Legislative Assembly of Alberta

3 p.m.

Thursday, March 8, 2018

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

[The Clerk read the Royal Proclamation dated February 14, 2018, summoning the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to convene on this date]

The Clerk: Please be seated.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! Order! Mr. Speaker.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Speaker, accompanied by the officers of the Assembly, entered the Chamber and took the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon, fellow parliamentarians.

I would ask that we please each bow our heads and let each of us in our own way pray or reflect. We are the blessed daughters and sons of indigenous people, of pioneers, and of immigrants from every part of our world. We are here because of our elders, whose sacrifice, hard work, and wisdom paved a path. We exist and are strong due to our shared love and compassion for each other. We thrive because of our families and this land's bounty. We are blessed because of both our diverse and also shared beliefs passed down from our mothers and our fathers. We are here to fulfill our shared commitment and responsibility to make a better world. Let us never fail in our duty to serve and lead through example for the sake of our children's children and all those who come after us. Let us be defenders of democracy and models of it.

Ladies and gentlemen, I would now invite Mr. R.J. Chambers, accompanied by the Royal Canadian Artillery Band, to lead us in the singing of our national anthem. Please join in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members and Guests:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Presentation to the Assembly of Hon. Jason Kenney Member for Calgary-Lougheed

The Speaker: I would invite the Official Opposition House Leader to proceed to the main doors of the Chamber.

Hon. members, I have received from the Chief Electoral Officer of Alberta the report of the returning officer for the constituency of Calgary-Lougheed containing the results of the by-election conducted on December 14, 2017, which states that a by-election was held in the constituency of Calgary-Lougheed and that the Hon. Mr. Jason Kenney was duly elected as the Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

[Mr. Nixon escorted Mr. Kenney to the Mace]

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to introduce to you and to this Chamber the Hon. Mr. Jason Kenney, the new Member for Calgary-Lougheed, who has taken his oath as a member of this Assembly, has inscribed the roll, and now claims his right to take his seat.

The Speaker: Let the hon. member please take his seat.

Entrance of the Lieutenant Governor

[The Premier, the Clerk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

[The Mace was draped]

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Royal Canadian Artillery Band musical interlude will now be played. The piece to be performed is Concerto in C Major. This concerto for double trumpets is one of the few solo works of the early 1700s to feature brass instruments. It is the only such piece by Vivaldi. What is remarkable is that the work itself is among Vivaldi's best known creations, yet we know very little about it. The material is appropriately flashy and fanfarelike, marked allegro, while propelled by vigorous rhythmic support, much like this Chamber occasionally is.

The RCA Band, Canada's oldest regular army band, was formed in Quebec City in 1879. It was subsequently stationed in Montreal and in Halifax. It is now claimed by our province of Alberta. It has been in service in both world wars and in Korea, and it has travelled across Canada and beyond our borders. Reconstituted in Edmonton in 1997, the band today is under the direction of Captain Christopher Embree, CD, who is in the Speaker's gallery.

Please enjoy listening to the Royal Canadian Artillery Band brass ensemble performing Vivaldi's Concerto in C Major.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Ladies and gentlemen, all rise, please.

Mr. Speaker, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

The Speaker: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

[A fanfare of trumpets sounded]

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Lois Mitchell, CM, AO, LLD, and Honorary Colonel Douglas Mitchell, their party, the Premier, and the Clerk entered the Chamber. Her Honour took her place upon the throne]

Her Honour: Please sit down.

Speech from the Throne

International Women's Day

Her Honour: Fellow Albertans, welcome to this, the first day of the new session of your Legislature. We gather today on the traditional territory of Treaty 6 and acknowledge the Métis people of Alberta, who share a deep connection with this land.

I also want to acknowledge that today is International Women's Day. In the halls above this Chamber are tributes to Alberta's Famous Five, whose historic win ensured that many Canadian women were considered persons. Much later indigenous women won that same recognition. Throughout our history women in Alberta have done great things, women such as the recently retired Beverley McLachlin, a brilliant and proud Albertan, who left her mark on her country and our Supreme Court as Chief Justice. Alberta women won medals for our country in six events at the recent Olympics. Alberta was the first province in Canada to have a cabinet where the majority of ministers are women. On this International Women's Day we recognize these successes and more. Women's rights are human rights, and your government celebrates them.

Saluting Alberta's Heroes

As citizens of Alberta, people who proudly celebrate one another, we also defend one another. When tested, Albertans come through for each other. Again this past year we were tested, by terror in our capital and fire in our south. Again Albertans stepped up to defend one another. We saw that in the brave and selfless efforts of James Hargrave, a volunteer firefighter tragically lost battling a wildfire near Hilda, and in the unbreakable resolve of Constable Mike Chernyk of the Edmonton police, who protected his neighbours when their lives were threatened. On behalf of all Albertans, thank you. And to the family of Mr. Hargrave, our deep condolences for your loss.

Courage, resilience, generosity, and openness are found in every corner of our province. When we're down, we help each other up. And we know that no matter who we are, however we worship, where we come from, or who we love, we are stronger when we look out for one another.

Ensuring Canadian Tidewater Access for Alberta Energy

That applies to Canada, too. Albertans fuel the economic strength of this great country. We are hard-working people who create wealth and jobs across Canada, we are forward-looking people who know climate change requires us to look out for the world we leave for the next generation, and we are practical people, united in the conviction that a new pipeline to the Canadian coast must be built and our land lock must end.

Canada's decades-long inability to diversify our export markets is holding us back, all of us. Billions of dollars for schools, hospitals, and public services have evaporated, thousands of good jobs have been tossed aside, and money that should be in the pockets of working Canadians has been redirected south of our border.

The dispute British Columbia triggered with its attack on Canadian workers will not stand. We won't let it. We have been vigilant in defending our workers, and we will remain vigilant. When the city of Burnaby tried to block the Trans Mountain pipeline in court, your government intervened. When the government of British Columbia tried to overstep its authority and regulate something it has no right to regulate, your government stepped up. We shut down talks about electricity sales to British Columbia, talks that could have meant up to $500 million per year for them; we banned British Columbia wine from Alberta shelves; and we brought together a task force of experts and notable Canadians to provide us with the best advice. Those measures were effective in getting British Columbia to back away from the illegal point in their plan and effective in making sure all Canadians knew our resolve.

We refuse to let anyone turn their backs on the thousands upon thousands of working people in our energy sector. Some people have asked how far we are willing to go. Today we reaffirm that we will do whatever it takes. In the past when workers in our energy industry were attacked and when the resources we own were threatened, Premier Peter Lougheed took bold action. Your government has been clear: every option is on the table. We will not hesitate to invoke similar legislation if it becomes necessary owing to extreme and illegal actions on the part of the B.C. government to stop the pipeline. Make no mistake. Alberta has no desire to take this step, but it is important that B.C. and the country know that we will do whatever it takes to make sure our constitutional rights are respected as partners in Confederation.

Albertans are united. We will remain united. Together we will get this pipeline built.

Choices Made during the Downturn

The last few years have underscored our need to diversify our markets and diversify our economy. When your government was first elected, we inherited an economy in free fall. The boom had ended, and the bust had just begun. But this bust was unlike others that had come before, different not only for its severity but in how we chose to respond, by working to make life better and putting the priorities of regular people first. We did not rest idle or turn our backs on the day-to-day needs of people and families.

Based on the solid advice of David Dodge, the former governor of the Bank of Canada, we invested in bricks and mortar, tarmac and rails and put Albertans to work building our province. A new cancer centre is being built in Calgary. On Edmonton's growing south side we are planning a new hospital. Both will serve patients and families for generations.

After years of overcrowding, hundreds of new schools have either been built or are under construction. More will be announced this year.

In the Industrial Heartland new petrochemical plants are on the way.

Better highways, bridges, and overpasses are being built across Alberta.

The construction of the green line in Calgary is the largest public infrastructure project in the city's history. It will create tens of thousands of jobs, and when complete, it will serve more than 60,000 people every day.

Not only did these efforts help rebuild and re-energize our cities and towns; these efforts supported and created tens of thousands of jobs for Albertans when those jobs were needed most.

With our plan working and the private sector regaining strength, your government will again act on the advice of Mr. Dodge and bring the level of public-sector capital spending down. But make no mistake. Unlike previous years when infrastructure announcements were made in front of empty fields that would remain empty indefinitely, the projects your government has already announced will be built.

Things Are Looking Up

The cumulative impact of making different choices is paying off. Although there is more work to do to make sure each and every Albertan benefits from the recovery, things are looking up. Our province is leading Canada in economic growth. Our economy is diversifying. Almost 90,000 people have found a new full-time job over the last year.

Signs that things are looking up don't stop there. Manufacturing is up. Housing starts, exports, and retail sales are up. So too is drilling activity and earnings. We steered our way through the recession by focusing on the fundamentals: good jobs, day-to-day affordability, and public services people and families can rely on.

Now that the economic recovery is here, we will keep our focus on the priorities of regular people. This time the economic recovery will be built to last. It's to that plan that we now turn our attention.

Diversifying Our Economy

Albertans want off the resource royalty roller coaster. Rather than sitting back and hoping for the best, your government's main priority for this legislative session will be to further diversify our economy and build a more resilient future. Thankfully, we are not starting from a standstill. Action already taken is paying off. More workers are finding more jobs in manufacturing, tourism, and renewable energy. This is encouraging, but more can and must be done.

With the economy looking up, now is the time to help more Albertans find jobs in new areas of opportunity. Toward that end, three bills will be aimed at diversifying our economy. The first bill will focus on diversification within the energy sector. As we work to diversify the markets our energy resources can access via pipeline, we will also do more to add value to our resources right here at home. The second bill will focus on diversification across our economy. The third bill will focus on laying the groundwork for new renewable energy jobs and an electricity system with more stable prices. Let's look at each of those measures in turn.

Diversifying Our Energy Sector

We begin with our traditional strengths in the energy sector. Guided in part by the advice of the Energy Diversification Advisory Committee, your government will act boldly to help the industry innovate and diversify. We believe the public sector can and should help foster the next generation of technology in our energy sector. Through Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act, Alberta will support the commercialization of the partial upgrading of our bitumen. This will increase the number of refineries that can accept our energy resources, increase pipeline capacity by removing the need for diluent for some of our exports, and create good jobs.

In addition, we will embark on the second phase of petrochemical diversification to further broaden our recovery and further diversify our economy. The first phase exceeded expectations. We received nearly double the number of applications we expected. Taken together, those applications represented more than $20 billion in potential investment in Alberta. We want to seize that investment potential and build on this success with more petrochemical plants, plants that will employ more Albertans and put more of our feedstock to use in new and prosperous ways. And when it comes to that feedstock, we will work with industry to incentivize investment in new straddle plants to separate high-value natural gas liquids from Alberta natural gas, creating jobs in value-added industries, diversifying our products and our markets.

These measures are not one-off fixes. They are part of a long-term plan to put our province on a more diversified and resilient economic footing.

Diversifying through Education, Training, and Business Development

While your government works to diversify our traditional strengths, we will also diversify by helping other sectors of our economy grow. The second bill your government will table before this Legislature will be the Growth and Diversification Act. This act will expand existing tax credits, introduce new tax credits, place major resources behind education and training, and help make postsecondary education more affordable. We will extend the capital investment and Alberta investor tax credits to help businesses grow and expand.

We will also support job creation in digital industries with a new digital industries tax credit. This act will also create thousands of new spaces in our postsecondary institutions dedicated to technology, an investment that will enable more Albertans to get the education and training they need to get good jobs in this growing sector. At the same time we will continue to make postsecondary education costs here more competitive with costs elsewhere. The tuition freeze will be continued, saving students up to $1,500 on a four-year degree. To keep education affordable and to protect the gains we have made on behalf of students and families, any future tuition increase will be capped by law. To make education more accessible and affordable in northwest and central Alberta, colleges in Grande Prairie and Red Deer will begin their path to becoming degree-granting institutions.

Diversifying Our Electricity Sector

Your government will create new jobs and protect people from wild electricity price swings. Since Alberta's electricity system was deregulated, families, businesses, and investors have been subject to volatile electricity costs. That volatility was keeping investors on the sidelines. At the same time, the electricity system generated harmful air pollution, with Alberta burning more coal than every other province combined. We had a choice. We could change nothing and leave families exposed to price spikes, we could change nothing and leave our health and environment exposed to pollution, or we could act to make sure consumers have more predictable bills, investors have more certainty, and our electricity mix is diversified into wind, solar, and natural gas.

We chose to act. Last year Alberta's renewable energy auction secured new renewable energy at the lowest cost in Canadian history. This year we will see more low-cost renewables and more work to make sure communities across Alberta, including indigenous communities, see the economic benefits.

We will also lay the groundwork for a more stable electricity system by introducing legislation to create a capacity market. Our province needs billions of dollars in new investment to keep our electricity reliable and efficient. A capacity market will enable us to get the new, low-cost electricity supply Alberta will need to power our long-term economic prosperity. The old model relied on squeezing consumers to attract investors. The new model will attract investors through stability and reliability. While we take the time to implement a new, more stable system, our electricity price cap will continue to protect consumers from the sudden price spikes they've endured since deregulation.

As Canada moves toward cleaner ways to generate electricity, we will support the communities that have powered our province for generations. We have made sure some coal plants are able to convert to natural gas. We are helping coal workers with a $40 million fund to support training, retirement security, and economic development. Taken together, these efforts will help further smooth out the bumps between boom and bust, diversifying our economy into green energy and green energy jobs, and help make sure this economic recovery works for working people.

Path Back to Balance

Another legacy of our province's boom-and-bust history is wild government spending swings, swings that created uncertainty for people. When your government was first elected, we outlined a plan that invested in people when times were bad but which would also return to a path to balance when times were better. Key to that plan is smoothing out those spending swings and making sure our schools, hospitals, and public service providers can count on stable, predictable funding.

Last week we released our third-quarter update. Coupled with an improving economy, the deficit is lower than projected, in keeping with the plan to which we have been working.

In the coming weeks we will release our budget. It will show that our economy continues to grow and diversify. It will also show that as we move toward a balanced budget, our dependence on nonrenewable resource revenue will be lower than what it has been historically.

The path to balance will also require working in partnership with the public sector to reduce costs. The people who work across our public sector are integral to the services Albertans rely on. We have already reached practical agreements, with no raises and better job stability, with many labour partners, including teachers and nurses, and a tentative agreement has been reached with our allied health professionals such as paramedics, lab technologists, and X-ray technologists.

We have also extended the pay freeze that covers all government managers for two more years while also expanding its reach. At the same time, your government is committed to making sure taxes on people and businesses remain the lowest in Canada.

Making Government Work for People

As we stay on track to balance the budget, we will continue to make sure your government puts regular people first. That means getting rid of long-standing executive perks and insider excess, all of which have been paid for by the many but enjoyed by the few. We have significantly reduced hospitality and travel costs and eliminated ridiculous perks like taxpayer-funded golf club memberships for well-paid executives of public bodies. We will continue to reduce salaries for executives and board members.

Building on our work to reduce exorbitant salaries in government agencies, boards, and commissions, work that has seen salaries cut significantly, with some executives seeing their salaries cut to the tune of hundreds of thousands of dollars a year, we will now focus on our postsecondary institutions. We owe it to our students to ensure that funding for education goes where it belongs, the classroom.

We will also continue our work to take big money out of politics. The days of union and corporate donations are done. Strict spending and contribution limits are now in force, and new accountability measures for third-party advertising have been put into law.

To further assure Albertans that their government is working for them, not for insiders, not for campaign donors, and not for special interests, this session we will also act on the advice of an all-party committee and reform Alberta's lobbyist laws.

Protecting Albertans from Crime

Across Alberta, from our rural communities to our urban centres, every Albertan deserves to feel safe. Today in Alberta, especially in rural areas, people are concerned for the safety of their homes, their property, and the well-being of those they love. That must change.

Your government invests more than half a billion dollars annually into police services across the province. Our police officers serve and protect Albertans with a bravery and dedication that is unmatched.

Yet more can be done to protect people and property and help Albertans feel safe. Together with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police we have developed new initiatives to combat rural crime. The focus will be to act on the advice of our police and law enforcement experts, including specific measures to better address the challenges of policing in rural communities and new measures to make sure people who refuse to obey the law are held to account.

This includes investing in new bait-and-tracking technology, including technology related to farm equipment, new measures to help police spend less time on paperwork and more time on the street, and putting boots on the ground where they're needed most to protect families.

Working with Indigenous People

When your government was first elected, we made a government-wide commitment to make sure that the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples was respected in all policy deliberations. Your government is working to keep that promise, and it is paying dividends. Initiatives such as affordable housing for indigenous people living off-reserve, the climate leadership plan, the renewable energy program, the curriculum review, work to better protect children in care, and more have all been strengthened because they engaged indigenous people and their interests in a constructive and practical dialogue.

We recently finished consultations with the people who were robbed of their families, communities, and language during the '60s scoop. The purpose of those consultations was to bring their suffering to light and help to reconcile this destructive legacy with a formal apology. Work will continue on this important matter.

We have invested to make sure First Nations communities in Alberta will have the infrastructure necessary to bring safe, clean, reliable drinking water to people. This year that work continues.

The Opioid Crisis

The opioid overdose crisis affects the lives of a growing number of Alberta families. Every affected person has a right to dignity, respect, and medical care. In this session your government will introduce legislation to ensure safety and quality care in private treatment facilities. We will provide more public treatment options, more harm reduction services, and more public education.

Driven by the best advice, scientific research, and evidence on how more lives can be saved, we will expand access to supervised consumption services. This work will continue to be guided by a diverse and committed emergency response commission that includes public health leaders, law enforcement, community workers, and Albertans who have experienced this crisis first-hand.

Addressing Inequality

When government fails to work for people, inequality rises. Since coming to office, your government has ensured that Alberta makes progress in building a fairer province. Too often in recoveries of the past the poor and most vulnerable have been left behind. This time we will make sure the economic recovery works for everyone.

That is why we have protected funding for our schools, hospitals, and the services on which Albertans rely, and it is why we will continue to protect and improve public services. It is why hundreds of thousands of families have received financial support through the Alberta child benefit and the enhanced Alberta family employment tax credit. It is why we have built more affordable housing for people and introduced better supports for seniors. It is why we have made changes to help protect LGBTQ2S youth, including new guidelines within our housing and homelessness system that are the first of their kind in Canada. It is why this year we will have a minimum wage of $15 per hour.

We introduced a new school nutrition program to help kids get a good, healthy meal to start the day. This year that program will expand. We pioneered a new, affordable, high-quality child care program so the paycheques of new parents go further. This year that program will also expand. Your government will take action in response to the child intervention panel so we can do more to help vulnerable children and to reduce the number of indigenous children in government care.

More also needs to be done to make sure every Albertan can live to their fullest potential. Accordingly, your government will support our most vulnerable neighbours by improving income support programs. We are also conducting a review of the persons with developmental disabilities program to determine how best to support persons living with disabilities.

Finally, owing to the bravery and resolve of women speaking out about sexual violence, we are facing up to a reality that unfolds daily in the lives of countless women. We hear them, and we stand with them. That's why we have invested to expand counselling and crisis services so more survivors who take the brave step to come forward have the supports they need.

Looking to the Future with Optimism

With the economic recovery upon us and as working Albertans get back on their feet, now is the time for unity. Our task together is to make sure this recovery works for working people. This recovery must be more diverse and long lasting.

It is time to look to the future with confidence, optimism, and the determination to build a more resilient economy, one that puts the economic security of people first. It is time to build on our traditional strengths and help Albertans seize a broad range of opportunity. It is time to overcome our land lock. A new Canadian pipeline to the Canadian coast must be built. Whatever differences members of this Assembly may have, we must move forward united.

Differences over strategy and tactics are healthy, democratic, and always encouraged. At the same time, we must resolve to make sure those differences remain rooted in our love for this great province. We are Albertans, all of us. We all want our province to succeed and our citizens to prosper. Let no one in this Chamber, this province, or this country cheer for Alberta to fail. We must stand united in defence of our collective security and well-being. Together we will get a pipeline built to the coast. Together we will diversify our export markets. Together we will unleash the potential of this province and its people.

To those who would say that Alberta's best days are behind us, we have proven them wrong, and we will continue to prove them wrong. Alberta's best days will always be ahead when we are home to diverse, talented, hard-working people.

This recovery is proving things can be done differently and that good things happen when governments proudly stand on the side of working Albertans. Our task is to make sure this recovery keeps working for working people, which is exactly what your government is committed to do.

Thank you, my friends and fellow Albertans.

God bless Alberta.

God bless Canada.

And God save the Queen.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: Ladies and gentlemen, I would now invite Mr. R.J. Chambers, accompanied by the Royal Canadian Artillery Band, to lead us in the singing of God Save the Queen. Please remain standing at the conclusion.

Hon. Members and Guests:

God save our gracious Queen,

Long live our noble Queen,

God save The Queen!

Send her victorious,
Happy and glorious,
Long to reign over us;
God save The Queen!

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Their Honours, their party, and the Premier left the Chamber as a fanfare of trumpets sounded]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

[The Mace was uncovered]

[The Premier returned to the Chamber]

The Speaker: Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, I am honoured and privileged to stand before you as Speaker of this Legislative Assembly to share a few words about a very significant anniversary. I'm referring to the 100th anniversary of the first two women to take their seats as legislators in this Legislative Assembly of Alberta. As well, it should be noted that these women were the first to be elected not only to our Assembly but to an Assembly anywhere in the British Empire, now the Commonwealth of Nations. On this day, International Women's Day, it is also with great pride that I say that a century after electing the first women to this Assembly, this 29th Legislature now hosts the largest number of women legislators in our history. Ought we not ask ourselves: why did it take so long?

On February 7, 1918, Louise McKinney and Roberta MacAdams were sworn in as Members of the Legislative Assembly in the fourth Legislature. Women in Alberta, at least some women, had gained the right to vote and hold office two years earlier, in April 1916, with the passage of the Equal Suffrage Statutory Law Amendment Act. In fact, it was only in the 1950s that barriers to the election of women and men on racial and religious grounds were eliminated. It was only in 1960 that all status indigenous people were finally granted the unconditional right to vote. The full enfranchisement of Albertans was only possible due to the sacrifice of many, many nameless Canadians who fought to move the dial slowly but surely forward towards equality.

In any event, Louise McKinney and Roberta MacAdams were elected in the provincial general election of 1917. McKinney was elected as the member for Claresholm, and MacAdams was elected for the province at large as a soldiers' overseas representative because she was serving in the First World War at the time of the election.

Louise McKinney and Roberta MacAdams were indeed remarkable individuals. McKinney was a dedicated social reformer who was active in the temperance and women's suffrage movements. She was also, later on, a member of the Famous Five, the group that advocated for women to be recognized as persons under the Canadian Constitution. In 1929 the United Kingdom's Judicial Committee of the Privy Council granted the status to Canadian women, thereby enabling women to be appointed to the Senate.

As an aside, as the members know, there is a wonderful exhibit dedicated to the Famous Five on the fifth floor of this legislative building. I encourage our guests here today to take time to visit that display.

Roberta MacAdams trained as a dietitian and joined the Canadian Army military corps in 1916, serving as a lieutenant during the First World War. Following her election in 1917, MacAdams became the first woman in the British Empire to introduce a bill, an Act to Incorporate the Great War Next-of-Kin Association. The bill was passed into law, giving legal recognition to this veterans' organization and reflecting MacAdams's dedication to veterans and their dependants.

As we embark upon the new session, as legislators, parliamentarians let us together remember the enduring contributions of Louise McKinney and Roberta MacAdams and so many others who have come before us in this Assembly and in this great province.

Today let us celebrate the endowment made by women to our society and acknowledge the struggles that they still face at home and around the world, and let us commit to promoting equality and freedom and respect, no matter what Albertans' race, colour, creed, or gender identity may be.

Thank you.

Tablings

The Speaker: I have the honour, hon. members, to table a copy of the speech graciously given by Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Bill 1

Energy Diversification Act

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and good afternoon, hon. members. I'm very pleased this afternoon to introduce Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act.

Diversifying our energy sector has been a dream of Albertans for decades, but it is our government that is taking action to make it happen. We are acting, Mr. Speaker, in the proud tradition of Peter Lougheed, who believed that government can and government should help to foster the next generation of technology in our energy sector.

If passed, this bill would lead to the creation of programs to support partial upgrading of our bitumen as well as a program to boost the collection of raw resources needed in petrochemical manufacturing such as ethane. It will also launch a second round of a successful petrochemical diversification program. This legislation is part of a long-term plan, Mr. Speaker, for a more diversified and resilient energy sector, one that is built to last.

With that, I am truly proud and honoured to move the first reading of Bill 1. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a first time]

Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the speech of Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor to this Assembly be taken into consideration the week of March 12, 2018.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I move that the Assembly stand adjourned until Monday, March 12, at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:01 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 4th Session (2018)

Activity to Thursday, March 8, 2018

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sittings.

1:30 p.m.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Hon. members, welcome back.

If you could just bow your heads in prayer and contemplation. On this Commonwealth Day I would ask that we, each in our own way, reflect on the deep ties that link the Commonwealth together. In our deliberations today let us strive towards a common future together with our partners across Canada and the Commonwealth. Let us not forget that it is only through exchanging ideas and collaborative work that we can build an inclusive and more peaceful future. As practitioners of democracy let us serve as models for the betterment of the world's human condition.

Hon. members, as is our custom, we pay tribute to members and former members of this Assembly who have passed away since we last met.

Mr. Garth Alphonse Turcott
July 30, 1930, to January 11, 2018

The Speaker: Mr. Garth Alphonse Turcott was elected as the first-ever New Democrat member in Alberta and represented Pincher Creek-Crowsnest following a by-election held on October 6, 1966. He served until May 22, 1967. Mr. Turcott received his bachelor of arts and his bachelor of laws from the University of Saskatchewan. He served the community of Pincher Creek faithfully through his law practice for over 30 years. Mr. Turcott passed away on January 11, 2018, at the age of 87, following 65 years of marriage to the love of his life, Joan Turcott, and will be dearly missed by his granddaughter and nillywog, who is sitting in my gallery today and with whom he shared many cherished summer camping trips.

In a moment of silent reflection I would ask you to remember Mr. Turcott as you may have known him.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. R.J. Chambers, and I would invite all to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you. Please be seated.

Statements by the Speaker

Commonwealth Day Message from the Queen

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we begin, I would like to take a moment to recognize that today is Commonwealth Day. I have a message from Her Majesty the Queen I would like to read. Copies of this message have been placed on your desks for your reference.

We all have reason to give thanks for the numerous ways in which our lives are enriched when we learn from others. Through exchanging ideas, and seeing life from other perspectives, we grow in understanding and work more collaboratively towards a common future. There is a very special value in the insights we gain through the Commonwealth connection; shared inheritances help us overcome difference so that diversity is a cause for celebration rather than division.

We shall see this in action at the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting which takes place in the United Kingdom next month, bringing together young people, business and civil society from across the Commonwealth.

These gatherings are themselves fine examples of how consensus and commitment can help to create a future that is fairer, more secure, more prosperous and [more] sustainable. Having enjoyed the warm hospitality of so many Commonwealth countries over the years, I look forward to the pleasure of welcoming the leaders of our family of 53 nations to my homes in London and Windsor.

Sport also contributes to building peace and development. The excitement and positive potential of friendly rivalry will be on display next month as we enjoy the Commonwealth Games on the Gold Coast, Australia. Contributing to the success of the Games, alongside athletes and officials, will be thousands of volunteers.

Voluntary effort, by people working as individuals, in groups or through larger associations, is so often what shapes the Commonwealth and all our communities. By pledging to serve the common good in new ways, we can ensure that the Commonwealth continues to grow in scope and stature, to have an even greater impact on people's lives, today, and for future generations.

Members' 10th Anniversary of Election

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we introduce our visitors and guests this afternoon, March 3, 2018, marked the 10th anniversary of the election of two members of this Assembly. Firstly, I would ask the hon. Premier if she would join me at the dais. The hon. Premier has represented Edmonton-Strathcona for some time and also has a new job in this place.

I need the steps to be a little taller. It's the only time that that happens to me.

The second member also has served 10 years in this establishment. I would ask that the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti please come forward. I must tell you – and I think there would almost be unanimous consent – that this is a very gentle man whom I've had the privilege of meeting.

I would like to thank both of you and your respective families for the sacrifices they, too, have made to allow you to serve as members of this Assembly. In this 29th Legislature, having spent a decade as an MLA makes you elders of this hallowed hall. I know you both will continue to pass on the knowledge and experience you have gained to all of your colleagues. Congratulations.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, with our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of the families who shared the burdens of public office and public service. Today I would like to welcome members of the Turcott family, who are present in the Speaker's gallery. Please rise as I call your name and remain standing until all have been introduced: Gabrielle Kirk, Cameron Kirk, and Michael Lavorato. Thank you for being here today, and thank you for your services.

The Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you my friend Mr. Stephen Mandel, the newly elected leader of the Alberta Party. Mr. Mandel has had a long and successful career in both business and politics, founding the Mandel Group and serving as mayor of Edmonton for nine years. He has dedicated himself to addressing homelessness, expanding seniors' housing, and engaging with multicultural communities. Stephen is also a dedicated father, husband, and grandfather to his grandson, which I admire the most. I and many Albertans look forward to Stephen's leadership in building up the Alberta Party to be the first choice for pragmatic, responsible government. I'd ask that Mr. Mandel, who is sitting in your gallery, sir, stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my distinct pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature a class from Earl Buxton school, which is in Edmonton-Whitemud. This is Earl Buxton elementary. The students are accompanied by their teacher, Ms Laura Wenger, and a chaperone, Mrs. Jennifer Brayer. I'd ask them to rise and receive the usual warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the climate change office.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members assembled a number of dedicated public servants in Environment and Parks. I'll ask them to rise as I call out their names: Mr. Victor Daramola, Ms Zoya Sekhon, Mr. Tychon Carter, Mr. Phillip Phuong, Miss Leah Arnason, Ms Kristine Cariaga, Chantel Danylyshen, Graham Brittain, Cecile Novel, Wenhao Guo, and Ben Branscombe. I want to thank them for their service to this province.

The Speaker: Thank you. Welcome.

The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A great honour for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to the House two committed animal activists, wildlife activists: a biologist, Lisa Dahlseide, and an activist, Laurel Ambrose, from Calgary. Please stand. Thank you. I'm proud to say that Laurel Ambrose is a constituent of mine in the riding of Calgary-Mountain View, a member of Russell's Private Advocacy Group, known as R-PAG, a group dedicated to driving wildlife rehabilitation advocacy initiatives in Alberta. Lisa comes to us from the riding of Calgary-Bow. She's a wildlife biologist advocating for rehab of all wildlife and for science to better reflect wildlife management and policy. These passionate advocates have helped rally thousands of people to sign petitions urging this government to lift restrictions on the rehab of bears and other large wildlife. People like Lisa and Laurel are the environmental conscience of Alberta. They are seated in the public gallery. I ask all members to give them the usual welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce some very special guests who are in the members' gallery. I ask that they rise as I introduce them. They are Jayden Strauss's family as well as Kristopher Phillips and his family – please rise – and the Alberta Children's Wish Foundation of Canada team, based here in Edmonton. They're here today to celebrate children's wish month. Jayden's wish was the 25,000th wish granted by this organization. Kristopher will be fulfilling his wish in the near future. We know that granted wishes are beneficial to the psychological well-being of children as well as their families. I'm incredibly honoured to acknowledge the Children's Wish Foundation for their dedication to granting wishes in support of children who are sick and their families. I ask that all of our members please extend the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Cortes-Vargas: It's an honour to introduce to you and through you, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the MLAs from Strathcona county the organization committee of the Sherwood Park & District Chamber of Commerce, the first annual International Women's Day organization committee. On March 8 they set an agenda to press for progress to build workshops to support equality in the workplace, and it's my pleasure today to thank them for their dedication and vision. From the chamber of commerce we have with us – I'd ask them all to rise at once – board president Penny Jennings, executive director Todd Banks, chair of the organization committee Elan Lynes, and all of the rest of the staff that put this day together. Thank you very much. Please extend the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my absolute pleasure to rise and introduce a good friend of mine. You know, there are people who make politics better and then there are people who do the opposite of that, and this particular individual makes politics incredible. He is the most principled guy that I have ever had the opportunity of working with. He has a knack for knowing what everyday voters care about and are passionate about. He was an incredible member of our team over a very long period of time, and he's leaving the capital region for the land of opportunity. I invite him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly, Mr. Evan Menzies.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. The first one. It's my honour to rise and introduce to you and the Assembly a team of individuals helping to ensure the long-lasting success of Alberta's energy industry. The Energy Diversification Advisory Committee put in hundreds of hours in meetings and policy work, all to determine how best to invest in the value-added downstream sector here in Alberta. The vision of their final report was reflected in Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act, which will go a long way to achieving a stronger and more diversified energy sector. I know that not all of them could be here to join us today, but I would introduce them and ask them to rise as I say their names: our co-chairs Jeanette Patell and Gil McGowan as well as fellow members Carol Moen, Marie Robidoux, Rocky Sinclair, and Warren Fraleigh. I thank them for all the hard work they did on behalf of Albertans and ask the members to join me in the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, I seek the guidance of the House. We have a number of introductions to be made. Is the House prepared to consider a motion?

The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Then, I will move to ask unanimous consent to continue till the conclusion of introductions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

1:50

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I may have the same situation of not all guests being here, but I would like to now present to you and through you some guests joining us here today for the debate on the future of our province. Albertans from all walks of life know that building a pipeline to tidewater is crucial to Alberta getting a better, fairer price for our resources. Workers, communities, indigenous leaders, and industry all understand this to be true. It's my honour to welcome today to hear this debate, Mark Scholz, president of the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors; Ben Brunnen, vice-president of oil sands with CAPP, Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers; Elizabeth Aquin, Petroleum Services Association of Canada; Bill Clapperton, VP stakeholder and environmental affairs, Canadian Natural Resources; Julie Woo, public affairs lead, Canadian Natural Resources; Keri Scobie, public affairs manager for Imperial's Edmonton refinery; and lastly, Scott Wenger, manager of government relations at Suncor. I ask those who are here to please rise and accept the warm reception of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly two outstanding Albertans. Margaret and Ron Monroe are residents of the humble constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar. When they were 17, they met as students at Red Deer College, soon to be a university. They fell in love and have been together ever since. The Monroes are lifelong New Democrats who volunteer for me and are dedicated servants of their community. They are also two of the kindest, most generous people that I have the privilege of knowing, and I wish to thank them for all of their support. My guests are seated in the gallery behind me. I ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly members of the Building Trades of Alberta. The BTA represents 16 unions and more than 70,000 Alberta members who build and maintain our province's roads, bridges, and critical energy infrastructure. As these Alberta men and women have built our province, they are here today to make sure we keep building into the future and hopefully listen to the debate on Government Motion 2. Our partners in the building trades know that we will get this pipeline built together. I'd now like to ask those members to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the Assembly Chief Billy Morin of the Enoch Cree Nation, who will be joining us to hear about the motion being presented this afternoon. Chief Billy is part of the Enoch Cree Nation, which is a signatory to Treaty 6 and which is bordered, of course, on its eastern side by the city of Edmonton. Chief Billy is supportive of Alberta's efforts to access new markets for its landlocked oil and gas resources and is looking forward to observing the debate on the Trans Mountain pipeline, that we are expected to have later today. I'd like to ask the Assembly to provide him the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's great to be back. I'd like to introduce to and through you to all the members of the Assembly Mr. Rob Johnson. Rob, if you could please rise. Rob Johnson is a friend, a really good friend of mine, and a farmer in the heart of my riding, which I would say is the heart of Alberta. Three years ago, however, I narrowly won a nomination contest over him by only eight votes. Would you please join me in welcoming and giving him the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seated in your gallery today are eight board members of the Royal Commonwealth Society of Edmonton. The Edmonton branch was founded in 2005, during the visit of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II to Alberta. The Royal Commonwealth Society has a long history dating to 1868, and this year marks the 150th anniversary. The theme for this year is Towards a Common Future, which explores how the Commonwealth can address global challenges and work to create a better future for all citizens through subthemes of sustainability, safety, prosperity, and fairness. Our guests are here to recognize Commonwealth Day, which is celebrated annually on the second Monday in March. I would ask that they each rise as I call their names. We have Joe Zasada, who is the chair, commonwealth society of Canada; Rick Stewart, treasurer; and directors Bernie Baker and Kath Baker. I'd ask the Assembly to please give them the warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Statement by the Speaker

Rotation of Questions and Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'd like to make some remarks on the rotation of oral questions and Members' Statements before the Assembly proceeds to Oral Question Period. As noted in the procedural memorandum dated February 22, 2018, and sent to all members, I encouraged House leaders to come up with an agreement on these rotations. At 12:09 p.m. on March 8 my office received a House leaders' agreement outlining new Oral Question Period and Members' Statements rotations to reflect the caucus changes since the fall sitting. At the appropriate time I will be tabling the House leaders' agreement.

I have reviewed and accepted the agreement. Accordingly, on March 9 my office sent to all members a chart showing the Oral Question Period rotation and a projected sitting days calendar to reflect the allotment of members' statements among other things. Concerning the details of the Oral Question Period rotation, the third party will continue to receive question 4. It is also allocated question 11 on days 3 and 7 in addition to days 1 and 5, for a total of 12 questions over the eight-day rotation.

There have been changes at question 6. The Member for Strathmore-Brooks is now allocated question 6 on days 4 and 8, and the Official Opposition receives question 6 on days 3 and 7.

There is a change at question 10 as well. The government caucus is allocated question 10 on each day except for day 5, when the Official Opposition is entitled to ask that question.

Lastly, in terms of changes to the rotation, the Official Opposition is allocated question 12 on each day.

In terms of the total number of questions over the eight-day rotation, the number of questions remains the same for each of the caucuses and the independent member, except for the third-party opposition, which, as mentioned, receives two more questions.

A few changes have been made to the allocation of members' statements. The third opposition is now allocated a member's statement each Thursday.

Furthermore, each of the single-member caucuses and the Member for Strathmore-Brooks retains one statement over the three-week rotation. That statement is allocated on a Thursday. The change is that the Liberal caucus receives its statement on week 1, the Progressive Conservative on week 2, and the Member for Strathmore-Brooks on week 3.

I will implement these rotations starting today, the first day of the Fourth Session of the 29th Legislature. Today is day 1 of the Oral Question Period rotation.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As this is my first opportunity to speak in this Chamber, let me begin by thanking my constituents in Calgary-Lougheed for their confidence, the members of my party for the opportunity to serve as Leader of the Opposition, and offering a word of respect to the hon. the Premier and members of her government for their public service. I hope that while we will disagree, we can do it without being disagreeable.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Expansion Opposition Carbon Levy

Mr. Kenney: Now, having said that, it's my job to hold the government to account. I always recall that my grandma used to say that imitation is the sincerest form of flattery. So we were very flattered with the throne speech, seeing the government do a complete one-eighty in accepting the strategy we have long advocated: to fight for our pipelines by being prepared to turn off the taps. The question, Mr. Speaker, is: why did it take so long?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, I'm also very pleased to welcome the member opposite to the House.

You know, at the end of the day, we're not going to take lessons, although from the leader of the UCP, on our energy future. We had Conservatives in Ottawa, we had Conservatives in Edmonton, and we had conservatives in Victoria for nine years, and they couldn't get a pipeline built, Mr. Speaker. No pipeline, no diversification.

They had their chance, and they blew it. That won't happen again. We will get that pipeline built.

Mr. Kenney: They are taking lessons, and we appreciate that, Mr. Speaker. We hope they'll take more of our good ideas. I'm also glad that the NDP has accepted our call for a debate and, hopefully, a unanimous motion where we could all speak to the importance of our resources and against the B.C. New Democrats' efforts to violate the Constitution and the rule of law. I have a very simple question for the government. Will the government accept one of our constructive amendments calling on the federal government to use its clear power to override Victoria's delay tactics by invoking section 92 of the Constitution Act and declaring the Trans Mountain pipeline as being . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I certainly do hope that the members opposite support our motion because I think it's very important for all Albertans to come together and actually get this pipeline built. With respect to the member opposite's motion the fact of the matter is that the federal government already has that authority because the pipeline crosses boundaries. In fact, accepting that motion would somehow suggest that they don't already have that authority. We know they have that authority. They approved the pipeline, and we will get the pipeline built.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's a constitutional power that we believe the federal government could invoke and stop the New Democrats in Victoria from blocking our resources.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have here an important piece of literature. It's the NDP platform for the last election, and try as I might, I cannot find a single reference to the carbon tax. Right here, page 24: lots of other tax increases but not one reference to the job-killing carbon tax. Months after this platform was presented, the NDP imposed the largest tax hike in Alberta history. My question for the Premier is simple. Why did the NDP mislead our . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, we're going to work on those times together. I'm sure we'll catch it up.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I will say is that when it comes to our climate leadership plan, the member opposite is actually batting zero. He said that our economy would tank, and Alberta's economy is leading growth in the country. He said that jobs would flee – would flee – Alberta, but last year alone: 90,000 jobs created in Alberta. He said that we won't get the pipeline built, and my advice to him: welcome back to Alberta; never bet against Alberta. [some applause]

The Speaker: Hon. members. Hon. members.

Hon. member, first of all, welcome to the House. I would respectfully ask that you not rise until I ask you to do so. Please proceed.

Mr. Kenney: I was just receiving a standing ovation, Mr. Speaker.

Energy Policies and Social Licence

Mr. Kenney: You know, it shows how out of touch the NDP is. They're talking about happy times when 175,000 Albertans are unemployed, and their high-tax strategy led to one of the biggest and longest recessions in our history.

I want to ask the Premier about her so-called theory of social licence. She told Albertans that if we just pay more for everything, somehow, magically, pipeline opponents will become pipeline supporters and pipelines would get built. But Justin Trudeau vetoed Northern Gateway, killed Energy East; Barack Obama vetoed Keystone XL; and now the B.C. New Democrats are doing everything they can to kill Trans Mountain, so whatever happens . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, speaking of written records, it's quite interesting. The member opposite was in Ottawa for nine years, and the phrase "Trans Mountain pipeline" left his lips once, about three days before he finally left Ottawa. What we actually need is a government that is committed to getting the pipeline built, committed to innovating our energy sector so that we are world leaders and continue to be world leaders. That is exactly the work that this government is doing, and we will in fact succeed.

Mr. Kenney: With 10,000 full-time jobs lost last month, Mr. Speaker, it shows how out of touch they are.

Now, just eight weeks ago the NDP raised their job-killing carbon tax by 50 per cent, and now they're promising to raise it by another 67 per cent. Why? Because Justin Trudeau asked them to, and they're keeping the door open to even higher raises beyond that. Since the carbon tax hasn't done anything to get us a pipeline, Mr. Speaker, my question is: will the Premier stand and commit today that she will not raise the carbon tax by a further 67 per cent just to satisfy her ally Justin Trudeau?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I would say to the member opposite is that climate denial is, quite frankly, a dead end for Alberta. The UCP wants to walk down that road again. We say no. We say that Alberta is a world energy leader. We say that we need to have those new jobs, like those 90,000 new jobs last year. We need new industries, we need innovation, we need diversification, we need renewable energy, and we need a pipeline to tidewater, all those things that this government is going to get done.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, the NDP said that their carbon tax would buy us something called a social licence. Somehow it was supposed to turn pipeline opponents into pipeline supporters. That didn't work with Justin Trudeau killing Northern Gateway and Energy East or the B.C. New Democrats trying to kill Trans Mountain or Barack Obama vetoing Keystone XL. Can the Premier name a single government, municipality, environment organization, or political party that has moved from no to yes on pipelines and energy as a result of her multibillion-dollar carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In November 2016 the federal government of this country approved the Kinder Morgan pipeline, and when they did it, they did it with specific reference to the climate leadership plan that Alberta brought into place, which is leading the country in helping our country to do its part on climate change while we take our place as the world-leading energy producer.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, that's the same federal government, her close allies, that killed Northern Gateway, that killed Energy East, about which this government did nothing to protest.

Energy Policies

Mr. Kenney: I want to ask the Premier: when Justin Trudeau forced the National Energy Board to get into the business of regulating up- and downstream emissions, which lead to the death of the $16 billion Energy East pipeline, why did this government do nothing to defend Alberta's jurisdiction? The regulation of oil and gas production is a jurisdiction won by Peter Lougheed in the Constitution. Why isn't this government defending that?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think the member opposite knows that the outcome with respect to Energy East had nothing to do with the NEB decision. More importantly, the member opposite should also know that our government spoke up against having downstream emissions considered with respect to NEB decisions, so we did actually do that. But at the same time we are going to also do our part to make sure that we take our place as an energy leader producing sustainable energy that has a strong market across the world, and we will . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Well, I regret to see, Mr. Speaker, how, apparently, our Premier didn't even follow the decision by TransCanada, where the president explicitly said that it was the uncertainty created by the NEB by getting into the business of carbon emissions which resulted in them pulling the project and killing the dream of energy independence for Canada.

Mr. Speaker, recently I visited the Sundre seniors' centre, where they're paying 8 per cent of their small, $18,000 annual budget on the NDP carbon tax. They may even have to close the place because of it. What message does the Premier have for the Sundre seniors who are thinking of closing their centre just to pay . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What we can say and have said is that we will be working with community members in Sundre and across the province, quite frankly, to come up with different ways by which we can support nonprofit agencies in increasing their efficiency and reducing their costs. That work, paired with the other work that we have already done to support seniors, to support nonprofits, to support communities, will ensure that those organizations get to move forward and, in fact, are strengthened.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, this government has made a total shambles of Alberta's power policy. Their carbon tax made it uneconomical to produce power in this province, and then a ham-fisted legal strategy by the government forced power companies to court. This government lost, now settling and forcing taxpayers to eat hundreds of millions of dollars of costs as a result of their power policy fiasco. My question for the hon. Premier is: will someone in her government take responsibility for costing taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars by mismanaging power policy?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government took legal action to protect Albertans from previous governments' misactions. The excess consumer supply that was created by that likely benefited Albertans, didn't hurt them. At the same time, we're very pleased to see that the matter is resolved, and now we look forward to working with all of our industry producers to actually fix what was a broken electricity system and provide cleaner electricity, more stable electricity, more reliable electricity, and greater renewable investment.

Nonprofit Organizations

Mr. Fraser: One of the government's favourite lines is that they are making life better for Albertans. Well, that's also the goal of the nonprofit sector although they do it with fewer resources and less fanfare. That's why it's very troubling to hear that many of the government's actions are having a direct and negative effect on nonprofits across the province. The carbon tax, for example, is hurting their bottom lines and taking away money from those that need it the most. With the carbon tax slated to keep increasing, they're worried about their future and rightly so. To the Premier: will you commit to a carbon tax exemption for nonprofits so that the dollars are going towards the people they're intended to help and not government coffers?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, nonprofits truly are the beating heart of Alberta communities, and we will do everything we can to continue the work that we've been doing to support them. When it comes to energy efficiency and the carbon levy, we've created the nonprofit energy efficiency transition program. We have already provided support to more than 100 nonprofits across the province. That's in addition to other things that we have done like, for instance, increasing FCSS funding for the first time in over a decade, by about 25 per cent. These are the kinds of things you do to make life . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Fraser: Well, Mr. Speaker, the carbon tax is not the only measure this government has taken that's impacting our nonprofits. The increase in minimum wage has been made with good intentions, but the government isn't the one that has to deal with those consequences. The increase in labour costs means fewer staff, shorter hours, or it might mean a nonprofit has to close its doors completely. The effects of this increase could be substantial for the nonprofit sector, and it would be wise of this government to understand what the effects of another hike would look like. To the Premier: will the government commit to a review of the impact of the changes to the minimum wage on the nonprofit sector before introducing yet another increase?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What we know is that in this province, during the recession as well as during the previous booms and now during a time when things are recovering, we absolutely cannot have people go to work in the morning, work for eight hours, and then go home and have to stop on the way at the food bank in order to feed their families. It doesn't matter if they work in the retail sector or in the nonprofit sector or in corporate offices. It is unacceptable. Our government took action to stop that, and we are proud of that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Oh, I'm sorry. Second supplemental. My apologies.

Mr. Fraser: It is a long way from here to there, isn't it, Mr. Speaker?

I understand there might be some on the government side of the House that think services in the charitable organizations, that they provide, should come from the government programs instead. Well, Mr. Speaker, I disagree with that notion. While we all agree that these organizations could use some more resources, nonprofits are about Albertans making life better for Albertans, not politicians. The relationship between governments and nonprofits should be a partnership, and that's not how nonprofits feel they're being treated right now. To the Premier: when will this government start treating nonprofits as an equal partner in making life better for Albertans?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, our government has done quite a wide range of work with nonprofit sectors as they provide the important services that they do, and in fact we do absolutely respect the work that they do. As I mentioned previously, one of the first things our government did when we just got elected was, after many, many, many years of asking the previous government, of which the member opposite was a part, to increase FCSS funding after not touching it for years. We did increase it. The Finance minister tells me that it was 33 per cent, not 25 per cent. So we will continue to work with nonprofits because we understand how important they are for making life better for Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Now the hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Expansion Project

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Trans Mountain pipeline expansion project is critical to ensuring that Alberta's energy products get to market. Given the recent actions on electricity sales and wine exports it is clear that this project is important to our government and to working Albertans. To the Minister of Energy: how important is the pipeline to Alberta energy jobs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the member raises a very important question. He's right to say that this is an important project, not just for Alberta but for everyone in Canada. Recently Scotiabank put out a report suggesting that these delays are costing $15 billion a year to the Canadian economy. These pipelines create thousands of construction jobs and operational jobs. It's important to all of us that our energy sector is supported. That's why we're not going to stop fighting until this pipeline is built.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that Alberta energy products sell at a discount on the open market. To the same minister: how will the Trans Mountain pipeline make sure that Alberta gets a fair price for its valuable resources?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, for a number of years the U.S. was our biggest customer and we enjoyed good dollars in that relationship, but now they're our biggest competitor, so we have to expand our markets to Asia because we can't continue here in Alberta to sell our product at a discount. We made it very clear in the throne speech that this is an important enough project that we're going to do all it takes to get it built, and we are going to get that pipeline built.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has shown it's willing to take action by banning B.C. wine imports, cancelling electricity sales, and maybe even turning off the taps in order to get this pipeline built. Given the opposition to this project by other jurisdictions, to the same minister: how will the Trans Mountain pipeline provide benefits not just for Alberta but for all of Canada?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, as many know, I live in northwest Alberta, and a number of workers who work up my way are actually from B.C. They pay taxes in B.C., and they live in B.C., but they work in Alberta. We're talking 40,000 people in the last while who are from B.C. but work here, so it's a benefit not just to Alberta but to B.C. workers. When I was on holidays last summer, I met people in Nova Scotia who work in Alberta in our economy and enjoy the benefits, so this is important not just to us, not just to B.C.; this is important for all of Canada. This money is going to help pay for the services that we all enjoy in this province.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Oil Sands Development Concerns

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's clear that our oil sands provide incredible opportunities for fossil fuel energy, economic returns, and jobs for citizens across this country. The current impasse with B.C., however, has also highlighted Albertans' growing concerns emphasized by the Auditor General report of two years ago on the growing unfunded reclamation liabilities in the oil sands and its contributions to our rise in greenhouse gas emissions. To the Premier: will you in the public interest commit to establishing a public consultation or summit on the future of oil sands development in Alberta in relation to both the benefits and the risks to Albertans now and in the future?

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much to the member for his important question. You know, Mr. Speaker, I think that in some ways a lot of that work is already under way. Obviously, through our climate leadership plan, one of the critical components of it, which actually is a very persuasive argument when we talk to folks in B.C., is the fact that we put in place an emissions cap and that industry agreed to that and worked with government. Paired with that, we are supporting industry as they come up with more innovative, safe, sustainable ways to extract that resource, so it's kind of a win-win. That's one piece that's going on. As well, the minister of environment can talk at quite great length in terms of much of the work that's going on with the LARP.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
First supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, again to the Premier: given that the oil sands operators have set aside a mere 4 per cent of the estimated $21 billion required for oil sands cleanup, which could be passed on to Albertans if these multinational companies default, when will the Premier require these multinationals to guarantee security for the cleanup?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. The matter related to development of the oil sands is being captured under the lower Athabasca regional plan and also the new tailings management framework. As we receive the plans from the companies with respect to the tailings management framework, we're looking at our reclamation criteria. We hope to have more to say over the course of this year.

Thank you.

Dr. Swann: Well, again to the environment minister: given the lack of clear public data on our net greenhouse gas emissions and the priority you've placed on climate change, will you commit to annual reporting, including year-over-year trends of Alberta's total greenhouse gas emissions so that Albertans can readily know what progress is being made on our greenhouse gas emissions?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member will be pleased to learn that Alberta reports in to Environment and Climate Change Canada, as we always have. We have very robust measuring, reporting, and verification systems in place, in part to safeguard the integrity of the offsets market but also to ensure that we are being transparent with Albertans. We've just gotten our preliminary data back from 2015-16. It takes that amount of time in order to ensure that we've got the verification pieces in place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Carbon Levy Increase

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite the NDP government wanting Albertans to believe that everything is great, Alberta lost 10,000 full-time jobs last month. Unemployment in Alberta is the highest outside of Atlantic Canada. Calgary has the second-highest unemployment of any city in Canada. We also know that many Albertans have given up looking for work altogether. On top of it, this NDP government hiked their carbon tax by 50 per cent on January 1, making life more expensive. Why does this out-of-touch government insist on making it more expensive for Alberta families to make ends meet?

The Speaker: The hon. Finance minister.

Mr. Ceci: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, we have some work to go as a government, as a province to make sure that every Albertan feels the economic recovery that is going on in this province, but it is undeniable that 90,000 new full-time jobs were created over the last year and the unemployment rate fell to its lowest level in two years. Things are looking up in this province. Wages are up in this province. Small-business confidence is up. I can go on and on and on. I don't know why the opposition continues to run down this province. We're turning it around. The economy is coming back.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, I think the Finance minister didn't read his new update.

Given that the latest carbon tax hike makes it more expensive to fill up at the pumps and given that Albertans are paying more for fresh fruit and vegetables at the grocery store because of the carbon tax and given that this NDP government claimed that a carbon tax would buy us a so-called social licence for pipelines, yet that's clearly been a failure, why are Albertans paying more to drive to work and buy their groceries if the carbon tax isn't even doing what they were promised?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. More than 60 per cent of Alberta households receive rebates for the carbon levy, and small-business taxes were cut by 33 per cent. In 2018 carbon levy rebates will be provided for $300 for single adults, $450 for couples, and $45 for each child under 18. Over the next three years there will be $1.4 billion invested in rebates and, of course, investments in green infrastructure and in large-scale renewables, clean tech, bioenergy, and coal community transition.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, the minister responsible for climate change is forgetting about the other 50 per cent that don't receive the carbon tax cheques.

Given that many Airdrie residents commute outside the city to go to work, provided that they still have a job despite the NDP government's policies, and given that the NDP carbon tax makes driving to work much more expensive and given that it's clear that this NDP government is only making things harder for Airdrie residents and the rest of Alberta, Mr. Speaker, when will this government admit that the carbon tax is a sham, stop punishing Albertans, and scrap the carbon tax?

Ms Phillips: Well, you know, curiously, Mr. Speaker, this weekend we learned from the leader of the UCP that Ontario is the big brother of Canadian Confederation. If that's the case, then Preston Manning is surely the granddaddy of Canadian conservatism, and even he supports a price on carbon.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Carbon Levy

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government claimed that their carbon tax would win the so-called social licence for pipelines. Standing right here less than two years ago the Minister of Economic Development and Trade said that the carbon tax will, quote, get social licence to get pipelines approved and get our product to tidewater. Two years later no pipeline, but the constituents of Chestermere-Rocky View are still paying a carbon tax to heat their homes in winter, and what a winter. Will the government agree to suspend their carbon tax since the so-called social licence argument was clearly a myth?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The climate leadership plan is part of a policy that will ensure that we get pipelines to tidewater, that we build an economic recovery to last, that we diversify the economy, and that we make investments in new, diversified areas like renewables and energy efficiency. We're an energy province, and not just oil and gas. Oil and gas, yes, but also a number of new areas. We'll continue to build and diversify this economy.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a former member of this government's oil sands advisory group recently said of the carbon tax that, quote, it was a false premise to assume that that therefore means it was a bargain for a pipeline. I mean, that's quite the investment. She also said that the carbon tax for a pipeline trade, quote, wasn't going to work from the beginning, and it's not working now. Well, why does this government expect Albertans to believe that the carbon tax will result in a pipeline approval if the government's own advisory panel group doesn't believe it themselves?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Of course, on this side of the House we believe that the climate leadership plan will result in a pipeline approval because the climate leadership plan resulted in a pipeline approval. Of course, we heard from the leader of the Conservatives that Ontario is the big brother of Confederation, as I said. But you know who my brothers and sisters are? They're up there in that gallery. They're the electricians, the insulators, the boilermakers, the pipefitters that are all getting back to work as a result of our policies.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, her brothers and sisters are also paying this carbon tax, so we'll see what happens with that.

Given that this government did not campaign on this carbon tax and given that the carbon tax is failing to produce any economic benefit promised and given that the Calgary area – and to reiterate: 7.9 per cent unemployment, Mr. Speaker. I mean, that's the second highest in Canada. I think the hon. member already mentioned that. Why won't the government scrap the tax and the cash grab? This hurts our not-for-profit organizations, shelters, schools, and other service delivery providers that actually help Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Speaking of Calgarians, of course, we are investing a billion dollars into the green line so that Calgarians can get to work quicker and spend more time with their families and less time on the road. The Conservatives would, of course, endanger the green line and the southeast valley line here in Edmonton by cancelling the climate leadership plan, and that is no way to build this province.

