a government amendment. Governments amending their own bills: I don't laugh at it. I think it's a sign that says: we can always make something better. Even if I disagree with the substance of the amendment, the government clearly believes that their bill can be better.

This amendment: Mr. Fildebrandt to move that Bill 9, Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act, be amended in section 7 in subsection (3) by striking out "160 metres" and substituting "10 metres" and in ...

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt. Sorry. I just looked at the amendment again. This is written in the format of an actual amendment, not a subamendment, so we would have to wait until the vote on amendment A1 to see if you would then introduce this as amendment A2. It's not in order as a subamendment.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Okay. Can I ask the chair just for clarification, with Parliamentary Counsel, if the amendment that I am proposing here would be in order as a stand-alone amendment if the government's amendment still passes? Our parliamentary monk here says that it does, but I await Parliamentary Counsel.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, yeah, because of the way that it's formatted, you will be able to introduce it because you're actually amending section 7, which is an amendment to a different section than this amendment that we're debating on the floor as A1. Right now amendment A1 is amending section 6(4), and your amendment, that you have just introduced, is amending section 7, so it's a separate amendment from this one. You'll have to wait till we vote on A1, and then you can reintroduce this one as A2.

Mr. Fildebrandt: It would be in order as a stand-alone amendment?

The Deputy Chair: It would be in order to be a stand-alone amendment, yes.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Okay. Very good. In that case I would temporarily withdraw the subamendment. I'll be reintroducing it later as a full amendment.

But I'll speak to the Member for Calgary-Bow's amendment, put forward here. I think in this debate on this issue we should try to understand that we're dealing with real people, people in a vulnerable case, and we want to protect them, but at the same time we have to protect the fundamental right to free speech and expression and assembly of everyone here.

Now, before I was trying to quote Voltaire. It turns out it's attributed to Voltaire. I think I said that it was Jean-Jacques Rousseau – it's normally attributed to Voltaire – but it was actually someone else, I think a woman from Britain who was paraphrasing Voltaire. That's a long way of saying that I was wrong and the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster was right. But the saying attributed incorrectly to Voltaire is: I may disagree with you, but I will defend to the death your right to say it. If we believe in free speech, we believe in free speech that we disagree with. That's the real test. You know, we all here, I think, pay lip service to free speech, but do we really stand by it when we hear something that we strongly disagree with? That's the real test here.

The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms: it's an imperfect document, but one of the geniuses of that document is that all of these rights and freedoms have to be justified in a free and democratic society. That's essentially the big asterisk below the entire Charter of Rights and Freedoms, that we have all these rights and freedoms, but they're not absolutes. As Canadians we tend to be lukewarm about a lot of things. We believe in free speech, but we generally don't believe in incitement to hate and violence. The degree to which we believe there should be limits on that varies, but generally we believe that you shouldn't be allowed to incite explicit hate. So all of our rights and freedoms are subject to some caveats. You know, we all have our favourite rights and freedoms here, but as strongly as we believe in them, none of them are absolute under the Constitution, including my very favourite freedom after guns and property, free speech.

Mr. Mason: After guns?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Guns and property.

Dr. Starke: But religion falls below that yet.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Religion comes a bit below.

We've all got a hierarchy of our favourite rights and freedoms, but they're not in any particular order in the Constitution. They're all equal rights, but they're all balanced off against each other. You know, we have the right to the security of person. We have the right to the security of person, to be safe from harm, and we also have the right to freedom of speech and assembly. Sometimes those rights are in conflict with each other. In this case they are in conflict, and it's up to us as legislators and, hopefully, not the courts if we get it wrong to find the appropriate balance between those two.

I think the original legislation has already too large a zone restricting freedom of expression and assembly and that the amendment goes even further, obviously, but I certainly appreciate that the member has put it forward with the best of intentions, that she believes that this will help. I believe her concerns are genuine, but I think that they are moving the balance even further off than the original government legislation proposed. So I would ask her to consider her position. None of us, once we stand up, are ever wrong, except for myself – I like to admit if I am – but I'd like her to just consider if this amendment is striking the appropriate balance in a piece of legislation that's dealing with very delicate and competing rights right now.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, I'm a little confused by the Member for Strathmore-Brooks' comments. He's saying that he wants to see women be protected, yet he doesn't support my amendment, where there could be situations where they need that further protection. I want to be clear about one thing. This bill is not about free speech. This bill is about protecting women. It's about protecting them from harassment. So I'm a little confused by his comments. You know, we all know that he is a libertarian, and we have different ideologies. We'll put it that way. But I think that this bill is not about partisanship. This bill is about women's rights, and as I said earlier, we should be unanimously supporting women's rights every day in this Legislature.

I appreciate his comments, but I wish he would reconsider his position on this amendment as this is a really important one. You know, I know that he's not a woman, that he'll never be in the position where he has to go to an abortion clinic, where he has to make that tough choice, but a lot of women in this province do. Put yourself in their shoes just for one minute because this bill is about them. It's not about you; it's about them. So I ask the member to reconsider his position, and again I ask the House to support my amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you. Thank you, Member for Calgary-Bow, for your comments. I think they're reasonable, and I think they're heartfelt, but we don't deal with pieces of legislation in silos. You know, I generally don't like taxes, but we need taxes. We balance everything, and we always try to – the difference is that what we try to do is balance. Some of us think the balance should be one way, and some of us think the balance should be another. When we debate fiscal issues, I don't think I've heard anybody say that we should have a 100 per cent tax or a zero tax. We have varying degrees because government and legislation are dealing with competing interests in trying to balance things. We're not always balanced in here. I'm as guilty of that as members opposite. We are dealing with women's rights here, and we are dealing with the fundamental right to security of the person, enshrined in the Constitution. But we are also dealing with other fundamental rights and freedoms, the freedom of expression and freedom of assembly. We're not dealing with just any one right here in isolation.

As I've said, we all have our hierarchy of favourite rights. I think we all do, and it's legitimate for you to want to put more weight on one than on another. That's legitimate. We have different backgrounds here and different priorities, but I would ask you to not consider this as dealing with one specific right, just as dealing with the budget is not dealing with just the income tax. It's dealing with all revenue, it's dealing with all spending, and we take these on as a whole. We might focus on certain parts of it here and there and pick it apart, but as legislators it's our duty to try and find an overall balance.

When we're dealing with important Charter rights here, on both sides, that are competing, it's important that we get the balance right. So, unfortunately, I'm not able to vote for the member's amendment, and it might come as a great shock to her, but I do thank her still for putting it forward and participating in the debate.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1?

Seeing none, I will put the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A1 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 9:46 p.m.]

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill, Bill 9.
I will now recognize the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I would move that we rise and report progress.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

[Motion carried]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, I will now call on the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 9. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Second Reading

Bill 7

Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act

[Adjourned debate on the amendment May 8: Mr. van Dijken]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 7? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm very happy to stand and speak to Bill 7, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act, on the referral amendment. The reason that we're asking to refer is that, you know, I look across the aisle – I know that there are a few producers and farmers on this side – and I don't know how many producers and farmers there are on that side. [interjections] I'm just saying. This is why we should be consulting the people that are actually producing the food and preparing it. It would be a good thing to have them present to committee.

I see that the Minister of Finance had a little bit too much coffee, maybe, today.

Anyway, I'm pleased to rise. That's the reason that we, Madam Speaker, go to committees, so that we can get consultation from the experts in the field, in this case the farmers and producers and food processors.

This bill basically has three parts that it deals with. The first is to establish organic standards. This means that it would now need to meet Canadian standards established by CFIA. The second is about local food week. It would coincide with Open Farm Days celebrations. These are typically held during the third week of August. The third is the establishment of a local food council. This would be in an effort to promote and support local small producers, including farmers' markets.

You know, out in the St. Paul area we have a producer that grows vegetables and is famous for his carrots. He sells them packaged to a lot of the Sobeys stores in the area. He calls them Al's Carrots. His name is Al. It's amazing. They're wonderful. My wife particularly likes them. You have to be pretty quick when they do arrive at the store because they're bought out that quickly because they're so fresh and sweet compared to other stuff that you get from other parts of the world. That's why it's important. It's a real bonus that we can actually enjoy fresh produce here during the summers at least, and we should support our local growers.

Also, I'd like to talk about the farmers' markets especially and at-gate stands, where a lot of seniors use that not so much as a form of entertainment – I don't think a lot of them make a whole lot of money on them, but they do sell a lot of pies or, you know, pickles. Especially around our community there are some babas that get in every Friday to the farmers' market and sell fresh perogies, cabbage rolls, and borscht. It gives them a chance to get out on a Friday and make a little bit of extra money. I hope that when we start introducing legislation, we don't make it so cumbersome that we affect those good people that are just trying to make a few extra dollars and occupy their time.

Before this legislation there was no Alberta standard of organic. Goods that were sold outside of Alberta or Canada needed to meet standards that are set at the federal level by CFIA, but this regulation closes the gap for Alberta. There are many stakeholders that this legislation would affect, and we believe that not enough consultation was done. Again, like I said, I'm not trying to be insulting to any of the members opposite, but I don't see a lot of farmers or producers there, so I really think that we need to gather as much information from the people that are actually doing the work as we can. I mean, we would do it in, hopefully, any other bill that we were presenting to the House. If it was a health bill or something like that, we would definitely consult the health professionals. So I see that in this one we should be consulting.

It's kind of a déjà vu moment or Groundhog Day or however you want to put it, but it seems that we've been down this road before with the local producers, and at that time I believe we did submit that one to committee. I think that this one should also go there and get some further study.

Further, to the title of "organic," this legislation sets out regulations to deal with standards and labelling. With so many changes coming forth, we want to ensure that all those affected by this bill have their voices heard.

We also want to ensure that there are no unforeseen consequences inflicted on Albertans. It is our duty to consult beforehand. This is why it is imperative that this bill be referred to committee, where we can bring in the specialists. I know that the minister of agriculture probably talks to forestry, you know, when they're considering a bill or, hopefully, some of the bigger producers. If you're doing something, it's always nice to talk to the people that are actually on the ground and that will be affected by these bills. In this case it is smaller producers, and we don't want to put in legislation that is so cumbersome that it forces them out of business or forces them to work underground, where they're not going to be taxed at all.

Madam Speaker, this bill will cause Alberta to be among the other provinces with legislation. We have the opportunity to analyze what worked and what didn't work in those other jurisdictions and how those situations fundamentally differ from ours. So I would hope that in considering this bill, we would actually look at the successes or failures of the other jurisdictions before we wrote up ours. Every province finds itself in a quite different position. That is why it is our responsibility as legislators to listen to what Alberta's food producing industry believes would be beneficial and what wouldn't. The only way we're going to find that out is if we actually go to committee and have them be allowed to come and present.

Now, that being said, you have heard my frustration in the House before about the ability of our committees to actually meet with stakeholders. I've been on that Resource Stewardship Committee for three years, and we've not been allowed to meet with anybody. I hope that gets addressed in the meeting tomorrow regarding the standing orders.

Also, a part of this bill would establish a council whose mandate would be to provide a report no later than 12 months after its creation to report advice and recommendations regarding provincial policies, programs, pilot projects, or initiatives which support Alberta's food sector's sustainability and growth. This council would be dissolved upon providing that report to the minister. This is a good example of why an analysis is needed to determine the effects of this bill. We need to consult with those who will be affected prior to putting this bill into effect, not simply implementing it and then collecting information on how it affects Albertans, food production workers, and families. Again, as I said before, a lot of these producers are small. At farmers' markets a lot of grandmothers put together their produce. I would say that a lot of those people and a lot of the gardens around our area, though they're not certified organic, are probably about as organic as you can get.

We need to consult with stakeholders about what type of unforeseen costs there might be. It is not fair to simply inflict these costs with minimal input having been heard. It is their livelihood. If you put a per capita or a per volume on product, it's easy for large producers to absorb those costs. Although they can't pass them on to the consumer, they are a lot more able to absorb those whereas a small producer, like I mentioned Al's Carrots – I would hate to see legislation that's going to make it more difficult or less profitable for him because I know exactly how much work he goes into every year.

The imposition of this bill without properly consulting those that will be affected is once again reflective of a top-down, paternalistic government that does not want to listen to Albertans. As the government continues to eliminate ABCs, this bill adds more. An example of this is the aforementioned council. It seems perfectly reasonable that an existing group with the capacity could take on this task. It seems as though this bill has not been fully thought through and will massively benefit from the opportunity to discuss the effects in committee, where stakeholders will have a chance to have their voices heard. This will have a far-reaching impact.

As such, it is the government's duty to represent the desires of Albertans. Without adequate feedback and without proper analysis of unplanned costs it is hard to imagine that they are doing their duty in representing Albertans. If the government is not giving the chance for input to those who know the sector better than any legislator, how would the government get any legislation better than just a one size fits all? Again, I'll mention the fact that not all producers are the same size. We have to protect our small market producers. For this reason I strongly urge all of my fellow members to support sending this bill to committee, where we can discuss the real effects of this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the referral?

[Motion on amendment RA1 lost]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. We have made some progress tonight, perhaps, depending on your definition on progress. I would move that we adjourn the House until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:16 p.m.]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

As we begin our work for the day, let us acknowledge that we are on Treaty 6 territory, traditional lands for a wide diversity of indigenous people. We're all treaty people, and as such we have a responsibility to work collaboratively and respectfully with our indigenous partners.

Please be seated.

Bill 14

An Act to Empower Utility Consumers

[Debate adjourned May 2: Mr. Orr speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak to this bill? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 14, An Act to Empower Utility Consumers. The Utilities Consumer Advocate was established by the former government approximately 15 years ago, by the government of Premier Klein. I believe that it has provided great service to Albertans, and I am pleased to see the way it has evolved over the years to assist more and more utility consumers. It's focus so far, as per legislation, has been on electricity and natural gas. Education, advocacy, and mediation are its areas of expertise, and it does a good job.

I support the government's plan to include water under its purview in this proposed legislation. In fact, we were pleasantly surprised to see the government do this for we have not seen the government display much concern about average Albertans in the first three years of this government's mandate. The government, despite repeatedly telling us that they're making life better for Albertans, has brought forward many policies that do not help make life better for Alberta families, yet that is what they are continually telling us. We only have to look as far as the carbon tax to see the trials this government is putting Albertans through. They blindsided Albertans with the tax in the first place and then increased it this past January by 50 per cent. You can understand why we are not convinced when the government is suddenly showing much concern about Alberta's water bills.

That said, I do support the UCA expanding to include free mediation services for water billing disputes. As we all know, mediation should always be the starting point when there's a dispute about anything. It lowers the temperature, thereby reducing stress. It saves time and money. Expanding the UCA's mandate to include this utility is clearly a good move and completely consistent with the existing services. I like the idea of offering Albertans a one-stop shop for utilities, and anything that makes it easier for citizens to receive assistance, especially at an early stage, is positive.

I do note that the department is not planning to expand personnel to perform these extra mediation services that will come with handling water billing concerns. That seems a little naive, but I guess we'll see how that works out.

I'm also curious as to how the UCA will work with municipalities on billing issues that require mediation. We hear some unfortunate stories about spikes in water bills if there's a leak in a line or a toilet is left running. Right now some residents feel the need to go public with their plight to bring attention to it. Hopefully, having the ability to turn to the UCA will prove helpful to both parties involved in disputes of this kind or any other kind.

While it is good to see the government address this issue in a positive manner, I wish they displayed equal interest in addressing the financial burdens they are choosing to place on Alberta's families. They continue to pick and choose, acting on one thing like this bill, and ignore other areas where Albertans are really hurting such as the instability they are causing in our power system.

As an example, the NDP have displayed little concern for the communities trying to figure out how they'll survive the aftermath of the early phase-out of the coal-fired generating units. In her speech on Bill 14 in the House last week, the minister talked about Albertans feeling powerless when they have received massive water bills and had nowhere to turn. Well, what about the communities that feel powerless to stop the government's rushed phase-out of their coal-fired plants, plants that have been main employment generators in their communities, plants that had moved to clean-burning technologies? Madam Speaker, these communities are full of families that the government has shown almost no concern for. Their main industry is going to vanish, and so will jobs, and that means families are already leaving these communities for they see no future there anymore. A little bit of caring about these families would go a long way, but the government has never seemed concerned about the fate of rural Alberta.

A point I have yet to address in Bill 14 relates to the Utilities Consumer Advocate gaining the ability to report the track records of power and natural gas utilities companies. One of my colleagues described the change as turning the UCA into something akin to a Better Business Bureau for utilities. I believe this is quite apt. This addition to the act should allow Albertans to become more informed utility consumers. If the UCA is reporting on the performance of power and gas utility companies, then Albertans will likely pay more attention to the information available to them, which will also raise the profile of the UCA and the services it offers. That is a very positive move and something I applaud.

Now that I think about this point, Madam Speaker, perhaps the UCA's mandate should be extended to address the carbon tax on utility bills. I'm speaking specifically about natural gas. Maybe the UCA could act as a mediator when consumers have concerns about high heating bills due to the government's carbon tax on natural gas. Now, that would be providing a really good service for Albertans.

I'll leave this Assembly with that thought. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 14, An Act to Empower Utility Consumers. Being from Calgary, local residents would welcome this bill as Calgarians have been facing a fiasco of problems with their water bills. This bill appears to be an honourable bill. The NDP finally appears to be taking notice of the concerns of Albertans in regard to utility bills and not just Calgary's water bills. But after three years of serial increases to the cost of living for Albertans by this very NDP government, at $30 per tonne the carbon tax nearly doubles the cost of residential natural gas before other taxes and fees, so it's very important to have the outlet of the Utilities Consumer Advocate, to be able to call, complain, get help, and fix the problem with utility bills.

Not only has the natural gas jumped in price for consumers, but so has the electricity. Last month alone, the NDP spent $9 million subsidizing electricity bills for consumers on the regulated rate option.

Mr. Gill: How much?

Mr. Panda: Nine million dollars just in one month.

Why? Because the price of electricity climbed above 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour, and that is the price cap that consumers get and the NDP subsidizes from a fund of $74.3 million budgeted.

I'm sure the NDP's actions in subsidizing electricity prices have freed up some workers at the Utilities Consumer Advocate to take the water utility complaint calls that Bill 14 will now allow. Or have they? I'm hearing lots of people complain about the high price of electricity these days, Madam Speaker. In 2017 and '18 the Utilities Consumer Advocate took 22,790 calls and conducted 5,184 mediations on electricity and natural gas, and it is all the NDP government's fault.

For the first three years this government seemed determined to raise the cost of utilities for everyday Albertans. They hiked the job-killing carbon tax, and the early phase-out of our most efficient coal-fired generation: that coal-fired generation produced fly ash, which is used in the construction industry. Now the cement plants will have to use silica fume and metakaolin. But that's our NDP, always driving the costs up for consumers in the name of environmental do-goodism. The NDP even dared to close down brand new coal-fired generating stations – that's not common sense; it's crazy – then sent the minister on a road trip with the president of the Alberta Federation of Labour to visit the affected communities and bring hope when the workers are still at work trying to make the last dollar they could. It isn't right, Madam Speaker.

If the NDP are unwilling to address the cost of electricity and natural gas to ratepayers and taxpayers, it's a small comfort that they are willing to address concerns surrounding water bills. The UCA, the Utilities Consumer Advocate, is a good tool to provide consumers with the information and tools that they need to understand and manage their electricity, gas, and water bills. After all, it was a Conservative government who brought it in in the first place because the private sector was being unfair and not being accountable.

Bill 14 is going to allow the UCA to provide public reports on power and natural gas utilities. These reports will tell of the utilities' customer service performance. I know these reports will get used and generate news stories and make consumers shop and switch if they are being treated unfairly by utilities. However, there is inherent hypocrisy. The NDP are talking about public reporting on utilities while they simultaneously try to play down and hide the negative impacts of their policies on the utility costs for average Albertans. The NDP have raised electricity and gas prices and dared to tell customers and consumers to go complain to the Utilities Consumer Advocate.

Now, the NDP are not known for getting consultation right with Bill 6 and all other bills. We hope the NDP government engaged in meaningful consultation with municipalities on this bill, Bill 14, as this is an area primarily of municipal responsibility.

Bill 14 only solves water billing disputes, not water rate disputes as those rates are set by municipalities. It costs money for water lines, treatment plants, and environmental monitoring, and if you're using more water than your neighbour, you'll get billed more. That's why it is so important to stop any leaks as soon as they are found because you'll be charged for the water that leaked. I understand that over the last period of time, the UCA received 179 calls with respect to water bills. With Bill 14 giving them a mandate to handle water bills and a water billing dispute in the city of Calgary, I expect the calls to rise. Extending the free mediation services provided by the Utilities Consumer Advocate to water bills is the issue I can support, Madam Speaker, but what I can't support is the NDP government raising electricity and natural gas prices with their carbon tax, coal phase-out, and forced renewable electricity programs.

Madam Speaker, my colleague from Grande Prairie-Wapiti talked about extending the scope of the UCA to handle the complaints on the carbon tax. I think that that government is open to considering that. I encourage them to consider it because it's the most important concern on the minds of everyday Albertans. Their costs have gone up. The NDP tries to, you know, say in the House every day that they're making life better, but if they look in the mirror, they will know that they are making life even harder, miserable, unaffordable. If they really want to know that, they should extend the scope of the UCA to cover the complaints on the carbon tax as well.

With that, thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. When we have an act that comes through the House, Bill 14, An Act to Empower Utility Consumers, I think that what's important to note here is that it's always good that there's a mechanism for people to be able to deal with monopolies, and that really is what a water commission is. You've got one line coming into your home. You have one supplier. Now, what happens here is that when there's a dispute with that supplier, we end up with a situation where they can just cut you off. Now, if this was something that wasn't a necessity of life, then that would be something that would be dealt with between the supplier and the consumer. In this case I see the wisdom in the government bringing forward a bill that says that we need to make sure there's a mechanism in place for us to be able to resolve these concerns before it gets to the point of cutting off that water.

Now, what I hear is that this is a good mechanism that deals with just the dispute between the two parties. What we have here is the fact that the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills has been very clear in saying that maybe, possibly, we need to also address the rates that they're using. This needs to be something that is maybe potentially an improvement going forward, and I think that's a reasonable improvement.

He also brought up the fact that carbon taxes are another thing that are a concern to a lot of Albertans. We heard that two-thirds of Albertans disagree with the carbon tax levy on their bill.

Mr. Gill: Tax.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you. It really is a tax. This tax is levied on top of their bill, that Albertans are now responsible for.

What we need to do is ensure that the consumer has the ability to be able to discuss these things if a government implements an unfair burden on those consumers, and I do see the carbon tax as an unfair burden. It's disappointing to hear and see the fact that we have a mechanism to deal with water but that we do not have a mechanism in here to deal with something where a government goes off the rails, like what my hon. colleague has been saying.

My question to the Member for Calgary-Foothills is: do you feel that this bill, while it's a start and we agree with it, could have been improved?

Mr. Panda: Absolutely. As legislators in Alberta our job is to critically evaluate every single bill that comes in front of us and see if it meets the expectation of the constituents that we represent. That's why I supported the point of view raised by the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti here. I do a lot of door-knocking in my riding, Calgary-Foothills, and sometimes I go into other areas, too, to talk to people. That's what they say. They say that our colleagues from the government side, the NDP MLAs, have good intentions, but they're not close to reality. Unless they go and consult Albertans on this very subject, they won't know. They think that just covering electricity and water will solve the problem and that Albertans don't have any other problems. They're all happy, in their mind, but they would realize how they feel about the carbon tax if they went and talked to their constituents.

That's why I think government should be open to an amendment to include the carbon tax also in the scope of this bill, and that's how we can serve our constituents better. I don't understand why they're hesitant to talk about this, because two-thirds of Albertans . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Good morning, Madam Speaker, and thank you. This is an interesting bill, and thank you to the government for bringing this forward. It's interesting. You can read in the newspaper, you can read all sorts of interesting things about what it's like for the average person who's having these issues and trying to get help and trying to have somebody mediate through a lot of these issues.

As I understand it, the bill will expand the current mandate of the Utilities Consumer Advocate to mediate disputes for Albertans who have concerns about their water bills, sewage, and drainage as well as expand the UCA's ability to report on customer service performance, a company's history of consumer complaints, investigations and penalties. Madam Speaker, this is a great idea. It certainly pushes accountability. For anybody who is in this, to bring up the point of my hon. member over here that was talking about the fact that there is a monopoly on these things, there is absolutely a need to make sure that there's transparency and oversight. We all know how stressful this can be – right? – so to make sure that we're advocating on behalf of Albertans when something goes wrong, especially in these particular situations, is a really, really good idea.

As we know, the Utilities Consumer Advocate was actually established in 2003 to act as a mediator between Albertans with concerns regarding electricity and natural gas bills and companies that provide energy. Madam Speaker, I can honestly say that I'm sure everybody in this Chamber at some point in their life has gotten that bill, that one bill that was way higher than expected, way higher than they budgeted for, that causes unbelievable stress.

I remember when my husband and I bought our first house in Chestermere. We'd actually bought it from my parents. My parents had built this beautiful atrium off the back, extremely pretty but very, very inefficient and poorly built. It had plants. They put a banana tree in there and a jasmine tree and all sorts of wonderful things. However, the bills to heat it and to take care of it were well beyond the scope of what we were able to afford at that time. We had a particularly bad winter, and I remember my husband and I getting that bill, and I almost fainted. Now, that wasn't the fault of anybody else other than us not realizing the amount of energy that it was going to take to run that particular greenhouse at that time. But being a young couple with young children at the time, unfortunately the bougainvillea and the jasmine and the banana tree met an early winter death because the power quickly went off in that wonderful little space until we were able to figure out what was going on in there.

I'm just sharing this story because I can share the stress with you, what that felt like, and what it took to be able to pay off that massive bill as well. I mean, you're looking at the bill. You know, you look at your bill, and you look at the number at the bottom of the page. I know, for us, our eyes bugged out. You start to run through your monthly expenses. You wonder: oh, my goodness, how are we possibly going to pay this?

Especially right now, Madam Speaker, we've got people in severe stress and distress. I can't imagine that there's a single person in this House that hasn't had discussions with folks about how hard it is right now. This is a good act in order to make sure that we're protecting people from at least some part of the stress or that at least they have somebody that they can talk to when that happens. I'm sure all of us can talk about a point in time when we didn't understand how that bill happened, and it's very, very difficult to get answers and very stressful and not always friendly on the other side of that phone call either.

You rack your brain and you desperately search for a reason for why your bill is so high. You know, did you turn the lights off? Did you have your heat turned up too high? Did you get a new appliance that is sucking more energy than you expected? Have your kids been playing with some button on your heating vents or the AC or whatever it is? Did you leave a window open? Or whatever the case may be. Sometimes you figure things out, but other times consumers are really, really left struggling and scrambling to figure out: why is the bill so much higher than you expected? You know, this is a very, very easy thing to relate to.

Now, obviously, there are many things that can lead to the discrepancies in the bills. When a consumer is faced with having to figure out which one of the multitude of factors might have caused the hike in the price, it's an incredibly, incredibly vulnerable feeling, Madam Speaker, when you're dealing with a large corporation. We know, at least in my office, that feeling of vulnerability. It's a feeling of helplessness, and you feel hopeless. Realistically, for the average Albertan, it's very complex to go through. It's very difficult to understand, especially with all the changes that are going on right now. We have a multitude of changes that are happening right now. Can you imagine, for the average Albertan, what it must be like looking at their bill right now to understand the energy market and the impacts of that on their bill and then to be able to fully advocate on behalf of themselves?

Having a Utilities Consumer Advocate I think will make a huge difference as someone, hopefully, that is in your corner so you don't feel like you're up against the odds with massive corporations. It's also another avenue when you're out of options. It's somebody that you can go and talk to.

Madam Speaker, there's one constituent in particular that comes to mind when I think about this advocate. We had gotten a call from a senior constituent in our riding who lives in a rural area and was away for a month. They're snowbirds – right? – so they fly out of the country for a little bit. When they returned, they had a $3,000 power bill. That's when your eyes bug out of your head, at $3,000. The family called the company, and they asked them to look at the bills for the last several years. When they looked at the average, it was about $150 a month on average, and he explained to the company that his bill was way off base. I mean, it was just astronomically expensive.

In fact, you know, he had his heat turned down to, like, 13 or 14 degrees the whole time he was gone, so it should have been less expensive than usual because he wasn't actually living in his house at the time. He was told by the company that they had no way of verifying the information and that there was nothing they could do. Can you imagine coming home to that bill? That would be horrible. Then, on top of that, for the power company, the ones that are supposed to have the expertise in doing this, not to be able to tell them what's going on – I can't begin to explain to you what it was like talking to this gentleman. I mean, his voice was cracking, and he didn't know how he was going to make this happen on his fixed income – I mean, it was obvious in his face: what was he going to do to pay this $3,000 bill? – and he also was facing the horrible, horrible fact that his power could be turned off. And with absolutely no explanation.

He felt that he had no way to prove that he had not used that amount of power. It was basically, Madam Speaker, his word against that of a giant company, who hold all the power – no pun intended – literally. He absolutely felt completely helpless in all of this, completely unable to find answers. He was being blamed for this and hadn't even been there. The heat had been turned down. It just didn't make any sense. The legislation will help to protect Alberta consumers not only on concerns about their power and natural gas bills but also on the water bills, and that's good.

I wanted to talk for a moment, too, about what the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti and the Member for Calgary-Foothills said about how this should extend to the carbon tax as well. If you think about how many issues we've had with distribution of the carbon tax rebate – folks whose spouses have passed away who have had to return carbon tax rebate cheques and it going out to people who don't need it, that aren't on fixed incomes – like, there have been a lot of issues with that. I imagine it's very difficult to do something like that, to get that program up and running, so it might be a worthwhile umbrella to put the carbon tax under there, too, because it is very complicated and some people don't understand why they're having that clawed back. I mean, we have that issue with seniors, where 30 per cent of their carbon tax was being clawed back in order to help pay for utilities in the facility that they're living in.

These are all things where I think advocacy would be very, very useful for the folks of this province. You know, there are a lot of things going on that are making it difficult for people in this province, but as we all know, people love this province. They love being here. They're resilient. If they're given the opportunity to be able to be resilient and to be able to figure things out, they're going to do that. So the government might want to be able to extend this advocacy to that, too, especially given the number of issues that the government has had with the distribution of the carbon tax and especially because the rebates will not be increasing along with the amount of the carbon tax increases. Anyway, it's something to think about.

But this poor gentleman doesn't have much of a choice right now, Madam Speaker, and it's for these exact situations that the UCA is so important. We know that in recent years the number of complaints that the UCA has received regarding water bills has increased dramatically, but their hands have been tied since water bills didn't fall within their mandate. So thank you for putting that in there.

I've also heard from some of the members of this Assembly that constituents have seen their water bills increase, and this is especially a problem as Albertans head into the summer season and the demands for water to water plants and grass and to fill recreational pools increase. But even aside from those kinds of things, there was a woman – it was in one of the newspapers, so I don't have it exactly. But I remember they were saying that she was charged $2,700 for her water bill – $2,700 – and had absolutely no way to be able to advocate on behalf of herself for this. There was another thing, where they were describing that she had to choose between I think it was, like, lessons or putting her daughter into dance classes.

Mr. Panda: Heat or eat.

Mrs. Aheer: Yeah. There's always that, too. Heat or eat.

But, I mean, she had to choose between paying her water bill and being able to do extracurricular activities with her daughter. I don't know about you, Madam Speaker, but I think that this is solvable. I hope that this advocate is able to bring some sense of closure for these folks and that they have somebody who has their back with respect to these things. Adding water bills to the mandate of the UCA will give Alberta consumers some recourse for these inexplicably higher bills.

I think equally important, Madam Speaker, and what I actually really, really like about this bill is the increased reporting measures. I think it's one thing to have an advocate; it's a whole other thing to be following up with them and making sure that they're actually doing their job appropriately. I think that's excellent, and those reporting measures will really give us a sense and an idea of what's happening with the people who work within this monopoly, as the hon. member said, to make sure that they're being held accountable for their work and that they have great people on the ground that can help folks at this very, very stressful time in their life.

It's also important to note that the UCA has no formal enforcement powers. The one thing that they can do, which is very useful, is that they can go public, and they can report on the providers. Their ability to be able to report on these providers and either their ability to handle those situations or their inability to handle those situations is a hugely significant tool in itself. Sometimes public shaming is the only way that you can get things done, especially with these particular situations, when we have people that have these massive bills. I think that's incredibly important, and it will push those companies that are not putting the interests of their consumers first to actually start doing so.

I don't want to make it sound like these companies are always these terrible people – they're not – but there are situations where these things happen, where it's maybe a customer service issue or it's a contractual issue. I'm not sure. I mean, every one is significantly different.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Listening to the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, you know, she has brought up some really good points. Specifically, I would have to say that whenever it comes to monopolies, we always need to be very cautious.

Now, as we've seen with this government – and we're seeing some municipalities follow suit – we're seeing a lot of creative taxes being added to bills and levies. This is something that I think – it doesn't just end with the carbon tax that we're seeing. We're seeing other things that are being put on the bill as a line item that more or less go into the general coffers of that utility commission or that municipality. You know, when I look at some of these line items, I ask myself: is that money doing what it was intended for or what the people think it's for? It's easy to add a 1 per cent or 2 per cent levy or, in the case of the carbon tax, a tax. What we see here are breakdowns with incredible amounts of detail, but we have no idea whether there's actual accountability to see that money actually go to where it was intended.

We also see that it's done on these utilities that we have no choice but to buy. That's the problem here. When you've got a monopoly, you can tack on whatever you want. Some of them are very well intended, but in the end, we end up with things like the – a good example is when the city of Edmonton added a fee to its new builds, that accumulated large amounts of money. Then we found out that that money was meant for helping the process of new builds, and the problem here is that that money ended up becoming a massive slush fund for the city of Edmonton. Clearly, that was not the intent of that money. Clearly, the auditor of the city of Edmonton pointed this out. Now what happens is that we have an embarrassment for one of our largest cities, our capital city. This is an example of what happens when we have fees that are added and nobody is watching them.

When we've got a carbon tax – and this is a good example – we have a massive green slush fund that has been put together by this government, that is not being used as they had initially laid it out. There's no accountability mechanism when it comes to the things that are put on our bills. I do believe that it would be an improvement to this bill should the government decide to move this forward. I'm sure they will; they brought the bill forward. Again, the opposition agrees that this is a very important bill to move forward so that we've got the mechanism in place.

But the question here to the member is: do you feel that the carbon tax is the only one that we should be focusing on? Should it be all the potential levies that we've got on those bills, and if so, what mechanisms do you think we should put in to protect the consumer?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I actually think it's a great idea any time that we can provide transparency. It might be complicated, but every time there's a line item that explains – because sometimes you have fees for service. Sometimes you have fees for a product. There are all sorts of fees, especially if there are utilities that are run through particular cities. Those will also have their fees running through their utility. There are all sorts of things. Presently we understand what that looks like. If it's not put onto these bills, we're not going to have any idea of what's happening. So the carbon tax would be a very, very good step in the right direction.

I think that to a large degree, to the point of the member, we don't actually understand what percentage that would be. So even if we understand that there's a carbon tax on that, we don't understand how that's being incorporated into that overall bill. By doing this and actually adding those pieces in, if you're a large company and you're providing water right now with very few incentives to actually do the right thing . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's an honour, as always, to rise in this House and speak to a bill, in this case Bill 14, the utilities statutes amendment act, which would expand the Utilities Consumer Advocate's ability to deal with water complaints in particular and extend their education and free mediation services to disputes that involve water bills.

As we've heard in the debate previously, this has been an issue. Certainly, in the city of Calgary in particular it's been especially acute. It's been a challenge and an issue for certain of my constituents, so I certainly welcome the opportunity for those constituents to have another avenue of recourse should future issues like this arise.

The question I have is that this is a bill that seems to be designed to elicit a great headline for the government, but I'm curious what the actual outcome will be for consumers. Beyond the urban areas like my constituency it does, of course, include farms and small businesses as well and does continue to respect municipal jurisdiction. I'm pleased to see that the government has consulted with AUMA and RMA as well. The reporting of performance: I'm sure the House knows, but it's never a downside to say again how much I love data and how much evidence is, I think, the backbone of good decision-making, so I'm pleased to see that it will publicly report on that performance. I think that's, obviously, an important thing to incorporate into everything government does. It's especially true here.

What I'm fascinated by, though, Madam Speaker, is that there doesn't seem to be any need for new resources and there doesn't seem to necessarily be a plan here to actually promote these new services. The services will be made available by the UCA now to consumers who have complaints about water bills, with some pretty remarkably quick turnaround times by the looks of it. The mediation looks like two weeks to mediate the complaint, which is the same as existing.

It makes me wonder if the services that we have been paying for to date have been underutilized. Perhaps they have, or perhaps this organization has found some efficiencies that allow them to expand their capacity without additional cost. If that is the case, I give them great kudos for doing so, and I would say that it's a small but important example of what is possible when one sets one's mind to finding ways of doing more with the same resources and could be used as a tremendous example for the rest of government. I would really encourage the government side to find other areas within the government where this same basic model applies and more can be done.

You know, it is interesting that members have brought up some of the challenges that have been faced in Calgary. It didn't seem to be a huge focus for the government in their initial comments on the bill, but I can tell you that it has been a big, big issue in Calgary. So I think that the changes will, at the end of the day, be welcome. It's certainly not going to cost us any more, and it's going to allow consumers another avenue.

With that, I think we will be supporting this bill – I just wanted to put those brief comments on the record – and I will move to adjourn debate on this bill, Madam Speaker.

Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 1 Energy Diversification Act

[Adjourned debate March 21: Mr. Westhead]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, did you wish to continue in your time? No?

Do any other members wish to speak to this bill? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 1. It's always a pleasure to rise in the Assembly and speak to such important pieces of legislation that the government is so aptly bringing before the Assembly.

You know, one of the challenges that we see with this particular government is that they seem to be putting together such a lengthy track record of causing economic pain and terror and then needing to come to the Assembly to try to fix some of the problems that they've created. Any time government is engaging in this sort of governance, we wind up with government programs that often fail; we wind up with government programs that sometimes create more harm than good. I think of another Bill 1 that was brought before the Assembly. I can't remember the name off the top of my head, but something about: We're Going to Create the Most Jobs that the World Has Ever Seen Act, or the jobs plan bill, or the most amazing Bill 1 that the Alberta Legislative Assembly has ever seen, An Act to Create Jobs, Jobs, Jobs.

Madam Speaker, I think that you'll recall that it was basically a bill about nothing, trying to solve a problem that the government had created. In fact, it was used more as a political tool for the government to talk about jobs and how they were going to create all these jobs, and it really came down to the fact that it was a lengthy job description for the Minister of Economic Development and Trade. I remember him standing in the House so triumphantly about how they were going to create all these jobs. The reality is that it created zero jobs. Well, maybe it created one job, and that was formalizing the job of the minister and giving him an actual job description.

We've seen this time and time again, where the government is responding to crises that they've created and then bringing forward legislation to try to correct some of the problems that they have started to make. In some respects that's exactly what we see with this Bill 1 as well. While, you know, I have spoken with a number of stakeholders and colleagues about this particular piece of legislation and while there are some good things in Bill 1, particularly in terms of its overall goal and that, we wouldn't be here if it wasn't for the government and their significant mismanagement of a wide variety of challenges that they've created.

While I've spoken with some stakeholders, and they have said that on balance they're not super opposed to this particular piece of legislation and that they, in fact, will be happy to apply to receive some benefit from this particular piece of legislation, what they would prefer even more than that is a strong and robust economy that didn't require government intervention or the overregulation that we see from this NDP government. And while they are going to quite likely engage in efforting to receive some of the revenue or the guarantees that come from Bill 1 because, at the end of the day, it has the ability to have a positive impact on their business and potentially – and I use this cautiously – have a positive impact on the industry, it also has the potential to be an absolute boondoggle as well.

While there is the potential that it will have a positive impact on the petrochemicals industry and in diversifying our energy industry and the economy as a whole, we've seen time and time and time again that where government efforts to intervene in the industry in the form of picking winners and losers, it is actually the taxpayer that loses. Now, I will provide some qualifying statements there because I understand that in Bill 1 there are more checks and balances than we've seen in the past with respect to trying to prevent those boondoggles in that some of the revenue doesn't actually get delivered until the project is – and these sorts of things make this piece of legislation appear to be better than some of the other times when the government has engaged in the economy.

But I think we can all agree – certainly, folks on this side of the House will agree with me – that government, generally speaking, has a terrible, terrible, terrible track record when it comes to intervening in the economy or providing subsidies or projects and oftentimes, Madam Speaker, under the guise of very noble ideals and ideas but delivered quite poorly. There are a lot of things that I believe could be done to help provide some additional assurances.

As well, I keep coming back time and time and time again to when I speak to the outstanding constituents of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills that they talk about the destruction and the damage that the government has imposed upon Albertans and that they are the leading challenge to Alberta's economic future. I just keep coming back to that, that if it wasn't for the government, we wouldn't be in such a terrible position that needed to then be corrected.

As I look at Bill 1, on balance I see that there are just so many things that, first of all, have not been done that should be done to ensure that this piece of legislation is as good as it can be. But at the end of the day, it's difficult to support a piece of legislation that wouldn't be needed if the government didn't create the problem in the first place, and then it's difficult to support such a piece of legislation when you consider all of the other external factors and the financial position of the province and all sorts of other really good concerns and challenges that I hear from outstanding constituents in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills with respect to the way that the government continues to govern.

I don't know for sure, you know, and I see no reason why we shouldn't have sent this particular bill to committee. Industry has been speaking to the government with respect to diversifying the economy; therefore, it makes some good sense that we would allow industry to speak to the Legislative Assembly, to advise all of us. It would provide the opportunity for the opposition to ask industry in public. It's one thing, Madam Speaker, for me to call up stakeholders or for stakeholders to approach me privately in my own office or in the constituency office or here in Edmonton when they come to express either some concern or pleasure with legislation that is just like this, but it is entirely another thing – entirely another thing – to allow the sunlight of public presence to shine on those sorts of meetings.

I know that I've heard from some of my colleagues. The independent Member for Calgary-Mountain View, the former leader of the Alberta Liberal Party, recently brought up some of the concerns on the government meeting with certain types of lobbyists under the guise of secrecy. If there's one thing that folks on this side of the House know, it is that this government has all sorts of a track record now on doing business in secret. We look at the number of times that this government has been under investigation by the Privacy Commissioner, whether it's on shredding documents, not allowing access to visitor logs, whether it's operating in voice mode, whether it's political interference in the Premier's office in the absolute highest form, whether it's interference and political engagement in the FOIP process, in the PPA – they're under investigation for their interactions in the power purchase agreements – just four or five or six significant issues where they have been proving to Albertans that they act in secrecy.

I think just yesterday at the PAC meeting we heard some very troubling reports out of the Energy ministry's office on this very topic of the government essentially acting in secrecy. We've heard the Deputy Premier at times openly talk about how this government operates in voice mode. That's exactly why these sorts of pieces of legislation need to go to committee, so that it isn't on voice mode and it isn't just members of the opposition of the government calling up industry stakeholders and speaking to them about the legislation and whether or not it's right or wrong. I don't understand why the government continues their very poor track record on consultation, their very poor track record on openness and transparency and continues to not allow these sorts of things to take place.

You know, Madam Speaker, there are a number of other areas with respect to this piece of legislation that I have significant reservations around. I know that my colleague the Member for Calgary-Foothills has risen in this place to talk about whether or not the government fully understands, and not necessarily specifically to Bill 1 but on a number of pieces of legislation. He's done a great job of holding this government to account with respect to: what are the actual impacts of Bill 1 going to be? This government likes to study everything under the sun except what the actual economic benefits or impacts of this legislation are.

A perfect example – and I've already alluded to it this morning – is that if the government had done an economic impact assessment on Bill 1, the bill that didn't create one job or do anything, they would have known in advance that they would have been embarrassed to introduce such a piece of legislation as they did. They could have saved themselves the heartache and the pain if they just had done an economic impact assessment on Bill 1 at that time. I believe that there have been zero actual economic impact assessments done with respect to the current Bill 1 we see before us, the Energy Diversification Act.

It's one thing to make yourself believe that your legislation is going to do what you hope it will do, and it is entirely another thing to go ahead and spend a brief amount of time to make sure that the results you hope to have happen will actually be the results that the legislation delivers. One of the ways – I'm not saying that it's the only way – that you can do that is to have an economic impact assessment. I just wonder if that was done. I'm certain that it hasn't been done, but from time to time I like to give the government the benefit of the doubt. I just wonder if, in fact, the government could save itself some hardship in the future by actually doing the important work that needs to be done now.

I was in the House just the other day when the Minister of Municipal Affairs rose in his place and talked about the impact that his father had had on his life. His father had taught him that if you're going to do something right, do it right the first time. I think that that is good advice that this government should heed. They have not done that on numerous occasions in just their short term in government, whether it's the elections financing act, that they've now brought back to the Assembly three, four times. I think this is the fifth time that we're going to see it, in the form of Bill 16, that I believe is currently on the Order Paper.

We've seen the government trying to do things that will diversify the economy.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you. You know, I've been listening very intently to my colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. I have to say that whenever you have a lot of questions about process, secrecy within the decision-making part of the process, the question is: is this the appropriate place to be putting taxpayers' money? Now, I have to say that when you hear the member speak of the Energy Diversification Act, he has some reasonable concerns, and the reason is that as we move forward and we're dealing with billions of dollars, it needs to be transparent. It needs to be something where we can look back and actually quantify and qualify the results. If we put large amounts of money in something, did we end up with the result that we were hoping for?

The question here that the hon. member brings forward is: did the government do an economic impact study? It's clear that whenever we've had decisions go through this House, we have asked that question repeatedly, and the answer always comes to a cold silence on the other side. It's because what happens here is: do we actually have a government that just wants to go out and pick winners and losers? Do we have a government that is looking out for the best interests of the economy? Just because we're spending money doesn't mean that we're ending up with the results we're hoping for. That's an important point to bring up.

We look at our health care system as a good example. We continue to spend more than any other province on our health care, and we continue to see this government pouring more and more money into health care, but we see our wait times going up. Clearly, what we're doing isn't working for Albertans. We put money into the system. These hard-working men and women, who are doctors, nurses, technicians: they're working hard. So what is it that is preventing Albertans from getting these services? That is the question, yet the only answer we receive from this government is to put more money into it.

That doesn't seem to be a solution that is working for Albertans, and to be honest with you, it is reckless when it comes to the taxpayer because what happens is that we get into a cycle, a never-ending cycle of levying taxes and adding more and more money to the system and achieving fewer and fewer results from that money. Now, I can't remember the exact definition for insanity, but if I remember correctly, it's doing the same thing repeatedly and expecting a different result.

Now, what we're looking at here is the important question to the member: do you feel that an economic impact study is a necessity whenever you're dealing with large-scale credit projects like this one here being announced by the government?

Mr. Cooper: Thank you for your thoughtful question. You know, I think, as I highlighted, the government likes to study anything and everything except for things when it comes to the economy.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise in the House this morning to speak to Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act. I listened intently to my colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills talk about some concerns and issues he may have.

The government's purpose behind this bill is to encourage investment in Alberta, specifically in the petrochemical industry. An important point to make and, I imagine, one of the reasons for the introduction of this legislation is the staggering amount of money that has been invested in other jurisdictions instead of Alberta in the same industry. We know now that most of this investment has been shifted to the United States' market, and part of the reason for this was the use of incentive programs and business-friendly tax policies in the United States that made them a very attractive place to invest. I'm not sure what the recent dollar amount is, but I'm thinking that billions of dollars have left this province in investment in this industry. Now, the bill does attempt to deal with some of this and some of the lack of competitiveness in Alberta.

I believe the government has good intentions behind this legislation. In fact, there are a few positives we can probably pull out of this bill. First off, the bill uses a mix of incentives to encourage the petrochemical industry to invest in long-term facilities, to grow here in Alberta. That sounds like a good plan. With investment drying up in Alberta, any incentive to get money flowing again through Alberta's economy can be seen as a good thing. Now, this could and would put Albertans back to work and would increase our tax revenue.

It is important to state that part of the reason there has been a lack of investment in Alberta's petrochemical industry is because of this government's inability to encourage investment. This, coupled with attractive incentives from other jurisdictions such as the United States, has led to Alberta becoming an undesirable place to invest. If we're able to lure some of this investment back to Canada, I think that would be an extremely desirable goal.

Further, some of the initiatives that this bill proposes could have the potential to free up pipeline space for our resources. This could be done through partial upgrading, which would open up pipeline capacity. This would have added, to the benefit of enabling more refineries, the ability to access Alberta oil and thus expanded our market. Now, with this government's inability, with Ottawa, of course, to get pipelines such as Kinder Morgan's Trans Mountain expansion built, any program that could increase pipeline capacity would be extremely beneficial to Albertans. And if more refineries are able to purchase our oil, that could also be beneficial to our economy, for our tax base, and to Albertans.

However, Madam Speaker, I have some concerns with Bill 1. Bill 1 allows for the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission to use any financial tools available, including loan guarantees and equity investments. I don't think that's a good deal for taxpayers. I think taxpayers get nervous when governments start to control these financial tools. What happens when a loan is defaulted on? What about if we invest in a company that goes bankrupt? Some of you might not remember, but NovAtel and the magnesium factory and a few other investments that governments in the past have invested in have not been beneficial for the taxpaying base here in Alberta. I'm not comfortable with giving Alberta public agencies too much power and too much financial ability.

Further to this, Bill 1 also gives power to the minister to create programs that support economic growth and energy diversification. This may include government grants or others, and I wouldn't trust the minister to have the power to create programs with taxpayers' dollars unilaterally. In other words, we, I believe, require a considerable amount of consultation and economic baseline adjustment to truly understand where those dollars should be invested.

We've seen how this government has used public dollars so far. I believe that we should not give them any more power to waste more money, chase good money after bad. We know that this bill would give the minister this power, but what programs would the minister create? We've yet to hear anything, nothing specific. How would this be rolled out? Again, no one is really sure how this will be rolled out. It's just too vague, and I still have many questions on exactly how or whom they consulted with regarding these programs that they would be potentially creating.

Now, my colleagues on this side of the House have argued unsuccessfully to refer the bill to committee. I'm getting used to going back and forth to the committee, by the way. In committee we could have heard expert opinions and hashed out the details and what the ramifications of this bill could be and would be. With billions of dollars that could be spent with the passing of this bill, is it not a bit irresponsible for the government to be pushing this through without proper study, economic consultation, maybe some experts and some expertise? Bill 1 is not a simple piece of legislation, and with the implications really unknown at this point, I and my colleagues on this side of the House believe that it needs more time for study and that henceforth we want to send it back to committee.

Madam Speaker, in my opinion, it's just a little too risky. As a general rule, the government and/or its agencies should not be using public money, at the best of times, to try and influence the market. Now we are far from the best of times, and this government wants to throw money into projects that may or may not succeed. With a $96 billion debt expected in the next decade, now is not the time to be throwing money away on projects at this government's discretion without consultation, without discussion, without an economic impact study, without people actually having a chance, an opportunity to deal with experts and expertise. I know that governments in the past, in this province and others, have considered situations like this, and they have not worked out well for the taxpayer.

I think everyone in this House would love to see the economy be diversified – we talk about diversification quite often, but what does that really mean? – however, we cannot do it at the expense of taxpayers. This government is already spending billions of dollars we just don't have. Let's not spend more on projects that we're not sure are really going to work out for the benefit of Albertans and for the benefit of taxpayers. The government's job is to set the market conditions that encourage investment.

If this current government really wanted to diversify the economy, there are many things they could do to increase investor confidence. Perhaps the government could look at repealing the job-killing carbon tax, which is absolutely driving away investment. Does the government think a $30-per-tonne carbon tax is actually encouraging investment? How about when the carbon tax rises to $50 a tonne? Will there be any investment left in our province? How about the increase in corporate taxes or the increase in regulations, red tape – red tape – bureaucracy? Has the government done anything that says that we are open for business? The answer, Madam Speaker, is no. This government has spent three years driving away investors and driving away jobs. Albertans are suffering for it.

After pushing their ideological agenda since they were elected, this government for some reason seems to be surprised that the economy is not rolling forward anymore. What's their solution? Let's spend taxpayers' money and drive us deeper in debt. This thinking, to me, makes no sense. With the current government policies, economic activity has decreased and tax revenue has gone down substantially. Tax revenue has gone substantially. So in order to try and get the economy going again, the government decides to spend money it just doesn't have. Again, I believe this is poor economic planning and, quite frankly, backward thinking.

There's a simple solution, Madam Speaker. The government needs to repeal the tax hikes, reduce regulations, and create the conditions so that businesses can succeed and for investment to thrive. We've got to put a sign on the border: we're open for business. This is far easier and far cheaper than pushing through Bill 1. Now, this would give investors the confidence that Alberta is actually open for business, which would increase economic activity, increase the tax base, and get Albertans back to work.

Madam Speaker, it's disappointing that the government is pushing through Bill 1 when there are far better solutions that could benefit Albertans, increase jobs, and, of course, increase our tax base. Now, unfortunately, I think Bill 1, as I said earlier, is a risky piece of legislation that spends additional taxpayer money without the confidence that it'll actually accomplish the outcomes the government is seeking. I think it would be prudent for us to go back, take this to committee, or at least have a chance to communicate with and involve experts and expertise and do an economic impact study and try and design legislation that will work for Albertans without burdening Albertans and putting us more in debt.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) any questions or comments? Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have to say that, again, listening to another one of my colleagues describe the state of our Alberta economy in detail, showing how we had a thriving economy – and, yes, oil did start to plummet. There's no doubt that oil is a factor in this slowdown in Alberta. Now, we have seen low oil prices before. As a matter of fact, from what I understand, during Premier Klein's time we actually saw oil plummet to about $10 a barrel, and we were still able to move forward and bring stability to our market and show the industry, the energy industry, that we are a good place to put their money.

Now, what's happened here is that we've seen ideology trump common sense. We've seen a government that said: we are going to fix the industry through taxes, and then we're going to pick winners and losers on who is going to get the money and go in that direction. Now, my colleague has been very clear in his speech, saying that it's that ideology that is preventing us from getting back on our feet. That seems to be a very reasonable statement. We see the damage this government has done when it comes to our energy industry, and it's not just the fact that we've done it with the taxes. We also had our Premier and ministers showing embarrassment for our industry.

Now, what happens here is that I am proud. I am proud of everything that has happened within my Bonnyville-Cold Lake constituency. I am proud of every single company. I am proud of the men and women that drive those companies. I am proud of our environmentally responsible approach to getting that oil out, and I am proud of the footprint, the ability to create smaller well sites to get that natural resource out. To the member: do you think that the government should be looking at repealing the carbon taxes, the emissions caps, and the other things that they have levied on top of our industry that more or less have chased away every big industrial player?

Thank you.

Mr. W. Anderson: Well, thank you to my hon. colleague for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. He raises some interesting points. Now, my feeling is that you can't tax your way to prosperity. It's a very difficult position to take. Moreover, reading through this legislation and with the lack of consultation, I think there's just a little too much risk involved. There's nothing specific in here that talks about or mentions how we are going to encourage investment. All it states here is that what we're going to be doing is potentially borrowing out more capital that we don't have to potentially provide an economic environment for investors to come back into Alberta and invest in our industry.

Now, if we wouldn't have chased them out in the first place – what makes us think that through taxation we're going to keep them here? The reality is that if you lower taxes and you create an economic environment that makes sense for people to invest and they can receive a good return on their investment for their shareholders and others, then they would really consider coming back and investing here. But all this really is is a tax play. It's taking our tax dollars and putting them back out in the public market and saying: here you go; come on; let's invest.

But the reality is that the investment capital that's going to be provided for these individuals is debted product. We're getting too deep in debt, and this province cannot afford to continue going down this road: a $96 billion debt over the next 10 years. It's $8 billion this year, and we're going to offer more of our tax debt dollars to a market that has run away because they increased the taxes – corporate taxes have gone down – and the carbon tax. All those things are not favourable for investors in the North American market to invest in this province. That's why they've moved billions of dollars into the U.S. market.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I see another Bill 1 coming from this government, a cornerstone bill. It is the government's flagship, if you will. They're saying that this is our most important piece of legislation, the one that we need to bring forward first and that we need to deal with quickly. Now, it's called the Energy Diversification Act.

I would say that you would find hardly any Albertans that would say that we don't want to get off the energy roller coaster. I would say that every Albertan is tired of the fact that when the oil prices go down, our royalties go down, and then in turn our spending either is reduced or we run deficits. With that in mind, this seems to be a bill that should be getting unanimous consent, you would think anyway. So what is it that we may have some concerns about when it comes to this?

Now, I'd like to go to a press release done by the Alberta government and released on March 8, 2018: Investing in a Diversified Energy Future. Underneath that it says:

New initiatives would create thousands of jobs, attract billions of dollars in private investment and secure Alberta's energy future through diversification and innovation, under legislation introduced today.

What happens here is that we have more or less taken money from Albertans and said: let's make sure that we go in a direction we want. Now, having said that, in fact, it sometimes can be reasoned that maybe taxpayer dollars can go down this road if you were to explore an economic impact study. What happens here is that you need to ensure that you end up with the result you were hoping for, and then if it doesn't work, you stop. But what happens is that when we have no way of quantifying the results, you end up putting more and more money in, that our hard-working families put into this wonderful province, to subsidize something that isn't doing what it was intended to.

A good example was when Justin Trudeau bailed out Bombardier. This seems to be a very clear example. Bombardier was in trouble. It went to the government for a bailout because it was not profitable. It was no longer viable to continue running in Quebec. I understand that there are thousands of jobs on the line. What happens is that instead of working with Bombardier and saying, "We cannot continue to bail you out," what they did was just gave them a lump sum of money. I would say that once that money runs out five years from now, we will see the same story happening on the front page of the newspapers again, where Bombardier is requiring a bailout in order to be able to sustain its operations.

Now, what happens is that instead of calling this what it is – it's a bailout. It's taxpayers' money. It's hard-working families that paid into that. That's hundreds of thousands of families paying into Bombardier so that we can support several thousand jobs. That seems problematic when they are not breaking the cycle, the cycle of continually asking for bailouts. Now, if Bombardier came to them and said, "You know what; we're in trouble; we need a little bit of help; we will get through this; we have a solution in place; we are going to ensure that a bailout is not going to be needed in the future,” that is something that we could look at with an economic impact study. We can look into it to see if their solution will work, and then we will come up with an answer that best reflects what the province feels.

In this specific case, what we had was a bailout that came to Bombardier, and then they fired a bunch of employees within Quebec, and then they gave their executives millions of dollars in bonuses. Does that not seem problematic to each and every one of you? That seems very problematic to me, and that seems to go against exactly what the intent of that money was. The money was to go and save Bombardier, to save those jobs, but in the end we saw the exact opposite. We saw abuse of the money.

Now, going back to this bill, what we’re seeing here is the government asking us to trust them that they are going to get this right without an economic impact study. Clearly, that is something that we as the opposition need to do our job on and say: “This is too general. We need specifics. We need to ensure that we end up with the result you’re trying to move forward.” But you know what we end up with? Silence. We end up with a government that says: “You know what? Trust us. We’re going in the right direction.”

Now, you’re saying that Bombardier isn’t even an Alberta company. Well, fine. You know what? I’ll give you an example that is in Alberta, an example that this government is responsible for. What happened is that we ended up with a government that forced a 3 per cent growth mandate on our Alberta heritage trust fund. They said: you have to invest in Alberta. What they did was that AIMCo, who is responsible, invested in a company called Calfrac. This company unilaterally got loans from the government and equity agreements and then moved their operations, a large part of it, to the United States. That’s shameful, and that is something this government is responsible for. It did not do an economic impact study. They didn’t ask Calfrac: what are you going to do? Yes, we saved jobs. We saved American jobs. That is what we did. You know what? That is sad.

We’ve got Bombardier. It’s a great big number, billions of dollars saving them, and we’ve got a smaller one, and, yes – you know what? – several million dollars in the grand scheme of things doesn’t make or break Alberta. But I will tell you that it is an example of when ideology gets in the way of common sense. What we need to do is that we need to ensure that we always are respecting the dollars that Albertans are putting forward. That’s why, when we have a bill that comes forward that says, “Let’s put money into diversifying the economy,” we need to be very cautious. This government has shown a repeated lack of foresight when it comes to managing the money that our citizens have given them the responsibility for.

Now, when we see the fact that we’re running almost a $9 billion deficit – and most of that is to keep the lights on – what we’re seeing, then, is the fact that we have a government that isn’t even trying to manage itself. It won’t even put forward a real, credible plan on balancing a budget, and that is troublesome.

You know what? As we continue to go down this road of issuing credits and loans and guarantees and all these wonderful, creative ways, what ends up happening is that when the money runs out, the system collapses. When the money runs out, the system collapses. This is what we see in green energy projects across the world. When governments stop subsidizing those green energy projects, we see the entire company collapse.

Now, I am convinced that Bombardier would collapse its entire Quebec operations the very minute the Quebec government and the federal government stop bailing them out. That clearly isn’t working right for Quebec. That is clearly not working right for the Canadian people.

When you bring in a bill, Bill 1, the cornerstone of your entire mandate, it’s important that you do a little bit more. Now, we had my hon. colleague speak before me here about how the government brought forward a plan for jobs, their Bill 1, the last Bill 1. It was more or less a job description for the Economic Development and Trade minister. If he needs a description for his job – you know what? – power to him. But I will tell you that when it comes to the fact that that minister was told that one of the programs that he was going to be bringing forward was going to fail and he refused to do an economic impact study on that, it’s shameful. You know what? In the end, it failed, and it was because what happens is that it was offering businesses money to hire employees when they had no profits. That is a strange way of putting forward a program.

Now, thankfully, the government has collapsed that program. I will tell you that it was poorly thought out. This is my concern here. We had one cornerstone bill before that clearly was a mockery to this government. Now we’ve got the government putting out a bill that says that we need to diversify our economy, which, I will reiterate, every Albertan agrees with. We should be looking for diversification, but when we do it, do it responsibly.

Another quote, and this is from our Energy minister.

We’re taking bold steps to help the energy industry innovate and diversify. These measures are not one-off fixes – they’re part of our made-in-Alberta plan for a more diversified and resilient economy that’s built to last – one where no Albertan is left behind.

That’s from that press release that I just referenced.

Let’s talk about this even further. We’re starting programs that aren’t just going to be affecting this year; they potentially could affect generations. That’s troublesome. It is troublesome that we have not done economic impact studies and that we are maybe putting forward programs that could affect generations to come because of the decisions you’re making today. If you’re looking at buying equity in companies, if you’re looking at loan guarantees, if you’re looking at creative ways of getting money to diversify our economy, putting our entire province at risk is not the way to do that.

Now, the government continues to say that they’re all about diversifying the economy. What we see is a tax levied against Alberta. We see families paying, we see seniors paying, and we see the results for companies. A good example is Lafarge Canada in my constituency. Two ready-mix cement plants, one in Bonnyville and one in Cold Lake, have said that they’re no longer economically viable within my constituency. That’s 15 families now that have no job, no source of income.

Now, let’s point to what potentially created this, the storm that created this. What we’ve got are oil companies that are saying that you’re too unstable. We’ve heard our leader, the opposition leader, Calgary-Lougheed, say that companies are now doing risk assessments and showing that dictatorships are less risky than Alberta to invest in right now. That means that the people – the residents, the families – of Bonnyville-Cold Lake no longer see the incredible growth that we had before because of the unstable nature of this government. The fact that they have brought about a situation where companies feel that we’re so risky here that they’re unwilling to put capital here is very, very sad.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Yeah. I’ll just be very brief. I just wanted to correct one thing. Calfrac actually does have a presence in Calgary and western Canada. They're on 4th Street and 8th Avenue. They're also in the United States, Russia, and Argentina or Brazil, I believe.

When the opposition speaks about the good old days and the Klein days with the oil prices, I would encourage them to look at where the royalties truly came from in those days. It wasn't as much from oil royalties as it was from natural gas, and that situation has changed.

The plan for EDAC: it was consulted on for over a year. The number of companies and people who were consulted is in there. It's available online. It's 167 pages. I guess my question to the hon. member or members is: have you actually read the plan? It gives how it's going to be done. We've accepted all the recommendations. We're acting on three of them right now. It's got who's on the committee, who was consulted, how long, what they heard, the plan for financing, and all that. Just read the plan, 167 pages. It's not that much, and it's all nicely outlined in 10 sections. Most of the answers are there for you.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you. It's always great to see the Minister of Energy up defending her government.

Now, let's talk about that advisory committee. They met four times. Wow.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Wrong.

Mr. Cyr: The minister is calling me out on that. Absolutely. It's in the report. Did you read it?

Yes, I actually did read the report. You know what? I can actually list the dates that they met: March 13 and 14, March 28 and 29, May 2, and June 12. That's in the report. What we've got here is a group that is highly partisan that met, and what we've got are real problems when it comes to the fact that this report does not seem to have a balanced approach.

Now, having said that, let's move on to Calfrac, which was her other concern. They moved the equipment from Alberta to the United States. Yes, they have a presence here still, but – you know what? – a box number is not a presence, in my opinion.

You know what? When we've got a government that is making decisions that, clearly, I question, clearly it shows that what we've got here is an ideology moving forward. You know, when we've got a committee that appears to have been formed when we actually have standing committees that are not being used in this House, that is completely insulting. We have the Resource Stewardship Committee, that should have been consulted on this specific piece of legislation before it went anywhere. But what we did was that we decided: why would we actually use MLAs for their function? Why would we actually bring all parties together to try to find a solution here?

What we found was a government that decided they already had a path. They already knew the direction that they were going to go. They decided to bring people together, and in the end they created a 167-page report which, I would say, has some good ideas. I am not discrediting the entire report. I am discrediting the fact that we could have done a better job of consulting. Now, they do have a large list of people that they did one-on-one meetings with. They have a large list of people that met, it appears, with government staff, not even with board members. I asked that question; there was no answer.

We have an advisory committee that doesn't seem to be functioning at its best capacity. We do have a Resource Stewardship Committee, that is tied up in an endless inability to be able to meet with stakeholders. My colleague from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills has repeatedly brought up that they haven't had somebody come before their committee for two years.

Mr. Hanson: Three years.

Mr. Cyr: For three years no stakeholders.

What other purpose can we have other than to go out and reach out to our stakeholders? But what we end up with are decisions made beforehand. We have committees tied up in things that are probably important in the function that they're doing, but we are looking for more.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to Bill 1? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to speak on this. It's interesting, for me anyway, when we talk about diversifying and growing support for our petrochemical sector. I think what we sometimes forget in our discussions: the province and the amazing folks that work here in this industry have already done that.

I mean, when I had the Energy portfolio, one of the most interesting things that I found out in meeting with people was the way that the industry is able to pull resources out of the ground, for lack of a better word. I remember having a meeting with some of the geoscientists and some of the geophysicists, and they were talking about how they were able to extract bubbles of oil and gas from underneath incredible structures under the ground. Like, they're able to extract tremendously difficult, wonderful resources from our ground that are not easy. It's not like you just drill straight in and pull it out. It is extremely difficult.

These folks are unbelievably innovative. That has come from a province that has had to be able to figure that out. They've had to be able to figure that out. I mean, if you think about SAGD or all of these other things that have come from this province and all of those amazing things, the technology and the work and the innovation that have come from the industry are really quite astonishing. I was really a novice in this industry and really wanted to learn. You know, you find out why people that are working in this industry love this industry so much and why we have a responsibility as legislators here to really be, like, the biggest cheerleaders of our industry that we can be.

I just want to be clear, though, that diversification has been going on for a long time, and some aspects of diversification have been going on just fine without government involvement, too. Now, I realize that other pieces have had to have government become involved in order to spur technology and all of those kinds of things. We've had some great experiences, but we've also had some really serious boondoggles in the past. That's what's always concerning about this kind of thing.

When we're talking about the original Bill 1 and diversification, why are we just talking about this now? The government has been talking about diversifying the energy sector from the moment they came in here like it had never been done before. Like I said, when I had the privilege of being in that portfolio, these were discussions that were happening then.

My questions mostly revolve around, I suppose, the discussion that all of these things look great on paper. They always do. Even when I was reading the bill initially, I thought: okay; there are some really, really good ideas in here. I think all of us can agree, like, that we can understand where the government is coming from. We get it. But if you're looking at the market and at making us a competitive jurisdiction, the only part that the government is focused on is subsidizing. They haven't focused on the fact that we have lower productivity due to winter, that we have regulatory complexities that delay labour regulations.

There are so many things, Madam Speaker, that could have been done with respect to red tape. This has been an issue for us from the beginning. Diversification: you have to have many, many regulations to oversee what's going on because there are a lot of new products that are coming on, there are a lot of new innovations, all those kinds of things. I get that. But if we actually want to be able to get our products to places, you have to be able to look at the regulations to see if that's actually part of the reason why the industry hasn't been successful in the first place. You don't just throw money at things.

Now, I appreciate that the Minister of Energy has had these meetings. I don't doubt that for one moment. The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake mentioned a few that are supposedly on the website and within this document, that is public. I don't dispute the fact that she's met with all of these other companies. I'm not saying that. But why, within this particular bill, are we not talking about regulatory issues and red tape? That's a major issue in this industry. We all know that.

Saskatchewan is managing to drill. They're in the ground, they're creating product, and it's not just because dollars are being thrown at them. It's because the regulatory burden is completely different there. It's two years less to get into the ground there than it is in this province. Madam Speaker, that's a huge differentiation in the ability for an organization to be able to get their product to market.

The other interesting thing, too, that I want to talk a little bit about is the carbon tax with respect to this. As I understand it, you know, because these are large emitters, they will not be involved in paying the carbon tax because they're already more efficient. Maybe the minister can correct me if I'm wrong about that. The specified gas emitters already function higher, which is why large corporations are able to stand up and go, "Yay; carbon tax," because they don't have to pay it, just regular, everyday Albertans have to. But what about transportation of these products, Madam Speaker? What about that? Are we transporting it through – well, some of it will probably go through a pipeline if we're lucky enough to get that built, but what about truck transportation, train transportation? Those aren't exempt from the carbon tax, I don't think.

On one hand, the government is going to give over hundreds of thousands of dollars, hundreds of millions of dollars, actually, to incentivize an industry, but then that industry is going to have to charge a carbon tax to the people at the other end that are supposedly buying these products, which makes them less able to compete. I understand when I read this bill that that was the whole point of this.

We were the most competitive jurisdiction, and then other jurisdictions were putting in incentives that eroded our ability to be competitive. So if I was to understand this correctly, Madam Speaker, the incentives that were put in by the government were to help to stimulate this industry, to be able to get them started, to get them going. But at the same time, on the other side, all of the other pieces of this: running the facilities, the transportation, and everything else that a carbon tax is on, which is everything. Where's the cost-benefit analysis showing us how that all lays out? First of all, this is being paid for by tax dollars, and then on top of that, we have a carbon tax that we're paying into this as well to subsidize the costs that are going to come from the regular, everyday operations of these particular groups. Where is that information?

You know, this is a huge amount of intervention. The whole point of this, as I understand it, is that the government wants to create diversification. If the market is there – and as we can see, the market seems to be available – why not look at making us the most competitive? There are places where taxes could be looked at to give incentive to these companies. I mean, on paper it looks great. It looks like PDP 1, based on their royalties and based on what would come back to Albertans within, I think – what is it? – a three-year period or something like that that we were looking at: the numbers look like they would add up.

But guess what, Madam Speaker? There's no cost-benefit analysis to hedge that, to give Albertans any sense of security that that will actually work out so that we can actually look at those numbers and see that it's been done in the past and it hasn't worked. Other governments have failed with this. It would be really, really good for this government to take a look at the failed policies of other governments or where this has worked. Policy matters. That's the thing. You know, we look at the legislation and the language and the attitude of a government that was so anti-resource for such a long time, so negative towards resources for such a long time, and now the government has to pass legislation to counter that. What if the government had from the very, very beginning promoted that diversity, looked at where the taxes could have been changed?

How much do each of these jobs actually cost? I mean, it's wonderful. Job creators are fantastic. That's what all of us want. But each of those jobs is now being supported by the taxpayer, and we don't even know what the cost-benefit analysis of that is for Albertans. What are they going to see back from this? I mean, I hope we see something.

It seems to me that this level of diversification, where we're talking about, as I understand it – and the minister can correct me if I'm wrong. But we're looking at, you know, the feedstock of propane, extending it to methane and ethane as well and using those feedstocks to be able to produce products that are needed elsewhere. Well, we're kind of landlocked here, Madam Speaker. It's not like we have a port that we can just use. We actually have to transport these items somewhere. So how are we getting it there? Trucks, trains, cars, some form of transportation that is pollution intensive. That would be my best guess.

I mean, the Kinder Morgan as it stands right now does push diesel to B.C., but aside from that, all of these other products, as I understand it, are going to have to use transportation to get there. Why is that not part of the discussion as to the overall cost of this, not only the physical cost of what it's costing the taxpayer but the environmental cost, the environmental footprint? That has to be part of the overall cost of this as I understand it. I mean, it is this government that agreed to upstream emissions being put on pipelines. They certainly didn't fight against it with the federal government. It's interesting, isn't it?

Why not look at repealing some of the harmful policies? Why not repeal the carbon tax? Repealing the carbon tax would automatically change the way that we are able to compete. Automatically. Every other jurisdiction that is oil intensive – Australia, France, United States – has repealed those because they don't work. Look at a different way, especially because these products are going to be using pollution-intensive mechanisms to get their product to market. There's no way to change that footprint, Madam Speaker, at least not at this point in time.

Then I'm not even clear about the legislation that is used to carry out this agenda. There's a ton of – I mean, the Minister of Energy has extraordinary powers on many, many, many, many levels. So when that lack of transparency is there – like, we're looking at the fact that we don't understand the cost benefit. We don't know how much this is going to cost Albertans down the line. It could end up being a really great project, but if it's a great project and it's everything that the government says that it's going to be, where's the analysis for those of us who are looking at this and going: hmm?

I mean, it's our job to give the government an opportunity to fix any of the mistakes that might be in there. Hopefully, this is helpful.

I just have to say this again. There is nothing – nothing – in this bill to address the regulatory roadblocks, Madam Speaker. This is one of the major issues. I mean, we've been talking about this forever. We have competition in other jurisdictions that are getting there faster than we can. I mean, the government is saying this, too. These are jobs that are on the line. Even to keep a base of people to work here when they can just cross the border to Saskatchewan or go to the United States – I mean, money is mobile. It certainly is, and the energy industry realizes that. To tell you the truth, I mean, you can throw as much money as you want at these projects, but at the end of the day, the company is only going to stay as long as they can see that there is profit for them and that they're able to continue on and that the jurisdiction they're working in is actually working along with them, not against them. The industry here certainly has not seen that.

Now that the government is finally jumping onboard, it's a little too late. Like I said, I believe that policy matters. We need a cost benefit, an economic plan, an understanding of how this is going to work out.

The other thing, too, is that the government has in here some ideas about guarantees – I'm not sure; maybe the minister can answer that for me – in the feedstock infrastructure program. She talks about industry constructing more straddle plants needed to capture more natural gas liquids required to feed the petrochemical industry in Alberta; namely, ethane, propane, methane. Evidently, there are more details coming on that. Can she answer what that actually means? Like, is the government not only going to help out with the process of creating plants to create these products but also with the capture of those products as well? So we're in at all ends of this.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I actually had the honour to work with the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View when she was the Energy critic and I was the economic development critic. She took a lot of interest in that file, meeting with so many stakeholders in and around Calgary. We went to those meetings together. I really appreciate her passion on this file. She's raised many good points on this Bill 1.

I know Chestermere has a similar demographic to my constituency of Calgary-Foothills. Many of the people work in the oil and gas sector in downtown Calgary, travelling every day from Chestermere. How do they feel about the overall economic environment? What do you hear from your constituents about the job opportunities and whether they're still gainfully employed? Are they able to find work in Calgary? Can you share your thoughts on that, please?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the thoughtful question. I am actually really thrilled to be able to talk about this. There are some people that are doing okay. I mean, part of it, too, is that because so many people have left the industry, there are jobs for those that have been able to stay around and been able to pick up some of those jobs. We have some people that are okay and are successful, but that's also because they've divested a lot of their interest to the United States. A lot of their capital, that was once invested here in drilling – and there's a ton of drilling out in Chestermere and around that area. A lot of those are on hold right now. They've taken their finances out of those, and they've put them into other countries, into Saskatchewan. So some of those folks are doing okay.

But weekly the hardest – and I don't think it's just this particular timing right now. I mean, there are ups and downs all the time, but particularly right now, because of the added burdens, there are just so many things. We have, you know, the economy, that is in rough shape. The government keeps saying that we're coming out of this recession. My goodness, I really, really hope that they are correct. The folks in Chestermere-Rocky View aren't seeing a lot of that right now. We have that. We have the carbon tax. We have small businesses that are impacted by minimum wage increases.

On top of that, we have a government that is bringing in bills at the last minute to try and create job opportunities. I'm sure that they will, but the thing that we all don't understand as taxpayers and ratepayers is: why are we consistently being put on the hook for something when the government is coming literally late to the game to bring this idea forward?

Then, on top of that, we have no changes in the regulatory burden. Let's say that somebody has some capital and wants to get involved in this; they can't. They're looking at, like, a four-year date out, Madam Speaker, if they're lucky enough to be able to put their cash there. Quite frankly, as an investor there's no way that I would look at that. I would absolutely be looking to other jurisdictions. I'd have to in order to be able to maintain my investments where I want to keep them, and I would certainly direct my friends, too. I'd love to be able to invest here, but I don't know how to do that when there's this much regulatory burden.

I just think that most of what we hear in ours over and over and over again is to please repeal the carbon tax. If that was able to happen, that competitive nature and the competitive ability for the province to be able to function would certainly increase. We've seen it in other jurisdictions. We've seen it in the United States, we've seen it in France, and we've seen it in Australia, all of these places. The government will keep trying to reinforce that somehow this helps the environment, but it doesn't. There are so many other ways that you can reinforce good behaviour for the environment.

On top of that, the government has a responsibility to really, really show Canadians, especially our friends out east – or especially their friends out east – and the world what an amazing, responsible development jurisdiction we are. What I find interesting is that ...

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to Bill 1? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I thought that you'd already spoken to this bill, hon. member.

Mrs. Pitt: Are you sure?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Mrs. Pitt: Can I move to adjourn debate?

The Deputy Speaker: No.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move to adjourn debate on this bill, please.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 2 Growth and Diversification Act

[Adjourned debate May 1: Mr. Mason]

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak to Bill 2? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to go to the throne speech and see a lot of the direction that the government is taking when it is putting forward a piece of legislation. Now, in the throne speech, if you go to page 6:

The first bill will focus on diversification within the energy sector. As we work to diversify the markets our energy resources can access via pipeline, we will also do more to add value to our resources right here at home. The second bill will focus on diversification across our economy. The third bill will focus on laying the groundwork for new renewable energy jobs and an electricity system with more stable prices.

That is underneath the heading Diversifying Our Economy. We've got Bill 1, which is on diversification, then we've got Bill 2, which is on diversification, and we've got Bill 3, which is on diversification. So it seems to follow the premise that the government has put forward.

Now, again, when we've got a government that is clearly looking at diversifying the economy, it is important that they understand that the opposition agrees that diversification is important. We do need to find ways to diversify because I don't believe that anybody likes to be on the oil roller coaster, but, again, we need to do it responsibly. We need economic impact studies. When we show that the government has repeatedly made ideological decisions over decisions that are clear and concise, when it comes to results, we get failure.

Now, to go back to the throne speech and what we've got here, I'd like to see what the government is trying to accomplish with Bill 2. The heading is Diversifying through Education, Training, and Business Development. What we've got here is that the government is saying that they want to train the workforce, and what they're looking to do is develop new diversified parts of Alberta that they can work in. Now, to continue quoting this:

While your government works to diversify our traditional strengths, we will also diversify by helping other sectors of our economy grow. The second bill your government will table before this Legislature will be the Growth and Diversification Act.

We do have that act before us.

This act will expand existing tax credits, introduce new tax credits, place major resources behind education and training, and help make postsecondary education more affordable.

Now, over the last weekend we had the honour of holding our founding meeting of the United Conservative Party, and we had a speaker, the past Premier of Saskatchewan, Mr. Brad Wall. He is a remarkable man who did remarkable things with that province. You know what? I had never seen a speech given by Mr. Wall, but I will tell you that no matter what party you're with – you probably may not agree with his speech if you are on the socialist side – it is an entertaining speech, and it is one that is very informative.

To get back to the point, one of his comments was that Alberta needs to thank Saskatchewan. I'm, like: well, okay; what is it that we need to thank them for? One of his points was that they helped to build Alberta, and I think there's some truth in that. I truly believe that what happened was that Saskatchewan was training their students, and those students were coming to Alberta and growing our economy. So when we've got Saskatchewan saying that they helped to build us, the question is: now that we're putting this forward – and let's say that these tax credits don't diversify the economy the way the government is hoping because they didn't do an economic impact study – are we going to be training 3,000 new Albertans to work outside of Alberta? I don't believe that's an unreasonable question, because in the end what we need to be looking at is the best value for taxpayer money.

In this case what we see is the government saying that they're going to diversify the economy. This is important here.

We will extend the capital investment and Alberta investor tax credits to help businesses grow and expand.

Now, what happens here is that these tax credits are normally applied against profits. Right now a lot of our businesses are having a hard time attaining a profitable balance sheet or income statement.

What happens here is that until they see a stable government come in, which means a government that is less likely to implement taxes every single – well, it seems like every month we've got some new tax. But what we've got here is a government that made it so hard for businesses to actually run here, let alone start here, that that's problematic. So now what we end up having to do is to create subsidies for them to survive, subsidies to grow. This is something new for Alberta. This is something that we have never had to do before because of the tax environment that we had before. What happens is that the more you take out of these corporations, the less likely they're going to put their capital here in Alberta. It seems that when this government moves, every time they decide to, it is our corporations, our business communities, our small businesses that seem to take the right hook.

Here we've got a bill that is using tax credits, more or less, on the justification of expanding the training of students within Alberta. It is admirable that we are trying to diversify, something that I mentioned right off the bat in my speech. I said that that is something that I think we should all be trying to attain, which is: let's try to get off this roller coaster.

Going back, why is it that we see no economic impact study? Can they show us that this is going to work? Do we have anything to show success? I would say that we will end up creating a whole lot of unemployed youth in Alberta. That is unfortunate. I believe – and somebody can correct me if I'm wrong – we're sitting at about 45 per cent unemployment for our youth right now. Is it that high? I thought that I heard that.

You know what? If we start to continue going down this road, we're not going to see the youth staying in our province, which is getting back to my main point that Saskatchewan, Ontario, B.C. are going to be thanking us for these trained youth.

Apparently, that was completely false, and I am going to clarify. There are 43,000, which is where I got that number from, unemployed youth, which is 13 per cent. So I apologize. I wasn't meaning to bring misinformation to the House. But we still have a very large youth population that is unemployed. So if we don't create these jobs, like the government is hoping, that is clearly problematic.

Moving on:

We will also support [jobs] in digital industries with a new digital industries tax credit.

So they're saying that they're trying to move into new industries. Now, it's my understanding that when it comes to a lot of these industries, they are highly subsidized. If that is the case, is it the intent of the government to start massively subsidizing it beyond the tax credits that they're already offering in order to attract them here? That is a question that I have.

This act will also create thousands of new spaces in our postsecondary institutions dedicated to technology, an investment that will enable more Albertans to get the education and training they need to get good jobs in this growing sector.

We're going to be training Albertans in a sector that needs to be developed en masse. If that tax credit doesn't work, these Albertans will have no choice but to move out of Alberta because of how specialized this training is. That is problematic.

At the same time we will continue to make postsecondary education costs here more competitive with costs elsewhere. The tuition freeze will be continued, saving students up to $1,500 on a four-year degree. To keep education affordable and to protect the gains we have made on behalf of students and families, any future tuition increase will be capped by law.

Now, we have heard from our universities that they adamantly disagree with the cap. You can see why. They need to be able to move according to what their needs are.

Now, as a past student I can tell you that I lived on that shoestring budget, like a lot of people that went through university. When it comes to every dollar that is in your pocket, that actually matters. I'll tell you that $1,500 over four years doesn't sound like much. You're looking at – what? – about $375 a year. That doesn't sound like a lot of money, but to me that was a large amount of money. That was an incredible amount of money. You start looking at the fact that I was eating a great big thing of spaghetti. That thing would last me for a week. It sure wasn't good at the end of the week, but – you know what? – you made it work. Your suppers, lunches, and breakfasts really depended on how much money was in your pocket, on how much you could budget.

Now, I have to say that when we start looking at this, it's very attractive to these youth that are looking to get out into the job market. They're saying: I need the money in my pocket. Fair enough. But if you end up getting out of school with no job waiting for you, that also is problematic. We always had a system where when youth got out of school, no matter what they were looking to do, there was a job waiting for them in Alberta. That has changed. That has dynamically changed.

We've got a system right now that more or less has been attacking our business community. A lot of these business leaders are saying: why would I keep capital here in Alberta? It's not being malicious. This is not businesses saying: I don't want to support Alberta. In the end, what happens is that a successful small-business community, a successful business community, means jobs. It is plain and simple. As we continue to levy more and more taxes against them, you're going to find that those jobs are not there for our students, which gets me back to Bill 2.

You're looking to diversify the economy. Why would anybody want to when it's too unstable? As we continue to put in more and more restrictive labour laws, as we continue to put in more and more red tape, as we continue to levy more and more taxes on them provincially, municipally, and federally, they're not going to see us as a jurisdiction that they want to place their business in. I can tell you that when it comes to business, we all need to be wary whenever we start attacking them.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for giving me the opportunity, and thank you to the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. The hon. member was speaking on Bill 2, Growth and Diversification Act. I understand that the intent of the government is to look for another way to demonstrate this government's commitment to diversify the economy. Again, this bill creates tech spaces in postsecondary institutions, creates a framework to invest in new scholarships and programs in tech, launches an interactive digital media tax credit, continues the Alberta investor tax credit and the capital investment tax credit, and installs the Minister of Transportation as a point person for the unmanned aerial systems sector.

The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, you know, spoke at length. I know it's unclear at this time, according to my understanding, if the companies who have received tax credits during the first incarnation of the program were actually in need of the tax credit support. Some would likely have been able to access investment capital through the traditional channel. I would ask the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake if he can further comment on that and share his experience and knowledge with us. Like, how does this work with the companies? Who can benefit from this program?

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. My colleague brings up some very important parts here. When we start picking winners and losers, the entire industry becomes the loser. That's the problem here. Let's say that there are, for argument's sake, 30 different businesses within that industry. We pick three of them, saying: you are going to get these credits. The other 27 suddenly are not competitive with those three different businesses. Clearly, that is a system that we need to be very cautious of. Now, that's where, if you were to do a tax credit, you would do it to an entire industry. In that way, they're all competing at the same level. But that is not what we have seen traditionally when it comes to this government.

Now, I would like to finish off with the throne speech, though, in this section.

To make education more accessible and affordable in northwest and central Alberta, colleges in Grande Prairie and Red Deer will begin their path to becoming degree-granting institutions.

They're acknowledging that we've got parts of Alberta – and I would argue that northeastern Alberta, actually, should have been highlighted. Actually, to be honest with you, northern Alberta should have been highlighted.

Now, what we've got here is a government that is more or less, it appears, giving up on the oil sector, giving up on the forestry sector, and they're saying that we need to retrain you for a different occupation. That is what it seems like. In the end, we're not proud of our energy industry when it comes to the fact that we continue to levy unbearable, incredibly insulting restrictions on this industry. We need to make sure that we're competitive with neighbouring jurisdictions, we need to make sure that we're competitive for the world, and we need to make sure that our oil gets to markets.

I know that the government is working very hard to get the Kinder Morgan pipeline, and it is important that they continue their advocacy. I support them and I hope they're successful in that because it does mean jobs for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. When they say that we're naysayers on the opposition side, that is categorically untrue. My constituency depends on that pipeline as much as this NDP government. That is just a fact.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. It's a pleasure to rise this morning and speak to Bill 2, the Growth and Diversification Act. I'd just like to thank my colleague from Bonnyville-Cold Lake for some of his remarks. I think that they are certainly well and truly on point.

As I spoke earlier today about Bill 1, Madam Speaker, you'll know that Bill 1 and Bill 2 certainly have some similarities with respect to providing tax credits and the like to certain sectors. I'd just like to highlight or reaffirm some of the comments from the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake with respect to some of the concerns around tax credits.

In particular, Bill 2 is a first-come, first-served tax credit, similar to the AITC credit that we saw in the past. About 5 per cent of that credit wasn't used in the last round of similar programming, so it begs the question: do we need another one if it wasn't fully used prior? Given that it is a first-come, first-served credit, you do run the risk of making one business more competitive than the other.

I think the highlight he used was that if there are 30 businesses and three of them get the credit and 27 don't, then you've essentially chosen winners over losers, whether or not it was just on a first-come, first-served basis or was hand-picked by the government. I know that they like to provide hand-picked handouts, certainly, to some of their close friends and allies with respect to funding from the carbon tax. In this case, when these things happen, you make one business more competitive than another, and the free market has significantly more difficulty adapting to these sorts of conditions. Any time you have the government engaging in the free market in a way that creates an unfair environment, that always will have negative impacts on that market.

You know, the role of the government should be essentially – I know that this side of the House and that side of the House have a very different view on this – getting out of the way of the job creators, getting out of the way of the market, getting out of the way of creating undue regulation whereas on that side of the House they want to do the opposite. They want to meddle in the market. They want to meddle in so many different – I mean, the carbon tax is a perfect example of this exact problem.

This government implemented the single largest tax increase in Alberta's history, that essentially removes $3 billion from the economy so that it can be redistributed by the government. This isn't equitable, it's not reasonable, and it doesn't create an environment of competition both here in the province as well as across North America. That's one of the big, big, big problems with the carbon tax, that it continues to put Albertans at a competitive disadvantage to our single largest competitors, whether it's the province of Saskatchewan, British Columbia, Manitoba, Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota. While British Columbia does have a carbon tax, it's certainly structured significantly differently than ours. In North Dakota, South Dakota, all of the northern states, and, in fact, clear around the world it's one of the reasons why we see many jurisdictions moving away from carbon taxes, because they don't have the same net positive effects both on the economy as well as on the environment.

We've heard at length from some of the government's very own experts talking about what the price of carbon actually needs to be to have the positive impacts that they say that their carbon tax is going to have with respect to actually reducing emissions. Some say $200 a tonne, some say $300 a tonne, but already at the current price it has major negative impacts on Albertans, in particular on low-income Albertans. In the future, as the government has now made a commitment to not having rebates and to rolling back the rebates, with all of the money moving to general revenue, what we see is a tax is a tax is a tax under the guise of having a positive environmental impact.

These are the fundamental differences between this side of the House and that side of the House. They believe that the government knows better than everybody else, and we believe that everybody else knows better than the government. We need to do things to eliminate government intrusion in the marketplace, we need to do things that eliminate government intrusion in people's lives, but we currently have a government that wants to do the exact opposite of that.

Bill 2 is an example of just that. Bill 2 is an example of where some businesses will receive a benefit and others won't. It's an example of the government engaging in the marketplace that is – and I will submit that it may be helpful, but the opposite of that can also be true. It may not be helpful and, in fact, may be damaging.

That's one of the reasons why I would like to move an amendment. I will provide the page the copies, and I will wait for your direction.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Notice of amendment. I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 2, Growth and Diversification Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 2, Growth and Diversification Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the government should pursue other measures to reduce the cost of doing business in the province, including the introduction of legislation to eliminate the carbon levy, which, if implemented, would make the measures proposed in the bill unnecessary.

You know, Madam Speaker, before us we have a very reasoned amendment. I think the case has been made very clearly this morning that the reason that we're here needing to implement these boutique tax credits, these programs of government intervention, in many respects lies at the feet of the fact that the government has such a disastrous record on the economy and on taxes. I think the carbon tax is a perfect example of that.

Now, I recognize – and this may be one of the very few times that you'll ever hear me say the words "carbon levy." I think I've got something in my throat here. The reality is that if the government was to actually take the time and introduce legislation to eliminate the carbon whatever you call it, the province would be much better off. As such, I am of the belief and I'm certain that many members on this side of the House are also of the belief that eliminating the carbon tax would in fact have the same sorts of impacts or better.

In fact, I spoke earlier in the House about an economic impact assessment, and I would be more than happy to have the government do one on this very task. Unfortunately, I as the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills didn't have the available resources to do a full, costed economic impact assessment, but I can assure you that the government has the ability to do so.

I also know that the outstanding people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, certainly the thousands that I have spoken with – I'll acknowledge that I haven't spoken to every single member of the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills – have spoken at length about their concerns about the cost of everything being increased by this government and, as such, would also agree with me that eliminating this tax, that has negative impacts all across the economy, would in fact have better results than simply introducing patchwork quilt type legislation that we see in the form of Bill 1 and Bill 2.

You know, this government has such a terrible record when it comes to increasing the costs to business and, as such, a negative impact on the economy, a negative impact on small-business owners, a negative impact on employees. I know many businesses in the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills that, because of a lot of the regulatory burden – the increase in costs, the minimum wage, the change in the labour legislation – no longer exist.

I think it's a very reasonable amendment. I think that the government would be well served. I can tell you that the popularity of the NDP would increase by significant, significant orders of magnitude in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills if you eliminated the carbon tax. Just to offer you a small piece of free political advice, if you're looking to make any inroads in the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, the number one thing you could do is to pass this amendment and take steps to eliminate the carbon tax because they would actually believe that you're finally listening to the people.

But I think the amendment is a good one, particularly because it speaks about: "pursue other measures to reduce the cost of doing business in the province." It's not just specific to eliminating the carbon tax, although that is clearly the best path forward for everyone, but it also encourages the government to pursue other measures to reduce the costs that our small businesses and our economy are facing because of this province – because virtually the only thing that we've seen from this government is an increase in costs, with the one small exception of a small reduction in the small-business tax rate, which, if you're following along at home, was actually a suggestion that the Official Opposition had made, that was initially rejected.

Mr. Cyr: Actually, they did it, but it was 3 per cent.

Mr. Cooper: Yeah. It was initially rejected, and then in the following session the government realized that this was a good idea and that, in fact, it would be a positive for small-business owners, so then it was implemented. [Mr. Cooper's speaking time expired] I sense there's a pattern.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Cyr: You know, I would like to thank the member from the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. You know what? I have to say that when you start looking at a reasoned amendment, that is the equivalency of saying: let's shut this bill down. Here's the reason why. When you look at this bill and you hear why the member feels that this is important, you start to see that we really need to review the direction we're going. Going back, we have several committees that could be tasked to come up with better ways of diversifying our economy.

Now to go back to his point, let's talk about the Calgary Chamber of commerce: "73% of businesses surveyed reported that their costs will increase due to the carbon [tax]." This is the Calgary Chamber report, December 14, 2017. This is not something that was long ago or outdated.

Let's read the reasoned amendment again.

Bill 2, Growth and Diversification Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the government should pursue other measures to reduce the cost of doing business in the province, including the introduction of legislation to eliminate the carbon levy, which, if implemented, [will] make the measures proposed in the bill unnecessary.

What it's saying is that we need to start taking the burden off the business community. When you start looking at any of the chambers across Alberta – I can't speak for them all, but I will say that when it comes to the chambers, many of them will agree that the carbon tax is a burden on their business.

Now, there are a few other quotes. The Canadian Taxpayers Federation: 55 per cent of Albertans received no rebate cheque, or it was less than they paid in carbon taxes.

Now, here's the thing. This is not just harming our business community; it is also harming the Albertan who spends money at these businesses. It reduces the amount of disposable income. Some of it is not disposable income; some of it is plainly for necessities. So as we start seeing the fact that these individuals or these Albertans, these families in Alberta have less money to spend, the businesses are also feeling the pressure on themselves. They have less revenue coming into these businesses, and they also have a collapse in the fact that they're no longer being profitable.

Now, to the member I have to say that this amendment should be moved forward. You started talking about your constituency and the fact that what we see here is a business community that has gone from shock to, I guess, a standstill, and now they're declining. Do you see that this is going to change in the immediate future?

Mr. Cooper: I mean, certainly, it's not going to change in the immediate future. You know, one thing that could help change it, of course, is repealing the carbon tax. We would see significant economic growth, and we would become again equally as competitive as our neighbours, lots of steps forward that would be very positive for Alberta. But the thing that's important about this is that it's not just business; it's also Albertans. This government is taking $3 billion out of the economy in the form of the carbon tax, and that is hurting families as well.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's truly a pleasure to rise and speak to the amendment. As we all know, Alberta's economic future is looking up, and it has been gaining speed over the past year, I'd say. But there's more work to be done in what we've gained and sustained and to continue on a path of economic diversification. Like I said, we've made great progress. We've introduced programs to stimulate growth across sectors, to support job creation, and we've opened doors to small business and new entrepreneurs to start and expand. We have to keep this recovery going for the long term and not return to the same boom-and-bust policies that put the security of Albertans at risk. That's what this bill supports. It supports businesses in Alberta to continue to grow, to continue to hire, to make sure that we're still on that trajectory.

I just want to remind everyone what this bill does. It's starting with the Alberta investor tax credit. The AITC encourages investors to provide entrepreneurs across sectors with greater access to the capital they need to innovate and expand by offering a 30 per cent tax credit for investments in small Alberta businesses. Bill 2 proposes to add a diversity and inclusion component to the AITC program for those investors who invest directly into companies where the majority of the board of directors as well as the CEO are members of an underrepresented group. Now, our government is encouraging companies to do more to ensure that inclusivity and diversity are part of their business models. That's part of this bill and why I don't understand why the opposition thinks that this isn't needed and that we should just get rid of some other issue instead of actually putting the details in this bill into power.

Now, businesses asked us for these things, have asked us to help them grow through tax credits like the capital investment tax credit, like the AITC; however, it seems the opposition is constantly attacking business. They don't want to help these businesses grow. They don't want to help these businesses with the tax credit that they've asked for. They've asked for these tax credits for decades, Madam Speaker – for decades – and the opposition, when they were in power, did nothing to help them in this respect. So I'm proud to be part of a government that's actually putting these measures into motion.

To remind everyone what the capital investment tax credit does, as with the AITC, the CITC has supported new jobs by fostering increased economic activity through the labour required to make these new investments in capital assets and through the positive impacts in related industries once these investments are up and running and turning a profit. The CITC offers Alberta companies a 10 per cent nonrefundable tax credit up to $5 million, encouraging timely capital investments that offer opportunities for economic growth.

Now, this program has already seen huge success, with 35 companies from across the province conditionally approved for a total of $62 million in credits through the first and second round of the CITC. I just don't understand why the opposition doesn't think this is a good idea, when businesses are using this to grow, to hire, and to expand.

The opposition seems to want to put the brakes on this right when the economy is growing. We're the fastest growing economy in this country, and the opposition just wants to put the brakes on, saying: "No. We need to stop now. We need to lower taxes for higher industry and get rid of these things through cuts." Cuts, cuts, cuts. That's all the opposition has. They don't want to help these businesses through tax incentives. They just want to cut taxes. That's how we got the boom-and-bust cycle that we've been living in for the past few decades, and that's why we have such large infrastructure deficits.

Now, just to remind the opposition, I just want to quote a few people who are very much in favour of this. Kevin Barrett, the executive director of studio operations at Serious Labs Inc., has said:

For Serious Labs, a groundbreaking virtual reality training company based in Edmonton, the new IDMTC would help ease the strain of our 100 per cent year-over-year staff growth rate. The demand for our industrial [VR] simulators is enormous, and we require more and more highly qualified and experienced developers to design and build them. Government assistance in helping us expand and retain our talent pool is greatly appreciated.

Once again, that's Kevin Barrett, the executive director of studio operations at Serious Labs.

From Heather Sworin, HR manager of CodeHatch Corp.:

We're happy to see the Alberta government taking a competitive approach to growing Alberta's video game development industry by coming alongside tax credit programs that have long been in place in other Canadian provinces. Edmonton is already on the development map, but it would be great to see that reputation grow much further, and to see the industry grow all over Alberta. We're excited to see how this program will help local studios to expand, both in size and ambition, as we bring our games to a global, highly competitive market.

Since the video game market is worldwide, the potential for growth is very high – we think the government will see a good return on its investment in Alberta video game developers through this tax credit program.

I just want to reiterate that I just don't understand. Maybe the opposition can explain to me why they don't think that these tax credits and this – sorry; I'm going to get the exact wording – interactive digital media tax credit are a good idea. They seem to want to be hurting businesses that have been asking us, once again, for decades to put these tax credits in place. The opposition continuously wants to put the brakes on the economy of Alberta. They want to stop business from growing in Alberta. They just want to go back to the old ideas that they've been on.

They think it's a laughing matter. I can't believe they're laughing. The Member for Calgary-Greenway is continuously laughing. Why is he laughing, Madam Speaker? He just thinks that growth in the economy is a laughing matter. It's not a laughing matter, sir. I don't know if you noticed from last time, but the Member for Calgary-Greenway was continuously talking when other people were talking in this Chamber. I'm sick and tired of his attitude to these businesses, who are just trying to grow.

They just want a little support from their government, and that side of the House could never give it to them. They just helped the oil and gas companies, which are beneficial for Alberta. We do have a lot in my riding. I would say that probably in every riding in Alberta we have people who are employed in the oil and gas sector, but that's not the only industry we can concentrate on. We have to help other sectors of the economy grow. We have to help them through tax incentives and tax credits like we're doing here.

That's why we are not going to accept this amendment, because it's putting the brakes on the economy. It's stopping business from continuing to grow. It's going to hurt these businesses that need these tax credits to continue to grow. That's why we will not be supporting this amendment; at least, I won't be. I would suggest to all members of this Chamber to not support this amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the passionate discussion. It's very nice to see the member stand up and discuss this, and I would love the opportunity to make a few remarks if that's okay and to potentially ask a question here.

I just wanted to mention that I've been living in my riding of Chestermere-Rocky View for 40 years. I've had, well, at least seven businesses over the course of that, three of which I still have with my husband, so I am this person. I am a small-business person. I represent an entire body of people who are small business in this province, and I can tell you – the member was mentioning something about the last 10 years. I'm part of the Chambers of Commerce. You know, the one thing that small businesses want more than anything is for the government to get out of the way so that they can be very, very, extremely positive in their ability to do their business.

Part of what small businesses actually talk about – I don't know. Maybe the member has some experience in small business and would like to share that back with me afterwards. That would be great. It would be a wonderful discussion. Having been a person who's been involved in small business since – I think I was probably 21 when I started my first business. I'm a musician by trade, so I started a small music school. My entire life – and I can only speak anecdotally for myself – has been about building that business, building relationships, being successful in that.

Anybody in the world who's a musician knows that it's not an easy job. The pay is not great, and you usually have to have four or five jobs to make it work out. But as a small-business person, as an entrepreneur, that is the energy, the driving force, Madam Speaker, behind the fabric of the people who have built this economy on small business long, long, long before this government was ever in power.

In fact, this jurisdiction of Alberta has brought more small business to the forefront than pretty much anywhere else in Canada. Do you want to know why? They had the ability to do that because people came here with big dreams. They came here with everything they had from different countries. They've immigrated. They've come from all over the place.

My father is a perfect example of a person who came to this country in 1963 with a few bucks in his pocket and big dreams. He absorbed the Canadian way of life, grew a business, and raised a family. My father-in-law, who came from extreme poverty in India, Madam Speaker, and was able to come here because his brother was here, raised a family of four, pulling logs at the mill for 32 years, raising his family, not asking for anything other than the fact that he could have this job and do this here and raise his family.

You know, the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood said that all we want to do is cut, cut, cut. Well, cutting taxes is actually a tax advantage, Madam Speaker. If you look at what the carbon tax is versus what these tax incentives were, the reason why we brought in this amendment was because cutting the carbon tax would significantly impact those of us who actually have small businesses, who are impacted daily in every single part of those businesses that we run. It impacts our ability to hire people, along with minimum wage increases. It impacts our ability to do our business in a way that we've done it before. It impacts absolutely every aspect of our lives.

I can speak for myself, Madam Speaker. My family are huge volunteers. We are huge volunteers. Because of our entrepreneurial spirit, our ability to be able to contribute back to our communities is because of the ability that we had to be in this province, not because the government put in some tax incentive. It's because the government gave us the best jurisdiction in the world to be able to build those businesses. People who build businesses will give back. Albertans give back more per capita than anywhere else in the world. We are a generous, giving, magnificent group of people.

Helping businesses get started is actually government being able to give an economic environment to be able to do that. It's an environment in which people will come and flock to this province because . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Oh, I get to speak again. I'm sure you're so excited. [interjection] I know. I'll just keep going.

I have to say – and I've said this before, Madam Speaker – that policy is the most important thing that happens in a government. You know, all governments have failed, and all governments have been successful. There are none of us who have the ability to stand up here and say that one way was perfect or anything like that. I couldn't agree more. I mean, we all have different reasons as to how we got involved in politics. There are a lot of different reasons for why we're here.

As a small-business person there were a lot of reasons for me to get involved. Largely in part, though, for me, it was making sure that we're not mortgaging our children's future. I'm certainly not here for me. A lot of the things that we will put in now won't impact specifically my business or the things that I do at this point, Madam Speaker, but it'll impact my children and certainly my grandchildren and those that I may never see. It's something where we have to be able to look at ourselves every single day and know that the policies that we put in place are the most important things that we will do, not for us – it's not for us right now – but for the future.

Certain things need to get passed right away because they are absolutely necessary. There are concerns that need to get pushed through right away. I get that. But in these particular things there are huge waves and ripple effects to the impacts of these things.

When we're talking about economic policy, the biggest thing that we can do for this province, the best thing that governments in the past have done, even with mistakes that have happened, is to make the environment here the best in the world to come and invest. That is something nobody else had. You hear us talk about the Alberta advantage and all that kind of stuff. That has always been one of those wonderful things.

I mean, I've had the privilege of travelling all over the world. When I've talked to people about coming to Canada and especially coming to Alberta – I mean, this is a cold place. It's not an easy – you talk to anybody who has emigrated here, you know, from other countries. We have a new family in Rocky View that came from the Caribbean islands. I'm telling you that this winter – oh, my goodness – just about sent them home. They were freezing. I mean, there weren't enough coats and leg warmers and mittens. It was just traumatic for them. What were we at, 176 days of winter or something? I can't remember what the number was. It was huge.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2.1) the House stands adjourned until 1:30 p.m.

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, May 9, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my very great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly today students from Viking school from the community of Viking. I had an opportunity to meet with them and their teachers, Mr. Brick and Mrs. Josephson. Amongst them I am sure that we have a future Don Mazankowski, Glen Sather, or one of the skating Sutters, because they all came from Viking. They, of course, are here to observe us in action, and they're particularly interested, as the students from Viking always are, in what happens over in this corner, the Valhalla section. I'd ask my colleagues in the House to join in giving them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-South West 53 students from Dr. Margaret-Ann Armour school. They're accompanied by Ms Karen Mosewich and Mrs. Markiana Dhadli and their chaperone, Mr. Joffe Hotz. I'd ask them to rise now and please accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any additional school groups?

Seeing and hearing none, the hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an absolute pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two amazing constituents of Strathcona-Sherwood Park, Valerie Hawrelak and Eva Shwetz. Valerie and Eva have a keen interest in politics and governance and are eager today to watch the House proceedings and especially question period. I thank them for their continued support and for their interest. I ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Tara Martin. Tara is a former work colleague of mine and an Edmonton entrepreneur who is doing some pretty remarkable work with gig work and the new workplace and really is somebody who is not only responding to but helping to shape the next economy in our province. It looks like Tara is standing there. I ask that you all give her the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions. The first is to rise in recognition of National Nursing Week. Alberta's nursing professionals bring compassion and expertise to the roles that are continuously evolving and changing over more than a hundred years here in Alberta. Our guests today are licensed practical nurses and members of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. I'm grateful for their tireless work to care for Albertans when they need it most, and when we chatted outside, I realized that some of these staff actually cared for my own grandmother just down the street at the Edmonton General. I ask that those present, including Mary, Dolly, Remy, Teresita, Derrek, Bree-Ann, Sharon, and Edward, please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Hoffman: The second introduction I have, Mr. Speaker, is that I'm privileged to introduce members of the Alberta and Northwest Territories division of the Multiple Sclerosis Society of Canada, who are seated in the members' gallery. They work to improve the quality of life for those living with multiple sclerosis through education, support, research, and public awareness. I commend this society for bringing together researchers, health professionals, and the MS community to find better ways to care for Albertans. I invite Dr. Garry Wheeler, Dr. Penny Smyth, Dr. Pamela Valentine, Patrycia Rzechowka, Candice Laws, and Julie Kelndorfer to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also have two introductions. It is my privilege to rise today to recognize National Nursing Week. Nurses are a critical part of our health care system, and we value the work that they do to provide the right care in the right place at the right time. I am so grateful for the work of the more than 40,000 registered nurses from across this province, who provide compassion and care to Albertans when they need it most. I am so glad that members were able to join us on Wear White Wednesday. I would now ask that Meagan LaRiviere from the College and Association of Registered Nurses and Jane Sustrik and Karen Craik from the United Nurses of Alberta please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Payne: I'm also honoured to introduce to you and through you guests from the Canadian Mental Health Association housing program, who are joining us today during Mental Health Week. The goal of the program is to provide quality, secure, and affordable housing for people with mental illnesses and/or low income. The CMHA is committed to building healthy, resilient communities by providing mental health services, educational resources, and crisis intervention. I thank them so very much for their partnership in making life better for Albertans. I ask Gail Haynes, Averie McNary, Richard Boulet, and Cheryl Williams to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other guests? The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to join in the recognition of National Nursing Week. I rise today to introduce to you and through you Dr. Harrison Applin, dean of health, Northern Lakes College, indigenous scholar, leadership studies, and Shelly Gladue, senior adviser, north zone, indigenous health program. Dr. Applin is a board member of the Canadian Indigenous Nurses Association. And representing Treaty 8 First Nations of Alberta, Health Director Sandra Lamouche, and Treaty 8 protocol office and Bigstone Cree Nation members Margo Auger and Cheryl Moberly. The CINA works with communities, health professionals, and government institutions on aboriginal health nursing issues and practices within the Canadian health system that address particular interest and concern in aboriginal communities. CINA's work benefits aboriginal peoples of Canada by improving their health and well-being physically, mentally, socially, and spiritually. I'd please ask all of my guests to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Expansion Opposition

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The latest study from the Fraser Institute indicates that a lack of pipeline capacity in Canada will cost our energy sector as much as $15.8 billion this year. That's .7 per cent of national GDP. Think about it for a minute. If our country had effective national and provincial leadership steering pipeline projects into reality, our national GDP would increase by almost a full percentage point without any government incentives or spending. In fact, invoking constitutional jurisdiction might just be enough to get hostile provincial governments out of the way.

Mr. Speaker, who are the people blocking this pipeline? Our government's fellow-travellers, their B.C. NDP colleagues, who I imagine would vigorously defend the pensions of B.C. government employees. But even the B.C. Investment Management Corporation, which manages pension funds for their public-sector workers, sees the importance of our energy industry and invests in companies like Enbridge, Pembina corporation, and, lo and behold, Kinder Morgan.

Not only is Horgan putting the livelihoods of Alberta and B.C. oil and gas workers at risk; Mr. Speaker, he is risking the financial futures of his own employees and an untold number of other public-sector employees across Canada, whose pension funds are invested in our humble energy industry, protecting the public sector with yet another dose of hypocrisy, indeed.

Finally, who is actually on the front lines protesting this pipeline? Free speech gives individuals the right and the ability to voice their opinion for or against Kinder Morgan within the confines of the law. However, just this week when Global B.C. tried to film the protest camp and the structure that is being built there as these individuals settle in for the long haul, the journalists and the crew were threatened with violence by the protestors and were told they could not film even though it was on public property.

Mr. Speaker, I'm hopeful that one day we will have a federal government with the courage to step in and press our vital energy interests as a national priority instead of sitting idly by and letting the hypocrites and violent foreign-funded protesters rule the day.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Progressivism and Conservatism

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As an MLA I get to hear a lot of debate with many terms in this House. Two of the most relevant are the terms "progressive" and "conservative." The definition of the word "progressive" includes the concept that the human condition as a whole can be improved, that progress, improvement, and social justice are possible for everyone. Our government talks about everyday Albertans and the need to focus on a bright future for everyone. It is the NDP government that is investing in health care, education, seniors' services, youth, children, families, socioeconomic growth, and environment. All in all the concept is that the next recovery is for everyone in every area of life.

The definition of the word "conservative" includes the concept that tradition and existing social and political hierarchies must be maintained, that social stability and continuity are critical. In more extreme, reactionary cases conservatives seek a return to the way things were. That's what the UCP wants, to return to the past, a society built on traditional power structures. Their inherent inequity is part of their platform.

Mr. Speaker, as we grow older, our needs change. The needs of each generation change due to continuous advancements in population and technology. The needs of each generation and life in each century are different. If we do not accept this reality, then we are doing injustice to Albertans by imposing traditional ways upon them that no longer serve them. Conservatives' refusal to support our government's policies to increase rights for the LGBTQ-plus community, provide equity for women in the workplace and the economy, and enhance the fairness of elections is nothing but injustice to Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, our province demands a progressive government that is striving to build a future for Albertans instead of turning back the clock, like the Conservatives want, to a time that no longer exists.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Carbon Levy

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday the Leader of the Opposition was in Ottawa standing up for Alberta's economy and against the carbon tax, a tax the NDP failed to mention in the election but imposed anyway, the largest tax increase in our province's history. On January 1 the NDP raised the carbon tax 50 per cent and have committed to raising it again a further 67 per cent. This is the frog in the pot, bit-by-bit increases to get Albertans used to paying more for everyday essentials.

The NDP will continue to raise this tax. Experts say that in order to reach Paris targets, the tax has to go up to $300 a tonne. Advocates of the carbon tax would rather see it increase than look for sensible, positive adaptations and changes to anthropogenic global warming and that would actually reduce greenhouse gases, not burden Alberta families. Instead, they will continue to increase the carbon tax, forcing Albertans to pay more to heat their homes in winter and drive to work.

The NDP sold the carbon tax as a social licence. They told Albertans that if they paid more for just about everything, we'd get pipelines built. How's that working out? Well, as we see in the news today, we're approaching Kinder Morgan's May 31 deadline and are nowhere near to getting Alberta resources to tidewater. The NDP's friends in British Columbia continue to firmly oppose any pipeline and will stop at nothing to get the Trans Mountain pipeline cancelled with their death-by-delay methods.

B.C. had the first carbon tax. Instead of causing people to alter their consumption behaviour and use less gasoline, sales have skyrocketed over 23 per cent, over a billion litres increase in demand from 2012 to 2016. No change of behaviour there, and no social licence. Not one activist or the Prime Minister has gone from no to yes on pipelines. And greenhouse gases? Hmm. No statistically measurable change except up with a hope of going down while protestors keep using hydrocarbon fuel to power their lives along with the rest of the world.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Multiple Sclerosis

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May is Multiple Sclerosis Awareness Month, a campaign to raise awareness as Canada has one of the highest rates of MS in the world; 1 in 340 Canadians are living with this disease. However, Canada has the best MS researchers in the world. MS is an autoimmune disease, which means the immune system, designed to protect against intruders such as viruses and bacteria, attacks tissues in the body. In the case of MS the tissue that is targeted is myelin. Without myelin the communication between nerve cells is disrupted, and the body does not receive the instructions necessary to perform basic functions like speaking, seeing, walking, and learning.