Nonprofit Organizations and the Carbon Levy

Mr. Nixon: This government's reckless carbon tax is hurting Alberta communities. Here's what Leona Bennett from the Sundre & District Aquaplex recently said: we're really getting hit hard; it's not just us that are impacted, it's the community as a whole; our little organizations are what keep Sundre going, and without these facilities in the community, we won't have a community; because of the carbon tax, we had to increase our rates, but we couldn't increase them as much as required because people are also paying the carbon tax. Mr. Speaker, why does this government insist on hurting our communities with their job-killing carbon tax?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we know that the Sundre West Country Centre is a vital recreation hub for local gatherings and community activities. In fact, my office reached out and spoke to the mayor this morning. We are listening to their concerns. We have arranged for an energy efficiency round-table to be held in the community, and there are a number of other initiatives that I'll be pleased to report to the House in the supplementals.

Mr. Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that this Sundre community centre, seniors' centre, has been asking this minister to speak with them for months and in fact the Premier's office's only communication back to them was to hold a fundraiser or raise their rates on fixed-income seniors, I'll ask this question: since this government insists on continuing to punish everyday Albertans with their carbon tax, why won't they at least exempt right now community groups from this punishing tax?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are in fact reinvesting in community infrastructure like arenas and pools and other municipal infrastructure. The Minister of Municipal Affairs will have more to say about that in the coming days.

2:30

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, given that charitable giving in Alberta has declined 10 times faster than the national average and given that the carbon tax makes it more expensive for nonprofit and community groups to heat buildings and buy gas and given that this tax disproportionately impacts rural Albertans, will the government finally do the right thing and exempt groups from their cash grab – yes or no? – or will they continue to stand side by side with their Trudeau allies and punish our seniors, punish our veterans, punish our children, punish our homeless, and on and on?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member will be pleased to learn that in Sundre more than 100 homes, businesses, nonprofits, and others are currently participating in and benefiting from Energy Efficiency Alberta programs. We've also provided over $2 million in grants to repair, renovate, upgrade, or expand community facilities for seniors across the province, including the Rocky Mountain House Pioneer Centre in the member's riding, in Rocky Mountain House. We've also provided over $200,000 in grants to nonprofit organizations in the member's riding, the Sundre & District Aquatic Society and the Bergen Community Association.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Inter Pipeline Heartland Petrochemical Plant

Ms McKittrick: Merci, M. le Président. Diversification is key to ensuring long-term success for Alberta's energy sector. Given the recent release of the Energy Diversification Advisory Committee report and the press release this morning with Inter Pipeline could the Minister of Energy explain the importance of the investment by Inter Pipeline, which is located in my constituency, and building the plant in the Industrial Heartland, and how the petrochemicals diversification program helped Inter Pipeline make the investment?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, that's a very important question. Inter Pipeline's investment in the Industrial Heartland is most welcome. They were, as you know, one of the recipients of the first PDP round. You know, we've heard from Albertans all across Alberta through EDAC and others that they're tired of the boom-and-bust roller coaster we've been on for all of my lifetime here in Alberta and that they want a recovery that's built to last. The Inter Pipeline project is one piece in our move to diversifying our economy, and petrochemicals is going to play a big role in that.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how many jobs in Alberta have been created during construction and for the operation of the plant?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we know that most projects in construction are between 2,000 and 4,000 jobs, and we know that they create anywhere from about 180 to 250 in operational jobs. We heard this morning from Inter Pipeline themselves that they believe that at peak when they're doing their project, there are going to be 13,000 indirect and direct jobs, and that doesn't count all the services around that expand because of people having work and spending money. We know that this is a huge impact in Alberta, and it's a great move to diversify our economy, something that wasn't done in many years.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Partial upgrading means that companies can ship bitumen through a pipeline without adding diluent, which means that they can ship more bitumen through the same pipeline. To the same minister: does this mean that we don't need pipelines anymore?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In our new Bill 1, where we're talking about diversifying the economy, part of it is partial upgrading and allowing products to be created that can go to new refineries, that don't have access to those refineries right now. But one of the other sidelines is that we will be able to increase pipeline capacity 30 per cent. That doesn't mean that we don't need other pipelines, because we're going to grow this economy. Energy is here to stay for a long time, and we're going to need that capacity for new products as we move forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Energy Industry Diversification

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Economic diversification has long been the dream of governments in this province, for as long as most of us can remember, but the question remains: what is the role of government in encouraging that diversification? This government has not surprisingly taken a hands-on approach, which could mean that it is government, not the free market, that chooses winners and losers. To the Minister of Energy: what assurance can you provide that your plans will not distort the market and put taxpayer dollars unduly at risk?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, again, you know, the parts of Bill 1 that we introduced today and had a press conference about the next details show that we're taking a competitive approach. We have three areas: petrochemical diversification round 2, partial upgrading, and a feedstock strategy to supply those feedstocks to the projects. With them, there are incentives to build, but in the case of PDP they will not be getting any of those BRIK, or bitumen royalty in kind, dollars until the project is up and running.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: It still sounds like government choosing over the private market, Mr. Speaker.

Given that Alberta already has one of the most diverse economies in Canada and given that we don't have as much of an economic diversification problem as we do a government revenue diversification problem, again to the Minister of Energy: can you quantify the problem you are trying to solve? Can you provide data that shows specifically that any investments of taxpayer dollars will be better used to subsidize private investment than they would be funding core services or reducing Alberta's substantial deficit?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, this diversification plan is something that we heard loud and clear from Albertans. They're tired of the boom and bust. When prices are high, everything is good. When prices are low, everybody is getting laid off, and the economy is in jeopardy. So we've launched a diversification plan to do just that. I was just in Houston last week, and I know and saw first-hand how competitive it is. We have a plan, something that hasn't been around since Premier Peter Lougheed. This is a government that's going to lead. We have a plan, and we've put the stake in the ground that Alberta is open for business.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, given that the Auditor General has recently reported that the APMC, which is the agency which will be responsible for this program, isn't able to prove it is managing the risks associated with Alberta's substantial investment in the Sturgeon refinery and given that this is far from the only area where this government or its agencies have failed to define objectives, track risks, or report either of those to Albertans, again to the Minister of Energy: what specific, measurable objectives will you create for your diversification programs? How will those be reported to Albertans and when?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we did with PDP 1, it was an open and transparent process. It was a competitive process, and it was reported publicly. We will do the same. We welcome the Auditor General's comments on how we can do better. We're absolutely following up on that. All these endeavours: as we go forward, these processes will be open and transparent. You can check our website. We will be reporting back to Albertans on a regular basis. There will be no secrets.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this NDP government wants Albertans to believe everything is just great again and given that the ATB chief economist recently said that people are making less money and job prospects, when they do exist, are at lower pay and given that Calgary has the second-highest unemployment rate in Canada and Alberta's youth unemployment rate is over 13 per cent, second only to Atlantic Canada, to the Energy minister: with all of this mounting energy against the carbon tax, why will your government not scrap it?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, jobs are up. We know that there's more to do, but we've got 90,000 new full-time jobs created over the last year. Of course, RBC is forecasting Alberta to lead the country in job growth in 2018. We're also forecasted to lead the country in GDP growth. Wages are up. Small-business confidence is up. Manufacturing is up. Housing starts are up. Exports are up. We know there's more to do, and that's exactly why we're taking measures to do things like diversifying the economy. But what we won't do is cheer for Alberta to fail as the Conservatives are doing.

Mr. McIver: Well, given, Mr. Speaker, that the minister just demonstrated she seems unaware that 10,000 full-time jobs were lost in Alberta last month and given that she seems also unaware that the carbon tax has failed to produce any of the economic or environmental benefits promised and given that the carbon tax makes it more expensive for all Albertans to heat homes, to fill up cars, and to buy groceries, to that minister: why does the NDP continue to nickel and dime Albertans with a carbon tax that makes everything they buy more expensive and has a net negative environmental impact?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's hard to know where to start unpacking that series of statements. So let's just focus on some facts, shall we? The Conference Board of Canada predicts Calgary's economy grew 4.6 per cent last year. Of course, we know that there's more to do, but a good start is where Calgary Economic Development beat their target and has attracted and supported the expansion of 90 companies that have created more than 5,000 jobs in 2017. Compared to a year ago, Calgary created over 28,000 new full-time jobs. Things are looking up. We know there's more to do, and that's why we have a comprehensive diversification strategy in place as well as those pipeline approvals.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister is a job-loss denier, as she just stated, and given that the Calgary Chamber of commerce reports that 73 per cent of businesses said that their costs will increase because of the carbon tax and given that the Canadian Federation of Independent Business found that 92 per cent of their business owners are not confident in this NDP government and not confident they're committed to increasing the business climate and given that the carbon tax is another obstacle stopping hiring and paying employees, to the minister: why does your government insist upon punishing small businesses through the carbon tax while denying the damage that is so obviously there?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, small-business taxes have been cut by a third; $40 million has gone toward small-business tax reduction already. We've also exempted small and medium-sized Alberta oil and gas facilities from the carbon levy until 2023, saving both large and small oil and gas companies who operate those facilities more than $2.5 billion over that period. We've also provided between $1.5 billion and $2 billion of free carbon offsets to companies investing in methane reduction and invested $440 million in innovation funding specifically for in situ oil sands facilities. That's all part of the package.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Electricity Power Purchase Arrangement Lawsuit Settlement

Mr. Panda: The government and Enmax have reached an out-of-court settlement over the power purchasing agreement lawsuit. The NDP caused the lawsuit by raising the carbon tax, which invalidated the contracts with the power generators. The settlement means that Enmax will transfer carbon offset credits to the Balancing Pool in exchange for a payment of unknown value. To the Minister of Energy: how much is the government paying to the Balancing Pool to cover the purchase of these carbon offset credits? What's the secret number?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the government took legal action over two years ago to fight for Albertans' interests. Many parties such as Enmax were involved, but to be clear, that action was against the previous governments. We're pleased to have this final agreement signed off because now it allows us to work together with them and other companies to go forward in our electricity transition, where we're going off coal and into renewables and using natural gas to fill that gap. We're very pleased with that, knowing that we're going to move forward with cleaner air and a better electricity system.

Mr. Panda: Given that the former president of the Balancing Pool, Gary Reynolds, said that the entire situation has been in complete shambles since 2015 and given that the legal action has actually cost consumers hundreds of millions of dollars because the legal action forestalled the Balancing Pool from terminating the PPAs sooner, why hasn't this government taken responsibility for the $70 million cost to taxpayers each and every month as a result of their mismanagement?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, this agreement does provide for the transfer from Enmax to the Balancing Pool of carbon offset credits as part of their agreement. Many of the details certainly are between themselves and the government. These offset credits are going to allow the Balancing Pool the flexibility in meeting future greenhouse gas emissions compliance obligations. At the end of the day, this is, again, a step we took as government to stand up for Albertans for backroom deals that were arrived at by a previous government. Enmax and other companies were a part of that, and we're glad that all of the agreements are signed so that we can move forward.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that the PPA debacle has cost Albertans millions of dollars because the NDP raised the carbon tax on electrical generation and given that the third-quarter results update shows that the Balancing Pool will need to borrow $650 billion in debt, which is $418 million more than the budget, will the minister stand in this House and tell Albertans: how much is the total cost of this NDP PPA debacle?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we took action on a broken system that we inherited from the previous government. We're pleased that this final agreement has been reached because we are taking action on climate change. We're taking action on fixing a broken system, and now we can work with all the companies to go forward and create a system that Albertans deserve, one that's stable and predictable and, you know, provides predictability for month-to-month bills and not the spikes that we used to see before.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, given that one government cannot sue a former government – it's called the Crown; it's not divisible – and given that the government just signed an out-of-court settlement with Enmax and given that the minister has refused to tell us how much it is, I will offer the minister another opportunity to be forthcoming with Albertans. How many tens or hundreds of millions of tax dollars have we lost in this secret court settlement?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, with other agreements as with this one, the agreements are between the government and each of the companies. The broad strokes of this one is that it involves turning back some of the carbon offset credits to the Balancing Pool. But at the end of the day, each agreement is different because each company is different. At the end of the day, we're all going to work together to create a new system from one that was broken, one that we inherited from the previous government, as we go on to a capacity market, renewables, all the different things and creating a more stable system. We're now free to work with all these companies on that. I'm pleased with this arrangement.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think this will now be the fifth opportunity for the minister to answer the question given that she has not done so yet. This is a matter of clear public interest for Alberta taxpayers on the floor of this Legislature to learn how much the government has just signed away to a power company that it sued and sued wrongfully. So will the minister please disclose: how big is the cheque that it's writing to Enmax from Alberta taxpayers? Will she disclose that, or will it stay a secret?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned, as with all the other companies that we made arrangements with, this one is between the company and the government. At the end of the day, we're pleased that this agreement has been reached. It's been a long two years. Again, this whole court thing was because of backroom deals from previous government, who set up a system of volatility that was hard on Albertans, hard on people's pocketbooks. This is something we are fixing along with our new electricity grid.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, given that the government cannot spend public money without the authorization of the Legislature and given that it has to be voted supply to write the cheque to Enmax, Alberta taxpayers and members of this place have a right to know. How big is the bill, and will this minister take responsibility for the fiasco that has cost Alberta taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars? Come clean. How much is the cost? How many hundreds of millions has this government lost us?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely, there will be a budget that all of us will discuss after the 22nd, I believe, when it will be put forward. We'll have opportunity to discuss a number of matters and also with estimates.

But today, again, this is an arrangement that has been reached between Enmax and ourselves. It allows us now that we're complete with all the agreements that we can move on with working with coal communities. We can work with transitioning to renewables and natural gas. We can work on creating a system that's going to be stable, without spikes, and predictable for consumers.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for West Yellowhead.

Geothermal Project in Hinton

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Hinton geothermal project will be a unique opportunity to provide heat to public buildings in the town of Hinton. This initiative will be the first in Canada to use one or more repurposed oil and gas wells to heat buildings. To the Minister of Energy: how does this Hinton geothermal project fit into Alberta's climate leadership plan?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Certainly, there's a lot of excitement in Alberta about geothermal energy. When we did our Renewable Electricity Act, we included geothermal for that reason, its very low emissions. With more than 80,000 inactive wells here in Alberta, we have an opportunity to look at how we might repurpose some of those wells for geothermal. We're very well positioned, and certainly in the member's riding are extremely well positioned, to look at those higher thermal gradients. There is a particular project in that area that we're looking at very closely to learn from.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the support for this project from municipal leaders, including the mayor of Hinton, to the same minister: what does the funding of this project mean for the local community?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, projects like this will focus on how we can make life better for all Albertans. This is a project that we can learn from, look at how it can work in a municipality, how we can use deep geothermal resources to power our municipalities. We're very excited to watch and see how the community of Hinton manages this and how we can learn to help other communities in Alberta.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the investment in the project by Western Economic Diversification as well as the government of Alberta and Alberta Innovates what does this project mean for Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the fact that we got Western Economic Diversification's interest in this as well shows that it's not just good for Alberta, but it's good for Canada. This is the first type of project like it in all of Canada, where we're going to use operational oil and gas wells to harness heat. As I've said, there's huge potential in learning from this project. We are supporting it because this is a good project that'll help us deal with our climate leadership goals. It's helping the folks of Hinton. It's going to help all of Alberta when we learn from it and are able to move that around to other areas.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. members, we'll proceed with Members' Statements in 30 seconds.

International Women's Day

Cortes-Vargas: On March 8 we recognized International Women's Day. This year's theme is Press for Progress.

Since the 1800s women have been campaigning for women's rights, yet women are still not equally represented in corporate boardrooms, decision-making tables, and public office. The women that have fought to be treated as equals are our role models as we move forward. We are seeing the paradigm shifts in movements like Me Too, Time's Up. The women's marches speak out about the injustices endured predominantly by women for far too long.

With these changing tides and as we move towards equity, we know that governments must and should respond accordingly. Our government stands with women and families in the prevention and elimination of sexual violence by providing operational funding to sexual assault centres. Our government stands with women in lower income situations by addressing the gender wage gap and increasing minimum wage. Our government stands with women in business when we provide grants to support women entrepreneurs as they take risks and grow our economy.

We see the collective effort to support women in overcoming barriers in the workplace when chambers of commerce like the one in Strathcona county provide workshops to build capacity so that we can address inequities in the workplace. I am proud to see this kind of work being done in Strathcona county and across Alberta.

Lastly, but perhaps most importantly, we are reducing the barriers that keep women from leadership positions. This is necessary to see the aforementioned progress. As such and as the youngest female ever elected in Alberta's Legislature, my story provides hope for others that want to see more diverse representation at decision-making tables. Whether you are young, racialized, female, or part of any other minority group, don't let that hold you back. Press for progress.

Former Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to a well-liked, caring, hard-working, true Albertan who rose to prominence, served Alberta and conservatives, and is now taking a well-deserved and earned leave. I'm speaking about the former Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin, Brian Jean.

After having served the residents of Fort McMurray as their Member of Parliament for nearly a decade, Brian rose to prominence in the 2015 Wildrose Party leadership contest, winning the leadership and subsequently winning 22 seats in the snap general election. Right away Brian knew that a political realignment needed to happen with Alberta's conservative parties. The theme of the party's fall convention that year was Unite the Right People. His dancing shoes were on, and the dance began to unite conservatives at the grassroots level.

Life is never a straight and easy path. Along the way there are personal tragedies that take on greater significance when a person is in the public eye. The death of Brian's son Mikey during the 2015 leadership race drew attention to problems within Alberta's health care system. The loss of Brian's house during the Fort McMurray wildfire showed just how vulnerable even our most prominent citizens are to forces that get beyond human control.

Brian was in the middle of it all and wore the mantle of an everyday Albertan experiencing great personal loss with dignity and grace. Brian's Facebook following exceeded the daily average print and digital circulation of any Alberta newspaper, providing a very powerful platform to communicate to Albertans. He was concerned about Albertans, and they were concerned about him.

Eventually Brian found his dance partner to unite conservatives, but he also found a life partner, marrying Kim Michelutti in the summer of 2016.

Brian, on behalf of your caucus colleagues, thank you for your unlimited sacrifice, dedication, and service to this province, and may God bless you and Kim in all your future endeavours.

Challenge in the Rockies 2018

Mr. Rosendahl: Mr. Speaker, today I rise to talk about the fifth annual Challenge in the Rockies. This fun hockey experience takes place in Hinton and Jasper this year from March 29 to April 1.

The challenge is an inclusive event which allows all youth to participate, from pond hockey, minor hockey, shinny, and ringette, plus any new and returning skaters. The challenge enhances youth sport while helping with fundraising for future programming and other community nonprofits. This affair is a testament to the dedication of the organizers and more than 200 volunteers who support the athletes, families, and coaches participating in venues in both Hinton and Jasper.

Over five days of hockey, with teams from all over Alberta, Saskatchewan, and B.C., more than 600 players play in close to 100 games. This is not a tournament. Players aged four to 18 face off on the ice, with a focus on physical literacy and staying active. The challenge is a Chiefs event hosted by the Hanson brothers. This year we'll be welcoming alumni from the Edmonton Oilers and honouring the late Dave Semenko. All players will be wearing his number on their jerseys.

Over 2,500 people converge in the area, gathering more than a quarter million dollars in revenue for the local hotels and close to a million dollars in business for the region's economy.

I would like to thank the organizers, volunteers, and more than 25 sponsors that make this event possible. Come on out to West Yellowhead and join us in the Challenge in the Rockies from March 29 to April 1 in Hinton and Jasper.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Women's Political Engagement

Mrs. Aheer: Mr. Speaker, last Thursday marked International Women's Day. Following a year of unprecedented upswing in political engagement on a global level, I took a little bit of time to reflect on the role that women have played in shaping and driving the conversation.

In the last year women started an international cultural shift with the Me Too and Time's Up movements. Millions of women have bravely shared their stories, prompting a fundamental cultural shift in the way that our societies perceive sexual assault and harassment. This movement gave millions of women a strong and united voice and politically engaged those that may not have traditionally taken an active role. We are so hopeful that this will also lead to an upswing in women running for public office.

There are already many amazing, competent women holding key positions around boardroom tables, women rallying across the world and standing up for what they believe in, and the UCP wants to encourage and see more. Our party is built on principles of inclusivity and diversity, and we want everyone to feel this momentum. All Albertans have a home in our party. Every woman from the home to the boardroom should feel engaged and valued and that they have a voice.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot stress the importance of a continuation of this engagement and its momentum. Despite all of the accomplishments and the momentous past year we still have a long way to go. I know that I feel extremely blessed to live in this country, ruled by democracy, that allows the right to elect our representatives.

Let us be the ones that inspire increased political engagement, to see more women running for public office. The Member for Airdrie and I are honoured to work with these gentlemen, whom we work with every day. We honour each other's unique gifts and talents and what we all bring to the table. As a woman I feel empowered to speak my mind every day; you can ask them. Let's continue to inspire citizens to be more involved in our political process, to speak out, to get involved.

To all of the powerful women and men out there that are part of the change: thank you, and let's keep it going.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I'd request unanimous consent of the House to extend Orders of the Day until the completion of the Routine.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Volunteer Firefighters

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a few weeks ago I joined the Beaver Emergency Services Commission and Fire Chief Dave Oleksyn for a Thursday night training session in Tofield. After talking with the team about occupational health and safety amendments and the changing communications equipment, we got to work. After trying to pull on 45 pounds of gear in 90 seconds, which is much harder than it looks, we went to the training area to practise transferring a person from the rooftop to the ground using only a ladder and ropes. Then, to practise strength and precision, we played a game of Jenga using a 20-pound piece of equipment similar to the jaws of life, where we pulled two-by-fours out of the tower, grasping each piece out of the middle and – yes, you guessed it, Mr. Speaker – putting it on top. It was exhausting.

This visit was important to me, Mr. Speaker, because volunteer firefighters are at the heart of every rural Alberta community. They protect critical infrastructure, control fires, clean up environmental spills, provide emergency first responder services, are often the first on scene at major vehicle collisions, and, when trained, can deliver life-saving naloxone. These brave men and women commit countless hours to training and answer the call while we sleep soundly in our beds.

But, Mr. Speaker, their bravery comes at a cost. Exposure to these traumatic events can result in major consequences to their mental and psychological health as well as increased rates of cancer from exposure. That is why ensuring our first responders have PTSD coverage is so important. That's why I'm so proud of our government's recent announcement to expand workers' compensation benefits for firefighters who contract ovarian and cervical cancer and to reduce the minimum exposure period from 20 years to 10 for compensation for testicular cancer.

Equipping our firefighters properly through training grants, accessing support for communications equipment, and legislation that will better protect all Albertans in an emergency is something I will continue to fight for, Mr. Speaker, because we owe it to them.

Heart Health and Emergency Services

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, there is something I'd like to get off my chest and get right to the heart of the matter. Six months ago I had emergency heart surgery. This is what happened. Seventeen days prior to that I had chest pains scary enough that I asked my wife to take me to the hospital. My blood pressure was just about off the charts, but through the night the good folks at the Wainwright hospital both monitored my chest pains and got my blood pressure under control. Enzymes that would indicate a heart attack were low, but they knew something was going on.

Ten days later the next step consisted of an echocardiogram, which showed a birth defect, revealing a bicuspid aortic valve, stenosis, and an alarming 5.4-centimetre aneurysm. Once the technician saw the results, she immediately contacted the hospital, came back into the room, and told me to go straight to the hospital: "Do not go home. Don't go for coffee. Go to the doctors; they want to see you right away." At that point the ball was rolling towards surgery.

Over the next couple of days I underwent a CT scan, an angiogram, another echocardiogram, and numerous chest X-rays while constantly being connected to a monitor. By Monday all the tests were done, and on Thursday I was first up for surgery. After the surgery they found that the aneurysm had actually grown to almost seven centimetres, about the size of a baseball, and as a result they told me afterwards that I had had about two days left to live.

Heart health awareness is something we need to be cognizant about all year round. Heart attack signs can include pressure, tightness, pain, or a squeezing, aching sensation in your chest and arms that spreads to your neck, jaw, or your back. Symptoms may include nausea, indigestion, heartburn or abdominal pain, shortness of breath, cold sweat, fatigue, lightheadedness or sudden dizziness. If you think that you're having these things, get checked immediately for signs of a heart attack.

Mr. Speaker, unlike the Tin Man from The Wizard of Oz, I didn't need a new heart. A big thank you to the doctors and nurses and staff at the Mazankowski and the Wainwright hospital for the great care that they gave me.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think we could all listen very carefully to your message, and by the way, on behalf of all of us, it's nice to have you back.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to present a petition on behalf of 3,224 Albertans. The petition seeks to urge the Alberta government to allow rehabilitation sites to accept all Alberta wildlife to allow rehabilitation of any injured, diseased, or orphaned wildlife that is not fully capable of surviving in the wild. Omitting sections 4 to 8 of schedule A would be preferable as it is what prohibits the rehabilitation of select species.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

Dr. Swann: To follow up again, Mr. Speaker, these very energetic activists I introduced earlier collected another approximately 14,000 signatures from around the world calling on the government to review its policies related to large-animal rehabilitation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have one tabling this afternoon. I table five copies of the March 9, 2018, memo and attachments to all members regarding the Oral Question Period and Members' Statements rotations.

Thank you.

The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table five copies of a regional crime survey that has been done by the MD of Bonnyville; 61.4 per cent of the respondents have confirmed themselves as victims of rural crime.

The Speaker: Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies to table of excerpts from Alberta Transportation's project administration manual, October 2006, that outline the developer-pay policy of the government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of a third report that was suppressed from the research committee by Alberta Energy and obtained under FOIP by the Official Opposition. This report is entitled Resource Management & Environmental Stewardship: Integrated Research Strategy, Final Report, February 2, 2016.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, over the weekend I happened to meet a patriotic Canadian in Vancouver. Her name is Vivian Krause. She did extensive research and produced this report, which is an exclusive summary and introduction and conclusion about the campaign targeting the oil sands. They call it The Tar Sands Campaign. There is lots of good information in this. I'm sure the members in this Chamber will benefit from reading it.

The Speaker: Thank you. I'm sure they will, hon. member.

Mr. Panda: Thank you.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: I recognize the Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I request the unanimous consent of the House to waive Standing Order 8(1) to proceed to consideration of Government Motion 2.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Trans Mountain Pipeline

2. Ms Notley moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly support the government of Alberta's fight on behalf of Albertans' interests to ensure the lawfully approved Trans Mountain pipeline expansion is built, and be it further resolved that the Legislative Assembly call for the federal government to continue to take all necessary legal steps in support of the pipeline's construction, and be it further resolved that the Legislative Assembly reaffirm its support for the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion as a key component of Alberta's energy future.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm privileged to stand today and move Motion 2.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to stand before you today to sponsor this motion, that is, quite frankly, of the utmost importance to every Albertan and indeed to every Canadian. It's a motion that is aimed at sending a clear and unequivocal message to the country: Albertans are united; Albertans are resolved; Albertans are determined. Together Albertans will secure our place as a world energy leader, open up new markets for our energy products, end the land lock, and build the Trans Mountain pipeline.

Now, before I move into the substance of my remarks, I want to start by welcoming everybody back to the Legislature. And to the new Leader of the Opposition: in 35 seconds I wasn't able to fully welcome him, but I do so now. I know that we will have a constructive and vigorous debate over the next many months. But whatever our differences may be, everyone in this Chamber shares a deep love for Alberta and is united in our conviction that Alberta's best days lie ahead.

Friends, we gather today at a very critical juncture in Alberta's history, perhaps one of the most consequential in recent memory. Alberta is just coming through a very difficult and deep recession. Three years ago, owing to a dramatic collapse in oil prices, tens of thousands of Albertans lost their jobs, businesses were shuttered, and many families struggled to keep their homes and make ends meet. Fighting this recession has been the central preoccupation of my government since being sworn into office.

We have moved on all fronts. With interest rates at historic lows, we invested more in modern infrastructure, putting thousands of Albertans to work on projects like the Calgary cancer centre, highways, roads, and transit. We cut the small-business tax to help businesses cope, and we raised the minimum wage to help our lowest paid workers put food on the table. We expanded access to capital for Alberta business, and because an oil price collapse is no excuse to sacrifice our children's future or the health of our loved ones, we protected vital public services that working people depend on. We expanded the child tax credit. We piloted and expanded affordable daycare. We expanded skills training and froze tuition. We cut school fees and built hundreds of new schools. Mr. Speaker, we took these and many other measures as part of a deliberate and considered plan to absorb as much of the shock as possible from the oil price collapse and to put our economy back on stable footing.

Today I'm pleased to report that things are looking up in Alberta. Ninety thousand new jobs were created in the last year, almost every economic indicator is headed in the right direction, and Alberta has the fastest growing economy in the country. Now, are we there yet? No. No, we are not, and we won't be until every Albertan feels the security that comes from a meaningful economic recovery. But I do believe that we're on the right track. With our economy growing, we're taking action to expand and secure a lasting recovery for working people, a recovery that isn't as vulnerable to boom-and-bust cycles in the way that we have been plagued for many generations, a recovery that is more resilient and more diversified, a recovery where every Albertan is lifted up, a recovery that is built to last.

Mr. Speaker, to build that recovery, it's critical that we diversify our energy economy and our energy markets. Here, too, our government has taken aggressive and forward-looking action.

Through the climate leadership plan we've taken steps to spark unprecedented investment in renewable energy. Through initiatives such as the petrochemical diversification program we are incenting billions of dollars in new investment to get more jobs and more value out of our energy products, and with Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act, which will be debated in this House in the coming days, we are taking action to secure our place as one of the world's energy leaders.

Together, the actions taken to modernize and diversify our energy sector and to tackle climate change have put Alberta at the forefront of energy leadership, and they are why after years of failure Alberta took another major step forward with the approval of the Trans Mountain pipeline, which brings us to the motion that we are discussing today.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans know well the arguments for the Trans Mountain pipeline, but I'm compelled to make them again today in an effort to inform our fellow Canadians again. Because Alberta is landlocked, we are forced to sell our energy products to one customer, the United States, at a discounted price. This geographic fact of life is costing the Canadian economy billions of dollars and tens of thousands of jobs.

Just a few weeks ago Scotiabank reported that that lack of pipeline access to tidewater will cost the Canadian economy $10.7 billion this year alone, and a new U of C study concludes that the Alberta government is losing $7.2 billion per year in oil revenues. Think about how absurd that is for just a moment. In Alberta, Canada is home to some of the world's most abundant energy resources, resources that contribute to the well-being of every community in the country. As I like to say, there is not a school, not a hospital, not a road, not a bus, a bicycle lane, or a port anywhere in this country that does not owe something to Alberta's energy resources.

At the same time, the world needs more energy products, but the world can't buy them from us because we won't let them. Quite frankly, it's maddening. I'm hard-pressed to think of another country that so willingly handcuffs its economy in this way, certainly not countries like Norway, which has built one of the world's most prosperous, healthy, equal, environmentally responsible societies in the world using its abundant oil reserves. But in Canada we have been content to sell only to the U.S., take a discounted price, and let the future take care of itself. It makes absolutely no sense. It's an abdication of our responsibility to each other and to future generations, and it must change.

Mr. Speaker, the vast majority of Canadians understand this. The vast majority of Canadians want to see it change, and when this government was elected, the cycle of failure and recrimination that has characterized pipeline politics for too long in this province and in this country began to change. Albertans came together from all walks of life to help chart a path forward. In partnership with industry, workers, and community leaders we established the climate leadership plan, the most far-reaching response to climate change anywhere in North America. We phased out pollution, invested in energy efficiency, and reinvested in an economy-wide price on carbon into energy diversification. We also capped emissions. This is very important for all Canadians to understand. Because Alberta capped oil sands emissions, a new pipeline to tidewater does not – does not – increase carbon emissions. We also lobbied Ottawa a lot in public and behind the scenes, and we reached out to our fellow Canadians to explain why the new pipeline was so important for our shared future. The change paid off.

In November 2016 Ottawa approved the Trans Mountain pipeline, a historic accomplishment for our province and the country, for which all Albertans deserve credit. At every step along the way our government has made the case to Canadians. In British Columbia I reminded audiences of how important the oil sands are to their economy. It's not all about new condos and inflated house prices. Sometimes economies look different than that.

In 2013, 44,000 people who lived and paid taxes in B.C. actually worked in Alberta, most of those people in the energy sector. Those British Columbians earned more than $2 billion, most of which was spent supporting their local economy back in B.C. I spoke about the community benefit agreements that will provide millions of dollars for local priorities and the additional property taxes that will include the local governments of B.C. along the way in the pipelines. I reminded them that getting their energy exports off railroads into modern, well-regulated, well-designed, and closely supervised pipelines would be safer and much more secure. Put another way, our products are going to be shipped one way or another. We can either ship them less safely by rail at a much smaller return to marginally interested customers, or we can ship them safely by pipeline to people who want our product and get much better value for every barrel that we sell.

I also reminded them that every Canadian, including every Albertan, cherishes Canada's coastline and wants to see it protected because it's not only British Columbia's coast; it's Canada's coast. It's also Canada's gateway to the Pacific. Vancouver is one of the world's great port cities, and the people who manage trade through the port are experts in safety and protecting marine ecosystems. Indeed, every year thousands – thousands – of commercial ships travel the coast safely and reliably. In fact, B.C. has been asking for years, for decades, for more resources to make sure that that level of safety is actually increased, and for years that request to the federal government fell on deaf ears, so it bears repeating that with the conversations around the Trans Mountain pipeline, the federal government has also committed $1.5 billion in ocean protection programs to B.C. This improves the safety of shipping for everybody, of all shipments all along the western marine area. In fact, the completion of the Trans Mountain pipeline actually improves and increases marine safety off our west coast.

I've also reminded all Canadians just how significant Alberta's contribution is to the Canadian federation. One fact stands out, and everywhere that I have gone and given this speech, it is the one that often catches the most attention, particularly in other parts of the country. Mr. Speaker, there are four net contributors to the Canadian federation: Ontario, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and B.C. On a per capita basis the good people of Saskatchewan contribute about $554 every year to our country beyond what they receive back through federal programs. In Ontario that number on a per capita basis is an average of $650 per person. In B.C. – great job – an average of $886 per person. But in Alberta every man, woman, and child contributes an average of $5,148 each to our country, six times more per person. All in, Alberta contributes $22 billion more per year to Ottawa than we receive in return even after the effects of the oil downturn and the recession.

Mr. Speaker, I did not make this point to shame other provinces. I made it again and again to drive one simple point home, and that is this: when Alberta is strong, Canada is strong. When Alberta is working, Canada is working. And when some try to harm Alberta's economy, they are also harming themselves. So it's not actually a hard sell, we discovered. The vast majority of Canadians want Alberta to succeed, and that includes many of our fellow citizens – I would go so far as to say most of our fellow citizens and neighbours – in B.C. It's close, but it's a small majority.

Just let me quote a few British Columbians who have sent us their thoughts over the past few weeks. "I fully support you & your government's stand for the pipeline through B.C. I was born in B.C. & have always lived in our wonderful province. We all need fuel for our cars & need to heat our homes. Keep up the fight." That was from Brenda at Qualicum Beach, B.C. Another one: "We all want to, and can, protect the environment and have well engineered and safe pipelines to bring oil to tidewater and across the oceans. As BC and Canadian citizens we need to get on with supporting our energy industry." That's from Don in Delta, B.C. Finally, Cheryl from Invermere: "We must get our oil to tidewater so we can get top price for it, in order to help pay for health care, education, roads, infrastructure and all the extras that Canadians enjoy."

Mr. Speaker, these are just a few of the hundreds and hundreds of testimonials that we received. Canadians understand the need for a new pipeline, but sadly the government of British Columbia appears not to.

Up until recently B.C.'s case was being heard in the Federal Court of Appeal, the appropriate place for pipeline opponents to be heard. A ruling is expected soon, and I'm confident that Alberta and Canada will prevail. When that happens, what should also happen is that the dispute should end. Canada's decision should be upheld, and we can carry on with construction. But the new B.C. government in coalition with the Green Party has now determined that it is willing to use any means necessary, including unconstitutional ones, to harass and delay the Trans Mountain pipeline.

Let's be clear. That's a change in their strategy. That fact became clear on January 30 of this year. On January 30 B.C. released what's now known as point 5, a blatantly unconstitutional attempt to limit what flows through a federally regulated pipeline. I want to pause for a moment to reflect on what the B.C. government was actually saying with point 5. In essence, B.C. was saying that it had a right to unilaterally overturn a federal government decision made in the national interest; that it did not care that that decision came after the most exhaustive environmental review and consultation process in Canadian history; that it was not bothered by the fact that it would damage the entire Canadian economy, threaten the country's ability to meet its climate change commitments, and cost the economy tens of billions of dollars; that it was happy to pretend that B.C. is its own country, free to make up its own laws to serve its short-term political interests.

To say that this was disappointing was an understatement. This is not how our country was built to operate. It is political game playing at its worst and the most serious of consequences for the livelihoods of working Canadians. At the end of the day, that is who we all are here to serve.

So it demanded swift retaliatory action. Within days of B.C.'s actions Alberta did five things. First, we shut down electricity sales to British Columbia, talks that could have meant up to $500 million per year for them. Second, we formed a Market Access Task Force of experts and notable Canadians to give advice. Third, we banned B.C. wine from our shelves. Fourth, we threatened escalating action if B.C. didn't back down on point 5. Finally, we escalated our Canada-wide public education campaign and asked Canadians to show their support for Alberta's position, which tens of thousands of Canadians have since done. I want to pause for a moment to thank Canadians for their support. Albertans know that we are not alone in this fight, and that means a very great deal.

Mr. Speaker, if B.C. didn't see Alberta's response coming, they really should have. You can't pick a fight with Alberta and expect us to walk away. We will act to defend our interests.

A few days after we imposed the wine ban, B.C. did back down. They shelved point 5, and they said that it would go to the courts to see if they have the right to overturn the Constitution. Interesting strategy. For that reason I decided to suspend – suspend – the B.C. wine ban with a clear warning that it would come back if B.C. continues its campaign of harassment and delay. Let me say that the support Albertans showed for the wine ban was overwhelming, and I thank them for it, including the Leader of the Opposition. To retaliate against our fellow Canadians is not an easy decision or one we take lightly. We don't want to hurt B.C. businesses or B.C. workers. We don't want to put at risk the deep economic connections that bind our two provinces.

Let me be clear. Albertans don't want a trade war, but as I've said from the beginning, we won't shy away from doing what is needed. If anyone was confused on that point, let there now be no doubt. We will protect our economy, our workers, our made-in-Alberta climate plan, and our rights in Confederation.

Mr. Speaker, in proposing point 5, B.C. crossed a fundamental line, and it put its cards on the table. Not only did they pick a fight with Alberta; they picked a fight with Canada. In doing so, they took it upon themselves to change the rules of engagement.

As Premier I've reflected on this at great length. From my very first day in this office I together with my colleagues and all Albertans have worked to break the land lock. Every step of the way we have played by the rules, and we have pulled our weight. Our climate leadership plan is second to none. Our energy industry is a world leader in environmental innovation, and it is getting better every day. Our energy workers are the best-trained energy workers anywhere, and Trans Mountain was subject to one of the most exhaustive environmental reviews in Canadian history.

So how does one respond when a partner in Confederation says that the rules don't seem to apply to them? Let me be clear. I love this country too much to play political games that threaten it. As Premier I have a profound responsibility to uphold its institutions and to act in its best interests. I take that responsibility very seriously. It's a trust that I and everyone on this side in government hold dear. But as the B.C. government's approach to Trans Mountain has changed, so too has ours. The wine ban was but one tactic in a larger strategy that we are executing. In consultation with our Market Access Task Force, my cabinet, and Albertans the government is actively preparing additional measures that can be deployed judiciously and strategically to make sure that the pipeline is built. We're preparing a public awareness campaign aimed at all Canadians to ensure that the loudest and most extreme pipeline opponents are not allowed to dominate the conversation.

We're working closely with Ottawa to align our legal strategies to expedite permitting and construction. The federal government has this power now and must act on it. Invoking additional legal powers such as section 92(10)(c) is not needed on a pipeline that already falls under federal jurisdiction. That section of the Constitution is designed only to apply national interest status to a project that is completely encapsulated within a province. The federal government already has the power, and the issue is to make them use it. The power exists, and the federal government must assert it to ensure that a decision that it made in the national interest is carried out in the national interest. We seek the support of all Members of this Legislative Assembly to join us in that call to Ottawa.

Finally, in last week's Speech from the Throne our government said that if it becomes necessary, we will invoke similar legislation to that which Peter Lougheed used to defend Alberta's interests almost 40 years ago. Mr. Speaker, in this session we will introduce legislation that will give Alberta the ability to control the supply of oil and gas in order to ensure that we maximize access to markets and benefits for Albertans. It's no secret that I do not relish taking this action, but I have determined that at this moment, under these specific circumstances that we face, in particular an intransigent B.C. government that has shown its willingness to act outside the law and is intent on a strategy of harassment and delay, it is in Alberta's strategic interest to put it on the table.

Let me be clear. Though some want to cut off gas to B.C. this second, for this government it's not a first but a last resort. After all, it will hurt working people on both sides of the Alberta and B.C. border. In the Lower Mainland and around B.C. life is already expensive enough. Affordability is already a huge challenge for people living in B.C.'s Lower Mainland. Two or three dollar a litre gas will cause real hardship and pain for regular working people who are just trying to go about their lives, and here in Alberta we, too, would have to make difficult sacrifices. But if it becomes necessary to help build a pipeline that will benefit, ultimately, all those working people for generations to come, then this government will act.

Mr. Speaker, let me conclude my remarks. As I said at the outset, we are gathered at a historic juncture in Alberta's history. In an uncertain and increasingly volatile world this province is a beacon of hope. We have built a democratic, prosperous, and inclusive society in a beautiful, if at times inhospitable, environment. Alberta stands as a tribute to the idea that we can accomplish so much more working together than we can working alone.

That is why the motion before the Assembly today transcends political divides. It is why today we must speak not as partisans but as citizens committed to our province, our country, and to the larger good of all Albertans and all Canadians. I urge all members to support this motion and stand united. Albertans are counting on us. Canadians are counting on us. Together we will overcome the land lock. Together we will secure Alberta's economic future. Together we will build on the work of generations to build a more hopeful, inclusive, optimistic province and country. My fellow Albertans, my fellow Canadians, together we will get this pipeline built.

I thank the members for taking the time to listen to my remarks. I urge you to support this motion, and I look forward to everyone's contribution to this debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour for me to rise to deliver my first speech in this august Chamber although I will reserve the custom of a maiden speech until my response to the Speech from the Throne tomorrow. Let me begin simply by once again saying to all hon. members from both sides that I am honoured to be serving with you. As the rookie I begin by recognizing that I have an awful lot to learn in this place, and I look forward to doing so.

Mr. Speaker, let me also again thank my constituents of Calgary-Lougheed for the tremendous honour of representing them, being their voice in this Legislature, and my colleagues for their confidence to serve them as Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to thank the hon. the Premier for the opportunity to have this debate in this Legislature. The Premier will recall that I wrote to her several weeks ago proposing that the Legislature be called into session shortly following the decision of the NDP government in British Columbia to seek to delay and perhaps kill the proposed Trans Mountain pipeline expansion. My proposal to the Premier at the time was that it would be, I think, helpful to her case as our head of government and to Alberta's interests to demonstrate how we could come together across party lines to put the province's interests ahead of our own respective partisan interests. I regret that I have not yet received a response to my letter. I'm sure it's on the way. Perhaps it got lost in the mail. But I am glad that the Premier has accepted our proposal, in principle, of having a motion before this place.

I did propose in that letter, Mr. Speaker, that I would be willing as Leader of the Official Opposition to work with the government and the other parties and independents to negotiate in good faith a hopefully unanimous resolution that could reflect this Legislature, speak on behalf of Albertans of all political persuasions. To that end, the Official Opposition House Leader, I believe, had discussions with his hon. government counterpart late last week and suggested some constructive amendments – I think three, to be precise – that in our judgment would make this motion more likely to speak for a broad spectrum of Albertans. We would ask the government to give fair consideration to those motions. I think the key thing here is that we all operate in good faith. Let's be blunt. All of us in this place are elected officials. We all have our own partisan and political interests, but at a moment like this it serves us all well, it serves our constituents well if we are prepared to put some of our water in our wine.

We certainly are prepared to accept the bulk of this motion, which I read into the record. Moved by the hon. the Premier that the Legislative Assembly support the government of Alberta's fight on behalf of Albertans' interests to ensure the lawfully approved Trans Mountain pipeline expansion is built and be it further resolved that the Legislative Assembly call for the federal government to continue to take all necessary legal steps in support of the pipeline's construction and be it further resolved that the Legislative Assembly reaffirm its support for the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion as a key component of Alberta's energy future.

We broadly agree. The Official Opposition broadly agrees with the pith and substance of the motion, Mr. Speaker. However, we do have some concerns. While we certainly salute the Premier's recent approach to responding to her New Democrat allies in Victoria, we believe the government should be going further and should be taking stronger measures and being more forceful in asking for federal intervention. While we support the measures, essentially our position is that the measures taken by the government to date are necessary but not sufficient.

Therefore, we would humbly request that the government consider an amendment to the first paragraph in the Premier's motion to say, "that the Legislative Assembly support the efforts of the government to fight on behalf of Albertans' interests" because we broadly support the strategy, but we think more should be done.

Secondly, we would like to propose, as will be done by my hon. colleague the Official Opposition House Leader, that the second paragraph call explicitly for the government of Canada to invoke the so-called declaratory power of the Constitution Act, section 92(10)(c), which allows the federal government to declare a project as being in the general interest, a provision that has been employed some 400 times in the history of Confederation.

Now, admittedly, the declaratory power has not been used in recent history, but these are not normal times, Mr. Speaker. In recent Canadian history we have not had one provincial government proposing to violate the Constitution, directly undermine federal jurisdiction, in this case over the regulation of interprovincial pipelines, and attack the economic union while also undermining this country's vital economic interests.

Some have referred to the declaratory power, section 92(10)(c), as, quote, the nuclear option. Well, I think it's time, Mr. Speaker, that this Legislature and government call upon Prime Minister Trudeau's government to demonstrate that it is serious about defending Canada as an economic union, defending our Constitution, defending the principle of interprovincial free trade, and defending the country's long-term economic interests by removing any doubt about the federal jurisdiction to override purported B.C. regulations or statutes seeking to block the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion.

Those are two of the amendments that we will put forward formally following my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, let me back up, though, and say that I agree with much of the Premier's remarks. Alberta is blessed to have some of the world's greatest energy reserves. Countries all around the globe envy the position, the blessings of nature that we as Albertans have inherited and developed, and that development has been central to our economic history and our prosperity. Alberta possesses the third-largest oil reserves on earth after Venezuela and Saudi Arabia, before Russia and other countries. If we were able to commodify those reserves at today's current global price of slightly over $60 a barrel, they would represent a current global market value of some $11 trillion. Now, that's a lot of money. I don't even think the hon. Finance minister could spend that much although I'm sure he would try if he had the opportunity.

An Hon. Member: Don't tempt him.

Mr. Kenney: No, I won't tempt him. Don't give him any ideas.

But, Mr. Speaker, $11 trillion. Now, according to the Fraser Institute, Canadian governments collectively owe about a trillion dollars in debts, unfunded liabilities, unfunded health care, and pension liabilities. A trillion dollars collectively. This government is running the highest deficit of any provincial government in Canada as a share of gross domestic product. According to Standard & Poor's they are on track to quadruple Alberta's public debt to some $86 billion. Their fiscal policies and recklessness have led to six credit downgrades for Alberta's debt, meaning that we have to pay more to borrow more. We have to pay more in interest payments. What does that do? It simply enriches bankers and bondholders and diverts tax dollars from public services.

It's not sensible, but this is unfortunately and increasingly the case across the country. There was a period – they called it the Chrétien consensus – of a good 20 years in the country when governments were committed to trying to stay within balance, but sadly that is no longer the case, neither here nor in Ottawa.

Here is the point. We are now not on the cusp of but in the midst of a radical demographic change in our society. We're fortunate here in Alberta to have the youngest average population in Canada. But overall our population in this country: this province is aging. We need look no further than southern Europe to see the consequences of an aging population. When the bills come due, when the IOUs have to be cashed in, when the debt obligations have to be repaid to the bankers, if you have a shrinking tax base and a growing population of retirees and beneficiaries and people who are in their acute years of health care consumption, when that happens, governments can go bankrupt. The government of Alberta effectively once did go bankrupt, Mr. Speaker. This is not some kind of an implausible scenario. Developed governments, members of the OECD, have been verging on bankruptcy because of their inability to service their debts in recent years.

Here is my point. If we as Canadians, as Albertans want to avoid a similar fate; if we want to have the public resources and the revenues, the jobs and incomes to handle those future debt obligations to pay back the debt being racked up by this government, to honour our future pension obligations, to pay for increasingly expensive health care with an aging population; if we want to manage those trillion dollars in accumulated public debts and unfunded liabilities; and if we also want to be able to provide the very best of public services to future generations, the highest quality health care and education, infrastructure; if we want to be that generous, caring, and compassionate society that we aspire to be in the future, then we must develop those resources and the revenues that they represent.

Mr. Speaker, according to the International Energy Agency, they project that there will be a growing global demand for hydrocarbon-based energy through at least the year 2045. So for at least the next generation, they claim, there will be a growing global economic demand for the oil and gas that we have here in abundance. The question then becomes for us as Canadians an existential one. Will we, as some say, leave that in the ground undeveloped and will we in so doing assume an opportunity cost of trillions of dollars of future wealth, or will we do what is right for future generations and will we develop those resources in an environmentally responsible way to sell them on global markets?

Mr. Speaker, I maintain that not only is this an existential question for our prosperity, current and future, but it is also a moral question. It is a moral question because the world's other major oil and gas producers, many of them, are amongst the world's worst regimes. Number one reserves: Venezuela, a socialist dictatorship where people are dying of starvation and deprivation of basic health care, where political prisoners are tortured and imprisoned, a disaster notwithstanding having the world's largest oil reserves and, by the way, a government that fuels conflict throughout Latin America and, regrettably, a government that has fans on the other side of this House.

Then you have the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia: Saudi Arabia, the second largest oil reserves, that treats women like property rather than people and that for the better part of four decades has exported forms of extremism and financed terror organizations in every part of the world. Then you have, Mr. Speaker, Canada, the third largest reserves, and then Russia, Vladimir Putin's Russia, an authoritarian state in gross violation of human rights standards, that as well has fuelled conflict around the world, including the prolongation of the recent Syrian civil war. Then in the top 10 you have other jurisdictions like the emirate of Qatar which, even more than Saudi Arabia, is responsible for bankrolling genocidal organizations like Daesh, the so-called Islamic State in Iraq and Syria, and you have the Islamic Republic of Iran that hangs gay men, that is responsible for stoning women accused of adultery, that through the al-Quds Force of the Iranian revolutionary guard is responsible for projecting terror around the world, a country whose leadership has called for the obliteration of the only Jewish state on earth, a member state of the United Nations, Israel. I could carry on, but these are the other countries that are together with Canada in the club of the world's largest energy reserves.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Here's the question, Madam Speaker. If Canada keeps it in the ground, if the B.C. New Democrats get their way and block the Trans Mountain pipeline, if Justin Trudeau gets his way and effectively prevents any other pipeline application from going to approval because of their Byzantine and ridiculous new process; if Justin Trudeau gets his way and quote, phases out, the oil sands; if the so-called environmental organizations, many of them foreign funded, get their way, like the NDP's friend Tzeporah Berman, and shuts down our industry; if David Suzuki, who was recently paid up to $50,000 by the teachers' union to come to Alberta, gets his way and keeps it in the ground; all of these fellow travellers of the NDP, if they get their way and we shut down Canada's energy production, I have a question for fellow members. Will Venezuela, Saudi Arabia, Russia, Iran, or Qatar stop exploration, development, and shipment of oil and gas on the global market? Absolutely not.

This is not, actually, an environmental question. This is not a question about global greenhouse gas emissions because as long as there is a growing demand, there will be a supply to meet it. The question, then, is whether or not Canada, primarily Alberta, will be central to that supply, whether or not we will compete with and displace, hopefully, hydrocarbon-based energy from some of the world's worst regimes. I submit, Madam Speaker, that it is not only in Alberta's interests and Canada's interests, but it is in the world's interests that we see more production and shipment of energy from this province that has amongst the world's major oil producers by far the highest and best environmental, human rights, and labour standards on Earth. I submit that this is a question for our economic future, but it is also a moral question. It is not an environmental question insofar as the growing global demand will be met by supply. That is why, I think, Albertans have a growing understanding about the importance of getting our resources to market.

I was proud to belong to a federal government that saw the approval and construction of four major pipeline projects, Madam Speaker, that doubled the capacity to ship oil within Canada, and that approved the Northern Gateway pipeline that would have given us market access to Asian markets. I regret that after the deal done between Premier and Prime Minister on the carbon tax, the federal Trudeau Liberals by fiat arbitrarily vetoed the approved Northern Gateway pipeline, a project that would have had a direct investment of $9 billion on which, I believe, the proponent had already spent $800 million.

Then, Madam Speaker, former President Obama vetoed the proposed Keystone XL pipeline, an application by TransCanada PipeLines for a presidential authorization of that pipeline to cross the Canada-U.S. border, against the advice that he had received in two exhaustive studies conducted by his own State Department, the second of which concluded that Keystone XL would actually lower global greenhouse gas emissions because if the Alberta energy did not move by pipe, it would move by rail. Whose carbon footprint is higher? President Obama, for ideological and political reasons, rejected Keystone XL even though he endorsed the Alberta NDP government's carbon tax. So much for social licence.

Then, Madam Speaker, after TransCanada had spent hundreds of millions of dollars advancing the Energy East proposal, it was killed by the National Energy Board, which decided last August to change the rules of the game midstream by indicating that the pipeline application would include an assessment of up- and downstream emissions notionally related to the Energy East pipeline. Now, I must say, I found this more than peculiar because, first of all, as I asserted during question period, the production of oil and gas is the exclusive jurisdiction of the province in which it is produced. That was established in the Constitution by Premier Peter Lougheed during his negotiations around the repatriation in 1981 and '82. So the National Energy Board, an agency of the federal government, has absolutely no business sticking its federal nose in the regulatory authority of the province of Alberta as it did. Regrettably, this government still to this day has not raised a syllable of protest to this flagrant federal violation of our hard-fought jurisdiction.

Now, during question period, Madam Speaker, the Premier, to be charitable, demonstrated that she has been, let us say, misbriefed on the reasons for the cancellation of the Energy East pipeline route, by the way, a project that represented a $16 billion capital investment, thousands of direct jobs, potential value to the Canadian economy of hundreds of billions of dollars, and the dream of energy independence. Had that pipeline been built, our friends and fellow Canadians in eastern Canada would no longer be dependent on foreign oil, including from conflict regimes. They could have displaced those imports from Venezuela and elsewhere with ethically produced Alberta oil, but sadly that dream is dead, at least for years to come.

Now, the Premier, as I said, betrayed a misunderstanding, shall we say, about the reasons for which Energy East was killed. Madam Speaker, in August the National Energy Board said that it was changing the approach to include carbon emissions because it had been asked to do so by the federal government. I'm going to quote here from the National Energy Board statement on August 23.

Given increasing public interest in [greenhouse gas emissions], together with increasing governmental action and commitments (including the federal government's stated interest in assessing upstream GHG emissions associated with major pipelines), the Board is of the view that it should also consider indirect GHG emissions in its NEB Act public interest determination for each of the Projects. In considering such indirect GHG emissions, the Board will focus on the quantification of incremental upstream and incremental downstream GHG emissions, as well as incremental emissions resulting from third-party electricity generation.

So there you have it, Madam Speaker. That was the statement issued by the National Energy Board on August 23 of last year saying that it was going to force TransCanada to take responsibility for notional increases in GHGs associated with the pipeline. That means that for the oil that is produced in Alberta, regulated according to our exclusive jurisdiction, somehow the pipeline company had to take responsibility for that even though the pipeline didn't burn the emissions. By the way, what is this notion of an incremental assessment of downstream emissions? What is that all about? Why should the pipeline company be regulated based on the consumption of the energy shipped through it by the end-user? Bombardier, the construction of whose airplanes we Albertans subsidize through our federal taxes, isn't forced to go through a regulation or an assessment of its incremental GHG emissions that are spewed out of the airplanes that burn hydrocarbon-based energy.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Quebec government, incidentally, shortly after this decision by the NEB, cut the ribbon on a new cement factory in Gaspésie with a $400 million government subsidy. Now, that's the business of the government of Quebec. They're free to engage in corporate welfare if they want. But one has to wonder whether the $9 billion in equalization benefits received by the government of Quebec gave them the fiscal capacity to finance the $400 million subsidy for the cement factory, which will, when fully operational, have a carbon footprint of some 2 million metric tonnes per year, more than most of our Alberta oil sands developments. And guess what, Madam Speaker? That cement factory was exempted from environmental review and exempted from any assessment or regulation of its carbon output.