MS is the most common neurological disease affecting young adults in Canada. While it is the most diagnosed in young adults ages 15 to 40, we know that it also affects younger children and older adults. Women are three times more likely to be susceptible to MS.

Symptoms of MS depend on what part or parts of the central nervous system are affected. This can include the brain, spinal cord, or optic nerve. For this reason, symptoms of MS are unpredictable and vary greatly from person to person and can fluctuate within the same person from one time to the next. This can lead to impairments of vision, memory, balance, and mobility.

The cause of MS is still a mystery. However, thanks to the continued research by groups such as the MS Society of Canada, Alberta, and the MS Scientific Research Foundation, we are getting closer to exploring ways to repair the damage it causes and getting even closer to preventing MS from occurring.

The MS Society asks that we as Members of the Legislative Assembly work with them to both improve the lives of Albertans living with MS and raise awareness not only during the month of May but year-round.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Carbon Levy and Vulnerable Albertans

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The law of unintended consequences is a rule articulated by reputed economists, who point out that the actions of people and, especially, of government will often have effects that are unanticipated or unintended. It seems that this government simply does not consider this concept of unintended consequences.

The cost of energy is a shining example of how what was perceived to be in the public interest can go horribly wrong. Recently my constituency offices in Drumheller-Stettler have received several calls concerning the consequence of this government's energy policy, proving that, typically and unfortunately, unintended consequences often land at the feet of our most vulnerable and those least equipped to handle it. I'm getting calls from single mothers, the disabled, and seniors who are indicating that Alberta's legislators have failed when it comes to securing energy. It's disheartening, Mr. Speaker, to hear people on the phone saying that they have to decide: do I eat, or do I have electricity? Up till now this government has generally resorted to blaming the previous government or another level of government for problems. But doing such a thing will not keep anyone's lights on, heat a home, and it definitely will not feed anybody.

What would help these struggling Albertans is if this government cancelled its crippling carbon tax. That would keep hard-earned money in people's pockets and lessen the burden when it comes to utility costs. It is imperative that we all remember that real people suffer real consequences that affect their lives and their families, Mr. Speaker, regardless of whether the consequences were intended or otherwise. It matters very little to the senior sitting in the dark or a single mother wondering how she can possibly keep lights on and feed her children.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Provincial Election Third Anniversary

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three years ago our government came into power, and I'd like to mark that anniversary by looking at some of our achievements.

We banned corporate and union donations to keep big money out of politics.

We enhanced farm safety, protection, and compensation for farm workers. We did this while the opposition yelled and screamed that we were killing the family farm. The opposition was obviously wrong, and it's clear that they would have left paid workers vulnerable and unprotected. Zero farms have been killed in my constituency. In fact, profitability has gone up, and land values have increased.

We know that human-influenced climate change is real and instituted a carbon levy to help support environmental change, foster clean energy jobs, and create a made-in-Alberta solution. In my constituency alone three solar companies have hired 20-plus employees.

We took the advice of financial experts and invested in infrastructure projects while the economy was down. We've kept Albertans working and tackled the crumbling infrastructure that Conservatives left behind. We're building a hospital in Calgary, while the Conservatives blew one up. We will build 200 schools. While the Conservatives promised 400, they built two.

We are raising minimum wage to give the lowest paid people in Alberta a chance at dignity. This while the opposition incorrectly screams that it is killing the Alberta economy. It's obvious they would have kept Alberta's working poor even poorer.

We've created over 90,000 new jobs in the past year, most of them in the private sector.

We've expanded the sunshine list for public servants earning more than $125,000, and we're getting rid of the outrageous salaries and perks that ABC appointees enjoyed under the Conservatives.

Mr. Speaker, we've made progress on so many things that it would take three more years just to talk about it. Thank you.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Bill 12 and Federal Tanker Ban Legislation

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is only 22 days until the deadline for Kinder Morgan's decision on possible cancellation of the Trans Mountain pipeline, that they have cancelled. This government brought forward Bill 12, the turn-off-the-taps legislation, at our suggestion, supposedly to give us leverage in opposing British Columbia's stalling tactics. However, that bill is not moving forward. Given that there are only 22 days left, what is the government waiting for? Why aren't they expeditiously moving through this place their supposed keynote legislation to turn off the taps?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We certainly are keen to move a number of bills forward in this House, and we certainly welcome every member of this Legislature to debate all of those bills and support us in that. For example, when it comes to doing your job, we look forward this afternoon to debating, in Committee of the Whole, Bill 9. We certainly look forward to being able to do that. We welcome all members to participate in that, and we also welcome all members to participate in every piece of legislation. We have a number of bills that are important to the people of Alberta, including Bill 12, and we're proud to be able to move that forward soon.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, Bill 9 is something they didn't even think was important enough to mention in their throne speech, let alone their platform, but Bill 12 was billed as the keynote legislation of this session to turn off the taps, to get tough with the New Democrats in British Columbia for blocking our resources and attacking our vital economic interests. But now, nothing. In fact, they voted to adjourn debate on that critical, urgent legislation. Why? Why are they surrendering? Isn't this just a pattern? They surrendered to Trudeau's cancellation of Northern Gateway, his killing of Energy East. Aren't they now surrendering to the B.C. New Democrats on Trans Mountain?

Ms Hoffman: No, Mr. Speaker. Actually, nothing could be further from the truth. If we want to talk about surrendering to failure, I think the member opposite could look at his track record in Ottawa, with nearly a decade in cabinet and not getting a pipeline to tidewater. This side of the House has been working diligently. We got our approvals, we're making progress every day, and we won't back down until that pipeline is built. We're also going to deal with other important matters like women accessing abortion services or youth being protected from being outed. We're proud to protect people in this province and to get a pipeline built.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, last night the House of Commons passed Bill C-48 to impose a ban on tankers exporting Canadian oil from our northwest coast. That is now going to the Senate of Canada. Does the Alberta NDP government support or oppose Bill C-48, the Trudeau ban on the export of our oil from the northwest coast?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we're working diligently, day in and day out, to get our products to tidewater. Of course, getting our products there is part of the challenge. Of course, the other piece is making sure that we can get them to a world that is thirsty for Canadian energy products, Alberta energy products. We certainly are working to make sure that we get our product there and we get our product across those oceans to the other markets. I have to say that we won't take advice on how to get this pipeline built from the member opposite since he didn't actually manage to do it when he had a Conservative government here, he was in a Conservative government in Ottawa, and we didn't get it done. But you know what? This government is up to the task, and we will get the job done.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Federal Policies on Oil and Gas Transportation

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, it was not advice, nor was it an invitation for clichéd government talking points. It was a very simple question, which was not answered, so I will repeat it. Does this government support or oppose the federal Bill C-48 to impose a tanker ban on the export of Canadian oil? I will repeat: does this government support or oppose the federal Bill C-48 to ban Canadian oil tanker exports from the northwest coast?

Ms Hoffman: It's really sweet of the member opposite to ask the question slower the second time. Thanks for that. I really appreciate that tone that you're setting in this House.

We've been clear with Ottawa that our energy and environmental sectors can work together to promote economic development and don't need to sacrifice one to have the other. In fact, late last year Minister Garneau, at a press conference, referred to the concerns that we had with the federal tanker ban bill. Mr. Speaker, we've been very clear about our record on this issue and on all issues that are before this House. In this House we also debate bills that matter to women who are accessing health care services. We wish that the Official Opposition would do their job.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Kenney: Well, I think the minister said something about concern. Is that opposition or support for the bill, Mr. Speaker? Will the government join with the Official Opposition in calling on their federal Liberal allies to drop Bill C-48, the ban on the export of Canadian oil from our northwest coast? I repeat: will they join with us in calling on the federal government to stop the C-48 attack on our energy industry?

Ms Hoffman: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, we're happy to make our position triply, quadruply clear. We've told the federal government that there are better ways to protect the west coast, which has had tankers moving safely along it since the 1930s. We are fighting for this pipeline to tidewater. We're fighting for tankers.

It's nice that you want to debate federal legislation, but you're sitting in a provincial Legislature. There's a bill before this House that can stand up for women. You have an opportunity to tell us whether or not you're going to stand with women or hide in the bathroom with your colleagues. We'll see what happens in about an hour. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please. Order.

Mr. Kenney: I can only infer that this government doesn't really care about the imposition of this tanker traffic ban by their federal Liberal allies, yet another example of their total failure to stand up for Alberta's interests.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the federal government also said that they were going to bring forward legislation to clarify federal jurisdiction over the Trans Mountain pipeline. That was supposedly part of the co-ordinated strategy between our Premier and Prime Minister to ensure the construction of Trans Mountain. That bill hasn't come forward. Is there now a co-ordinated strategy to down tools and surrender to John Horgan on Trans Mountain?

Ms Hoffman: Of course not, Mr. Speaker.

If you want to talk about co-ordinated strategy, let's talk about the UCP's fiscal plan, that only benefits the incredibly wealthy.

You might think that's me talking. It's not, actually. It's a quote from U of C economist Lindsay Tedds, who said that it is very clear that everyday Albertans will get nothing from the economic policies that are being proposed by the members opposite, only $700 million in tax giveaways to the richest of Albertans. What would be the cost? Schools, hospitals, the economy, that we've worked so hard to diversify. You know what? Let's talk about the issues that matter to regular Albertans because this is one of them.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Public Purchase Proposal

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, what concerns us about the government's failure to move forward with their turn-off-the-taps legislation, their surrender to the federal Liberal shutdown of the northern coast, the Trudeau government deciding not to proceed with its pipeline legislation is that instead we're hearing a lot of talk about backroom deals to have taxpayers essentially buy the pipeline. Does the government not understand that any public financial participation in the pipeline should be a last resort and not a first resort and that we should first fight for the rule of law and the construction of that pipeline?

The Speaker: Hon. member, it was your third main. I apologize. I thought it was the second supplemental.

The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It sounds like the member is backtracking on the position he took very clearly about a month ago, when he said that he stood with this government to make sure that we would get our product to tidewater, even if that meant buying the pipeline. It sounds like he's backing down. Maybe it's because some of the folks he's friends with in Ottawa, where he likes to spend a lot of time, are telling him that that's problematic for their position. I guess we'll only find out one way. But you know what? The truth is that on this side of the House we will let nothing get in our way on pipeline access to the west coast. That's why we are moving on three fronts: the courts; public investment, if it comes to that; and, of course, making sure that we are moving forward with our legislation, Bill 12. We're very proud of that.

Mr. Kenney: They're not moving forward with the bill that they just adjourned.

Mr. Speaker, I said that we would be willing in principle to see financial participation as a last resort. As a last resort. The first resort was to fight back. The first resort was to ensure that the British Columbia government understands that there will be consequences. It appears that what we've got are backroom deals being made to force taxpayers to clean up the mess created by this provincial government and their close ally Justin Trudeau. How many billions of tax dollars are they prepared to risk in order to clean up their political mess?

Ms Hoffman: Well, here's the thing, Mr. Speaker. We hear a lot of stuff in this House that doesn't exactly ring of the truth. Here's one. This afternoon we will be debating Bill 12. It's in Committee of the Whole. We welcome the members opposite to help us get it moving forward in a very timely manner because this is a tool that it's important that Albertans have at their disposal. The Minister of Energy has made it very clear that nothing will stand in our way on getting this pipeline. We've been having meetings with folks from across this country and building national support around this national pipeline, that's in the national interest, and we look forward to seeing you move this forward with us in an expeditious fashion.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, this is becoming slightly comical. The Official Opposition voted to continue debating Bill 12 to get it done. It was the NDP that voted to adjourn debate on their own bill because they wanted to delay it. The question is: why? What are they cooking up behind closed doors in terms of risking tax dollars with their close ally Justin Trudeau? Why won't they stand up for Albertans against Justin Trudeau? Why won't they stand up against his tanker ban? Why won't they stand up against his failure to bring forward federal pipeline legislation? Why, instead, are they prepared to risk billions of dollars of taxpayers to bail them out of this political problem?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: We'll be debating that exact bill this afternoon, Mr. Speaker.

If you want to talk about why, why is it that the member opposite is committing to having a $700 million tax break for the richest 1 per cent, Mr. Speaker, with those cuts, of course, inevitably happening to schools and hospitals, to the health care providers that we count on to make sure that we have a healthier society tomorrow than the one we inherited yesterday? Our students and loved ones will suffer if that $700 million cut goes forward, as the Official Opposition is proposing. We saw it under 44 years of Tory rule. We actually stand up for Albertans on this side, and they only stand up for their rich friends and insiders.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Antiracism Strategy Development

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, the vast majority of Albertans are open and welcoming, but sadly our province is not immune from racism. Today we learned about a disturbing incident caught on video. This government says that they want to tackle racism, but their words are not backed up by action. Community grants under the human rights, education, and multiculturalism fund have been cut by the NDP to levels lower than 2013, and at the same time the Alberta Human Rights Commission reports that complaints are the highest they have seen in 15 years. To the Premier. Words are meaningless without action. Why have you cut the very programs intended to target racism?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very important question. Racist and bigoted comments have no place here. We know that Alberta is a positive and welcoming place, and so is the city of Lethbridge. I think any of us who saw the video today are absolutely shocked by what we saw displayed there. That's why we're not only working with the items that the member has referred to, but also we have a minister dedicated to ensuring that the work around antiracism moves forward in this province because we absolutely are better when we are loving and accepting of one another.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad the minister mentioned the work that the Minister of Education was tasked with nearly a year and a half ago. At the time, you got some good headlines, but since then we've heard absolutely nothing. Hundreds of Albertans participated in consultations in good faith in hopes that your government would take real action to address their concerns about increasing racism. The mandate letter to the minister says that his work was to be completed by last fall. Now, it's funny how priorities change when the story slips out of the headlines. Again to the Premier: will we see the report soon? Have you given up on it, or do you have the report and you've simply decided not to release it?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for that important question. Certainly, yes, we have been working on a paper and a strategy to fight racism, to foster inclusion, and promote acceptance in the province of Alberta, and we have been working hard on this issue for the last number of months. We will have a paper and the results of this very, very soon. In the meantime we've been working in Education to further this since the best way to fight ignorance is through education.

Mr. Clark: Well, Mr. Speaker, Albertans from diverse backgrounds face racism far too often. The incident we're learning about today is a particularly graphic example, but it is far from the only one. In April this year there was an anti-Muslim rally held in Calgary. This weekend we saw disturbing anti-indigenous sentiments loudly voiced at a political convention. People of colour face subtle and overt racism in their everyday lives. Premier, addressing racism in our society absolutely must be a priority. It's easier to write a letter to a minister, but it's much more difficult to take real action. I want to know exactly what this government plans to do to address racism and when we will see concrete results.

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member again for the question. We are in the final stages of consultation on the report that we promised, and we are working with the community. It's proving to be very complex work. When we intervene to stop racism, it is at any opportunity we have the chance. I'm very proud of the fact that Alberta Health Services worked very quickly around disciplinary measures when health care workers last year used racist terms. They fired those workers. We know that there are hundreds of Albertans that are working alongside to make sure that we get this right. We want to honour their report. It will be released very soon, but we want to make sure that we get it right.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

School Nutrition Programs

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Too many children go to school with empty stomachs, and we know that they cannot learn properly if they are hungry. That is why we introduced the important pilot school nutrition program in 2016. To the Minister of Education: are we looking to further expand this program through Budget 2018?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to say that, yes, in fact, we are intending to expand this program. We are now feeding more than 30,000 kids a day a daily nutritious snack or meal through Budget 2018, and we have been expanding it exponentially every step of the way. We know that it causes positive effects in regard to education and learning, and it also fosters a positive relationship between the school and the parents and the children. It's in all ways a very, very successful initiative.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: this program does not extend to all schools across the province, so how do you decide which schools will benefit from this program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. We've been working so that all school boards have access to this program, and they are making the choices based on socioeconomic factors and so forth to see where their areas of greatest need are. I was just amazed how school boards have taken to this and have expanded the program, have combined with charities and existing food programs to do truly, truly a wonderful job. This program is dependent on the budget that I brought forward, and I was really, really disappointed to see that the members of the opposite side refused to vote for this.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what kind of improved learning outcomes have we seen for these children?

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly, when kids are well fed, they are more confident as well. They're able to concentrate on their studies and learn about food as well, quite frankly. There's a component of curriculum built into the nutrition program so that they can set up a lifetime of good habits and positive returns. You know, it costs money to run this program, and I'd rather put that money into the nutrition program than into the pockets of the richest 1 per cent in our province.

Long-term and Continuing Care Beds

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, in the last election the NDP promised to create 2,000 public long-term care beds. Now, depending on the day, the Health minister says either that it's already been done or that they're well on their way. Now, most of the beds that have been created came about as a result of the 2014-15 ASLI program, that this minister first delayed and then proceeded with. To the minister: as I asked in estimates and have not yet received a response, what is the number of public long-term care beds that have been created since you took office, and where are they located?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think I recall the day where the member is referring to me potentially misspeaking, but I want to assure all Albertans that our commitment to build 2,000 long-term care and dementia spaces by 2019 is well under way and that we're on track to achieving that. In fact, since coming into government, we've approved approximately 3,002 – I guess that's not approximately if it's 3,002 – new long-term care and dementia spaces. That includes beds which will be completed beyond 2019. The three public builds are Calgary, the complex care there at Bridgeland; Norwood here in Edmonton; and Willow Square, of course, in Fort McMurray. Those will be completed after 2019, but they are well under way.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's take a look at those. Given that the vast majority of long-term care beds are a result of the government simply completing ASLI projects that were already planned or under way under the previous government and given that those beds were built at an average cost to the taxpayer of $65,000 per bed and that this government's three projects, that the Health minister just mentioned, will create 489 new beds at a projected cost of $587 million, or $1.2 million each, to the minister: why are the long-term care beds created by your government 18 times more expensive?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks. I believe I also committed to tabling the math because I think there's some creativity happening by members who keep asserting those numbers, so we are working to ensure that we do that. The former Conservative government made a lot of promises without actually budgeting or signing any contracts. When we came in as a government, we made sure that their empty promises became actual projects. We moved many of those beds up from being lower levels of care to being long-term care or dementia care beds, and many of them are open. For a fact, I toured St. Theresa – I always want to say Mother Teresa – in Calgary just on Friday, and the staff and the residents who are there are in very good hands, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that in this time of fiscal restraint strategic partnerships with nonprofit, faith-based, and private continuing care providers would maximize every taxpayer dollar and given that many Alberta communities are desperate for additional continuing care spaces but the government's current building projects have resulted in skyrocketing costs, to the Minister of Health: will the minister inform Albertans whether future projects will be built using a cost-effective partnership program like ASLI, or will she continue with the government-only projects, that are astronomically more expensive and provide a tiny fraction of the number of beds?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I'm proud of the fact that we're building almost 200 net new beds in Calgary for complex patients, who are some of the most challenging to care for. We're also building 350 at Norwood, which I think is important, 145 net new for, again, patients who are some of the most hard to care for and who regularly find that they aren't welcome in other facilities. It's important for us to build a variety of types of options for the people of this province because nobody should be living in a hospital bed or receiving care that is inappropriate. For folks who are receiving the most complex care, we need to make sure that they have those options as well. So I'm not going to apologize for building . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Calgary-West.

Drug Use and Treatment in Correctional Facilities

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Four people in custody died of suspected opioid overdoses in Alberta's correctional centres in the last few weeks. One of the young men had told a family member that he was staying clean by choice because he had access to a whole market of drugs in the Lethbridge Correctional Centre. Minister, what are you doing about this crisis? I'm asking specifically about the systemic problem of drugs in the correctional facilities.

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very important question. We know that drugs have been getting into corrections facilities since corrections facilities have existed. As a result of the new designer drugs coming onto the market and the new opioids coming onto the market, those have become much more dangerous not only for individuals in the facilities but for our staff working inside those facilities. We continue to implement a number of methods that I'm sure I'll get to talk about in subsequent answers, but one of our brand new initiatives is that body scanner that we implemented at the Edmonton Remand Centre. That is having some great results, and we're hoping to be able to expand that pilot project.

The Speaker: Thank you hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that drugs fuel crime and that rural Alberta is dealing with a crisis that is seeing repeat offenders prey upon those citizens and given that addictions counselling is critical to helping people become law-abiding members of our society, which in turn helps reduce crime, Minister, why does it appear not to be a priority of your government to ensure that people in custody receive addictions counselling in our correctional centres?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is absolutely a priority of our government to ensure that people throughout the province, whether they're in custody or out of custody, have access to those services. What that requires is that we fund the staff to assist with that, that we fund the medication to assist with that. That's why we're continuing to invest. We're continuing to invest not only in my department but in the Health department and throughout the province. It is absolutely critical that we invest in those things. It's critical that we target these long-term offenders and ensure that we are dealing with the issues that are causing them to offend, and that's exactly what this government is doing.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, thank you. As the minister previously mentioned, given that the ministry invested in body scanners last year to stem the flow of concealed drugs into the Edmonton Remand Centre and given that the minister said that her department would assess the scanner's effectiveness over the course of the year, which we all, of course, look forward to, Minister, what were the results of that study, and are you planning to expand the scanner program based upon them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, of course, we're still evaluating the information on that, but I would have to say that I don't want to speak too soon, but initial signs look incredibly positive. That scanner has been having some fantastic results. We're incredibly glad that we had the opportunity to partner with our staff to invest in that piece of equipment. We intend to hopefully move that forward very quickly. Of course, that requires that we fund those projects, and I hope that the opposition is interested in actually voting for funding those projects in the future.

Oil Sands Investments Provincial Debt

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, yet another job provider, Royal Dutch Shell, is divesting from Alberta oil sands. To the Premier. You promised that in exchange for your job-killing carbon tax, Alberta would receive social licence to build pipelines and attract investment. Shell leaving is yet another example of how your plan has failed. When will you scrap the carbon tax, reduce regulatory burden, and admit your alliance with Justin Trudeau is not in Alberta's best interests?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we agree with the opposition that failure is not an option on the Trans Mountain expansion, and that's why we've taken the actions that we have. Where we don't agree is that apparently the members opposite don't believe that kids deserve to be safe in their schools. They don't agree that women have reproductive rights. They don't agree that we need to support public education and support teachers. Where we disagree is in the servicing of extremist special-interest groups. On this side of the House we have the backs of ordinary Albertans. On that side of the House they've been hijacked by extremist special interests.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, I'm appalled that Alberta's youth unemployment rate is nearly 14 per cent, 30 per cent higher than in the rest of Canada. Given that Alberta youth are facing the additional burden of repaying this NDP interest on debt instead of saving for their own futures, to the minister: how do you expect Alberta's youth to repay your interest and your wild spending while your government policies are forcing companies like Shell, Statoil, and Marathon to flee the province, resulting in reduced opportunity for all Alberta youth?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Viking Air just announced 150 jobs in Calgary, with a chance of 900 more jobs in Calgary. Some of those youth will probably want to work in those areas, and they'll be hiring. Youth also have a chance at an education that's affordable in this province because of the work of this government. The youth in Alberta are also getting apprenticeships. STEP was restarted after that side cut it off. The summer temporary employment program is helping many youth get back into the workplace. Those are all great things we're doing on this side. That side doesn't really do any of that stuff.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that a recent U of C report indicates that young Albertans each face an additional tax of over $40,000 – that's on top of all this NDP's other income taxes – to repay this Finance minister's big-spending ways and given that if this interest burden was instead invested in an RSP, a 16-year-old Albertan would accumulate over $100,000 by retirement, to the minister: why do you and your NDP government insist on making young Albertans poorer?

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know what happens when you pay attention to youth and you pay attention to postsecondary? You get a lot of great results in the province. One of the things we're doing is paying attention to postsecondary institutions. We're making sure that they have the supports they need, and when we do that, we turn out great, educated young people. Instead of vilifying them, vilifying teachers, and vilifying the education industry, we pay attention to that. If you want more information on that, we'll be happy to give you information on what we're doing at postsecondary institutions and hope that you pay attention to the excellent work educators in this province are doing.

Mental Health Services for Children

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago I raised in the House the issue of services for the mental health of Alberta's children and was only met with talking points from this government. Our children need and deserve so much better. Recently released data from the last year showed that the number of children offered mental health treatment within 30 days had fallen almost 10 per cent. Thirty days for families desperately waiting for help. To the minister: if it was your child in need of mental health supports, would you want to be part of the over one-quarter of Albertans that have to wait?

Ms Hoffman: Of course not, Mr. Speaker. There is no Alberta family who, when they have somebody they care about, wants to see them do without. They want to make sure that they get the care they need. That's why this government brought forward a budget that increased investment. Even though last year we increased investment, we know that demand went up even more than the increase. That's why we increased it again. That's why earlier this week I was at Jasper Place high school talking about the STAR program, something where we are adding to the grant that helped fund that, a 50 per cent increase in funding so that thousands of children across our province can have increased access to excellent mental health support in schools.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, the government can claim all they want that they're addressing the issues, but the numbers don't lie. Given that in the past year the numbers of children actually receiving mental health treatment within 30 days have dropped from 73 per cent to 67 per cent and given that those are the facts, why is it that this government's investments in mental health are not being reflected in outcomes for vulnerable children, and when will they actually get control of these plunging statistics that have real-world impacts on Alberta's families?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm so happy to be able to talk about mental health during Mental Health Week. You know, it's hard to know where to start with this one, but I think an important piece is that what we're seeing is an increase in demand. Due to the work that our government and community health partners are doing to reduce stigma, to make it okay to talk about mental health and mental health challenges, we're seeing more and more Albertans coming forward. That's a good thing. People were struggling all along, and now they're reaching out and getting connected with the supports they need. In Edmonton alone we've increased the number of spots for youth and children accessing services . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, in Children's Services estimates my colleague discovered that two key strategies from last year's business plan relating to children's mental health were not even transferred into this year's plan. Given that these issues were not addressed in the last year and given that the government still has not supported and implemented the recommendations from the mental health review and given that, when asked, the Children's Services minister claimed that this was Health's problem, when will the government step up, stop passing the buck, take some responsibility, and ensure that our children's mental health is a priority?

Ms Payne: Mr. Speaker, we have ensured that children's mental health is a priority. We did that by increasing investment year over year in the term of our government into mental health supports for Albertans across the province, from the northernmost tips to the southernmost tips. We are working with community partners, with community agencies. We are recruiting child psychiatrists across the province. There is a shortage in Canada, and to address that, we are also looking at how we can support families while they're waiting to access other supports. We're also doing work to build resilient communities. We know that mental health exists on a spectrum, and we have Albertans' backs. The members opposite should have voted in favour of the budget if they . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Drinking Water Quality in Indigenous Communities

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After years of setbacks and attempts to ignore the problem by the previous Conservative government, our NDP government has made significant strides in renewing the relationship between government and indigenous communities in Alberta. To the Minister of Indigenous Relations: what is the Alberta government doing to ensure that First Nations reserves have access to clean water?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud of what our government has done to renew the relationship with indigenous people of this province, who were clearly long neglected under the previous government. We're working with First Nations, the federal government, municipal water commissions, and Alberta's Ministry of Transportation on the First Nations regional drinking water tie-in project, which will help determine how we can provide access to clean and safe drinking water on First Nations reserves. I'm proud to say that we are the first province in the country who has put our provincial money forward to do this.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Conditions on reserves have traditionally been the responsibility of the federal government. It has pained me over these years to know that our former Conservative government refused to act on this file. Why has Alberta's provincial government now finally chosen to act in this case in response to this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member mentioned, water on reserves is the federal government's responsibility. However, our government has chosen to support that responsibility by working with our partners to expand water infrastructure to the reserve boundaries – our investment in water to reserves, our leveraging federal dollars to ensure that First Nations in Alberta have clean, reliable drinking water – and the side benefit is that many other communities near reserves are also getting connected, something, again, that was neglected by the previous government.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. This problem certainly is not going to be solved overnight. I'm just wondering if the minister could give us a progress report. What number of indigenous families have been served with clean drinking water as a result of your initiatives?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The First Nations regional tie-in project is currently considering about a dozen projects throughout the province. Our government is funding the construction up to the reserve boundaries of the Alexis Nakota Sioux, just west of the city of Edmonton, and the Paul band First Nation, again west of the city of Edmonton, both of which will be completed in this year. Two other projects are in the design phase, four are in the feasibility phase, and others are in the engagement phase. These are exciting projects. They have a high degree of support by the indigenous community. We have brought in the support of the federal government in a way that has never been done before, and we are doing something that should have been long done.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Oil and Gas Rail Transportation

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Energy minister said that her new crude-by-rail working group is looking for solutions to address bottlenecks in the rail system. Her focus is on moving oil. Albertans are aware that we need more access to foreign markets, not just the heavily discounted U.S. market. To the Energy minister: we all want Trans Mountain to succeed, but has the minister given any consideration to expanding market access with a rail line from northern Alberta to Valdez, Alaska?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to my colleague for that important question. You know, we're absolutely at a critical point not only in pipelines but in rail capacity, and that is exactly why we announced last week our crude-by-rail panel, who's going to meet with stakeholders to look at options. We do absolutely need market access, which is truck, rail, and pipelines to the Pacific coast to get our products to market. The company he mentioned, G7G, is one of them that we're talking to, who have an exciting project going north.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the proposed G7G rail line would have the flexibility to move bitumen, grain, forestry products, and many more commodities to ports that are significantly closer to China and given that the company does not need government funding – it is just looking for support – to the economic development minister: since meeting with G7G in February, what steps have you taken to support this project?

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, one of the great things about our economic development minister is that no one works harder. He is constantly on a plane, having those conversations, travelling around, making sure that when we talk about innovation and we talk about diversifying our economy, we are walking that talk. I think that's really important. Certainly, when it comes to information like that, we're happy to get that over to your office. I know we have open lines of communication. We're happy to continue that.

Speaking of walking the talk, Mr. Speaker, certainly there's an opportunity for the opposition to do that as well. If they want to ask questions . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the G7G railway is a green project because the locomotives would be electrically driven, with power produced by wind turbines, and given that our northern neighbours support this project because of the economic development potential it offers them as well as the indigenous partnerships involved, to the Energy minister: since rail lines seem to check off all your boxes, will you commit to invite G7G to your next working group meeting?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yeah, I can further comment for the Minister of Economic Development and Trade. He and I have both met with the proponents, and he reports that he feels they're doing good work in demonstrating that they have the ability to raise the capital. Absolutely, I will contact the chair of that panel and make sure that they have the ability to meet with the chair and, hopefully, the whole panel, because that's an important part of our market access strategy.

Health Services Employees

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, I have previously asked the Health minister about the duplication of bureaucracy in Alberta Health Services and the Department of Health. The Auditor General pointed out that there's parallel management at the highest levels. Everything from mental health to continuing care to infection prevention have mirrored management structures within the Ministry of Health. Has this government done anything to evaluate and streamline these officials to increase efficiency for patients?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We certainly do look for opportunities to protect the front lines and increase investment there at any opportunity. Of course, the responsible thing to do is to always look at whether there are efficiencies and opportunities for management or duplication of structures.

Mr. Speaker, I'm really proud of the fact that we've been able to hold our health spending increase to 3 per cent while increasing front-line services at a greater level than that. That's because we have a government that's working to invest and reduce any type of duplication. Every time a position is vacated in management, we certainly look to see if that's absolutely required, but we're not going to get rid of the HR staff. They are important as well.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, the Health minister informed us previously that AHS has hired 10,000 employees over the last several years, going from 90,000 to 100,000 staff, making it the fourth-largest corporate entity in the nation. I asked you last year how many of those are front-line workers, to which you replied: 1,500. I reminded you of this question a month ago. Have you since done some research to identify the remaining 8,500 positions that AHS grew in the last seven years, and if they were not front line, why were they more important than front-line services?

Ms Hoffman: There's nothing more important than front-line services. It's also important that front-line services get paid, that they have staff that make sure that their rights are being protected, in terms of providing support staff to those workers as well. I appreciate that the member opposite wants to imply that we could get rid of everyone who works in any office, but the truth is that those people are important, too. Many of them provide important front-line services. Very recently I was at 108th Street, an AHS tower that has tons of mental health professionals that see staff right in that building. Yes, it's an office tower for AHS, but they're also front-line workers, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud of the work that they do on 108th Street, in every hospital, and in every clinic across our province.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, according to the AHS website they now boast of having over 108,000 employees. I'm going to give her a pass on answering about the previous 10,000 hires, but can she explain the 8,000 that have been hired in the last couple of years? I ask this, sir, because Calgarians are still waiting 36 weeks for hip surgery, Albertans are still waiting 46 weeks for cataract surgery, 73 out of 100 children can't access mental health treatment in Edmonton within 30 days, and I have seen no additional staff in any emergency room or operating room.

Ms Hoffman: Well, I don't know where you've been touring, hon. member, but where I've been touring, we're seeing increases. We're seeing important investments to make sure – for example, the EMS budget that this government brought forward has an increase to EMS front-line workers. What did the members opposite do? They voted against that very budget. Why is that, Mr. Speaker? They are calling on us every day to make deep ideological cuts. They did it again at their convention. They want to give $700 million in tax giveaways to the top 1 per cent. We know what that would do to emergency room wait times. We are working to make sure that we're increasing staff, we're increasing mental health supports, and we're increasing front-line service providers because that supports Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Victims of Crime

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The recent case of a 28-year-old indigenous woman who was brutally attacked by serial violent offender Lance Blanchard rocked Alberta and highlighted some of the serious concerns within victims' supports. This young victim was thrown in jail, forced to ride back and forth from jail shackled and in the same vehicle as the man who raped and almost murdered her. Given that this woman was not referred to victims' services at all and had no contact with a victims' support worker between June 2014 and 2015, can the government please tell us what they're doing to ensure that this never happens again?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the absolutely important question. I think all members on all sides of this House were incredibly disturbed to learn about that case, as was the public. The government was extremely concerned. That's why we moved expeditiously to launch two different reviews, one performed by an outside agency, by Roberta Campbell, and another one internally to review our policies to ensure that we're doing better as we move forward. We have been working with our partners in victims' services to ensure that we are closing those gaps because, as the member identifies, that was a concern in this case.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The story of this young woman could have ended so differently if she would have had the support system around her in order to help her. This was an overwhelming, terrifying situation. Given that the report mandated by this government following the tragic incident recommended the development of a centralized victims' services mode that operates independently of Edmonton police and the RCMP, has the minister consulted with the relevant stakeholders on this recommendation, and what was the feedback?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the absolutely critical question. We have had the opportunity to speak with our partners in victims' services. We have been dealing with them on a number of recommendations from the office of the Auditor General with respect to the victims of crime fund as well. It is true that Roberta Campbell's report did reference this and suggest a change in the way in which we do business. We have hundreds of volunteers throughout the province working very, very hard to provide those services. Sometimes there are differences in the needs in different rural communities, because of the size sometimes, so . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mrs. Aheer: The victims of crime fund is meant to be used to help fund and support those that have been impacted by crime, and given that the former Auditor General highlighted that the government had no plan to spend the tens of millions of dollars sitting in surplus in the victims of crime fund for over two years and given that the current amount is $65 million sitting in that fund, $30 million earmarked for reserve purposes, and given that the government promised it in the spring of 2018 – Mr. Speaker, it's the spring of 2018 – where's the plan, and when will that be public?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the important question. The member is absolutely correct. For over a decade a surplus has been accumulating in that victims of crime fund. When we came into office, the Auditor General was looking at this issue. He made a series of recommendations, and we were looking to move forward on that. Obviously, an intervening event was the report from Ms Campbell, that suggests a move in rather a different direction. We have been consulting with individuals in the area and working with those victim-serving agencies. This file is absolutely critically important, and the government absolutely must get it right.

Service Alberta and Status of Women Minister's Remarks

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, a video was circulating showing a terrible racist tirade by a person in, I believe, Lethbridge, the sentiments of which I'm sure we all condemn. The Minister of Service Alberta and Status of Women issued a tweet earlier today apparently trying to offer sympathetic context to the racist tirade. Will the government agree with me that this message posted by the minister was unbecoming of a minister of the Crown?

Ms Hoffman: Absolutely, and so does the minister, Mr. Speaker. She has apologized and since removed the remarks, and our government unreservedly apologizes to all Albertans for the remarks that were posted. There is no excuse for racist, bigoted comments in the province of Alberta. Our government is determined to make sure that we combat racism and unreservedly apologizes for the minister's remarks, as she did on the Internet as well just a few minutes ago.

Mr. Kenney: I appreciate that thoughtful response by the hon. the minister.

Mr. Speaker, given that last week the Edmonton Journal reported Anti-Semitism on the Rise in Alberta and given that the Minister of Service of Alberta and the Status of Women posted: "This is very concerning. The conservative movement in Alberta and Canada . . . need to be held accountable" for this rise in anti-Semitism, will the government agree with me that such comments are unbecoming of a minister of the Crown?

Ms Hoffman: Those comments were inappropriate, and they were removed. Our minister also apologized.

We are working closely with our friends in the Jewish community, and the Premier was recently recognized for the work with B'nai Brith. We certainly look forward to working with all members of Alberta, and we are fighting to make sure that we have a more just and inclusive society for us all.

Mr. Kenney: I appreciate, again, that answer, Mr. Speaker. Given those comments will the minister undertake to encourage all members of the Assembly, including ministers of the Crown, to avoid divisive remarks publicly in social media that divide people on the basis of race or ethnicity?

Ms Hoffman: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. I think all Albertans should be living with a desire to show that they are an accepting, loving, and inclusive society. We certainly are engaging in that work, and we encourage not just all members of the government caucus but all members of this House and all Albertans to do that as well, not just through their remarks or through their outward expressions but also in their thoughts and in their actions. We're going to continue to work to make sure that we have an inclusive Alberta and welcome all Albertans in doing that work in partnership with us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Climate Change and Agriculture

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know producers see first-hand that the climate is changing. This year winter came earlier, and spring came later. We also see extreme storms and unpredictable precipitation. How is the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry helping producers deal with the effects of a changing climate?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Climate change is a growing threat, and it's already having an impact in rural Alberta. As a government we are proud to be taking actions to fight this and to support Albertans through the climate leadership plan. We refuse to leave farmers to deal with this on their own as the problem worsens. The opposition prefers to stick their head in the sand and chooses to ignore this. To ignore climate change means jeopardizing the entire industry.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How is the minister helping producers adapt to climate change and become leaner and cleaner, thereby reducing their emissions and spending fewer hard-earned dollars on fuel, fertilizers, and other high-carbon inputs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We provide substantial support through the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation, providing subsidized assistance in the event of extreme weather or market variations. Hundreds of farms benefit from AFSC assistance. As part of our preventive efforts we offer many business support programs to farmers and recently injected $81 million into energy efficiency programs. Most of this recent funding comes from the carbon levy being reinvested in rural Alberta. We also provide an abundance of expertise through Ag and Forestry department staff on how producers can respond to new issues and make their operations even more efficient.

2:40

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Beyond programs, how else does your ministry continue to ensure that farms in Alberta continue to be profitable?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, since day one this government has taken a position against the reckless cuts proposed by the opposition. As the climate continues to change, markets shift and new pests and diseases emerge. Farmers need a supportive government now more than ever. If the opposition were making program and insurance decisions in the province, farmers could expect a 20 per cent cut to everything that is available to them now. Ag services boards would see an $11.4 million cut. It would mean privatizing AFSC, crippling farms with huge hikes in costs and fees. Also, all the opposition could do is to give tax breaks to their rich friends.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, in 30 seconds we'll continue with the Routine.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On June 1, 2017, the Standing Committee on Families and Communities was deemed by the Assembly to be the special committee for the purpose of conducting a comprehensive review of the Missing Persons Act pursuant to section 13 of the act. As chair of the committee it is my honour to table five copies of the committee's report of the review of the Missing Persons Act. Copies of the report are also available through the committee office and online.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Government House Leader I would like to give oral notice of a motion for the next Order Paper, that motion being:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Government Motion 16 is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the motion, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the motion shall be put forthwith.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have in my hand here five copies of a May 2 Graham Thomson article which refers to the motion that was just talked about, where it says that the opposition may dread the idea of having "such an outspoken truth-speaker as Lorne Gibson" when it comes to the opposition opposing Mr. Lorne Gibson's appointment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table five copies of Controversial Nominee Named for Alberta's First Election Commissioner, Tasked with Rooting Out 'Dark Money.'

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite five copies of the mandate letter sent from the Premier to the Minister of Education outlining the work that is to be done to address racism in Alberta and the timeline, which dictates that that work was to be completed by last fall.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of an article in an obstetrics publication from the Faculty of Nursing, University of Alberta; nursing and midwifery in London, U.K.; and advanced specialty health studies, Mount Royal college, Calgary, Alberta. The results: "For women who chose midwifery care, an average savings of $1172 per course of care was realized without adversely affecting maternal or neonatal outcomes." This is in particular for the Health minister.

Mr. Speaker, I have two more. This is, again, another report done by a medical journal. The conclusions read: "Our findings should reassure health planners and policy makers that there are not deferred excess costs associated with planned home birth with a registered midwife."

One more, Mr. Speaker, this one being from Maternity Care in Alberta, written by the Alberta Association for Safe Alternatives in Childbirth. The report highlights:

This difference in approach translates into an average cost savings of just over $540 per in hospital midwifery birth and a savings of $2,055 for out of hospital births when compared to uncomplicated vaginal birth with an obstetrician. Midwives offer both high quality and continuity of care, relieving some of the burden on the healthcare system while also offering cost savings.

I would like to add that that would be a significant cost savings when multiplied by the number of women in this province that choose a midwife as an option.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite five copies of two articles that I would like to table. The first one is by Dr. Frank Wolak. He's the director of the program on energy and sustainable development. He's also the Holbrook working professor of commodity price studies in the department of economics at Stanford University. He has a PhD from Harvard, and his research focuses on the design and the regulation of energy markets.

The second document I'd like to present is an actual 19-year study of a capacity versus energy-only market on a case study based in the country of Chile, which turns out to be a country where it was fairly easy to separate the two out, and it makes clear that capacity markets are actually more costly and unstable on the grid than just a plain energy-based market.

Thank you.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I have a report here from ATB: Alberta's Still Not the Economic Driver It Once Was. It talks about the annual unemployment rate jumping above the national average in 2017 for the first time since 1988. So much for the talk in this House that there is a recovery. It's a jobless recovery.

Thank you.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 13

An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future

Mrs. Pitt moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Adjourned debate on the amendment May 7: Mr. Feehan]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After 44 years in the political wilderness governing must have looked so easy to the NDP. Sometimes it is. The way forward is clear, the public supports you, and the decisions you make are clear. But as this government has figured out, that's simply not how governing usually works. The decisions are almost never clear, nor are they easy, and there are always unintended consequences. There are enough pitfalls and obstacles for government to avoid that it shouldn't go about creating new ones. But this is exactly what this NDP government did, and I can only conclude that the NDP is so ideologically opposed to market-based electricity generation that it couldn't help itself but start to meddle and muddle about, all in the name of renewable energy.

Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that the system we had was working, and it was working well. It was the NDP – the NDP – that have made electricity much more expensive. Under the market system the electricity producers held the risk and consumers, Albertans, enjoyed lower prices as a result. A capacity market will make electricity more expensive for consumers by transferring more risk away from generators.

Mr. Speaker, I found this interesting tidbit on the website of the Alberta Electric System Operator, or AESO, under the heading Market Basics: Guide to Understanding Alberta's Electricity Market. "The wholesale electricity market in Alberta is currently an 'energy-only' model, meaning that generators are only paid for the energy they produce, not how much they are capable of producing." So we have a system whereby producers are paid for electricity that they produce, and we are moving to a system that pays producers based on how much power they could or might produce.

I believe that Frank Wolak explained it best in his 2004 Stanford University report entitled What's Wrong With Capacity Markets? Dr. Wolak wrote: "Consumers want cars, not automobile assembly plants. They want point-to-point air travel, not airplanes. They want a loaf of bread, not a bakery." When Albertans get up in the morning and turn on the lights, they expect electricity, not the ability and overcapacity to create electricity, Mr. Speaker, and fortunately the electricity market that we had – that we had – successfully delivered Albertans' electricity for the best price. When Albertans turned the light switch on, there was always a steady, reliable current there to ensure that our lights stayed on, our homes were heated, especially on January 15, and our refrigerators kept our food from spoiling.

Before this government came to power, it had long ago decided that it was going to phase out coal and shutter our most efficient, cleanest burning power plants decades – decades – ahead of the federal government's deadline. The existing federal deadline had Alberta phasing out 12 of our coal-fired generating plants by 2029. We knew this wouldn't cause much volatility because we had planned for it and the generating plants were nearing the end of their lives in many cases anyway. What the NDP did was demand, insist, force six of the newest and most efficient coal power plants to be shuttered well before the federal agreement allowed. Some of these coal plants, Mr. Speaker, were practically brand new. Keephills 3 was supposed to run to 2061, Genesee 3 to 2055.

This ideological decision cost Albertans $1.4 billion just so that we can shut these coal plants early and convert them to natural gas. Mr. Speaker, I shudder to think that with our system now headed toward 70 per cent reliance on natural gas electricity generation – that's a complete redundancy necessary for the NDP government's plan to have 30 per cent renewables, so another 30 per cent, where natural gas will be the backup – our youth, our families, and our communities are so subject to volatility if the price of natural gas doubles, triples. And it's been there in the past.

On top of that cost is the fact that coal to natural gas conversion is not as efficient as brand new natural gas power plants. We could have transitioned our system to natural gas over the long term by having new gas-only plants replace coal plants as these coal-powered plants ended their life cycle in 2061 and 2055. Instead, we are left with a more expensive option and less efficient gas power plants. No matter which way you slice this, we are going to end up paying more, receiving less, and driving Albertan industry, billions of dollars of wealth and tens of thousands of jobs, out of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, what is more, a full accounting has not yet been done. No one knows just how much the NDP's poor decision-making has cost or will cost Albertans. The United Conservative Party Official Opposition has written the Auditor General requesting that his office investigate, with a full-cost accounting of the NDP's electricity fiasco and report back to the Legislature. Albertans, taxpayers, communities, and our youth deserve to know exactly what this NDP boondoggle is going to cost them.

What's even more mind blowing is that AESO's own modelling showed that this government's renewable electricity program would actually decrease the overall revenue needed for all generators to recoup investment and earn a profit. Mr. Speaker, what does that mean in layman's terms? What it means is less investment in our electricity generation system, less reliability, and higher prices, a no-win everywhere for Albertans.

In his 2016 report to government the AESO said:

Without investment in new firm generation . . . to replace retiring coal-fired electricity, the market will be unable to support increasing volumes of intermittent renewables and provide a healthy reserve margin to manage through a wide range of system conditions. System reliability will be compromised.

System reliability will be compromised in the middle of July, in the middle of January. It's amazing that we are subjecting ourselves and our families to this.

Despite this warning the government charged ahead and legislated that the electricity system must have 30 per cent renewables anyway. The NDP purposely compromised what was a world-class, sustainable, and reliable electricity system for an ideological fool's errand. Without guaranteeing that natural gas peaker plants would be built to produce electricity when the sun doesn't shine and the wind doesn't blow, the government has completely, on their own, manufactured the need for a capacity market.

Mr. Speaker, if the government had continued to do nothing in response to their invasive meddling, the $1,000 per megawatt hour cap on electricity prices would have had to rise to $5,000 per megawatt hour just to attract the investment needed to make the system reliable. The NDP have now given Albertans a choice, a choice between high electricity prices and high risk or higher electricity prices with lower risk. What a terrible choice, all because they have tried to force renewables into the market and close coal-powered plants early.

As I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, governing is tough. Often the choice is between two bad options, and you have to choose the one that's less bad. However, this government created the situation, created the bad options, where the people of Alberta are left with two bad choices. They did have a choice not to meddle in the electricity generating system in the first place, a choice they should have made, could have made, but didn't. We are where we are because this government couldn't help but make an irresponsible, ideologically based decision that is not in the best interests of Albertans.

This all could have been avoided. It's incredibly upsetting and exasperating to see Alberta in this position when it all so easily could have been avoided. I don't support this government's irresponsible and ideological meddling in what was a perfectly reliable and inexpensive electricity generation system, a system now, Mr. Speaker, where the costs will be billions and billions of extra dollars for years and years down the road and a loss of reliability. It was a perfectly reliable and inexpensive electricity generation system, and I certainly do not support their attempts to hide their bad decisions from Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I will be voting against this bill, and I encourage all of my colleagues to do the same. Thank you.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Just to confirm that it's under 29(2)(a)?

Ms Phillips: Yes. Mr. Speaker, there were a lot of half-baked statements in the hon. member's comments; in fact, when it comes to renewables, probably a baker's dozen worth of mistruths and misstatements.

But, you know, we'll start with the phase-out of coal. The member claims that they are efficient and the cleanest burning, perhaps, of coal, but we have a number of lower emission ways to generate electricity in this province. I'm wondering if the hon. member is not looking at those because he simply doesn't believe in the science of climate change, that greenhouse gas emissions actually do cause anthropogenic climate change, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the hon. member has gone on the record several times indicating that he does not understand the science of climate change, so I'm wondering if that's what's behind some of his statements.

Mr. Speaker, leaving aside climate change for a moment, you know, when his own leader was part of the cabinet that gazetted the regulations to phase out coal, in there there were statements around the hundreds of millions of dollars that would be saved in the health care budget due to phasing out those plants. I'm wondering if the hon. member would restart the coal plants, or if it is in fact the position of the Conservatives that they would restart those coal plants and take on all of that pollution and those health care effects. That's not some kind of hoax perpetrated by the Chinese, as the hon. member seems to think that climate change is. The health care costs and the effects of burning coal are well documented. If he has questions about that, then he can ask his own leader because he sat in cabinet, the same cabinet that gazetted those regulations. Those facts are right there for him to see. Or he could go and talk to any health care provider, emergency room doctor, the asthma society of Canada, for example, a number of other folks, the Lung Association and others.

I'm wondering if they will reverse those agreements, Mr. Speaker, if they would commit to doing that. I'm wondering if they would commit to reversing the capacity market. This is something that if you want to talk about uncertainty and investor uncertainty, this would send all of that investment capital that is looking at new natural gas investments, looking at options in hydro, looking at the renewables climate into quite a tailspin. I'm wondering if the Conservatives can go on the record right now and commit to reversing the capacity market.

I'd also like to ask, given that there were so many misstatements – and you can't glaze them over; they were just wrong – around renewables in there, if the hon. member would like to go on the record and reject the thousands of new jobs that are coming into his riding and into his economic region as a result of the lowest cost procurement of renewables in Canadian history, Mr. Speaker, that are directly benefiting his own constituents.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to my hon. colleague the minister for rising and being involved in the debate. I guess where I want to start is that the Alberta government's year-end is March 31, and our government put in a system where the ratepayer is capped, capped at 6.8 cents. But capped by who is what's important. Capped by the taxpayer. Subsidized by the taxpayer. What's amazing to me: the ratepayer has a cap, meaning the most they'll pay is 6.8 cents for the cost of their electricity, but the poor taxpayer doesn't have a cap. If the cost of electricity goes through the roof, the taxpayer and the ratepayer, who are often the same thing, will just end up paying the higher cost of this NDP boondoggle but in a more indirect, inefficient, noncompetitive way.

Mr. Speaker, why I mention March 31 is that I think it was April 8, and already the taxpayer was subsidizing the ratepayer in the province of Alberta. I think it was $8 million or $9 million.

Mr. Panda: $9 million.

Mr. Barnes: Nine million dollars. Thank you. Eight days into our year. Already this capacity, this boondoggle of a system that the NDP government put in, had resulted in the hard-working youth, the hard-working job providers, the hard-working wealth creators of our province having to dig into their pockets in an unintended way and pay, pay for the cost of this boondoggle, pay for the cost of this fast, ideologically driven I want to call it overexposure to natural gas. As I mentioned in my comments . . . [Mr. Barnes' speaking time expired]

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just want to take some time today to talk on Bill 13 here, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future. Of course, as usual the government has come up with a good name to describe their bill and all sorts of rosy outlooks because of this bill. But let's be certain about one thing. Everything this government has done having to do with electricity has been a failure. This government from the start, when they increased the carbon tax and started the shutdown of coal, everything they have done has caused problems in the electricity market. We've seen the problems with the Balancing Pool and the companies returning their contracts to the Balancing Pool and how the government had to pass legislation in order to bail out the Balancing Pool. Every single thing this government has touched has either damaged the electricity market or has been to try to fix the problems that they've created by the bills that they initially passed.

There's one thing we can be certain of, Mr. Speaker. The prices of electricity are going up. There's only one way that this ideology goes, and that drives electricity costs up. We've seen it happen in Ontario in huge ways, and this government seems to be wanting to go down the same path. Now, it's crazy to me to think that we have such an energy-rich province here in Alberta, and this government is talking about importing energy from other areas. This doesn't make any sense.

Now, another thing that doesn't make sense is that this government talks about, you know, wind power, generating electricity from the wind. They talk about it like it's something that's never been done in Alberta. That's just not true. There've been wind generators in Alberta for years. In fact, some of the first ones that were started are actually being decommissioned now because they've fulfilled their lifespan. It's just amazing to me that this government comes up with these things like it's some new, incredible revelation that's never happened before, and it's just not true. It's been going on, but this government wants to push ahead and force the market to do what it wouldn't do naturally. Of course, when you do things like that, somebody has to pay. Who's going to pay, Mr. Speaker? Albertans are going to pay for this. When natural gas plants that are producing electricity are shut down, presently they cost nothing to Albertans, but under this plan when they're shut down, Albertans will still be paying for them. Albertans will be paying whether these plants are working or not.

Now, the only thing we're certain of, of course, is that prices will be getting more expensive. We've seen this already. This government has brought in a cap on the price of electricity, but they put it in at over twice the price of what it is. Obviously, there was an expectation that the prices were going to double or more in order to have any benefit of a cap. Of course, Mr. Speaker, what happens when the cap is reached? What happens then? If the companies need to charge that much money to make a profit or to keep going, when they hit the cap, who's going to pay for it then? Who's going to pay for that electricity to keep coming in? Well, it doesn't matter whether Albertans are paying for electricity or whether they're paying a tax that's funnelled back into these companies generating this electricity. It's still the same people that are paying. That's Albertans.

This government has to quit trying to convince Albertans that there's some magic here that creates a situation where they put a cap on it and all of a sudden it just doesn't cost anymore. It still costs. If the company has to have a return on the investment higher than that cap, then somebody has got to pay for it. Of course, there is only one person paying for electricity in Alberta, and that's Albertans. This will result in paying for electrical generating capacity that is not being used. Whether the electricity is being generated, the power is going to be paid for; that capacity is going to be paid for.

Now, AESO demands a 15 per cent reserve margin, and of course wind and solar cannot be used to factor into this margin. You know, these other things, wind and solar, can't be factored into that because they're not dependable. Solar doesn't work when it's dark, and wind doesn't work when it's not blowing. So there are several issues with this situation that we find ourselves in, and, again, it all started because of this government's ideology of driving through the electricity market and thinking that they can force fixes on the economy.

I think we all agree that there could be some tweaks made and some fixes made, but this government has decided to change the fundamental way electricity is generated and distributed in Alberta. That's just a dangerous road to go on, especially when they don't fully understand the market. They didn't understand that these contracts were returned to the Balancing Pool. They didn't understand that. They just thought: oh, that's no big deal. Well, it turned into a big deal. The contracts were returned; the government sues the energy companies. That's a pretty big deal, especially when some of these energy companies were owned by Albertans. Then we have the Alberta government suing another Alberta-owned, taxpayer-owned company. There's just a double whammy when it comes to the effects of a government that can't see how the market works and feels that they can just run roughshod over everybody and force everything to happen when, really, these things are intricately related.

Now, Bill 13 amends the Renewable Electricity Act to make FEOC not applicable to renewables. FEOC is the rules of fair, efficient, and openly competitive electricity markets. This bill wants to take away rules of fair, efficient, and openly competitive electricity markets. Now, for a government that pretends to be open and transparent, they bring in legislation to remove that, especially when it comes to renewables. It places merchant wind and potentially future renewable electricity projects at risk by doing that. Mr. Speaker, I mean, I don't understand how this government feels that taking away rules of fair, efficient, and openly competitive electricity markets is somehow going to benefit Albertans.

Now, the NDP government announced the creation of a capacity market in November 2016. Bill 13 is not about renewables per se. It's about financing coal-to-gas conversions, new natural gas generation, combined-cycle gas, and backup for renewables, which is simple-cycle gas in peaker plants. Bill 13 attempts to fix the mess from the coal phase-out, that is making the grid unstable with 30 per cent renewables under Bill 27. The AESO contracts renewables capacity through a bid process. Mr. Speaker, I mean, obviously, again, this is a situation where the government's previous bills have created problems. Of course, we come up with another bill to try to fix those problems. Obviously, there should have been more thought, more consultation, and more listening to opposition and to other people in the market before they started down this road.

Now, we talked about that with the capacity market the retail electricity prices would be capped at 6.8 cent per kilowatt hour until 2021. Of course, that's not part of this bill, but if retail rates exceed that amount, the Alberta government will use carbon tax revenues to pay the difference. This government is somehow trying to convince Albertans that they're going to be saving money if they put a cap on the electricity rates. Of course, we see that this government is going to use the carbon tax revenues to pay the difference. Well, Mr. Speaker, the carbon tax is a tax on Albertans. Albertans pay the carbon tax. So suggesting that they're saving the money of Albertans by putting a cap on electricity rates and then paying the difference with Albertans' tax dollars doesn't save Albertans any money. It doesn't make things any better because it still costs Albertans.

There is $74 million set aside in the budget for this year to do this. They've already planned that this is going to happen. They already know what's going to happen. They know that the price is going to go up. They know that it's going to go up above their cap. They know that they're going to have to take taxpayer dollars to fund this, to subsidize this process that they've undergone.

Now, the three generators who won phase 1 of the renewable electricity program are not eligible for capacity payments, only electricity payments, so when the price goes above 3.7 cents per kilowatt hour, these generators pay into the government. When the price goes below 3.7 cents, the government pays these wind farms from the carbon tax.

Again, Mr. Speaker, we have this situation where the government is taking Albertans' tax dollars and putting them into electricity. They've changed these rules, and they've tried to get all these different things going within electricity, with all the bills they've passed, without fully understanding what the effects are. Now we have a situation where, when the price is below 3.7 cents, the government pays the wind farms from the carbon tax. I mean, we've had wind farms here in Alberta for years, but now, of course, we have a government that figures that they have to take taxpayer dollars to make these things work.

Now, again, it's very clear that the NDP have made electricity more expensive, and it's going to go higher. What's happening is that it's transferring more risk away from the generators, but somebody has to pay, and the only person to pay is Albertans. I don't know how Albertans can have any trust in this NDP government when it comes to electricity because we've seen over and over again the cause-and-effect reaction of their bills and their legislation that they pass here.

Now, we've written to the Auditor General asking for a full-cost accounting of the NDP's electricity fiasco. I think Albertans deserve to know. They deserve to know how much this is costing. If they're going to suggest that the people of Alberta want this – and this is what they're saying, that Albertans want this, that this is the road that Albertans want them to go down – I don't know how Albertans can make a decision on whether they want this or not unless they know what the full cost is, unless they have all the facts. You can't make an informed decision without information. Mr. Speaker, this is, again, this government not wanting to provide all the information to Albertans so that they can make a decision on their own.

Now, we've given them plenty of opportunity. A lot of times we've given them opportunity to send these bills to committee so that we could gather more information. More people could present to the government and to opposition in a committee setting so that we could learn this information, and they could have input on the actual effects of this. But any time we ask for that to happen, the government, of course, votes against it. They feel that they know everything, that they know better than everybody else, so they don't want to listen to anything more. They don't want to hear the truth, I guess. They just want to push ahead with their ideology and push ahead with these multiple bills that have caused damage to Albertans.

Now, Alberta was to phase out 12 coal-fired generating plants as per a federal agreement by 2029. Mr. Speaker, those coal-fired generating plants are ones that were reaching the end of their life. They were going to be shut down anyways, and that was kind of a bit of a natural progression. But when this government comes along and they decide that they're going to not only shut down those 12 but shut down the other six, the newer ones, the ones that are burning pretty clean and the ones that haven't had their life cycle run out on them, then that's what costs millions and millions of dollars. Again, who pays the millions and millions of dollars to shut down these coal-fired generating plants early? Albertans.

Dr. Turner: Under 29(2)(a). I've been quite anxious, actually, to get a chance to participate in debate on this very important Bill 13. Bill 13 is actually going to enable the capacity market to function the way it was designed to do. I think it's been one of the great accomplishments of this government to get the capacity market in place, and this legislation is designed to make sure that it operates in the best way.

Now, there's a lot of hot air coming from the other side. That's a trite sort of a comment, but I think it's appropriate on this one. I want the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky to think about a few years ago, when there were rolling brownouts across this province. The city of Calgary, I think, was particularly affected by that, but even Edmonton was affected by it. I don't know if Grande Prairie suffered from it. I imagine they might have. Those brownouts actually were happening – I'm sure, Mr. Speaker, you experienced them in Medicine Hat although you've got an excellent electricity provider in the city of Medicine Hat, that maybe was able to avoid it. The way that the energy-only market was working in this province meant that some of the providers of electricity, actually, for their own economic benefit – they called it economic withholding – shut down power plants, and the government of Alberta had absolutely no way to ensure that that didn't happen.

I'm sure the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky remembers those brownouts. I'd like him to comment on whether or not his reaction to it is to go back to this energy-only market – he thinks the capacity market is the wrong way to go – whether or not we would actually be plunged back into those horrible summers of brownouts, when the air conditioning wouldn't work, when perhaps the air conditioning in his farm buildings would shut down because the power wasn't being supplied.

The other thing that I'd like to have him comment on – and he was talking about this at length towards the end of his comments – is the coal phase-out. I think it's one of the smartest things that the Conservative Party of Canada did when they were in power in Ottawa. They actually started it, and the leader of the UCP was part of the cabinet that decided that it was very important to speed up the phase-out of coal-powered electricity because of the health costs. I can tell you as a physician that those health costs are real. It causes problems with the health of all Albertans. It costs us money.

So on those two topics I'd like to hear the member's comments.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much. Speaking of hot air, I guess we do hear a lot of hot air from the other side on a lot of these issues. We have a government, again, that doesn't want to provide the facts to Albertans so Albertans can make decisions. You talked about rolling brownouts. Well, the same thing happens in capacity markets, too. The problem with the renewables is that the sun doesn't always shine and the wind doesn't always blow, so you have to have backup. There are extra costs there, but there is also extra risk there.

Now, again, with the coal phase-out – he talks about the coal phase-out – well, why don't we get the facts to the people and let them decide, you know? It cost $1.36 billion to shut down these coal plants early, and this is even the newer plants that they want to shut down. Some of these plants were supposed to run until 2061. Genesee 3 was supposed to run to 2055. Of course, that's why it cost so much money to shut these plants down. Again, these are newer plants that are burning very clean.

I guess I don't understand why this government – we've asked for dollar figures on the cost of their electricity experiments that they're doing. Of course, I would presume that they've done some sort of study. If they hadn't, of course, that's very irresponsible. But, obviously, if they have these numbers, then provide them to us. Provide them to Albertans. Let's see them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the opportunity to speak on this Bill 13, Alberta's electricity future, in second reading. In a few short years this NDP government's strict attachment to its ideology – and we can see that time and time again decisions are not made here based on rationale. Rather, it's on ideology, the way this government thinks and presumes that everything that has happened in Alberta was wrong before they came along. That's what they think. They have taken our electricity system down I don't even know which route, this wild ride, that creates a new mess at every turn in trying to create something.

Mr. Speaker, let me quote from the April 19, 2018, edition of the National Post, from a column by Kevin Libin.

Get ready, Alberta, because all the thrills and spills that inevitably follow when politicians start meddling in a boring but perfectly well-functioning electricity market in the name of pointless political symbolism are coming your way, next.

Well, this next step of political symbolism is Bill 13, which creates a capacity market to fix a multitude of NDP redesigns already.

We see many problems with this bill, not the least of which are the details for creating this new market in regulations. As we all know in this House, Mr. Speaker, that means that the NDP government, which has made such a mess of our system already, can do more shocking changes behind closed doors. You know what that means? It means that the legislators, who supposedly craft these rules, will learn about it at the same time as Albertans would. The NDP would just craft their own rules without consulting the stakeholders. I think history is on my side when I say that. The failure of this government to consult with the stakeholders on a number of other occasions: I don't think anybody can argue that. For those consumers, Mr. Speaker, the NDP changes so far have meant more government debt, to the tune of billions of dollars, and higher rates down the road for a long time.

It's not that the concept of a capacity market is bad. It is that regardless of the electricity market, electricity prices will go up. This NDP government repeatedly tells us that it is fighting for Albertan families and that it's making Alberta better for families and that they've got their backs. How is it possible when they continue to play games with our perfectly run system which cost billions of taxpayers' dollars and which result in higher rates?

Mr. Speaker, let me say that the carbon tax does not help families either. We still have not seen any study presented by this government pertaining to the carbon tax. They have taken – I don't know – hundreds of millions of dollars from hard-working Albertans, and they still have to show what the impact of that is and the greenhouse gas emissions reduction. Well, I'd rather stick to Bill 13.

The carbon tax does not help families. We all know that. This supposedly caring, progressive NDP government has generated a regressive electricity system. The Member for Calgary-Glenmore spoke very passionately about their progressive government. When 200,000 people are sitting at home without work, I don't think that's progress. Like, 14 per cent of youth are sitting at home. I don't think that is progress, Mr. Speaker. A $96 billion debt we're passing to the future generation: in my humble opinion, I don't think that's progress by any stretch of the imagination.

Again let's go back to Bill 13. After this bill, Mr. Speaker, Albertans are simply shaking their heads at it and saying: "Like, what is going on? What is this government up to again now?" They can't keep up with the changes this government brings. On this side of the House the Conservatives have been, like, blowing the whistle on the NDP's interference in our complex electricity system from the beginning, but they simply dismissed our concerns, and they dismissed Albertans' concerns because they think they always know best. I understand. They can dismiss our concerns. Like, you know, we're partisan parties. That's their duty, to ignore us. But they should not be ignoring the concerns of the people who sent us here.

We warned them not to introduce the carbon tax and apply it to heavy emitters. I mean, like, they never listen, so they forged on and moved, triggered a clause that allowed now unprofitable companies to hand back their power purchasing agreements. The NDP appeared to be taken by surprise that this was even a possibility. Lawsuits ensued – and they are not cheap, Mr. Speaker; I'm sure you came across a few lawsuits, like, in private life or something; I definitely have – in a short period of time, that we all predicted would come to pass and had to come to pass.

All that Albertans really know is that the unnecessarily purely ideological move is costing taxpayers a fortune, and it's a multibillion-dollar fortune. Albertans know that the only party to blame here is the New Democratic Party, the NDP. Most Albertans don't know more than that. That's all they know, that the NDP is creating this mess and that they're going to blame them. They don't feel the need to move more than that. They're not happy with the changes, especially in this thing.

When they hear about yet another change to fix the last one that went wrong, they just roll their eyes, like: "You know what? We just can't wait for our chance to, you know, make our voice heard," especially the hard-working people in Calgary-Greenway, Mr. Speaker. Every time I'm stopping at Tim Hortons or getting gas at Petro or something, they're just, like, "When is the next election?" I'm, like: "I don't know. That's up to the government, right?" Albertans are ready for that. We feel that it is our job, until that occurs, to continue to be the best guardians we can as opposition, to hold this government to account, and we need to guard their hard-earned tax money, which this government is trying to take every opportunity they get. We need to guard their lifestyle, and we need to protect the future of the province they love so dearly. They helped build this province.

Anyways, let's get back to the repercussions of Bill 13, Mr. Speaker. I've only mentioned one of the many interferences in the market that have brought us to this state of looking at the capacity market. If you remember, Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act, was brought forward despite the warning from AESO that it would compromise the electricity system. And what happened? The NDP chose not to allow for a guarantee that the peaker plant would be built to produce electricity when renewables were not co-operating. You know, the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky said that the sun and the wind: we know that they're not always working. The sun is not always shining. The wind is not always blowing. That's why the industry has been calling for a capacity market.

If all of this sounds like echoes of the Ontario market to you, Mr. Speaker, you are correct. We have all seen the electricity prices in Ontario. I remember, like, when the Prime Minister was doing a town hall, and this hard-working lady at the town hall – most Canadians would have seen the video – was basically crying and saying that she cannot afford to pay her utility bills. This seems like we're on the same path.

Mr. Kevin warned about this problem, too, in the same column I quoted from earlier, and let me do it again. "Whenever progressive politics infests the electrical grid, people always pay for it in the end." That was Mr. Kevin's comment. He notes that people either pay through their power rates, or they pay it through their taxes.

The NDP makes it all sound great, with the rate caps and such, but if the rates are capped, the money has to come from somewhere. That means that this NDP government, Mr. Speaker, slides into another pocket to pay for its experiment. Last month I think it's, like, $9 million if my memory is correct, and the government has put aside $76 million for the whole year.

Now, the government's talk about, you know, building schools and building infrastructure – I mean, a simple question to all of us: how many teachers can we hire with $75 million? How many schools can we build? Well, they all would, say, like, average $40 million to $50 million, depending on the size and location, each school that can be built. So why are we throwing this money away rather than putting the taxpayers' money towards the infrastructure this government claims that we need? We do need that infrastructure.

So it just tacks onto it. It's a $54 billion debt, which we all know will be close to, like, $100 billion by the time of the next term under this NDP government. Even for those who expected an NDP government to be costly and did not care about the origins of the funds, it is so reckless. This NDP government has been tragic for Alberta, even the people who thought, like: "Okay. We can look at Manitoba. We can look at, like, the late '90s in British Columbia. We can look at before the Saskatchewan Party." In Saskatchewan people say, like: wherever this style of government goes, they just, like, mess things up. Even they are saying: wow; this is beyond our expectation.

Anyways, Mr. Speaker, I'm just going to wrap it up. In the end, what I would like to do is, like – you know, we're hoping that when it comes to Bill 13, this government will give it another thought and try to do the right thing for the taxpayers and Albertans. We'll find out shortly if they really care to protect Albertans because right on their website it says: fighting to protect what is important for you and your family. That's their website, on the Alberta NDP site. So if you really claim and believe in that, let's do the right thing and put the partisan politics aside and start actually serving the hard-working people of Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Calgary-Greenway? The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes. I enjoyed listening to my colleague's comments here on some of the problems with the electricity market and the NDP's, you know, plans, that have changed things fundamentally and, obviously, cost Albertans more. He mentioned about the coal-fired generating plants being shut down. I think it's important to note that coal conversion to natural gas is not as efficient as brand new combined-cycle natural gas plants. Of course, by forcing these companies to shut down early the coal-fired part of their plants, they're somewhat forced to try to recover some money out of that investment. So instead of waiting for the life cycle of the plant to run out and then just building new plants, they're encouraged by this program to build less efficient generating plants using natural gas.

Regardless, it seemed like the NDP wanted to force the renewable electricity on the Alberta market. But AESO ran many models, including for high use of intermittent renewables to generate electricity in Alberta, and what this modelling showed is that the renewable electricity program will decrease the revenue needed for all generators to recover investment and earn a profit, thus deterring investment.

Mr. Speaker, by deterring investment – that's something that, we've seen, is a recurring theme in Alberta here since this government has been involved with governing this province. They seem to be always meddling with things and always causing stress in the investment community, and therefore the investment just doesn't want to come here to Alberta. These people are still investing money. They're just investing it somewhere else, not in Alberta. We keep warning the government about these things, about the messages they send the investment community. Of course, when the investment community spends money in Alberta, it creates jobs, and these jobs, of course, make life better for Alberta. This government talks about making life better for Alberta, but of course they don't. They bring in things like the carbon tax. They increase the cost of electricity. They do all these things that do anything but make life better for Albertans.

You know, I just want to hear my colleague talk again about some of these additional costs that are affecting Albertans and how this meddling with the electricity market is causing problems for Albertans.

They do something, they bring in the carbon tax, they send all these shock waves into the investment community, and of course every time they meddle with something, there are unintended consequences. Now, they're always warned about the consequences of what they do, but they never seem to listen. They just bulldoze ahead anyway. If it fits into their ideology, they bulldoze ahead, and if it doesn't fit your ideology, then you send it to committee to die. That seems to be the way this government operates. I think we have, you know, a problem here, and we need to make sure that as this government moves ahead with the different bills and legislation, it doesn't have these unintended consequences. Over and over, Mr. Speaker, we try to warn the government. We try to have things go to committee so that there can be more input, so that this government can have an opportunity to learn the full effects of their legislation.

With that, I would just like to have the hon. member kind of respond to that and his opinions and his thoughts on that issue. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to my hon. colleague from Grande Prairie-Smoky. You're right, sir. Albertans are actually getting frustrated with this government's unintended consequences in anything they do, basically. I mean, I just touched on one saga, its ideological experiment with Alberta's electrical system, but there are many, many more.

I mean, like, let's look at the climate change plan. It's another experiment that has baffled and infuriated Albertans. The root of it, of course, is the carbon tax. We still have to see the study of, you know, what it has caused environmentally. What kind of gain it has caused we still have to see. Mr. Speaker, Albertans are waiting to put a delete button on it because that's what the hard-working people in Calgary-Greenway tell me. They're, like: why do I have this carbon tax on my bill? One of my friends actually is in the towing business. He had to pass that tax . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future. The bill before us today is a very important bill as far as my constituency is concerned, but in order to address the issues that are found in Bill 13 and how it's affected my constituency, I believe it's necessary to place this bill into the context of what has happened over the last two or three years in my constituency.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta was going to phase out 12 coal-fired generating power plants as per federal agreement by 2029. Instead, the New Democratic government here has decided that it would phase out the additional six remaining coal-fired power plants that would have operated past 2029. They have decided to phase them out early. This decision has not only negatively affected the coal and the electricity workers in my constituency but also businesses like Capital Power, also at a cost to all Albertans. The NDP have cost us approximately $1.36 billion in their attempt to shut down these coal plants early and to convert them to natural gas.

Today I had the pleasure of attending the annual general meeting of ATCO Canadian Utilities. At that AGM they talked about the fact of having to shut down their Sheerness power plant. While it was going to shut down earlier than, say, the Genesee power plant in my constituency, there was still going to be significant cost to the early shutdown of that facility. Indeed, some of these coal plants that are going to be shut down are practically brand new. Keephills 3 was supposed to run till about 2061 and Genesee 3 to 2055. That's a continued and long lifespan that was going to go past 2030, and the costs of stranding those assets are going to be significant.

The decision of the NDP government to move away from coal-fired generation to generation of electricity by natural gas and/or renewable energy generation like wind or solar power has greatly impacted my constituency. Currently in my constituency of Drayton Valley-Devon I have the Genesee power plant. That's a coal-generated power plant. It's not just a power plant but one of the most efficient coal-burning electrical power plants in the world, so efficient that I'm aware of engineers that have come to my constituency from Germany, engineers that have visited and have studied the technology in this coal-burning power plant and are using that as a template to go back to Germany and begin transitioning away from nuclear energy and away from the renewable energy that they have pursued in Germany to this point, to go back to a stable, low-cost coal energy source. Ironical, isn't it?

I've toured Westmoreland Coal, that provides the coal for the Genesee power plant. I've seen the jobs that are created there by this mine, and I've seen the land reclamation that they have so diligently applied in my constituency. I've gone to the meetings of the workers that have been so concerned with how they are going to transition out of the jobs in coal, how they're going to try to transition and find new jobs and take care of their families in doing so. All of this economic and this personal pain is because this government has decided to transition early to natural gas and renewables, by 2030.

This government has tried to justify their actions by claiming that shutting down coal will greatly improve the health of the people of Alberta. Yet, Mr. Speaker, in my constituency is the West Central Airshed Society. It was created after the Lodgepole blowout in the 1980s. They have continuously monitored the air in my constituency for well over 30 years. I have gone to their meetings, and I have looked at their annual reports, and what we've seen is that in fact the air has never been better than it is today in my constituency. We have in fact quintupled the amount of oil and gas and coal activity in my constituency over the past 30 years, yet today we have better air quality than we had 30-plus years ago. It's not my opinion; this is science. In fact, the air monitoring shows us that the air quality meets or beats all of the ambient air quality standards in Alberta.

The fact that phasing out Alberta's coal-generated power plants reflects a large portion of Alberta's electrical generation and capacity does not seem to register with this government. The fact that all of this economic pain to generate electricity by natural gas only marginally improves the reduction of greenhouse gas production and will have little to no effect on climate change does not seem to register with this government. The fact that we were already on track to phase out coal and that companies like Capital Power already had a plan for phasing out coal in an economical way that would provide a stable source of electricity to this province has yet to seem to have any impact on the actions of this government. This is the backstory of Bill 13 in my constituency. In my constituency it's all economic pain for no discernible environmental gain.

So what is Bill 13 going to do? Well, the New Democratic Party government here announced the creation of a capacity market in November 2016. We presently have an energy-only market which produces our electricity. Electricity-producing companies are paid solely based on the provision of the electricity that is consumed in an hourly wholesale market. This is an efficient system. It has produced some of the lowest energy prices for Albertans in North America. But the NDP have decided to move away from an energy-only market towards a capacity market.

Now, in a capacity market the companies that produce electricity are paid for the provision of energy in an hourly market and for the potential to generate electricity; in other words, a payment for potential generation at some point in the future. Supporters of a capacity market believe that a capacity market will ensure that there is sufficient investment in new generation capacity to keep the lights on and to reduce the price swings in the wholesale electricity market.

Bill 13 is really about financing coal-to-gas conversions, creating new natural gas generation and backup generation for renewable energy sources like wind and solar, that are nonbaseload sources of energy, or, in other words, peak power, therefore the need to provide simple-cycle gas or peaker plants.

Bill 13 is an attempt to fix up the mess that they've made of the coal phase-out, that has made the grid unstable and would make the grid unstable, by the setting of a 30 per cent renewable energy goal under Bill 27. The problem is that the renewable energy that the NDP have pursued, solar and wind, is peak power and cannot replace the baseload power of coal-generated electrical plants. In other words, Mr. Speaker, we cannot replace 30 per cent of Alberta's power supply with peak power like solar and wind and still maintain a stable electrical grid for Albertans.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I sometimes wonder where the NDP is going. I've had very good conversations with the Member for Leduc-Beaumont and with the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Because we share some of the same school boards, et cetera, we come into contact with each other quite often. It's a bit of a mystery to me. I'd love to be able to understand why the New Democrat government is not prepared to look at geothermal energy, which is baseload energy. I have been able to see from the figures from companies that have come to me and have proposed this to me where they are able to produce electricity from the heat energy of the ground, do so without government subsidies, and meet that 30 per cent energy from renewable resources yet from a baseload power source.

I just finished going to the ATCO Canadian Utilities AGM, where they were talking about taking solar and wind power – one of the problems with solar and wind is that you can't store the energy when it's not needed. When you've got wind power going at night, the energy is not needed. Yet they have been working in Australia on looking at taking that excess energy and putting it into hydrogen and then using abandoned pipelines to store the hydrogen, which is simply just a battery. That makes more sense than what we're doing here.

The hydroelectric dam that I have in my constituency is going to be building a second channel where they can take that same electrical energy that's being produced by renewables like solar and wind and use it to pump the water back into a second channel, where it can be used essentially as a battery to create energy again. That makes more sense than what this government is doing.

Bill 13 has significant problems. The energy direction that this NDP government has taken has created significant problems, that they're trying to address through Bill 13. As a result of the coal-fired generation phase-out and the push for renewable generation the NDP have significantly compromised the reliability of our electrical system. Therefore, in order to attract the necessary investment to replace the baseload lost from the coal and for future growth, Bill 13 will change Alberta's electricity market from an energy-only market to a capacity market. Mr. Speaker, the first step will be to auction off to companies a percentage of the energy market that each company will produce and at what price they will produce their energy in order to provide the electrical energy that Albertans will need. The capacity auction is targeted for late 2019, with the capacity market to be fully operational, in theory, by 2021.

Now, until the capacity market comes in, retail electricity prices will be and have been capped at 6.8 cents a kilowatt hour until 2021. If retail prices exceed that amount, that 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour, then this government has said that they will use the carbon tax revenues to pay for the difference in the price. That's why when we take a look at the budget that they have presented this year, Mr. Speaker, they have put aside $74,310,000 – set aside in the budget this year – to cover the costs should they exceed the 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour, money that would not have to have been there had we stayed with an electricity market for . . .

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon? The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yeah. I was enjoying the comments from my colleague on these electricity boondoggles that this government has brought forward and the additional cost that it's costing Albertans. I guess I wanted to kind of touch on something here on AESO. We were talking earlier about how AESO ran many models, including high use of intermittent renewables like wind and solar, of course, to generate electricity in Alberta. This AESO modelling showed that the decrease in revenue needed for all generation to recoup investment and earn a profit would deter investment.

Now, in October 2016 AESO created a report that said that system reliability will also be compromised. It says:

Without investment in new firm generation . . . to replace retiring coal-fired electricity, the market will be unable to support increasing volumes of intermittent renewables and provide a healthy reserve margin to manage through a wide range of system conditions. System reliability will be compromised.

Mr. Speaker, that's not from the Official Opposition; that's from AESO. That's who has done that report, and that's what their findings were.

When we look at what this government is doing and how they're ramming through this legislation and doing all these things that have hurt Albertans and hurt Albertans' pocketbooks with the renewables, what was the government's response to this AESO report? Well, Bill 27 was introduced in November 2016 and set the target for 30 per cent renewables.

Mr. Speaker, here we have a situation where the government has received good information from an organization that's not a political organization. It's not a partisan organization. They've received information from this organization. What did they do? They just ignored it. They just bulldozed past it. It doesn't fit their ideology, so: "We're going ahead with what we think. We're not going to listen to anybody. We're not going to listen to common sense or anything of the sort. We're going to do what we want."

The NDP purposefully compromised the electrical system's reliability and did this without a guarantee that the peaker plants would be built to produce electricity when the sun doesn't shine and the wind doesn't blow. That, of course, created the need for the capacity market. Because of this government's plans that they've decided to push ahead, that's what's created the situation where all of a sudden they need to do the capacity market.

Mr. Speaker, you know, I just want my colleague to kind of respond to that and to just give us a bit of an idea of what his feelings are as far as how this government has bulldozed ahead with this and not listened to organizations that have provided good advice for them. We'll just have him respond on that.

Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the hon. member for his question here. You know, I think that's probably one of the things that's most worrisome here. When this government gets information from nonpartisan sources like AESO, like the West Central Airshed Society, sources that don't rely on the opposition – obviously, they're not going to pay a whole lot of attention to the opposition – they simply won't pay any attention to those nonpartisan sources that know a whole lot more about this issue than members of the government do.

When AESO suggests that you're not going to have the financial capacity there to encourage people to continue building peaker plants and to be able to deal with the drop in energy production because of the wind and the solar problems and you don't listen to it and you continue down a path that's going to create problems, that's when you get the $74 million that you have to set aside. It's not fair to Alberta taxpayers. We have a situation here where AESO – I mean, a capacity market, from everything that I've read, is very complex, and you have to have organizations like AESO and the AUC that will help to regulate a capacity market. You have to have a series of regulations that will help this capacity market to actually function.

You know, one of the things that's missing in the discussion about this . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to speak to the referral amendment on Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future. We have time and time again seen how the NDP government's destructive policies and disregard for Albertans have affected the economy, the job market, and just about every aspect of our lives.

Mr. Speaker, from Fort McMurray's perspective, the policies that this government has put in have affected us negatively on personal taxes, municipal taxes. The carbon tax alone, or – sorry – carbon levy, has impacted everything. Chasing away all the international companies from our region truly didn't help us. You know, it's really unfortunate. The policy to decide to do a review of our oil industry: that took you eight months, to decide that oil was good, and in that eight months you gave all the internationals a great amount of time to realize that they didn't see any future here, and they left.

It's unfortunate because a lot of those internationals actually had a lot of good Canadians, local boys and girls, working for them, and they took the cream of that crop, and they moved them to all their jurisdictions everywhere else in the world. My good Member for Calgary-Foothills knows a lot of those guys that left. And then they left themselves, those big companies. So it's unfortunate that your policies haven't been very positive for our province.

One of the insults to injury is that Albertans keep telling the government how this is impacting them, but the government just does not listen. This is one of the reasons that we need to tell the government that it's time to take a step back and send this bill to committee. Albertans need to have their voices heard. Their concerns need to be acknowledged, and considerations need to be made for issues that are insurmountable. I can predict that the government will tell us that they don't need to listen to Albertans, but this is the same type of attitude that led the NDP into the situation where they are now, where they have no other choice but to rush into a capacity market.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, I am referring to how they brought in bills 27 and 34 last session, rushed them into effect, and then bungled up the electricity file altogether. They changed the fundamental ways the electricity market operates and introduced instability and unpredictability. They caused volatility in the market, and it was no longer viable for Albertans. No Albertan should be kept out of the loop only to open up their power bill and be shocked by what's inside. Albertans should get their word in before the decision is made, not as feedback to the complaint department.

On this side of the House we've lost trust in the government's ability to fix what they've wronged in Alberta's electricity market. Last time they pushed through with their electricity bills, they did so despite warnings from the opposition, the same as we're doing now, and warnings from the AESO, the Alberta Electric System Operator, the operator mandated by legislation which connects generators with transmitters to run the electricity market and keep adequate electricity flowing. AESO ran many models, in fact, including the high use of intermittent renewables to generate electricity in Alberta, and as the operator that would arguably be best suited to provide guidance on this matter, they proceeded to find with their modelling that the renewable electricity program will decrease the revenue needed for all generators to recoup investment and earn a profit.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Madam Speaker – wow; that was gender fluidity there – they warned that this would be a deterrent to investment, as we then went on to see, with stakeholders begging the government to take action to fix the chaos. As part of providing advice in order to ensure the best outcome for the electricity market, they released a report in October 2016, one month before the NDP came out with Bill 27, and warned them that the reliability of the system would be compromised. Obviously, they said it to deaf ears, just like I am now.

The report read:

Without investment in new firm generation (or equivalent but alternative sources of firm supply such as demand response, etc.) to replace retiring coal-fired electricity, the market will be unable to support increasing volumes of intermittent renewables and provide a healthy reserve margin to manage through a wide range of system conditions. System reliability will be compromised.

The government needed to listen then, but they didn't, and they need to listen now to the experts in the field, the stakeholders in the electricity market, and families across Alberta that have something to say about their power bills.

This is why I urge all my colleagues to support the amendment to send this bill to committee and have a thorough round of consultations done so that we can truly, truly analyze the consequences that this bill will have on everyone because it does affect everyone. It affects business people, it affects employers, it affects mom and dad, and it affects all of our neighbours. It's really disappointing.

Madam Speaker, back when they proceeded to push Bill 27 through despite the constant warnings, they had set a target for 30 per cent renewables. In doing so, they compromised the reliability of the entire electricity system in Alberta. They proceeded recklessly and with little foresight, without a guarantee that peaker plants would be built as backups to produce electricity when the sun doesn't shine and the wind doesn't blow. AESO had warned of compromised reliability for the electricity market, which fell upon deaf ears.

With the volatility and unpredictability of the market stakeholders such as generators, the AESO, the Market Surveillance Administrator, investors, and consumer groups demanded a capacity market. It seems that the prospect of all these stakeholders standing in unison against a poor government decision has forced the NDP to introduce a capacity market. However, they seem to be making the same mistakes as before. They seem to be rushing through it with short timelines and little input.

I have no doubt that you're taking lessons from your comrades in Ontario, but as you can see, what they did to their province wasn't the best. I ask that they slow down and consider taking input from those that will be most closely affected by this legislation. Albertans should not have to open their electricity bills to the shock and dismay of finding out that the government has gone and passed legislation that will affect their day-to-day lives.

I have a friend who used to work for the fire department up in Fort McMurray. He now lives in Airdrie. He sent me a little e-mail on Facebook, and he said: Tany, our bills have gone up $300 from last year. He's got a family of, I believe, three children, ages, like, five to 13, in between there. That's disappointing when a family like that has to stomach that much in their bills. You know, $300 is a lot of money for some people. Maybe not for you guys because you're all raking it in, aren't you?

In the end, we simply do not trust that this government has the expertise on this file to be able to foresee all the effects this will have on the industry without proper consultation. They must be willing to slow down and take input. I thought we had taught you about consulting and speaking to Albertans. You claim to have gotten that consulting thing down pat, but then you throw something out like this. You really lack on that consultation. You lack on consultation that involves anything that relies on the economy and jobs and our industries, and that's a shame.

Due to the lack of former consultation they're now costing taxpayers $1.36 billion for the early closing of the power plants in order to convert them to natural gas. This is not what consultation would have looked like. The people who will be out of work because they depended on those coal plants for employment in order to pay their mortgages and feed their families did not experience consultation. In fact, they did not hear a word from the government about what would happen to them once those plants shut down. Some of those plants are practically brand new. Keephills 3 was supposed to run until 2061 and Genesee 3 until 2055. We believe that taxpayers, who will be cleaning up this mess, have the right to their voice being heard by the government that they have elected. We have also asked that the Auditor General do a full-cost accounting of the NDP's whole electricity fiasco. In one way or another they must be accountable to Albertans.

In a completely different light, when the federal government came out with a reasonable and well-thought-out proposal to phase out 12 coal-fired generating plants, they would have done so by 2029, a much more sensible timeline, which allows proper transition plans to be put in place. They were mindful of families. Instead, this government would phase out the six remaining coal-fired power plants that would operate past 2029. Shameful. I'd like to know what kind of consultation they would have done on this and whether the stakeholders believe this would be an overall benefit.

Well, Madam Speaker, coal conversion to natural gas is not as efficient as brand new combined-cycle natural gas power plants.

[The Speaker in the chair]

But, Madam – Mr. Speaker. Oh, you pulled another fast one on me there, sir. You are the most fluid of fluid.

Mr. Speaker, the NDP forced this on Albertans way too fast. We have seen this bureaucratic style of top-down decision-making a lot over the last three years. They rush the implementation of a coal phase-out against warnings by all, and now they're rushing to fix their mistakes by implementing a capacity market. I urge this government to stop the rush and send this bill to committee, where its effects can be thoroughly examined, so that in a year's time we're not all playing cleanup once again.

The $1,000 megawatt hour cap on electricity prices would have to rise to $5,000 a megawatt hour in order for investment to be attracted to keep the system reliable. Can you stand your power bills going up five times the price? Or how about the monthly volatility of your bills? No one wanted the same electricity disaster as in Ontario, but this government could not politically afford Albertans' power bills being five times higher. This government is already costing taxpayers $1.36 billion by shutting down these coal plants early and converting them to natural gas. The government was set on shortening that time frame. I'd like to know why this is so rushed, why it needs to be passed so quickly that it should not be thoroughly consulted on first. Instead of implementing the capacity market over three to six years, they're doing it over two years.

Mr. Speaker, this government has put in place a 6.8 cent per kilowatt hour cap, and they will subsidize your power bill should power prices rise over that 6.8 cents. However, they're going to be using tax dollars to pay down the rest of the power bills. Where do those tax dollars come from? I'll have you guys know, if you haven't clued into this already, that the ratepayer and the taxpayer are the same person. You're hitting all Albertans, and it's very unfortunate.

You know, I just find it amazing that you do attack our coal generation plants here. Quite honestly, when we look at a country like China, where the homes are heated with coal, a whole bunch of individual furnaces in every home all use coal. I can't help but wonder if when the Minister of Economic Development and Trade went to China, he thought of, like, perhaps selling them our gas and selling them our furnace technology to heat all those individual homes, because China is the biggest polluter in the world. Yes, you have billions of people who are using coal to heat their homes, and not all of those are high-efficiency burners. Those are ovens that they're heating their houses with. They are trying to put some gas in, but that's been unreliable, and for the last few winters they've had to fall back on coal, even the ones that did convert over to gas.

Anyways, back to the subject, sir. This is the government's roundabout way of taking money out of the pockets of Albertans without them knowing. Wind and solar energy are important, but they are not yet at the level where they can be interchangeable with coal or natural gas in terms of reliability and capacity. Alberta needs a steady, basic stream of electricity from baseload combined-cycle natural gas and simple-cycle natural gas obtained through peaker plants in order to begin to replace coal and to provide a backup necessary for renewable forms of energy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Panda: Yes, sir. I wanted my colleague from Fort McMurray to finish his thoughts about the coal-fired electric generation and other subjects he was talking about if he can.

The Speaker: I'm having a little difficulty hearing you, hon. member.

Mr. Yao: Why, thank you very much, my good engineer friend. He'd love to just hear me finish off my thoughts, and if I could, that would be wonderful.

Let me reiterate: Alberta needs a steady basic stream of electricity from baseload combined-cycle natural gas and simple-cycle natural gas in order to begin to replace coal and to provide the backup necessary for renewable forms of energy. The AESO has a requirement for a 15 per cent reserve margin, and wind and solar energy on their own are not reliable enough to meet that as they are too fickle in nature. The wind doesn't always blow, and the sun doesn't always shine.

It is clear that the government has not done enough consultation on this matter, and the electricity file is too important to all Albertans to just wait and see what happens. We need to send Bill 13 to committee and allow everyone impacted by this bill to have their voices heard. That's why I'm urging all of my colleagues from across the way to vote in favour of this referral amendment.

I thank you for your time, sir.

The Speaker: Any other questions under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll keep my comments brief. I think my colleagues have generally made most of the points that need to be made here, but I think they're well taken.

The members for Calgary-Foothills and Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo have made the point about why this bill is certainly flawed, why it's important to send it to committee for consultation. In general I believe that all bills should be sent to a committee for consultation. I rarely consider Ottawa to be a shining beacon of good parliamentary process, but when they can shame us, I think that there is something to be said for it.

I won't belabour the point, but I think that it's important for us to recognize that bills like this have an important impact on our economic future, on the ability of families and small businesses to live normal lives and to run normal businesses without undue burdens and the long-term impacts that this bill could have, as we see in Ontario. I would encourage all members of the House to support this amendment to refer the bill to a committee so we can hear from Albertans, small businesses, and those who are impacted by it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, the Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would rise to adjourn debate on this bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 9 Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Madam Chair. I spoke on this bill during second reading. I spoke to the two miscarriages I endured. I spoke to the fact that those miscarriages were not my choice, and I will refer back to this fact a little later.

When this debate began, the only voice from the Official Opposition spoke of freedom of speech and then left the Chamber crying: heckling. I have to speak on this and the disrespect I see and feel when the Official Opposition fails to stay in this Chamber to debate this issue. I expect many Albertan women feel as I do in that you don't have the whatever to actually speak to your values. I am telling you that I do. I am telling you that any person's freedom of speech does not trump my right or any other woman's right to security of person.

I will also tell you that within my head I had to be brought to the distance of 150 metres kicking and screaming as my gut was telling me no. The fact is that there was a time when I could have sprinted 150 metres in 16 seconds. In 16 seconds a lot of damage could be done to a person or a facility, certainly much quicker than the police could arrive and provide security. Personally, I would have preferred the distance that one could shoot a gun to ensure the safety of a woman, but I do understand that 150 metres is a reasonable distance.

Again, having said this, many people go to clinics every day, and no one hassles them as they go to get a medical, a cancer treatment, or a prescription for Viagra. My question is: why is it that someone becomes a uterus control person when it comes to my or somebody else's body, in fact so much so that we have to create a safety bubble around a facility which addresses the needs of my uterus? It is none of your business.

Now I will reflect back to my statement about how those miscarriages were not my choice. They were the choice of a uterus control person who wanted to control every facet of my life. I don't want that to happen to anybody else. I don't want that to happen to any woman who's seeking medical treatment for whatever reason. It's none of your business, just as it is none of my business if you're going to get a prescription for Viagra.

I will stand here, and I support the member's amendment for 150 metres. Again, I'd like it to be further, but I do think that I'm a fairly reasonable person, so I stand in support of that amendment.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to thank the Member for Lethbridge-East for her comments, especially with regard to Viagra prescriptions. At least she could get up in the House. Do I need to say anything else?

I certainly appreciate a lot of her comments. You know, a lot of women go to these clinics not just to seek abortions, but they go for miscarriages. These are not just purely about abortion even. They are in many cases just going to deal with other issues around pregnancy. I certainly respect their right to privacy and to not be harassed and to be able to go about their business peacefully.

Now, I said in the debate last night that every debate is balancing competing interests and competing rights, and no one right absolutely trumps all other rights without any regard for balance. You know, different members here put different weight on different rights, but I think we're well served to remember that every right is weighed in contrast to other rights that it is conflicting with.

I have an amendment to put forward here that does not deal, necessarily, with the substance or even the merits of the bill but, I think, just seeks to improve its wording. Actually, members who support or don't support the bill itself should generally be supportive of this amendment. I believe that it just seeks to clarify some wording and make it easier for the law to be carried out.

I will table this now to the pages.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A2.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you. I will read the amendment into the record. I move that Bill 9, Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act, be amended as follows. In part A section 2 is amended by striking out subsection (2) and substituting the following:

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply to the following persons, while those persons are carrying out their duties:

- (a) police officers;
- (b) persons empowered to enforce a bylaw under the Municipal Government Act, a provision of the Municipal Government Act or a provision of other enactment that a municipality is authorized to enforce.

In part B section 3(2) is amended by striking out clause (b) and substituting the following:

- (b) the persons referred to in section 2(2), while those persons are carrying out their duties.

This amendment does not change the substance of the bill. It does not change the merits or demerits of the bill. It preserves it intact. But it is a rather technical amendment that I think is just better legislation regardless of what one thinks of the merits of this bill.

In essence, the bill does have roles for police officers in the enforcement of the act that the government is proposing here, Bill 9. What this amendment seeks to do is to ensure that the same rules apply to municipal bylaw officers. As I said, if anything, it actually strengthens the bill, probably, from the government's perspective, but even for those of us who do not believe it strikes the appropriate balance, I think it's just good legislative writing.

I've consulted on this with municipalities in my constituency and with legal experts. This takes away no powers from the police or powers that the government is proposing to give the police to enforce the act, which ensures that municipal bylaw officers are also able to carry out their duties fully without being worried about stepping over the law here. I think we would generally recognize that a legal matter of this nature can also be dealt with, at least in many circumstances, by municipal bylaw officers. If it's a circumstance that's more serious, obviously we would have police involvement. But I think that in many of the cases, we would generally agree that municipal bylaw officers are capable of carrying it out, and if that's appropriate, they should be covered by this legislation as well.

I would welcome feedback and comment from members on all sides of the House, and I hope that they support this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and I want to sincerely thank the Member for Strathmore-Brooks for engaging in the parliamentary process that we are so proud to have the opportunity to do here. I know that that isn't the case, necessarily, for everyone in this House, so I appreciate that he's taken the time to bring forward something that he thinks can improve this legislation and that he's taken the time to consider it and vote on it as well. Again, I want to say that I respect that.

Always when I look at an amendment to a piece of government legislation, my first question is: does this honour the intent of the original bill, and is this going to help us make the bill or hurt us in making the bill? I can say that I think this honours the intent of the original bill. I think that it's exciting to see an amendment that – this isn't the way it's worded in other jurisdictions that we've used as our template, but I think this certainly doesn't impede or hurt our ability to do so enforcement. With that as my sort of guide, I think this honours the intent of the bill and that this won't be damaging in any way. I think this says to me and, hopefully, to all members of this caucus that this is something that we can certainly move on in good conscience moving forward.

While I don't always agree with the member – actually, I rarely agree with the member – I have to say that I do agree that it's important for us to come here every day and represent our constituents and the people we're here to serve. I have the honour of being able to do that with sort of guiding values around – you know, I mentioned the other day that I walk into this place and I see “Now That We Are Persons.” And now that we are persons, we can create laws to help other women and to help make a more just society.

I think that this is a reasonable amendment, and I am happy to speak in support of it and encourage not just my colleagues but colleagues from other caucuses as well, I'd say, to consider voting for this amendment. I think it's fair and reasonable. I think it gives additional protections, confidence to the police without compromising the safety of the women accessing these zones. I certainly think that this could be a very useful amendment, and I would encourage not just colleagues in my caucus but in all caucuses to consider supporting this amendment from the member.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

[Motion on amendment A2 carried unanimously]

The Chair: We are back on the bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, that was weird. I'm not really used to this. It feels good to finally win one, although it will damage my record of being the member with most votes against the NDP, for which I'm sad. But I'm not sure if it counts when the NDP get to vote with me. It felt great. But no, I want to thank the members who were present for the vote for supporting the previous amendment. I think it improves the bill. As I said, it was a rather technical change still preserving the intent of the bill.

You know, in many ways there is a lot in the bill I could support. I do believe that the balance is wrong. I don't believe it's appropriate for a bill to target one specific group generally not liked by the government of the day, but there are still laudable intentions, I think, behind the bill.

Some of the amendments I'll be bringing forward, I have to say, probably don't have the greatest chance of getting accepted by the government but I think are necessary to make regardless. Some of them, like the previous one, I am hopeful will receive the support of government and other opposition members as we seek to, even if we don't always agree with the bill, at least make the bill better from a technical and legislative standpoint. I've got binders full of amendments, Madam Chair, and I'll be bringing some forward here.

My next amendment – well, here. I'll just distribute it to the House and pages before I speak to it.

The Chair: Amendment A3.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. As I was saying before I distributed the amendment before the members right now, this amendment is put forward with the intention of simply just better legislative writing. I know that the public servants who put in a lot of work in writing bills are professional and second to none. I was very surprised to learn that Parliamentary Counsel is not paid by the hour. If they were paid by the hour, they'd be racking up the overtime with what my office has put them through.

You know, I've learned a lot about the parliamentary process as an independent, and while I don't think it's practical, I think that all members should try six months as an independent. You really learn the way this place works. I don't think many are going to take me up on the offer, but you learn quite a bit about the actual functionality of this place and parliamentary process when you've got to do the heavy lifting. Frankly, the heavy lifting has been done by my staff, which has been incredible, and by Parliamentary Counsel, who have probably really gotten sick of me by this point, but they've been excellent here in helping to write legislation that just improves upon existing bills, again, if we agree with the intent or balance of the bill or not.

Some of the other amendments I'll put forward are dealing more with the substance of the bill, its appropriate balance as a piece of legislation, but this amendment before the members right now is in the same spirit as the last amendment that I put forward and was accepted. I'll read it for members now. I move that Bill 9, Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act, be amended as follows. In part A section 1 is amended by adding the following after clause (e):

(e.1) "journalistic purpose" means communications by a publisher, writer or reporter for a newspaper, news magazine, television broadcaster or radio broadcaster, as the case may be, that is of general and regular circulation or broadcast for the purpose of disseminating information to the public;

In part B the following is added after section 1:

Application

1.1 Sections 2(1)(c), 3 and 5(1)(a) and (b) do not apply to a person communicating for a journalistic purpose.

The purpose of this is just to clarify that journalists will still be able to do their business in covering the issues of the day without being considered a protester. This is very carefully worded. You know, we have the phenomenon of activist journalism, and the intent of this is not to include activist journalism.

Now, it's always very dangerous if a government tries to define journalism. I don't think that's a proper role of government. It's a very dangerous road to go down, a slippery slope. This is not intended for every blogger with a keyboard or camera. This is defined here . . .

Ms Hoffman: Aren't you defining it right now?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, no.

The government should not be picking and choosing who is a journalist but that we have a broad definition that's not so broad that it's everyone with a keyboard. It is defined here as "a newspaper, news magazine, television broadcaster or radio broadcaster, as the case may be." I think it would be fair to say that, for the most part, that does not cover citizen journalism or activist journalism. Those are very legitimate forms of journalism. They tend to be, obviously, much more politically slanted, and there's a real place for that, and they should never be silenced. But the goal of this should be that the objective journalistic organizations which cover the news shouldn't be considered protesters.

If an activist organization is covering a protest here and filming that, I believe that the wording of this amendment would not exclude them from the bill, that they would not be able to do so. I think one of the most horrible things that some people can do in these protests is to film individual people and try to shame individual people. Regardless of how you feel about abortion, attacking an individual woman once she's already made that decision is not going to advance the cause and, frankly, takes away from what they're trying to achieve and is very uncompassionate. So I think that stopping photographers and cameras from filming women entering these facilities is a laudable goal.

I know what it's like, actually, to have journalists pry into your home. I've had the CBC parked outside of my house with cameras pointed into my windows, where my wife and baby child were. The CBC parked outside of my home, prying into my windows, and that's not appropriate. No one wants to deal with that. You know, it often comes with this business, and we have to deal with it, but I don't think that individual women accessing an abortion clinic should be subject to that. They're not public figures. That is harassment of one of the most disgusting types, so I want them to be protected from that.

I think that most nonactivist or citizen news organizations are certainly not engaging in that. They would not, with the wording of this amendment, be able to film individual people entering or exiting an abortion clinic or women's health centre of some kind that's covered in the legislation, but they would be able to otherwise go about their business. Hypothetically, if the building had been broken into or graffitied or, say, there had been a strike or, say, they added to the size of the building or upgraded the building and there was legitimate news to be covered about the facility, then it would not be unreasonable or intrusive for journalists to do their job and to take some film of the facility.

I've never seen a news organization ever take film or photos of a woman entering or exiting an abortion clinic. It's always been in the nature of B-roll, where there are a couple of cars rolling by and maybe a bird in the background. It's very objective. I've never seen a news organization film individual women entering or exiting one of these clinics, so I don't think it's been abused by the media to date, and I don't think it would be abused in the future. But I think it's an important aspect to take note of when we're writing legislation like this.

I do not believe it takes away from the intent of the bill and what the government is trying to achieve here. I think it's trying to clarify that, you know, if the CBC, CTV, Global were to set up a camera across the street and take some B-roll film in the background, not filming individual people entering or exiting the clinic, I don't think that constitutes a protest. I don't think that constitutes harassment, blocking an entrance. I don't think it fits the definition of any of that. So I would submit this to members on all sides of this House for due consideration. This is not changing the intent of the bill in one direction or another. Again, it's an amendment of a largely technical nature that seeks to, I think, better clarify the wording of the bill to make sure it doesn't do things that it's not intended to do. I do not believe that the intention of this bill would be to stop Global News from filming B-roll outside of a clinic, not featuring any individuals entering or exiting.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, I appreciate the amendment you're bringing forward, and certainly my colleagues do as well. I think that one of the big questions for the ages here is: what is journalistic purpose? Certainly, you mentioned that the goal of this is not to allow special-interest groups who call themselves media to have the kind of access that protesters have. But the fact is that you are not making that call, and these folks are out there. The idea is that antiabortion media – if you google “antiabortion media,” what will come up is a list as long as your arm of folks in this country who have media outlets that they call media but whose sole purpose is to disseminate misinformation about women’s reproductive rights.

You know, first of all, that’s a concern because you’re not going to be able to make a comprehensive list of who is mainstream media and who isn’t mainstream media. Now, I will certainly say that anyone who wants to go out there and call themselves mainstream media then has the opportunity to argue that they’re journalists and they’re exempt from the rules that other people have to follow. That’s concerning because the definition of media is so broad.

I can tell you that I was a journalist for 24 years, and at no time in that 24 years – and I covered many stories, many stories at clinics – did I ever hang around outside a clinic looking for a story. Mainstream media will pick up the phone, whether it’s our assignment editor or we’re doing the work ourselves, and we will make a phone call to the clinic and say, “We’re coming down to do a story or an interview,” and we will book an appointment. It’s called consent. That’s a thing that we do in the media. In all the stories that I covered at clinics, we booked appointments, we went down, we did interviews, we got our B-roll, and if we were ever in a situation where the only thing we were looking at was B-roll, we went to the clinic and shot the B-roll.

A buffer or a bubble zone would have absolutely no effect on a mainstream media outlet’s ability to carry out their job. So this is, first of all, unnecessary in the sense that it doesn’t intrude on mainstream media in any way at all. Secondly, what it does is that it creates a window of opportunity for antiabortion groups to come and to do their harassment within the bubble zone.

Now, I will say that, certainly, when women are accessing a clinic, they don’t show up at a clinic with a chart to show everybody outside what it is they’re going in for, nor should they. What happens is that women go into these clinics for many-layered reasons, and when they go into these clinics, these groups then have an opportunity to not only take pictures of them, whether it’s video and photographs, but to use them in any way, shape, or form they want. That is chilling. What you see when that happens is that these women are going in during an intensely personal, painful, emotional, vulnerable point in their lives to have whatever discussion or procedure they plan to have within that clinic, and this would allow these special-interest groups to stand within the bubble zone and to get images of them to do with whatever they want.

Now, we have lots of media groups, as we’re very familiar with in this country, who call themselves mainstream media, who clearly are not. They have agendas. And to actually have to make a list of who is mainstream media and who isn’t would be an impossible task to do.

You know, I understand what you are explaining, that the whole goal is to make sure that mainstream media can cover stories. I appreciate the goal of the amendment. I will say that I consider it a bit naive. I know, Member, you’re probably not going to hear people describe you that way a lot, but I will. I will say that, certainly, if the goal is to make sure that the media can still tell their story, there is absolutely nothing to stop them from talking about these issues the way they have always done, by making a phone call, by booking an interview, or by simply going to a clinic the way they have ever since I can remember – and I’ve been around a long time – and shooting the footage respectfully and using it respectfully like they have done so far.

While I appreciate the effort, I will say that I find the implications of this amendment frightening, and I know that’s not what you intended. At the end of the day, it endangers the people who use the facility, the staff, and anyone in that proximity. So I will urge my colleagues to vote down this amendment because I believe that in no way at this time are the efforts of the mainstream media or their attempts to cover stories hampered in any way, shape, or form, and I think this amendment, if accepted, would open the door to a frightening possibility of some very negative interactions happening at these clinics.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-North West for her comments. You know, I think she is correct that if essentially anyone with a camera and keyboard can call themselves a journalist or media now – and sometimes that’s positive; sometimes, perhaps, it’s not. There is left-wing citizen or activist journalism, and there is right-wing citizen and activist journalism, and some people who just want to blog about the issues of the day without a particular agenda but who would probably not be considered mainstream media.

I take her comments well here, but I have to disagree with how she believes this would be applied. You know, she spoke to her time in the media – I believe it was CTV for some time – and that, in her experience, never once did they send a CTV camera to one of these clinics without first consulting them and letting them know that they were coming. If I understood her correctly, they certainly never captured the images of any individual people entering or exiting these facilities. It was carried out respectfully and reasonably. It was not used to target or harass or shame an individual person. That’s the way it’s already been taking place for media outlets. This bill, however, would at least legally stop the media from respectfully and even consensually taking what amounts to B-roll footage outside of a clinic.

Journalists who are covering this story, at least for television, that I’ve seen have been respectful. The footage I’ve seen on television is footage from the Legislature, and B-roll footage was used. I haven’t seen anyone in the media, activist or mainstream, that has used images of individual women entering or exiting these facilities. So it’s actually been used respectfully.

Now, individual people may at some point have tried to use their cameras to capture images of and shame individual women, and it’s beneath contempt for anyone to do that. But in the experience that she’s pointed to, they never showed up unannounced at one of these clinics with a camera and ambushed anybody. It was respectful; it was consensual. They called in advance. That’s the way it should be, and that’s the way I envision it going forward. But the way this legislation presently reads, that wouldn’t be the case.

Now, in practicality it is likely that, you know, if a media outlet contacted a clinic in advance and said that they wanted to come and capture some B-roll footage, I think it’s probably fair to say that the clinic would not call the police or bylaw officers to come and do something about it and enforce this bill, but the bill still could be enforced if it is passed in the present wording. It is unlikely that the clinic would call the police or bylaw officers on a media crew that at least have their consent to be there, but legally speaking, they would not be allowed to be there even to film B-roll footage that doesn’t single out or identify any individual woman.

So the purpose of this amendment is to clarify this so that it’s very clear. I think if someone who called themselves a journalist or called themselves media were to show up there and take images of an individual woman entering or exiting the facility, that would still constitute a violation of the bill because it would be used for the purposes of harassment or intimidation or shaming, and the bill is still clear that that would be illegal. That's one part of the bill that I really agree with, that you should not be allowed to film people entering or exiting these facilities. It's contemptable. That is probably the part of the bill that I would agree with the most. But it's important that if a news organization is simply going to take some B-roll footage of the facility without the intention or result of harassing, identifying, or shaming anyone, then it's perfectly reasonable for them to do so.

As the Member for Calgary-North West has said, when she was a journalist, she would always call in advance or her colleagues would call in advance, and they always did so in a respectful way. Perhaps members of the gallery can send me a direct message if I'm wrong, but I can't remember any time that CTV or Global or CBC has ever used individual images on their programs of a particular woman or doctor entering or exiting one of these clinics. It simply, as far as I'm aware, has not happened in Canada as long as I can remember.

So I would ask that members give this amendment due consideration. It is an amendment of a rather technical nature, not changing the intent of the bill, not even changing the weight in which it leans one direction or another, but simply clarifying some of the language around this so that, you know, journalists can still do their business in the respectful way that they generally do.

Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 12

Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. In respect to Bill 12, Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act, the bill is a result of a set of extraordinary circumstances, and the situation it seeks to rectify will hopefully be very short lived. It's a shame that it had to come to this, but here we are.

As I understand it, the industry is generally supportive of the bill because they understand the importance of taking actions to ensure that Alberta producers get the maximum return on Alberta's natural resources. But the power to arbitrarily dictate to whom and how products are shipped should not exist in perpetuity. As such, I propose an amendment to Bill 12. If the pages would like to come and collect it. Let me know when you'd like me to go ahead.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A1.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Ms McPherson: I move that Bill 12, Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act, be amended by adding the following after section 13:

Repeal and continuation

14(1) Subject to subsection (2), this Act is repealed 2 years after the date on which it comes into force.

(2) Where in the opinion of the Legislative Assembly it is in the public interest of Alberta to extend the date of the repeal of this Act, the Legislative Assembly may adopt a resolution to extend the date.

This amendment adds what is commonly referred to as a sunset clause. It means that all provisions of the bill will expire on December 31, 2022, unless the Legislature extends the bill or if there are other circumstances. This will provide industry with assurances that the power to arbitrarily dictate to whom and where and when they sell their product will only continue so long as the Legislature approves it to continue. Given the power that the government is granted with this bill, it's reasonable to place a limitation on that power. At the very least, the Legislature will need to reaffirm that power, or if it has served its purpose, the power will revert to how things are today.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to thank the hon. member for this amendment. Looking at it, it looks reasonable to me. Two years is a reasonable time, and then there is the ability to revisit it should, at that time, circumstances dictate that we keep it. If not, you know, as this pipeline is done, we may look at others. This legislation isn't just directed in one direction; it's all directions.

We think this is reasonable, and I would encourage all members of the House to support this amendment.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to thank the government for their support. I was actually on a flight from Calgary to Edmonton this morning, and I sat beside a gentleman from London, Ontario. His name was Richard. He didn't know what I did for a living, and he said: "What about that pipeline? When are you going to get it built?" We had a really good conversation. It's broadly recognized across the country how integral this pipeline is to the economic security of our entire country. There are certainly times in the Assembly when we need to put aside partisanship, and this is definitely one of those times. In an effort to ensure that a pipeline that is in the best interests of the entire country goes ahead, this bill is important, but it also is very powerful.

I'm really very grateful for the support. You know, working together, we can make great things happen for a great province. Again I just want to extend my thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill for bringing the amendment forward and the hon. Minister of Energy for accepting it. She got the jump on me. I was going to bring forward a very similar amendment to this and give the government four years before it expired. Perhaps I was trusting in government a bit too much. But I think the point is very well, that these are extraordinary circumstances and these are extraordinary powers. We should always be very cautious about giving government powers that are largely arbitrary in nature. I think that under the circumstances that we're in, they are appropriate powers but that powers like this have a sunset clause. So while I was going to propose four years, I think two years is even better because if we still need them in two years, we're in a whole other host of trouble.

I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill for bringing this forward and encourage all members to support it.

5:30

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you so much. Now, this is fun. I have to say that I appreciate that the member – because last night I think he wanted to amend a section that we already had an amendment to amend so that he could amend the same section if that amendment passed.

I think his idea of looking at other time frames is something that merits discussion. I think this is worded as two years. Maybe we land on 25 months, or maybe we land on 23 months, or maybe we land on something else. That being said, I actually think that this could be an opportunity for us to consider other timelines.

That being said, I'm going to actually encourage my colleagues to consider voting against this so that we can consider other timelines. Thank you very much to the Member for Strathmore-Brooks for his contributions to the debate and helping us to consider those other opportunities.

Thank you.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Chair, we are in the twilight zone. I don't want my amendment to pass. The amendment from Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill is better. As much as I would like the credit perhaps for getting the bill amended, I think that two years is much more appropriate than four. I really don't know what the heck to say.

I prefer four years over having no sunset clause, but I don't know what to do anymore. If the government members vote it down, I will bring forward my amendment of four years, but I encourage all members not to make it necessary for me to bring forward my amendment. The Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill's two-year timeline, I think, is eminently superior.

Two years from now will be after the next election, in all likelihood. There may or may not be a new government. I'm sure that members opposite don't think that's possible. You know, I think that in two years, if the government still needs to have these powers, then we're into probably a much graver step in this crisis. If those powers are still needed, I think all members here would be happy, when everyone here is re-elected exactly as they are, to renew the mandate of this bill. I certainly would be if those powers were still required, but it is a bill with very significant and, admittedly, arbitrary powers, and we should always be careful when granting government arbitrary powers. In this case I do because I think we all share the intentions of what the government wants to achieve here.

Two years I think is certainly an ample amount of time for this bill to go before it requires renewal by this House, so I would strongly encourage members to support the amendment from the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill. It's eminently better than my amendment of four years. I beg members: don't vote for my amendment; vote for the amendment from the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm really struck by the saying: politics makes strange bedfellows. It's not often that I find myself in agreement with the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, but in the last couple of weeks I think I've said, "Oh, good for him" and "I could just hug him," which is unusual.

I just want to reiterate why I think the timeline is important. This is a bill that grants a lot of power, and it is important given the circumstances that we're in right now. With the pipeline being in jeopardy, it is really important for the government to have the tools that it needs in order to be able to put the province in the best possible negotiating position to ensure that the pipeline is completed.

Those powers in perpetuity are actually very concerning. It is possible for a government in the future to use these powers in a way that wouldn't necessarily be in the best interests of the province or the producers in the province, and that would certainly not be in the best interests of the country either. That's why we came up with two years. Two years is, I believe, an ample amount of time to resolve the current position that we find ourselves in. It allows the government to do the things it needs to do, and it gives the government the tools that are required in order to be able to resolve the situation but doesn't give them those powers forever. In the eloquent words of my colleague from Strathmore-Brooks I think two years is a reasonable amount of time. It's sufficient to get the job done, and it also ensures that the powers of the government are limited in the future.

For those reasons, I would like to encourage my colleagues to please vote in favour of the amendment.

The Chair: Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll speak to the amendment. You know, it's really difficult to enact this bill itself because we don't want to be doing this at all. We don't want to enforce this bill because it does give extraordinary powers and it could actually be hurtful to not only British Columbia but to Alberta. With that said, because we have to think about the consequences of this bill and the good things that could come of this bill, we have to think about what this amendment does as well. We shouldn't take this amendment lightly as well. As the Deputy Premier said, maybe we need to take some more time to think about if we need to have timelines or what specific timelines we should have on a sunset clause, if you will.

You know, it does give the minister extraordinary powers, but we have to be clear as well that companies would not be automatically required to apply for an export licence either. They would only be required to do so if the minister deems it appropriate. As per the bill, section 2(3) of the legislation, the first step in the process is actually for the minister to determine whether requiring an export licence “is in the public interest.” I think that’s a key phrase right there: in the public interest. I think we can say that about the amendment on the table right now: is it in the public interest?

The criteria that would be established for determining the licence include several things, too: “whether adequate pipeline capacity exists to maximize the return on crude oil and diluted bitumen produced in Alberta,” the method by which these resources may be exported from Alberta, and many other criteria.

We have to understand, too, Madam Chair, as I said, that we don’t take this legislation lightly, but we also didn’t start this fight either, did we? We didn’t start this fight at all. You know, this government has been playing by the rules from day one. We had this pipeline in our sights from day one. With the climate leadership plan a big part of that was getting approval for the pipeline in the first place. That was the big first step. As I’ve said before, you know, we wouldn’t be here right now if it weren’t for the climate leadership plan. Let’s face it; we wouldn’t be talking about shovels in the ground.

I guess that’s part of the reason why we don’t want to necessarily support this amendment at this time either, because we understand the criticality of the pipeline, and we understand how important this piece of legislation actually is to Alberta. You know, there’s deep frustration that we have felt as a government in playing by the rules and getting approval for the pipeline, and then we see the blatant hypocrisy happening in British Columbia right now with their own pipeline going up the coast with jet fuel. The other hypocritical piece of that is that the pension plan is invested in pipelines, Kinder Morgan. Isn’t that shocking?

You know, the B.C. government can’t continue to impact Alberta’s economy, and we just don’t know how long the government is going to be required to enforce the statutes in Bill 12. Is it going to take a day? Are they going to succumb? Probably not. Is it going to take a month? I mean, we’ll keep fighting. We’ll keep fighting every court challenge. Do we need to bring more legislation in? Maybe we do, but this is a really good first step. I don’t think at this point we can actually say: “Two years is sufficient. We’ll have this taken care of. The minister doesn’t need to make these crucial decisions on pipeline capacity and whether to withhold pipelines and whether to grant licences to producers of all sorts of energy, natural gas, bitumen.”

So at this time I don’t think we can support it, but I will be happy to sit down at some point and discuss more about what should be the timeline on this. I mean, should it be indefinite? Perhaps that is what we need to do. Are we not going to face this type of resistance to pipelines in the future? I think we just might. I mean, it seems to be what’s happening in British Columbia right now, so maybe we actually need to have an indefinite timeline on this so that at any time the B.C. government will understand that the Minister of Energy will have the ability to turn off the taps.

We saw how much the price of gas is in the Lower Mainland right now. How’s two bucks, $2.50, $3? Can I go for $4? You know, in a lot of places gas is actually cheaper than a litre of milk. A litre of gas is cheaper than a litre of milk, I’m telling you. Soon it won’t be. It’s going to be very expensive in British Columbia. We don’t want to get there, but we want to have the ability to turn off the taps and make a statement on this.

With that said, Madam Chair, I will not be supporting this. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just feel compelled to maybe review a few things while we’re thinking about this whole bill and just remind us, you know, why we’re here and the nature of what’s in the best interest and that. Bill 12, Preserving Canada’s Economy Prosperity Act. We’re now at Committee of the Whole, and I appreciate the input everybody has had.

Through this bill, Madam Chair, our government is demonstrating that we are standing up for Alberta and a healthy Canadian energy sector, including the working people and men it employs. I’m pleased that we’ve had positive speeches on both sides of the House on this. I cannot think of a more timely and important piece of legislation than what we are about to debate in this Committee of the Whole and when we look at amendments and that. I hope our government will have the support of every single member in this House for this bill. I think most members in this Chamber know why this legislation is needed. Simply put, our existing pipeline capacity is full, there’s no more room in the system, and because of this we face some hard choices.

Alberta all along has played by the rules. We secured federal approval for this pipeline thanks in large part to our climate leadership plan. We have defended the expansion every time it has been taken to court, Madam Chair; 14 out of 14 times we have been successful, each and every time, over the opponents of this pipeline. But the B.C. government has continued to put up roadblocks despite this court action, and the Canadian government has remained slow to defend the decision it made in this area, that falls under, clearly, their jurisdiction.

So it has fallen, Madam Chair, to Alberta to act. Now we must defend all Canadian workers, the Canadian economy, and Alberta’s and Canada’s progress on climate action. Every day the Canadian economy is losing $40 million – $40 million a day – because of the lack of this pipeline capacity and the lack of access to markets. That’s money that we all agree could be supporting jobs, families, social programs, and, incidentally, funding our transition to a low-carbon future.

Alberta’s natural resources are owned by Alberta, but the benefits that those resources provide are shared across the country. There’s no road, there’s no school, there’s no bridge, there’s no hospital, courthouse, seniors’ centre that doesn’t owe something to Alberta’s energy economy. A low-carbon future for Alberta will make it possible for Canada to meet its climate targets. Without progress in Alberta, Madam Chair, Canada will miss those targets by a country mile, and that’s just a fact. So people from every corner of this country who care about the environment should be rooting for this pipeline, not opposing it.

I’m pleased to see that support for this pipeline is rising. Thanks to the work of our Premier, that she has done across the country, people are climbing onboard and realizing what a good project it is. Thanks to the good work of many people in this government, more than two-thirds of Canadians now support the Trans Mountain expansion, but clearly more needs to be done. Our government needs more tools in the tool box to bring this pipeline to fruition, which brings us to the bill before us.

Preserving Canada’s Economic Prosperity Act would give the government the authority to if necessary – and I emphasize if necessary – require any company exporting oil and gas products from Alberta to acquire a licence. It's important to understand a few distinctions about this legislation.

To be clear, companies will not be automatically required to apply for an export licence. They will only be required to do so if it's deemed necessary. As per section 2(3) of the legislation the first step in the process is for me as minister to determine whether requiring export licences is in the public interest. I want to review the criteria for establishing that:

- (a) whether adequate pipeline capacity exists to maximize the return on crude oil and diluted bitumen produced in Alberta,
- (b) whether adequate supplies and reserves of natural gas, crude oil and refined fuels will be available for Alberta's present and future needs.

Should I determine that such a decision would be in the best interest of Albertans, I may then establish some terms and conditions of such a licence. These are outlined in section 4(2) of the legislation. Those conditions may include but are not limited to:

- (a) the point at which the licensee may export from Alberta any quantity of natural gas, crude oil or refined fuels;
- (b) the method by which [these resources] may be exported . . .
- (c) the maximum quantities . . . that may be exported from Alberta during the interval or intervals set out in the licence;
- (d) the maximum daily quantities of natural gas, crude oil or refined fuels that may be exported from Alberta;
- (e) the conditions under which the export . . . of [these resources] may be diverted, reduced or interrupted;
- (f) the period for which the licence is [in effect].

In addition, I may impose different terms or conditions upon a licensee for different types of refined fuels.

I have met with numerous industry leaders in the past several weeks, and I have promised there will be no surprises. While we all know that this legislation will have economic impacts on Alberta companies, the industry leaders that I and others in our government have spoken with absolutely understand this is for the long-term benefit of a healthy and stable energy industry.

We understand the gravity of using this legislation. It is not a step we would take lightly, but we know it is a step we must be prepared to take if necessary. As the Premier has said, we need to ensure Albertans get the best value from the resources that we own, so we will strategically deploy this authority to ensure that we get the best value. This will depend on circumstances at any given time. The bill is crafted so that we can use it quickly when needed.

I want to move on for one moment to discuss not just the need for our pipeline from our end but the demand that exists on the other side of the ocean. It has been suggested by critics that this vital pipeline is not needed because no one overseas wants Alberta oil. They try to suggest that because very little has been exported to Asia from the existing pipeline, this proves that there's no demand.

Well, Madam Chair, we need to set the record straight. In the fall of 2017 I went on a trade mission to Japan, China, and Korea, where it was made very clear to me that importers in these countries are eager to buy our oil, and they cannot understand why Canada cannot deliver it. Companies such as Cosmo Oil of Japan said very clearly that they're interested in diversifying their imports with oil from Canada. In fact, the company has said that it will take 11 to 12 days for Aframax tankers to reach Japan from Vancouver, compared to nearly 30 days for tankers to come from the U.S. Gulf coast via the Panama Canal. That's nearly 20 days' difference in travel time. Of course, that doesn't just mean time; it absolutely means money. Simply put, Asian markets will save money on buying Alberta oil.

Of course, we know that Asian markets want our oil, no matter what some pipeline opponents might say. But more than that, Alberta can offer oil produced under some of the highest standards in the world. Alberta has strict environmental regulations and a climate leadership plan that includes a cap on oil sands emissions, a plan to cut methane emissions by almost half, and a price on carbon. We have oil and gas producers with experience in deploying new technologies designed to reduce their carbon footprint. We have regulations to protect the health and safety of the workers who produce that oil, and we also have legislation and a government committed to defending their human rights as well. We know that a growing number of markets are interested in oil produced according to some basic norms of social and environmental responsibility. Madam Chair, that's something Alberta can deliver.

Currently nearly all the oil produced in western Canada goes to one market, as we know, and that's the U.S. For much of the last decade Canada has been selling to the United States at a discount to the world price for similar oil products. Of course, the U.S. will remain an important market for our Alberta oil exports, but access to tidewater and markets beyond the U.S. will provide producers with more options and the ability to react quickly to market conditions, moving crude supplies to higher priced markets as supply and demand conditions change. It will also ensure that Alberta's crudes, both heavy and light, are able to secure the highest prices.

In closing, Madam Chair, our government understands the great responsibility that comes with this legislation, and that is why we have pursued all options before arriving at this point. We know that there is potential for impacts on Albertans if we are forced to use this legislation. The powers in the legislation are not to be taken lightly. They should not be used cavalierly to score cheap political points at the expense of Alberta energy producers, the workers they employ, or the communities where they're based.

But make no mistake, Madam Chair, that if we need to use these powers, we absolutely will. We are prepared to use every tool at our disposal to defend Albertans, to defend the right of Albertans to get the best possible price for resources we own, to protect public funding for the vital public services all working families rely on, to defend Alberta's and Canada's progress on addressing climate change, and to preserve Alberta's and Canada's economic prosperity.

I look forward to hearing more from the members in the Chamber and to passing this bill, and I look forward to hearing more input on the amendment. It's important, the amendment as well as this bill. We need to get it right, but we all need to get it done, and we need to get it done together.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the Minister of Energy for bringing in this bill and supporting the amendment. As you might have followed the debate in this House and outside of the House, our party and our leader and our caucus colleagues, every one of us, were eagerly waiting for this for more than eight, nine months. We would love to work with the government and everyone in this House to send a unified voice and message to the rest of the world that we are all together in this House working on this bill. If the rogue governments in our neighbouring provinces are trying to attack the livelihood of Albertans, we have to stand together and send them a message.

We know that the government has good intentions to use this judiciously to meet our goal of getting access to tidewater. This is a good tool, and we are hoping the minister and the Premier will use it as soon as possible. To strengthen this further and to contribute our part, I rise to propose a minor amendment. If you don't mind, I'll pass this around.

Madam Chair, we understand that the minister doesn't want to misuse this. She always said that she would be fair. That's what she said. She talked to the stakeholders in Calgary. You know, if the government of B.C. continues to obstruct this pipeline, then we want her and the Premier to be able to use this option of shutting the taps. That's why I'm proposing this minor amendment, and I'm asking everyone in the House to support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any members wishing to speak to subamendment SA1? Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair. I appreciate the member's subamendment, and I have to say that I believe that it makes the amendment much stronger. I believe that our whole caucus will be able to support both the subamendment and the amendment as proposed by the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill if we have the subamendment from the Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Thank you very much for the camaraderie and the working togetherness that we've seen in the past few minutes. I want to thank the member opposite, and I hope that all my colleagues in the House support this subamendment.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the subamendment?

Seeing none, you're ready for the question?

[Motion on subamendment SA1 carried]

The Chair: We're back on amendment A1 as amended. Any other speakers to this amendment?

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: Are there any further speakers to the bill? Any questions, comments, or amendments to Bill 12?

Seeing none, you're ready for the question?

[The remaining clauses of Bill 12 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Cortes-Vargas: Madam Speaker, I'd just like to ask that we rise and report progress on Bill 9 and report on Bill 12. There's been so much good work done today that I think it's a good point to rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 12. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 9. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the Assembly's records.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, say no. The motion is carried. The Assembly stands adjourned until 7:30 tonight.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: It's a wonderful evening. Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 11

Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2018

[Adjourned debate May 2: Mr. Hunter]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's always a pleasure to rise in the House and comment on legislation. I'm going to keep my comments relatively short here.

We can all agree that lobbying, the process of lobbying is not a bad thing, but we can also all agree that Albertans deserve to know who is actually lobbying their government. Of course, the main aim of the amendments that are being presented right now, in fact, is that we want to have an open, transparent government. That means that Albertans indeed know who these stakeholders or lobbyists are that are actually trying to influence decisions that the government is making. We're confident that the proposed changes will increase transparency without creating additional barriers to government access on issues that matter. I mean, it's really important for the stakeholders in our society and, of course, organizations to be able to have access to the government so that they can give their opinions on pieces of legislation that we're considering.

I was really happy to participate in the actual review of the Lobbyists Act through the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship. We appreciate the commitment and the hard work that all members contributed towards the review of the Lobbyists Act. We can't forget that the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee was part of that as well, which I had the privilege of sitting on. Of course, all of the information that was done by the members of that committee was then passed on to the Resource Stewardship Committee for further consideration.

I truly believe that members on this side of the House, members on the other side of the House that participated on both of those committees had ample opportunity to be able to reflect on the issues that were brought before the committees, the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, of course, as well as the Resource Stewardship Committee. We really think that we struck a good balance here to be able to provide that openness and transparency that Albertans are looking for and rightly deserve from their government.

I would highly suggest that all members on each side of the House vote in favour of this bill. I'll leave it at that, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Strankman: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, sir. It's a fine spring night to be discussing ethics, accountability, and democracy, particularly with the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, with his previous experience regarding democracy and its presentation in a new democratically governed area. I'd ask if the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie could expound upon his previous depth of experience in regard to the demonstration of democracy, particularly beyond his experience on the Resource Stewardship Committee and the special ethics committee.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. As I've mentioned in the House before, my family and I fled the violence that occurred on September 11, 1973, in the nation of Chile. We all know that on that very day there was a ruthless dictatorial regime that decided to bring an end to democracy in the nation of Chile. Of course, it had an incredible impact on many Chileans that ended up having to flee from the nation at that time. I can tell you as a fact that Chileans ended up going all over the world as a result of what happened on that day.

For that reason, transparency and openness of government and making sure that they follow democratic process, that people in society feel that they have a way of connecting with their government and making sure that their government is truly representing what their aims are and especially their values – that is the goal of this Alberta NDP government, making sure that we're doing things like implementing a $15 minimum wage, things that people have actually requested from this government, making sure that we're implementing the pilot program for $25 a day daycare.

We all know that families in this province find it very difficult to find affordable daycare. That's something that I've heard substantially from constituents in my own riding. It's really important that we remember that women feel the brunt of this, unfortunately, because they're the ones who are saying to themselves: well, if I go to work and more than half of my wage ends up going to child care, I might as well just stay at home.

As a result, we have an incredible number of these very capable, intelligent, and giving women here in the province of Alberta that feel forced to actually stay at home rather than join the workforce. We all know that once they do join the workforce, well, that's a contribution to our great province here. Of course, I've heard it said by many that for every dollar that we invest in daycare, we actually see $1.65 in return through the actual revenue through income tax that ends up coming back to the government.

These things that we're hearing from Albertans, the things that they want their government to do: this is what true democracy is really all about. How we're providing access and opportunity so that we can move forward together as a province: this is what true democracy is really all about.

For me it's so important, coming from the history that I've come from, that we listen to Albertans, that we're out there on the doorsteps listening and consulting with people, hearing what they have to say. Of course, that's what this Lobbyists Act is really all about. Perhaps in the past – and I can't speak in all instances, you know – stakeholders seemed to have the ear of the previous government, I would say, more so than the actual constituents. The MLAs, the cabinet ministers, the people that they were here to represent were hearing more from particular lobbyists, and the process wasn't necessarily as open and transparent as Albertans would want it to be.

This is really important. These amendments that we're making right now are truly important so that we can make sure that we have a strong democracy here in the province of Alberta as we continue to move forward, so that we can continue . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 11, the Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2018. I'm pleased to say that I think it's an important bill. Lobbying is truly part of the conversation that needs to happen between citizens and government at various levels, so I think it is an important act. I realize that the act did go through the process of the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship. Quite frankly, I think more bills should go through that process. They would probably come out as much better bills if they did. When they get rushed and that committee process gets skipped, too often things go awry.

I think having the bill put through the committee was an excellent process and has resulted in some good steps. Many of the recommendations actually came in that process from the office of the Ethics Commissioner, who has the authority to administer as well as enforce the Alberta Lobbyists Act and the Alberta Lobbyists Act general regulation as well. As I move forward, just for shortness I'll refer to the office of the Ethics Commissioner as the OEC, just to keep it simple.

This piece of legislation does make a variety of changes to this act, and I will be supporting it. As I've said, I think it's a good piece of legislation. However, I think there are some questions yet that could be asked, some follow-up questions from the committee work. Some of what was recommended there and picked up and some of what was recommended and not picked up is interesting.

Most of the recommendations from the OEC are based on improving transparency and reducing confusion for lobbyists who have to file returns with the OEC and comply with the regulations. I do believe that accountability is essential to a healthy democracy. There need to be clear checks and balances put in place to ensure that the interests of the public really do come before government, that they are heard, and that the public is given a fair opportunity to speak but not an unfair opportunity to influence. We are certainly in favour of supporting any measure that improves transparency and accountability and that relationship, as I've spoken of.

One of the OEC's recommendations that I guess you could say was partially successful was the recommendation to remove the 100-hour threshold altogether. That's been partially acted on. Instead of removing it, though, the threshold has just been reduced from 100 to 50 hours, and then as well the prep time was included in the 50 hours, which didn't use to be the case before. I would be interested to know, I guess, why the 100-hour threshold wasn't just removed altogether since that's what the OEC had asked for and suggested. But what we've got is an improvement, no doubt. I guess my question is: is the OEC satisfied with the way this has come out? Will this be workable for them? I think that's important.

I think another area of related concern might be: what impact will these changes have, particularly on the smaller organizations, the smaller groups that previously didn't fall under the Lobbyists Act? They will now, and quite frankly many times the paperwork, the bureaucratic process, all of the steps that have to be complied with are much more difficult for smaller groups. I would hate to see that this has the unintended effect of just really pushing the lobbying efforts onto just the big professional organizations, even the professional lobbyists. I think the closer you come to grassroots, the better off we are. I guess that's a concern that I would have and something that I would want to make sure was not happening.

As well, I'd like to just comment on the piece about contingency fee payments. I think this is an important piece. The OEC recommended that consultant lobbyists should not be allowed to accept clients on a contingency basis; in other words, essentially have them on retainer. They felt that lobbyists should be facilitators and not have remuneration attached to success. I think the intention of attaching payment to success in a way defeats the effect of this whole thing. The point is that they should be acting with the utmost of integrity and transparency, and when their fee depends on how successful they are, then the motivation to maybe use methods that aren't entirely transparent, the motivation to do whatever it takes to get paid is somewhat challenging, I think. So I guess that's a bit of a concern for me.

I also want to comment on the bit about grassroots communication. I think this is important. Grassroots communication now falls within the definition of lobbying. It refers essentially to when organizations try to communicate with the general public or with individuals. Not having been a member of the actual committee that discussed this, I do have a real question here on, I think, something that needs to be a concern to all of us in this modern day and age. I don't really see anything in here in that regard, particularly with regard to the grassroots communication out to the general public.

With regard to Internet, social media, the use of computer bots, as we all know, around the world, beginning in the U.S. and other places, there have been massive, massive efforts to sway public opinion, to influence voters and policy-makers. I think there needs to be some thought given to: are we aware, and are we setting up the kind of regulations that will protect us from some of the influence and influence peddling that happen in the social media world? We have some of that already happening here in Alberta, where, quite frankly, officials of all types are being heavily lobbied via social media and e-mails and other things, sometimes not always with integrity, sometimes, in fact, in the name of other officials and other individuals when those other officials and individuals do not even know that their name has been attached to that.

I think there are real challenges and concerns in this whole area of digital communications and, particularly, lobbying at the grassroots level. How do we keep that honest? How do we keep that truthful? How do we know who's even doing it? How do we make sure that the kind of people that appear to be speaking to individuals are actually the people that it appears to be? In many cases it's not. I think this is a really sort of – I don't know what word I want to say – the cutting edge of the reality of our world. Although “cutting edge” has the implication often of being positive and where we should be going, this is the wrong direction. It's cutting edge in the wrong way.

We really need to be thinking about: how do we address and incorporate into the definition of lobbying and even the regulations of lobbying with regard to digital and even anonymous communications and, quite frankly, even communications that may come from outside of our country? These things are very real in our world and something that I think needs to be addressed. Maybe a further review of this act at some point will be required in order to do that. I raise that as a very serious question that has not been addressed and, I think, really does need to be addressed. Probably the sooner the government is thinking about it and looking into it with a very close magnifying glass, it would be a very good thing.

There are a couple of things that the OEC did ask for that did not make it into the bill, and maybe some explanation in regard to some of those things would be helpful. The recommendation that current semiannual registration filing should be changed to annual did not make it into the bill. I just wonder why, if that should be in there. It would certainly cut down on the work of the OEC. I don't know that it would necessarily cut down on their ability to actually monitor or not because there are other kinds of things that would take care of that. An important question, I think.

The OEC also asked that the registrar be given the authority to refuse to accept a return when the filer has not paid the administrative penalty. Again, I think there does need to be some penalty involved, and I think that needs to be backed up. It seems like maybe it's not being backed up in this case.

I'm also concerned about the fact that the OEC recommended changes to be made to the section that exempts nonprofits. There are some very large nonprofits in our country. As society evolves toward more nonprofits and nonprofits in some cases being a different kind of organization that even takes on the work that in some cases used to be done by private companies, I think that it's important that nonprofits, quite frankly, if they're going to lobby, should have some reporting requirement. I think that's a loophole. I think that nonprofits do often engage in lobbying. Some of the very large ones, quite frankly, are very aggressive about lobbying. They have full-time paid staff. They raise a lot of money, and they spend a lot of money on their lobbying efforts, and that they should have a free ride raises questions for me. I would much prefer to see something in that regard.

I realize that maybe there was a concern, as I mentioned earlier, about the smaller nonprofits and the burden that would put upon them, but the reality is that if they're not actually actively engaged in lobbying, it probably wouldn't be of a concern to them. I think that's an important piece and something that should be considered as well.

Let's see. What else here? I think I'll leave it at that for now, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity.

The Speaker: Any questions for the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka under 29(2)(a)? The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yeah. I just wanted to get the member to expand a little bit. He talked about, of course, transparency and accountability and how important it is that we have that when it comes to lobbying. I think this is essential to a healthy democracy, to make sure that we have these checks and balances, to make sure that the interests of the public come first.

He talked a bit about the small groups, and I think that there's definitely some concern that small groups, even though they may be trying their best to comply with regulations such as these, may be kind of slipping through the cracks. I think our hopes are that they won't find themselves in a situation where they're on the wrong side of the regulations because, of course, these larger organizations that are more professional lobbyists, that sort of a thing, have the personnel to take care of these regulations and make sure that they're in compliance and track things like how many hours of lobbying they're doing and prep time and that sort of thing. For some of these smaller groups, you know, they may have a hard time keeping track of what each member of the group might be doing at different times, depending on their organizational structure. I think that's kind of a concern as far as how these organizations are going to keep track of this and make sure that they are on the proper side of the legislation.

They could have problems navigating the system, too. I think that sometimes we in the Legislature here become, I guess, somewhat used to dealing with paper and dealing with different parts of the government and the different paperwork that has to be done. Though we might not enjoy it any more than anybody else, we still have to work with that. Some of these organizations may be the same. You know, if you have organizations with people that aren't necessarily computer savvy or used to dealing with bureaucracy and different regulations, again we just want to make sure that they don't fall through the cracks and find themselves on the wrong side of regulations. They may be just simply advocating their concerns to government regarding an area of special interest but not really in a professional way or in a calculated way. Obviously, when you have situations like that, you don't want to have these smaller groups burdened by any kind of investigation or something into their activities if really they meant no harm or just maybe weren't up to date on everything.

Again, the larger groups, of course, the professional lobbyists, I mean, are used to a system similar to this. Of course, the dropping from 100 hours of meeting time to only 50 hours, including prep time: I mean, that is a substantive change, but it's something that these larger organizations probably won't have too much trouble calculating and figuring out. Some of these smaller groups, where they're just volunteers, they're just helping on the side, they're spending a little time in the evenings working for their organization, and they meet a time or two a year with an elected official: of course, that would come into play as far as lobbyists if they were there to, you know, give the government an idea of what they would like to see happen.

I guess, some of the concerns that the member brought up were along those lines, and I just want to maybe have him discuss it just a little bit more as far as making sure that we don't have the issue of these smaller groups ending up in trouble for something that they may not have known.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Orr: Yeah. Thanks. I think it is a valid concern. I've already raised it, and I guess, you know, that raises one of the other recommendations from the OEC that wasn't actually picked up. The OEC had asked for the opportunity or to be given the ability to issue interpretive bulletins, advisory opinions as sort of standing and official documents. I think the ability to issue those kinds of documents would actually go a long ways to helping the smaller groups understand what the rules are, what the regulations are, what the interpretation of various regulations is. So I think that if the Ethics Commissioner had been given that authority, it would have gone a long ways to helping people who don't really do this on an everyday basis understand where the paths lead and what the complexities are and what's safe to do and what's not appropriate to do because some of them, quite frankly, might make mistakes entirely out of innocence. I mean, it's never any excuse in the law, but the reality is that it could happen, so issuing those kinds of bulletins and interpretive opinions would, I think, be very helpful.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 11, the Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2018. You know, there's a lot to like about this bill, and I believe that it raises the issues that we need to consider in a democracy when it comes to this whole process of lobbying and trying to get the ear of the government and trying to have an influence on policy that the government is bringing before a Legislature and before the people.

Mr. Speaker, I think that anybody that's listened to me over the last few years in this Legislature knows that I'm a strong defender of democracy. I believe that it's the best form of government that we've been able to have, and I'm particularly fond of the version that we have in this country. I believe there's a great deal that we can be proud of in this Legislature and in all of the Legislatures across this country.

I know that I have said at various times that occasionally I travel down to the United States, and I can remember being engaged in a conversation with a couple of ladies that I had bumped into. They asked me what I did, and I said that I had just finished being a teacher after 30 years and I had now started a new career as a Member of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. They paused. "Oh, you're a politician." I said, "Yeah," and they said, "Well, you know, when did you get elected?" So I started talking about how I had started to run for political office a year before and started selling memberships and how I'd raised a grand total of $29,000 to run my campaign. They stopped, and they looked at me. They said, "Do you realize that the governor of California, the person that lost in the last election, had to raise $64 million, and they lost?" I said, "You know, I think that one of the values of having the system of democracy that we have is that very normal and very average people have the opportunity to participate and to run for office and to be elected to public office in this country." I can't express how important that is to my vision and my understanding of democracy.

Mr. Speaker, I know that you're wondering: well, how does that fit into this bill? I believe that it does because I think that we can look down south and I think that we can see how much big money runs the political system down in the United States and how often it's hard for politicians to stay away from that big money and how that big money can be intertwined with lobbyists and with that whole issue of trying to get the ear of the government. I believe that there's a lot to be said for this bill before us and how it begins to address this concept of lobbying.

Now, I can remember being in my classroom and having the kids in grade 12 go through and look at this whole idea of lobbying, and one of the things that we would do is that we would look up – for instance, I can remember that on a regular basis Maclean's would come out with a poll that would look at the top 10 lobbyists at the national level. We would look at the types of organizations that were lobbying the government on a regular basis. Many of them had to deal with the economy. Many of them had to deal with sectors of our economy, whether it was mining or forestry or oil. But there were always a few in the top 10 that dealt with some sort of a social issue or an environmental issue, where you could see those groups that had met with the government many, many times. Then we would talk as a class. We would take a look at who some of those lobbying groups were and some of those individuals were. We would look at some of the methods that they would use, and we would talk about some of the legal and illegal methods, and we would look at the pros and the cons and whether we should be straying into the illegal or not. And we would come to an understanding that, in some ways, this is a two-edged sword because when you lobby, you are simply exhibiting and using to the fullest extent your right to freedom of speech and your right to come into contact with the people that make decisions within government.

As private citizens you have the right to lobby and you have the right to try to get the ear of the government, but at the same time, that can't be to the disadvantage of the person or the people of this country and of this province, that Joe Average person. I can remember that we would often send my kids home thinking and ask them to come back the next day and be prepared to talk about many different kinds of issues. One of them might be: to what extent should lobbying be controlled in a democracy?

Well, I bring this up because one of the main reasons that I rise is to speak in favour of this legislation because I believe it increases accountability. Accountability in a democracy is essential. It's essential if you're going to maintain a healthy democracy anywhere in the world. Now, there need to be checks and balances in every democracy. Some of those checks and those balances to the power that we have here in this Legislature are the interest groups and lobby groups because they help to point us back to the interests of the public and that the public should always come first.

Now, we all know that there are caricatures out there of big money and lobbyists that represent big money. To be honest, I believe that is probably a caricature. It's more based on the activities, perhaps, of American politics than I think it is on Canadian. My experience with lobbyists in Alberta in the three or so years that I've been in this Legislature has actually been very positive. We might not always agree, but they come with a position that they're articulating, and it allows me to be able to listen and to hear and to question and, in some cases, to become educated on a particular issue.

I know that as we've looked at the marijuana laws and as we've started to look at the legalization of marijuana and what the impact is going to be and whether we should have stores and how we're going to have those stores, as we've had constituents come in and businesses come in, it's been an education for me. It brings a greater understanding of whatever the issue is.

This specific piece of legislation amends the Alberta Lobbyists Act, which is the piece of legislation that regulates lobbying in Alberta and the lobbying activities in Alberta. I believe that it brings a balance of free and open access to the government but also that it's the public's right to know about who is actually accessing government and who is actually meeting with your elected officials or with the bureaucracy within the government. While at the same time that allows them to be able to provide information and education to the government, it is also a check on that power through transparency and accountability.

Now, this legislation makes a variety of changes to the Lobbyists Act, and these changes come about as a result of, as we've said before, the recommendations to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship and based on recommendations, in many cases, from the office of the Ethics Commissioner, plus other stakeholders. Many of these recommendations, Mr. Speaker, come from the Ethics Commissioner, as I've just said, and they're based on trying to improve the transparency and reduce the confusion that sometimes comes around lobbying and lobbyists that have to file returns with the Ethics Commissioner regarding their activities. This is good.

As I've said many times and I'll continue to say into the future, increased transparency is always a positive step in a democracy because it allows the citizens of this state to be able to know what their government is doing and why they're doing it. I'm sure that all of the various lobbyists across Alberta probably welcome this piece of legislation because there is going to be a reduction in the confusion, hopefully, involved in filing their returns with the Ethics Commissioner.

Well, this legislation defines two main types of lobbyists. The first is a consultant lobbyist. They are likely the type of lobbyist that first comes to mind when you consider it and think of it as a profession. They're individuals who are paid to lobby on any kind of specific issue on behalf of a particular client. Now, the chief purpose of these individuals is to lobby. Currently the consultant lobbyists are automatically required to register with the office of the Ethics Commissioner.

The second type of lobbyist revolves around organizational lobbying. These individuals lobby for a group, an organization that they work for or that they may own or that they are a partner in. Currently organizational lobbyists are required to register if they have combined with anyone else in their organization and they lobby for more than a total of a hundred hours in a year.

The main difference between the organizational lobbyist and the consultant lobbyist is that lobbying is not the sole purpose for the organizational lobbyist. They obviously belong to an organization. They represent perhaps a business or a group of businesses, so it's wider than just simply a lobbying effort.

Now, this legislation changes the threshold for the number of hours in a year that an organizational lobbyist would have to cross in order to be required to register with the Ethics Commissioner. Instead of the previous 100 hours, the number is now 50 hours, and this is where I perhaps have some concerns, Mr. Speaker. My concern is that maybe there'd be an overburden with paperwork on some of the smaller organizations who've not previously fallen into the Lobbyists Act. Because you have a 50-hour threshold before registry is required, you now have a lower threshold, and that actually includes the prep time that they have. So 50 hours of lobbying, including prep time, as you can probably see quite easily, is not a lot of time.

This will increase the number of individuals and the number of organizations that will now be responsible for registering as a lobbyist. That means that there's going to be more paperwork for these organizations, including semiannual returns. Now, for example, an advocate group such as a local chamber of commerce could quite easily cross this threshold. If this group has 10 people who are all involved in the process of lobbying and each person takes two one-hour meetings in the course of a year, well, there's your 50 hours, and they would be required to register. This same organization could have five people in a meeting, where they are preparing to meet with a government official, and if that meeting is one hour long, which is not unusual, they have just burned 10 per cent of their 50-hour threshold with one single meeting. So there's some concern there.

In other jurisdictions prep time is not included in that lobbying effort. It's not included in the hour threshold. You know, for example, in British Columbia the threshold is 100 hours, not including prep time. In Ontario their threshold is 50 hours, but again prep time is not included.

I guess that does beg the question, you know: why was that threshold not just removed altogether? It's going to become a problem for many organizations. It would be nice for this Legislature to consider whether or not we should make some amendments towards that issue with regard to the thresholds and the prep time. I think it would and could make this a little better law. I would just like to make sure that in our efforts to decrease the confusion and increase the transparency, we are not creating an extra level of red tape and regulation for small organizations that are just trying to bring forward a position that represents their small organization or their small group.

My other concern with the 50-hour threshold, including prep time, is that it could potentially impact those who become advocates because of personal circumstances. You know, it's not unusual, especially when we're dealing with something like our own kids, for parents to get involved in advocacy for their children; for example, a parent who's asking the government for increased wheelchair access for public buildings because they have a child or a loved one who requires a wheelchair. You know, I just had an organization, a school group, that wants to build an all-inclusive playground. The people that are involved in that committee are all parents advocating on behalf of the children that they love. If you've got a child who's experiencing a specific medical condition of some sort and they would like to raise the awareness of the need for treatment options for others experiencing that same condition, then perhaps these restrictions on time and prep time could be a problem.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert. On 29(2)(a)? Please proceed.

Ms Renaud: It was interesting to listen to the member talk about the importance of disclosing money in politics. Certainly, I think it's important. I'm just curious if it bothers you at all that contrary to the grassroots guarantee that your leader would be clear and open about who funds him – I'm just curious how you feel about when he ran to take over the PC Party. I think he spent about $1.5 million and raised about $2 million before the writ, a lot of that going to a PAC, so he wasn't required to share that information with Albertans, although he did promise to. Of course, later that sort of changed. So I'm just wondering how you feel about that, working for somebody who doesn't quite walk that talk.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order is noted. Go ahead.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Nixon: Again, the NDP may want to laugh when the Opposition House Leader rises on a point of order. They can act that way. That's fine. That's their decision. But, Mr. Speaker, that clearly had no relevance at all to the topic that we're talking about, and it was a clear attempt at a personal attack on another member. I'd ask that you'd encourage members to stay on the topic of the legislation we're debating.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I might note that the Deputy Government House Leader has a opinion as well, I see.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, in these kinds of situations there's always some leeway given for somebody to express some of their context before they actually get to the point of their question. It happens all the time in the House. In fact, I've been here in the House where a full five minutes was used in creating context without actually arriving at a question. To stop the process, as it was less than a minute, seems a little premature. You did offer a warning. The speaker clearly was preparing to wrap up the context so they could proceed, and I think if we allow that to happen, I'm sure we'll see a question at the end of that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: In fact, I did caution the member, and she declined to speak. However, not only to that member but to the others: please stay on the subject matter that's at hand, and when you are making context, make it more brief and less directed at individuals. I'm seeing some shaking of heads, but I would like to move on.

Hon. member, please proceed. Do you have a question or an additional comment?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I think that we've already had a conversation about how appropriate that question was.

Thank you very much.

Debate Continued

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), anyone else to the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon?

To speak to the bill, the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: I was looking around there for a minute, Mr. Speaker, because the Member for Strathmore-Brooks has had an interesting day in the Chamber. He even commented about being near a twilight zone, I think, or something.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the chance to speak to Bill 11, or, as my notes say and my assistant put down, "Bill one one," so that I would not forget that, the Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2018. This bill speaks to accountability and transparency, a theme that we've heard a great deal of varying remarks on in the Chamber as we go forward.

Mr. Speaker, I too have some personal experience going forward, and I'll try and relate it to that. Depending on the timing, I'd be happy to entertain some questioning under 29(2)(a). I know that quite likely the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie might take an opportunity to question me on some of our varying experiences of the effect of democracy in different regimes.

The Speaker: Hon. member, the same principle as before: keep going on subject. Thank you.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm getting to the point about democracy and the lobbying of that because of personal experiences of varying natures. This bill is getting to that.

You know, we've heard comments about the varying amounts of dollars involved, and some people think that dollars relate to democracy. Dollars do relate to the presentation of it in some cases but not always, because the people have reason to move forward. As we go forward, I'd like to try and hit the mark regarding this. There are unquestionably a lot of different perceptions on accountability and transparency, and those terms are completely subjective.

I'd like to share, if I could, Mr. Speaker, a personal situation I had in relation to my activism and my lobbying. In fact, not unlike the Official Opposition leader, I too travelled to Ottawa at one point in time to appear at a standing committee in regard to federal legislation which was effected unequally across the province, and I did so on my own time, on my own expense. Simply to travel to Ottawa by jet travel is three hours each way or four hours depending on the tailwinds. From where I live, it's three to four hours, depending on traffic, to travel. So it takes one day each way to go forward with these sorts of things. So sometimes the limitations – how do you value that to simply get from a rural position to have an opportunity to voice your democratic opinion?

Mr. Speaker, this situation involved, as I say, travelling to Ottawa and commenting with many other elected members, in fact, who were already there at government expense. When you make your presentation to the standing committee, it takes some time. As I'm telling you and telling other members, it takes prep time simply to get there, never mind the commentary required. You know, I have some umbrage putting an exact value on this because third-party organizations do this all the time.

We've talked about consultant lobbyists, we've talked about organizational lobbyists, and we've talked about the contingency fees required for that. We've also talked about grassroots communication. How would you define grassroots communication as we go forward and at what cost, Mr. Speaker? That's an extremely difficult thing to figure out. You know, the government in some realm – I can understand their concerns when you have many thousands of organized union labourers who are forced to give some portion of their wages and dues to the membership of an organization that may or may not lobby exactly in their direction. Sometimes then we get into a grey area, an area of perception, so there's lots of debate back and forth.

We've received also some valuable insights from the office of the Ethics Commissioner. This is how it could be done, and it could be done more often. Could you imagine how much easier the government's lives would have been had they taken this approach to the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act? There was a lot of miscommunication and missteps and, frankly, bad decisions and making more bad decisions, and this could have been alleviated with open and transparent processes. There was no reconciliation. There was no explanation to the number of people that actually lobbied for these changes. But the government decided in a relatively inexperienced fashion as a new government, and that's fair. Everybody is allowed to make mistakes.

But when it comes to democracy, it's a blunt instrument. It's handled awkwardly at many times, not unlike the situation where the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie actually had to flee his country. I still live and he does, too, the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, Mr. Speaker, in a country that did at one time incarcerate farmers for selling their own grain, in a free country. How can the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie defend something like that? I would appreciate a 29(2)(a) question from him explaining his opinion on that and requesting that information from me. That's talking about lobbying to change a piece of legislation. That's what I did, and that's what was done and happened at the time.

I'd like to take a positive note on this bill, Mr. Speaker, talking about the elimination of gifts from lobbyists. Kudos to the government for adding this measure. I think everyone in this House has probably been in a situation where you're in a meeting with a lobbyist or a stakeholder group or speaking in a public function where somebody gives you a gift, not knowing that that may or may not be above certain limitations. Now, it's thoughtful, but it tends to be awkward because sometimes you have to ask the person who is giving you a heartfelt gift: is this over $50, or what's the value of this? They don't understand that they may be putting you in a compromising position. It gets uncomfortable and weird trying to accept it, so I'll take that gift if it's only the value of a glass of water or something under $50. How do you, on the spot, deal with those sorts of things? It's completely awkward. But it's important also for the sake of optics and correct conduct, absolute correct conduct, to not necessarily accept onerous, large gifts from others because we are elected officials.

Certainly, as members of the opposition we have a different ability of perception from lobbyists coming forward to us complaining about actions of the government. The government is in a position of power, Mr. Speaker. They can approve or deny or change legislation going forward, so it's a bit of a benevolent dictatorship in some regard going forward. So it's an unfair advantage in acquiring their time, different from us as opposition members.

I think everyone agrees that in many ways this can be seen as inappropriate, especially to a governing body as opposed to an advisory body, if you would call us that, Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, Mr. Speaker. It's an important role that all of us play in this Chamber. But as we go outside and as we go into the separation between church and state, if you will, this being the state and the church being the political parties that we all belong to, that, too, also becomes a separate entity.

I'd like to say that these new rules will bring the giving of gifts more in sync with the rules outlined in the Conflicts of Interest Act as it pertains to those gifts. A great benchmark, Mr. Speaker.

From my notes here, as I go forward, I've discussed the potential ambiguity, though, when the matter pertains to a thing like lobbyists hosting meetings with greetings and receptions. There have been plenty of MLAs – and you may know that federally, Mr. Speaker, people have expensed $16 glasses of orange juice, to the great chagrin of the taxpayers that pay for those abuses to their dollars.

The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster may remember when I questioned him in the Chamber about the expensing of $180 tuxedos that his staff used in a meeting, an interdepartmental meeting. Mr. Speaker, I think some members of the Clerk's department might remember the day when I actually took the liberty of renting my own tuxedo. Fortunately for me, the Speaker of the day did not call it as the use of a prop, but I know full well that the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster remembers that day in the Chamber.

Mr. Speaker, if I remember correctly, in the office of the Ethics Commissioner's original recommendations they suggested restricting lobbyists from offering a gift of more than $100 to public office holders to prevent lobbyists from offering high-valued gifts, which is great. It makes sense. But it still allows for various industry associations to host information sessions for many MLAs.

I know that many of the members opposite last night attended a hosted session by a lobbying agency for the irrigators of Alberta. I found it and I know that other members found it highly educational. So, Mr. Speaker, is that an infringement on these rights? It's hard to know because I don't know and I'm quite sure the members opposite who attended don't know what the lobbyist organization was paid to allow those irrigators to meet with us going forward. I see one of the members – I believe it's Lac La Biche – shaking his head in agreement, so I think he, too, would understand that there may be some questions there or understand that there could be some questions as to what the money was that was spent in that regard.

Another concern I have is around the proposed legislation bringing the reporting threshold for lobbyists from 100 hours of meeting time to only 50 hours. That would be including prep time. Mr. Speaker, I primarily covered that in my earlier, introductory comments. I know that for those consultant lobbyists who are not necessarily sometimes familiar with all the subject matter at hand, as I was in regard to my volunteer activism role – I'm fully versed on the infractions or the inadequacies of the federal legislation. I was lobbying and appearing, actually, at federal standing committee meetings to hear. Fifty hours of lobbying: you know, in the case of the federal situation, that doesn't even hardly get you to Ottawa and back.

In the case of Edmonton, in relation to where I live, it is three and a half hours one way. I know that the Member for Peace River takes considerably longer, and Grande Prairie is similar. It will be onerous in some cases for a number of individuals and organizations, who will be responsible for registering as lobbyists so that their effective action is not completely disqualified or they don't get the member that they're meeting with into some form of trouble. It could be quite burdensome on small groups, Mr. Speaker. It could create a whole bureaucracy of required paperwork although a lot of it nowadays is electronic. Still, you know, some people may be doing this in absolute good nature and without malice, but then all of a sudden they find themselves offside to go forward with this funding.

As we found last night, there are many irrigators, for example, who pool their resources to meet with us as MLAs. Then it becomes a quandary as to how you're going to separate that out for each individual organization. Even though they are jointly irrigators, each of them was representing many different organizations. So there's a technical issue based on interpretation, Mr. Speaker. I'm not singling out that one organization, which I view as a valuable organization, but I'm talking about similar organizations with the same name but who are legally different entities. If that's going to be covered in this legislation, it needs to be dealt with.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to go on and talk about grassroots communication, trying to understand how volunteer grassroots communication could be affected or licensed. How do we license or unlicense free speech? If these people want to voluntarily get together and speak on any subject, whether it be anything from health care to agriculture to transportation ... [Mr. Strankman's speaking time expired]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under 29(2)(a)?

Any other parties who would like to speak to Bill 11?

Seeing and hearing none, do you wish to close debate, hon. minister?

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the comments that I've heard from my colleagues on the Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2018, and I look forward to continuing the discussion as we move into Committee of the Whole.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a second time]

Bill 10

An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements

[Adjourned debate May 2: Mr. Cooper]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House – it's such a size.

Mr. Nixon: You're almost there, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Yeah.

Mr. Nixon: We can't forget about the beautiful little town of Sundre down south. But you got the rest of it down pat, for sure.

It's my pleasure to rise and have a conversation today about Bill 10, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that it's great to be here this evening. I'm sure you feel the same way. It's interesting that we find ourselves in the same place over and over in this Chamber, not just sitting in the same place, though some of us move to different locations, but discussing often the same type of theme when it comes to legislation that this NDP government brings forward. I think Bill 10 is no different, unfortunately, than some of those themes that we've seen with some of the legislation this government has brought forward.

Often it appears that this government is behind on bringing legislation forward, that they panic as they're going into session, and we end up seeing legislation that is sometimes coming off the photocopiers moments before it arrives. It doesn't even have time to be bound or sent to these places. Then what we see is mistakes that happen because of that speed. Then we come back, and we see some consequence because of that mistake. There's some push-back on the government, and the government then comes back to this Chamber and brings other legislation off to the next sitting, trying to fix all the mistakes that they made in the last batch.

There are a few examples of that, particularly when it comes to reforms to our election system. This government repeatedly over the last several sittings has brought forward bills. Some of the content is good, that we agree with, on our election system. Then they went too fast, didn't consult, didn't work with Albertans, with the opposition, with others and then had to come back in the next sitting right away and fix mistakes in their own bill that they just passed several months before.

I'm starting to become concerned the more that I review Bill 10 and talk to constituents and stakeholder groups. People that have an interest in the content of Bill 10 are starting to realize that this, sadly, Mr. Speaker, is starting to appear to have some mistakes inside this legislation. I know the Minister of Municipal Affairs is laughing right now. Over the course of this evening I'm sure we will talk about some of those mistakes, particularly some of the comments that he has made already in debate on this bill. After research, since the last time that we debated portions of this bill, we've been able to find out that there are some mistakes with what the minister has even said inside this Assembly on this piece of legislation. Maybe the minister doesn't know, and that's fair. I guess that's part of what the process is all about.

As such, Mr. Speaker, I believe that we are in a position where I need to move an amendment to be able to address that. I have the appropriate copies for the pages, and I will send them to the table and wait for your permission to continue.

The Speaker: We identify this as amendment REF.
Please proceed.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the reason that I move this referral amendment is for some of the reasons that I've already articulated in my preamble to the amendment. We have a situation where it appears that this legislation the minister is bringing forward has been poorly thought out, has missed some key issues that we want to discuss with him. The number one issue right now that I think is a problem with this bill and why it should go to committee is that again this government is asking the members of this Chamber, specifically this cabinet is asking the members of this Chamber, both on the government side and on the opposition side, to just trust them to get the details of this legislation right at a later date. [interjection] This is a pretty standard procedure. I know the Minister of Municipal Affairs is laughing about that.

Mr. S. Anderson: That's not true.

Mr. Nixon: That is where it is. They're asking MLAs to trust them because the details of this program will come forward later in regulations. They will not be debated. They will not be voted on by MLAs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Yes, they will.

Mr. Nixon: The minister suggests they will, but they're not in here. That's where it will happen at another time. Thus, it should go to committee.

Another interesting concern that we have with this legislation that shows why it should go to committee is around that the requirements of the disclosure of PACE property tax to prospective buyers in this legislation is left to regulations, just like I said, Mr. Speaker. Nothing in this legislation in itself ensures transparency when selling a property with a PACE property tax.

Considering that PACE programs, Mr. Speaker, are not common in Canada and it's unlikely that Albertans know that they've even existed for some time, this is a problem. It's also unclear how a PACE property tax will affect an owner's ability to obtain a mortgage. Now, considering the likelihood of interest rates increasing and the new, more onerous stress test proposed by the federal government for mortgages, this is a problem. When the minister was asked questions about that last time we were in the Chamber on this bill, he was unable to answer, again showing that this legislation is not ready to go forward.

Bill 10 exempts – this is an interesting thing – municipal borrowing associated with the PACE program from counting against the municipality's debt limits. Now, Mr. Speaker, debt limits are in place to ensure the viability of Alberta's municipalities. I represent lots of small municipalities, and viability is extremely important. I can tell you that for our counties – the minister represents a county, at least one, I think, Leduc county. The counties have lots of concerns on this issue, the viability of some of the smaller hamlets and towns inside their communities, because ultimately the county ends up in those situations. Now, how this will impact that debt limit is extremely concerning and something this minister has not addressed. Currently a municipality's total debt cannot exceed 1.5 times the revenue of the municipality. The municipality's debt servicing costs cannot exceed 0.25 times the revenue of the municipality. This could affect the debt limit of the municipality. That is a serious issue which would again show why this needs to go to committee.

Again, Mr. Speaker, we continue to see this government bring forward poorly thought out legislation at a rapid speed and then say: "Hey, trust us. We got this all taken care of. It's going to be okay. We're going to go back, and we're going to fix it with regulations." Well, our experience – I'm sure you would agree – is that that has not worked out very well for Alberta. It has not worked out very well for Albertans. A prime example of that is Bill 6, one of the most famous pieces of legislation of this Legislature. We still have not seen the regulatory side of it finished because, as the opposition pointed out, the bill was a mess. A mess. How do we know that's not the same with this piece of legislation based on what we're seeing? The minister appears not to have been ready to bring it to this place.

The government has said that they intend for Energy Efficiency Alberta to be the administrator of the PACE program, not municipalities, but Energy Efficiency Alberta is not mentioned in the legislation, and all administrative positions are being left to the regulations. Again, when I started out talking today, Mr. Speaker, the minister was laughing when I said that this would all be decided in regulations. Again I just provided another prime example of where this will be decided in regulations. Another prime example of where this bill falls short and that not enough information has been provided to this House is that this minister has not shown this House that this bill is worthy to be passed or ready to be passed. This bill has fallen short. It should go to committee to make sure that he has it right.

Nothing in Bill 10 prevents municipalities from deciding to administer the program themselves, another hole in this piece of legislation that the minister seems to have missed and that needs to be addressed. Is this another piece that the minister expects the opposition to just trust him on, that he will deal with in regulations, Mr. Speaker, given the track record of this government and their complete inability to legislate on most issues effectively and the fact that they have to continue to go back to this Chamber to fix previous legislation that they've done in very short periods of time? It clearly shows that the minister is not ready to bring this piece of legislation here.

Now, according to the NDP government's PACE information website on how PACE works, it states:

Once a PACE program is established, property owners would take the following steps to access the program:

1. Owner decides to make a clean-energy upgrade
2. Owner signs agreement with municipality
3. Municipality installs and pays for upgrade
4. Owner pays back municipality through property taxes
5. Property owners save money on energy bills, reduce emissions and contribute to a green economy.

Wow. The word "municipality" was in there an awful lot. That was on the NDP's website. This minister has stood in this House already on this bill and told this side of the House that municipalities have nothing to do with it, but the website says that they do. So is the website accurate, or is what the minister said last time that we talked about this bill accurate? Another good reason why this needs to go to committee and shows again that the minister is not ready to take this to this place.

The minister said that Energy Efficiency Alberta will be administering the PACE program. Energy Efficiency Alberta is not even in the legislation, Mr. Speaker. Municipalities will have nothing to do with it, but then the minister's website associated with this program says "municipality" in, like, three or four of the steps, and it also doesn't mention the Energy Efficiency Alberta website at all.

I know that the minister gets upset by that, but those are the facts. You can go look at it. I'm sure, based on the reaction from the minister this evening, that that website will be down soon. But don't worry; it's there. The point, though, is . . . [interjection]

The Speaker: Hon. members, calm it down.

Direct the comments to me. Keep going.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the point is that I brought this referral forward because the minister is not ready to bring this legislation to this House. The things that he has brought forward inside this Chamber, through you to him, are not what the facts show.

It's frustrating to continue to see this government in a rush to bring forward legislation, try to jam it through, try to get it fixed. You know, that's frustrating for us to have to be here through the process. But who cares about us at the end of the day? What matters is the Albertans that will be impacted by this. It matters to my towns, something like 24 or 25 towns and counties that I represent, that will be impacted by this and to the constituents that live in my communities who will be negatively impacted by this because this minister brought forward legislation to this House that was not ready to be here.

Then when he tried to address the questions from this side of the House, he got it wrong. That's okay. I don't expect the minister to know everything. But the problem with this, particularly, is the fact that he said that municipalities basically couldn't be in any way negatively impacted by this or would have no role in it, and you have a website that says it, Mr. Speaker. The website says it. The legislation and the website don't even mention the Energy Efficiency Alberta organization. But they talk about municipalities: owners sign an agreement with the municipalities; municipalities install and pay for the upgrade; owners pay back the municipality through taxes. It sure sounds like the municipalities have a lot to do with this process, I would think. It does not make any sense for the minister to say that municipalities will not be impacted by it.

We're starting to hear from municipalities, that they have some concerns with this. The minister says that all municipalities that he has heard from, or most that he's heard from, I believe he said the other night, are not concerned. It appears that that may have been the case even a few weeks ago. I don't know. But it ain't the case now as people begin to look through this actual legislation this minister has brought forward because they're starting to realize that there are possible serious negative impacts to our communities and to the people who are in them.

Because this minister is not able to answer this yet, because this minister continues to just ask this House to trust him – and we don't – and pass this legislation, this bill should go to committee to make sure that they've got it right. This government across from me should stop punishing Albertans because of their incompetence and start making sure that they bring proper legislation to this place in the future.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments to the member under 29(2)(a)? The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we've had a pretty clear indication here tonight. We've seen the minister, heard the minister, of course, howling over there on the other side, protesting the truth, the facts that are written on the website that are clear and plain. I think my colleague clearly described what was going on here. You know, as I look through it, too, it talks about the next steps.

If Bill 10 passes:

- the government would consult with municipalities, lenders, real estate associations and other stakeholders to develop a guiding regulation in the summer of 2018.

So here we have another situation where this government says: pass the bill, and then we'll consult. But, of course, they're saying that they're consulting all the time. They're saying that these municipalities are more than happy with what's going on, but obviously that's not the case. Obviously, they want us to give them the blank cheque that they usually ask for in this House, and then, of course, they're going to come up with the regulations afterwards. Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think that's our duty here representing the people of Alberta, to pass legislation with no regulations, no ideas. They can't even get their story straight between what they have on their website and what they say in this House.

Mr. Speaker, I think this is very clear, and my hon. colleague has pointed this out very clearly. It's on the website. It clearly says these things, and, of course, the minister is still grumbling over there about the facts.

The Speaker: Hon. member, stay away from words like "grumbling." Keep going. Do you have a question for the member?

Mr. Loewen: Yeah, I do, actually. I would like my hon. colleague to carry on with his comments on this because obviously there's a severe lack of congruency between . . .

Mr. Nixon: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Nixon: I rise on 23(h), (i), and (j). The hon. Member for St. Albert is heckling across the room at the member, who is trying to get his question out, to: spit it out. It's unbecoming of this place for the member to say – she can deny it all she wants. That's what she said. All of us heard it. She should stand up and apologize and withdraw that comment.

The Speaker: Hon. member, it's important that I heard it, and I didn't hear it.

The Speaker: Please continue, Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky. Are you ready?

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like my colleague to continue on with his comments on this, clearly stating the difference between what's on the website, what the minister is saying, and what he's grumbling about even right now. He can continue on with pointing out the incongruences between what the minister says. The website clearly says that municipalities would install and pay for upgrades on private property. I mean, that's a pretty bold statement of an expectation for municipalities to do as opposed to what the minister has said. If my hon. colleague would like to carry on in that vein, that'd be great.

The Speaker: Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky has a great point. I think he has understood and articulated the core problem with this legislation and the core point of why it needs to be referred to committee. There are several other issues, and I'm sure you're going to hear about them over the next little bit from other members inside this Chamber who have some concerns with it.

But at the end of the day, this minister said that Energy Efficiency Alberta will administer it. Energy Efficiency Alberta is not mentioned on the website or in the legislation anywhere. It says that municipalities will not administer it, really will have almost nothing to do with it, but then when you go on the PACE website, it says that owners sign an agreement with the municipalities, municipalities install and pay for upgrades, and owners pay back municipalities through property taxes.

I know I can hear the minister heckling away at me, Mr. Speaker, but this is what it says. This is what it says. I hear the Minister of Infrastructure heckling away. This is what this says. This is it. There's nothing to heckle or shout me down about while I speak. This is what this website says. This website says that. The minister said that it was Energy Efficiency Alberta that would administer it, but the website says something different. That's something alone right there that needs some clarification, I would say.

But it also goes back to the core point, that the minister's intent is to bring legislation here and say: trust me; I'll keep care of it during the regulatory stage. The municipalities that I represent don't trust him. They don't. Never mind that I don't trust them. The municipalities that I represent don't trust them. They want to make sure that we have this legislation right, that we're not going to be back here in a few months trying to fix another bill the NDP has messed up. The government gets really upset about that being pointed out, but with the track record like theirs when it comes to legislation, it has to be pointed out. What this government does is that they bring forward a bill, come back a couple months later, fix it, come back a couple of months later, fix it, come back a couple of months later, fix it, come back a couple of months later, fix it, because they can't get it right, mainly because they won't talk to anybody. That's their biggest problem. They won't talk to anybody.

This should be referred to committee, and I thank the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky for indicating his support of my referral amendment. I look forward to hearing much more vigorous debate through the evening.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, REF, the referral amendment, is what you're speaking to?

Mr. Orr: Yeah.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, I have a different series of concerns about this bill and why it should be referred. I'm speaking to Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements, which is referred to as PACE. My concerns are that while the PACE website says that this is meant to help Albertans make clean energy improvements, save money, et cetera, et cetera, I really fear – and I'll demonstrate this as I move through – that the unintended consequence may be, in fact, for many families and individuals that it will not help them; it will in fact harm them in significant and serious ways.

The reason I go there is because this is about borrowing money. This is about adding debt to families, adding debt to individuals.

Now, debt is a great tool. Debt is a tool. I come from a construction industry. Tools can do great work, and tools can also do great damage. This is a bill that needs to take some time considering: what are we pushing upon our people? What are we leading them to? The use of tools, whether it's physical tools or debt tools, requires knowledge and training and clear safety procedures. That's why we have OH and S in the world I come from. Why do we push, in this case, a potentially dangerous tool of debt without giving people adequate training, preparation, warning, or instruction? That's where this is going.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Debt is debt is debt. I've said it before that we live in a society that is too often endangered by debt. Debt added to taxes is actually one of the highest priority forms of debt. While we all look with excitement at the toys we get to bring home on debt and credit card debt, then too often we get the after Christmas hangover and spend the next six months trying to pay off the debt. Hopefully we do get it paid off, or it gets carried forward next year and gets added, to be even higher.

There are concerns about the form of this debt. First of all, who's going to manage it? It's not clear. There are concerns from mortgage companies about how this impacts the process of discerning how much capacity a person has to pay. We have very strict and very clear rules in this country about how much a person should be allowed to borrow – there are limits to that – for the protection of the people, but now we're adding another system of debt that may in fact short-circuit that. The stress test for mortgages today went up in Canada, and now we're going to add another level of debt that will probably not be subject to stress tests. Or maybe it will be. If it is, then more and more people are going to be disqualified from buying a home, not even be able to do it.

Unfortunately, this whole thing follows a pattern from California. The whole PACE idea originated in California. It's something that has been in use there since about 2008. Interestingly enough, we have from April 12, 2018, in the Los Angeles Times a lead article that states: Lawsuits Filed against L.A. County, Lender over the Green Energy Program. It's not just a single lawsuit, Madam Speaker. It's a class-action lawsuit. This is a serious problem. Homeowners have taken on PACE debt, not quite realizing the implications of it, and now they can't afford to pay for it. They can't afford to keep their homes. They're afraid of losing their homes. They can't afford to pay their regular bills. Unfortunately, this is turning into a very bad experience in some jurisdictions that have had it for a good amount of time already. It turns out that it's all related to debt and the way that debt is handled, the way it's introduced to people or not introduced to them, the lack of clarity, the lack of rules around it. This kind of debt becomes a lien on their house, which means that their house will be lost when it's filed against. There's a lack of adequate consumer protections with regard to this kind of debt.

We have a government that wants to say that it's always out there to protect the consumer. Well, I want to say to you that this piece of legislation is not yet ready in terms of protecting the consumer. The consumer is at risk here. It's happening already in other places. This thing needs to be looked at very, very carefully, which is why it needs to go to committee, have some time to learn from the experience of others, and make sure it's better.

The challenge is that it's the low-income people, the elderly, and those who don't speak English as their first language that are the most at risk and are having the biggest amount of trouble with PACE-related debt in the U.S. This is something that needs to be carefully administered, carefully thought about. What it does is that it produces inadvertently excessive debt-to-income ratios. People are left with very little money to actually live on after they pay off their loan or pay their loan on a regular basis. As I said, it's not just one person. This is a systemic problem. There are many people involved in this.

Some of these people are saying that if somebody had told them in the first place what this actually involved, they wouldn't have gotten involved in it. The problem is that the people who are pushing it are not actually under the rules that lenders and bankers and mortgage brokers are under in terms of how they deal with customers for customer protection. In many cases what's happening is that, actually, the contractors are showing up at people's doors, giving them a quick whatever, promising them a government rebate. They sign on, and they have no clue what they're getting involved in. They don't know what the interest rates are. They don't know what the repayment schedule really is. They don't understand what the complications and repossession realities might be if they don't make their payments.

In Canada today, with most of the banks, you can actually have your monthly mortgage rate forgiven for a period of time. You can go in and talk with them. You can work things out. This is different. This isn't subject to any of those rules. Then there's the whole issue of the fact when large numbers of people, as is happening in Los Angeles county now, begin to run into trouble with these things. What's actually happening is that the Los Angeles county has had to set up a reserve fund to cover the borrowers' missed payments, and the county is now on the hook for people who are not making their payments. This is debt that the lenders have pushed out. In fact, the article points out that in many cases this is a very similar kind of action and behaviour that happened in the U.S. subprime mortgage crisis that brought down many of the big banks and all the rest of it.

The same kind of practices are happening here, where contractors, who have no accountability, no experience, and just want to make a sale, serve as de facto mortgage brokers and push this stuff out, and it's creating a crisis. It's not helping. The contractors, quite frankly, are not legally required to determine if a customer is qualified to take on the loan. It's not their responsibility. They're not even accountable for it. Of course, the payment loan brokers that are behind it just rubber-stamp what the contractors do without responsibility to follow any guidelines. So now we have a class-action lawsuit coming off the ground over all of this.

This is a very problematic idea. I get that it's meant to try and help people. It's certainly meant to advance the green agenda. But when you do it at the cost of the ordinary people, put people at risk, you don't have their back. You're not helping them in that regard. We need to be very, very careful about this. This bill absolutely needs to go to referral.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Grande Prairie-Smoky.

9:00

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was listening to the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka talk about, you know, how this lending situation is and how it's not the same as going to a bank and borrowing money. Basically, what's happening with this situation is that it looks like they're looking more at property-based lending versus income and credit scores. Of course, there's a reason why lenders use income and credit scores. Things can change within a household's income over time, and of course banks will look at that and understand that, okay, maybe this family or this couple, seniors for instance, may not be able to afford to pay this back. It might put them in a situation where they can't afford to pay their other bills, their necessities of life.

The member brought that up very clearly. I just want him to expand on that a little bit because I think it's so important to realize that based on the situation we're in with this government, where they bring this bill forward that obviously they haven't had time to properly think through and properly prepare for – I mean, they have a website that directly contradicts what's being said. They've got the briefing notes that contradict everything else. We have just a situation where this government has brought this forward without a whole lot of thought and a whole lot of planning.

Of course, they think that we should just pass it here and they'll just come up with all the regulations afterwards. They think that's a great way to do business, but unfortunately I don't think that's what Albertans are expecting us to do here today. I don't think they're expecting us to come here and just say, you know: "Yeah. This looks okay. You fill in the blanks afterwards, and we should be happy." I don't think it's the case that we should be doing that. I think that we owe it to Albertans and we owe it to the people we represent to make thoughtful decisions and make informed decisions.

Of course, to make informed decisions, you need information. Obviously, this is deeply lacking in information. There are so many contradictions that obviously this wasn't prepared properly. This was thrown out there in a panic, I guess, to – I don't know – maybe get out for the summer break quicker or whatever they wanted to do. They haven't consulted properly with the municipalities. You know, it says right on the website that the municipalities will install and pay for these upgrades. Well, I don't know about the municipalities of the other MLAs in this House right now, how their municipalities feel about it, but I'm pretty sure mine would be thinking twice before they started to install and pay for upgrades on private property.

I'd just like to have the member maybe take a little more time and talk about that a little bit more. Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you. My concern really is to protect the consumers. You know, I guess maybe the reason this jumps to the forefront of my mind at this point in time is that just a couple of days ago, last weekend, in my riding at a meeting a gentleman came up to me. He held out his phone, and he had a Google map on it with a whole bunch of different points plotted on it. It was central Alberta. He said to me: "Do you know what those are?" He said: "Every one of those is a foreclosed home in central Alberta. I'm a property manager. I manage foreclosed homes for the banks." He said: "We're up substantially over what we were a year ago. All of those places are homes that I look after now that the bank owns." And he says: "Get this. I'm only one of 40 property managers in the central Alberta region. There are 40 more people that have other cellphones with other lists of homes on them that are foreclosed."

Now, if you go and add a PACE debt tax burden on top of these houses, how many more houses and homes are we going to have foreclosed? How many people are going to be thrown out of their houses? How many families are going to be broken apart over the stress and the anxiety of having signed on to an additional debt burden that they didn't properly understand? They didn't know what the implications of it were, and it's going to lead them into an extreme level of crisis.

My concern is that we need to think this through really carefully to protect consumers. This is a form of legislation that, literally, when it comes to how this debt is rolled out, how consumers are liable for it, falls through the cracks. As I said before, we have very clear debt and lender legislation and rules in this country for the protection of the consumer, but as soon as we introduce something new and novel, it falls through the cracks, and it puts consumers at risk. I think we need to be very, very careful about that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to rise to speak to Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements. I thank the Minister of Municipal Affairs for bringing this forward. I do think he's brought forward some important legislation. An opportunity, I think, to introduce renewable energy into consumers' homes is a good idea.

[The Speaker in the chair]

However, the legislation which he is bringing forward is another sign here. Although that minister actually had a track record once upon a time of consulting, I think this is a case where we do not have enough robust consulting with some of the people that should be brought into the picture before we leap forward with this legislation. You know, I think that we have an opportunity here with Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements, to do some good, but I think the minister has missed the mark on this one because there are long lists, which I'll get into as we discuss this, of people that they have not consulted, experts that have not been consulted. We've seen this before, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 20 enables municipalities to pass a bylaw creating a property assessed clean energy, or PACE, program, which provides a mechanism for property owners to finance energy efficiency, renewable energy, and water conservation projects or upgrades on their home properties. This program does so by allowing the repayment to be collected through the property owner's municipal tax. Sounds really nice. We're hearing here, of course, that we're not sure how that's going to be done or even who's going to be doing it. It might sound like a great idea, and there's nothing wrong with green technology. We all believe in the opportunities to save money for households and also to bring renewable energy into our households.

But if you aren't looking for ways to save money on energy bills, I'm not sure why you like lighting your money on fire, which could be the case with this program, especially considering this government has taken every conceivable opportunity to make electricity and home heating more expensive for Albertans. So I guess if they want to have a greater rationale, I suspect we're going to see that, Mr. Speaker, in the future people may be running for programs like this because they're going to see their electricity bills spike because of some other bad decisions made by this government. I just don't think taxpayers should have to pay for these upgrades, though, in the way that we see these upgrades and these upticks in the costs. I'm a little concerned here, and I think this really indicates why we need to have further consultation on this legislation.

Now, the municipality already collects property taxes, so there could be little or no additional costs on municipalities to add this PACE program, but they've told us that they don't want to administer them. We as provincial legislators need to make sure we spare municipalities from additional burdens, which they would then pass on to their taxpayers. Again, as we all know, there's only one taxpayer, Mr. Speaker.

Energy Efficiency Alberta, it sounds like, is administering the plan, so the municipalities don't have to be responsible for those costs, but it's nowhere, again, in the bill. We're told that it's going to be in regulations, but I've got a wonderful orange piece of PowerPoint presentation here that tells us that they're in there, Energy Efficiency Alberta or another administrator. I'm going to tell you here that that concerns me, another administrator. We've heard from other members here how those other administrators have been positioned in some of the lawsuits in the States as predatory lenders. That frightens me. We're going to protect that in the regulations? I think we'd better do our homework on this one, Mr. Speaker.

You know, we've also talked about some of the lending institutions, and I'll get into that later. Lending institutions may or may not be a key to this program as well. Who's going to do the lending? We'll talk about that as well.

Mr. Speaker, who wouldn't want to have solar panels on the roof and put electricity back on the grid and maybe have some more upgrades or have their hot water heated by solar, maybe have a windmill in their backyard? People used to have windmills. You know, we got those from Holland, and they used to pump water for people. They used to work on the prairies before we had electricity. Maybe you have appliances or machines drawing a lot of current, driving up your power bill. PACE could help replace those. I think they've replaced some light bulbs already. What a great idea. Maybe you're trying to protect a wetland on your property in order to conserve drinking water, or maybe you have home needs, you know, your home needs an energy audit to find the leaks and then renovations to keep the heat during the winter. Of course, PACE can help. It's going to fix all of these things for everyone, but at what cost?

You know, it concerns me when I look at some of these bills, and, Mr. Speaker, I look at a long list of things here. But we've heard from people that there's predatory lending. I think about the seniors. You know, what we see in the presentation from the website is that financial barriers will be reduced. That sounds like a good thing. But we have seniors on fixed incomes that could be the subjects of either predatory lenders if that's not controlled properly in regulations – we don't even know what they are – or contractors that may or may not be well regulated. We all know that this government has actually taken the ability of some of the people that are offering these programs so they can't knock on doors anymore, to put in – guess what? – energy-efficient furnaces, hot water tanks. They can't even go door to door. So now we're going to have that entrenched in this, and we're going to have people now through the PACE program able to essentially go door to door and sell these things or maybe not even door to door, maybe through their tax bill. It'll come with their tax bill, with maybe an unregulated lender and an unregulated service provider. But – you know what? – we're supposed to trust that that's all going to be in the regulation. Why don't we regulate that now?

We've seen in the article from the U.S. financial elder abuse. Is that what you want, financial elder abuse because of the regulations we can't even see and touch here today? Predatory lending, predatory contractors: what if that's the case? You know, we see already that the uptake on reverse mortgages from seniors and the SHARP program is not what we expected it to be. Guess what? Those seniors are worried, they're afraid, they're scared that they're going to get scammed. The headline on the article from the States says: scam, S-C-A-M. These people that you're actually targeting: many of them are on fixed incomes.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm over here.

Mr. Gottfried: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I love talking to . . .

The Speaker: I know. I thought I was forgotten.

Mr. Gotfried: Seniors are there, and they're worried about that. That's the reason they don't use many of those programs, sometimes reverse mortgages and the SHARP program.

Also, they don't want to take equity. Well, this, Mr. Speaker, is actually taking equity from their house. It doesn't look like it. It's on the tax bill. But when they go and sell it, it's going to be considered as a liability and reduce the value that they can sell that home for.

What about new-home owners? I was in the new-home building business. I know what new-home owners are like. You know what, Mr. Speaker? Most new-home owners today come in with – guess what? – 5 per cent down. Now they're going to be stress tested with the new mortgage regulations. I can tell you that their debt and risk tolerance is much higher than mine was when I bought my first home. If we take this and we put the PACE program off the books, they may put themselves at increased risk by taking that program and putting themselves another $20,000 or $30,000 in debt, that they can ill afford. They may not be someone who's been through enough economic cycles to know the risk of economic cycles. What if one of the members of the household loses their job, and they can't pay the taxes, and they can't pay the PACE program, and they can't pay the mortgage? Then we have foreclosures and bankruptcies. That frightens me, that we have not addressed that.

I ask: did the government consult? A simple list. You know what, Mr. Speaker? When the SHARP program was announced, I spoke with the reverse mortgage experts, who'd been doing that for almost 30 years in this province. Nobody talked to them. They're the people doing the SHARP program for 30 years, and nobody in this government talked to them. I talked to the fellow who actually started it. They call him Mr. CHIP. That's unconscionable. Mortgage brokers, reverse mortgage lenders I just spoke about were not consulted.

How about CMHC or Genworth, the people that insure the mortgages? We saw that reference in the U.S. articles as well. I'm sorry; you said that this isn't going to affect your qualification for a mortgage. But what if they say that it does, and people can no longer insure their mortgages? Did anybody talk to CMHC or Genworth, Mr. Speaker? Did anybody talk to CMHC and Genworth? We need to put this to committee so that they can be appropriately consulted.

What about the chartered banks? You know what? They do this lending already, too. You know what it's called? It's called a home-line credit program, home-line loan. Maybe it can be done as a second mortgage or put on the first mortgage when they renew to do these home improvements, with an ability to pay them back.

I don't want Albertans to act like this government over here, where they borrow money they can't afford to pay back. They push it down the road. They push it so far down the road that when it comes time and something unusual occurs, Mr. Speaker, they go bankrupt. They are foreclosed upon. Their assets are seized. Their house is seized because of nonpayment of taxes. Is that what we want?

What if the administrators are allowed to be private lenders? I mean, maybe it's ATB. Well, guess what? That's public risk because ATB gets all of its money from the Treasury Board.

What about realtors? Did we talk to realtors? The PACE could be viewed similar to maybe an underfunded condo reserve fund or maybe considered as a cash call to come on a building. It is a liability, Mr. Speaker. It is not an asset anymore. Those pretty panels on the roof might be outdated, they might be in ill repair, they might actually need to be torn out. So what do you do when you buy the house? Say: "You know what? Could you tear those out before I buy this house because they're a liability?" Wow. Great asset. But, by the way, you're still going to be paying for it, so let's reduce the price on that house by $20,000 and maybe wipe out all the equity that that new homeowner has in the house. Great. The Member for Calgary-Greenway has been in the business. He knows what happens when houses have assets and liabilities.

What about poorly installed items that may have been done? You don't have regulated installers, then you get into a situation where it's poorly done and it needs repair or it needs maintenance or it should be torn out. What a debacle, Mr. Speaker.

You know, there's a reason why we have orderly and disorderly transition into new technologies. I remember when my brother-in-law – and he's got more money than I do – bought his first big-screen TV. I think it cost him $6,000 or $10,000 or some stupid amount of money. Now you can go into Costco and get that same big-screen TV, bigger, twice as big, for $499 or maybe $599 for the bigger one with a curved screen and all that sort of stuff. That is the pace of technology, so five years from now the pace of technology might mean that your $30,000 investment is now worth $6,000. Great investment, Mr. Speaker. Let's let our consumers, our Albertans catch up with the pace of technology with an orderly transition to renewables.

Like the climate leadership plan, coal shutdown, or – you know, again, I've been talking about orderly versus disorderly transition, Mr. Speaker. The coal shutdown is quite clearly a disorderly transition because it's going to – mark my words. I had a fellow in my office yesterday who wanted to bet me that electricity was going to cost double within the next 24 months. You know what? I wouldn't take that bet because he might be right, and I don't like to lose my money on bad bets.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I was in the housing market, as I mentioned to you, and I was involved with affordable housing and attainable home ownership, where we worked and I worked to the penny so that we could qualify people for their mortgages, so that we could get low- and middle-income Albertans into home ownership. We helped them with down payments, and we helped them with monthly subsidies, and we helped them to achieve home ownership. We worked it to the penny so that we could get the people with the lowest possible income into ownership but not so that they could lose that home a year or two later. We wanted that to succeed, and I'm proud to say that we had over a 95 per cent success rate. In fact, I think it was 97 per cent. Only 3 per cent of the people that went into that program ever foreclosed, and some of them probably shouldn't have been in that program in the first place.

Maybe some of these people should not do it in the first place either, Mr. Speaker, and we do not have the mechanisms. The minister has not done his diligence on this to ensure that we do not put Albertans at risk with this program. That should not be the objective.

What about the legal mess we've seen, class-action lawsuits? Where's that going to lead to, Mr. Speaker? Where is that going to lead to? We're seeing the people that we followed in this program now going in class-action lawsuits and being accused of predatory practices. That's not where we want to go.

I think about the builders out there – I was a builder for a dozen years – and the move, actually, towards net zero building in the future, and I think we'll get there one day because we have the technology. It's not necessarily affordable for every homeowner so that we can allow Albertans, low- and middle-income earners, to actually be able to afford a house. That should be our goal, to actually allow Albertans to achieve that dream of home ownership – and many of them have – by doing things in an affordable manner.

But I can see a builder who specs in $30,000 or $40,000 worth of this new technology in a house, but – guess what? – it's not on the sticker price. They do a whole community, and they push that all into a PACE program, and every house on the block has that caveat, that monthly bill, for 10 years on that property. The builder makes it look like it's more affordable. Well, the builders are already faced with taxes upon taxes upon taxes and levies. Mr. Speaker, please . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would love to go on 29(2)(a) with the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. He was giving a very impassioned speech on this. All the warning bells and whistles are going off with this legislation: obviously, the unpreparedness of the minister and how this was brought forward in such a haphazard manner, where things don't seem to match when it comes to what the minister says and what's on the website and what's written down on the handout they give.

Now, I actually was watching the minister, and he talked about the reduced value of the property when it's sold with a lien such as this. The minister was just shaking his head like he couldn't believe what he was talking about. Well, of course, what the minister, I guess, maybe doesn't understand is that not everybody wants to pay for these things. When these liens are put on these properties, people that are buying a property are going to look and see: okay, what are the taxes? That's something that you have. When you mortgage a house, you have to show what the taxes are because the bank wants to see what payments there are. Obviously, if there are some additional fees on those taxes, the bank is going to want to see them, and that's going to come into effect in the borrowing. Of course, another thing is that these products age and they become obsolete.

There are a lot of different issues here that the minister doesn't seem to have realized. In fact, it was like it was something that he had never considered before, obviously. I think we see in the U.S. that, like, "Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac won't lend money on houses with PACE" is what I've read. I mean, obviously, these are lending institutions that won't lend money if houses are involved with this PACE situation. Obviously, there are a lot of things that haven't been considered here.

When we look at the handout that the government gave out, it says here, "Municipalities are not interested in administering the program and incurring administrative costs." Well, that doesn't line up with what they've said on the website, where it says, "Municipalities would install and pay for upgrades on private property." So I don't understand how all this has gone so far off. If we look in this handout here that the government has, it talks about this first being implemented in California in 2008. Of course, they're using California as an example when we happen to know that there are class-action lawsuits going on over this.

I would like to hear the member continue on with his thoughts on this PACE program that this government has brought forward. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for his questions. I think we've seen in this that there is a big concern. We're worried for consumers. You know, we've heard the term "financial barriers reduced" in the presentations by the minister, but I think what we're seeing is financial accountability ignored. Now, this seems to be a bit of a theme with this government, financial accountability ignored, but you know what? It's not our position to force and push that onto Albertans because of a lack of diligence and a lack of consultation.

To the member, I agree that there are some concerns here. Even on their own website versus their own presentation there are some inconsistencies. You know, I'd hate to see this become the son of subprime loans. We all know what that did in the United States in 2008, don't we, Mr. Speaker? It triggered an entire economic and financial system meltdown. Now, if this program were done through some administrator and all the lending is done through ATB and everybody uses it, that could be us taxpayers on the hook for those losses when those loans go bad. I don't want to see that. I'd like to see a big caution about predatory lending.

Really, I think the thing here is that we must send this to committee for further consultation with the real experts because I'd sure like to hear from the minister about this long list of organizations and industries and people that I don't think have been consulted. Mr. Speaker, I think that that would be irresponsible of us as legislators, to let that occur. It'd be irresponsible of this government to not refer this to committee for further consultation.

Mr. Speaker, at that, I'd like to adjourn debate and move that we adjourn debate for the evening. Thank you.

The Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. member. I'm advised that you're not able to move adjournment under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

But I do see the Minister of Municipal Affairs standing.

Mr. S. Anderson: You bet. Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I've listened with interest, very, very keen interest. I'm not sure . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member – I'm looking to the table – are you closing?

Mr. S. Anderson: I'm going to. Yeah. I've just got a couple of words that I'm going to say, Mr. Speaker. I won't take long.

The Speaker: All right.

Mr. S. Anderson: I listened intently to the rabbit holes we've gone down tonight, the interesting casting of aspersions and accusations and conspiracy theories. I don't know if Bigfoot is going to walk in the door here pretty soon. I'm not too sure because of all that they've said. I would encourage them to continue to look at the website.

Mr. Nixon: Here I am.

Mr. S. Anderson: There he is.

Mr. Speaker, just a couple of things that I'll say, and then I will adjourn. This is enabling, this piece of legislation. It's an enabling piece of legislation. It comes down to the people that want to participate in it. It's a personal choice. We're talking about third-party lenders. That's what I meant about saying that the municipalities didn't want to do the lending. So we'll look at third-party lenders. Of course, we've been discussing that with them. That's fine.

An Hon. Member: It's pro choice.

Mr. S. Anderson: It's pro choice.

Mr. Speaker, really, you know, it's quite interesting here about raising the bar. I just want to say that the consultation I've done continuously through Municipal Affairs has proven itself again and again. This is legislation that's setting the framework for us to go out and do extensive consultation through the summer. I've said that on record in here. You can go back in Hansard and find it. I'll keep saying it. I've said it in the press. I'll say it again. That's what we've done before. We've learned that through the MGA, how well that worked, and we will continue to do that with this ministry. With that,

I do have a list of quotes and a bunch of other people, like from the AUMA, some other folks who are supporting this. I won't go through that now because I know we have some other things to go through.

Mr. Speaker, with that, I will ask that everybody just relax in here. Take a deep breath. There's no reason to get agitated about everything and make personal attacks on anybody. This is a great place to debate things that we might disagree with in a very respectful manner.

With that, I will adjourn debate, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Your motion was with respect to the amendment, correct, hon. minister? Is that right?

All in favour, please say aye.

Mr. Nixon: Whoa. Mr. Speaker, he's not closing debate; he's adjourning debate. Just making sure. Let's make sure we're clear what we're voting on. Thank you.

The Speaker: Let me try again.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 1 Energy Diversification Act

[Adjourned debate May 9: Mr. Gill]

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I move that we immediately adjourn debate on this and go to Bill 12 as the Premier said in question period today that it was important that it get passed. So I move that we adjourn debate now and get Bill 12 done for the people of Alberta.

The Speaker: Hold on a sec, please. Just to clarify, hon. member, it's to adjourn debate on Bill 1, correct?

Mr. Nixon: That's correct.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion to adjourn debate lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 9:29 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

[Motion to adjourn debate lost]

Mr. Nixon: Switching back to the bill, Mr. Speaker, I assume Bill 1 because the government doesn't want to go to Bill 12. We are on Bill 1; I just want to be clear on that.

Mr. Westhead: Point of order.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane has a point of order.

Mr. Westhead: I think the member has already spoken on this bill, so I don't think he can speak again. He just adjourned debate.

The Speaker: I've been advised that he was adjourning debate, that he still has an opportunity to speak to the bill. It was simply adjourning the debate. I've consulted on the matter, and I believe that's the order.

Mr. Nixon: You'd have to adjourn debate with me as the speaker.

Anyway, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I will talk on Bill 1. This is an interesting bill. I would think that the vast majority of Albertans do not support the programs that the minister is creating in Bill 1. Now, the reason I think that is because that's what I'm hearing from the vast majority of Albertans.

I think it's interesting that when you look at this legislation – I think it's even telling – the NDP is now introducing this three years into their mandate. If this was so important and the NDP truly wanted to create economic benefit, create jobs, do different things with this legislation, why did they wait till they're in the red zone and not do anything for the last three years? Instead, what did they do for the last three years? The NDP raised taxes on job creators by 20 per cent. They dramatically increased red tape. They imposed a carbon tax telling investors to go elsewhere. They sent billions and billions and billions of dollars of investment from our province to other jurisdictions. They brought in a carbon tax that they did not campaign on.

It's interesting, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Leader of the Opposition keeps an NDP platform in his desk and often refers to it. In that platform it says nothing about that carbon tax. Then they bring it in secretly along the way without telling Albertans about it. They don't tell anybody about it when they door-knock. That's secretly. That's what they did. Now, three years in they seem to think that they can come up with some loan guarantees and a few grants and they're able to fix the absolute catastrophic damage that they've done to the Alberta economy.

It doesn't make any sense. It's disingenuous. You have a government who, when they came into power, brought in the largest tax increase in the history of this province. They attacked the largest industry in this province, the energy industry, chased away investment, raised taxes on job creators, lowered revenue in the process but raised taxes on job creators, oversaw some of the largest unemployment in generations under this government's watch, and continue to then take that tax and raise it because their close friend and personal ally in Ottawa Justin Trudeau called up the NDP and said: I want you to raise it to $50. What did this NDP government do? They said, "No problem, Justin," and raised it to $50. They didn't do an economic analysis, didn't listen to the people of Alberta, the large majority of which in almost every poll are clear that they do not like this job-killing carbon tax that this government has brought in, but they did it because of Justin Trudeau.

Then we see, Mr. Speaker . . .

The Speaker: Try not to use members' names in the House.

9:50

Mr. Nixon: Well, Justin Trudeau is not a member of this House. He's a member of the House of Commons.

The Speaker: Okay. I'm sorry.

Mr. Nixon: That's okay. Am I right, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Yes, you are. Please proceed.

Mr. Nixon: Okay. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. So they did what Justin Trudeau told them to do, which is to raise the carbon tax. Then they tell the people of Alberta: "We're going to keep this carbon tax. We're going to give rebates to everybody. This won't be used for general revenue."

Now, first of all, let's talk about the rebates. They don't give the rebates to everybody. Even the rebates that they give do not come anywhere close to covering the cost of what people have to pay for the carbon tax because the carbon tax raises the price of everything. As you know, Mr. Speaker, everything in our society comes by train or rail or truck, so everything has fuel costs. So it costs you when you buy carrots at the grocery store, when you buy your kids' Christmas presents, and none of the rebates cover that nearly. They did bring in some rebates, granted, though now, with a 67 per cent increase inside the budget, they're clawing back those rebates.

Interestingly enough, you want to talk in this bill about bringing in loan guarantees and grants, et cetera, but the rebates that are there don't even come close to covering the 67 per cent increase that this NDP government has done. They're now crawling back on fixed-income seniors inside our communities and allowing them to reduce those carbon tax rebates by 30 per cent, holding them to 70 per cent. Fixed-income seniors, Mr. Speaker. Now, that shouldn't surprise me because you know what this government told seniors in my community that complained to them about the carbon tax? They told them to go fund raise to pay for the carbon tax.

Bringing in legislation now, saying, "Hey, a couple of loan guarantees, a few grants spread out over this time will make up for all this damage that we have done to Alberta," is not accurate, Mr. Speaker. It is ridiculous. This government should be ashamed about the way that they have treated Albertans, particularly when it comes to how they treated them with the carbon tax.

Now, we talked about their attack for the last three years on the largest industry, that they're trying to fix here. They also attacked the second-largest industry during their time here. They attacked the agriculture and farming communities across this province, something that has still not been forgotten or forgiven in rural Alberta, and it will not be. Very soon, hopefully less than a year, rural Alberta gets to come and cast their judgment on that attack. But this bill . . . [interjection] The Minister of Municipal Affairs said that I should go talk to some farmers and ranchers. I do every day. I live next door to them.

Mr. S. Anderson: That's not what I said, but that's fine. [interjections]

The Speaker: It's getting late, hon. members.
Keep going.

Mr. Nixon: Absolutely. You have a piece of legislation. The NDP tries to bring it forward and says: "It's okay. Forget all that stuff. We're going to be able to fix the catastrophic damage that we've done to the economy by bringing in some of these grants and loan guarantees." The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that if the NDP really wants to change or start to adjust or modify even a little bit the hurt that they are doing to Albertans, the very first thing that they should do is start repealing some of their disastrous policies – start repealing some of their disastrous policies – starting with the carbon tax.

If the NDP would go outside of their little bubble of people that have their world view and talk to Albertans, they would find out that the reason that they're 30-some points behind in the polls is because they won't listen to Albertans. Albertans are frustrated with this carbon tax and other taxes. They're tired of paying for it at the gas pumps. They're tired of paying for it on their heating bills. Industry is tired of having this extra cost added. It's costing us jobs. Instead of doing a little, tiny Band-Aid solution like the government is proposing in this legislation, this government right now should join the opposition's call to repeal the carbon tax.

Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, as you know, if Albertans in a year elect the United Conservative Party and we're given the privilege of governing, the very first thing we will do is get rid of the carbon tax. We won't bring in little Band-Aid legislation; we will listen to the people of Alberta, and we will get down to work. We will fix the problems that this government has created. But now you have a government that wants to distract from their disastrous record with this bill. That's their goal with this bill. There's nothing here. There's nothing inside this legislation that addresses the regulatory roadblocks, red tape that's holding up project permits.

Further to that, Mr. Speaker, we oppose $800 million in loan guarantees for partial upgrading and $500 million in loan guarantees for the feedstock infrastructure program. We oppose the $200 million in grants for partial upgrading. What we want this government to do is to stop bringing in Band-Aid solutions to distract from their disastrous record but instead come to this House and get to work on trying to fix things, get to work on reversing the damaging policies that they brought forward, that have hurt the people of this province. Listen to the seniors in Sundre when they come from a place like the West Country Centre and say: Premier, we can't keep our doors open to our recreation centre because of your carbon tax. Actually listen and realize that there are no grants for those people from this government, confirmed by the Premier's office. The Premier's office said to them: "No grants. There's nothing to help you. Go fund raise for your carbon tax."

If this government truly wants to distract from their disastrous record and wants to truly help the people of this province, why wouldn't they go there? Instead, they come here, try to distract us from the real problem. You know what that real problem is, Mr. Speaker? I suspect you do know what that real problem is. Certainly, no big surprise, it's the NDP government. The number one thing this NDP government could do right now to make things better is to scrap the carbon tax, not bring forward bills that are distractions.

They could attract investment back to our province, stop bringing in ideological policies that are scaring away investors and creating unemployment, not stand in this House and call the 200,000-plus people that have been unemployed under this government's watch an opportunity cost so that they can put in their ideological agenda, which they did. They're not an opportunity cost, Mr. Speaker. Those are the people of Alberta, this government's boss. This government's boss.

They want to make the province better for the people with this bill, they say, a government that tells seniors to fund raise for the carbon tax, a government that won't help seniors, that reduces seniors' carbon tax rebates by 30 per cent. Then when you ask the seniors minister why that's happening, the response, Mr. Speaker, is: "It's okay. They got 70 per cent." This is a government who does not care about the people of Alberta. They show it each and every day with their actions. They show it each and every day with their actions.

The Municipal Affairs minister represents a lot of constituents that I know who do not like the carbon tax. They talk to me about it all the time. He gave a speech the other day in Leduc. The number one thing that they spoke about was how upset they were with the carbon tax. This is all across the province. The members across the way know that the majority of their constituents do not want the carbon tax. They know that, so instead of doing the right thing, reducing the carbon tax – removing the carbon tax. Mr. Speaker, I want to be very clear that I misspoke. I don't want them to reduce the carbon tax; I want them to get it out of here. At the very least while they're here I want them to stop their increases. But instead of doing the right thing and removing that carbon tax for their constituents, they're now going to try to come here with this piece of legislation to try to distract from their disastrous record. Well, you can see it's not working. It's not working.

You know, in Red Deer this weekend I talked to hundreds of people – hundreds of people – all of whom want the carbon tax gone. All. Interestingly enough, the waiter who was waiting at a dinner that I was having at the motel in Red Deer last weekend, Mr. Speaker, found out that we were having a political convention, and he asked some questions about that. His number one concern was the carbon tax. Number one: carbon tax.

Ms Hoffman: How do you think he felt about the minimum wage? [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: Actually, it's interesting that the Deputy Premier just heckled me about what he thought about the minimum wage. He also brought that up, too, Mr. Speaker, interestingly enough. He brought up the minimum wage, and he was very upset about it because it ended up costing him money. What he was explaining is that since the minimum wage increases have happened, he's seen a drastic reduction in his tips. He made more money before this government messed with the minimum wage. He made more money. He is in a worse spot now because of what this government did on minimum wage, so I don't think the minister should heckle about that as a great thing. Twenty-two thousand people lost their jobs because of this minimum wage increase. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

Let's stay on the bill here, hon. member.

10:00

Mr. Nixon: I am referring to the bill. This bill is a distraction from that, as you can tell. The Deputy Premier, that's the example she wanted to use to try to justify it. That's silly, Mr. Speaker. It's silly.

Mr. Carlier: You're right. People should work for nothing. The world would be a better place.

The Speaker: Hon. minister.

Mr. Nixon: It's silly, Mr. Speaker.

I know the agriculture minister is really upset and heckling away over there right now, Mr. Speaker. He probably is because he's the guy, under his watch, that attacked farms and ranches in our communities with Bill 6 and is trying to use this legislation to distract from his record. I would be heckling, too. That's what he's doing. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nixon: Now, as I said, Mr. Speaker, it would be far more effective to start by repealing NDP harmful policies than utilizing this legislation. That's what it would be. It would be far more effective to do that. Instead, what we get is the NDP bringing forward this bill to try to distract from their record. The vast majority of Albertans did not support this.

It's telling, again, that the NDP is introducing this after three years. Why, Mr. Speaker? You have to ask yourself as we debate this legislation why they would bring this forward after three years. Why was it not important in the first year? I think that in the first year what was most important to them was chasing off investment in this province, raising taxes on everybody, causing unemployment, et cetera, et cetera. That seems to have been their bigger priority rather than bringing forward this legislation at the time.

In this bill the NDP will provide $1 billion for partial upgrading over eight years beginning in 2019-20. Now, most of this, Mr. Speaker, will be up front, with about $800 million in loan guarantees and $200 million in grants. With that money it appears, certainly . . .

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Klein, under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Coolahan: Under 29(2)(a), yes.

The Speaker: Okay. The Member for Calgary Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to make a few comments and then perhaps ask the member a question. He's saying: why is this brought in after three years? Well, after three years because we had the Energy Diversification Advisory Committee working on this, right? You have to understand that we wanted a fulsome understanding of what would make the petrodiversification program successful. We took the advice of that committee and of the experts in the field.

You know, I don't necessarily believe the member when he says that people don't support this bill. Maybe in his world they don't support it because of the way the question is framed, right? "Bill 1 stinks, right?" Then, of course, they say: "Yeah. You're right. You're right. It stinks." But it doesn't. This is coming on the heels of a very successful first round of the petrochemicals diversification program.

I also find it hard to believe – you know, in 20 years in my circles all I've ever heard about is: why aren't we upgrading bitumen in this province, right? I mean, people used to point to the B.C. example of their forest industry. The money isn't in the raw product; it's in the finished product. That's where the money is, and look at where the B.C. forest industry went. They had to start diversifying that economy as well.

But, you know, this is really about creating good jobs. It's about creating good jobs. I mean, we're looking at a situation in which the Alberta chemicals sector thinks that they can employ about 7,500 people directly at a salary of over $90,000 per year. Now, that's creating jobs, and that's creating an industry that's going to be sustainable when the oil and gas price crashes. We have seen the ebbs and flows of that over and over again.

So I guess I would like to ask the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre under 29(2)(a): when you do talk to your constituents, do they say that we should never diversify our oil and gas economy? I mean, should we just stay having one customer, selling it at a discounted price to the U.S., who has become our major competitor, our only source of income for that right now, really? Is this what the member thinks, that we should just continue doing what we have been doing for 30-plus years, selling to one customer one product and buying it back at a discounted price? Should we not be moving in a direction where we can be selling a finished product to other customers? This doesn't make any sense to me, Mr. Speaker.

I find it hard to believe that the member's constituents find this formula of boom and bust and one customer forever to be the solution to Alberta's economy. To keep it strong and to create jobs, we've always talked about diversifying the economy. It has actually, I think, become a reality under this government.

The Speaker: Hon. member, why don't we give the member an opportunity to answer your question?

Mr. Coolahan: Okay. So the question would be, then, Mr. Speaker: should we not diversify our oil and gas sector, and should we continue to sell our raw product at a discounted price?

Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the limited time I have left, I will tell you what my constituents think. What my constituents overwhelmingly tell me back home is that they do not want the carbon tax. What they also tell me overwhelmingly back home is that they want this government gone and that . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move that we now adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the hour of the night and the fact that we have accomplished a great deal today, I would like to move that we adjourn until tomorrow at 9 o'clock.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:08 p.m.]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Prayers

The Acting Speaker: Good morning.

Let us pray and reflect, each in our own way. As we conclude this week's work in this Assembly, we renew our energies with thanks so that we may continue our work for the people in the constituencies we represent.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Time Allocation on Government Motion 16

23. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that when further consideration of Government Motion 16 is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the motion, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the motion shall be put forthwith.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. As outlined by the Government House Leader when the matter of Government Motion 16 was last before the House, it has become clear that the opposition are not only opposing the appointment of Mr. Gibson as Alberta's first Election Commissioner, but they are filibustering to try and prevent the appointment from even coming to a vote.

It has been five months since the legislation was passed in this House, creating the Election Commissioner, legislation that we believe is vitally important to ensure that we are getting dark money out of politics and ensuring that we put the voice back to the people of Alberta. This legislation, Madam Speaker, was opposed by the United Conservative Party.

A hiring process was launched in December, led by an all-party committee. That committee completed its work and made a recommendation to the Assembly. That recommendation was made last month and tabled in the Assembly on April 10. It is now, of course, May 10.

We began debating the motion last week. It has been debated multiple times, for a total of about six hours. In my view, through the course of numerous committee meetings, through their minority report, through their statements and motions, and through the amendments they have presented, the opposition has made as compelling a case as they can for why Mr. Gibson's appointment should not proceed. But they have not made that case. We continue to be compelled that his appointment should proceed because there is no such case to be made, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Gibson has devoted many years to this issue and has a proven track record. But rather than stating their objections, then voting against the appointment, we have witnessed speaker after speaker simply repeating the same talking points. Madam Speaker, on the government side we want to see the position of Election Commissioner filled, and we want to see it filled by Mr. Gibson as soon as possible so that he can start his important work to protect Albertans.

For that reason I am moving this motion, and I urge all members to support it.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and wow. Wow, wow, wow, wow, wow. I think it's worth pointing out here that the first time that the Government House Leader time allocated in this Assembly was on Bill 6. I'm sure you remember Bill 6. Bill 6 was the NDP's attack on family farms, where thousands of farmers were protesting right across this province because this NDP government was attacking the very way in which they live and do business. This government stifled debate then, and they're trying to do it again. History is but repeating itself.

Madam Speaker, I think it's worth pointing out that this probably means that the government feels like they're in trouble. Why would they feel like they're in trouble on this motion and feel like they have to time allocate? The Official Opposition has only put forward two amendments on this motion, very reasonable amendments, I might point out. One very, very transparent amendment we put forward was an amendment to disclose the salary of the Election Commissioner. The government during the course of that debate told us: "It'll happen. Just wait. You've just gotta do it. It's the law. Why would you be breaking the law and not following the law? This is crazy. It's gonna happen." They voted it down, and then we find out after – and the Government House Leader brought this forward – that in error, in fact, that was not the case. Had it not been for the Official Opposition standing up for Albertans, we wouldn't know this.

The second amendment, Madam Speaker, that this Official Opposition put forward, which we actually have yet to even vote on and not all members have even spoken to yet, is that the Election Commissioner's term mirror that of the Chief Electoral Officer, the position which this NDP government took from in the first place. That's all they did. They made one become two.

So if this government thinks that the Official Opposition is filibustering when we're standing up for Albertans and trying to make this process more transparent, then I guess we're filibustering. Madam Speaker, this is insane. If this government thinks that we're filibustering when we stand up for Albertans against their reckless ideological agenda – is that what they mean? Is that what counts as filibustering?

You know, it's sad to have this government, more specifically the Government House Leader, once again embody something that they used to fight so fervently against. Madam Speaker, do you remember the time that the Government House Leader said that this time allocation thing is a way for the government to short-circuit democracy? I remember it. I'm sure you remember it. This House remembers it, most certainly, but he's forgotten that. It's nice to know that this government holds firm to their convictions. Albertans see it. Perhaps he didn't really mean it when he said it, because he certainly doesn't mean it now. This government certainly doesn't mean it now.

Now, does anyone else find it amusing that this government brought forward this independent officer of the Legislature, an office which is supposed to be nonpartisan in the application of its roles and responsibilities, yet they time allocate? They do not let members of this House debate this position, try to make it more transparent. Nothing says partisan like time allocation, and that's exactly what this government is doing for an independent officer of the Legislature that is supposed to uphold democracy, that is supposed to be nonpartisan. What is this government hiding? This is something special, Madam Speaker, that I don't think Albertans are going to be pleased with.

I would ask all members of this Assembly and specifically those who weren't in attendance at the committee: why do you think the Official Opposition is standing up so strongly against this? Something happened in that committee that made us question and made us fight and made the Official Opposition make sure we were standing up for all Albertans.

Please vote against time allocation.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I will now put the question.

Election Commissioner Appointment

16. Mr. Mason moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur in the report of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices tabled on April 10, 2018, Sessional Paper 67/2018, and recommend to the Lieutenant Governor in Council that Mr. Lorne Gibson be appointed as Election Commissioner for a term of five years commencing May 15, 2018.

Mrs. Aheer moved that the motion be amended by striking out “a term of 5 years commencing May 15, 2018” and substituting “a term commencing on May 15, 2018, and expiring 12 months after polling day for the next provincial general election in Alberta”.

[Debate adjourned on the amendment May 8]

The Acting Speaker: Just a reminder to all members of the House that due to the time allotment any points of order will be considered as in time. Time does not stop for the hour.

Are there any members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I will call the question on amendment A2 as proposed by the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A2 lost]

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Acting Speaker: Before we proceed, hon. members, I just want to clarify the division bells and the timing associated with division. During time allotment the division is included in the timing of the one hour. We started the time allotment at 9:26, which means it will continue till 10:26, inclusive of any divisions and points of order.

Are there any members now wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Despite our time allocation restriction by this government, the Official Opposition will continue to improve transparency and accountability in this House. We have now failed on two amendments in an effort to do so, despite the government and their entire argument actually being wrong on the first one, and that, of course, was being transparent with the salary of the new Election Commissioner.

We are going to continue to try again, so I will introduce another amendment.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, can you just wait till I have a copy at my desk? Hon. member, please proceed. Your amendment will be referred to as A3.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you. I move that Government Motion 16 be amended by striking out “five years” and substituting “four years” and adding “, and that the position of Election Commissioner be designated as 60 per cent of full-time with the salary pro-rated accordingly” after “May 15, 2018.”

Madam Speaker, the rationale for this amendment, firstly, by striking out “five years” for “four years,” is that five years will put us right into a scheduled election year. Given that this is an Election Commissioner position, I would think that it would be rather difficult to be renewing a contract or not renewing a contract or dealing with that whole situation at that time. That's obviously just a really good idea.

In addition to that, we're moving that the designation be 60 per cent of full-time and that the salary be pro-rated accordingly. We've already heard from other members in this House who have also been consulting with various Albertans and Canadians, more particularly the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, who also said that this is to be known as a part-time position. Madam Speaker, I think that it's an accurate assumption to say that because this position came already from the current Chief Electoral Officer and half of his job is being taken away and created over here, only half of another job was created in the first place. So, in fact, I think we're being generous with the 60 per cent of full-time marker.

Madam Speaker, this is a very reasonable amendment. It's very common sense, and I would urge members of this House to vote for it.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to speak to – what are we calling this amendment? – A3 with regard to Government Motion 16. We take a look at the situation that's before us, and I believe that many Albertans will recognize that it's disappointing that we're now in time allocation debating the terms and the disclosure with regard to the position that's been created through Bill 32 in December. Here we are rushed through things to get to a point in time where I believe full disclosure is necessary to ensure that Albertans can understand that the process was somewhat reckless and that they should be given all the information that can be made available to them.

I believe that the Member for Calgary-Currie was speaking the other day, a couple of days ago, with regard to this individual and the ability of this individual to speak truth to power. We also recognize that this is a point in time where this government, in choosing an Election Commissioner, in moving towards the position of Election Commissioner in a somewhat reckless manner, I would suggest, uses their majority, their power, to confirm their candidate. Now I believe it's again using its power to limit our ability to allow the government to become fully transparent with Albertans and fully accountable and allow some common-sense resolutions to come forward and be considered.

I think that all Albertans should be concerned with this abuse of power. I would suggest that the work of the opposition, what we are doing, is helping the government to recognize the need to be fully transparent and accountable in our democratic process. This government has chosen not to be, and I find that very concerning.

When we take a look at the amendment, we're looking at the term that was suggested in the motion, that the government is offering through their majority vote in committee, offering this individual a five-year term, which is the maximum that's allotted in the legislation. So it's permissible, but is it practical? Is it practical when you create a new position to go the full term, the full five years? I would also speak to – the Member for Calgary-Mountain View brought this up in his discussions. The Liberal member of the Legislature brought up in his discussions the other day that it seems somewhat reckless and it seems we're moving in a direction that "does raise serious questions about how quickly we're moving."

The government should take notice that the Official Opposition is just doing its job. Now that we're under time allocation, can we do our job properly? We would like the government to recognize that Albertans expect transparency, Albertans expect accountability from their government, and we're not having it at this point.

Now, the reason to go to a four-year term – we did propose an amendment to match the term length to be similar to the Chief Electoral Officer, where the term would end a year after a general election. That makes great sense because it gives the time for the Chief Electoral Officer and then it would also give the time for Election Commissioner to complete their work, their investigative work, the work necessary to present final reports with regard to the general election. Then it also allows the term to be fixed based off general election cycles.

Now we have a situation with a five-year term in that we quite likely are going to land up with an Election Commissioner's term ending right in the middle of an election. That's concerning, and that should be concerning to all Albertans. It should be concerning to this government. It makes me wonder why they pushed so hard for the five-year term. Now we're looking at a four-year term, a very reasonable amendment that allows us to move into a four-year term and allows us to recognize that it most likely won't land right in the middle of a general election.

The other portion of the amendment that – we were looking to bring this forward as two amendments, but because of the time allocation we're forced to highlight the issue that possibly is before us. In our stakeholder outreach and, I believe, maybe some of the stakeholder outreach that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View has done, there are questions about: is it a full-time position? We need to take into consideration that it quite likely is not.

Many of the stakeholders that we talk to – especially, you know, a lot of the work is going to happen within the six months, probably, before the election actually takes place and within the year after the election. How much work is the Election Commissioner actually going to have to keep him busy or her busy, whoever it may be at the time, to actually work on in year 2 after an election, year 3 after an election, when there really is not very much activity? This is an investigative role. It's not planning elections and working much like what the Chief Electoral Officer has to do in preparing the office and preparing for the next general election. There's a lot of work that has to get done there.

Time allocation now has restricted our ability to speak to these and actually possibly have a chance where the government members can fully consider our position and understand the risk and how the abuse of the power could negatively affect them. I believe that Albertans will look at this and interpret it as an abuse of their power, and that is concerning to me. You know, we look at others that have spoken to the amendment, both from our caucus and other members in the Legislature. We are speaking on behalf of Albertans. The government can propose that we are filibustering, but I believe that we are truly speaking on behalf of Albertans, and all Albertans want to know that this government is working hard to get value for tax dollars.

By appointing this individual for the full term, the term ending in the middle of a general election, likely, and not disclosing salary – we know the range was in the advertisement. I don't have the advertisement in front of me, but it could have ranged, I believe, from about $158,000 to $212,000. The government is making a commitment on this one individual for a term of five years, potentially for compensation that's going to exceed a million dollars. I think Albertans would like to be sure that they're getting value for that tax money. The government is not going to disclose this at this time. They're going to wait until after the election to disclose what that commitment is, what Albertans are committing to here. I find that concerning, that they're not willing to be transparent with Albertans, and I think Albertans will question: well, why won't they? What are they trying to hide here? It makes no sense to have a term end in the middle of what probably is the next election, in 2023, after the 2019 election, and not disclosing.

You know, with the potential that with this position there are going to be a couple of years there where there will be very little if any activity, as the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills pointed out, this position is potentially going to be compensated more than what our Chief Electoral Officer currently makes, an individual that's in charge of a much larger office, that has a lot more work to do in preparation for a general election.

I am speaking in favour of amendment A3. I believe that the term is better than the five-year term. I honestly believe that in good governance we would have matched what's in the term for the Chief Electoral Officer, that we end it a year after, but the government decided to vote that down. I believe that four years is much better than the five-year term that's being proposed. In consultation with others that there is potentially only a half-time position, we felt that 60 per cent of full-time was being fair and maybe a little bit on the generous side. I guess we'll leave it to the government members to try and become more accountable and more transparent to Albertans.

I am speaking in favour of this amendment, and I would encourage everyone within the Legislature here to also vote in favour of this amendment and try and fix a little bit about what has potential risks of not bringing true value for taxpayers' dollars.

I also believe that we need to, when we create new positions, have time to evaluate properly. Is the position necessary? That was the question of the Chief Electoral Officer, even. Is the position necessary? Is it a full-time position? Others have raised that concern. Here we are. Now we're to a five-year commitment, and we don't have the opportunity to evaluate that after the next general election. We will end up moving right into where we have a term ending in the middle of an election in 2023.

With that, I would encourage all members of the Legislature here to vote in favour of amendment A3. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm just going to take a quick moment here to speak on amendment A3. I'm just going to start from the beginning: "by striking out 'five years' and substituting 'four years'." I don't agree with this particular change. Mr. Gibson has my full confidence, and as a result I think he should have the full five years to reflect my confidence in him.

Second of all, referring to the second part of the amendment, "that the position of Election Commissioner be designated as 60 per cent of full-time with the salary pro-rated accordingly," Madam Speaker, in his new role, should he get it, Mr. Gibson would be overseeing multiple investigators, and I believe that that is, in fact, a full-time job. Those investigators are going to be looking at political action committees, third parties that participate in our electoral system. We have seen a rise in dark money recently here in Alberta and throughout Canada and the United States. This is a new phenomenon here when it comes to democracy, and I think that that is a full-time job, to oversee the investigators to make sure that our democracy is fair and that there's not undue influence from third-party agitators.