So we get to subsidize – we're required through our federal tax dollars to subsidize – cement factories and airplane factories that produce massive carbon emissions. They're not regulated for that, but the federal government through its regulator was forcing a great Alberta company, TransCanada PipeLines, to be regulated on the basis of emissions for energy that it does not consume. So the energy consumers are exempted even though we subsidized them, but the energy shippers are hit by these new federal regulations. That is why on September 7 of last year Russ Girling, president and chief executive officer of TransCanada, suspended the Energy East application – I'd be happy to table this, Madam Speaker – and I quote: due to the significant changes to the regulatory process introduced by the National Energy Board. Unquote.

Now, let me just circle back and make sure that we're on the same page here, Madam Speaker. In question period the Premier said that the NEB had nothing to do with the cancellation of Energy East, but the project proponent, TransCanada, said that they cancelled Energy East because of the National Energy Board's regulatory decision. I have enormous respect for our Premier, and I know that she would never – I mean this sincerely – deliberately mislead this place. But I would ask her staff, who may be observing this – is her Energy minister here? I would ask her minister to brief the Premier on the actual statement made by TransCanada saying that, quote, due to the significant changes to the regulatory process introduced by the National Energy Board, TransCanada is suspending the Energy East application. There you are. So what happened?

Now, Madam Speaker, should we be surprised by this? When the NEB said that the federal government's stated interest in assessing upstream GHG emissions associated with major pipelines – when they said that that's why they did this, they were giving us a little bit of a clue. They were telling us that they had been compelled by their bosses in Ottawa to change the rules of the game after TransCanada had spent, I gather, upwards of a billion on this project.

And who would be calling the shots in that federal government? Well, I've got to say that I know the Prime Minister – he was my critic in opposition for a couple of years – and based on my experience, let's just put it this way: I'm skeptical that he understood the details.

Madam Speaker, let me say that perhaps the former executive director of the World Wildlife Fund Canada, Gerry Butts, is the person who pushed this policy onto the National Energy Board that killed Energy East and, I believe, with it the prospect of any major pipeline application proceeding in the future. This, by the way, was made worse by the announcement of the federal government a month ago on the new pipeline assessment process.

Madam Speaker, let me introduce to the House this individual, Gerry Butts. He is the principal secretary to the Prime Minister. He is described as the most powerful and influential person in Ottawa. Mr. Butts was once giving a speech, I think in 2012, not long ago, just five or six years ago, in Calgary – courageously, in Calgary – and he unencumbered himself of his real views. When asked on the question of Northern Gateway, "Do you have an alternate pipeline route that you'd like to propose . . ."

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, it's customary to address your remarks through the Speaker; it's also helpful to Hansard. If you turn away from the microphone, they can't hear what you're saying.

Please proceed.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have to unlearn bad habits from the federal House. I will always accept your correction.

Madam Speaker, Mr. Butts was asked: did he have an alternate pipeline route to propose? He said: "No. No alternate pipeline route. I want to propose an alternate economy, with no hydrocarbon-based energy." This is a man who's arrived at the right hand of the Prime Minister with an ideological zeal to, to quote the Prime Minister, his boss, phase out the oil sands and keep it in the ground.

It is time that we as Albertans called a spade a spade. This federal government is not an ally of Alberta's energy industry, and, Madam Speaker, I contend that Albertans understand that. They see this for what it is, and that's why in the most recent public opinion poll Mr. Trudeau's government was polling at 11 per cent in Alberta. After the national energy program – the Government House Leader is old enough to remember this – his father's party, the Liberal Party of Canada, won 23 per cent of the popular vote, and Justin Trudeau, an enemy of our energy industry and our future prosperity, is at half that level. So who's kidding who here?

That is why I urge our provincial government to understand. Yes, of course they have to work with the Prime Minister and his government – I understand that – but, Madam Speaker, they must not make the mistake of becoming apologists for this government in Ottawa that vetoed Northern Gateway, that did precisely nothing to protest Barack Obama's vetoing of Keystone XL, that has killed indirectly, according to both the National Energy Board and TransCanada PipeLines Limited, the Energy East project, and which now is doing precious nothing to ensure the construction of the last remaining coastal pipeline proposal, the Kinder Morgan Trans Mountain expansion.

Let me turn my attention to that project, Madam Speaker, because it represents, as the hon. the Premier has said, a multibillion-dollar investment, thousands of direct jobs, and potentially hundreds of billions of dollars in value to the Canadian economy, not just the Alberta economy.

Now, Madam Speaker, let's be clear. This is not a brand new pipeline. Trans Mountain has been in the ground and safely operating for over six decades, for over half a century, fuelling the economy of British Columbia's Lower Mainland, without a single major environmental incident or problem, for six decades, producing indirect economic and fiscal benefits for First Nations along the pipeline route, which is why every First Nation in the immediate proximity of the Trans Mountain pipeline supports its expansion until you get to the coast.

Madam Speaker, if it weren't for that pipeline, how would our friends in British Columbia have run a modern economy for the past six decades? I mean, their cars are not fuelled by pixie dust or good wishes, you know. Their buses and trucks and their industrial basins in the Lower Mainland are fuelled and have been for over half a century by Alberta oil, and for six decades oil tankers – heaven forbid – have safely and regularly exited the port of Burnaby, the Burrard Inlet, and the port of Vancouver to global markets.

Incidentally, not all of the energy consumed in the Lower Mainland comes from Alberta. A growing portion has come from U.S. refineries in Washington state. Madam Speaker, you know where that oil comes from? Tankers, oil tankers that come down the west coast, our Pacific coast, safely, without concern, year after year, delivering the energy that fuels British Columbia's economy together with Alberta oil.

Moreover, Madam Speaker, Kinder Morgan has already built approximately half of the expanded pipeline. It was already approved several years ago and built without controversy. Most people don't even understand this either, I think, in British Columbia. So this application merely is to complete that project.

Now, this project went through the most rigorous environmental assessment on Earth for a pipeline, through the National Energy Board. All of the opponents had an opportunity to raise their objections and their concerns. The issues around, you know, what happens in the hypothetical scenario of a bitumen spill: all of that has been studied scientifically. The evidence was presented, and the National Energy Board approved this pipeline expansion with conditions, a decision subsequently ratified by the federal Governor in Council. That was done over a year ago.

Now, Madam Speaker, as I said, I broadly appreciate the approach being taken by the Premier in advocating for the pipeline today. I do, however, have to register a reservation that Alberta's NDP government was too late to the party. Shortly after the federal approval of the Trans Mountain expansion our Premier, who can be a very effective advocate, went to Vancouver and issued a press release that she was going to be fighting for Trans Mountain. I thought: that's great; we're going to see our Premier stand up and explain the importance of this and how it's environmentally safe and the benefits for British Columbians and all Canadians. Guess what happened? On that visit, just over a year ago, she had some private meetings at a hotel in Vancouver. She did not give a single interview or deliver a single speech, but she did meet with her NDP counterpart, the then opposition leader and now Premier, John Horgan, who left the meeting and said that our Premier did not try to persuade him – did not try to persuade him – to support Trans Mountain.

Madam Speaker, a year has flown by. The clock is ticking. Kinder Morgan, the project proponent, has spent, I suspect, hundreds of millions of dollars patiently waiting for the rule of law to work. Recently Kinder Morgan's parent company in the United States said that given the uncertainty around this project, they will not be making any major capital expenditures on building a pipeline until that uncertainty is resolved. The opponents of that pipeline, the opponents of Canada's energy industry: many of them are foreign funded, like, for example, Tides Canada. It has received some $40 million in foreign money over the course of the past decade alone. They are banking on that uncertainty. That is their strategy, to create more uncertainty. Their strategy is death by delay.

It is the same strategy as the B.C. New Democrats, as the NDP mayor of Vancouver, as the NDP mayor of Burnaby, as – oh, I think there's a bit of a trend here, right? – their friends in the B.C. Green Party. Their strategy: death by delay, a thousand little cuts, a regulatory consultation here, a court challenge there, a protest over here, an illegal protest over here. Yes, it's almost like they read the foreword to that Greenpeace book about civil disobedience, that was co-written by our environment minister, Madam Speaker. An action a day: that's what we're seeing.

The Deputy Speaker: A point of order? Go ahead, Government House Leader.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition is misrepresenting the situation with respect to the minister of environment. She did not co-write any book with respect to that matter, so I think that the hon. member should correct his historical record that he's trying to place before this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. First of all, I would point out that the hon. Government House Leader did not even provide a citation, so at this point I think we may as well go forward. But to be clear, this is a matter of debate. The Government House Leader knows that. If – if – anybody is confused about who wrote the foreword to that book or not, the hon. environment minister's name is on that foreword. I mean, quite frankly, it can't be any more clear than that. Without a doubt, the Government House Leader knows this is a matter of debate, and he's just interrupting the Official Opposition leader's speech before this House. He should stop that behaviour, and we should continue on.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the point of order?

Mr. Nixon: What's the citation?

Mr. Mason: Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j).

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). I will give the hon. Government House Leader the benefit of the doubt on the citation. I think we understood what it was.

Do you wish to comment on the point of order?

Mr. Kenney: No.

The Deputy Speaker: No.

I just would like to really caution the House to be careful. At times, yes, it is a difference in how we understand things, but we have to be careful, when we make a statement, that we can back it up with accurate facts. That helps to keep the tone of the House civil and respectful.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Debate Continued

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Speaking of NDP environment ministers, her counterpart in British Columbia, it was recently disclosed, spent an evening – I think it was on Hornby Island or one of those places – hanging out with a so-called hive of environmental activists, all of them devoted to shutting down this pipeline and our energy industry. This has all been reported. Documents have been leaked from that group. They were talking about organizing swarms, they called it – their word, not mine: swarms – of these organizations to engage in lawbreaking protests.

Let me be clear, Madam Speaker. I am an advocate of freedom of speech and absolutely support lawful protest. It's a necessary part of our democracy. But these are people talking about planning and executing the blocking of trucks trying to enter the Kinder Morgan work site in Burnaby or trying to create an illegal marine cordon around the Kinder Morgan site. These are the same people that created an illegal camp on Burnaby mountain last year in flagrant violation of a court order, seeking successfully to delay seismic work related to the Trans Mountain pipeline. These are the people that the B.C. New Democrat environment minister is hanging out with. Let's not pretend that there's good faith going on here. We're talking about a minister of the Crown knowingly collaborating with people talking about breaking the law to attack this province's economy. This is unacceptable.

That is one of the many reasons, Madam Speaker, why I have called, since day one of the NDP government in British Columbia, for a serious fight-back strategy, because the NDP came to office there on a promise to use every tool in the tool box to stop Trans Mountain. Like, it's not as though they were ambiguous about this. I was quite intrigued recently to hear our Premier say that she didn't understand the degree of opposition that would be coming from the New Democrats in British Columbia. How could they have been more clear? Do you think they would have had the support of the Green Party in this B.C. coalition if it weren't for a sotto voce commitment to do everything possible to stop the Trans Mountain pipeline? The B.C. New Democrats have been refreshingly transparent about their motives and intentions. Regrettably, for most of the past nine months our government has been, to be kind, naive and passive in response to that hostility.

Let's just be clear. Constitutional law 101: interprovincial pipelines are the exclusive regulatory jurisdiction of the federal government. Nobody should really dispute this. What we have in the Horgan government in Victoria is a pretense that they can somehow manufacture regulations or pass statutes to interfere with that federal regulation, and they cannot. This is black and white in constitutional law, Madam Speaker. But they don't care if they're going to win in court or not. What they're trying to do is death by delay. It's to create enough uncertainty, with the protesters that they're talking to over here and the NDP government in Burnaby refusing to grant permits for construction here and NGOs taking the project to court over here, all of this together, a co-ordinated strategy to say to the investors in Kinder Morgan that this thing is just too uncertain. Now, heaven forbid it ever comes to that, but that's exactly their strategy.

That is why we advocated tough action from the get-go, from last July, the coming to power of the British Columbia New Democrat government. Even then, Madam Speaker, since last July I have articulated a fight-back strategy. I have said, first of all, that we should be calling upon the federal government to invoke the declaratory power under section 92(10)(c) of the Constitution Act to obviate any dilatory measures by the British Columbia government.

Secondly, I said that we should prepare an entire suite of potential economic reprisals, saying that if they start a trade war, they'll have to learn that Alberta will finish it. I talked, Madam Speaker, last summer about symbolic measures like perhaps not buying B.C. wine through the ALCB or not entering into future contracts for the purchase of B.C. hydroelectricity from their Crown corporation.

I talked about doing an assessment of all of British Columbia's major exports to and through Alberta and suggested that perhaps, you know, if they're going to pretend they have the constitutional authority to block this pipeline, we could assert a constitutional authority to impose tariffs on some of those products or maybe stop some of them for rigorous safety inspections. I know that my hon. colleague from Drumheller would be happy to volunteer to engage in some of those safety inspections at the border – sometimes I find he can be very slow moving when needs be – because he knows something about running stuff across the border, let me tell you, Madam Speaker. I've also raised the following question: why would we allow British Columbia to ship its natural gas through pipelines in Alberta to U.S. markets toll-free if they block, effectively, the shipment of our oil to British Columbia and global markets?

Finally, since last July I said that if push comes to shove, if absolutely necessary, we must have as an ultimate remedy what I call the Loughheed strategy. In 1981 Premier Peter Lougheed announced in this place that Alberta would reduce its production and shipment of oil to the rest of the country, forcing a significant increase in consumer prices, forcing the federal government of Pierre Trudeau to come to the table and renegotiate better terms around the infamous national energy program. Now, when he did so, Madam Speaker, he was acting as a true visionary and a statesman. I guarantee you that Premier Lougheed – I'm sure his phone in this building rang off the hook, with energy executives in Calgary saying: "Peter, what are you doing? You're killing my share prices over here. You're undermining the short-term financial interest of my company." But Premier Peter Lougheed understood that the role of a Premier is to defend the vital strategic economic interests of the province and its economy and not somebody's short-term shareholder value. So he did the right thing. He showed us the pattern.

That is why I have explicitly advocated that we publicly announce our willingness to follow that approach in this dispute with the New Democrats in Victoria, but when I did so, Madam Speaker, guess what? This Premier mocked and ridiculed me. It's true. [interjections] I know. Say it ain't so, but it's true. I was shocked – shocked – to hear the hon. the Premier suggest that I was acting like, quote, Donald Trump, that I wanted to build a wall around Alberta and make B.C. pay for it, by adopting exactly the same policy that she announced in the throne speech last Thursday. You know, she accused me of having a temper tantrum, said that a temper tantrum by the opposition leader wasn't going to build a pipeline, for advocating exactly the same policy that she adopted five days ago.

Well, that's fine. You know, Madam Speaker, that's okay. I understand that the NDP didn't want to really get into a serious fight with their brothers and sisters in the British Columbia New Democrats. I understood there was a degree of professional and partisan courtesy here. I understand that they would have preferred that this whole thing would be like one of those World Wrestling Federation matches, one of those choreographed fights. That's what we saw going on for several months there.

But, lo and behold, they had a conversion on the road to election day, Madam Speaker. They called this by-election down in Calgary-Lougheed, and they ran a great, qualified candidate. The Premier and half their cabinet went down there. They talked tough, and they called me all sorts of names. Oh, no: the NDP vote fell in half. Oh, ouch: the newest political party in Canada, the United Conservatives, won the largest number of votes ever cast for a single candidate in Alberta by-election history, and that was with a weak candidate. [laughter] You're not supposed to laugh.

So here's the thing. They're looking at this, and they're looking at public opinion, and they realize: my goodness, maybe we actually have to drop the pro wrestling antics and demonstrate to our New Democrat friends in British Columbia that Alberta means business. I commend them for doing so, Madam Speaker. You know, I think it was Ralph Waldo Emerson who said that a foolish consistency is the hobgoblin of a little mind, so I'm glad that the New Democrats are not being foolishly consistent about this, that they've demonstrated an openness of mind, a willingness to take good advice. I hope sincerely that this is the beginning of a pattern, their willingness to take good advice.

When in the throne speech the other day Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor said that the government is prepared to replicate what Peter Lougheed did in 1981 – thank you and full commendation to the Premier and the government for hearing the message. But it is not enough, Madam Speaker, because when they were in the pro wrestling part of this, their fake dispute with Victoria, the Premier brought in, I thought, a pretty good starting point – it was an attention-getter – and that was the de facto boycott of B.C. wines. Like the Premier, I enjoy and I certainly understand – like the Government House Leader, I enjoy a good British Columbia Chardonnay although I'm more of a beer man myself. But, you know, B.C. wine is a great Canadian product. We all appreciate it, and we love our friends and family over in British Columbia. But we had to get John Horgan's attention somehow. That was, I thought, a sensible first step but symbolic, to demonstrate that we were going to represent our interests.

But here's the problem, Madam Speaker. It was hardly proportionate. Albertans buy about $70 million of B.C. wine per annum, and we sell them billions of dollars of oil, and we're hoping through Trans Mountain to sell the world hundreds of billions of dollars of oil. So it was not in any way proportionate, but it was a symbolic attention-getter. Regrettably, the government dropped even that measure when Premier Horgan said that he would take his proposed regulations on Alberta bitumen shipments to a judicial reference.

Now, in my judgment, that was a transparent delay tactic, Madam Speaker. We already know what the law is on this. By the way, the last time that a British Columbia government did a court reference, it took nearly four years to be finally resolved at the Supreme Court of Canada. It was on the polygamy reference. Now, admittedly, that started at trial court and then went to the B.C. Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court of Canada. But we don't know. I think it's possible that Premier Horgan will start at the B.C. trial court and then, if he doesn't like the answer, go the B.C. appeals court and the Supreme Court. This could take years for that reference to come to a resolution.

Secondly, I have to ask why our Premier did not insist – because let's be honest; we're all grown-ups here, Madam Speaker. We all know that our Premier's chief of staff was John Horgan's chief of staff. So we all know that there were phone calls happening and . . . [interjections] Is that not true? The last one. Okay. The connections are so tight that I get confused. We all know they're buddies, and we all know that they were talking to Victoria as well they should. There should be back channel conversations. There's nothing wrong with that. But I wish that our Premier had said to her friend John Horgan: "Listen, John. Okay. We understand you're going to make this reference, but in Alberta we have to be part of drafting the question. We want to make sure that it's a fair, balanced, neutral question, that it's not stacked in B.C.'s favour." She apparently didn't do that. She has given or the Premier of B.C. is taking the full discretion to write his own question, which can help to create a certain outcome.

If you don't believe me, Madam Speaker, just look at the court reference done by Premier Lougheed back in the early 1980s on the shipment of Alberta gas and on the taxation question. He wrote some very loaded questions and got the answers he wanted from the Alberta appeals court. So I think it was a tactical mistake to give John Horgan a blank cheque on the reference, but it was, in my judgment, a strategic mistake to back away from the wine boycott because now the B.C. government can say: well, they're not really all that serious over in Alberta.

So, Madam Speaker, you know, all of these comments are to say that we are prepared in the Official Opposition to support our Premier and this government in whatever measures they take that strongly defend our interests – I think all Albertans are prepared to do that – but we continue to have questions about the seriousness of this government. We are glad that they've accepted as their policy suggestions that we have been making for the better part of a year, but we want to see those ideas turned into actual policy.

That is why, again, we call upon the government to encourage the federal government to declare Trans Mountain as being in the national interest under section 92 of the Constitution. It is also why we call upon the Alberta government to demand that Ottawa, in its new statutory package around pipeline regulation, exclude any assessment of up- or downstream carbon emissions by the new regulator, the son of the National Energy Board, the Canada energy regulator. We ask that the federal government remove the temptation to get into the regulation of upstream production, which is our exclusive constitutional jurisdiction, and not repeat the catastrophic decision of the NEB with respect to up- and downstream emissions. If the government takes measures like that, Madam Speaker, we will fully support this government and this Premier. All of us are in this together as Albertans. This is about our vital economic interests.

I will close with this. Madam Speaker, our quarrel is not with ordinary British Columbians. The polling indicates consistently that a plurality of British Columbians support the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion and environmentally responsible resource development. Our quarrel is with an ideological government in Victoria that is doing everything it can to attack our vital economic interests, Canada's prosperity, and the economic union promised in the Constitution.

This is not just about Alberta; this is about what kind of country we live in. I believe this is the only Legislative Assembly in Canada that proudly displays the flags of all 10 of our provinces and all three of our territories. Madam Speaker, that is a reflection of our patriotism as Albertans. We are proud to have shared hundreds of billions of dollars of wealth created in Alberta with our fellow Canadians across the country. We are generous and are proud to have shared some of our wealth when times have been good here but bad elsewhere. But in recent years the opposite has been true. As we continue to contribute to the rest of the federation through equalization, through the entire system of federal transfers, hundreds of thousands of Albertans have been out of work. Thousands of people have lost their businesses and their homes, their dreams, and their life savings.

We all know Albertans who have gone through personal and family crises as the human consequence of this. I met people going through adversity every day on the road, putting 150,000 kilometres on my pickup, going to over 900 events in communities across the province, people barely hanging on. It is our responsibility collectively, on both sides of this place, to speak and to fight for those proud, hard-working Alberta women and men who ask for nothing more than a fair chance. They ask for nothing more than opportunity. They ask for nothing more than basic fairness in this federation. They acknowledge that our province and our previous governments, as this government, have been generous with the rest of Canada. Now it is the time for us as Albertans to ask Canadians from coast to coast to stand up and to say: "We embrace a future of prosperity. We embrace a world where Canada, with the highest human rights, environmental, and labour standards, plays a growing role in global energy markets so that the world can be less dependent on conflict regimes."

Madam Speaker, this is the cause for Canada. It is time that all of us put aside to the greatest extent possible our partisan differences, our regional differences to come together in the defence of our country's future prosperity and to demonstrate that we will not relent in that fight for our future.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. My apologies to my colleagues in the House and to those watching that, unfortunately, standing orders will not allow me to speak for the same length of time as the Leader of the Official Opposition and the Premier. I know that you would love to hear me for the better part of an hour, but unfortunately my time here is limited, so I will dive into my ...

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Point of order.

Point of Order Speaking Order

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker, it is customary in this House that on bills and other matters like motions we alternate between the government and the opposition in the speaking order.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak?

Mr. Clark: If I could cite Standing Order 16, I believe, on a member rising to speak, which says, "Every Member desiring to speak is to rise in his or her place and address the Speaker." And Standing Order 17: "When 2 or more Members rise to speak, the Speaker calls on the Member who, in the Speaker's opinion, first rose in his or her place."

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to comment on this point of order?

Seeing none, it is absolutely the Speaker's decision who they choose to recognize to speak, and it so happens that the only individual I saw standing to speak was the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Debate Continued

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll continue. I appreciate that. Speaking about Government Motion 2, am I upset with the B.C. government's repeated attempts to block the lawfully approved Kinder Morgan pipeline? Of course I am. I'm a proud Albertan, and I will always stand up for the best interests of my home province.

I can also tell you that my constituents are angry not only with the attempts of B.C. to block the lawful construction of the Kinder Morgan pipeline but also about the failure of Energy East and of Northern Gateway and all of the barriers big and small that have been put in the way of the development of Alberta's energy industry. I can tell you that I've had many conversations with my constituents, most recently this Friday, a constituency day, in a coffee shop in my constituency, where it was made abundantly clear to me that my constituents are very upset with the repeated attempts to block lawful access for Alberta's natural resources to global markets. It's especially frustrating when our neighbours to the south continue to grow their energy production and steal Alberta's market share while supporting many of the protests that have stalled energy development in our province.

Now, we all know about the story of growing energy production in Texas and North Dakota. The growth in shale oil has made the U.S. a net exporter of crude. But a constituent pointed me to the extent of urban drilling in one of the most densely populated locations in the United States. Do you want to guess where that is? Los Angeles, California. Over the past 125 years L.A. has produced 9 billion barrels of oil and still today pumps 12 per cent of California's oil, with nearly 80,000 people working directly or indirectly in that industry. There's a refinery, the El Segundo refinery, that is the state's largest, processing 269,000 barrels of oil a day. The Wilmington oil field in L.A. has over 1,200 wells right on the coast of Long Beach. There are many other producing wells all throughout greater Los Angeles and some even in beautiful Beverly Hills.

In 2015 a California government report showed that many grades of California crude have substantially higher carbon intensity than Alberta oil sands crude and, in some cases, twice as much. Some blends of other country's crude, Venezuela and Nigeria in particular, are three or even four times as carbon intense as Alberta's crude.

So why do I bring all of this up? Because compared to what happens in the United States in one of the most dense urban areas of the country where there is substantial oil production, for our neighbours in British Columbia to attempt to block a single pipeline, which is a twinning of an existing pipeline, it would be laughable if it wasn't so tragic and frustrating. It's frustrating to my constituents, Madam Speaker, and it is incredibly frustrating to me.

What is just as frustrating is to witness the ham-fisted way that Alberta's NDP have made the case for pipelines. Yes, we know there is economic benefit from pipelines. Alberta, by a recent report, loses $7.2 billion a year as a result of lack of market access. The federal government loses a direct $800 million a year. Private investment is constrained by $5.3 billion a year. The overall cost to Canada's GDP from lack of market of access is $15.6 billion a year. That is a substantial, substantial amount of money.

In addition to the economic benefit, we know that the science is rock solid, that pipelines are by far the safest way to transport Canada's products to market. This includes those double-hull tankers that use not only the latest GPS technology but also pilot ships to ensure they safely navigate the inner harbours on the way to open ocean. By the way, in the 62 years – 62 years – that tankers have been transporting crude oil from the Vancouver port, there have been zero incidents. That's zero incidents of tankers spilling, absolutely none, in all the years since 1956, when GPS wasn't even science fiction.

But in addition to the safety and the economic benefits of pipelines, there is a strong environmental case to be made. This government has let our province down because they haven't told British Columbians that we share their desire to address climate change. Alberta's and B.C.'s interests are and should be aligned. British Columbians should know that Albertans share their desire to reduce carbon emissions, or at least some of us on this side of the House share their desire to reduce carbon emissions, which is exactly what the Kinder Morgan pipeline expansion will do. How? Alberta innovators, including government, academia, industry, and more, are working to reduce carbon emissions from oil sands. The Clean Resource Innovation Network, which includes COSIA and many others, is finding ways to reduce and maybe even remove carbon from Alberta's oil sands from extraction to end use. How many people in B.C. know about the carbon Xprize? It's a $20 million incentive to move new and emerging CO₂ technologies from the lab to real-world demonstration. To translate: Alberta is leading the charge to a low-carbon future.

If we apply some of the economic gains realized from attracting global prices for a product that's still in demand – we've heard repeatedly today and we know that even with the emergence of electric vehicles, global energy oil demand will continue to grow. We know that if we can attract global prices for that product – economists have said that there is a strong case to be made for investing the revenues that we will derive from the legitimate, safe, and legal economic activity of producing oil and gas in this province – if we invest some of that in reducing carbon emissions, we will have tremendous environmental and tremendous economic benefit. These investments would not only reduce carbon emissions from hydrocarbon production and use but would allow Alberta entrepreneurs to do what Alberta entrepreneurs do best: to create the companies and technologies to address a problem the world is grappling with, to attract capital to our province, to diversify our economy, to innovate and create those technologies that we can sell to the rest of the world.

Now, the crude shipped through the Kinder Morgan expansion will also displace higher carbon crude produced in places like Venezuela and Nigeria, and I can promise you that neither of those countries' environmental or social standards are anywhere near Alberta's. Let me be absolutely clear. Alberta's energy industry has the most socially and environmentally responsible energy production in the entire world. Our regulator is second to none anywhere in the world. We export our regulatory expertise around the world. The world is trying to produce oil and gas in the same way that Alberta does, in the safe and socially responsible manner. Having worked in that industry, I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that I have seen it first-hand. It's absolutely true. That is the story that we need to be telling our neighbours in British Columbia and telling the world.

But in addition to making this case to British Columbians, we need to ensure that Ottawa steps up. This is a project that has been approved after thorough vetting by one of the if not the very best energy regulators in the world. The pipeline is safe, it is in the public interest, and it absolutely must be built. The federal government must step up and aggressively send that message to B.C. And the Alberta government needs to step up and aggressively send that message to Ottawa, that Ottawa needs to invoke section 92(10)(c) of the Constitution, that this is a project in the general interest of our country. While it is okay, as this motion says, to urge the federal government to take action – and I will give this government credit for some what I would call gentle nudging of Ottawa – they have pushed, but they haven't pushed nearly hard enough. The NDP needs to be very specific about what they want Ottawa to do. They should declare loudly that Ottawa should employ their powers under the Constitution to declare this Kinder Morgan pipeline a project in the general interest.

In the end the Alberta Party caucus will likely support this motion. We look forward to seeing the amendments that come forward. We do think that there are some areas and opportunities for improvement. But it's not nearly good enough for the Premier to talk about just the fact that there is a carbon tax in an attempt to gain social licence for building that pipeline. It is not enough for this Premier or this government to simply make the economic case for pipelines. And it is not enough for this government simply to threaten another trade war. Alberta's and B.C.'s interests are much more closely aligned than we think. It is up to this government to make that case and to ensure that the Kinder Morgan pipeline is built.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise in support of this motion to support the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion and to call on the federal government to live up to its responsibility to support the pipeline that it has approved. You know, I've spoken before in this Assembly about the personal, deep roots I have with the energy sector. Many of my family members have worked and continue to work within the sector. I've also bragged many times about where I live in Alberta, which is northwest Alberta, which is currently a growing centre for oil and gas activity. Many of my constituents in Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley work in the industry, as do neighbouring constituents. This is not a phenomenon confined to the Alberta side of the border, either. A lot of folks on the B.C. side of the border also work in this sector.

People in my area travel back and forth. It's something that's been going on for many, many years, and it's something that people mostly take for granted up my way. In northwest Alberta we don't have differences with our neighbours on the B.C. side of the border. We share common economic interests and a common understanding of the value that the oil and gas sector brings to the well-being of our communities. So make no mistake. This is not a dispute between the people of Alberta and the people of B.C. This is a disagreement between governments about the best way to develop our economy and protect our environment.

Here in Alberta we're protecting our environment and the future of our economy through an ambitious, nation-leading climate leadership plan. It's a plan that phases out coal-fired electricity by 2030. It's a plan that helps households, businesses, farms, communities, and not-for-profits reduce their greenhouse gas emissions and their costs through new energy efficiency programming. It's a plan that already has made history for achieving the lowest prices for renewable generated electricity, and it's a plan that has placed a hard cap on oil sands emissions. That plan helped to secure the federal government approval for the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion and for line 3. That plan is the reason why we have a pipeline approval to defend at all. That plan is our answer to those who claim that Trans Mountain will increase greenhouse gas emissions. Simply put, Madam Speaker, it won't. Alberta now has a hard cap on emissions from the oil sands. We've given industry the time and room to innovate, to develop new technologies that will enable them to reduce their carbon footprint, but there is a cap in Alberta beyond which the oil sands emissions cannot exceed.

We know the Trans Mountain expansion won't increase greenhouse gas emissions, but what are the benefits? Why is our government so determined to get this pipeline built to tidewater? The answer, Madam Speaker, is very simple. Our biggest market historically has been the U.S. For decades Alberta has been able to sell its oil to our neighbours to the south and make a bit of a tidy profit. Today, however, the U.S. is not just our biggest customer; it is our biggest competitor. In recent years U.S. oil production has skyrocketed, and Americans are now energy self-sufficient. The result? Alberta producers are now selling our resources at a discount. It is estimated that through the course of 2018 the gap between the average U.S. price and the average western Canadian price will average out at more than $21 a barrel. Imagine the impact of that price differential on one Canadian energy company, particularly on players that have already been ravaged by the oil price shock of recent years. Imagine how much harder that lower oil price is making it for many operators to stay competitive, maintain production, and keep people working. Now imagine the impact of that across the entire industry and the damage that it is doing to our Canadian economy. It's certainly not small.

Indeed, in a recent study by Scotiabank, which has been referred to a couple of times today, the cost alone in 2018 could be more than $10 billion. Madam Speaker, a loss of that magnitude will inevitably impact jobs and incomes for working families. A loss of that magnitude will make its impact felt in government revenues that support public services like health care, education, social programs, and environmental protections. The same study suggests that the price differential may ease somewhat as more oil finds its way onto the rail system, but there are economic costs to that scenario as well as oil competing with other products such as agricultural products on our rail system. And, of course, there are safety concerns with transporting more oil by rail.

Madam Speaker, no government that cares about working families, as this government does, could fail to act. In the Speech from the Throne on Thursday our government made it very clear just how far we will go to defend Alberta's right to get a fair price for our resources. As I've said, the single biggest threat to our competitiveness is the current lack of Canadian pipeline capacity to global markets. The Trans Mountain pipeline expansion project will go a long way to solving this problem, and our government has been clear from day one that we will do whatever it takes to get it built.

When the government of B.C. tried to overstep its constitutional authority and regulate something it has no right to regulate, our Premier and our government stepped up. We shut down talks on expanding electricity trade, banned B.C. wines from Alberta shelves, and brought together a task force, Madam Speaker, of experts and notable Canadians to provide us with the best advice. Those measures were effective in getting British Columbia to back away from the illegal point in their plan and effective in making sure that all Canadians knew our resolve.

But in the face of continued threats we need to be prepared to take further steps to protect our workers and protect our industry, and if that means invoking legislation similar to the bold action taken by Premier Peter Lougheed when our energy industry was under attack in the past, we will not hesitate. Let me be perfectly clear, Madam Speaker. Our government understands that taking such action, even if absolutely necessary, could have consequences for our energy sector. We sincerely hope it doesn't come to this. Make no mistake. Our government has no desire to take this step, but it's important that B.C. and the country know that we will do whatever it takes to make sure our constitutional rights are respected as partners in Confederation. If we are forced to take this step, we will not do it lightly, and we will do it with open lines of communication with all our energy stakeholders.

Madam Speaker, one of the most gratifying parts of our work on Trans Mountain has been the support we've received from Albertans from all walks of life, people like the members of the Market Access Task Force, who I want to thank for their incredible work. We're talking about people like Frank McKenna, Anne McClellan, Jim Carter, Peter Hogg, Peter Tertzakian, Trevor Tombe, Ginny Flood, and Janet Annesley. Every one of them is making an enormous contribution to Canada, and I want to thank them all for the work they have done. I also want to thank members of Building Trades of Alberta for their presence here today, representing the thousands of working men and women who work every day in our sector in jobs that are hard, demanding, and crucial to the well-being of Alberta's economy and to the Canadian economy.

I want to note some of their words of support, a quote from Terry Parker, executive director of Building Trades of Alberta.

The Trans Mountain Expansion is a project that would not only benefit many skilled trades workers . . . but also would encourage additional investment in Alberta, to the benefit of all of us . . . We support the work of the Alberta Government standing up for the people of Canada. It is critical that all our provinces – all citizens of Canada – recognize that for Canada to prosper, we must work together.

There are many others, Madam Speaker, but I want to continue because I have some other good words to say.

I also want to acknowledge and thank the indigenous leaders who have been in attendance today, upon whose traditional territory this Legislature meets. I want to thank them as well for their participation in this fight and for their words of encouragement to me and my colleagues. You know, Madam Speaker, there's a tendency sometimes in debates like these for some people to speak on behalf of indigenous people instead of respecting that they have their own diverse voices and can speak very well for themselves.

I want to provide a quote from Chief Ronald Kreutzer from the Fort McMurray First Nation.

The Kinder Morgan Trans Mountain Pipeline is essential to the viability of the economic engine of Canada, the Alberta Oil sands [and First Nations]. Fort McMurray #468 First Nation relies heavily on the responsible development of the Oilsands to provide the necessary economics to be a self-sufficient Nation for the next seven generations.

We have another quote, from Chief Arthur Rain of the Paul First Nation, who wrote:

Kinder Morgan and its representatives have been engaging Paul First Nation leaders and membership for several years. Through these years we have worked hard to develop a relationship of deep trust and mutual benefit.

Finally, Madam Speaker, I want to thank the many leaders from the energy industry with whom I work every day and I've gotten to know over the past three years, many of whom my staff and I have spoken to in recent days.

You know, my government colleagues and I take very seriously the responsibility to this industry and the working women and men that this industry employs. We know the decisions that we take have direct bearing on their future and the ability of hundreds of thousands of Canadians to make ends meet. It has shaped our work implementing the climate leadership plan, a plan which brought the approval, as I mentioned, of Kinder Morgan as well as line 3. It has motivated our plan to provide leadership to support energy diversification in the form of partial upgrading of our bitumen, more petrochemical development, and better access to the natural gas liquids that our industry needs to grow. Our goal, Madam Speaker, is to foster a more resilient economy and a recovery that is built to last.

Finally, it has underpinned our determination to fight for better market access and to get our resources to new markets, to close the gap between the price we are forced to accept for our resources and the price we deserve. It is why we do not take lightly our decision to provide ourselves with all the tools we deem necessary to defend our industry and to defend our province's right to get a better price for our resources.

We know that if we were to act precipitously, we run the risk of inflicting short-term pain on an industry and on a group of workers that have already suffered more than their fair share in recent years. That is why I'm so gratified, Madam Speaker, by the many words of encouragement that I have received from industry leaders in recent days. People have told me repeatedly that while they worry about the short-term consequences for themselves and their workers, we do need to step up and take this step if necessary.

People like Mark Scholz from the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors has stated publicly: we are very supportive of the Premier; she has shown some incredible leadership on this file. End quote.

Mark is just one of the people showing his support and solidarity in the gallery here today. We are joined by others: Ben Brunnen from CAPP, Elizabeth Aquin from PSAC, Bill Clapperton from CNRL, Julie Woo from Canadian Natural Resources, Keri Scobie from Imperial Oil, and Scott Wenger from Suncor. And there are others who have spoken on our behalf to the media or stand ready to do so if called upon today.

I am gratified by the trust that so many have put in us, trusting that we will not act precipitously; trusting that we will not take action simply to grandstand but only when it is truly necessary; trusting that as we understand that our actions have real consequences for real people, we must be measured, mature, and responsible as well as firm and decisive. Madam Speaker, it is an honour to be the beneficiary of that level of trust, and I know that my colleagues and I strive to be worthy of it every day.

Albertans from all walks of life are unified and united: workers, community leaders, many indigenous leaders, industry. They stand together in calling for fairness, in calling for respect for the rule of law and the constitutional authority of the federal government, in calling for Alberta's right to defend our workers, to defend our economy and our right to get a better price for our energy.

Madam Speaker, Albertans stand united. The members of this Assembly should stand united as well. I urge my colleagues in the Legislature to show that unity here today and to support this motion unanimously.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to thank and commend the hon. minister for her remarks and agree with much of what she has said. I have a question, though. One of the reasons that Trans Mountain has become so important, that the stakes are so high, is because of the failure of other coastal pipelines, including Energy East. Given that TransCanada pulled its application on Energy East because of the NEB's decision to get into the regulation of up- and downstream carbon emissions, will the hon. Minister of Energy join with me in calling on the federal government to prevent the regulator from looking at the issue of up- or downstream carbon emissions in future pipeline applications?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In fact, I think I'm on record for letters we have transmitted giving our feedback on the process with the NEB on the overreach. I can say from my conversations with TransCanada that their decision was also based on financial reasons.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am very interested to hear the minister speak for a moment about the indigenous representations with regard to the Trans Mountain pipeline.

I also want to take a moment to acknowledge the presence here of Chief Billy Morin from the Enoch reserve, who's been very interested in this conversation that we have been engaged in this afternoon.

I also want to take a moment to just ask a question of the minister. I know that while the pipeline is the focus of our conversation this afternoon, there's been a very clear message to us from the indigenous community, which I would like to relate and have the minister reflect on, and that is, simply, that moccasins come in pairs. While we are speaking of the pipeline and the importance of the jobs and the economic benefits that come from these kinds of endeavours in this province and in this country, the First Nations communities have consistently been behind and have asked to be participants in and have clearly indicated to me their desire to have the pipeline move ahead.

They've also indicated that their support for that kind of pipeline has been very much contingent upon the fact that we are also doing the other thing, wearing the other moccasin, and that is that we have a climate leadership plan that is taking care of the environment. What they are consistently saying to me is: we want to participate in all that is good in Alberta and benefit from the economic goodness that comes from our natural resources; we also need to make sure that we pass on an environment to our children and our grandchildren that will allow them to live their lives fully and in the traditional manner, which requires that the environment be taken care of. So they have very clearly tied the success we have had with the climate leadership initiative and particularly the indigenous climate leadership initiative to their support for projects such as the Trans Mountain pipeline.

You know, I'd just like to acknowledge that right now there are 124 projects under the climate leadership initiative that are going through the process – 38 of them are already in the process of being built, and the rest of them are in the process of being okayed – that demonstrate the indigenous community's firm commitment to the climate leadership initiative. So they are there saying: we want to work on the pipeline; we want the pipeline to benefit all Albertans. They are simultaneously saying, "We want to ensure that we have a good environment," and that requires that we have a climate leadership plan that is based on our carbon levy.

I would like to ask the minister if she sees how the indigenous community sees the intertwining of these two projects and whether or not she as the Minister of Energy supports the indigenous community in their requests for both the pipeline and the climate leadership initiative.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the motion? Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you for recognizing me today on this important motion. I'd like to start off first by reiterating what the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition stated so clearly in his speech this afternoon, and that is that the United Conservative caucus in this House generally supports this motion. We support the need to stand up for this pipeline going to the Pacific coast through the province of B.C. In fact, Madam Speaker, as you well know, we have stood in this House over and over and over raising concerns on this issue and, in fact, articulating concerns on the lack of action from the government that is across from me today. So today, first of all, I celebrate the fact that this NDP government finally seems to be moving on this important file. It's disappointing for me, though, that it has taken this long for us to get to this point.

Madam Speaker, I am today going to move an amendment on this important motion to make it stronger, to make it clearer that the federal government has a responsibility to use its powers to step in, to get the government to agree with us that their Trudeau allies in Ottawa have to stand up and do the right thing to make sure that this pipeline gets built.

Now, Madam Speaker, we have talked about this in this House for a long time. We have talked about this in question period and in debates, and over and over and over members across the way, members of the government, have stood up and guaranteed that this pipeline would be built, guaranteed that there would be no problems going forward, have belittled and made fun of in some ways the opposition many times for even raising this important issue in this House. Something changed magically over the last few days. I was excited to sit in the Chamber and listen to the throne speech from the Lieutenant Governor and finally see some language in there that shows clearly that we will start to take steps to stand up for this great province.

You know, before he was a member of this place, I had the privilege of campaigning across much of the province with the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed as he campaigned for the leadership of this party. I can tell you that at every stop along the way this issue was discussed. It is probably one of the most important issues that we heard from people across the province on, and every time the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed took the podium, he spoke about this issue. He spoke about this issue.

In fact, if you want to hear some of the things that he said along the way, you could probably read sections of the government's throne speech because they took a lot of his comments across the way. They saw the light. The problem, Madam Speaker, though, is that it took this government too long to get there. My constituents and the people of Alberta don't have time for this government to continue to take six months or a year or longer to get to the right decision, which is to protect them.

Across my constituency of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre people are out of work. The economy has still been tough. Things are rough still. You know, a good friend of mine in Rimbey, Shawn Hatala, a great, great guy, has been out of work. I talked to him on the way up here on Sunday night. He's been out of work for over a year, looking to get back to work. Shawn does not have time for this government to take six months or a year every time to see the light.

So we are going to move an amendment to the motion today that will help us to hopefully see that through. As such, I have the appropriate copies for the pages, and I will wait for you to tell me I can continue, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: We'll refer to this as amendment A1. Go ahead and continue speaking to it, hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. My amendment is to move that Government Motion 2 be amended (a) in the first recital by striking out "the government of Alberta's fight on behalf of Albertans' interests" and substituting "the efforts by the government of Alberta to fight on behalf of Albertans' interests" and (b) in the second recital (i) by striking out "continue to" and (ii) by adding "including putting before Parliament a declaration that the pipeline is in the national interest pursuant to section 92(10)(c) of the Constitution Act, 1867" after "construction."

Madam Speaker, I move this amendment for the reasons already articulated by the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition in the House today to make it clear that we want to support this government's efforts. It has taken a long time for the government to finally put serious efforts forward on this important issue, but this side of the House, as opposition, and, I hope, the whole House will support the government's efforts to advocate for and to fight on behalf of Albertans to get this pipeline built.

The second portion makes it clear that we expect this government and this House to make a clear statement to Prime Minister Justin Trudeau and the federal Liberal Party up there in Ottawa that it is their responsibility to do something, that no longer will we accept paper approval of this project. It's time for the Prime Minister to stand up and finish what he promised the Premier and what the Premier, in turn, promised this House would happen, and that is that we would get this pipeline built. As long as the government continues to avoid that issue, to avoid the confrontation and to avoid standing up for this province with the federal government and insisting that Justin Trudeau take concrete action to get this pipeline built, we may still be here in six or seven months. This is important, Madam Speaker.

I will tell you that the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed – I'm just getting used to not being able to say his name in the House because it was said so much last time that we were here – said on November 10, 2017: well, in 1982 Peter Lougheed shut off the taps of Alberta oil and gas to central Canada to get the attention of the federal government on national energy policy; you know, perhaps we should consider doing the same thing with respect to current shipments of oil throughout the Kinder Morgan pipeline, that existed for 60 years and that fuels much of the Lower Mainland economy; B.C. needs to understand that its economy is partly dependent on Alberta oil and gas, and if they want to violate the rule of law and violate free trade in Canada, there will be consequences.

Now, Madam Speaker, what did the Premier say in response to Mr. Kenney? I quote: I think that some of the suggestions that have come from Mr. Kenney are a very isolationist view of how Alberta should engage with the rest of the country; you know, I honestly won't be surprised if he's essentially saying that what we should do is build a wall around Alberta; I wouldn't be surprised if tomorrow he comes out demanding that B.C. pay for it, and then the next day he'll come out and wonder why it is that we can't get a pipeline built. Madam Speaker, that was the response from the Premier to the then candidate for Leader of the Official Opposition.

This Premier is now doing the exact same thing that the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed advocated at that time. How can Albertans trust this government? What has changed? There's no answer to that. I'm glad it's changed. But we need them to go all the way because the people in my constituency, the people across Alberta cannot afford anymore for this government to take forever to make solid decisions on behalf of this province.

You know, we've been promised by this government that as a result of the carbon tax we'd be gaining social licence, that it would be okay, that pipelines would go to the coast in the future because we brought in this carbon tax. It was okay for the people across Alberta to pay significant amounts of tax out of their hard-earned income because that's what they're going to get. Here are the facts. I disagree with that completely, but at least this government could have delivered on that promise. Madam Speaker, my constituents have been paying the carbon tax for a couple of years now – in fact, it was just raised in January by 50 per cent, I believe – and still no pipeline is being built.

In question period today I asked the environment minister about my constituents, about some of the social agencies that work in my constituency. In fact, I referred to the aquaplex, which is a swimming pool that a nonprofit organization runs inside the community of Sundre so our children and other people can utilize the swimming pool, you know, to recreate. A very important issue. She responded, in turn, by talking about a seniors' centre that was in danger of shutting down rather than talking about the aquaplex, which was fine, and seemed to indicate that now everything was going to be okay, that they're finally reaching out to that seniors' centre to get them some funding.

Well, here are the facts, Madam Speaker. The Leader of the Official Opposition and I were visiting the seniors' centre just a few short weeks ago. Do you know what they got back from the government? They were told: "Have a fundraiser to pay for your carbon tax. Raise the rates on your fixed-income seniors to pay for your carbon tax." That's the social safety net of my community, a small seniors' centre that helps the people that built our community recreate, that gives them a place to go in their senior years to be able to enjoy a great place. In fact, when the hon. leader and I were there, they were trying to teach us how to dance. I have to say, Madam Speaker, that it's pretty hard to teach a guy with size 16 feet how to dance, so I don't think I did very good at it, and I think the leader actually beat me at darts.

The point is that this government told that seniors' centre: "Take all this pain. We'll get you a pipeline built." The reality is that no matter what, we will not get social licence to work on this issue. It's been proven. It's time for the government to walk away from that.

It's time for the government to take concrete action, demand that the federal government stand up. Madam Speaker, you have heard me talk in this Chamber, in questions to the ministers and to the Premier across the way, about paper approval from Justin Trudeau. We can see what paper approval from the Premier's ally Justin Trudeau is worth. We see what it is worth right now. It ain't worth the paper it's printed on. It ain't worth nothing. It is time for the Premier and her ministers to call up the federal Liberals and say: "You must do this. This is in the national interest of our country. Actually do what you said that you would do."

By amending this motion, we're giving an opportunity to the government, who has now given us an opportunity – and we appreciate it – to be able to show that we support them on the importance of this pipeline, to show that they are truly serious about this motion, that their change of heart that has happened in the last 72 hours or in the last week or so on this important issue is true and that they support a simple amendment, a very simple amendment, that will then allow this whole House to be able to send a clear message to B.C. that this is not acceptable and also to the federal government that it is not acceptable for them to continue to provide paper approval, to say one thing when they're in Edmonton and to say another thing when they're on the other side of the country. That is completely not acceptable.

I hope that the government will have a serious look at this amendment. I will say, Madam Speaker, for the record that we did reach out to the government in advance on this amendment. In fact, I met with the hon. Government House Leader just before I headed home for the weekend, so this is not an amendment that has just been put on the floor as a surprise. We are negotiating in good faith. We do hope that the government does what they said that they would do with this motion, which was to work with this entire Assembly to make sure that we have a solid motion that this House can send to this country that makes it clear where we stand and that we will not accept this behaviour anymore and that there will be consequences if it continues.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, just before I recognize the hon. minister, a reminder, hon. member, that even when quoting, we don't use names.

The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Interestingly enough, that includes mentioning your own name in the House, which has happened.

I do want to thank the hon. House leader of the Official Opposition for his amendment and for his comments. I think that they're very, very interesting, and I'm going to talk about those specifically a bit later. I want to correct an impression that the Leader of the Official Opposition and his House leader have been leaving with the public and with members of the House. I think it was the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition who suggested that somehow we've had a conversion on the road to Damascus on this issue. The Opposition House Leader just said, you know, that we're recent converts to this. Madam Speaker, I don't think anything could be further from the truth, and I want to take a moment to try and set the record straight with respect to that.

The government established the climate leadership plan, and it's generally recognized as one of the foremost plans to deal with climate change. Now, the opposition has of course dealt just with what they like to call the job-killing carbon tax, but that, of course, is just one component of a much broader program to help Alberta reduce its emissions to make significant contributions to that issue. The opposition seems to forget, when it talks about the job-killing carbon tax, that, in fact, climate change and carbon emissions are a real and existential problem in the world that the world as a whole is trying to come to grips with. I think that it's important to recognize that it's not a trivial matter. Whether a carbon tax, at whatever level, is in there or not, the point is that we need to take some real action to deal with climate change, and the opposition tends to just ignore that fact and gloss over it.

As a result of the climate leadership plan, the federal government in November 2016 approved the Trans Mountain pipeline. That was November 2016. That's well, well over a year ago, Madam Speaker. We worked very hard, this government worked very hard with the federal government not just on the climate change plan but to secure approval for the pipeline. We were hard at work almost from the outset of this government's term in order to not only deal with the important question of climate change but also to secure support for the pipeline.

Now, the Leader of the Official Opposition has suggested that we haven't really followed through on that, but when the British Columbia government and British Columbia municipalities brought forward actions to challenge and to delay the Trans Mountain pipeline, the government of Alberta stepped up and intervened and actively defended that. We were not idle, Madam Speaker, as they would like to suggest. We have had a consistent policy of aggressively defending Alberta's interests.

When the B.C. government undertook unconstitutional means to try and delay the pipeline, we also responded very strongly and appropriately by cancelling negotiations for power agreements with respect to the site C dam and then eliminating B.C. wine from the listings from the current gaming control board. When we took that action, Madam Speaker, the results were effective. The results were extremely effective in the fact that the B.C. government withdrew its contentious extralegal attack on Alberta's industry. Only then did the Premier suspend the wine boycott.

Now, the Opposition House Leader suggested also in his remarks that, in fact, it was only after the climate leadership plan was adopted that the Northern Gateway pipeline was cancelled. He's suggesting in that that it was our climate leadership plan that in some way led to the demise of the pipeline through to Kitimat, the Northern Gateway. But, you know, the facts couldn't be more different. In fact, it was the actions of the federal government, of whom the Leader of the Official Opposition was a key member, that led to the cancellation of that project by the courts.

I can tell you a little bit about what the courts had to say about the federal government's work with respect to the Northern Gateway pipeline. The Federal Court of Appeal overturned Enbridge's controversial Northern Gateway project after finding that Ottawa failed to properly consult the First Nations affected by the pipeline. "We [find] that Canada offered only a brief, hurried and inadequate opportunity... to exchange and discuss information and to dialogue." It goes on to say: "It would have taken Canada little time and little organizational effort to engage in meaningful dialogue on these and other subjects of prime importance to Aboriginal peoples. But this did not happen."

The Court of Appeal ruling says that the standard for consultation doesn't have to be perfection but whether reasonable efforts to inform and consult were made. The judges found that the federal government had not met that standard. This is again a quote from the ruling.

The inadequacies – more than just a handful and more than mere imperfections – left entire subjects of central interest to the affected First Nations, sometimes subjects affecting their subsistence and well-being, entirely ignored. Many impacts of the Project – some identified in the Report of the Joint Review Panel, some not – were left undisclosed, undiscussed and unconsidered.

For the Leader of the Official Opposition to attempt to suggest that this government's climate change policy was responsible for the cancellation of the Northern Gateway project is beyond stretching the truth, Madam Speaker. It is, in fact, very contrary, directly contrary, to the actual facts that it was the negligence and neglect of the federal government, of which he was a member, that resulted in the courts cancelling that project. If that is the standard of veracity that we can expect from the Leader of the Official Opposition, then I am very, very worried indeed for the future of politics in our province.

Now, the other claim, equally dubious in my view, is that we are somehow now just following behind the UCP on this issue. Well, I don't think that that's any more accurate than the rest, Madam Speaker. While the Premier was touring Canada, speaking to the Calgary Chamber of commerce, speaking in Toronto, speaking to the Vancouver board of trade, building a national consensus on the Trans Mountain pipeline, we had the Leader of the Official Opposition, newly elected, having yet to take a seat in the House, sabre rattling and making bellicose threats to the British Columbia government and to the people of British Columbia.

That's not what we have done. What we have done is move deliberately and judiciously. When legal challenges were launched, we responded legally. When extraconstitutional threats were made, we responded appropriately and effectively. That's the difference between being in government and being a responsible government and being in opposition and having the luxury of just saying whatever it is you want.

Now, Madam Speaker, I spent a lot of time in opposition. The Leader of the Official Opposition spent a lot of time in government, but I think he's going to spend a lot of time in opposition. I know that being in opposition is ever so much easier than governing a province. That's one of the first things I learned after the last election. I want to suggest to all hon. members over there that, yes, you can say whatever you want in opposition, but you may in fact do harm. You may in fact worsen the situation. I suggest that's exactly what's been happening, and that's what the Premier has been talking about. There's a difference between taking appropriate action when it is time to do so, when you have exhausted your other options, your other tools, and making empty threats. That's the difference, I think, between this Premier and that Leader of the Official Opposition.

Now, let us deal a little bit with the amendment that we've seen from the Official Opposition. They propose to do a couple of things; first of all, not to support the government's fight but to support efforts by the government to fight. In other words, they're suggesting that what the government has been doing may not be very effective. Madam Speaker, that is where we fundamentally disagree. This government has been extremely effective in defending Alberta's interests and is going to continue to do so and has sent clear signals to British Columbia and across the country that we're going to continue to do so. So that part, I think, just weakens it. It suggests that the government has been remiss, and I don't agree with that for one moment.

Then there's this interesting thing that they've included as part of their amendment that says: including declaring the pipeline in the national interest by use of section 92(10)(c) of the Constitution. Now, that's a very interesting thing. I know that Senator Black from Calgary has introduced something in the Senate along the same lines, but I think we should take a close look at what that section actually says. Section 92 says, "In each Province the Legislature may exclusively make Laws in relation to Matters coming within the Classes of Subjects next hereinafter enumerated; that is to say," blah, blah, blah. But section (10) of that says, "Local Works and Undertakings other than such as are of the following Classes." And (10)(c), which this amendment specifically refers to, says, "Such Works as, although wholly situate within the Province, are before or after their Execution declared by the Parliament of Canada to be for the general Advantage of Canada or for the Advantage of Two or more of the Provinces."

Now, there's the thing, Madam Speaker. This clause is intended to be used to exert federal authority in a case of national interest in something that is entirely within a province, because sometimes things within provincial jurisdiction may be in the national interest. That's what the clause is there to do. But in regard to interprovincial matters such as pipelines the government clearly has the constitutional authority to act. It does not need this clause, nor does this clause apply to interprovincial matters such as pipelines.

The opposition wants us to pass this so that they can look like, you know, they're really toughening up the positions, but in fact they're introducing an amendment that invokes an entirely irrelevant section of the Constitution and pretending that that somehow adds something to the debate. It doesn't, Madam Speaker.

For those reasons, there's no reason for this House to support that part of their amendment either because it clearly refers to things entirely within provincial jurisdiction. Every Albertan knows already that this is a matter of interprovincial trade and is clearly within the jurisdiction of the federal government. We don't need this. In fact, it may muddy the waters, so I think that the House should reject it.

Just in conclusion, Madam Speaker, this government has worked very hard to protect the jobs and the security of Albertans, and we're going to continue to do so.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), the hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Nixon: Madam Speaker, not on debate, but the table officers asked me to point out on my amendment that I would like to request that this amendment be voted in three separate votes, those being part (a), part (b)(i), and, finally, part (b)(ii).