You know, there was a suggestion that between elections there might perhaps be less work. Well, I would suggest that those third parties and dark money don't take a break after the election, so that is why I think it is important that this position is a full-time position. I will vote against this amendment, and I encourage all members to do the same.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll just be brief. You know, I have a question for the hon. member. If this amendment does not go through and the original motion goes through and Mr. Gibson has his term conclude in May of 2023, which could potentially be right in the middle of a writ period, does he have any concerns or issues, or does he think there might be any undue or unintentional consequences as a result of his term potentially ending in the middle of a writ period?

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much. As we know and have seen in this province, elections and by-elections could potentially happen at any time, depending on the makeup of the Legislature. We can have, of course, minority governments. We could have majority governments. As a result, trying to predict when the next election would be, whether it be a by-election or general election and trying to look into the future is, I think, perhaps not an optimal thing to be doing. The short answer to the hon. member is no. I do not have any concerns.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just a real quick question to the Member for Calgary-Currie. I wanted to know. He talked about: dark money doesn't rest. My question to him is: does he feel that the $45,000 being paid by the Toronto Steel Workers union to a PAC that is actually under the direction of one of the past members of the NDP is considered dark money?

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yeah. I guess I have to start off by saying that I'm disappointed that we're into a time allocation and that we're not able to actually get this right. That's a problem here. You know, the Member for Calgary-Currie made a good argument for amendment A2, saying that a year after the election – because you don't know when the election will occur. It could be three years. We've seen that before. It could potentially be five years. His argument to say that we don't know when that date is made the last amendment very logical. I'm disappointed that that was voted down as a result. We still have to make sure that we're trying to do something that's going to be more workable.

We're looking at this one because four years is more logical than the five years is. If we take the five-year term and we go a year from now and we have the election – you know, the Premier has stated before that we'll have an election next year sometime around now. We will have an election. Then four years from that would lead us to five years. That would be kind of timing out at the same time the election is called. I'd have to argue back again to the Member for Calgary-Currie, saying that I appreciate the fact that he recognized it, but I'm disappointed that the member did not vote for A2, which would have allowed for that logical, sequential change that needs to happen.

You know, if we have that logical, sequential change and we have that time just after the election, well, then you're able to do the proper filing, the paperwork, and make sure you've done your job right. You've got the accountability and the transparency that you need. Frankly, there's a lot of information that needs to be done after an election, but potentially putting it at the same date as the election is problematic.

When we look at what we have here, striking out five years and substituting four years, well, we're looking at an election time that would be at least in the year earlier than what the next potential election is. We still allow for that accountability and that transparency, and it just makes it, like you say, a simpler transfer for the next person that might be taking up the job. We don't know if that same person will have that job. We don't know what happens in four years' time or five years' time. It's all a matter of who gets that job.

But it's not a firing, as was mentioned before. They called it a firing because the person's term ended and then all of a sudden that person said: well, my term has ended and you're not continuing to hire me; therefore, it's a firing. They went before the courts. The judge found not in favour in that case, that it wasn't a firing. It was a normal agreement for a term of a contract. When the term of the contract expires, you can either renegotiate it and continue on, or it's done. In that case it was done. We see those kinds of terms of contract. Even in the military we have terms of contract. They're expected to work usually three-year contracts. I have a son-in-law that works in the military, and he is hired under three-year contracts. It doesn't mean that he's fired at the end of the three years. He can make those decisions. There are so many people that work under contracts, and when the contract is done, it's done. It doesn't make it a firing, so I found that debate that was brought up earlier just disappointing.

I'm disappointed that this process has been rushed. This process has been rushed from the beginning. If we go back and we look at the minority report – I wasn't a member of the committee, so I wasn't able to do it. I have to take the word for what was going on in the committee.

It became evident,
it says,

at our first meeting at the end of December that government MLAs were determined to proceed in a reckless fashion by forcing the Legislative Assembly Office to compose a job posting and position profile for a brand new position in less than 48 hours.

That does not seem like somebody is taking the time and cautiously moving forward to make sure that we get the right person. This is being rushed.

We don't want to rush what we're doing here in that sense because this position is very important. The position that we're talking about for elections governs what we do and allows us to have a democratic process. We're not having a democratic process.

Deciding upon the completion date during the Christmas holidays: this is during the Christmas holidays for the completion date, including a costly run of print advertisements that required an LAO employee to come into the office on their holidays to make certain deadlines despite the Official Opposition's strong advice that this would be a waste of money and put undue strain on support staff.

Again, this is rushed, and to what? They could have taken their time, and now they're stopping the debate on this. We've got a time allocation on this, so we're stopping this.

This position, the member yesterday was bringing up, really is not a full-time position. This is not truly going to be a full-time position, so when we bring it in here designated as 60 per cent full-time with this salary pro-rated accordingly, this makes a lot of sense. You know, if you're hiring for a job, if you're only doing 60 per cent of the work, it should be paid for 60 per cent of the time. The government has posted on their website – I'm not quite sure what that number is, but it is between $150,000 and over $200,000 that could be paid to this position. That would be based on a full-time position, I would assume, but we should be looking at it as a part-time position, at 60 per cent, perhaps. But, I mean, that would have to be determined, how much time actually needs to happen for this thing.

I really have to be in favour, of course, of this amendment A3, but I have a problem with the government's motion because the timing that they have set aside does not seem to make sense. The five years just doesn't make sense.

I was not on the committee that selected Mr. Lorne Gibson as Election Commissioner, you know, but just listening to the comments and that minority report that I referred to, like I say, causes me to pause. Why was the selection made? Why was this one person selected? It wasn't a majority of the committee that wanted to do it. That's why you ended up with the minority report that is on here. Typically speaking, when you select somebody for this position, you really want to have a consensus because then you have a balance between what the different parties are looking for, Madam Speaker. We're not getting that balance. At least getting some of the consensus: even if 75 per cent of us on this side were saying, "Yeah, that's a reasonable candidate," that's closer to consensus than what they've achieved. Like I say, they had to have a minority report to discuss this.

There are issues that were discussed. It also says here in the minority report that we "took issue with being strong armed by government MLAs who would declare that a consensus had been reached" – consensus among themselves, I assume, but not consensus from all of the committee – "on issues in camera." Consequently, not being on the committee and not being able to know what happened in camera, I can't tell you what the consensus was. It goes on to say: "and would try to force votes with little to no discussion." It seems like that's kind of the process that's happening now because we're not having a fulsome discussion on this motion. We have a time allocation. Therefore, where's that discussion? Where's this fulsome discussion? Trying to get these things is just, like I say, problematic.

The selection of an Election Commissioner should be a nonpartisan exercise. Where only one party votes in favour of a potential candidate – when there's a potential to confirm a consensus candidate, that is what we need to have. We need to have all the parties involved. It seems the committee acted in a partisan manner in this case. They acted just for themselves, to make sure that this person was elected. Why? We don't know. It was a problem before. The person was not hired again for the position. Albeit, he has experience. He would understand what's going on. But he was not rehired and caused some disruption and dissention.

Why is this a problem, Madam Speaker? Well, you know, when you use a partisan kind of an approach, the optics alone would tell you and it would tell Albertans that this candidate was potentially not selected to represent the interests of all Albertans. I'm not saying that he wouldn't represent the interests of all Albertans, but there's that perception, Madam Speaker. It's certainly there.

With that in mind, another concern of mine is the morale in the office, what could potentially happen when the advice of our own Chief Electoral Officer was disregarded and then to go on to hire someone who may or may not fit into the culture of the current Chief Electoral Officer office. So Mr. Gibson's proposed appointment is brought into question, an appointment that should have but did not follow the same kinds of nonpartisan rules and procedures, for lack of a better term, as the members of the committee have expressed previously.

As I mentioned before, there were other qualified, good candidates. As mentioned here, they did not have a negative history with the government of Alberta. These other candidates did not try to sue the government for firing them. That's problematic, when, in fact, that's the furthest thing from the truth, and I expressed that before. That's the furthest thing from the truth. The person's term – his contract just termed out, his service term, and the judge confirmed that decision. He was certainly qualified, but is he the right person? I think that you would call this a somewhat tarnished history if you look back at what has happened. If he has to say that he was fired and, in fact, all he was was termed out, that's a problem.

However, this government has proposed to hire him again, and that might raise an eyebrow or two on Main Street, Alberta. It really should concern every Albertan, that we can expect this individual to move forward in a type of manner that will see no animosity, stigma, or baggage. We need to make sure of that. That's how we're moving forward. This has to be something where we want to have the best candidate, not one that's going to cause problems going forward.

Based on the information that we do know – some information was held in camera that I wasn't privy to and that the rest of us that weren't on the committee just do not know – and based on the strange way that the majority of the committee insisted that advertisements for the position had to be hurriedly blasted out during Christmas holidays, like I say, this whole thing is problematic.

I have to speak, you know, in favour, again, of this motion A3 . . .

An Hon. Member: Amendment.

Mr. Taylor: The amendment. Pardon me. Not the motion. Thank you.

It's amendment A3 to Government Motion 16 to put it to four years. A four-year term is going to, in all likelihood . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As the chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices and indeed having been the chair for the search process, I deeply appreciate this opportunity to make a few brief comments before the vote comes before this House on the appointment of Mr. Gibson.

The member that was just speaking, again, as many of the members across the way have, referred to concerns about the conduct and the work of Mr. Gibson in his position as the Chief Electoral Officer for the province of Alberta and made the suggestion that perhaps there have been concerns that he did perhaps a poor job in the 2008 election, that there were issues, perhaps not from that specific member but certainly this has been what we've been hearing from other members across the aisle.

Now, Madam Speaker, they have not offered any actual specifics on that. They prefer to go with broad insinuations. So I'd like to take a brief moment to reflect on what actually occurred during that period.

Paula Simons at that time wrote . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I just want to clarify that you're speaking to the amendment.

Mr. Shepherd: I am indeed, Madam Speaker. This has to do with the amendment because these are the reasons that they are putting forward for why they feel the need to restrict Mr. Gibson's term and indeed partly why they seem to be suggesting that they feel the need to reduce the time that's allocated to this position.

Now, I would note that Paula Simons wrote an article back in February 2009, Gibson Affair Sends Terrible Message. One of her comments was:

But whatever Gibson's failures as chief electoral officer may or may not have been, it looks as though he was dismissed because he repeatedly embarrassed the Stelmach government by writing reports filled with uncomfortable recommendations.

That was the view of the media at the time, Madam Speaker, and indeed the view of members of the opposition, including at that time our Premier.

I would note that what actually occurred at that time was that Mr. Gibson came in, and he became the Chief Electoral Officer for the province of Alberta. This, Madam Speaker, is all from the Alberta Hansard and is available online for anyone that wishes to review it and the testimony that was taken regarding the 2008 election, noting that Mr. Gibson sent multiple requests to the then Minister of Justice asking for them to appoint returning officers because at the time of Mr. Gibson's arrival as Chief Electoral Officer in the province of Alberta the governing party selected returning officers. They appointed the people that would supervise the vote in every constituency across the province, not terribly nonpartisan and definitely not a system that was in place in many other jurisdictions, including the province of Manitoba, from which Mr. Gibson had come.

Indeed, he worked within the system that was available. He made multiple requests, beginning on May 16, 2006, continuing through March 29, 2007, four requests in total. Then on April 18, 2007 . . .

Mr. McIver: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, a point of order has been called.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm rising under 23(h), (i), and (j). The member is imputing "false or unavowed motives to another Member." You know what? We've been careful on this side not to question the incoming person's track record but, rather, to talk about the process and how the government is trying to actually be disrespectful to the current Chief Electoral Officer.

In my view, the hon. member is really being disrespectful after putting time allocation on, trying to not even talk about the amendment and, rather, chew up time. I know the government is embarrassed by this motion, which is why they had to time allocate it, and I understand that they're trying to cover up what is a big mistake that they're making and an obvious mistake. But the fact is that the hon. member and the rest of the government actually are going down this road, not addressing the amendment and trying to imply false motives to members of the opposition because they're embarrassed by this motion, as they should be, which is why they put time allocation on it.

They don't want to hear the opposition's good and reasonable objections to this action, they don't want to hear the opposition's genuine concerns about changing electoral officers in the middle of an election, and they don't want to hear the opposition's genuine and heartfelt concerns about how disrespectful this is to the Chief Electoral Officer, to put somebody else in his office, give him essentially the same job, potentially pay him more money, essentially after not even having consulted with him about the piece of legislation that authorizes this hiring.

They have so much to be ashamed about, and they're implying false motives to the opposition in an attempt to cover up and hide and run away from debate on something that the government is clearly and rightfully and justifiably embarrassed about. I would ask you to ask the hon. member to stop.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I think that before I address the point of order directly, because that went on a bit of a frolic, I might say that the government is not the least bit embarrassed about this. We are absolutely so proud to be able to bring forward this appointment, to be able to bring forward and protect democracy in this province from dark money.

Madam Speaker, the member, I believe, rose under imputing false and unavowed motives. I'd like to point out that our member was actually citing a columnist's, a journalist's writings. Using the words of journalists is a frequent thing that happens all the time in this place. He's not intending to impute unavowed motives to anyone.

Madam Speaker, I think that with respect to the allegation, which I don't think was the point of order, that he's trying to talk out the clock, it's certainly not the intention here. He is in fact speaking to the amendment. The hon. members have put forward a justification for shortening the term, they've put forward a justification for only making this a 60 per cent position, and these are the justifications for why we think that the original decision was, in fact, the correct decision.

So I don't believe that there is a point of order here. I think there is a dispute as to the facts, facts which occurred, Madam Speaker, quite a long time ago.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

I am prepared to discuss the point of order at this time. It is not a point of order. However, I would like to remind the member that if you could speak specifically to the amendment, that would be appreciated. Also, if you could table any of the documents that you have spoken to.

Mr. Shepherd: Absolutely. I'd be happy to table that document.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Shepherd: Indeed, in regard to this particular amendment, again suggesting that Mr. Gibson's term should be limited to four years and then designating a salary of 60 per cent, as I was noting, there were multiple requests that were made. It took 19 months before the requests were met to appoint returning officers – 19 months, Madam Speaker – and that shortly before the election itself was actually called. These matters are available in Hansard for anyone that wishes to read them. Indeed, many journalists and people did at the time and observed that Mr. Gibson's conduct given the circumstances was, in fact, pretty commendable.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, pursuant to Government Motion 23, that was agreed to on May 10, the time allotment has now expired. I will put forward the first question, which is the vote on amendment A3 to Motion 16, as proposed by the hon. Member for Airdrie.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 9 Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered in respect of this bill? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to thank members for joining us, late this morning now, for continued debate on Bill 9. As I've mentioned previously, I don't believe that this bill strikes the appropriate balance between security of the person for women trying to access abortion clinics and balancing it appropriately with freedom of expression and freedom of assembly. Some of the amendments I bring forward are trying to better balance that, in my view, but some of the amendments I'm bringing forward are of a more technical nature, a more fine-tuning nature, trying to simply improve upon the wording of the bill, trying to clarify some of the bill so that, you know, even those of us who do not agree with it can at least have a more clear piece of legislation in front of us so that when it probably, inevitably passes, it'll be the most functional and clean piece of legislation possible.

Before I continue, I'll distribute an amendment to the pages.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. If you could please just wait until I have a copy at the table. Hon. member, please proceed. Your amendment will be referred to as A4.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. Mr. Fildebrandt to move that Bill 9, Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act, be amended in section 1 by adding the following after clause (e): "(e.1) 'intimidate' means to threaten violence or other injury to another person or to damage the property of another person."

This isn't changing the substance of anything in the legislation other than adding a definition in the definition section. This is, to the best of my knowledge here, using the Criminal Code of Canada's definition. This is using a definition of intimidate that has been upheld by the courts on federal and provincial levels from time immemorial, that clearly defines what intimidate means.

I think even those of us here who oppose Bill 9 – I at least support parts of the bill. I think it should be and it actually already is illegal to intimidate folks by threatening violence or injury to another person or to damage the property of those persons. That is already illegal, but this bill wants to clarify that. This is not a part of the bill that I have any problem with whatsoever. So if we want to clarify in this bill that intimidation is illegal, although it already is, if we want to do that, that's still a laudable goal.

My goal here is not to change the legislation in a substantive way except only to include a definition, a definition used in the Criminal Code of Canada, that has already been upheld by the courts. This just clarifies so that we're not throwing it to the courts. You know, the goal of this bill, I think, from the government's perspective, has been that the court injunctions, in their view, are insufficient. They want to put this in legislation because the court process can be lengthy and unreliable at times. If the goal is to make sure that this is speedy and not tied down in the bureaucracy of the courts, then it's, I think, best to have a very clear definition of what we mean by intimidate.

So I've decided not to reinvent the wheel here. We've just looked to the Criminal Code of Canada and taken that to be inserted. As I've said, it doesn't change the substance of the legislation in any way. It doesn't change the intent of the bill. It doesn't change the spirit of the bill. This is just cleaning up some of the wording by adding a proper definition of what intimidation is using the Criminal Code of Canada.

I ask members to give this due consideration regardless of how you feel about the bill. If you're for it, if you're against it, if you have no official opinion on the bill, simply adding this definition is just cleaning up the wording for better legislation regardless of how you feel about the bill itself.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to amendment A4? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Chair. I thank the member for this amendment, for being here through the votes and the discussion and debate. I don't actually support this amendment and encourage everyone else to do the same. The reason is that I think the amendment, if approved, would narrow the scope of the word "intimidate" to the wording used in the Criminal Code. Some forms of threats and intimidation that could be included under the legislation could not be included if this amendment were to pass. Currently the definition of intimidate and intimidation is left up to the discretion of the courts, which allows more flexibility when enforcing. Although I appreciate the effort to try to make this better and to keep providers and women seeking treatment safe, I don't actually agree with it.

I wanted to say a couple of things. Like most people, I think, I find it shocking that members on the other side will stand up and say how important it is to support women and to keep them safe from violence and intimidation and harassment yet wilfully stand up and turn their backs and walk away when they're given the opportunity to do just that.

In addition to that, I think the abortion provider community – again, it's not just those particular services that are offered in this clinic – is made up of medical professionals who are both highly skilled and uniquely dedicated to protecting the lives and the health of women. They treat their patients with incredible respect and provide the highest level of care, and they deserve our thanks and protection. You know, they don't need to go to work and be fearful every day or to mentally and physically have to prepare themselves to face an onslaught of intimidation and harassment, not to mention a woman simply trying to get health care in this province.

The fact, once again, that people across the way, when given the opportunity to stand up and say, "Regardless of what I may think, I want to do what's right for women in Alberta; I want to keep them free from abuse and intimidation, so, yes, I'm going to support this": they're choosing not to do that.

I think one other thing that they're doing is that they're encouraging other people to take this stand. You know, we can't help but see, living as close as we do to the United States, what's happening there, when political leaders wilfully call women who obtain health services and express their reproductive rights, essentially, criminals that should be punished. Of course, you know, there is one particular leader who I won't name. I think there's a fact-checker full-time at one of the big national papers that does a running fact check, and one of the things he said repeatedly is to spread lies about the fact that abortion providers will simply rip a child out of a woman's womb at nine months. We know that's not true. That's just a bald-faced lie, and it's disgusting, and it emboldens people.

What all of this does: by turning your back on women and by allowing this to happen, it has ramped up the hatred. It has ramped up the misinformation, the protesting, the intimidation, and the harassment, and we're seeing it here in our province. We're allowing it to happen, and by turning your back and ignoring this important issue, you're creating an environment where you're condoning. When you do nothing and you say nothing, you condone, and that's sad. I can't imagine that every woman in your constituency is okay with that, but I imagine you'll have to reckon with that at some point.

Again, thank you to the member for the amendment. I appreciate the fact that you've been here throughout by yourself. That's all I have to say.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm just trying to share the floor and wait and see if anyone else tries to get up. You might want to just always check with the Valhalla section before calling the question.

I thank the member for her comments in the debate here. I can't agree, though, with her objections to this amendment. We're simply mirroring what is used in the Criminal Code of Canada, which has been upheld by the law. It is possible that the amendment could even be redundant because if this goes before the courts, it is highly likely that lower courts would be looking to use of the term "intimidation" as has been already upheld in the courts. Even if they don't, surely appellate courts, if it goes that far, would likely uphold the definition of intimidation already established by our common law and the Criminal Code of Canada.

It may be a moot point regardless, but my concern is, you know, that sometimes we can use terms rather loosely. What constitutes intimidation? I think that the Criminal Code of Canada's definition is pertinent and tight. It's threatening violence or injury to another person or damage to their property. Sometimes the term "intimidate" can be used a little bit loosely. It might mean that someone simply has a big presence. You might be intimidated, but it might not be intentional intimidation. I think it's important that we clarify what exactly we mean when we're passing laws like this.

I appreciate her concerns. Harassment is a different part of this. We're not clarifying the harassment definition here, so I don't think that any concerns around this would take away from, you know, having flexible enough language around "harassment," which I think is, again, a term that does mean something but can be used rather broadly sometimes. I mean, there's harassment, and there's heckling. I don't think most of us here – everybody loves heckling. I don't think we'd call it harassment, but some could probably extend the definition to that. Like "intimidation," I think it's important when we're writing laws to be very specific about what we mean.

That's why this is going forward and just simply mirroring what is in the Criminal Code of Canada. This is not changing the intent of the bill. This is not changing even the spirit of the bill or even the weight of the bill in one direction or another. It is simply trying to clarify the language in it so that we're absolutely clear what we mean when we make it illegal – it already is illegal, so when we essentially make it illegal again – for people to intimidate anyone entering or exiting these buildings. I'd ask members to give due consideration to this just to clarify some of the wording.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill. Are there any comments or questions? The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I would now move that the committee rise and report progress on Bill 9.

[Motion carried]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 9. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur with the report? All in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed, please say no. So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 12

Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act

The Acting Speaker: I'll now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today as cosponsor of Bill 12 to move third reading on behalf of the minister and to voice my support for this bill and for the action our government has taken to get pipelines to tidewater.

Now, the other day the Leader of the Opposition railed about the campaign of misinformation being conducted by opponents of the Trans Mountain pipeline, and I have to say that I agreed with much of what he had to say. Certainly, I believe that pipeline opponents are often short on facts to back up their arguments. They oppose Trans Mountain expansion out of concern for the rights of First Nations while ignoring the numerous indigenous leaders who have voiced their support for the pipeline, including virtually all of those along the proposed pipeline route.

They oppose the pipeline on environmental grounds but ignore the considerable progress that the industry has made to reduce emissions and Alberta's cap on greenhouse gas emissions in the oil sands.

Of course, there is the B.C. government, who opposes the Trans Mountain pipeline, a pipeline over which they have no jurisdiction, while approving a pipeline to transport fuel to the Vancouver International Airport.

I have to say, Madam Speaker, that if one is going to rail against misinformation, one had better practise what he preaches, and on this front the Leader of the Opposition and members of his caucus fall woefully short. Let's just name a couple of examples. Members opposite like to claim that members of the government have done nothing to promote or support pipelines. I guess that when you get your news from Rebel media, it's possible that they may have missed hearing everything our government and our Premier have done.

Really, Madam Speaker, when you're a member of the Legislature, is it too much to ask to follow the news? The members opposite apparently missed it, but the Premier's first interprovincial meeting after being elected was with New Brunswick Premier Brian Gallant, in July 2015. A news release stated, "The two premiers . . . discussed carbon exchange pricing and the Energy East project, and recognized their importance for both governments."

In October 2015 our Premier and Premier Gallant held a news conference right here in Edmonton to affirm their support for Energy East. A direct quote from our Premier: Alberta as the push and New Brunswick as the pull in terms of getting that pipeline approved.

In March 2017 we even talked about our support for both Energy East and Trans Mountain in the Speech from the Throne. Again, I know it's not on Rebel media, but the pages actually handed members opposite a copy of that speech in the very Assembly. Is it too much to ask that they read the Speech from the Throne?

Also on Trans Mountain, on January 12, 2016, our Premier provided a written submission on behalf of the government of Alberta to the National Energy Board. In April 2016 she presented to the federal cabinet, and in December 2016 she travelled to Vancouver to promote the economic benefits of Trans Mountain to British Columbia and British Columbians.

I could go on and on, Madam Speaker, but I'm sure you get my point. If members opposite fail to understand, I'm sure my colleagues would be happy to give some further examples of where we have stepped up to support pipelines because I want to move on to a different example of how the Leader of the Opposition and his caucus like to spread misinformation.

You know, a favourite talking point of the members opposite is that because someone somewhere still opposes pipelines, our government's climate leadership plan has failed. They claim that it hasn't convinced anyone, Madam Speaker. This conveniently ignores the fact that the climate leadership plan helped convince the people with the authority to actually make this decision, the government of Canada. In other words, this pipeline would have been dead 18 months ago if it wasn't for the leadership our government has shown to position Alberta as a responsible energy producer. The members opposite can try to ignore it, but it's an undeniable fact.

It also ignores the fact that as our Premier and other members of our government share Alberta's story across Alberta and across the country, support for the pipeline is rising. According to recent polls a large majority of Canadians, including a majority of British Columbians, now support the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion. In other words, Madam Speaker, our strategy to work with industry, with environmentalists, and with indigenous people to get this pipeline built is working.

But members opposite howl that because not everyone is convinced, somehow the government has failed. We haven't convinced people who are never going to change their minds under any circumstances, no matter what facts were placed in front of them, people with extreme positions whose minds were made up a long time ago and who will never budge from those positions, no matter what evidence shows or what a majority of their fellow Canadians may think.

You know, Madam Speaker, it's a lot like the opinions of the Leader of the Opposition, and this was the point I was trying to make the other day on social issues. For years public opinion polls have shown that three-quarters or more of Albertans support a woman's right to reproductive choice or the right of same-sex couples to marry, yet the Leader of the Opposition clings to his extreme hardline views on these topics. He hasn't changed his mind with more information or tried to catch up with the majority. He believes what he believes.

Madam Speaker, the climate leadership plan was about getting the trust of reasonable Canadians and potential investors from outside Canada, the people who needed convincing. The majority of Canadians were and are people who believe that climate change is real, who care about the environment, and who want to see evidence that Alberta is a responsible energy producer. Well, we've been able to show them that evidence, and the result is that support for the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion is rising. A majority of Albertans support it, a majority of Canadians support it, and a majority of British Columbians support it.

Our approach is working, Madam Speaker. It's winning the day, and it's thanks to this approach that this pipeline is going to get built. Thank you.

With that, I'd like to move third reading of Bill 12.

11:40

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to compliment the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood for actually speaking up on important matters like pipelines recently. I appreciate that. But he would do well, instead of being obsessed to go after the Leader of the Official Opposition on every single occasion – his constituents, partly going to be my constituents soon, would appreciate if he really focused on matters of substance.

Madam Speaker, I rise to speak in support of Bill 12 because in this House, at least on this bill, there is no scope for divisions. But since the members opposite keep bringing up criticism of the Leader of the Official Opposition, I also have the responsibility to correct the record here. I'll speak to that briefly.

Madam Speaker, Bill 12 is an incredible, powerful bill that can halt exports of Alberta's oil and gas, or it can prioritize or it can optimize the products shipped to the west coast. While the province cannot restrict flows on federal pipelines or federal railways, it is the feeders to these that can be shuttered, slowing the flow to a trickle. Provincial pipeline tank farms are all affected by Bill 12. So, too, are the provincial short lines and industrial railways. This means that many tank cars will not get loaded for the shipments outside Alberta if the powers of Bill 12 are used. These are incredible, extraordinary powers. Bill 12 is a very much loaded economic weapon, with unlimited ammunition, and the NDP government has no shortage of targets.

The Leader of the Official Opposition and the Member for Calgary-Lougheed has been advocating for these powers for eight months. We in the Official Opposition are here prepared to help load this economic weapon and hand it over to the Premier and her government to actually use. But recent comments indicate that the NDP government does not understand the concept of ready, aim, fire.

Industry is onboard with these powers. Some of my stakeholders that I consulted such as the Explorers and Producers Association of Canada and its president, Gary Leach – this is what he had to say: we are supportive from the perspective that we need this pipeline impasse resolved. So, too, Petroleum Services Association of Canada's president, Tom Whalen: "The larger issue is the crisis in confidence that investors cannot rely on the rule of law in Canada for investment of their capital, especially if the government must resort to taking a financial position in the project to ensure it proceeds."

The Official Opposition understands the need for these powers now, until the Kinder Morgan Trans Mountain pipeline expansion is built. So, too, does Saskatchewan. A bill before the Saskatchewan Legislature will do the same thing. Having an expiry date for these powers signals to industry that this is a temporary measure. An expiry date allows investors to invest with certainty and confidence instead of uncertainty.

Bill 12 brings in a licensing system for the export of petroleum products. Needing a licence is not a given but entirely at the minister's discretion and subject to a public interest test. Permits issued under the Gas Resources Preservation Act to move natural gas are deemed to be already having a licence. There will be a public interest to test the issuing of the licence, based on the point of export; method of export; maximum quantities; maximum daily quantities; conditions for diversion, reduction, or interruption; and the period of time for the licence. The minister may reconsider decisions made.

Madam Speaker, I actually went to the technical briefing on the bill, and I had tons of questions. The minister's chief of staff gave me his phone number and said: call me later; I'll clarify it for you.

I took him up on that, seriously, and called. But no answer till today. I reminded the minister: Minister, I called your chief of staff; he offered to clarify; no answer. I didn't want to bring it up in the House. I wanted to come prepared to debate, and I also wanted to share that information with my colleagues. Till today no one got back to me, just to put it on the record. That's why we have so many questions still. In spite of that, we're still supporting this bill because the United Conservatives put Alberta first.

The Minister of Energy will create regulations as required, specifying how Bill 12 will be: applications for which fuels, applications for a licence or an amendment or renewal of a licence, fees for a licence or licence renewal, terms or conditions to which licences are subject, and the method of measurement of natural gas, crude oil, or refined fuels.

Madam Speaker, with up to 35 per cent of Washington state petroleum coming from the Trans Mountain pipeline, any disruption in flow will raise gasoline and diesel prices in America as well. We know that the governor of Washington stands arm in arm with the B.C. NDP Premier, John Horgan, on this pipeline. What would America say and do if their most trusted, secure supply of petroleum was halted? Would America take Canada in front of the NAFTA panel and litigate? We don't know.

Would the federal government be forced to pay a penalty, and would Ottawa even dare to try to tax the penalty back from Alberta after Albertans pay over $20 billion a year to Ottawa? That's not just small money. We're sending $20 billion to Ottawa each year that never comes back. That is the equivalent of the entire budget for national defence. And British Columbia had a chance to oppose the pipeline at the NEB hearing, and they didn't.

Madam Speaker, the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood also mentioned that when someone somewhere opposes pipelines, we say something. It's not someone somewhere. There are people in this House, that actually sit on the front benches on the other side, that oppose pipelines. I have a video showing the Premier opposing Northern Gateway, and this Premier didn't say one word when Trudeau killed Energy East. A member of this cabinet wrote the introduction to a book on how to obstruct pipelines, how to take an action a day to keep capitalism away. I can name other members. I mean, it's on the Internet. They can google it. When he says that, he should remind himself that there are people in this House who oppose pipelines still today.

I'm not making it an issue. They brought up, you know, on Bill 12, instead of talking about it, an attack on the Leader of the Official Opposition. That is not helping Albertans. That's why I had to bring it up. As I said, Madam Speaker, we have to stand together on this. We don't care who gets the credit. Our leader said that he'll give the credit where it is due.

If they don't want to follow through on what they say in this House, what's the point of passing this bill if they don't want to even use it? In good faith we are supporting this bill, hoping that they'll use it, because Bill 12 is a loaded economic weapon. It will take a government that is prepared to proclaim it. They have to proclaim this, Madam Speaker; otherwise, they can't use it. They have to proclaim the law in order to make British Columbia wake up and realize that there are consequences to their lawfare and their disrespect of the Constitution vis-à-vis projects in the national interest.

With that, Madam Speaker, I urge every member of this Legislature to vote in favour of Bill 12. Thank you.

11:50

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I feel I've been sitting here in the Assembly listening to a lot of speeches from the opposition, and I always have to ask myself: what are they actually saying, and do they always recognize that we're sitting here in the provincial Assembly of Alberta and not in Ottawa? I'm really confused about what you believe, what you don't believe, and where you're going with this.

Today I wanted to talk about Bill 12 and the wonderful day that I spent with the Minister of Energy actually visiting a lot of the pipeline industry in my riding. The members opposite may not know this, but in our riding we actually have the beginning of the Trans Mountain pipeline and we have the Inter Pipeline company and Pembina, who, through their control stations, run all of the pipelines, I think, mostly in Alberta. As you can well imagine, the issue of the pipeline is very important to myself and my constituents, and we actually spent a lot of time talking to the companies. You know what? We discussed this bill with the companies in the visits with the minister.

I should pause and really thank the staff of the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park who organized these visits with these companies.

We actually talked about this bill and why the government was proposing this bill and the importance of this bill. Do you know what? We didn't get any push-back from these companies because they understood that the reason the government was putting this bill forward was because it was really needed to show our determination to get this pipeline built.

I want to really thank the Premier and the Minister of Energy for their commitment to having this pipeline built and for understanding the importance of having legislative resources in case we run across blocks. We spent the whole day with the minister and these pipeline companies. Through that discussion, it was very obvious that the minister had spent quite a bit of time consulting with the oil and gas sector and that she had talked to them, obviously, about the purpose of this bill and what may happen or not. And they were very, very supportive of the opportunity.

Now, I just want to really speak a little bit more about the point that I made that we're here in the provincial Legislature and not in Ottawa. I'm really, really confused. I believe that it's very dangerous to keep mixing provincial and federal political levels. I have to also wonder if a lot of the comments that are coming from the opposite side on this bill are really something that should have happened at the federal stage but that the current leader of that party is still fighting in this Legislature his thinking about climate change. I don't think the opposition really believes that climate change is something that really happens.

One of the things that the opposition recently said – and I think it really relates to this bill and why there's been some work done by the ministry – is, again, an attack on environmentalists and so on. You know, when I talk to the oil and gas companies – and I do spend a lot of time with them, and I know the Minister of Energy and many ministers do – one of the things that I always do is to meet with environmentalists within the oil and gas sector.

I don't know if you know that, but all of the oil and gas sector has environmentalists that are a very important part of their team. When the pipelines are built, there are a lot of environmental standards. There's actually not only one control station for each pipeline; there's also a substation somewhere else that's totally independent so that in case there's a failure within the main control station, there is the possibility of quickly switching to the other control station so that any leaks and so on are prevented.

So the oil and gas sectors have very strong environmental safeguards, and they hire environmentalists. This is why I have to wonder why the opposition is always talking negatively about environmentalists and the work that environmentalists do because we wouldn't have this pipeline and all the other pipelines in Alberta if these companies did not hire environmentalists to make sure that the environment is protected and so on.

What I would really like to ask the opposition at some point is: why are you always fighting environmentalists, and why do you think that the work of environmentalists is very bad when the oil and gas sector all have a lot of environmentalists on their staff? It is the work of the environmentalists and the staff, as I find out when I visit these companies, that is really allowing the pipelines to be built in a way that safeguards all of us. So I would like to just suggest to the members opposite that you actually go and visit these companies and meet environmentalists and find out what work the environmentalists have done to allow these pipelines to be built.

I'm so thankful for the work that Trans Mountain has done and is doing and the careful work that they were doing in my riding at the beginning of the pipeline to make sure that the pipeline can be built in a safe way that protects all of us from spills.

I just wanted to go back and talk a little bit about the work that the Minister of Energy is doing on this bill and why this bill has gotten support from the oil and gas sector. The oil and gas sector knows that the only way that this bill would be used is if indeed it was the only way, if we could not get the pipeline built. There are a lot of safeguards in that so that it's only going to be used when it's needed and not used for purposes that are not appropriate.

I wanted to talk a little bit about the importance of the Trans Mountain pipeline, not only to my sector. I don't know if you know that when a pipeline is built, a lot of the companies make sure that the material is bought locally. For example, in my constituency we actually have steel manufacturers and we have a steel mill, but the pipeline is going to bring economic benefits to many, many communities around Alberta. One of the things I really appreciate from the oil and gas companies in my riding and in the Industrial Heartland is that they make a real huge effort of employing local people and buying the material that is needed in Alberta and from local companies. I think this is a real demonstration to me that these oil and gas companies understand that the benefit of their work is throughout Alberta.

I'm especially delighted when I find out that these companies, including the Trans Mountain pipeline, are hiring a lot of women. When we recently visited the Trans Mountain pipeline, Inter Pipeline, and Pembina Pipeline, we saw the real efforts that these companies are making to diversify their workplaces, to hire women, to hire more minorities, to hire indigenous communities.

I would like to urge all members of the Assembly to support this bill, to also support the work that those pipeline companies are doing to be environmentally responsible, and to stop bashing environmentalists through their policies at their conventions or through what the Leader of the Opposition says because these pipelines would not be built if these companies did not have such strong environmental leadership within their head offices and within their top management.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2.1) the Assembly will now stand adjourned until 1:30 this afternoon.

[The Assembly adjourned at 12 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, May 10, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. I'm from southern Alberta. It's nice to see that there's a little bit of rain happening. It's dry out there.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Adriana LaGrange. Adriana has served on the board of trustees for Red Deer Catholic regional schools since 2007 and is currently in her second term as president of the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association. She's known as a faith-filled and energetic leader with a great passion for Catholic education across Alberta. With Adriana today are Dean Sarnecki, executive director with the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association, and Eugenia Kowalczyk, also with the ACSTA. I would ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly family members of our current page Amanda Porter. Seated in the Speaker's gallery are James and Shelley Porter, Amanda's parents, as well as her sister Elizabeth Porter and grandfather William Klute. Shelley is a former school trustee who is currently with Alberta Justice, and James is a salesman with a love of politics. William is a farmer in Sturgeon county, and Elizabeth is currently studying chemical biology at UBC. They are in the Speaker's gallery today to observe Amanda in her role as head page during her last session here at the Legislature. We will bid farewell to Amanda as she leaves to attend university in the fall, after holding her position as a page since November 2015. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Sweet: Mr. Speaker, joining the Porter family in the Speaker's gallery is former page Christian Fotang. Mr. Fotang was a page until last year and is joining us to watch session one more time. I would ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Good to see you again.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you today the students and assistants from St. Augustine school, a great bunch of students and a great school, I have to say. The students are accompanied by teachers Sharon Hackett and Ken Hackett along with some chaperones: Amanda Scott, Jennifer LaForge, Sara Dennis, Crystal Fleck, Alison Roland-Klimec, Marilyn Almond, and Tony Cabay. I would ask them all to rise, please, and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, it is my sincere pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Alberta's official forest fire prevention mascot, Bertie Beaver, standing today in the members' gallery. Bertie was a gift to the province of Alberta from Walt Disney as a thank you for filming in Kananaskis. This year marks Bertie's 60th birthday, and I must say that Bertie has never looked better. As we observe Alberta Forest Week, I invite everyone to honour and protect our forests by following Bertie and helping us stamp out wildfires. I would like for Bertie to wave and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: So, hon. minister, what's the matter with being 60?

Mr. Carlier: Nothing, Mr. Speaker. Not a thing.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you Janice Willier along with her sons Zachary and Jaxon. The Willier family lives here in Edmonton, but they are proud members of the Moostoos family in Sucker Creek First Nation in Treaty 8 territory. Janice has long worked to improve the holistic health of First Nations in Alberta, a passion that has led her to an executive director role at HCOM, the Health Co-Management Secretariat, here in Edmonton. Zachary is a talented fiddle player who attends Maskwacis academy and has represented Alberta youth at the national Métis gathering in Batoche, Saskatchewan. Jaxon attends Prince Charles school and is also a gifted fiddle player who dabbles in drums, guitar, and violin. I would ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you members of the Stollery Children's Hospital Foundation and some of the families that they support, who are seated in our members' gallery. They're here to celebrate Stollery day, and I hope that my colleagues were able to spend a few minutes with them downstairs to celebrate the excellence that they are helping us provide in terms of children's health. Now, please stand as I say your names – the Stanley, Post, Pinchuk, and MacKinnon families as well as Martin Schuldhaus, Mike House, and Cora Carter – to receive the warm welcome of our Assembly as well as our appreciation.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Hoffman: The second, Mr. Speaker, if I may. Thank you. I also rise today in recognition of World Lupus Day. Lupus is a serious autoimmune disease affecting approximately 1 in 1,000 Canadians. I want to commend Lupus Canada and the Lupus Society of Alberta for their leadership in promoting public awareness and general education about lupus and for providing compassion, hope, and support for those who are affected as well as their families. I invite Shane from Lupus Canada as well as Rosemary from the Lupus Society of Alberta and all of the patient advocates who are here today seated in our public gallery to please rise and receive the warm welcome and, again, appreciation of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning has another introduction, I believe.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand to introduce to you and through you a school from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, Destiny Christian School. Currently they are visiting the Legislature with 26 students from their school. I would ask them all to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Stollery Children's Hospital Foundation

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The health of our province starts with the health of its children. The Stollery Children's Hospital Foundation has a vision. It wants to help transform children's health care so that every child, no matter where they live, can get the best possible care anywhere. That's why we're proud to host Stollery day at the Legislature today. This is an opportunity for our members to celebrate the amazing, world-renowned expertise that exists right here in our own backyard to help kids like Austin from Cold Lake, Evanna from Calgary, Jack and Lily from Redwater, Josie from Whitecourt, and Porter in his backyard of Onoway. I'm proud to say that all of these Stollery kids and their families are with us today in the gallery.

With more than 291,000 patient visits each year and more than one-third of those kids coming from outside the Edmonton region, the Stollery children's hospital is one of the busiest children's hospitals in Canada. It is the most specialized pediatric facility in all of Western Canada, performing more than 11,000 surgeries per year and providing care to some of the most complex health cases anywhere in the world.

The foundation is committed to investing in the best people, programs, equipment, and research to make sure that the Stollery has what it needs. With the support of its donors the Stollery is the foremost funder of pediatric research in Alberta, $40 million over 10 years, through the Women and Children's Health Research Institute at the University of Alberta.

The foundation also believes in equity and fairness. That's why it's investing in mental health, indigenous health, and transitional health from child to adult in an effort to expand the Stollery's growing network of care.

Stollery day is an opportunity for us to reflect on the tremendous impact this hospital has on our province and the vital importance children's health plays in the future of our province.

On behalf of Austin, Evanna, Jack, Lily, Josie, Porter, and their families, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Catholic Education

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and highlight today as World Catholic Education Day, which is being celebrated across Canada. Catholic education has served parents, their children, and communities in countries across the world. In Canada Catholic education is an integral contributor to our Canadian identity and culture, serving the nation through faith-based leading and learning. Catholic education, with its deeply rooted teachings of social justice, service to the community, and ongoing promotion of respect and dignity for all persons, values which are inherent to our identity as Canadians and Albertans, has helped define who we are.

Catholic schools provide an environment for the students which encourages not only high academic achievement but strong emphasis on love of God, self, and others. This is achieved by permeating all curriculum with faith, emphasizing sacrificial love, respect for creation, and academic development in an effort to form the student's whole person.

Mr. Speaker, the strength of Alberta's education system is built on the foundation of choice. Parents have a variety of options to choose from as they decide what the best avenue of education is for their kids. With steadily increasing enrolment numbers, parents in Alberta continue to demonstrate that Catholic education remains a primary option for many families across the province.

I would like to offer my most sincere congratulations to all who are involved in Catholic education in our province, and I would ask all members of the Assembly to join me in congratulating all of our fantastic English and francophone Catholic schools across this great province and wishing them the best as they celebrate World Catholic Education Day.

Human-animal Bond

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, humans have kept domestic animals as pets for thousands of years, but it's only been in the last 40 years or so that the benefits of the human-animal bond have become better understood. Research has shown the health benefits of pet ownership: lower blood pressure, lower cholesterol, less anxiety, fewer heart attacks, and fewer suicides. Incredible service dogs support people who are blind, deaf, have autism, epilepsy, or PTSD.

Other research has shown the benefits of having animals in our workplaces. While we've gone to great lengths in making this place more family friendly, our four-legged family members are banned. I used to bring my dog to work here at the Legislature, and those days were the best days.

Ninety per cent of Canadians consider their pet a member of the family. Now, as a veterinarian I viewed my job not as someone who cured disease or repaired injuries; my job was to preserve family relationships.

Now, our family has been blessed with the unconditional love over the years of three dogs: our Airedale, Hillary; our golden retriever, Sara; and until three weeks ago our Bernese mountain dog, Liesl. We shared all the joy, the laughter, the heartaches, and the tears of our time together.

It's been said that dogs live short lives and that it's really their only fault. When they die, we grieve and maybe ask the question that I got so many times from teary-eyed children: will my dog go to heaven? Now, Hollywood says that all dogs go heaven, but some theologians argue that dogs can't go to heaven because they don't have souls. Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm a veterinarian, not a theologian, but I've looked deeply into the trusting eyes of thousands of dogs, and my professional opinion says that dogs have souls. And as for going to heaven, well, I agree with Will Rogers: if dogs don't go to heaven, I want to go where they went.

In the meantime I'll keep believing that we are richly blessed to share the Earth with animals and that when my earthly journey here is done, my dogs will be waiting patiently for me at the rainbow bridge to go for one more walk.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Mental Health Week

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today to speak about a topic that affects us all. Mental health is something that affects 1 in 5 Albertans, and when you think about your family, your friends, and your co-workers, I'm sure that you yourself know someone who has been impacted. Mental health is something that we should all be aware of year-round, but this week especially we need to make some noise and let everybody around us know that mental health is an issue to be taken seriously.

The 67th annual Mental Health Week runs this year from May 7 to 13. It is an opportunity to attend events, speak to loved ones, and raise awareness. The theme of this year's event is Get Loud, and the Edmonton chapter of the Canadian Mental Health Association lets everyone know what that means.

Getting loud means speaking up to stop the discrimination and the stigma that usually go hand in hand with mental illness. It means using your voice to raise awareness and build support. For someone at work. For someone at home. For yourself.

I am proud to be part of a government that recognizes the importance of mental health. Soon after our election the Premier struck the Alberta Mental Health Review Committee to look at the state of mental health and addictions treatment in Alberta. From that committee came the Valuing Mental Health report and a series of recommendations to improve the system. I'm proud to say that Alberta Health has been taking a proactive role ever since implementing those recommendations and working in collaboration across government and with community agencies to support people in need.

For this Mental Health Week let's say it proudly and loudly: mental health is everyone's business. Stop the discrimination and stigma. Offer and build support. Together we can all be healthier.

Thank you so much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Catholic Education

Ms McKittrick: Thank you. Merci, M. le Président. Alberta's Catholic community makes an enormous contribution to our province. This is why I'm rising today to recognize World Catholic Education Day. Every year Catholics across the world give thanks for the gift of Catholic education. Alberta has a long and wonderful tradition of publicly funded education. Every day Catholic schools teach students the skills they need to be leaders in their communities and to build a bright future for themselves, their families, and the province as a whole.

The government is proud to support all of our students. We are hiring new teachers, reducing school fees, and making investments we need to make in our children. In my constituency we are celebrating the announcement of the modernization of l'école Père Kenneth Kearns Catholic elementary school, which will provide modern learning spaces for students for generations to come.

Alberta's greatest strength is its diversity. Alberta is home to many faith communities, who have contributed greatly to the identity of this province. While each of us in this province lives out our own values, there is more that unites us than divides us: our sense of fairness, our compassion, our sense of justice, our desire to ensure that all children are nurtured and cared for, our pioneer spirit, and for many of us the centrality of our faith to our daily lives, myself included. I love walking into Archbishop Jordan school in Sherwood Park and seeing the 12 chairs and the statue of Jesus, where students meet and develop community. It brings the centrality of faith into the everyday life of the students.

I hope that World Catholic Education Day brings Albertans marking the occasion inspiration and grace and that together we can continue to do the important work of ensuring that our children can reach their full potential.

Merci.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Justice System Concerns

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our legal aid system limps along in a state of crisis that costs all Albertans in longer court wait times and impaired access to the legal system for everyday Albertans, with serious charges being stayed in criminal court cases. The president of the Criminal Defence Lawyers Association recently said that a lawyers strike is possible if the NDP government doesn't provide a significant funding increase immediately for legal aid, currently needing about $61 million. Albertans who are full-time employees making the minimum wage, about $19,000 a year, currently would not qualify for legal aid coverage. If the working poor can't get legal aid, then the system is broken. It must be fixed now. The system is overwhelmed, with up to 1,400 calls per day.

I applaud the government's investment in therapeutic courts for mental health and addictions issues, which keep people out of jail and help people heal as well as free up court time, but changes are essential to improve efficiency in the system. Foremost is a more independent board to Legal Aid from the NDP government. What is the government afraid of? Allow the board to make common-sense changes; for example, to streamline folks needing social services, mediation, private lawyers; more flexibility for family law cases to reduce conflict and ongoing court disputes that drain the system, damage clients, and do not result in optimal outcomes, especially for children.

Clearly, there's also a need for more focus on the 30 per cent of clients that are indigenous. Siksika Nation, for example, has duty counsel and social workers on-reserve at the band office. Other First Nations would benefit greatly from this service. The NDP Justice minister is not providing lasting solutions, including some increased funding, to deal with increasing demands. Instead, it's offering more consultations and delaying essential changes to the provincial justice system. We need solutions now. Albertans cannot wait any longer.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Provincial Response to Pipeline Opposition

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all want to see Kinder Morgan's Trans Mountain pipeline expansion succeed and ensure that our natural resources get to tidewater. That's why our Official Opposition called for consequences last summer, when the B.C. NDP was sworn into government, but the government chose to ignore calls for consequences until just recently. To the Premier: why did the government not take B.C.'s threat seriously until B.C. was already taking active steps to obstruct the pipeline?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. We are working to get our pipeline built to tidewater, and we are committed to ensuring that it succeeds. As our Premier said this morning, Ottawa is in a very serious and determined discussion with our government with regard to Kinder Morgan. I want to assure Albertans that those discussions are focused on one outcome and one outcome alone, the construction of the Trans Mountain pipeline. We won't take our foot off the gas. We're going to keep moving forward. We're proud that we are in a position to be able to move this important project in the national interest forward after many decades of it failing to move forward under the former government.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since last summer our Official Opposition has called for this government to turn off the taps to British Columbia if their NDP government tried to stop the pipeline. Only on March 8 of this year did the government announce that they would take such an approach. There are now only 21 days left until Kinder Morgan makes a decision on whether or not to even proceed with the project. To the Premier: why did this government wait until March 8, after months of uncertainty, to even consider this?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the important question. Certainly, we know that over many, many years there was a Conservative government here in Alberta and a Conservative government in Ottawa and that they didn't turn the taps down. We know that things have also changed over the last several months. We are very determined to make sure we get this pipeline built. That's why we brought in Bill 12, and that's why we are going to back down at nothing.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 15 B.C. Premier Horgan said that our Premier told him they wouldn't actually be using Bill 12. On April 17 B.C.'s Attorney General said: clearly, the legislation is a bluff; they don't intend to use it. There are now 21 days left until Kinder Morgan makes a final investment decision. To the Premier: how does this government plan on using Bill 12 to get the pipeline passed if they've already signalled to British Columbia that they won't use it?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much again, Mr. Speaker. Again, we've heard this question asked before, and the answer remains the same. Of course, we brought in Bill 12 so that we can have additional tools so that we can use them if we need to use them. I understand that you're taking: somebody said something to somebody else that got reported in the media, and now it's coming back to Alberta. I can tell you straight up that if we need Bill 12, we will use Bill 12. If I were one of the people in British Columbia – we've already seen the prices at the pumps go up – I'd be really worried about what's going to happen if Bill 12 does have to get used, which, of course, is at our disposal, hopefully, very soon.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Federal Policies on Pipeline Development

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After his April 15 meeting with our Premier, the Prime Minister announced that the federal legislation would be coming to reassert and reinforce federal jurisdiction on pipelines. There are only 10 sitting days left federally until Kinder Morgan makes its final investment decision, and the Liberal government has not actually done so. To the Premier: has the government reached out to their federal counterparts to see why they failed to table this promised legislation?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're using various tools with the goal, of course, of getting that TMX construction on track this summer. We aren't going to back down. I'm very proud of the work that we've done to build bridges and to build relationships with folks across this country, including now the majority of British Columbians, even in the Lower Mainland. We're going to keep moving forward to get this pipeline built.

I won't take advice from the members of the opposition around a number of things, including their proposal around outing gay kids. This is making international media, including The Guardian: Forcibly Outing LGBT Children to Their Parents Is Monstrous. I have one question: will you please stop?

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to the Canadian Energy Pipeline Association federal Bill C-69 will make it "difficult to imagine that a new major pipeline could be built in Canada." Given the uncertainty already created over the Trans Mountain expansion and a number of companies already divesting in Alberta, this is troubling for the families that depend on our energy industry. To the Premier: when was the last time this government expressed concern about Bill C-69 to the federal government and on which specific date?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We've been very clear. I believe that the correspondence started last fall, and we continue to say that we want to ensure that we not only get our pipeline to tidewater but that we have a means of transport to ensure that it gets across to the markets that really do want it. The Asia Pacific markets are very hungry for our resources. I do have to say that this is an important project in our national interest. We won't back down from standing up for Albertans, whether it's women accessing health care, children wanting to feel safe at school, or getting our products to tidewater.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The urgency and necessity of the Trans Mountain expansion is the result of the failure of other important projects like Northern Gateway and Energy East. A recent report showed that the lack of pipeline capacity is costing our energy industry $15.8 billion every year, or nearly 1 per cent of GDP. To the Premier: with the continued uncertainty over Trans Mountain, what actions has this government taken to ensure that future pipeline projects can be considered?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the Leader of the Official Opposition did in fact indicate that he didn't think that the Northern Gateway pipeline was in the national interest. Certainly, we do need to ensure that TMX is built, and we will ensure that TMX is built. That's why it's a priority of this government. It's identified as a national priority, unlike with the Leader of the Official Opposition. It's been identified as such because our government has put it on the agenda. We've also secured the approval for the Enbridge line 3 project as a result of the climate leadership plan. As for our interventions on federal C-69 there are about 120-odd amendments that we're sifting through right now.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Third main question.

Health Care Wait Times

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to the Canadian Institute for Health Information Albertans are now waiting longer for surgeries than they were just three years ago, including hip replacement surgeries, cataract surgeries, and knee replacement surgeries. Fewer Albertans are receiving these surgeries within the recommended times. To the Premier: how is it that wait times for these important surgeries are increasing?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. We know how important it is for Albertans to be able to access timely care in the right place at the right time by the right provider. Of course, we believe that that should be public. It shouldn't be derived based on how much money you have in your pocket but on how much need there is. The need has gone up dramatically over the last few years. We have made significant strides in reducing wait times in a number of areas like hip fracture repair, radiation therapy, stroke treatment, but we know that there are additional needs. That's why we brought in a bigger budget. We wish that the opposition would have voted for it, but we're proud to pass a budget that's going to invest in health care.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a matter of outcomes, not spending.

According to a freedom of information request wait times for heart valve surgeries are up from 16 weeks in 2015-16 to 23 weeks last summer. That's a long time for families waiting for a needed surgery for a loved one. To the Premier. These increases all happened under this government's watch. Can you explain how it happened, and what steps are being taken to address it?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. Well, there are increased needs in this province, so while we're providing more services, there are additional people who are also lining up. That's because people are choosing Alberta as their home, and we're really proud of that. We've also, as I've mentioned, addressed wait times in a number of those other areas. As well, family physicians have been able to reduce the wait-list for nonurgent GI treatment in the Calgary zone by 98 per cent, Mr. Speaker. That's certainly a success. One of the other things we did was that we added $40 million for AHS direct funding to support things like cancer surgeries and hip and knee and cataract surgeries. We voted for that budget. Why didn't you?

2:00

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A recent Alberta Health Services quarterly update shows that the percentage of Alberta children needing mental health treatment and actually getting an appointment within 30 days has been declining in Edmonton, from 77 per cent in 2014 to only 45 per cent last year, and in northern Alberta, from 84 per cent in 2014 to only 70 per cent last year. To the Premier: how is it that these wait times are getting longer? Are you concerned about it, and if so, what is being done today to address it?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker and for the question. It's a fair question. We have increased service provision significantly across the province. Part of what is also happening at the same time is that more people are coming forward identifying as being in need of mental health supports. That is certainly a good thing. We want people to come forward and ask for help, and we want to make sure that help is there for them. That's why just on Monday – this is Mental Health Week – we announced the increase of a grant that we have that goes specifically to schools to help hire staff to support children in school. We've increased that grant by 50 per cent this year alone. That's why we brought forward a Health budget that increased spending instead of calling for drastic cuts. I'm proud of our government and what we're doing.

The Speaker: Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

PDD Program Review and Advocate

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government of Alberta has a legal and moral obligation to provide appropriate and equitable funding to persons with developmental disabilities and to manage the PDD program in a manner that's responsive to the needs and concerns of individuals, families, service providers, and workers. To the Premier: when will the government conclude its review of the PDD program in respect to the principles of inclusion, transparency, independence, collaboration, and best practices?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I couldn't agree more with the hon. member. It is absolutely the case that this government is completely committed to ensuring that we have a better PDD program going forward. As my colleague is always saying, what we've heard loud and clear from various communities is: nothing about us without us. We are absolutely taking the time to go out and consult with different communities. We've demonstrated our commitment by increasing funding by $150 million to provide 800 additional PDD clients with the supports they need, and I'm sure I'll have more to say about that shortly.

Ms McPherson: The community is confused by conflicting messages about the government's intentions with the PDD program. It's been almost three years since the government has taken power, and we've yet to see a comprehensive PDD strategy. Why did it take so long to initiate a PDD review, let alone address community members' long-standing and well-known concerns?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, of course, as all members of this House will be aware, when you're dealing with a complex situation and you want to make sure that everyone is included, sometimes it takes that long to get it right. I think that rather than hearing from us, we should hear from some people who have been affected by this. Bruce Uditsky, Inclusion Alberta CEO and parent of a son who receives PDD services, said that our government showing "leadership in launching this forward-thinking review and ensuring families and individuals with developmental disabilities are fully heard and engaged is much appreciated."

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Second supplemental.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In May 2017 this Assembly voted unanimously to create an advocate for persons with disabilities to examine broader issues affecting people with disabilities and assist individuals having difficulties with the system. Despite royal assent in June 2017, the government only began searching for an advocate this week. To the Premier: how much longer will Albertans have to wait for an advocate to finally hear their concerns after years of inaction by previous and current governments?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Of course, our government is incredibly proud of the Member for Calgary-North West for passing a private member's bill to make life better for Albertans with disabilities. I'm proud to announce that the posting was opened recently. There was incredible engagement on this file. Over 1,300 Albertans with disabilities, their families, and self-advocates shared their input on the role that the advocate should take through a survey to help us determine what the priorities are. We're committed to working with those communities to make sure that we get it right.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Access to Health Services and Social Supports

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning I attended the Momentum mental health awards honouring those who've helped end stigma that prevents many from seeking help. Indeed, stigma against mental illness can drive some to self-medicate through substance use. Yet while the Leader of the Opposition yesterday expressed concerns about access to treatment, he also continues to spread stigma about individuals who access life-saving supervised consumption sites, having referred to them as addicts who inject poison into themselves. To the Associate Minister of Health: alongside providing funding for those life-saving health services, what steps are you taking to end stigma by pushing back against such life-threatening misinformation?

Ms Payne: I'd like to start by thanking the member for his advocacy on this important issue. Mr. Speaker, stigma kills. Stigma prevents people from talking openly about mental illness and substance use, and stigma prevents people from accessing the help they need. I'm so proud of the work our government has done to make supervised consumption services available in Alberta. In Calgary there have been more than 10,000 visits to the Chumir site since it opened, and almost 200 overdoses have been reversed. Behind each reversal is a person with value who deserves to be treated with dignity and respect, who has friends and family who care about them. Now they have another chance to find help.

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that stigma is also one of the reasons that many LGBTQ2S-plus youth struggle with their mental health and given that studies show that GSAs save lives by offering them safe spaces with peer support free from judgment and given that the opposition leader and UCP MLAs have contributed to harmful stigma against them by repeatedly suggesting GSAs...

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Mr. Shepherd: ... teach secret curriculum on sexual subjects, to the Minister of Education: what steps are you taking to push back against such life-threatening misinformation?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, GSAs literally do save lives in schools and outside, too. I've visited a number of these GSAs around the province, and I've heard that message loud and clear from students. For that reason, we passed Bill 24 into law this past fall, and I was definitely disappointed that we did not get unanimous support for that. The opposition did vote against it and then brought forward policy that would reinforce the destructive elements on GSAs. I was very disappointed, but certainly our government is here to protect kids. They know that, and students should feel safe and welcome.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Proceed.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that women have long faced judgment and stigma simply for insisting on the right to control their own bodies and reproductive decisions and given that members of the opposition refused to even engage in discussion on ensuring they can exercise that right with privacy, safety, and dignity and given that the majority of their party members voted to strip that right from young women old enough to drive and work a part-time job, to the Minister of Health: what steps are you taking to ensure that all women in our province can access this safe, legal health care service?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government stands with women, and we believe strongly that women's rights are human rights and that their right to make their own decisions is not up for debate. The members opposite showed what their beliefs are at their convention, but they won't stand up in this Chamber and state their beliefs for Albertans. On this side we welcome every day all members of this House to stand up for Albertans. This side of the House won't stop doing their work to protect the things that matter most to Alberta families.

Thank you.

Power Company Compensation for Coal Phase-out

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, when the government agreed to compensate coal-fired electricity producers, these companies assumed the government would act in good faith. Well, one year into this agreement there are already issues. Capital Power is suing Alberta Energy, alleging the government failed to act in good faith, shorting the company $2.7 million in just the first year of this 14-year agreement. To the Minister of Energy. One year into this deal and we already have a lawsuit. Will this be a recurring theme of Alberta Energy, being sued for failing to live up to contractual obligations?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the agreements that our government negotiated are fair. They will help companies continue to power our electricity grid, to transition to natural gas where appropriate, and ensure that power companies keep their headquarters here in Alberta and protect worker benefits. They were negotiated with the support of an internationally respected expert with decades of experience. This particular case is before the courts, so it's inappropriate to comment any further, but we are confident in our legal position.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

2:10

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that litigation is almost always a last resort, I would assume, taken only when parties refuse to negotiate or bargain in good faith, and given that on April 9 a dispute resolution meeting between Alberta Energy and Capital Power was arranged to avoid costly court proceedings; however, at this meeting a deal could not be reached because the province did not send someone with the authority to resolve the dispute, to the Minister of Energy: why did you force Capital Power to pursue litigation by refusing to send someone with a level of authority to negotiate a settlement in good faith?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is inquiring about a specific case, so it would be inappropriate to comment on this particular case and what led to it. We are confident in our legal position. We are also confident that the communities that are affected by the coal-fired transition, whether it's the 12 that were phased out under Prime Minister Stephen Harper at the time or the remaining eight 12 years from now – we're making sure that the worker benefits are in place, that there's a transition fund for workers. The communities will be protected.

Mr. Gotfried: A great way to do business, Mr. Speaker.

Given that yesterday ATCO indicated they are considering litigation against this government as a result of the coal compensation agreement and given that if litigation is instigated by ATCO, that would mean 3 out of 4 companies compensated through the coal phase-out will have had to sue the government in order to receive the compensation they are owed, again to the minister. These companies want to be adequately compensated based on contracts signed in good faith. Why are you forcing them into the courts and proving yet again that this government cannot be trusted?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. While I will not provide comment on a particular case before the courts or a hypothetical case before the courts, what we do know with respect to this government's approach to the coal-fired transition is that we ensured that the federal government had the regulations in place to ensure coal-to-gas conversion, something that the previous federal government utterly failed to do and, in fact, the previous Conservative government here in Alberta as well. We made sure that we had transition funds in place, some $40 million, to ensure that families have the supports they need to phase out coal, and it was certainly not supports that were in place under Prime Minister Stephen Harper's phase-out of coal.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Long-term Care Facility Construction Costs

Mr. Gill: Thank you. During budget estimates the Health minister told me that my math was wrong when I pointed out that her government's plan to build a long-term care bed program through a purely public funding model is costing 10 times that of the abandoned ASLI program. The minister offered to table her department's figures one month ago. Mr. Speaker, through you to the minister. Minister, it's been a month now, and you still have not tabled those figures yet. Can you please table those figures now?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will be happy to table the responses that I said that I would be happy to provide. Let me just say right here in this place, in the 30 seconds that remain, that the types of beds that are being built are very different from some of the other types of beds that were being built in the past. Instead of building low levels of care, we're building the highest levels of care for those who are most in need. Rather than keeping people living in hospitals or unsupported in home facilities, we're building these types of beds, that are most needed for those who are most critical in our province, and I'm proud to do that.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we all had noted that the $110 million Willow Square project in Fort McMurray was costing, Minister, approximately $700,000 per bed – I understand, as you just mentioned, that you're building different types of beds – and given that under the ASLI program the average cost per bed was $65,000, can you please explain to the taxpayer why your program is costing 10 times more than the previous program? What kinds of different beds are you making or developing or creating?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question. One of the biggest differences, that I'm happy to explain, is the difference between renting and owning. When you're building a facility that is publicly owned, the province after five years, 10 years, 30 years will still own that facility. When you're building a facility that the members in your own caucus asked us to move from out of town to downtown, where we have to do some flood mitigation to make sure it respects the needs of the community – we're willing to invest in that. We're willing to invest in Fort McMurray, honouring the requests of your own caucus members. Why aren't you?

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've been asking for that but not on the taxpayer's dime, which is costing them 10 times more, Minister.

Given that the Health minister informed this House her government is on track to build 2,000 long-term beds by 2019, please let us know and please share the information with the House: what is the status of those 2,000 beds? How many of those beds have been created? How many are left? When are you planning to complete them?

Ms Hoffman: Well, I did answer that question yesterday, so I'll be happy to make sure – I can't table Hansard. On the exact breakdown, I did answer that yesterday.

Let me tell the people of Fort McMurray how proud I am that we are investing in the project that the people of Fort McMurray asked us to. Your government kept jerking them around for more than 10 years about whether the site was going to go forward or not. These people are sitting in the hospital waiting for the very important health care service that they certainly deserve. This government stepped up to the plate. Instead of moving a project from the edge of the city to the heart of the city, that's what we did. Instead of making people languish in hospital, we're building a facility, and I will be very proud to move forward on that.

I can't believe your colleagues are letting you ask . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Chestermere-Rocky View.

Carbon Levy and Pipeline Approvals

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pipelines are the safest and most green method of transporting our resources to tidewater and to the world market, yet the Premier doesn't seem to believe that this is good enough. Given that the Premier has felt that rather than fighting to show her friend Justin Trudeau that pipelines themselves would reduce emissions instead she imposed a crippling carbon tax and given that the carbon tax has failed to get the social licence promised from her Liberal friends, why would the government not scrap the carbon tax, which has failed to get anything more than paper approval for these pipelines?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, we do share with the hon. member across the way the priority of getting a pipeline built, but it's the only thing that we share.

Here's a list of things we don't share, Mr. Speaker. We don't share the value that you need to out gay kids in our school system, that you need to privatize health care, that you need to show up at an emergency room with a credit card and not a health care card. We don't share the idea that cutting education funding and attacking teachers is any way to build this province. We don't think that you need to cut taxes for the wealthiest 1 per cent. Those are some things we don't share.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, this government brought in the largest tax hike in the history of Alberta, a tax that they did not run on and that makes life more expensive. Albertans were told that this bitter pill would ensure a pipeline to tidewater with thousands of jobs, yet here we are, three years later, with no pipeline, damaging policies, and bills for families that are piling up because of this carbon tax. What does this government have to say to everyday Alberta families that can't afford to put their kids into hockey this year, take a family trip, buy fresh groceries because of the NDP's failed tax grab?

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the climate leadership plan led to the approval of two pipelines to tidewater, and we stand in this House every day to talk about the work that we are doing to get that pipeline to tidewater. That's our job. We're happy to do that job.

Clearly, the opposition is not interested in doing their job. They continue to run away from a debate on women's health care. Looking at some of the motions they passed over the weekend, I guess we know why they need to run away from being honest with Albertans about what they really stand for.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, on two separate occasions my colleagues in this House brought forward a motion that would suspend this crippling carbon tax until there were shovels in the ground on the Kinder Morgan pipeline. Given that on both of those occasions this government voted against those motions and given that this government's carbon tax has failed to get a pipeline to tidewater and given that pipelines are the safest and most green method for transferring resources, why won't the Premier scrap the carbon tax when the pipeline, by its very nature, should have been enough of a green incentive to get approval from their friends in Ottawa?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much. Of course, our climate leadership plan led to the approval of those two pipelines. Certainly, that pipeline will be built, unlike the expectations of the members opposite, who are continually cheering for Alberta to fail on this. When we do succeed – and we will, Mr. Speaker – we will generate revenue that we will put towards important health care projects like the Calgary cancer centre, something the members opposite dismissed as “a fancy box.” It'll add to resources used to cut wait times, to assist our EMS workers, and it will add to a public health care system that in this government's hands will remain public.

2:20

Bill 12

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, Bill 12 was introduced on April 16. We are now at May 10. Why has this NDP government dragged their feet on passing this legislation?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. We're really proud of the progress that we're making.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Ms Hoffman: We continued to make progress on that bill yesterday, and we look forward to doing so again today, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hunter: Given that we are now going on to almost four weeks since it was introduced, why has the government not passed it sooner? There are only 21 days left.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're happy to move through the business of this House, including Bill 12. It is one very important piece of legislation. We certainly are looking forward to being able to have it passed and to have those tools at our disposal. We're also looking forward to being able to protect women who are walking into clinics from being bullied, shamed, and harassed. We're also looking forward to being able to invest in the petrochemicals diversification program, that's putting thousands, tens of thousands of people to work across our province. We have a number of important bills, and we look forward to you supporting them and helping them all make their way through this Assembly. Maybe you'll vote on all of them. We'll see.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that the Official Opposition has indicated that we are more than willing to pass this legislation in one day, why has the government dragged their feet? Are they really championing this Kinder Morgan pipeline?

Ms Hoffman: Of course, we are. Of course, Bill 12 is one tool that we are using to help us champion it. We are in regular contact, almost daily contact, as a matter of fact, with the folks in Ottawa to make sure that they are moving all of the barriers that lie in our way. We are making sure that we are meeting regularly with Kinder Morgan. We've taken intervenor status, and we've won 12 out of 12 court cases, Mr. Speaker. We are using all of the tools at our disposal, and we are happy to welcome the Official Opposition to start cheering for the project instead of finding ways to pretend that they are cheering for the project when they're actually working towards its demise.

Eastern Slopes Land Management

Mr. Westhead: The eastern slopes are some of Alberta's most valuable environmental assets. They provide water for millions of downstream users, recreation opportunities for Albertans and tourists alike, and critical wildlife habitat for endangered species like westslope cutthroat trout. To the Minister of Environment and Parks: what role do environmental NGOs play in advising the government on ways we can protect and enhance Alberta's wild spaces?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Over the weekend the Leader of the Opposition vowed to fight civil society if they stand up or advocate for the protection of our wildlife, our fish, our water. Here's what Dave from southern Alberta had to say about this in the pages of the Calgary Herald.

I feel that recent comments about "activist special interests" are directed at me, my friends, family and neighbours who share my values . . .

There is, however, one special interest group I will gladly admit to being part of: Grandfathers who want to give their grandchildren the same clean water and life-filling fishing, hiking, camping and hunting experiences that I have had the privilege of enjoying in Alberta's foothills.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Westhead: It's hard to believe the opposition leader would add grandparents to his enemies list.

To the same minister: given that draft management plans for the Livingstone-Porcupine area were recently opened for public comment, can you please tell us about the consultation process that went into creating the draft plans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For years landowners, grazing lease holders, ranchers, and others in southern Alberta have been asking for better management of our public lands. Certainly, the Livingstone Landowners Group and the Livingstone-Porcupine Coalition were some of the first to ask us for that. They'd been asking the previous government for years and years, falling on deaf ears. We listened to ranchers, we listened to people who live there, we listened to recreation groups, and we've put forward plans that enjoy the broad support of the people in that area. You know, it's really not surprising that the folks across the way have chosen to side with . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It hardly sounds like a special interest to me.

Again to the same minister: given that there had been plans to close fisheries along the foothills due to declining trout populations, why were those plans reversed?

Ms Phillips: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. As I said, civil society in Alberta, whether it's the Alberta Fish and Game Association or Trout Unlimited or the land trust organizations or others, has been asking us for better management of our resources and our water resources, in particular, and really managing to keep habitat in place so that we can ensure that we have native trout species to enjoy for generations. For years those concerns fell on deaf ears. In terms of our approach to fishing regulations I said very clearly to the Fish and Game Association that I was not going to make Alberta anglers pay for 40 years of Conservative inaction on habitat. So we're moving forward.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-South East.

Legal Aid

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I asked the Minister of Justice previously about the problems facing legal aid, and the minister has responded by pointing the finger at other levels of government or previous administrations, but defence lawyers currently have their fingers pointing squarely at the minister. Calgary defence lawyers are open to meeting with this government to discuss this in good faith but warn that the situation is dire enough that they're considering strike action. To the Minister of Justice: will you commit to meeting with these lawyers and attempt to resolve this issue before things get worse?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think the first thing to note here is that stating that legal aid has historically been underfunded is not intended to blame anyone; it's simply a statement of fact. That's why when our government took over, we took this issue very seriously. We have increased funding to legal aid by close to 40 per cent. We absolutely are in negotiations for a new governance agreement. We meet regularly with the defence bar in terms of that governance, and we will continue to have those conversations.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that court slowdowns caused by a strike action would not only have a negative impact on those seeking justice but would also likely end up costing the government more money in the long run and given that this government has spoken at length about the need to invest in the future as justification for borrowing, to the same minister. Minister, a healthy legal aid program is like a vital piece of infrastructure for our justice system. Why are you shortchanging this one program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, I think the member's statement is fairly inaccurate. It's absolutely the case that legal aid has received a greater increase in funding percentagewise than anything else in my department. It's absolutely correct that we continue to need to invest in legal aid. That's a critical service. But many of the other services in my ministry are also critical services, and we have to continue to invest in those as well.

Mr. Fraser: Given that court times and a responsive justice system are threatened by the troubles facing legal aid and given that the expectation of a fair and timely trial is both a right, regardless of personal wealth, and encourages participation in the justice process by both offenders and victims and given how crucial public trust is for this process to succeed, to the same minister: how will you ensure that your conflict with defence lawyers and legal aid won't erode public trust in our justice system?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we have regular conversations with all participants in the justice system to ensure that we're responding to the Jordan decision and to underfunding from the government of which that member was a member. It's the case that we've worked very closely with the defence bar. For instance, the CTLA here in Edmonton had advocated to have defence lawyers at bail hearings. We've heard that call, and we've responded accordingly.

Air Ambulance Service in Peace River

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Health Services issued an air ambulance service update on March 15, 2018, stating that it will base one plane in Peace River, on the tarmac, exposed to the elements of Alberta's weather because the successful proponent did not have a hangar, with a second plane based out of Grande Prairie to service this region. This was followed up by an assertion by AHS on March 16, stating that this was an improvement in patient care. My question to the Minister of Health: can she explain how one plane stationed on the Peace River Airport tarmac is equivalent to the level of service that was provided by the previous supplier, that being two planes stationed in a fully serviced hangar?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the hope of AHS is that the provider will be able to secure space for both planes in a hangar in Peace River. I understand that there are some details that are before the courts right now, but I can assure all Albertans that the plane that is in Peace River is the plane that responds to all emergency calls. The plane that is in Grande Prairie is the one that goes out for scheduled calls. But the direction has also been given that if the emergency plane is away and the scheduled one is not on another call, it be moved to Peace River as well to ensure that there's always one in Peace River available to respond to those emergency calls.

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, given that the preferred proponent still does not have hangar facilities at the Peace River Airport, why didn't AHS simply extend the current service provider's contract, which would have ensured a higher level of service while AHS continues to inappropriately do all it can to resolve the problem for a proponent it should not have selected in the first place?

Ms Hoffman: Well, you know, it's really interesting, Mr. Speaker. Some days the members opposite ask for fair and open and transparent bid processes, and other days they don't. What is happening right now is that there is a review before the courts. There was a bid process. Of course, my expectation is that all Albertans have confidence that they're getting a high level of care. I've made it very clear that we need to have air ambulance in Peace River, and that's why, even though it can't be in a hangar, it's on the tarmac. I'm grateful that this is making its way through the courts and that we'll be able to hopefully come to a decision soon.

Mr. W. Anderson: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the preferred proponent still has insufficient facilities at Peace River Airport and given that just recently the aircraft was improperly stored without proper facilities to date and given that just two weekends ago their airplane was stuck in the mud and could not leave with a patient for two and a half hours after dispatch, can the minister agree that this a reduction in service? If not, how so?

Ms Hoffman: Well, I certainly will agree to look at the details of the assertions that were just made. We've seen on more than one occasion that when members opposite throw mud in this place and then we look into the details, they're not exactly factual. I will guarantee that I will look into the situation that the member just asserted occurred, and I will be happy to address that with him at a further date.

Thank you.

Agricultural Concerns

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, a rangeland recovery study was launched by the universities of Alberta and Saskatchewan to look into how farmland responds to wildfire. The province will put in $200,000 to fund this study. Odd. That is the same amount that the government offered up in March to cover all of the landowners that were devastated in the Hilda and Acadia Valley wildfires. To the minister: with losses in the millions of dollars, don't you think that spending a similar $200,000 for a study shows a lack of respect and understanding reminiscent of your handling of Bill 6?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reference to Bill 6 is the oddest part of that question, but I will answer the legitimate part of that question. The study was requested by some of those landowners down there. Some of the grasses that were affected are in very delicate soil, so it's important that we have all the information we need to be able to continue assisting those producers down there. The wildfire was a traumatic event. We're going to make sure that we do what we can to ensure that the grasslands are able to survive and are able to continue doing what they do; that is, providing feed for the cattle down there.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that Alberta farmers and ranchers settled in and built Alberta to what it is today and given that these entrepreneurs face increasingly expensive and burdensome regulations brought in by your Bill 6, the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, Minister, with all the uncertainty farmers face, why is your government continuing to treat our farmers and ranchers with so little respect?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I'd request that the member perhaps needs to hire more researchers over there so they could actually have real questions, but I'm happy to talk about the good work that this government is doing for our farmers and ranchers. Last year was the highest sales for farms in the history of Alberta. It was 12.6 per cent higher than the year before. I think the member there owes all farmers and ranchers in this province an apology. This government will continue supporting that good work that farmers and ranchers do.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that Alberta farmers and ranchers help feed the entire world and given that these entrepreneurs face global, personal, and financial risks and given that a UCP government would repeal Bill 6 and that farmers and ranchers are always offering a hand up and that they will often rally the entire community to a good cause, Minister, why can't your government help and repeal Bill 6?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Jocularly. Jocularly. I believe the member has not talked to any farmers and ranchers. He should realize that the legislation protects farm workers, and they appreciate that. It also protects farms from getting sued. Bill 6 is doing what it's supposed to do, and farmers and ranchers are respectful of that and appreciate that. We'll continue doing the work here on behalf of them, as we always have.

Mental Health Services for Children

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, mental health outcomes for children in Alberta are spiralling downward, and this government doesn't have any answers for families across Alberta. But mental health is just one portion of the problem. Twenty-five per cent of Alberta's population are under the age of 18, approximately 1 million kids, and research has proven that many health outcomes that plague adults often set in in the first thousand days of life. We're spending most of our money on health outcomes for adult services rather than prevention. This government doesn't have a comprehensive children's health strategy. Why not?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, given the member's statement and given all the research that we do have around the impacts of the early days of a child's life, I would actually say that that's all the more reason the members opposite ought to be supporting programs like the early childhood learning centres and $25-a-day day care, that have been introduced by this government. That is one of many things that we are doing as a government to support young people across our province, including making sure that young people and their families have access to the mental health supports that they need.

Mr. Cooper: Given that there is a pressing problem of children in emergent need of mental health services and given that the Stollery children's hospital is the only emergency department in Edmonton capable of dealing with children in imminent danger and given that families whose children are in crisis have described the system as a revolving door and that these families are ending up in the ER regularly with no long-term solutions, to the minister. Your government is supposed to be implementing the mental health review. When is the revolving door going to stop for these families?

Ms Payne: Mr. Speaker, I couldn't be prouder of the work that our government is doing in partnership with the Stollery as well as the Stollery foundation to improve access to mental health supports for children in the Edmonton region as well as across our province. They are great partners, and we're pleased to work with them. Further, our government has been working diligently to implement the recommendations from the Valuing Mental Health report, to the point that they are embedded in every single thing that we are doing in the mental health space. We are making sure that families and children are among the top-priority populations and that we are investing in their supports. I wish the members opposite would have done the same at budget time.

Mr. Cooper: Given that representatives from AHS described the child mental health system as, quote, I think we often don't have a very well co-ordinated and easy system to navigate, unquote, and given that we've heard almost no details about the government's child suicide prevention strategy and given that the results from the mental health review have not yet been implemented, to the minister: when are you going to start taking some responsibility and make meaningful change to protect Alberta's families, that are struggling to navigate your poorly co-ordinated system?

Ms Payne: You know, Mr. Speaker, it takes a little longer than three years to fix a system that was underfunded for 44. Our government knows that an important part of providing services is to address the stigma that has existed for so long and that has led mental health to be treated as an afterthought by the previous government. We support mental health initiatives for children and youth. In 85 communities across the province, from as far north as Fort Chipewyan to southern towns like Milk River, we are doing everything we can, working diligently with Children's Services to develop a youth suicide prevention framework and are working with community partners and advocates across Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for St. Albert.

Diabetes Support in Schools

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Type 1 diabetes is a complex condition that requires patients to manage and monitor their blood sugar through a combination of diet, insulin injection, and blood sugar checks. It often affects children and youth, who require accommodation so they can thrive in school. One of my constituents is just such a child. To the Minister of Education: what supports exist to support students, especially K to 4, with the management of diabetes in classrooms?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that the care of a student with a health or medical condition such as type 1 diabetes is a shared responsibility, and our government is working collaboratively with school authorities, Alberta Health Services, Community and Social Services, Children's Services, and other partners with the regional collaborative service delivery system that we have in place. Certainly, we're looking for a common way to tackle type 1 diabetes here in our schools.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of young constituents, as I said, living with diabetes. I'm sad to say that some of those young students are not getting the supports they need to thrive at school. Given that this can affect their academic performance and cause medical complications later in life, again to the minister: what is your ministry doing to improve the access to supports for students who need these critical medical supports?

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you to the member for that critical question. I've been hearing from parents about the challenges that students face in regard to type 1 diabetes. That's why my ministry has been providing resources and information assembled by Diabetes Canada directly to school boards to help to build policy to deal with medical conditions, especially type 1 diabetes. I'm very sorry to hear about your constituent not receiving the support she needs. We can certainly meet to discuss this further, how we can ensure that she has her needs met in terms of diabetes.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's a lack of consistency across the province when it comes to how students with type 1 diabetes are supported in our schools. We need to ensure that all students in Alberta get equitable access to supportive learning environments regardless of where they live. Again to the minister: what is your ministry going to do to make sure that all students with type 1 diabetes get the supports they need to succeed in school?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I have directed my ministry to develop a provincial guideline that will set common and consistent expectations across the province of Alberta to support students with type 1 diabetes. I do recognize that the impact is significant, and we need to make sure that our kids with this condition are safe and healthy in our schools.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Election Commissioner

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government has committed to adding a new Election Commissioner although the current Chief Electoral Officer said that it wasn't required. Albertans will want to know: can the government tell Albertans how much the new Election Commissioner will be paid?

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour and democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased with the work that our government has been able to do to renew democracy, beginning with Bill 1: banning corporate and union donations, putting in new, important spending limits for both individual campaigns and for parties, and bringing in someone who, especially during an election period, will be able to focus resources to look into any complaints or concerns so that the Chief Electoral Officer can concentrate on running an election and the new Election Commissioner can concentrate on enforcing. This is a model that we've borrowed from the federal government that will allow us to make sure that our democracy is respected and is working cleanly.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the interest of protecting democracy and given that the new commissioner will have a term expiring in May 2023, which is exactly in the middle of the writ period in the second next election, my question for the government . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'd like you to address your question to the policy issue.

Mr. McIver: I am. That's exactly what I'm doing, Mr. Speaker. The policy I'm addressing is: will the government change the election schedule, or will they actually change commissioners in the middle of a writ period?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's very important to us that Albertans are able to trust in a fair and democratic electoral process, one that gives the power to the people of Alberta, not big money, not heavy influencers, which may have been the case in the past. We will continue to work with the Chief Electoral Officer, as we have in the past, and now with our new Election Commissioner to make sure that our Alberta elections are protected, respected, fair, transparent, and accountable.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, given that the government won't say how much the new commissioner is getting paid and given that they won't commit to sticking to the election schedule – we know from past history that that hasn't turned out well for other governments – and given that the Chief Electoral Officer said that the position wasn't necessary, to the government: will you apologize to the Chief Electoral Officer for ignoring his advice?

The Speaker: Hon. member, that question is a significant stretch, I think, from a policy matter. It seems to be focused on an administrative matter.

I would give the minister an opportunity to respond if she would like, but it's entirely your call.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We greatly respect the Chief Electoral Officer, as we respect Albertans, unlike the members of the opposition, who follow a leader who promised to disclose his donors and has not. We need to work very hard to make sure we get big money out of politics and have a . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, Minister.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Bill 205

Supporting Accessible Mental Health Services Act

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Peace River I rise to request leave to introduce Bill 205, the Supporting Accessible Mental Health Services Act.

This bill is very close to the Member for Peace River's heart, who knows the challenges and stigma that patients can face when seeking treatment for mental illness and substance use disorders. Mr. Speaker, everybody has a fundamental right to be treated with dignity and respect when dealing with a substance use disorder or mental illness.

If passed, Bill 205 would establish the enactment of a mental health bill of rights. This bill also looks to establish a publicly accessible online registry of mental health services available in Alberta and to ensure that supports and understanding are in place for all Albertans seeking treatment for a substance use disorder or mental illness.

The Member for Peace River looks forward to debating this bill with her colleagues in the House. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 205 read a first time]

The Speaker: I believe that the hon. Member for Calgary-Klein has a request.

Mr. Coolahan: I'm introducing a bill, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Oh. I'm sorry. Please proceed.

Bill 206

Societies (Preventing the Promotion of Hate) Amendment Act, 2018

Mr. Coolahan: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request leave to introduce Bill 206, the Societies (Preventing the Promotion of Hate) Amendment Act, 2018.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has seen a rise in organized hate groups with racist and extremist views, and that is something that should not be supported by this or any government. No organization that is founded on the principles of hating another Albertan or engaging in illegal activities should receive special recognition from the government.

Bill 206, the Societies (Preventing the Promotion of Hate) Amendment Act, will ensure that organizations that exist solely to promote hate like the Ku Klux Klan will not be revived as a legitimate organization under the Societies Act, and Bill 206 will prevent modern hate groups from achieving legitimacy by incorporating under the Societies Act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to debate on this bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 206 read a first time]

The Speaker: Minister of Municipal Affairs, I believe you have a request.

Mr. S. Anderson: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask if the House would allow us to revert to Introduction of Guests briefly.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is it an honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House some of my incredible staff that I work with every day and who keep me grounded. If they would stand as I say their names. First is Lisa Gentles, my scheduling co-ordinator, who is actually somebody who runs my life and finds me babysitters at times and more; Cindy Chisholm, our correspondence assistant, who deals with everything that comes into our office and picks ties for me all the time even though I wear shirts that they don't match, so I appreciate that. They are also newly grandmothers, which is fantastic as we get to see cute baby pictures all the time. Gillian Kerr, who is my ministerial assistant, is one of the smartest people you'll ever meet. I don't know how, but she's got more energy than probably all of us combined. As well, we've got Harman Kang, who is our new intern for the summer, who is incredible. I'm so glad that she's joined us this week on our team. Hopefully, she has a great summer.

Again, thank you to them. They keep me grounded, and I couldn't be doing what I do without them. If we could give them the warm welcome of the House, I'd appreciate it.

2:50

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to introduce a group that was here a little earlier during question period, that I didn't have a chance to introduce before. It's the Rosedale Christian School. They're from the bustling metropolis of downtown Ridgevalley. In the group here I have Mr. Andrew Reimer, Darla Goossen, Fred Goossen, and then Arlin Loewen, my cousin, and Gloria Loewen, his wife. I had a chance to meet with them earlier, I guess, last week. They had some great questions, and we had a great discussion on how the Legislature works and the different processes that happen in this place. If we could give them a warm welcome, I'd appreciate it.

Thanks.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite number of copies of a letter from June 18, 2013, that I quoted today in my main question. It was written by the MLA for Edmonton-Strathcona to the then minister of human services.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is an article I referenced in my comments this morning on Motion 16, about the appointment of the Election Commissioner, an opinion article by Paula Simons, Gibson Affair Sends Terrible Message: When the Chief Electoral Officer Criticizes Government and Loses His Job, What Are Other Officers to Think?

My second article is from the Lethbridge Herald, titled Kenney Opposes Consumption Sites, in which the Leader of the Opposition states, "Helping addicts inject poison into their bodies is not a solution to the problem of addiction."

Thirdly, I have an article here from CBC news regarding Bill 24, which was passed last fall, the title being Gay-straight Bill Could Allow Covert Sex Ed: Alberta United Conservatives, which states, "Alberta's United Conservatives say they're concerned the government is using a bill on gay-straight alliances to prepare for kids to be taught sex education without parents being told."

The Speaker: The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of an article from CBC entitled Oilpatch CEOs Blame High Costs, Red Tape for Erosion of Canada's Competitive Edge. This is in response to the Minister of Transportation two days ago questioning this information.

The Speaker: The Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to table the appropriate number of copies, alluding to my question to the Minister of Health, giving some photographic evidence of an aircraft in Peace River stuck in the mud for two and a half hours, not providing services for a needy patient, from April 29 of this year.

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is the appropriate number of copies of AHS's March 16 statement outlining their opinion that having fewer aircraft would actually improve patient care.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we have a couple of points of order to deal with.

Calgary-Foothills, did you have a point of order? No. Withdrawn?

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills is indicating, and I will officially on his behalf, to withdraw his point of order, but I would like to argue my point of order. At the time, I called it.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on 23(j), using "abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder," particularly language of a nature likely to create disorder. The hon. Deputy Premier and Minister of Health in her answer to a question today in regard to Bill 12, the shut-off-the-tap legislation, indicated two things that are certainly likely to cause disorder in this House. The first was that the opposition in some way was rooting for trying to slow down Bill 12, the shut-off-the-tap legislation. Nothing could be further from the truth. In fact, twice we have voted against adjourning on Bill 12, trying to get that piece of legislation done. So that's one misleading of the House.

Second was to say that they're trying to get it all through the House in one day, when, clearly, we know that, Mr. Speaker, that is not the fact. We gave them a chance again last night to do that, and they haven't. We will give them a chance shortly to do it yet again, and hopefully they will do it.

So I would ask that you would ask the minister to stop misleading this Assembly.

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This point of order is clearly, actually, just a matter of debate and not a point of order. The minister did not use unparliamentary language. What she did do was to engage in legitimate debate in a manner that is not unordinary in this Chamber. This isn't the first time that the members of our government have pointed out just how much the Conservatives seem to root against Alberta. A similar claim was made on December 7, 2016, when the Premier first pointed to Conservatives at the Prosperity Fund meeting who called the possibility of this government getting pipelines a doomsday scenario. No point of order was raised at that time, and none should have been raised today.

The fact of the matter is that we have an opposition party who thought getting pipelines was a doomsday scenario and who just don't seem to be on the side of Alberta families. I think it's unfortunate, and I wish they would put their partisanship aside and celebrate the great progress being made.

The Speaker: Hon. members, it seems to me that this is yet again another example of a difference of opinion about the discussions in the House. I don't know how many more times you want to hear the warning about avoiding those circumstances, but in this particular instance I don't see that there was a point of order.

[Motion to adjourn debate lost]

The Acting Speaker: We are now back on the debate for second reading of Bill 6. Are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm disappointed that we can't move on with important legislation that needs to be dealt with soon, but we'll talk about Bill 6 for a little bit.

Madam Speaker, this legislation is in response, of course, to the federal government's decision to legalize cannabis. I think it's important that we note that this discussion is not about whether or not cannabis should be decriminalized. That decision was not up to the provincial government. The provincial government, without a lot of time, has had to regulate cannabis to prevent a legal vacuum, putting us in a spot where we have to make some decisions. This government does not have the authority and the responsibility, however, to make important decisions when it comes to legalization.

Last fall this government passed Bill 26, An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis. My understanding is that this bill is a companion to that bill or a follow-up piece of legislation, if you will. Our caucus ultimately voted in support of Bill 26 as a fairly reasonable response to the federal government's decision to legalize cannabis. We did have some concerns and questions surrounding Bill 26 at the time, however, Madam Speaker, that you may recall. Unfortunately, as is the pattern with the NDP, the NDP rejected our amendment to mirror restrictions around alcohol instead of mirroring their public consumption laws with tobacco. This plan allows us to question whether public health is one of the NDP's main priorities when it comes to cannabis laws.

When marijuana becomes legal, Madam Speaker, unless a municipality passes a bylaw restricting it, people can walk down the street smoking a joint and they can smoke in public parks. Albertans will be exposed to it almost everywhere outside. Alberta will have a patchwork of smoking laws across the province, no doubt confusing citizens and making it challenging for the police and bylaw enforcement officers to enforce.

Public safety and health of our children need to be priorities, Madam Speaker. We need a sound public education strategy on the effects of cannabis as well. Some people are already doing cannabis illegally and know the sorts of effects cannabis has on them. But when it has been legalized, likely some people will try it for the first time and those who were doing it illegally might get bolder. I've heard from constituents concerned about drug-impaired driving in particular, and it's not very clear what this government is doing on this front.

In closing, though, Madam Speaker, it's clear that this legislation has to be discussed in this place because of the decision by the federal government, and I look forward to the discussion as we go through Bill 6.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 6?

Mr. Panda: Madam Speaker, I rise to speak about Bill 12, actually. So I'm moving to adjourn the debate on Bill 6 because Bill 12 is impacting the livelihoods of Albertans and Canadians as we speak. This government, as they spoke today in question period . . .

Speaker's Ruling

Projected Government Business

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, can you please sit down. Thank you, hon. member.

I just want to clarify for the members of the House Standing Order 8(2.1), which indicates that on Thursday afternoons the government sets the agenda for the government debates. You get an Order Paper that gives you the order of the bills that will be debated. Unfortunately, this afternoon Bill 12 is not on the Order Paper to be debated. So if we could please continue on with the debate that is on the Order Paper, as set out in the standing orders.

Debate Continued

Mr. Panda: With due concern, I move to adjourn the debate on Bill 6, Madam Speaker.

[Motion to adjourn debate lost]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: My apologies. Sorry, hon. member. The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills still has the floor as his time allotment has not expired.

The hon. member.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to rise and speak at second reading of Bill 6, the Gaming and Liquor Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. I realize that this discussion is not about whether or not cannabis should be decriminalized and that it is not up to the provincial counterparts, like my colleague from Rocky Mountain House said, but I have come to share and perhaps ask some questions. This bill was brought about to basically close holes that were in Bill 26. It amends the Gaming and Liquor Act as well as other small sections of other acts to respond to the federal government's decision to legalize cannabis and set up a retail framework and combine cannabis with most tobacco laws.

On the provincial side of things, Madam Speaker, we really haven't had too much time to respond to the legalization of cannabis but have the responsibility of regulating cannabis to prevent a legal vacuum. That said, however, the government does not have the responsibility and authority to make the very important decisions surrounding legalization, decisions that could affect thousands of people across the province. There has been a lot of debate, and the issue has been well circulated in the news. Some are in support; others are not. I'm not here to debate those issues but, rather, to discuss reasonable responses to the federal government's decision to legalize.

Late in the fall the government passed Bill 26, An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis. That bill was more in response to the federal government's legalization through their Bill C-45. The bill more or less discussed how households would be allowed to grow up to four cannabis plants at home, that the only way to purchase legally online would be through the one publicly operated store, and that sales would start immediately following legalization in July 2018. That is coming up here shortly. It also gave the specialized private retailers the ability to sell cannabis legally with no co-location with alcohol, tobacco, and pharmaceuticals. Eighteen was decided to be the minimum age to use and sell, and 30 grams was decided upon as the maximum public possession limit. It discussed restrictions on where cannabis could be publicly consumed, which basically is anywhere that smoking is already banned.

The bill also gave the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission the authority to carry out the oversight and compliance functions, and it will manage the distribution of cannabis to licensed sellers. Bill 6 is basically a companion or follow-up piece of legislation which will amend and fix some of the issues that may have been missed in the previous legislation.

My colleagues and I did have some misgivings about Bill 26. Unfortunately, the NDP rejected our sensible amendments to mirror restrictions around alcohol and instead decided to mirror their public consumption laws around tobacco. Even though the federal government has legalized cannabis, the provincial government has been given the authority to work out the details, so that was one of the areas that kind of shocked us and had us questioning whether public health really was one of the NDP's main priorities.

We did support the premise of Bill 26, but that doesn't mean that we necessarily support all the additions that were made, and we had kind of wished that the NDP would have listened to some of our amendments. Now, once cannabis becomes legal here in July, unless a municipality passes a bylaw restricting it, anyone can walk up and down the street smoking their joint and will also be able to smoke it in public parks. Unfortunately and most importantly, due to the nonrestrictive use our youth will be subjected to it everywhere outside.

The other problem with mirroring the public consumption laws on smoking is that Alberta has a lot of different smoking laws across the province, which will no doubt confuse citizens and make it challenging for the police to enforce. I'm a firm believer that public safety should come first and that the health of children needs to be the government's top priority.

On that note, I would like to ask the government if they thoroughly went through all the suggestions of the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta and the College of Pharmacists. They both indicated concerns about the health implications of using cannabis recreationally, particularly amongst individuals younger than 25. Did this government take their suggestions into consideration?

I sure hope that there will be some sort of public education strategy on cannabis effects that will roll out prior to it being legalized here in July. It is very important that all Albertans be educated on the effects. There are some who, once it is legalized, will decide to try it for the first time. We know that there are plenty of people doing it now illegally. They already know the effects it has on them, but those who will be tempted to try it now may not know how it can alter and impair the mind. The other point I would like to point out is that for those who have already tried it illegally, they might get bolder and try to use it with another substance. These are some of the issues that should be covered in the public education piece, Madam Speaker.

Many people are concerned about the impaired driving piece. We would like to know what the government is doing on that front. Will the police be properly supported, and will they have the right tools to do their jobs properly? Albertans are asking that. The United Conservatives will be monitoring the government's implementation of the legalization of cannabis and will continue to talk with and seek feedback from special-interest groups and the public.

The government has been quiet about details on how the government-run online store for cannabis will work. One of the questions Albertans have: how is the age verification process going to work when ordering online? It would be a shame if minors would be able to process orders online. Even if asked for a driver's licence, what is to say that they won't use another adult's identification?

Bill 6 opens the door for permitting cannabis sales in an existing business such as a separate section of the rural general store in communities too small to support a stand-alone cannabis store. Was this done because the government was hearing concerns from special-interest groups? We understand that enabling regulations for this subsection will be created if there is demand. Is there already demand?

Also, I have noticed that Bill 6 includes two additions unrelated to marijuana legalization. One allows you brews and establishments to order liquor products such as for premixing batches of cocktails, adding flavouring, infusing food with liquor, and creating barrel-aged liquor. Why have you decided to add in this piece? The other one is that government is proposing changes to the liquor laws while the act is open, and they have the opportunity because they were apparently listening to what Albertans want. I wish this government would listen to Albertans more often. This was not the case with the previous Bill 6, that affected all farmers in this province.

I would like to now close by saying that I'll be supporting this bill although it is Bill 6, but it's a different bill, so I'll be supporting this. It's my hope that they would answer the questions that we have on this side of the House as most questions that we ask come directly from the concerns of Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Strankman: I really enjoyed the presentation from the Member for Calgary-Foothills, Madam Speaker, because he's got a bit of a rural background and from a foreign country. I wonder if he could expound on some of his perceptions of Canada, from another country.

Mr. Panda: I'd like to thank my friend from Drumheller-Stettler for his advocacy on another bill, Bill 6, on which he was our lead as ag critic. That bill scared all Albertans to death. But this bill, Bill 6, I think is a companion bill to the previously approved Bill 26, which we supported with some reservations. But to the member's point: what do I like about this bill? The way I understood, it's the federal government which has the jurisdiction, so they chose to legalize cannabis.

Personally, I never tried it, and I don't intend to try it even when it is legalized. Where I grew up, it was taboo, actually. People wouldn't try it, at least the people that I know, that I grew up with, my family members. They don't have access to it. They won't try it. But here, if both levels of government and municipal government choose to implement, I'm cautioning, based on what I hear from my constituents, that we can't make it a free-for-all. We have to implement it with the utmost caution and care in a responsible way.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I've actually been looking forward to being able to speak to Bill 6 for some time, and I was actually quite disturbed earlier in the day when it appeared as though the opposition was basically impeding the work of this Legislature in making progress on this very important legislation.

I mean, you can't compare bills. That's like comparing children. But this bill is a necessary bill. We need to get working on this bill so that Albertans and Canadians as well as retailers and basically all citizens and municipalities know what the lay of the land is from the provincial legislation point of view.

It is really important legislation that we've known is coming down the pike for a while. This government has been showing some proactivity in getting ready for what is going to happen, presumably in early July. It may be delayed because of some activities by the Conservative Senators in the Canadian Senate that are putting some obstacles into getting the federal legislation actually enacted. In any case, it's very important that we here in Alberta are ready to go and that we can deal with the health issues, with the public safety issues, with the potential exposure of our youth to a mind-altering and presumably brain-altering medication.

I just read in the Edmonton Journal that 450 small-business people have actually applied for a licence to open a shop to sell cannabis in the city of Edmonton. Now, in the hamlet of Sherwood Park apparently there's only one. I don't know what that tells you about Sherwood Park, but I can tell you that here in Edmonton, and I presume in Calgary as well and probably in most of Alberta, there is a lot of interest among small business as an economic opportunity. Why would the opposition want to stand in the way of small business developing a new market and, you know, allowing us to diversify the economy? Here is a great chance, folks. Go for it.

I was just out at the Edmonton airport, the pride of the Member for Leduc-Beaumont. Edmonton airport is a fantastic place, and if any of you are not using that facility that are in the opposition, please start doing so. They've got a new Costco, an outlet store, and the actual Edmonton Airports is expanding its footprint a lot. There's a race track there that you can bet money on if you wish. It's great for that sort of stuff.

You know what else is at the Edmonton airport? One of the largest hemp-growing facilities and also part of a company that, I believe, is called Aurora Cannabis. Aurora Cannabis is Canada's largest grower. That company is showing a lot of faith in what this province can do in terms of economic development. It needs to know that we've got some laws around the production of cannabis.

I would also say that it's important that we modernize our liquor laws as well, and this law has some very common-sense points in it that are going to bring us, basically, up to date in that regard.

It really is a pleasure on behalf of the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General to rise in support of Bill 6, which is amendments to the Gaming and Liquor Act. You know, we're making a number of amendments to modernize and update that act. In some cases these amendments are in response to the impending legalization of cannabis, but it's also the result of extensive consultation for some time that these are coming through. As I said before, the amendments help to further protect public health, keep cannabis out of the hands of children, and most importantly – and I didn't mention this before – limit the illegal market. I mean, we talk about getting dark money out of politics; let's get dark money out of drugs.

We're also going to increase the capacity and capability expertise of the board of AGLC. I talked about the economic opportunities here in Edmonton and across the province for cannabis sales. The changes in this law are also going to help the liquor retailers.

The federal government in April of 2017 announced that cannabis is going to become legal across the country. At that time they said in the summer of 2018. At that time, a year ago, this government started to develop a system for legal cannabis, and the minister started by asking Albertans what our province's legal cannabis system would look like. She reports that there were over 60,000 Albertans that responded. That must be one of the most – I think only my colleague from Edmonton-South West's consultation on daylight savings time actually produced more response. I believe it was 80,000 that he received. But 60,000 Albertans: that's evidence, I think, of the real interest of Albertans in this process.

You know, besides keeping cannabis out of the hands of children and ensuring public health, road safety is another thing that's really important, not just road safety but workplace safety and even in the public spaces. We've heard a little bit in the previous speech about concerns about consumption of cannabis in public. This legislation is actually going to help municipalities or give the municipalities a framework in order to deal with that. The legislation grants authority to the AGLC to oversee the system, and it paves the way for us to begin preparing for the private, licensed retail sale of cannabis. The regulations were announced in February of this year, and they provide clarity for the cannabis retailers while ensuring our system is safe, secure, and effective.

Today I'm seeking the hon. members' support in this Legislature for Bill 6, which continues to work on what's been done to date. The legislation is important. It's important that we don't drag our feet on it. It's important that we get these bills passed in the next short while. Bill 6 includes amendments that, if passed, would provide the AGLC board with the tools it requires to better regulate and enforce rules around cannabis. Some of this includes prohibiting retailers from using names such as "pharmacy" or "medi-" or any symbol that has a medical connotation. Actually, as a physician who has prescribed medicinal marijuana, I think this is a very, very important distinction. They also are going to prevent the packaging or naming of the products that would be in any way attractive to children.

You know, it's part of a comprehensive approach to making sure that if cannabis is going to be legalized – and that was a decision made by the federal government. The province of Alberta did not make that decision. This government did not make that decision. I think this situation is kind of analogous to tilting against windmills, that I heard in that previous speech. I mean, the law has been changed by the level of government that has the power to change that law. Why would we try to stand and sort of tilt against that windmill and not deal with this effectively? We want to produce the best kind of legislation, the safest kind of legislation, the legislation that's going to keep our children and youth as safe as possible and our roads as safe as possible, our public spaces as safe as possible, our workplaces as safe as possible.

I'll come back to that "choice" word. We've been discussing other bills that involve choice here. You know, after it's legalized, it's going to be a choice whether or not a person age 18 and over is going to use recreational cannabis. At least in my opinion, government's role is not to get in the way of that choice, just as it's not to get in the way of choice in other contexts. I don't think I have to spell that out, but I'm saying it because the members opposite actually disappear when we vote on that kind of choice. At least they're sitting here listening to me talk about choice. It's a fundamental democratic principle that a citizen, a resident, has choices to make, and it's the responsibility of the government to make sure that it's done in a safe and responsible way.

You know, I do want to talk a little bit about what the AGLC is going to do or the tools that we're going to give the AGLC. There are going to be fines that are an important tool in deterring contravention. We propose increasing the maximum fine from $200,000 to $1 million per incident. This amount gives the AGLC the room it needs to properly address serious infractions when necessary.

Madam Speaker, Bill 6 also amends the act so that for the minor ticketable provincial offences the court could rely on evidence that a product is cannabis based on packaging, labelling, or smell. I think this is very common sense. This applies for public consumption, youth possession, consumption in a vehicle, improper transport in a vehicle, and, most importantly, sales to a minor.

While the legalization of cannabis was the impetus for developing the legislation, we also saw the opportunity to amend the Gaming and Liquor Act so that it will better reflect an evolving liquor industry. The first amendment allows fermenting on a premises basis, and this basically adds to the business.

The bill would also allow retailers to blend and infuse liquor products. This is a growing trend that involves infusing liquors with flavouring agents to create specialty drinks, infusing food with liquor, and creating house-aged liquors. I mean, that's going to help small business in that field.

Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm trusting that members on both sides of this House will support this legislation.

With that, I would ask to adjourn the debate on Bill 6.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 17
Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

[Adjourned debate May 7: Mr. Ceci]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to Bill 17? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to adjourn debate so that we can speak about the important bill, Bill 12, and have the opportunity to be able to address an issue that is . . .

Speaker's Ruling
Projected Government Business

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you. I've already made the ruling under Standing Order 8(2.1) about Orders of the Day already being determined on the Thursday prior to the proceedings of the week. You were notified that Bill 12 was not going to be on the Order Paper of the day.

In addition, I would like to remind all members of Standing Order 28, which requires "some intermediate proceeding" to take place between a motion to adjourn debate, requiring that at least there is some progress in the debate in order for the motion to be put forward again. I would like to allow a member to at least speak to the bill that has been put in front of us before we ask for an adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Hunter: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: Please go ahead.

Point of Clarification

Mr. Hunter: Madam Speaker, I actually would like to just reference 13(2). In this situation I'm trying to find out why it is – the government can actually bring forward a bill at any time. It doesn't have to be on the Order Paper. They can bring it forward at any time. What you've quoted to us is actually something that – they would have no problems being able to just bring forward Bill 12, so I'm not sure why we aren't addressing this bill. We've given them many times this opportunity today to be able to address the issue, which is that we're almost four weeks into introducing this bill, Bill 12, and we're still not bringing it to fruition. If they want to put their money where their mouth is, then let's pass the bill. We've already said that we'll do it in one day, yet they're not willing to be able to bring forward the bill. We've given them lots of opportunities to be able to do that, and this is why I'm asking if you can please give us some information.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I will clarify my ruling. Standing Order 8(2.1):

On Thursday afternoon . . . the Government House Leader shall provide notice to the Clerk of projected Government business to be brought before the Assembly.

As the Speaker it is not my responsibility to debate what the government decides to bring forward as the issue of the day. My job is to moderate between both sides. You need to negotiate amongst yourselves what you will be having to debate on the afternoons when bills are brought forward. That is not my role. My role is to enforce the standing orders, and that is what it says. It's not up for debate.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: Are you speaking to a different point of order?

Mr. Nixon: Yes. Absolutely.

The Acting Speaker: Please.

Point of Clarification

Mr. Nixon: I'm speaking to a different point of order. You let the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud just adjourn debate, and there were no intervening speakers, which seems to significantly contradict what you've just told the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. So under 13(2), could you explain that, please?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, your members were actually provided the opportunity to adjourn the debate on the exact same bill twice. I asked if anybody would like to speak. Your member was able to speak and have a break on his time allotment. The next speaker spoke on that particular bill, and my ruling stands. We are now on to the bill that we are speaking about, which is Bill 17. We will not be discussing my past rulings on Bill 6. If you'd like to call a point of order to discuss an issue on Bill 17, please go ahead.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am most pleased today to speak to Bill 17, Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2018, in second reading. While the UCP agree with the main premise of the bill, I have some questions and some additional comments I would like to make today. Bill 17 amends a number of pieces of provincial tax legislation to reflect changes made at the federal level. Some of the changes are good ones; others I do not agree with. I want to talk today about those things to bring some fulsome debate to the House so that no stone is left unturned.

I'll start with some of the more positive pieces, like the fact that this amendment will now align Alberta tax legislation with federal legislation. This will align tax collection and ensure efficiencies. I am more than sure that this will make many agencies and accountants across the province happy. This will undoubtedly save money, and saving money is obviously a good thing for a Conservative.

On another positive note, this amendment will correct legislation to better align provincial practices with the CRA administrative practices regarding how the carbon tax rebate is calculated for those families who have working child dependants. I'm glad that the federal government did not act and calculate the income, and it's definitely a positive step forward for the provincial government to align with the federal government on this front. Families are already facing too many obstacles, Madam Speaker. This doesn't have to be one of them. Can you imagine including a dependent child's income? How can a family get ahead when we start including income that likely isn't taxed in the first place? This was another piece we brought up when the carbon tax bill was introduced that we believed needed to be changed, but of course a lot of our debate in this House tends to fall on deaf ears. Glad to hear that this one is now being fixed.

However, on that note, I would like to add that I just heard one of the government members talk today about one of the UCP members' speech and how to criticize this side of the House for wasting thousands of dollars in wasted time, just to hear a speech he didn't quite agree with. Madam Speaker, here we are in the House, now fixing a government bill that went awry. I wonder how much these changes have cost the government in time on the carbon tax bill. I mean, we're not talking about just listening to a speech; we're talking about hours of research and collection of data over the last two years, including lawyers and perhaps some laypeople to make the corrections. Maybe that member would like to count that cost. I'm sure it would cost more than the thousands he accused us of today. We're being paid by Albertans to scrutinize the government. Please, we should not have that taken away from us.

Moving forward, I have to say that I am scratching my head when it comes to taking away any tax credits for fishermen and farmers. This NDP government has shouted from the hilltops that it prides itself on the principle of helping those who are struggling. Madam Speaker, many fishermen and farmers that I know struggle every year. It's not an easy way to make money. It's not an easy way to support a family, and it's sheer back-breaking, hard work. We should be doing everything possible to help our farmers, not removing tax credits that would help them. They feed their province, the country, the world. If it wasn't for farmers, none of us would eat as well as we do.

An article from ATB Financial that was posted in 2017 talks about how the number of Alberta farms has been shrinking for some time. The article claims that in 1996 there were over 59,000 farms in the province. In 2017, just last year, they claim that there were just a little over 40,000 farms. That, Madam Speaker, is a little bit more than a 31 per cent decrease in farms in the province in those few short years. However, the article states that the average size of a farm in the province has grown from 881 acres in 1996 to 1,237 acres in 2016. That is an increase in farm size by a little over 40 per cent, which could prove the theory that only the strong will survive.

I have to wonder if now would be a time to remove tax credits for farmers and fishers alike. I'm not sure if that would actually help small farmers or hinder them. Obviously, it would hinder them. As minuscule as you might think them, every small financial hit hits a farmer and, especially, small farms. Unfortunately, now farmers will have to pay more in taxes.

Another area that I am not too happy about but really shouldn't be surprised about is the changes in notification, which at first appearance look to lessen government's responsibility to ensure delivery of requests for information related to businesses' tax filing. But that one isn't really worth debating.

Madam Speaker, this will now be the second consecutive year where we are called into the Legislature to correct mistakes that were made in the carbon tax bill. In 2016, when we asked the House to refer Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act, to committee, it was because it was riddled with new legislation that wasn't well thought out. A couple of those pieces that were problematic we now see the government trying to fix in this bill.

While we spoke about how Bill 20 would hurt families in the province that don't have the access to everyday needs that most of us have, they made no change. Those families who struggle and who depend upon charities come in all shapes and sizes. We asked and implored at that time for the government to ensure that families have access to the basics and to help out these charities by making sure they were tax exempt. We talked for hours about how this bill would raise prices at a time when charities were already facing a double-edged sword, on one side, due to the fact that many more Albertans were struggling, were going to have to rely on these essential nonprofits and, on the other hand, realizing that prosperous businesspeople would have to focus more on saving their businesses and keeping Albertans employed and would not have the ability to donate at the once generous levels they had once before.

We spoke about how the Climate Leadership Implementation Act would hurt Albertans all across this province. We gave specifics and told the government exactly how we thought it would hurt them, only for those things we talked about for just two short years to become reality. Madam Speaker, Albertans are hurting. This bill doesn't reach far enough. We're glad to see that there will be some of the changes that were badly needed back then coming to fruition but wish the bill went further.

I truly wish that when legislators come into this House to debate a bill, all sides of the House would take a good look at what is being debated to ensure that all potential problems are included and dealt with at that time. There is wisdom in prudently looking into the future and asking ourselves: how will this piece of legislation affect Alberta families, businesses, and the prosperity of our province? I know that the government has the right intent, and I applaud them for that. They want to do the right thing for this province, but sometimes that means looking outside of your own ideologies and putting all that aside, especially if you see something better that would produce better outcomes. My hope is that during this session the NDP ponder outcomes rather than focusing on so much ideology.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Mr. Panda: Madam Speaker, I move to adjourn the debate on Bill 17.

The Acting Speaker: Before I put the question on the adjournment – we have not been able to make much progress on this bill, as I have already indicated – is there anybody from any other side that would like to speak to the bill?

Then I'll allow the vote on the adjournment.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 16

Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is my honour to rise today to move second reading of Bill 16.

Our government continues to act on our commitment to ensure that our electoral system is fair, accountable, and transparent for all. In fact, having me rise as the minister responsible for democratic renewal to introduce legislation to make sure that we have a fair, accountable, and transparent system for our elections and our democracy may seem familiar to you, Madam Speaker. The reason it may seem familiar is because I've had the honour to do this a number of times.

I would like to set the stage into which we introduce Bill 16 today. That stage began with the introduction of Bill 1, the very first thing that our government did when we formed government in 2015. Bill 1, An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta, banned corporate and union donations, returning to Albertans the confidence that it is the votes of our citizens, the voices of our citizens that will be heard through the democratic process. Banning corporate and union donations as a first act as a new government sent a strong signal to all Albertans that our government was going to be very different, that the priority was not going to be for big money and the insiders but, rather, to make sure that the voices of the citizens were protected, respected in our democracy. I was very honoured to be part of the caucus at the time Bill 1 was introduced.

Following Bill 1, following my appointment as the minister responsible for democratic renewal and building off the work of the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, that was formed to review the Election Act, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act as well as the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act and Conflicts of Interest Act, I have been pleased to continue to work on the task of renewing democracy here in our province, Madam Speaker, to touch on a number of key issues that impact our citizens as we look forward to the coming election, and make sure that it is the will of the citizens that will prevail.

It was with honour that I stood in 2016 and introduced Bill 35, legislation designed to make sure that we were getting big money out of politics, building on the initial work of Bill 1. The Fair Elections Financing Act, as it was named, was designed to ensure that Albertans, not big money and special interests, decide the outcome of elections. It did a number of important things, Madam Speaker, including amendments to limit campaign spending, ensuring that, for the first time, campaign spending limits for political parties would be capped, at $2 million. This touches directly on Bill 16, the second reading of which I am introducing now. That $2 million spending limit would apply to all political parties within an election.

As well, though, we also imposed spending limits of $50,000 for each individual candidate's campaign so that, regionally speaking, it was not going to be a candidate who was able to fund raise vast sums of money from wealthy donors who would be able to dominate the conversation. We want to make sure that all candidates are able to participate and communicate with the electorate and allow everyone the opportunity to participate.

To that end, while putting in spending limits, we also made a point of making sure that there were certain things that would not count towards those spending limits, particularly candidate travel costs, because we know we have ridings that are incredibly large.

Care for a candidate's or contestant's children and other dependants. Wanting to support women and wanting to support parents who may be interested in running as a candidate for a political party in a provincial election in Alberta was very important to our government. To that end, excluding some of these costs from these spending limits could help to support these candidates.

Expenses related to a candidate or a nomination contestant living with a disability: very similarly, making sure we are accessible and offering supports to all who may be interested.

Petty expenses incurred by volunteers, which we know will vary from region to region but could touch on things like – Edmonton-Centre, represented very well by the member in this House: his volunteers will have parking expenses that my volunteers in Edmonton-Mill Woods will not, so allowing petty expenses to not count towards those limits was something that we were considering.

Finally, we also imposed nomination contestant spending limits of $10,000, which is roughly 20 per cent or exactly 20 per cent of the spending limit in each electoral division, because nomination contests can often be very important in our democracy. So those spending limits are very important, and it is on those spending limits that Bill 16 will continue to protect our democracy.

Bill 35 did a number of other things as well. It limited contributions so that individual Albertans – when we banned corporate and union donations, individual donations were capped at that time, Madam Speaker, at $15,000, up to $30,000 in an election year. Now, that is big money to me. We have now created an aggregate contribution limit of $4,000 per individual contributor each calendar year. That means that whether you donate to a party, to a constituency association, to a candidate, to a nomination contestant, any of these donations contribute to your $4,000 contribution limit. Making sure that we had reasonable contributions pairs nicely with spending limits.

The other thing we did in Bill 35 which again touches on what we are going to be amending through Bill 16 is third-party advertising. The act set spending limits on election advertising by third parties. The limit would apply from writ drop to the close of polls and be set at $150,000, of which no more than $3,000 can be used to support or oppose candidates in a particular electoral division. Making sure that we have those types of spending limits and that third-party advertisers' donors are disclosed in a type of sunshine list is a way of renewing democracy and making sure that it is accountable and transparent for all, so I was very proud, Madam Speaker, to introduce Bill 35 in 2016.

Then, knowing that my work was not done, I was also proud to introduce Bill 32 in 2017, making elections fair and more accessible. This bill touched on the fairness and integrity of our elections, including setting new limits on third-party spending, again, another area that the bill I am speaking to today, Bill 16, touches on. Bill 32 placed new spending limits on third parties that would start December 1 prior to an election year, which is three months before the beginning of Alberta's fixed election period. It made sure that third parties would not be permitted to spend more than $150,000 on political advertising before the election is called; again, not more than $3,000 per area. It made clear that political activities should be done by political parties, not by PACs or third-party advertisers. It also made sure that third parties would not be allowed to incur expenses to do the work of political parties: sell memberships, fund raise, or collect information.

Similarly and after a great deal of debate here in the House, where a private member's bill had been introduced, we also introduced restrictions on government advertising, advertising or publishing information about government and provincial corporation programs or activities, and put in clear, common-sense rules when government advertising was taking place during by-elections or general elections, allowing specifically for important health and public safety messages to proceed.

Now, in Bill 32 we also created the new position of Election Commissioner. This new, independent Election Commissioner is responsible for fully investigating complaints and recommending prosecutions, and the annual report goes to the Legislative Assembly.

We reviewed penalties, again an aspect that touches on Bill 16. When we introduced Bill 32, we reviewed the penalties inside of our Election Act.

Now, Bill 32 did a number of other things as well, encouraging greater voter participation, but as that does not touch on my Bill 16 pieces, I will leave that there.

Today we introduce Bill 16, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. We know that as a result of Bill 35, where we introduced spending limits, our act currently allows each registered political party to incur election expenses up to $2 million to promote or oppose a registered political party, its leader, or a candidate during an election period. Our amendments forward a simple concept. Elections should be decided on big ideas and not big money. As part of our work to deliver on the promise we made to make elections more fair and balanced, we are now closing another loophole that could be used to get around election financing rules. We've heard concerns from Albertans who've told us that right now it's possible for associated parties to collude together and circumvent the legislated spending limit. Now, this is not right.

It's clear that electoral fairness requires that associated parties be subject to the spending limit of a single party. The proposed amendments would ensure that associated parties won't be able to take advantage of multiple individual spending limits. If Bill 16 is passed, associated parties must abide by and share the $2 million spending cap. The proposed amendments would enable the Election Commissioner to investigate whether two or more registered parties are associated registered parties. The criteria for being associated would include whether the parties have common leadership, political programs, or policy statements; whether one party controls another; whether parties have the same advertising material and branding; and the nature of agreements and interactions between parties.

The Election Commissioner would be able to initiate an investigation on their own or at the request of the Chief Electoral Officer, an elector, or registered party. The commissioner would not have to wait for a breach of the spending limit to initiate an investigation into whether parties are associated. If the parties are being investigated to determine whether they are associated, then the commissioner would also be required to notify these parties. Parties would also be free to approach the Election Commissioner in advance of an election to seek advice on whether or not they would be in compliance. To be clear, Madam Speaker, we are not suggesting that being an associated party is in any way wrong, only that associated parties should share that same $2 million spending cap.

To that end, we are proposing adopting an anticollusion provision. This provision would specifically prohibit parties from colluding in order to circumvent spending limits. If Bill 16 is passed, a party would be prohibited from using its status as a registered party for the purpose of circumventing or attempting to circumvent spending limits. In effect, these provisions, like the provisions for associated parties, will prohibit the use of a multiparty structure to get around that $2 million spending limit introduced in 2016 as part of our Bill 35. The bill would provide for a penalty of up to $100,000 for associated registered parties or the chief financial officers of the associated registered parties who contravene the spending limit.

Likewise, the maximum penalty for nonassociated parties exceeding the spending limit is increased to $100,000. This change would make spending limit penalties for parties consistent with existing penalties for third-party advertisers who breach their spending limits. The maximum penalty for registered candidates, registered nomination contestants, and their chief financial officers would go from $5,000 to $10,000.

On another note, Bill 16 will also touch on something out of Bill 32, revising the definition of election advertising period to include by-elections. The current definition only covers general elections. We want to make sure that any advertising done by third parties during a by-election does fall under political advertising rules instead of election advertising rules.

We are also updating the reporting. We are committed to ensuring that everyday Albertans have the confidence they deserve in our electoral system, so we are making changes to both the quarterly reporting and the annual financial statements. These amendments would enhance transparency and protect fairness in election spending.

Fair elections depend on all parties and candidates having a level playing field so that big ideas and not big money decide our elections. Our democracy belongs to Albertans, to every person in our province, and we will not allow private interest groups or big money to unduly interfere in our electoral system. Bill 16 is another step to preserve the fairness and integrity of all future elections within our province, another step along the path that we began with Bill 1, the very first action of our government, followed by Bill 35 and then Bill 32.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. minister, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2) the House stands adjourned until Monday afternoon at 1:30.

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 4th Session (2018)

Activity to Thursday, May 10, 2018

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sittings.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Hon. members, let us each in our own way pray or reflect in the celebration of motherhood and the mothers, stepmothers, grandmothers, and great-grandmothers of our wonderful province.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, we now will be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. R.J. Chambers. I would invite all to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a couple of distinguished guests sitting in your gallery: the high commissioner for India to Canada, His Excellency Vikas Swarup, and his wife, Aparna Swarup. His Excellency's visit offers Alberta and India the opportunity to discuss potential co-operation across Canada, across government, academia, business, and more. With growing economies in both our jurisdictions, there's enormous potential to expand bilateral trade and collaboration. I look forward to working with His Excellency on further developing and strengthening our relationship with India. I would now like to ask the high commissioner and Mrs. Swarup to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. M. le Président, c'est avec fierté que je me lève à la Chambre aujourd'hui pour introduire — it's a tremendous honour, as always, to introduce to you and through you students from a school in my constituency, Lycée Louis Pasteur. Les étudiants et étudiantes sont accompagnés par leurs enseignants. The students are accompanied today by their teachers Nicole Pereversoff and Ryan Taylor. If I can ask all the students and teachers from Lycée Louis Pasteur to please now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to announce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature staff from the Department of Treasury Board and Finance. I'd ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome as I call their names: Heather Ford, Carla MacLeod, Jared Anuik, Mary McPhail, Arlene Hendrickson, Dylan Corcoran, Bijon Brown, Rebecca Isbister, Mason Meyers, and Cindy Yang. Please stand up. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today I had the honour of standing on the Legislature steps with parents, families, and advocates along with my colleague the MLA for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville. I want to recognize some incredible advocates for their courage and commitment on behalf of children with disabilities and their families, and I want to thank them on behalf of our government and let them know that we are committed to working with them. I would ask them to rise as I call their names: Marcy Oakes Henschel, Jennifer Shipley, Angela Anderson, Sabrina Park, Sandra Temple, Victoria Hampson, Shirley Samuel, Angela Seitz, Francie Astorino, Stephanie Ballard, Li Luo, Yufeng Zhang, Adolph Zelmer, and Kristina Peters. I ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. The first is to you and to the rest of the Assembly Ms Jenn Thompson, who is the firebrand that held the rally on the steps of the Legislature today, a dedicated mother, activist of children with autism and other disabilities. She spoke passionately at the rally with dozens of parents on the Legislature steps about internal policy that has replaced direct therapy for children with a consultation-only model, laying the burden of treatment on parents. They've also raised serious concerns about the accountability of families with supports for children with disabilities, and I've referred that to the Auditor General. She is seated in the public gallery. I'd ask her to rise and be recognized by the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Dr. Swann: Thank you for indulging me with a second introduction, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you Mr. David Renwick and Brent Korte. Please stand and be recognized. They are, respectively, the general manager of Adapt Pharma, who produce a nasal delivery of naloxone now being used in Ontario and Quebec; David is visiting Alberta to explore its application to our opioid crisis. Brent, a mental health advocate and consultant representing Adapt Pharma, supports a number of life science companies in engaging government. They are seated in the public gallery. Please rise and let us recognize them.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you some of the individuals behind the annual EPCOR RiverFest presented by the River Valley Alliance. EPCOR RiverFest celebrates and connects Albertans with our hidden gem, the North Saskatchewan River. It also draws attention to the river as a critical water resource in our region, one that is to be protected and enjoyed. I'd ask my guests to rise as I call your names: Mr. Brent Collingwood, executive director of the RVA; Ms Connie Smart, RVA marketing and communications manager; and Andrew Laycock with EPCOR government relations. I would ask that they now receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [Disturbance in the gallery] I rise today to introduce to you and through you some amazing Albertans and dear, dear friends of the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. Naomi Pedersen and her husband are the proud parents of seven children and four foster children whom they love dearly. They work every day to support and educate their children while being active community members and fierce advocates. I'm so lucky to have met these folks. They reached out because of their natural love for children and their knowledge that family is so important for healthy societies. I'm going to say your names, and if you could please rise as I say your names: Naomi Pedersen, Talia Pedersen, Isaac Pedersen, Kamilah Pedersen, Hannah Pedersen, Anaya Pedersen, Robyn Bowyer, and Violet Bowyer. If we could please give them the warm and traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

I must say, hon. members, that it's nice to hear a child's cry in the place occasionally. Very refreshing.

The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

1:40

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the pleasure of introducing to you and through you two of my constituents, Mary and Dean Michailides. They live in the vibrant constituency of Edmonton-Glenora, and they're seated in the members' gallery. Mary has been an educator, consultant, and leader for 35 years, and Dean is a principal at Centre High here in downtown Edmonton. Mary is a founding member of the Zebra Child Protection Centre, and at the time she first had a child disclose the experiences she'd received as a survivor of sexual assault – that was more than 20 years ago – Mary chose not to put the child in the police car alone. She instead drove the child with her to the headquarters, and she stayed with her. That was really a first that we'd experienced here in Edmonton. Since that ordeal she's become very active in finding a different model to protect children experiencing abuse, and I'm so proud of the work that she does to support our most vulnerable children. I thank her for her work in the community, especially with Zebra centre, of which she was a founding member. I'd ask that both Mary and Dean please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, it's a pleasure to be able to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a couple of home-schooling families in my riding. As I say your name, I'd like you to please rise. We'll start with Lindy McKay, Maxwell McKay, Hyrum McKay, and Daniel McKay; and we also have Mireyah Proffitt and Sariah Proffitt. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I had the honour of standing with the Minister of Community and Social Services to stand with parents of children with disabilities, with their families, their advocates, many people who just want to be known as mom and dad. I'm thankful that they were able to come in and join us today in our Assembly, and I want to thank them for their dedicated advocacy and recognize their courage in bringing forward their stories and also their children with them here today. I ask them to rise as I call their names: Claire Wilde, Kristi Rouse, Peter McDonald, Leanne Hart, Helen Hampson, Lisa Bazzardeth, Helen Oakes, Chantelle deVisser, Debbie deVisser, James Gauthier, Aaliyah deVisser, Tammy Suarez; I also recognize those that wished to come. Thank you again for coming here, and thank you for your work. I'd ask all members to extend the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

United Conservative Party Policies

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last weekend the UCP held their first convention, where they at long last laid out some actual policy on how they'd govern our province, and for that we thank them, as do, I think, a number of Albertans, because in doing so, they clearly displayed and doubled down on some truly risky ideology, risky ideology like claiming to support mental health while dehumanizing individuals struggling with substance use as addicts injecting poison into their veins and suggesting that peer support groups for vulnerable youth are Trojan Horses for secret sexual curriculum. Risky ideology is stoking resentment based on those views for political gain and then feigning surprise when your membership refuses to listen when you beg them not to vote to out gay kids and block them from joining life-saving GSAs.

Risky ideology is planning a $700 million tax cut to benefit less than 10 per cent of Albertans and cuts in spending on health care, education, and other supports for everyone else.

Risky ideology is believing that real barriers that women face in getting into politics are socialist crap, that a cabinet with more women than men is patronizing, and that feminism is a dirty word. Risky ideology is refusing to debate or vote on behalf of your constituents on a bill ensuring women have safe, dignified access to a legal health care service. Risky ideology is believing that young women old enough to drive, work, and consent to sex can't be trusted to make their own reproductive choices. And risky ideology is promising that your policies will be developed democratically by your grassroots members, not imposed by a leader until you don't like what they propose and then declaring: I hold the pen on the platform.

Mr. Speaker, I was elected by the people of Edmonton-Centre to stand against those sorts of risky ideas. I'm proud our government continues to stand by the people of Alberta to make their lives better and more affordable, that we, in the words of Don Braid, are working "to level social gender and minority inequalities in Alberta," and that we are working to build a diversified economy, rooted in a recovery built to last because that is an ideology I can believe in.

Electric Power System

Mr. Loewen: This government's handling of the electricity file has been boondoggle after boondoggle. First, this government increased the taxes on specified gas emitters to the tune of 70 per cent and rising. They also initiated accelerated phase-out of coal-fired generators. Of the 18 coal-fired plants 12 were already planned to phase out under their natural life cycles, which would have left no cost to taxpayers. The six newest plants, which, of course, were the most efficient, are being shut down well ahead of their life cycle, at enormous cost to taxpayers.

These changes and others caused electricity companies to return their contracts to the Balancing Pool, exercising the “more unprofitable” clause of their contracts. This government, only too happy to blame everyone else for their own mistakes, decided to sue these companies for exercising their rights written in their contract. Further, these actions and costs have sent shivers through the investment community, making potential investors in our electricity markets even more uncertain.

On top of all this, the government has tried to sell an interesting story to Albertans with their legislation to cap electricity prices at 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour. They claim that they are helping Albertans, but really they are just trying to hide the cost of their policies from consumers. The fact is that the average cost of electricity was 2.2 cents per kilowatt hour in 2016 and 1.8 cents a kilowatt hour in 2017, but now, after NDP meddling, the price for the regulated rate option in April 2018 was 7.9 cents a kilowatt hour. Now the government is subsidizing green electricity when it goes below 3.7 cents a kilowatt hour, placing all the risk with Alberta taxpayers.

The electricity policies of this NDP government have been an abject failure, and they need to come clean and admit it. Albertans want to know: how much did the lawsuits, the accelerated coal phase-out, the additional cost to the Balancing Pool, the electricity cap, the renewable electricity program, and all the other market manipulations cost and will continue to cost Albertans? The ratepayers and taxpayers of this province deserve a straight answer, yet the government refuses to give one. If you want to prove you’re on the right track, give Albertans the information so they can decide. I think Albertans will be unpleasantly surprised. The Auditor General needs to take a look into these mistakes and others.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Stanley Knowles

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recent comments in this House regarding decorum during question period have made me think about Stanley Knowles, a decent and compassionate man known as the conscience of Parliament. Stanley Knowles became a United Church minister in 1933, and he quickly realized that it was not enough to preach compassion and fairness from the pulpit; he needed to be part of the struggle. Winnipeg at the time was the home of Canadian progressive thought, and it was there that Knowles ran under the banner of the CCF, the precursor of the New Democratic Party. He won a by-election in 1942, thus beginning an astounding run of 13 federal election wins, broken by only one loss.

Knowles’ maiden speech was an appeal for social justice, lower unemployment, better pensions, and improved housing. It was a mark of the esteem in which he was held by all members in the House that his pleas for equity for the less fortunate were always listened to with respect, no matter how often he made them. Knowles’ work ethic and grasp of parliamentary procedure were awe inspiring. He became known as the Gretzky of Parliament. His dignity and decency always kept him above the rough and tumble of political frays. Former Prime Minister Joe Clark remembered the parliamentarian crossing the floor to give him a pep talk. “With Stanley,” he said, “you had a sense of collegiality in the fraternity of Parliament.”

Stanley Knowles toiled in Ottawa for four decades, until a stroke in 1981 forced him to retire from politics and led him to being given the unprecedented distinction of being made an honorary table officer of the House of Commons by Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau.

This allowed him to spend his retirement viewing parliamentary debates from the floor of the House.

Thank you very much.

Flood Mitigation and Recovery in Southern Alberta

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, residents of southeastern Alberta have been struggling to put back their lives from a devastating overland flood which took place in the spring of this year. Thirteen homes were flooded and 831 overland flooding sites were logged in the MD of Taber alone, but it could have been worse, much worse. If it weren’t for the quick and proactive responses of many, there could have been tens of millions of dollars more in damage.

Just one example is the great work of the St. Mary River, the Taber, and the Bow River irrigation districts’ team, that worked collaboratively to combat Mother Nature. Recognizing that when the ice started to flow in the main canal, it would destroy bridges and canal walls, they brought in 40 excavators to clear the floating ice. They worked continuously for two weeks. Due to their proactive and quick response, they are now able to provide irrigated water to the farmers of southern Alberta, and not one bridge was destroyed, Mr. Speaker. Had they not been proactive, many farmers may not have received irrigated water this year, which would have been an unquantifiable cost.

Now the cleanup starts. The devastation, in spite of the mitigating efforts of so many, is immense. The question I hear most is whether DRP funding will be made available and when it is coming. The MD of Taber has had to put on hold two road construction projects this year in response to the increased cost of this flood, so DRP funding needs to be allocated quickly. My hope is that the government will reward the district’s implementation of best practices, that saved tens of millions, rather than punish them for taking concrete action, as they did. We want future disaster events in this province to be handled in this proactive way as being proactive mitigates the overall cost to all Albertans.

I salute the forward-thinking individuals in my communities and in my riding. I look forward to working with the Minister of Municipal Affairs in freeing up the much anticipated DRP funding.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty’s Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If I could just begin by expressing our concern for the minister responsible for seniors, with her sad health news today, and our encouragement to her to get well soon.

Bill 12

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, it was on March 8 that the government announced its intention to bring forward legislation to allow it to turn off the taps to British Columbia to protest that government’s blockage of the Trans Mountain pipeline. That legislation could have been passed in a day. It’s now 10 weeks later. Why has this government been delaying its own keynote legislation to turn off the taps of Alberta oil to British Columbia?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would start by responding, simply by saying that we’re not delaying it, but it is certainly a piece of legislation that needs a certain amount of oversight and the opportunity to be debated, so that's what's happening. I expect that we'll see that piece of legislation pass later this week, and then we will do what we need to do in the best interests of all Albertans, to do what the members opposite have so far been unable to do, which is to get a pipeline built to tidewater.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, the government itself has voted to foreclose debate on that bill several times. We're in the peculiar situation where the Official Opposition has been trying to accelerate the government's keynote legislation and the government has been delaying it. It makes us wonder how really serious they are about the threat. We know that the NDP Premier of British Columbia doesn't take it very seriously. After meeting with our Premier in Ottawa last month, he said that it was essentially an empty threat. So I ask again: why has the government been dragging its feet on its own keynote bill?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have not been doing that. But, you know, ready, fire, aim: that is the approach that the members opposite would like to take with respect to getting this pipeline built. That is probably in part the explanation for why, over nine years when they were in Ottawa and their friends were here in Alberta, they couldn't get a pipeline built to tidewater. We have every expectation that we will use that legislation in a way that best supports Albertans in all of their objectives, including ensuring that we get that pipeline built, and – you know what? – we will get that pipeline built.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, a coastal pipeline had been approved, and then this Premier told her close friend and ally Justin Trudeau that he could go ahead and cancel Northern Gateway. She surrendered to his veto of Energy East, she and Justin Trudeau, her ally, surrendered to Barack Obama's veto of Keystone XL, and now here we are, 10 weeks after a threat, with no action. Does the Premier not understand that Albertans don't just want empty words? They want action. Will the government agree to pass that bill at all three stages this afternoon?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, the member opposite is very impressive in terms of his ability to rewrite history in a way that is very disconnected with, oh, the facts and also history. That being said, what we will do is that we will ensure that that bill is debated properly and that everyone gets an opportunity to engage in it. It will be passed this week, subject, of course, to the efforts of the members opposite. But we will ensure that it's passed this week, and we will move forward with respect to that bill in a thoughtful, strategic, cool-handed way. That is the way we will get this pipeline built.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I'll take that as a no, that the Premier will not take us up on our offer to expedite her most important legislation.

Provincial Response to Pipeline Opposition

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, this NDP government spent 9 million tax dollars telling Albertans why it was a great idea to punish them with the NDP carbon tax, and now they're going to spend $1.2 million at the eleventh hour to advertise on behalf of the Trans Mountain pipeline. Why was it so much more important for the government to spend tax dollars advertising in favour of their punitive carbon tax rather than in favour of market access for Alberta oil?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I will say that given that the member opposite, when he was in Ottawa, actually went on national TV to say that pipelines are not a national priority – it is true that perhaps if we'd spent just a fraction of that amount educating the member opposite when he was allegedly standing up for the people of Alberta, it might have been a better use of our money. That being said, our campaign is working. The polls are showing that the level of support in B.C. and across this country is growing. We're doing exactly what we need to do. I wish the member opposite would get onboard and hope for our success rather than cheering for the failure of Albertans.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I said no such thing. When, in 2015, I was on the front page of the Victoria Times Colonist arguing for coastal pipelines, the NDP was attending rallies and lobbying against Keystone XL, lobbying against Northern Gateway. Why did it take the government until 17 days before the potential cancellation of Trans Mountain to finally come up with $1 million in advertising on behalf of Trans Mountain? Why didn't they do this nine months ago, when the New Democrats came to office in Victoria?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, the fact of the matter is that this project is getting closer and closer to getting built, and we are seeing success after success. Just last week in the courts we had two more decisions which bode very well for the outcome of this project. In addition, we're seeing the polls show increasing and growing amounts of support as a result of reasoned, respectful, fact-based conversations that the people of Alberta, all the people of Alberta, well, except for maybe one or two, are having with respect to the people of B.C. In addition, we're having business leaders and community leaders come here to Alberta later this week to continue this work. We will get the pipeline built. We will get it done.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Premier doesn't seem to be able to take responsibility for the fact that she gave her ally and fellow New Democrat John Horgan a pass when he came to office last July on a threat to do everything possible to shut down Trans Mountain. She attacked our suggestions for potentially turning off the taps. She did not advertise on behalf of Trans Mountain until now, 17 days before its potential cancellation. Again the question is: why did the NDP government wait so long to get in the game?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the announcement that we made last week is not the first round of advertising, nor is it the first round of efforts to engage with the people of B.C. on the matter of the pipeline, so, first of all, the member has his facts incorrect there. Secondly, we've been engaging in a number of different strategies to get this pipeline built. We didn't move into a corner and start having temper tantrums and then wonder why nobody was talking to us. That particular strategy was tried for nine consecutive years, and it resulted in abject failure. Thank goodness other people are in charge of this, and – you know what? – because of that, we're going to get it done.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Third main question.

Mr. Kenney: Yes, Mr. Speaker, she's delighted that her close friend and ally Justin Trudeau is in charge of this. She's happy that he cancelled Northern Gateway. She doesn't care that he killed Energy East or that he surrendered on Keystone XL.

Carbon Levy and Nonprofit Organizations

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the Community Kitchen Program of Calgary delivers 1.3 million pounds of food to 190,000 people, but they are deeply concerned. They said that it is very tough with the higher gas prices now. "This keeps us up at night," they said. One of the reasons for the higher gas prices is the higher NDP carbon tax. Is the government happy that they're squeezing nonprofits trying to deliver food to poor Calgarians?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, first of all, let me be very clear that the vast majority of the price increases that the member opposite is talking about are as a result of an overall increase in gas prices. To suggest that it's all because of the carbon levy is misleading; hardly surprising, not out of character, but nonetheless it is that. Meanwhile, our government is working with social agencies through a number of programs that we have engaged in over the last three years because we are focused on making life better for all Albertans, including lower income Albertans, and we will continue that record.

2:00

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I've said the carbon tax is part of the reason for higher fuel prices. It's about six cents right now, but the NDP want to raise that by 67 per cent. Why? Because their close ally Justin Trudeau asked them to. Now, the Vecova Centre for Disability Services and Research says: when our costs go up, it means a reduction in the amount of money that can come back to support the programs that we offer. They said this in the context of higher gas prices, which are partly driven by the higher carbon tax. Will the government reconsider their pledge to Justin Trudeau to raise the NDP carbon tax by 67 per cent?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin by saying that I find it interesting that the member opposite is standing up for an organization that is focused on doing drug and alcohol treatment, which is important, after a convention a week and a half ago where you had motions actually suggesting charging people for treatment because they've made the choice to become subject to addictions, illnesses. I've got to say: a little rich for folks over there. That being said, we will continue to do the work that is necessary to support those kinds of organizations and many other important organizations which deliver that important service.

Mr. Kenney: There was no such motion adopted.

Mr. Speaker, the Women in Need Society provides food and services to underprivileged women. It expends about 38,000 litres of fuel every year, meaning that the carbon tax has already cost them $2,500 a year. Now the NDP wants to raise that carbon tax by 67 per cent to get the approval of their close ally Justin Trudeau. Why are they placing their alliance with Justin Trudeau ahead of the good people at the Women in Need Society?

Ms Notley: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. The member opposite is ignoring the many things that our government has done to support an organization like Women in Need, the many things that we will continue to do, and the supports that go to not only those organizations but the people they serve; for instance, as a result of having a progressive tax situation, by having rebates to low-income people through the carbon levy program, as a result of the child tax benefit, and as a result of the numerous things our government has done to stand up for women in need. We will continue that record. We will not let their record hurt those women.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Homelessness Initiatives

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the warm weather we are currently experiencing, it may come as a surprise to many Albertans that Inn from the Cold is seeing a spike in users that is leaving them at or near capacity. Landlords aren't allowed to evict tenants during dangerous winter months, and rightly so, but this leads to a surge in the number of evictions as the weather begins to improve. To the Premier: what is your government doing to make sure organizations like Inn from the Cold have the resources to deal with the increased user numbers?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. We have been working with our partners in that area, and we have provided stable and predictable funding to make sure that they can provide the services to Albertans who rely on these services. If we were take advice from that side, the proposed cuts each and every day would have made the situation worse. We have increased funding in all four of our budgets to make sure Albertans get the services they need.

Mr. Fraser: Affordable housing and programs like Inn from the Cold are vital parts in dealing with homelessness and housing insecurity, but we need to be more proactive about keeping people housed to begin with. We can save the system money if we focus on keeping people housed instead of rehousing them. That stability has associated benefits to the health and wellness of families who are no longer being evicted. To the Premier. We need to support organizations like Inn from the Cold, but we also need an alternative, proactive solution to keep people in their homes. Where is your government on this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. As I said, instead of cutting funding for homelessness housing, we are investing almost $170 million in the homelessness file. We have invested $5.2 million in support for 200 new permanent supportive housing. We are also investing $1.2 billion to make sure that affordable housing is available, that there is a permanent solution available for Albertans who rely on these supports.

Mr. Fraser: The problem that is shared by people at risk of losing their housing as well as the nonprofits that assist them is the lack of cash on hand. Both groups are usually very tight on budgets, and small increases in costs can have dire consequences. This means that a carbon tax actually has a higher impact on these families and nonprofits, who have to pay increased costs every day but then have to wait months for rebates. You can understand that those months feel like a very long time when you're struggling to make ends meet. To the Premier: will you show some understanding and some compassion and exempt nonprofits and low-income Albertans from the carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that when the climate leadership plan was brought forward, we considered those. That's why two-thirds of Albertans are getting those rebates, so they're not burdened with that. As I said before, the reason we are facing these challenges is that that side over there – the member was a part of that – for 40 years ignored these, and those social deficits were off-loaded onto Albertans. Now we are making those investments. We are investing $1.2 billion to make sure that housing is available for Albertans who need it.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Family Support for Children with Disabilities

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The family support for children with disabilities program is intended to provide vital resources to children and their families. Many families consider this program a lifeline, but we've also heard from families that feel the program isn't working the way it's supposed to. To the Minister of Community and Social Services: what is your ministry doing to ensure that children and their families have the supports they need?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Let me begin by saying that children with disabilities deserve every opportunity to be successful. As a government we are here to support families and children. We do know that parents of children with disabilities, many of whom have joined us here, work tirelessly for their children, and they know best about their children's needs. I stood with them out on the Legislature steps, I heard their concerns, and I'm absolutely committed to working with them to ensure that they get the supports they need.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're hearing from parents that they feel that too much pressure is being put on them by the FSCD program. Does the minister support parent training as a replacement to direct supports for children with disabilities?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. I guess, first and foremost, I will say that they are parents first, and we do not support the idea that they should take on the role of professionals. These supports are there to support their children. We had listening sessions over the last week, four sessions, and I'm committed to working with them, listening to them, and taking action to make sure that this program responds to the needs of the children and their families. We will work with them to make sure we get this right.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Woollard: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Caseloads for FSCD are growing, and parents are concerned about cuts to the program. To the same minister: what investments have been made in FSCD, and are there any plans to make cuts in order to manage caseload growth? What would the effects of these cuts be?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member. First, I want to say that even during the worst economic downturn we made a decision to put Alberta's families first. We didn't make any cuts to this program. I would say that we added $50 million to this program in the last four budgets, and we will continue to work with the parents and their children to make sure that this program responds to their needs.

Thank you very much.

Cannabis Legalization

Mr. Fildebrandt: The Stone Age policy of Canada's prohibition is finally expected to come to an end this summer, but even once it's legalized, thousands of Canadians will still carry criminal records. They will continue to be criminally penalized for something that is no longer a crime. When the Wheat Board was abolished, Prime Minister Harper pardoned those who were charged with the crime of selling wheat. One of them is our colleague from Drumheller-Stettler. Will the Minister of Justice call on her federal counterpart to provide a full pardon for those who carry a criminal record for violations that will no longer be illegal?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Well, the issue the member raises is absolutely an issue that I think would be of interest to many people in Alberta and many people throughout this country. It rests within the jurisdiction of the federal government and is therefore a decision that they would need to make.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Given, Mr. Speaker, that there's a lot of good in this government's cannabis legalization plan but that there is a notable hole – legitimate business owners like Marc and Jodie Emery, who operated with a storefront and paid taxes, are lumped in with organized crime, like the mafia and Hells Angels, in being prohibited from operating a licensed cannabis business in Alberta – will the Minister of Justice amend our legislation to ensure that legitimate business owners like these are not treated the same as violent criminals?

Mr. Ceci: Under the Alberta gaming, liquor, and cannabis commission, AGL Ceci, I just want to say that there's a process. All people who want to be legitimate sellers of cannabis in Alberta have to go through that, be monitored, and run through the AGLC. Everybody's background will be checked as well as the people who are selling in the store will be checked. It's not a process of saying that we're lumping this group in with that group. Albertans want to know that everybody's record is stellar.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, I just want to point out that you can't use a person's name in this House.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I guess a new slogan will be Pot is Good.

Given, Mr. Speaker, that while it's not perfect, Alberta has the best system in the country for the legal sale of cannabis, with no government weed stores with bureaucrats helping you pick out a bong, but for some reason the government believes that it can establish a monopoly on the online sales of cannabis – you can buy pot online right now without much trouble even though it's illegal, so good luck with that. They even expect to lose money on online sales. Only the government could possibly lose money selling pot. Can we agree that after we legalize it, we should privatize it?

Mr. Ceci: Again, with regard to the legal sale of cannabis, once that comes through, with the federal government approval to make that happen, the government of Alberta will be the online seller of cannabis. We think that's in the interest of all Albertans. Alberta will have a social responsibility to deliver cannabis in their online sales and not to promote it and to make wild assertions about their cannabis. It'll be sold socially responsibly, and for a couple of years it'll be challenging to make a profit.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many Albertans are currently struggling to find work. Alberta was once prosperous, and workers from many different jurisdictions came to Alberta for well-paying jobs. Now what we are seeing from other jurisdictions are activists that are trying to shut down our energy industry and the jobs that go with it. I'm referring to the Tides Foundation, Packard Foundation, Rockefeller Brothers foundation, and the like. They don't have Canada's national interests at heart and are far from it. Minister, what are you doing to stand up to these foreign special-interest groups that are doing everything in their power to block the Trans Mountain pipeline?

Mr. Ceci: I think it's clear, Mr. Speaker, what the government of Alberta is doing to promote it and to assure Albertans that it's in the interests of Canada that we get this right and we get a pipeline to tidewater. We are out there with: making Canada work. There's an advertising campaign to convince all Canadians that it's in all of our interests to see this pipeline get to tidewater as quickly as possible. We'll continue to stand up for Albertans and Canada in that regard.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this NDP government has a very poor record of standing up for Alberta when it comes to our energy industry and given that this NDP government has yet to pass Bill 12, which would allow the government to turn off the taps to B.C., and given that this NDP is still punishing unemployed Albertans with its expensive carbon tax that has not moved any opponents to the pipeline from no to yes – Minister, we only have 17 days left until Kinder Morgan's decision – when will Albertans finally see concrete action to stop those who are illegally obstructing the pipeline?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we've been standing up every day since we were elected to support our most important industry here in Alberta, not just with the construction of the Trans Mountain pipeline but with Keystone XL and line 3. Anything we can do to promote market access, we've been doing. You know what? It's starting to work. An article this weekend in the Herald talked about: "Slowly but surely, pipeline backers [are] winning 'hearts and minds'" of not just people in B.C. but in all of Canada.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Second supplemental.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we already have the most environmentally responsible oil and gas industry on the planet and that we continue to improve and given that we've already seen job losses on the Trans Mountain expansion sites as a result of the uncertainty created by pipeline opponents and given that the government in B.C. has not yet changed its opposition to the project, since the government isn't rushing to pass Bill 12, what is being done to ensure certainty for this project?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, again, we have been working very hard, and sometimes it takes one conversation at a time. Many of our ministers have been going across Canada. Our Premier has been doing hard work talking to people about why it's not just important for Alberta and not just for B.C. but for all of Canada. Despite the naysayers in the opposition benches we are winning the hearts and minds of British Columbians and Canadians thanks to the leadership, as I mentioned, of my colleagues and our Premier. Over the next 20 years we know that this pipeline is going to generate $5.7 billion just to B.C.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Caribou Protection

Mr. Loewen: The environment minister went with a delegation of Alberta industry and community representatives to Ottawa to meet with the federal ministry to talk about caribou plans. Would the minister confirm that the federal government is very willing to work with Alberta on the caribou issue and not unilaterally enact a protection order as long as Alberta shows progress towards dealing with this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member is quite right. We did go to Ottawa. We secured a financial commitment from the federal government, so it was a very successful trip, in no small part due to, I think, the interventions of the municipalities who came with us and who told their stories of the effect of range planning on their communities. You know, the fact of the matter is that the federal government is willing to be good partners to us on this – they understand where we are coming from – but at the same time everyone is being pushed forward by the courts, and there's very little we can do in that context.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Loewen: Given that a protection order is not the preferred route as it has negative effects on the economy and the people in the region, would you be willing to push the federal government to work with the province to expand the section 11 agreement, if necessary, so that there is a reasonable alternative to a protection order?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the member is correct. The section 11 agreement is one of the tools in our tool box. We need to make sure that it's the right tool for us, and we need to make sure that it aligns with the funding commitment that we did secure from the federal government. You know, the Species at Risk Act is a very inflexible instrument. There were nine years that the hon. member's leader was in Ottawa that he could have used to change it, and he didn't, so this is what we're stuck with now.

Mr. Loewen: Given that the federal government committed to giving money to Alberta to help with the costs associated with the caribou issue, can the minister confirm exactly how much and exactly what products that money will be spent on?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We do not have that information at this time.

Provincial Response to Pipeline Opposition (continued)

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, last month the Premier said that the NDP government would file for intervenor status in the dilbit reference case, but she has a record. She failed to file a brief to the parliamentary committee in opposition to Bill C-69. Kinder Morgan wants their permits to build from all levels of government not to be held up by endless court cases and foreign-funded special interests who are NDP fellow travellers like Al Gore. Has the NDP government filed for intervenor status in the dilbit reference case with the Court of Appeal of B.C.? Minister of Justice, if not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned in an earlier question, we have fought every step of the way for market access, and that is certainly true in the case of the Trans Mountain going to B.C. We've fought in the court and won now 14 out of 14 times, and we continue to have intervenor status as necessary. We're doing everything we can to make this pipeline go, and absolutely it's going to go.

2:20

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that effective May 22 the Liberals in Ottawa have cut off the committee work on Bill C-69, the federal bill that makes changes to the National Energy Board, despite having 470 amendments to consider, to the Premier: in your closed-door meetings with your best friend Justin Trudeau did you object to Ottawa running roughshod over Alberta's energy industry and the Canadian economy with the dangers of C-69, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the reference case brought forward by the B.C. government is not good for Canadian jobs, it's not good for the industry, and it's not good for economic union. Frankly, it's just not good for our country. Essentially, B.C. wants the power to unilaterally throttle our resources and hurt the Canadian economy, and I would suggest that they be very, very careful in what they ask for. Our Premier has instructed officials to immediately apply to be a party in this reference case, and we are going to aggressively stand up for Alberta and, frankly, for Canadians and all economic interests.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that Bill C-69 allows the federal minister unlimited powers to reject major projects like pipelines before an environmental assessment is carried out – the Alberta NDP government never filed any briefing in opposition to C-69, but I did – Premier, why have you failed to stand up for Alberta's industries and defend the Constitution against this federal Liberal government that disrespects the provinces?

Ms Hoffman: Well, I want to thank the member for bringing this issue forward, and I certainly wonder why, when his leader was in Ottawa for nearly two decades, they didn't address this at that time, Mr. Speaker. These are the kinds of things that compel people to question the determination of the members opposite, actually, on these issues. Conservative leaders sat in Ottawa and in this House here in Alberta for a decade, almost, at the same time and didn't get this pipeline to tidewater. Our Premier has made significant progress on this file in just three short years, and we are going to get our pipeline built. You can mark my words.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Classroom Improvement Fund

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since being elected in 2015, I have visited a lot with teachers. Not once have I ever heard a request for a raise, but what I did hear about was the need for classroom funding support, support promised by governments before but never delivered. The last collective bargaining agreement saw teachers and our government come together to put kids first with the commitment of $75 million in classroom improvement funding, and on a visit to SouthPointe school in Fort Saskatchewan we saw the impact of those funds first-hand. Would the Minister of Education please update the House about how the classroom improvement funds are being used to improve the lives of Alberta's students?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, the classroom improvement fund has been very successful. We've seen more than 400 new teachers and support staff hired across the province. In Peace-Wapiti and Wetaskiwin school divisions they started Empower Reading, which was a comprehensive approach to teaching students to read. Horizon school set up a policy called calm, alert, and learning, which helps teachers to talk about diversity in school. We see many, many interesting projects.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that each school has different needs and given that teachers and locally elected school boards are best suited to address those needs, to the same minister: how has the classroom improvement fund specifically helped students like those in my constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville with their literacy skills?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is correct. The SouthPointe school in Fort Saskatchewan is the first new school that was built in 30 years – can you imagine? – while the whole city grew by more than many times that amount. Anyways, what they are using it for is for comprehension and the tracking of reading comprehension over the course of the school year. You can see quantifiable improvements by focusing on young learners and their literacy from ages seven and eight.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that our classrooms continue to grow and given that we know what the UCP wants to do to publicly funded education, to the same minister: how have you ensured that students in rural schools have the same access to the classroom improvement funding as those in large urban centres like Edmonton and Calgary?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the classroom improvement fund is spread out across all 61 school boards. I mentioned some examples of both rural initiatives and urban initiatives. People are focusing in on mathematics skills and critical thinking skills. You know, the best way to make sure that kids get the help that they need is to make sure you hire teachers and support staff, which we're doing through this fund. You do not help kids by making cuts and laying off teachers and support staff, as the UCP has suggested they would do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mathematics Education

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Falling math scores remain an issue for Alberta schools. The minister assured us during estimates that memorization and algorithms will be a fundamental part of the new curriculum which is being developed. However, my concern is for the students currently in the system, especially those in junior high and high school. These students cannot be left behind. How they are learning math now needs to change. To the minister: what specific changes to the way math is taught in our schools have been made to address falling math scores?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, there's every reason why we need to build a new curriculum. You know, I found it very interesting that the member's leader said that he would put the curriculum into the shredder. Can you imagine that? We're building curriculum that will strengthen mathematics, and if we have a good idea, we're using it straight away. For example, I put the written section into the diploma exams for mathematics. We put in the no-calculator sections for the PATs for grade 9s. We're working hard with teachers, as I said, with the classroom improvement fund, funding specific initiatives. I'll tell you lots more about it later.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Calgary board of education has done significant work to tackle falling math scores, including hiring math coaches, with a focus on getting back to the basics, and given that this diversion away from discovery math has begun to show results, demonstrating once again the importance of being able to memorize times tables and demonstrate recall, again to the minister: what are you doing to provide leadership on the issue of falling math scores so that individual school boards do not have to fill in the gaps?

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, as it happens, the school boards work together with us to improve education. The Calgary board of education: you know how they're doing that? They're using the classroom improvement fund, that we negotiated together, to make that investment. The best way they can do that is in hiring those coaches. You hire teachers, and you hire support staff. What you don't do is make reckless cuts towards education and compromise the education of our students. We're there to make life better for our kids, and I think we're doing a pretty good job.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I recently had a first-year engineering student from an Alberta university write to me about discovery math and given that he stated – and I quote – that discovery math only helps a small percentage of students and that many fall behind, end quote, and given that he went on to say, quote, that as someone who uses high levels of math on an almost daily basis, discovery math does not help and that Alberta math scores have been dropping because of this, end quote, again to the minister: are you concerned that the way math is currently being taught in Alberta does not properly prepare students for postsecondary success?

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's very important to make some distinctions here. You know, we don't look at saying, "Back to basics" or "the old curriculum" or "the new curriculum." What you look for are the best tools every step of the way to make sure a kid learns math and English and critical thinking skills as well. You don't shy away from making investments even during tough economic times, as we did. We doubled down to make sacrifices in other areas to fund education for enrolment. I would suggest that the hon. member should take a second look. I don't know if you can do a do-over and allow him to vote for the Education budget. He didn't do it the first time, and that kind of was an indication of their true intentions.

Edmonton General Continuing Care Centre Parking

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, last week's question got results. On Friday AHS reported to me that the Westlock hospital helipad is now open.

But on to another project. Across the street from the Edmonton General Continuing Care Centre I understand AHS plans to replace a parkade with – get this – a new parkade. A real estate developer made an unsolicited offer to buy the air rights over this new parkade in the hopes of adding apartments to the neighbourhood, but AHS turned down the revenue. Can the Minister of Health explain: why is AHS turning down this surprise source of revenue?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for this opportunity to set the facts straight. We absolutely worked to make sure that that helipad was open as quickly as possible. It was literally the day after the member asked a question that we ensured it was back up and operational.

I also want to set the facts straight on some questions that were asked last week. The member said that things were shut down for two and a half hours with regard to an air ambulance. It was 10 minutes. They said that it was an urgent case. It was a routine transfer. Mr. Speaker, I'm sick of the mudslinging in this House. If you want to talk facts in improving health care, I'm there. I'm willing to do it with you. I welcome you to the table.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that Alberta Health Services is re-evaluating this matter at the joint capital projects table with the ministries of Health and Infrastructure and given that the Minister of Infrastructure deferred questions on this matter during estimates to the Minister of Health, with the NDP running a near $9 billion deficit, can the Minister of Health provide an update on the re-evaluation of this proposal and advise: will the air rights for this parkade be put up for auction, bringing in potentially millions of dollars in new revenue for Alberta Health Services?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question, Mr. Speaker. It is true that there is a need to ensure that staff and visitors have a place to park when they visit hospitals. I believe that it was at a former policy convention where some members opposite were talking about making parking free for everyone. Today they're talking about charging those same staff and visitors $9 billion. Let's take some time to get your facts straight. Come to us with reasonable solutions. Of course, we're going to make sure that people have a place to park when they come and visit their grandparents, their loved ones, their children. I think that's the right thing to do, and it will be cost recovery.

Mr. van Dijken: Given, Mr. Speaker, that AHS funds parkade replacement projects out of the revenue generated from parking fees and given that visiting loved ones in care can exact an emotional toll, never mind having to pay for parking, is the Minister of Health in any way considering providing some amount of short-term free parking since AHS seems to have enough money to replace parkades with parkades without accepting millions in surprise revenue for condos and affordable housing?

Ms Hoffman: Well, let's fix some more facts. It's a Covenant Health facility. Covenant Health, just like AHS, ensures that they're not diverting funds from front-line services, not laying off nurses to provide free parking. There are certainly important investments to make sure that they're cost recovery. That's one of the reasons why they're asking for this to be done, so that they can build one facility while they are certainly replacing another one.

Mr. Speaker, it's important that we be compassionate with people. We know that health outcomes are better when people have an opportunity to visit, but we're not going to lay off nurses and other important front-line providers. It's important that health be Health funded and that parking be cost recovery.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Elizabeth Métis Settlement Wildfire

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fire season is here, and the people of the Elizabeth Métis settlement in my constituency found themselves facing a state of emergency due to a fire this weekend. Could the minister please provide us with an update on the situation, its impact on the community, and the status of the wildfire within my area?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you. Thank you to the member for the question. It's an important question. There are some fires around the province right now, Mr. Speaker. We do empathize with the folks out there, specifically the Elizabeth Métis settlement. On the 12th of May a wildfire on the settlement did grow rapidly to over 300 hectares. They do have a state of local emergency and established an EOC and a reception centre. Fishing Lake and Cold Lake assisted with fire suppression. The fire is now being held. Fifteen residences were evacuated, and a mandatory evacuation remains in place due to hot spots although residents are allowed to return during the day to deal with animals and property issues.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for that answer,

Minister. Given that this fire has forced the evacuation of residents and given that wildfires often behave in an unpredictable manner, could the minister please tell us what resources the government has dedicated to keeping both people and property safe from this blaze, and how long do you expect that these resources will be in place?

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you to the member for the question. Well, it's a crossministry initiative, obviously, with Ag and Forestry right now, so right now there are resources out there. There are 860 firefighters out there. I don't have the specific numbers that are right there in Elizabeth. There are 84 helicopters, 79 pieces of heavy equipment, and 16 air tankers. We do know that, thankfully, power has been restored in the settlement. There is one firefighter, unfortunately, that was taken to hospital for smoke inhalation, but we are still working on the ground with the Alberta Emergency Management Agency and with field officers to help.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Second supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again thank you to the minister for that fulsome answer. Again, given that people have been displaced from their homes, that have been threatened by this fire, can the minister please tell us how the evacuated residents are being accommodated and provided for in these serious and stressful circumstances?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, and thank you to the member again for the question. I do want to make sure that – I'd be remiss if I didn't thank the local volunteers and the folks on the ground out there, the first responders. The municipalities and the people out there have been absolutely phenomenal working on the ground. You know, I want to let them know that the POC is open 24/7. We are monitoring the situation daily, so everything we can do to adapt to the situation – we do know it's hot and it's windy out there. But it's also incumbent upon us as citizens to be ever vigilant. We will have the assistance there for those folks when they need it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Grande Prairie Regional Hospital Construction

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The new Grande Prairie hospital looks great from the outside. We know there's a lot of complex work to do inside, but we are hearing rumours of delays. Constituents are asking if this is true. To the Health or Infrastructure ministers: can the ministers confirm that this project is on schedule to open in 2019?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to assure members here on behalf of the Minister of Infrastructure that we're doing everything possible to make sure that that hospital is completed in a timely fashion. Having said that, we inherited quite a situation when this government took office. The previous government had built an envelope for the hospital that was far too big for the needs of the hospital. It created many challenges, not the least of which was a significant overbudget situation, because they hadn't planned the hospital properly.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the hospital project includes a parkade and given that we've not seen any construction activity yet on the parkade site, to the same ministers: can you confirm that the new parkade will be there when the hospital opens?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Well, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Infrastructure I can undertake that question and provide a response to the hon. member. There are many difficulties associated with the poor planning related to that particular hospital, and the Infrastructure department officials have been working very hard in order to remedy those things. The next thing that needs to be done is continuing construction on the interior, including the mechanical, electrical, and drywall work. Site and landscaping work is under way and is expected to be completed in 2018.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the hospital is supposed to be finished at the end of this year and open in 2019 and given that the constituents are very interested in the project and appreciate updates on it, to the same ministers: if the project runs into delays, will you commit to communicating this information to the constituents?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the minister I can assure the House and the people in Grande Prairie that everything is being done to diligently complete this very difficult project, which, unfortunately, was very badly planned by the previous government. We will provide continuous updates on the progress of the project.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Calgary Southwest and West Ring Road Construction

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Transportation: can you please give my constituents and Calgarians in general an update on where the southwest ring road construction is right now?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for that question from the Member for Calgary-Bow. Construction continues along highways 8 and 22. They will require some speed reductions in some areas. Detours along Glenmore Trail, highway 8, and Sarcee Trail will be going into effect later in the summer. We'll be taking the proper steps to help Calgarians understand the effect of this work. The construction of the southwest Calgary ring road is a historic and much-needed project for Calgarians and Albertans alike.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What impacts will this construction have on the travelling public as far as traffic disruptions are concerned?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for that question. As with all projects, there's going to be some inconvenience during construction, but once it's complete, the southwest Calgary ring road will make life better for all of those who make use of it and will improve the free flow of traffic. My department has worked closely with our contractor, and we've come up with a plan to have the least possible impact on the travelling public. There are detours, as I've mentioned. Some lanes will be narrowed, and the connection between highway 8 and Glenmore will be forced through a detour, so we do anticipate significant levels of service disruption, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for those updates. People in my riding are also waiting to hear about the completion of the ring road. What can you tell my constituents about the west Calgary ring road?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Calgary west ring road will complete the ring and will be the final leg, providing more than 100 kilometres of free-flow traffic around the city of Calgary. It's an approved project that's part of Transportation's 2017-2020 capital plan. The project remains a priority for this government, and we understand its importance to residents and businesses in the Calgary region.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today in a question that was asked by the Leader of the Official Opposition, the Premier indicated in regard to Bill 12 that they were not delaying the passage of Bill 12 but were in fact trying to make sure that this House could debate it. The question, though, then becomes why the government won't allow Bill 12 to come to the floor. Why does the government keep voting against the opposition on trying to get it to the floor to debate it?

Ms Hoffman: I'm just going to take this first one, and then I certainly welcome the Government House Leader to supplement in the other responses. I want to be very clear that Ottawa is in very serious and determined conversations with Kinder Morgan. I want to ensure Albertans that these discussions are focused on one outcome, and that's the construction of the Trans Mountain pipeline.

With respect to Bill 12 the Premier made it very clear that our intent is to have it passed this week. We certainly welcome members to participate in that. We respect democracy and welcome them to participate in the debate on Bill 12, Bill 1, Bill 2, Bill 9. We'll see where they are when it comes to all of those bills, Mr. Speaker, because I think Albertans deserve to know.

Mr. Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that it's been four weeks and the government repeatedly continues to stop this bill from coming to the floor to be discussed and that when they do allow it to the floor, they then vote to shut it down instead of dealing with this issue on behalf of Albertans, again my question to the government is: why will they not allow this bill to come to the floor to be debated and passed on behalf of Albertans? Why do they continue to delay it?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, there are many bills before this House. You know, the opposition thinks that they can pick and choose which bills they want to debate. They can't wait to debate Bill 12, and they can't wait to get out of the House when we deal with Bill 9. They can't have it both ways. The Premier has told the House that we will debate and pass this bill out of third reading this week. I'm sorry, hon. member; I don't know what the point is.

Mr. Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, the point is that the Premier said that she was wanting this bill to be debated in this House, but the government continues to delay it. It's now acknowledged by the Government House Leader that he will not bring forward this piece of legislation. The question is why, first of all, but second, I'll just ask another question. Why did the Premier say that it was going to be debated in this House and then her Government House Leader won't allow it to be debated in this House?

Mr. Mason: Well, I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the hon. member and I speak different languages, because I just said that it's going to be debated and passed out of third reading this week. I don't know. Does he have a hearing problem? I just don't understand the question. You know, we couldn't have been more clear. We will debate and pass Bill 12 and finish it this week.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Killarney 1 Affordable Housing Project in Calgary

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A few weeks ago a construction manager walked into my office because he felt compelled to come see me, his representative in this Assembly, and say thank you to our government for investing in Alberta's people and communities.

A few short years ago he had a lull in business and had not been paid for work completed. He was like so many contractors at the start of the 2015 recession, down and out. But that changed when his company won a bid on a maintenance project funded by this government that is refurbishing a 17-unit affordable housing project in Calgary-Currie. Over the past year he has hired 12 local workers to renovate and upgrade what is known as Killarney 1.

Three Fridays ago I visited Killarney 1 and heard many hopeful stories. One man used to walk by with his grocery cart collecting bottles until the crew asked him if he was looking for work. He was, Mr. Speaker, and he has since become a member of this hard-working team and has found housing and belonging. Another person was hired for this team just as his landlord was about to evict him, and yet another young man was hired whose struggles with mental health had forced him to quit university. He now owns his own apartment and has a good income.

The bonds forged between these workers and the residents of Killarney 1 were heartwarming. The construction crew not only chats with the residents, but they also have lunch together on the back patio when it is appropriately sunny. The construction manager told me that this has been his favourite project because it allowed him to provide good jobs for people who are too often forgotten.

For me, Mr. Speaker, it was an amazing example of how government decisions to invest in affordable housing, invest in job creation and people make lives better, and we also know that the opposite is true. The opposition's desire to cut infrastructure spending would slow down business and prevent hiring, making lives worse for average Albertans.

I am so proud of our government, Mr. Speaker, and I will continue to work hard to ensure that more stories like this one are possible for more people across this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills

Seniors' Mobile Blood Collection Service in St. Paul

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to speak to the obvious lack of respect shown by the NDP government to the seniors of our province. We've all heard how the Premier's office responded to the Sundre West Country Centre when they were threatened with closure due to the effects of the carbon tax. They were told: just hold a fundraiser. Otherwise, they would have had to increase fees of fixed-income seniors just to cover the costs of the carbon tax.

More recently I received a copy of correspondence from the east area laboratory manager for Alberta Health Services to the Sunnyside lodge residents in St. Paul regarding a change to mobile collection requisition dated May 8. Previously a lab tech from the nearby St. Therese health centre would come by once per week for scheduled blood work. Often as many as 20 residents would be lined up, and with help from the staff, this convenient, senior-friendly service was expedited.

But no more. Suggestions were made by this manager of numerous options for seniors to find adequate transportation for a small fee, and I'll quote from her letter. "If finding adequate transportation is an issue there are many options within St. Paul such as the Action Bus that is ran through the Town of St. Paul for a small fee, utilizing cabs and family members." So residents can bundle up and go sit in the emergency ward at the hospital, exposing themselves to the virus of the day. Oddly enough, this service is still available to patients in extended care in the facility next door, literally just metres away.

I wonder how many levels of management at AHS and how many meetings of the minds it took to come up with this cost-saving measure. I wonder if any thought was given at any time to eliminate a management position rather than cut this service to seniors, or is it just easier to hit the most vulnerable who don't have a voice?

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the minister of environment, who is not able to be here but who referenced this particular article by a gentleman named Dave Klepacki when she was speaking last Thursday, that Kenney Doesn't Get to Label Me a 'Special Interest,' I have the requisite five copies.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In my member's statement I referenced a letter from Megan Boire, the east Alberta lab manager for Alberta Health Services, to the residents of the Sunnyside lodge, saying that their on-site blood collection will be cancelled.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Ms Phillips, Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the climate change office, pursuant to the Alberta Land Stewardship Act proposed amendments to the South Saskatchewan regional plan.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 204

Land Statutes (Abolition of Adverse Possession) Amendment Act, 2018

[Debate adjourned May 7: Dr. Turner speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying when this matter was last debated, the government takes this matter very seriously and has asked for expert analysis from the Law Reform Institute. That work has begun. I'm of the view that proceeding with this bill at this time rather than waiting for advice from the experts on a very complex bill would be premature. For that reason, I will be moving a reasoned amendment. It reads . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, let's just give an opportunity for the pages to pass the document around, and then we'll proceed.

Hon. member, proceed with the amendment.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. MLA Turner to move that the motion for second reading of Bill 204, Land Statutes (Abolition of Adverse Possession) Amendment Act, 2018, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 204, Land Statutes (Abolition of Adverse Possession) Amendment Act, 2018, be not now read a second time because a review of adverse possession is currently underway by the Alberta Law Reform Institute, and any recommendations and advice coming from that review must be taken into account prior to the government developing legislation and policies to give effect to the abolition of adverse possession.

Members, I agree with the principle and motive behind this bill, but I believe that we have to get it right. Adverse possession is a complex matter that impacts not only the legislation included within Bill 204 but also potentially other provincial statutes. That is why the Alberta Law Reform Institute has been asked to review the matter. I understand that the review is under way and that stakeholder consultations will form part of that review. I believe it's appropriate that further action on this issue should await the receipt of this report.

For that reason, I urge all members to support my amendment.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the amendment will be identified as RA1.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for recognizing me today. It's funny how much of a pattern you've seen in this Assembly over the last three years. It would be very funny if it wasn't for the fact that it has such serious consequences for people each and every time that the government continues their pattern when it comes to this.

So here we go. We have another amendment, another referral amendment from the government, sending a bill to committee. [interjections] Oh, sorry. A reasoned amendment. Thank you. I was coming back from talking with the Government House Leader. A reasoned amendment. My point would still stand. Sorry; I thought it was a referral.

We have a history of this government when they recognize that politically they can't vote against something but because of their ideology or because of the circumstances that they have they are incapable of or unwilling to support an opposition private member when it comes to a piece of legislation, where this government has repeatedly done this in this House. I mean, the earliest recollection I have is when they did it to the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler on an important piece of legislation in regard to holding politicians accountable in our democracy.

What happens then is that the government over there looks and says: "Whoops. We can't vote no for this because our constituents will not accept that, so we'll do a procedural amendment. We'll send it off to a committee to die, and then we'll walk around and tell our constituents that this will actually, truly be debated." In that case, that's where it would go, and then it never happens again. Repeatedly now. This is even more appalling when it comes to Bill 204 because this has been through committee after committee after committee in which the result has been to say: vote for this.

Now, the constituents that I have that are being impacted by this, that are actually losing property or those types of things, they aren't going to accept that as an answer. I mean, the government, Mr. Speaker, should stand up and acknowledge that they don't want to vote for this because they disagree with it. That's fine. But to then just try to run and hide and kill the hon. member's bill without admitting why or even discussing why they want to do it is appalling. It's appalling.

Ms Hoffman: Why do you want to run and hide?

Mr. Nixon: I don't want to run and hide from this at all.

This is an important issue. We have had several constituents who have come and talked to me about this. Early in my elected life this was one of the first issues that came to my office. I do understand that in urban Alberta they may not hear it as much, though the examples used by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek are from urban Alberta.

You have a government who over and over and over brings forward legislation in this Assembly that they're not ready to legislate on, and when it's pointed out that they're not ready and the opposition says, "Hey, get this to committee and get this fixed," the government won't do it. They'll jam it through, come back in another session, and try to fix it. But then in the case of private member's business that is reasonable, that Albertans want – this government realizes that, and they won't vote and support it – they do the same thing, they bring forward a procedural amendment each and every time.

It's shameful, Mr. Speaker. It's ridiculous that this government keeps doing it, and it's time to call a spade a spade.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're dealing with amendment RA1. Hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, to the amendment?

Mr. Gottfried: Yes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's a bit disconcerting. I have to say to you that we actually as a caucus joked about whether we should maybe do our own referral to committee on this because it's been a ping-pong ball back and forth between this committee and the Ministry of Justice and various other organizations.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation has been addressed since 2003 by the ALRI. It was addressed in a bill, brought forward by Ken Allred, that was unanimously passed at second reading in 2012. It was discussed and the adverse possession component of it was supported in many ways by members of this government when Bill 204 came up most recently.

But I wanted to look through a little bit of chronology on this, Mr. Speaker. I'm referring to the body of recommendations, most specifically from the Alberta Property Rights Advocate and the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, which is of course dominated by members of the government side, in support of the abolition of adverse possession that started in 2014. The Alberta Property Rights Advocate annual report recommendation 2014.03, submitted on June 22, 2015, is "that the law of adverse possession be abolished in Alberta."

In March of 2016, when that report was addressed by the Committee on Resource Stewardship, it was determined that this recommendation should be reviewed and addressed by the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General based on these considerations. "The Committee recommends that the Legislature not act on recommendation 2014.03 at this time but instead refer the recommendation to the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General for review."

Mr. Speaker, from a minority report at that time expressed from that committee:

Despite it being clearly within the committee's mandate to recommend that the Legislature act to reassure Alberta landowners they are not vulnerable to this archaic law, the majority chose to abdicate its deliberative function and pass the matter on to the Minister of Justice to review at her leisure with no expression of support for the change.

At a subsequent meeting of the committee it was noted that Standing Order 52.09(1) requires the government to respond to a report of a Legislative Policy Committee, with certain exceptions, within 150 days from the date on which the committee reports to the Assembly. It is unclear whether the standing order was met at the appropriate time by the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General, but from what I've been able to determine from the committee reports, that was not met.

Mr. Speaker, fast-forward to July of 2016 and the Property Rights Advocate 2015 annual report, recommendation 2015.02.

It is recommended Alberta Justice and Solicitor General be asked . . .

And this is because of inaction.

. . . as the ministry administering the Property Rights Advocate Act, to develop a process to ensure recommendations made by the Property Rights Advocate Office are followed up on after they are endorsed by a Standing Committee of the Legislature, or where the Committee requests additional action, which they did.

When the Committee endorses, or rejects a recommendation, it may be desirable to have a mechanism that demonstrates what follow up was taken.

Without a clearly-defined process . . .

This is from the Property Rights Advocate.

. . . for follow up, the work of the Property Rights Advocate Office, the Committee and others [who work on it] may not bear fruit.

I don't think there's any fruit coming from this committee and from the Ministry of Justice at this time, and now we are trying to grow a new tree to try and bear the same fruit.

3:00

Further, in the 2016 Property Rights Advocate office annual report:

In addition, both recommendations contained in the 2015 Property Rights Advocate Annual Report were unanimously endorsed by the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship. Once these recommendations are fully implemented, the likelihood for government to identify and act upon ways to improve fairness and equity among property rights should be enhanced.

In addition, implementation should increase transparency and accountability to Albertans by their government regarding property rights.

Property rights: that's what we're talking about here, Mr. Speaker.

During its meeting on February 21, 2017, the Committee made a [further] recommendation with respect to the common-law doctrine of adverse possession in Alberta. While considering the issue, the Committee acknowledged that the law of adverse possession is archaic and has been abolished in other provincial jurisdictions except in Nova Scotia, which is currently in the process of abolishing this doctrine. The Committee therefore determined that adverse possession should be abolished in Alberta.

And we want to bounce it back to that same committee, Mr. Speaker?

Based on these considerations the Committee recommends that the government introduce legislation abolishing the common-law doctrine of adverse possession in Alberta and all statutory references supporting adverse possession in Alberta.

That sounds pretty clear to me.

July 21, 2017, would have marked 150 days from the date of that motion and that recommendation from the committee, and to date, we do not see evidence of a response to the committee nor any action to abolish adverse possession, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, subsequently I had the chance to meet with the ALRI, and they told me that they have not gotten to this yet, that it has been pushed to them by the ministry, and that it is in the queue, which means that they may or may not be able to get to it. Once they do get to it, it will take between 12 and 18 months. So we don't have a timeline of when they're going to address it, and we're told that it's going to take 12 to 18 months.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Madam Speaker, I had a constituent recently, who was in this House just last week, who lost almost 1,000 square feet of his property, valued in the tens of thousands of dollars, because of a fence misplaced for just over the 10-year limit; 11 years, I think, 11 and a half years. When he decided and went to his neighbour and said, "Neighbour, you know, why don't we put in a new fence? It's time. The fence is getting a bit run down. It's time to put in a new fence, and then we can kind of get this thing settled once and for all," well, guess what? The next thing he got was papers served to him for adverse possession because that land was going to be seized by his neighbour with no compensation. This is within today's law.

So there's a time to get rid of bad laws. We have section 69 of the Law of Property Act, which will protect people where something has been done inadvertently, where a house or something or a garage is in the wrong place. There are settlements, and there are ways for that to be done with compensation, Madam Speaker, not a legal seizure of land. A legal seizure of land. Can you believe it? When I talk to my constituents about it, they go:

“No, no, no. You have to be kidding. Squatters’ rights: I thought that was some sort of thing of the past that we talk about in sort of archaic terms.” Outdated and archaic terms, to use some of the terminology of the very committee that we’re trying to send this back to.

Madam Speaker, this is ridiculous, for us to send this back to a committee that’s treated this like a ping-pong ball. We’ve had to force some decisions on that committee, and they finally passed unanimously – unanimously – to recommend to this government that they abolish adverse possession, and now that ping-pong ball came back into this Legislature.

We gave you the opportunity here today. We’re giving you the opportunity to do what’s right for your constituents, your constituent that might lose their property with a legal – not illegal; legal – seizure of land with no compensation because a fence was in the wrong place for 10 years and a day. Does sound right to you? Now look me in the eye, and tell me that. Madam Speaker, have them look me in the eye. Have them go to their constituents and tell them: “Oh, by the way, it’s okay. I’m okay if we have this battle on the books for another 18 to 24 months” – or maybe it never gets addressed by this government – “that you can have your land seized.” They’ll look at you, and they’ll laugh and say: “You’re kidding me. That can’t be a law today.”

This is a chance to get rid of a bad law, Madam Speaker. You know what? There might be some other changes that we make to this law in the future, as we see, but there is section 69 to make sure that there is a way to adjust unintended buildings, unintended improvements, unintended location of buildings. There is a law in place to be able to adjust that.

This reasoned amendment, Madam Speaker, is not something that we should consider at this time. This reasoned amendment is a bit of a joke to me. In fact, we joked about it earlier today, that maybe we should do that, just to sort of say: wouldn’t this be crazy if this reasoned amendment were to pass, if this motion were to pass. And we said: no, that’s crazy; why would we want to do that, send it back to the very same committee? What for?

Dr. Turner: It’s not going to a committee.

Mr. Gotfried: Sorry. It’s a reasoned amendment. It’s being hoisted here.

You know what? The bottom line is that we’ve talked about this piece of legislation enough. We’ve promised Albertans. We’ve had the Property Rights Advocate tell us time after time after time. That’s the Property Rights Advocate, a specialist in property rights, Madam Speaker. A specialist in property rights has told this Legislature and that committee that they wanted to – and that committee agreed with that, and they said that they were going to do that. They recommended that it be done.

Is this because the government is embarrassed in not meeting that 150-day rule once, that 150-day guideline twice? Now we’re going into triple jeopardy on this, and we’re going to push it down the road at least another 12 to 18 months. And the ALRI: I’d love to hear if the ALRI has actually given us a date they’re going to start this. They only have five people there – five people – and they have other legislation they’re dealing with.

You are doing this reasoned amendment, are saying to Albertans that the seizure, illegal seizure of their land, the absolute disregard for their property rights, the disregard for our Torrens system, which – by the way, Madam Speaker, the Torrens system: actually, we guarantee. And I’ll use the term here, “we guarantee.” This reasoned amendment does not deserve . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the reasoned amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow first.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Often when something comes before the House, in particular under private members’ business – but it happens on other topics as well – the government will do something that seems to be a little counterintuitive or, perhaps, even very intuitive. There’s a very clear, often transparent political motive behind what the government may want to do because perhaps they just don’t want to be caught out with the opposition having passed a particular bill or motion. Perhaps they don’t want to be seen to vote against something that really is in the best interests of Albertans or just sort of fits good, common sense, but for political reasons they don’t want to give the opposition a win.

But what I really have a hard time getting my head around on this topic is: what is the motivation of the government for not supporting the end of adverse possession? I can’t actually understand why we’re in this place. The only thing I can think about is that they somehow don’t want the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek to get the credit for doing something that is so far overdue that Alberta is now the last province not only in the land but one of the last places in the entire Commonwealth to have this system in place. That’s all I can think about. If that is, in fact, the rationale from government, it’s about as petty as you could possibly get, and it’s profoundly disappointing if that is, in fact, the reason. Perhaps there’s some other reason, but I haven’t heard through the course of debate any logical, rational reason why this should not go ahead.

I’ve heard from the government: “Good idea. We think this is, you know, long overdue. It’s about time, and, yup, we’re looking at it.” Well, guess what? The Resource Stewardship Committee did look at it. I happened to be part of that. I happened to be part of the committee when it wrote its report, released in March 2017, which recommended that the law of adverse possession is archaic and has been abolished in other provincial jurisdictions except Nova Scotia, which is currently in the process of abolishing this doctrine . . . the Committee [recommended] that the government introduce legislation abolishing the common-law doctrine of adverse possession in Alberta and all statutory references supporting adverse possession in Alberta legislation.

[The Speaker in the chair]

It’s about as clear as you get, Mr. Speaker. That is a standing committee of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, dominated by government members, that passed that recommendation, if I recall, unanimously. It’s the right recommendation.

The only reason, I can think, that this is not being supported by government is because somehow they want the credit for doing it themselves, I guess. I don’t know. It’s certainly not on the legislative agenda for this spring. The clock is ticking. Frankly, because this bill, as a private member’s bill, is on the Order Paper for this session of the Assembly, my understanding procedurally is that the government couldn’t even bring it forward in the fall, so we’re basically out of time if we want to deal with this under this Legislature unless we’re going to go into next spring and go deep into next spring without an election. This is your chance.

So what do they do? They send it to the Alberta Law Reform Institute, which, by the way, has addressed this question three times already. What information do you think you’re going to get from the Alberta Law Reform Institute that you don’t already have?

Nova Scotia is abolishing this. The United Kingdom: interestingly, my wife is British, and you hear these stories, in London in particular, of squatters' rights. Someone comes in, lives in a building for a particular time, and claims it. It actually happened to friends of ours. They ended up walking into their brand new apartment in London – they just got posted there – and there's a notice on their door from the squatters who have taken over the building. They're a little shocked because they're Canadian, and they want to be polite and nice about things. But these people are in their house, so what do you do? They called the police. There was a process. It took a bit of time. It wasn't straightforward. There are still people operating and labouring under the misapprehension in the U.K. that there is such a thing, but it's been abolished since 2002. Even the root parliament, the root set of laws – the common-law principle, where this comes from many, many, many hundreds of years ago, has been abolished basically everywhere but here.

This is our chance to do it. It makes absolutely no sense. I honestly can't actually see – even from a political perspective, if I was just to flip it around and think about why the government might strategically want to kind of get one over on the opposition or not be seen to be outfoxed, I can't actually even understand what logical purpose it serves for the government to bring forward this amendment, to not simply stand up and say, "Hon. member, good bill; we like it," perhaps work with the member if there are certain amendments that you'd like to see, work with Parliamentary Counsel to make sure we get it right because, of course, this is complex legal territory. That would have been the right approach. I'm sure that if it's a question of timing, I think we could have moved it through the Assembly very quickly. We could have paused it as needed to make sure we get the technical aspects of this correct.

What I see from the member here is not some political trick to try to corner the government. I see an opportunity and an attempt to actually legitimately make change that is in accordance with the finding of a standing committee of the Legislative Assembly, of which there were all parties present. We spent an awfully long time on that particular topic and came up with some very good recommendations.

Mr. Speaker, it makes no sense to me, why this government seeks to not now read this bill a second time. It makes absolutely no sense why we're not simply abolishing the law of adverse possession. It causes real harm to the people of Alberta, and I really am absolutely baffled why this government is allowing that situation to persist.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a fine day in Alberta. It's quite interesting to be talking about the Alberta land statutes act when many Albertans are actually out on the land. An old rural, farmer adage: they talk about being out standing in their fields.

I'd like to share some thoughts, too, on this amendment coming forward from a backbench NDP MLA. It's kind of interesting that we would be talking about this because this has been referred to many times in the Legislature. If I could, Mr. Speaker, just to be perfectly clear: MLA Turner moves that the motion for second reading of Bill 204, Land Statutes (Abolition of Adverse Possession) Amendment Act, 2018, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and submitting the following:

Bill 204, Land Statutes (Abolition of Adverse Possession) Amendment Act, 2018, be not now read a second time because a review of adverse possession is currently underway by the Alberta Law Reform Institute . . .

That's an important organization.

Any recommendations and advice coming from that review must be taken into account prior to the government developing legislation and policy to give effect to the abolition of adverse possession.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if we don't make and change policies in this Chamber independently or at some point take our own initiative, I don't know when we would. It's time that there be some responsibility taken in this Chamber going forward. I can see that I'm enthralling the members in the backbench on the other side over there like another member from Calgary there, who takes great umbrage in the importance of the discussion here. It's important that we learn and understand, you know, about adverse possession. This is truly about the actual dirt when we talk about property rights.

It's important because in my career of travelling about the prairie provinces, I've seen false and incorrect survey installations go on across the prairies. Because of the way the survey is imparted upon the globe, there are various areas of the province that have what they call correction lines, where the survey is corrected. As a result of that and prior to the development of the modern GPS technology, there are many places where sometimes a survey is not necessarily accurate. Even in the situations that I have in our farming operation, when land surveyors come out to survey for oil field lease site development, sometimes they'll find where the stake that was driven by the surveyors of the 1880s isn't necessarily completely accurate based off the information that they have from their GPS survey.

Mr. Speaker, what I'm talking about is a legal process, in this case, where a person who is not a registered owner of land can acquire legal ownership of that parcel of land from the actual existing registered owner if the new person claiming ownership can prove continuous, open, and exclusive possession or occupation of the owner's land for a period of 10 years. If the new person trying to acquire legal ownership can satisfy a Court of Queen's Bench justice that the defined conditions have been met, then the court can issue a judgment that would allow a new certificate of title to be issued in the name of the new owner. The former owner would not be entitled to receive any compensation for the land that was lost to the new legal owner based off the court action.

Mr. Speaker, as I've said, from my flying career, you know, at elevation above the ground of anywhere from 10,000 to 5,000 feet, sometimes these lands are easily discernible, and it's easy to see and to understand why there may have been misunderstandings. But the implications of this act are absolutely basically very simple.

If I could just go on with some more background, in 2014 the Property Rights Advocate recommended that adverse possession be abolished. Mr. Speaker, the Property Rights Advocate is an entity coming forth from government, and they receive and field lots of questions, lots of comments and regularly meet with all sorts of landowners. That's their job, to talk about property rights, not necessarily always about the physical attributes but sometimes the nonphysical attributes of property rights. They made this recommendation because, in their view, abolishing adverse possession would strengthen the integrity of the land registry system and the reliability of the land title records based off our Torrens system of land ownership. This 2014 report suggested reintroducing and passing the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I was fortunate enough in 2003 and 2004 to travel to Brazil, and in that jurisdiction they don't use the Torrens land system. When you go and purchase land from an existing neighbour, they go to all the boundary neighbours of the land that you're talking about purchasing and get signed documents based off the opinions of the neighbouring landowner. From that, now they go out and put GPS co-ordinates based off where the boundaries are that are agreed upon by the neighbours of the land that's about to be transferred.

Mr. Speaker, this predecision, this preacknowledgement of what they perceive the boundaries to be based now on modern GPS locations is a predecessor to preventing any miscommunication of where the actual legal boundary lines are. In the Torrens system this land boundary system was perceived to be created in the 1880s.

In February 2016, Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship reviewed the '14 report from the outgoing Property Rights Advocate, Mr. Lee Cutforth. The legacy Wildrose Party and PC members urged the government to support them in recommending to the Assembly that adverse possession be abolished. Instead, the NDP used their majority to refer the matter to the Department of Justice. We are not aware of this review ever being initiated by the Department of Justice. So I ask again: when is this Chamber going to take some intestinal fortitude, I would call it, and move forward with legislation?

In February 2017 the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship again revisited recommendations from the Property Rights Advocate. At this time the committee was also urged by legacy Wildrose and Progressive Conservative members to recommend that the government should abolish adverse possession. Again, while considering the issue, the committee acknowledged, Mr. Speaker, that the law of adverse possession is archaic and has been abolished in other provincial jurisdictions except in Nova Scotia, which is currently in the process of abolishing this doctrine. The Committee therefore determined that adverse possession should be abolished in Alberta.

A committee of our own Legislature, Mr. Speaker.

Based on these considerations the Committee recommends that the government introduce legislation abolishing the common-law doctrine of adverse possession in Alberta and all statutory references supporting adverse possession in Alberta legislation.

The motion was unanimously passed in a committee of this Legislature, Mr. Speaker. The committee recommended that the government introduce legislation abolishing the common-law doctrine of adverse possession and all statutory references supporting it.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the NDP MLA for West Yellowhead published a column attacking UCP members of the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship for voting against a motion he had put forward relating to the Alberta Property Rights Advocate, but, as usual, sometimes the government isn't giving the full story. The motion introduced by the member and pushed through by the committee's NDP majority proposed to have an internal government committee assess options to bring fairness and equity to the property rights dispute settlement process. On the surface this may look reasonable, but a closer look reveals several fundamental problems. This side took issue with the idea that these discussions should be internal to government and take place behind closed doors with minimal or any input from the public.

Mr. Speaker, this government has an established track record of failing to adequately consult with Albertans before implementing policies that directly affect them. Albertans are growing tired of being told . . . [Mr. Strankman's speaking time expired]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Why, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to speak on Bill 204, Land Statutes (Abolition of Adverse Possession) Amendment Act, 2018. I was surprised to learn that in 2018 our laws still state that someone can take over ownership of someone else's land simply by having squatted on that land for 10 years. You never think that when you have a large piece of land passed down from generation to generation, a family legacy, someone would one day claim ownership to that land because a fence was in the wrong place. That just doesn't seem right.

I commend my colleague for bringing forward this bill that prevents individuals from losing land they have the rightful claim to. It is an archaic law. We need to protect the rights of property owners in Alberta. Most other provinces have made this change already as it is sensible, and it alleviates unnecessary concerns for property owners. For example, Mr. Speaker, did you know that the owner of a large farm under the current legislation would need to inspect the bounds of his property frequently to ensure that no one else lays a claim on that land? This could pose challenges when it comes to examining every inch of fence that was built to make certain that he does not risk forfeiting any of his rightful property.

It is evident how adverse possession, more commonly known as squatters' rights, is problematic in a rural setting, but it is equally troublesome in an urban city. It is all too frequent that we must rebuild our fences every few years, whether due to erosion, rotting wood, rust, or even a bad storm that knocks over a tree. Either way fences need to come down, but then the new problem arises. When working with your neighbour to put up a new fence, if you deviate from the census line by even a few inches, that property transfers ownership after 10 years and one day.

Mr. Speaker, I know that across the way we have a subject matter expert in this field. He sold real estate, and I hope the Member for Edmonton-McClung can speak to this because, certainly, these are very real issues that are happening here in Edmonton.

I might say that about six years ago I bought a house here in Edmonton, Mr. Speaker, to renovate and stuff. You know what? When I was getting it surveyed, they told me that the fence lines were completely off. They said that this is epidemic throughout the entire city of Edmonton. You see, sir, they didn't have the same technologies that we do today. You know, they used a little bit more in the way of old-school measuring back even 50 years ago, 40 years ago. As a result, there are a lot of properties even within Edmonton that do not have the proper property lines on them. And it was substantial, sir. The neighbours actually had a few feet either way from the property that I had purchased. Everyone was good and understanding with: should we decide to move the fence? But I don't think people are aware that they could basically take that land and just make it theirs. Fortunately, most people, I like to think, do have some sort of morals about them that are of the better qualities.

I think we do owe property owners who have invested their hard-earned money into this province the peace of mind that they will not lose their land without fair compensation. We do not simply play finders keepers with privately owned land. It seems completely counterintuitive that we can allow ownership to change hands, for property that was legally purchased, to someone that has squatted on the land for a basic, certain amount of time as this flies in the face of basic property rights and the law itself. To follow the law to the letter, have legal claim to land, and then through a loophole lose possession of that land sends a message that the legal system and the government will not protect your rights.

Mr. Speaker, seeing this bill brought forth by my colleague, I'm very optimistic. I hope that this time around we will see real change. Back in 2012 former member Ken Allred's private member's bill sought to abolish adverse possession. Unfortunately, although the bill passed second reading, the bill died on the Order Paper as Mr. Allred did not seek re-election.

In 2014 the Property Rights Advocate recommended the abolishment of adverse possession. This recommendation was made because, in their view, abolishing adverse possession would strengthen the integrity of the land registry system and the reliability of the land title record. The 2014 Alberta Property Rights Advocate annual report recommendation 2014.03 was submitted on June 22, 2015. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the report suggested reintroducing and passing Mr. Allred's proposed legislation.

In February of 2016 the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship reviewed the 2014 reports from Lee Cutforth, the outgoing Property Rights Advocate. The legacy Wildrose Party and PC members urged government support in recommending to the Assembly that adverse possession be abolished. Instead, as we're quite used to in this place, this government used their majority to refer the matter to the Department of Justice, and we are still not aware of a review even being initiated on this matter by the Department of Justice.

3:30

The minority report expressed:

Despite it being clearly within the committee's mandate to recommend that the Legislature act to reassure Alberta landowners they are not vulnerable to this archaic law, the majority chose to abdicate its deliberative function and pass the matter on to the Minister of Justice to review at her leisure with no expression of support for the change.

That is shameful, Mr. Speaker, that we still have not heard a word on this important matter being reviewed, supposedly, by the minister.

It is noted that at a subsequent meeting of the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship it was reaffirmed that under Standing Order 52.09(1) the government is required to respond to a report of the legislative policy committee, with certain exceptions, within 150 days from the date on which the committee reports to the Assembly. Yet it is still unclear if the standing order was met within the appropriate time by the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General.

In February 2017 the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship once again revisited the idea of abolition of adverse possession from the recommendations of the Property Rights Advocate. From both the Wildrose and PC sides members unanimously agreed and passed a motion that would recommend that the government introduce legislation abolishing the common-law doctrine of adverse possession. However, as the government has been aware of this issue since taking office, we continue encouraging action from this government much to our frustration. Even their own members tried to stir some action on this file over a year ago to seemingly no end. As such, it is now time that we do take action and abolish adverse possession.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this notice of amendment to basically scrap this proposal by the good Member for Calgary-Fish Creek is disappointing. You know, I expect more out of the good doctor from across the way. I have no doubt that a gun was held to his head and that he had to put this one out there, but it is disappointing. I guess the point is that we do have the opportunity to fix this law and to correct it.

Don't get me wrong, Mr. Speaker. I know there are people on the government side that totally plan on squatting somewhere, taking over some land one day. That's the NDP way, right?

Mr. Gotfried: Squatters' rights.

Mr. Yao: Ah, yes. Squatters' rights.

I guess that in the end we do have to be careful because we have legislation. We have rules that govern property and land, and it is a huge part of our economy. We cannot undermine an aspect of our economy with something like squatters' rights. It will either encourage or discourage confidence in our system, depending on the rules that get passed through this House.

I would implore all members on both sides of this House to truly approve this Bill 204.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll be brief. The statements have been made pretty cogently, in my view.

I've been dealing with this issue for at least five years, and it was going on before I arrived or paid attention to the issue. Bill 204, the Land Statutes (Abolition of Adverse Possession) Amendment Act, 2018, proposed the repeal of section 74 in the Land Titles Act, which allowed an individual to obtain title and ownership through adverse possession, often referred to as squatters' rights. That's been back and forth between here and committee. We've had input from many organizations across the province, including the municipalities, law institutes, legal counsel, the committee itself. Those who have been adversely affected already in the province have addressed the issue.

It may be a reasoned amendment, but it doesn't seem like a reasonable one to many of us. I mean, this is such a basic concept that most of the western world has shifted away from it. Our own review of it called for this change, so let's get on with it.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 8(7)(a)(i) provides up to five minutes for the sponsor of a private member's public bill to close debate. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. "Be not read right now." Well, it is time for us right now to all do the right thing for everyday, hard-working Albertans, many of whom are lucky enough to have those mortgage-paying jobs we all seem to talk about in this House.

Mr. Speaker, we heard from the Member for Calgary-Currie that he hadn't yet heard from any of his constituents on this issue and that it needed more study to avoid unintended consequences, but today this law has specific, intended consequences, namely the potential, each and every day, of legal seizure of your constituents' land or a portion thereof without compensation. I ask that member: do you truly think we need to send this back to the ALRI after years of expert legislative recommendations, including a unanimous recommendation from a committee chaired by one of your hon. members, on which you personally sit, which said that "the law of adverse possession is archaic" and then unanimously recommended that the government introduce legislation abolishing the common-law doctrine of adverse possession? Do you want to vote against that, members? Do you want to vote to send it somewhere where it doesn't need to be sent and not get it done today? When will this government do so after having similar recommendations in their hands since the spring of 2016? Now is the time.

The Member for Edmonton-McClung waxed prophetically about indefeasibility, yet the very application of adverse possession, in fact, makes a mockery of that concept. Property rights and government-administered title registration, indeed. I note that on Service Alberta's own website it clearly states that "the Government guarantees the accuracy of the title." So why would members opposite not respect their own government's guarantee to Albertans? Is your word and your guarantee of such little consequence? Now is the time, Mr. Speaker, to live up to that guarantee.

The now Minister of Transportation has said in previous debate in this House, "I find it ironic in a way that it's the New Democrat opposition that is standing up and has stood up from the beginning for the rights of property owners in this province." Mr. Speaker, voting down this bill will be a clear sign to Albertans that the members opposite do not in fact stand up for the property rights of all Albertans. Irrespective of their political affiliation we have a duty to Albertans. Shameful, empty rhetoric. Let's put this quite simply.

I have a classic example. This is not a partisan issue. I have a constituent who you've met in this House. He was a guest in this House just last week who lost a portion of his land, a classic and recent example of bad law in action in my own constituency, the recent case of Moore versus McIndoe. A suburban lot, a misplaced fence, 11-plus years of dutifully paying taxes, and then out of the blue a legal claim of adverse possession resulting in the loss of close to a thousand square feet of his lot, tens of thousands of dollars in lost value on land that may still hold a mortgage, Mr. Speaker. Tens of thousands spent to fight it on principle, and land seized legally by a possessing neighbour because of this bad law.

Mr. Speaker, possession is 10-tenths of the law in this province right now, and squatters' rights rule the day after 10 years and a day. Adverse possession is a time bomb of legal seizure of land for all Albertans. This is a quote from Mr. McIndoe, my resident, my constituent, who motivated me to bring this private member's bill. This is not a partisan issue. This is for everyone in this House. He brought that forward to me, and that is his quote: this is a time bomb for every Albertan who has lived in their house 10 years plus a day and may have a fence in the wrong location. Property rights injustice, indeed. Let this be a reminder that your constituent might be the next to be surprised by such a punitive, unfair, legal seizure of their land.

If you want that to be a possibility, vote yes to this amendment and you will be doing a disservice to your constituents. If you believe in doing the right, nonpartisan, constituent focusing and protecting the legal, registered, government-guaranteed property rights of all Albertans, vote no for this amendment and abolish adverse possession now here today. Prove that you truly stand up for what is right and the expectations of property rights and ownership protection shared by virtually every Albertan against this outdated, archaic law. Mr. Speaker, let's live up to our responsibility to Albertans, accept overwhelming expert legislative opinion, and get this done once and for all for hard-working Albertans. Let's not make this, my private member's bill, solely motivated by one of my constituents, Mr. Jim McIndoe, who has given his personal phone number to several members on the opposite side to share his story with them. Nobody has taken him up on that opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, the same Albertans that this government purports to be making life better for and who've worked and struggled so that they personally and their families may have a humble place that they believe they rightly own to call home: let's make sure that that home remains theirs and is not seized through the misapplication of a bad law. Vote no to this reasoned amendment, and vote yes to Bill 204.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment RA1 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:41 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

For the motion:

Totals:	For – 42	Against – 12

[Motion on amendment RA1 carried]

The Speaker: Hon. members, as you will no doubt know, with a reasoned amendment, debate on the bill will end, and the bill would disappear from the Order Paper.

4:00

Bill 205

Supporting Accessible Mental Health Services Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to request unanimous consent of the House to defer second reading of Bill 205 until the first available Monday of the 2018 fall sitting.

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 205 carried]

Bill 206

Societies (Preventing the Promotion of Hate) Amendment Act, 2018

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour to move second reading of Bill 206, the Societies (Preventing the Promotion of Hate) Amendment Act, 2018.

Mr. Speaker, there has been a disturbing rise in organized hate groups around the world, and unfortunately this is also true right here in Alberta. Why do we know this? They've become emboldened; they've become visible. I'm not going to speculate on the reasons for this brazenness. I have my suspicions, but I'll leave that to the experts. The fact is that hate groups appear to feel that it's a good time to rise, that it's a good time to crawl from the dark corners of the Internet and publicly share their hate with other Albertans. Albertans should be concerned and appalled.

It is the brazenness of these groups in Alberta that was the impetus for me bringing Bill 206 forward. Seeing groups such as the Worldwide Coalition Against Islam openly promote their message on the steps of Calgary city hall did something to me. It made me concerned. More than concerned, Mr. Speaker, I was appalled and disgusted that the past 50 years of progress on inclusion was disappearing or, at the very least, that it was being challenged. What I said to myself was that there must be something that can be done to, in some way, stifle the potential upswing of these hate groups trying to gain traction and influence a new generation to join these hate-filled organizations, which brought me to tabling Bill 206 in looking for some way to bring forward legislation to limit the ability of hate groups to grow.

I discovered that becoming a registered society in Alberta is a fairly simple process and, most alarmingly, that the Ku Klux Klan, the KKK, Mr. Speaker, was officially a society in Alberta until 2003. Much to my amazement, the postal code of the KKK that was attached to the application was actually in my riding of Calgary-Klein. Very concerning.

As such, the opportunity was presented. The ability of hate groups to be a legitimate society or organization in Alberta must be stopped, and this is what this bill will achieve. Mr. Speaker, Bill 206 amends the Societies Act by adding the term “lawful purpose” in section 1. That is the most important part of this legislation as it gives the registrar the ability to consider the purpose of an applicant to become a society from a perspective that considers that its intentions are for a lawful purpose. While this seems obvious, I have already noted that the KKK was a society until 2003, and without passing this legislation, there is nothing to stop this infamous hate group from reregistering as a society in Alberta. This legislation is not complicated. In fact, it’s common-sense legislation that blocks hate groups from becoming legitimized as a society in Alberta.

The second primary change in Bill 206 is that it puts the onus on the director of the society that the group applying for status has a lawful purpose and to ensure that this is not only valid at the time of application but that this declaration is carried out indefinitely.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a very important and positive consequence of the changes being proposed in Bill 206 is the fact that without being able to become a legitimate society, hate groups will not be able to accumulate wealth as a society. Societies are able to own and inherit property, and much like any other organization, it is money that enables a registered society to sustain itself and to grow. Isn’t it great that this legislation will stand in the way of both legitimizing and development of these hate groups? I think so.

British Columbia adopted this language in its Societies Act in 2015 and did so for the same reasons for which I bring this forward.

I spoke with the Alberta Muslim Public Affairs Council and the Calgary Jewish Federation, who endorsed this bill and applaud not only the symbolism of it but the practical step it takes to not permit hate groups to have official status. I also spoke with those who work to combat hate groups and have an intimate understanding of the inner workings of these groups, including retired RCMP officer Terry Wilson and Cam Stewart of the Alberta Human Rights Commission, who were also closely monitoring hate groups in Alberta. Mr. Wilson, who specialized in hate groups and is very familiar with the B.C. legislation, sees Bill 206 as a positive step forward in confronting hate groups. For Mr. Wilson, the biggest thing is the fact that this legislation limits the ability of these groups to accumulate wealth, and I couldn’t agree more.

I’ve had a lot of questions from media and other interested parties around how this legislation will be carried out; that is: are there currently organizations that promote hate who have society status in Alberta? Well, the answer to that is that we actually don’t know at this point, and there’s no intention to go through the 50,000 registered societies in Alberta to attempt to uncover groups whose sole purpose is hate. But Bill 206 will allow the registrar to use the criterion of lawful purpose when reviewing the yearly financials of current societies and to apply this to new applicants and those who may try to revive their society status such as the KKK.

Again, Mr. Speaker, without this legislation there is nothing to stop the KKK from renewing its status as a society in Alberta, and there’s nothing to stop the emboldened hate groups that we’ve seen come onto the scene recently. On the advice of Mr. Wilson and something that I understand was done in B.C. in concurrence with the legislation, Alberta’s registrars will be encouraged to have a relationship with the province’s hate-crime units to have an understanding of how hate groups are operating, under what names they’re operating, and to keep apprised of the trends in this area to allow them to carry out this legislation in the most effective way possible.

Mr. Speaker, I’m not going to dwell on the past and wonder why this simple piece of legislation wasn’t enacted years ago. In fact, it is my understanding that the Premier’s father and former leader of the Alberta New Democrats, Grant Notley, attempted to make similar changes to the Societies Act during his time in the Assembly here, and he also cited the fact that the KKK was granted society status. I’m not going to lament the past. I just want to move forward with this government’s goal to make life better for all Albertans and to continue to move forward towards a more inclusive, kinder society.

I do, however, Mr. Speaker, want to make a comment outside of this legislation, a comment that is nonetheless germane to the topic of hate and hate groups overall, and that is that we have individuals and groups right here in Alberta who may not be directly related to hate groups but do, however, foment hate in our society, like the opposition’s close friends and allies at the Rebel media. We need to stand up to these organizations and let them know that it’s not okay to stir the toxins in the well.

To recap, Mr. Speaker, there are really two main reasons for introducing this legislation. First, by not permitting hate groups to become societies, we as a government and as a greater society are not giving hate groups legitimacy, we will not acknowledge them as an entity under the law, and we are making a statement that their ideas are not welcome. Secondly, it puts the onus on directors of societies to ensure that a society does have a lawful purpose and that it remains that way. Without having society status, it will not allow hate groups to accumulate wealth, the wealth that allows them to thrive and grow.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I ask that everyone in this Assembly support this bill and, in doing so, help keep Alberta the inclusive society that we all want it to be now and into the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

4:10

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 206, and I’d like to thank my colleague from Calgary-Klein for bringing this important piece of legislation forward. I think it is an issue that is of paramount importance here in our province, and that is to stop and speak against the promotion of hatred and any form of bigotry through any means and through any avenue. Any form of hatred, bigotry is completely and totally unacceptable.

Mr. Speaker, it is an important issue that we can all address together. We have an opportunity in this House to either address it together from both sides of the House or to divide the House as well. I think it’s important that we do all that we can to ensure that on such an important piece of legislation we don’t play politics but that we put the interests of Alberta ahead of any personal interests, and the interest of ensuring that hatred and bigotry are not accepted in our province of Alberta: I think it’s something that we need to do together.

Throughout history we have seen all sorts of devastation and destruction at the hands of hatred. Literally tens of thousands of people have lost their lives, there has been untold suffering, and entire generations have been wiped out under what is an absolutely disgusting practice, and that is the form of hate. There is no place in our society for this kind of behaviour, yet it's unfortunate that we see groups aimed directly at promoting hate against one particular group or another cropping up all across North America.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I have the absolute pleasure right now, myself and some of my colleagues, of reading a book called Why Young Men. It's written by a Canadian author. His name is Jamil Jivani. He speaks very specifically about the politics of division, about identity politics, about hatred, and about the radicalization of young men not just around the world but also right here in Canada. I think that we would all be well served to read such a book to have an understanding of what's happening in our society and what's happening to allow predominantly young men to find comfort and safe haven in digital and online communities and other spaces for these sorts of ideological positions and radicalization of individuals that suffer from a lack of community, that suffer from a lack of respect. Oftentimes they turn to communities where they feel those things that are unfortunately based in hate, that are based in a lack of respect for society and in bigotry.

I think that there is so much work that can be done, and while certainly this particular piece of legislation doesn't solve all of those problems, I think it does send an important signal about what we value here in our province of Alberta. As the member opposite stated, potentially societies that are based on hate or those directors who have committed hate crimes or hate speech would not be able to profit under the new legislation, and I think that we as a province would be well served.

We in Alberta are not immune to this sort of hatred. I think that, as the author that I previously mentioned has rightly pointed out, all across the country there are the sort of groups that promote this hatred, and we need to do what we can. I believe that that's what the intention of the Member for Calgary-Klein was. It was founded in that desire to do something against this terrible, terrible situation. We have seen and, as mentioned in a recent audit from B'nai Brith Canada, we found that anti-Semitic crimes are on the increase in Alberta, and that is disturbing.

Mr. Speaker, you'll know that the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed has spent significant periods of time in his career fighting against the forces of hatred right here in Canada as well as abroad. The Member for Calgary-Klein is absolutely right that we each have a personal responsibility to do everything we can to stomp out the flames of racism, bigotry, and hatred. That is exactly much of the work that the Leader of the Official Opposition has done over his time in public life. You'll know, Mr. Speaker, that as the minister of citizenship, immigration, and multiculturalism he defunded many of the so-called human rights organizations that were using public grant money to promote the type of hatred that the Member for Calgary-Klein is trying to prevent with respect to the Societies Act here in the province of Alberta. The Leader of the Official Opposition worked tirelessly to reach out to ethnically diverse communities in our province and across the country to help to promote a vision of unity, of understanding, and of respect and dignity, that is so important when it comes to preventing the radicalization and the promotion of hate inside our province.

You know, Mr. Speaker, we agree that any group that is found to be promoting genocide or inciting hate of any nature should certainly not be permitted to register as a society here in the province of Alberta. I think about the world that I would like my children to grow up in, a society that's based on kindness, that's based on equal opportunity for each individual, a society where the likes of some of the radical folks that the member opposite has mentioned are not welcomed in any way, shape, or form, be it here in the present or in any form of digital or online community. As we saw just so recently on the streets of Toronto, in the absolute darkest places on the Internet individuals are celebrated for promoting such hate, and if those individuals are benefiting in any way, shape, or form from being a society here in the province of Alberta, we should not tolerate that any longer or in the future.

Mr. Speaker, the role of all of us here is to ensure that we have legislation that is absolutely the most sound. I have some small reservations about one particular section in the piece of legislation, and I hope that we can work collaboratively to ensure a piece of legislation that is the strongest, that is the absolute best piece of legislation for all of Albertans. I hope that we can have a number of questions answered around the practical application of section 3(1)(b), where the word used is "could." It certainly leaves something to interpretation, so I have some small reservations around that. That's not to say that we shouldn't support this piece of legislation. I look forward to voting in favour of Bill 206 at second reading as we proceed forward together.

My colleague from Bonnyville-Cold Lake will outline some of these concerns in greater detail, but I want to reiterate that I hope that we can work productively with the government side of the House and all members, and in particular the Member for Calgary-Klein, to address these concerns, to ensure that the legislation is as strong as possible and that as an Assembly as a whole, over the next year that we have left together, we can have frank and real conversations about how we address this issue of hatred on a wider scale. One thing that we always need to ask ourselves as legislators is: what problem are we trying to solve? It's an important question that we ask. While this piece of legislation solves one piece of this larger problem, it is certainly not the entire solution.

I think that as legislators and as Albertans we have a duty and a responsibility to speak up against hatred and bigotry and do all that we can to ensure that this sort of behaviour is not tolerated or respected or celebrated in Alberta in any way, shape, or form. I look forward to supporting the legislation. I look forward to working collaboratively to find solutions so that we can get the best piece of legislation past third reading as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, one thing that I always look forward to is a future in which, to be frank, we don't talk about a lot of social issues in this House, where hate groups are not part of the narrative, where we don't talk about the challenges we deal with, transphobia or homophobia. There are some days where I think we're very close, and then there are some days where we see things on social media or the Internet that seem like we're rolling back.

If I can extend a thank you to the Member for Calgary-Klein for bringing forth this bill. I know it's done sincerely. I know he's done a lot of work behind the scenes, that he doesn't do it to seek accolades but he does it because it's the right thing to do and it's something he's passionate about. So as I open up, I do want to say thank you. You know, I do look forward to the day where we really judge people on the merits of their character and the merits of the job that they do when they're seeking employment. While we're not there just yet, I would love to see the day in my lifetime where we do get to that.

When I door-knock in Calgary-Shaw, I hear from many of my constituents who express concerns about fringe groups who really try to leverage things like social media and the Internet to get out and spread populist, extremist views, in many cases of a racist nature. We see many groups, as the member alluded to, some like Rebel media, that really pick up on these racist undertones. It's very unfortunate, so anything that we can do to try to combat the legitimacy of this is very important for us to do.

You know what? At the end of the day, we will always stand up in this House, and we will always defend free speech. Our party will always defend it. Even though we don't like the narratives that we have, it is important to recognize that we are not stopping free speech. We are only using this to take away the ability to register as a society. To refresh members, societies may own property and may also sign contracts under the name of societies. They also may accumulate debt without the debt being put under an individual's name. This also provides them with a bit more formality. At the end of the day, anything that we can do to pull back that formality for groups of a racist nature is important.

You know, being a born-and-raised Albertan and growing up in northeast Calgary, I always felt blessed to be living in that area, in that part of Calgary, because it was very diverse. I learned a tremendous amount, and my family and my parents saw it as a benefit for us, a net benefit. At the end of the day, we could learn about our country, we could learn about our cultures, and we could learn about our world. We always leveraged that as a huge net benefit for our community.

Unfortunately, in the '90s there was an uptick of racist undertones that happened, and I would see that in my community. Sometimes it was from other – you know, we weren't leveraging the Internet, but we were leveraging editorials and other fringe ways for this, whether it was slipping in leaflets or whatever the case may be. We saw that coming from populist groups like the Heritage Front at the time. Groups like this would use their status to try to influence the political narrative and to really influence what was happening within policies that were being made.

I recall in 1992 the Heritage Front members even attempted to influence the Reform Party, and members were joining that party. You know, credit to the leadership base of the Reform Party at the time: they did expel these members when they caught wind of what they were trying to do. I do have some respect for that. When I door-knock in my community, one of the things that I've heard that is a huge appeal of the NDP to people is that we stand up for building strong, united communities. The last door that I knocked on on Saturday, that was what I heard from them: I've always been a strong supporter of the NDP because they build strong communities.

So it concerns me when I'm in my constituency that some extremist views might be influencing people who are represented in my community. Just eight days ago we saw Motion 30 come out, and unfortunately that was sponsored by members of the UCP Calgary-Shaw EDA. Essentially, going against the views of the ATA, it would out gay kids within schools. I want to give some credit where credit is due, to the Member for Calgary-Hays, because he spoke up against that motion, and he did say that this is about outing gay kids, and he really tried to push against it. Unfortunately, it did pass the convention.

I'm hopeful that this is not influenced by any extremist groups. To be honest, when I received the few comments against Bill 24, that this Motion 30 would look to repeal, they cited so-called pseudo-news articles. These ones were coming from Rebel media, and this is a group that has been known to spread hateful comments.

At the end of the day – I will move on my next point – I think it's very clear to the people of Calgary-Shaw who's going to stand up for LGBTQ rights in that area because we've already seen the motions that have come forward from the EDA in that constituency. But you know what? The one thing that the member brought forth, that I would like to put as an undertone, moving on to my next topic, is that it's hard for us to really know if fringe groups are really trying to do this, if they've gone into societies, because there are so many of them.

To put some safeguards in place that'll prevent them from spreading hate as a society will allow us to pull these groups back. We've really started seeing them coming out in the communities, whether it's on the steps of city hall or even in my constituency. I know that some of them have set up in Fish Creek park a few times to spread their racist views. These groups are really trying to manipulate facts to spread a false narrative and false truths that are existing. Whether they use this to try to influence immigration policies or whether they try to use this to influence overall general policies or even our curriculum, it can be very disconcerting because it spreads false fears, and it spreads falsehoods.

With that being said, I look forward to this bill moving through the House and hearing comments from all members. I want to thank the member for bringing forth this bill because I know that it comes from the right place, and it comes from very strong views. I know that he really wants to make his community the best one possible, just as all members of this House do.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 206, Societies (Preventing the Promotion of Hate) Amendment Act, 2018. It's surprising that we have to address this in such a formal way, but I'm pleased also to see this formalized in a bill, recognizing that we've come a long way in Alberta. It's so subtle at times and so dramatic at other times that our society and culture are shifting to recognize universal rights. Over the decades, centuries it's taken this kind of attention to address everything from women and their rights, to indigenous people, to gender issues, such as we've heard today, and all manner of religious intolerance around the world.

I think we're united here, very clearly, in wanting to address the issue, to prevent this kind of activity in society, and to ensure that we don't have to deal with problems in the streets, in the courts, in other respects when we could be dealing with them very proactively by identifying these kinds of activities that discriminate and promote hate and ultimately violence.

I guess one would have to look, indeed, at improving some of the checks and balances on our social media, that is digital media, but also on our public media, because in some ways it's creeping in in various places there. Whether or not these individuals or organizations are registering: that's a question I would have for the bill promoter, to what extent this adds to and supplements the other ways in which we can identify and intervene on some of these intolerant and hateful messages and images that are coming across, that go beyond the federal act and violate the hate speech laws that we currently have in place in Canada.

It should be very easy to move this forward. How these various acts and messages are determined to be unacceptable is a matter for those involved in the legislation federally. But it also places a burden now on our Service Alberta ministry to be more vigilant, to identify even in current societal registrations whether there's been due diligence, and to look backwards at some of the activities of some of the organizations that have been in place. Of the thousands of societies in Alberta, there may be indeed some examples that need to be confronted under this new bill.

I won't prolong the discussion, recognizing that we have many things to deal with, but I think this would unite us in support for a very vigorous, very public recognition that this kind of speech or activity within an association or society needs to be confronted as soon as it's identified and proactively snuffed out.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 206, the Societies (Preventing the Promotion of Hate) Amendment Act, 2018. Before I even get started here, I wanted to state my condemnation of any individual or group that spreads hate in our society. It is unacceptable to give any legitimacy to hate groups in our society. The United Conservative Party stands resolutely against the promotion of hate and bigotry.

I thank the member for his action to raise this issue through this bill, and I wholeheartedly agree with the sentiment and the goal to try to eliminate the horrendous occurrences of inciting hatred and the support for genocide that we, sadly, see from time to time. Under this legislation a society may only be formed for a lawful purpose, specifically targeting those who promote or advocate genocide and those who would speak publicly to incite hatred. Again, this is a well-intentioned proposal which acknowledges, correctly, that government should not be inadvertently legitimizing hate groups through the Societies Act.

I also want to be clear that this is not a partisan issue. We all stand united against hatred and bigotry, and we all support action to combat it when and where it occurs.

I also would like to take a moment to thank our Alberta law enforcement officers and prosecutors, who work diligently to ensure that the perpetrators of hate crimes are brought to justice and feel the full force of the law. We need to ensure that law enforcement professionals and legal professionals have every resource at their disposal to do their jobs efficiently and effectively. With the recent increase in crime, we've been seeing a strain on our justice system. We need to do all we can to ensure that those who are engaged in criminal activity like advocating for genocide and the incitement of hatred are investigated, arrested, charged, and prosecuted, period. As such, I certainly hope that the members across the aisle will support real, concrete action to deal with the increased strain on our justice system, that our caucus has been raising as an issue for quite some time now.

We'd like to make sure that no Albertans live in fear of encountering these types of crimes in our society. Alberta has long been a welcoming place for peoples of all races, religions, backgrounds, and no one should ever feel targeted for these reasons. I want to make it absolutely clear to any Albertan that has ever experienced any form of hatred targeted towards them: the United Conservative Party stands with you. We will be your voice against hatred and bigotry. We will work with you to combat hatred in our province. That is why I can say that I support the principle of this legislation without hesitation.

That said, I do have some questions surrounding the potential administration. Thus, I would like to take an opportunity to seek clarity from the proponent on parts of this bill and its potential application. Particularly in section 3(1)(b), I am hoping to gain some insight on the use of the word "could." We want to have clarity on what will be and will not be included there. The current wording seems to make this subjective and opens up a large grey area. Surely, the member would agree that when it comes to the serious matter of promoting genocide and inciting hatred, we want the law to be absolutely clear and unequivocally something that we can move forward with. This may be an area where we can offer up a friendly amendment to strengthen the legislation in a crosspartisan fashion. Perhaps some of our colleagues should share their thoughts. I look forward to the discussion on this matter.

I would also like to inquire with the member if he has had the opportunity to discuss with any legal experts the implication of extensive Canadian jurisprudence on the matter of hate speech laws and any impact it might have on potential legislation like this. I want to make sure that when we pass legislation, we stay within the bounds set out on the topic of law in question to ensure that it is capable of standing up to a potential legal challenge, again, something that has been quite common with legislation dealing with the topic of hate speech in the past. We owe it to the victims of hate and bigotry to make sure that we get the protections like this right the first time. As I said, I would appreciate any insights on this from the member proposing this bill.

I think that we can take the good intention of the member, the noble goal to combat and eliminate hatred and bigotry in our province, and iron out any minor wrinkles, that together we can pass a law that will protect Albertans and show that we will work together to take action on this serious issue, specifically when it comes to Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that we can do exactly that. I hope that we can work together to combat hate and bigotry. I hope that through discussion and debate we can get clarity and make improvements on this bill before us, and I look forward to hearing what my colleagues have to say on this topic.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for this bill. It's about time, and I'm thrilled that this is going to be happening.

For many of you, I know that you've been part of boards for nonprofits that are registered societies. I know that I've worked for a number of registered societies over the years, and it's a lot of work, actually, to submit the objectives of your societies, your annual returns, your audits, all of the things, and I think that most of us take it very, very seriously as we register, outlining the importance of the work that we do and the benefit that it has to our community. That's really key about nonprofits, the benefit. The fact that this member has brought forward something that will address this very issue is fantastic. It's about time. I know that great nonprofits all around Alberta are standing up and applauding this, so thank you for that.

I've heard the members from across the way a few times now highlight the fact that they don't think that this is a partisan issue. I agree with them. I don't think that this is a partisan issue at all. I think it's a human issue, absolutely, but how you govern yourself is certainly a partisan issue. I know that I can speak for the people on this side that we don't make a habit of going on hate-filled, lie-filled sites like Rebel to be interviewed or to be supported and then turn around and come into this place and say: yay; we're going to do something to clamp down on these hate groups.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Let me remind you a little bit about the hate that that particular organization spews, and let's be honest with ourselves. I think we're in denial a little bit in Alberta and Canada that this isn't a big problem here. It's not as big of a problem as it is south of the border, but it's getting worse. It's getting worse all the time, and it's getting worse for a reason. When you have hate-spewing sites like Rebel doing things, hiring people that will use their platform to talk about things that they hate about Jews or to go stand and record the tragic events at Charlottesville — and that's just touching the surface. I mean, there are so many hateful things that go on there that I can't even begin to touch on them all. They legitimize hate. They use it. People call it clickbait. That's what it is. It's clickbait. If you associate with groups like that, you're encouraging them, and you're saying that that's okay. Sure, maybe you didn't spew hateful facts or lies while you were being interviewed that day or, well, maybe you didn't retweet something particularly hateful, but you're supporting it. So it becomes a partisan issue when you as a partisan person choose to support that kind of work.

If you didn't read this article, there was a really great article written. It was Vice that published the article in August 2017, which I will table tomorrow. It talks about their very long – I think it was eight months long – study on hate groups and the rich history of hate in Alberta but also some of the growing hate. Some of the things they talked about: they reminded us about some recent rallies in Edmonton. I think that in 2012 there was a particularly vile rally here in Edmonton in Churchill Square. Again, people are starting to focus on immigration, of course, spreading lies and misinformation about immigration and anti-Islamophobia.