My colleague would like to speak under 29(2)(a), I believe.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate that. I was interested to hear the Government House Leader's comments. He covered quite a bit of ground, and I'm not sure I can really comment to him on everything in the five minutes allotted, but I'm going to start. I have to say that he spent some time talking about being effective. Well, I would say to the hon. Government House Leader, through you, of course, that the definition of effective is getting other people to do things that need to be done and things that you say need to be done.

I would submit to you, Madam Speaker, that the hon. Premier and Government House Leader were largely sitting on their hands on these issues until the Leader of the Official Opposition became a factor and made his views known. Suddenly the government's entire focus shifted based on that, including the throne speech.

Broad sections of it could have been written by this side of the House and, in particular, our leader.

Now, I would submit that if there is any definition of being effective, that is it, when you, being the leader of a party in the minority in a Legislature, can get the government to do a whole range of things that they absolutely were sitting on their hands about and refused to do until you showed up on the scene, and suddenly they're spending all of their time trying to look as if they were the Leader of the Official Opposition by copying all the things that they had made fun of ever so recently, beginning with the idea of the legal challenge.

Now, in fact, Madam Speaker, I'll say that the government themselves can't quite get their story straight. The Premier today had said of the idea of raising section 92(10)(c) that the government already has that power, so it's not necessary. Now the Government House Leader has said that, in fact, the section won't be used. So the government, I would suggest, probably needs to have a huddle and get on the same page. The Government House Leader and the Premier aren't even on the same page, let alone all the other private members on the government side.

The other thing, too, is that we and our leader have been quite supportive, frankly, of the Premier and the government when they have done the things we've suggested, getting B.C.'s attention. We were even supportive of the Premier and the government when they put on the wine ban. In fact, we kind of agreed with the Premier and continue to agree that that got the B.C. government's attention. We're a little more disappointed that they folded their tent after about a week and left the impression – I know it's not exactly a week. Somebody will quibble over whether it was two weeks or one. Nonetheless, they folded their tent and left the people of B.C. and, in particular, the government of B.C. to have the impression that Alberta has nailed it in, they're all done, and they're not interested anymore.

What you have here is a government pretending – pretending – to have cared about this issue but that really only woke up from the blissful slumber after the Leader of the Official Opposition started speaking publicly about this, even from the time before he was the Leader of the Official Opposition. So I think it rings pretty hollow to me when the Government House Leader is trying to leave the impression that they actually were making an impression and working hard. I would add as additional evidence to that the fact that when the Premier a year ago went to see the person who's now the Premier of British Columbia, that person, now Premier Horgan, made it clear to the media – you don't have to take my word for it. He told the media that the Premier didn't even press him on the pipeline issue. So when the Government House Leader is trying to say that they're not, that they haven't been converted on the road to trying to get re-elected, I think no one will believe that because the evidence is all to the contrary. All to the contrary.

Further, it is true that, frankly, the government's friend Prime Minister Trudeau was part of killing Energy East through the National Energy Board. I don't think there's any doubt about that. This is the same Prime Minister that in one breath – of course, I would caution the government to be careful about whom they make friends with because they can't . . . [Mr. McIver's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Again, I'd like to reiterate what the Leader of the Opposition said earlier and commend the government on moving forward with this. I think that's something that we can all agree on.

It's interesting because when I think back to when the Minister of Energy and I both started out on this, we were both starting at a sort of similar level with – I can't speak for her but for myself, anyway – quite a limited understanding of just what an immense resource we have in this province. The language around how we are perceived, whether that's globally or within our province or within our country, requires some teeth. It requires people who truly believe in resources and understand the privilege that we have in this province in bringing those resources forward, especially the amazingly incredible manner in which we do it, in the responsible way that we develop resources here.

I think back to that time as a new MLA and the way that the energy industry just sort of opened up their arms and educated me in understanding what was important. It became very clear to me at that point in time that Alberta needed people to take that stance and bring forward all of the positive things that were already being done in previous governments and then things that would come forward in this government as well but, mostly, just understand Albertans and the mentality here and the fabric of who we are in this province. We are job creators, not governments but actually people, the industry. That's the fabric of who we are in this province.

If you talk to anybody on the street at any time – and I wear my I love Alberta oil sands T-shirt pretty much everywhere I go. Believe me; I've gotten into some interesting conversations as a result of that. But the more important thing about it, Madam Speaker, is actually having that conversation. I think, to the credit of our House leader on this side, that's what he's talking about when talking about strengthening this bill and strengthening the language that's in there. It's not just about saying it. It's about saying it and meaning it and feeling it and putting it across in a way that everybody around you is inspired by what you're actually doing here, not the rhetoric, not the stuff that we hear all the time. It's about actually feeling at a visceral level the privilege of what we have in this province. I mean, the Leader of the Opposition said it very, very well.

One of the things that you have to think about is that carbon leakage aspect. One of the things that continuously doesn't get spoken about in any meaningful way and that needs to be continued is that no matter what we do here – no matter what we do – there is so much more oil that is going to be produced and other products in the world that will provide for other countries what it is that we can already do way better than anybody else. Nobody can dispute that in this House.

Truthfully, I remember when I was first starting out in understanding the industry and trying to figure out sort of what was going on. Everywhere we went, when we were talking with people who were trying to understand what the government was doing, all we heard were negative things about our resources. I can attest to that. Honestly, since I've been in this House, we've done nothing, on this side anyway, except to try and promote the industry. And it came up against one attack after another: you're a climate denier; you're this; you're that, whatever names could be called to people that actually were standing up for resource development in this province. Really?

I have a very, very difficult time believing that all of a sudden the government has just made a turn. I mean, I'm grateful. I hope it continues. I would love nothing more than to support that. But the language needs to be inspirational. It needs to alter the way that – I mean, when the minister of environmental change was in Paris the first and the second time, I don't recall seeing anything in the news where she actually stood up and talked to people that were in Europe saying that we are the tar sands, that we're dirty oil. There were no articles coming from the minister on that side or Minister McKenna, for that matter, saying what great producers we are here, that people in the world should be taking a leaf out of our book, that they should be looking at what we're doing here. Not one.

I looked because I thought by the second or third time that if people in the government actually believed that we in this province are the best at what we do in the world, the language would have changed. But no. All of the articles were saying that we're still the dirty tar sands, that we're these massive producers. Okay. Yes, we are carbon intensive. Nobody is suggesting the latter. However, if you actually want to learn how to do this right, we are the best. We should be using that language, especially when it comes to B.C.

I mean, what I found interesting is that there was another piece that came out where they were saying something about the Leader of the Official Opposition, that somehow the way that he was speaking was going to cause issues with investment here and that's because he was anti climate plan or something along those lines and that we shouldn't be looking at suing the federal government because it would cost too much money for Albertans. Yet the government had no problem doing that with PPAs, no problem suing themselves, no problem suing Enmax or anybody else to the tune of $2.6 billion but isn't willing to at least look at it from a different perspective and see what constitutional rights we have with respect to the federal government. I find that extremely frustrating.

I can understand the difficulty. You know, the government is catching all sorts of grief – right? – on the carbon tax, that they didn't campaign on, to rebate, to not rebate, free light bulbs. Then the Prime Minister told them that within their plan, pipeline expansion was possible. Really? On one hand, the provincial government is saying that it's interprovincial trade, and then on the other hand, they're saying that it's federal jurisdiction. My understanding is that it's federal jurisdiction. The things that are happening with B.C. are being empowered not only by the federal government but by inaction from the government before that.

Again, I love the fact that we're making this turn. This is fantastic. I fully support the motion and fully support making it stronger because the B.C. government now stands in the way. On top of that, we have the likes of Tzeporah Berman and Karen Mahon, who were hand-picked by that minister to be on the oil sands advisory panel, who are now actively campaigning against pipelines – actively – and the Alberta taxpayer paid for those two to be on that panel. So we haven't bought social licence.

To tell you the truth, Madam Speaker, my understanding of social licence was that the NEB or whatever arm's-length group that was involved in this particular situation – social licence is actually working with the groups that are impacted by disturbance. For example, in Trans Mountain pipeline there's a small percentage – I think it's 11 per cent disturbance – that is changing, because the pipeline is already there. They're doubling it. I think there's about – I'm not sure if my numbers are correct – 11 per cent disturbance. My understanding of social licence was and always has been that folks that are along the pipeline, anybody that's going to be impacted, no matter who you are, whether you're a farmer, First Nations, or anybody else, has to be able to be, by the NEB, constantly in contact, updated on changes, made sure that they understand. Those are social licence things. Those are actually ingrained or were ingrained in the NEB previous to this situation.

My understanding is that it was already there. I didn't think it was something we had to purchase or bargain for. I think the words, the term, the sentence has been misused. We already had a process that was extremely, extremely well rounded and thoughtful. Yes, there have been mistakes made – I have no doubt about that – but that was not a reason for cancellation. That was a reason to look at it and see how we could do better. At least, that was my understanding. That's what social licence was supposed to deliver. When mistakes have been made, that's the whole point. That's why it exists.

You know, Tzepporah Berman made an interesting comment. She said: we need pipelines for a climate plan is like saying we are selling cigarettes to people to get them to stop smoking. It's an interesting conflation – isn't it? – comparing basically the prosperity of Canada, who we are, down to cigarette smoking. I mean, doesn't that tell you something about the people that we've engaged to come into our province to work on the oil sands advisory panel? Then they go back out into the world and fight with this kind of language. I mean, where is ours? Where is ours? That's why this legislation needs a little bit more teeth, in my opinion, for whatever it's worth.

Senator David Tkachuk had a recent article that he was speaking in, and he said that British Columbians think they can kill pipelines because they know Ottawa doesn't care. Why is that, do you think? Why do you think Ottawa doesn't care? If that's the truth. The language isn't there to inspire, to see what is actually possible here about prosperity because nobody is speaking up for that. Are we that risk averse that we're not willing to take a stand and step forward and, you know, take a little bit of it? I know. I realize it's difficult, especially when you've sold a climate action plan as being the reason to get social licence, to get pipelines and that it's not working out as you had planned. Madam Speaker, I understand that. I think anybody would have difficulty with that.

Having said that, you have to take a step back and understand: what is it that we're actually trying to accomplish here? We're trying to make sure that those of us who have the privilege of being in here are speaking on behalf of Albertans, and Albertans – we all know this; we all have the privilege of speaking to them all the time – love this province. They come from all over the world to work in this province and not for any particular – there are a lot of different jobs. There are a lot of different things that spin off as a result of energy jobs, mostly because we had the opportunity to provide them with that, with a life, a way of life that is second to none.

You know, it's interesting. When we talk about the National Energy Board and the Trans Mountain pipeline, did you know, Madam Speaker, that the project had a 29-month review from the National Energy Board? In fact, they actually said that the pipeline was in the public interest. Even more interesting is that it has an environmental assessment certificate already done. It's worth about $7.4 billion just as it is.

I mean, I think we can all agree in here that B.C. is being reckless.

The thing is that when a province or anybody, for that matter, feels empowered to move forward and feels like they have the upper hand, they're going to do that. They're going against this approved process. That's, again, something that we can all agree on in here. Kudos to the Premier for standing up. That was great to see.

Here's an interesting thing. We've got ballooning deficits, and as we know, we're losing investment to the United States because it's a much more efficient and better place for people to invest in right now. So how do we make it better here? Well, for one thing, we have to be the biggest proponents of this industry. We have to be the ones that – everything that you show, that goes forward is this tremendous amount of pride in our industry, not just saying it, but really, really believing it.

As the minister had said earlier, so much advancement has been made. The industry is doing a phenomenal job, and Albertans do hold them accountable. If there's anybody in here who truly believes that anybody, industry or otherwise, does not care about their earth, air, and water, I challenge you to talk to anybody in this province. The families that work in these areas send their kids to school right down the street from where these projects are. Please don't tell me, Madam Speaker, that they don't care about their earth, air, and water. That's completely disrespectful and should never be said out loud.

You know, we have the deficit. Did you know that in the first 20 years of the Trans Mountain pipeline's opportunities we could generate $18.5 billion in fiscal benefits? This is coming from the Senator. Just to be fair, too, the pipeline has passed and surpassed all regulatory pieces. Again, can you imagine – just to give an example, like, we have, potentially, Trudeau doing a tanker ban on the west coast, another thing that I think we need our government to stand up and expressly say: that is not okay.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate that. I just wanted to talk to the hon. member. She talked about social licence. I'm interested if she would agree that when the government promised social licence and the Premier of B.C. is fighting against them on this pipeline and the Prime Minister of Canada essentially has caused, through the National Energy Board, Energy East to get cancelled – would you not agree that the government has been pulled over . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2) the House stands adjourned until 10 a.m. tomorrow.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m.]

10 a.m.

Tuesday, March 13, 2018

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Morning.

Let us reflect. Let's think of the great strength and courage of all Albertans across this province. During difficult times we need to have confidence that strength will be found from within ourselves and those around us. Let us welcome small acts of kindness and recognize that small acts will make a huge difference.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

3. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly resolve into Committee of the Whole, when called, to consider certain bills on the Order Paper.

[Government Motion 3 carried]

4. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly resolve itself into Committee of Supply, when called, to consider supply to be granted to Her Majesty.

[Government Motion 4 carried]

Transmittal of Estimates

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I received messages from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Deputy Speaker: The supplementary supply message reads as follows. The Lieutenant Governor transmits supplementary supply estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2018, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

The interim supply message reads as follows. The Lieutenant Governor transmits interim supply estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province and of certain sums required from the lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2019, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I have received certain messages, and I now wish to table the 2017-18 supplementary supply estimates. When supplementary estimates are tabled, section 4(5) of the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act requires an update to the consolidated fiscal plan to be tabled. Accordingly, I wish to table the 2017-18 third-quarter fiscal update, which serves as the updated fiscal plan. The quarterly fiscal plan provides the framework for additional spending authority for the Legislative Assembly and for the government.

Madam Speaker, these supplementary supply estimates will provide additional spending to the Legislative Assembly and the 10 government departments. When passed, the estimates will authorize an approximate increase of $720,000 to the office of the Child and Youth Advocate, $1.5 billion in expense funding, and $35.7 million in financial transactions funding for the government. Of this funding, the highest single expense is the reprofiling of $800 million for the municipal sustainability initiative. These estimates will also authorize the transfer of $49.7 million, with a net transfer of $41.5 million, from expense vote to capital investment in the ministries of Education and Economic Development and Trade as previously approved.

In addition, I now wish to table the 2018-19 interim supply estimates. These interim supply estimates will provide spending authority to the Legislative Assembly and to the government for the period of April 1, 2018, to May 31, 2018. This interim funding authority will ensure continuity in the business of the province while the Legislature takes the time necessary to discuss, debate, and enact the full funding required for government business for the 2018-19 fiscal year. When passed, these interim supply estimates will authorize approximate spending of $29 million for the Legislative Assembly, $7.7 billion in expense funding, $559 million in capital investment funding, $160 million in financial transaction funding for the government, and $240 million for the transfer from the lottery fund to the general revenue fund.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

5. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that the message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2017-18 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

[Government Motion 5 carried]

6. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 61(2) the Committee of Supply shall be called to consider the 2017-18 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund for six hours, three hours on Wednesday, March 14, 2018, beginning at 3 p.m. and three hours on Thursday, March 15, 2018, beginning at 9 a.m.

[Government Motion 6 carried]

7. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that the message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2018-19 interim supply estimates, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

[Government Motion 7 carried]

8. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 61(2) the Committee of Supply shall be called to consider the 2018-19 interim supply estimates for three hours on Wednesday, March 14, 2018, beginning at 9 a.m.

[Government Motion 8 carried]

10:10 Evening Sitting on March 19, 2018

9. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 4(1) the Assembly shall meet in the evening on Monday, March 19, 2018, for consideration of government business.

[Government Motion 9 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Morning Sitting Cancellation

10. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that, notwithstanding Standing Order 3(1), the morning sitting of the Assembly on Wednesday, March 21, 2018, be cancelled.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. By way of explanation I should indicate that on the morning of March 21 the AAMD and C is hosting the ministerial forum. To facilitate greater participation, we are proposing that there not be a morning sitting on that date.

[Government Motion 10 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Morning Sitting Cancellation

11. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that, notwithstanding Standing Order 3(1), the morning sitting of the Assembly on Tuesday, May 8, 2018, be cancelled.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As you know, the office of the Speaker hosts the annual event MLA for a Day to give students the opportunity to experience what it's like to be an MLA. That event is traditionally held overlapping the first Tuesday in May. I understand that participants make use of this Chamber during the event, so for that reason we have cancelled the morning sitting on that date in previous sessions, and we propose to do the same this May.

[Government Motion 11 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Auditor General Appointment

12. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur in the report of the Select Special Auditor General Search Committee tabled on December 21, 2017, Sessional Paper 732/2017, and recommend to the Lieutenant Governor in Council that W. Doug Wylie be appointed as Auditor General for the province of Alberta for a term of eight years, effective April 29, 2018.

Ms Ganley: Thank you once again. As stated in the motion, the Select Special Auditor General Search Committee – say that five times fast – completed a thorough hiring process in December and recommended that Mr. Doug Wylie be appointed as Alberta's Auditor General. Mr. Wylie has been in the office of the Auditor General for 28 years. For the past 14 years he has worked as the Assistant Auditor General. He has a wealth of relevant knowledge and experience, which he would bring to his new role. I encourage all members to support this appointment.

As well, I would like to thank our outgoing Auditor General for his service. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. members wishing to speak to this motion? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak on the motion, Motion 12, before the House to adopt the recommendations of the Select Special Auditor General Search Committee in appointing the next Auditor General of Alberta. As a member of the committee I had the opportunity to be involved in this critical process to set a future course of this important institution, which serves to hold government to account and makes sure taxpayers get the value for their money. I think this is all important. I think that's all that every MLA is looking to achieve.

Madam Speaker, the independent office that has been led by the Auditor General helps to give Albertans and the members of the Legislature a perspective that is insulated from partisanship of politics and the spin of government. They do immense work to help sort through a web of government bureaucracy and keep the government accountable for its decisions.

As we move on to select a new leader for this important role, I believe that it is worthwhile to stop and acknowledge the exceptional work that has been done by the current holder of the office for a better part of a decade. Merwan Saher is and has been for some time an extremely dedicated public servant, a true Albertan.

I have to say that he started his career in the Auditor General's office in 1980. Mr. Saher has given almost 40 years of service to the people of Alberta and over the last eight years has done so as the Auditor General of Alberta. As the job of the Auditor General's office is to keep the government accountable and steward the hard-earned tax dollars of Albertans, I would wager, Madam Speaker, that over his impressive career Albertans have saved substantial sums of money by Mr. Saher's dedicated work. As an elected representative of Albertans I would like to thank the Auditor General for what he has done for the betterment of our great province.

Now, looking forward, we must make sure that the quality work of the Auditor General's office continues to go on. Madam Speaker, I am pleased to say with confidence that the people of Alberta have yet another dedicated person ready to serve them. After advertising the position, receiving many from both in and outside of Alberta, and conducting interviews, our committee concluded that the best person to become the next Auditor General of Alberta was Doug Wylie. Like his predecessor, Mr. Wylie has a long track record of public service for the province of Alberta. For the last 28 years – 28 years, Madam Speaker – he has been a part of the team of the Auditor General's office, being a Deputy Auditor General for half the time. His experience and effectiveness in the role leave him well prepared to take on this daunting challenge that's before him. He will now lead this team that does such incredible work for the people of our great province.

Madam Speaker, I just want to conclude by reiterating the importance of this role and this office to the people of Alberta. As a member of the opposition it is our job to hold the government to account, and we do that to the best of our ability in the Legislature. But accountability and efficiency in government take more than just opposition. The Auditor General has a critical role as a nonpartisan third party in ensuring the prudent management of fiscal resources in government departments.

I would like to say once more: thank you. Thank you very much, Mr. Saher, for the incredible service that you have done for the great province of Alberta. I would like to add my congratulations and best wishes to Doug Wylie as he carries on with the important duties entrusted to the Auditor General's office of Alberta. It is for this reason I am pleased to support this motion. Thank you for putting this forward. I look forward to seeing what Mr. Wylie does for Alberta.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak in favour of this motion. It was my privilege also to be a member of the Select Special Auditor General Search Committee. I think the committee has done good work and worked well together, so I fully endorse this motion and the appointment of W. Doug Wylie to the position of Auditor General.

Madam Speaker, I also rise to pay tribute to the soon-to-be-retiring Auditor General, Merwan Saher. According to his official biography Merwan became a member of the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales in 1972 and a member of the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Alberta in 1982. His career as a legislative auditor began with the office of the Auditor General in 1980, where he engaged in various roles. Throughout his professional journey within the office Merwan's devotion to improving the Alberta public service has grown unceasingly, fuelling his decision to dedicate his career to the province. Merwan Saher was appointed Auditor General of Alberta in April 2010, and in 2012 he was made a fellow of the Chartered Accountants of Alberta.

Merwan has shown an unwavering commitment to helping government managers wisely use the funds and resources that have been entrusted to them over almost four decades. I can attest to the seriousness that some departments treat the findings of the Auditor General's reports. The best public service managers launch tiger teams and special temporary work units to fix problems in short order so they don't happen again. The role of the Auditor General, of course, is to improve all the processes and procedures that are in these departments. I feel that he has been able to bring light and bring also an awareness in these departments so that they recognize the importance of the recommendations and the importance to Albertans in ensuring that Albertans are getting the best value for the dollars that are being spent.

Merwan has delivered at least 26 office of the Auditor General reports, and in a place filled with so much partisanship, Merwan is truly a light of nonpartisanship, overseeing the government's finances and processes no matter who is in power and delivering the same fearless recommendations.

With that, I'd like to recognize the retiring Merwan Saher. Also, again I repeat my full endorsement of the work that the committee has done and fully recommend the appointment of W. Doug Wylie to the position of Auditor General.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the motion?

Seeing none, the hon. Deputy Government House Leader to close debate.

Then we'll call the vote.

[Government Motion 12 carried]

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Sweet moved, seconded by Mr. Malkinson, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Speaker and to the members of this Assembly, for the opportunity to respond to the Speech from the Throne. It is such an honour to be able to debate on the throne speech. I'd like to thank Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor for her thoughtful and passionate words about our province and for laying the groundwork of this, the Fourth Session of the 29th Legislature of the province of Alberta. I am humbled and deeply honoured to rise today.

On International Women's Day we celebrated the success of women here in Alberta and around the world. We celebrated our daughters, who represented the future of our province; we celebrated our mothers, who are the backbone of our economy and our communities; and we celebrated our grandmothers, whose wisdom and perseverance in creating a more just and equitable world helped lay the foundation for the progressive Alberta we all love.

Madam Speaker, I am so proud of how far we have come. I am proud that in the heartland of this great country Albertans have elected a government where the majority of ministers are women. I am proud that in this Legislature half the government caucus is represented by women, and I am proud that we established a government with a Status of Women ministry at its core, a ministry that ensures every single day that we are doing our part in government to advance the place of women in our society.

Madam Speaker, as Albertans know, symbols matter. Symbolic figures like the Famous Five help us tell the story of the progress in our society, but as history has shown, for real progress to be made, symbolic rhetoric must be matched with concrete actions.

That is why our government, the government that Alberta put their trust in, took real action. We are raising the minimum wage to $15 an hour because we know that it is disproportionately helping low-income women. We established the Alberta child benefit because we know that it will help lower income families reach their full potential. We took the first steps towards advancing affordable and accessible child care so that more mothers can take advantage of our economic opportunities.

Madam Speaker, the good news is that economic opportunities for women and for all Albertans are looking up. After the toughest recession in generations, brought on by historic drops in oil prices, Alberta is back in the saddle. Almost 90,000 Albertans have found a new full-time job over the last year. Wages are up, our economy is diversifying, and Alberta is once again the leader in the country for economic growth, growth and opportunity that is being shared by all and not just a few at the top. The choices that our government has made were the right ones, and the plan we enacted to protect core public services like health care and education while stimulating job creation is working. I see the evidence in my constituency of Edmonton-Manning.

Every year I collaborate with Women Building Futures when planning my annual job fair. Since 1998 Women Building Futures has been preparing women for career success in industries where we have been historically underrepresented. Their work is critical in creating new economic opportunities for women.

Women Building Futures shared a success story with me recently that really hit home. Last year a woman came to our annual job fair with her sister. She was there, as siblings often are, to lend her support. She wasn't looking for a new job let alone a new career, but she had some time, connected with Women Building Futures, and had a conversation. She ended up enrolling in their journeywoman start program, an integrated job-training program that is offered in conjunction with the province of Alberta. She graduated at the top of her class. And today she's building her own future in the trades, with a new career, a new job, and endless opportunities. It is experience like this that will tell the story not only of our economic recovery but of how our government is working day in and day out to ensure that all women can succeed in today's Alberta.

Madam Speaker, I'd like to take a few minutes to talk about this job fair. It was held over the weekend in Edmonton-Manning. It was bigger than last year but also smaller. Sounds confusing, but let me explain. This year I collaborated with more employers. Quite simply, there were more employers looking to hire. Over 50 businesses, some large and some small, came together to try and fill 500 vacancies across a broad range of sectors. While the number of jobs available increased, I am so very pleased to report that the number of job seekers decreased, and for the first time I had employers hiring people right on the spot.

Nothing is more gratifying than sharing in the experience of one of my constituents finding new economic opportunities and a new job, the smiles on their faces, the look in their eyes. It is replicating the experience across this great province that is at the heart of the work of this government. We know that stories like this are happening with increased frequency. We see it in the job numbers. We see it in the take-home pay numbers. We see it in the economic projection after projection that says that Alberta will lead this country in economic growth year after year after year. More importantly, I'm seeing it in my constituency and in the stories my constituents are telling me and at my annual job fair, where more and more Albertans are finding work and securing their future.

Madam Speaker, as I said earlier, this government resolutely committed to providing economic opportunities for all Albertans. Alberta is the economic engine of this country, and when our engine is humming Alberta's success, our country succeeds. As we all know, Albertans are down-to-earth, practical people. They know that today and into the future our energy industry will continue to provide good quality, mortgage-paying jobs. They know that getting a pipeline to tidewater is an economic and social imperative. And they know that they have a government that will use every tool at its disposal to get energy products to market and to get the pipeline built.

Let's be clear. We will get the Trans Mountain pipeline built. We will do whatever it takes. This government has already succeeded where others said that we would fail. We did what many thought was impossible in today's climate. Under the leadership of Premier Notley we had the federal government declare that a pipeline was in the national interest, and we had the federal government grant regulatory approval for a pipeline to tidewater. This was a historic step for our province, for our energy industry, and for all Albertans. Now we are taking action on the next step in this two-step dance. Under the leadership of Premier Notley we are working strategically in concert with our partners to get this pipeline built.

While the city of Burnaby tried to block our pipeline in court, we intervened. Albertans as practical people supported this move. When the government of British Columbia tried to overstep its constitutional authority and regulate something it has no right to regulate, we intervened. Albertans as practical people supported this move. They supported our Premier when she shut down talks about electricity sales from British Columbia, deals worth potentially $500 million to them. They supported the Premier when she shut the door on B.C. wine in order to get B.C. to back down on the infamous point 5. Under the leadership of our Premier the measures our government introduced were effective in getting B.C. to back away from the illegal and unconstitutional part of their plan.

When I talk to my constituents, they are proud of this government and proud of our Premier. They see what I see. They see a bold leader and a champion for our energy industry. They see a strategically sophisticated thinker who has delivered on regulatory approval and is working day in and day out on their behalf to get the pipeline built, and they see a government who is determined to do whatever it takes to stand up and make sure Albertans are respected on the national stage.

Let me say this to my fellow Albertans. Thank you for your vocal support over these past two months. From east to west and north to south you've had our backs. It's because of you and the strength of your voices that your government has been successful. And know this. Just as you've had our backs, we'll have yours. We'll get this pipeline built by pulling together as Albertans always do. Finally, know this. Your government will not back down. This project is in the national interest. This project is essential to our future prosperity, and this project will get built.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, I just want to confirm that you are moving the motion.

Ms Sweet: Yes, Madam Speaker. My apologies.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is a pleasure to be here this morning. You know, each spring your government outlines a plan for the future of Albertans through the presentation of a throne speech. The throne speech is a way for us to reaffirm our values as a society, and it sets the broad strokes of a government's legislative agenda. Previous throne speeches and budgets have outlined our commitment to affordable child care, to protected leave to care for a sick child, and to a $15 minimum wage for Alberta workers.

During the worst economic downturn since the dust bowl of the 1930s we promised to have Albertans' backs, and we did just that. We've protected our health care and education. We've invested in green energy, public transit, and the long-promised and much-needed projects like the Calgary cancer centre. Those decisions ensured that many Albertans did not lose their jobs and that many others got back to work. Over 90,000 new jobs were created, and today there are more jobs than ever before in our province's history.

I am so proud of the choices our government made during the downturn and the choice to have Albertans' backs all across this province, but even though Alberta is once again leading Canada's economy, important work remains to be done. The recovery has not yet touched all of my constituents. That is why I'm proud to be part of a government that is putting people first. I'm proud to be part of a government where every decision made about how every dollar is being raised, saved, and invested is being done with one goal: to make life better for all Albertans.

As I move my comments to the current throne speech, I think it's best to review how we got here. I came up with my response to the throne speech while working on my car, which is, strangely, where I'm at my most relaxed, as some of you may know. That car is a good metaphor for where we are at currently. My car is as old as the previous PC government, and just like the previous PC government, it contains 44 years of questionable compromises, quick fixes, and just plain weird add-ons that don't work well together anymore. That's why I fixed it up, upgrading some things with new, modern parts, adding speed and efficiency, and in other areas returning it to stock. I suppose one could say that this is a good analogy for politics here in Alberta. The UCP is really just the same rusted, barely functioning, sputtering car that the PCs were, except that somebody pried off the PC logo and slapped a UCP one in its place. Albertans rejected that tired car. It wasn't working for them.

To govern by putting people first is not about putting new paint on an old car and saying: "There. All done." It's about rebuilding that car piece by piece. That is what Albertans elected us to do, and that is what we see in this throne speech. We will diversify our electricity sector and lay the groundwork for a more stable electrical system by introducing legislation to create a capacity market, a new, modern capacity market that will enable us to get new, low-cost electrical supply that Albertans will need to power our long-term prosperity. The old model relied on squeezing consumers to attract investors. The new model will attract investors through stability and reliability.

Madam Speaker, in other areas our government is taking our best ideas from the past such as diversifying our economy. I know you've heard that one before, except this time we are actually doing it. The Energy Diversification Act will support the commercialization of partial upgrading of our bitumen. It will increase the number of refineries that can accept our energy resources and will create good jobs for Albertans and for residents of Calgary-Currie. This is important work, and it is work that Albertans are depending on us to get right. When I meet people on their doorsteps and verandas or chat with commuters on C-Train platforms or at community events, those in Calgary-Currie appreciate that work, too.

Members opposite like to clamour that we are out of touch with Albertans – tell me if you've heard that one before – but that it is not what I am hearing in Calgary-Currie. People want a car that works and one that works when you need it most. That means addressing inequality and taking action on climate change. And in a riding where over 20 per cent of families work in oil and gas, that means investing in diversifying our energy economy.

I met many seniors and parents at the doors. I met a mother of a daughter who is on AISH. She learned about the work I did on Henson trust, and she was very hopeful that the meaningful changes I brought forward will be taken up by this government, changes that will be made to safeguard her daughter's future. She knows that this government is looking out for her and that we will not leave the most vulnerable behind.

Last November the Minister of Seniors and Housing and I visited Spruce Cliff Downs, an affordable housing for seniors in Calgary-Currie. With Marlys Jordan, CEO of Calgary Heritage and Housing, and Graham MacDonald, the facilities manager, we identified a need for unit replacements. Just last week as part of a $1.4 million investment in affordable housing to build and renovate housing units across the province, Spruce Cliff Downs was successful in securing $250,000 to work with this government to make lives better for senior citizens in this townhouse complex.

This funding complements work already done in Calgary-Currie. Just last year I had the opportunity to open a 26-unit affordable housing redevelopment which will help families stabilize their finances, live in a safe place, and build their lives for themselves and those they love. Just on the other side of the street from my riding, at the base of 45th Street, 160 new affordable housing units are just months away from completion, when they'll be occupied by Calgarians in need. This is putting people first.

In Calgary-Currie we have many young families, and I frequently hear about the struggles families face in balancing child care and working needs. Last year a mother in Rosscarrock, another neighbourhood in my riding, told me she paid $65 a day for child care and was forced to decide whether she could afford to go back to work and place her child in care. She could not. Studies show that she is not alone. I also met with a father living in Killarney, a more affluent area of my riding, who said that he can afford child care while he knows many of his neighbours cannot. What he particularly liked about our pilot project was that we had thought out well-rounded solutions to child care that work for everyone. He's a shift worker, and he has always had trouble finding child care that extends beyond 6 p.m. He said that he was happy to contribute to an affordable child care that works for all and is happy that we are exploring new child care initiatives.

Young families across Calgary-Currie welcome Alberta's new $25-a-day daycare, and this throne speech promises that it will expand this year. This is great news. Affordable child care is the most effective way to tackle the gender wage gap, but it is also effective at creating jobs, good jobs for students like those at Mount Royal University who are training to become professionals in early learning and child and youth care programs. Alberta's $25-a-day early learning and child care centres are making life more affordable for the people of Calgary-Currie, and I want to see even more of them.

We are not neglecting education either. Where past governments announced school after school only to announce the same school four years later, we have taken action by actually building the schools we have promised. A novel concept, I know. We have newly built or substantially modernized 128 schools since election.

For too long Alberta governments – I'm going to stick with my car analogy here – sputtered along with the check climate change light on. In 2015 we campaigned on taking concrete action on climate change, and we have. We struck a committee with leading experts, resulting in recommendations on how to address climate change, and that work has begun to yield results. The carbon levy has resulted in rebates to families and businesses and community organizations like Richmond Knob Hill Community Association in my riding, which used that money to install solar panels to offset costs.

Over 150,000 Albertans have taken advantage of the energy efficiency program. There has been record investment in renewable energy, resulting in new and innovative ways to diversify our traditional energy industry. One innovation that was recently announced by Gen III Oil Corp is the construction of a $90 million, 2,800 barrels per day re-refinery. This will be the first re-refinery on the prairies and just the third in Canada. Many of you probably drove by this project on the way here; it's in Bowden.

I was pleased to host Calgary-Currie resident George Davidson, who is the president of Gen III Oil Corporation, as one of my throne speech guests. We will now have a place right here in Alberta where we can recycle used oil and have it turned into new products, and I personally look forward to giving him some used oil as one of the first feedstocks for that project. But we cannot diversify a ghost town. Calgary-Currie residents understand that you cannot have one foot on the gas and the other on the brake. This is not about the environment and the economy but how they work together, and getting a pipeline to tidewater is an important part of Alberta's diversification plans for a lower carbon future.

Downtown Calgary is headquarters to several pipeline companies, including Inter Pipeline and Pembina, both recent recipients of newly announced royalty credits under Alberta's petrochemical diversification program. Inter Pipeline is building a $1.85 billion propane dehydrogenation facility near Fort Saskatchewan, and Pembina has a proposed propane-to-plastics facility. Employees of these pipeline companies and employees of their oil-producing businesses as well as engineers and everyone involved in the construction and operation of these plants are partners in Calgary-Currie or employees that live in Calgary-Currie. Calgary-Currie will benefit from these investments.

As we work to diversify the markets our energy resources can access via pipeline, we are also adding value to our resources right here at home and laying the groundwork for new renewable energy jobs and an electricity system with more stable prices.

In 2015 Albertans rejected that unreliable car – I love my car analogies – and they replaced it with a government that works for them. Since 2015 I go out door-knocking as much as I can. Prior to the election I thought my local MLA was too absent, someone who only liked to be with like-minded people – I was a mechanic; I moved into sales before the election – and I thought this was wrong. That is why I've been to events filled with supporters and others filled with people that have a concern. Face to face and on occasion in my face I chat with all of my constituents to hear their perspective and what matters to them most.

Just this weekend, Madam Speaker, when I was out door-knocking, I met a man, a lifelong conservative, who could not imagine how anyone could stand up stronger for our province than our Premier. I thanked him and told him about the future outlined in the throne speech, a future where Albertans work together, where they have each other's backs. He, like so many others in Calgary-Currie, see this recovery, that things can be done differently and that good things happen when governments proudly put people first.

I am truly proud of this exciting throne speech. That is why I sought to be an MLA representing the people of Calgary-Currie. The people of Calgary-Currie are energy workers, parents, students, seniors, immigrants, and we all share in this tremendous love for this province and want to see each other succeed, to be educated, and to be healthy. We want each other to have good jobs, and we know that it is important to support pipelines to tidewater while maintaining our environmental integrity. We know that energy jobs are what grow our city, and we know that supporting the arts is just as critical to a well-balanced livelihood and community.

We are also learning that this government's initiatives are resonating with Albertans. They are seeing that progressive values are Albertan values and that they can peacefully coexist with an economic recovery. We are forging the path to prosperity without sacrificing Albertans along the way.

I have truly enjoyed all the relationships I've built with various community organizations and businesses in Calgary-Currie. People know that they can come to my office or give me a call any time, and if they are too busy in their lives to come to my office, I will find them at the doors. Calgary-Currie wants a representative government to fight for them, and this throne speech makes it clear that this is exactly what they'll get.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, could I just confirm that you are seconding the motion to accept the throne speech?

Mr. Malkinson: That is correct, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Why, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure today to rise to speak about the throne speech. Very clearly, if you've listened to the government members this morning, there are two very different Albertas that are currently taking place here across our province, one that the government wants you to believe and one that's filled with constituents like the ones in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, that I hear from on a very regular basis. They certainly see the world very differently than the government would like to have you believe.

I do rise to respond to the government's Speech from the Throne. As you've heard from the Leader of the Official Opposition, they say that replicating what someone has done is the sincerest form of flattery, and I can only imagine how flattered the Leader of the Opposition must be by this government. Last week their speech swung from reading talking points from the Member for Calgary-Lougheed to making further announcements of risky ideological policy. It was something else to see. I know, Madam Speaker, that I spent a good portion of the summer speaking about the future of Alberta and how the best days of Alberta are ahead and that there are many great things to come.

Madam Speaker, one thing that I know to be true is that that's because of the people of Alberta, not because of the government of Alberta. It was so interesting to hear the government's throne speech speak about those days ahead. I really, firmly believe that the best days are ahead of us, but it isn't going to be because this government continues their reckless track record. It's going to be because of everyday Albertans that are committed to moving this province forward.

You know, Madam Speaker, the role of the opposition is to ensure that voices of everyday Albertans are being elevated and represented here in the Chamber. For the sake of Albertans I desperately wish that the government's sunny-skies optimism outlined in the Speech from the Throne was truthful. I wish that I had constituents lining up at my office to tell me about the amazing new job that they have, how they felt supported by this government during the economic downturn and recession. I wish that I had food banks coming to the office and saying, "We're ready to close our doors," that they're seeing such a decline in the need for service, that they've had so few people knocking on their door asking for their services. But that's just not the case. I wish that I had industry telling me that the government was creating an environment where they wanted to create and invest billions of dollars in Alberta, but those folks aren't coming to the office in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

There are a lot of things that the government talked about in their throne speech that I desperately want to believe were true for the sake of Albertans. Unfortunately, Madam Speaker, that is just not the case. Just recently I've been meeting with service providers and nonprofits, who have spoken very frankly about the devastation and destruction that this government has done and the pressures that their legislation and policies have put them under, the type of pressures that come from government regulation and changing the rules that will add significant burden and cost to their service providers. I think specifically about major legislation changes to labour laws that literally will be costing nonprofits $50,000, $100,000, $200,000, where they're going to have to dramatically reduce services because of this government.

You know, in the throne speech we heard a lot of buzzwords like "diversification," "economic development," and "predictable funding" to disguise the fact that despite their best efforts Alberta is still struggling as we go further into debt every single day just to keep the lights on. Madam Speaker, there are currently 165,000 unemployed Albertans. Last month alone 10,500 jobs were lost, and not included in that statistic are the Albertans who've given up looking for work. Even the lucky Albertans who've been able to find employment have not been able to find jobs that pay them the same type of wages comparable to what they were making prior to this NDP government.

The problem is that the government has piled on taxes, regulatory burden, red tape, labour changes, a minimum wage hike on top of an already spiralling economy. The government's job was to do no harm, and they did an incredible amount of harm. Investment fled the province in unprecedented numbers for more stable markets. According to the CFIB 92 per cent of business owners are not confident that this government is committed to improving the business climate. We've seen countless businesses go under, losing valuable jobs and crippling small businesses, which are the backbone of the economy.

Madam Speaker, I've spoken to small-business owners, and they are resilient. They have the entrepreneurial spirit that is built into the very core fabric of Alberta. But, unfortunately, they continue to see a government that works against them. These people are not able to absorb the ballooning costs of the minimum wage, the carbon tax, mandatory statutory holiday and overtime pay, particularly in the nonprofit sector, along with the increasingly complicated red tape that they must wade through. This government is truly crushing Alberta business with their death-by-a-thousand-cuts tactics.

It's not just small businesses and medium-sized businesses that are struggling financially. Our province is facing a fiscal crisis that this government seems intent to ignore, but it is their own creating that has created this fiscal crisis. They frame their out-of-control spending in light of the investment that they're making in Alberta, all while racking up billions of dollars of debt. The government talks about returning to balance as if the additional $45 billion that they've borrowed since coming to office is just going to be found in the couch cushions or something like that.

You know, the NDP stated in their speech that they "did not rest idle or turn [their] backs on the day-to-day needs of people and families," yet those same families, Madam Speaker, have less money in their pockets, they have fewer economic prospects, and they have less access to quality health care and education as billions of dollars disappear into the bloated bureaucracy. Those same families have seen Alberta's credit downgraded six times since the NDP took office. This means that we are borrowing more and we are seeing our liability of borrowing costs go up. This is clearly not the best path forward.

This Speech from the Throne addressed a number of issues, including rural crime. While I was pleased to see the government finally acknowledge this significant problem facing rural Alberta, I am and have been disappointed that it took so long. The United Conservative Party caucus had been calling for this issue to be addressed over 12 months ago. Rural crime is up by over a hundred per cent in many counties all across our province. Our amazing first responders have been doing everything within their power to protect rural residents, but with the economy in a free fall crime has continued to rise.

Last fall the United Conservative Party caucus invited dozens of rural Albertans to share their stories with the Assembly and give a face to these shocking statistics, but when we called upon the government to take emergency action to protect these Albertans, their calls were brushed aside as if we were making things up as hundreds and hundreds of impacted Albertans looked on, whether it be at home or in the Chamber galleries.

Madam Speaker, we have seen this time and time again, whether it is on the issue of pipelines, where the Premier has poked fun at the opposition and the Leader of the Opposition, or whether she has made all sorts of outlandish comments about the direction that we believe should be taken, only to be a convert in recent weeks to the importance of what we have been saying and now taking many of the same steps that we have been calling for. I hope that in that respect we will see a continued trend because if there's one thing I can assure you, it's that the United Conservative Party wants to make sure that Alberta is the best place to live, work, and raise a family, that Alberta is the best place for business to invest, that Alberta is the best place for the strongest outcomes in education, that Alberta is the best place for women to have success, that Alberta is the best place for the prospect of jobs and a growing economy.

One of the ways that I believe we can get there is for the government to continue to respond to the calls of the Official Opposition. When the government has heeded our advice, that is when the government has done its best work, and I encourage them to continue to do that.

Madam Speaker, as I said, I would love to take the government's throne speech at face value. I want to believe that the hard times for the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and right across this province are over, but unfortunately we cannot bring this into existence by sheer force alone. It is going to take some tough decisions, some discipline and sacrifice, and it's been unfortunate to see that up to this point the government certainly has been unwilling to do that.

What I do know is that Albertans have been making those sacrifices, that Albertans have been leading by example, that Albertans have been pressing forward against all odds. They've seen all levels of government, in particular the provincial and the federal governments and the Trudeau-Notley carbon taxes . . .

Mr. McIver: You can't say names.

Mr. Cooper: I will be happy to withdraw my reference to the Premier.

. . . the NDP government and their extremely close relationship to Prime Minister Trudeau. All of the times that the Prime Minister has failed to defend our interests, we have not seen the response from this NDP that Albertans expect. It's my hope that over the next coming days and weeks we will see actual action from this government. Led by the Leader of the Official Opposition and the good work that he has done in his short time as leader, I look forward to what we can do over the coming days and months to really provide strong leadership for this province.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very pleased today to have the opportunity to respond to the Speech from the Throne. We all heard the inspiring words of the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Lois Mitchell, in which she described Alberta's priorities and how the government of Alberta will help each and every one of us. The people in my wonderful constituency of Edmonton-Mill Creek tell me at every opportunity that they're happy to live in such a vibrant and growing area of Alberta and that they look to our government to create new jobs which will benefit their families and to maintain and support the schools, hospitals, and social supports which are essential for our communities to keep prospering.

The dramatic collapse of the global price of oil had a serious negative impact on many of the constituents of Edmonton-Mill Creek and, of course, people all across Alberta. Many of my constituents work and have worked in the oil and gas sector, and the downturn in the fossil fuel industry really hit many people hard. As well, the impact that the lower global price of oil had on not just our oil and gas sector but on all sectors created ripple effects that affected many more people than just those directly involved.

But these are resilient and resourceful people, as all Albertans are, who realize that when one door closes, another one opens. Thus, the message from the throne speech that our government is going to focus on creating jobs in a more diversified economy was very welcomed. Thousands of new spaces will be created in our postsecondary institutions that will be dedicated to technology. As well, a second round of the new petrochemical diversification program will create new jobs and attract new investments. Work is being done with industry to incentivize investment in new straddle plants and the commercialization of partial upgrading, which has the potential to significantly improve getting our bitumen to market. I had the privilege of visiting a plant in northern Alberta near Christina Lake in which they're engaging in research to partially upgrade bitumen, and it's fascinating. The process is ongoing in a number of areas and shows great potential.

Speaking of bitumen, our government is determined to do everything in its power to get our pipelines built to carry our resources to the Canadian coast. As I've said, all our innovations are helping in this endeavour.

Two other measures to help energy consumers is to establish a capacity market to give people more stability in electricity prices and to continue to support the development and implementation of renewable energy, which will create jobs and diversify our electricity mix. The construction industry, another industry that's so important in Alberta and which has been affected in Alberta, is now definitely on the upswing and is creating housing and employment for people all over Alberta, especially in Edmonton-Mill Creek. The construction industry is one of the sectors that is so important to keeping our communities growing and thriving.

A project in Mill Creek that I found very interesting is an innovative development which is a collaboration between a private building company and Capital Region Housing. They're creating a mixed market price and subsidized-unit building, a couple of buildings, actually. Residents who start off in a subsidized unit will not have to move if or when their circumstances change and they no longer require subsidized housing. They'll be able to stay in their unit with just a transition to a market-based rental agreement. It provides a lot more stability for people. Another thing that's so important is that people get the financial support they need. They're able to live in a modern apartment unit. It's close to transit. It's within walking distance of parks, schools, and stores, and they're able to live there with other people and not have stigmatization about being on income supports. It's a really fantastic arrangement. Housing supports of this kind also really help support people upgrading their education, so if they want to be able to qualify for employment in order to be able to achieve their goals and support themselves, this helps to make that possible. Mixed accommodation allows people to be able to receive rental supports without being

The increases also in minimum wages have had a really solid and positive impact on improving people's lives. Many people, especially people I meet – I meet them all the time – who are newly arrived in the country and the community: they start off with minimum wage jobs to support themselves and their families as they improve their language skills, they learn the customs of their new home country, and they try to figure out what their long-term employment goals will be. Many newcomers to our province have professional qualifications or training from their homeland, and they need to spend time learning how to gain equivalent qualifications in their new home.

For instance, as an example, the other day I met with a person who was trained as a pharmacist in their home country. They may need to work in Alberta at a minimum wage job until they're able to get their credentials evaluated, upgrade equivalencies if need be, and write equivalency exams, all at which time will help them gain the confidence and the ability to work in their profession. I met a couple of people in various fields like pharmacy who are now working in small, rural communities who are more than happy to work in very outlying areas that, you know, a lot of people maybe who grew up in the big cities are not so keen to do, and they're providing a valuable service in all areas.

This is in addition to the many other minimum wage workers who benefit from wage increases, people in the community who are tiding themselves over until they have more lucrative employment, people who have started off their working life or who are working toward their postsecondary education. These kinds of jobs are invaluable. Research from other areas which have raised the minimum wage as we are doing shows that having a higher minimum wage allows workers to have a better quality of life and more discretionary income, which gets spent in the community. This small measure to improve people's lives can make a huge difference in how they succeed in the long run.

People in my constituency have also expressed great appreciation for what our government has done and plans to continue doing in our education system. Parents are very happy with the new schools that are being built, not just promised but built, and the education that their children are receiving. As we all know, the education of our children and youth is vital to ensuring that we have a well-educated and well-prepared workforce in the future. Our children today are our teachers, doctors, scientists, and politicians of tomorrow.

Another important measure to support members of our community is to ensure that they feel safe and secure in their neighbourhoods. Our government is providing additional initiatives to combat crime and to help keep families and property safe.

Health care, mental health care, and addictions treatment are also important to Edmonton-Mill Creek. The planning for the new southwest hospital is very welcome news for people in the southeast and southwest of Edmonton. This will be the first new hospital built in Edmonton in the last 30 years, and with the Grey Nuns hospital in southeast Edmonton already seeing or treating twice the number of patients per year as it was designed to do, this new hospital is sorely needed.

In all of our services which our citizens rely on – health care, schools, postsecondary facilities, and all of our social services – it is absolutely essential that we have trained nurses, doctors, teachers, and all front-line staff to keep our society functioning and our citizens' needs addressed. Every day I am asked what agencies provide programs to help people entering or progressing through the workforce and how they can access the services available.

It's clear that Albertans want an economy that's resilient to energy price swings. That is why we're focusing on building on our strengths in construction, in the agriculture and forestry sectors, in clean tech, partnering with tourism, and leveraging what we are already doing well. Our government has addressed and acknowledged the current economic climate within the province, within Canada, and the challenges we are experiencing in maximizing our resource sector through getting our pipelines built to carry our products. We're looking at opportunities to partner with the private sector and the job creators to ensure that we're acting in a supportive way, that we're laying the right foundations to encourage economic growth.

Madam Speaker, I am optimistic that our economy is moving in the right direction, that we have chosen wisely in deciding to build and create in the midst of a downturn rather than slashing and burning to save money, and that we have a plan to get back to balance now that the corner has been turned. With the outlook brighter and the spring approaching, we can all look ahead with anticipation to great things for Alberta and for all Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I've spoken on the other throne speeches over the years, and I like to as a practice actually go through the throne speech and more or less discuss how relevant it is to my constituency and how it's relevant to Alberta and whether or not I agree with parts of it. Now, this throne speech is 15 pages long and it's double spaced and it's more or less very general, I would say, in the fact that it's announcing already-made announcements. Now, I don't see important groups in here, and I can be corrected if I'm wrong, but farmers and seniors should be very specifically mentioned in here. I don't see them in this speech, and that's disappointing.

Starting on page 1, we've got International Women's Day. I have to say that the one thing that I take pride in is my mother. I think we all have a mother that raised us to have those qualities and the morals that we all bring forward to this House. You know, I had the opportunity to have my mother sitting right behind me on the floor during the throne speech. Just remarkable that I had that opportunity. You know what also made this great? It was her birthday. Now, isn't that something that's remarkable that lined up? On International Women's Day I had my mother sitting on the floor in the House during the throne speech. I have to say that this was truly a memorable thing for me and my family. You know what? I plan on passing on the morals and the values that my mother passed on to me to my two little daughters, Amelia and Charlotte.

This actually is something that I would hope this Assembly can agree on. This is quoted from the throne speech. "Women's rights are human rights, and your government celebrates them." I wholeheartedly agree with this. I think that this is a great opening.

Moving on, Saluting Alberta's Heroes is the second part of this. Again, I can't say enough when it comes to our local heroes, and this speech actually acknowledges our local heroes. When it comes to the fact that we have EMS, RCMP, peace officers, firefighters, and our military all contributing to our safety, this is something that needs to be clearly laid out as important to each and every one of us in this House. Again, when it comes to opening, I think that this throne speech did a great job with International Women's Day, and

I also believe that acknowledging our local heroes is an incredible part to be put in by our government.

However, it follows this up with Ensuring Canadian Tidewater Access for Alberta Energy. I believe that we've had some very confusing messages coming from this government when it comes to trying to get to tidewater. Now, I went and searched last night to try to find one NDP government, whether it's federal or provincial, that supports pipelines besides Alberta's NDP. You know what? I will tell you that I was unable to find one that said that they support it. This is where I'm saying that we've got conflicting messages from the NDP Party. We have an entire group that is acknowledging that they see pipelines as a problem, where Alberta needs to get its energy resources to tidewater. It is indisputable. It's a constitutional right. And we need to be pressing this.

Why am I saying that it's confusing? Well, you know, we have a Premier that picks winners and losers when it comes to pipelines. She outright said that she's taking a hands-off approach when it comes to Keystone and Energy East. She is quoted before the 2015 election as saying that. This is disappointing. And you know what? In the end, the pipeline that she was betting against, we see the United States moving towards, and the one that she is potentially saying that she'd like to see go forward, which is Keystone, her own NDP allies and Trudeau government are pushing to shut down. It's truly shameful.

Now, I have to say, in going through this, that we're seeing that this Premier has got a tough message. She's saying that what we need is to start to send a message, more or less. Her plan, which I wholeheartedly agreed with, was to start with B.C. wine. Send a subtle message saying that we're serious. After a week and a half or two weeks she buckles. Buckles. Shameful. We needed to keep the pressure on. You don't just say, "We did a very insignificant move" and not follow it up with actual action.

What we did see in this throne speech is her saying, "We shut down talks about electricity sales to British Columbia, talks that could have meant up to $500 million per year for them." It is unbelievable that Alberta, which has the largest energy resources in all of Canada, is negotiating to buy power. I do not understand how this works. Why is it that we are even looking at that? We're moving too fast with this radical government.

Now, when it comes to energy, you would think that we would at least be sufficient for ourselves. When we need to go outside of Alberta to get energy to be able to support the direction this government is going in, it shows that we have a problem, and it needs to be resolved. On the PPA agreements, the power purchase agreements, the government went in and unilaterally shut them down. And you know what ends up happening? We end up making massive payouts to these companies that are affected by the decisions that this government has been making. Whether it's the carbon tax, the fact that they're phasing out our coal, it continues to accumulate to a point where it is unsustainable to make energy in this province. So we're seeing that we need to go out of our province to make it.

One thing didn't occur to me until I was talking with one of my local farmers. He is buying coal right now to heat his farm. It is clear that this government does not like coal though I have to say that it appears to be an energy source that has proven to be cheap, efficient, and for the most part clean. But what he's saying is that the farmer right over the border, in Saskatchewan – right over the border, in Saskatchewan – is buying that same coal. He's buying coal from Alberta: no carbon tax. So he cannot compete with the farmer just over the border because we're selling our energy cheaper. That is unbelievable. This is carbon leakage. Carbon leakage. This is an example that is happening within my constituency.

Now, I'd like to talk about a member's statement that was put forward by Calgary-Klein. He made some compelling arguments, and we'll start off with a part here.

Instead of arguing at the level of insult, let's look at some facts.

The first is the Prime Minister of Canada's announcement where he publicly stated that Kinder Morgan and line 3 could not have been approved without the leadership of Alberta's Premier and Alberta's climate leadership plan. If the opposition wants to claim that the Prime Minister is lying, that is their choice.

I am telling you now that Prime Minister Trudeau is not doing enough. It is clear that he needs to be called to account, and this government is not doing what it needs to do.

To move on, support from powerful political and business leaders did not come about because we used childish insults. This support came about because we, working as a conscientious and informed government, recognized some fundamental realities. Albertans know that a strong economy and a clean environment go hand in hand. Opposition to pipelines is real. We must engage with those who oppose pipelines in order to achieve lasting results. The benefits of pipelines, both economically and environmentally, are substantial. We must educate and inform everyone of that reality.

Clear. Again, a lot of this I agree with. I don't disagree with a lot of that. I will say that when we come to defending our resources, though, there is no way that we are ever going to convince some of these groups. There is no way to do that. And you know what? The B.C. NDP and the Trudeau Liberals are those two groups. That means that we actually have to take action.

I've spent a lot of time on pipelines – I've probably eaten up more than I should have because I've got to get through a lot on this thing – but I will say that when it comes to pipelines, Bonnyville-Cold Lake is really being impacted in a terrible way right now. Right now our oil companies are unable to bring the economics forward because they can't get the darn oil out of the province.

Choices Made during the Downturn is the next one. This is where the government more or less says that the choices that they've made have made things better. I will tell you that when it comes to 2019-20, we're looking at a $70 billion debt. Seventy billion dollars: this is a stunning number. You know what? This is the government's own number. This isn't something that comes from the opposition. This is actually from the government. It is Alberta Finance that put this number out.

Now, what we've got in the last second-quarter update, the 2017-2018 second-quarter update – and I know a third-quarter update has come out – is a billion dollars of interest that we're going to be paying. That is twice the amount that we're spending on our entire spending for Justice. That's remarkable. In rural Alberta right now we're crying out to the government: "Please, help us with this rural crime, this property crime that we've got in northeastern Alberta. Bonnyville-Cold Lake has a problem, where we're seeing a substantial increase in rural crime. What are you doing about it?" What I can tell you is that as we continue to raise our debt in an irresponsible manner, we will continue to see less and less funds going to these important things like education, health, and our police forces. This is disappointing, that we are actually saying that the decisions that they've made are helping Albertans. I can't disagree enough. It's clear that it's not.