I heard a member from over there talk about how great their leader was at bringing us together. Well, I can think of a lot of examples where, you know, that really wasn't the case. I remember comments made by him in the House of Commons where he wanted an English-to-English translation from somebody whose first language clearly wasn't English. That wasn't just a slip-up. He also worked pretty hard, after the courts ruled otherwise, to prevent Muslim women from wearing head coverings at citizenship ceremonies. Why? Ask yourselves: why? That doesn't seem like a uniting activity to me.

Anyway, more recently I remember that the federal government was trying to pass some prevention of anti-Islamic activity after the mass shooting in Quebec City, and although we were not there – we were not debating that federal movement or those decisions – the stuff that was coming out of Alberta was disgusting. The stuff that was coming out of Rebel media, who the opposition supports by participating in their activities, was awful, and it was vile. That's the kind of stuff that incites hatred.

The other kind of stuff that incites hatred is promoting these fallacies and these lies about immigration, about religions that are not yours, about rights. You know, we heard earlier today somebody talking about the need to stand up for property rights, which I agree with – we're all here to stand up for everybody's rights – yet they turned around and walked out when faced with an opportunity to protect women's rights. That's a form of hatred. When you have innocent women trying to get some health care and exercise control over their own bodies and they're faced with this wall of hate, lies, and misleading photographs, that's not good. That is not good at all. I do think that we're in denial about the growing hatred, and all of us as leaders in our communities and as elected officials absolutely have the responsibility to do everything we can to counter that, to not incite hatred.

I wanted to go back, too, a little bit. Clearly, folks across are not looking up too much because we're talking about Rebel. I would like to remind the House just how vile some of the things that they've said and published are. One of the people that they hired went to Israel and published information about why they hate Jews. They actually blamed Jews for the Holodomor. I don't even understand that. They literally gave and shared their platform with the KKK Grand Wizard David Duke – I can't believe that I'd ever say his name in this place, but they did – and white nationalist Richard Spencer. Why on earth would you support an organization that promotes that kind of hate and then come to this place and say that you support legislation that aims to check the activities of groups trying to seek society status in this province when you are guilty of associating with these groups that promote violence and hatred and misinformation?

I'll tell you that I think it was last year when, very much in the news, people were talking about Omar Khadr and the federal government. Actually, the Supreme Court of Canada had ruled that the government had obtained evidence during oppressive circumstances, which led to some other things, and the government of Canada negotiated a settlement. I wasn't saying that I agreed, that I was happy. I was neutral on that point. What I was saying is that it's important to respect the Supreme Court of Canada. That was it. Instantly I was flooded by the Rebel crew with these horrible, nasty messages. They have meme makers that are so fast, it made my head spin. I had a picture of myself with "traitor" over it or a bullet hole in my head. This is the kind of stuff that incites hatred. I won't even get into all of the history of this case because it's not my case. I'm not a lawyer. But I do trust the Supreme Court of Canada.

I just want to say again that I am incredibly thankful to the member for bringing forward this bill. It's important. A few people have asked: "Why wasn't this done earlier? This should have been done a long time ago." We say that a lot these days, but it should have been done a long time ago.

You can propose amendments to try to make it better, like what normally happens. You can say that it's not partisan, but it is. You can do everything you can in your personal power in your communities and in this place to say: that's not okay. When you go to your own convention and you have people attacking indigenous people for taxes, you can stand up and say: that's hate. When you talk about people that are different from you, that practise different religions, and you hear them say things like that, you can say: that's wrong. You can point out that the garbage that is spewed by the Rebel is wrong, and you can choose to distance yourself. Or you can just vote for this and say, you know: you're good.

I would encourage everybody in this House to support this bill.

Again, I thank you very much for your work.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It really is an honour to stand up this afternoon and speak to Bill 206, the Societies (Preventing the Promotion of Hate) Amendment Act, 2018. The intent of the bill, to prevent the establishment of hate organizations, is laudable. I want to acknowledge the Member for Calgary-Klein, my neighbour in north-central Calgary, for bringing forward this bill. As private members we don't have a lot of opportunity to bring forward any policy directly to the House, and it's really commendable that he's using this opportunity to address the very upsetting and distasteful subject of racism. We certainly don't need to embolden hate groups by allowing them to create societies for racism or to give them assistance in organizing. By not allowing them to incorporate, the bill reduces access to banking services, public funding sources, and the legitimacy that some of them seek to spread their hate in Alberta.

[The Speaker in the chair]

One of my constituency staff members, Saima Jamal, has worked for decades to overcome racism and hate in Calgary and in the province. As an antiracism activist she knows how pernicious racism is in Calgary, with followers of groups like the Alberta Three Percenters, Soldiers of Odin, and Polish priest Jacek Miedlar claiming their racism loudly and proudly in Calgary. She's told me about the impact this hatred has on the communities she works with. Their actions make it explicitly clear that not everyone thinks racism is awful and that hateful individuals have gained more of a foothold in Alberta.

In the '90s I worked for Shell Nigeria in Calgary, and our workplace was very diverse. Most of my colleagues came from Nigeria while some were from England and the Caribbean. I was enlightened about racism by my colleagues. I grew up in a small town in northern Alberta, and at that time most of the faces I saw in school and on the streets in my town looked a lot like me. I was privileged to live so long and not see much racism. But they told me that racism in the U.S. was much easier to identify because it was overt. They knew who the racists were.

Racism has been deeply embedded in parts of Alberta culture for a long time, but it was mostly hidden. Recently, however, people who hold racist views have been emboldened by the normalization of intolerance in the political discourse, mostly in the U.S., and on social media. The experience and negative impacts on the tens of thousands of Albertans who experience racism and hate in public, at work, online, and in the receipt of services speaks to the urgent need to address casual and systemic racism in Alberta. We must be active. We cannot be complacent on racism. As elected members of this Assembly it is incumbent on all of us to moderate our social media pages and remove any intolerant or racist comments. Homophobia, misogyny, sexism, and racism cannot remain unchallenged because to do so is to implicitly approve of them. The Alberta Party stands resolute in our commitment to challenge and remove any intolerant or racist comments on social media.

The bill is a good move in challenging hatred, but I would like to see it go further. There are some limitations with the bill, including a gap in the practical ability of the registrar to enforce its provisions. Existing societies currently receive very little oversight from the registrar about their activities as long as their paperwork is filed regularly. I'd be curious to know if or how the registrar can ensure that Alberta's over 58,000 existing incorporated societies do not have hateful objects or practices or that their actions under apparently benevolent objects are carried out in inclusive, nonracist, and nonhateful ways.

Despite decades of work the memberships and boards and clients of Alberta's 58,000-plus nonprofits do not consistently represent Alberta's diversity. This bill as it stands doesn't address existing embedded racism experienced by Albertans from nonprofit societies. How will the registrar address groups that try to incorporate by simply hiding their racist intentions under benign-appearing objectives? How many Albertans who are members of societies actually read society bylaws or objects? I believe the bill could be made better and more effective than in its current form by being informed by lived experiences.

I'm happy to support passing second reading of Bill 206. I look forward to discussing and improving this bill in debate, and I certainly urge all of my colleagues to support this bill as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to have the opportunity to stand today to speak to this bill, brought forward by my colleague from Calgary-Klein, an act to amend the Societies Act. This is a very important and timely bill. As many members have observed today, we have seen a sharp rise in language of hatred and intolerance here in Canada and, unfortunately, much of it here in Alberta, so it's incredibly important, I think, that we move forward on taking clear steps to show that we as public leaders do not tolerate, do not accept, and indeed will not provoke or stoke or incite this kind of language.

Local journalist Mack Lamoureux recently did an investigation through Vice magazine. He spent eight months investigating the inner workings of a group that is very openly anti-Islamic, largely based here in the province of Alberta and known as the Three Percenters. As one expert has described them: a wholesale lift of an American militia. A very frightening group. These are individuals who have heavy weapons. They buy shock canes. They openly posture online about being anti-Islamic; about conducting monitoring and surveillance of mosques, live-fire, paramilitary-style training; claiming that they're going to purchase land; making plans for creating smoke and flash bombs. In the words of their founder: what we like to consider ourselves is Canada's last line of defence from all enemies, both foreign and domestic; if the time would come and we would need to use force and take action, you know, we will do that.

This is a group, Mr. Speaker, that took their name from an American paramilitary group which organized after Barack Obama was elected President. I'm sure their only motivation there was the fact that he was a Democrat. I'm sure that was the only objectionable thing about that particular President.

Numerous people who are linked to the Three Percenters in the U.S. have been charged with crimes, including one gentleman who shot five people at a Black Lives Matter protest. Another member was arrested in a foiled bomb plot to bomb federal buildings in Atlanta. For almost a year now the Three Percenters chapter in Alberta, which has the most active members of the Three Percenters in Canada, has been slowly forming themselves into a militia-like organization according to the investigation by Mr. Lamoureux, with the chapter in Wild Rose Country boasting, at the time of his investigation, about 150 to 200 active members and over 1,600 members that subscribed online.

As I noted, they claim to be heavily armed. They like to post photos of their numerous weapons and guns that they own. They claim to meet on a weekly basis to train, and they clearly state: we are anti-Islam; we dislike Islam and the Muslims. This is a group that exists currently here in Alberta. They are big fans, Mr. Speaker, of spreading debunked news stories, far right wing commentary from sites like Rebel media, Infowars in the U.S. As I mentioned, they've openly admitted to surveilling mosques in Calgary, conducting live-fire paramilitary episodes.

This group, as Mr. Lamoureux uncovered, recently had plans to launch a series of recovery homes here in Edmonton called the freedom house Canada recovery homes. Now, a recovery home is a privately owned group home for residents that are recovering from drug addiction. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, you know that our government is strongly in support of offering supports to individuals who are recovering from substance use disorders. But this group was looking to open these homes as a means of trying to whitewash their reputation. There is a history of this with such groups. They went so far as to begin to consult with existing recovery homes. They held auctions amongst themselves, selling guns, knives, bikes, whatever they had, to raise money for this purpose, for the purpose of transferring 43 rental properties over to their group to operate. I quote from Mr. Lamoureux's article, with one of them stating: "Guys, this is huge, and will definitely put us into the media and public spotlight on a huge, huge positive note."

Mr. Speaker, these groups are real, they're alive, and they are active. The Soldiers of Odin, another group which was seen to begin here in Alberta a couple of years ago, in 2016 were doing street cleanups and raising money for food banks while also spreading anti-Muslim rhetoric and marching in the streets. This is a common tactic of these kinds of groups. It is not necessarily unheard of that one of these groups might, then, try to register as a society in our province and try to access government dollars, grants, other forms of charity to support their cover work, to support work done in the community to hide the fact that what they are about is promoting hatred and intolerance and indeed endangering the lives of Canadians.

I think that, again, as I said, it's incredibly timely and incredibly appropriate that my colleague from Calgary-Klein has brought forward this bill to ensure that we can close this loophole, that we can protect Albertans from these groups trying to exploit that opportunity.

Now, I appreciate what the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills mentioned today about not wanting this to be a partisan bill, and indeed I can understand the spirit of that, Mr. Speaker. I think my colleague the Member for St. Albert said a lot of what I would have to say in that regard. I will recall that in February of last year I stood in this House and I loudly called out Rebel media because, indeed, in my work with many people from the Muslim community here in the city of Edmonton, they told me how the types of language that they saw from that group made them feel deeply uncomfortable and unsafe and targeted as Canadians.

As I have stated, I am deeply uncomfortable when I see our political leaders in any way appearing to support or incite or provoke this kind of language and this kind of behaviour for their own political gain. Indeed, in the last few years, Mr. Speaker, we have seen some shameful examples of that. I am glad that finally, after the events of Charlottesville, members of our political leaders distanced themselves from that site.

I look forward to the opportunity to speak to this more.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the time for consideration of this item of business is concluded.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Electricity and Natural Gas Bills

504. Mr. Cyr moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce legislation that would prohibit distribution fees and levies to be charged on residential customers' electricity and natural gas bills unless there is an actual, measurable use of electricity or natural gas and which also caps administration fees on such bills at $10.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the privilege to stand before the Alberta Legislature to move Motion 504. This simply means that if you use natural gas or electricity, you pay for it. Period. If you don't use energy, you should not have to pay a fee other than the $10-a-month administration fee. This motion is not a matter of some abstract or theoretical problem. It is one where there is a real problem for Albertans across this province, some of them my constituents and, I imagine, many constituents of other members as well.

I have two specific real-life examples I would like to share with you. The first one is a realtor named Louise, who reached out to my office for a meeting. During that meeting she identified that she has a lakeshore cabin and that she uses that cabin for the summer months. In the winter months she has significant fees on her bills because she has infrastructure on her land. An important clarification is that this is infrastructure that she paid for, and even though she's not using the lines, she still has to pay significant fees. If she doesn't pay the fees, then the utility company will remove the infrastructure at no cost. However, should she wish to have the utility again, she would have to pay tens of thousands of dollars to reinstall it and be put on a waiting list, and it could take several months to install the lines. Clearly, this isn't a route that any landowner would take, so you're forced to pay the monthly fee for no service.

The second example is Chad, who received property through the passing of his father. During the grieving process Chad requested that the utilities be shut off and disconnected as he lived in Calgary and his father resided in Cold Lake. Chad thought that his obligations with the utilities ended, yet two years later, just when he lost his job, he got contacted by the utility company demanding back payments of several thousand dollars. He explained that he disconnected the utility, and they responded that you pay even though your services are disconnected. He was shocked and dismayed that as a utility they were clear that they were going to remove his utilities if he did not clear up the bill. However, if they removed the utilities and he wanted to reinstall them, it would be between $30,000 to $50,000. He had no money but had no choice but to come up with the money as property within the rural setting needs utilities in order for it to be sold, because nobody wants to buy a property without utilities on it.

These two examples show that the current system has put people into a situation where the utility has you over a barrel whether you pay for the service or not. This motion would eliminate all costs other than the $10 administration fee when you don't use their services. However, when you do use their services, you would pay the rate that is charged to the general public.

This may seem like only a small number of individuals that may be impacted, but there are wider implications of this motion. If we look at renewables, renewable energy, and the direction that this current government is intent on moving Alberta towards, there is a problem. For many, it comes to the fact that the numbers just don't add up when you move your residence to renewables. It's just not viable. The problem is that renewables just aren't a stable source of energy, so many if not all will still need to be connected to the grid. When the sun doesn't shine and the wind doesn't blow, they have to have access to energy. This means that fees are added to the cost even though you aren't using the energy. By passing this motion, we would be reducing one of the largest burdens on renewable energy. When the sun is shining and the wind is blowing, the household would only be paying $10 per month, and this, in the end, could save a family thousands of dollars.

The NDP continue to ask what the United Conservatives are contributing as ideas for moving Alberta forward with renewables. Well, this is an idea. This is an idea to move Alberta forward when it comes to installing renewables in residential households. Instead of more light bulbs, thermostats, and subsidies and grants, this will actually have a long impact that increases renewables installed in homes across the province. What is important to note is that there is no cost to government and minimal impact on our energy companies.

This motion also just makes sense. Why would we set up a system that has user fees with no services provided? It is like purchasing a cellphone for $2,000 with a three-year contract with one provider and finishing the contract and the provider telling the customer that there is no pay-to-talk feature. It just simply doesn't exist. So if they don't continue paying for the phone that they've already paid for, they will take it back, and should that happen and should you need to be connected back to the telecommunication grid, you need to buy another $2,000 phone. They're completely happy to sell you another one. Therefore, continuing to pay for a phone that you already own just doesn't make sense, just like this motion that I'm trying to move forward.

I acknowledge that should you use a network, you need to pay the fees. This motion isn't about eliminating or challenging the current fee structure. That is another debate that needs to happen but isn't one that is happening with this motion. This is completely about: if you don't use the energy, there should only be a $10 administration fee so that if you do need that energy, it will be there for you to use. This is good conservatism at work.

Mr. Speaker, good Albertans like Louise and Chad shouldn't be punished for the circumstances they're in. Like many Albertans in similar circumstances, all they want is fairness. I know that on this side of the House we talk a lot about fairness for ratepayers and taxpayers, but I also know that on the government side they hear a lot from their constituents on these issues as well. I know that the government members have also talked on occasion about fair practices for consumers. I would hope that they turn that talk into action here and vote to protect the interests of their constituents as I am proposing to do for mine and for the people like Louise and Chad all across our great province.

I would also hope that the government members, given all of their talk about enabling consumers to make choices to use green energy, will also support the motion on the basis that they're helping Albertans who want to pursue microgeneration with residential-scale wind and solar. If actions like this will assist the adoption of these technologies without burdening the taxpayer through costly subsidies and guarantees, why wouldn't we want to pursue them?

Mr. Speaker, I hope that we have adequately explained to the members of this House that this is indeed a real and important issue for everyday Albertans. I hope that members from all parties will join with me in voting for this motion and taking a step in the right direction and urging the government of Alberta to solve this problem.

I have members that will be speaking on this motion and go further in explaining how it doesn't just help a small subset, but it also helps additional groups within Alberta, and I will allow them to continue with those speeches.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been an honour to speak on this motion.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the member for bringing forward this motion. I rise to explain why I will be voting against Motion 504. Motion 504 would benefit a small number of people at the expense of other Alberta electricity consumers. Let me start by saying that I understand the basic motivation for the motion. We know that Albertans pay close attention to their utility bills, and we know that they are concerned about delivery costs. We understand the impact that rising or unpredictable utility rates can have on families and their budgets.

In fact, that is precisely why we are addressing energy costs on electricity bills in two key ways. First, we capped rates for electricity at 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour. We knew that the electricity system we inherited from the Conservatives was prone to bad price spikes. We heard from experts that this was only going to get worse over time because investors were no longer comfortable with the energy-only market like the Conservatives put in place. To protect consumers immediately, we capped rates so that Albertans didn't ever again have to fret about the threat of rates tripling in mere months.

But that was only an interim measure to give consumers immediate protection against the Conservatives' broken market. It bridges the time we need to take to bring in a system that stabilizes rates in the long run. We are doing that by introducing a capacity market, which is implemented through Bill 13, legislation that is currently before members of this Chamber. Unfortunately, the members opposite choose to forget the rampant price spikes that consumers have endured for years under the Conservatives' energy market system, but we remember them all too well. That's why we introduced Bill 13, to bring stability and steady affordability to electricity rates. It's a responsible measure to protect utility consumers.

Motion 504, by contrast, is not a responsible measure. Let me explain. Distribution systems are built to serve peak load so that everyone has access to a reliable electricity supply regardless of how much they use and when they need it. You can compare electricity infrastructure to a road system or a highway. It is built for everyone to use whenever they need to go somewhere, not just for frequent travellers. As distributors' infrastructure and operating costs are for the most part fixed and do not change regardless of energy consumption, the wires to your neighbourhood, in your neighbourhood, and right up to your house and your neighbour's house essentially cost the same no matter how much you or your neighbour use.

Now, say that your neighbour uses all the power and gas they need in December, when we often have peak usage, which is what the system is sized for. The system is sized for them to be able to use the energy on demand when they need it. Then they leave on holiday in January and February, so they don't use any power and natural gas, but when they come home in March, they still need the wires and pipes so that they can turn the lights on and the furnace on. They didn't need the wires or the pipes any less, and they didn't decrease the cost of those wires or pipes at all, but with this motion they would get two months free from paying for them even though they still need the wires and the pipes when they get home.

Now, someone has to pay for the building and maintenance of that infrastructure, and that someone is you, you and the rest of your neighbours and the people in your region. Why should your bill have to go up to cover their costs just because they went out of town for the winter? That's totally unfair, Mr. Speaker, and I have to believe that it is not what the member intended with this motion, but it's what the motion will clearly do.

Now, as the government that protects Albertans, we're not satisfied to just dismiss the member's motion. We know that we need to stay vigilant and take action on behalf of consumers. That's why we are introducing new penalties to ensure that utility service providers like distribution companies and retailers cannot bilk their customers with unwarranted and erroneous charges. That is an important part of Bill 13 as a strong, responsible measure to protect consumers. I encourage the member to support this legislation, which is still before the House. We are also taking a close look at all the bill components, and the Minister of Energy has asked her department to assess opportunities to develop policy to better manage electricity distribution costs in Alberta.

We inherited the system from the previous government, and we think that there are ways we can do better. This work includes finding ways to bring better and more effective regulation of electric distribution costs, and this work is already under way. It's the kind of real work that we need to undertake to reduce overall costs for consumers so that all consumers benefit from lower system costs. We can't rely on gimmicks that let a small number of particular customers pay less for a system that they equally need and then force those costs onto their neighbours, like we see with this motion.

Mr. Speaker, this motion is so flawed and so ill considered that I encourage all members to vote against it. It would hurt the pocketbooks of the vast majority of Albertans, and I encourage everyone to vote against it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, if you seek it, I'm sure you will find unanimous consent to move to one-minute bells.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for . . . just a second.

Mr. Hanson: Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

The Speaker: Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Mr. Speaker, I saw you scan the room to see if anybody else was standing, you know, so I have to be a little offended by that.

Anyway, what I'd like to do is just stand and speak to Motion 504. I don't know whether this is what the member is referring to in this motion, but I'll just give you an example that I had in my constituency in the town of Two Hills. There was an old mechanic shop that had been sitting vacant for years, and the owner phoned me because he'd received a bill for $1,500. Now, the previous summer and fall he had rented that space out and, prior to that, had not received any bills at all from the power company.

He was approached in the summer or fall by an individual that wanted to rent the property, so he said: "Okay. You can rent the property, but you have to take care of getting the power reinstated, getting the meter put in." The individual did that. He kept the lease up for about six months, and then he got a hold of the owner and said, "You know, I'm no longer requiring the rental of the place," so the deal was struck that he could vacate the premises on the understanding that he would disconnect the power and deal with the power company.

The owner was a little surprised when six months later he got a bill for $1,500, so he contacted the leaseholder and was told: "Yes. You know, I cancelled everything." But, apparently, there's some loophole. The infrastructure company had leased the power supply agreement to another company, and they, without giving any notice to the owner, were continuing to bill this premise. The breakers were shut off. The meter was not running. There was no power consumption at all. So he was a little surprised when he got this bill for $1,500.

He came to my office, and we had a chat. I phoned the power provider and asked them to explain it. They said, "Well, this is our policy," or whatever. After a couple of phone calls they finally agreed to reduce the bill by a thousand dollars, so they brought it down to $500. I called the building owner, and I said, "They've decided to meet you kind of halfway," and he said: "No. I never signed a piece of paper with that company. I have no agreement with that company. There's no reason that I should owe them $1,500 when no power was consumed at all. I had no knowledge that there was even an outstanding bill on the property or a caveat on the property."

I called the company back, and I said: "You know, he's not willing to accept that thousand dollar reduction. He would like the bill wiped out completely." At that time I asked them: "What piece of legislation allows you to do this anyway? If you could tell me that piece of legislation, maybe as a government we can look into it and see if it's fair to consumers or not." Well, about 15 minutes later

I got a call back from the company saying: "You know, tell that landowner that he doesn't have to worry about it. We're just going to waive this one."

To me, that tells me that there's something there that we need to look at. Maybe this isn't the answer, but I think it opens it up, that we do need to have a look at which legislation allows this to happen to Albertans and consumers and commercial property owners and residences. You know, as investors in buildings or residential properties we shouldn't be responsible for deals that are made without our knowledge and without our consent between a leaseholder or a renter and any power company or gas company.

If that's the intent of Motion 504 and if it opens up the investigation so that we can at least look at the legislation, find out where the problems are, and maybe tweak them to fix them a little bit, I'd be open to that. I think that the House should be at least open to the idea of looking into the legislation and protecting consumers, whether they be residential owners or commercial building owners.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other members that wish to speak? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Motion 504 on fees and levies on residential electricity and natural gas. This motion has been brought forward by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Speaker, I guess I would first draw attention to the fact that I would like this Legislature to consider that this is not actually a bill but a motion. It's just a motion. If a motion is passed by this Legislature, it's just simply saying that this is a direction we think the government should consider going in, that this would be a good idea. This is not going to change the law, but it is going to give direction to the government, give an idea to the government about where we think the government should go. So let's be clear. This doesn't create legislation. It's a motion. It's not a bill. It's just there to consider the issue, in this case an issue surrounding electricity and natural gas and the fees that surround that.

So what are we asking the government to consider? Well, we're asking that a motion be considered that would prohibit the charging of distribution fees and levies on electricity or on natural gas when a residential property is not actually accessing either the natural gas or the electricity, that if a property is owned by an Albertan but that property is not being lived in or the owner of the property is not accessing the electricity or the natural gas, they should not be forced to pay the distribution fees and the levies charged. It just makes sense that a citizen should not have to pay the levies and the fees for a service that they are not actually receiving. This has the ring of fairness to it, I think.

Currently if a consumer is placed in a situation in which they are responsible for a property that is not in use, for which they are not using electricity, not using natural gas, they may still be charged hundreds of dollars in fees and levies. This motion would seek to allow those who are in that situation to effectively disconnect their utilities and be exempt from paying distribution fees and that a cap of $10 would be placed on there for an administration fee simply because they are a part of the grid.

You know, Mr. Speaker, in Alberta a significant portion of our utility bills are as a result of the fees and the levies that are applied to them. I don't know about any of my other fellow MLAs, but I've had many seniors come through my office very concerned about those extra levies and those extra fees, even to the point where they're wondering if they can stay in their house. We have people that are in very constrained circumstances, and they often face the situation where there is more month than there is income, and they want this Legislature to address those fees and those levies.

While Motion 504 may not address that whole wide-ranging issue, it does in a fairly narrow way address at least a portion of that. Currently consumers do not have the ability to avoid paying those fees even if a property sits unused for a significant period of time, even if they are not consuming any measurable amount of electricity or natural gas. In fact, it's my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that the only way to really avoid paying fees and levies is to have a property physically disconnected, and this could result in thousands of dollars of extra costs should, at some point in time in the future, the property owner desire to be reconnected to the grid.

Mr. Speaker, some Albertans desire to hook their residences up to renewable energy sources for microgeneration, and while they would like to provide their energy needs from a renewable source like solar or wind, et cetera, they would also like to remain hooked up to the grid for those times when their intermittent renewable energy sources don't actually meet their electricity needs. The problem is that when the residences' electricity needs are met by the renewable energy and they are not using energy from the grid, they are still expected to pay the fees and levies for the electricity.

Motion 504 is just simply a common-sense measure based on the principle of fairness. If you're using a utility, you are expected to pay the associated costs and fees. However, if you are not using that service or consuming the product, you should not have to pay exorbitant fees.

I would therefore recommend to this Assembly that they support this motion. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Any other members prepared to speak to Motion 504?

Seeing and hearing none, the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake to close debate.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that it's disappointing to see that the government won't be considering supporting this motion when we hear the government every day get up and say that they want to see a change when it comes to responsible government. To vote down a common-sense motion like this one is shameful.

I've heard some that say: well, if you don't like it, just sell the property. That seems a little radical when you're looking at the circumstances involving this. I'll also say that when we hear the government talking about fair share, that does seem like a concept that a socialist government would buy into. [interjections] I wholeheartedly agree. The only thing that I will say that counteracts this is that when you look at a socialist government – what they're trying to do is that they're trying to move Alberta to a renewable source. What they've done is that they're looking to shut down our coal industry, which supplies about 50 per cent of our energy right now. When we've got ideas on how we can move Alberta in the direction that this current government is looking at, you would think that they would at least entertain the thought.

Now, my hon. colleague had brought up that – you know what? – when you're moving a motion, this does not mean that we're creating law. What it does mean is that we're reviewing the motion, a sensible motion. Then what happens is that they will take that information and they'll create laws. We've got a government that is clearly moving in a direction of reducing our fossil fuel dependency. So when I have this clear motion in my hands here, that says that if we can reduce the red tape or the burden that's placed on residential – residential – renewable energy, solar and wind, that makes it more attractive to the consumer, which means that we will end up moving in this direction without a dollar spent by the government, you would think that this government would take notice.

What happens is that we've got a government that is so focused on their direction, they are unwilling to take interest in other ideas. We have a government that would rather put billions of dollars into paying out PPAs, breached agreements, than deal with something as simple as saying: let's give the consumer the ability to do this on their own. Let's make this viable for all Albertans and then move in the direction that this government is looking to do. What we end up with is a government that says: we inherited a problem from the past government, and – you know what? – our way is the only way to fix this.

Well, clearly this isn't working because we've seen incredible raised rates when it comes to both natural gas and electricity. This is becoming a real concern for most Albertans, especially when we start looking at the most vulnerable: our seniors, our disabled, and our single parents. The fact is that should they need to shut down utilities during the summer months to be able to make payments, that option is there for them in a way that is a responsible way when it comes to forming government.

Now, again, it is disappointing to see that we have a government that is unwilling to follow through with a clear mandate that they have said that they have from Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, when it comes to this motion, I would encourage every member in this House to consider it and to vote for this. Thank you.

[The voice vote indicated that Motion Other than Government Motion 504 lost]

Bill 10

An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements

Mr. Nixon moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements, be amended by deleting all the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Alberta’s Economic Future in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Adjourned debate on the amendment May 9: Mr. S. Anderson]

The Deputy Speaker: Speaking to the amendment, Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As always, I appreciate the opportunity to rise and share my thoughts and particularly this evening for my good friend from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. This motion would propose that we send this bill off to the Economic Future Committee for further input. Once again, I couldn’t agree more with my colleague on this subject in this regard. This motion, of course, is meaning additional work for the committee members, but isn’t that what we were elected to do, work together to make laws that not only protect Albertans but make sure what laws we do pass are the best that they can be? That is why we have the option of sending them back to committee for a more fulsome debate and input to make sure we get it right.

As I mentioned in an earlier speech, consultation is not always the government’s forte. I mentioned how they failed to consult on the carbon tax, the largest single tax in Alberta history. Some would talk in the federal arena in the past election of one Stephen Harper. When he became Prime Minister, a lot of people felt that there was some of secret agenda. Well, Madam Speaker, that secret agenda was never shown. Again, reverting back to the provincial government, our new provincial NDP government, I talked about how badly they got it wrong on Bill 6, and it was only after massive, massive backlash, Madam Speaker – in fact, one day we saw almost 2,000 people on the steps of this place. It was quite something, the protests. They admitted that the government had failed miserably on the consultation process. Madam Speaker, here we are again. I don’t think it’s on the level of the total lack of consultation on the carbon tax. It’s somewhere between the two examples for sure.

It always concerns me when I see the words “will consult on regulations.” To me always that is tantamount to saying: trust us. Well, I don’t think I’m the only one that takes this with a grain of salt. While I have never for once believed that government members have any sort of ill intentions when they pass legislation, I can’t say that I support their ideologically based policies. Those are two distinct things. Even with the best of intentions – and we’ve heard these words in this Chamber many times, talking about unintended consequences. Even sometimes the best intentions play out down the line or at some other far and remote place to create unintended consequences.

Madam Speaker, this bill, once again, needs the important aspects of it to be completely fleshed out, to be worked on with the consultation of the municipalities and other stakeholders such as the Real Estate Association to develop this Bill 10’s regulations. Once again, I can’t help but feel that this government is putting the cart before the horse. The government will pass the bill, then consult with the municipalities about putting forward a regulation with regard to the act. I don’t know how many times I myself or my colleagues in opposition have actually stood in this Chamber and had to say those very same words: the government is going to pass a bill, then go and consult with those that it affects. They do that time and time again. It’s repetitive, so we make a referral motion time and time again in the hopes that they finally get it right. I’m not sure who said that the definition of insanity is doing the same thing over and over again hoping for a different result, but here we are, Madam Speaker, once again, and I’m sure we’ll hear that expression again.

This issue is fraught with missteps and mistakes, things that were caught by the opposition because we took what little time we had, made some calls, talked to some people, and, no surprise, found some flaws, flaws that could have been avoided had time been taken and this bill had been floated by the correct standing committee, first for debate, then consultation and examination. Fortunately, we are at a stage in this House where we can remedy this flaw and send it back for these important corrective steps.

Now, as we know, PACE, or the property assessed clean energy program, is a financing tool which building owners and developers can use to upgrade their building’s energy performance, install renewable energy systems, and reduce resource consumption with no money down and with the financing repaid through their property’s tax bill. PACE financing capital primarily comes from private investment sources who are seeking long-term, secure investments. This program is a financing mechanism that enables low-cost, long-term funding for energy efficiency, renewable energy, and water conservation projects. PACE financing is repaid as an assessment on the property’s regular tax bill and is processed the same way as other local public benefit assessments, i.e., sidewalks, sewers, and other infrastructure, in the way those have been paid for decades. Depending on local legislation, PACE can be used for commercial, nonprofit, and residential properties. Sounds like an interesting program, Madam Speaker, but it’s not all what it’s cracked up to be, not at all.

While it could be said that homebuyers are attracted to properties with energy saving features and may even be willing to pay a premium for them, as cited in the Berkeley Lab study of 2013, Remodeling Magazine in 2016, reporting the 2015 Appraisal Journal study, the financing structure of PACE projects may be a deterrent for resale of properties with an outstanding PACE loan. Madam Speaker, I’m talking about some American models that are already in effect in the U.S.

What I’m getting at, Madam Speaker, is that the design of PACE programs in California has resulted in some financing institutions’ – Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac; they’re popular names – decision not to lend monies to homebuyers when the property has an outstanding PACE loan. This is due to the fact that PACE loans are recorded against the property as a tax lien that assumes a first position in case of a mortgage’s default. As a result, many sellers in California had to repay the loan first to attract buyers. Others, unable to pay off the loan, were unsuccessful in finding a buyer. As a result, depending on the specifics of Alberta’s PACE financing scheme, homeowners may sign up for the program without understanding the full implications of having a PACE lien on their property’s land title and related ramifications at the time when they are looking to sell it. I’m talking about unintended consequences.

In fact, there have been some that I've mentioned that they have concerns around section 390.7 of the MGA, the Municipal Government Act, which says:

If, after a clean energy improvement agreement has been made, the council refinances the debt created to pay for the clean energy improvement that is the subject of that agreement at an interest rate other than the rate estimated when the clean energy improvement agreement was made, the council, with respect to future years, may revise the amount required to recover the costs of the clean energy improvement included in that agreement to reflect the change in the interest rate.

Again, Madam Speaker, I'm talking about the potential of unintended consequences with a lot of moving parts in play.

What this section does, Madam Speaker, is that this provision introduces a level of uncertainty for Albertans interested in signing up for the PACE program as the municipalities will have the option to unilaterally revise the interest rate after the agreement has been signed by the parties involved. That's deeply troubling. I know that I don't enter a poker game if I know that after I buy in and the cards are dealt, the dealer can make up the rules as he sees fit. That simply is not an option, and in that arena it's not common for that to occur. I think that Albertans should be equally troubled. We can't simply let the government sweep this under the rug with a vague reassurance of: it will be dealt with in regulations. We have seen too many examples where "trust us" simply won't cut it, and this situation is no different. It's another reason to send it to committee.

Additionally, I can't help but worry that considering PACE programs are not common in Canada, it's highly unlikely that Albertans will know they even exist for some time or that they will fully understand the rules or the legal implications around them. As these regulations will be trotted out, it will take some time for understanding of or adherence to the ideas going forward. This could have a deeply unsettling effect upon consumers, not unlike the sense of disquiet and uncertainty that Alberta farmers and ranchers have experienced over the two and a half years previous to today with the passing of Bill 6. Considering the requirement to disclose PACE property tax to prospective buyers is left to regulations, nothing in the legislation itself ensures transparency when selling a property with PACE property tax. Where have we heard that before, Madam Speaker?

Some other issues I can't help but have trouble with revolve around this government's original briefing on the whole act. According to the government brief municipalities will "install and pay for upgrades on private property and recover costs through the owners' property taxes." Now, I highly doubt that municipalities will want to get into the business of greening businesses and homes as a lucrative sideline. Madam Speaker, it's not their role, nor should it be. There will be an accounting cost to be effected with all the collecting or not collecting or the arrears of taxes that may go on. It's not likely they have a geothermal engineer's degree or a solar panel insulation expert on staff, so I can't rightly say where the statement makes any semblance of sense. Where is the understanding or the qualifications of the install? Is it going to simply be built based on taxes, based on somebody's whim or idea?

In Ontario, Madam Speaker, at one point the green energy thing was so prominent and so efficient that they actually paid for rain barrels so that the homeowners could store their fresh rainwater. Is that actually an energy saving thing? That was what the program dictated, but a lot of people didn't like to carry the water in from the back side of the house.

Now, that isn't the only contradiction between various government documents, notes, and web pages. Not at all. In the government's own bill briefing it was pointed out that the Rural Municipalities of Alberta had expressed concerns on whether this program will be mandatory or not. That's kind of a big unknown if you ask me. After all, the briefing states that it will be up to municipal councils whether to pass a PACE bylaw or not, which is odd to me because on the government's own website it states: "Under PACE, municipalities would install and pay for upgrades on private property and recover costs through the owners' property taxes." Anyway, if the municipality has the option to pass the PACE bylaw or not, why does the website say that it will? It contradicts itself in the briefing and again on the website. Madam Speaker, as you well know, in this place we live and die by the words that are used. Whether they be heckles or whether they be direct quotes that are recorded in the services of Hansard, we live and die by the words. Again, I go back to the use of the word "will." It contradicts itself in the briefing and – I'm repeating myself, I'm sorry – on the website.

That's not all. There are other concerns as well. Certain stakeholders have expressed concerns that there was no interest in administering the program and incurring those extra costs, which is a fair argument. They have their choice. But here again we see that there seems to be a contradiction in the government's briefing and some of the website statements. The government response to the concern was that it was an envisioned portion, envisioned that Energy Efficiency Alberta will administer the programs on behalf of the municipalities that pass the PACE bylaw. Maybe I'm missing something, but this also appears contrary to what is stated on the website.

Finally, again concern from the RMA, where they state that many municipalities are not interested in a lending role. Well, the government envisions the EEA finding private capital, but that's not how it's explained on the website.

Now, as I run through this, it dawns on me that nowhere does this bill talk about how – and the Member for Leduc-Beaumont is quite familiar with my next bit of terminology here – the government entity, his government agency, known as the special areas. Nowhere does it talk about how they would adopt Bill 10. After all, they aren't a municipality. They may act like one on most day-to-day operations, but they are certainly not one under the Special Areas Act, written in about 1935 or '38, somewhere back there. I mean, how will the PACE programs be dealt with by them? Madam Speaker, I live in that area.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Why, thank you, Madam Speaker. Holy smokes, don't we have a star-studded cast across the way here tonight. I see that they put all the good-looking ones in tonight, so that's nice. But life has a way of balancing itself out, and though they're gifted with one thing, they're lacking somewhere else. But that's why we're here, to educate them.

It is my pleasure to rise today to speak in favour of the referral amendment on Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements. This bill would enable municipalities to pass a bylaw creating a property assessed clean energy program, otherwise known as the PACE program. Madam Speaker, there are so many aspects of this bill that have either not been discussed enough with Albertans or that just seem to be unprepared. I urge this to be sent to committee to be discussed.

It is our duty as legislators to bring forth legislation for which we have considered all the possible consequences without leaving the fate of what the law would like to see in action to a wait-and-see mentality. It is our responsibility to Albertans to listen and to hear how they would like legislation to work for them, which is what we were all elected to do here in this House, not to make high-level decisions and impose them in a top-down manner. I want to take a look at the ways this bill is not a fully finished piece of work and could use the benefit of a committee for it to be refined and for input to be given by those it is intended to be useful to.

Madam Speaker, conversion of every nook and cranny of this province to energy efficiency has been quite a frequent topic of conversation over the last several years, and although we, quite obviously, know that this is not the most pressing matter to every single Albertan, this government continues to insist that we treat it as such.

With that, I'd like to discuss what Bill 10 endeavours to bring about, the PACE program. We often hear that a substantial barrier to energy efficiency is that large initial investment cost that the property owner must take up in order to upgrade their existing set-up to meet efficiency standards. It's quite costly, and, you know, quite honestly, only wealthier people can afford this. But in the scheme of things, what we're basically getting people to do is take out a mortgage for an additional piece of infrastructure in their home. Albeit the long-term goal is energy savings and more reliance off the grid, the truth of the matter is that it is very expensive. If we were to see a natural cycle in the economy of scale and things like that that happen over time with these things, it might be cheaper for people, even just a few years from now, to do this on their own without the need for these subsidies.

As much as everyone would love to replace existing windows, upgrade insulation as this would not only provide added comfort in winter but also reflect the savings in energy bills, again, people just have other priorities, and that's the truth of the matter. Coming from Fort McMurray, I see that many people have been laid off, lost their good jobs. They've moved back to everywhere from New Brunswick and Newfoundland to the Lower Mainland, British Columbia, and they're struggling trying to pay their mortgages, to get food on the table. And it's not just nation-wide. A lot of those people that are affected by the shortage of jobs in Fort McMurray are from right across our province as well, and they have more immediate monetary priorities, especially when there are carbon taxes to pay.

Green infrastructure is expensive, and understandably Albertans aren't queuing up to install solar panels on their roofs while still in the grips of a recession and high unemployment. In essence, Bill 10 provides the tools for property owners to be able to finance renewable energy products and allow repayment to be collected through their municipal property tax bill.

My first concern on the forthcoming list of concerns is the fact that we as legislators are being asked to simply trust the government on what regulations and plans to put in place to govern this program. I, for one, do not feel comfortable granting my approval to a program where I've not had the opportunity to thoroughly study nor debate and vote on the regulations that will be put into action. As legislators our responsibility is to remain transparent to the public, and I feel that my duty is not to blindly vote on unseen regulations.

Furthermore, as eligibility is based primarily on property information rather than on income and credit scores, it could mean that PACE would be relatively easy to qualify for, but it poses a problem as the program is structured as a tax assessment rather than a loan. A loan is considered based on a thorough risk assessment with a repayment plan and based on a credit assessment that indicates an individual's history with finances.

Although this structure would allow a lot more people to qualify, I have to wonder how the government intends on handling situations when the money is not capable of being repaid or perhaps if someone intends to bite off more than they can chew; that is to say, they'd like to undertake more than they are capable of repaying on their municipal property taxes relative to the valuation of their property and the regressive nature of property taxation, particularly for fixed- and low-income owners. I find this troubling as the structure of assessment for the approvals of these loans relies heavily on the property owner being encouraged to commence green energy upgrades and then being stuck with the tax bill for the next many years as there was no income assessment done beforehand to ensure that this was a viable undertaking.

Now, tying these last two points together, there seems to be nothing governing a situation where someone who has not finished their payments on a PACE property tax sells their property. As, once more, the regulations are not up for debate or voting, we cannot discuss the matter of disclosing the remaining PACE property tax when selling a property. The lack of this takes away from the transparency of the process, which makes me very wary. I certainly hope there will be no abuse of the system, no intentional malice, but as you know, Madam Speaker, the onus is on the buyer to ensure that everything is in good order and that they've done their due diligence.

I fear that there may be loopholes in this bill. This is why I urge all of my colleagues in this House to refer the bill to committee, as there are clearly some gaps. I could foresee that there will be some concern from Albertans on what those mean for their property tax bills as well as for when the time comes to sell their home and enter the market for a new one. We don't want to introduce uncertainty and distress into the housing market. Therefore, I continue to urge that all the members of this House vote in favour of this referral amendment. [interjection] Thank you, sir.

We are continually seeing further lack of clarity when analyzing what this has the potential to do to mortgages. As a PACE property tax has a likelihood of increasable interest rates, we may see more onerous stress tests imposed by the federal government. We could well see this program affecting property owners' ability to obtain a mortgage. Of course, I believe this is territory that even the most green-minded of us don't want to dabble in. It has the potential to affect our future abilities to obtain a mortgage. The problem is that we just don't know. It may have an impact; it may not. But I'd much rather hear an answer that comes out of an intense study from committee than what the government can come up with here on the spot.

One aspect of this bill that staunchly troubles me is that it exempts municipal borrowing associated with the PACE program from counting against the municipality's debt limit. The debt limit is in place to ensure viability of Alberta's municipalities, Madam Speaker. Currently a municipality's total debt cannot exceed 1.5 times their revenue, and debt servicing cannot exceed .25 times the revenue of the municipality. I find this portion makes absolutely no sense. Is the government suddenly making fiscally counterintuitive decisions to play to their green energy agenda? Is renewable energy debt not still debt? Does it not count as money spent if it's going towards something that this government wants to boast about? Or are they trying to draw attention away from how much their green program spending has racked up debt? I found this portion particularly mind-boggling. If it impacts a municipality's debt-servicing costs as well as its economic viability, how can the government be giving them the mandate to spend unrestrainedly?

Let's talk about the cost of the program. The government has stated that they intend for Energy Efficiency Alberta to be the administrator of the PACE program and that the government will bear the cost to administer this program. However, Energy Efficiency Alberta is a provincial agency funded by Alberta taxpayers, in essence yet another roundabout way for the government to take money out of the pockets of hard-working Albertans.

Furthermore, the administrative costs of the PACE program are unknown, and I have yet to consider where the brunt of any defaulted loans would fall. The bill seems to have a premise that seeks to help Albertans, but in the process it creates more problems than it patches. I firmly believe that this bill needs to be thoroughly revised in committee. Albertans need to have a voice in the process as well as municipalities, that seemingly will be bearing the majority of unintended consequences.

In closing, I urge all my colleagues in the House today to please support the referral amendment and send this bill to committee. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Not under 29(2)(a), Madam Speaker. I'm moving a motion to move to one-minute bells for the remainder of the evening.

The Deputy Speaker: You wouldn't be able to make that motion in the context of this bill as you've already spoken to the bill.

Mr. Nixon: Got you. Okay.

The Deputy Speaker: You moved the amendment.

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker, being considerably more innocent than the Opposition House Leader, I would like to try my luck to move to one-minute bells for the remainder of the evening.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: I've also had a request to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests, which also requires unanimous consent.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the House. It's my great pleasure to introduce a couple that many of you might know. They've been here virtually every year for the last 14 years, standing up for farm workers and the rights of farm workers that have been expressed through Bill 6. Eric Musekamp and Darlene Dunlop have committed their lives in the last 15 years to seeing the resolution of this important basic right given to farm workers and the protection of farm owners and ranch owners from litigation. I'm very delighted to see them here. They're here, of course, to see the Governor General, who wants to meet with them and talk to them about their leadership on this tomorrow, hopefully. Thank you very much to the House for giving them a warm Legislature welcome.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 10

An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements, or, rather, to the referral motion that we're looking at right now. We look to a referral amendment to study and get a deeper understanding of the bill that's placed before us. It's a chance for us to be able to take a look at the bill as legislators but also to invite people in, stakeholders, to provide more consultation and to get a better understanding of how the bill is going to impact Albertans. I would speak in favour of sending this to committee.

I'd start first by, I guess, saying thank you to the Minister of Municipal Affairs for bringing forward this piece of legislation. I believe that his heart is in the right place. I know that we've had many conversations in the past about alternative energy sources. We would both probably agree that an end goal we would like to see is net zero communities that have the capacity to be environmentally responsible.

Madam Speaker, I guess I would put some caveats on that. I believe that they need to be cost-effective and cost-efficient, that net zero shouldn't be dependent on the largesse of the taxpaying citizens of this province, and that at the end of the day whatever we're looking at does not place the property owner or, for that matter, the government at risk as a result of those programs.

Madam Speaker, we know that there are times when property owners and the people that purchase property can place themselves at risk, and the government allows them to place themselves at risk when we start to take a look at the parameters that they allow for taking out mortgages.

We could talk about the subprime mortgage housing bubble that we saw in about 2007, when consumers were allowed to take on very high debt at low interest rates that would eventually increase, and we realized that they would have insufficient income in order to handle the mortgage and the interest payments and would have to hand their properties over. So we can see that if we don't do things wisely when it comes to probably the most important purchase you're going to make in your life, your house, we can get ourselves into trouble.

When we take a look at Bill 10, Madam Speaker, I would suggest that we need to be careful. Bill 10 enables municipalities to pass bylaws creating what we call a property assessed clean energy, or PACE, program. This property assessed clean energy program provides a mechanism for property owners to finance energy efficiency, whether we're talking about renewable energy or whether we're talking about water conservation projects or simply upgrades to their property, with the idea of creating a more energy-efficient property in which they can live.

So far it's sounding pretty good, a good idea for a program. Anyone who owns a property is more than likely going to be looking forward to saving some money on power bills and on water bills as they take advantage of the PACE program, you know, the former of which is becoming much more expensive, obviously. When we take a look at the energy bills that we're starting to see as a result of the NDP government, they're just starting to become more and more and more expensive. For many people this might be a program that they look forward to as a way of sort of hedging themselves from the poor policies of the NDP.

But back to the legislation here. The PACE program provides the mechanism for financing the types of projects that we've just been talking about by allowing the repayment of the monies that are being put forward for these renewable projects and for the water conservation projects. The repayment will be collected through the property owner's municipal tax bill. This, in theory, could be seen as an innovative way to pay for these upgrades, a new avenue of financing for cash-strapped property owners, if you will. However, as you drill deeper and deeper into the details, more and more concerns begin to arise.

That's why I would argue that as we begin to talk about these concerns, we need to think about referring this to committee. This bill and the concerns that we're going to be talking about need to be addressed at a deeper level. We need to ask the right questions. As legislators sometimes that means that we need to go back to the drawing board and that we need to start studying the bill and that we need to start asking the appropriate questions that will help us to make sure this program truly does meet the needs of Albertans. Maybe we need to bring in some of the banking and financial institutions to come talk to us, to find out if we're placing Albertans at risk through this program. Maybe we need to bring in the builders that, in some cases, will be front-loading this onto the backs of the property owners. We need to start asking these kinds of questions, do our due diligence, and make sure we've done the consultation before we start passing this bill into legislation.

The first major example that I would like to highlight was given to me by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, and it deals with what happens in the case of a foreclosure, Madam Speaker. Let's use what's an oversimplified example – I'll grant you that – but for now let's just use this as an example. Let's look at an individual that has a $30,000 solar panel installation built onto the top of their house. They finance this through the PACE program. This individual finances the $30,000 for the solar panel installation over a 10-year period of time at $3,000 per year. Well, this individual perhaps has overextended themselves, or they've lost their job, or there are some other unforeseen events that occur. Essentially, Madam Speaker, sometimes life just happens. Now that individual finds themselves in a position where they're having a hard time making their mortgage payments. Banks are usually pretty good. They try to work with the individual, but sometimes many mortgage payments can be missed, to the point where eventually the bank feels like they have no other option than to foreclose on that property.

Unfortunately, Madam Speaker, this is not something that in the last three years has been uncommon in my community of Drayton Valley. I've talked to former students. I've talked to friends. I've talked to acquaintances. I've had people come in. I remember one lady coming into my office and begging me: "What can we do? I'm going to lose my house." She'd lost her job. She'd maxed out everything. I saw her about three and a half months later, when I went to the Drayton Valley parade that we have in the summer. She was sitting on the side of the road as the parade was just waiting to get started. She walked up to me, and she said, "Do you remember me?" I said, "Yeah, I do." She said, "Well, I lost my house last week." There were tears in her eyes, and there were tears in mine. My heart was just breaking.

So we need to make sure that we do our due diligence, that we make sure that this program doesn't set people up for failure. Madam Speaker, we've seen at times that programs like this, as in the United States, have set people up for failure and have created problems. I don't know if you've seen the photos, but I've seen photos of houses that have been foreclosed. Sometimes before the person leaves, those houses are stripped bare. Sometimes they've pulled the copper out, the pipes. Sometimes they've pulled out the electrical wires. With houses that are being foreclosed, sometimes people, in their anger and their disappointment and their frustration and in order to try to get as much as they can before they leave, break the law and damage the facility. That bank has to take over a house that is, in some cases, hard to sell. Sinks, toilets, light bulbs: anything of value is pulled out before they leave the house.

Well, for a house where the property owner has invested through the PACE program and put in, for instance, say, a $30,000 solar installation, what would be the first thing to go, Madam Speaker? Well, I would suggest that this individual, who is not too careful about whether he's on the right side of the law or not, is going to be looking at that expensive solar installation, and he's going to take it right off the top of the roof and into the back of his truck, never to be seen again. What then happens to the remaining money, which has to be paid through the property taxes to fund that installation? Who's on the hook for that money? Is the municipality really going to have to go after an individual who has, clearly, no regard for the financial contracts or commitments to which they've agreed?

This and many other questions continue to abound with this legislation, Madam Speaker. That's why we need to talk with the builders. That's why we need to talk with the stakeholders. We need to make sure that before we pass this piece of legislation, we've used all of the mechanisms that we have in the power of this Legislature, that we refer this to committee, that we allow ourselves to have the time to do due diligence on this bill.

However, let's give credit where credit is due. There are some very positive aspects of this legislation despite the fact that I have some overall opposition to Bill 10. Municipalities have already collected property taxes in the past, so the burden to municipalities is pretty limited in that way. Energy Efficiency Alberta will administer the plan, so again municipalities are not responsible for the administrative costs, which is a key factor, Madam Speaker, that we all need to be wary of because all orders of government need to be committed to working together and to not adding additional burdens onto the other levels of government.

I wish the federal government would have some consideration and show more leadership in that area. Again, that's one of the reasons why we should be referring this to committee. We expect and we need to have all levels of government, whether municipal, federal, or provincial, working together in concert with each other to ensure that these kinds of programs succeed. If we send this back to committee, a referral to the committee, we could take the time to consult with the municipalities, we could take the time to consult with the federal government, and we could work together as Canadians, as Albertans, as fellow citizens through this legislation and make sure that it is indeed serving the needs of all levels of government so that the property owners, at the end of the day, benefit from this, their largest purchase, probably, in their life.

Now, an additional strength of this legislation is that it does not impact property owners' ability to borrow from lending institutions. Lending institutions will be involved, but the money is not coming from the municipalities.

Who would not want to have a solar panel on their roof and put electricity back onto the grid or have their hot water heated by solar, maybe have a windmill in the backyard? Madam Speaker, I know I've thought of that often over the course of my life, and that's why I'm not averse to this bill at all. I believe that the more self-sufficient we can make individuals in their property ownership, the better off we're going to be as a society. And if we can do it cost-efficiently, in a way that makes economic sense, giving people the capacity to reduce their carbon footprint and to generate their own electricity and put that together into the pockets and into the lives of people that own their own property, that's a good thing. So I'm not averse to this, but I do say that we need to make sure that we're doing it very, very wisely.

You know, maybe you have appliances in your house or machines that are drawing a lot of current and driving up your power bills. Well, the PACE program could potentially help to replace them. Maybe you're trying to protect a wetland on your property in order to conserve drinking water, or maybe your home needs an energy audit to find the leaks and then perform some renovations to help keep the heat in during the winter. This program, Madam Speaker, if executed properly, could help address all of these issues.

So it's not that I don't see the many benefits that this program could bring, but I believe that we do need to make sure that as we go through this bill, we are indeed making the best legislation we possibly can. That's why in sending it to committee and letting the committee do its work – let a nonpartisan committee bring in the stakeholders that we can consult – we can educate ourselves, and we can pursue the best possible piece of legislation that we can create in this House.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise and speak to Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements across the province.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I should have clarified. You're speaking to the amendment still?

Dr. Swann: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay.

Dr. Swann: Madam Speaker, I think this is a bill that many of us recognize has important leadership and bold initiatives around a very critical issue for us, the climate change reality, and the need to incent some of the changes both in individual and in commercial operations. The fact that the last member was speaking against it in relation to financial liabilities I think is unsupportable because this is clearly going to be attached in the Municipal Government Act, to tax repayment. This is a very forward-thinking way, and it's been used in Calgary by Enmax to incent solar panels on their roofs for some time, where they recoup the cost of solar panels on the basis of their premium or the monthly instalments that they charge their customers.

The same principle is involved here. It would be repaid through the building owner's property taxes. Very little risk, and there's a real opportunity to do three things: one, improve the energy efficiency of homes and offices in the province, thereby over the long term saving that individual's or organization's finances; secondly, reduce carbon emissions; and thirdly, stimulate the economy and jobs, which is what we keep hearing is something that is desperately needed in Alberta to move away from our carbon-dependent province.

I think it behooves us to move with the times. Government has been a laggard in this area for decades. We see important leadership coming from other provinces like Quebec and B.C., other countries in the world like the United Kingdom, for example. I think there's an opportunity here to take another step without any risk if you believe that the MDs, the municipalities can properly bring in the changes that are needed to ensure that these investments – and I call them investments advisedly – will be repaid through a properly imposed tax subsidy on individuals who choose to make this kind of investment and both stimulate local economies and do their part in reducing the climate emissions that are such a big part of this current reality.

I think the Liberal caucus is quite clear that this has very little risk and much, much to benefit Alberta. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Back on the main bill, the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I will move that we adjourn debate on Bill 10.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 1

Energy Diversification Act

[Adjourned debate May 9: Loyola]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to speak to Bill 1 this evening. The government and the minister proponent of this bill are continually looking for ways to position themselves as the only champions of economic diversification. Indeed, there was no economic diversification until this government came forth with some of these bills and other great initiatives. Of course, before they took office, one hundred per cent of Alberta's economy was based on oil and gas, and there was a drill bit in the back of every one of those dually pickup trucks out there, and that's all we had in this province. That was what we were, a one-trick pony. Not one single person in this province worked outside of that industry, and our government couldn't afford to even keep lights on if oil dropped by $5 a barrel.

That might seem a little facetious, Madam Speaker, and of course it is, but that is basically the crux of every government talking point we've been fed on this legislation: we diversify, and nobody else does or did. Of course, all you have to do is to go on the Economic Development and Trade website to find, right on the front page if I'm not mistaken, that from 1986 to 2016 Alberta's GDP grew from $59.6 billion to $314.9 billion. During those 30 years oil and gas and mining decreased as a percentage of total GDP from 23.2 per cent to just 17 per cent. Now, that sounds a little bit like diversification to me. Further, the construction sector grew from a 7 per cent share of GDP in 1986 to 10.7 per cent in 2016; the finance, insurance, and real estate sectors from 13.5 to 16.7 per cent; and business and commercial services from 6.6 to 11.7 per cent, almost double. Perhaps one of the members opposite could jog my memory, but I'm not sure who was in government for 29 of those 30 years. During that period a lot of diversification took place. Surprise, surprise.

I would also like to provide a quick quote from a paper written by Dr. Bev Dahlby and Mukesh Khanal at the policy school at the University of Calgary. This paper was published in January 2018, not long ago.

In 1997, the oil and gas sector accounted for 35.81 per cent of total Albertan economic output. By 2009, that share was 24.95 [per cent], a decline of 10.86 percentage points.

That also sounds to me like a significant decline of the oil and gas industry and a rise, surprisingly, in diversification in those other industries, many of which I have referred to earlier. In the release for that article Mr. Khanal also stated:

Research shows that economic output in Alberta today is as diverse as in Ontario. Alberta's economic output has become quite diversified in the last 20 years, and that has resulted in a 21 per cent decline in the volatility of economic output.

Now, I know that members opposite are quite fond of quoting the distinguished members of the policy school at the University of Calgary, as they should be. The policy school in Calgary is a fantastic group of high-level academics who contribute extremely valuable and insightful information to the public policy debate. I think we can all agree on that, ministers. I personally enjoy this paragraph by Drs. Mintz and MacKinnon from their October 2017 paper published through that very same policy school. They're comparing this government's actions to those of the Romanow government in Saskatchewan.

In contrast, the Alberta NDP has raised taxes for larger businesses and high-income earners, increased environmental and other regulations, imposed a carbon tax, significantly increased the minimum wage and has run large deficits . . .

thanks to the minister,

. . . raising the prospect of future tax increases to balance the budget. Taken as a package, the message to potential investors is that doing business in Alberta is becoming more difficult and . . . expensive.

Very interesting. More difficult and expensive: that, Madam Speaker, is why we've seen $34.8 billion and climbing of foreign direct investment leave this province. The bucket has a lot of holes in it.

Prior to this government taking office in Alberta, Alberta was able to grow in part because of previous governments who worked extremely hard to make Alberta the most business-friendly environment in Canada and perhaps in North America and one of the few debt-free jurisdictions in the world. One of the few debt-free jurisdictions in the world, Madam Speaker. That attracts investment because people know that they will not be burdened by someone reaching more deeply into their pockets, year after year, to try and balance those budgets, to try and pay back irresponsible debt. Corporate tax rates were reduced, personal income tax rates were reduced, and the economy continued to grow, and that created jobs.

But we've heard from the minister of economic development many times, saying how without programs like the ones being introduced in Bill 1, the economy will nosedive. Well, that's not what happened in the past. We attracted. We were the most business-friendly and investor-friendly jurisdiction in Canada, in North America, a beacon from around the world, where international investment was attracted.

Madam Speaker, I think of the international investors, of which I hear many say: "Well, it doesn't matter. They left, and Canadians bought those assets." Sadly, those foreign investors are the canaries in the gold mine or maybe the coal mine – maybe that's an appropriate comparison – leaving this province because they detect that early. They have the international options, much more than the Canadian companies. Sadly, what we see after that is the Canadian companies following suit because they're not stupid either. They look at the big international companies, that have maybe more robust analyses and more choices, and they have a chance to go and look at those companies and say: "You know what? Maybe we'll invest a little bit more in the United States. Maybe we'll look overseas. Maybe we'll increase our drilling program there or build a new pipeline there." That's why we're not getting investment here and that diversification we so very much and dearly need.

Minister, this is curious to me. If I recall correctly, in 2013-2014 – and at that time I was employed with Calgary Economic Development – Alberta created fully 87 per cent of all the new jobs in Canada, in fact 82,300 new jobs, and all of that with a supposed competitive disadvantage because we didn't have the diversification tools that we're being thrown here. Alberta had the highest median wages in the country – not the highest mean; the highest median – indicating that the data was not being skewed because of a select few who were making inordinate amounts of money, because a growing economy isn't all that valuable.

Every day work-seeking Albertans are unemployed, Madam Speaker. If we cannot generate the wealth and thereby the tax revenues to balance our budgets without reaching deeper and deeper and deeper into the pockets of hard-working Albertans, hard-working, middle-class, mortgage paying job type Albertans, kind of like what we have right now, where the Minister of Finance says, "Things are looking up, up, up," while Albertans are telling the government that they aren't feeling the recovery and widely respected pollsters are telling the government that they are coming across as out of touch, out of touch with everyday Albertans when they say that they're making life better for Albertans, making life better at the same time as being out of touch with those very people who are looking for a better life, looking for better incomes to support their families, looking to create long-term wealth – and it saddens me when I see that we have a generation here that's going to pass on debt to the next generation and not a little bit of wealth to carry them through and to give them a hand up in the future.

Madam Speaker, the government has decided that to turn the tide, they will introduce Bill 1, Energy Diversification Act. As a whole I think Bill 1 and Bill 2 are focusing on the trees at the expense of nurturing a mighty forest. Both bills are basically applying a Band-Aid to what I see as a critical injury, throwing candy after taking away that plate of meat and potatoes that this province once had.

Choose your own metaphor, Madam Speaker. They all paint a picture of trying to undo a failure of economic, regulatory, and fiscal fundamentals, because it's the fiscal and economic fundamentals that attract investors when they come looking and look around the world for places to invest. The smart ones aren't looking for somebody throwing something at them today that they can take away tomorrow. What they're looking for are strong economics – tax, fiscal economics, and fiscal responsibility – that do not layer burden on them down the road. They can see it coming. They have economists. They're not stupid.

We wouldn't even need programs like this, Madam Speaker, if this government had not so severely damaged Alberta's attractiveness for business and investment and business and investor confidence. Whoever thought that the term "political risk" would be used in the same sentence as Alberta? Political risk: usually that's reserved for banana republics and third-world countries with unstable political and economic environments and war and famine and poverty going on, but, no, we're talking about political risk in Alberta – in Alberta – because of this Alberta NDP.

I would also add that it's telling that the NDP is only introducing this after three years in government, and in those three years they raised taxes on job creators dramatically here, by 20 per cent, Madam Speaker. You know what? With the debt that they're building, $96 billion in debt, somebody is going to be reaching deeper into those pockets. Even if those pockets are able to generate wealth, somebody from that government will be reaching deeper in there to try and fix the tide of red ink that is washing across this province. It's incredible to see that.

Increased red tape and regulation for those job creators, imposition of a carbon tax, massively hiked minimum wage despite the protestation of businesses across Alberta: I hear from them every day, restaurateurs, small businesses that say that the owners of these businesses are putting in 70-hour weeks and taking home no wages, Madam Speaker. This government will tell us that they're not managing the businesses well and that they're doing something wrong, that they're taking advantage of people. But they're out of touch. They're tone deaf to what we're hearing from job creators and investors.

It's hard to see how the programs contained in this bill will draw much-needed investment back in any meaningful way from long-term investors, long-term investors who'd look at the fundamentals. That is the crux of the issue with the government bringing in legislation like Bill 1, Madam Speaker. The government has gone out of its way to erode, seriously erode the Alberta advantage. They have introduced cost after cost after cost, and they wonder why the Finance minister's talking points and debt tolerance are so different than the experience and priorities of everyday Albertans.

I find it hard to believe that anybody doesn't think about how they would run their household or run a business. Madam Speaker, if we ran our households the way this government runs their government, we'd all be on the street. We'd all be on the streets because we wouldn't be able to afford our homes. The businesses that we run would be out of business, and we'd lay off all those workers, and all the paycheques would be gone because nobody can live on that kind of red ink.

You know, Madam Speaker, I hear the heckling going on from over there, but you know what? Honestly, when you take on a mortgage on your home, guess what you do? You start paying it next week. You don't push it down the road to your grandkids so you can live in a big house today and say: it's okay; the grandkids will pay for it. That's so irresponsible.

If the government had not implemented all of their negative policies in the first place – dare I mention the all pain, no gain carbon tax – there would be no argument, justification, nor need for programs like these because Alberta would have no hurdles or issues attracting and retaining investment, as we did for many, many years, or worries about competitiveness in all market sectors and industry, including capital markets, Madam Speaker.

You know, I'll go back to that bucket. If you drill 20 holes in a bucketful of water and then you take that, add Bill 1 and Bill 2 and other bills, and you try and plug, and you get two, three, four of them plugged, your economic bucket is not going to hold a whole lot of water. So they keep dumping it in the top, Madam Speaker, but the holes in the bottom are just too many, and that bucket just keeps dropping down and keeps dropping down.

Mr. Ceci: And you drilled all the holes.

Mr. Gottfried: You drilled the holes. We didn't drill the holes. You drilled the holes in the bucket.

That is essentially what the government has done. They took a bad situation, and they made it worse. Now they're turning around and pretending like everything is rosy and that these Band-Aid, candylike, hole-plugging programs will save Alberta and attract back the investment we truly need for a robust and sustainable recovery, yes, a return to the Alberta advantage, that so many people are yearning for in this province. They know they won't get it from this government. Madam Speaker, those arguments – and, ministers, your buckets do not hold water.

Madam Speaker, what Alberta needs is to recommit to becoming the most business- and investor-friendly jurisdiction in North America. We need to get back to making sure that the world knows that Alberta is open and looking for business and welcomes new investment and that we respect investors and the risks that they take, the jobs they create and that we do not jealously covet the profits they earn, those rewards which balance off with the risk.

I often say that Hong Kong, which is kind of like my second home, has been voted the most free-enterprise economy in the world for 26 years running. Once we get Alberta back on track, we'll do that.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills: it's such a difficult constituency because it doesn't exist anymore, I guess. That's what makes it tough.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act. This bill put forward by the government seeks to incentivize investment in Alberta, and upon studying this bill, I see that it focuses most directly on the petrochemical industry in Alberta.

Let's talk about energy diversification. You'd kind of think that it's a new idea, listening to this government, but here are just a few of the diversification or refinery projects that I've worked on personally throughout my career. Imperial Oil refinery, Strathcona: started on that in about, I want to say, 1980. The Gulf refinery: I worked on that one as well. That's out in Strathcona as well. The Husky upgrader, Lloydminster; the Shell Scotford refinery out in Fort Saskatchewan, which is one of the largest refineries in Canada, I believe; Dow Chemical, Fort Saskatchewan; Redwater fertilizer plant; Sherritt Gordon fertilizer, Fort Saskatchewan. There are many, many more out there that I didn't actually get a chance to work on. My point is that all of these or most of these projects were started back in the '70s and '80s, long before the NDP government and their Energy Diversification Act, so the idea that this is anything new to Alberta is just a little bit ludicrous.

Although the government has brought forth a number of different programs, some that may appear beneficial even, it's clear that the vast majority of Albertans do not support the programs proposed in Bill 1. A part of this bill that I find troubling is that it enables the APMC, the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission, to use financial tools available such as loan guarantees and equity investments. This is not in the best interest of taxpayers, nor is it in the best interest of the industry. I have serious concerns, if we are allowing the APMC to guarantee loans, in the case that a company goes bankrupt or defaults on a loan. Alternatively, should the APMC be in the gambling game at all in terms of loans? This strikes me as a power with which a public agency would be in a unilateral position in relation to any other controlling body and raises a question about how much power we should really be giving to Alberta's public agencies.

Furthermore, not only does it enable APMC to use financial tools; it also enables the minister to use any financial tools to establish programs that support economic growth in energy diversification, which include royalty credits and grants. We've all seen how things can go off the rails when it comes to getting into debt here in the province. I believe my colleague mentioned that $96 billion is what the projected debt is going to be when this government is finished.

However, what we've seen from the minister thus far is a track record of ineffective, inefficient use of money. We've seen money spent on the early closures of coal plants which should have been in operation for another 30 to 40 years, costing the taxpayers $1.36 billion. On the program front we have seen the true effect of these programs on Albertans, whose tax dollars would be better off left in their pockets to begin with. I feel that until we get concrete answers that show Albertans that their money will be used in the highest value-per-dollar way, the minister should not have the mandate to spend more taxpayer dollars on these unspecified programs.

Further to my questioning of their use of tax dollars, another question has arisen here as well. As we are investing in the partial upgrading to free up pipeline space on existing pipelines, which in and of itself would sound like a benefit of the bill, I'm at a loss as to why we are not investing in full refining instead. Like I said, we have many examples, that I've given, that refining has been taking place here in Alberta. We know how to do it, we know how to build them, and we know how to deal with the weather conditions.

If our target is to expand our market and increase our ability to refine and export, this would be the sensible route, although I suppose that it is telling that the NDP introduced this after having already been in government for three years. They have spent the last three years implementing detrimental policies that drove out investment, decimated jobs, crippled the economy, and shattered both investor and Albertan confidence. Now we have to throw incentives back to try and get the energy industry back on its feet. A lot of the bills put forth by the NDP that we've seen come through this House have been reactionary to a mess they've created with another one or more of their own bills, and this one is no different.

Madam Speaker, trying to stick all these patches on something inherently flawed just gives you have a pothole-riddled highway with Band-Aids scattered on top. I believe I sent pictures to the Transportation minister last year of highway 28, where they sprayed black topcoat over top and then painted yellow lines right over top of the potholes.

Trying to stick all these patches on something inherently flawed when it looked like the economy was at the end of its roll, the NDP started poking it with a stick. Perhaps it would be more effective to start repealing harmful NDP policies. Addressing the root concerns of investors in dealing with our province, such as the detrimental policies brought about in the last few years, would bring back Albertan confidence whereas Bill 1 simply reads like a distraction from the NDP's record.

From the time the NDP were elected until the introduction of this bill and still to this day, they have spent their entire time in government raising taxes on job creators, which are effectively those who largely stimulate the economy. We've talked many, many times in this House that the only true source of revenue is from the private sector and people working for the private sector. It is unsurprising that they need a bill to legislate the need for investor attraction considering that their policies were the ones that had them running for the hills in the first place. They increased red tape, imposed a disastrous carbon tax, imposed administrative hikes, corporate tax hikes, and put out bill after bill indicating that it would be their way or the highway, and what did investors choose? Highway 1 right out of the province.

Moreover, Bill 1 has no framework set out to address regulatory roadblocks and red tape that are holding up project permits. As per the EDAC report document's recommendation 3.2, this bill does not address those sorts of delays. In terms of increasing investor confidence, this bill does a wavering job of even laying out specifics in which it will accomplish its mandate.

Madam Speaker, I'm having trouble truly believing that relatively modest loan guarantees and grants that will be spread over eight years have the potential for significant impact in re-attracting much-needed investment to Alberta. It's going to take a lot more than that to get all of the investment dollars and foreign investment dollars back into Alberta that left this country because of their policies, especially since, in a legislative sense, nothing has changed. The carbon tax is still in full swing and growing. We are a jurisdiction with significant red tape and significant cost of doing business that result in nothing but dead-weight loss, a gain to absolutely no one, not the government, not the company, not the average Albertan.

Therefore, with these policies remaining in place, I struggle to see how we could by definition be competitive with other jurisdictions. We've got a lot of catching up to do. They have the good sense to be economically attractive to investment by creating an attractive, open, free-market environment without the need for government incentive programs. The simple need for government programs demonstrates an intrinsic undesirability. It means that this jurisdiction is not a favourable environment and the government is desperate. To reiterate, it would be far more effective to start repealing those harmful NDP policies. Our leader has spoken many times in the House about how foreign investment is going to places like Iran and Kazakhstan rather than coming to Alberta. That says something about our policies here in this province.

Instead, we keep seeing the government spend money it doesn't have and drive up debt. On this side of the House we stand against the $800 million in loan guarantees for partial upgrading and the $500 million in loan guarantees for a feedstock infrastructure program. We also oppose the $200 million in grants for partial upgrading.

Madam Speaker, this government should not keep scrambling to fix problems it has caused in the past, thus causing multiple other problems in the process. The best solution to restore investor confidence and get Alberta back on track is to repeal the tax hikes, reduce regulations, and create favourable conditions under which investors can flow back into our jurisdiction. Rather than pushing Bill 1 and ballooning our debt more and more, I wish that the NDP would take a step back and analyze the much better solutions this side of the House has proposed.

I urge all members of the House to vote against Bill 1. Thank you.

Bill 17

Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

[Adjourned debate May 10: Mr. Panda]

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak to Bill 17? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Are you ready for another riveting speech?

An Hon. Member: Use the same speech.

Mr. Hanson: I'll just use the same speech and see if you notice. Sure. See how long it takes.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 17, the Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. I have risen more times than I can count in this Chamber to discuss this government's hastiness and lack of forethought.

An Hon. Member: Really?

Mr. Hanson: Yes, I have.

Rather than taking the time to meaningfully consult and consider all consequences and thoughtfully correct course when they discover inconsistencies, this government has bullishly railroaded through legislation despite constant warnings from the opposition, stakeholders, and experts on glaring problems. We saw it with Bill 6 on farm safety, we saw it with labour changes, we saw it with minimum wage increases, and we saw it with the carbon tax. They wouldn't listen to anyone.

These are just a small portion of examples that show that this government's dedication to ideological policy supersedes their dedication to careful, well-researched, well-thought-out, and thoroughly consulted legislation. Perhaps it's not surprising that after their frantic passage of laws over the last three years, we have seen at least two tax statutes amendment acts in the last year. I can imagine that there are accountants from the CRA who turn on Alberta legislative TV and curse the heavens when they see that the NDP are about to further complicate their jobs.

Madam Speaker, as we know, decisions have consequences and ripple effects. It is the duty of the government to take the time to think about how every pebble that they drop into the water will ripple out and impact Albertans. When you're ramming through legislation in the middle of the night and you have Albertans standing in the cold outside of this building protesting that legislation, it normally is a pretty good indication that you are not carefully considering the outcomes.

Madam Speaker, when this NDP government introduced the carbon tax, which is the largest tax hike in Alberta's history and a tax they did not run on in the last election, I might add, everyone told them to pump on the brakes. My colleagues on this side of the House warned that in the grips of our current recession, inflicting further costs on Albertans would cripple families. We talked about how the cost of everything that Albertans would buy would go up in price through the rise in direct costs of transporting goods and services that would be translated into indirect costs that would affect everything from the price of apples in the grocery store to the price of bus passes to the new hockey skates that families needed to buy for their kids.

I think that we've been proven right time and time again. The carbon tax makes absolutely everything more expensive, including the cost of gas at the pumps that Albertans use to fill up their cars, the cost of heating Albertans' homes so that they can survive through these bitterly cold winters, or the price of running recreational facilities that bring communities together. No one and nothing is safe from the reach of this carbon tax.

Albertans were told that it was not a regressive tax and that they would not be seeing increased costs as they would get rebate cheques in the mail – I believe they're saying that's two-thirds of Albertans – except, as we suspected, this government had not done their due diligence on this large and controversial piece of legislation. This is why last year we saw the government harassing grieving families by demanding that their deceased relatives repay their carbon tax rebate, and it is why this year the CRA realized that the government had inadvertently been calculating the income of dependent children into the net family income that is used to determine the carbon tax rebate, which was never supposed to happen.

Luckily for us, the folks at the CRA caught this glaring mistake and were able to prevent families from being underpaid in their carbon tax rebates from the administrative side. Unfortunately, though, this meant that the CRA was in noncompliance with Alberta law. Such silly mistakes with easy solutions, which could have been prevented had the government taken the necessary time to consult properly, bring in the experts.

Now, Madam Speaker, I know that I'm being hard on this government, and I know that tax statutes amendment acts are necessary from time to time to ensure that our legislation is in line with federal legislation and to make it easier for Albertans to navigate filing their taxes. The CRA has a tough but important job in maneuvering an incredibly complicated system of rules, credits, and exemptions. Ensuring that Alberta's legislation is up to date means that they are working off the best and newest information in order to ensure continued efficiency in tax collection, which is why I'll support this bill and why the legacy caucuses voted in favour of the latest Tax Statutes Amendment Act, Bill 15 in 2017. But I would like some clarity, specifically around the issue of tax credits for fishermen and farmers.

I don't know how many of the government members have spent significant time farming, but I can tell you that many in our caucus have dedicated their lives to feeding this country. Farming is an absolutely grueling but essential job, Madam Speaker. It requires great personal sacrifice, significant capital risk, long hours, and hard labour. Farmers out in my area right now are running their seed drills all night long. It's amazing to watch and incredible, the amount of acreage that they're putting in. Farmers put up their own personal capital to seed crops that are under constant threat from Mother Nature in order to ensure that when we go to the grocery store, there are wholesome options that are reasonably priced. Farming is not a cushy job, but I am so glad that this province is blessed to have so many great folks that are taking up that torch.

You can imagine, with all of that information, why I'm confused that this legislation, which I understand was passed at the federal level, undoes existing federal tax exemptions for farmers' and fishermen's insurers, which has been in place since 2006. This will likely lead to higher insurance rates for farmers. Did this government even raise these concerns with their friend Justin Trudeau? Did they advocate on behalf of our hard-working fishermen and farmers? Madam Speaker, if we look around Alberta, farmers have enough insurance rate headaches thanks to several years of droughts, wet springs, and early winters that we certainly don't need to burden them with further expenses.

I also want to highlight another question that I would like answered. Section 71 changes the notification requirements for government communication with a person regarding the individual's information return. From my reading of this, there is the potential that this amendment would release the minister and the department from having the responsibility to ensure the person receives the request. Is there any particular reason that this clause is necessary? It seems there's a risk that we could potentially have taxpayers who the government has requested further clarity from but who are unaware of this because they missed one letter.

I don't know about you, Madam Speaker, but I'm not always home before 5 p.m. In fact, I rarely am, which means that I frequently miss registered mail drop-offs. Since I travel frequently between Edmonton and St. Paul for my work, as many Albertans do, that means that sometimes mail can slip through the cracks. Add to that fact that we have a hard time getting registered mail delivered out on the farm, and if you're not in the post office before 5 o'clock, you miss it completely.

If the government needs something from me in terms of my individual information return, should it not be their prerogative to ensure that they get in touch with me to give me the opportunity to fix whatever the issue may be? Perhaps I'm making a larger deal out of this than necessary, and please correct me if I'm wrong. I'd be grateful for some clarity on that.

Now, Madam Speaker, another group that I'm worried about are small and medium-sized businesses that may be impacted by this legislation's changes to the Corporate Tax Act. While these might be minor for massive organizations, who have accounting departments dedicated to ensuring that they're in compliance with tax legislation, there are far more small and medium-sized businesses in Alberta who do not have the luxury of a dedicated accounting team and may be negatively impacted by these changes. Has the government taken necessary precautions to ensure that these mom-and-pop shops would get the necessary information to remain compliant with the legislative changes?

The last available data from 2015 shows that there are 168,000 small and medium-sized businesses in Alberta, so while these changes may be small, their impact may be large. Has the government thought through what ripple effects may result from this legislation for the small and medium-sized business owners, that are the backbone of our community and our economy?

The point of me asking these questions, Madam Speaker, and my hope is that these questions will give the minister pause to double-check and hopefully avoid some of the unintended consequences that have been made in the past. Albertans deserve our very best, and I hope that with this legislation and a little diligence and fact checking, we are able to avoid being back here this time next year debating another tax statutes amendment act.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

9:00

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to Bill 17?

Seeing none, the hon. minister to close debate.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, for the information that was presented. I'd like to close to debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Well, good progress tonight. I would like to thank all members, and I'd particularly like to thank the opposition. We made, I think, quite a good effort tonight. I would move that we adjourn the House until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, which is actually the right motion this time.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 9:01 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

10 a.m.

Tuesday, May 15, 2018

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Prayers

The Acting Speaker: Good morning.

Let us each pray and reflect in our own way. May we always do the right thing unto others as we journey through this maze of life, where we are but servants chosen by others to bear the burdens, the challenges, and the duties of public life.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I request unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 3(1) to allow the Assembly to recess at this time and reconvene at 11 this morning.

[Unanimous consent granted]

[The Assembly adjourned from 10:01 a.m. to 11 a.m.]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 2 Growth and Diversification Act

Mr. Cooper moved the motion for second reading of Bill 2, Growth and Diversification Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 2, Growth and Diversification Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the government should pursue other measures to reduce the cost of doing business in the province, including introduction of legislation to eliminate the carbon levy, which, if implemented, would make the measures proposed in the bill unnecessary.

[Debate adjourned on the amendment May 9: Mrs. Aheer speaking]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, are any members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the chance to rise and talk a bit about our reasoned amendment. Of course, the reasoned amendment should be supported. It's totally logical and makes total sense because of what's happening in Alberta right now and what this three-year accidental government has done and what they haven't done. It's been said in here already that just repealing the carbon tax would do more to stimulate economic development in the economy than this picking winners and losers, this creating huge levels of bureaucracy to have yet another law.

I want to talk about the carbon tax for a sec and the number of people I bump into in coffee shops, restaurants, the number of people that e-mail me, text me, send letters to my constituency office that talk about the $35 carbon tax on their bill when the electricity charge portion is $50 or $60. When they couple that with high administration charges, Madam Speaker, it's absolutely crystal clear that because this money comes out of so many hard-working Albertans' pockets, so many family budgets, these people don't have enough left over to support the businesses in their community, to support their favourite charities, and to support each other. A reduction of the carbon tax, just in the everyday pocketbooks of everyday Albertans, everyone included, would go a long, long way to stimulate the economy.

Of course, when we realize that this money was transferred from the pockets of hard-working Albertans, from the balance sheets of successful and struggling small businesses to big renewable companies, to ideological phasing out of coal early, you just think of what we've got for this money, and it's absolutely huge, huge steps back. Madam Speaker, just the elimination of the carbon tax alone would ensure that Albertans can support their communities rather than support costly NDP lawsuits because of the early coal phase-outs, costly lawsuits that have absolutely destroyed our competitive advantage of cheap carbon.

Madam Speaker, of course, as we all know, the NDP expert that designed the climate leadership plan, the professor from the University of Alberta, mused about carbon leakage. He mused about industries, that instead of setting up in Alberta, instead of paying $10 million, $20 million, or $40 million in carbon tax because of using a virtually clean fuel like natural gas, what they've done is that they've gone to Montana, Saskatchewan, Louisiana, and other jurisdictions.

Madam Speaker, in Medicine Hat we have a great company called Methanex, an absolutely great corporate citizen, a great company, a great corporation. About two weeks ago the announcement on the front page of the Medicine Hat News was that instead of expanding in Alberta, Methanex has picked Louisiana. Again, you see that when you talk to many of these people who were around the edges of similar boutique tax credits, their preference was: no, for government to get its spending in line, for government to get its taxation fair, for government to ensure that all businesses have an equal opportunity. Of course, they, like so many others, have voted with their feet.

Madam Speaker, I was in Beaumont last week, and I was meeting with three younger drilling executives, guys who had come into the coffee shop in their work clothes. I came up and I introduced myself and shook their hands, and I said, “Isn't it great news that oil hit $72 a barrel?” The answer I got was: “It doesn't matter. We've just sent all our rigs to Texas. Taxes are too high here. Regulation is onerous.” It's unlikely they'll come back because – guess what? – the price of oil is also $72 in Texas.

Then one of them talked about this government's huge spending ways, its $8.8 billion operating deficit, its $15 billion or 15 and a half billion dollars combined deficit, and how he knew that today's debt is just a future tax. He knew how businesses and younger people were likely to be the targets and the ones that faced the most burden of that huge debt. He knew full well that this government is headed towards $96 billion, minimum, in debt in just three more years. Madam Speaker, and he was absolutely a believer that that was a future tax on him, a future tax on his kids, and a future tax on his industry, where other jurisdictions don't have that burden that has to be paid off by future generations.

Madam Speaker, that reminds me of that U of C report from about 10 days ago now. It's alarming – absolutely alarming – that a 16-year-old Albertan today is faced with a minimum of $42,000 more tax just on the NDP interest on their overspending and their borrowing. I think it was a 32- or a 35-year-old that's going to be faced with $50,000 in extra personal tax just on the interest – just on the interest – of this NDP government racking up huge debts. Of course, we know that interest rates have been rising a bit. Interest rates have gone up, and that problem may get worse. But, of course, that interest doesn't take into account the fact that today $56 billion of NDP borrowing has to be paid back, headed to $96 billion in just three more years.

You know, Madam Speaker, these are the kinds of things where, if this government and this Finance minister would have the strength to get these things in order rather than kick the can down the road, rather than putting this on the backs of future Albertans, absolutely Bill 2 would not be necessary. We wouldn't need to pick winners and losers. That is why this reasoned amendment should be supported. It is not necessary.

The carbon tax and the debt are two other things that I have to touch on. I'm always amazed when I talk to oil and gas job providers, oil and gas executives, these great technological drillers that quite often stand 20 miles from the Northwest Territories border to make money and create wealth and create taxation for all of us, how they say that the layers and layers of NDP burden are bad enough – the carbon tax is terrible; the regulations are onerous – but the biggest reason that they're deciding to allocate scarce capital and create jobs in jurisdictions other than Alberta is what this government did initially. That was the 20 per cent increase in corporate taxes for Albertans.

Of course, that corporate tax rate, that 20 per cent increase, was on top of what the federal government already taxes these companies. When you compare it to other jurisdictions, when you have the opportunity to set up your firm and your jobs in other jurisdictions, the fact is that our biggest competitor to the south is just reducing taxes 40 per cent. That our government is increasing taxes 20 per cent while our major competitor is making it 40 per cent more affordable to do business there is absolutely unimaginable and that it was thought of as sound policy. It is obviously going to have serious consequences unless this government gets its house in order.

Let's talk about that for a second. Madam Speaker, I'm appalled that three years ago, when this government was elected, our good energy companies said that what takes a week to get approved in Texas and takes two weeks to get approved in Saskatchewan takes up to four years to get approved in Alberta. I'm appalled that I have seen no improvement on that. We had the Energy department at Public Accounts about two weeks ago, and there didn't seem to be any meat on the bone for ensuring something as simple as making sure that the regulations are proper, fair, and streamlined so that these people could allocate their capital and create their jobs in a timely manner. It appears that it's not even on this government's radar. My goodness. When Saskatchewan can do it in two weeks, surely to goodness we can at least beat Saskatchewan. Surely to goodness, we can put in the focus and the resources to make sure that when Albertans and other people have the opportunity to invest money, we haven't put barriers in their way.

You know, as some of the proof about how this government's plan of big spending, big taxation, not getting to regulations, and huge debt for our kids and our economy isn't working, let's talk about tax revenues, how tax revenues have fallen across the board even though tax rates have been increased. As I've said in this House before, people are voting with their feet. People are putting time and money and effort into professional advice and professional paperwork to ensure that their business affairs are as tax efficient as possible, something that used to happen considerably less, I'm told, when we had a 10 per cent flat tax, when we had a government that tried harder to look for value for taxpayer dollars.

I still remember a report from about a year ago that talked about how more oil sands leases, bigger than the entire province of Prince Edward Island, had been turned back. Now, buying an oil sands lease and when you have to drill and how you get extensions and when you have to develop is a very, very complicated set of rules, and that's something that needs to be changed. But, Madam Speaker, I am absolutely amazed that companies would spend tens and tens and tens of millions of dollars to buy the right to develop a much-needed asset and then walk away from millions and millions of dollars because of this government's policies, this government's carbon tax, this government's 20 per cent hike in corporate tax.

Madam Speaker, we don't need little boutique tax plans, where the Minister of Finance or the cabinet get to pick winners and losers. We need an economy that's fair, that's vibrant, that gives every Albertan the opportunity to be involved, the opportunity to help each other, the opportunity to create choice in the services that are provided, and the opportunity to create jobs.

You know, another example, from a week or so ago, of the plan not working is Royal Dutch Shell, which is, like, the second- or the fourth- or the 10th-biggest company in the whole world, bigger than a lot of countries. Guess what they did? They, too, decided to vote with their feet. They said: we're not keeping our money in the Alberta oil sands. They put their shares in, I believe, a joint project with CNR up for sale. Almost $4 billion. Madam Speaker, if that money was still in our economy, all the money that Total and Marathon and others have taken out of Alberta, think of the jobs it would provide, think of the tax base that it would create, think of the services that we could provide, and think of the opportunities for young Albertans.

If you're a young Albertan without the NDP carbon tax, without the 20 per cent corporate tax, without the big tax hikes, you'd have an opportunity to actually go out and create, you know, a family, buy a house, pay off some of your university debts. My goodness, too many young kids are coming out of school with huge university debts and without jobs. That's the real problem. They don't have the jobs to pay these off. Madam Speaker, instead, what these youth are faced with is $40,000 to $50,000 in additional provincial tax – additional provincial tax – just on the interest of this Finance minister's and this government's big-spending ways. It's a burden that families have to face or leave. I know that Albertans are extremely qualified and hard working. I know that our future is bright, and I know that our opportunity is there.

I want to talk about opportunity. Madam Speaker, I stood up at a meeting in Medicine Hat about two weeks ago, and I said that the demand for oil is increasing and what a shame that it's not coming from Alberta, with our strong environmental records, our strong social justice records. We're always improving. We're always getting better. I said that because the demand for oil is currently 90 million barrels a day, and I've read that it's going up to 1 million barrels per day annually. So a year from now it'll be 91 million, and two years from now it'll be 92 million. Then I got schooled. There was a financial planner in the meeting who had some financial data that showed that it's actually 100 million barrels a day now.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a real pleasure to rise and offer some comments in response to the statement that the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat made this morning. First of all, let me just express my severe and ongoing disappointment that the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat has yet to bring doughnuts to share with the members of this Chamber. I hope that the good people of McBride's Bakery continue to ply him with doughnuts and that he is willing to share with the people of this Chamber.

I want to talk about some of the statements that the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat made today. On this issue of taxes, he has about as much credibility as he does on the issue of climate change, and that's precisely none, Madam Speaker. You know, it's well known that the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat funds climate change denial movies in his spare time. I really encourage him to get the opportunity to meet with the Governor General while she's here today because she's a very learned person in science and has seen through her own eyes that not only is climate change real and having severe and drastic impacts on the world but that the world is, in fact, round. She's seen it with her own eyes. I hope that the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat takes the opportunity to learn something from such a learned person, who has the privilege of being the vice-regal representative here in Canada.

My initial point was that the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat has no credibility on the issue of taxes, just like he has no credibility on the issue of climate change. Here's why. I can't remember which member of the opposition it was who claimed that, you know, our tax rates were driving businesses out of Alberta. That is a patently false statement, Madam Speaker. In fact, he mentioned Methanex. Of course, I've conferred with some of my colleagues here on this side. Methanex hasn't actually made a decision about where they're going to invest in their next plant, so for the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat to get up and say that they've already picked up and are moving to Louisiana is not entirely an accurate statement. I hope that the people of Alberta who are listening to this debate take that with a grain of salt.

More importantly, on the issue of taxes generally, the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, of course, along with all of his colleagues in the United Conservative Party, has long complained about tax rates that have gone up under this government. Of course, our government has implemented a $30-a-tonne carbon tax, and we raised the corporate tax rate from 10 per cent to 12 per cent, Madam Speaker. In my comments to another member from the opposition I had identified that Amazon had just opened a new head office of some kind – I can't remember which – in Vancouver a couple of weeks ago. The Prime Minister was there to celebrate. This was a great day for economic prosperity for the people of British Columbia. When I pointed out that the corporate tax rate in B.C. is also 12 per cent and that the carbon tax is $30 a tonne in B.C., I was actually corrected by my hon. colleagues after the fact. The carbon tax rate in British Columbia is actually $35 a tonne, $5 a tonne more than what we're charging here in Alberta, yet Amazon chose Vancouver as the site to locate its new, splashy headquarters and develop the economy there. It's a shame that they didn't choose Alberta, which is why we need to move quickly on the legislation that is before us.

Madam Speaker, I wish the members opposite would stop selling this snake oil that our tax rates are driving investment out of Alberta, because it's not supported by the evidence. We maintain overall the lowest taxed jurisdiction in the country. We're competitive with everywhere in North America, and of course we have a lifestyle that's beyond compare here in Alberta. We have an incredible health care system. We have an education system that's second to none. If some company wants to pick up stakes and move someplace where their children are going to have a third-world education system, you know, where the children of the workers are going to graduate from high school being barely literate . . .

11:20

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the referral amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity. I rise today to speak in favour of the reasoned amendment brought forward by my hon. colleague. Of course, I feel that some of the comments I will make today will be very reminiscent of a narrative and a conversation we keep having in this House about the destruction of the fundamental economics of this province, which has scared away so much investment. You know, I'm not happy about the song this government is singing nor the song sheet that they're singing from. We just seem to be getting that same story over and over again about the challenges we have with economic fundamentals and why we have to keep bringing forward other legislation, as I say, throwing candy at a situation after we've taken away the meal.

This government and this minister are continually looking for ways to position themselves as the great diversifiers, Madam Speaker, but as I just heard actually this morning in Public Accounts Committee, they have big plans, big strategies, big outcomes but very few measures to keep them accountable. In fact, I think there were 12 objectives and two outcomes to measure those objectives. I don't know how that equates in the real world. When you set objectives in the real world, you set objectives, you put measures by them, and then you achieve them. It's often said that if you can't measure, you can't manage, but I think that also, consequently, if you can't manage, you just don't get results.

Madam Speaker, from 1986 to 2016 Alberta's GDP did grow from $59.6 billion to $314.9 billion. During those 30 years oil and gas and mining decreased as a percentage of total GDP, decreased from 23.2 per cent to 17 per cent. That GDP number still represents – we talked about this in Public Accounts this morning – the third-largest economy by GDP in Canada, ahead of British Columbia. That's without the oil and gas industry. That doesn't sound like a failure of diversification in the past to me.

Alberta was able to grow in part because previous governments worked extremely hard to make Alberta the most business-friendly environment in Canada through fundamental economics, Madam Speaker. Fundamental economics attracted people from across this country and around the world, but it not only attracted people; it attracted investment. Last time I heard, you don't create a job until somebody puts an investment dollar at risk with the hope of some reward for creating that job. But you have to attract those people. You have to have them willing to take those risks.

Madam Speaker, we were one of the few debt-free jurisdictions on this planet, and that was attractive to investors and to businesses as well because there was an opportunity there. They knew that the burden of debt was going to be not only on their shoulders but on their employers' shoulders and their families' shoulders and the shoulders of future generations, their children and their grandchildren, on those who moved here. Over the years we saw so many people come from so many places across this country and around the world. They chose Alberta for those fundamental economics and the way of life that we generate and are able to sustain and for the social programs that we are able to sustain through the wealth that we were able to create by attracting that investment and attracting those businesses and then creating those jobs and creating the wealth thereby that came from that risk taking.

In the past we had corporate tax rates being reduced, we had personal income tax rates reduced, and the economy continued to grow. Actually, our provincial coffers prospered. Yet we've seen tax rates increase more recently. And what have we seen? A reduction in revenues. What does that tell you, Madam Speaker? I might add that the current government is all too happy to point out as a defining attraction for investment in Alberta that they opposed cutting those same taxes, but that attraction is really what we need to focus on. How do we attract people back here to grow that economic activity, grow the GDP, grow that economic pie so that we can have an opportunity to succeed, to actually have a chance to pay off that debt, to balance the budgets, to pay off that debt, and to start doing that today, not pushing it down the road to future generations, onto the shoulders of future generations? I think many of us in this House worry that that's not going to be just our children but our grandchildren to come.

We've heard from ministers and backbenchers alike from the NDP side that because Alberta has not had these programs previous to this government, it left Alberta and Albertans at a competitive disadvantage, Madam Speaker, that they were doing so to level the playing field and that without that level playing field, that was so magically created by this government with their initiatives, somehow we couldn't compete on a national and global scale. Well, again, this is curious to me. If I recall correctly, in 2013-2014 Alberta created 87 per cent of all the new jobs in Canada, in fact 82,300 new jobs in that year, and all that with a supposed competitive disadvantage and an unlevel playing field before we had some of these pieces of candy, or Band-Aids, that we see coming into play.

I think some will remember this term. It's faded into the past, and hopefully we can revive it in the future. That unlevel playing field was once called the Alberta advantage. Fundamental economics, Madam Speaker. Fundamental economics attracted people with lower tax rates, a positive business environment, and an absence of what we're hearing, oddly, in today's world, the terms "political risk" and "Alberta" used in the same sentence. I don't think I ever heard that in my life, and I was born and raised in this province. I don't think I ever heard the term "political risk." Yeah, I've heard it in other places. I lived in Nigeria. We heard about political risk there. We hear it about Venezuela and Saudi Arabia. In the Middle East we hear about political risk. But I ask all the members of this House and all Albertans: did they ever expect to hear the terms "political risk" and "Alberta" used in the same sentence?

Madam Speaker, Alberta then had the highest median wages in the country, and these weren't skewed because of a few high salaries. They were skewed because of broad high salaries for most Albertans and the opportunity for work for many of those that are currently unemployed today. They actually had the opportunity to work and to make a good living and to build a good life in this province. Growing an economy isn't all that valuable every day if work-seeking Albertans are unemployed, is it?

They're unemployed not just in the short term, but for many I'm hearing from in my community, it's going on two years. I'm hearing about people not being able to make their payments on their homes, and I'm hearing about bankruptcies. We've heard stories in this House of people approaching them and telling them that they've lost their house. We heard that from the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon just yesterday. Losing their houses. These are hard-working Albertans who have lost one or two incomes, who are trying to live a frugal and modest lifestyle and have tightened their belts as much as they possibly can, Madam Speaker, and still to this day cannot find employment because of the lack of the attraction of that investment and those businesses to create the jobs we need.

We need to generate wealth, Madam Speaker. We need to generate wealth in this province to balance our budgets. Those tax revenues from generating wealth will do that because the businesses will pay taxes, and the individuals that are employed by them – but they have to be employed first – will generate those tax revenues to help balance our budgets without reaching deeper and deeper into the pockets of hard-working Albertans, on whose shoulders this province is built.

And our seniors, Madam Speaker. Many of the seniors of today thought that they would be living a comfortable retirement, but many of them are not able to. Many of them hope to have part-time employment. We're seeing that. But you know what? Some of them are having to steal jobs from the youth that we once employed before we jacked up our minimum wages and things like that that made it attractive to hire youth without the experience. So what are they doing? They're hiring 65- and 70-year-olds who need that income just to survive. That's a sad reflection of the way our economy is today and how we are not generating the wealth to support not only our budgets and balancing our budgets but to pay off our debt and to generate the types of social services which a compassionate society will do.

You know, when I hear from the Finance minister that things are looking up, up, up, I worry again, because that's not what the Albertans that I talk to are telling me. They're expressing to me that they're having difficulties paying their household bills, yet we hear in this House that we want to put more through the PACE program, that we want to put more tax burden on people so that when they lose a job, they're more likely to lose their homes much more rapidly because their ability to reduce their burn rate through something that is a fixed cost on their tax bill will not be something that they can adjust. They can't go to their bank and say: I'm going to skip a payment here; I'm going to skip a payment; I'm going to reduce 10 per cent, working with the banks. I know the banks have worked hard with their clients to keep them in their homes, and I hope that that will continue in this province from a compassionate standpoint.

When we hear from the polls, pollsters and we hear from Albertans face to face telling us that they're still struggling, they're not saying: up, up, up. They're saying that they're worried, worried, worried. They're worried about the future of this province. Madam Speaker, some of them are worried about themselves, but I hear more often that they're worried about their kids not being able to find jobs. We know that the highest unemployment is in the youth segment of our population, who now are being deeply affected by taxes and deeply affected by the lack of investment, the lack of new businesses, the failures of so many small businesses, many in the service and hospitality sector, that just can't survive with the burden of the carbon tax, the burden of the minimum wage increases, and the burden of some of the employment and labour costs that have been pushed on them even though they're struggling today just to survive. That's sad for me, Madam Speaker.

So the government has decided that to turn the tide, they will introduce Bill 2, the Growth and Diversification Act. This bill builds on Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act, which introduced two tax credits, the Alberta investor tax credit and the capital investment tax credit. As a whole, I think both Bill 30 and Bill 2 are focusing on the trees at the expense of actually nurturing a mighty forest, that we once had here in Alberta. Both bills are basically applying – I used the phrase earlier – a Band-Aid to a critical injury of bad fundamental economics, Madam Speaker. The throwing of that candy after taking away that attractive plate of meat and potatoes that Albertans have enjoyed for so many years, taking that away from them and throwing candy at them: that's great. It's going to rot their teeth at the same time.

Madam Speaker, choose your own metaphor. They all paint a bleak picture of trying to undo a failure of fundamental economics in this province and regulatory and taxation failure that have been wrought by this government. We wouldn't even need programs like these if the government had not so severely damaged Alberta's attractiveness for business and investment, business and investor confidence and put us in the realm of being a jurisdiction of political risk. By my last count – and that was now over a year ago – $34.8 billion of foreign direct investment has left this province. I think I called it yesterday that they are the canary in the coal mine, again a very appropriate term given what's been done to decimate our coal industry in those towns that are attached to our coal industry in this province.

We heard just this morning in Public Accounts Committee that not only do we have that damaging effect but very little is being done. I think they've got $5 million allocated. I think that might be just enough to buy all the shutters to shutter up all the businesses in those communities because we have not anticipated what the outcome was going to be, what I call a disorderly transition rather than an orderly transition, which brings me, Madam Speaker, to such things as the carbon tax. The carbon tax always comes to mind because it has layered another burden on top of Albertans, with all economic pain and no environmental gain. That is one of the reasons I am speaking in favour of this recent amendment.

Madam Speaker, the University of Calgary School of Public Policy issues a number of great documents. A recent personal favourite was by former Minister of Finance from Saskatchewan Dr. Janice MacKinnon. In that paper they state that to grow the economy, you need to consider important policy objectives like the creation of a positive environment for business. They say that to spur economic growth, you need to do certain things but that this NDP government in Alberta has abandoned traditional opportunities. In fact, in Saskatchewan back in the 1990s they did abandon traditional NDP policy, which normally "supported raising taxes on business and high-income earners in the name of tax fairness." They call that business-killing initiatives. "However," the paper notes, "raising corporate and personal income taxes discouraged investment and economic development." Discouraged investment and economic development.

When you tax them and then you try and throw some candy back at them, Madam Speaker, you really don't achieve anything. That bucket is still leaking even more. You're just trying to pick winners, and you're trying to pick losers. You're trying to fill up the coffers with other people's money and then redistribute it, all the while burning a bunch of that money up through administration and other costs.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to offer some comments, if I can, on some of the statements that were made by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. First of all, let me just start off by saying that I have never seen a group of people more resistant to facts than the hon. members over there. It doesn't matter how many times we stand up here and talk about the fact that our tax rates are not discouraging investment, that, in fact, we are the most competitive taxed jurisdiction in the entire continent, they get up and say the opposite. It's true for climate change. It's true for a whole host of things on which they are resistant to facts. They are so focused on their ideology that they refuse to look at the evidence and make decisions based on that, which is really disappointing. I think the people of Alberta deserve better, and they have been getting better from this government for the past three years.

You know, I want to talk about, first of all – I also want to address a phrase, "political risk." This is a phrase that the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has used a couple of times recently in debate. He says that, oh, he's surprised that he's heard the words "political risk" used in Alberta for the first time, and they're only talking about it because of the NDP.

Madam Speaker, I want to confirm what the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has said because I, too, have heard the phrase "political risk," but it's in relation to the Member for Calgary-Lougheed and the United Conservative Party. I'm hearing the phrase "political risk" from women, and I'm hearing the phrase "political risk" from gender minorities, from LGBTQ people. I'm hearing the phrase "political risk" from ethnic minorities, from indigenous people. They are scared witless that those guys over there are going to win an election and take away their hard-earned rights, that have been championed by this government. So when the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek talks about political risk, he'd better remember that there are a lot of Albertans who are scared of the political risk that his own party poses to the good people of this province.

Now, on the issue of economic diversification, one of the key objectives of this bill is to enhance economic diversification in the digital realm, and in fact the interactive digital media tax credit is designed to do just that, Madam Speaker. This came from extensive consultations with video game designers, people working in the digital industry. They pointed at one jurisdiction that really got this right and has spurred development in this area better than any jurisdiction in the country, and that's Quebec. I wondered, as I do when I listen to the members opposite, what the tax rates are in Quebec, because apparently we hear nothing but the fact that our high taxes are driving out investment, that our taxes are so high that they're driving investment in the interactive digital media world to Quebec.

What is the corporate tax rate in Quebec, Madam Speaker? You'd be shocked to know that it's 11.9 per cent provincially, .1 per cent lower than the corporate tax rate here in Alberta. What are the provincial income tax rates? I was shocked. I was shocked to find out that a person earning $42,000 a year pays 15 per cent in provincial income taxes. That is our highest personal income tax rate in this province. People earning $300,000 a year or more are paying 15 per cent. What are people paying who are earning $300,000 or more in Quebec? It's a whopping 25.75 per cent, more than 10 per cent higher than our highest provincial income tax bracket, and that starts at $103,000 a year.

You know, the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek isn't paying attention because, like I said, he is as resistant to facts as everybody else on that side of the aisle, Madam Speaker, and I'm sure that he's whiling away his time wondering how he can attack the rights of indigenous people and other minorities that that party opposite seems to be intent on attacking, but . . .

Mr. McIver: Point of order, Madam Speaker.

11:40

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. McIver: The hon. minister is out of line. Under 23(h), (i), and (j) he's imputing false motives to another member in order to create disruption, and the hon. member needs to apologize and withdraw his remarks.

The Acting Speaker: An hon. member wishing to respond to the point of order? The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: I apologize and withdraw my remarks, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Would you like to continue?

Mr. Schmidt: Yes, I would, Madam Speaker.

Debate Continued

Mr. Schmidt: You know, my previous comments aside, I do have a question, though, for the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. Why has the development of the interactive digital media technology sector in . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the reasoned amendment? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you. It's a privilege to speak in favour of this reasoned amendment proposed by my hon. colleague. The interesting thing, as I've been listening to the debate go back and forth here today, is that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar continues to indicate that this is all about comparing taxes. You know, I think that we've tried to make the argument very clear that this is actually not just about taxes but specifically about the environment that has been created in Alberta. So through you to that hon. member, Madam Speaker, I would like to just indicate to him that our argument is specifically about the environment that the government has set up that has chased away the investment in Alberta. This is very important for the members opposite to realize, that we're not actually attacking one specific thing but a whole suite of things that they have done in order to be able to chase away that investment.

Now, the way that the investment trickles down is that the investment comes in, and as the investment comes in, it creates the jobs that Albertans need. This is really what we're trying to fight for. I actually don't believe that the members opposite are trying to chase away investment or that they're trying to stop Albertans from having gainful employment. I don't believe that. In fact, when I talk to people, I say: you know, some of the nicest people I've met are from the NDP side. Here's the problem. The problem is that they might have the best of intentions, but, again, if you were to go to a mechanic, and the mechanic didn't do the job properly, you'd fire the mechanic. You would not go back. This is the concern that I hear from Albertans. They are very concerned about outcomes, not best intentions.

I think this government would get an A for best intentions, but the problem is that they continue to make a bad situation worse. Now, we know full well that with the collapse in oil, many jurisdictions throughout the world have suffered because of that, and Alberta's economy is very much dependent upon oil, and there's nobody arguing that. What we are arguing, Madam Speaker, is the fact that the policies that this government has brought forward have exacerbated the economic downturn in this province.

When I take a look at Bill 2, Growth and Diversification Act, this again is another response or reaction to, I guess, maybe best intentions that just haven't played out the way that they feel they should. This is why, you know, I believe that we don't need to have this bill, and this is the reason why I believe that the reasoned amendment is the proper go-forward strategy, because had we not introduced, first of all, the carbon tax, had we not introduced the increase in the tax burden, had we not increased minimum wage, had we not – and the list can go on. It may be the best of intentions, but the problem – and I've described this in the House before – is that this government seems to be the government of unintended consequences.

So we're in a situation now where the government is arguing for I guess we would call it maybe a boutique tax program, picking winners and losers. This is something that I've been very interested in as I've watched for the last three years. I'm not saying that they are arrogant, but there this an arrogance to the idea or belief that we know how to be able to micromanage an economy. There is an arrogance to the idea that we believe that we can actually mess around with supply and demand, which creates the equilibrium, and figure it out better. History has proven that when you allow those market forces to be able to float freely in free-market economies, as we call them, that creates a better outcome, because the markets know.

There are two forces in the market. There are those who supply, and there are those who consume, or demand. Those two forces have to come to an agreement about what is the right approach forward, and there are the best of intentions out there, and there are lots of businesses that fail. The problem is that this government, through programs like this, has determined that they know better, that they know how to micromanage this economy, and that they know what is the best, growing approach for the future. I have to say that there is an arrogance to that, that that's something that has never proven to be true as we have moved into the 21st century.

Again, I've listened to the arguments by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and you know what? I wanted to give him the benefit of the doubt, that perhaps he has an argument that I haven't already heard from members on the opposite side, but I haven't heard an argument that sways me to believe that this type of a tax boutique is something that we should embrace and use as a go-forward plan.

Now, one of the reasons why I think we see some of the problems in Alberta is because of the regulatory burden. I actually had a private member's bill, Madam Speaker, that I brought forward to try to address this issue. The NDP government voted that down and rejected the idea. In fact, the argument that they gave me was: well, we're addressing it as we go.

It sounds similar to when I talked to the Minister of Labour about the consequences of minimum wage. I said to her: "Listen, you know, this isn't the first time we've actually done this in the world. We think that if you just raise minimum wage, there won't be outcomes or consequences to that." I said: "Take a look at the plethora of studies out there, the peer-reviewed articles that are done. It shows that for every 10 per cent increase in minimum wage, people between 18 and 24 have an increase in unemployment of between 2 to 8 per cent, so it's a terrible trade-off." I said to her, "Well, have you done an economic impact study?" That's the first question I asked. Then the second question I asked was, "If you haven't done one, are you going to do one?" and she said: "No. We're going to assess as we go." Well, it's been three years now. Unemployment amongst young people is 13.2 per cent.

Mr. Schmidt: Historically low.

Mr. Hunter: You know, again, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar: I don't know if he knows anything other than angry, but he heckled out "historically low."

Mr. Schmidt: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: A point of order has been called.

Mr. Hunter: Oh, he can dish it out, but he can't take it.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Schmidt: Yup, under 23(h), (i), and (j). I heard the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner call me an angry person, Madam Speaker. You know, I recognize that I get under their skin, that they don't like a lot of the things that I say. But under 23(h), (i), and (j) I think that to characterize me as angry and then to sit down and say, "Oh, he can dish it out, but he can't take it" is language that's abusive or insulting, and I request that the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner withdraw his remarks and apologize.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to the point of order?

Mr. Hunter: Madam Speaker, I believe that the words I used were that he doesn't know anything other than anger. I didn't call him an angry person, just to make sure that the member understands what I did say, and that's what I said. But if I have gotten under his skin, I apologize, and I withdraw those remarks.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, I believe that if we could just, you know, revert to discussion of the policy of the bill and the reasoned amendment and try to refrain from directly speaking to each other, maybe just through me, that would be the best way to do it. At this time there is no point of order.

Please continue.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Now, again, I was talking about the minimum wage issue and how it is a terrible trade-off to have 13.2 per cent unemployment among young people. The point, again, that I was making is that there is lots of evidence out there that shows that the increase in unemployment amongst young people is a terrible trade-off for those increases in the minimum wage. So I asked: "You know, have you done an economic impact study? What are you going to do about this, and would you ever stop?" The answer specifically was, "No, we are not going to do an economic impact study, and we will assess as we go."

Well, again, three years into this now, we're already seeing unemployment among young people at 13.2 per cent. When is it enough? When is it that this government is going to start to say that there is a terrible trade-off and that the unintended consequences were not what we expected? Again, I'm not saying that this government wants to see this unemployment or wants to see Albertans not gainfully employed, but I am saying that when they see the outcomes of these things, I wish that they would reassess and say: we need to be able to take a look at this process and move forward in a positive way. But I haven't seen that yet. I haven't seen that in their approach.

With this bill, the idea of having a tax boutique, as it were: even if it did work, have they measured? I was at a PAC, a Public Accounts Committee, meeting this morning, and the committee asked the Economic Development and Trade deputy minister and his team, you know, what kind of measurables they're using, whether or not they are measuring the success of these things. It was all anecdotal, the evidence that they gave, which is: well, our economy is increasing, in terms of GDP growth, fastest in the country, and it's projected to go the same this year. That was the evidence that they gave, but the question has to be asked, which is, once again: is the money that is being spent, these tax boutiques, the result of this increase or this growth? They could not give us an answer, Madam Speaker.

Again, if this is supposedly the answer to our woes, this concept, then there must be some way of being able to measure to say that, yes, this is actually working or that this injection of cash in terms of the Growth and Diversification Act is going to work or has worked. I don't know if there's any evidence that I've seen that shows that.

The other thing that I was concerned about with this is that it's unclear if the companies who have received the tax credits during the first incarnation of the program were in actual need of the tax credit support. You know, obviously, the question is: is there a private-sector vehicle that can provide the funding or the initial start-up capital costs that would help that organization or that group or that company to be able to get on their own two feet? I don't know whether or not even the first iteration or incarnation of this program can show that that is actually the case, that, again, these tax boutiques were actually of benefit or helpful to facilitating growth in the economy or in these areas.

The other question that I had that I was a little concerned about is that as of March 16, 2018, there was unallocated money to the tune of roughly 5 per cent of the first AITC funding. Now, that was a first-come, first-served funding pool, but the question is: was it undersubscribed, or was it not successful in its delivery? Was there too much red tape to be able to get it out in time? What were the reasons why it was 5 per cent undersubscribed or underutilized?

These are some of the things that, you know, I think any prudent government would take a look at and say: what have we done right, and what have we done wrong? This is really the major reason why I cannot support this bill, because I do not believe that this government, with the best of intentions, is going to be able to get it right.