One thing that they've got is Things Are Looking Up. "Almost 90,000 people have found a new full-time job over the last year." Well, that sounds good, but when we actually look at the facts, the facts are that there are 165,300 unemployed Albertans, and 26,000 more than when the government took office are unemployed. This is from Statistics Canada. Again, this is not something that the opposition has driven. Last month we had 10,500 full-time jobs that were lost – last month – and the youth unemployment rate is 13.1 per cent. This is the highest outside of Atlantic Canada. Now, I have say that if that's making Alberta look better or things are looking up, I would disagree. I think we need to be better and more responsible when it comes to ensuring that investment flows in. I'll tell you that as long as there's instability within our government when it comes to decision-making, we're not going to see that investment.

All right. Let's move on to Diversifying Our Economy, and they've actually got Diversifying Our Energy Sector. Now, I would say that every Albertan would love to see diversification. I can't see that anybody would want to say: well, you can't bring manufacturing into our province because – you know what? – we don't believe in that. So to say that we're going to diversify, I would say that we need to do it responsibly. Especially when it comes to taxpayer dollars, we need to ensure . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers? The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate on this issue.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 1 Energy Diversification Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise in the House to table Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act, for second reading.

Bill 1 is legislation to realize a vision of Alberta, a vision of a more diversified energy industry that is a vital part of a healthy and more diversified economy, an economy that provides good jobs for people, growing industries for our communities, and exciting new products for export.

As the Member for Calgary-Klein I am honoured to speak to Bill 1 in the company of my colleagues from Edmonton-Manning and Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater. We're from different parts of our province – Calgary, Edmonton, and rural Alberta – but the three of us share an understanding of what Bill 1 will mean for our constituents and to people in cities, towns, and communities across the province. There are three components to Bill 1. I will look at how the bill will renew the petrochemical diversification program, my colleague from Edmonton-Manning will explain how Bill 1 supports the commercialization of partial bitumen upgrading, and my colleague for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater will speak to a new petrochemical feedstock infrastructure program made possible by Bill 1.

Before we get into the details, it's important to look at the context of this bill. Madam Speaker, Bill 1 is part of a long, proud history in this province of innovation in our energy sector. For generations Alberta's oil and gas resources have been a pillar of our economy and our enviable quality of life, and for generations Albertans have looked to their government to stand up for their energy resources and industries.

Peter Lougheed stood up for Alberta's interests and our right to get full value for our natural resources. His vision spurred the development of our petrochemical industry. His vision spurred the development of Alberta's oil sands. Peter Lougheed understood that Alberta's resources were a blessing and an opportunity, one that Alberta could not afford to squander. He believed that it wasn't enough to get value in the upstream side of the sector. He believed that Albertans were smart enough, innovative enough, and creative enough to take our province's nonrenewable resources and add value to them right here in the province. In short, he believed in Albertans.

But as we saw from the recent economic downturn, Peter Lougheed's vision of a more diversified economy was never fully realized. We are still not getting full value for our resources, and we are still too vulnerable to world oil prices and to decisions made elsewhere. Part of the reason for that vulnerability is, of course, the land lock – hence, the need for new pipeline capacity – and part of the reason is also that we're not doing enough to add value to our resources here at home. Things are looking up in Alberta, Madam Speaker. Our economy is recovering, but we need to do all we can to ensure that this time the economic recovery is built for the long haul and that Alberta's dream of economic diversification becomes a reality.

Diversification does not mean leaving Alberta's traditional leadership in oil and gas behind. Instead, Bill 1 builds on this traditional economic strength to make it even stronger, and it does this by providing the authority to create three new programs that will help Alberta get full value from energy resources and multiply the benefits right across the province.

Components of natural gas that are feedstocks for a wide range of products will drive new facility construction, find new markets, and create new jobs. Oil sands bitumen will be attractive to more refineries and will pass through pipelines with need for less diluent. Energy will have an even stronger role in a more diversified Alberta economy.

As I said, I will focus on how Bill 1 extends and expands the highly successful petrochemicals diversification program. This program targeted propane and methane upgrading and already has resulted in two major projects that will establish Canada's first propane-based value chain right here in Alberta. Bill 1 will extend the program to draw even more investment into petrochemical processing, and it will expand the program by adding ethane as a recoverable natural gas feedstock. It will foster investment in additional petrochemical processing, and ultimately it will further diversify Alberta's energy sector by focusing on creating new petrochemical value chains.

Of course, we are not the only jurisdiction in the world to understand the economic benefits of petrochemical investment. Alberta is facing stiff competition from jurisdictions around the world. Without the necessary leadership in government, Alberta won't be as competitive as we need to be. An extended and expanded petrochemicals diversification program will help Alberta remain competitive. Processing natural gas feedstocks will increase the value of our raw resources and help Alberta get the most out of them in the form of investment capital, jobs, increased economic activity, new revenue from taxes, and more exports.

The components of natural gas form the ingredients that are the building blocks for products that enable modern life. These include plastics, antifreeze, fertilizer, fabrics, toys, and much more, Madam Speaker. As the world population grows, so does the demand for these products. The Chemistry Industry Association of Canada estimates that Alberta's chemical industry exports are already valued at $8.2 billion. This new round of the petrochemicals diversification program will help that grow.

The first round of the program was very successful. It attracted 16 applications, representing $20 billion in private investment. We expect the second round of the program to see similar results. The resulting petrochemical manufacturing facilities will create thousands of construction jobs and hundreds more operational jobs, and that is good news for Alberta workers and their families.

The Chemistry Industry Association estimates direct employment in Alberta's chemical sector at more than 7,500 people. That's half the population of Canmore. That's a lot of jobs. The average salary is estimated at more than $90,000 per year. That supports a good standard of living. Expanding petrochemical processing will add even more good-paying jobs. Those are all very good reasons to support Bill 1.

Madam Speaker, I encourage all members of the Assembly to examine Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act. Consider all of the benefits of expanding the petrochemicals diversification program. See for yourselves how this bill will build even stronger energy and petrochemical industries by getting more value out of our natural resources. I am confident that you'll agree that Bill 1 is a crucial step in helping to build what we all want for Alberta, a more stable, more diversified, more prosperous economy for Albertans and a recovery that is built to last.

Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I would like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Trans Mountain Pipeline

2. Ms Notley moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly support the government of Alberta's fight on behalf of Albertans' interests to ensure the lawfully approved Trans Mountain pipeline expansion is built, and be it further resolved that the Legislative Assembly call for the federal government to continue to take all necessary legal steps in support of the pipeline's construction, and be it further resolved that the Legislative Assembly reaffirm its support for the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion as a key component of Alberta's energy future.

Mr. Nixon moved that the motion be amended as follows:

(a) in the first recital by striking out "the government of Alberta's fight on behalf of Albertans' interests" and substituting "the efforts by the government of Alberta to fight on behalf of Albertans' interests"; (b) in the second recital (i) by striking out "continue to" and (ii) by adding "including putting before Parliament a declaration that the pipeline is in the national interests pursuant to section 92(10)(c) of the Constitution Act, 1867" after "construction."

[Debate adjourned on the amendment March 12]

The Deputy Speaker: Any speakers wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak on the amendment put forward by my colleague from Sundre and area. It's an important one because the government's motion is one that is certainly not everything that we hoped it would be. The point is that what is important and has been seen as important is that the fight for pipelines is important, and it's certainly one that we on the UCP side of the House support.

Let me say this. When the government has actually been in support of the pipelines, we have been with the government, cheering for them, supporting them, being their biggest allies in the world, and we certainly hope that we see more of that from the government in the future.

Now, Madam Speaker, it's important to remember that we actually need to put our hearts into this. The government needs to put their hearts into it, and we all need to put our hearts into it. I think that for the government's sake, they were very fortunate that the Leader of the Official Opposition came on the scene, because that was truly, truly the point in time where the government started to pay attention to this issue, truly the point in time where the government, I believe perhaps initially out of fear for their own political futures, decided to make some efforts here.

But I am prepared to take the government at their word today when they say that they're in support of the pipeline. When they do that, I support them one hundred per cent and the UCP Party supports them one hundred per cent because the pipeline itself is going to be core to the long-term health of our province. It's going to be core to providing a future for all of our children and our grandchildren, and it's going to be core to the financial health of the government of this province and, along with that, the ability of this province to provide the services that Albertans both need and demand, rightly need and rightly demand: a good health care system, a good education system, strong social services, good infrastructure.

All of this depends upon a private sector that is vibrant, that is successful, that is profitable and includes as many Albertans as possible. Of course, the profitable part matters severely because, of course, the profitability is what a lot of the government's taxes are based on, so we should be cheering for businesses, big and small, to be profitable. The pipeline and the government's efforts to get it are potentially going to be at the heart of that. If successful, it will certainly be at the heart of that in the future. Even if not successful, the part of the industry that will go ahead without additional pipeline capacity will still for decades to come be at the core of the Alberta government's ability to provide schools, roads, hospitals, social services, the education system, the entire social safety net, and supports for our citizens.

But Albertans have never really been shrinking violets about the way they make a living. Albertans have always and continue today to act bigger than our population would indicate, to act bigger than our geography would indicate, to act bigger than what our people can consume. Because of this, Albertans create not just more energy than we could possibly consume but more agricultural products, more forestry, and indeed provide more tourism than we could possibly consume. So when the government's efforts are to support additional pipeline capacity, we're with them. We are with them.

The amendment from the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre actually strikes out "the government of Alberta's fight on behalf of Albertans' interests" and substitutes "the efforts by the government of Alberta to fight on behalf of Albertans' interests" because we actually think the government's fight could be a lot stronger than it has been. We support the fight such as they put it forward. We're with them. We're looking for more.

Certainly, I was disappointed – and I believe I'm not the only one of my colleagues – when the government folded their tent on the wine ban after just a week or two. In my view, it left the impression about the government of Alberta that this government's heart was not really in it. I believe that's the prevailing sentiment as a result of the government folding their tent and backing down on that. The Premier and the government say no. Let me say this, Madam Speaker: I would like to believe that. My level of belief will be largely influenced by either the action or the lack of action that the government takes in the future, but we would like the government to take more action. We would like to be there cheering them on, to be partners with them in it, to support them, to continue to cheer for the success of Alberta by cheering for the success of the Alberta government being part of getting this pipeline built. That is indeed what that first part of the amendment truly says.

Now, Madam Speaker, moving on to part (b), it says: by striking out "continue to." To me, that's a statement that the government could do more, and I believe the government could do more. We want them to do more than continue to. We want them to expand their efforts. We want them to make it clear to all Albertans that their heart is truly in this effort, that they're truly putting their shoulder to the wheel, that they truly want this to happen.

Part of that, in my mind, means convincing the NDP's political partners, which is the British Columbia NDP. They are the same party, so I don't think I'm casting any aspersions by saying that they're partners. That's just a fact that I think we all accept in this House. If anybody should be able to get the NDP's partners to come around to a place of reason, it ought to be their partners, the Alberta NDP. It seems logical to me. I'd be surprised if even any of the government members argue with me on that because it is, after all, the same happy family.

Furthermore, we'd like to see stronger efforts by the Premier and the government pushing the federal government and their best friend Justin Trudeau to actually live up to his responsibilities and get this done. Our leader has put the idea of court action, of having a referendum on the table. I would like to see the government follow our leader's lead farther than they already have. They certainly indicated in the throne speech that they're following the direct path that our leader has suggested that Alberta go, and I'm grateful that they have been moved by those arguments. I appreciate that it took them a little while to come around to that. It was fairly recently that the Premier was actually outwardly making fun of those efforts, but in fairness to the Premier, she's come around to adopting it to such an extent that many of the ideas first put forth by the Leader of the Official Opposition became very much the centrepiece of the government's throne speech very few days ago.

So there's hope, and we want to encourage the government along the lines of that hope. We want to help them. We want to be part of the solution. We want to provide more ideas together because we believe, as I believe the government believes, that if we go to Justin Trudeau as the government of Alberta, as a united front and if indeed we can present that united front to the people of Alberta, I think more of them will be believers that we are committed to getting this done. That indeed should actually help the cause. That indeed should help the Prime Minister to know we're not going away. That should indeed help the Prime Minister and encourage him to get off his hands, to spend some time in Canada, and to actually work with what I believe is the biggest economic issue facing this country.

Why is it the biggest economic issue? Because it affects what I think is, if not the biggest, one of the biggest cash registers that the federal government rings, the revenue that comes from Alberta through transfer payments and other taxes and fees and payments. The Prime Minister needs to actually do the job of a Prime Minister, not the job of a movie star, not the job of a celebrity, not the job of someone who's on Dancing with the Stars. He needs to do the job of the Prime Minister of this great country and stand up for and enforce one of the main tenets that holds this Confederation together through the Constitution, the right for each province to sell their goods without interference from the other provinces. It's not a one-way street or a two-way street. Depending on how you do the math, it could be a 13-way street or a several hundred ways street, but the fact is that the Prime Minister has to enforce that right, that main tenet, that core part of the country of Canada that he is sworn to protect and look after. He needs to actually get down to the business of protecting and looking after this country because he has been missing in action.

He, I believe, is hoping this goes away, which, unfortunately, will be to Alberta's detriment because I think the only way it's going to go away is if the shareholders of Kinder Morgan say: we cannot put up with any more monthly losses because the federal government will not enforce the ability for us to get the pipeline built. That risk exists. The Prime Minister needs to actually decide that – you know what? – actions do speak louder than words. Right now the Prime Minister actually needs to act because the Prime Minister's actions now say that he doesn't care. The Prime Minister's actions, which are none, now say that he's hoping this goes away. The Prime Minister's actions now say that he doesn't have the courage to take a side when a side needs to be taken. It says that he doesn't have the courage to lead when leadership needs to be provided for the country that he decided to lead and got elected to lead. He is the rightful Prime Minister and leader of this country, and he is letting this country down big time.

We would be happy to join with the government in delivering that message louder and clearer to the Prime Minister and his government, that we have noticed and that Albertans have noticed. It's not just the people in this Chamber; 4.3 million or 4.4 million Albertans, whatever the number is today, have noticed that this Prime Minister has left them laying in the dust, unattended to by the person most responsible to attend to us.

The risk for the rest of Canada is that if the Prime Minister will let one province drown, choke to death, not be able to make a living because he wouldn't live up to his responsibilities, then the other provinces and territories ought to be saying to themselves at the various Legislatures around the country: we could be next. They actually ought to have Alberta's back because I would surely hate to see – no one wants this. Nobody even wanted the wine ban. But the fact is that we had to get the government's attention, and we supported the Premier a hundred per cent in getting the government of B.C.'s attention. Nobody really wants to stop drinking B.C.'s wine. We just had to get their attention. We also don't want to necessarily stop driving cars that are built in Ontario. We don't necessarily want to stop eating agricultural products from Quebec, eating fish, seafood products from eastern Canada or western Canada. Every province has things that they produce and sell to the rest of the country, and we are all healthier when we share.

So, Madam Speaker, as I close, I would move to adjourn debate with your permission.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll allow that motion even though your time was up.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, March 13, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Hon. members, good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Strathcona Christian academy. They're here visiting the Legislature on their grade 6 trip. They're accompanied, of course, by their teacher, Alison Collins, and their many parent chaperones: Nick, Krista, Nicole, and Tracey. I would just ask the Legislature to greet them with the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature students from Pembina Valley Christian School. The students are accompanied by their teacher, Janalyn Toews, along with their chaperones, Verle Unruh and Barry Esau. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise on behalf of the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville to introduce 56 students from the Win Ferguson school. They are accompanied by teachers Ms Sheila Storey, Mrs. Sarah Burgess, Mrs. Cathy Ord, and their chaperones: Mrs. Carilyn Afaganis, Ms Corrie Sidam, and Ms Chrissy MacQuarrie. I would ask if they would all rise now and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Do you have another visitor, hon. minister?

Mr. S. Anderson: I do. Not a school group.

The Speaker: Proceed, then.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Carmen Wyton, Wendy Jabusch, and Patrick Shaver from Building Industry and Land Development Alberta, otherwise known as BILD. BILD represents over 1,700 businesses, which, in turn, employ over 180,000 people across our province. I will have the pleasure of speaking at the reception this evening at the Federal Building.

Carmen Wyton is the CEO of BILD, and she is currently chair of the Canadian Society of Association Executives Edmonton and founder of the Women's Health Coalition of Alberta. She has served as a community member on several municipal and provincial government boards, most recently as the chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities.

Wendy Jabusch is chair of BILD Alberta. Wendy has worked in all facets of the residential construction industry and is currently the senior vice-president of Edmonton homes at Brookfield Residential, which is one of North America's leading land developers and builders.

Patrick Shaver began his career in the land development industry over 25 years ago and has held positions with the city of Edmonton, Enbridge Pipelines, and was a project manager for the aquatic centre for the Sydney 2000 Summer Olympic Games.

Also attending question period today with BILD Alberta representatives is Thomas Djurfors, who is an executive director in the public safety division of Municipal Affairs. They work closely with BILD and myself. I'm happy that Thomas is here with them in collaboration.

I would ask all of them, who are seated in our members' gallery, to stand and please be recognized by the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I have two introductions. First, it's with great pleasure that I get to introduce the German choir Liederkrantz. Twenty-nine choirs world-wide gathered in Riva del Garda, Italy, for a four-day music festival and competition. On the final night of the festival the judges presented their evaluations to all the performing choirs in the 3,500-seat sanctuary of San Giovanni Catholic church, and it was Liederkrantz, from Edmonton, Alberta, that gleaned the highest marks from the judges in the seniors' category and were awarded the gold prize. This trip and event was a rewarding experience for the Liederkrantz choir members and their followers who travelled with them. This trip was made possible by the financial assistance of the AGLC. Liederkrantz, by their efforts, have demonstrated to the world the diversity and the cultural richness of the province of Alberta, and the moniker Edmonton, the City of Champions has once again been confirmed. I would ask all the members of the choir to please rise and receive the warm greetings of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome. Allow me to say danke schön.

Mr. Feehan: I have one more.

The Speaker: One more, hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: A much more personal introduction, this second introduction, because I'd like to introduce the person who is the most responsible of anyone in the world for my being here today, and that is my mother. My mother has been my – Kay Feehan. I should mention her name, I guess. Kay Feehan has been my great protector and teacher and most devoted person behind my campaigns, donating to the maximum in the last year, I just want to point out, and has provided me with all the emotional support that I could possibly ask for. Accompanying her today is Father Albert Sterzer from St. Joseph parish in Grande Prairie, who is a long-time family friend. I'd ask them both to rise and receive the warm greetings of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome to you.

Hon. members, I think I missed a school group. The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, M. le Président. C'est avec fierté que je me lève à la Chambre aujourd'hui pour introduire the students from the very new and beautiful Lois E. Hole elementary school. I would get them to rise. They're with their teacher, Mat Knoll, and their chaperones, Keri-Ann Berga and Leila Devlin. Please join me in extending the welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real treat to be able to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Clare Lazzer and her students from CDI College north campus legal studies program. My office and CDI College have worked together on numerous events such as the upcoming massagathon on May 25. If the students collect over $1,000 in donations for SCARS, I will once again find myself in the dunk tank to help raise more money for this great cause. At this time I would ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you a group of U of A pharmacy students joining us during Pharmacy Awareness Month. Alberta's pharmacists provide excellent front-line health care to Albertans every day, from medication advice to annual flu shots. We appreciate the important role pharmacists play in our health care system, and I hope my colleagues were able to stop by the heart health clinic downstairs to get their blood pressure checked, particularly in advance of QP. I now ask Jody Johnson, Sean Hanson, and Hannah Kaliel to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

With your permission, I would like to just take a moment to congratulate one of our table officers, Stephanie LeBlanc, who has recently been appointed as Senior Parliamentary Counsel. This year marks Stephanie's 10th anniversary with the Legislative Assembly Office. I think I heard that number of 10 years recently. She was hired as a legal research officer in 2008 and joined the table as Parliamentary Counsel the next year. Stephanie was born and raised in Regina and graduated with a bachelor of law with great distinction from the University of Saskatchewan in 2006, winning the Law Society of Saskatchewan silver medal in her graduating class. Stephanie plays a significant role in the office of Parliamentary Counsel, and many of you will be very familiar with her excellent work, her sound advice, and her pleasant demeanour. Stephanie continues to take on increased responsibility with that office, all while raising two young daughters with her husband. I'd ask, hon. members, if you would please join me in congratulating Stephanie on becoming Senior Parliamentary Counsel.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Agricultural Safety Week

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize Canadian Ag Safety Week and would like to commend the organizers for this year's theme of Supporting Seniors. Farming is more than a job; it's a way of life. Our government took action to make that life better for farm and ranch workers by guaranteeing basic workplace protections so that if they get hurt at work, their families will know that they'll be taken care of.

The proof is in the statistics. Since legislation was introduced, an additional 2,478 farms and ranches now have no-fault insurance coverage. That translates to 8,041 more farm and ranch workers who now have robust workplace protections. That's a lot of rural Albertans that members opposite would leave vulnerable to legal battles and lost income in the event of farm accidents.

However, as essential as WCB coverage may be, it is, of course, much better to prevent farm accidents from happening in the first place. Including farm and ranch workers under basic health and safety rules is critical to this effort, and so are the continued ongoing safety education efforts made by our ag societies and producer associations. This year's focus on seniors is well founded. Fatality rates from farm accidents are consistently higher for adults aged 60 and over, with a fatality rate of 22 per cent.

This is something I've seen for myself. In the last several years I've had two dear friends killed in farming accidents. In May 2014 a beef producer from Colinton was killed by one of his own bulls. In September of 2015 a grain farmer from Newbrook was killed in a silo accident. Both men were in their 70s when they passed away. These men worked hard to support their families and their communities all their lives. Their premature demise is a loss to all. Let us lose no more. Therefore, let us all work together to ensure that our farming Albertans, especially our seniors, have long and healthy lives on the farm and can pass on their hard-won knowledge and skills to the next generation. They deserve no less.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Troy Black

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Troy Black was the only child of Patricia Nelson, the former MLA for Calgary-Foothills, an accomplished former minister. Troy died tragically last month in Mexico, where he was enjoying a vacation with his wife, Lindsay, whom he loved dearly. Troy was only 34.

I knew Troy when he was the president of the local PC association in Calgary-Foothills. When we formed the new UCP constituency association, Troy was easily one of the most enthusiastic board members, and I was thrilled when he stepped up to lead our policy committee. I was so proud to have Troy as a key member of our team.

Troy was influenced not only by his mother but also by his grandparents. They taught Troy to live by the motto to thine own self be true. If you are true to yourself, then you'll be true to the world.

At Troy's memorial service his cousin John told us that Troy married the love of his life, his true soulmate, Lindsay, whom he met in grade 3. Troy's cousin John also said that Troy was his mom's best friend. They can split the atom, but if there ever was an indelible, unbreakable bond in the universe, it was the love between Pat and Troy. I can't even imagine the emotional grief that Pat and Lindsay are facing every day. When someone dies unexpectedly, it makes us all reflect upon our own relationships and how we should cherish every moment with our loved ones and make every day count.

Troy Black, you'll be missed, and you will always be loved.

Thank you.

Sexual Assault Services in Lethbridge

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, as we begin the spring sitting, we must never forget that we are here for the people in our constituencies. As we speak, there are people in our communities dealing with serious challenges. There is a huge need in Lethbridge for programs and facilities dealing with sexual assault, child abuse and sexual assault, and domestic violence, which includes sexual assault. The services we have are bursting at the seams and are unable to address all of the needs. There are an incredible number of good people working on each of these areas, and there are a number of common issues they all face.

We all know that a solution is critical. Perhaps a solution can be found by collaboration and joint utilization of some resources and facilities. Lethbridge is a city that does collaboration very well. I believe it is by working together that we can build a more supportive community for survivors of these types of assault. The challenges faced by those providing services are immense, and we must continue to look at improvements in how those services can be delivered.

That is why the government's announcement last week to provide an additional $8.1 million for sexual assault services and supports is so important. The government is helping, dedicated and passionate people are working together, and we need to continue to do that. We need to continue to listen as survivors come forward, we need to believe them, and we need to ensure that they get the support they need and deserve. Let no one forget that people striving to make life better for all Albertans are active in every corner of this province. We must do our part to fully support their initiatives, especially within my city of Lethbridge and across Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Immigrants to Alberta

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is a land of opportunity. Roughly 1 in 6 Albertans were born outside of Canada, and hundreds of thousands were born elsewhere in Canada and chose to move to Alberta with the promise of economic opportunity. Personally, I moved here in early 2000 from India and made Alberta my home. Go to Stampede or Eskimos home games when they're playing the Roughriders, and you'll see many, many Albertans originally from Saskatchewan. Doves of British Columbians moved to Alberta after the NDP formed government in the 1990s. Canadians from every corner of our country have ended up in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, over a million Albertans were born outside our borders. More than a few of us in this Chamber are included in that group. Our rapid growth has been fuelled in part by people flocking to our great province, which is why it is so discouraging to hear some in the NDP and their supporters suddenly argue that those of us who are not born here somehow are, quote, less Albertan, unquote, or not qualified to serve on behalf of Albertans. Some Albertans were fortunate enough to be born here. Many others, including myself, are Albertans of choice because this is the best place to work, live, and raise a family. Every single one of us is an Albertan.

Now, I have no doubt that our Premier is a proud Albertan. I never alleged that she is less of an Albertan just because she spent a few years working for the NDP in British Columbia in the 1990s. While we respectfully disagree with the Premier on policy, we don't doubt her devotion to her province. Albertans are concerned about the future of their province. They want to hear serious debate of the issues, not crude nativist smears.

As we embark on a new era of civility and decorum in this House, I encourage all members to uphold the highest ideals of Alberta, the land of opportunity. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Carbon Levy Increase

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How high will they go? When the NDP introduced their job-killing carbon tax originally, the one they didn't mention in the last election, it was at $20 a tonne.

Then they raised it by 50 per cent at the beginning of this year. They've told us that they're going to raise it by another 67 per cent. Why? Because Justin Trudeau wants them to. But the Premier has left the door open to even further increases, saying that effective carbon pricing acknowledges that as time progresses, it needs to go up. So what's the NDP's real carbon tax price? How high will they go?

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What we will do is exactly what we announced just a few months after we got elected, when our government made the decision to finally, after years and years and years of ambivalence and delay and failed action, actually do something about the challenge of climate change that faces all Albertans. The folks over there want to kill this climate change plan. They don't want to go ahead with the green line in Calgary. They don't want to go ahead with an LRT in Edmonton. They don't want renewable energy, but Albertans do, and that's what we'll deliver.

Mr. Kenney: Well, I'm going to give that another shot, Mr. Speaker, simply because the Premier didn't even try to answer a pretty direct question, so here it is. She's committed to raising her carbon tax by another 67 per cent, from $30 a barrel to $50 a barrel, but she's also left the door clearly open to further increases above that. Now, the so-called experts on carbon pricing, like her own expert Professor Tombe, say that it has to be at least $200 a tonne to meet global climate targets. Environment Canada says $300 a tonne. Does the NDP have a ceiling on how high they are prepared to go with their carbon tax? Albertans deserve to know.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, as I did in fact answer, we have laid out our plan. It goes over several years, I think about 10 years at this point. You know, I think that's not unreasonable. But when it comes to matters of climate levies or taxes generally, it is really quite interesting because what the members opposite want to do is give a $700 million tax break to the top 1 per cent of Albertans, so what about that? It's rich. Those folks over there want to give them a tax break. We're going to stand with all Albertans on this side of the House.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Kenney: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Now, I'll give it a third shot here to see if the Premier would like to give Albertans any transparency on the NDP's ultimate intentions with respect to a carbon tax. You've got Environment Canada saying that it has to be $300 a tonne to meet Canada's climate targets. Professor Tombe, her adviser, is saying that it has to be at least $200 a tonne. It's currently $30 a tonne. So given that the NDP was not forthcoming with Albertans about the carbon tax at all before the last election, could they be forthcoming now? At what price is she prepared to impose a carbon tax on Albertans?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I actually believe that I've answered that question now twice, so I think that's good.

What I will say is that the members opposite need to back away from their position of climate denial, their position of walking away from the climate leadership plan, the instability that creates in the nonrenewable energy sector as well as the energy sector, and the instability it creates for people in Calgary and Edmonton who are looking forward to finally getting the support that they need for public transit, that hasn't been there for so many years. We need to move forward with this, we need to stop making people scared of things that don't really exist, and we need to get the job done.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. Kenney: . . . we're not climate deniers; we're climate tax deniers. For the third time the Premier didn't answer the question.

The Speaker: Hon. member, please proceed. Thank you.

Pipeline Approval and Construction

Mr. Kenney: Now, it's interesting that for months she told Albertans that we had to punish consumers, making it more expensive to heat their homes and fill up their gas tanks in order to get this so-called social licence from her New Democrat allies in British Columbia. Well, that hasn't worked out. In fact, the other day the Premier said: quite honestly, I don't know that B.C. would care one way or another if we scrapped the carbon tax. If that's the case, Mr. Speaker, then why did they choose to punish Alberta consumers with this multibillion-dollar carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, first of all, the climate leadership plan secured the approval of the pipeline from the federal government. I know the members opposite hate that little fact. It was not something that they were very happy about. It was a very inconvenient fact for them, but in fact that is the fact. The other thing that the member opposite fails to recall is that 60 per cent of Alberta households actually receive a rebate, so the fact of the matter is that the carbon levy is designed to reduce emissions and also give the vast majority of Albertans a rebate. It's a win all around.

Mr. Kenney: On pipelines, Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was a bit surprised to hear the Premier say that the outcome with respect to Energy East had nothing to do with the National Energy Board's decision, but TransCanada actually suspended Energy East on September 7, saying that they did so "due to the significant changes to the regulatory process introduced by the NEB", specifically forcing them to get into up- and downstream emissions. Why has the Premier and this government never objected to the National Energy Board's intrusion into our jurisdiction over regulating the production of oil and gas?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I said yesterday, in fact, our government, our Minister of Energy, and subsequently me, specifically articulated that the proposed plan of the NEB, which has not been put into effect yet, to look at downstream emissions when considering the appropriateness of projects was incorrect, that it was inappropriate. We might as well do the same kind of analysis for the auto industry in Ontario. No one was interested in doing that, so why would they do that for the energy industry? It makes no sense. That point is something that we made very clear on behalf of the energy industry, on behalf of Albertans, and we'll continue to do that.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the Premier and I agree on the question of downstream emissions being inappropriate for the National Energy Board, but she avoided the question again. Why did she not object to the National Energy Board getting into the business of upstream emissions, which is clearly this province's exclusive regulatory jurisdiction thanks to Peter Lougheed's success in getting section 92A in the Constitution Act? Now, every Alberta Premier has jealously defended this critical jurisdiction. Will she join with her predecessors in defending provincial jurisdiction over the production of oil and gas and telling the federal government to get their nose out of our jurisdiction?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, when it comes to defending Alberta's oil and gas against Ottawa or other people in Ontario, our government has worked very hard on it. Ministers all along here and other members have been across this country standing up for pipelines, going into rooms filled with environmentalists, going into Montreal, talking to workers about how important the pipelines are. Meanwhile, the member opposite was in Toronto last weekend speaking to Conservatives, and he didn't mention the word "pipeline" once. You know what? I think we all need to come together to stand up for our pipelines and our energy industry here in Alberta.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I didn't have to pitch . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Kenney: . . . Conservatives who already support the pipeline to do so. I was celebrating the fact that Ontario Conservatives join us in opposing the Trudeau carbon tax, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Energy Policies and Social Licence

Mr. Kenney: Perhaps this Premier instead could go to her federal New Democrats, her B.C. New Democrats, the New Democrat mayor of Burnaby, the New Democrat mayor of Vancouver, New Democrats all across the country who have supported the Leap Manifesto, who want to keep it in the ground, and who have been attacking our energy industry. If she wants to talk about partisan friends, why can she not persuade her own fellow New Democrats from coast to coast to support our energy industry?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The fact of the matter is that I think that the rubber hits the road when you go into rooms where you're promoting a position that's not popular. That is exactly what this government has done on behalf of the people of Alberta across this country – in Vancouver, in Toronto, in Montreal, all across the country – because we know it is the right thing for working people. If the member opposite can't even go into a friendly room and utter the word "pipeline," how can we expect him to stand up for us at all? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I proudly do so all across the country, including in Toronto last week at an event with cultural communities.

When Kinder Morgan's Trans Mountain was approved, this Premier went to Vancouver, had some private meetings, talked to John Horgan, her former NDP colleague with whom she worked in the Legislature, and he came out of that meeting and said that she did not even try to persuade him to support Trans Mountain. Mr. Speaker, supposedly the carbon tax was going to persuade the antienergy NDP across the country. It hasn't happened, so will she admit the carbon tax social licence thing is a total failure?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what I will do is talk about how hard our government has worked to position our province as a sustainable, progressive, forward-looking energy producer on a worldwide stage. We have succeeded on that, and we are succeeding every day as we diversify our energy industry more and more. We also got approval for a pipeline to tidewater from the federal government that isn't them. I know it's very hard for the member opposite to deal with that, but that's a whole different story. The reality is that the pipeline will get built.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Energy minister: how much is the secret deal with Enmax in the legal settlement that was signed last week? This government through its carbon tax created panic in the energy markets, they made a bad situation worse with their ham-fisted legal manoeuvres, and now they've signed a secret settlement. Albertans deserve to know: how much is the damage? How much did NDP incompetence cost taxpayers in this secret settlement?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What we can say is that we had to take action to stand up on behalf of Alberta consumers as a result of some very bad deals made many years ago by the member opposite's predecessors. That being said, I will say that the resolution with Enmax will have no impact on taxpayers. Absolutely none. What it will do is that it will allow us to work together with Enmax to accelerate the good work that we've already been doing to restructure our energy system, to protect consumers from price spikes, and to support renewables going forward, and Albertans deserve no less.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Coal Strategy

Ms McPherson: The health and environmental benefits of phasing out coal-generated power are undeniable. However, there are concerns. The government is eliminating carbon emissions from coal by shuttering Alberta's thermal coal industry, which will affect thousands of workers on top of thousands of oil and gas energy jobs that are now gone forever according to ATB economist Todd Hirsch. To the Premier: could you please quantify the return on the government's investment in phasing out coal in terms of net jobs affected, revenue, and carbon emissions?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, 12 of Alberta's 18 coal plants were in fact scheduled for phase-out under the regulations of the previous federal government, of which the Leader of the Opposition was a part, but there was no plan for coal-to-gas conversion regulations or any plan for workers. When we took office, we noticed that that was a glaring absence, so now there is a $40 million transition package for affected workers. There are also coal-to-gas conversion regulatory changes.

Ms McPherson: The coal community transition fund and the coal workforce transition program were promised to help Albertans and communities survive the government's energy policies, yet coal communities continue to worry about their future. According to StatsCan unemployment in Alberta has increased from 144,000 people in May 2015 to 165,000 in February 2018. What specific jobs do you expect coal workers to retrain for, and how have you partnered with local communities to ensure workers have all required supports?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Interestingly, it was our government that negotiated coal-to-gas conversions under federal law, something that, certainly, Conservatives couldn't be bothered to do when they had the chance, so that is part of the workforce. Another part of the workforce is looking at opportunities in renewables. We've had very productive conversations, which we will continue to have, with Hanna and the Special Areas Board around opportunities in those communities, and the renewable energy program will be delivering jobs to southeast Alberta as well.

Ms McPherson: The AER estimates that there are 91 billion tonnes of coal resources at a suitable depth for mining. There are an additional 2 trillion tonnes of coal at depth in the Alberta plains that may be suited for coal-bed methane exploration, for example. Alberta now produces less than 30 million tonnes of coal per year. There must be some way for Albertans to profit from this vast natural resource. To the Premier: what progress can you report on developing an Alberta coal innovation cluster comparable to our food and wireless clusters?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, Alberta does have a number of metallurgical coal interests and will continue to develop those. Of course, coal-bed methane and extraction of natural gas in that way is an undertaking that's been happening for some time in southeast Alberta, delivering good jobs to communities there. The fact of the matter is that burning thermal coal results in a tremendous amount of pollutants and air quality concerns. That is one of the reasons why it's being phased out in addition to the greenhouse gas emissions it generates.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Supervised Drug Consumption Sites

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I hear a lot of noise from certain individuals in the House about how supervised consumption sites are a blight on our communities, so I personally visited the site of the Sheldon Chumir centre near my riding. It was clean, well run, and nondescript. My question is for the Associate Minister of Health. What measures have we taken to address this crisis, and what has informed those measures?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the Member for Calgary-Currie for the question. In addition to the supervised consumption services offered at the Sheldon Chumir centre in Calgary, we've also opened a supervised consumption service in Lethbridge which has been supporting patients for nearly two weeks and has already saved many lives. Additionally, when we learned of a tragic spike in overdoses in the community of Stand Off, AHS was able to act within days to set up a mobile overdose prevention site in the community to help save lives.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know it's very important that we rely on the expert knowledge of those who are experts in these areas rather than knee-jerk judgments on those in need of supports. Who have we consulted for solutions regarding treatment?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you. Our approach is guided by the Opioid Emergency Response Commission, which draws on the expertise of physicians, researchers, law enforcement, front-line workers, and people with lived experience. We know that ideology should never come before people's lives, and for anyone to suggest otherwise and argue that we should deny medical, life-saving care to Albertans struggling with substance use is unacceptable. The Lethbridge chief of police has said that we can't arrest our way out of this crisis, and he's right. That's why our comprehensive approach includes harm reduction, wraparound health care services, education, and enforcement.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Elaine Hyshka from the University of Alberta's School of Public Health says that supervised consumption sites are also critical for connecting people with treatment and health care. To the same minister: what would the impact of closing down these services or reducing these services be?

Ms Payne: Mr. Speaker, without supervised consumption services Albertans would be at an even higher risk of overdose and death. In the first three months since supervised consumption was open at the Sheldon Chumir centre, there have been more than 90 overdose reversals. That's 90 lives saved because Calgarians had medical supervision and support, 90 Albertans with the opportunity to take the next steps into primary care, supportive housing, employment, and treatment, all of which they can be connected to through this service. We believe in keeping Albertans alive so that they can make another decision tomorrow, and we stand with families in doing that.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Vermillion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to welcome the Justice minister back and congratulate her and her husband on the safe arrival of Wren.

Rural Crime Prevention

Dr. Starke: While we're all happy for the minister, concerns over rural crime continue to grow. After months of brushing off this issue and insisting that everything possible is being done, the government finally took some action last week and announced that they're going to hire an additional 39 RCMP officers and 40 support staff. Now, while that's encouraging, that response is so anemic that it's like taking a water pistol to a four-alarm fire. To the minister. There are 113 RCMP detachments in Alberta. Which lucky 39 get boots on the ground?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the very important question. We've heard from Albertans throughout the province that they are concerned about rural crime moving forward, and that's why we've taken action. We were able to work in concert with the RCMP, asking them: what do you need in order to help address this? In addition to those boots on the ground, I think one of the fantastic things about this plan is that it allows front-line officers who already exist to spend more time on the front lines doing that important work.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the minister has also announced funding to hire up to an additional 10 Crown prosecutors and given that the Crown Attorneys' Association has pointed out the challenges of recruiting prosecutors to serve in rural offices and that these offices see a high level of turnover, with 21 prosecutors leaving in the past 12 months, and given that the Crown prosecutors in Edmonton average 800 files each while those in the St. Paul regional office are handling upwards of 2,000 each, what measures will the minister take to reduce the turnover among rural Crown prosecutors and address the discrepancy in caseload between urban and rural offices?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is correct. There are some concerns with file caseloads in rural areas. That's why we've taken action. One of those things that we've committed to is to increase the number of rural Crown prosecutors. We thank the association very much for working with us and for making that case to us, and we'll be moving forward in concert with them.

Mr. Speaker, the member is correct. We do have some turnover of some professionals in those areas, and we will continue working with the association on strategies to ensure that we have appropriate resources in place.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the government's announcement of 39 new officers for Alberta's 113 RCMP detachments means one additional officer for every third detachment and given that faced with a similar rural crime issue, last year the government of Saskatchewan responded by putting 258 additional officers, an average of over two per detachment, into rural crime enforcement, to the minister: why is our government's response to this pressing issue so pusillanimous when compared to that of our neighbours to the east?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government is proud to continue supporting rural policing and policing throughout the province. This province provides more to municipalities to support them in policing than any other western province, and we're very proud to do that. But we know there are still concerns, and that's why we're taking action moving forward.

I think it's important to note that it isn't just about putting those new officers in place. It's also about using strategic intelligence, leveraging those resources we already have in place, and ensuring that we have civilian officers to take some of the paperwork off the plates of our front-line officers so they can be visible in the communities, because that's what we're hearing they need.

Electricity Power Purchase Arrangement Lawsuit Settlement

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, just a few moments ago, in response to a question from the Leader of the Official Opposition in regard to PPAs, the Premier blamed the previous government when the opposition leader was asking about how much the secret deal with Enmax was going to cost. The problem with that is that Gary Reynolds, the former Balancing Pool president, said that the government of Alberta trying to put blame on past governments is completely ridiculous because it was specifically their action in increasing the carbon tax in 2015 that created this whole mess. Enough games, enough blame. How much is this secret agreement costing the Alberta taxpayer?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, there is no question for any Albertan who ever opened an electricity bill for the last 15 years that there was a mess to clean up – and it was a Conservative mess – when it came to electricity deregulation. This settlement has no impact on Alberta taxpayers. It's an arrangement between the two parties. It is time to move forward, as we are, with Enmax on a number of different initiatives related to renewables and efficiency and as we are with Capital Power as well, who also settled this matter. Now they are moving forward with a massive new investment in renewables.

Mr. Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, again blaming the previous government.

Given that Gary Reynolds, the former Balancing Pool president, said – and I quote – that the NDP's legal action has actually cost consumers hundreds of millions of dollars because that legal action forestalled the Balancing Pool from terminating the PPAs much earlier than this, again, Mr. Speaker, the question is very simple. To the environment minister: how much is this secret agreement with Enmax costing the taxpayers of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once more, this settlement has no impact on Alberta taxpayers, so it is time to move forward. It is certainly the case that this government will not take lessons from Conservatives. Their deregulation schemes on electricity left people on a price roller coaster. We are building a stable electricity market. Prices are capped. Predictability is being restored.

Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, it's embarrassing to watch this government over and over not answer questions.

Given that this decision, from this government's incompetence and inability to manage the situation, has resulted in a significant lawsuit being settled and given that the government will not present that to us despite the fact that it will become public at some point, one has to ask on behalf of the constituents of Alberta: what is this government hiding, what is the amount, and what is the cost to Alberta taxpayers as a result of this secret agreement with Enmax? A simple number, please, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This settlement has no impact on Alberta taxpayers. It's a settlement between the two parties. Certainly, it contains a number of commercial considerations for Enmax, as did the settlements with Capital Power and with AltaGas.

You know, the fact of the matter is that the Conservatives don't have Albertans' best interests in mind. We entered into these actions in order to protect consumers. We will continue to do so, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, what we won't return to is the price roller coaster the Conservatives put Albertans on for over a decade.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After trying for months and months and months to get this NDP government to even hear the desperation of rural Albertans about the shocking amount of crime that is occurring on a daily basis in their communities, this government finally acknowledged it last week, but what did we get? Smoke and mirrors. So let's get specific. The RCMP is already understaffed, not even close to meeting their minimum staffing requirements. That's one of the reasons for this crisis. Minister, how long before the new officers will be working to protect rural Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, I think that working with the RCMP, we've managed to come forward with a strategy. That strategy includes seven prongs. It includes new boots on the ground. It includes new civilian staff. It includes new crime reduction units. One of those crime reduction units, that was piloted in central Alberta, is already having an effect. So I think that this is what the experts are telling us we need to do, and that's how we're going to move forward.

Thank you.

Mr. Ellis: Face it, Mr. Speaker. Smoke and mirrors. So please allow me to explain. Given that the RCMP has a time-consuming process with multiple levels of planning and approvals at the federal level and then recruitment and training and strategic deployment for those officers and given that it's not like there are recruits in depot just waiting for assignments in Alberta, Minister, realistically, when will rural Albertans see these officers in their communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Well, we've been hearing from rural Albertans that this is something they needed, and that's why we decided to move forward with concrete action. Unlike the opposition, who said that they need over a year to develop a plan around rural crime, we think that rural Albertans can't wait, and that's why we've moved forward with a plan right now. Those crime reduction units are already in the process of being formed, and we're ready to move forward. The RCMP and many rural politicians are very excited.

Mr. Ellis: We identified this issue a year ago, Minister.

Given that the Alberta MP for Lakeland has a motion coming before Parliament directing that the standing committee on public safety undertake a comprehensive review of rural crime in Canada and given that Alberta urgently needs this study as it will allow us to understand the resource challenges our provincial police, the RCMP, are facing, Minister, will you commit to endorsing this motion today for the good of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member has noted, I know that the Official Opposition feels that this issue needs more study. We've been hearing from rural Albertans throughout the province that the time for study has passed. They need action now, and that's why this government is moving forward. That's why we've committed to taking action. We have a seven-point plan, unlike our opponents, who have chosen to say that they need a year to come up with a plan. Rural Albertans don't have time to wait.

Privacy Commissioner Investigation

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, this government is incapable of being transparent with Albertans, whether it's hiding the costs of their lawsuits or refusing to be honest with the details. Last fall, when the Official Opposition brought to light political interference by the Premier's former chief of staff, the government denied any wrongdoing despite evidence in their own e-mails which raised many red flags. Does this government still believe that there was no wrongdoing or political interference?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We certainly welcome the commissioner's investigations, and our officials will be co-operating fully. We take Albertans' right of access to information very seriously. That's why we've turned around times for FOIP requests and we've proactively shared more information with the public than ever before. Since day one we've been working to make government more open, transparent, and accountable to Albertans. In fact, we're the first government in Alberta's history to post the salaries and contracts of all Premier and minister office staff.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given that this is another new investigation, I recently received a letter from the Privacy Commissioner that states, "Considering the serious allegations that have been raised by the UCP . . . and my own concerns, I have decided to conduct an investigation," and given that oral hearings like this have not been done in Alberta for decades, to the Premier: are you still confident in your chief of staff's actions on your behalf, that they did not break the law?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, absolutely. We're fully prepared, and all of our officials will be co-operating fully with the commissioner's investigation in this. We do without doubt take access to information very seriously. To be clear, the FOIP Act does allow third parties named in a request to review information before it's released. It would be inappropriate to comment further on the matter as it is under investigation at this time.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the confidence that the government has shown in the former chief of staff's actions and given that this government has made all sorts of claims about how they are the most open, the most transparent, and the most accountable government that the world has ever seen, will they commit today to Albertans that they will ask the Privacy Commissioner to hold Mr. Heaney's hearing in public?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the member for echoing the fact that we do consider ourselves absolutely to be very open, very transparent, and we do take Albertans' access to information very seriously. I will certainly take the member's suggestion under consideration as we go forward, and we'll continue to be one of the most transparent, open governments in Alberta's history.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Seniors' Facility Resident and Family Councils

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The passage of Bill 22, the Resident and Family Councils Act, last year was welcomed by the many residents living in seniors' accommodation in Edmonton-Whitemud. The Bill 22 preamble says that the government "recognizes that a residential facility is the home of its residents, and . . . residents should be involved in matters that affect their daily lives." To the Minister of Health, who sponsored this legislation: please update this House on progress in implementing the councils across Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question, which we know matters to residents and their families throughout this province. Today over 70 per cent of our facilities have some type of council in place, supporting residents in having a voice and ensuring that it's heard in their care. We've been working with operators, support agencies, health care providers, residents, their family members, and members of the PDD community to help us develop the tools to implement these councils where they don't exist and to improve them where they're needed. This spring we'll be releasing a tool kit to help this work be done in further detail.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Minister. This reflects what I've heard from my constituents who are residents or who have family members living in a residential facility. Given that in Edmonton-Whitemud there are several examples of life lease residential facilities and that many have instituted councils but that there are life lease facilities that have resisted instituting councils and given that life lease facility residents should be involved in matters that affect their quality of life, will it be possible to extend the regulations of Bill 22 to cover all life lease facilities in the province?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the MLA for my great-aunt Alma, who happens to be one of these residents living in one of these buildings. He certainly has been a strong advocate for the residents in this specific type of facility, and since he brought this to my attention, my officials have been working with Service Alberta to look at potential possibilities for residents living outside of supportive living facilities who also see the value of these councils. We look forward to working with the member and both of our offices to develop an effective solution to support residents in life lease situations.

Dr. Turner: Thank you very much, Minister. What recourse does a resident of a residential facility have if he or she believes that the operator is not meeting its obligations under Bill 22?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. To a resident or a family member who feels that an operator isn't acting in a council's function in the way outlined in Bill 22, please reach out to Alberta Health. We'll connect them with a complaints officer. They're listed on the website, but you can call my office or directly to the Alberta Health main switchboard, and a complaints officer would be the best place to direct that. Also, I want to assure everyone that when health inspectors are in these facilities on a regular basis, in these people's homes, they are going to be monitoring that as well. We want to ensure that every Albertan living in a facility where they receive care has a voice and feels like a true partner in their home, and that includes having resident and family councils.

Carbon Levy and Rural Education Costs

Mrs. Aheer: Last week in Edmonton trustees from Chestermere-Rocky View and across the province met at the Rural Education Symposium. They had questions about the impacts of the NDP's carbon tax on their bottom line. They were met with rhetoric from the Deputy Premier about light bulbs and solar panels. Minister, what is your government actually doing to help these schools struggling to absorb the impacts of your disastrous policies, or are these just concerns that the Premier says don't really exist?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. I was also at the Rural Education Symposium. In fact, I was chairing it. We had a number of very good questions from rural school boards across the province in regard to the carbon levy and education around this as well. We had lots of interesting stories of how people have been working hard to help to educate their kids about the importance of fighting climate change and the way by which they can do that with practical additions to their school, to their curriculum, and so forth. Certainly, it was a very worthwhile . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't think that answered my question. I'll try a different one.

Given that small cities like Chestermere are seeing huge increased costs for school buses due to the carbon tax – maybe that's part of the educational piece – and given that my trustees asked for answers about the $306,000 tax grab after they were told that their schools were not meant to be impacted and that it would take time to address the issue, Mr. Speaker, how long are our schools supposed to struggle until the government figures this out and scraps this brutal tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, there are a number of energy efficiency investments that this province has made and continues to make. We've been working in partnership with school boards, who have talked to us about a number of different initiatives that we can undertake as a province. I certainly will have more to say about that tomorrow, in fact. As for school funding, we have ensured that school boards receive stable and predictable funding. What would not help is a 20 per cent across-the-board cut. What would not help is leaving classrooms without the resources they need. What does help is ensuring that . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mrs. Aheer: Mr. Speaker, what does not help is telling families that light bulbs and solar panels are going to help their problems with carbon taxes.

In fact, rural schools right now are seeing a decline in students, but their operating costs are skyrocketing due to the carbon tax. Given that the per-student funding is declining due to fewer students and massive hikes due to this cash grab, I would really like to understand how this government is going to reconcile disastrous policies with the real people that they're impacting every single day.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, it's very important for us to talk about carbon and climate change in the schools. In fact, that's the very heart of where this conversation should lie because not only is it important for students – they need to and want to know about the effects of climate change and building a more diverse economy – but, also, it's their future generation that will be more impacted by these very climate change issues. Certainly, I'm working with school boards every step of the way. What's not helpful is when you hear inflamed rhetoric like that when, in fact, we are having civilized conversations between school boards and ourselves about finding solutions.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Carbon Levy and Northern Albertans

Mr. Loewen: From the start the carbon tax has always particularly disadvantaged rural and northern Albertans. The tax on gasoline, diesel, and natural gas is far more costly when there are longer distances to drive as part of everyday life and temperatures tend to be colder. Despite the intent of the government's carbon tax, my constituents in Grande Prairie-Smoky won't stop heating their homes in the winter to reduce emissions and they won't quit their jobs so that they don't have to drive. They're just being forced to pay more to do it. Why does the government think it's fair to disproportionately punish rural and northern Albertans with their carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, two-thirds of Albertans receive a rebate on the carbon levy. If you're a couple who makes less than $95,000, you're getting a $450 rebate. If you have two children, you'll get $540. We also have a number of different energy efficiency programs in place, the total of which added up to about $300 million worth of energy savings for Albertans in the first eight months of those programs. It's really quite interesting and amazing what can happen when you actually take on the issue of energy efficiency and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Loewen: Given that that didn't answer any questions about how it affects northern Albertans and given how out of touch this government is with the needs of northern Albertans and given that this government's previous response to carbon tax concerns was that Albertans should consider, quote, taking a bus or walk and given that these are simply not options for many rural Albertans, why does this government insist on making it more expensive to make ends meet for those living in rural Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, there are 32 indigenous communities across this province who are now undertaking renewables and energy efficiency programs to save their communities money. There are hundreds of farmers that have availed themselves of the energy efficiency and renewables programs. There are several municipalities, hundreds of projects across the province, and nonprofits as well who are availing themselves of energy efficiency. That's creating good jobs. It's putting people back to work when they need it the most. It's also saving Albertans money on energy, and they can redirect those funds to other things.

Thank you.

Mr. Loewen: Given that the MLA for Peace River said this about fuel costs in northern Alberta:

at any given time we pay on average 20 cents more per litre than the rest of the province. Not only does that impact our personal travel costs, but the increased costs of transporting goods and services are passed on to us in higher prices for everything, and the carbon tax will only add to these costs and this out-of-touch government's suggestion was to change the car you have, which is unrealistic on northern rural roads, and given that the carbon tax has not attained the fabled social licence for pipelines, why won't the NDP government make life better for Albertans and cancel the carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, there are so many interesting success stories. For example, the Westerner Exposition society in Red Deer received $16,000 to replace old light fixtures. Their assistant general manager has indicated that they're going to save money on their electricity bill and also install new fixtures. The Calgary Rotary Challenger park received an $8,000 rebate, and they have indicated: most importantly, in the long term we will save large amounts of money. The Crowchild Twin Arena Association received an $18,000 rebate for a number of fixture changes. The Calgary Urban Project Society received . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. Thank you.

Economic Indicators

Mr. Barnes: Last month the Minister of Finance published the government's fiscal update. According to the minister it was rainbows, full steam ahead. He said, quote: this third-quarter report shows a solid rebound; Alberta continues to improve. Not so fast, say businesses. The president and CEO of Edmonton's Chamber of Commerce says, quote: some might say the tide has turned, that we're on our way back to prosperity, but that's not what I hear; things on the ground appear to be still as much a struggle as ever. To the Minister of Finance: who's telling the truth, you or the Edmonton chamber?

Mr. Ceci: What I can clearly tell the member opposite is that our economy is looking up. Jobs are up, and the deficit is down $1.4 billion. Our plan is working, Mr. Speaker. The economy is growing in this province again. We're the fastest growing economy in Canada. Drilling is up, retail sales are up, manufacturing is up. More than 90,000 full-time jobs returned to this province in 2017.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that Alberta businesses have faced nothing but tax increases from this government, something that this side of the House warned the government would result in lower tax revenue, it is not hard to see why Alberta businesses are not buying this government's rosy talk. Given that despite this government increasing our corporate taxes by 20 per cent, corporate tax revenue has actually fallen by 22 and a half per cent as this economy declines, to the minister: will you admit that your government's tax-and-spend policy has failed and commit to reducing taxes, reducing regulatory burden so Alberta businesses can prosper . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Ceci: You know whose tax policy has failed? It's the province of Saskatchewan, Mr. Speaker. What we won't do is to take advice from that side or the province of Saskatchewan, that increased taxes on new construction 6 per cent. Our economy grew by 4.5 per cent. Saskatchewan's is lagging. They want to go down that road? Go. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please. Order.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, also, given that as of January 1 the United States has reduced their corporate taxes by 40 per cent, from 35 to 21 per cent, and given that Alberta has seen its tax competitiveness drop drastically since this government took office, from most competitive in North America to 15th, and that, more importantly, Alberta has fallen behind every single large oil-producing state in the United States, to the minister: if this government's plan is working so well, why do job creators keep leaving?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I believe that the premise of the hon. member's question is patently false. There are a number of indicators that economists have said – this isn't coming from the government of Alberta; this is coming from the Conference Board of Canada, RBC, TD Bank. Alberta led the country in 2017 in economic growth with 4.5 per cent. This year, 2018, we are poised to lead the country for a second time. There are a number of significant investments, including Suncor's announcement of their massive, multibillion-dollar investment here in our province. Because of our PDP program we have a $4.5 billion investment by Inter Pipeline. Amazon is here, Google DeepMind is here, Cavendish Farms are . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Carbon Levy and Postsecondary Education Costs

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, the effects of this government's disastrous policies on communities across the province have been devastating. When this government brought in its carbon tax, little thought was given to the effect it would have on postsecondary institutions. With the tuition freeze going into its fourth year, institutions are being forced to look at their books and make cuts. Now they're forced to turn over millions of dollars to the government for a carbon tax they were never consulted on nor benefit from. To the Minister of Advanced Education or whomever is representing him today: when will you admit that these policies will eventually damage the institutions' ability to provide quality education here in Alberta?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, go ahead.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, in the first instance, stable and predictable funding to our postsecondary institutions, just as to our health care system or to our education system or to the many, many municipalities or community services, has been job one as we have ensured that we have moved Alberta out of the recession. As we invest in energy efficiency, that's also creating thousands of new jobs. Of course, there are a number of investments that are also happening in the postsecondary sector, but job one for this government was stability and not making reckless cuts during the recession.

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, given that institutions have increased the tuition rates for international students to off-load their operational costs, eventually this could affect all students and future foreign students and future enrolment. Is this how you expect these institutions to offset the disastrous effects of the NDP carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. You know, institutions in advanced education have been working very hard in close concert with our government to look for solutions to reduce carbon emissions. There's a lot of research that's going into this very area as well. Postsecondary institutions are meant to lead not just in terms of education but in terms of advancing and diversifying the economy, and that's exactly what our advanced education institutions are doing in regard to carbon. We're very proud of the partnership they're providing to work with us.

The Speaker: Second supplemental question.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the carbon tax on postsecondary institutions is really a tax on taxpayers' dollars, public funds which are allocated to these institutions are being clawed back through the NDP carbon tax. Can the minister then explain: why is this government taxing these institutions' operational dollars?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, these sorts of questions display a misunderstanding of exactly part of why the carbon levy is in place, which is to provide efficiencies. When you look at public institutions and the literally hundreds of buildings and energy uses that you have in postsecondary institutions across our province, they're making ways by which we can provide efficiencies in those same places and actually save money over time. It's important that postsecondary institutions participate in the carbon levy, and we're looking for ways in which this can be a constructive process that can be both educational . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Educational Curriculum Review

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, as you know, our government has been dedicated to ensuring that students in Alberta are receiving high-quality education. We know that students in Alberta are some of the highest academic performers in the country and that we have one of the best education systems in Canada. This is due to our talented teachers and our emphasis on a common-sense curriculum. Can the minister provide some information on the curriculum review?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the curriculum process has been very interesting, and we have engaged literally tens of thousands of parents, students, teachers, and so forth in working on the six different core areas and all subject areas, too. In fact, we had a response of more than 40,000 people to surveys, and we're building a curriculum that will focus on and emphasize language, mathematics, critical thinking and help to have our young students participate constructively in a more diverse economy here in the future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that Alberta's economy is dependent on important, technologically driven industries like the oil and gas sector. We also know that more students are interested in science, technology, engineering, and math and that our students perform very well in these areas. Computer coding is becoming more popular and plays an important role in industry development. Within the curriculum review would the minister identify what role computer coding will play?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you for the question, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we've been engaging with postsecondary institutions and teachers and schools across the province and looking at other jurisdictions and how they're using computer coding as an integral part of not just that very process but the critical thinking skills that go along with that, the math, the science, the social studies, and so forth. Yes, definitely, we are looking for these contributions, contributions from industry: the energy industry, forest industry, agriculture, the financial sector. This is one of the biggest, probably, engagement processes to build a sound curriculum for the future that's ever taken place here in the province.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is committed to ensuring that students are prepared for our diversifying economy. Career and technology studies programs play an important role in preparing students for a variety of careers. We also know that there have been exciting transformations in the career and technology studies programs across the province. Can the Minister of Education tell me about some of the CTS programs that he has visited in the last year?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks so much for the question. We have many creative and innovative school boards around the province who are taking full advantage of expanding the scope of CTS programming here in the province of Alberta. I just want to thank the Lethbridge Chamber of Commerce and the colleges there for helping to work with school boards in Lethbridge in regard to building dual-credit programming. We put in a five-year stable funding formula, that is really catching fire across the province, for dual credit, where kids are able to go and take high school courses but also get credit for colleges. This opens the door for lots . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. members, in 30 seconds we will continue with Members' Statements.

Friends of Confederation Creek

Mr. Coolahan: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to give the Assembly an update on a member's statement that I did last April on the Rally in the Valley, a gathering of Highland Park residents and other citizens concerned with a proposed high-rise development on a former nine-hole golf course.

Since then the community group Friends of Confederation Creek was formed. They work to preserve, protect, and restore Confederation Creek in the Highland Park golf course. Many members live in the area. Some have for decades, and they have seen the valley change. They understand this complex environment and that it's a natural drainage area for several small creeks and prone to flooding. This group has put in hundreds of hours of volunteer work going through and documenting what they find in old city maps and records as well as documenting what's occurring in the valley on a regular basis.

Mr. Speaker, a drainage study was recently completed, and it concluded that the valley is a natural drainage area for several creeks and that it may be difficult for some areas to be developed. So the update really should be that the community did its homework, and they were right. While the results of the study have created new challenges, there's now a better understanding of the area.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to share this truly great example of community engagement that reached out to work with all levels of government. They are proof of why input from the local level is invaluable to all levels of government.

Mr. Speaker, I'd just like to thank the Friends of Confederation Creek for all the work they've done. It's given me and many others a better understanding of what the area was built on and that this just might be a rare opportunity to unvault a new type of development.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Carbon Levy

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Legislature has been entrusted by the people of this province with overseeing and managing the economic and social resources of this province and to do so in such a fashion as to meet the needs and the desires of the people that we represent.

I received a phone call the other day from a constituent. He was having a hard time understanding the actions of this government with respect to the implementation of the carbon tax. He made several telling points. Firstly, he correctly identified the nature of the carbon tax when he called it a selective sales tax. A sales tax is a tax on just about every product that is sold. Since every product and service that is produced is the result of some expenditure of carbon, it is reasonable to conclude that the carbon tax is a sales tax by any other name.

Why do we have this carbon sales tax? Well, to appease Prime Minister Trudeau and to purchase the social licence necessary for the federal government to approve and push forward pipeline access to coastal waters. Well, we can see how much social licence a carbon tax has provided for the people of Alberta, just a lot of pain for Albertans. How much pain? Well, this constituent drew my attention to the gas bill that he received and to the budget line on his gas bill that revealed that the small gas co-operative he purchases his gas from paid $89,688 in carbon tax, $89,688 that he and his fellow gas consumers paid, $89,688 that could have been spent by consumers at the local restaurant, grocery, or liquor store before they closed their doors in his small community over this last year. Now these constituents have to drive to Drayton Valley to buy groceries or to celebrate a special occasion, increasing – you guessed it – their carbon footprint because of our infamous carbon tax.

This government passed the carbon tax over and above the objections of the majority of Albertans, and now it is the majority of Albertans that are suffering.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the Government House Leader's objections to our leader citing the minister of environment's role in Mike Hudema's book, An Action a Day Keeps Global Capitalism Away, I'd like to table excerpts from the book. In one quote, referring to the minister, Hudema says, "It would not have been possible to put this book together without her. She pushed me to write it, edited my work, and contributed to its content . . . I owe her a heavy debt."

The Speaker: Let's table it.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Trans Mountain Pipeline

2. Ms Notley moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly support the government of Alberta's fight on behalf of Albertans' interests to ensure the lawfully approved Trans Mountain pipeline expansion is built, and be it further resolved that the Legislative Assembly call for the federal government to continue to take all necessary legal steps in support of the pipeline's construction, and be it further resolved that the Legislative Assembly reaffirm its support for the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion as a key component of Alberta's energy future.

Mr. Nixon moved that the motion be amended as follows:

(a) in the first recital by striking out "the government of Alberta's fight on behalf of Albertans' interests" and substituting "the efforts by the government of Alberta to fight on behalf of Albertans' interests"; (b) in the second recital (i) by striking out "continue to" and (ii) by adding "including putting before Parliament a declaration that the pipeline is in the national interests pursuant to section 92(10)(c) of the Constitution Act, 1867" after "construction."

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers wishing to speak to the amendment to Motion 2? The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Certainly, it gives me great pleasure to rise and speak to the proposed amendment to Government Motion 2. As the Leader of the Opposition has made clear, our UCP caucus supports the government's efforts to stand up for this lawfully approved Trans Mountain pipeline expansion. I mean, how could we do anything else? After all, in the very beginning, when the Premier bragged that the shovels would be in the ground shortly, we offered the best wishes that this would in fact start quickly. But we also knew that hurdles would arise because we see this happen on a regular basis. The NDP should have also known that protests would pop up because, you know, many of their own supporters in Alberta, including some in this Chamber, have expressed opposition to any kind of action that would allow for the economic expansion of Alberta's oil sands.

But let's leave that aside for the moment. Like I said, we expected to see opposition in British Columbia to this crucial pipeline expansion, and we warned the Premier and her colleagues on the government benches not to take its progress for granted. Nevertheless, they did, and once again we saw that if firm action by the federal government and our provincial government did not occur, the pipeline could go sideways.

That's exactly what happened when the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed offered well-intentioned advice in August. He suggested: take a firm stand, and do not let B.C. play games. He said: do not let the Prime Minister off the hook; do not let Albertans down. This past August, of course, the now Member for Calgary-Lougheed, as I stated, said, "If the government of British Columbia purposely undermines the rule of law and our ability to safely export products from Alberta, then there will be repercussions." "Trade is a two-way street." I'll repeat that last part because it is so very, very important. "Trade is a two-way street."

The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed went on to say, and I quote: if I were the Premier and the government of British Columbia were blocking one of our prime exports, we would find ways to respond in kind that would be an economic response. Unquote.

What kind of response did he get for that common-sense advice? Dismissive mocking, ridicule. The Premier called our now leader, quote, an isolationist, unquote, and insisted that he was building a wall around Alberta. Then just two weeks later the Premier assured Albertans that, quote: the B.C. government has stopped talking about stopping the pipeline, and instead they're talking about ensuring that it meets high standards. Unquote. Well, that sounds positive, doesn't it? Except that it wasn't. B.C. had plenty of ideas up its sleeve to delay, delay, and further delay, with hopes of scuttling the pipeline no matter how long that takes. Frankly, for them, the longer the better.

What was the end result of the government's, quote, everything is fine, unquote, tactic? Well, the Premier finally took the advice of our now leader to impose some trade consequences. What did our leader do in response? Did he mock the Premier? Did he criticize her? No. He supported her. He supported her position so strongly that he even lamented the moment when she took the wine boycott off. He encouraged her to stay the course and be firm. This is the position of the United Conservative Party. We applaud the government when it is doing well on behalf of Albertans, and that is all we continue to ask when it comes to this motion.

We do wish, however, to strengthen it together with all members of this Chamber. Our House leader has proposed two amendments that strengthen it. The Premier has bowed to our leader's advice a few times already when the Trans Mountain pipeline has faced repeated barriers from British Columbia, and now we are asking that this government take his advice again. He has clearly proven that he knows what Albertans need to do, and we all appreciate the Premier following his recommendations.

That brings us to a key element of the amendment; that is, the addition of this clause to the motion: including declaring the pipeline in the national interest by using section 92(10)(c) of the Constitution. Clearly, this is critical. How so? Well, let's parse it out, Madam Speaker. Is there any question that this pipeline is in the national interest? Even the Prime Minister, who is not normally deemed a friend of Alberta, has made that statement. Although we disagree with the Prime Minister on very many policy fronts, we certainly support that one. We display this nonpartisan support because it is in the best interest of Albertans to do so. Today we are asking the NDP to do so as well when it comes to strengthening this motion.

We are not challenging the NDP's belief that this job-creating project is in the best interests of Canada and the Maritimes and Ontario and Quebec and western Canada and British Columbia, but it is time to see and hear it, not just for us but for all Albertans. Supporting the amendment to this motion will allow all residents in this province to see that this whole House is on the side of Alberta. The Premier has taken our leader's advice in the past, and we are hoping she does so again.

The second part of the amendment, which includes "[declaring] that the pipeline is in the national interest," involves the use of section 92(10)(c) of the Constitution. By now, thanks to, of course, the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, every single member of this Chamber knows what this section is, which is something that in the past may have eluded some members of this Chamber. All we are trying to do through this amendment is to get the Prime Minister to use it. Is that too much to ask when a province is obstructing a project that is in the national interest? It can't be too much to ask because that is the reason the clause exists in the first place, Madam Speaker.

We are asking this government not to reject our leader's well-intentioned, well-reasoned advice just because we are on different sides of the House. On this issue we are together, in solidarity. Let's show Albertans that we can work in their best interests because it's the right thing to do, Madam Speaker.

Thank you for this time.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm going to stand today and I'm going to do something that I think doesn't often happen in this Assembly, something that I think that, as I've talked to constituents and I've talked to Albertans, they say that they'd like their elected leaders do a lot more often, and that's admit when we're wrong. Yesterday I was talking a lot about the declaratory power and speaking in favour of the Official Opposition's amendment to invoke section 92(10)(c) and encourage or ask the federal government to use their declaratory power.

After the Leader of the Official Opposition very kindly quoted me in a tweet, I got into a long and fascinating discussion with some folks on Twitter, and one of those people on Twitter is a noted constitutional law expert at the University of Ottawa, Carissima Mathen, vice-dean academic. Now, I had done some research before I made my comments yesterday, which I hope we would all do, and I actually had seen Professor Mathen quoted on 92(10)(c), from an article midway through 2017, and implying that, in fact, this would help move the Kinder Morgan pipeline forward, that the federal government could in fact use this declaratory power.

But then I did some further research, prompted by some comments and questions that were asked of me on Twitter, and it was Professor Mathen herself who responded that, in fact, the declaratory power in this case is not relevant. Not being a lawyer and having never gone to law school, let alone being in any way the constitutional expert that Professor Mathen is, I can assure you that she's absolutely right and that I am incorrect. That also makes the Official Opposition and the Member for Calgary-Lougheed incorrect in their assessment of how 92(10)(c) could be used.

In doing my research, Professor Mathen was on a radio show, Rob Breakenridge's show, I think it was last week, and I just want to read out a few of the quotes from her on this particular point. Quote: when you actually look at how our Constitution works, it's a redundant move in talking about using that declaratory power. She goes on to say, quote: it would be highly disruptive; it is more of a rhetorical tool than something that has present-day, real legal utility. She then says that the federal government has exclusive authority over the projects that cross provincial boundaries.

This whole situation reminds me of that famous quote erroneously attributed to John Maynard Keynes: when my information changes, I change my mind. In this case the information has changed. I know I have changed my mind on this particular point. As an evidence-based party the Alberta Party believes that when you find new information, it's only the responsible thing to do to acknowledge that, put that on the record, and change your view on a particular point.

Having said all of that, I do still support the other aspects of the amendments brought forward by the Official Opposition, and I do still believe that our provincial government should push harder to ensure that the federal government pushes this project forward with more force and enthusiasm and applies their existing legal rights to ensure that projects that cross provincial boundaries, that are within legitimate federal jurisdiction, do in fact go ahead. So let my correction of my understanding of what federal powers are not be mistaken in any way for weakening our resolve on the importance of building the Kinder Morgan pipeline. It is absolutely in not only the urgent public interest of the province of Alberta; it is in the urgent national interest that we build this pipeline, that we get Alberta's products to market, and that we do so in a way that is environmentally beneficial, that is as safe as possible.

Pipelines, especially modern pipelines, and shipping, especially modern shipping, are incredibly safe. Incredibly safe. If this government, as I was saying yesterday, had made more of a case to align Alberta's interests with the interests of British Columbia – in fact, I believe our interests are aligned with the interests of British Columbia. We care in this House about ensuring that British Columbia and Canada's coastline is safe.

I did my university education on the west coast, on Vancouver Island, and it reminds me of two stories. One, it is a gorgeous, remarkable, beautiful place. Any of us who have been to the coastline of British Columbia, I promise you, not a single one of us wants to see that coastline fouled with any sort of effluent, any sort of accident from any oil tanker. I can assure you that if I felt that was in any way a risk and a remote possibility, then I wouldn't be supporting the expansion of Kinder Morgan, but I do because I believe that the methods for shipping crude oil to market, for which there is still a substantial demand, are absolutely fundamentally safe.

I have to say that back in – it was a long, long time ago, Madam Speaker – the early 1990s, which some in this House, more on this than that side, would remember, we were protesting. We were protesting, as good university students who cared about our environment did then and still do now, the fact that the city of Victoria dumped raw sewage into the Pacific Ocean. It was an outrage in 1992 and – you know what? – it's still an outrage in 2018 because they still do it. It actually defies belief that that is still something that goes on in that province. So I think that our friends in British Columbia ought to look in their own backyard if they want to tackle a pressing and urgent environmental issue that relates to their coastline. I would encourage them, please, to work on cleaning that up. It just stuns me that that happened so many years ago and happens to this very day.

So I will be supporting the first two of the three amendments brought forward by the Official Opposition. I will not be supporting the third because I think that it's important that we do continue to press the federal government to act in Alberta's and Canada's interests, to use the lawful powers that they have to put forward a strong case to British Columbia and to all Canadians, the importance of this pipeline not just from an economic perspective but from an environmental perspective as well.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Mason: Yes, please, Madam Speaker. Well, I want to thank the hon. member for admitting his mistake and talking a little bit about the leading constitutional expert who has weighed in to suggest that this particular clause, section 92(10)(c) of the Constitution, is redundant in this case.

I will just add another authority to that argument. This person says that local works and undertakings such as of the following classes, that are wholly situated within the province, are before or after their execution declared by the Parliament of Canada to be to the general advantage of Canada or to the advantage of two or more provinces. The authority went on to say:

This clause is intended to be used to exert federal authority in a case of national interest in something that is entirely within a province, because sometimes things within provincial jurisdiction may [also] be in the national interest. That's what the clause is there to do. But in regard to interprovincial matters such as pipelines the government clearly has the constitutional authority to act. It does not need this clause, nor does this clause apply to interprovincial matters such as pipelines.

That authority stood in this place yesterday and made those comments, hon. member.

Mr. Clark: That authority wouldn't have been you by chance, would it?

As I was talking about with my hon. colleague here, Hansard is forever, so it's important what we say here. Yes, I will acknowledge, of course, that it's there in black and white. While I absolutely trust the hon. Government House Leader, Madam Speaker, I trust but I verify, so I have gone out and I have made sure that in fact his words were true. You know what? Rare as it may be, it turns out he's right, so we'll acknowledge that fact.

Again, using this as an opportunity to remind us all why we're here and the importance of this particular motion is absolutely vital. While we can have a little fun with each other catching one another out when we're not correct on something, it is absolutely urgent that we remember why we're debating this motion. That is to ensure that a lawful piece of infrastructure that is to the benefit of our entire nation is absolutely safe, that it in fact has a strong environmental benefit in terms of displacing higher carbon crude from sources of crude like Nigeria and Venezuela – in fact, by building the Kinder Morgan, we will help reduce global carbon emissions. I'm happy to stand here and say that because I know it to be true. We will support the research and development that's already under way in Alberta's remarkably responsible and innovative oil and gas sector, which is actively working today to not only reduce carbon emissions from oil sands production but outright decarbonize the barrel from production to end use.

That's a big goal. That's Alberta's moon shot, Madam Speaker. That is the kind of work that's going on in this province. That is the kind of work that is going to be supported by the building of the Kinder Morgan pipeline. Far from it being something that we should be ashamed or embarrassed of; it is something that we ought to be in this province fiercely proud of. That is something I'd like to hear our federal government say.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to use Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to the amendment to the government motion. Like our leader mentioned before, our caucus is broadly in support of the motion, but our intention of moving this amendment is to strengthen the government motion. Now I'm hearing that there is some legal opinion about 92(10)(c). I have to do a little bit more research on that in the next couple of hours.

In the meantime, Madam Speaker, I would like to focus on the big picture that our hon. Leader of the Official Opposition eloquently explained to all of us yesterday. Alberta is sitting on a resource of $11 trillion, which is a God-given gift. Some people want to leave it in the ground, but if we get our act together, like the Premier asked for yesterday, and if we act as one nation and leverage that resource for the benefit of all Canadians – Albertans and Canadians are counting on us to get to that point.

To talk about how we got here, I just want to take us back in time. Kinder Morgan got the approval for Trans Mountain almost 18 months ago. They received the paper approval 18 months ago and, as in the Official Opposition, have been saying: time is money. Time is of the essence. We can't lose time. Let's get these shovels in the ground. We raised that consistently in this House, and we have been asking the Premier to champion the construction. For over a year every time we asked about that, we were mocked, and they said, "We got two pipelines approved; we got two pipelines approved," the front line there. Every day that's how they answered for any question we asked about the construction delays, about the legal issues, about the blockades. The answer was: we got two pipelines approved.

We wasted precious time in not acting on this file in the interest of Albertans and Canadians. What's the result of that? Every single day of delay is costing $70 million to $90 million in revenues for Kinder Morgan. Their president, Ian Anderson, is very clear about that. He said that the company is watching and that they don't want to invest any more into this project unless they're crystal clear about getting the full approval, and they wanted the Prime Minister and the Premiers to remove the blockades because the ground realities are different. Here we can sit and talk. I was there on the weekend in Vancouver to support and show my solidarity with the couple of hundred Canadians that wanted this pipeline to be built. Who are they fighting against? There were 5,000 more protesters there who don't want this pipeline. They just want it not built. They want to leave it in the ground. No amount of persuasion, facts, science:

doesn't matter. They are very clear about that. They say leave it in the ground. Those are the types of people we are dealing with here.

All of us have been acting in good faith so far. I know why the Premier and the cabinet haven't done enough when we were insisting. You know, paper approval doesn't mean anything. There has to be a start date, middle date, end date, and this construction schedule is not working. What are you doing? How are you helping that? They kept mocking: no, no; we got two pipelines approved.

In that one year we heard so many other reports. The Premier herself quoted the Bank of Nova Scotia's report recently: lack of pipelines is costing $15.6 billion a year, which is almost $43 million a day. That money could have been used for schools, hospitals, for everything we wanted, infrastructure projects, but we were not taken seriously. Our leader, the new leader, has been saying that you have to be proactive. We can't wait. We can't dither on this. The Prime Minister, his point is: "Okay. We approved. We finished our job. Now, B.C. and Alberta, you sort it out. You fight it out." We kept saying: no; only federal government has the jurisdiction.

That's why we brought in this amendment, 92(10)(c). Now, I heard what the Government House Leader has to say and the Member for Calgary-Elbow has to say. We'll go and find out. But that's one person, one constitutional expert. Albertans and Canadians want to hear how it can be done, not how it can't be done.

When we are dealing with the government in British Columbia – at all levels of the B.C. government that happens to be NDP. It's an NDP mayor in Vancouver. It's an NDP mayor in Burnaby. It's an NDP Premier and an NDP federal leader. Those are the people who are saying that, you know, for them to survive as the B.C. government, because they signed a deal with the Green Party – three members of the Green Party, three legislators, are controlling the balance of power there. Our Premier and the cabinet here are naive enough to think that, oh, John Horgan will actually agree and give them social licence. They should have come to Vancouver over the weekend. They would have seen 5,000 people saying: no matter what, we won't let it get built.

Those are the kinds of eco radicals we are dealing with, and in good faith this cabinet brings in people like Tzeporah Berman and Karen Mahon and gives them positions on the oil sands advisory council. The result is delay. Just delay. That's why we are frustrated. We are asking them to use every tool available to clear the roadblocks of this project.

The money we are talking about here is big, Madam Premier, $11 trillion of assets. If we leverage that asset and develop the oil sands in an environmentally responsible manner, we can work for the benefit of all Canadians. Like our leader said yesterday, that $1 trillion debt we have together as all governments in Canada can be cleared. We can be debt free. Canada can be debt free. Albertans are not selfish. We have been sharing our prosperity with all Canadians.

We don't have time here. People are looking for jobs. There were some in this House that we introduced. A few hundred people looking for work showed up last year, and they're all still looking for work, because I know those people. I used to work with them. I see them in Calgary, in Edmonton, in Fort McMurray, and they're saying: we're still looking for work. They don't have time.

The Premier is saying: oh, okay; 92(10)(c) is irrelevant. But, come to that, if our talks in good faith continue to fail after six months, we come back to that. That's what they have been doing. When the Leader of the Official Opposition said, "Act tough; convey to B.C. that there will be consequences," he was mocked. In that process we lost more than a year doing nothing. If we rely on this Prime Minister, nothing gets done. Nothing gets done, Madam Speaker.

He happened to be in India two weeks ago. We all know he came back empty handed. Within a week the President of France was in India, and he could go and sign $16 billion worth of deals with India. Countries like India, China – the Prime Minister was also in China. He couldn't get that trade deal with China. He just came back empty handed because he went there to lecture them on labour standards and other stuff, which for their country – I mean, they look at what's good for them. So that is the Prime Minister who happens to be leading on this file and who happens to be the close ally of this Premier, and both of them are not able to get anything done.

We are here saying, "We are with you, and these are the tools you can use," but they don't want to do that. Albertans don't have time. Canadians don't have time. People looking for jobs don't have time. Time is money. Every day of inaction is costing Canadians billions of dollars. That's why we asked for this amendment to be included, to strengthen the government's motion. It's up to them whether they accept it or not.

Yesterday the Premier was saying that we all should act together and send one message. Then why can't she accept the suggestions from us? She has been doing that. The throne speech reflects our input. Whether she gives us credit or not, we don't care. As long as something good is done for Alberta, we are happy. Whether she acknowledges our contribution or not, we are not worried about it. But don't reject good ideas or delay and come back after six months: okay; we'll do this. That six months is another billion, 2 billion, 3 billion dollars of money we could use for development activities in Alberta.

That's where we are at with this government motion. We'd like to support it, but we want our amendments to be considered and not to be rejected just based on ideology or political opposition. Don't do that. You did it enough. That's why investments are fleeing. If she wants to send that positive message to investors, then she has to work with the opposition and act timely. We are very grateful that they have accepted our suggestions and included some of our suggestions in the throne speech, and we are hoping that good common sense prevails here and that they'll take our suggestion of these amendments.

I strongly ask the Government House Leader to take the opinion of other legal experts, not just one. There may be ways to use that, and that's why I actually started a petition together with our local MP asking Albertans to sign that petition so that the Prime Minister can use it. If not 92(10)(c), he'll find something else. But once we express our will that we want him to act and not dither and not let this project die, he should get that message. That's why we started that petition. That's why we are asking this amendment to be considered. Don't tell how not to do it. Tell Albertans how you can do it.

People don't have patience. People don't have confidence in this government now. Those protests: I mean, if you trace them back, there are some people in this House who wrote – today our Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky actually tabled a document. The minister of environment contributed to a book which is telling those protestors how to blockade things. Those protestors are getting oxygen from the front lines of this House.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, this was very interesting. I'd love to hear some more about that specific document that he's referring to.

Mr. Panda: Thank you. I'm talking about a book written by Mike Hudema, who is very active with Greenpeace, and the minister of environment has contributed to this book. I don't want to waste my time speaking about that, but I can give a copy of this to you and to other members in this House. They can read that. But the point I'm trying to make is that we can't wait. We have to do something about this. We have to rise above partisan politics here, and if this Premier is serious about taking all opposition together with her on this fight, we are here to work with her.

We don't need any more proof of what we are saying. There is a lady I met, Madam Speaker, in Vancouver. Her name is Vivian Krause, a very patriotic Canadian. She has been doing great research work in digging up information on how foreign funds are coming here to help these environmental activists who simply want to leave it in the ground.

You know, if you say, "Okay; there is 1 and a half billion dollars to protect the coastlines," they say: "No. It doesn't matter. We don't want that." You tell them: "Okay, We'll ensure that there won't be any spillage. If there is something, we have all these backup plans." You give them evidence, you give them reports that that's how it will be handled, and they say: "No. We don't want that oil to come out. We want it to be left in the ground." They're very determined about that. No amount of logic, reason, science, fact is going to help.

That's why the federal government, which has the jurisdiction, has to, you know, invoke that 92(10)(c) and then implement that. Otherwise, this Premier will be dreaming that her ally in Ottawa will do something. He'll say that, yeah, he will do it, but then another year will pass by, and Canada will be losing billions.

Madam Speaker, you know, like our leader said yesterday, the international demand for fossil fuels is growing. There is a demand, so when there is a demand, there will be a supply. If we are not supplying, someone else will supply. Or, if we are producing, CAPP is saying that our production here will grow from 4 million to 5 and a half million, so an additional 1 and a half million barrels will get to the markets. Maybe we'll ship it by trains, which is not safe. Is that what the opponents want? Do they want a reliable, safe pipeline system to bring prosperity to Canadians and Albertans, or do they want us to use whatever means it takes and grow the emissions? Supply will be met with demand from other countries, which don't have the same human rights or environmental standards. If that's not what we want, then we should make sure that we build this pipeline.

This pipeline, Madam Speaker, is only adding 600,000 more barrels, but there is a gap of 1 and a half million barrels of pipeline capacity, so that means that we have to build another pipeline to the east or west or south. Sending to the south doesn't make sense because we are selling at a $30 discount per barrel, so that means that we are to ship it either east or west to fill that differential, to not lose money on the differential. That means we have to build another pipeline. This pipeline, if and when it is built, is only for 600,000 barrels, but we need another million barrels of capacity on the pipelines, so that's why this government motion is really important. That's why we're all excited about it, but we want our amendments to be considered.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to speak to the amendment to Government Motion 2. I think that yesterday the Government House Leader spoke for all members on this side of the House about the significant concerns that we have about parts of the opposition's amendment, particularly with the first part, (a), in which it wants to change the wording to essentially say that this government has not been fighting for pipelines. Nothing could be further from the truth.

However, I will indicate that we are prepared to support one part of their amendment, that being the request that the phrase “continue to” be struck out as it relates to the federal government’s use of all necessary legal steps to see the pipeline built. You know, what’s needed is for the federal government to use those tools. As outlined by the Premier, you know, in sponsoring this motion, we want to send a clear and unified message to the country that Albertans are united in our resolve to get this pipeline built, and to that end we can support the second part of the amendment, specifically being part (b)(i).

I’ll speak a bit mostly about, right now, why we’re not going to support the rest of the amendment. Quickly on part (b)(ii), the House leader spoke to that just shortly before, and that it’s really not necessary to put that in there is the gist of that.

You know, it has become clear over the last day and a half that we are unanimous in this Assembly that getting the Trans Mountain pipeline built is a critical project for Alberta’s energy sector. All Albertans and, in turn, all Canadians will benefit from a new pipeline to the west coast. Of course, this debate is good to have. It allows us to come together, share our ideas, make amendments, and ensure that we can get on the same page and, ultimately, get this pipeline built.

At this stage of the process, Madam Speaker, what’s required is to have the B.C. government recognize the importance of this pipeline to the economies of both provinces and all of Canada. We need the B.C. government to honour the fact that this pipeline was approved and its Premier to recognize that pipeline approval is federal jurisdiction.

We also need the federal government to send a strong message to them as well. In November 2016 Ottawa approved the Trans Mountain pipeline. This was a major step forward, but more work needs to be done to get the pipeline built. As outlined by the Premier, the federal government already has the legal power to assert that this project gets done, which was approved in the national interest and should be carried out in the national interest. Ultimately, Madam Speaker, we need the B.C. government to stop delaying construction.

Madam Speaker, I just want to go back to what I said earlier about the fact that getting a pipeline built is a process. As much as I said that we’re all in agreement in this Assembly on the criticality of the Trans Mountain pipeline, what I think the opposition is forgetting is the fact that the only reason we’re here debating next steps as to when to get shovels in the ground is that we passed the first hurdle, which was getting federal approval. We would not have got that approval without having the best climate leadership plan in the country.

We would not be at this stage in the process if the opposition had its way. It’s that simple. In the opposition’s world view, which is void of a climate leadership plan, which drives innovation and efficiency in both traditional oil and gas and in the renewables sector, we’re not standing here talking about shovels in the ground. No, Madam Speaker. We would still be trying to convince the federal government of the need for a pipeline, and we’d have no answers to questions like “What are you doing to reduce emissions?” or “What are your targets for renewables on the grid?”

It really is because of this government’s foresight, because of this government’s working with the energy sector on policy, climate leadership, royalties, renewables that we have approval for the pipeline that we are debating here today. What’s more, Madam

Speaker, British Columbia should take notice of the fact that we do have a robust climate leadership plan, and it should be a factor in their decision to stop delaying construction. Now, the opposition can jeer at the idea of social licence, but – make no mistake – the climate leadership plan is a necessary component of getting this pipeline built, and this government knew this from the start.

You know what else this government understood, Madam Speaker? This government knew that action against man-made climate change is simply the right thing to do. It’s the right thing to do for our children and our grandchildren’s future, and it’s the right thing for the longevity of the energy sector, driving efficiencies and research and development into other areas like renewables.

With that said, Madam Speaker, with this government setting the stage with strong economic and environmental arguments, with this government’s use of diplomacy with both the federal and provincial governments, with Premier Notley using the B.C. wine ban to demonstrate . . .

An Hon. Member: Name.

Mr. Coolahan: Pardon me.

. . . to the B.C. government that she is focused and determined to get this pipeline built, and with the Premier’s continued focus on this file, I am optimistic. I am optimistic that the Trans Mountain pipeline will be built.

And when it is, the opposition must understand that it never stood a chance under its watch. Modern pipeline construction is complicated. People are demanding responsible energy development and responsible pipeline construction. Purchasers of energy are demanding the same. This is what this government and my colleagues on this side of the Assembly understand, and this is something that the opposition is missing. It comes down to the fact that we believe that we can have a thriving energy sector and a robust climate leadership plan. In fact, we believe it is necessary.

Madam Speaker, I don’t believe that getting the Trans Mountain pipeline should be a partisan issue because it benefits the entire country. We all benefit from this pipeline. With that said, you know, the opposition continually bets against Alberta on getting the Trans Mountain pipeline built. They see victory in pipeline construction being delayed. They put ideology and misinformation ahead of success for the province.

Nowhere is this more evident than in the fact that the opposition continually suggests that members of the government caucus are anti-energy. Nothing is further from the truth. The opposition mistakes a call for sustainable, responsible energy development as anti-energy. But this is what the world wants, and the world has taken notice. In fact, with that being said, it’s the opposition that is anti-energy. It’s the opposition that doesn’t understand the modern energy industry. As such, it does nothing for success in getting this pipeline built when the opposition falsely accuses this caucus of being anti-energy. It does nothing for the success of getting the pipeline built.

Madam Speaker, knowing what’s available at this stage of the process to get shovels in the ground is extremely important. I’m grateful that we have a Premier that people view as tough, tough but not scary, at least not scary in the sense that she’s not trying to drag the energy industry back 30 years, not scary in the sense that people fear that economic and social progress will cease to continue to move forward under her watch. We’ve seen the Premier’s resolve on the pipeline file. We’ve seen the caucus’s resolve on the pipeline file. Getting the Trans Mountain pipeline built is necessary, and it requires a delicate balance of environmental action and progress and a steely resolve. Alberta has the right Premier to get the job done.

You know, when the city of Burnaby tried to block the Kinder Morgan pipeline in court, we intervened. When the B.C. government tried to overstep its authority and regulate something it had no right to regulate, we stood up. We shut down talks about electricity sales to B.C. that could have been up to $500 million per year for them, and we banned B.C. wine from Alberta shelves and brought together a task force to provide us with the best advice.

I've had many conversations with my constituents in Calgary-Klein over the past few months, Madam Speaker, and they know that we're focused on their priorities, like fighting to get this long-overdue pipeline to the coast built. We refuse to let anyone turn their backs on hard-working people in our energy sector. On this side of the House we're fighting for pipelines and hard-working Albertans, and we're not going cheer for Alberta to fail because of narrow political interests. We're focused on creating good jobs in a diversified energy economy. Unlike members opposite, we are not going to settle for the same old boom-and-bust policies that hurt working families.

In closing, Madam Speaker, I would just like to say that I am in full support of this pipeline and in full support of the Premier's approach to getting this pipeline built. I have the utmost confidence that every decision the Premier has made to date and every decision she makes going forward is in the best interest of Alberta's energy industry and will lead to getting this pipeline built. The Premier and Alberta's energy industry have my full support, as does section b(i) of this amendment.

3:40

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), no questions or comments?

Then I will recognize the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you, members, for your comments to date on the motion before us. I want to thank the government for bringing forward a motion that should be able, I hope, to garner the unanimous consent of all members in this House. It is important that we send a strong, unified message to the rest of the country and to pipeline opponents in particular that Albertans, regardless of partisan stripe or the ideological bickering that can take place in this place, can put those differences aside and stand together for the common good of all Albertans. I want to thank members of the opposition who have been putting forward pretty much just this idea for some time now. But thank you to the government for bringing it forward as the first item of business that we have here.

Just a few days ago – or perhaps it was a week ago – there was a rally of Canadians, primarily British Columbians but, I think, some Albertans, too, in Vancouver standing up for the Kinder Morgan pipeline and the development of our resources. I know that the Member for Calgary-Foothills was there. The vast majority of Canadians support responsible resource development, including the vast majority of Canadians along the proposed pipeline route.

But the enemies of this pipeline are intractable. Some of the key activists against it, including Elizabeth May, the federal Green Party leader, have said that they're willing to go to prison to stop this by illegal means. That is disturbing. Regardless of what party is in power federally or provincially in any of the provinces, I've always had a sneaking suspicion that it might take armed security along the route of this pipeline to get it built because we're not having a debate simply about the legality, the pros and cons of pipelines anymore. There is no social licence to buy. There is no level of responsible resource development or pipeline safety measures that will bring most of these opponents onside. They are stiffening their resistance; they are not softening it.

I'm going to stay away from the conversation about how successful or not I think the carbon tax and its related plan have been in earning social licence – it's a debate for perhaps another day – because I want us to be able to put the province first here, put party and ideology aside, and try to come to a consensus all 87 members of this House support.

I'm speaking in favour of the opposition's series of amendments to the government's motion, and I think that if the government will accept them, I would certainly be in favour of the motion. The first amendment, part one, I think, is the most important. All members of this House, I trust, support the Kinder Morgan pipeline and fighting to get our resources to market, but we don't all necessarily agree on the means, on how that's been done. I would find very little, until very recently at least, in the government's approach to fighting for pipelines that I would agree with, that I think is the best way forward. I don't doubt that the government is sincere in how it has fought, at least in its own mind, to get this pipeline built. I believe they are sincere in their intentions. I just think: woefully wrong.

But it would be incorrect to ask all members of this House in goodwill to unanimously support a motion saying that we support this government's approach to this fight. We all have different approaches. There is a variety of parties in this House, and to varying degrees we might agree or disagree with the government's approach. But I think we all agree, every member of this House, on the ends which we are trying to achieve, getting our products to tidewater to get fair prices for Albertans' own natural resources. We agree with the ends, but we don't agree with the means. That is why I think this motion should focus on the ends, on what we are trying to achieve, what we are trying to do, not how we're trying to do it because even within different parties I'm sure there is some dissension. I'm sure there is some dissension in the NDP, some differences of opinion about how hard the government should be fighting for this or not. I'm sure there are differences of opinion within the UCP about how aggressive the government should be or not. There are going to be differences of opinion about how we achieve this, and those are all fair debates to have. I'll have my own position, and you will all have yours.

I think that the first part of this amendment is about making sure we are focusing on the ends, getting access to tidewater for our products, and not the means of it. If the government would accept that part of the amendment, this motion would earn my own support. I very much hope that I will be able to support it. The government has already said it will agree to section 2, which is a relatively minor amendment.

Section 3 is about strengthening the wording of the motion regarding invoking section 92(10)(c) of the Constitution Act, 1867. I'll listen to members here about how necessary or not or redundant or not that particular declaratory power is in this debate, but I'm of the opinion that we should be throwing the kitchen sink at getting a pipeline to tidewater. It is hopefully not a necessary power, but it may become a necessary power, especially when we are dealing with many actors in this debate who are willing to take extralegal means to block pipelines, be that chaining themselves to fences or trees or whatever other measures they might want to take. But it is important that the federal government use every tool at its disposal, and if the federal government needs to throw the kitchen sink at it, we should support them in that. I'll be happy to listen to other members as they quote constitutional scholars about the necessity of that particular section or not.

For me the most important part of this amendment is part 1, to make this a nonpartisan, nonideological issue, not to make this about trying to obtain post facto the support and endorsement of MLAs in other parties to approve of the government's own handling of this fight. I think it would be a bit of a stretch to say that this side of the House is broadly in support of how the government has handled it so far, but if they are willing to deal in a spirit of goodwill and make this about how we go forward, not the particular ideological or partisan approach of the government in power or the party in opposition, if we make this just about the ends we are trying to achieve, I think it would say a lot about this government, that they are growing into the role and that they're willing to reach across the aisle to work with members of all stripes on one of those rare occasions where we can come together unanimously to support something for the good of all Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), any questions or comments?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek on the amendment.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, it's clear that today much has already been said by my colleagues and other members of the House, really, on behalf of hard-working Albertans. But I do find it interesting that we actually are having to have to debate this motion and what I think is a reasonable and well-reasoned amendment which supports a project which is essential to our future, probably the most essential thing that we've come across in our short but rich history, namely the Kinder Morgan pipeline expansion. Is there any question that we as accountable Members of this Legislative Assembly need to act swiftly and without hesitation arguably with the strongest mandate from an overwhelming majority of hard-working Albertans? There is no debate on that self-evident truth.

We've been saying this for months, but we have sadly been greeted by tone-deaf ears on many occasions when it comes to acting without hesitation, equivocation, or delay on behalf of Albertans who we represent. I am glad we are moving towards this today and over the coming days as we debate this amendment and the motion itself. But let's be clear. Our leader, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, proposed – no; he pleaded – with the Premier in early February that we take the threat from this government's B.C. comrades seriously, reconvene the Legislature, and debate a motion with a similar intent to this one. Madam Speaker, that was more than a month ago.

Since then we have been stuck at a green-and-orange roadblock, thinking we have a social licence while being told by envioradical gatekeepers that our licence is being regarded as little better than a learner's permit. At that time, the Premier's chief spokesperson stated, "On the face of this, there doesn't seem to be a lot of value in recalling the Legislature to debate an issue we all appear to agree on." She followed that up with the following tweet, which again I'm quoting verbatim: "We don't need to have a debate to work together. This isn't a partisan issue, we all agree on this."

Madam Speaker, it's encouraging that the government has changed their tune and decided to have this debate after all. I think it's important to all members to come together and show the intransigent B.C. NDP that our province and our people are united in our desire to get this pipeline built for the benefit of all Canadians. This arguably is one of the few issues in this Assembly where we have broad agreement, but it is still important to have the conversations on the record lest we forget and veer from our steadfast position that access to tidewater is indeed our constitutional right.

Overall I think the motion at hand was a positive step, albeit over a month late, and a good starting point, but I believe – no; I know – there is room for improvement, hence the amendments brought forward by my colleague the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre to strengthen this amendment and ensure there is absolutely no mistake in its attempt and the clarity around the desired outcome. I do not believe that asking the federal government to take all legal steps in support of the pipeline construction goes far enough. We need to make a very specific request of the federal government and the Prime Minister to do what Albertans expect them to do, not just on our behalf but in defence of a strong, vibrant, and prosperous Confederation, the country we all know and love.

The federal government is clearly not doing everything within their power at the current moment to make sure this pipeline gets built. It's pretty clear to all of us here. Their resolve appears vague, conciliatory with those already stating their intent to defy the law and lacking in balance with respect to our proven track record of world-leading environmental stewardship and responsible resource development.

As we see foreign-funded eco radicals, if you will, inside and outside the B.C. Legislature and local governments continue to plot the demise of not only the Kinder Morgan pipeline but any future pipeline projects, the Prime Minister and his cabinet continue to dither with respect to their constitutional authority. Indeed, I would suggest that the Prime Minister – sorry – that Trudeau Sr. would be appalled at the lack of clarity and resolve in his own offspring given his own fierce defence of clear delineation of constitutional authority and jurisdiction. We are getting none of that clarity nor any sense of urgency from this government's ally and compatriot in Ottawa in spite of what would appear to be common belief in the power of social licence.

This Assembly here now, today, needs to make an explicit and direct request of the federal government in order to ensure that they respond and respond with a sense of urgency and clarity, with meaningful and concrete action. The government needs to follow up with dogged determination in what is, guess what, the Year of the Dog – maybe the stubborn earth dog, of which I happen to be one – with the Prime Minister and his government to continue to push them to step up and do their job on behalf of Canadians from coast to coast, who stand to benefit from well-reasoned and responsible resource development.

I know this may be hard for this government, having been hesitant to criticize Justin Trudeau and his cabinet and playing along at every step with his regional favoritism, hypocrisy, and all-pain, no-gain environmental policies, but the self-evident truth known all too well by generations of Albertans is that the Trudeau Liberals have failed Alberta again and again when it comes to the energy sector and pipelines. For two generations, in fact. We need to demand the transparency of due process and constitutional accountability now, today, with solidarity from Albertans of all political stripes and from all walks of life.

Madam Speaker, the Trudeau Liberals failed on Northern Gateway, blocking approval for a pipeline, which has now led numerous aboriginal communities in northern British Columbia to consider court action against the federal government for rejecting that project. The federal government failed Alberta and all of Canada on Energy East by having the NEB rescope the review to include downstream emissions in spite of ignoring similar or even more blatant downstream emitters in the heart of central Canada. The federal government will again fail Alberta if they do not step up without hesitation or delay and use their declarative authority under this country's Constitution.

Asking the federal government to continue to take all necessary legal steps in support of the pipeline construction does not go far enough, hence our amendments. It does not go far enough because I do not believe that the federal government is currently taking all the necessary legal steps to support pipeline construction. Far from it. You can't continue to do something if you aren't doing it well or diligently in the first place – that's pretty clear – and we need to ensure that clarity in this motion.

The second and more important reason, which I've previously touched on, is that when we are talking about the Trudeau Liberals, words are not enough. In fact, I apply a deep discount to them virtually every day. Talk is cheap, as they say. The PM can play the game and give good stump speeches while he is in Alberta, but that simply isn't good enough. Alberta needs actions, not words.

Our leader has been very clear on this issue, and I would suggest that we have not heard the last of his impassioned plea, indeed his battle cry, in defence of our province and the people we fiercely represent as patriotic Canadians and proud Albertans. On August 12, 2017, he stated, and I quote: "So we need to send a very clear message to Premier Horgan and the British Columbia NDP that Alberta will not take this lying down. We will stand up and defend our legal rights, our economic interests. This is about more than merely some pipeline. This is about whether or not Canada is a country governed by the rule of law and whether or not we are an economic union."

Again on September 28, 2017, he stated, and I quote: "If the government, the NDP B.C. government, violates the rule of law and the economic union of Canada through dilatory measures that stop the construction of the approved Kinder Morgan Trans Mountain pipeline, there must be repercussions. There must be consequences, and there's a whole range of possible consequences, one of which, I think perhaps the strongest consequence, would be to say that we would stop signing permits for the shipment of oil and gas through the current Trans Mountain pipeline, which fuels much of the economy of the lower mainland."

He followed up these comments once again on November 10, 2017, with the following, and I quote: "Well, in 1982 Peter Lougheed shut off the taps of Alberta oil and gas to central Canada to get the attention of the federal government on the national energy policy. You know, perhaps we should consider doing the same thing with respect to the current shipment of oil through the current Kinder Morgan pipeline, that's existed for 60 years and that fuels much of the lower mainland economy. B.C. needs to understand that its economy is partly dependent on Alberta oil and gas, and if they want to violate the rule of law and violate free trade in Canada, there will be consequences."

Yet, Madam Speaker, the Premier stated on December 3, 2017, and I quote again: "I think that some of the suggestions that have come from Mr. Kenney are a very isolationist view of how Alberta should engage with the rest of the country. You know, I honestly wouldn't be surprised if he's essentially saying that what we should do is build a wall around Alberta. I wouldn't be surprised if tomorrow he comes out demanding that B.C. pays for it, and then the next day he'll come out and wonder why it is that we can't get the pipeline built."

Well, Madam Speaker, the Premier seemed very dismissive of escalating action, of using decisive measures against the government in British Columbia just a few short months ago, yet in the Speech from the Throne, delivered so eloquently by Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor, Lois Mitchell, the government stated, "In the past when workers in our energy industry were attacked and when the resources we own were threatened, Premier Peter Lougheed took bold action. Your government has been clear: every option is on the table." Apparently, if you list turning off the taps as a retaliatory option in December as a Conservative, you're promoting Trump-ish protectionism, but if you promote the same idea in March as a New Democrat, you are standing up for Alberta's interests. A curious, self-serving juxtaposition indeed. However, at the end of the day, we have a broad consensus from all parties in this House around the intent of this motion. I would suggest to the members opposite that our friendly amendment does indeed strengthen the motion and deserves not only due consideration but your vote of support. Albertans are counting on it, and anything less will reflect on your judgment or perhaps resolve to address this challenge to the livelihood of all Albertans without equivocation.

As I've already stated, the Prime Minister and his government have, at best, tepidly supported Alberta's energy sector, jobs, and the proven engine of our national economy. We need to make a clear request, we need to be specific, and we need to ask for – no; we need to demand – concrete and deliverable action. Doing so will provide the federal government with ample opportunity to back up their words to prove to all Canadians that it is not just empty rhetoric and to ensure this pipeline gets built.

Madam Speaker, in closing, I would encourage all members of this Assembly to support the amendment to the motion put forward by my hon. colleague. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to speak about pipelines as they actually are very true to my heart. Pipelines mean jobs for me, plain and simple. People are out of work in my constituency right now, and it comes down to the fact that we can't get the oil out. Literally, it is that simple.

What I have to say is that we have to look at the track record here. I have to say that the NDP government has been repeatedly saying that our federal Conservatives have not put out pipelines. I see that they've stopped that, but to be sure to put this on the record because this is important, the Kinder Morgan anchor loop was completed in 2008, the Enbridge Clipper was completed in 2010, the TransCanada Keystone was completed in 2010, and the Enbridge line 9B reversal was completed in 2015. Together these projects provide 1.25 million barrels per day of additional capacity for western Canada. It's very impressive.

Let's look at the track record of the federal Liberals, and let's look at the track record of our provincial NDP here. I'm going to paraphrase; I don't have the Blues in front of me. We've got the Member for Calgary-Klein: a pipeline would never have had the chance to be built under the opposition. I adamantly disagree with that. I believe that we would be right now fighting for four pipelines, not one. Four pipelines. We have Energy East, that the Trudeau government shut down. We have Northern Gateway. I credit our Premier, the Premier of the province of Alberta, for shutting that one down, Northern Gateway. Keystone XL was another one that the Premier, in my opinion, was planning on shutting down. But you know what? It is actually the one that is moving forward the quickest. Ironical that we have a pro-pipeline government down in the United States right now trying to make sure energy gets to markets. It's good for everybody.

The Kinder Morgan pipeline: for sure it's clear that this is our last hope of seeing something move out of here from this NDP government. So I understand that they actually want to see this. I don't believe that every one of the members across the aisle wants to see pipelines fail, but I will say – and, again, I brought this up earlier – that when you look at NDP governments across Canada, I am certain that you're probably going to find that most or all of them except for Alberta are actually advocating against us, which is why we're getting some strange messaging, which was why I think that the Trudeau Liberals don't seem to really care about the direction we're going in.

Now, I have to say that my colleague from Calgary-Hays on June 1, 2017, asked the question: "Do you now regret opposing Northern Gateway, and do you have any real plan to get Kinder Morgan's shovels in the ground?" This is a question that he asked last year, last summer.

The response from the Premier was:

Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I don't plan to do is to talk down the chances for Alberta's growth, talk down the fact that Alberta is actually a great place to invest, try to discourage people from coming here by telling them the sky is falling when it's really not, all the kinds of politically motivated things that we see from those guys over there and those guys over there. They are so interested in their own political success that all they want to do is to see economic failure for Albertans.

That wasn't even the question. That's the problem. The fearmongering isn't coming from our side. What we actually are seeing is a reasonable question from Calgary-Hays, saying: what are you doing to get shovels in the ground? And we're hearing: it's because of the opposition. That's the strangest answer I've ever heard.

Let's go on. Fort McMurray-Conklin on November 4, 2015, so going back a little further: "Energy East will only be viable if this Premier can convince the NDP Premier in Manitoba to stop trying to shut it down." What we've got here is the question: "When is she going to stop fighting against Alberta jobs and start fighting for pipelines?" That's from the Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin.

Now, the answer here was:

I took an approach of working collaboratively and respectfully with our colleagues across the country. In so doing, we got them to agree to the Canadian energy strategy. Temper tantrums were not a way to get our colleagues across the country to agree to the Canadian energy strategy. A collaborative effort was required, and that's what we did.

You know what? We saw the results. That pipeline was cancelled. That's clear. So social licence was very successful in that example.

Now, what I've got here is another example from one of my other colleagues. The question is – oh; sorry. I will put the date on it for Hansard. I don't have the date. I'll get the date to Hansard. "Your public confidence is admirable, but can you confidently say today that the Trans Mountain pipeline is any closer to being built than the Northern Gateway ever was?"

The Energy minister said:

You know, we continue to do the work we've done, and so does Kinder Morgan with Trans Mountain. As we speak, they are in B.C. talking. We continue with our relationships, as we've done. These relationships and this adult way of dealing with pipelines has gotten us not just one but two approvals. It's also been our climate leadership plan that got us those approvals as well, and we're going to continue that good work.

It doesn't seem that everybody else has got the message. What it does seem is that the only thing the NDP have been good at is demonizing the opposition, and that is all the opposition on the other side. Instead of working with us like they should have been, they continue to rail at us, saying that we're fearmongering. You know what? We've seen pipelines continually put down, and now we have a government that's worried about getting re-elected, so they're suddenly starting to ramp things up to see if they can get back into government.

Now, let's go to May 25, 2017. This was back in the summer again. This was an answer that was put forward by our Energy minister. The Member for Calgary-Foothills put this question forward. "Why is the NDP government working with the anti-Alberta organizations like Tides and radical activists like Karen Mahon and Tzeporah Berman, who are clearly on the take from people who would ruin Alberta?"

The response from the Energy minister was: "You know, this side of the House has taken a different approach because, we know, for far too long the other side wanted to go full John Wayne and pull everybody against each other."

I don't say that this answer is wholesome because, in the end, challenging the government and saying, "Why were we paying people to oppose our own pipelines?" – it seems to be an insane option for this province.

Now, let's go on to Calgary-Foothills:

By now you probably might have heard that the Petroleum Services Association of Canada, PSAC, lambasted our Premier and our Prime Minister for not standing up for the oil and gas industry.

The PSAC president said, quote, it's totally irresponsible that Canada is not getting its oil and gas to tidewater, to other parts of the world. Mr. Speaker, this is just common sense. Karen Mahon in her petroleum-made kayaks should have been out protesting the city of Victoria, not Kinder Morgan, for dumping untreated sewage into [our] ocean.

This was on November 1, 2017.

You know, I can go on and on with these examples, but we have limited time. I will say that what we needed has been a clear message from both opposition and government. This entire three years that you've been in government you have failed us. Now it's time to start to back up something. This motion is a good thing. We should accept this motion.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), the hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Now, I heard the hon. member say that he lays the responsibility for the cancellation of the Northern Gateway pipeline directly at our Premier's feet. I don't know if he was with us yesterday when this was debated, but I want to know from the hon. member, given that the Northern Gateway pipeline was cancelled by the Federal Court of Appeal, who in their ruling overturned the project after finding that Ottawa, that is to say the previous federal government, of which his leader was a leading member, failed to properly consult with First Nations affected by the pipeline. It said in the ruling that inadequacies – more than just a handful and more than mere imperfections – left entire subjects of central interest to the affected First Nations, sometimes subjects affecting their subsistence and well-being, entirely ignored. Many impacts of the Project – some identified in the Report of the Joint Review Panel, some not – were left undisclosed, undiscussed and unconsidered.

Given that the Northern Gateway pipeline was cancelled by the Federal Court of Appeal because of inadequacies and failures on the part of the previous federal government, of which his leader was a key member, will the member stand and apologize for blaming the cancellation of that pipeline on our Premier?

Mr. Cyr: With the Kinder Morgan we went and got intervenor status. Now, I'm not wholly familiar with that case, but I will say, though, that if we had gone through the same process with the Northern Gateway that we're going through with the Kinder Morgan right now, would that have changed? I'm going to say that we didn't start ramping this up until you realized that you were going to get no pipelines through. Let's just say that the federal Liberals changed the game plan or the rules halfway through that pipeline, like most pipelines, and it's shameful to see that we have co-operation from our Premier, the Premier of Alberta, who is an NDP leader, actually working with the federal Liberals to shut down that pipeline. I've got no apology for that.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm really pleased to be able to be here to speak on behalf of this amendment not only for Canadians, because I believe there are jobs that are going to be brought across this country because of this, but for Albertans and for the people in my riding. Hardisty has got this nexus of pipelines that are sitting that deliver oil across this country right from there.

I find it encouraging that we are here to debate a government motion that asks the Legislative Assembly to support Alberta's fight on behalf of Albertans' interest to ensure that a lawfully approved Trans Mountain pipeline expansion is built, to also call for the federal government to continue to take all necessary legal steps in support of pipeline construction, and to reaffirm our support as a Legislature for the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion. I think the government would agree with all those points because that came right out of the initial motion.

I as well as my colleagues have been supportive of this expansion of the Trans Mountain pipeline since day one, and we have been clear about our support for that expansion. While I certainly support any efforts by the government to accomplish this by standing up for this much-needed project, I really believe that this motion can be better, and this amendment helps make this motion better. Why do we need to make this better? It's simple. As Albertans we are leaving billions – that's billions – of dollars on the table that could go directly into our economy. But let me be clear here, too. We are not just leaving dollars on the table for Albertans alone; our resources could create prosperity again across all of the country, not just Alberta. We could have done so much more if we didn't have so much opposition from both the federal Liberal government and the B.C. NDP Party.