You know, B.C. and Quebec supposedly have been doing this for a while. By us injecting and getting in this late in the game, how much of the market share can we actually access and get ourselves? Again, these are the questions that I think an economic impact study would actually tell us, yet again we've seen nothing from the government that says: "This is how it is going to roll out. This is what's going to happen if we inject this amount of money, that we will be in a position where we can see this number of jobs and this amount of growth in our GDP."

With that, Madam Speaker, I will just conclude by saying that I believe that this could all be fixed by having the government not do these tax boutiques and instead be able to provide an opportunity for Albertans to have that gainful employment or that gainful business opportunity by getting out of the way. In the olden days they used to call it salutary neglect.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members that want to speak under 29(2)(a)? I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to talk to the hon. member that was just on his feet about some of his remarks. He talked about how the government is making changes, these boutique tax changes, essentially trying to undo the damage that their other policies have done. I wanted to get his opinion on the fact that, well, in the past, under previous governments there have been several periods of time when we've been in a recession and several periods of time when energy prices have been low, but never before in history have we had those things happen at the same time as a tremendous outflow of capital. That has only happened under the NDP government. Never before, despite all the recessions in the past, despite all the low energy prices in the past, has 35-plus billion dollars leaked out of Alberta. Essentially, there has to be another reason. Clearly, an obvious place may be the policies that the NDP has put in place. But I'd like the hon. member to have an opportunity to elaborate on this fact.

Mr. Hunter: You know, I think the member makes a very important point, and I think the point is this. Businesses want certainty. They want to have a belief that if they're going to play the game of business and developing business, the rules aren't going to change or that the umpire is going to be fair. It has been clearly shown throughout history – we've seen it in B.C. and Ontario – that when an NDP government gets in, it scares businesses to death because they are absolutely not convinced that the NDP government will not change the rules midway through a project. They do not believe that the playing field is going to be fair, that they will have an opportunity to be able to provide for the people in their businesses.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2.1) the Assembly will now stand adjourned until 1:30 this afternoon.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, May 15, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Hon. members, the RCA Band under the direction of Captain Christopher Embree, CD, will now play a brief musical interlude, The Arrival of the Queen of Sheba, originally a sinfonia for two oboes and strings from the oratorio Solomon by George Frederick Handel, which premiered in London on March 17, 1749. Solomon is rarely performed in its entirety, but Handel's bright and lively The Arrival of the Queen of Sheba interlude is a widely appreciated processional set piece.

Please enjoy listening to the Royal Canadian Artillery brass band ensemble performing The Arrival of the Queen of Sheba.

[The Premier and the Deputy Sergeant-At-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Governor General]

[The Mace was draped]

[The Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

The Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms: Ladies and gentlemen, all rise, please.

Mr. Speaker, Her Excellency the Right Honourable Julie Payette awaits.

The Speaker: Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms, admit Her Excellency the Right Honourable Julie Payette, Governor General of Canada.

[A fanfare of trumpets sounded]

[Preceded by the Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms, Her Excellency the Right Honourable Governor General of Canada, Julie Payette, CC, CMM, COM, CQ, CD, her party, and the Premier entered the Chamber. Her Excellency took her place upon the throne]

The Speaker: Ladies and gentlemen, I would now invite Mr. R.J. Chambers, accompanied by the Royal Canadian Artillery Band, to lead us in the singing of our national anthem. Please join us in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Your Excellency, hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, please be seated.

On behalf of all members and Albertans I am honoured to welcome you, Your Excellency, to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

Your Excellency is an outstanding Canadian whose exceptional achievements range across a number of fields. You worked as an astronaut. You flew two missions in space, and you served for many years as a capsule communicator for NASA. You are a scientist and an engineer of considerable repute and have been active in the educational, sports, and cultural matters of our nation.

Your Excellency, you are a role model for young Canadians and most especially for young Canadian women. Do not underestimate your influence and your voice, that needs to be heard. You reinforce our confidence and hope in the future of our province and of this great nation we call Canada. We are proud of your appointment as Canada's 29th Governor General.

It is truly a momentous occasion to have the Governor General here with us in our Chamber. It is only the third time in the history of our province that a Governor General has addressed the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. Representing Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, Queen of Canada, Your Excellency's presence here today strengthens the connection between the Crown and our Assembly. The Governor General continues to play an essential role in our constitutional democracy and through official visits such as this helps to bring us together as Canadians, a bond that is not hampered by boundaries but which celebrates our diversity and our strengths from sea to sea to sea.

With great respect for you, your accomplishments, and the esteemed position you hold, I wish to extend Your Excellency the best wishes from all members of this Assembly as you make your way through our great province and as you travel through our beloved country.

I am pleased to invite the Premier to make her remarks to Your Excellency and to all Albertans.

Thank you.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Your Excellency, colleagues, distinguished visitors, ladies and gentlemen, what a great pleasure it is for me today to welcome Her Excellency the Right Honourable Julie Payette, Governor General and commander-in-chief of Canada, to this Assembly.

While she is still relatively new to the vice-regal role, having been installed as our 29th Governor General only last October, Mme Payette is very well known to Canadians. We know her best, as the Speaker has already mentioned, of course, as one of Canada's most accomplished astronauts. She flew two space shuttle missions and was the first Canadian to board the International Space Station, she served for many years as capsule communicator to NASA's Mission Control Center in Houston, and from 2000 to 2007 she was Chief Astronaut for the Canadian Space Agency.

Her down-to-earth accomplishments, to name only a few of them, are no less impressive. She was a scholar at the Woodrow Wilson International Center in Washington, DC. She served as the chief operating officer of the Montreal Science Centre. A long-time member of the board of Own the Podium, she was recently appointed to the International Olympic Committee's Women in Sport Commission. She is also a gifted musician and singer and has sung with the Orchestre symphonique de Montréal and Toronto's Tafelmusik Chamber Choir.

Mr. Speaker, Her Excellency's experience as an astronaut has given her the rare privilege of looking upon our wonderful nation in its entirety from the vantage point of outer space. She has seen Canada as we all should strive to see it, as a precious and beautiful gift without lines or divisions. In her unifying role as representative of Her Majesty the Queen, Her Excellency is travelling the nation to meet Canadians of all backgrounds to learn the stories and aspirations of Canada's greatest resource, its people. We are honoured that Her Excellency has chosen to visit Alberta so soon in her tenure as Governor General.

Your Excellency, all Albertans are honoured to receive you as our guest. We hope that you enjoy your visit to our province, and we know that you will experience the great warmth of Alberta hospitality. You will find that Albertans are to the core of their very being proud and committed Canadians. Merci, Votre Excellence, et bienvenue.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

I would now like to welcome Her Excellency the Right Honourable Julie Payette, Governor General of Canada, to address this Legislative Assembly. Your Excellency.

Address to the Legislative Assembly by Her Excellency the Right Honourable Julie Payette

Her Excellency: Merci. Thank you. Mesdames et messieurs, ladies and gentlemen, I first would like to acknowledge that I am on Treaty 6 territory, and very proudly so. Because I cannot speak all the languages of the First Nations of Alberta, I can speak a greeting in the First Nation language of the Algonquins, where Rideau Hall, the residence of the Governor General, is located. [Remarks in Algonquin]

I would like to go down here, if you don't mind, because I am so humbled by the invitation to address this venerable institution and all of you distinguished guests. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, Mme Premier, M. chef de l'opposition. I am humbled because I never thought in a hundred years that I would be standing here, truly, addressing you.

The good reason is that I have a long-standing relationship, actually a love relationship with western Canada and Alberta in particular and that for many decades. From the moment I could buy an airplane ticket on my own, I flew from the east because the real skiing is right here. I came to ski, and I discovered something that was really similar to where I came from, the same kind of warmth of people.

Then I got chosen in 1992 to become an astronaut, and they sent us to – you know that province next door? Saskatchewan. They sent me to become a pilot in Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, and they sent me to survival training in Jasper Lake, Alberta. It was in November 1993. You may not remember; I do. In November 1993 we went from plus 10 to minus 25 in, like, a day, and we weren't acclimatized. They left us in the forest out there to survive with the contents of the seat pack of an ejection seat to demonstrate that we can actually survive until the rescue folks can come to us. We did. They plucked us out of the forest after a little while, and they took us to Hinton. I have this memory of the best hamburger ever in Hinton, Alberta. It was just so amazing, because we hadn't eaten. It was just Alberta beef, the best. The best.

But that was not the end. I was so impressed by Alberta that when I flew in space in 1999, there were places where I needed to take my crew, and this province was one of them. In 1999, after our flight, which occurred in May, June, we came in the summer here to Alberta. We, of course, went to those places like Ottawa, Montreal, and we even ended up in Nunavut. Nunavut in 1999 had just become a new territory, and we had brought the flag with us into space to honour the new territory.

We came back down, and we landed in Edmonton. We went to see our friends at the science centre and Telus World. We gave a presentation, and then there was a local person who lent us a 1971 Oldsmobile Cutlass, and we took off on highway 2, drove down from Edmonton to Calgary. Six astronauts, five Americans, in one Cutlass. We stopped at the Dairy Queen in Red Deer. Is it still there? It was in the middle of summer. The chinook was there, so it was a really, really nice day. Everybody was out there having an ice cream, so we came out of the car and we had an ice cream, and it was just amazing, because it is exactly what this is about. Then we ended up in Calgary being received with full honours for the Calgary Stampede and receiving, you know, the warmest of welcomes.

One of the newspapers in Calgary had taken a photo of me and the pilot of my crew. His name was Rick Husband. We were sitting somewhere. They had a caption underneath that said: Canadian astronaut Julie Payette and rich husband are coming to Calgary. I was, like: all right; I'm getting there. Unfortunately, you may know that Rick Husband was the commander of the space shuttle Columbia, that failed to re-enter the atmosphere in 2003. But he had fond memories of his trip to Alberta.

You're probably wondering why I'm telling you all this. I came again and again and again; I've been everywhere in this province. I've been to Coutts. I've been to Grande Prairie. I've been to Lethbridge. I've been to Fort Smith. That was my last – oh. That's true: Fort Smith is not in Alberta, right? Well, we played a game with my son. Fort Smith, yes, on the map is in the Northwest Territories, but we played that game where we had one foot in Alberta and one foot in the Northwest Territories. Of course, you can't distinguish, right? It's the same soil, the same planet.

That's exactly why I'm talking about this. It's because when we fly in space, that's exactly what we see. We see no distinction. Often the planet makes little distinction except if it's a geographical one. We share a vast, diverse, spectacular country, all of us, and we work together to accomplish things. You do so in this very room every day. We work together so that we can move forward and improve things and so that we can ensure prosperity for all Canadians, including our children, in the future. That's who we are in this country. That's who you are in Alberta, an incredible place.

You have here in this province, more than anywhere else I've ever seen, a culture of open innovation, a resilience, a leadership, a will to move forward no matter what happens. Yet when I think of Alberta, because I've been here so many times, it's mostly the people that I think of. I think of the warmth, of the pride, of the hard-working people of Alberta, and they remind me of other people throughout this country. Then I think of the fact that you're really, really good – I was at the University of Alberta just an hour ago – at developing and exporting talent, excellence, resourcefulness, highly qualified personnel. I know that for a fact.

Actually, I know this first-hand now in this new position. Just last week we had five Albertans that received the Order of Canada, the highest distinction in this country. One of them you might have heard of, Mark Messier, a guy who exemplifies almost alone exactly what this province is all about: hard work, teamwork, and sharing, always.

Ce qui me mène aussi à dire que je suis maintenant dans une nouvelle position, Gouverneure générale, mais un prédécesseur, Roland Michener, from Lacombe, Alberta, was the 20th Governor General. Roland Michener a été le premier décoré de l'Ordre du Canada au monde. Puisque l'ordre a été créé en 1967 et qu'il était le Gouverneur général, donc il a reçu le premier insigne de l'Ordre du Canada. So now, if you did not know this before, then please use that at the next cocktail hour. Yes, the first person that was decorated with the Order of Canada was an Albertan, Roland Michener.

Let me go back to perspective, if I can, for a minute. I know I only have five minutes, so I'm going to go fast. Perspective. One of the greatest privileges that we get when we see the planet from above is to see with perspective, to realize how important and precious home is and how much we need to put in some work.

La planète, c'est tout ce qu'on a. C'est la seule qu'on a encore aujourd'hui, et donc on doit s'en occuper et travailler ensemble pour répondre à ses besoins et à ses défis. Because challenges we have. You know this more than anybody else in this room. There are a lot of challenges, and they're not going to go away. It's through collaboration and it's through the will to make things happen that we move forward.

Oh, by the way, I do have another link with Alberta. You might know that I flew my second mission in space in 2009. At the time, when I arrived onboard the space station, there were people onboard, including a Canadian. The only time so far – this will be rectified in the future – that there have been two Canadians orbiting the planet at the same time, it was me and the chancellor of the University of Calgary. So, again, another connection.

Certainly, you know more than anybody else, because you serve the people of Alberta every day, that we have to be very careful. Things move fast in today's world. Things change. We can't be complacent. We have to always keep our guard up. I know that you will continue to do what you do so well in this room, that you will continue to look out for those who have less, that you will stand up for those who can't, just like those Famous Five, whose mural is right in the middle of the city of Edmonton, who stood up at a time when there was a need for that; that you will continue to do what you do particularly well in this province, welcome people who seek harbour; that you will continue to use, exploit, and share your land intelligently; that you will continue to reach across differences and also seek opportunities for more collaboration and team work; and that you will never cease to base your judgment on facts and evidence, to be curious, and to ask questions, because that is the premise by which we find solutions.

Let's not forget, of course, because that's what we are, to celebrate who we are and what we'd like to become. There is no doubt that this province, in particular, the economic powerhouse of Canada, has made a tremendous contribution in the past to the well-being of our country. Without a strong Alberta, Canada could never reach its full potential in the future.

Thank you for welcoming me into these venerable walls. I actually do feel at home. Merci de m'avoir accueilli si chaleureusement. Thank you for the service that you do for this province and for the entire country.

In closing, I hope you will allow me to use a parting phrase that we flyers use to send each other off on a really important and challenging mission, and that's Godspeed to you all. Merci beaucoup. Merci. [Standing ovation]

I wanted to do this at the beginning, but of course I forgot because I was too impressed. Mr. Speaker, who was so kind to lend me his chair for a few minutes, I brought something that astronauts bring. It's what we do get to see. This here is a picture taken by a colleague of mine two years ago onboard the International Space Station. We see in its entirety, at night, bathed in the beautiful northern lights, the entire province of Alberta. This is the highway we travelled right here. This is Edmonton, Red Deer, Calgary. There's Grande Prairie, and then there's Fort McMurray. We see a little bit of Saskatoon, but don't tell. This is, hopefully, something that will remind you that you inhabit a fantastic world.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Your Excellency, you said that you had five minutes left. Actually, I would be prepared to give you far more time than any other individual in this room. If you were surprised that you were sitting here as our Governor General in this place, you would almost be as surprised as myself, who is a Speaker welcoming the Governor General of Canada. You used the word "spectacular." We do have a spectacular country, and I think we have a spectacular Governor General.

Thank you, Your Excellency.

2:00

Ladies and gentlemen, I would now invite Mr. R.J. Chambers, accompanied by the Royal Canadian Artillery Band, to lead us in the singing of God Save the Queen. Please remain standing at its conclusion.

Hon. Members:

God save our gracious Queen,
Long live our noble Queen,
God save the Queen!
Send her victorious,
Happy and glorious,
Long to reign over us,
God save the Queen!

The Speaker: Au revoir.

[Preceded by the Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms, Her Excellency, her party, and the Premier left the Chamber as a fanfare of trumpets sounded]

[The Mace was uncovered]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Hon. members, we will now take a two-minute pause before starting our regular Routine. You will have a tough time in the next couple of hours upping that.

Hon. members, on behalf of all of you I will be extending appreciation and thanks to the staff of so many that helped organize this event. It took a lot of commitment and time.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to welcome four important guests seated in your gallery today who were here to watch the address by the Governor General of Canada, and I'd ask that they please rise as I call their names. First, we have Grand Chief Isaac Laboucan-Avirom, the Treaty 8 grand chief and chief of the Woodland Cree; Grand Chief Wilton Littlechild, the Treaty 6 grand chief and member of the Order of Canada and the Alberta Order of Excellence; Audrey Poitras, president of the Métis Nation of Alberta; and Chief Crowchild, chief of the Tsuut'ina Nation. I would ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two special visitors. Former MLA Dave Coutts represented my riding of Livingstone-Macleod for three terms, from '93 to 2008. During his 15 years in office Dave served as the minister of government services from 2001 to 2004 and as minister of environment and sustainable resource development from 2004 to 2006. Dave is joined by his grandson today, 12-year-old Graham Morrison. Graham attends Brookside elementary school here in Edmonton and missed his class visit to the Legislature, so his grandfather is making good on his promise to show him around today. I don't think anyone should be surprised to see Graham back here in a more official capacity very soon. They are seated today in the Speaker's gallery. I'd ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you the brilliant students from Eastview middle school in the spectacular constituency of Red Deer-South. The students are accompanied by their teachers and chaperones. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I'd like to welcome a number of special guests from around the province who are seated in your gallery today, who were also here to watch the address of Her Excellency the Right Honourable Julie Payette to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. If these individuals could please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly: Marichu Antonio; Marlene Poitras; Meeka Otway; Stephen Mandel; Hal Danchilla; David Dorward, former MLA; Erika Barootes; Glen Resler, the Chief Electoral Officer; and Doug Wylie, the Auditor General of Alberta. Please give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through you and to you I'd like to introduce your constituents and close friends Jennifer Kerslake and her mother, Natalie Sauer. They are both committed public servants. Jennifer works for Medicine Hat College and Natalie for the city of Medicine Hat. I'd ask both Natalie and Jennifer to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have three introductions if I may. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature Meghan Keating – if you could please rise when I say your name – who grew up in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, and then studied to be an MRI technologist at NAIT here in Edmonton. She has worked in diagnostic imaging for 11 years and recently volunteered on the playground committee in Harvest Hills through the NHCA. They recently received CFEP funding and are super excited to start their playground construction soon.

Leah Argao was born in Lac la Ronge, Saskatchewan. She then moved over 20 times and went to school at Grande Prairie university. She then moved some more before settling down in beautiful Harvest Hills to raise her three children and work in the business and financial risk industry. She currently volunteers as president of the Northern Hills Community Association because she wanted to give back to her community.

Finally, Tamara Keller is originally from a farm in north Saskatchewan. She went to the University of Saskatchewan for a bachelor of commerce. Tamara worked in the agricultural industry for 10 years, then two years in telecom, and then moved to Coventry Hills in 2006 to raise her two boys. She's an active volunteer with AHS, a chair for advocates for the north Calgary high school, and a member of Northern Hills Connect, which is the subject of today's member's statement.

It's great to see them all here today, and I would ask my colleagues to now give them the traditional warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Joining us today is Colin Belliveau, director of training and apprenticeship for the Alberta carpenters' union. Colin works with Alberta's carpenters, scaffolders, floor layers, and interior systems mechanics to get them trained and working safely and productively. The carpenters' union is a key partner in supporting Alberta's workers and in keeping our economy growing. With Colin is my friend Jeff Sloychuk. No one really seems to know what Jeff does, but he assures me that he does it very well. I want to thank my guests for their work on behalf of Alberta workers, and I'd ask all members to extend to them the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to be able to introduce two guests today who have been here for the address of the Governor General. I'm very pleased to introduce Gulwant Singh, who is a constituent in my area – I'm very pleased to see you – and Haiqa Cheema, who is my fairly new constituency manager and a nearly completed graduate of the U of A in political science. Thank you, both, and please receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I didn't know he was going to be here today, but it's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you Jeff Kasbrick, who is now with the AMA, but we got to know each other about 10 years ago, when we were both political staff. It's a pleasure to have him here today. I'd ask my colleagues to please join me in welcoming Mr. Kasbrick to this House.

The Speaker: Hon. members, any other guests today? The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a strong advocate for conservative values and principles, a strong member of the community advocating to stomp out racism, and a good friend of mine, Mr. Arundee Sandhu. I'd invite him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my constituency assistant Mathew Goncalves. He's a very dedicated and a very hard worker. With him today is Mariam Hosseiny, who is an intern in my office this summer. I'd ask that we all extend the warm welcome to these wonderful guests.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Federal Response to Pipeline Opposition

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister is visiting Alberta today. He arrived yesterday. Will the Premier be meeting with the Prime Minister to discuss the Trans Mountain pipeline with 16 days to go before its possible cancellation?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much to the member opposite for that question. I will not be meeting directly with the Prime Minister, but as I've said before, we are fully engaged with federal officials. Discussions are happening daily with those officials. We are very much focused on outcomes, and the particular outcome that we are focused on, the only outcome that we will accept, is that we get a pipeline to tidewater and that we get the certainty that is needed to ensure that construction resumes this summer. We know that we are on track for that outcome.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, does the hon. the Premier believe that the Prime Minister's refusal to meet with her during his visit to Alberta demonstrates the seriousness of the federal government's commitment to building the Trans Mountain pipeline?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can say very clearly that the Prime Minister did not refuse to meet with me, and that is a ridiculous assertion on the part of the member opposite. You know, the Prime Minister knows exactly where I stand, quite honestly. The only confusion out there right now is the position of the Leader of the Opposition. Back on April 8 he said that the federal government must be prepared to step up and provide financial certainty. Now he's saying that that's just the wrong way to go. I just want to know: who is pulling the strings of the Official Opposition leader? The Conservative leader in Ottawa? Or is he actually committed to the people of Alberta?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I guess the Premier doesn't understand the difference between that as a last resort – it appears that she and her close ally Justin Trudeau are prepared to write multibillion-dollar cheques as a first resort.

On April 15 the Prime Minister said, quotes: we are actively pursuing legislative options that will assert the government of Canada's jurisdiction on the Trans Mountain pipeline. Close quotes. A month later no legislation. Today in Calgary the Prime Minister said that he's still considering his options. Why can't this NDP government get any action out of their close friend and ally Justin Trudeau?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we are getting a great deal of action. As I've said, we're working very closely. But you know what's really interesting? The member opposite is opposed now to ensuring that we support, provide the financial certainty to Kinder Morgan to make sure we get the project done. Meanwhile, when he was in Ottawa, he and his Conservative government friends wrote a $9 billion cheque to General Motors and Chrysler for Ontario jobs, but apparently Alberta's industry isn't worth it. So my question is: he may have said that he's moved back to Alberta, but is he still picking up his mail in Ontario?

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Kenney: So now I see we're back to the NDP attacking their opponents . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. Kenney: . . . but that's all right, Mr. Speaker. When they go low, we'll go high. [interjections] Can you hear them heckling? It never stops.

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. Kenney: The anger machine never turns off.

Federal and Provincial Energy Policies

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the real question is this. This Premier gave in to Justin Trudeau's carbon tax. She's going to increase it by 67 per cent. She's increasing payroll taxes to satisfy the Prime Minister. He's given us two dead pipelines and is doing nothing to build Trans Mountain. How is this working out for Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, what I will say is that when the member opposite and his friends in Alberta were running both governments – you may not have heard this before, but I'll just let people know – for nine years they couldn't get a pipeline built to tidewater. They messed it up so badly that they couldn't save it when the courts said no. But you know what? We are working very carefully, very strategically to get the job done. We will keep a cool hand on all the levers at our disposal, we will use them at the right time, and we will succeed.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, let's be clear. The NDP gave Justin Trudeau a carbon tax. They're going to give him a 67 per cent increase in that carbon tax. They're going to raise CPP payroll taxes. What have we got in return? The cancellation of Northern Gateway; the killing of Energy East; the intrusion of the federal government into provincial jurisdiction on upstream emissions; Bill C-68, that will make it impossible to get a future pipeline approved; and rewarding the B.C. government with billions of dollars of transfers even though it's violating the Constitution. What exactly are we getting out of the NDP's close alliance with Justin Trudeau?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I'll tell you that Albertans are not getting is a Premier who's standing in a corner grandstanding, having temper tantrums for the sake of that day's media cycle and their own political, cynical desires. What they have instead is a government that is working strategically, thoughtfully with a multipronged approach with many, many different stakeholders at many, many different levels to get this pipeline built. And you know what? Things are looking up, and we're going to get it done.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, what the Premier characterizes as a temper tantrum was my suggestion nine months ago that Alberta should be prepared to turn off the taps of Alberta oil fuelling the B.C. economy if the NDP there violates the Constitution and attacks our vital economic interests. That so-called temper tantrum is now the policy of the NDP government. Well, it was supposed to be. It was in their throne speech, but 10 weeks later they still haven't passed their keynote legislation. Why, again, are they dragging their feet on the turn-off-the-taps legislation?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I think I was very clear about yesterday, we expect that that piece of legislation will probably pass tomorrow. As I've also been very clear and very consistent on from the very outset, this is one tool that we will use at the right time at the right place in the best interest of Albertans to ensure that we get the best return for our resources. I have always been very clear about that. But when it comes to consistency, the member opposite had better figure out his position. Is he for government support or against it? Is Andrew Scheer his boss or are the people of Alberta?

The Speaker: Third main question.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, we know who the boss of this NDP government is. His name is Justin Trudeau. He killed the Northern Gateway pipeline. He killed Energy East. He's killing any future pipelines with his Bill C-68. He has got this NDP government to agree to punish Albertans for heating their homes with a 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax, and he won't even meet with this Premier while visiting in Alberta. He promised legislation to crack down on B.C.'s obstructionism, and nothing has been forthcoming. Will this Premier get on the phone with her friend Justin Trudeau and demand federal action to defend Alberta's economy?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, again with the temper tantrum, Mr. Speaker.

What I'm not going to do is make things up, as the member just did in about three-quarters of his preamble there. What I am going to do is carry on with exactly what we have been doing. We are working closely with the federal government, with federal officials on a very clear strategy to ensure that the uncertainty is removed and that construction resumes on schedule this summer. That is the only outcome that is acceptable to this government on behalf of the people of Alberta and the people of Canada, and we will not stop until that is exactly what happens, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, one of her ministers said that shovels would be in the ground last fall. The project is 18 months behind schedule. We are 16 days away from its potential cancellation, and this Premier has given Justin Trudeau everything he wants, including a punitive carbon tax. She can't get any action out of the Prime Minister to defend Alberta's vital economic interests. Why is the NDP government giving in to Trudeau on everything and getting precisely nothing in return?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What we're not doing is getting the outcomes that the member opposite and his friends and colleagues in Ottawa and Alberta delivered to Albertans: zero, 'zipkus,' nothing, no pipeline to tidewater. Nine years: no pipeline to tidewater. We are on the verge of getting construction under way on the best reviewed, most rigorously reviewed pipeline in the country. We will get it done. The member opposite should join Albertans instead of hoping for their defeat.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, our previous government approved and saw the construction of four pipelines that doubled the capacity of shipping oil and approved the Coastal pipeline, Northern Gateway, that she opposed and that her Education minister said was a dirty tar sands pipeline that should not be allowed to proceed. Justin Trudeau listened to the NDP when he cancelled Northern Gateway. He listened to the NDP when he shut down Energy East. He apparently has listened to the NDP with Bill C-68, that makes it impossible to get another pipeline built. Why are they punishing low-income Albertans for heating their homes in order to get no pipeline built?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the first delay to Energy East came as a result of the bumbling, last-minute appointments of the former Conservative government that blew the whole process up and then made them have to start all over again, so everyone has a lot of blame to share for the end of Energy East. What we have done is that we have worked thoughtfully and consistently to play by the rules and get things done to build support, which is growing – I know the member opposite hates to admit it, but it is growing everywhere, including in B.C. – for that pipeline to western coastal waters. We will get it done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Unemployment and Job Creation

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week Edmonton's chief economist spoke about how the unemployment rate in Edmonton was dropping but that it was dropping for the wrong reasons. What he was referring to is the fact that some Albertans have been out of work for so long that they're actually leaving the labour force altogether, this in spite of this government spending millions of tax dollars to try to retain and retrain these workers and consistent messaging from the government about the strength of the economy. Premier, we want to see this province succeed, but if things are as good as your government is saying, why are workers continuing to leave the workforce and the province?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't think that they're actually leaving the province. It's interesting. One of the other things that was in that report by the city of Edmonton's chief economist was that one of the things that has helped make the problem not as bad as it would have been – we all know that we have a very serious problem and that people are suffering – is the fact that our government chose to continue to invest in important public services and that if the plan put forward by the Official Opposition were to go in place, the city of Edmonton would struggle mightily with respect to jobs and economic growth. Thankfully, that's not what is in place, but we know that we have more to do to deal with the very people that that member opposite ...

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Fraser: Our caucus believes in the value of public investment in the economy, but we must always ensure that there's a good return on investment when we're using public dollars. This is especially true when we're talking about programs aimed at job creation. Unless there is a measurable impact on job numbers, these programs often amount to paying public dollars to companies for jobs that would have been created anyway. To the Premier: what specific measures is your government using to make sure that the tax dollars that you're using for job creation are actually delivering value for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member opposite knows, last year alone our province created roughly 90,000 new jobs. That's exactly the kind of progress that we need to make after one of the worst recessions that the province of Alberta has ever felt in history. We know that we have more work to do, but we know that we're taking a multidimensional approach and that we also need to focus on diversification. We need to not just talk about economic diversification, but we need to start delivering on that. That is work that our government will continue to do.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Premier, for the answer. This government has focused on tax credits for specific industries, with the goal of diversifying the economy. The problem with that approach is that most economists agree that Alberta's economy is well diversified but that the real lack of diversity is in the government's revenue. We can see this in the government's plan for a balanced budget, which relies almost exclusively on royalty revenue to come close to balance. To the Premier: if the government continues to offer industry-specific tax credits, aren't government revenues going to become even less diversified and more reliant on resource revenue?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, while our path to balance does continue to rely to some degree on resource revenue, it does so with relatively conservative assumptions around the price of oil and the differential and all those things. In fact, if we continue to perform in the long term above those conservative assumptions, we actually will be in a position to apply that money to other projects. Meanwhile we'll continue to focus on diversification, and we will, of course, measure the effectiveness of different programs as we go, because we know we share the same objective, diversifying the economy and getting people back to work.

Calgary LRT Green Line

Mr. Malkinson: Mr. Speaker, my riding is served by the west LRT and the upcoming southwest BRT, and Calgary-Currie is seeing the benefits of this investment in transit. The upcoming green line is the largest infrastructure investment in Calgary ever. This investment in public transportation will directly help tens of thousands of Albertans get around the city faster and connect with transit currently serving Calgary-Currie. Can the Minister of Infrastructure explain why this significant investment is needed?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. You know, capital spending to remove impediments to growth was exactly the message I got from former Bank of Canada Governor David Dodge when I circled back with him for a conversation before we released our capital plan. The green line means an easier commute to work and school. It means that an extra 65,000 Calgarians every day will have an easier time getting around, 12,000 direct jobs, 8,000 supporting jobs. Great cities have great transit infrastructure. Flailing opposition parties fight great infrastructure.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what are the other environmental and economic benefits of this project?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member. You know, stage 1 of the green line is going to reduce CO₂ emissions by an estimated 30,000 tonnes every year. It would be nice if the opposition actually listened to this because it's important to them, too. I know that when they ask for infrastructure, their list right now is over $3 billion. I'm sure they should be paying attention to this. The green line is going to promote growth and diversification over the long run. It will help stimulate housing, employment, and shopping developments in all the neighborhoods that it serves. We continue to make these investments in the economic growth of Calgary, of all the cities in this province. Certainly, building back from previous . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that this project is possible because of funding from the carbon levy. I'm often asked: what would happen if the carbon levy was axed, as the UCP proposes? To the same minister: what would happen if the tax was axed?

Ms Jansen: I'd like to thank the member. You know, $1.5 billion of the green line funding is coming from the climate leadership plan revenue. The other side calls it a green slush fund. Mr. Speaker, if we want to build this province into an even greater province than it is, we need great infrastructure, and it would be nice if everybody got onboard with that. They promise to do nothing about climate change. They're not interested in putting folks to work. They promise to leave tens of thousands of Calgarians stuck in traffic while they spend their policy time working at how to out gay kids in school and limit women's reproductive rights.

Workplace Safety and Employment Standards

Dr. Swann: As a result of Bill 6, passed in this House in 2015, farm workers are now persons. Last week in question period the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, following through on the lead of the opposition's grassroots guarantee, announced that the UCP would repeal Bill 6 based on the votes of a strong majority at the UCP convention. The Official Opposition continues to misrepresent the legal, moral, and business imperatives of Bill 6. To the Premier: could you explain again to the political opportunists in this party why Alberta must abide by the Canadian Charter and the Supreme Court decisions in Canada?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member opposite for that important question. I know he's fought for years, as have I, to ensure that we finally bring justice to a group of very underrepresented workers for whom that justice was long overdue. The member opposite rightly points out, of course, that there were also, in fact, among many other reasons to bring forward legislation that would protect the safety and health of working people in the farming industry, previous judicial decisions that stated very clearly that we were discriminating against these people by treating them differently from other workers. So we were proud to address that injustice.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
First supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the Premier also explain the moral imperative behind finally bringing in child labour standards in this province, health and safety and employment standards in line with the rest of Canada and the developed world?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, I want to really congratulate the work of our initial Minister of Labour and our current Minister of Labour and our Minister of Agriculture and Forestry because what we've done is that while we have brought in important legislation to protect this very vulnerable group of workers, we have also followed that up with extensive consultations across the board, with agricultural industry people, with farmers, with health and safety representatives, and with workers, to bring in health and safety laws that are both workable for people in the industry but will protect children and workers in that sector.

Dr. Swann: Again to the Premier: could you explain how Bill 6 respects and protects farmers, landowners, operators in the industry by bringing Alberta's agriculture sector in line with the standards of the world market regarding health, safety, compensation, and employment?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely true, actually, that if you have a catastrophic accident in a place and you don't have proper workers' compensation coverage, it is very possible that you could be sued in a way that could hurt your business and make it impossible to carry on. The insurance that people were buying for that, actually, in the long term is ultimately very, very expensive, so what we've been able to do is that in many respects we've provided more certainty to farmers while also providing care and income support for families and injured workers should they suffer an accident in the workplace.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Barnes: Former U.S. President Herbert Hoover once said, "Children are our most valuable resource." Unfortunately, this government's legacy of debt, interest, and deficit will leave a $96 billion bill to be paid by our children. According to a recent U of C report a 16-year-old Albertan will pay an additional $42,000 in interest debt over their lifetime. Mr. Speaker, this is nearly four times the cost of a criminal justice diploma at Medicine Hat College. To the minister: why do you insist on setting our children up for failure rather than success?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, on this side of the House we are setting Albertans up for success each and every day by investing in education, by investing in advanced postsecondary schools and hospitals. Here's another U of C professor. Economist Lindsay Tedds from the University of Calgary School of Public Policy stated that only the incredibly wealthy would benefit from the policy that's been peddled by the Leader of the Opposition, the flat tax. That's no legacy to leave anybody.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that since the carbon tax was instituted, rec centres around the province have been forced to drastically reduce their service levels in order to pay the carbon tax and given that one rec centre in Calgary literally turned off the heat and instituted cold showers, the NDP's carbon tax is leaving many young Albertans cold. To the Premier: are these the type of choices you were referring to when you said that the carbon tax was a tremendous opportunity for people to make better choices?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, a few weeks ago we announced $54 million to help municipalities and recreation centres and others reduce their energy costs. That's $17.5 million to reduce energy costs at community rinks, arenas, swimming pools, and so on. The folks from the RMA said, "The magnitude of this new funding is an important recognition of the role municipalities play." It enables municipalities to continue to build climate change resilience, improve efficiency, reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Those are all win-win-win scenarios that position Alberta well for the future rather than dragging us into the past.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that the carbon tax will cost school boards nearly $20 million this year – and that doesn't even account for the increased cost of electricity – that's the equivalent of 201 experienced teachers. To the minister. Your carbon tax has ripped tens of millions of dollars of funding out of the classroom in order to pay for the increased cost of utilities and transportation. Will you commit to scrapping the carbon tax and keeping education funding where it belongs, in the classroom?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I find that a bit rich coming from the members opposite, who are going to cut education quite significantly, 20 per cent. Our government has put significant investment in education for the last four budgets. We owe it to our kids to make sure that we have great schools, that we build schools, and that we also protect the planet that they will inherit from us one day.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Physicians' Disciplinary Policies

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last month I asked the minister about Dr. Ismail Taher, who, after showing a repeated pattern of sexually inappropriate behaviour and being found guilty in the court of assaulting an 18-year-old girl, sexually assaulting a nurse twice, and physically assaulting a clinical manager, had been allowed to return to work as a doctor following the ruling from the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta. Last month the Health minister assured me that her ministry had reached out to the college to seek assurances. Can she please update the House on this discussion?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you to the member for the important question. I'm deeply concerned by this, and we know that all Albertans and Alberta women should feel safe when getting medical care or when working in a doctor's office as well. Doctors are in a position of trust, and patients have the right to know that their disciplinary histories will be public, especially for those they're putting their trust in. When I was made aware of this situation, where a doctor was convicted of sexual assault and got his licence back, I was shocked. My staff reached out to the college immediately, and we're working on developing the supports to be able to remedy this.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, given that Dr. Taher's case is not an isolated case in Alberta and given that Albertans are calling for greater transparency and higher penalties for physicians who abuse the trust of patients and given that the College of Physicians & Surgeons has limited options under the current legislation to sanction its members that abuse patients' trust, what specific measures is the minister taking to ensure that patients are protected and that Albertans maintain faith in the health care system?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for that. I want to ensure that the college has all of the tools necessary to keep Albertans safe and make Albertans aware if there has been disciplinary action or a criminal conviction against a doctor in the past. Some jurisdictions are ahead of us in this work. For example, the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario posts criminal convictions of doctors and also keeps disciplinary decisions on their website longer than we do here in Alberta. I also understand that Ontario has recently taken legislative steps to prevent sexual abuse by amending the Regulated Health Professions Act to expand the grounds for mandatory revocation of medical licences. These are two of the things that I'm certainly considering.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Given that there are serious concerns with compliance with those disciplinary conditions currently imposed by the College of Physicians & Surgeons – to follow up on what the minister said, there's a lack of transparency, Mr. Speaker, in the disciplinary process, including the fact that Alberta only maintains those records for five years. The minister said that she would consider bringing forward legislation similar to Ontario's, which requires the colleges to revoke the licences of members who have engaged in certain types of abuse. To the minister: will you then be bringing forward this legislation to protect Albertans this session, and if not, why not?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question. We are certainly working hand in hand with the College of Physicians & Surgeons and looking at what has happened in Ontario as well. I want to make sure that we get any legislation right, and of course we want to ensure that it will withstand any kind of appeal that might happen. We're working to bring a draft as quickly as possible, Mr. Speaker, but I also want to ensure that it will be something that we can all be confident will withstand court challenges, so I'm not going to rush the timeline. I want to make sure we get the legislation right, and I also want to ensure that every Alberta woman feels safe when she's going into a doctor's appointment or receiving that care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Adverse Possession of Property

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday this House was faced with a choice, and once again the members opposite rejected the principle of property rights protection for land- and homeowners across this province. As they voted down my private member's bill, NDP MLAs continually said that we needed to further await a review already two years in the making. To the Minister of Justice: when will the review of adverse possession be complete, and when will the results of that review be tabled in this House?

The Speaker: The hon. Justice minister and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I believe that what the hon. member is referring to is the request that the government made after the recommendation of an all-party committee that adverse possession be eliminated in Alberta. We have asked the Alberta Law Reform Institute to take a look at that. As I understand, they will be coming forward with recommendations later this fall to ensure that we enact that fully across all the acts throughout the government of Alberta.

Mr. Gottfried: So we're hearing this fall.

Mr. Speaker, given that the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, with an NDP chair and majority no less, voted to ask the Department of Justice to develop legislation to abolish adverse possession and given that the minister has consistently failed to actually follow through on these recommendations, which should have been initiated as much as two years ago, again to the minister: when will we see this legislation in this House to abolish the doctrine of adverse possession?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, as I have said, an all-party committee studied the issue. They made recommendations that the doctrine of adverse possession be eliminated here in Alberta, and that's why we asked the Alberta Law Reform Institute to take a look at all of our legislation throughout the government of Alberta to ensure, first off, that we are impacting all things that have an impact on adverse possession so that we're getting it right but also that we're not having any unintended consequences, because this has been in the law for quite a long time in this province.

Thank you.

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, given that this government has an abysmal track record on standing up and protecting the property rights of Albertans and given that various government MLAs demonstrated their lack of respect for landowners in Alberta when they dithered around the abolition of adverse possession, leading many Albertans to question this government's commitment to scrapping this punitive and archaic law, again to the minister: when your review is complete, if the recommendation is to abolish this outdated law, will you commit today to following through on that recommendation and abolishing adverse possession at the earliest possible opportunity?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I believe I've said it twice before, but I'm happy to say it again a third time. An all-party committee has recommended the abolition of that doctrine. That's why we asked the Alberta Law Reform Institute to look at how best to abolish the doctrine, and that is what they're doing.

In terms of our record on property rights, Mr. Speaker, it's pretty rich for the members opposite to stand up and say that after they voted against investments in the RCMP to protect the property of rural owners.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Seniors' Mobile Blood Collection Service in St. Paul

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I informed the House about the government's decision to abandon seniors in my constituency who rely on mobile collection for blood work. To the Minister of Health. Especially with higher fuel costs and the carbon tax and the increase in GHGs that this will create, transportation for seniors in rural Alberta is not always easy. Why was it a priority to abandon this service for our seniors?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much to the member for the question. I'll be happy to follow up with specific details with regard to the specific situation.

I want to ensure that all Albertans know that in 2015 we had a choice. We had a choice between going down a path that we'd been down many times in Alberta, one that saw deep cuts; for example, seniors had to start paying property tax for education, something that was done under the guise of, you know, everyone needing to carry their weight. Seniors had a lot of health care services cancelled. Instead, our government chose to follow a different path, one that invests in seniors and makes sure that we support communities and the health care that those seniors count on, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hanson: This certainly looks like a cut to seniors to me, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the lab technician providing the mobile collection service is paid whether they are performing the service in the hospital or on-site and given that the medical supplies used are the same either way, to the Minister of Health, a simple question: what were the criteria used to make this decision?

Ms Hoffman: Thanks again for the question. I will be happy to look into this very specific case. We do have an MLA contact in my office that we try to ensure is available to all Albertan MLAs so that we can make sure we can get details on very specific, case-related items community by community. I'll have to certainly look into this. I imagine that this is something that Alberta Health Services determined. I didn't make this decision, but I'll certainly be happy to look into it and determine if there is something that we can respond to, to help provide greater clarity.

I do welcome all MLAs to please bring these kinds of concerns forward as soon as you hear of them so we can help to come up with clarity and potential solutions. Thank you.

Mr. Hanson: Mr. Speaker, I did a member's statement yesterday on this topic, and I tabled the documents from AHS so that the minister could read them.

Given that it is much more efficient to do this service on-site with the help of the more-than-willing staff at Sunnyside lodge and given that travelling to the ER for lab work is not only costly and inconvenient for these seniors but it exposes them to unnecessary illness, Minister, why are you allowing these seniors to be treated this way? Will you reinstate this program immediately?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and again to the member. My office is completely accessible. We certainly welcome you. There are many times that we've worked through a number of local concerns. For example, we found a solution when some of the seniors in your neighbouring riding wanted to ensure that they could have their Remembrance Day honoured in a respectful way. For example, we brought dialysis to Lac La Biche, something that I'm very proud of. This government has shown that we are willing to work on coming up with solutions. We certainly welcome you to call our office or e-mail my office, and we'll be happy to look at the details about your specific question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Home-care Services

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Home-care clients rely on service providers to perform daily living tasks, things like personal hygiene and medication management. I was disturbed to hear this week that a senior home-care client outside of Edmonton waited for hours for an AHS-contracted home-care provider, who didn't show up for a scheduled appointment, to move her between her wheelchair and her bed. To the Health minister: what is being done to ensure that AHS home-care clients receive services from providers?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. One of the big things that we've done as a government is that we've provided stable, predictable funding to the people of this province to ensure that health care under, well, what was the Conservative cabinet minister and now the leader of that member's party – they were proposing a $1 billion cut to health care. We reversed that. We invested in the people of this province, and we specifically increased home-care funding every single year because we want to ensure that the people of this province get the care they need close to home.

Again, with regard to a very specific situation, I'll be happy to look into that specific instance. But, Mr. Speaker, this side of the House is investing in the people of this province and expanding home-care services.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms McPherson: Given that the home-care provider told the client that they didn't need to provide any backup and that the client would need to find her own backup and given that after being previously stranded in her home for 13 hours in her wheelchair, this time she called a friend to drive from Edmonton to her place, almost an hour, to give her some help, how is it acceptable for AHS to allow contractors to not have contingency plans and to require home-care clients to find their own backup services?

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you. Again, with regard to one specific case we'll be very happy to look into that. My office is very accessible. Please call my office or e-mail my office, and we'll be very happy to address specific concerns with specific care.

Under self-managed care clients receive funding to hire and pay for their own unmet personal care and supportive needs. We also have AHS care, and we also have AHS contracted care, Mr. Speaker. We're proud of the fact that we're providing these choices and options for the people of Alberta to ensure that they get the care they need instead of pushing for rash cuts that would certainly hurt all Albertans, including those who are on home care. This government is investing in the people of this province.

Ms McPherson: Given that not every home-care client lives in a community where ad hoc home-care services are available when AHS fails to provide sufficient oversight of its contractors and given that adding funding to pay for the services Albertans do not receive does not make life better, does the minister know how much of the $575 million spent on home care last year through AHS has been spent on services that were not delivered?

Ms Hoffman: Well, I can tell you that it's a lot more than a billion-dollar cut. Mr. Speaker, I'm proud that on this side of the House we're investing in health care, we're investing in our seniors, and we're keeping them well. We had a choice in this province. We could go down the same path that Conservative after Conservative after Conservative asked us to go down, which was deep cuts that hurt the people of this province, including our seniors. On this side of the House we were elected to stand up for the people of Alberta. I think actually many members were elected to stand up for the people of Alberta and make sure that they got the services they needed. I won't be lectured to by somebody who is now following the lead of a leader who's advocating for billions of dollars in cuts. That's pretty rich.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-West.

Serenity and Her Siblings

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all know the sad tale of little Serenity and her all-too-short life. Less acknowledged is the story of her two older siblings, who survived in the same horrific circumstances. Minister, can you please tell us if Serenity's sister and brother will ever see justice for the abuse that they experienced?

The Speaker: The Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is absolutely committed to working to improve the way that kids and families are supported when they are struggling. We are absolutely moving forward – thank you to the all-party panel members – with ensuring that as we move forward, our child intervention system has all the support it needs to ensure that children and families have the very best opportunity to meet their potential. I do want to thank all the members of the House for supporting an increase to the budget of Children's Services. It's so important to ensure that we actually have the capacity and the front-line staff to ensure the well-being of those children.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Ellis: Given that police have investigated the treatment of Serenity's siblings and that that involved multiple interviews, which caused them to relive their horror each and every time, and given that Alberta's Child and Youth Advocate has also confirmed that these children suffered abuse and given that Serenity and her sister and her brother were all living in the same care home and experienced the same terror, Minister, can you please tell us why almost four years later no charges have been laid in relation to Serenity's siblings?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, these sorts of situations are incredibly concerning. They're incredibly concerning to all Albertans and to all members on both sides of this House. Ultimately the police make the decisions. They investigate specific cases. It's not appropriate for me to speak to those investigations or to what those decisions will be in terms of them laying charges. You know, we continue to be dedicated to ensuring that as we move forward, we revamp our child welfare system just to make sure that things like this don't happen again in the future.

Mr. Ellis: Not dedicated enough, Mr. Speaker.

Given that in budget estimates last month, following a question from my colleague, the Minister of Children's Services said, "The Serenity case is somewhat dated at this point," and given that if we ever consider Serenity's case dated that that means we are not doing her memory any justice, Minister, why would you have used that term in relation to a little girl whom you say that we can never forget?

The Speaker: The Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I think the children and the families of Alberta deserve is a government who's committed to ensuring that they take action instead of putting a report on the shelf. I'm really excited that we will be moving forward with an action plan very soon in terms of actioning the recommendations from the plan. What they don't deserve are Conservative politicians who would politicize this particular issue and politicize a particular family instead of focusing on getting down and doing that work that needs to be done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Schoolchildren's Transportation

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Department of Education has announced a student transportation survey to help determine future changes for school busing criteria and mandated service levels. It's a bit curious to do this consultation now as the government implemented major and unwelcome changes to busing last fall, which greatly affected students in alternative programming in my constituency in northeast Calgary. Minister, is transportation to alternative education programs part of the scope of this review, or is the review solely focused on the public system?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the survey that we have out is very popular. We have many thousands of people participating. We know that we need to focus on transportation to make sure it's safe, to make sure it's timely and reliable. We've been meeting those targets to some degree, but you can always improve. I encourage everyone to make sure they make their submissions and work with school boards to make sure that we make life better for all our kids and the school buses that they travel on.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the survey mentions that any, I quote, potential changes, unquote, will not take place until the 2019-2020 school year, not this upcoming one, and given that the surprise policy changes made this past school year left students in many alternative education programs without busing, leaving them to take transit or rely on their parents to get them to school, Minister, will the government commit to being fully transparent with parents on the future of busing for their children?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's important to point out that individual school boards do build their schedules and scheduling. That is their responsibility. It's also important to point out that it's a very large task to build busing transportation schedules. That's why we're consulting and working with school boards over this next year to make sure that we get it right. You know, the biggest thing that we can do to support them is to make sure that we're financing and putting money behind education in each and every budget, which we've done so for enrolment. If you take money away, like the members opposite would do, chaos would ensue.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Member for Calgary-McCall held a town hall on education and transportation issues in northeast Calgary and given that I'm interested to know if anything came out of it that could inform education policy, Minister, what was the outcome from this meeting, and how much of a role will it play in affecting your decision on future busing policies in northeast Calgary for students attending alternative programs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Well, certainly, Mr. Speaker, I recognize that we want to improve school busing in general. That's why we made the space through Bill 28 here last session to look specifically at the walk limits, right? The walk limit has been set at 2.4 kilometres for many, many, many years, and clearly that wasn't working. You know what? When I see something that needs to be improved, I actually act on it and I actually put in money. We have a caucus and a government behind us that actually do invest in education. That's something that we can all be very proud of.

Medical Laboratory Construction in Edmonton

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, media reports that costs for Edmonton's new superlab facility have risen to $595 million, significantly more than the preliminary estimate of $325 million. When a building doubles in cost, there should be some hesitation. We all want to have the necessary health facilities, but can the minister of Health or Infrastructure explain what is causing this massive cost overrun?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I think what he's referring to is the budget documents the first year that the lab showed up and the budget documents this most recent year. As the member might be aware, but I want to ensure that all Albertans are aware, the budget documents usually only have three or four years. We've actually gone out six years with our fiscal plan, so it's the entire costing for the project as opposed to just the first three years of the plan.

Mr. Yao: It's still double what your estimates were.

Mr. Speaker, the current lab contractor is occupying a facility owned by AIMCo. It has a podium for an office tower with no current plans of expansion due to the proliferation of the Ice District. The city of Edmonton wishes to develop a technology cluster in the city centre, and removal of this lab does not help. Can the minister explain how they chose the new location, what the criteria used was, and was there not a downtown option available to own, lease, or build there?

3:00

Ms Hoffman: Well, again, the member is wrong. What I said is that the first fiscal time it ended up in the budget, it was just the first three years of costing. This is now six years out. We're being even more open with Albertans about the cost of our infrastructure projects, clearly far more open than we ever saw under the former government. My job, Mr. Speaker, is to make sure that we get the best value for the people of Alberta. We had land in Edmonton on an excellent site that's adjacent to the LRT. You're asking me to lease land or buy land from a private developer downtown. I don't think that's very fiscally responsible. I'm going to look at the best way to get the best value for the people of Alberta, and we will own that lab in the city of Edmonton.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Yao: So let's clarify. In three years it's going to cost you $300 million, and then it's going to cost you $600 million over double that time, yet the value of the building is actually in the equipment involved and the people that are there, the lab technicians. Please explain: what is the doubling in cost that has occurred on this project?

Ms Hoffman: Let me clarify that. You're wrong. What we did is that we put it in the budget the first three years. Now we've got a six-year fiscal plan, so we have the total costing for six years of development. This is a massive project that's certainly in the public interest. The Health Quality Council of Alberta confirmed that we want to ensure that there's confidence, that no matter where you are in the province, you get the very best quality of lab services, and I also believe that those lab technologists deserve to be treated with respect in a consistent fashion as well, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud of the fact that we're building a public lab. I'm proud of the fact that it's going to be in Edmonton. I'm proud it's on land that we already own, so we don't need to waste money buying additional land. You guys have got to figure out what your real values are in this place.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Indigenous Relations

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's previous government did a poor job of consulting with indigenous peoples, and if their founding convention is any indication, it appears as though the current UCP isn't doing much better of a job. Since forming government, our party has committed to renewing the relationship between indigenous peoples and the government of Alberta. To the Minister of Indigenous Relations: what are you doing to ensure proper consultation happens with indigenous peoples?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Throughout the past two years the Alberta government has been working to renew our First Nations and our Métis settlements consultation policies and is developing a Métis consultation policy for those living off settlements. As part of our work to ensure Alberta's consultation process is more effective and efficient for all parties, we're also speaking to industry and municipalities and other groups in the province. We've engaged First Nations, Métis settlements, the Métis Nation of Alberta, and the MSGC, and we're planning to have our policies in place this fall. These new policies will help to ensure that indigenous people living in Alberta have a voice and can . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to mention, before I do my second question, that we have Mr. Willie Littlechild in the audience today, and he was a member of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission.

To the minister. I would like to know: what other consultation processes has the Alberta government undertaken with indigenous peoples?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very proud to speak to this question because, of course, the provincial government has really worked on transforming our relationship with the indigenous people in this province, and that includes coming to the table with them and having multiple conversations, whether it be through our Treaty 8 tables or our Blackfoot protocol tables or many other areas. For example, we have had consultations with indigenous people around curriculum, around rural broadband, around the North Saskatchewan regional plan, mandatory training for the Alberta public service, a human health study in Fort Chipewyan.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Conservative governments in the past just tried to ignore the problems facing indigenous peoples and given that the same attitude seems to be alive and well in the UCP today, again to the same minister: what are you doing to ensure that indigenous people and communities are treated with the respect they deserve?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much, Member, for the question. I appreciate the hard work you've been doing in the area of Wetaskiwin, and I look forward to working with you and with the Maskwacis communities again, just as we did even last week.

You know that we have been working very hard to develop a really positive relationship with indigenous people in Alberta, but meanwhile the UCP members, like the Member for Little Bow, say things like, quote: these people don't traditionally vote. I'm not sure what part of that sentence is most offensive. It's a shame that a member of this House would say that, and that shows that the UCP has no interest in working with our indigenous peoples. Our government will continue to strengthen these important relationships . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Thirty seconds, hon. members.

Hon. members, I think the Deputy Premier has a supplemental answer which she'd like to clarify. Is that correct, Deputy Premier?

Tobacco Reduction and Industry Lobbyists

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to all members. I have a supplemental response to the question that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View asked last week of the Premier. I'd like to clarify some information from last week.

In the Ministry of Health there were actually two meetings with staff and National Smokeless Tobacco regarding the ban of menthol cigarettes. I also understand that there had been annual meetings with Treasury Board and Finance staff regarding regulating the industry. In 2017 I directed my deputy minister to send a memo to Health ministry staff to reinforce article 5.3 of the framework convention on tobacco control, which states that interaction with the industry is limited to only those meetings which are absolutely necessary about regulating the industry. No government official will meet with the tobacco industry going forward.*

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't have a lot to say, but thank you for clarifying it. There have been rumours about meetings within other government departments. You've clarified that there have been a couple. I would hope that all departments in government get the same message at some point so that related departments such as Economic Development and Trade or whatever other departments also understand the same proscription on meeting behind closed doors with tobacco lobbyists.

Thanks very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's certainly my intent. I look forward to – I believe my office has tried to schedule time so that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View and myself can discuss this in further detail face to face and discuss how we're going to make that happen.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Edmonton-McClung.

Ramadan

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today and wish Ramadan Mubarak to all, especially to those of my constituents in Edmonton-McClung and to all Albertans of Muslim faith. Muslim Albertans have a long history in our province. Across Alberta Muslims are volunteering in our communities, donating not just time but also financially. In Alberta we are proud to say that the oldest mosque in Canada, the Al Rashid mosque, was built right here in Edmonton in 1938.

During this month Muslims will be fasting from sunrise to sunset, praying, reading the Quran, and reflecting on their personal habits. This time of renewed devotion to the practice of Islam is meant to not only connect mind, body, and spirit but to increase empathy for those less fortunate. While Ramadan is a time for faith, prayer, and fasting, it is also a time for charity. Let us all take some time this month to reflect on what each of us can do in our own communities to help those less fortunate and how we as Albertans can work together to make a more inclusive society, a society that helps those in need, values diverse cultures, and sees our differences as a strength.

Muslim Albertans will be gathering to break their fasts this month at iftar meals across the province. In my constituency Rahma mosque will be hosting daily iftar meals. I encourage all MLAs to work with their local mosque to invite their non-Muslim constituents to attend an iftar meal. You will be wholeheartedly welcomed. This is an excellent opportunity to learn about the commitment to community that is fundamental to Islam throughout the year, and the food is fabulous.

Observing Ramadan in a climate as northern as Alberta's means long hours of daylight, leading to long hours of fasting. I hope that this month those of us who do not observe Ramadan take the time to recognize and support our friends, colleagues, and neighbours who may be fasting. I plan to do a one-day fast in solidarity with our Alberta Muslim neighbours, and I invite all MLAs to join me.

Once again, I wish a hearty Ramadan Mubarak to all.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we've had a request for unanimous consent to revert to introductions.

The Speaker: The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure what happened earlier, but some of the school groups were escorted out before introductions were made. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the Taber Christian school. The children are accompanied by René Angermeier, Trina Friesen, Stacey Kopp, Helene Ypma, Jennette Ypma, and Colin Oosterhof. If they could please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to introduce one of my constituents from the lovely constituency of Edmonton-Manning, Ranjit Singh Powar. I would like to congratulate him also for the celebration that happened this past weekend with the bringing together of families between his nephew Harpreet Singh Sandhu and Anapreet Kaur Dhillon.

Thank you so much.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 20 staff and members of the Book Publishers Association of Alberta, and I'd ask them to please rise at this time. The Book Publishers Association of Alberta was founded in 1975 to support the development of a thriving provincial publishing industry. Earlier today I had the honour of declaring, with the BPAA, May 15 as Alberta Book Day, recognizing the importance of Alberta's book publishing industry in preserving and sharing Alberta's culture with the world as well as contributing to the province's economic growth and diversity. I would like to now ask our guests to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Provincial Election Third Anniversary Reflections

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is now just three years since earning the honour of serving the constituents of Calgary-Fish Creek, and I continue to firmly believe that there is no greater privilege than public service. We are given the opportunity to not only represent people from all walks of life but to hear, listen, consult, and share conversations around the hopes, wishes, dreams, and, yes, more than occasionally the challenges they face in making a living and living a good life.

I am adamant in my commitment to absolute accessibility to all of my constituents irrespective of political or other affiliation and am proud to host my regular MLA cafés, to attend community meetings and events, and to be visible, engaged, and accessible to all in the community. It is my pleasure as well as my privilege to do so.

I believe we are all blessed as legislators in our opportunity and commitment to bring our varied work, life, and community experience, skills, and ability in all that we do, and I am grateful for the opportunity I've had in my life for global travel, community building, community and economic development, the creation and growth of businesses, and, yes, for the philanthropy and volunteerism that enrich the community.

We must represent, promote, advocate, and defend the best interests of our diverse constituents with passion and humility. We must be frugal, accountable, and responsive with hard-earned tax dollars and remember that all of the resources we are entrusted with and the debt we create are theirs, not ours. We must be committed to the health, education, and well-being of Albertans while being compassionate about the vulnerable. And, yes, we must be committed to enhancing life not just for today but for tomorrow and to pass on wealth and prosperity, not debt and burden, to future generations.

That should be our goal and our responsibility to all Albertans. Mr. Speaker, we must do so with the highest commitment to integrity, ethics, and principles of selflessness, even when we respectfully agree to disagree, while doing our best to do so with a sense of humility, humanity, charity, and compassion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Flood Mitigation

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise before you to talk about the very critical issue of flooding in Alberta and in particular in Calgary. As most Albertans know, conditions can swing dramatically year to year, season to season. The flooding that hit Calgary in 2013 was devastating to families, homes, businesses, schools, and many communities. My own constituency of Calgary-Bow suffered during that flooding.

As memories fade and other priorities arise, our government took action to ensure that progress was made on key flood resilience and emergency preparedness initiatives. These projects will help ensure public safety, protect critical municipal infrastructure, and better manage stormwater.

As part of its $150 million in funding for Calgary the province has approved the new Alberta community resilience program grants, totalling $13.5 million. This funding will support three of the city's top-priority projects: the construction of the downtown flood barrier along the south bank of the Bow River, the separation of the upper plateau stormwater system from the community of Sunnyside-Hillhurst, and support for raising the replacement deck for the 9th Avenue bridge.

Across the province the government will invest close to $30 million for 20 flood mitigation projects. Additionally, a new $10 million investment will support projects to prepare communities across the province for emergencies.

Mr. Speaker, flood mitigation initiatives help communities address existing flood concerns while taking proactive steps to better protect our neighborhoods from future floods. We have made significant progress in our efforts to address immediate and short-term remedies while working on long-term solutions to protect our people and property well into the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Farmers

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's springtime in Alberta. That means that birds have returned, bringing music to the ears of all. In rural Alberta there's another sound springing up. It's the sound of farmers hitting their fields. As Albertans we are one of the world's most productive agricultural economies, with a total farm area of 50 million acres. To offer another perspective, farm cash receipts tallied $13.5 billion in 2016, which accounted for 22 per cent of our nation's agriculture production.

Alberta has been increasing its ability to process agricultural products at home, and most of our entrepreneurs' endeavors have succeeded wonderfully. In fact, based on revenues of $15 billion our value-added agricultural product sector has become our top manufacturing industry.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to work with many colleagues in our United Conservative caucus who are proud farmers. It amazes me that they spend their time here in Edmonton representing their constituents in this Legislature, and then they go back home and they're busy performing valuable work in their community. Instead of relaxing, they will head out to their fields, for they must take advantage of this good weather to seed their fields. So when we see a farmer making the solitary journey around their land as they sow their crops and hope for perfect weather, I encourage everyone to take a moment to appreciate them.

As I am myself from a farming family, I would like to extend my best wishes to all the farmers for this upcoming season. As the saying goes, if you ate today, thank a farmer.

I would like to close with a famous quote from Paul Harvey. And on the eighth day God looked down on His planned paradise and said, "I need a caretaker," so God made a farmer.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Northern Hills Connect Social Enterprise Support

Mr. Kleinstuber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In early 2017 Vivo for Healthier Generations facilitated community discussions focused on increasing social connections in Calgary's Northern Hills. Out of this, Northern Hills Connect was born. This group of energetic neighbours connects entrepreneurs with innovative ideas for social enterprises with the people and resources to further their business plans.

With the support of the Northern Hills Community Association, Vivo, Momentum, and Thrive Calgary, Northern Hills Connect hosted workshops throughout 2017 to develop skills for social entrepreneurs. Of the 150 participants, eight pitched ideas in September's pitch competition and two went on to share their winning ideas at EconoUs, the national community economic development conference.

Nanny shack was one of those winning ideas. Pitched by Jessie Leighton and Fatima Cuade, nanny shack was further developed by Sanya Chaudhry, a student at the University of Calgary's Haskayne School of Business. Sanya described the impact of the experience. She said that it had been a discovery of her own strengths and talents with the help of her neighbours. Social enterprise is what she wanted to be a part of.

Night Market North was another social enterprise born out of a connection with Northern Hills Connect. Within a few short months Ian McAnerin's idea became reality, with vendors, entertainment, and food trucks converging in Vivo's parking lot. Six hundred people attended the first night and 2,000 the second night.

Mr. Speaker, to kick off Stampede this year, my office will again partner with Vivo for Healthier Generations, changing it up from our usual breakfast to instead host a Stampede barbecue at Night Market North on July 6. This is a great opportunity to support Northern Hills Connect as it cultivates entrepreneurs to launch social enterprises, thereby fostering community connections.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Serenity's Siblings

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alex, Ryan, Ezekiel, Serenity: these are all children of Alberta who died tragically. There is another distressingly common thread among them. In each case there were adults in their lives who were aware of that plight.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, there are many other children out there at risk right now who can be saved by adults today. How do we know this? Well, because the media reports their cases on an, unfortunately, regular basis. What happens following each report? Each time we shake our heads in shock and say that we have to stop this from occurring, and then we simply go about our lives.

At this point I'm sure everyone might be expecting me to talk about Serenity's law, my private member's bill that the NDP refused to implement. You know, the one they say isn't supported by the Alberta chiefs of police, but, Mr. Speaker, I called them, and – guess what? – they actually do support it.

But I digress. Today I'm not going to do that, even though it is always on my mind. Instead, I'm going to remind everyone about Serenity's siblings. They, too, were in care like her. The child advocate in his comprehensive report confirmed that they also suffered but that, thankfully, unlike their younger sister, they survived. These children have been back with their mother for years now, and they are thriving. I hope that brings joy to your hearts. It certainly does to mine.

It seems that this government has forgotten them, for while Serenity's case continues, her brother's and sister's appears to have been abandoned. I have promised Serenity's mother that I will never give up seeking justice and protection for children for the sake of her children and all others who are at risk. Today I make that vow again. My wish is that everyone in this Assembly makes that vow with me, for we are in a position to make a difference, Mr. Speaker. Let's never lose sight of that. We can and we must do better.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I spoke in support of Bill 206, Societies (Prevention of the Promotion of Hate) Amendment Act, 2018, and I have some tablings. The first is an article with Vice June 14, 2017, The Birth of Canada's Armed, Anti-Islamic 'Patriot' Group.

The second was in the Edmonton Journal, Jonny Wakefield, August 21, 2017: After Charlottesville, Police and Activists Look to Counter Alberta's Extreme Right.

I tried to get a copy of the Rebel media piece called 10 Things I Hate about Jews, but of course they've since taken it down, or the paywall is strengthened.

Here they are. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat this morning, to the comment that he made during the Bill 2 debate, I rise to table the five requisite copies of three separate articles detailing the Methanex investment in Louisiana. In one of the articles the CEO of Methanex says: "That doesn't mean Medicine Hat is dead by any means . . . We [still] think Medicine Hat is a great place to [make] methanol."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the five requisite copies of the incorporation certificate for Invisible Empire Association of Alberta, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, which I referenced during second reading of Bill 206 yesterday. It shows that the KKK was registered as a society in Alberta in 1980.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Feehan, Minister of Indigenous Relations, responses to questions asked by MLA McPherson, hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, Mr. Loewen, hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, and Mr. Hanson, hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, during Ministry of Indigenous Relations 2018-19 main estimates debate.

On behalf of the hon. Ms. Sigurdson, Minister of Seniors and Housing, responses to questions asked by Mr. Clark, hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, and Dr. Starke, hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, during Ministry of Seniors and Housing 2018-19 main estimates debate.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 5

An Act to Strengthen Financial Security for Persons with Disabilities

The Chair: Currently under consideration is amendment A1. Are there any members wishing to speak to this amendment? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to read the name of the bill out again: An Act to Strengthen Financial Security for Persons with Disabilities. That's what we thought we were doing when we were bringing this amendment forward. I'm really quite disappointed. This is purely what would seemingly be a partisan decision, voting against this amendment. This amendment strengthens this legislation. Actually, that's what's in the title, just to be clear, An Act to Strengthen Financial Security for Persons with Disabilities. That's what this amendment does.

The amendment would have allowed AISH recipients to draw up to $800 a month from a trust without their AISH benefits being clawed back, the same way that AISH recipients can currently draw $800 a month of employment income. I mean, this costs the province nothing, Madam Chair. Nothing. Earlier, you know, the Premier was saying that they're standing up for Albertans. This is not the way you show how you stand up for Albertans, by not giving AISH recipients another opportunity to be able to top up the money that they receive in order to maybe, potentially, pull them out of poverty. I can't even begin to tell you how disappointing this is. It costs the government nothing.

I am a parent, Madam Chair, of a child who is now an adult who could be part of this particular situation, and I am telling you as a parent and as a stakeholder and as a person who's researched this that this decision of this government to go against this amendment is ridiculous. My only hope is that maybe they'll come back with their own wording and do it in a different way. I'm not quite sure what the government has in store, but I can tell you that as a stakeholder and as a person who is a parent of a young adult who could benefit from something like this when I'm not here to oversee this that it's more than disappointing; it's appalling.

Bringing some income from a trust and employment is in line. It's a practical, common-sense amendment that would have positively impacted the lives of disabled Albertans and their families as well as reducing confusion. Let me tell you that at a time when you're going through this, when you're creating these wills, when you're doing this, when you know that your child could be on their own some day, reducing confusion is absolutely imperative in piece of a piece of legislation like this.

I mean, I was so excited about this bill. It's a measure that we specifically heard from stakeholders. The government, Madam Chair, keeps saying: nothing for us without us. Well, I am telling you that going against this amendment is going against that saying straight up. This came directly from stakeholders. The disappointment is not only that the government is voting this down but that they didn't come up with this on their own. But even that would have been okay because the legislation as it stands is a needed piece of legislation. But let me read the title again, just to be clear so the government knows that this was their title. An Act to Strengthen Financial Security for Persons with Disabilities. So strengthen it. Strengthen it. Madam Chair, this is a real opportunity to actually do that. The government is voting down a reasonable amendment, and I'm going to go into why later.

This is particularly interesting for Albertans, for families that I know of. I happen to be in touch with a ton of families in this particular stakeholder group and not just because my son happens to be a part of that group but because we actually have friends and associates and groups of people.

Did you know that people have travelled to this province from all over the world, Madam Chair, to receive services in this province? The government would have you believe that our services in this province have been lacklustre. Let me tell you. I can tell you of 10 or 15 families, specifically, that moved here to this province for these services in the time that I had the privilege of finding out all about these services that were there and the people that came to my aid when my son was first diagnosed. Let's just clear that one up right away.

If the government has concerns about the language, which was vetted and approved by Parliamentary Counsel – these people are extremely well educated and brilliant. I'm pretty sure that if there was an issue with the language, they would have caught it. I'm not sure if maybe the government, then – can you just take the spirit of this legislation, Madam Chair? Is that possible? I would love to know what wording issues are here because it has already been vetted by the experts.

If you want to put forward your own amendment, please do. I really don't care who takes credit for this, but it is a needed part of the legislation that was left out by your government, and we brought it forward with good intentions to work with the government to make this better. Let me read the title again, just to be clear, because this is the government's title: An Act to Strengthen Financial Security for Persons with Disabilities. Really? But you're not willing to take a well-intentioned amendment, and you're going to say that you're not taking it because of language. Really? Well done. Well, then you fix the language and bring it back. How about that? Like I said, I really don't care who takes credit for it. Let's just get it right. Will the government commit to doing this, Madam Chair?

I'd also like to highlight a few other things. The government has concerns about the specific wording of this amendment. We would have been more than happy to sit down with them and discuss these concerns, rework the amendment to get all-party consent to pass this. That's what happened with my bill for adoption. The government had concerns. We went back and forth. We fixed it. We did it together. That would have been fine.

But to vote down this amendment is ludicrous. At no time did the government reach out for further clarity or to work collaboratively. Interesting. The government said today, specifically in question period: please reach out to us; our offices are open; we're here to do work with you. Really? Well, here's a perfect example, Madam Chair, where that didn't happen. We did reach out. We did ask for help. We were willing to work collaboratively, but the minister decided, along with the government, to vote down a reasonable amendment instead of working with us to get the wording clear to make this legislation stronger, which is in the title of the government's legislation. Wrong. I hope Albertans are watching this. Wrong. We did reach out for help.

The NDP has made life more difficult and more expensive for more Albertans, and under this government they've increased the cost of everything. With the carbon tax, minimum wage increases, regulatory burden, the cost of life in this province is soaring. Meanwhile, the last time that AISH was indexed to adjust for the cost of living was 2012, when it rose from $1,188 to $1,588, which is significantly lower than the current low-income cut-off, which is $1,699. This means, Madam Chair, that the AISH recipients are receiving the same amount of money, but their costs have risen. Their costs have risen.

So we came up with an alternative plan, especially for those folks who do have trusts that would be able to draw on that, that costs the government nothing. It leaves a huge financial gap, and many AISH recipients are living well below the poverty line, which is absolutely unacceptable. Our disabled population deserves every opportunity we can give them to live comfortable and successful lives, and this amendment would have provided them an additional opportunity. I cannot understand why the government would have taken this away.

Again, should the government choose to bring their own amendment forward, that would be fantastic. We will vote in favour of that. If it needs to be in your language, then do it. Again, this suggestion came from the stakeholders, Madam Chair. It's such a simple amendment, and the only reason the government has given us for voting it down is because of language. Please do clarify. It would be greatly appreciated.

The ability of AISH recipients to draw from a trust, in line with employment income, would have helped to make up some of the difference in that financial gap that is created by this government. It's so incredibly disappointing that they would have voted this amendment down. I mean, again, this could have helped raise AISH recipients out of poverty. I mean, honestly, it's a top-up. It's a top-up that would have cost you nothing – absolutely nothing – and it's already something that can be put in this legislation right now. But it's clear. Despite talking a big game, Madam Chair, does this government actually care about Alberta's vulnerable populations? Does this government actually have their backs? I would say, based on this, no.

We've seen that this is the case with the minimum wage increase. I mean, I can give you a perfect example. We have a fellow who's working at our car wash, and the increases to minimum wage made him unable to work at our car wash and still receive what he needed. I know that the minister knows this because I've sent him this information. This is a person that was trying to get ahead but, if he made more than $12 an hour, was unable to receive the requirements that he needed. He had to pick, Madam Chair, between either his medication or his AISH payment, and with one sign-off from the government, that could have been fixed in that particular situation. Again, I have reached out to the government. I have asked for help.

We've seen it with their shocking mishandling of the PDD review, which was frantically announced in early January this year despite stakeholders receiving assurances that the government would not be doing a review. Since the stakeholders have heard little to nothing about this review, which has no scope, no timeline, or deliverables – and it appears to be simply another announcement that the government can pat themselves on the back for, Madam Chair. Where is that PDD review? I'd like to know.

We have seen, in fact, that the PDD agencies were not consulted – isn't that interesting? – on the recent labour changes regarding overtime and holiday pay, which has caused some agencies the choice of being noncompliant with the legislation, closing their doors, or cutting services. This is particularly interesting. The government is cutting services to vulnerable populations, Madam Chair. The government is cutting services to vulnerable populations. I'm so tired that the government keeps talking about what they're doing to help vulnerable Albertans, and time and time again I see those Albertans' needs not being met. They're pawns, pawns for a government, being used as a political football.

This is actually a decent piece of legislation. I was so excited about this. We just wanted to help strengthen it, and the government, for partisan reasons, has shot it down. Interesting.

The disabled are already being negatively impacted. Let me give you another example, Madam Chair. Federally, if CPPD increases living for a person with disabilities, guess what happens? Da-da-da-da: AISH is clawed back. The minister also has that one, too. I've sent him a couple of those as well. Every time they get a cost-of-living increase, this is deducted from AISH. The minister has the power to fix this. Why not? Why am I bringing this up? Here's a decent piece of legislation that could have been strengthened, and the government is choosing to vote down the amendment. Hopefully, I can convince you not to do that.

You know, when you see a piece of legislation come through this – and the member had done a ton of consultation on this, went to the stakeholders. I was at all of those meetings. I saw the work that was done. It was very, very good. There are some things that are going to get missed, and it's such a privilege to be in this place, to be able to bring forward amendments that will strengthen legislation that is already good to start with. You feel like: oh, my goodness, they're listening to stakeholders – that's fantastic – and not just making meaningless promises and cutting ribbons and patting yourselves on the back. Yet such a simple amendment, which would have strengthened the legislation, is going to be or has been defeated needlessly.

There's another hole in this legislation that I'd like to also bring out, that the NDP has failed to address, which is that, unfortunately, due to the scope of the bill we are not able to amend because this bill does not bring this into consideration. We've heard from concerned families of disabled seniors who have trusts like the one that's laid out in Bill 5 and that raise their income to a level that is disqualifying them, Madam Chair, from being able to receive the Alberta seniors' benefit. Okay. I understand that that's out of the scope of this bill, but why isn't there legislation on the table, then, for that one? Bill 5 is supposed to ensure that those that receive an inheritance or trust will not be disqualified from AISH. Would it not stand to reason that the bill should also prevent disabled Albertans who have gone over to the side of the Alberta seniors' benefit from being disqualified from those benefits as well? I think it's a fairly major gap that needs to be fixed. Maybe the government has legislation in the works. Let's hope so.

We know that the transition from AISH to the Alberta seniors' benefit at the age of 65 is really, really, really, really difficult, and it's a huge hurdle for Albertans and their families. Like I've said to you before, Madam Chair, as a parent that has tried to navigate this – and I feel like can navigate this – I've made a gazillion mistakes in my own situations. I'm telling you that when those mistakes are made, you are rejected and not just once or twice or three times. You know what's even more interesting? When you're rejected, nobody tells you what you're rejected for. That's the most interesting part, going through that form and trying to figure out what you did wrong in the first place. It can sometimes be as simple as putting your name in the wrong space or not having a doctor's piece of information completely directed to the same place as what you may have checked off elsewhere.

If the government isn't taking the time to actually read the forms and make sure that people are being taken care of – I mean, hopefully, that advocate will be available to us soon so that maybe there will be some help there because this is extremely difficult to navigate. It's extremely stressful. I am so blessed, Madam Chair, that I have family around me. My husband and I are able to work through this paperwork. If it was my son who had to do this with some sort of advocate, I can tell you that I don't even know the language that I should use to explain to you the level of anxiety that that puts into me even thinking about that. The anxiety is almost too much to bear, the idea that my son could be left as an adult without help to figure out and navigate this system. And the government is not even willing to pass a small amendment to make it easier for people in this province. Holy moly.

Anyways, I would highly recommend that the government look through this problem and create legislation to protect disabled Albertans of all ages from having their government subsidies negatively impact their family's ability to leave them an inheritance. In conclusion, I mean, I've said "ludicrous." I've said "appalling." All of those words describe to me an inability to see past partisanship, but what's worse is that I'm really sad that the government would vote against a valuable amendment. I hope, Madam Chair, that they will fix this problem that our amendment highlighted as well as amend Bill 5 to include a provision to protect disabled seniors from having their seniors' benefit revoked because of a trust.

It would be a nice show of unity for the government to work with the opposition to make life better for Albertans with disabilities, but what, in the end, this side of the House cares most about is that the work gets done. We don't care who takes credit for it, and we would be happy for the NDP to take credit for closing these loopholes, as long as they get closed.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you, Member, for the remarks. I also heard words like "ludicrous," "appalling," and I can start by telling you what's really appalling. We added $103 million to this program in the last four budgets, and you have voted down those increases every time. What's really appalling is that we added $150 million to the PDD budget, and every time you along with your caucus have voted down all of those increases. There was an opportunity to vote on that budget separately as well; you still chose to vote it down. What's really appalling? You were asking about other bills that may be in the pipeline. There is a bill before the House, Bill 9, which you have walked out on along with your colleagues six times so far if my count is correct. That's really appalling. Yes, you made arguments about this amendment without even listening to this side, what we have to say about this amendment.

The thing is that what we have done as government: we had focused on making these programs better, making improvements to these programs, increasing funding to these programs over the period of last year. As I said, we have increased funding for AISH by $103 million to ensure that more Albertans have access to this vital support. If we were to take the advice from that side and cut 20 per cent, make it equal to B.C. – B.C. pays around $1,100 in AISH payments.

Also, there are things that are shared here that I don't think are completely correct. The way the AISH program works is that it's a guaranteed income program. What it says is that it ensures that your income from all sources doesn't fall below $1,588. There are categories of income which are exempt, partially exempt, not exempt, and if something falls in one of those categories, it will be treated accordingly.

I can talk about some other questions raised. Again, there are many things that were talked about that don't fall within the scope of this amendment or this legislation, so I will talk specifically about this legislation and this amendment and how AISH treats trusts and other incomes. I will start by saying that we have made strong investments in public service, health care, and education so that individuals and families have the help that they need. We have invested in the Calgary and Edmonton low-income transit pass program, which most people on these programs benefit from. We are investing in affordable housing, a $1.2 billion investment that low-income families will benefit from. We increased funding for FCSS programs, $25 million.

With that said, we value the intent of the amendment put forward by the member opposite, that they are trying to give an exemption to those on AISH. However, I think I briefly said this before. I do not think that it accomplishes what it's intended to accomplish. Insofar as the language of 3.1(1) goes, it refers only to cohabiting partners. The way I am reading it and the advice that I'm getting on it, this assumes that all AISH clients have partners, and it could have a negative impact on individuals who do not have partners. At best, I would say that it's not the most clearly written piece of legislation. We think that that's not fair, and we are concerned why it's drafted that way. I think I spoke to the member who brought this amendment. I shared my concern when this bill was debated a couple of weeks ago.

Secondly, the exemption level of a maximum $800 per month that is quoted in 3.1 doesn't actually match the true employment exemption level for a single client or cohabiting partner. The single exemption for employment income is the first $800 of net employment, which is fully exempt, and any amount over $800 up to $1,500 is 50 per cent exempt, for a maximum of $1,150. The family exemption is that the first $1,950 of the applicant or client or their cohabiting partner's combined net employment income is fully exempt. Any amount above $1,950 up to $2,500 is 50 per cent exempt, for a maximum of $2,225.

Neither of these exemptions is reflected in the proposed amendment. We are concerned that this amendment could result in unintended consequences and penalize single individuals who count on AISH. As a result, we cannot support this amendment. However, we are interested in looking at this issue further. I will be directing my department to explore this issue and any potential opportunities, and I will certainly keep all members of this House apprised of this work.

Another difference that I want to explain here is that the rationale behind different exemptions is different. Employment exemptions are there, I guess, to support and encourage employment while this trust income, rent, and other passive incomes – there are quite a few of them – are treated in one bucket separately. Going forward, we can certainly look at how we treat passive income, and again I will ask my department to look into it. But creating this one-off exemption I think creates a new layer of exemption which only applies to one kind of passive income, and the rest of the AISH recipients will have the same $200 plus 25 per cent exemption.

I think there is more work that needs to be done on this one. When my colleague the MLA for Calgary-Currie consulted with Albertans, that's not something that we have consulted on. We will work with our community partners to make sure that we get this right and that we make a decision that is taken in consultation with the community.

Thank you. As much as I appreciate the intent of the amendment, I will ask all members of this House to vote against this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, and thank you to the minister for the answers. I have absolutely no issue with the fact that there needs to maybe be more work. I understand that. But for the government to say that this amendment, that went through Parliamentary Counsel and an entire group of people before it comes to you, is poorly worded is disrespectful to this House, in my opinion. If the government had an issue, Madam Chair, with the language or anything like that, as you know as and as we've said to you on several occasions, we would have been happy to work with you on that.

I understand the exemptions. This exemption has nothing to do with those other exemptions, and you know that as well as I do. So if we needed to change the language in order to fix that, it would have been a very minor change. You know that as well as I do. It could have been a very small change that would have very much helped those of us who have children in this particular situation, who will one day leave this Earth and leave these things to our children, to make sure that some aspect of that was taken care of for them, and it could have very well raised them out of poverty.

I think your interpretation of the single versus cohabiting is misunderstood, and that's fair. If you've misunderstood it, Madam Chair, that's fair; that's fine. But we could have discussed that, and I would happily have done that. Having been a parent and having been in the system and having gone through this, I would have happily been a person to have bounced these ideas off to make this amendment work.

The only thing I care about at this point in time, Madam Chair, and that I'd like to have on the record is that the government look at this fulsomely. If you need to come up with whatever language you need to come up with, Minister, in order to make this work, we will be very grateful. If that's what needs to happen here, then so be it.

But in the meantime to be able to have an opportunity, especially in committee like this, to be able to work on language together would have been a wonderful opportunity to make this legislation stronger, which – I've read the title several times – was what this was intending to do.

Madam Chair, thank you so much for the opportunity to speak to this. I look forward to the amendments to this legislation that the government will be bringing forward to amend their own legislation. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment A1? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to take a couple of minutes to speak to this amendment. When I read it when it was first introduced, I was actually pretty excited to see it. I think it makes a lot of sense. I think it's very compassionate. It fills in a gap that was noticed, and I'm very disappointed to understand that the government isn't supporting this.

I appreciate the explanation that the minister gave, but I think that, as the Member for Chestermere-Rocky view said, there's still space to have a conversation about it and to change the amendment in a way that would be acceptable and still meet what it is that the amendment was trying to achieve in the first place, which is compassionate. AISH recipients are pretty vulnerable people by and large, and it's hard to get by on AISH. Anything that we can do from a regulatory or legislative point of view to make it easier for them, to make life easier for them: I think it's incumbent upon us to at least give it very serious consideration.

With that, again, I'm disappointed in the decision of the government, and I would still urge colleagues in the House to support this amendment.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I won't take up too much of members' time, but I've been following this bill pretty closely. The Member for Calgary-Currie and I met I believe last September to discuss this when it was in the form of a private member's bill. I thought it was an absolutely excellent piece of legislation, compassionate, and helping families to care for their loved ones in need, and it was sorely needed. I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Currie for bringing this forward.

I won't belabour the point, but this amendment I think does improve upon a positive piece of legislation. I'll be voting for the final piece of legislation if this amendment is accepted or not, but this is a very nonideological piece of legislation and a nonideological amendment. I just want to thank the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill for her comments, Chestermere-Rocky View, and then, obviously, the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills for bringing it forward.

I think this does build upon an already positive piece of legislation. I imagine we'll agree a bit more on this piece of legislation than on the next bill up for debate, but I think it would be a positive move on the government's part to consider accepting this. If they need more time to consider it, perhaps they would just tell the House so, and we could adjourn debate on this and come back to it later in the day or tomorrow. It does build on a positive piece of legislation.

I just also wanted to make sure I'm on the record thanking the Member for Calgary-Currie for consulting widely and bringing forward a good piece of legislation even though it's now in the form of a government bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A1 lost]

Bill 9 Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act

The Chair: Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to speak about Bill 9, access to abortion services act. This piece of legislation has created quite the interesting conversation in Alberta as of late. I think that this is an incredible move by the government to ensure that there is fair access when women are choosing to access reproductive health care. There are a number of services that women access when they visit abortion clinics. It is not only an abortion that they are always seeking when they go into a clinic, and it's important that they feel safe and respected in that community. Just like being at home, just like at a workplace, it's important that they feel that they can access health services without feeling harassed, without feeling that their privacy is being compromised.

I know that we have heard in this House experiences of an increase in protester activity when people are going to these clinics. As well, health professionals have also been feeling fearful for their safety. As well, people that go as a support system to these clinics with friends of theirs, with family of theirs are also feeling a lot of unease when they go to access these services. So, you know, that stigma that still surrounds abortion in Canada and in Alberta is still a real thing.

It reminds me of when, I think, I was 20 and I was seeking services, psychiatry services. I made a trip to the University of Alberta hospital, and I knew that if I were to go in the door and go through the doors of the office, I would be able to attain services, and if there was someone standing outside staring at me with a placard to tell me that there was something wrong with accessing mental health assistance, I probably would not have gone. It was only because of the ease of accessing that service that I was able to get through those front doors, and I'm grateful that those services were there when I needed them. You know, I've spoken a lot in this House about the stress of having a mom with a lot of complex mental health issues. Over the course of my life that created a lot of compounded stress and was leading to depression, so I needed help that my friends were not able to give me. It's good when we can have support systems around us, but having a mental health professional that is accessible is something that is worth its weight in gold, so to speak.

You know, the stigma that also surrounds accessing abortion is very real. I was talking to a friend of mine who had accessed those services for herself. She's still not ready to tell it as sort of a general part of her story about who she is, where she's been. She's only told, I think, three people in her life because she's afraid of what people will think of her even though this has been a legal service that women have had access to for 30 years in Canada.

You know, it's for those reasons that I speak highly in favour of this bill. I know that for her it was the right choice. It was a choice that she thought about for as long as she needed, and she needed to know that she had support from her family and friends around her. She had certain plans that she had for her life. She didn't feel like having a family at that time was the right choice for her, so she made that choice of her own free will. That's all this is. It's to allow a woman to be able to have that freedom, to not have someone else, whether it is their values, their morals, their ethics, putting those upon a woman that is going to make her own choice about her own health care.

I think that that's really important. I know that we come from a lot of diverse experiences. You know, I had the opportunity to meet with a couple of people that actually are some of those people that meet outside across the street from clinics that provide abortion services. I listened to them. I listened to why it is that they go. They feel that they're doing their own service. They feel that they are being there in a very specific way for a specific reason outside of the clinic, and they'll continue to do that. They're not happy about this, but they will continue to do that. They just will continue to do it from a further distance away from the clinic. These actually were not people that loudly protest, that hold placards. They just engage in their own prayer. They will continue to do this, and that's their freedom to do that. It's their freedom to practise in their own way, and it is a woman's freedom to access legal health services that are available to her.

I'm also glad to hear that there are parts of this legislation that will make sure that, you know, even beyond that zone that will be set up around a clinic, it will not be legal to harass people outside of that, whether it's to try to intimidate health care providers, to use people's connections that are in these communities and in their families to try and stop a health care provider from being able to do their job. That's what we're trying to address, that sort of chilling effect that happens when women feel afraid to access the service and the health care providers want to be able to practise health care free of intimidation. That should be their right, especially in this country of ours, especially in this province of ours.

Those were some of the things that I needed to reflect on from my own experience and that of my good friend. Also, you know, I needed to reflect on how it is going to affect others, people that would want to go and engage in loud or silent protest outside of these clinics. It's about striking a balance. It's about protecting a woman's right to access health services, legal health services, and protecting the ability for someone to exercise their own views, their own opinions. But there is a line. There is a line at which my rights should never impede upon yours. I think that's a really important balance to strike.

With that, Madam Chair, I will conclude my remarks on the bill at this time, but I thank the government for bringing forward this bill. I'm thankful that in this country and in this province, women are able to make their own choices when it comes to their own bodies, and I am proud to stand up for those rights.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise in full support of Bill 9. Now, Madam Chair, I am pro choice, and I am about as pro choice as one can get. I've always believed in a woman's right to choose, and I'm passionate about making sure that people have access to safe abortions.

Something that I want to point out before I continue is that abortion rights are not only women's rights, but many men also have uteruses. There are thousands of trans men and nonbinary people in our province who have a different type of difficulty accessing these types of services, and I want to remind the House that we cannot forget them when we're talking about health care and abortion services.

As a man who doesn't have a uterus and doesn't have to worry about being pregnant or even worry about impregnating my current partner, I realize that I'm in a position of extreme privilege when it comes to the subject of abortion, which is why I don't think it's up to me to tell people what they should do with their bodies. Being pro choice means that you believe people should be able to choose what is best for them when it comes to their own bodies. It's not up to me to decide what is best for people who are pregnant and are making the decision of whether or not to go through with the pregnancy. When I have people that I love trying to make that decision, I help them, I support them, I hold their hand, and whatever they choose, I am there for them. But it's not up to me to make that decision for them.

I can understand people who don't want to have an abortion themselves. But to stop everyone else from seeking access to an abortion is such a foreign idea to me. I simply don't understand. You cannot be pro life and antiabortion because when states bar access to abortion services, people die. We've all heard stories of people trying to self-abort, and we all know that many of those stories end in tragedy. That's why I'm fighting for this bill, because the people of Alberta deserve to have access to abortion services without harassment. They deserve the right to access legal health care services without attacks, without molestation, and without having to go through a throng of people yelling at them and holding up signs with graphic images to try to dissuade Albertans from making a very personal decision.

I am very proud to support this bill, and I would ask all members of this Chamber to stand and vote in support of Bill 9.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to thank members for their participation in the debate here, especially the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville for her personal experiences and the experiences of her friend. It is a choice, but it is, I think, for the vast majority of women who make the choice, a very difficult and personal choice that shouldn't be an easy choice, but it is their choice to make.

I want to address just a few of the comments from the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood around what it means to be pro choice. I am pro choice for everything. If you are pro choice and you believe it is your body and your choice, that should apply beyond just abortion. It should apply to every law that the government passes. It should apply to private health care. If you believe that it is your body and the government has no right to tell you what to do with it as long as you're not hurting anybody else, then surely we should at least believe in the right of people to access private health care in parallel to our public system. If it is our body and our choice and the government has no say over it, then clearly the members opposite must believe that the Canada Health Act itself is in violation of that principle.

If we are pro choice in believing that it is your body and your choice and that the government has no say over what you do with it, then clearly banning flavoured tobacco should be against the spirit of their convictions. If they are pro choice that it is our body, our choice, then clearly the right to ride a motorcycle without a helmet, however ill advised that activity may be, should apply to everyone regardless of their religion. This is the concept of sovereignty of the person.

Now, there is a legitimate debate about, you know, that some people would say that in the case of abortion there is another person involved, and surely at some point there is, and we generally have a hard time determining where that point starts and where it ends. Some people have black-and-white views on it. I have a bit more of a grey view on it. I want to emphasize the point that if you do believe in what you're saying, that it is your body and your choice, then surely that principle must apply beyond the narrow confines of the abortion debate.

Again, you know, the story the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville spoke to I think is very heartfelt and one that many women go through every year in Alberta. As men in this Chamber we should be very grateful that we don't have to face that. That is a difficult time. But I do take issue with some of what she said. I think she is confusing opposing a legal right to abortion with opposing even questioning the morality around it. I think that the vast majority of reasonable people in Alberta and in Canada have nuanced views on the topic. As I've said before, if you want to ruin a perfectly good conversation between two civil and reasonable people, talk about abortion. You'll ruin a conversation pretty quickly because it's such a polarized debate, and nuance does not function well in it.

There is a difference between trying to actively deprive someone of the legal right to do it physically and having a disagreement about it as a moral issue. Bill Clinton, probably the most famous pro-choice president of the United States, famously said that abortion is between a woman, her doctor, and her God. He was clear that, you know, he believed that he was pro choice, he believed in lifting restrictions on abortion, but he did not deny that there are moral implications involved in it that every woman must make a decision on herself.

You know, the pro-life movement itself has a pretty broad range of views. There are the more extreme ones who believe it should be banned in all cases. I think that's a very small group, but there are some who believe that. There are moderates along a long line of where they draw the line. And then there are a significant number of pro-life Albertans and Canadians who believe it should be legal but who take moral issue with it and seek to change hearts and minds rather than legislation.

I think this bill is going to make it illegal for even the most respectful kind of protest. I'm sure there probably have been examples, but I cannot recall an example in recent history where there's been violence or active intimidation at an Alberta abortion clinic. These protests are rare in general, but in most cases where I'm aware of something, it's been a little old lady praying quietly, and this will make them illegal. You might disagree with her, and she might disagree with you, but if she's not hurting anyone, if she's not harassing anyone, if she's merely praying, I think that's her business.

That's where this bill crosses the line. It is already illegal to harass someone. It's illegal to intimidate someone. If this bill sought to just clarify that in law, around intimidation and harassment, I would be its most enthusiastic supporter, but this bill talks about protest and has a very broad definition of protest, and that would include someone who just sits there quietly praying, even silently, to themselves. I'm sure that we have a hard time as legislators figuring out what she's saying to God, but that's her business. Somehow we're now going to expect law enforcement officials to figure out what she might be praying quietly. That's a very strange thing for government to legislate.

I'll have a series of amendments dealing with some of these issues, trying to better balance this bill. I'll distribute them now before going any further.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A5.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. The amendment that I've put before members reads as follows. I move that Bill 9, Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act, be amended in section 7 by (a) in subsection (3) striking out "160 metres" and substituting "10 metres" and (b) in subsection (5) by adding "not to exceed 10 metres from the boundaries of the parcel on which a residence is located" after "physicians or service providers."

Now, I can speak from personal experience of having unwanted political business outside my house. I mentioned it at an early stage of this debate. Several months ago I had CBC camped outside my house with a camera pointed through the windows of my home while my wife, children, and other members of my extended family were inside. It was a gross violation of privacy and, I think, outright paparazzi-style media, unbecoming of any news broadcaster, let alone one that receives state taxpayer funding and support. I believe that that should have been illegal. I think that would constitute harassment and a violation of my privacy at home. If they want to wait outside my office, that's fine, but not at my home.

The home is much more sacred than that, and there is legitimacy in, I think, stopping protests outside of a home, period. One area of the bill where I would be more comfortable with limiting freedom of assembly is outside of people's homes. Protesting at a place of work is one thing, protesting at a monument or a government building is one thing, but protesting at someone's home is quite another. I'm actually quite supportive of there being a no-protest zone at residences, but at 160 metres it's quite an extraordinarily large zone that's been proposed. I mean, where can we draw the line? If you simply drive by a house with a pro-life bumper sticker, would you be considered protesting? If you wore a T-shirt as you walked by, would you be protesting?

What I'm seeking to do here is leave in place a part of the bill with which I actually strongly agree, that you should not be protesting outside of someone's home, but to bring that zone down to a more manageable level of 10 metres. At 160 metres, especially if you're in an urban area, you might not even know who's there.

That's a very large zone that was extended by the government without particularly much opposition here. I disagreed with 50 metres before, and I certainly disagree with 150 and 160 metres.

I will just say that this is a part of the legislation with which I strongly agree. You should not be protesting outside of someone's private residence. I've experienced that myself, and it's disgusting regardless of what you're doing. I support the spirit of it, but I want to bring the zone size down to a more manageable level so that we're not capturing people in this who should probably not be considered protesting outside of someone's home at that kind of distance.

Thank you.

4:40

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to the amendment. I am immensely appreciating the opportunity to do so to the amendment, reducing the distance from 160 metres – was it? – to 10 metres. So 10 metres I don't have a way to measure, but that's approximately from myself to you.

I don't know how many clinics you've driven by, but I don't just see little old ladies sitting there praying. It tends to be groups. It tends to be graphic, graphic signs that are huge that people are holding, and they tend to yell some obscenities that I'm not going to say in this place, not to mention the harassment that comes with the name-calling. I don't know. I'm pretty sure that if I called you a baby murderer from here, you'd hear it, so I think 10 metres is not sufficient. Although I do certainly appreciate your interest in this bill and allowing us the opportunity to debate every facet of it, I would encourage all of my colleagues to vote no on this amendment.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A5?

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my absolute honour and privilege to stand up today to talk about Bill 9, the access to abortion services act. As a woman, as a mom, as a friend, as a social worker I've had first-hand experience assisting those who both work professionally and have had to use abortion services here in the province of Alberta. I was a young mom, and I had several friends that had to make that decision when faced with an unplanned pregnancy, and I can say that it's not an easy decision.

Being a young person and having to come to a decision and then being forced to go to a clinic where you're being yelled at and threatened and told that you are an absolutely horrible person because of a decision that you have to make, accessing health care, is absolutely unacceptable.

Early on in my career I chose to work with young parents. I worked at an organization called Terra. This organization supported young parents and/or pregnant teens. Not all of us chose to parent. Some chose to place for adoption, some chose an abortion, some had miscarriages, but we all came together as a community, and we supported each other. Seeing these young women and young dads was absolutely remarkable. The thing that was really heartbreaking was when a young woman had to decide that she needed to have an abortion for her own personal choices and then had to run a gauntlet of protesters, who were horrible. Seeing the aftermath of that as their friend, as a counsellor was absolutely devastating.

When I was a social work student in my second year, I chose to do my practicum at Planned Parenthood, and to me it was one of the most amazing experiences that I could have had as a social worker. I had the privilege of hearing first-hand from women who were struggling with an unplanned pregnancy. As staff at Planned Parenthood we received horrible, horrible messages, hate mail from people that were just disgusting in the language that they sent to us as staff that were supporting women that were able to access health care. In talking to staff that worked in the abortion clinics, they were terrified sometimes to go to work, had been accosted on ski hills out with their family during vacation, had people that knew where they lived and would come to their home. It was absolutely terrifying, and my heart went out to so many people that were doing their job, essentially, every day.

That was in the '90s, Madam Chair, and to hear that they had asked government for protection, for bubble zone legislation, and that the government turned their back on them is horrible. I am so proud that our government listened to the women and to the health care providers and that we came forward with legislation that's going to help protect those people that need to access their employment and need to access health care services.

I remember a woman when I was working in a women's shelter. She was pregnant, and she was terrified that her husband would find out, and she chose to access abortion services. She went to the clinic and came back in tears to the shelter. She was horrified. She didn't feel safe and was terrified that somehow her husband was going to find out that she was pregnant just simply by going to the doctor. She struggled a long time about how she would make that decision to simply walk through the doors. That's not okay. This was a woman who needed for her own personal safety to access health services and was afraid because of the protesting that was happening right out front of that clinic.

I stand here in disappointment that there aren't more members listening to some of these stories and standing up for what they believe in regardless of whether they're supporting it or not. I stand here proud of our government and what we're doing to help women. This is simply about making it safe for women to access health care. They need to be able to walk into a place where they can access health care and feel safe and secure and not abused, Madam Chair, just for having an appointment at a clinic.

I would really strongly suggest that all members of this House stand with the women of Alberta and stand with the health care professionals that go to work every day and have a right to go to work and access services without being harassed, threatened, ridiculed. It's our right, Madam Chair, and I'm pleading: please, please support this bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs for her comments.

Madam Chair, certainly, it'll be a change in tone, but if you and the members would indulge me for just a moment to go completely off topic – I'll try to tie it in – I want to get on the record after meeting members of different parties during the bells as we chatted. I think there will probably be all-party agreement if the Minister of Finance, responsible for the AGLC, were to extend opening hours for places that serve alcohol on the 19th of May so that all Albertans can join in celebrating the royal wedding as good, loyal subjects of the Commonwealth. We did this during the World Cup when it was on, and I greatly appreciated it. We may have done it during hockey games as well. I know I'm completely off topic, so I appreciate members' indulgence on this. I think there'll be a great deal of crossparty support, and I would encourage the Minister of Finance to consider it.

Back to the more serious matter at hand, though, I have another amendment to put forward, that I'll distribute to members before continuing.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A6.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. In the amendment put forward, I move that Bill 9, Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act, be amended in section 2(1) by striking out clause (b). This is striking out three words in the bill: "engage in protest."

This is important because this is keeping everything in the bill about intimidation and harassment. The Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs spoke to her experience and the experience of people she knows of horrible intimidation and harassment, things that are unacceptable, really, anywhere but in particular when someone is going through such a difficult time. But "engage in protest" is an overly broad term. Protest can range from aggressive shouting, which I believe should not be permitted – I think we would consider that harassment in the context of outside an abortion clinic – but it can also include peaceful and respectful protest. It can include protests, which are actually more common in these places, of just silent prayer.

I won't belabour the point, but as I spoke to earlier, if someone is engaging in silent prayer somewhere, this legislation would probably consider that protest. It may be a form of protest, but I think it's not intimidation. It's not harassment. It's someone expressing their religious freedoms, freedom of expression, and freedom of assembly in a way that I don't believe is worthy of being struck down. It's not a kind of protest I would engage in or even encourage at that place. I think there are better places for it. But if someone is engaging even in silent prayer as a form of protest, I think it would be a gross overreach and violation of freedom of expression, assembly, and religion to ban that.

I think all members, on all sides of this House, should stand up for those basic liberties. This is a part of the bill where the balance is completely wrong. If we're trying to protect people from harassment and intimidation, we can do that, but we should not be unduly infringing on people's basic Charter rights. The Criminal Code already prohibits harassment, intimidation, threats, and assaults. The Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs spoke to that. Those things are already against the law. If this bill wants to further clarify and entrench those things in legislation, I think that is positive, but this is where the bill goes completely off script, where it goes completely off balance in balancing important Charter rights.

This is a very simple amendment to better balance this legislation. It keeps in place everything on harassment, intimidation, threats, and assaults but strikes out only three words: "engage in protest." I'd encourage all members to support it.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Seeing none, are you ready for the vote?

The Chair: Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to the bill? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. Let's try again. I'll try to be brief, which I am sure members will surely appreciate. I'll distribute this amendment before continuing.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A7.
Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. The amendment I propose is to move that Bill 9, Protecting Choice for Women

Accessing Health Care Act, be amended in section 13 by striking out:

(4) Where a corporation commits an offence under this Act, any officer, director or agent of the corporation who directed, authorized, assented to, acquiesced in or participated in the commission of the offence is guilty of that offence and liable to the penalty provided under subsection (2)(a) or (3)(a), as the case may be, whether or not the corporation has been prosecuted or convicted of that offence.

Now, this is more of a housekeeping part of the bill. The last amendment I moved dealt with the substance of the bill, I think, trying to better balance Charter rights and freedoms. This amendment is more housekeeping in nature, just trying to improve the wording of the legislation.

Corporations are already subject to the Criminal Code. The definition in section 2 of "every one, person and owner" includes public bodies, bodies corporate, societies, and companies. Corporations can only act through their employees and agents. Under current Canadian law officers and directors of a corporation cannot be convicted of a crime for the acts of the corporation solely because of their status as a director or officer. That's a basic principle of Canadian corporate law and societies law. If they are directing the corporation to commit crimes that will benefit the corporation or otherwise participate in criminal activities within the corporation's context, they can already be held criminally responsible. In those circumstances, though, it is highly likely that the directors and officers would be charged with the offence jointly with the corporation, not singled out.

So if that conduct is what the government is targeting in Bill 9, it would be supplementing the Criminal Code, meaning that Bill 9 is potentially encroaching on federal jurisdiction. I think that that is an issue with the way this legislation is written. This particular amendment is not trying to change the spirit of the bill, the intent of the bill, or even the strength of the bill from the government's perspective but is simply trying to clarify important distinctions between individuals and corporations here, to clean up the wording there.

I would encourage all members to support this amendment.

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll distribute the next amendment before commencing to speak.

The Chair: This will be amendment A8.
Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 9, Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act, be amended in section 5(1) by striking out clause (c).

The section that I'm proposing be stricken out says "persistently request that another person refrain from providing, or facilitating the provision of, abortion services." I consider this part to be a direct assault on freedom of expression. It is not necessarily harassing somebody or intimidating somebody or assaulting to express your viewpoint to someone. Members across the way tell me not to do things all the time. I may not listen to them all the time, but they have a right to express themselves. As the opposition it's nearly our job to tell the government not to do things, but they are not obliged to listen to us.

Someone expressing their point of view about what you're doing is not violating their rights. Freedom of expression is the right to express yourself, but someone does not have the right to make you listen. That's what the block feature is for on most social media platforms. You don't have to listen to somebody.

In this case, this amendment, if taken in isolation, would keep the bill intact. It would achieve, I think, most of or all of what the government is intending to do except that if, you know, someone were to politely ask someone: would you like to talk about this? Again, it's not something I would encourage at an abortion clinic. I don't think you're going to talk someone out of it, but if someone simply wants to talk about something, I don't think we should be stopping them for simply asking if someone wants to talk about it. To request that someone refrain from doing it I think is an overreach of the law. So I believe that this amendment would better balance security of the person, a Charter right to protect women accessing these services, with the competing Charter rights in this bill of freedom of expression and freedom of assembly.

I'd encourage all members to consider supporting this particular amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I want to thank the member for being very clear and open about where he stands on this and for the work that he's done in this Assembly to make sure that he is present and active in debate regarding something that women have been asking for government to act on in this province for about 30 years. They only asked this government about a year ago.

When I toured Woman's Health Options here in Edmonton and when I toured Kensington clinic in Calgary, the staff there said that what they were most excited about with this legislation – there were lots of pieces, but when I said, "You may have heard. Our Premier wants us every day to get up and do something that day to make life better for Albertans. I know that you've told me this legislation will help make your life better. Tell me one way this will help you personally," some of the staff said: "I'm really looking forward to not having to spend an hour every day deleting e-mails from my inbox. I'm really looking forward to not having to answer hateful phone calls when I start my day."

People have the right to make their opinions known. I believe just last week there was a protest at the Legislature regarding legislation around this work, but: "People shouldn't be coming to my place of work day in and day out and harassing me for doing my job." Part of it was that they were saying that they feel like this government for the first time in the history of those clinics respects what they do. Part of that is not allowing harassing behaviour that really is beyond reason.

I have to say that I believe that removing the words that are in this clause would remove one of the benefits that these staff said will indeed make their lives better. For those reasons, I won't be voting in support of the amendment, and I would encourage colleagues to also oppose it.

Again, through you, Madam Chair, to the hon. member, I do want to say that I appreciate how open he's been about what his views are on this legislation. Clearly, he is engaging in this process and has opinions, as I'm sure many Albertans do. He's right. Sometimes this is a contentious issue for folks, but I appreciate that he's showing up to his job and doing it in a way that he feels safe, respected, and honoured. Certainly, we won't necessarily agree, but you can't deny the fact that he is giving his job his all. I want to give that to the women who are entering these clinics as well, whether they're staff or – I imagine there's probably been a man or two working in these clinics. I've only met women when I've visited them, so I use that gendered language, I guess, when I'm referring to it. I have to say how much I want to make their lives better.

I imagine that many of us in this House signed up for this work because we wanted to have an opportunity to influence public policy and make our opinions heard. Certainly, to that hon. member: your opinion is heard. You joked I think a few days ago about being the Leader of the Opposition, and I have to say that you are certainly holding government to account and doing your job. While I won't be voting for your amendment, I certainly respect that you've brought it forward and the way that you've been open about your opinions on this issue.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members to speak? Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I want to thank the hon. Deputy Premier for her comments, but for the sake of my popularity in Strathmore-Brooks please stop complimenting me.

Ms Hoffman: Sorry. This is just too much fun. I won't drag this on much longer. I appreciate the focus that has been given to this item.

I do want to say: don't worry. I think you're up soon for a rotation in question period, and I'm sure you'll have an opportunity to highlight just how much we differ in our opinions on many items. Certainly, you being the lone vote on this for many items I think bodes well for your reputation as well.

5:30

Again, I imagine that there are people in this Chamber that have strong opinions on this and might not feel so safe or supported. I imagine sometimes it cannot necessarily feel safe or supportive to be a lone member, an independent member, but I certainly do respect that you have shown up to do your job and that you have said that nobody is going to stop you from doing that. I can tell from your tenacity with these amendments that you're committed to trying to do everything through your powers as a Member of the Legislative Assembly and the responsibility that comes with that to do your job.

Again, to the hon. member, I'll bring the gloves tomorrow, but I respect, certainly, the work that you've done on this today and in the many days that have been previous and, I imagine, forthcoming as well. Thanks again.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A8?

Seeing none, I'll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A8 lost]

The Chair: Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, Madam Chair, I have the pleasure of announcing to members that this will be my last amendment to the bill. Sorry to disappoint some. I'll distribute it before speaking further.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A9.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. The amendment is as follows. I move that Bill 9, Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act, be amended as follows: in part A section 1(d) is amended by striking out the word "or" at the end of subclause (iii), by adding "or" at the end of subclause (ii), and by striking out subclause (iv), and in part B section 15 is amended by striking out clause (a).

What this does is that it essentially strikes out sections that say:

The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations

- (a) specifying or describing premises as a facility for the purposes of section 1(d).

This is an amendment, again, I think, from just a better legislative perspective. It is not changing the intent of the bill, it is not changing the spirit of the bill, and it's not even changing, I think, probably in the minister's view, the strength of the bill. What this is doing is ensuring that this is legislative, that they are legislating very clearly here that the cabinet through order in council cannot simply expand the definition of what types of facilities here are protected through the back door. I think the bill is pretty clear about what it means for these kinds of facilities that they're trying to keep protests or dissent away from. They've been pretty clear on that. They've spelled it out in the legislation. My fear is that by simply granting the government the power through a simple decree, through order in council, the government may expand this to other kinds of facilities not really intended to be covered by this. This is, I think, just better legislative writing.

You know, regardless of where you fall on the political spectrum, what party you're in, we should always be careful to write laws that will be good regardless of what side of the aisle you're on. In the freak accident that the NDP were not re-elected in a year, they may regret giving a different party power through order in council to essentially change this bill. That's a very dangerous thing to do, to give unreasonable power to government through order in council.

There are appropriate times for orders in council for the government. I think that we've all demonstrated that in our support for the bill giving the right to the government to potentially stop oil shipments to unnamed provinces that try to stop our exports. That's a reasonable power to give government through order in council in cabinet, and the government has accepted a sunset clause to that. It's important that we restrain the arbitrary power of the executive, and that's why I believe that this amendment, which will keep the entire bill intact but remove the ability of the executive level of government to arbitrarily change the definitions of the protected facilities, is an appropriate move.

Dr. Swann: What would be an example of a misuse?

Mr. Fildebrandt: The Member for Calgary-Mountain View has asked for an example of it. You know, perhaps there is a pro-choice activist organization that has a building with a headquarters somewhere, but they do not provide abortion services there, there are no abortion doctors, and there are no patients seeking abortions or health services of any kind. It might be simply an activist headquarters of some kind.

It might simply involve organizations that support abortion access but aren't providing abortions themselves, and there's therefore no purpose to saying that you can't protest there. You know, if X organization supports abortion rights but they're not actually performing any there – there are no patients, there are no doctors, and it is simply a political activism group of some kind – disagree with them you might, but I think it would be unreasonable to restrict someone's right to protest that facility if there are no doctors or patients who can be affected. It is, then, simply a matter of political and social disagreement on issues, and I don't believe that the government would be right to limit that. That is one particular example.

But when you grant governments powers that are virtually unlimited to expand the definition of something beyond the legislation, it is always a dangerous road to go down. I hope that the government and other opposition members will recognize that it is always a very dangerous thing to grant the executive powers to change something arbitrarily.

I hope that they'll give this due consideration as an amendment to maintain the spirit and intent and powers of the bill but ensure that it does not exceed what they intend themselves for it to include. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. I think that I am not inclined to vote for the amendment for the reason that, for example, 30 years ago, when other jurisdictions were considering this, hospitals and clinics were the only places where abortion services were provided. We've since expanded to include pharmacies because of the addition of Mifegymiso across Canada, with recent approvals. Again, it is very clear in sub (iv): "premises specified or described in the regulations in which abortion services are provided." So it's not a pro-choice organization that isn't actually providing abortion services. This would be a specific place.

Again, with the evolution of science and with medicine, we didn't want to require a House of the day, whether it be in one year or 10 years from now, to have to come back and reopen this legislation to protect another site where this might be happening. We tried to be very careful in the choosing of these words to ensure that it was only about addition, that it wasn't about retraction of the types of locations that are included. But the addition could only be for facilities or premises where abortion services are provided.

I think the intent of the mover is acknowledged in the original legislation. Therefore, I would discourage my colleagues from voting for the amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll thank the Minister of Health for her comments. I just have a couple of questions around this, though. Is she able to cite examples where there have been protests, that involved harassment or not, outside of pharmacies in the last year or two? I know that most pharmacies will provide certain prescriptions and medications that can terminate pregnancies. Some of that might be considered abortion, some of it not. If she can provide whether there have been examples of people protesting outside of pharmacies: that is my first question.