I want to go on. I want to agree with my colleague from Calgary-Foothills when he says that we need to do everything that we can to be able to put everything that we can, all that ammunition, to the government to be able to get this thing processed. Simply, the federal Liberal government can do more, and they aren't doing everything within their power. The federal Liberal government can end this debate right now by using the declarative authority under the Constitution. This project is in the national interest. As I said before, there are monies that can be obtained or, you know, seen, realized throughout this whole nation because of manufacturing and services across the country. If the federal government used section 92(10)(c) of the Constitution and declared that this is in the national interest, then we would have it done. We'd have a pipeline.

Why hasn't the carbon tax social licence worked as promised? Yesterday the Premier stated during a question from the Leader of the Opposition:

You know, at the end of the day, we're not going to take lessons, although from the leader of the UCP, on our energy future. We had Conservatives in Ottawa, we had Conservatives in Edmonton, and we had conservatives in Victoria for nine years, and they couldn't get a pipeline built... No pipeline, no diversification. They had their chance, and they blew it. That won't happen again. We will get that pipeline built.

Well, I hate to break it to you – I know another member had to break that news to you – that during our leader's tenure in Ottawa four pipelines were actually built. Four of them. The Kinder Morgan anchor loop was completed in 2008, the Enbridge Clipper was completed in 2010, the TransCanada Keystone was completed in 2010, and the Enbridge line 9B reversal was completed in 2015, all built under the Conservative government.

So it seems that what we are left with is a statement from B.C. and a carbon tax that, frankly, has hurt businesses throughout my riding of Battle River-Wainwright. I've recently talked to an owner – this was just about 10 days ago – who has a gravel- and grain-hauling business. He told me that this tax has increased costs to him by about $100,000 per month. That's $100,000 per month, the carbon tax. That's about $1.2 million a year. That's outrageous. This is money that could be going back into the economy, the local economy in this small community, but it's not. It's going to the carbon tax, and it's going directly to different green agendas that this NDP government is wanting to put up. Tire shops, too, are at a standstill compared to a couple of years ago because of slow activity in the oil field. And the list goes on.

The thing about oil is that we all get what the market will bear. We don't get any more than what the market will bear. Unfortunately, right now we have to take the western Canadian select price, not the WTI, or the west Texas intermediate. More carbon tax just makes it harder for companies to compete. Their bottom line is being shrunk. Companies are, frankly, moving south of the border, where there are fewer costs, less regulation. They can see that there's less profit here in Alberta each day. Therefore, it is more imperative than ever to get this product to tidewater – that's what we're trying to do here – so that we can realize a higher price for this product, not the western Canadian select price.

How to make life better? Scrap the carbon tax for one thing. We have not changed a single pipeline opponent's opinion because of the carbon tax. No jurisdiction is saying, "Yes, let's do business right away" because it's been legislated. Why are Albertans strapped with this tax that only, frankly, drives business away and is, frankly, counterproductive?

Madam Speaker, we needed to make this motion stronger. It's clear that the federal government isn't doing everything within their power. We can make it known to the rest of Canada that Alberta elected officials stand united in their desire to get this pipeline built. After all, it was our leader who wrote the Premier asking for this debate to happen last month, and we were rebuffed. There is simply no logical reason for the government not to get onboard and support our motion. If they agree that the feds have the authority to declare this project essential to Canada's interests, then why not lend their voice to this motion? Where's the downside?

We are blessed to be here in the province of Alberta, that has the third-largest oil reserve in the world, but if we can't get our product to market, we can't realize our potential. My colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre's motion may help do just that. I encourage all the members of this House to support this motion in a united purpose and go forward.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any further speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to the government motion to really express a united voice on the part of Albertans to get the pipeline done. We need to do that. I speak clearly in support of the motion and also in support of the amendment. I think it's quite obvious that we are going to support on this side of the House the efforts to stand up for the Trans Mountain project, and it's something that we absolutely need to do. Albertans know exactly where we stand on this issue. Our leader, Jason Kenney, has been very clear on it, stated it over and over again, as have we, and we will continue to support the motion towards getting the pipeline built. I do think we can make it slightly better, and that's why we've introduced the amendment. I think the important thing is that we make this motion as effective as possible and get it done as quickly as we possibly can.

Albertans, particularly the Albertans in my riding, Lacombe-Ponoka, have been waiting far too long for the opportunity for us to get our energy to market and to be able to have the jobs and the economic benefits that will come with that. Quite frankly, it benefits all Canadians. It benefits all of Canada. Alberta oil and gas is the most innovative, the cleanest there is in the world. Right in Lacombe-Ponoka we have one of the largest secondary oil and gas industries, at NOVA Chemicals, manufacturing ethane and polyethylene. They also create green energy at that plant through cogeneration, capturing lost heat and turning it into electricity. The energy that comes out of Alberta and the energy products that come out of Alberta are actually extremely clean, much cleaner than in most other places in the world. We need to be careful that we don't basically shut down Alberta oil and gas and then have the rest of Canada using, really, energy that comes from other places that are not environmentally conscious, that are not socially conscious, that in fact are very dark in many different kinds of ways.

Also, I think people need to know that the east side of my riding, actually, is the area where carbon sequestration is going to be happening, coming out of the Alberta Industrial Heartland area, pumping carbon back down into the ground as one of the by-products of the production of oil and gas products. That happens right in the gas field on the east side of my riding because the geology is extremely beneficial for it. The pipeline will take carbon from some of the manufacturing process and pump it right straight back into the ground, where it came from, and will in fact reduce the carbon emissions from that particular part of it to zero. We need to be conscious of the fact that Alberta oil is not all about creating greenhouse gases. It's also about finding ways to mitigate greenhouse gases and finding ways to produce oil and gas and oil and gas products in ways that are beneficial to the rest of Canadians.

I should say that, really, it is Alberta oil that provides the quality of life that many Canadians enjoy. In fact, protesters themselves use the very oil that they protest. I find that extremely disconcerting. I've always said to people, you know, that it's extremely easy to shut down the oil and gas industry permanently if we really want to. Any group of people that would actually take this seriously could put an end to this industry very quickly, and that would be to just stop using it. But everybody wants to be able to fly. Everybody wants to drive. Everybody wants to heat their houses. Everybody wants to use the plastics, their clothing, their houses, their cars. You know, protesters need to show us how to stop using it if they think it's that bad. I just struggle with the cognitive dissonance of protesting the delivery of oil but accepting the uses of that same oil every single, solitary day, even on the days of protest.

I call on the citizens of British Columbia to challenge the false logic and the false messaging of extremist environmentalists against Alberta oil and gas. All of Canada benefits not just from the products but also from the wealth that's generated through this in the form of – what's the word? I can't even say it – transfer payments to the rest of Canada, to all of those areas that don't have this wealth. They get some of the cash benefit of this. We need to somehow get the messaging right on this. We don't have to destroy our country in order to receive the benefits of a modern economy. We don't need to punish our nonprofits, our agricultural industries.

Last week I spoke at a gas co-op in my riding. I was really disconcerted to hear that that gas co-op in the last 10 months, January to October, not even including the cold winter weather that we've had, had to collect from the people of my riding, the hard-working, ordinary people of just the eastern side of my riding, $750,000 in carbon tax. That came out of their pockets, out of their lifestyle, and that's just the natural gas to heat their homes. It doesn't count the increased cost of driving in rural areas, of agricultural uses, the increased costs of products, and all the rest of it. I think we need to find ways to do things in a more positive and forthright manner that are actually beneficial and not punitive to our people and to our country.

I would like to see us accept the amendment that has been put forward. We need to call on the federal government. I realize that there's some difference of opinion and debate with regard to section 92(10)(c) of the Constitution. You know what? Whatever it takes, let's just get it done. If Parliament has the jurisdiction already, well, then, act on it. And that's the challenge. I mean, the Prime Minister has stated that they believe the pipeline to be in the national interest of Canada. Well, then, do something to effect that belief. Take some action to actually cause it to happen. We need to challenge the federal government to act upon what they say, to take action. We need to make this motion as strong as we possibly can so that they get that message.

I truly believe that the Liberals could end this debate now rather than stand by silently. So I call on the Liberal government of Canada to actually resolve this in the Canadian national interest, for the benefit of all Canadians both in terms of product and in terms of the money that it produces for all of Canada. I implore all of us. Let's do the very best we can. Let's get this thing done. Let's do what needs to be done and move on with it.

Thank you very much.

4:30

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my honour to rise to support the amendments as proposed by the Opposition House Leader to Government Motion 2. Like everyone in the UCP caucus, I'm pleased to speak to the government's motion calling upon the Legislative Assembly to fully support the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion. Of course, we support the government's fight because (a) it is in the best interest of Alberta and Canada and, second, taking up the fight was the idea of our leader. Until the Member for Calgary-Lougheed started pushing our NDP government to fight with all its effort for this pipeline, you would hardly have known the pipeline was in any peril, despite B.C.'s clear plan to obstruct it. Now the government has come onboard to battle, and we are happy to do so to support government.

After all, this discussion itself is something our leader urged a month ago. At that time, the Premier dismissed it as unnecessary, and although she has come full circle to seeing its benefits today, we're not placing any barriers in its way because we offer full support. As our leader said last August, quote: we need to send a very clear message to Premier Horgan and the British Columbia NDP that Alberta will not take this lying down; we will stand up to defend our legal right, our economic interest. Unquote. This is an opportunity to send that message to the British Columbia NDP and the federal government. The message is important for B.C., who is playing games, that those games must end. The message is important to all Canadians, because it is important to the prosperity of our whole nation and it is important to the prosperity of future generations of this country.

It has taken quite a while to get this NDP government to this point. Two months ago the Premier said, quote: they want us to act like tough guys, threatening a trade war with B.C.; it would be amusing if it wasn't so bad. Unquote. Six weeks later she imposed a boycott on B.C. wine, which our leader supported, and now we're here today supporting this motion but asking that it first be strengthened. Since the Premier has taken our leader's advice, since she decided to acknowledge that Alberta had to play hardball with a province that wasn't respecting the rule of law in Canada, we are hoping she will take his advice on ways to strengthen this motion as well.

A key way to make this motion particularly relevant is to add the clause "including . . . a declaration that the pipeline is in the national interest" by the use of section 92(10)(c) of the Constitution. This clause is aimed at the Prime Minister, who confirms that the Trans Mountain pipeline is in the nation's interest but refuses to invoke the clause that puts an end to B.C.'s manoeuvring to delay the project with the hope that Kinder Morgan walks away from it. This is a smokescreen for not wanting to act as the leader of a country should when its country's economic future is placed at risk.

Our NDP government has been shy about criticizing Justin Trudeau and his Liberal government. We're confident they'll get over it when they see that Albertans do not want them to pander to Ottawa. Alberta has a fine heritage of standing up to the federal government when it wasn't looking out for all provinces fairly. The example that always comes top of mind is Peter Lougheed standing up to Pierre Trudeau and his national energy program, and we have discussed that many times in this House.

Our leader said in September, quote: I think we need our Premier to stand up to these attacks on our economic union and free trade and the rule of law the same way that Peter Lougheed stood up to Pierre Trudeau back in the 1980s. Unquote. Almost 40 years later we need that kind of leadership again. That's why our leader suggested a debate like this a month ago, and that's why we're supporting this motion today. But we're asking the NDP government to add this critical clause. Think about how powerful it would be if every member of this Legislative Assembly urged our Prime Minister to use this clause in order to support this pipeline expansion. It would put an end to B.C.'s delaying manoeuvres on this project. Investors who have been waiting to see if Alberta can get a pipeline to tidewater will obtain the confidence that they need to announce projects, building upon our resource industry, which has been damaged so badly in the last few years.

Fifteen thousand pipeline construction jobs will become a reality. The 37,000 direct and indirect jobs created by the project will be a go. Alberta will reset itself as a leader in Canada, a position we have lost in recent years. There is absolutely no reason to reject this amendment and, I think, every reason to support this amendment. We hope we're not disappointed after discussing Government Motion 2 for two days under the spotlight that Albertans have turned on our House as we deal with a question so important to the future of our province and the future of our country. This is the time for the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to display that we can set aside partisanship and political theatre for the common good of our province. After all, we are asking the same of our country, so we're compelled to do so. That's why we're adding this amendment. We will not give up, for at every stage of this discussion the NDP has mocked us and rejected us at every turn, only to suddenly change course.

We have all known the record of this NDP government and that some of the caucus members of the government haven't been in favour of development of resources in this province. It's in public display. I am going to give a couple of examples. This is our hon. Education minister from November 1, 2008. Quote: balance of mind and balance of body starts by doing the right thing, and I say that doing the right thing means that we have no new approvals for tar sand projects. This is what our hon. Education minister said on November 1, 2008.

We have also seen the pictures of the hon. Member for Calgary-East holding the no more dirty oil sign. We have also seen the pictures of the Premier attending the antipipeline, anti oil and gas rallies. I mean, this is the stigma. This is the reputation of this NDP government pertaining to resource development. I think that by supporting this amendment, the government can actually truly prove that they do believe in resource development, that they do believe in the development of our oil and gas industry.

Madam Speaker, I ask that, hopefully, by supporting this amendment, this government and this Premier and the caucus members on the government side will restore the position they claim, that they do believe in resource development and fighting for our province and our country's resource development.

Thank you very much. I hope all the members of this House support this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

4:40

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any further speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased and honoured to rise today and speak in favour of the amendment to strengthen and improve the government's motion. The issue is not whether I or anyone else in the UCP caucus supports the government's efforts to stand up for the Trans Mountain pipeline project. We not only support the government; we want them to be doing even more. I'm very, very appreciative of my colleagues who for the last hour or two have expressed many of the strong, strong reasons that we need our government to do even more, that we need to ensure that British Columbia and the rest of Canada gets a clear, unequivocal message of how important this pipeline is not only to just Alberta but, of course, to British Columbia and to all of Canada.

You know, I want to take just a couple of minutes and go back to who we are supporting. Madam Speaker, I had an oil and gas guy in my office about three or four days ago whose company is still going, barely going, and he told me that because of the drop in work, because of the decline in activity, he has not taken a wage from his company for three or four years. Can you imagine?

I was watching my youngest son play basketball in Brooks the other day, and a group of young men came in. They were in a good mood. They were positive. They were joking. They were friendly. They were a nice fellowship to witness. They kind of sat down in front of me, and I could hear them talking about how they had just got back to work, so I leaned in, Madam Speaker, and I said: "That's great. Good to hear that you guys are working. Whereabouts around Brooks are you working?" Unfortunately, the answer came back Saskatchewan. They had to travel great distances to find some work.

I think of many of my friends that are in the oil and gas business who tell me that although they've gone a year longer without work, they're grateful now to be working for 60 per cent of what they used to make or the ones that have lost their houses or had to move on.

You know, that's where I want to turn to next. Who are we doing this for? Why do we need B.C.? Why do we need Trudeau? Why do we need the government of Canada to ensure that this happens? My colleagues spoke at great length about how Alberta in Canada is the best producer in the whole world environmentally and socially.

I just saw on the Internet – it was by an Alberta economist – that only 55 per cent of young men in Alberta, 15 to 24 years old, are even working. Can you imagine the price they're paying for this radical environmental – this competitive battle that we've lost to get our good oil and gas to tidewater? That is something like 100,000 young men in Alberta who want to work and can't find work. Women with a higher degree are, unfortunately, unemployed as well, but this article stated that it wasn't as bad for young women. Of course, Madam Speaker, I'm concerned about all Albertans that want to find work and cannot find the type of work they want when they want it and at the highest amount of pay they can get. So to the Prime Minister of Canada, the ceremonial Prime Minister of Canada: this is what we're fighting for. To the Premier of British Columbia: young men, young women, young people everywhere are unable to find the work that they're looking for.

You know, the Medicine Hat News had a headline a week ago that still shocks me, that 18 properties over four years hadn't paid their property taxes. I remember talking to a city councillor three or four years ago who assured me that the number then was zero. So, my goodness, if that many properties haven't paid their property taxes in four years, how many haven't in one, two, or three? How many haven't been making their mortgage payments? How much of this kind of thing, Madam Speaker, is affecting the quality of Albertans' lives, their mental health, their ability to provide for their families, their ability to take care of their communities and their neighbours?

Madam Speaker, this is what we're fighting for, and it's back to what so many of my hon. colleagues have said: Alberta, bar none, is the best producer, the best producer environmentally and socially, in a world that's going to be demanding more and more barrels of oil every day. As we get cleaner, as we get more efficient, the demand for the product increases. It is our opportunity and our obligation to provide this to the rest of the world.

Look at how far offside our politicians have gotten it everywhere in Canada. We've heard about big cities in Canada dumping raw sewage into the precious waters with little regard. We know that Ontario and Quebec buy something like 800,000 barrels of oil a day from Saudi Arabia or Venezuela. Of course, our hon. leader has talked about those two regimes; many others have talked about those two regimes. We have turned this world upside down. We have done what is not the best. We have done what is not right for the environment, for young workers, and for the Canadian economy.

Now I want to talk a little bit about where we're at. I had breakfast with 30 Cypress-Medicine Hatters last Saturday, and I would say to the government, my colleagues across the floor, that they have a credibility problem. Many, many Albertans do not believe that their heart is in this fight, do not believe that they are really here to advocate for Albertans, to advocate for our oil and gas industry and get the pipelines we need.

I'm amazed that our Premier backed down on the wine embargo so quickly. I'm amazed that she backed down with a little bit of a promise although I believe that Premier Horgan has done nothing. Well, actually, Madam Speaker, that is not true. Premier Horgan went a step further; he taxed Albertans that own property in recreation areas that might be vacant. So our Premier fired a shot, then she retracted it, and the Premier of B.C. is now taxing Albertans even further. When I had breakfast with 30 Cypress-Medicine Hatters, it's no wonder that they don't believe that this government has their backs, that this government really believes in pipelines. Premier Notley's weak attempt at the wine embargo absolutely supports that.

Madam Speaker, you know what was so refreshing about these 30 people, too? We all took a minute or so, talking about what we'd like to see happen in this dispute with British Columbia to get the pipeline. They were all very, very concerned about their family members, their community members, other Albertans that couldn't find work at the maximum wage or the best opportunity they could. But, you know, Albertans being the wonderful people that they are, they were also concerned about anybody in British Columbia that might get affected inadvertently as well by what needs to be done. The genuine concern that Albertans have for all Canadians and the people of B.C. was so refreshing.

But, Madam Speaker, don't get me wrong. The people of Alberta, the people of Cypress-Medicine Hat want the Trans Mountain pipeline. They want our ceremonial Prime Minister to get to work. They want our government to get to work and make this happen. They want to do what needs to be done to make sure that Albertans can work, that Albertans can work to their full productivity, and that we can enjoy access to markets. Make no mistake that that was their overriding concern.

Madam Speaker, I said it earlier: I was disappointed to see the Premier and her NDP government fold at the first sign of pressure, you know, from the B.C. NDP and their Green Party allies. We know that their goal is to delay this, delay this, delay this until Kinder Morgan finally takes – jeez, I don't even know what it is – their $3 billion or $4 billion or $5 billion and invests it elsewhere along with those many good jobs that go with it. They're saying that the B.C. NDP agreed to take their plan to regulate and restrict the flow of diluted bitumen to the courts, but besides that, nothing has changed. The NDP B.C. Premier said that he would be using every single tool available for him to fight the Trans Mountain pipeline. Every single tool. That's kind of a coincidence because that was the phrase that the hon. minister of environment used when she wrote her foreword in An Action a Day Keeps Global Capitalism Away. I digress.

I just want to take a moment to point out that the B.C. government hasn't actually referred anything to the courts yet. They are still formulating the exact question to ask the court. A court delay is going to take three, four, or five, maybe 10 years, Madam Speaker. It's no wonder that Cypress-Medicine Hatters know how disingenuous this government is and know how important this fight is.

But back to my point. The B.C. NDP have not moved an inch from opposing the pipeline. They oppose the pipeline. In fact, not a single person or group that opposes the pipeline has moved to become a pipeline proponent, as our hon. leader pointed out the other day, in spite of us paying $2 billion a year in carbon tax.

It doesn't sound like this government was successful in convincing the B.C. Premier to accept that his actions are illegal or unconstitutional, nor does it sound like he's agreed to stop the obvious delay tactics specifically designed to disrupt the Trans Mountain pipeline. Madam Speaker, this government needs to show Albertans that they truly are in this fight, that they truly will do everything possible to get this pipeline so that men and women in Alberta can get back to work. That's why I'm supporting it.

Madam Speaker, thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any further speakers to the amendment?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker, if I may.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: I would like to move that we shorten the bells to one minute for amendments to the government motion only.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: We are now back on the main motion. Any speakers to this? The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have stood in opposition to new pipelines in the past. Maybe you've seen the picture. It's not a great one. I'm wearing a hat, and while I enjoy a good hat from time to time, I'm not really a hat person. It was downtown in 2011. I stood in front of the Harry Hays Building in downtown Calgary to protest the expansion of Keystone XL.

I was there for several reasons, reasons that a picture does not adequately explain. I felt that the government at the time was not doing enough to diversify the economy and that they were relying too heavily on the oil and gas industry and that this was doing irreparable damage to our economy long term. At the time, the government in 2011 was also not actively endeavouring to reduce Alberta's carbon emissions. They were not adequately protecting Alberta's greatest resources: our land, our water, and our air. I felt that shipping more raw bitumen to the United States so that it could be refined there and sold back to us was not in the best interests of Albertans.

I wasn't confident that the government at the time was spending the money from our oil boom wisely. How could we have a such a successful, profitable oil and gas industry but still have such a fragile economy, susceptible to booms and busts, busts that saw and still see Albertans from all over the province hurting? With oil above $100 a barrel and talk of expanding pipelines, why were teachers being told that they might not have jobs next year? Why were we not building schools? Why were we not contributing to our heritage savings fund? Other jurisdictions have been famously documented as navigating these same waters with much greater success. When Alberta was booming, why weren't profits being directed towards innovation and diversification across multiple industries?

I do not regret protesting a pipeline expansion in 2011. A pipeline in 2011 would not have created the jobs and the path that we need now. A pipeline in 2011 would have contributed more to the past government's inability to harness the power and economic force that a pipeline has the potential to be. A pipeline in 2011 would only have amplified the past government's propensity to spend money by providing tax cuts to their friends so that the rich could get richer. So I do not regret my actions in 2011. I stand by my actions at that time and in those circumstances.

But circumstances have changed. It's not 2011 anymore. Alberta voted to get rid of that government, and I can tell you that this government will utilize this pipeline to benefit all Albertans, not just those at the top; that this government will work towards a more creative, innovative, and diversified economy; that this government has a climate leadership plan that addresses carbon emissions and air pollution.

The opposition quickly points fingers and blames our government for the recession we've just been through, but our government has had to face down the economic reality of what former governments left us and create a plan that ensures that Alberta does become a leader in innovation, diversification, and that we do it with creativity and Alberta grit. There are people who ask me: "Why more oil? Why are you pushing this pipeline so hard? This isn't what I was expecting from an NDP government." They say, "Haven't you protested pipelines?" They say that I've flip-flopped, that I'm being political.

But I'm a science teacher, and I've always prided myself on basing my decisions on the best facts that I have before me. I'm here today, and I can tell you that I've toured refineries, in situ sites, and university labs. I've read countless studies and heard economic reports, and I can tell you without reservation that the Alberta oil industry is working continuously to take carbon out of the barrel.

I also know that the oil industry has been integral to the foundation of Alberta, and denying this would be ill informed and unenlightened. Here today, in 2018, we are in a position to work with the oil and gas industry, with universities, and with entrepreneurs to bring about the changes that we all seek, to create an economy that will provide the future that we want. I know now that protesting pipelines is not an effective way to reduce carbon emissions. Fewer gas-powered cars would reduce emissions. Better technology reduces emissions. More public transit; more green energy – solar, wind, wave, thermal – more energy efficient homes, offices, and businesses; more local food production; more local production of goods, period; less deforestation: these are things that will lead to a lower carbon economy.

In 2018 I stand having educated myself, and I know that pipelines are not the enemy. In Alberta this pipeline is needed so that we can continue building the diverse, innovative, multifaceted economy that we require for the prosperity of future generations. If anything can be seen as an enemy, it has been past governments' inability to adjust to new challenges, challenges that we can face and overcome together.

We can't remain fixed. We can't have one path. We have to be flexible, and we have to develop. I'm not fixed. Every day I challenge myself to learn more, to be more open, to try to more fully understand our difficulties. I am proud that our NDP government has not remained fixed in our strategies, that we strive to improve and rise up to meet the challenges that Alberta faces. I got involved in politics because I wanted a government that based its decisions on facts and the situation currently in front of them, one that took all factors into consideration, and I am confident that this NDP government is doing exactly that.

As a legislator I often ask myself if the policies that I am voting on will hold up for my children. We cannot deny that Alberta needs to diversify, to innovate. The energy industry is the backbone of our economy, but that doesn't mean that we shouldn't be making every effort to expand and lift Alberta into a future of all possibilities, a future with better public transit, more renewable energy, and more energy products being made in Alberta. To do this, we need the ability to sell our oil now. We need to be able to sell it without a steep discount and to support our industry in its ongoing quest to lower emissions. There's no question that this pipeline will help us get there.

For me, this issue boils down to three questions. First, will this pipeline mean that we as Albertans and as Canadians are better off in 20 years? Second, do the benefits outweigh the risks? And, most important, is it what the majority of my constituents want? The answer to all three of these questions is a resounding yes, so I am happy to support this motion.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'll make a few preliminary comments, and then I have an amendment to put forward to the Legislature. It's a very important issue, that we're all appropriately spending a lot of time and energy on.

I want to be clear that I think our oil sands have provided unparalleled opportunity and economic returns to Albertans, jobs for citizens across this country. It's been the engine of our economy, and technological advances with environmental demands have reduced the emissions per barrel of oil as we move from 2.5 million barrels a day to almost 4 million barrels per day in the coming years. It's clear that the Kinder Morgan pipeline passes all the tests of our current federal energy panel and our own Alberta Energy Regulator, and the federal government clearly has constitutional power to act across provincial lines in the national public interest.

But it's also clear to Albertans that in relation to the oil sands resource this government has a constitutional requirement to act in the long-term public interest, not just short-term economic interests. We must develop the resource but not at any cost. On behalf of Albertans and Canadians let us (a) be more transparent about the benefits and the risks to taxpayers, (b) ensure that these largely foreign-owned corporations pay fully for pollution and reclamation costs, and (c) report regularly on our commitments to climate change, holding ourselves accountable as the largest emitter of greenhouse gases in the country.

Let's talk first, then, about the benefits. The focus of this discussion has been entirely one sided, focused only on the benefits without the acknowledgement that we are taking risks whenever we develop heavy oil and transport it. We therefore have a duty to all citizens to provide a balanced, triple-bottom-line business case.

Recently the Parkland Institute reported that the claim of $18.5 billion in economic benefits should be seen in the context of a 20-year period, translating to $925 million annually for this pipeline, split between Alberta, Ottawa, and B.C. So let's be clear about the full accounting of the benefits. As the institute also pointed out, the revenue, fiscal benefits, and job numbers are premised on production levels that appear to go far beyond what will be allowed under our provincial emissions cap for oil sands production.

I think the Alberta public and the Canadian public will add their support to Alberta's call if we are much more transparent about both the benefits and the risks. Kinder Morgan as recently as August 2017 said that the total number of construction jobs for the project would be 2,500 per year for two years, not the 15,000 that were claimed in the media. Our credibility, as we deserve as the most responsible energy producer, also depends fundamentally on providing accurate information on both benefits and risks.

To address some of the risks – the principle is well supported across the political spectrum; I think there's no one in the House that doesn't believe that the polluter should pay. We now see growing interest among corporations in releasing their responsibilities as a result of the Redwater decision, and this government along with the federal government has loaned significant funds to oil and gas companies to particularly clean up orphan wells.

This is a concern, I think, that is doubly there for the oil sands, where a $21 billion cleanup is estimated to be required in the context of 4 per cent of that amount being set aside for cleanup today. It's also important to recognize and for Albertans to realize that only 1 per cent of the oil sands has been reclaimed so far. So I think we have to acknowledge the potential for a real hand-off to the public purse, and we have to start reporting on that in a more robust way to Albertans. The 2015 Auditor General report identified in relation to the mine tailings issues, quote: inflated asset measures, unrecognized development costs, and overestimation of the mine life. End quote. Albertans deserve to know full, detailed liability disclosure, and they need to know, as I asked yesterday in this House, what the government is going to do to ensure full financial security if they really plan to honour their commitment to the polluter-pays principle.

In this context we need to remember what's happened elsewhere in Canada. The tar ponds in Sydney, the Yellowknife Giant mine:

both of those left to the public purse. I'm not saying that this will happen, but I'm saying that a prudent government acting in the public interest has to be more serious about reporting every year to Albertans both the benefits and the risks.

Our First Nations interests are, thankfully, being much more addressed by this government, and I applaud them for their making a priority around First Nations treaty rights and including them in a lot of the consultations that have failed in the past to be appropriately done. They have health interests and concerns which we haven't fully characterized in the research yet. First Nations have reported higher incidence of a number of illnesses that still need to be researched in relation to ongoing oil sands development.

In relation to greenhouse gas monitoring and climate change, the fundamental question in relation to the government's clear commitment to climate change, I applaud them again as the government that has done more on climate change than any government since I entered the Legislature. I want to go on record as saying that I support the carbon levy. It's the price of using our atmosphere to dump carbon.

Let's get real about the seriousness of climate change across this planet. We are not suffering from climate change. Too many Albertans welcome warming here. That's part of the reason Alberta has been able to get away with much slower progress on reducing our carbon emissions. Our commitment in the Paris accord is to reduce by 2 per cent per year. The best information I can get – and I was asking the minister yesterday why we're not getting more timely information on greenhouse gas emissions – is that we're increasing 2 per cent per year in our carbon emissions. It's not 4 per cent, which was the previous decade, so we've reduced the percentage of increase. But let's face it. A 2 per cent increase every year is not going to get us to reductions in 2030.

How do we, in fact, reduce greenhouse gases by expanding the oil sands? We have other fossil fuel options that we need to consider as Albertans, thinking about not just this next election cycle or this next four-year period but long into the future. This government has yet to consult Albertans meaningfully, with full-cost accounting, on how Albertans want to see this critical resource developed over the coming years based on a balance of economic, social, and environmental values. As in the past, it appears that the political needs and industry pressure are still determining the pace and scale of our development of the oil sands. To quote Peter Lougheed: treat Albertans as the owners of our resource. End quote. To respect this is to provide Albertans with all the dimensions of the benefits and risks of our resource.

In relation to the recent Parkland report, they indicate that the big five oil sands producers have only one way, really, to reduce their total emissions. Because they have not been able to absolutely reduce emissions, they have reduced emissions relatively per barrel of oil.

Mark Jaccard of Simon Fraser University, a widely respected consultant on climate change, consultant to national and provincial governments over the last 15 years, asserts that, quote, if you freeze emissions today on the oil sands, it will still be extremely difficult to hit the Paris target.

It's puzzling that Albertans do not hear annual updates on our net GHG emissions, as we do on other key indicators for the oil sands, given the climate's significance to our health, our economy, and our environment. We have abundant local experiences of extreme weather and disasters. Our Paris commitment, again, is to reduce by 2 per cent per year, especially since Alberta contributes almost 50 per cent to the national greenhouse gas inventory.

In short, I'm asking this Legislature on behalf of present and future generations to be more conscientious about reporting the true benefits, costs, and long-term liabilities that current and future generations will bear as we grow the oil sands. I'm asking for full-cost accounting that relates to annual GHG emissions, annual industry reclamation liabilities, and public consultations on the future of the oil sands.

In this spirit I move the following amendment:

And be it further resolved that the Legislative Assembly seek to address public concerns about increasing bitumen production and pipeline transport by urging the government of Alberta to report each year, in the government annual report, on Alberta's oil sands region through a transparent, full-cost accounting framework that includes reclamation liabilities and estimated greenhouse gas emissions from the region.

I'll circulate that, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: This will be known as amendment A2.
Go ahead, hon. member.

Dr. Swann: I think it speaks for itself, Madam Speaker. We are an energy-producing province. Both the population in other provinces and, I think, citizens of Alberta have expected that they're getting the full information needed to make good decisions about our environment and our social impacts from oil sands development.

5:30

Yes, it's been overplayed to the extreme on both sides, with some people reviling the pipelines and the oil sands and other people saying: there's no problem with the oil sands, and there's no problem with pipelines. There's some balance there in the middle that I think we could get to, both in terms of our own credibility with our population and with other provinces, not even to mention the international community with respect to our commitment to climate change.

I dare say that it's been difficult in this province to get as serious about climate change as it requires. If we can't show leadership on climate change, with all the technology and all the wealth and all the good science here, where on the planet can we start to really show the importance of this triple bottom line that we talk about but that somehow escapes us with each successive administration as we desperately need the money and we desperately need the credibility now on the environment?

Finding that middle ground: I think this government is closer than any government I've been with to finding that balance. But this amendment would help to build that credibility, that we are not closing our minds, closing our eyes to the facts around some of the benefits and the risks in, particularly, two areas, climate and oil sands liability, that is very substantial, looking at the Auditor General's report.

I'll take my seat and look forward to the debate. Thanks, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and I want to thank the hon. member for his amendment. This goes a little far afield, in my view, from the focus and intention of the main motion. Although I'm a little surprised, it has been approved by Parliamentary Counsel.

The hon. member raises a couple of important things that should be benchmarked. The first is reclamation liabilities and greenhouse gas emissions for the region. Now, the hon. member provided the amendment to me yesterday, which I appreciate, and I did send it over to the Minister of Environment and Parks for her review. She informed me that these issues are already captured and provided in the climate leadership progress report and in the tailings management framework. Since they are already recorded and reported, Madam Speaker, I don't believe that the amendment is necessary and would be advising members not to support it.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: We're back on the main motion.

Dr. Swann: I'd like to have a standing vote, Madam Speaker.
[interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: The rules say three.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to bring forward comments on this motion, which I broadly support. I think that it is very clear, within the confines of this Assembly, that the members here support and understand the need for market access, pipeline capacity to be increased such that our products can get to market.

There was one phrase that the Premier gave in her introductory comments that really sort of struck me, and that is that we should speak and debate not as partisans but as citizens. I actually really like that. I think that's something we have to do more often in this Chamber. So for now, notwithstanding some of the comments I've heard from both sides, I'm going to set aside some of the things that we regularly hear from that side, which, quite frankly – and we heard it during the course of this debate as well, you know, things like, “Well, we cut the small-business tax.” But only after we dragged you kicking and screaming to cut the small-business tax, after all four parties on this side said that you should and the Finance minister insisted that it couldn't be done, then you cut the small-business tax.

I won't go into the constant refrain from over there about the failure to diversify Alberta's economy because, in point of fact, Alberta has the most diversified economy in the nation. That was correctly pointed out by the Member for Calgary-Elbow. What we don't have – actually, the Member for Calgary-Elbow has been correct in this, and the Government House Leader has pointed this out – is adequate diversification of revenue to the government. That is true, and we see that very clearly with the quarterly updates that show that not only is nonrenewable resource revenue down, but, associated with that, corporate income tax revenue, personal income tax revenue are also down because so much economic activity in Alberta is driven by oil and gas.

You know, we'll even set aside – and it was interesting to hear the Member for Calgary-East speak – past opposition to pipelines because it is well known that members on the other side have been opposed to pipelines in the past. It is also well known that they've claimed that pipelines do nothing but export jobs to other jurisdictions. We'll set those things aside because it sounds like the other side, if they haven't had a conversion on the road to Damascus, has had a pipeline epiphany.

Madam Speaker, the government is discovering the challenge of governing. It means making difficult decisions, and it means sometimes making decisions that alienate people who once were your base. They're discovering that challenge. It's taken a while, but they're discovering that.

So let's speak as citizens, not as partisans. You know, two great citizens of this province were privileged to be Premiers of this province. It's been interesting to hear the name of one of them invoked so frequently during the course of this debate, and that's Premier Peter Lougheed. As was said in a recent article in the Journal, as the last Progressive Conservative in captivity I'm rather proud that Mr. Lougheed's memory and his vision are being invoked so many times. In fact, recently one of his sons said, "That the left, right & centre in Alberta still find aspects of his vision, values & leadership appealing would make him quite happy, for that was his objective, [to] build an open, inclusive, pragmatic & moderate party that appeals to a broad base of Albertans across the political spectrum."

An Hon. Member: Here we are.

Dr. Starke: No, you're not even close. Don't even try.

Madam Speaker, the truth of the matter is that regardless of who wins the next election – we've had so many people invoking and we've had all parties invoking Peter Lougheed – it seems that Peter Lougheed's vision will live on, and that gives me great heart.

Mr. Lougheed's vision was important because – and the Member for Calgary-Mountain View just mentioned one of his six basic tenets, that I think have stood the test of time. It's important that we keep those tenets in mind: the first, behave like an owner; second, collect your fair share; the third, save for a rainy day; the fourth, add value; the fifth, go slow; the sixth, practise statecraft. Those basic fundamentals were the fundamentals of Peter Lougheed. Now, we can have a discussion, we can have an argument that at times there has been a departure from those basic tenets, but the truth of the matter is, Madam Speaker, that those tenets have served Alberta well in the past. I think we would do well to look at them on a regular basis in the future as opposed to treating some of the things that Mr. Lougheed did as a buffet and just picking and choosing the items that you happen to like and that fit your ideology.

Now, I have to say that the talk that's been brought up of turning off the taps I have found a little bit amusing. Things have changed since Premier Lougheed's time, and it has been well documented that while it may be politically expedient to stand up and say, "We're just going to do what Premier Lougheed did," the truth of the matter is – and it's been made very clear by a number of academics – that it's not simply that easy to do. There is a complex allocation system for how pipeline space is allocated. It's not simply a matter of shutting off the taps. The province of Alberta does not own the pipeline. The province of Alberta does not control all of the resources flowing through that pipeline. We have to make sure that we understand what effects that would have on our reputation as a secure supplier of energy to our customers.

That reputation has already taken a severe hit under this administration because of their inconsistencies with regard to how they deal with the energy industry. While they can trumpet the support they've received from large oil companies, I can tell you that overall, especially among small and medium-sized producers, by which the oil industry in this province was largely built, those producers are certainly not in favour of much of what this government has done.

You know, my concern is: are we leveraging alternatives? Are we developing any sort of a plan B in doing this? I see no evidence of that. I haven't seen that the advisory force, the task force of 19 experts that was appointed, has come up with any alternatives. I haven't seen the government look at: well, what happens if the pipeline doesn't get built? They've put absolutely all their faith that, either through the actions of the Prime Minister – and I have very little faith that he will act on our behalf because it's not politically expedient for him to do so. I think that if we hold our breath and wait for this Prime Minister to act on behalf of Albertans, we might get anoxic in a real big hurry.

Madam Speaker, I think it's critically important that we look at alternatives, including other proposals like the pipeline that is being proposed that largely has ownership and equity and the approval of First Nations and indigenous peoples along its entire route. There is a proposal there, yet this government hasn't even given those folks the time of day.

There's another proposal to build a rail line from northern Alberta to Alaska, the port of Valdez. You, Madam Speaker, attended a conference with me on that, and you know, as a northern Albertan, that that causes considerable excitement in northern Alberta because of what it would do for market access for products from northern Alberta, not just bitumen, which would be shipped in heated railcars not requiring diluent. Get this: they would be powered by electrical batteries that would be charged by wind turbines along the route. You want to talk innovation? You want to talk forward thinking? You should take a look at that project. But, no, that hasn't been given any attention by this government. Instead, the only project that we're pinning all our hopes on is the Kinder Morgan expansion, and we know that that expansion is encountering significant opposition.

Madam Speaker, I do support this motion. I support the efforts that the government has been making, but I also want to remind the government that many of their actions have not been consistent as far as support of our industry. While I am glad that they have come around and while I am glad that they are learning what it takes to govern and the complexities of governing, I think that it's important that we as an Assembly stand together, that we unanimously pass this motion, and I would urge all members in the Assembly to vote in favour of said motion.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any further speakers to the motion? The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am not going to talk about Peter Lougheed, but I'm going to be speaking about my constituency and the Industrial Heartland, that I share with the MLAs for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater, and Edmonton-Manning. This area is not only the area for the Industrial Heartland, but it's also where the Strathcona industrial area is located.

Pipelines and the oil and gas industry are a large, if not the major contribution to the economy of these constituencies. These constituencies are home to workers who work in all aspects of the oil and gas sector, from building the pipelines to maintaining them, to monitoring the flow of oil, to the numerous trades that build the plants that upgrade the oil and gas, to the trades that work in the plants, and to many who work in extracting in the oil and gas fields, commuting back to their homes in many communities in Alberta. For those of you who use Baseline to commute to points east, you will know the importance of this sector in this region. Many pipelines begin or start there. The safety and environmental standards of the industries in the region are exemplary, and the leadership of the industries work hard to mitigate environmental damage and carbon emissions.

The Trans Mountain pipeline will start in this area and move east just past my constituency office. This pipeline is important to the people I talk to every day. This pipeline is crucial for everyone in Alberta. As we all know, we need more pipelines to ship our oil for good value to tidewater. Even if there are currently projects to reduce the need for diluent to transport bitumen and partially upgrade the bitumen in Alberta, as was recently announced, we still need more capacity in existing pipelines.

Madam Speaker, the motion is clear in asking the federal government to continue to take all necessary legal steps in support of the pipeline's construction. It is also clear that the Premier has been working with the federal government to ensure that there is clarity on the importance of the pipeline to Alberta and the economy of Canada.

Just as a reminder, we are here in the provincial Legislative Assembly, and we are not in the House of Commons, as sometimes I think I hear. We are here to support Alberta industries and workers. We are here to affirm our commitment to the Trans Mountain pipeline and to the process that gave permission for its construction. We are here to affirm the work of Alberta companies, what they're doing, and their strong environmental record. We are here to boast about the innovative technology of Alberta companies that make pipelines safer.

Madam Speaker, my constituents and those of many of us in this House are ready to work on the pipeline. The industries here are ready to provide the materials and tools to build the pipelines. Les résidents de ma circonscription sont prêts à travailler sur le pipeline. Je suis prête à appuyer la première ministre et à voter pour.

I would urge all members of the Assembly to vote for the motion and support the Premier in ensuring the Trans Mountain pipeline is built. Merci.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any further speakers to the motion?

Are you ready for the question?

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 2 as amended carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect. May each member of the Legislature have a strong and abiding sense of the great responsibilities that are laid upon us, and may we always work to gain a deep and thorough understanding of the needs and the hopes of the families and the constituents that we serve.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day Committee of Supply

The Chair: I'd like to call Committee of Supply to order.

Hon. members, before we commence this morning's consideration of interim supply, I'd like to review briefly the standing orders governing the speaking rotation. As provided for in Standing Order 59.02 the rotation in Standing Order 59.01(6) is deemed to apply, which is as follows. First,

- (a) the Minister, or the member of Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may make opening comments not to exceed 10 minutes,
- (b) for the hour that follows, members of the Official Opposition and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (c) for the next 20 minutes, the members of the third party . . . and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak, . . .
- (d.1) for the next 20 minutes, the members of any other party represented in the Assembly or any independent Members and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (e) for the next 20 minutes, private members of the Government caucus and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak, and
- (f) for the time remaining, to the extent possible, the rotation outlined in clauses (b) to (e) shall apply with the speaking time set at 5 minutes as provided in Standing Order 59.02(1)(c).

During the first rotation speaking times are limited to 10 minutes, and once the first rotation is complete, speaking times are reduced to five minutes. Provided that the chair has been notified, a minister and a private member may combine their speaking times, with both taking and yielding the floor during the combined period. Finally, as provided for in Government Motion 8, approved by the Assembly yesterday, the time allotted for consideration is three hours.

Interim Supply Estimates 2018-19 General Revenue Fund and Lottery Fund

The Chair: The Committee of Supply has under consideration the 2018-19 interim supply estimates. I'll now recognize the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance to move the estimates.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Good morning, both sides of the House. I'd like to move 2018-19 interim supply estimates for the Legislative Assembly and general revenue fund. When passed, these interim supply estimates will authorize approximate spending of $29 million for the Legislative Assembly, $7.7 billion in expense funding, $559 million in capital investment funding, $160 million in financial transactions funding for the government, and $240 million for the transfer from the lottery fund to the general revenue fund.

These interim supply estimates provide funding authorization that will allow the normal business of the province to continue until the full 2018-19 estimates are approved before the end of May. These estimates also follow through on specific commitments this government has made to the people of Alberta and take into account the different timing of payments that exist across various ministries.

This simply means that ministries do not pay out the same amount of money each month. Advanced Education, for instance, makes up-front payments to postsecondary institutions so they are not forced to borrow. This is to say that it would be inaccurate to simply multiply these two months' totals by six and conclude that this will be the annual budget for a specific ministry. All of that will, of course, be revealed when Budget 2018 is tabled in eight short days.

I've spoken at length about our government's commitment to support and protect vital public services and programs. Our commitment to that is no better demonstrated than our previous funding increase to FCSS prevention across this province and the introduction of the Alberta child benefit.

It's important to remember that even during the worst of the recession Alberta's population never stopped growing. This means that we needed to step up and support Albertans receiving funding through various statutory and other programs. This is a commitment we made when the recession first hit, and it is a commitment we will continue to uphold as our government works hard to ensure the economic recovery reaches all Albertans and is one to last.

It is undeniable that things are looking up in this province. At our recent third-quarter update we said that Alberta's economy grew by 4.5 per cent in 2017. Average weekly wages are up. Manufacturing is up. Retail sales are up. Alberta added nearly 90,000 full-time jobs in 2017. That is undeniable. The trend is looking up. It was truly the year that Alberta turned the corner. And we cut the deficit by $1.4 billion as well.

We all recognize that the strengthening recovery has not been felt by each and every Albertan. That means there's still much that needs to be done. Budget 2018 will continue that work to ensure all Albertans feel the recovery and strengthening economy.

Before we open discussion, I want to be clear that our government has done significant work to carefully find savings, and we've done so while continuing to support and protect vital public services that Albertans rely on and built together. Steps taken to date include limiting departmental discretionary spending; cutting salaries and eliminating perks and bonuses like golf club memberships for the highest paid executives of Alberta's agencies, boards, and commissions; negotiating practical agreements with public-sector unions such as the Alberta Teachers' Association and the United Nurses of Alberta. Thank you to both of those. There's ongoing hiring restraint for the core public service in spite of additional programs and services being needed by Albertans. We're consolidating various corporate services such as communications and IT, and things that are back of house are being organized.

We continue to be focused on taking measured steps to contain costs and reducing the deficit gradually as the economy recovers. Our plan is working. At the same time we will remain focused on the priorities of Albertans. Collectively we want to make sure that our kids have good schools and that our loved ones get the care they need when they need it. We know that there are tough decisions ahead of us, but they will be made with an overarching priority that the quality of our public services should not be dependent on the world price of oil.

Madam Chair, these estimates will be fully debated when the budget documents are tables. Approval of interim supply estimates pending the release and approval of the budget will allow this Assembly the time it needs to review and debate those plans.

I thank you for your time.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. Did you want to split your speaking time with the minister?

Mr. Barnes: Is it okay to go back and forth, Minister?

The Chair: Go ahead, then.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Thank you very, very much, and thanks to the minister for his opening comments. Large parts of the world view – of course, I see differently. Alberta having the highest unemployment rate outside of Atlantic Canada, Calgary having the second highest unemployment rate of major metros in all of Canada, behind only St. John's, is a position that I thought we'd never see ourselves in in Alberta. In talking to some financial experts last week who follow the government of Alberta, once we got past the six credit downgrades, we had trouble deciding if Alberta a year from now, counting all of our liabilities on the books and pensions and unfunded, was going to be between $85 billion and $105 billion. My goodness, the legacy that we're leaving to the next generation is astronomical.

I guess I want to start my questions today, hon. minister, with the process. In the opposition and around Alberta your government has been criticized for being secretive at times, for having, you know, things behind closed doors and not fully transparent to Albertans. Of course, as you said in your opening remarks, part of this two-month interim supply will include annual expenses. Some of it will be on the monthly prorated. With us just receiving this yesterday and us having three hours to debate this and discuss it, it's going to be very, very hard to get to the details.

As far as I know, the year-end of the fiscal year has always been March 31. My first question is why the government didn't prepare its budget earlier, in February, so we could skip this part. We could have full transparency for all Albertans without an interim supply and a budget that instead of two weeks from now we'll be debating – we could have done this sooner and skipped this part.

Thank you.

Mr. Ceci: Well, thank you very, very much for the question. You know, maybe I'll start first by addressing some of the initial comments that were made by the member opposite regarding the unemployment rate in this province and other things like that. Yes, Alberta has been through the worst recession in a generation. It has meant that many, many, many people have been let go from their jobs, jobs that they thought would never change in their lifetimes. But then the oil crisis came and the drop in the world price of oil. I can remember it went down to $26 a barrel in January '16, I think. Twenty-six dollars a barrel. That changed the world, frankly. Many companies both in Calgary and throughout the province took the opportunity to address their challenges by letting go of their staff. Many people found themselves for the first time in the unemployment line. That was a sad time in this province.

Our economy contracted in 2016 and 2015 by 3.5 per cent. I don't remember times like that and certainly not as a Finance minister. That is not the kind of situation you want to walk into, but we did as a government. We didn't cause it. Again, it meant that many people were not able to find work because, frankly, the contraction of our economy meant that other businesses besides the oil and gas sector were affected as well. People didn't have the disposable income they usually have. They, the businesses, needed to get through that time, and they did by the means they chose. We as a government said that we would have the backs of Albertans.

This leads into the second part of the question, with regard to the way of this government and the plan that we rolled out, which was to continue to provide the necessary supports that Albertans require, especially in a downturn, especially when they're worried about their families, especially when they don't have incomes. So our statutory programs – the income support programs, the government in partnership with the federal government's statutory programs, EI – spiked in terms of the demand for those, but this side of the House chose not to increase the waiting times, increase the lineups for statutory programs. We said: "We are going to have the backs of Albertans. If we need to borrow money, we're going to do it for that purpose." It's a good investment, Madam Chair. We invested in Albertans and continue to provide them a quality of life that, frankly, they would have been challenged to have on their own. So the borrowing was necessary.

The investments in capital were necessary, and for that you need to borrow. That is by both sides of the House seen as an okay thing to do if you're borrowing for capital, so we did. We borrowed for capital, and we invested in the building of bridges and roads and health facilities and completed schools, and that kept people working, Madam Chair. That kept private-sector companies working. That kept them having people on the job, 10,000 jobs per year annually, as a result of our investment in the capital program the government of Alberta brought in. You can talk to financial experts, but you need to be able to be balanced in what was achieved in all of that borrowing. You need to be able to say that, you know, more people weren't on the unemployment line, more people weren't destitute as a result of our investments, as a result of our maintenance of programs and services, statutory and otherwise, for Albertans.

With regard to "Why doesn't this government just table a budget early enough? It's eight days from now. Then we wouldn't need interim supply," Madam Chair, our government has been taking the time to consult Albertans, to hear their thoughts and ideas about building our economy, an economy built to last in this province, and on our path to balance. Many, many people, of course, on that side, on this side are interested and want to know, so we're taking that time to build that plan, a thoughtful plan, and roll it out on March 22, a plan that will endeavour to ensure that our province has an economy that's built to last and moves further off the boom-and-bust roller coaster.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Minister, we're being asked to approve over 8 and a half billion dollars with only a dozen pages of detail and less than 24 hours to read and prepare. It brings me back to the Q3 update about two weeks ago, when a similar amount of time was all that was afforded. Two transactions, or two financial items, in that Q3 update: one, your government had taken $711 million of taxpayers' money for the Balancing Pool and PPAs to cover your climate leadership plan, billions of dollars of expenses, and with the climate leadership plan, in that Q3 update, there was $323 million of grants, grants without the specific detail as to who those went to. You know, Minister, once again I'm standing here without, never mind full information, hardly any information. My question to you: with everything in interim supply and the expenses, do you have any idea how much of those expenses are related to either the collection of the carbon tax, payment of the carbon tax, or special grants through the climate leadership plan?

Thank you.

Mr. Ceci: You know, the specific information with regard to the climate leadership plan – I don't see the minister here, but I know that that minister will be available when estimates occur and when our budget is tabled – those specific questions about, "How much does it cost for the climate leadership plan and levies to be administered?" can be probably answered more directly by that minister.

But I can tell you that in my own department there is I think it's in the neighbourhood of a couple of million dollars that are expended on the administration of that climate leadership plan. I can get more specific information and have that for when we do estimates and I sit down and talk with members of the opposition and members on this side specifically about my own budget and my own department. Those monies in my department, of course, are part of a contract we have with CRA to administer it on behalf of the government of Alberta.

The specifics I have for what is before you today: I think I did share what those details are about in terms of interim supply estimates. I mentioned that there was about $30 million for expenditures within the Legislative Assembly, different offices. There's $7.7 billion in expenses, and those are across the 21 departments of government. There is about $600 million in capital investments across those 18 departments. There's about $160 million – I can give you the exact numbers, but I'll round them for purposes of clarity – in financial transactions across 12 departments and then $240 million for the transfer from the lottery fund to the general revenue fund to address the needs of government.

When you look at the interim supply before us today – and I caution against multiplying by six because that's not actually how the departments have come forward with their interim supply estimates – I said that many are front-ending in terms of expenses. They have to put out to PSIs or other places.

We have this document before us today. We have this document that will allow us to work for two more months. But in the meantime we will table the budget on the 22nd, we'll debate it fully, and questions such as those posed by the member opposite will be clear in terms of the discussions that the ministers have with those committees, that they're in front of later in the month.

Thank you.

Mr. Barnes: Madam Chair, this year's interim supply requests 1 per cent less funding for expense amounts compared to what we saw in last year's interim supply. As the minister just said, we're not comparing apples to apples because we can't times by six. Some expenses are in there that are annual, and some aren't, so it's a very inaccurate comparison.

But what it reminds me of is what I read yesterday. An economist had put out that Calgary's wage levels are back to 2005-2006. When I go around the rest of Alberta, it's hard not to find somebody that's only making 60 or 65 per cent of what they used to make. Back to the Q3 update, where every time this government has raised taxes, our tax rate, from 10 points to as high as 15 for personal and the 20 per cent tax increase we put on our corporations, has only resulted in this government collecting significantly less revenue. Of course, that's because of the income and wealth that they've destroyed. I'm looking at a 1 per cent reduction at a time that Calgarians are back 12 or 13 years in their wage level.

And then I'm wondering, when I look at interim supply – and I would hope that the minister could expand on this. Interim supply is requesting 40 per cent less funding for capital investment compared to last year's interim supply. You know, we've seen around Alberta that, other than announcements, this government has barely been able to do anything more than complete what was announced by previous governments. Here we're seeing 40 per cent less funding. So have we significantly cut our need for infrastructure? Will all the projects you promised Albertans be built on time? How do you explain this amazing decrease in capital investment?

Compassionate belt-tightening: many of us on this side of the House have talked considerably about our 20 per cent per capita spending over other provinces, over British Columbia. You're suggesting a 1 per cent drop, but what we saw in the Q3 update: every time you found a dollar to save, you spent it as fast as it came in.

Minister, what are your plans for capital investment? What are your plans for the interim supply? Is it legitimately a 1 per cent cut? You're going to find 1 cent out of every dollar: that's what your plan is to get Alberta back to a balanced budget? Perhaps that explains why you've had six credit downgrades. Anyway, if you could address those two things, I'd appreciate it.

The Chair: The minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Just with regard to infrastructure I can tell you that in Q3 the capital plan is expected to be on budget at $9.2 billion for 2017-2018. Now, that's a lot of investment across Alberta, and that's not fully just government of Alberta projects. That's with the SUCH sector as well, the schools, universities, hospitals, and colleges. There really is a great deal of investment in '17-18.

That's following through on David Dodge's recommendations. The former Bank of Canada governor visited with us in the summer of 2015, and he helped us lay out a plan to essentially ride this recession through and, as I said in my first response to this member, to ensure that Alberta smoothed out the recession as much as it could. We used public-sector dollars to help do that because the private sector was not investing. The private sector was experiencing difficulties, laying people off, stopping, turning down the tap on their private-sector investment in oil sands and other energy and other kinds of investments. So this government boldly went into that area and said: we're going to try and mitigate this recession as much as possible. We had a plan that increased the previous government's capital plan by 15 per cent, and that 15 per cent – and I mentioned it earlier – allowed 10,000 more individuals to have annual employment. That 15 per cent over the previous government's capital plan helped out a lot.

The second part of Mr. Dodge's plan was to ensure that there was, you know, a pause, a reflection. Once you're through the recession and starting into recovery, then you need to focus your time on making sure your capital plan is readjusted. In Budget 2018 – you'll have to wait for that – you'll see what our numbers are there.

But I don't think that you can read the kinds of things that you've read into the tea leaves of these interim supply estimates, that there will be a 1 per cent reduction in anything. We are focused on cost containment, Madam Chair. We found $750 million in cost containment or savings this year, and we did that through a number of things that I talked about earlier: working with the public-sector unions to come in with practical arrangements for contracts, ensuring that discretionary spending of ministries or departments was reduced 10 per cent. We brought that across the agencies, boards, and commissions, and we asked them for 10 per cent reductions in their discretionary spending as well, and we were able to achieve that.

Madam Chair, on the capital side we helped Albertans out. We helped Alberta out. Going forward, the second part of the capital plan that was laid out by Mr. Dodge was: now take a look at rightsizing your capital plan. You'll find out more about that in Budget 2018 in just eight days.