The second, though, would be: in her view, are pharmacies already included in the definitions that she has prescribed in the bill that she's put forward here? If pharmacies are in fact included in the definitions that she's highlighted, why would it be necessary to give the government the power to expand the definitions to other kinds of facilities if clinics, hospitals, and pharmacies are all covered? Perhaps she can correct me if I'm wrong, but I can't think of other kinds of facilities that could be – yes. The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster has highlighted the section very specifically. Pharmacies are included right now.

This is not seeking to remove pharmacies from the legislation. It keeps it in there. Clinics, hospitals, pharmacies are all there. She can correct me if I'm wrong, but I can't think of other kinds of facilities that provide abortion or abortion-related services. Because they've been quite broad in the kinds of facilities that they seek to keep protest or dissent away from on this issue, I have a hard time seeing why the executive would want to grant itself extensive powers to expand the definition if it's already very broad and does include things like pharmacies already.

Ms Hoffman: In other jurisdictions it specifically referred to hospitals and clinics because at the time when these laws were brought in – it was a number of years ago – other jurisdictions, including Alberta, didn't have abortion services provided anywhere other than a hospital and clinic. We wrote in "pharmacy" because of the evolution over the last year of Mifegymiso coming on and our government making the choice to make that fully funded and publicly available for those who choose to access it. That's why we added in "pharmacy."

It's that same rationale that drove us to add in section 1(d)(iv), because nobody foreshadowed that "pharmacy" was going to be included. Now, in those other jurisdictions should the pharmacist feel that there is unreasonable protesting outside their pharmacy, they don't have the ability through an order in council to be able to protect those pharmacies from those types of protests. That's exactly why we added (iv), because science and medicine continue to evolve, and should there be – again, it's not any building – "premises specified or described in the regulations in which abortion services are provided," that's the type of building it could be expanded to.

Just like we didn't foresee "pharmacy" 20 years ago, I don't want to compel the House – we know that some members don't think this issue is worth debating today. We certainly envision that they might not feel it's worth debating in five or 20 years from today. I don't want to require a business or a premises where this service is provided to compel any government to have to come back to debate this legislation. As long as they meet the criterion of (iv), they could be expanded through an order in council to protect that space as well.

Again, I will be voting no on this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Go ahead, Calgary-MacKay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just a couple of things regarding this amendment. The first one has to do with language. The Member for Strathmore-Brooks referred to abortion doctors. Those are actually called gynecologists, and they're doctors that specialize in women's reproductive health care. That's a whole spectrum of things. It could be things from menstruation to having babies, conceiving babies, having a hysterectomy because of health issues. I think it's incumbent on us to use the correct language when we're speaking about matters like this. This is an important discussion, an important debate, and I'd really encourage us all to use the correct terms.

The second point that I wanted to make was that I agree wholeheartedly with the minister on this. I think it's very smart, actually, to leave it a little bit more open ended. This doesn't empower the government to make a change through an order in council to a wide range of health care services. This is specifically related to abortions.

Something that I've kept in mind throughout this whole debate and especially in listening to a number of these amendments: I would make a correlation to how generally we would expect people to react if it was a man going to fill a prescription for Viagra. Imagine the hue and cry if people were protesting and harassing somebody that was going to get a prescription for something that is legal. For some reason we – not "we" generally, but a lot of people – seem to think it's okay to protest against women who are securing legal health care procedures. I would really hope that everyone keeps that in mind. It's obvious for the people who are voting on these amendments. This is something that has occurred to them. There shouldn't be any sort of differentiation between the health care services men receive and the health care services women receive. If they're legal, people should be able to access them unfettered.

For those reasons, I would certainly encourage people to vote against this amendment.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I've said it before, but again: thank you to the member for getting up. To her point around the terminology of “gynecologist,” she is correct. These are gynecologists, but not all gynecologists perform abortions. Some of them provide these kinds of services, but not every gynecologist does. I think there is an important differentiation, and I’m not sure if there is a very specific term to single that out. But I want to thank her for her comments.

I want to thank all members who have participated in the debate. It’s been a lonely debate here in the Valhalla section, but it’s certainly been a privilege to do so.

I have no other amendments going forward, and I’m sure all members are anxious to get out for the 6 o’clock bells, so I would ask that we put the question.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. At this moment I’d like to move that the committee rise and report progress on Bill 5 and report Bill 9.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinstauber: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 9. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 5. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur with the report? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed, say no. So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. At this time, having made great progress this afternoon, I would like to move that we adjourn, returning at 7:30 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:56 p.m.]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Good evening. Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 7

Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act

[Debate adjourned May 8]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Good evening and thank you, Madam Speaker. Good evening, everyone. Nice being here on a nice, warm summer evening to enjoy the weather and so on. I'm sure we all wish we were doing more of that.

Tonight I'm speaking for a few moments on Bill 7. I'd like to start out just with a little bit about myself in some respects, and that is that I take these bills that we get and the legislation that is written fairly seriously, and I like to take a lot of time to go through it. A lot of times I run into the legislation language and find the detail in the bills to be a little bit wanting in many respects, so I've put together a few comments with that in mind regarding Bill 7.

I know that a lot of you are very much involved with this local food idea. I think it is probably a reasonably good idea, but I just wish that the legislation was more detailed and not quite as vague. I understand that it's being proposed as a three-part bill designed to support Alberta's local food producers. The three main parts of the bill will deal with establishing organic standards, which must now meet Canadian standards established by the Canadian Food Inspection Agency.

I also understand, secondly, that the local food week is to coincide with Open Farm Days celebrations. It's usually held in the third week of August across the province. [interjections] Thank you. Establishment of a local food council can help promote and support local small producers, including farmers' markets, U-picks, at-the-gate stands, and other direct consumer activities are another aspect of this.

As most in the Chamber know, demand for locally produced food has steadily increased in Alberta in the recent past. This is great news as it means that more consumers are interested in knowing where their food comes from and how it's produced. The agricultural industry is an integral part of our economy. All over farmers' markets and direct farm purchases exceeded $1 billion in 2016, and it is expected that this trend will continue for the foreseeable future. A large part of this growing subset of the agricultural economy is in organics. We see it every day in the markets that we all go to. While the term "organic" has been around for many years, it hasn't really been very well defined up until this point. I think Canada Organic defines organic agriculture as, "the way agricultural products are grown and processed; organic food is produced using environmentally and animal friendly farming methods."

Unfortunately, the term "organic" has been misused due largely to the fact that the organic market has been left unregulated for the most part, something Bill 7 attempts to address by bringing Alberta's organic food industry in line with the federal CFIA regulations, including regulations around labelling of foods as organic. I hope that Bill 7 would, you know, in the future be able to be amended and be a live document and some of these things could be augmented, especially because regulations, of course, are not debated in this House. A lot of times that is one of our concerns that we've always had, where some of the vagueness is looked after in regulations, but how do we know what is really going to happen with regulation once it leaves this Chamber? Nonetheless, it is important that the organic label means something to Albertans, more than just marketing ploys. So it is important that we get this legislation right at this time.

One issue is that the cost of certification is completely borne by the producer if they want the organic designation from the CFIA. The question then becomes whether certification will actually be of benefit and increase profitability enough to make certification valuable to a small producer. While the organic industry is growing, we don't really have a clear picture yet of how much of the agricultural industry in Alberta is organic, actually.

It becomes difficult to know if this bill is really even necessary at this time, especially considering that the cost of the carbon tax already seems punitive. That isn't me saying this. A former Calgary greenhouse owner stated that the government couldn't have come up with a more punitive policy for small producers, specifically small businesses, generally, from the carbon tax.

The proposed legislation is great in theory, but it really comes down to: how much is this going to cost producers? I simply haven't been given the level of detail in the bill that I need to be able to answer that here today.

When it comes to the local food council portion of this legislation, it's, again, pretty unclear as to who will be on the council. All the legislation itself tells me is that "the Minister shall ensure that the members appointed to the Council are representative of Alberta's local food sector, including small producers and processors." Why doesn't the local food council follow the lead of the other producer associations and elect members of the council?

Mr. Mason: Like the Wheat Board.

Mr. Stier: Like the Wheat Board, hon. minister?

The format seems to be working very well for the pulse growers association. This would address the legitimate concerns that have been raised by many stakeholders that the council will become dominated by one sector of the organic food industry.

Another question that this legislation raises is regarding the costs associated with the marketing council, which remain completely unknown. If the government knows what they will cost, we haven't heard about that yet. It seems that the government has undertaken a review of agencies, boards, and commissions, and, for the most part, this has been one of the few things that I think has been a positive reform. But the question remains: why is the government creating yet another agency, board, or commission with this bill? Wouldn't it be a lot easier and more efficient to simply expand the mandate of an existing producer group, similar to what Bill 14 does with the Alberta Agricultural Products Marketing Council, for example? This government seems insistent on creating, with we're listening to here in this prepared statement, ever more bureaucracy and red tape, which is really unfortunate. We could have already used existing boards for this one, we believe.

Other concerns I've heard from several producers is with the vagueness of the legislation, which I mentioned earlier. But other producers are saying the same thing. Sadly, it's not something that is specific to this bill. It seems like every time I speak about a bill – I know I was speaking the other day about Bill 10 – I'm repeating the same story about how vague the legislation seems to be and how much the specifics are always left up to regulations. I know many of you weren't here during the NDP time in opposition, but I was.

If memory serves me correctly, there were many times that one of my colleagues from the NDP caucus would stand and decry how vague a government bill was and how much of the specifics were being left to regulations.

A great example of how vague this bill is, anyway, is with its definition of a product, which includes “any food or drink wholly or partly derived from an animal or plant.” I would say it’s fairly vague. That covers just about everything we eat. Is it that vague because government needed a definition that covered ordinary things? How about hot dogs? Do we need to have one for that?

Mr. Sucha: Only if they’re organic.

Mr. Stier: Only if they’re organic.

Seriously, though, why does it need to be so vague? That definition covers about everything Albertans could possibly imagine as food. We’re trying to work with legislation. It’s going to be something that’s going to be likely passed as law. Doesn’t it need to be detailed and right and correct and not vague? Wouldn’t you think that would be the way it should go?

Another of my concerns is related to why this bill, which is supposed to be related to organic labelling and certification, includes a subsection which deals with all agricultural products produced or processed in the province. All means all, so are we going to get involved in our poultry industry totally across the province? How about our pork industry? How about the beef industry? How about all of these industries? Are we really going to expand this that far?

Other concerns I have are whether the increase in power for the ag minister is really necessary in order to regulate organics such as in section 20, which the minister may make regulations on “respecting any matter the Minister considers advisable for carrying out the intent and purposes of this Act.” The good old catch-all clause that we see in a lot of the legislation.

Albertans already support local food, as shown by a 2016 survey where 92 per cent of households bought local at a farmers’ market. I’m not really necessarily therefore convinced that this legislation is necessary even if it was well thought out at this time. That’s why I would have preferred to see this bill go to committee, as was being spoken of earlier in this process, so that it could be very, very carefully, examined and as a result perhaps amended and improved. But since that was defeated, at this stage, because I am so concerned about the lack of information in this bill and the vagueness of the clauses without the specifics and that I’m not involved in any discussions on the regulations nor will any of my team be, I’ll be inclined, unfortunately, to vote against this bill at second reading. Change the way it reads. Improve it. Make amendments. Give us some detail to work with, something to bite on, and that could change.

That’s all I have, Madam Speaker, at this time. Thank you for the opportunity to speak to you all this evening.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to Bill 7?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

Bill 14

An Act to Empower Utility Consumers

[Adjourned debate May 9: Mr. Clark]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It’s a pleasure this evening on this warm, wonderful May night to speak to Bill 14, An Act to Empower Utility Consumers. Bill 14 will allow the inclusion of water bills as part of the free mediation services provided by the Utilities Consumer Advocate. This bill will also expand to the Utility Consumers Advocate the ability to report publicly the performance of power and natural gas utilities as well.

Since being established in 2003, the Utilities Consumer Advocate has had a mandate to educate, advocate, and mediate electricity and natural gas concerns as well for Alberta’s residential farms and small businesses. The UCA currently handles mediation between consumers and electricity and natural gas providers. Adding water to the mediation process, I believe, is a logical step. Madam Speaker, it’s very difficult, if not impossible, for the average member of the public to go up against the large utility providers with a dispute. Ordinary Albertans do not have the time or resources to do so. That is where the Utilities Consumer Advocate comes in. You see, the UCA specializes in handling disputes between utility providers and consumers. They exist to serve Albertans, and they handle thousands of complaints on an annual basis.

Now, with the economic downturn and this government’s prolonging the downturn with their policies, it’s not uncommon for Albertans to be struggling to pay their utility bills. This, coupled with this government’s increase to the cost of living for Albertans, has made the situation worse for a lot of families, especially those in my constituency. With the inclusion of water in mediation services and the expansion of reporting for utility providers, it is my hope that Bill 14 will be able to aid those that are struggling and are now faced with a problem with a utility provider. Now, there are many positives in this bill. Adding water bills to the free mediation service by the Utilities Consumer Advocate, I think, is a good step for serving Albertans.

Now, as I’ve noticed and as I’ve said before, I’ve spoken to many residents in my riding who’ve had some difficulties with their water supplier. Previously these residents had few options to handle these disputes. Now, with the passing of this legislation, however, mediation services can be provided for water bills. This slightly expands the role of the Utilities Consumer Advocate, and I think that, again, as I said before, this will serve Albertans better. In the past the UCA was limited in how it could address water bill disputes. However, with the passing of this bill, Albertans have someone in their corner advocating for their rights in water disputes.

Another encouraging part of Bill 14 is that the current UCA personnel will be able to handle the water mediation. What does this mean? This means that no additional labour costs will be carried by the UCA. Considering the financial crisis this government has put us through, I’m very much in support of not spending more taxpayer dollars to hire additional staff. Likewise, doing more with existing resources is something I think all members in this House would be and should be, obviously, in favour of. Now, in that regard, I commend this government, for once, for actually being fiscally responsible.

On the same note, I can support having the Utilities Consumer Advocate as a one-stop shop for Albertans with utility issues. This means that the process for disputing utility bills is quite simple. No need for busy ratepayers to be going to multiple different agencies to sort out a utility problem. Additionally, having one agency to deal with all utility issues allows for greater savings for the taxpayer.

I also have to commend the government for increasing the UCA’s ability to report on the performance of utility companies. I think that’s a great thing. Bill 14 will enable the Utilities Consumer Advocate to report on consumer service performance, the history of consumer complaints, a company's compliance with laws and standards such as the orders from regulators, and a company's history of enforcement such as the investigation and, of course, penalties.

Knowledge is power, and if the consumers are able to make informed decisions on their utility providers, they can then choose the company that best fits their needs. This, in turn, can increase competition between providers and will better serve consumers. It gives them a choice. Competition is good. This also makes utility companies accountable to the public. Now they can no longer get away with unfair business tactics without being called out for it.

It looks like the government might be finally listening to Albertans. I've heard for three years concerns from constituents regarding their water bills. Too bad it only took three years to introduce this legislation. It is ironic how the government has been increasing the cost of utilities for three years, but only now do they introduce a bill that will assist Albertans with their utility issues.

Well, while I am supportive of this bill – I do believe there'll be positive results from it – there are much greater things the NDP government could be doing to better serve taxpayers. They could start with repealing the ideological carbon tax, which has had significant harm and impact on families. At $30 a tonne, the carbon tax nearly doubles the cost of residential natural gas. This means that families have less money to spend on their housing, food, and things that are truly important to them. What would happen if this government is still in power when the federal government raises the carbon tax to $50 a tonne? Wow. To $50 a tonne. Will this government, the NDP, actually stand up for the interests of Albertans, or will they blindly follow the federal government and significantly increase the cost of living for Alberta families?

We can also see the NDP pushing their ideological agenda at the expense of everyday Albertans with their coal phase-out. Coal is the most efficient and most reliable form of electricity. The early phase-out of coal will only end up costing ratepayers more. How can the government say that they support families when their policies again and again end up hurting those families they claim to help? Does this government know the impact of their policies? Do they understand the impact of the carbon tax and the coal phase-out on Alberta families? I don't know.

While many families were barely making ends meet – barely making ends meet – prior to this government pushing their ideological agenda, can they imagine how much worse it is now? If the members opposite are concerned about ratepayers and Alberta families, there is much more that they could do. However, as we've all seen, they've not acted to repeal their detrimental policies despite repeated requests by the members of this side of the House, the opposition.

Let us also not overlook the irony that this government is advocating for more information to be publicly available, yet they are hiding and trying to downplay the effects of their policies. Now, I do think it's a good thing that utility companies are accountable to consumers. Too bad this government isn't held to the same standards.

Now, in closing, Madam Speaker, I do plan on supporting Bill 14 as I believe that this legislation will be beneficial to Albertans, and I do commend the government on finally doing something to help utility consumers, but I will continue to press the government to take further action to repeal their energy policies that have truly harmed all Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you again for the opportunity to speak. I wish were outside in the nice warm weather. It's a little chilly in here tonight. Again, I wanted to thank the government for bringing this bill forward.

A couple of interesting things here that I thought about when I was reading over some of this legislation and just some of the information that has been put out. Over the last little while the UCA has received 179 calls with respect to water bills, which doesn't seem like a lot, and it's wonderful that Bill 14 has given them the mandate to handle these. But in the city of Calgary – and this is expected to rise. What I thought was really, really interesting, Madam Speaker, was that the UCA between 2017 and 2018 took 22,790 calls and conducted 5,184 mediations. That's pretty incredible. I mean, I imagine that many of those calls were probably able to be dealt with just with the call alone, but that's a lot of mediations on electricity and natural gas.

I guess one of the questions that I have with respect to this is: is the mandate of the UCA also going to be expanded to deal with renewables as well as they come online? There are going to be all sorts of disputes and interesting things that happen as the REPs are built and as the renewables come online. It's just a question for later. If someone can answer that, that would be wonderful. We're going to be having a lot more interest, for lack of a better word, in mediation and necessary people to be there in order to be able to look at a person's bills and have that dispute resolution, especially with capped prices on electricity and wind. It will be significantly more difficult to find out if something has gone wrong with your bill.

I'm just curious if the mandate for renewables will also be expanded in this particular bill or if the bill will be open to that. In my understanding of this bill, that's not up for consideration. I would hope that there will be an advocate at some point that will be able to help out with those disputes, too.

Having said that, you can imagine, you know, that if the UCA doesn't have formal enforcement powers, then that is difficult, but one of the things – and I think I mentioned this before – is that they have the ability to publicly report on providers. That's a very, very significant tool, that they can push companies that are not putting the interests of the consumers first by publicly being able to explain to people what these companies have been doing.

For example, you have a large company that provides water. Right now, without this person, there are very few incentives, Madam Speaker, to prevent a company from overcharging customers or not addressing customer complaints, especially with respect to unexpectedly high bills, especially if the individual is not representing their customers appropriately and is not helping out with customer policy. The ability for the UCA to publicly report on customer service performance, history of consumer complaints – and that one in particular is, I think, very important. I think most Albertans will, knowing that they have access to this – and I think that part of the plan, too, that is super important, is that Albertans understand that they have access to this. I mean, I think most of us, obviously, don't think about this until we see a bill that makes your eyes bulge out of your head and you don't understand what's going on. All of a sudden you're trying to call somebody to try and help you.

But if there's a history of consumer complaints to a company that is not providing the ability to address a customer complaint and is not incentivized to do so, it's very difficult to follow up on that. The ability to report history of consumer complaints and the history of investigations as well, Madam Speaker, will mean that companies that make a pattern of overcharging or becoming inattentive will be highlighted. It's a huge, huge, important piece for these companies to be transparent and make sure that they're doing right by the customers. I think that's excellent.

I think that if these things such as being inattentive and whatnot are highlighted, it will dramatically affect the ability to attract new customers, and at the end of the day the customer is always right. If the customer has the ability to be able to research and find out what's going on and to be able to advocate on their own behalf, especially with what the bill does, I think the companies themselves will be more willing to make sure that they're taking good care of their customers. That's always good.

Also, the good part about it is that you retain customers as well, right? Customer service and attentive abilities within these companies I'm sure for the most part are actually quite good, but this will reinforce and make sure that they take good care of their current customers as well as having to protect their public image, which I think at some time, to a large degree, is probably the best tool that we have. Certainly, with the advantage of social media and all of the other things that we have access to, information is quickly released. If a company is not doing right by their customer, I can almost guarantee that that's going to make it onto Twitter and Facebook pretty quickly, and those companies will have to deal with that quite fast. That's a good thing.

Companies that are attentive to their customers will generally work to resolve disputes anyways, but they will also benefit on the flip side from strong, strong customer service. As much as the bad representations will be made public, so too will the good ones. That's wonderful for companies that are doing the right thing, that are resolving disputes, and that have strong customer service records. Those good things will also be made public.

There was a news story on this legislation, about some of the consumers and their interactions with the UCA and that they're ultimately made to pay the higher bill, but at least with this legislation it will give them some time to delay a threat of their water being disconnected. Madam Speaker, again, can you imagine the anxiety from those kinds of things happening? Everybody is paying a lot more right now. You know, there's a lot of suffering going on in this province. We have a good chunk of our population that isn't working right now. We have a growing population of newcomers coming in but also of our seniors, too, and people who are on fixed incomes. The stress of having your water turned off or other things is massive. At least, through dispute resolution and through the UCA they have the opportunity to bring that forward. It gives them a little bit of time to figure out what's going on.

The legislation will also protect municipalities, who have jurisdiction over water utilities, from being put in a position to have to subsidize abnormally high water bills, which is what has happened in Calgary for some time now. I mean, we're looking at a subsidy of $1.5 million, which probably doesn't seem like a lot in the grand scheme of things, but it is, especially if this is an annual subsidy that's happening.

I'd like to ask a question, too, if there's anybody who can answer this for me. The legislation protects municipalities, who have jurisdiction. How are they protecting the municipalities from this? What is in the legislation? I'm not quite sure I understood that. I would love some clarity on: the subsidy versus what? Is it just a dispute resolution piece? Is it something that's coming down from the government to cover that subsidy? If there's somebody who could provide some clarity on that question, I would be very grateful for that.

I will be voting in favour of this legislation. I think that there is a little bit of irony here, though, that has to be pointed out. We have a government that is charging a carbon tax, the largest tax in Alberta's history. We have a government that is charging extra minimum wage. We have a lot of different things that are happening from this government in that the cumulative burden on Albertans, regulations, a whole bunch of things that are impacting Albertans in their pocketbooks, their everyday lives, and their ability to do things with their families and their children, choosing heat sometimes over hockey – I mean, that's just here right now. If we go towards Ontario, that could be choosing eating versus heating your house. These are some really, really serious issues. The irony of it is that we have a bill that is concerned with making sure that people aren't getting overcharged on their bills, but ironically the government is sure doing a lot to increase what that bill looks like. I think that's something that the government needs to consider going forward.

This legislation on its own is good legislation, but I will ask again: is this legislation going to be broadened to take into consideration renewables coming online and any disputes that will be happening with that? It's going to be very complicated, I would imagine. We have new infrastructure builds. We're going to be having different types of energy coming onboard that are not necessarily consistent. They don't necessarily have a baseline of energy that you can go from. It's intermittent. It's going to come on the grid in different places and different ways. I'm curious to see if the government is going to expand this mandate to take into consideration any sort of dispute resolution that may come online as a result of renewables also being brought online.

You know, Albertans are looking at a lot of different things. They're looking at: their taxes have risen; their cost of food has gone up; activities, clothing increasing due to passing on of transportation costs from the carbon tax. These are everyday Albertans that are being impacted every single day because the transportation of the goods and services that they need costs them more. Our ratepayers and our taxpayers are the same people. They're the ones that pay this. The increase of the minimum wage. Power bills have also climbed, and that is due to some considerable meddling by this government in the electricity market.

At the current rate the carbon tax rate is, well, depending on the day, a dollar and a half per gigajoule. Nearly half the cost of the residential gas price is a tax. An Alberta family that may face a $100 bill for natural gas prior to their fees and charges is actually paying nearly $45 in carbon tax. That's an interesting way of looking at it, isn't it? That's when it becomes a little bit more of a reality for the average family. It might not seem like a lot to those of us who have the privilege of being in here, but to the average family, that is a lot. While I'm glad to see that the government is taking some measures to protect Alberta consumers, I would like to highlight the fact that there's a litany of issues here that have caused poor economics. It's poor policy, it's impacting the economics of this province, and it's made things exceptionally harder for Albertans, Madam Speaker.

We will take our wins where we can get them, so thank you to the government for this legislation. If there's somebody that potentially could answer my questions with respect to broadening this legislation to renewables coming online, dispute resolution with respect to that, and also with respect to the protection of the municipalities, I would be very grateful for that.

I will be voting in favour of this bill, and I would urge my colleagues in the House to do the same. Thank you so much.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) any questions or comments?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a second time]

Bill 6

Gaming and Liquor Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

[Adjourned debate May 10: Dr. Turner]

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak to this bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a second time]

Bill 2

Growth and Diversification Act

Mr. Cooper moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 2, Growth and Diversification Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 2, Growth and Diversification Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the government should pursue other measures to reduce the cost of doing business in the province, including the introduction of legislation to eliminate the carbon levy, which, if implemented, would make the measures proposed in the bill unnecessary.

[Debate adjourned on the amendment May 15]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, again, Madam Speaker. Whew. It's a marathon tonight. Thank you again for the opportunity to speak on the Growth and Diversification Act. This act seeks to address current and future projected labour shortages in the tech . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we are still on the amendment, and you have spoken to the amendment already. I apologize.

Mrs. Aheer: Oh, pardon me. Thank you so much. I thought so. Okay. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood, on the amendment.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Absolutely. I rise in the House today to speak on and give my support to my colleague's reasoned amendment for Bill 2, the Growth and Diversification Act. This bill is another attempt by this government to try and diversify the economy. This bill aims to create spaces in tech programs in postsecondary institutions. It creates the framework to invest in new scholarships and tech launches, and an interactive digital media tax credit continues the Alberta investor tax credit and capital investment tax credit.

As I've said before in this House, I don't have a problem with the diversification of the economy. In fact, I would be thrilled if Alberta had a strong, robust, diverse economy. However, the problem we run into is: how do we as legislators encourage the diversification of our economy? How can we get private industry and private capital to invest in our province to get these industries going in Alberta?

Now, Bill 2 specifically looks at the tech sector as a place to encourage diversification. There's no doubt that Alberta would certainly benefit from an increase in tech-related jobs. Furthermore, the technology sector is one of the fastest growing industries worldwide. That sounds great for Alberta. However, Madam Speaker, as I stated earlier, the question is: how do we attract this investment to our province? The problem with Bill 2 is that it uses a mix of incentives to encourage the diversity of the tech sector; in other words, incentives as taxpayer dollars. Does the government really want to spend more money that it just doesn't have on a program that may not achieve the desired outcomes?

Alberta is in a fiscal crisis right now. The government's latest budget proposed a deficit of almost $9 billion. By the middle of next decade we will be looking at Alberta's debt hitting just shy of $100 billion. That's a lot of money. This is not the time to be throwing away taxpayer dollars or taxpayer money into projects that may or may not succeed. The government has attempted multiple times to try and diversify the economy. Has it worked? Well, the government keeps proposing more and more bills on diversifying the economy, so that should just give us an answer. Is the government thinking: “Well, we haven't had any success with any of our previous economic diversification legislation, but this time it's just going to be different. This time it's going to produce the results.” Madam Speaker, I think that's just unwise thinking.

Furthermore, the tax credits, the so-called incentives, proposed in Bill 2 allow the government to pick and choose winners and losers. Now, I want to let the members opposite know that the government isn't very good at picking winners and losers. These sector-specific tax credits leave out many potential businesses that would like to access capital. However, the government has already picked which industries they want to receive the credits, so if a business doesn't fit the specific framework of the legislation, it looks like they're just going to be out of luck.

Albertans will be skeptical of programs like these. The NDP has had difficulty rolling out these programs in the past. There were delays and difficulties with the rollout of the Alberta investor tax credit last year, and the interactive digital media tax credit program will not have any details until late this summer. Now, how can we trust that the government will get this one right? Also, the companies that are receiving these tax credits: could they not just get this capital from the private markets? If they could get capital privately, then why would we use taxpayer dollars to support it? If companies cannot get private capital, then why not? If the private market won't invest in these projects, why should the government?

Now, some may argue that the reason Alberta is lagging behind other provinces such as B.C. and Quebec in the tech industry is because we do not have a tech-specific tax credit. However, if we're already far behind, how are we going to catch up?

Maybe a better solution is not to be like every other province and instead restore the Alberta advantage and make Alberta the most attractive place to invest. I'm not sure why the NDP government hasn't learned by this point that the private sector does the best work of creating jobs. The government doesn't create private-sector jobs; the private sector does that. What should the role of the government be? To get out of the way of job creators and create conditions that allow them to succeed. Madam Speaker, we need to stop and step back and look at why private-sector jobs are not being created. That is why I'm supporting the reasoned amendment to stop proceeding with the waste of additional taxpayer dollars and actually address the reasons for Alberta's economic woes.

If the government was serious about seeing the results of a diverse economy, they could start with repealing the job-killing carbon tax. First off, Madam Speaker, the NDP never campaigned on the carbon tax. They had no mandate to introduce one. Secondly, the carbon tax was introduced without proper consultation or study. Did the government know the impacts of the carbon tax before they introduced it? Do they understand how detrimental this tax has been for businesses? I don't think so. I can't imagine they do. Otherwise, they would have taken the advice of the members of the opposition to repeal the tax a long time ago.

You see, Madam Speaker, the government has created an economic mess, and their solution is to spend their way out of it. Will this end? What happens if the federal government raises the carbon tax, a move, I should add, that this government is all too happy to go along with. Well, the NDP government just created more incentives. Will they waste more taxpayer money to try and achieve this so-called diversification? We all know that when the carbon tax goes up, economic activity goes down. Will the government try and spend more money to counteract the negative effects of their carbon tax? Eventually the government is going to have to realize that they cannot spend their way out of this.

We can see how much investment has decreased with the implementation of this carbon tax. What will happen when the carbon tax gets increased more and more? How much more will investment decrease? Although I'm not sure that this government knows this, with the decreased investment comes decreased tax revenue. The government is implementing policies that cause decreased tax revenue, but they're going to try, with less revenue coming in, to spend their way out of decreased economic activity with legislation such as Bill 2. To me, this is backwards thinking and will only lead to increased deficits and increased debt.

Instead, Madam Speaker, let's axe the carbon tax. Let's axe the waste of taxpayer money trying to spend our way to job creation. Rather, let's create the conditions for businesses to succeed and for investment to be welcomed. This would do far more for diversification of the economy than anything else I can think of. Has the government actually asked industry what would benefit them the most? Many business owners I've talked to say that they would benefit the most from the repeal of the carbon tax and reducing red tape, cutting out the bureaucracy, if you will. Has the government even looked into ways to reduce red tape? This is an area that they can explore that would cost very little to implement but could have large positive effects on business here in Alberta.

Less government would be a good thing, too, Madam Speaker. Less government means more economic freedom to invest, create jobs, and increase business activity. Unfortunately, the approach we've seen from the NDP, which we see in Bill 2, is to add more government and create more red tape for businesses. That doesn't attract private-sector business.

Before making this reasoned amendment, my colleague on this side of the House argued unsuccessfully to send this bill to committee. Here we could have studied the bill in depth to better understand the impacts of this bill, but unfortunately the government wanted to push through this bill and push through their ideological agenda.

In closing, Madam Speaker – and I know you wanted to hear those words – we need to show investors that Alberta is again open for business. That is why I encourage all members of this House to vote in favour of this reasoned amendment to put a halt to what the government is trying to do and step back and implement policies that'll actually help us, help the economy, and help all Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), the hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise and offer some comments on the speech that we heard from the Member for Highwood. I certainly listened with great interest to what he had to say. It was particularly interesting to compare and contrast it to what the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner had to say earlier this morning because at least the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner had reacted to some of the comments and responses that I provided to previous speakers earlier this morning.

A number of speakers from that side have risen and claimed that because of high provincial income taxes and high provincial corporate taxes the tax structure is driving investment to other jurisdictions. Of course, I've refuted that assertion by stating to the House what the provincial corporate tax rates and income tax rates are in those jurisdictions. Across the country, Madam Speaker, taxes are higher than they are in Alberta. Provincial income taxes are higher in every other province than they are in this province. Provincial corporate taxes are comparable or higher in most of the jurisdictions that we're trying to compete with in the high-tech sector.

Other jurisdictions where we find investments in the high-tech sector in particular, Madam Speaker, also have a carbon tax. In the case of B.C., of course, the carbon tax is $35 a tonne, so higher than the tax here in Alberta. In fact, in Quebec, although they operate on a cap-and-trade system, so it's not a direct charge to consumers, the estimated cost of the carbon tax per tonne is about $20 a tonne, so comparable to what we're taxing in Alberta. One of the things that I neglected to mention, of course, is that we have no provincial sales tax in Alberta, and there is a significant provincial sales tax in British Columbia as well as in Quebec.

Anyway, my point is that at least the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner reacted to the information that I brought to the floor of the Chamber refuting the notion that higher taxes in Alberta are driving out investment. It's not true, Madam Speaker. All across the board we have lower taxes than the other jurisdictions where we see development in the tech sector in particular, which is what we're trying to stimulate.

It was interesting, though, the tack that he took. He said that, in fact, it wasn't taxes, Madam Speaker, that were driving investment out; it was the environment. Then he failed, of course, to stipulate what environmental conditions in particular are driving investment out of the province. Perhaps he meant the extreme cold that we experience sometimes here in Alberta.

This just goes to show, Madam Speaker, the length to which the members opposite will cling to their ideological belief that tax rates somehow drive investment decisions, which is not necessarily what we're seeing in respect to investments in the tech sector, of course, because if that were the case, all of the tech investment would be happening here in Alberta. It wouldn't be happening in jurisdictions like British Columbia or Quebec because the taxes are higher in both of those sectors.

In the eight hours and 15 minutes since the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner got to his feet and said that, oh, no, in fact he wasn't actually talking about tax rates, he was talking about the environment, the Member for Highwood has gone back to this fairy tale that the UCP continues to peddle that tax rates somehow drive investment. In fact, he went on at length about the corporate tax structure in Alberta driving out investment, the provincial income tax structure driving out investment.

Madam Speaker, you know, I feel like a firefighter. I feel like a firefighter of truth. Every time misinformation is created by the other side, it's my job to get out and put it out, put it out with facts. I can see that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood is particularly enamoured with my metaphor, and I invite him to use this any time that he pleases because it's so effective.

Anyway, the fight against misinformation is never-ending, particularly in this House, Madam Speaker. That's why I feel compelled to stand up and remind the Member for Highwood again that we have the lowest provincial . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to support my UCP colleague's reasoned amendment to Bill 2, the Growth and Diversification Act. This bill is yet one more example of the government's lack of understanding about what Alberta's business community needs to thrive. Bill 2 creates specific tax credits for specific sectors, and once you start doing that for one sector, other sectors expect the same treatment. In the end, you end up with a multiple-layered set of narrow tax credits that may not accomplish anything.

We know that this is a problem because the government tends to have few, if any, measurables for these programs and policies. That means it creates policies before deciding what it wants them to do, and the ministries generally have no way of measuring how they're progressing. That's not a good way to create government policy. If you go down that route, it's easy to forget that you're spending taxpayers' money. Piecemeal policies like those offered in Bill 2 are good examples of that, and that's why I support the reasoned amendment that would ensure it does not proceed to any further readings.

Let me point to an example of a problem that Bill 2 purports to be fixing. This proposed legislation expands eligibility for the Alberta investor tax credit and tops it up, yet the first round of the tax credit was undersubscribed and it left $1.4 million on the table. This might indicate that there was less interest in this tax credit than expected, which means that there wasn't necessarily a burning need for it. Another possibility is that the government was not successful in letting investors know that the pool of money even existed. Clearly, the government needs to answer these questions about this specific tax credit and determine how it's performing before serving up millions of more dollars for a new set of narrowly defined tax credits.

I think it's quite clear, Madam Speaker, that Alberta's United Conservatives look at the government's role differently. We know that the greatest gift we can give business is a strong, sustainable economy, one that does not carry around big weights such as the carbon tax. If this government really wants to help business thrive, it needs to take a broader approach. Instead of picking out specific sectors, it needs to unfetter them all and then watch them flourish.

That approach has been successful in Alberta for many decades. It made Alberta the gold standard for attracting global investment. It created jobs and prosperity. It attracted people to come from across Canada and the world who have a similar independent mindset. Albertans know that when business thrives, Alberta thrives. Unfortunately, in choosing to focus on bills like this one – that is, one with a slate of tax credits designed for a small and specific sector of our economy – this government is taking a very narrow focus.

I believe that this is the wrong approach. That's why I support this amendment. This government has a pattern of tinkering and then creating problems that require even more tinkering to fix the problems that it's created. We have seen the folly of this approach in the way the government keeps meddling in the electricity system, to the cost of billions of taxpayers dollars and, of course, more and more debt.

We have spent many hours debating Bill 13 in this Chamber, and you will have heard the United Conservatives describe a long list of problems with this piece of legislation. It all started with the carbon tax, which prompted the power providers to hand back their PPAs. Since then we have had multiple pieces of legislation come forward to fix the cascade of problems created by rolling that first die.

At some point, I would suggest right now, with Bill 2 the government needs to take a different tactic and a more Albertan tactic. I admit that Bill 2 is not a tremendously expensive policy decision; it's simply the wrong one. But this government continues to ignore what the larger business community asks of it. It's first job-killing move was to increase taxes on larger businesses and high-income earners. It then piled on regulations with little, if any, consultation with those affected. Then it focused on measures that increased labour costs even though businesses warned that these unexpected costs would affect the jobs it could offer Albertans.

I believe this government's priorities are backwards, and Bill 2 is a good example of the reason why I feel this way. Business is asking government to stop introducing policies that are making it less competitive. Business is not asking the government to create tax credits like those handed out in Bill 2. That is a major philosophical difference between the NDP and the UCP, Madam Speaker.

You know, Madam Speaker, we're always being accused of giving tax breaks to, I think they call it, our big, rich friends or something like that. We're not giving them tax breaks. We're just treating them the same as everyone else. A flat tax of 10 per cent is the same for everyone. We're not abusing them and chasing them away. Ten per cent of not much isn't much, but 10 per cent of a big income is a lot of money. So if you chase that away, you're losing a lot of money. I mean, for example, just look at your income on the tax side. It's gone down. You've increased the taxes, yet you've got less income. I guess maybe it's not working.

You know, these are the people that create the jobs, the people that run businesses, make money. They create the jobs, and now this government is punishing them by increasing their taxes. These people aren't stupid. That's why they are high earners in the first place. If it's not profitable and the taxes are too high, they can show a loss. In any given year you can show a loss. So then you pay zero for income tax. So instead of getting 10 per cent of quite a bit, all of a sudden you get zero. Maybe that's showing up in your budget. Not only do they do that, they show a loss, they lay off people, they lay off workers, and that's why we have unemployment. All they're asking is to be treated fairly. We don't need to give them a break; just treat them fairly like the rest of the people. But I guess if you choose to chase them away with their taxes and their jobs, that's up to you.

You know, I know that probably the Advanced Education minister is going to get up and give me the same lecture you've given my colleagues about not understanding how taxes work. I think I understand it pretty well, Madam Speaker. You know, I won't get into personal stuff, but businessmen and people on this side know what makes money in this province and know what drives the reality. Treating them poorly and chasing them away and raising their taxes isn't what's going to get Alberta back on track. We don't need to give them breaks. We just need to treat them fairly and not punish them, Madam Speaker.

So I urge all members in the Chamber to vote for this reasoned amendment for it is time to put our priorities in the right order, and Bill 2 is not the way to do that. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: On Standing Order 29(2)(a) I'll recognize Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Madam Speaker, I was very interested to hear my hon. colleague talk about this bill, and I think that in comparison to the short, you know, five-minute clips that we get from the Edmonton-Gold Bar MLA, I can see why a reasonable approach here is represented on this side. The reasonable approach is that, look, we want investment to come back into this province. Now, the approach on the other side is that if we raise taxes and then do these tax boutique giveaways to some of our friends or to the people that we want, then we'll somehow magically make the economy work and get people back to work. Unfortunately, history has proven that that does not work. It's not a sustainable, long-term approach. As I listened, I heard a reasonable approach, which is: let's take a look at what has worked in the past, and then even if we need to tweak it a little bit, apply that because we know it works. We don't have to try to reinvent the wheel. We just have to be able to be conservative in this approach.

The nice thing about what happened in the past is – I know that the members opposite love to say how it's been terrible for 44 years here.

Mr. Coolahan: Agreed.

Mr. Hunter: And here's the heckle: agreed.

Now, here's the interesting thing about it. A majority of the people on that side moved to this province because of what Alberta actually provides for them. When I hear them say that it didn't work for 44 years, it's a hypocritical argument because they moved to this province to be able to get what the Alberta advantage offered.

Now, Madam Speaker, here's a situation where we have the members opposite speaking out of both sides of their mouths. First of all, they're saying: "You know what? Let's champion Alberta." But they're saying: "No. Alberta is terrible. It's broken." No, Alberta isn't broken. It was broken when they got in. That's exactly the reason that these guys are in the numbers in the polls that they are. That is what I hear constantly from business owners and from people who are just trying to be able to provide for their families. All they want is to be able to have some gainful employment, to be able to get back to this thing we called the Alberta advantage.

If the Alberta NDP government would just practise a principle called salutary neglect, which is that the government gets out of the way. I would like them to look that up afterwards, and then we can talk about it. This is the sort of thing that they need to do. This is what I hear from businesses. Businesses say: "The government needs to stop doing harm to the economy. They need to get out of the way. We know how to be able to create gainful employment. We want people to be able to be involved in our businesses, we want people to be able to provide adequately for their families, and we want to be able to pay them more than a $15-an-hour wage."

This is the sort of thing that Albertans have been great at. This is the sort of thing that Albertans – look, I've lived here almost all my life, and the great thing about Alberta is that it's been really good to my family. But what is it going to do for my children and grandchildren? Saddle them with $96 billion of debt? That's not the kind of legacy that I want to leave them, Madam Speaker.

This is the argument that I hear from the side opposite, this idea that they know best. I said it earlier, Madam Speaker. It is an arrogant approach. It is an arrogant idea or belief that you know better than a very complex economy – a very complex economy – one of the most complex in the world right here, and these guys know best how to be able to create tax boutiques to somehow start and make this thing work better.

Madam Speaker, I'm not trying to be rude to the members. I've said this before. They are some of the nicest people, some of them are some of the nicest people that I know. The problem is that they will not be judged by their intentions, because they would get As for their intentions. What they will be judged for are their outcomes. Have they been able to do what they promised? They sold hope and change like nobody's business, but were they able to deliver on that hope and change? I can tell you that they were not.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, you're ready for the question?

The hon. Minister of Transportation, on the amendment.

Mr. Mason: Yes, Madam Speaker. Sorry to be a little slow getting to my feet. I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Mason: Well, I don't usually believe in miracles, Madam Speaker, but we've accomplished a great deal tonight. I would like to thank all hon. members for that and move that we adjourn the House until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 8:35 p.m.]

Bill 16

Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

[Debate adjourned May 10: Ms Gray speaking]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you and good morning, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to be here with you on this fine May morning, the day after my son's birthday, so happy birthday to you, Porter, if you happen to be watching along at home, which you're not because you're in school. It's a pleasure. It is always a pleasure to rise in the Assembly and speak about issues that are important to Albertans.

Bill 16, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Statutes Amendment Act, 2018, is a bill title that I'm sure you're familiar with as we have had this particular piece of legislation come before the Assembly on numerous occasions now, and you'll know, Madam Speaker, that I have spoken at length about this particular piece of legislation. Let me just begin by stating that I think that there are some very positive things that have come from making changes to the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. You know, in fact, the United Conservative caucus as well as other legacy caucuses have been in support of many of those things, and I think that some good work has been done.

I think it's unfortunate the number of times that we've had to do this. You know, this is now the fourth or fifth time that the government has brought this forward. You've heard me in this House before, Madam Speaker, talking about the importance of that if something is worth doing, then we should do it right the first time. It shouldn't take us four or five times to get things right on Bill 16. Yeah, in fact, you'll know that I've spoken on a number of occasions about the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and his father's commitment when he was growing up about the importance of just that, doing the job right the first time, and I hope that he communicates to his cabinet colleagues and encourages them in the future to do things right the first time and not have to do things time and time and time again.

In particular, this piece of legislation, Bill 16, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Statutes Amendment Act, 2018, is a very, very interesting piece of legislation. If I could be so bold, perhaps Bill 16 might be better named the NDP Doesn't Trust the UCP Amendment Act because this piece of legislation is specifically targeted and tailored to the United Conservative Party.

You'll know, Madam Speaker, that following the unification of the legacy Wildrose and PC parties to create the new Official Opposition, that, I might add, has received some significant confidence and support of Albertans from pillar to post and corner to corner – I find it interesting that the government now is introducing a piece of boutique legislation specifically targeted at the United Conservative Party.

In fact, Madam Speaker, I know you weren't there, but I found it very interesting that at a government briefing for this legislation the minister's office actually made specific reference to internal party documents of the United Conservative Party in the form of the agreement in principle. The agreement in principle was a document that was created to help form the United Conservative Party. I found it very, very interesting that at a minister's briefing we wound up speaking about such an internal party document. In fact, I was quite concerned about this, that the government would be making legislation specifically targeted to the Official Opposition.

Now, having said all that, this legislation does do a couple of things, but the most significant piece of this legislation is the portion that surrounds associated parties. The purpose of defining associated parties is to ensure that parties that are closely affiliated share a single $2 million spending limit for a single party. As such, parties that may be associated wouldn't then individually be able to spend $2 million, $2 million, $2 million and then be able to circumvent the legislation that prevents a political party from spending more than $2 million on an election campaign.

Now, Madam Speaker, I don't know if there is anyone else that the government could have been talking about other than the United Conservative Party and the two legacy parties that were united. While we were very clear in the agreement in principle, the document that I've previously referenced, the government clearly has some concerns about that. In fact, in that agreement in principle on page 7 of the document it clearly states that the United Conservative Party "and the Legacy Parties will respect the spirit of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act (Alberta) by adhering to the spending limits of a single political party registration." So it's a big surprise to me that now they've placed this legislation before the Assembly specifically targeted at the United Conservative Party.

Madam Speaker, I don't know how else we could have been any more clear with our intentions. The Leader of the Official Opposition, the MLA for Calgary-Lougheed, signed his name to that founding document, which is legally binding in the negotiations between the legacy parties. I think you can probably understand my mild entertainment that the government is so concerned about the United Conservative Party's ability to spend $6 million total even though we've announced our intention to Albertans about adhering to the intention of the law, that now the government is bringing in boutique legislation specifically targeted at this very issue. It speaks to the concern that they have about the strength of the Official Opposition.

I'd also like to point out that there was a much, much, much, much, much better path forward, a much simpler way to create the same result. It's something that the Official Opposition and both of those legacy parties were speaking at length about, and that is simple: allow the parties to merge. Legislation like this has already been found at the federal level and in Ontario and Quebec. When the UCP was formed, its structure of having the legacy parties continue to exist under the UCP umbrella was done out of necessity rather than preference since there's no legislation that exists in Alberta that would allow the political parties to merge. If the government was actually concerned about this – they're solving a problem that will not exist and cannot exist. Instead, they could have just allowed the political parties to merge.

Now, Madam Speaker, despite the somewhat ridiculous nature and the redundant nature of this bill, the United Conservative Party is in favour of transparency and accountability when it comes to Albertans, and we will be supporting, or I will be encouraging my colleagues to support, this piece of legislation because the legislation is doing exactly what we said we would do, and that is respect the intention of the law. But I would state that any time that we're governing for tiny, tiny one-off situations, creating such legislation, this in fact isn't the best way to govern. It would have been much more reasonable and advantageous and forward looking to create a scenario where political parties may want to merge in the future. In fact, I can see a path forward, where political parties on other sides of the political spectrum may in fact want to also merge.

Having said that, we support the legislation. It's a little bit ridiculous because it's specifically targeted at the Official Opposition and doing something that we've already said that we would do. Any time that we create legislation on a go-forward basis on one-offs, it's rarely a good way to govern.

I would also like to highlight some questions and concerns that we have within the legislation. As stated, the legislation has a variety of factors that are used to determine whether or not parties are associated. They need to meet a set number of qualifiers that will deem them associated. Some examples of that are that if parties have the same leader, executive director, persons in positions similar to an executive director, CFO, they could be deemed associated. If they share common political programs, policy statements, advertising, branding materials or if one association controls the others, they could be deemed associated.

Now, Madam Speaker, one of the reasons why I have concerns about this portion of the bill is the fact that the individual who'll be making the decisions about whether or not they could be deemed associated is, of course, the Election Commissioner. This individual has been appointed and was the source of a highly debated and contentious government motion, Government Motion 16, which did not receive universal support from the search committee. Given that this newly appointed position is being filled by, some would suggest, a contentious candidate, additional power to deem associated parties leaves some significant discretion and also some concerns on a go-forward basis.

I specifically have some questions around what the Election Commissioner could constitute as similar political programs or policy statements that would deem registered parties associated given that many registered parties across the political spectrum hold similar platforms and how they could be implemented. You know, one concern that I have for my friends on the left is the Alberta Party and the Liberal Party. They're essentially the same organization, very similar to the NDP, all three of them, and in fact will quite likely make very similar policy statements in the next upcoming election. Like, they're going to all pledge their undying support for the carbon tax. Those are very similar or associated types of statements. They will have very similar political programs. They're all going to be very committed to high debts and deficits. They're all going to be committed to the carbon tax. So I have concerns for them on the left about whether or not an Election Commissioner may in fact deem them as associated because of their policy statements.

These are the types of concerns that we should all take a step back from when making legislation like this, when you're trying to solve one problem but not really getting at the heart of the problem, and that, of course, is continuing to prevent parties from merging because it's beneficial to the government.

I look forward to hearing the minister provide some specific examples on how the following section of the bill would be implemented:

the activities of the registered parties and their registered constituency associations and candidates, including the extent to which the registered parties have been involved in electoral campaigns or made public statements in support of any other registered party or registered parties.

Another perfect example – I know the NDP loves this sort of thing federally, and they love this thing in British Columbia – is making coalitions. Let's just say that the Alberta Party and the Liberal Party chose to work collaboratively in certain areas, or perhaps even the NDP chose to work collaboratively with their friends on the left in the form of the Liberal Party. I mean, we all know that their close personal friend and ally is the Prime Minister, the leader of the Canada's Liberal Party, Justin Trudeau, so what would prevent them, then, from working on a coalition-style election campaign when they start to look at the numbers and see, "Oh, man; things aren't looking as good for us as they once did," and then in turn wind up in a situation where they need to work in a coalition to try to prevent other parties from electoral success? Could then they be deemed associated parties by the Chief Electoral Officer and be in breach of the legislation?

I think that there are some very, very significant and realistic concerns that need to be addressed. Again, all of those things would have been mitigated if they solved the actual problem that was before the Assembly, and that is the inability of parties to merge.

You know, Madam Speaker, I spoke at some length already about the need for legislation to come forward and the fact that now we're seeing this particular piece of legislation before the Assembly for the fourth time. Just last session the NDP introduced Bill 32, which made large, sweeping changes to the electoral system. Some of those changes were important, but we also heard from the Chief Electoral Officer about the lack of consultation with his office with respect to Bill 34. He spoke at some length about the potential for unintended consequences in Bill 32, and we've yet to see all of those, but I'm certain that some are forthcoming.

I'm often concerned about the lack of consultation that takes place with the Chief Electoral Officer. I have yet to hear directly from him, but I look forward to hearing back from his office just to find out how much consultation took place with the Chief Electoral Officer during the drafting of Bill 16. I know that the Election Commissioner wasn't in place at that time and, in fact, it was the Chief Electoral Officer who was acting on behalf of the Election Commissioner, so it's my hope that they would have spent some time connecting with Chief Electoral Officer to ensure that he had the opportunity to provide input and feedback on this particular piece of legislation. Now, it's my guess that that hasn't happened because this government has such a poor track record of communicating with the Chief Electoral Officer, and he's written at some length, in a number of letters that have been tabled in this House, about some of his concerns when the government is tinkering in this area.

Now, it's not to say that all changes have been bad, but we are in the business of trying to make the best changes for Albertans and not the best changes for the NDP, and what we have here before us is a change that's best for the NDP and not necessarily best for Albertans.

Now, I have been clear that it certainly is my intention to support the legislation because it puts into law what we have said that we would do in practice. Now, it's unfortunate that we have to arrive here, but I do believe that members of the Official Opposition will be pleased to speak in favour of the legislation. I've had a good chance to speak to a number of my colleagues, and certainly they have some concerns about the government behaving in such a way that really targets the Official Opposition and, as such, creates or potentially creates unintended consequences on a go-forward basis.

There are a few things in here, additionally, that I can support in terms of some of the changes around by-elections and quarterly filings that are both good and create some concern about the difficulty that some of those things might pose in terms of campaign return filings, of separating out regular contributions and specific contribution campaigns during a by-election, for instance, where donations were not made specifically by the donor but it was received during a by-election period. There are a few potential challenges around that but nothing that can't be overcome.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, we on this side of the House, the Official Opposition, are incredibly flattered that the government saw fit to create a piece of legislation just for us. It makes us feel very special inside. It highlights the fact that they are concerned about the strength of the Official Opposition, that they are concerned that the Official Opposition is gaining momentum all across the province. In fact, the exact opposite of that is what is happening to the government.

We simply hope that unlike in past instances, they've thoroughly thought through this piece of legislation and that we won't be back again next session with another bill on elections advertising and financing to add to all the bills that they've rolled out so far in the past. I look forward to the debate. I look forward to supporting the piece of legislation. It's unfortunate that we're here, but I also look forward to the minister's comments.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Again, it's always a pleasure to rise in this House today to speak to Bill 16, Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. You know, we've had an opportunity to review this. Of course, the UCP Party believes in democracy and accountability and transparency and adhering to these rules, laws, and the spirit of these rules and laws in and outside of election periods, and that's a commitment that we make to all Albertans.

Madam Speaker, we've seen this type of legislation. In 2016 we had Bill 35 and in 2017 Bill 32, and we seem now to be taking three runs at this to try and get it right. There are many very positive aspects of this bill, but as was mentioned by my hon. colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, there seems to be some specific targeting of one party or another, and I don't think that that's really within the spirit that we would hope is in this House, that we actually try and address things that not only apply to all parties but are taken a look at from many different perspectives to ensure that we do the right thing on behalf of Albertans.

Some might say that there's some overreach in certain parts of this and past legislation into party activities, as the member previously noted. A commitment was made that we would treat the two legacy parties and the new party, in our instance, as one entity in terms of the spending limits. We've made that commitment, and that's a commitment we intended to honour, but of course if that's brought into this legislation, that's certainly something that we would continue to honour in that respect. But what we want to make sure of is that there is no overreach that is targeted and that there is fairness and that nobody is trying to stack the deck here in any way, shape, or form, Madam Speaker.

I think it was referenced with the Election Commissioner that that should be an opportunity for us in this House and in that committee to come together to select an individual who's universally accepted for their fairness and lack of bias and certainly who is acceptable to all members of this House with unanimous consent and in a unanimous decision. That would have been, I think, more appropriate and more respected and honoured in the spirit of what we're trying to do here with Bill 16.

You know, Madam Speaker, I look at some of the past here and some of the practices. I just remind all members in the House here that there is an election coming up, the election that we hope to have next year, intend to have next year, and I hope it will be held on time. It's one that is actually going to have to be hard fought, and the individuals there on all sides of this House will work hard and work fiercely for the privilege and the honour of representing the constituents in their constituencies. I know that I intend to do so. I know that I did so last time.

It reminds me of a few examples that I've noted within the last election, where, in fact – and I'll use a very specific example – in my constituency there really was nothing to worry about for the candidate who was running against me because when they filed their election finances, there were zero dollars spent, Madam Speaker. Zero dollars. I can tell you that even if you're just out knocking on a door and handing out a brochure, that takes more than zero dollars. What it actually showed and what we heard from my constituents as I was knocking on doors was that there was not one door knocked on. There was not one brochure printed. There was not one opportunity to meet the candidate, even a cup of coffee purchased for that purpose, not one sign printed. In fact, all the signs were for the hon. Premier. People were asking where the Premier's name was on the ballot. That was an opportunity there to show that there was really not much intent in terms of the energy, effort, or dollars in this respect to do that.

We saw it across many other constituencies, Madam Speaker. We've heard comments and thoughts that: well, we didn't have to do any of that; we just knocked on doors. But in this case there were no doors knocked on that I know of. I would be happy to be corrected on that. We saw in other constituencies election finances registered of $300 and $400 and $500. Well, that doesn't buy a lot of brochures, and it doesn't do a lot of different things in terms of reaching out.

We want to make sure that everybody in this House realizes that these are rules that we all must embrace, we all must live by, and that we all must have the spirit of those laws as well as the intent and also the administration that comes with those at heart. We're happy to reach out and to ensure that we not only adhere to the spirit of that but that we meet the administrative requirements around these in terms of spending limits and how we spend our money and who spends the money.

Madam Speaker, there are some other issues that have been brought to my attention as well. Again, it was mentioned by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills about the agreement in principle, which was referenced again, which concerns me when there's specific targeting of a party or an individual or political movement in that case. That concerns me, that that was brought into this as well, when we really should be looking at this from a broader view of how it impacts all parties, all candidates, and indeed all Albertans.

The increase in penalties, I think, for the political entities that exceed spending limits is a positive thing. If you're going to break the rules, you need to be penalized for doing so. Many of those were laid out in previous bills, Bill 35 and Bill 32. We think that that's a good thing. That's a positive thing because sometimes you need to have appropriate penalties in place when that's taken into account.

We also have some questions, I have some questions around the associated party issue, associated registered parties. You know, it often is brought up in this House, curiously, that many of us belong to parties that have individual registrations and brands and entities across this country. Some people think of us as the same. In the past there's always been confusion between the Conservative Party of Canada and, previously, the Progressive Conservative Party and now the United Conservative Party, but we are individual and separate entities, Madam Speaker. One thing that is constantly mentioned in this House is that the NDP Party is just one party nationally. There is one party. You hold one membership. I have some questions around that in terms of how that will be addressed, how that will be applied, and whether there will be any blurring of those lines not only with a similar brand and maybe some similar policies, although those seem to differ often in application across this country. There may be disagreements, but in essence you have one party that is representing that.

I wonder what would happen in a year that you have a federal and a provincial election at the same time, with the same registered umbrella party that is actually in play in both of those. What if the federal election was before the provincial election, Madam Speaker? Would that mean that the spend of that federal party, the value of the brand that might accrue positively – in this case it might be negatively, but if it was positively, would that be considered as an associated party? That spend could in reality benefit the provincial party when the federal party is spending money on billboards and advertising and mail drops for their candidates.

Let's be honest, Madam Speaker. Many of our constituents are not that clear on the separation between provincial and federal politics. I hear it all the time. I knock on doors, and people say, "Oh, we have memberships for this, and we have memberships for that," confusing provincial and federal parties. Of course, in the NDP's case there is no confusion because you only have one party. So where does that come in? Is the membership somebody who chooses to buy a membership in the federal NDP, and part of those funds goes back to the provincial NDP? Where does that start out? When somebody runs an advertisement, when somebody says, "Support your local NDP," is there a blurring of that? Does that create an associated party relationship? Again, what if we were in a situation where a provincial election were called in the same calendar year and just after a federal election? That sounds a little bit odd to me, a little bit blurred and a little bit associated.

That concerns me, and I certainly would ask that question to the minister and to this government on what the intent and what the application of that would be. Will that be left up to an Election Commissioner which was not selected unanimously by this House? Madam Speaker, there are lots of things for us to consider in this bill, and the associated party one certainly is one that concerns me greatly.

But I think the main thing that we have to consider here is that fairness, the fairness and the transparency and the accountability that I would generally sort of assume that everybody in this House wants to adhere to. They want to do the best. They want to do what's right by their constituents. I believe that a hundred per cent, and I believe they want to be fair as well. Everybody wants to win an election fair and square by working hard, by talking to their constituents, by sharing their ideologies and their policies and their goals with their constituents, and by doing so in a way which respects the limits that are put in place.

Madam Speaker, it does take energy and effort and commitment and dollars to run an election, and I think we owe it to Albertans as well – we can argue over whether these limits are the correct limits or not, but if we all have to play by the same rules, I believe that that will serve the purpose that we want, which is fairness. However, democracy does take a lot of work. It takes a few pairs of shoes to wear out for a good election. It takes a lot of door-knocking. It takes a lot of effort. It takes a lot of volunteers. It takes a lot of commitment from all of us. Any of us that have run those hard elections and not spent zero dollars and not knocked on no doors and not printed no brochures – those of us that have done that know how much work it is.

Having only been through my first election in 2015, trust me; I gained a lot of respect for anybody who runs for public office at any level in this country. I respect the commitment not even of those that win but of those that compete, who choose to compete and put themselves out there for public service. We'll see that again in the coming election, next year. I respect everybody for stepping forward and working hard and trying to earn the support of their constituents.

That, Madam Speaker, is actually the essence of the democracy we live in, and we need to respect that commitment that they put into that and respect the fact that they step forward and do their best, whatever that might be. Some people may want to knock on doors nine hours a day and some three hours a day and some three hours a week. Some may want to have brochures of various sorts. Some may have signs, and some more borrow their leader's signs. Some may host coffee events. Some may stand on street corners doing Burma-Shaves and waving signs in the morning to get people's attention. Those are always fun when it's nice and cold out in the morning. Don't forget to wear your gloves when you're doing those.

But, Madam Speaker, that's the essence of the democracy we live in and the opportunity for us to work hard and to be fair and to honour not only the spirit but the letter of these laws. That's where the letter of these laws is important, that they empower us to empower democratic society, that we have the resources required to reach out to our constituents, who can vote freely in any way they want in a secret ballot – I know that that's a unique concept in some circles in this House; secret ballots are not honoured across all platforms in this province at this point in time – so they can go in and they can actually say something and do another. They can have a sign on their lawn and do another. They can not have a sign on their lawn and tell somebody that they're not going to let anybody know how they're going to vote and do what they want when they walk into that polling station.

That empowerment that we give people is called democracy, the essence of what our forefathers and those who sacrificed before us in two world wars. The men and the women that fought for us – and many sacrificed their lives so that we can have that democracy in this country. I think sometimes that we take that too much for granted and start worrying about getting into the weeds of: can we spend $12 on a sign, or can we spend $6 on this, or can we have a coffee party?

Again, Madam Speaker, it's about fairness. It's about limits. It's about a level playing field and not stacking the deck. There have been some issues raised here of concern about whether we are stacking the deck on this one, whether there's a card being pulled from the middle or whether there's a joker being put in there as well to try and tee this up in a way which skews it for or against one political entity or another. That should not be the intent of this. The intent should be fairness. But the intent should also be there to allow for democratic participation.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Yes. That's a very difficult one to remember. Anyway, I'd just like to ask the hon. member. I was listening to his speech and just wondered if he'd have any comments. You know, this was specifically directed at the two legacy parties of the UCP, but in the event that two parties, say, the government and, say, the Liberal Party or the Alberta Party, decided that they would combine forces and not run a candidate in a specific riding to make it easier for one of their candidates to win over, say, the United Conservative Party's, could that be seen by the Election Commissioner as collusion and maybe in the same light that they're looking at the combined legacy parties of the UCP?

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you to the member for his very thoughtful question. That is a good question about this whole associated party issue. I do have concern about that because I think that in the past, if I'm not mistaken, in the last provincial election, we did have someone who actually sought the nomination from two different parties, so that would imply that there was some sort of agreement to run a single candidate. That is a concern for us because we know that some of the parties have not actually fielded candidates in all constituencies in past elections.

What if they chose to do that again if they didn't have candidates across the board and they chose to actually support one another in that election, through intent or through an agreement or through funding, that they would support or not support direct finances in various directions? Would that associate them enough? Even if that was in one constituency only, would that associate them enough that there was collusion, collaboration, association? That's a good question, Madam Speaker. To the member through you, that is a good question.

A question that we have for this government is: what's going to happen in those? Who is going to adjudicate that? Is it the Election Commissioner? Are they going to come in there and go: "That looks a little too cozy. We're going to call that associated." Maybe that's what should happen. I know our party is intent on and will have candidates in 87 constituencies, but we know that's not the case for all parties. So where do they decide – we're hearing it, actually, in the provincial election in Ontario, that there's collaboration between the Liberal and the NDP parties there. What is their elections commissioner going to say about that? What if that was Alberta, Madam Speaker? What if that was Alberta? Would that then mean that the two combined parties could only spend $2 million? That's an interesting question.

I know that the hon. member said that we have two legacy parties, but we have committed firmly that we will, right from the get-go, as part of our original agreement in principle – that was something we committed to Albertans, that we weren't going to try and circumvent, we weren't going to try and triple down on this. That was a commitment we made coming together as a party. Now, that could be put into law here, and that's fine if that's the way it is, but we want to make sure that this actually not just about the UCP and our two legacy parties, that it will be equally and to the letter of the law applied if there were to be collusion, collaboration, association between other parties in this province, Madam Speaker.

I think that there's an opportunity here for us to reflect on the letter of the law and the intent of the law and then, most importantly, the application of the law. The application of that law is really where the rubber hits the road in this province, Madam Speaker. I just would caution all of the members in this House to think about how this might impact them. We're happy to work by these rules, but be sure that the letter of the law, the impact of the law will be something that is borne by all of us. And then the application of it:

not just the letter and the principles but the letter of this law will need to be appropriately adjudicated and administered across all parties. That is something we all need to be certain about while we're drafting legislation and approving and passing legislation of this sort, that we understand the implications of it and we are all willing to live up not only to the letter and the spirit but to the application of this law.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

To the member through the Speaker: I'm concerned about that as well. I'm concerned about what this is going to look like. We've talked about: what if the policies of parties are similar? You know what? There are lots of principles of democracy which apply.

Thank you to the member for his questions. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to talk about Bill 16, the one that is entitled, at least, Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Statutes Amendment Act, 2018, as some of my colleagues have mentioned, a boutique piece of legislation presumably born out of fear that the Official Opposition will do something that they've promised they won't do. I'm not sure how even under the current rules, without this legislation, any Chief Electoral Officer would let that happen. Nonetheless, the government saw fit to put this into legislation. Ultimately, one of the most interesting things about this is that it's kind of a bit of a window into the minds of the government, that the Official Opposition is in their heads in a serious way in that they would pass a piece of legislation designed to do what probably cannot be done in any event.

It really is the continuation of several pieces of election finance rules that the government has put in place. Unfortunately, because they just can't get it right, they keep creating unintended consequences. They have to go back and try to mop up the mess that they made before and then go back again and try to mop up the mess before. This is the – I don't know – fourth or fifth iteration of them trying to mop up, not getting it right the first or the second or the third time. So here we are again, with this government trying to create what they weren't able to create the first two, three times around, though at least the last time they had two or three years in order to sort it out, but that wasn't enough, so here we are. They're back.

Madam Speaker, here's what's interesting and consistent, unfortunately, across this NDP government in so many of the things that they attempt to do and the things that they say. In many cases what the big print giveth, the small print taketh away. That's pretty consistent across much of the legislation that this government has and many of the things that they do. The most obvious example of that here is that while they seem awfully earnest and awfully concerned about collusion, they took the time to create an exemption for collusion. No. You can't actually make this up, Madam Speaker. It's right in there. They've made it so that if three parties – for example, the NDP and the Liberals or the Alberta Party – decided to share the 87 seats across the province, saying: we'll run in these 50, you run in those 40, and you run in those 50 ...

Mr. Schmidt: That doesn't add up to 87.

Mr. McIver: I know it doesn't add up to 87. Thank you.

The fact is that the example is that if they took the 87 seats and said that somebody will run in 50 and somebody will run in 30 and somebody will run in seven, that somehow wouldn't be collusion. You actually can't make this up, Madam Speaker.

An Hon. Member: You are right now.

Mr. McIver: It's in the legislation, folks. The member is saying that . . .

An Hon. Member: It's not in the bill.

Mr. McIver: "It's out," says the minister. That's a good thing because that is something that we cannot have. We cannot have the ability for collusion if the government doesn't want collusion. I'll take the minister's – the earlier draft that I saw had it in there, okay? Fair enough.

The fact, Madam Speaker, is that we're going to support this because there is no fear in our minds that we're going to try to combine spending between the parties. As my hon. colleague said, if the government legislation had just allowed us to put the parties together in the first place, then this wouldn't even be an issue. We would be happier if indeed we were able to do that. It would certainly be simpler for the taxpayers to administer through the Chief Electoral Officer's office, it would certainly be easier for any government of the day to keep track of it, and it would certainly be easier for our party, with the two legacy parties that were unable to fold into one, to keep track of it all. So this would actually benefit the taxpayers, benefit the government's side, and benefit the opposition's side if the government had indeed just made it possible to merge the three parties. That would really make all of this a lot more simple, less expensive, easier to administer for everyone.

Now, there are things in here, again, that are fine. The government felt that some of the fines weren't high enough. They increased them. No problem. Limiting election advertising by government and third parties during writ periods for the most part is fine. I think that if I don't mention it – I'm happy for the government members to mention it – there's at least one example from the previous government where there was a school announcement in the middle of a riding by somebody that was the Education minister, and I think we've agreed on all sides of this House that that was inappropriate. It was wrong. It happened. There's a piece of this legislation that, frankly, I agree with, that is an improvement.

While we're going ahead with this, we are trying once again to get to the point where there aren't any unintended consequences, where hopefully on the third or fourth attempt the government has got this to the place where they won't wake up the morning after it's passed and decide that they need to change one more thing. I suppose that will be a good thing because the election is approximately one year and two weeks away potentially. I appreciate that the legislation says March, April, or May next year, but I guess in my mind, Madam Speaker, I'm making the assumption that a choice for the government might be the last Monday in May next year. That's what I'm going on. Of course, the government might make a different decision. Well, there's only one person that has the authority to make that decision, as it should be, and that is the Premier. That is as it ought to be. The Premier of the day is the one that gets to make that decision.

The point is that even using the last Monday in May next year as the example of when the election might be, we're just over a year away. It's probably time, for the sake of Albertans, to know what the rules will be because out of 4 and a half million Albertans or 4.3 million Albertans, roughly, a large number of them, of course, are eligible to run. We don't know how many will, but the fact is that all the ones that are eligible to run probably have a reasonable expectation to know what the rules are going to be ahead of time.

The Chief Electoral Officer has a reasonable expectation to know what the rules will be ahead of time because the commissioner in that office is going to need to put administration in place to make sure that the election is run in a fair, consistent way that's not open to interpretation as to anything that isn't fair. All I'm saying is that that will be easier to do if those people charged with this responsibility know what the rules are, that they have to actually put in place and apply, and can put the fail-safes and the checks in place so that that can happen. So I am one of the ones here, as I believe are many of my colleagues if not all, that is hoping that the government is satisfied with their third or fourth attempt at getting this right so that they don't have to come back in the next session, with a little over half a year before an election has to take place, and try to do this one more time.

Here's the thing that is open to interpretation that the government may want to think about: what conditions, what rules? In fairness, perhaps – and this is a good question – the government may want to think about what are the rules that constitute an associated registered party and, again, if it were exactly the same policies, exactly the same rules, and how consistent. How much the same is it going to have to be? In fairness, there may be policies in the next election that every party running agrees on. One might be that everybody might say: we're in favour of getting the pipeline built. I think there's a pretty high probability of every party in the next election saying that they're in favour of that. So if every party says that, I would say that that's probably not grounds to consider the parties associated on its own.

I have a great deal of faith in the Chief Electoral Officer to make good value judgments for us, which is what they are charged with doing and what they get paid to do, but it is, in my view, still to a large degree open to interpretation. I would be interested if the government side, when and if they choose to take the floor here, might let us know what discussions, if any, they've had with the Chief Electoral Officer and, if indeed they have, whether the Chief Electoral Officer has given any hint or clue or idea or a direct statement on what would be considered similar policy or program or policy statements that would deem registered parties associated. That's something that, in my mind, the government should have done and they may well have done.

I have no recollection of them saying that one way or another, but when one of them gets on their feet, I would be interested in hearing from the minister or some other representative from the party on what indeed the Chief Electoral Officer has said on this topic, because it is one that I think all members of this House should be concerned with, all Albertans should be concerned with. Their democracy is important, and I expect that that is something that probably members from all sides of this House will probably be in agreement with. To have confidence – having been here long enough to have been on the winning side of an election and on the losing side of an election, in either case and in all cases it is important that the public, when they watch the late news or open up their newspapers the next morning or check the social media feed or whatever way they get their information, has confidence that the persons announced as the next government in 2019 actually got the most votes, actually won in a fair, equitable, well-refereed, well-run election.

It's my sincere hope and, really, my expectation and belief that all members of this House feel the same way, that if any of us win or lose the next election, there won't be any doubt about the conduct, the fairness, the way the election was done. Of course, then the people in government will have a true mandate to govern, as this government does. No matter how much we disagree with them – and we disagree with them a lot – the fact is that they won the most seats and earned the right to govern for the past three years and one more year to go. So it's equally important that when the next time – and, indeed, there was a previous government that won, I don't know, 13 or 14 in a row and each time had a mandate and had the right to govern, and we'll go through that really important process again next year.

Madam Speaker, it is, I think, of utmost importance that we get this right. In my opinion, just based on the timing of when the next election is likely to be, I think it's important that this probably is the last electoral rule change bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yes. I was just listening to my colleague here speak on this issue, and I think it's important that we have an opportunity to have an open discussion on this and have an opportunity to know, you know, what the government's plans are and why. I think we need to have that opportunity to have further discussion, and I hope that maybe my colleague could kind of continue on in his thoughts there and maybe just cover a little more ground in that regard.

Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to my hon. colleague. To my hon. colleague: I've tried to ask some questions during my time on my feet and have given several invitations to the government side to speak. Hopefully, the minister or somebody on the government side, before this debate is done, will speak because it's important that we give confidence to Albertans that we know what we're doing, that we've got a good process, that it'll be fair. I think it's important that we give confidence to Albertans that, in my view, I hope this is the last electoral bill only because of the timing. Again, we're now to the point where once we go into the fall session, it will be less than a year before the next election according to the election laws here in Alberta. Consequently, it's high time that we start writing things in cement instead of sand in terms of, again, giving those people charged with running the election the confidence that they know what the rules are and they know what they're doing.

It's also good to talk this out in this bill for that reason so that if there is some tweak, some amendment, some improvement from any side of the House that we could make to the rules, it's certainly my wish that this is the time to do it. To me, it doesn't matter whether those changes come from our side of the House or the government side or any of the other independent members as long as it makes the election better. If there's one place where I believe all of our interests in this House do align and ought to align, it's in having a fair, equitable process that all Albertans could have confidence in and know that on the day after the next election, those people that are announced as the winners truly do have a mandate from the people to make rules about how Albertans live.

That's why it's my hope more members of this House will stand up, talk about this, express their views. Again, regardless of the fact that we disagree on a lot of things, if on something so fundamental to what we all do here we all talk with a spirit of making the legislation better, of making the elections more fair, more transparent, giving Albertans more confidence in all of that, then we all win. Whether we win our seats in the next election or not, we all win if that election is part of a process that we and all Albertans can have confidence in.

It gives confidence across Alberta if we do that. Indeed, it gives Alberta, in my view, more respect across Canada and across the world if we can make sure that it's a jurisdiction where everybody feels good about the elections we have here and that when the government of the day is dealing with people, whether it's from another province or a state or another country, they know that Alberta is a place where democracy is protected by a strong set of rules, and that when a government official visits with someone from another country, another province, or our own federal government, they know that the persons were elected in a system that gives the people the utmost of confidence, the utmost of faith that the people's voice has been heard.

A year and two weeks from now, roughly, we'll all be fighting to take each other's jobs away, which is a proper and legitimate part of the process. I think it's in all of our interests to do everything that we can to push for the rules at that point to be as fair, as transparent, as honest, as clear as they can be.

Madam Speaker, I sincerely hope that I hear from more members of the House about this because, again, this may be our last chance with this bill to make it as fair as we can. We ought not miss that chance.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is a pleasure to have the opportunity to rise today and speak to the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act amendments. I've appreciated the thoughts that have been brought forward so far by the members across the aisle. We've had some good discussion, some good debate, and I appreciate the opportunity to respond to some of the concerns that have been raised by these members.

I would note that one of the concerns that had been raised by members across the aisle is that responsibility for enforcing this act and indeed for making assessments as to who would constitute an associated party and other aspects of this would fall to the Election Commissioner. Now, members across the aisle, Madam Speaker, have been indicating again this morning their dissatisfaction with the individual that has been selected to serve as the Election Commissioner. Again, as often occurred during the debate on the appointment of this individual, they have indicated that they fear this individual may have some form of bias. They have expressed concerns about the history of that individual when he served with the Alberta government previously as the Chief Electoral Officer. Indeed, the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek this morning expressed that he is concerned that the issues that are contained within this act and the aspects that would be enforced would be decided by an individual not unanimously selected by this House.

Now, I would note, Madam Speaker, that when the gentleman, Mr. Lorne Gibson, who has, I understand, now gone through all the necessary requirements to begin his service as our Election Commissioner here in the province, served as the Chief Electoral Officer for the province of Alberta, the decision not to renew his contract – in other words, to cease his work as the Chief Electoral Officer for the province of Alberta – was not unanimously selected by this House. In fact, that decision fell along extremely partisan lines, with all opposition members voting against the motion to not reappoint Mr. Gibson and all members of the government voting for. This is something we have seen before, and indeed the circumstances around that were somewhat concerning.

There have been many comments about Mr. Gibson's history with the 2008 election, an election, I would note, approaching which he made six requests over the course of 16 months for the government at the time to appoint the returning officers necessary for him to begin to do the work of enumeration and prepare for that election. Those were all ignored. Sixteen months, Madam Speaker. This is what members of the opposition would wish to use against this individual to indicate that for some reason he was going to be biased or not be able to make prudent decisions. Indeed, at that time it was the view of many outside of this House and, certainly, the view of members of the opposition at that time that the decision that was made not to renew Mr. Gibson's contract was where the real hint of bias lay. So I would suggest that those concerns are being somewhat overstated.

In this case I think that Mr. Gibson is, in fact, in a very good position. Indeed, he made 180 – wasn't it 180, Mr. Deputy Chair? – recommendations on how we could improve our electoral system here in the province of Alberta. The majority of those have been implemented since, Madam Speaker. This is an individual who has great knowledge and understanding of electoral law, electoral financing across Canada and indeed has been called into service in numerous jurisdictions across this country and is respected greatly for his knowledge and understanding. I cannot think of a better person to make these sorts of judgments, to make these sorts of decisions, and indeed I am quite comfortable placing these directions in his hands.

Now, the members across have also expressed their concerns that they don't believe we should be bringing in any legislation or making any decisions that are targeting any particular party. Indeed, Madam Speaker, again, I think back to that debate on the Election Commissioner and how members opposite spent the majority of that debate bringing forward amendments specifically singling out that particular appointment for unique treatment compared to the process used with any other officer of the Legislature.

Now, their argument was that they were merely looking out for transparency for Albertans in line with the spirit of the law. Indeed, Madam Speaker, that is all we are doing with this legislation. This legislation simply provides for the spirit of the law to ensure that no parties would attempt to circumvent that intent to provide transparency for Albertans, to provide Albertans with the assurance that when the elections law says that no political party would incur election expenses more than $2 million, that indeed that is the case. Members opposite have said that they agree with that. They have no problem at all with that provision. They indeed say that, you know, they themselves have taken steps to ensure that in the process of creating the party in which they now sit, they would not do so. So I don't see that we have any basis, then, for disagreement on this legislation.

It's fantastic that they've taken that step, and now we will ensure that any future parties in this province that choose to take a similar step will abide by similar rules. I think that's something all Albertans would support. I think that's something the members of my constituency, the folks that I am here to represent, would ask that we do. Indeed, I'd say that it's probably not appropriate, Madam Speaker, to simply say that we'll just trust any groups in the future that might choose to do that, that we will trust them on their goodwill. I've certainly heard frequent expressions from across the aisle about how much they trust our government in terms of making decisions that they feel are not going to be biased. I think it's fair and prudent that indeed in bringing forward this law, we would ensure that there are no loopholes outstanding that would allow any parties to circumvent in the future.

Indeed, when we look at the history of this province, Madam Speaker, we know that in the past there have been particular political parties which have sought to circumvent at times the elections laws that were in place. There was a time when there were particular political parties who took donations from places that they should not have been taking them from: public institutions, municipalities, universities, others. Thankfully, elections law was enforced in those cases, and those amounts were forced to be repaid. But we need to ensure that we do not leave loopholes for people to exploit, and so far, from what I've heard this morning, all members of this House agree on that point. There is no disagreement there.

So I think it's fair that we move forward with legislation to ensure that we're going to have these protections in place for Albertans. We're all – and all members of the opposition spoke this morning to say that they are in favour of transparency, that they have every intent to respect the intention of the law, and indeed we want to make sure that for every political party going forward, for any examples in the future, anything that may occur, that will also be the case.

Now, members have also mentioned, you know, their deep concern that perhaps somebody might consider parties with similar policy platforms to be associated. There was a comment that perhaps, well, the Alberta Party, the Liberal Party, the NDP could be considered associated or that parties in a coalition could be seen as acting collaboratively. Indeed, Madam Speaker, that is why this has the Election Commissioner with the ability to make that decision and make that ruling.

It was referenced that members have indeed run for a position in this House under the banner of multiple parties. That was my opponent in the last election who ran with nominations for the Alberta Liberal Party and also the Alberta Party, had both symbols on her signs. I respected that decision on the part of that individual and her choice to represent both those banners. Certainly, if this legislation had been in place and we had had an Election Commissioner at the time, then I could have approached him and said: "Hmm; I have a concern. Is this appropriate?" and he would have investigated. Indeed, the legislation also provides that that individual herself could have had the opportunity before making that decision, before holding that press conference, before producing those signs to sit down with the Election Commissioner, much as many of us often do on occasion with the Ethics Commissioner, to discuss and say: "Hey, I have this opportunity. Is this appropriate?" I think that's reasonable and clear, Madam Speaker.

Certainly, if there was the opportunity, if there were parties within the province that wanted to act collaboratively in terms of where they put their candidates or that sort of issue, they have that opportunity to sit down with the Election Commissioner, who has some clear criteria, and discuss and determine whether or not he would consider those parties to be associated, and he would be able to instruct them to act accordingly. Should they choose not to act according to that recommendation, he would have the option then to press appropriate penalties.

There have been some concerns raised about, I guess, some elements of the particular things that are put forward here in terms of the criteria to determine whether a party is associated. Now, just to be clear, Madam Speaker, it states here that the criteria that would be considered would include whether the parties have common leadership, political programs, or policy statements. Note there: common leadership. So do they have the same folks on the boards of both parties? Do they have the same people making the decisions, the same people serving on both constituency associations, that sort of thing? It's not just a question of whether or not they both happen to support a carbon levy or whether they both happen to support a flat tax. There are more criteria than that involved. It's not that simple a question.

Whether or not one party controls another: that's a fairly strong statement, Madam Speaker, and that would be something that the Election Commissioner can very clearly investigate and determine.

Whether parties have the same advertising material and branding: for example, again, the individual whom I ran against in the 2015 election indeed had election signs which contained branding of two parties, so the Election Commissioner would consider that criterion alongside all of the other criteria.

Members this morning have been talking as if one single criterion would be enough to consider parties to be associated. There are multiple criteria here, Madam Speaker. Again, we have an Election Commissioner who has a deep understanding of electoral law, has written instructional guides for multiple jurisdictions across this country, and indeed has provided education in multiple jurisdictions to individuals ranging from elected officials all the way down to volunteers on the ground. He is making himself available under this legislation to be able to sit down with any individuals who have concerns about whether or not they may be considered to be associated parties, to have that discussion with them and to help provide them with clarity before any action is taken.

Then, of course, you could also take a look at the final criterion that we have here, the nature of agreements and interactions between those parties.

That is a robust set of criteria, Madam Speaker. For myself, reviewing that, I have every confidence that an individual with the kind of training and knowledge and background that the Election Commissioner has would be able to come forward with a fair and prudent ruling, provide that advice, sit down and work with the individuals involved, help them to determine whether or not they may be in contravention of either the spirit or the letter of this law.

As I said, Madam Speaker, I think all Albertans want to ensure, when we have our next election, that things are conducted fairly, that things are conducted evenly, that there is indeed transparency on the part of all Albertans, and that indeed promises that are made are upheld, indeed that all of our commitments to transparency and how we work together and how we spend the money which is donated to us by Albertans to express their political views is used appropriately and indeed that we continue to maintain the kind of opportunity and accessibility to the democratic system that we now see following that 2015 election, where for the first time in a very long time in this province money did not decide the vote of the people of Alberta.

Now, in my view, that's resulted in some very good change. I understand that members opposite may not agree. We have disagreements on many areas of policy, but I think we can all agree that at the very least there is far more opportunity for democratic participation by all the people of Alberta than there has been in this province for many years. That is because of prudent changes that have been brought forward over the course of the last couple of years by the minister responsible for democratic renewal lowering those spending limits, lowering the campaign contribution limits, bringing these much more in line with other jurisdictions, much more within the reach of the average, everyday Albertan.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very pleased to be able to rise now and ask the Member for Edmonton-Centre about a couple of curiosities that have arisen while listening to the debate on Bill 16. One of them arises from the comments and claims from the UCP opposition members who've been speaking, including the last member who spoke, asking whether this legislation was needed or not, in the light of their founding document, that promised not to do what this legislation would prohibit them from doing, that being that an associated party would be subjected to the spending limits of a single party.

It occurs to me, Madam Speaker, that placing that restriction or making that promise within their founding document is a clear admission by the Official Opposition party that all Albertans might have a concern that this would be a problem if indeed associated parties were to combine assets and to circumvent the spending limits. I wanted the Member for Edmonton-Centre to perhaps comment on that curiosity of mine and tell Albertans whether he feels that it is really an admission of concern by the opposition party within their founding agreement that this really is a problem that needs to be addressed and should be formally addressed in legislation such as we're doing now in Bill 16.

Secondly, another curiosity that I had revolves around this principle of unanimous consent. As we all know, majority rules for most decisions of this House. Once the House or a committee of this Legislature has made a decision by majority, we expect as parliamentarians that we will respect that decision and not necessarily in the case of an appointment to a position shoot the messenger because we don't happen to like the appointment that we may have voted against in a committee or in a Legislature and therefore smear the reputation of an individual who may be taking on a position that he's been appointed to even before the appointment is made official.

I'm wondering if the Member for Edmonton-Centre could comment on those two curiosities of mine, the principle that indeed the UCP Official Opposition does in fact admit freely through their founding document that they are addressing a problem that needs to be highlighted and regulated by legislation and, secondly, whether or not this unanimous consent requirement that's implied by the opposition is really something that should be opposed and we should be highlighting the respect for our parliamentary institutions and allowing the majority decisions in committee and in this House to be respected when it comes in particular to appointments of legislative officers.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker and to the Member for Edmonton-McClung for that question. Certainly, again, I appreciate and I have heard the concerns of the members opposite that this is legislation that is particularly aimed at a particular party or that it might be targeted to a particular group. But, again, I would simply note that it is important that we protect on all fronts our democracy here in the province of Alberta to ensure that no groups have the opportunity to circumvent the letter or the spirit of the law as it's brought forward to protect the people of Alberta and ensure we have fair and balanced elections.

I would note, again, along those lines, Madam Speaker, that members opposite have expressed concerns about the structure of the federal NDP and the provincial NDP. Certainly, I respect that there is a different model by which our party operates than theirs. I would note that generally at the recent UCP founding convention they certainly had a large number of members from the federal Conservative Party both speaking and participating and very actively part of that, but I wouldn't look at that in any sense and consider them to be associated.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 16, Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. Wow, what a title. I rise today quite happy to speak in favour of this Bill 16 with some reservations. I see Bill 16 as in a long line of legislation that has attempted to make our system of democracy better, more transparent, more open, more accessible to the citizens of this nation and this province.

Madam Speaker, electoral reform is not new. Perhaps one of the strengths of the British parliamentary system of government is that it has allowed itself over its many centuries and its long and storied history to be amended and to be changed and to be improved upon.

Madam Speaker, there was a time when in our nation a property requirement was necessary in order to vote. That was not unusual. There were many democracies at the time that had the belief that in order to be able to participate, you needed to have attained a certain stature, a certain amount of financial and fiscal responsibility. I remember a story of one individual who had voted in an election. Because he had a certain amount of property, the primary piece of his property being a donkey, he was allowed to be able to vote. In the next election he had fallen on harder times. He had had to sell the donkey. He no longer had the donkey, and he was no longer allowed to vote. The question that he brought forward was: who voted in the first election, myself or the donkey? [interjection] Yeah. I didn't want to use that word.

You know, electoral reform has a long history in our province and in our country. At one point in time you had to be the right sex. I can remember growing up and having a great-aunt that lived to be 103 years old who could remember what it was like not to have been able to vote because of her sex. I think we've understood and we would all support in this House the evolution of our democracy to include people of both genders.

First Nations at one time in our nation did not have the right to vote, and I think our endeavour to have moved forward on that has been a positive thing.

At one time, Madam Speaker, we did not have a secret ballot. The abuse of that was obvious to everyone, so we moved forward on that.

I think that, to the credit of this House and of this Legislature, we have come together many times here to talk about how we can make our system of government better. This bill, Bill 16, addresses perhaps another issue that we need to pursue. It will have my support but not without some concerns and some reservations. I think we can say, as the hon. members have said today, that all of us support balanced legislation that will protect the voters and that will pursue accountability and transparency so that the results of any election, present or in the future, will reflect the will of the people.

Madam Speaker, we know that this Legislature has addressed in this session Bill 32, An Act to Strengthen and Protect Democracy in Alberta. In that act we passed rules on procedures that govern elections and by-elections. We established the new and independent office of the Election Commissioner. We addressed third-party advertising. We've addressed political action committees by setting new spending limits and time frames. We've set some guidelines regarding expenses. I believe that we have made some positive steps towards making our democracy more efficient and more fair so that it is addressing, truly, the will of the people when we go into an election.

I believe that I need to look at Bill 16 here in that spirit of co-operation. I believe that it does address some reasonable concerns. The United Conservative Party has always supported transparency. We've always supported accountability in election law. We're a little frustrated sometimes when legislation has to come back before this House four and five times in order to try to get it right. We should be able to get it right, better the first time. Perhaps we need to do a little more consulting or a little more thinking before you bring legislation before the House, but that's fine.

We're now stuck in a situation where we have Bill 16. Maybe it should be no surprise to the United Conservative Party that the government doesn't trust us and doesn't take us at our word. But when we placed into our agreement in principle that we would respect and adhere to the single-party registration and live under the $2 million spending limit, we placed that in there in all sincerity and good faith. But what it really highlights, Madam Speaker, is what this bill should really have been about. Bill 16 should really have been willing to address the heart of the matter, and that is that we have a problem when parties decide to merge in this province. There's no vehicle by which that can be done. So we are now looking at Bill 16, which addresses some of the results of what we've had to go through but hasn't really addressed the issue or the problem.

We pursued the path that we did in order to bring conservatives together. It was out of not desire but necessity that we pursued the path that we had to in order to unite. So we can stand here before you today, and we can say that we will support this bill. We don't believe that it's necessarily the best way to govern, to have boutique legislation, as one of the other members has described it, that sort of targets the opposition. That is concerning. We would just, I guess, at the end of the day, argue that if the government were willing to pursue the real problem, we wouldn't need this kind of boutique legislation.

We brought up some concerns about some of the qualifiers, Madam Speaker, about which you will deem that parties are associating: common leaders, common policies and programs, common materials. On the surface these things sound fine. It's when you try to apply them. It's the application.

What about the fact that it's often in our very flexible form of democracy for parties to be able to not compete against each other, to choose not to? Does that cross the line, Madam Speaker? By choosing to put forward just a single candidate or maybe even no candidate so that a third party would have a better chance at winning, is that kind of co-operation now transgressing this piece of legislation?

Madam Speaker, we have many parties. It's one of the differences between, say, our traditional Westminster parliamentary form of democracy and, say, the American form of democracy. We can have four, five, six, seven parties that are running for office within our multiparty system of democracy. That means that sometimes the differences between parties may not be on policy but may be on the personalities of the leaders. Sometimes their policies and their practices can be very similar and may simply be a difference between the regions of the country or the regions of the province.

We're leaving ourselves open, Madam Speaker, for decision-making by the Election Commissioner when, really, I believe those decisions should be made by the people at the ballot box when they vote. I'm not sure that it should be up to a single individual or to the government to be making decisions about whether parties have too similar policy platforms. At the end of the day, this should be in the hands of the people.

Just simply because they support a carbon tax or they have a similar policy on high debt and deficit – and some of the members have brought up that as much as we have chosen not to organize our political parties where the federal and the provincial parties are one party, the New Democrats have. That's fine. There are some problems that come with that, Madam Speaker, in the minds of Canadians, when they try to differentiate what is a policy from the federal side that's impinging on the provincial side, but we believe that that internal kind of organization should be left in the hands of the political parties involved.

But this piece of legislation draws that into question. Are you one party, and will this piece of legislation now think of you as being an associated party, of crossing the lines of provincial legislation, of political parties? Madam Speaker, will an Election Commissioner conclude that parties that are simply and merely co-operating are now associated parties?

You know, there have been times, Madam Speaker, in the history of our country when under great duress our political parties have eliminated the political lines and have actually come together in what we call union governments, where party lines are completely set aside in order to address the issues of the day; for instance, in World War I under the pressures of world war. Governments come under crises and come under times of great stress. Should the Legislature of Alberta ever decide that in order to co-operate, in order to address the problems of this province, we need to form something of a more formal union between the opposition and the government, are we now contravening our own pieces of legislation? These are some of the concerns that we throw out as needing some consideration, understanding that, at the end of the day, we will be supporting this piece of legislation.

Madam Speaker, last session Bill 32 created the Election Commissioner, and the Chief Electoral Officer spoke about the lack of consultation over Bill 32 and the unintended consequences that could be had as a result of that piece of legislation. I guess we would argue that to a certain degree Bill 16 is poised to do the same thing. The question that we would ask is: just how much consultation have you actually done with the Chief Electoral Officer? We know that there are times when we've accused the government of having a poor track record when it comes to consultation, and I think the question is worthy of being asked in this House today as to how much consultation has actually occurred with the Chief Electoral Officer over Bill 16. That's a part of our job as the Official Opposition, to ask these questions and to see what the response of the government is. I've yet to hear anyone on the other side of the House tell us just how much consultation they did on this bill. Who did they talk to?

We will support this bill because it puts into law what we are already willing to do in practice – we've stated that clearly, Madam Speaker – but that doesn't mean that we support the fact that this bill is targeted specifically to the Official Opposition.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's just interesting listening to the comments on this Bill 16, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. You talked a little bit about how this was, you know, making changes to Bill 32 and cleaning up some of the things that obviously had been missed when they brought that forward. I just wondered if you would like to continue a little bit more along those lines. I think you covered quite a bit of ground as far as the associated parties and how there seems to probably be a little bit of opportunity for whoever is making these decisions to kind of make their own judgment call on what's considered associated and what isn't. I know the Member for Edmonton-Centre seemed to think that it was spelled out so clearly, how could anybody go wrong? But I actually think that there's a lot of ambiguity there, that it will be up to the Election Commissioner to make some decisions there.

I'd just like to see if you want to comment a little bit more along those lines. Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think all of us in this Legislature would agree that, at the end of the day, the decisions of political parties, the platforms of political parties, the political alliances that are made in the Westminster parliamentary system of democracy, how it functions – it does have to be driven by the people. I think that's one of the real advantages of our system of democracy.

I mentioned previously, earlier, that we've seen a long history of evolution when it comes to our system of Westminster parliamentary democracy. A strength of that system has been its capacity to evolve and to change and to address the issues of the day, but always, always, always at the heart of that has been the fact that this is driven by the people and the desires of the people. We must make sure that we have legislation that protects this democracy but does not handcuff this democracy, that allows for the will of the people but doesn't constrain the will of the people. That's a delicate balance, and it's one that sometimes takes a few generations to figure out.

I think that both sides of this House have been willing to have discussions on spending and finance and how we want to see that reasonably constrained but not to the point where it constrains or stops the people from being able to express their will, whether that's through the support of a particular political party or whether that's through third-party advertising. You cannot constrain and pass legislation that disallows the capacity of the people to speak, to communicate, to coalesce around ideas and political parties, and to make decisions.

We understand that because there was a lack of legislation allowing for political parties to be able to merge, we had to use a process that essentially creates two legacy parties and a third political party, that we now call the United Conservative Party. It would have been so much easier if we'd had legislation that simply would allow the people through their membership in political parties to democratically make the decision to come together if that's what they choose. It was never the intention – and we've placed it clearly in our agreement in principle that we were not prepared to wiggle out of the $2 million spending limit, that we would have abided by the principle, and that we would have, Madam Speaker, followed the intent and the spirit of the law. I'm not sure . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 16, Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Statutes Amendment Act, 2018, subtitled An Act to Strengthen and Protect Democracy in Alberta. Obviously, there need to be checks and balances on spending and donations.

I guess the disappointment from my side has been that when given an opportunity to reduce the impact of political action committees, the government still hasn't made any attempt to reduce spending of unions, corporations, other than individuals, which therefore will continue to have a major influence not only on third-party advertising but potentially on policies and programs of this government. As we put forward under Bill 214, we were wanting very much to stop that practice and stop the ability of political action committees to inordinately influence media and public opinion, and we were looking for more there.

I was hoping that in this amendment we might see a much stronger attempt to reduce PACs such as this government seems to be associated with – Progress Alberta, Project Alberta – again, garnering increasing amounts of money from unknown sources inside or outside the province, including unions and, potentially, corporations. None of that is here, of course.

This simply focuses on the capacity of the new election officer to investigate whether two or more registered parties are associated and collaborating on advancing a political agenda, and of course this is important. One would not want to see parties that are extending the spending limits, garnering more power as a result of colluding, and therefore once again influencing unduly the electoral process, subverting democracy in that sense. This is important, but it pales in comparison to the soft-peddalling on the political action committees, the so-called dark money that continues to build as we head into this election year.

While we certainly will be supporting this bill, it adds another dimension, an important dimension, to preventing collusion and enabling the Election Commissioner to investigate and to prevent this kind of collusion. It doesn't go far enough, as far as we're concerned, in terms of the ongoing expansion of the dark money in this province, some of which this government is, of course, aiding and abetting by not addressing in a serious way the funding and financing of political action committees.

That's all I need to say, Madam Speaker. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was just listening to the previous member speak here, and he talked about concerns with unions and financing and campaigns and that sort of thing and the money that unions spend on politics in Alberta. He talked about the dark money and how this government is aiding and abetting this dark money by not covering issues like this. I just wanted to see if he could expand a little bit more on that issue.

The Deputy Speaker: Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thanks, Madam Speaker. I think we were very clear in our bill proposal, before it was superseded by this government's softer bill, that we wanted to ensure that there was no undue influence by nonindividuals. Under the original Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, that was amended a couple of years ago, it was very clear that political parties could only receive donations from individuals. Somehow that wasn't good enough in terms of this government's amending of the financing of political action committees. It's disappointing because we know that there are at least a couple of political action committees that appear to be associated with this government.

Some of the examples that we have seen in the past, both in the United States and in Canada, where the tremendous influence, in the United States particularly, these big corporations have had on U.S. elections has been very, very disturbing – and it's ironic that although this government has been critical of that kind of influence, they have failed to actually put teeth into the PAC control legislation.

Although they are standing up for individual rights in many cases – in relation to farm workers, for example, and to women seeking help with their health care – they don't seem to be prepared to stand up for individual rights and responsibilities in the election financing area and, in fact, seem to be enabling the restrictions on free speech if you equate funding with access to media and greater influence on individual rights.

Presently there are no limits when it comes to donating money to third parties or political action committees. The sky is the limit. We propose that the $4,000 limit annually be applied also to political action committees. That was not accepted by this government. In fact, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act doesn't even define what a political action committee is. We found that to be problematic as well. It's now going to be up to the Chief Electoral Officer to define that and what constitutes the unacceptable activities of a political action committee in advertising.

In summary, we're confident that our bill would have stood up to any Charter challenge, and we would have been willing to fight this in court if necessary. Unlike the NDP, we purposely did not prohibit the kinds of activities that PACs can engage in. Instead, we chose to make them subject to contribution limits and greater disclosure requirements and prohibit them from receiving union, corporate, and out-of-province donations. The NDP's Bill 32 simply doesn't go far enough, and this legislation had an opportunity to amend some of that but fails to do that.

It's obviously welcome that the fines for contravening this act have jumped from $10,000 to $100,000. That certainly should discourage collusion, but it says nothing about, again, what political action committees are doing behind the scenes, quite apart from the writ period, where they're limited to $100,000 of spending. So we think there should be some more serious attention to the whole dark money issue.

Once again I would call on the government, if they're serious about undermining dark money in the electoral process and if they're serious about confronting their own complicity with dark money in relation to Progress Alberta and Project Alberta, to make it clear to Albertans that you stand on the side of openness and accountability.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to Bill 16? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Now, I've been listening to the debate this morning on Bill 16, Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Statutes Amendment Act, 2018, and one of the most interesting things, I think, that happened this morning was listening to the Member for Edmonton-Centre get up and talk about Motion 16. He talked so much about it that I wondered if he was confused whether we were on Motion 16 or Bill 16. Regardless, Motion 16 is the appointment of Lorne Gibson as Election Commissioner. Probably one of the most interesting things that I noticed is that all this discussion on Motion 16 – the government, when we were debating Motion 16, time-allocated us. They shut down debate. They cut down the opportunity for us to speak on Motion 16, yet the government comes in here today, and, of course, what do they want to talk about? The want to talk about Motion 16. Well, we wanted to talk it about it, too, but of course that opportunity wasn't given to us to the fullest extent that we would have liked.

You know, we were talking about this Motion 16, and he talked about the idea of not renewing this person's contract when he was previously employed by this government. It wasn't supported unanimously. Of course, we know what happened there. The contract wasn't renewed, and then this individual sued the government. Now, of course, any time that anybody sues a person – in fact, if I was sued by somebody that was previously working for me, I think I would think seriously about whether I would want to rehire that person. Obviously, that's not a very good indication of goodwill shared back and forth. But this government, of course, thought that was just fine.

Now, when we talk about singling out – I think the Member for Edmonton-Centre talked about that. We're talking about how this bill has kind of singled out the United Conservative Party. But when we talked about Motion 16, when we wanted to have Lorne Gibson's wages on the sunshine list immediately, the government said that, well, this singling out of him was horrible. There's just, you know, a little bit of hypocrisy going on here, where they say that singling out the Election Commissioner is horrible but singling out in this situation is just great. This is just the way it has to be.

Now, I also wanted to talk about this one part here: constituency associations for registered political parties must file their annual return statements on March 31 of each year regardless of when a party becomes registered. Currently if a party registers in the four months leading up to March 31, a constituency association would not be required to file their financial statements until the deadline for the following year, which could mean that there are CAs that could have unfiled financials for up to 19 months.

You know, that somewhat makes sense, that they shouldn't have that amount of time to file their financial statements. But, of course, when we were talking about Motion 16 and we wanted the person that was to take the dark money out of politics on the sunshine list, which the government, of course, opposed, which is in itself fairly bizarre, I would say, one of the problems was that this person won't hit the sunshine list as it is presently for probably 16 months. So here we have the government bringing forward legislation that suggests that 19 months is too long for a constituency association to record their finances, but for somebody to hit the sunshine list after 16 months: I guess that's fine. There just seem to be disparities everywhere we go here.

Now, there were accusations, I guess, in previous elections and everything about things that were done wrong and different financing things, and the Member for Edmonton-Centre said that the election law was enforced, fines were levied, people were punished, and we went on. But, of course, that's supposed to be the job of the Election Commissioner, and there hasn't been an Election Commissioner yet. So it did point out the fact – it's good to see the Member for Edmonton-Centre at least admitting that even before this Motion 16 was passed, we still had laws being enforced and fines being levied. This isn't anything new, as they kind of allude to, that this is something new. Like I say, I just see some really strange things going on here this morning.

Now, the Member for Edmonton-Centre also talked about the coalitions and how in one of the previous elections somebody had run under two parties. Actually, it was three parties. It was actually the Liberal Party, the Alberta Party, and the Green Party. We look at these kinds of coalitions and how three parties could have one candidate run under them. I guess that does maybe spell it out a little more clearly as far as where the Alberta Party, the Liberal Party, and the Green Party sit on the political spectrum as far as the things that they believe. Obviously, they were very, very like-minded, or they wouldn't run the same candidate for the three parties.

I guess I wonder. You know, they talk about these associated parties and how that's all going to work. Of course, the Member for Edmonton-Centre talked about the person that he ran against that was representing two, as he said, three, as it was, parties. I could see that maybe he's a little concerned about the possibilities of re-election if it happens again, I would guess. Now, when I look back at previous elections, probably at least five or six elections in the past, the New Democrats got between 12 and 19 per cent of the vote, and then in 2015, of course, they got over 50 per cent. This member may have a very good chance of being re-elected in Edmonton-Centre, but obviously history has shown that the NDP hasn't had a real stronghold in Edmonton-Centre. So, obviously, when the government is working on these different issues, you always wonder why. Why are they concerned about some of these things? I guess it becomes more apparent as you look at past history and look at how things might be affected going forward for them.

Now, it talks about the criteria of association. Of course, I look at this, and I see some pretty vague things as far as what's considered associated and what isn't. I think the Member for Edmonton-Centre did mention, you know, that maybe – I don't know if he was really meaning this or not – one indiscretion was okay, but maybe two is bad. Or is three real bad? At what point do we get to the situation where any kind of association becomes an issue to cause problems?

Now, if we look at the past B.C. election, of course, what we've seen there is that after the election there was a coalition. So what I wonder is: in a situation like that, where two parties get together after the election, where does that fit into this legislation? That's a pretty deep association. Now, did that happen before the election, or did it happen after the election? Was it all predetermined? Had they colluded before, or did they make all the decisions afterwards? What's the penalty for this kind of association if it's deemed to be improper? Let's say that this legislation was in British Columbia, and we have a situation where two parties come together and form government, and then it was found out that they had colluded beforehand. Would this legislation mean that they would not be government anymore? Would they hold another election? Would it just be a fine, and you carry on? I think that there are probably a lot of questions that could probably be answered here or at least investigated.

Madam Speaker, when I look at Bill 16, I mean, this makes amendments to Bill 32, that was just passed last fall, so obviously there were some shortcomings in Bill 32, and now we're here to correct those shortcomings.

I also look at this situation here, where there is an exemption for parties that establish noncompete clauses in ridings – so if the Alberta Party and the Liberal Party agreed to run or not run competing candidates in Edmonton-Centre – but that's going to be pulled out now, is my understanding. So already we're amending the amendment act. I would probably suggest that if this government, I guess, keeps going down this road, we'll be amending the amended amendment act in the next session.

Again, I want to get back to this, that under this legislation the newly appointed Election Commissioner would be able to initiate an investigation on his own at the request of the Chief Electoral Officer or at the request of an elector or a registered party in order to determine if two or more registered parties are associated. Now, if two parties are found to be associated, they must share the $2 million spending limit for a single party. Of course. That makes sense. A variety of factors will be used to determine if parties are associated, but parties do not need to meet a set number of these qualifiers in order to be deemed associated. So they don't need to meet a set number of these qualifiers. Again, there's all sorts of vagueness here.

If registered parties have the same leader, executive director, or person in a position similar to an executive director or CFO, they could be deemed associated. If they share common political programs, policy statements, or advertising and branding material or if one party controls another, they could be deemed associated. It's getting right down to similar policy statements, which, of course, on the left, you know, there could be a lot of similar policy statements. They all seem to like the carbon tax. They all seem to like spending money. They all seem to like taxes, the more the better. I would say that there might be a lot of similarities there.

The Election Commissioner will also take into consideration the activities of the registered parties and their registered constituency associations and candidates, including the extent to which the registered parties have been involved in electoral campaigns or made public statements in support of any other registered party . . . or of a candidate of any other registered parties.

So I guess this Election Commissioner is going to have to be reviewing all the public debates and all the printed material and all the different interactions that go on during an election to see if there's any kind of association between parties.

Madam Speaker, it's good – I mean, we want to have fair elections. We want to take out any kind of improprieties with elections. I think that in a democracy we owe it to ourselves and we owe it to the people to have fair elections, where there is accountability and transparency in and out of election periods. It's not just during election periods. We need to have that at all times: democracy, accountability, and transparency, three very important things in the political process.

Now, what does seem odd are some of the things that this government is concerned about and some of the things that it's not concerned about. One thing is that we still haven't in this Legislature passed Bill 12, and that's something that's very important. Now, we're not supposed to have an election for a year, and as much as it is important to have, you know, fair and accountable and transparent elections – that's very important – even more important is the 14-day deadline on the pipeline. We have Bill 12, which is supposed to exert pressure to get the pipeline approved, and we're still sitting here talking about other things over and over again before dealing with probably the most important legislation of this session. I don't know if anybody could disagree that the pipeline is the most important issue facing Alberta today, and it's got a deadline. It's got a timeline. But, again, we're sitting here day after day talking about many different things when we should have been focused on making sure that Bill 12 passed.

We're a little concerned about some other issues, too, of course, with this bill. We're concerned about the difficulty that might be posed in the campaign return filing with separating out regular contributions and contributions specific to a by-election in instances where a donation was not specific by the donor but was received during a by-election period. I think we've all had that opportunity where we've taken in cheques during a time period where we're not sure and the person didn't say exactly where that cheque was going to go, so then we have to make a determination . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm sure that you were not quite close to finished there, but I'd just like to bring up that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View was talking about dark money in politics. He made some brief references to unions and that but kind of concentrated on PACs. I know that we've talked about this on numerous occasions in the House, when the government has been trying to stack the deck with their elections bills that they've put through, numerous bills over the last couple of years. One of the things that I'd like you to comment about – and I was hoping to get the Member for Calgary-Mountain View's opinion on it – is that when we talk about PACs, we're talking about individuals that support a particular political movement, and they give their money freely to support that movement. When we talk about unions and the Alberta Federation of Labour, if I'm a member of a union that's associated with the Alberta Federation of Labour and I happen to be a Conservative, $1.25 every month of my union dues goes to support the Alberta Federation of Labour, that supports anything but conservative views.

I'm just wondering if you might want to comment on that, that basically it's a forced donation to support a party that I don't support. You know, if we want to talk about dark money, I think that maybe these unions should be getting permission from their membership before they distribute that money. So if you want to talk about democracy and fairness, I think maybe we should do that, right? I just thought maybe you'd like to finish your comments and if you wanted to delve into that dark money hypocrisy that we've talked about here and expand.

Thank you.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much. Yeah. It's actually an interesting topic you've brought up, of course, with unions and how they spend their money and that sort of thing. Now, just to give you a bit of an example, my son is a schoolteacher. He teaches in Hillside high school in Valleyview, and he does a great job there, of course. He coaches the football team and that sort of thing and, of course, teaches in the classroom, too. I think it's probably alarming to him to think that part of the money that gets taken off his cheque each month actually goes to campaign against his dad, whom he supports. He supports my political endeavours. I have to think that that's very frustrating for him to see that. We see that these people that are working under these conditions with unions don't have a say in how that money gets spent. I think there are some, you know, issues there of what's considered dark money, what's considered fair, what's considered right when this sort of thing is happening.

Now, of course, the members on the other side are chatting away over there. They're not too happy about that. I guess they feel that that's okay. I'm not sure. But I'm sure that if money was being taken from your cheque and directed to a political party that you don't agree with, I think you would probably feel that that's not quite fair and not quite right.

Madam Speaker, there are a lot of things we can do to make things better in Alberta as far as making things fair and more transparent and accountable with elections. On this side of the House we're in support of all of those. It only makes sense that we do the best we can to make things just as good as possible.

Of course, this government every time we turn around is lacking transparency and they're fighting transparency. We've seen, like I was saying earlier about Motion 16, where we wanted to see the Election Commissioner's wages hit the sunshine list immediately, and they think that waiting over a year is the best way to go. So the person that's supposed to get dark money out of politics: their wages will not hit the sunshine list for over a year after they're hired. There are things like that, of course, that are alarming about what this government is doing. I think transparency, fair elections are a top priority, for sure. We need to be doing that, but of course this government seems to fall short just about every time we turn around on this kind of thing. Consultation: no such thing. Transparency: they have a really hard time with that. In fact, they seem to fight it just about any chance they can.

Madam Speaker, I think that's about it for now. Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Why, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is an honour and a pleasure to rise today to speak on Bill 16, Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. Amendment act. Wait a minute. Didn't you just run a bill through just last term? Aw, jeez. You guys just keep throwing out legislation. Then you have got to keep on going back and fixing it.

Now, fortunately, you have us here to help guide you in these things, but it is also good that you guys admit that your bills are all flawed and that they need to be rejigged. But at the same time, it is disappointing when our preference would be to talk about things like Bill 12, which really will have timely implications with the issues that are going on in British Columbia and with Prime Minister Trudeau. God knows what he's doing right now. Hopefully, he's going to help with that pipeline.

But back to Bill 16 here. This legislation makes a variety of amendments to Bill 32. You know, with Bill 32 you did make sweeping legislative changes to the rules and procedures that govern elections and by-elections here in Alberta as well as establish a new independent office of the Legislature in the form of an Election Commissioner. The last bill, Bill 32, also addressed the issues of third-party advertisers and, to some extent, the political action committees by setting spending limits and time frames as well as guidelines regarding those expenses and what those entities can spend their funds on.

But with Bill 16 here it seems that in particular you've just targeted the agreement in principle which amalgamated our two former parties, the Wildrose and the PCs. It's necessary. If I understand correctly, it wasn't anyone's intent on this side, but if it's to clarify some certain things, then I can respect that.

I mean, certainly if we look at the definition of what "associated registered parties" are under the legislation, the newly appointed Election Commissioner would be able to initiate an investigation on their own or at the request of the Chief Electoral Officer or at the request of an elector or registered party in order to determine if two or more registered parties are associated. Yeah. If that doesn't target us, I don't know what does, really. If these two parties are found to be associated, they must share the $2 million spending limit for a single party.

A variety of factors will be used to determine if parties are associated, but parties do not need to meet the set number of these qualifiers in order to be deemed associated. If registered parties have the same leader, executive director, or person in a position similar to an executive director or chief financial officer, they can be deemed associated. If they share common political programs, policy statements, or advertising branding material, if one party controls another, they could be deemed to be associated. I get all that.

The Election Commissioner will also take into consideration the activities of the registered parties and their registered constituency associations and candidates, including the extent to which the registered parties have been involved in electoral campaigns or made public statements in support of any other registered party . . . or of a candidate of any of the other registered parties . . .

when deciding if parties are associated. That's terrific. You are trying to define what happened with our two legacy parties as we turned them into one, and you want to make sure that there are no shenanigans with any spending that's associated with these former, legacy parties.

I can respect that, but, again, you know, as the good doctor from Calgary- . . .

Some Hon. Members: Mountain View.

Mr. Yao: . . . Mountain View. Thank you. Yes, not the good doctor from Edmonton-Whitemud but Calgary-Mountain View there. He did point out just some of his concerns around dark money, or so-called dark money, and he's right. A lot of that has not been clarified. Certainly, organized labour has that ability to collect money and to spend it in such ways that would support one political