One thing I'd like to bring up . . .

The Chair: We've come to the end of the first 20-minute set. Do you have another speaker?

Mr. Barnes: Could I go again for 20?

The Chair: Do you want to take the next 20-minute segment?

Mr. Barnes: Please.

The Chair: And you still want to do it back and forth?

Mr. Barnes: Please.

The Chair: All right. Go ahead.

Mr. Barnes: Yeah. When you get back up, you can go again on that.

I want to talk about your capital borrowing and the interest costs. I was disappointed in your Q3 update, that you had $500 million that you had set up as a reserve in case oil prices were low, and then you didn't spend it, so you claimed it as a saving. I don't know how not spending or not using it is a saving, but so be it. I was mostly disappointed that you didn't show the 5 and a half billion dollars of capital borrowing that you had done to show your true deficit number. Like the bondholders, like the bond-rating companies that have criticized you every time, that have criticized you considerably for not having a plan to get back to balance, I'm disappointed that you don't share your capital numbers and you don't seem to have a plan to repay the capital borrowing at all. Is this debt going to be on Albertans' books forever? Is this debt going to be on the backs of our future generations forever and ever and ever? I'd like to hear what your plan is.

When it comes to interim supply, capital investments, do you have any plan to repay that money just in what you're borrowing for this two-month period? Minister, the $1.4 billion of interest that Alberta taxpayers are paying this year: I see parts of that sprinkled throughout financial transactions. Of course, financial transactions can include more than just the interest costs. Again, I'd like your best guess, an assessment as to what you think your six downgrades have cost Albertans in higher interest, what you think they're going to cost Albertans over the next year, you know, over the next five or 10 years. Minister, do we have a plan to repay capital debt, never mind the $50 billion of operating that you've put on our credit card? How much is this extra interest going to cost us over the next few years?

Thank you.

Mr. Ceci: Thanks. To conclude the earlier question that I was in the middle of just before the stoppage, I just want to say that I'm really proud of the work that the different departments and ministers have done with regard to the capital and making sure that the capital gets built in a timely fashion, that the projects get built in a timely fashion. You know, when this government took over from the previous government, there were a number of outstanding promises that hadn't been followed up on, that no shovels were in the ground around, and one of the first things we did was that we reorganized that area to make sure that if announcements were being made, they were quickly followed up with shovels in the ground and execution and completion. Hundreds of schools are now completed in our term of office. We are working on major infrastructure projects throughout the province that were long promised and little delivered by the previous government.

Madam Chair, the percentage of completion of capital budget to capital projects and expenditure of money is now at the industry average, where previously it was lower and, frankly, wasn't good enough. We put time and attention through our various ministers, Infrastructure minister, to bring that average up to an industry average of completion. So that's a really good thing.

I just want to go back to something that the previous speaker talked about in terms of taxation. Just to correct the record, we have not raised taxes repeatedly. We have brought in a progressive tax regime like every other province, territory, and the federal government have. We brought that in soon after getting elected, in June of 2015, and it is no different. It is the same kind or on the low end of all of the provinces, territories, and the federal government.

The previous government had, frankly, a disastrous tax regime identified for Albertans, and it went too long in this province and left us in a bad situation when we took over government. And on the corporate side, Madam Chair – that was on the personal side. On the corporate side the speaker talked about 20 per cent taxes for corporations. That's not correct. It went from 10 per cent to 12 per cent, again, which is among the low end of corporate taxation of provinces, territories, and in the country. So we just did what was necessary. We did what was right on the tax side. Frankly, it was one of the proudest days of my Finance minister career when we were able to eliminate the flat tax in this province because it didn't make sense. It didn't make sense. It was good for those who had a lot and very bad for those who had little.

Madam Chair, just getting back to the next set of questions with regard to the plan to balance, I had mentioned in my speech that, yes, there is a plan to balance, and this individual and all Albertans will see that plan to balance when budget is released in eight days. I can tell you that this province relative to all other provinces has very, very low net debt to GDP. Our ratio will be the lowest net debt to GDP amongst all the provinces, and that will still be the case when we return to balance in 2023.

Now, on the cost of borrowing – that was asked of me, Madam Chair – I'd like to put that in perspective as well. Ontario spends 8 cents of every dollar on borrowing costs. Their total amount of borrowing at this point in time, their debt, is $141 billion. That's Ontario. Alberta is less than a third of that. Our borrowing cost is 2.5 cents on every dollar, so when you see that number in our budget or you multiply by what's here, remember that only 2.5 cents of every dollar goes to facilitate that borrowing whereas other provinces are as high as 8 cents. We are never going to get there. B.C. is 5 cents per dollar, and Saskatchewan is above us, at 2.6 cents.

Madam Chair, we have a sound fiscal plan. We have excellent public servants who are managing all of that. We have a focus on investing in this province so that we can leverage the recovery that's happening, and we will continue to move forward with that plan because it is working. The opposition, I think, are driven far too much by listening to credit-rating agencies. Of the credit-rating agencies that I've talked to, one of them suggested that $3.5 billion needed to be cut from the budget or that taxes needed to be raised in that amount, and I said no to both of those things. I said no because cutting $3.5 billion out of our budget would have a direct effect on the employment of hundreds and hundreds and perhaps thousands of people. It would reverberate through our economy, and our unemployment, which was talked about earlier and which is coming down, would just rise as a result of that.

So the government of Alberta said: we will take on the debt; we will keep this province going to ensure that the quality of life Albertans have come to believe and trust in remains strong and present.

Thank you.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. I guess, Minister, I'm hoping for a little quicker back and forth as I move into more specifics. I guess my last thought on that is two things. You know, I understand you took over when Alberta was $7 billion to the good in net assets, and here we are three years later $50 billion to the negative. It's an amazing turnaround, sir, and I think that's what the bond-rating companies are most concerned about.

I guess the other thing that I feel the need to say is that our dear late colleague Manmeet Bhullar – I thought the world of him, and I don't think I'll ever forget the day that he stood up here and warned you that raising our personal tax rates was going to lead to a drastic drop in our income tax collected. I guess I would ask that – you know, Albertans have spoken. Albertans have put a lot of information out there. You can continue to ignore it, but future generations are at stake here.

Let's move to health care. Your interim allocation is $3.8 billion, capital investments of $31 million, financial transactions of $12 million, a total of $3.8 billion. Expenses are the balance of that. I'm wondering, Minister: have you done an analysis on how much extra the carbon tax is costing our health care operators, how much the cost of operating the ministry has gone up due to legislated increases in statutory holiday pay, proportional increases in wages paid due to minimum wage increases and overtime pay? This will be reflected in a higher budget with, again, levels of bureaucracy eating up funding that should be going to front-line workers in our health care system. Minister, have you done an analysis of what the carbon tax and your government's labour changes have done to cost our taxpayers money in health care?

Thank you.

Mr. Ceci: I think I'll try and quickly answer to facilitate some back and forth. With regard to health care, as was identified in the interim supply estimates, the totals here for expense, which means to keep the hospitals running, people employed, is $3,746,000,000 roughly, then on the capital investment side about $32 million, and on the financial transactions about $12 million, 12 and a half million dollars.

Madam Chair, the breakdown that is here rolls up everything. The kinds of additional costs that may be contemplated from the other side are all rolled up in here. The breakdown could probably be best addressed by the Health minister. I know this has been a question from the other side for the short while we've been back. You know, what are the costs of the carbon levy, how much in administration cost is there? All I can say is that the carbon levy is – and this is not just me saying this. This is people with much higher positions than me saying that the carbon levy and the carbon leadership plan in this province led to the approval of two pipelines in this country. They will get built, and they will allow us to get oil to tidewater, which will be to the benefit of the entire nation. In terms of Alberta it will be a benefit as well.

The minimum wage increase that was talked about, you know, frankly – and I don't have statistics in front of me, but I can tell you that I think every person who works in a hospital setting is probably getting a better wage than minimum wage. So I don't believe that that is a relevant kind of concern to bring forward at this point in time, and I don't believe the changes to the minimum wage, which will be $15 this October, Madam Chair, and allow people to live in greater dignity than they previously could – under the previous government the minimum wage was, I think, in the $10 range in this province, and you can't live on $10. We know that. I haven't done that myself for many, many decades, but many people were forced to do that under the previous government. We're trying to make that wage the proper wage for people. I don't believe it's relevant for a modern hospital setting in this province at this time.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Again, I'd appreciate it if you'd stick to the question, sir. It's interesting that, you know, I talked about corporate taxes being raised from 10 to 12 per cent, and I was told that that wasn't a 20 per cent increase. We've also talked about the unemployment and how that relates. Let's move on.

I want to talk about health care some more. In my time as Health critic and my time sitting in here, hon. Minister, I think that the three things that I've heard that would help us get more value out of our health system more than anything are reducing levels of bureaucracy, Albertans having more access to allied health professionals other than doctors, improved services and reduced costs, and better electronic health records. So I'm wondering, very simply: is any of this $3.9 billion that you're asking for over the next two months going towards reducing bureaucracy? Is any of it going to improving access for Albertans to other allied health professionals? And is any of it going to ensure that someday Albertans have full interactive electronic health records? I'd appreciate three quick answers.

Thank you.

Mr. Ceci: You know, he asked me to answer. I guess I can take as long as I want to do that. I don't think he can make me sit down.

Just to be serious about all of this for a second, I am so proud of the work being done by the Minister of Health and the Associate Minister of Health. The reason I'm proud about all of that is because, you know, when this side took government in May of 2015, Health, frankly, was on an unsustainable operational growth track. It was growing 6 per cent a year. Frankly, it is the largest portion of the budget, and it's, obviously, in the interim supply estimates the largest number there in terms of that expenditure. It's about 42 per cent of the operational expenditures of government on an annual basis – 42 per cent – Madam Chair. When we took over, we said: this is not sustainable.

At the same time the federal government was changing the Canada Health Act in terms of the transfer payments coming to provinces, and they were saying that that was being reduced from 6 to 3 per cent annually. The transfer increases would be 3 per cent, so frankly this side had to look at it and reboot. We had to say: "Something has to be different. We have to do things differently." These ministers under the direction of the Premier have reduced that operational spending growth from the 6 per cent it was at annually because it was eating the lunches of all other ministries here. We've reduced that to under 4 per cent, and our goal is even less than that. That's a really important thing.

This speaker has put it in the area of, you know, reducing the bureaucrats involved. I know that that's their constant fixation. There are bureaucrats out there who are getting too much. Well, frankly, the other side put that organization in place. We didn't do that. We've been reducing the operational spending, working with the Alberta Health Services Board, making sure we get good value for money. We're doing that.

The plan is to have electronic health records as well, to start to share that information amongst, frankly, the thousands of different places in the health system that have records that don't talk to each other effectively. We started that work, and allied health professionals and the ministers are very focused.

The Chair: We are at the end of the second 20-minute segment. We can continue with the next 20 minutes.

Mr. Barnes: Yeah. Now, for this next 20 minutes can I just do 10 and then give the minister 10?

The Chair: That's fine.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you.

Okay. I want to talk first of all about Justice and the interim supply around that. Last year's requested interim amount for Justice and Solicitor General was $254 million, whereas this year, Minister, it is $286 million. I'm going to ask you to explain that $32 million increase. Of course, I want to know if any of that is to fight rural crime.

You know, in Alberta, where the same perpetrators come back to the same summer village or the same rural area weekly, I'm told by a solid businessperson in a community that he catches somebody shoplifting every day, phones the police, and the police say: "We're not coming. There are not enough resources for Crown prosecutors or judges, and there's no point to this." It seems like rural Alberta again has drawn the short straw in terms of rural Crown prosecutors with caseloads in the 2,000 vicinity. Of course, how can justice and the protection of citizens be proper? Rural crime has reached epidemic proportions. What in your interim supply amounts are addressing this urgent issue? You have a $32 million increase. We have a rural crime problem. We have a problem starting to spread into our cities. You're three years into your mandate, sir, and it's getting worse.

Again, of course, I know that you mentioned funding police officers. Okay. How does that address the problem if there are not enough people training to fill these vacancies? How does that address the problem if Crown prosecutors are overloaded? How does that address the problem of what I hear is the waste and the inefficiencies in the system, monies that could be put right to the front lines, right to the edge where we could do some work? I'd appreciate your explaining what that extra $32 million increase is for and what it's doing for rural crime.

Minister, I then want to turn to interim supply, Agriculture and Forestry questions. One of the highest expense asks for interim supply is in Agriculture and Forestry. Out of the almost $319 million requested over the short term for expenses, how much is going toward wildfire management expenses? How much is going to help our rural citizens that had horrific incidents, horrific events? Of course, your government has been slow to respond, and I wonder if there's an answer in there finally for still some of the people in Fort McMurray and the good families of southeastern Alberta.

How much of this interim supply will be for preparing for next year? How much of it will be to make sure that we can reduce the impacts of this? Would the interim supply ask be lower if this department actually provided a budget estimate for wildfire management instead of using the money out of the emergency disaster fund? It's always amazed me that as a government, you as a Finance minister, under budget for disaster instead of taking a three- or a five-year average so that the taxpayers, the citizens of Alberta, know what the true cost is.

What is your largest expense in Agriculture and Forestry? Over the next two months where is this $320 million going to go?

We've talked about how Calgary is the second-highest city in Canada in terms of the unemployment rate. Edmonton is the fourth highest. My goodness, sir, the only area of Canada that is higher than rural Alberta is Atlantic Canada. Is any of this money – any of this money – going to help them, whether it's for some necessary infrastructure or transportation projects, something that we can have a long-term focus on, or is it going to be in bureaucracy? Is it going to be in carbon tax? Is it going to be in extra hidden costs of labour changes and carbon tax? My goodness. You know, it's painful when you hear so many rural charities talk about how the carbon tax and these changes may force them out of being able to do the goodwill work that they've done for their neighbours for tens and tens of years.

I do see that there are approximately two and a half million dollars in capital investment in Agriculture and Forestry. Where is that capital investment headed? Is it going to be a physical asset? Again, will it be helping a particular community, or is it more of a provincial asset, a provincial spend?

Let's focus on the financial transaction line item in Agriculture and Forestry. What exactly does that $219,000 cover in financial transactions? I've asked you two or three times about the increase in our interest costs to the taxpayers of Alberta because of our six downgrades. You seem to prefer an answer as to how we have a race to the bottom, how your government took over a province of Alberta for the citizens of Alberta that was to the net good by $7 billion in assets and how you've changed that to $50 billion in just three short years. And again, Minister, I've heard estimates from $85 to $105 billion, where just a year from now you may end up. That's a financial record that Ontario and Kathleen Wynne may be proud of, but it's not a financial record that the people in the coffee shops of Alberta are proud of.

If you could and if you'd care to, I would appreciate your answering how much our downgrades in credit have cost us and where that may lead us over the next year, where that may lead us over the next five or 10 years. I think the bond agencies are asking for an answer. They would like to know. Certainly, Albertans would like to know what it's going to cost us as well.

Madam Chair, I'd like to go back again to the first part, Treasury Board and Finance. We're showing interim expenses of $33 million, financial transactions of $604,000. Again, Minister, if you could take some time and explain to me the interest and the debt costs in the financial transactions under Treasury Board and Finance, I would appreciate it.

You talked about our current debt to GDP. Again, your plan appears to be unlimited. Please, if you could just succinctly let me know: what is our current debt to GDP and what was it the day your government was elected?

How much of your interim supply budget is also going to risk management and insurance? It's very, very important to protect future generations.

The interim supply is also allocating around $900,000 towards capital investment and financial transaction for Treasury Board and Finance. Can you please indicate the background of where that money is being spent?

You know, there's been quite a bit in the news about concern for communities that straddle the Alberta-Saskatchewan border. Of course, your government has found itself in a trade battle with Saskatchewan and a pipeline battle with British Columbia in the last little while. But I want to talk a bit about the carbon tax, the Alberta-Saskatchewan border and the impact of the carbon tax, in particular. For years in Medicine Hat and Cypress-Medicine Hat people from Saskatchewan, when they were coming to visit, would sneak across the border on gas fumes, just barely making it to Walsh, Irvine, or Medicine Hat to fill up their tanks in Alberta, where they could save a bit of money. Well, hon. minister, the opposite is happening now.

People are going to Saskatchewan. They're waiting till they're in Maple Creek or Swift Current before they fill their gas tanks, back to the carbon leakage example of the unintended consequences of your climate leadership.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just to correct the record on so many things that were brought up by the previous speaker, you know, this government has put in place a strategy to assist the city of Lloydminster. Is it Lloydminster or Lloydminster?

Some Hon. Members: Lloydminster.

Mr. Ceci: Okay. That place, Madam Chair.

We put in a strategy to help the businesses in that community because, frankly, there was leakage. I think it was talked about that way. People were going across to the Saskatchewan side, and we didn't want the businesses on the Alberta side to be necessarily challenged around all of that. But, frankly, the same sorts of problems weren't identified in Medicine Hat, as was talked about just now. So we addressed where those issues are real, and we have a plan in place where it's necessary. Of course, you know that the government of Saskatchewan raised taxes, so we're finding less of a call on that program we put in place to help the folks, the businesses out in Lloyd.

Madam Chair, I just want to correct one other thing that keeps getting incorrectly talked about, and that is the net assets of the province of Alberta. The estimate is that this year, at the end of March, we will have $27 billion in net assets. Of course, that's when you add the capital, all the things that are owned by the province, on top of the net financial assets. When you do that, you know that we're in a positive position. We are the strongest province in terms of balance sheets. This is a problem other Finance ministers would love to have in this country. We are in good shape.

I will say just with regard to some of the questions on Justice that members opposite know that just earlier this week or at the end of last week there was additional investment in addressing rural crime. That investment is $10 million, and I have every confidence that we will continue in Budget 2018, which will come up in eight days, talking about our commitment to address the rural crime issues in this province. We are focused on it, Madam Chair. We are working with stakeholders and agencies throughout the province to ensure that we work collaboratively and do the right things as are identified by the people who have their boots on the ground and know what will be effective and work.

What won't be effective and work, Madam Chair, is when people like members opposite stand up and all they talk about are situations that have not gone well. If they don't focus on how we're going to improve things and how we can work together and only are naysayers and say that things are bad and they're getting worse and they're getting worse – that's not how you address problems. You address them clearly by seeing what the issue is, trying something, analyzing whether that effort was of any use at all or how it could be made better, and then going back at it and adapting your approach. I really wish the members opposite would take that problem-solving approach as opposed to complaining about problems all the time.

Madam Chair, Agriculture and Forestry. I can tell you that Agriculture and Forestry makes significant upfront payments to the AFSC, or the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation, and the irrigation rehabilitation programs. So the amounts that are identified in the interim supply estimates are very much to keep those agencies working. Obviously, the second one, the irrigation rehabilitation program, receives applications and makes decisions about investing those monies to ensure that we have the best agricultural growing situation possible for our agribusinesses out there.

Madam Chair, the other area of Agriculture and Forestry that was talked about significantly is wildfire preparedness. You know, I don't perceive that there's been a wholesale change from the previous government's approach to all of this. The same sorts of processes in working with municipalities and counties and districts are still in place in terms of their preparedness for wildfires and the government's support of all of them. The Flat Top mountain recommendations – I think that was the report that had to do with the Slave Lake fire – are what we are as a government focused on making sure get fulfilled.

I'm extremely proud of the work that first responders do every year to address and prepare for wildfires that may happen or once they do happen. I'm proud of the government's response to all of those areas. In 2017-18, Madam Chair, just to put some context around this, the base operating budget for wildfire management was almost $133 million. That covers all the preparatory work that's necessary, including training, opening air tanker bases, and hiring seasonal employees to get ready for all of that. We have also more than tripled the FireSmart initiatives funding, increasing funding to that area by $11 million in this year alone.

Actually, it was called the Flat Top Complex Review, not Flat Top mountain report, but all 21 of the recommendations in that report have been fully implemented at this time. We've focused a lot on that, and we'll continue to do so to ensure that all Albertans, particularly those who are concerned about wildfires, have a greater sense that their government is prepared for every eventuality.

With regard to other questions that were brought up about unemployment in rural areas of Alberta, I just want to remind members of the House that this side of the House is focused on a coal community transition strategy. Certainly, those people who were professionals and employed in coal communities with regard to the removal of coal: we are focused on helping them transition to alternative employment or training or education.

You know, the other thing that was raised was around charities in rural areas and additional costs. One thing we did immediately with Budget 2015 is that we raised the FCSS amount $25 million, from $76 million to $101 million, because FCSS communities, over 300 of them across the province, were asking for that. The previous government was deaf to their call. They did not address it. We addressed it. We have now, with our fourth budget, put an additional hundred million dollars where there wouldn't have been that money to social supports throughout the province to allow them to better address the needs in those rural and other communities around Alberta.

Madam Chair, the situation with regard to our plan and who we're working for is clear. We're working for regular Albertans. We're not working for the richest Albertans, whom that side treated as insiders and friends all the time. We're focused on making sure that all Albertans who have good, mortgage-paying jobs or want to get them have that opportunity to better themselves. We're focused in Treasury Board and Finance on that. We're focused in Agriculture and Forestry on that. We're focused to make sure that those Albertans who put in a good day's work have the ability to rely on programs and services they helped build. So I'm less focused on the credit-rating agencies than that member is. I'm focused on what Albertans' priorities are.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

This brings us to the next segment, with the third party. Hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, did you wish to go back and forth with the minister or do a 10 and 10?

Mr. Clark: I would like very much to go back and forth with the minister, with his kind indulgence. I'll open with a couple of general comments. I know each of you, as I do, pays very close attention to standing orders. I know that as we prepare for session, like me, you read through your standing orders. So it'll come as no surprise when you read Standing Order 3(4)(a) that the Legislative Assembly of Alberta is meant to come back "the second Tuesday in February." One of the reasons for that, Madam Chair, of course, is so that the government is not required to bring in interim supply because the budget would have ample time to be introduced, debated, and passed in time for the end of the fiscal year, which every year, without fail, like it or not, comes on the 31st of March.

This interim supply is interesting in that it's not just one month. We're not just going to the 30th of April; we're going to the 31st of May. While that may be spun as just some sort of a technical thing – "Don't worry about it," the minister may say – well, you know, every single time, of course, this government has brought in a budget, in fact, we've had to bring in interim supply. It is certainly a rich tradition that the government they replaced also followed.

I can tell you that from speaking with folks within various departments in the government, it introduces real challenges for them to plan because it's unclear exactly what their budget is going to be. If you can imagine that you need to plan your activities from the 1st of April 2018 through the 31st of March 2019, not knowing specifically what your budget is going to be until the 22nd of March, that eight-, nine-day window is probably not sufficient for ministries to really, truly understand exactly what their roles are going to be in the next year. So I am disappointed that here we are yet again debating interim supply.

As I get into my specific questions about line items within interim supply, I just want to make a couple of brief comments here to the minister. While I do appreciate that it is not a straight line and simply, you know, multiplying by six, there are differences year over year. Places like Education, places like Advanced Education, of course, have a substantial variation in spending through the year. I respect and understand that. But there is so little information in the interim supply. It's one line: Advanced Education, expense $469 million. There's virtually, in fact, no information about exactly what is included within it.

At least when we look at our supplementary supply, which we have the opportunity to debate this afternoon – and I am enthusiastic and excited about having an opportunity to ask some questions about that as well – there are at least a couple of lines of information of what exactly that money is going to be used for. So I am frustrated that interim supply traditionally has such limited information. The lack of transparency there is startling.

It does provide the opportunity for the government, perhaps, to embed and hide some spending increases, some overspending, and there's an awful lot of overspending to hide. When we look at the third-quarter fiscal update, issued just scant weeks ago, there's an extra $1.032 billion of spending in the current fiscal year, in fiscal '17-18. There's an extra $464 million over budget in operating expenses, $427 million in general capital grant overspending, and $323 million in climate leadership plan capital grant overspending. We throw around these numbers. It's a billion dollars here, a billion dollars there. It's $464 million. That is a tremendous, a remarkable, a startling amount of money, Madam Chair. With that preface, I will move into asking the minister some questions, and apologies if some of this may be a bit of an overlap with my hon. colleague who's gone before me.

I'll start alphabetically. We'll start at Agriculture and Forestry. Now, I understand a lot of these increased expenditures this year relate to wildfire remediation, and I appreciate that, but of course the wildfire was in 2016, and this is the 2017-18 budget. My question to the minister is: could you just comment on where this $318 million specifically is going to be spent on the expense side and on why it is that we're finding ourselves in Ag and Forestry so grossly over budget in this fiscal year?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you for the opportunity to speak on behalf of our government. You know, there was certainly a lot to unpack there, so I'll take the chance to respond to a number of them. I think there are certainly a number of reoccurring themes here in terms of some of the challenges, most of it bringing up things that are not new to this Legislature, not new processes whatsoever.

In terms of the budget being introduced in March, it's very traditional within this House to have the budget introduced at that time because of the way that our particular revenue stream is attached to oil and gas. In terms of the impact on staff decision-making and the difficulty of doing that, our government has certainly functioned quite well for decades in terms of functioning with the budget being introduced in March. They certainly have enough information on where we're going to be able to be quite confident and comfortable with moving forward and doing the work that they do every day.

Let me just take a moment to say thank you to all of those who work so hard on behalf of all Albertans in all of our departments across the government of Alberta. They work tremendously hard every day to make sure that we are able to deliver the services that they need in order to ensure that their families have all of the services and supports that they need to move forward. Thanks to all those staff. I certainly know that there are always challenges in terms of the direction the government and the Legislature bring to them, but they do an amazing job each and every year in working within the structure, that has been in place for a very, very long time.

Also, in regard to the limited information on interim supply, again, we have absolutely nothing to hide on this, Madam Chair, as is typical in terms of doing this. It's been every year that we go through this process and do it, and in just eight days, in just barely over a week, every member of this House will have a chance to see the full budget introduced, with an opportunity for all of us to have a very fulsome conversation on that. I know that I myself and all of my colleagues are looking forward to talking about what we plan to do this year in terms of moving forward in the new budget year, in terms of ensuring that not only do we continue to meet the needs of Alberta families and communities across this province but also that we've worked very hard in terms of ensuring that as we do so, we take every opportunity to do so in a fiscally responsible way. So we're very much looking forward to sharing that in just eight days.

Another point brought up by the member is on details around advancing the grant funding for the MSI funding. Again, Madam Chair, this is nothing unusual. It's been done in the past numerous times, and again there's nothing hidden in it, nothing bizarre. It's just something that's been done by others such as ourselves.

In terms of Agriculture and Forestry I wanted to clarify a misunderstanding there, that the upfront grant payments are to AFSC in order to support them, in order to do the payouts that they need to do through their program.

Hopefully, that was a good start to answering the member's questions. I know that we are all quite excited, as always, to continue to answer your questions and make sure that we are as open and transparent as possible to help yourselves and Albertans understand the direction that we're moving forward in in terms of supporting Albertans and making sure that we do so in the most fiscally responsible way possible.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Minister, for the answers to those questions. As always seems to happen, time flies, so I'll jump ahead here.

One of the areas I wanted to ask about – and, again, I appreciate that it is not always entirely valid when looking at an interim supply to simply multiply a number by the number of months. However, for health care, I would think that probably health care – I can understand where Infrastructure, Transportation, and Education type areas would have substantial seasonal variation in terms of when the dollars go out the door, but demand for health care in this province, I can imagine, is generally very steady and stable.

When I do my quick calculations on the expense side of Health and multiply by six the $3.746 billion that are planned to be spent in the two months here of interim supply, I get $22.476 billion, and when I look at last year's budget, the existing budget, we get $21.406 billion. That's a 5 per cent increase.

I look forward to the minister enlightening us as to how exactly that represents bending the cost curve in health care, where Albertans have, I think, a reasonable expectation that spending roughly 46, 47 per cent of our budget in one area would perhaps be an opportunity to find some savings without impacting front-line services. It's an area where I, of course, will voice my great disappointment in this government for not finding more ways of delivering high-quality health care services, which I know we do in this province, and doing so in a way that is more cost constrained. I look forward to hearing the answer on how it is that Health seems to have gone up so much.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. This is one of those situations in which somehow looking at the math and doing that multiplication just doesn't work. I certainly know that from my experience in working with women who were in labour, the same thing happened. In early labour they would be, like, "Okay; I've been in labour 12 hours, and I'm only at three centimetres" and think that they were going to be in labour for hours and hours and hours more after that. I told them: "You know, you can't do it that way. That's not the way the system works and not the way our bodies work." And this is very similar.

Sometimes, you know, you can look at things at face value and just do a simple multiplication, times six, and make assumptions that are in complete error. Just as those women in labour were not going to be in labour for three or four days based on the math that they were doing, nor can you say that interim supply in any way is representative of what we're going to spend by multiplying by six.

Just like in other ministries, Madam Chair, there are many upfront grants that Health has to provide. Health has an incredible responsibility in terms of ensuring that they meet the health care needs of those right across this province. I'm incredibly proud of our Minister of Health and our Associate Minister of Health and the work they're doing along with all of those incredible front-line providers and all their supporters in terms of providing health care.

But we also have many partnerships with organizations right across this province who work alongside Alberta Health Services and the ministry in order to deliver services, and those partnerships require many grants right at the front of the year. We're really thankful for their work and once again just want to acknowledge how we work together to provide the best care we can to Albertans and will continue to move the bar on this and continue to make sure that we deliver the very best health care to Albertans that we can. But, Madam Chair, we're certainly not doing that with a budget that would be multiplied by six based on what is on the line of interim supply.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you again to the minister, and thank you for your great work helping women in labour. I think this process may be just as painful as being in labour, but unfortunately the outcome isn't nearly as happy at the end.

Again, I do want to dig a little deeper into this whole question of health care. I appreciate the argument that we can't and shouldn't simply take this number and multiply it by six. However, what I'd like to understand is why, when I look at this $3.746 billion for two months of operations of health care – that will be for April and May, which is the next fiscal year – and then I multiply that by six to count for 12 months, if I was to take those two months, calculate that, multiply that by six, I'd come up with a number that's almost $22.5 billion. When I compare that to what was spent in this fiscal year, '17-18, that's a 5 per cent increase. That's the math that we have here in front of us.

What I'd like to know from the minister – again, I don't deny for one second that the people in our health care system are remarkable people and do tremendous work, and I want to be very clear about that. What I'd like to know specifically, though, is: what is different about health care spending in April and May that would make those numbers that much higher? When we see the budget in eight days' time, will we expect to see a 5 per cent increase in health care spending? If that's the case, what is already a pretty unlikely scenario of finding a way to balance the budget by 2023 gets pretty much impossible if that's going to be our cost curve. It may be bending the cost curve, but unfortunately it's bending it up, so that would be a real challenge. I'd like some very specific details on what exactly happens in health care spending in April and May that would put these numbers so far out of whack.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. Certainly, in my role as a nurse previously – no more reference to women in labour – what I can say is that it was incredibly difficult because previously what we saw in terms of health care spending was an absolute yo-yo. It just depended on the given thoughts of the government in that particular year what we might be getting. I never knew if I was going to have more colleagues or fewer colleagues that I got to work with, depending on the particular whims of that government.

You know, Madam Chair, we're committed not only to more stable funding than that, but also the outcome of that yo-yoing was, you know, an average increase in health care spending that was 6 per cent. Certainly, that has been an unsustainable outcome for the health system in this province, that has been a long-standing pattern, and we're very committed as a government to bending that cost curve. Absolutely, I would say that we are going to bend that cost curve, and absolutely our commitment to Albertans is that we do recognize the need to move forward in a fiscally responsible way and to ensure that we keep those increases within reason.

Again I will say how proud I am of the Minister of Health and the Associate Minister of Health and all of the staff for coming up with the very best solutions to move forward and doing so in a way that allows us to actually continue to enhance the health and well-being of Albertans and the work that we provide to them but also for ensuring that we find efficiencies around that.

Again, you know, the Minister of Finance was working with finance offices right across government to forecast the requirements for each department. These are based on their expected costs, what commitments they had, and the timing of payments in the two-month period. Absolutely, in no way can it be projected that expenses would be based on six times what it is for two months, and I think that has been stated very clearly, that multiplying this two-month period by six months is not going to be reflective of the budget.

Once again, in only eight days the full, entire budget will be available for everyone to look at and to be able to comment on and to have long and prolonged conversations about as we go into estimates and answer all of the very specific questions for the members who choose to have those questions answered.

Again, I'm very proud of the work we're doing to bend that cost curve as we move forward, and I'm looking forward to seeing the fruits of our continued support for the health and well-being of Albertans and looking forward to having those conversations on the budget just next week.

Mr. Clark: Well, budget day, Madam Chair, is one of my favourite days of the year. It ranks right up there with Christmas. It is finance-nerd heaven, so we look forward to continuing that conversation. I am disappointed that we didn't hear much in the way of specifics, so I remain skeptical, frankly, that this government has any desire or ability, more importantly, to rein in spending in a responsible way. To be very clear, when we're talking about reining in spending, we're not talking about massive front-line cuts. When I talk to my constituents, I find it very difficult to believe that in a $21.4 billion health care system, soon to be a $22.5 billion health care system, we can't find some reasonable and responsible savings that do not impact front-line services.

In my final 30 seconds I will ask the Minister of Children's Services perhaps also to comment on Community and Social Services. It appears that our spending again has gone up quite substantially in that area. Is there something specific about April and May in terms of timing of payments that would cause that, or in fact is there increased service being delivered that has caused this cost increase?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. Once again I just want to state that each department submitted their requirements based on what their expected costs and commitments and timing of payments would be, and Community and Social Services is no different in that. We all have different expectations throughout the year. There's not an even disbursing of funds.

The Chair: We're now moving into the next segment, where any independent members would have an opportunity to ask questions.

It appears that that's not the case, so we will move on to any members from the government caucus if there are any who wish to ask questions. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Madam Chair. I really appreciate this opportunity to ask some questions.

The Chair: Did you wish to go back and forth?

Loyola: Yes, Madam Chair. I'll go back and forth with the minister. A lot of comments have been made in the House this morning regarding credit ratings and the debt. One of the things that perhaps some of the members from the other side don't know – maybe even some of the members on this side don't know – is that I've been studying karate for the last nine years. You didn't know that about me, eh?

Mr. Ceci: I did know that.

Loyola: Oh, you did know that about me.

Mr. Ceci: You're looking good.

Loyola: Thank you, sir. Thank you. I appreciate that.

Now, you may ask: why is he bringing this up, right? Well, I bring it up because I was at my last karate class, and my sensei is, like: "Rod, why don't you hang out for a little bit here after class?" So we were hanging out, and, no word of a lie, the first words that came out of his mouth were: "Rod, I remember the Klein years. I remember the Klein years. My dad lost his job. I had just graduated from university. I couldn't find a job." He had a bachelor of science, he told me. He remembers at that time, during the Klein years, when the Conservative government of the time had cut so many programs in this province and people couldn't get access to the services that they needed because there were no front-line workers to actually help provide that service. That's what he remembers from the Conservative government of the time, when they chose to cut, cut, cut, cut, cut, as he put it to me.

Now, he's, like: "Rod, whatever your government does . . ."

Mr. Clark: Name.

The Chair: Hon. member, just a reminder that we don't speak names in the House, even your own name.

Loyola: He was, like, Sempei – because that's the title that's given to a green and a blue and a brown belt in karate, just so you guys know. I'm trying to keep this jovial. I'm trying to keep it jovial. He's like, "Sempei" – he actually said "Rod." He said: "I don't want us to go back to those times. I don't want us to go back to the times when it was hard for people to access services and when people were putting the budget before the actual needs of the people of Alberta."

Now, I understand that we don't want to go into major, major debt. We don't want to. I understand. And you know what? I know that our Finance minister has a good plan to get us back to balance, but that path to balance should not be sacrificing the people of this province. Never forget that the people who elected us to be in this House elected us so that we can make the best decisions in their interests and make sure that we're helping them when times are tough. That's the kind of government that we've chosen to be. When times are tough here in this province, we're going to make sure that we stand with Albertans.

We chose not to cut. Yeah, it's going to take us a little bit longer to get back to balance, but we chose not to cut because we don't want to sacrifice on behalf of the people of Alberta. We know they have it tough. But, you know, the good thing is that things are starting to change. The economic recovery is well on path. We're doing well. As the minister has said in this House before, housing starts are up, we have more drilling than we had before, manufacturing is up, and retail sales are up. Now, I know that not every Albertan is feeling the positive impact of this recovery yet, but going back to the words of my sensei, he was, like: it would have been a lot worse if you guys would have cut and cut and cut and cut the programs in this province so that people didn't have the services.

Now, the other thing that I want to mention is the fact that a lot of the problem during the Klein years was the infrastructure debt, lack of hospitals, lack of schools. Like, I mean, how many schools were promised and promised and promised to communities? In my constituency alone since we've been elected, we've built four new schools. When I go door-knocking in my constituency, people open the door, and they recognize me: Rod. Sorry. MLA. They really say Rod.

Point of Order

Referring to a Member by Name

Mr. Clark: Point of order. You have warned this member today. There are very, very clear parliamentary traditions that we don't use names, and cute as he may think it is, it is enormously disrespectful to this Chamber and to you for him to keep doing this. This is serious business. I understand that he's making a point, and that's fine. There are rules that have been established over centuries of how we conduct business in this Chamber, and I would ask that this member follow those rules.

The Chair: Another reminder.

Loyola: Madam Chair, I respectfully apologize to the House. I will stop using names. I was just trying to be jovial, but, you know, okay.

Debate Continued

Loyola: Anyways, I go out door-knocking in my constituency. People recognize me, and they say: "You know what, MLA? We thank you for those four new schools that have been built inside this constituency since your government has been elected."

Now, that infrastructure debt weighs – it weighs and it weighs and it weighs – down on the people of this province, and that's what perhaps the members across the way don't realize. You know, they like to talk about the debt as if it was the personal debt of every individual in this province. It's not. They like to frame it that way, and I get it. That supports their opinion, and it supports their world view, and it supports their ideology, right? I get it. But that's not the way that the average Albertan sees it, the parent that wants their child to go to a school in their neighbourhood or even one across town that has, like, a special program that they want. They want that school. They need that school. They don't need it 20 years from now; they need it now.

The people in the constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie, who started moving into that constituency more than 15 years ago, were promised. They were told by the developers, by the city. They were told by many people: yeah, they're going to be building a school right across from where you live, right here in this open space. They were being told that because they were being promised those schools by the past Conservative government. The sign was there, right in the field. It was there: future home of the new school. I don't know what they used to put on the signs. Whatever. It was something like that. The signs were up, but every time that constituent would walk by, walking their dog or maybe walking to the park, they would see the sign. Years would pass. No school.

When this government came on, we decided that we were going to fulfill our word and make sure to start investing in infrastructure projects so that we could get those schools built, we could get those hospitals built, and we could get those highways built because that's what the people of Alberta need. I want to give this opportunity to the Finance minister to talk to us a little bit more about that infrastructure spend and how important that is for Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to focus a little bit on Q3 and what I reported in terms of the deficit reduction. It blends in with what the MLA from Edmonton-Ellerslie was touching on. Just a few short weeks ago I said that the forecast deficit would be $9.1 billion, a $1.4 billion decrease from budget. It's lower. That forecast for the deficit is much lower as a result of the significant cost-containment efforts and constraints on costs and improved revenues that have happened in this province, specifically the revenues in higher nonrenewable resource revenues, and increased investment income. On the cost-containment side there has been significant work. It's not on the kinds of things that the member was putting a priority on. It's not on infrastructure investment. The cost containment that you're able to see as a result of the focused work this government is doing is on negotiating practical agreements with public-sector unions such as ATA and UNA and others that are in the queue.

Madam Chair, the previous government did a lot of individual negotiating. We've been able to take a government approach to negotiations and wrap them up into a more strategic, holistic – a comprehensive approach is what I'm trying to say. The previous government's efforts were all over the place, and it resulted in a noncomprehensive focus on negotiating practical agreements. We're changing that and seeing good results.

We've extended, Madam Chair, management salary freezes in the public sector along with a hiring restraint across public services. As people here know, for this Chamber and our political staff and others, almost immediately when the new government took over, there was a freeze on salaries for political staff and the elected for the entire term, and that won't change. We have a hiring restraint across the public service and a focus on hiring front-line jobs only, and that's having some significant positive effect. Consolidating across corporate services is helping out as well.

Madam Chair, in my much younger years, I took tae kwon do, and I was a yellow belt with a green stripe. The name that they gave me was Weakling. No, it wasn't, Madam Chair. But I did take that, and I know the discipline, I understand the discipline that the MLA for Edmonton-Ellerslie is talking about, the discipline of being focused on what your goals are and moving towards those little by little.

I can say that our goal is to get back to balance. We are moving towards that goal, and the good results of the decrease in the deficit in Q3 show how that can happen, Madam Chair, by the work this government is undertaking across cost containment and really focusing on diversifying our economy. That doesn't take place right away. Diversification takes time, but we're working on it. We're focused on it. We're not just riding the boom and bust and hoping to God that oil goes up to a hundred dollars again because it's not going there in the medium term, in the long term. What people in the know talk about: they talk about lower for longer, so we have to come up with a plan that realizes that reality and works with it.

We, of course, remain among the highest rated in the country with regard to credit ratings. We are carefully and prudently finding savings across the public services, but we will not sacrifice things like health care, things like education, that are priorities for the member back there. What we heard from credit-rating agencies was that we have to cut billions out of our budget or raise taxes by billions to keep our credit rates the same, and frankly we don't think that's the right approach. We know we're coming back. We know that with greater recovery, with that flowing in and more and more people feeling it, there will be more disposable income. There will be higher wages. There will be better jobs in the future for Albertans. Frankly, more Albertans are employed today than were in 2014, and they're employed today because they're graduating from schools. They're looking for work. They're finding work.

Often talked about is the quality of that employment. Madam Chair, it is no surprise to anyone that the recession has had the effect of dampening numbers of people in workplaces and their wages, but that is changing. That is changing. Our plan is working. We are leaders in the country, with the growth of our GDP being at 4.5 per cent last year, in 2017, and it will lead the country. Along with a couple of other provinces we'll be leaders again in 2018. You only have to look next door to Saskatchewan to see how the choices they made are having a negative impact on their province. Their growth in 2017 was 1.3 per cent. They sacrificed the hopes and dreams of many in Saskatchewan as a result of the choices they made, particularly around education, because it is challenging for people to get into postsecondary.

We're going to continue to support good jobs in this province, Madam Chair. A diverse economy will result as a result of the investments we're making. In Budget 2017 you saw that already with things like the petrochemical diversification program 1, which we have announced, and you'll see more work done on all of that in Budget 2018. We are focused on addressing the waste that was in the system, the waste, frankly, left behind by that side, the waste that was indicative in the high salaries and the exorbitant perks of some of the highest paid public servants in the country. We're addressing that, but you can't immediately address it.

Our plan is that those things are changing under our plan. We are going to make sure that people who are in public service positions are remunerated, are compensated, are benefited to the same levels as the public service or less than industry. The benchmarks, frankly, that the other side put in place for many of those agencies, boards, and commissions were related to the private sector, and that's just wrong, Madam Chair. We have taken pains to redress that through a number of our actions, and we're going to continue to do so.

The Chair: The Hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Chair. It's a pleasure to stand up and talk budgets. You know, as I mentioned, I'll start off by saying that unlike the two members that spoke before me, I do not have any background in the martial arts.

Loyola: Not yet.

Mr. Malkinson: Not yet. So there are going to be no martial arts metaphors in my questions here to the minister.

When I go out in the riding in Calgary-Currie, you know, I like to go and talk to my constituents. Not every single one of my constituents had a chance to come out and talk to me during the election, so I go to them and meet them where they are. Just recently, actually, I was at an event in my riding, that was a charity event hosted by members of the local community. A large portion of them were restaurant and small-business owners. I had a chance to go through the room throughout the day for this charity event, which was for a good cause, and be able to, you know, chat to them about some of their thoughts and what's going on. Some of them said to me, you know, the complaint that we often hear from the opposition: oh, minimum wage is going to make my business disappear, and doom and gloom will follow. So I, then, of course . . .

The Chair: We are now finished with the rotation of 20-minute blocks. We're now into 10-minute segments, where speaking time is limited to five minutes each or is shared. We will go back to the Official Opposition.

Mr. McIver: Okay. Madam Chair, I would like to share the time with the minister if that's okay.

The Chair: All right.

Mr. McIver: All right. May I begin?

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Okay. Madam Chair, I'm going to actually bring things back to where I think this is meant to be, which is . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, you do need to stand when you're speaking.

Mr. McIver: I will. Thank you.

I want to bring things back to where they're meant to be, which is a comparison of the first two months of the year coming up with the first two months of last year. I'm just going to ask the minister straightforward questions. To be clear, Madam Chair, I'm not asking him about any year other than a comparison of the first two months of this year to last. So if the minister goes other places, I am going to respectfully ask you to cut him off. Otherwise, he's not answering my question if he comments on other periods of time.

To the Finance Minister. Minister, you put this report out, and there's not a lot of information, but I'm going to respectfully ask you about the information that's there. It talks about Advanced Education. You want $469 million for expenses. What is the difference in money that you're going to spend between the year coming up and the first two months of last year? What are you going to spend more on and what less on, please?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. In Advanced Education these are payments to postsecondary institutions up front . . .

Mr. McIver: Madam Chair, I didn't ask him what the category was; I asked him what he's going to spend more or less on.

The Chair: Hon. member, there is no rule as to what he has to say. He can speak to whatever he chooses as long as it's within the guidelines of the discussion that we're having.

Go ahead.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Madam Chair.

As I was trying to say, in Advanced Education these are payments to postsecondary institutions upfront so they aren't forced to do any borrowing. Frankly, the member is saying: compare what last year's interim supply was to this year's interim supply, and tell me what the differences are. I'm not going to do that, Madam Chair. I don't think there's any point in doing that. What the point is is that these two months of interim supply are to ensure that the normal course of business, whether it's for Advanced Education or any government department, can be carried out as we take the time necessary to debate the budget, which will come up in the Committee of Supply process in a few short days.

Madam Chair, my staff has . . .

Mr. McIver: Madam Chair, he's not answering the question.

The Chair: Hon. member.

Mr. McIver: We were going back and forth.

The Chair: Hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Madam Chair, he's demonstrated that he doesn't know what he's talking about, so he should actually let me ask a different question.

The Chair: Hon. member, he can speak to whatever he chooses to speak to. He cannot be obligated to answer your specific question. That's simply the way this House works. You should know that and be aware of that, correct?

Mr. McIver: Oh, I'm happy to point out that the minister doesn't know his own portfolio.

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to reiterate that my staff have worked with finance officials across government to forecast what the requirements are. That works the same way for Advanced Education. So based on their expected costs for the first two months, their commitments, the timing of payments that they are required to undertake over the first two-month period of the year are calculated: totally rolled up, that's $8.7 billion.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like the minister to explain for any of the categories – I'm going to make it as easy as possible on the minister to demonstrate that he actually knows anything about what he's being paid to do. Pick one, Minister; I'll leave it up to you. For any of the ministries, since you're asking for money for the first two months of the upcoming fiscal year, can you tell me for any ministry where you're spending less money than the first two months of last year or more money than the first two months of last year? Any one. I'm making it as easy on the minister as I possibly can to show that he knows his job.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. The information that the member is asking for can best be understood with the full budget before us in eight days. In eight days he will be able to track every ministry he wants to track and see what the difference is in their expenditures. I've indicated that there are two months identified in this interim supply. It can't be multiplied by six. You can't compare this interim supply figure with last year's interim supply figure. It doesn't work that way. That's the answer.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. I didn't ask him to multiply by six. I asked him to take the two months of money he's asking for, and I asked him to say what was different. The minister demonstrated . . .

Mr. Ceci: Yes. I answered.

Mr. McIver: While he was interrupting me, he demonstrated that he doesn't know his job. So, Madam Chair, I will ask the minister another question based on the minister's opening remarks.

He spent some time talking about how he cut golf club memberships from agencies, boards, and commissions. I'm not arguing with him. My question for the minister is a simple one that only takes a number answer if the minister knows his file. The question is: what's the total number of the value of the golf club memberships, and what is that as a percentage of the government costs for agencies, boards, and commissions, please?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. You know, it's interesting that the member wants to go down the road of exorbitant kinds of salaries, benefits for leaders of agencies, boards, and commissions that this government put in place because it's not a good record. It's not a responsible way of doing business, but they did it, and they did it to benefit their insiders and friends and people who benefited from knowing them as a 44-year government that was in place. I have said before and used the number of $33 million that have been eliminated from agencies, boards, and commissions over a three-year period as a result of the work this government has done.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. The minister didn't answer the question: what's that as a percentage of the total cost of the agencies, boards, and commissions? So he demonstrated again that he doesn't know his job.

But we'll move on to the next thing, and we're going to continue to try to make it easy for the minister to just once show that he knows his job because so far he has demonstrated quite the opposite. Let's talk about things that the minister has talked about, and let's talk about how the decision should not depend upon the world price of oil. In these two-month estimates – and this was his remark, so I'm only asking him to expand on what he opened the door to. What's different in the first two months' estimates compared to the first two months of last year's estimates that is less dependent on the world price of oil?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. Again, I want to say that I don't think it's relevant to talk about last year's estimates. We're talking about this year's estimates. They're here before this House and can be debated. I'm endeavouring to do just that with the member opposite, who seems to be focused on last year.

I can tell you that the world price of oil for the fiscal year to date, which for the 2017 budget will end in just a few short weeks, will average $54, Madam Chair. We started the year out in Budget 2017, back in April 2017, saying that it would be $55 a barrel. That was the average that we understood from the private-sector people, and the method of calculating that is well known by the Energy ministry individuals. So they identified, we accepted, and we put $55 in our Budget 2017.

That changed drastically during the year. At Q1 we changed that to $49 a barrel. We were going along, tracking at $49 a barrel, but then the world price of oil went up again. We raised our forecast to be $54 for the entire fiscal year 2017, and, Madam Chair, we are very close to reaching that with two more weeks to go and the price of oil now being about $61.23 per barrel.

Madam Chair, Budget 2018 will have a new forecast for oil in it. That will come up, and we'll share that in eight days.

Mr. McIver: Thank you.

The minister, after promising that he now was going to make decisions not depending on the world price of oil, just talked entirely about how his budget is dependent upon the world price of oil, again demonstrating that he doesn't actually know his job. So I'm going to make it easy on the minister again. Every question has been easy so far. Every time he hasn't been able to answer it. He said that he's going to create an economy built to last. What is different about the first two months of this year compared to the first two months of last year, which is what we're talking about here, that is going to create an economy built to last, Minister?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. Well, the important things we've done are to make sure that schools are invested in, both at the postsecondary level and the elementary level, that there are schools there for people to go to, that there's training for people to go to. With education, with training, people can get better employment. They can do better for themselves and their families.

The other important investments we've made, of course, are into health care. So for an individual, that really is an economy built to last, if you have health care there and you know you can count on it.

Additionally, we have been focused on value-added parts of . . .

The Chair: We'll now rotate to the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow. Did you wish to share your 10 minutes?

Mr. Clark: I would like very much to go back and forth with the minister if I may. Thank you very much.

I just want to offer a few comments on a few of the points that the minister has made. You know, we've been here long enough – it's going on three years now – so we start to hear themes emerge and the same words repeated over and over again, and those words over time unfortunately seem to lose meaning.

What this government seems so blindly adherent to is this whole idea that if there's any effort made to apply any fiscal discipline, any fiscal restraint, especially on the expense side of the ledger, that only could possibly mean massive front-line service cuts, that either we have a benevolent government that will look out for people, or we have some draconian situation where we're throwing children out into the streets and not building a single school in this province. That just is simply not the reality. Not only is it possible but it is absolutely necessary for a government to apply a little bit of fiscal discipline, a little bit of restraint in terms of the monies that are spent within government, all the while expecting Alberta's tremendous public service to continue delivering those services.

I've heard the minister say a couple of times – and this will be the first question I ask – that within agencies, boards, and commissions they have found $33 million in savings from constraining executive pay from the ABC review, and that's great. I applaud them for this. Can the minister tell me, please, what percentage of reduction that results in to the overall deficit for the province of Alberta?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. You know, the first thing I want to speak to is the fiscal discipline question. The fiscal discipline of this side of the House is stronger than on that side. We only have to look at the operational growth year on year that the previous government had. I can tell you that some years there were spikes up to 10 per cent in operational growth, and there were dips down to 6 per cent, and there were spikes back up to 10 per cent. This side of the House has bent that cost curve, when you wrap up all of operations, significantly. It's exhibited in the Health minister's portfolio, where it was 6 per cent per year growth on the operational side, and now it's in the 4 or under 4 range, and we have goals for lower than that.

Madam Chair, the previous budget, Budget 2017, has a graph here that identifies the bending of the operational costs that we have kind of been part of. It's in the 3 to 3.5 to 4.2 range, and we are going to undertake even more discipline in that regard to make it even lower. That is how we'll get back to balance. That is how we'll address the deficit. We will have our expenditures under population plus CPI growth in this province. There are $750 million in real constraints or savings that we have brought into Budget 2017. There is more we need to do. We know that.

The percentages that the member is looking for I don't have at my fingertips, but I can certainly work those up.

Mr. Clark: Well, happily, I've done that quick calculus, and it turns out that $33 million of savings over your new $9.1 billion deficit is, in fact, 0.0036 per cent. It's what one would call nonmaterial in the financial world. So while it's something, I think that's clearly not enough.

The $750 million number you just threw out is a new one. I've never heard that number before. What I do know is that, looking at the third-quarter fiscal update, there's a billion dollars more in spending in fiscal '17-18 than was planned a scant nine months ago by this government in their very own budget. If all you did was stick to your own budget, that $9.1 billion deficit would be $8.1 billion. And that, Madam Chair, is material.

Back to health care. The minister had talked about constraining spending and also had talked about the behaviour of previous governments. I absolutely agree with him that previous governments, of which I was certainly never a part, never aspired to be, and never would be, quite deservedly were kicked to the curb. The party was so bad, it doesn't exist anymore. There's absolutely no doubt that the behaviour and poor fiscal management of the previous government were, frankly, not good either, but that doesn't excuse the approach that this government has taken. In fact, it gave even more of an opportunity for this government to show that it is possible – I can tell you that I know it's possible – to find reasonable savings within the public service.

I just wanted to ask – the largest budget line item here is health care. It looks like it's going to exceed $22 billion next year. We'll see exactly what that turns out to be in eight days' time. But the minister talked about a 4 per cent year-over-year spending growth. Well, that still exceeds inflation plus population growth and will result, without question, in a very difficult time in balancing the budget because on the revenue side of the equation this government's entire plan seems to be to cross their fingers and hope the price of oil goes up. That's what happened in the third quarter, finally, and we realized some benefit from that. While I certainly will never cheer against Alberta, I think we would all agree that relying on nonrenewable resource revenues as the only way of saving our budget is not a responsible thing to do. It's also exactly what the previous government did, to their great detriment and to the detriment of the people of Alberta.

So I will ask the minister why, for the single-largest line item in the provincial budget and indeed in this interim supply document, Health, it is, in fact, acceptable for it to grow at 4 per cent year over year. Again, if you can enlighten us, to my questions previous, on how it is that we're going to constrain that when it looks like the first one-sixth of next year would result in spending levels that, if they're sustained over the remaining 10 months of the year, would be a 5 per cent increase in Health spending rather than the 4 per cent that you talk about or perhaps even less? When you look at inflation plus population growth, it's certainly less than 4 per cent.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. You know, I cautioned all members – and this one has heard the caution from the Minister of Children's Services – not to do simple math and times by six because that's not how the work was done to identify the interim supply estimates. The two-month period that we are identifying here, I want to underline, ensures that there's going to be time for a healthy debate around Budget 2018 and passing the appropriation act. Leaving a healthy margin of time to get important work done is deliberate and prudent in the planning on the government's part. When Budget 2018 is tabled on the 22nd of March, the Assembly will have the opportunity to discuss and debate the full budget. Once that process is completed, we'll bring the appropriation act into the Assembly that will provide for the full-year costs of the government expenses, operations.

Back in Budget 2017, the current budget that we're working with, there was an operating expense budget increase of 3.2 per cent for the '17-18 year in the Ministry of Health. Madam Chair, we have a work-in-progress with regard to Health in particular. There is great work being done to bend the cost curve in that area. I know the minister wants to reduce the operational expenditures, and she's working with the board of AHS to make that happen. I said about 4 per cent. I didn't say 4 per cent; I said about. These are numbers that are known off the top of the head of the relevant minister, for sure.

I want to say that there's good work being done in the area of pharmacies in terms of savings in generic drugs, in terms of savings and operational best practices, in terms of more efficient ways of delivering health services that are all having the impact of reducing the operational growth of that area.

Mr. Clark: All right. Looking at the clock here, I realize we've got about 10 seconds left, so I think I will just cede that time.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: We will now go back to the government caucus if any members wish to speak. For the 10-minute segment, do you wish to share that with the minister, hon. member?

Mr. Malkinson: I do wish to share. Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: All right. Go ahead, hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Chair. You know, I go out and I chat with my constituents in my riding. Just recently I was at a charity event with a bunch of business owners, and I was chatting with them about what our government is doing. As business owners, of course, they definitely care about what the economy is doing. So I chatted with them, and they said to me, you know, some of the things that perhaps could be talking points coming from the opposition, that the minimum wage, for example, is going to cause doom and gloom. But I chatted with them. I said, "Hey, how is business going for you?" and it's, like: "Business is up. We're seeing more sales." They feel like they've seen the bottom of this recession. With the minimum wage, like any business, I mean, they would prefer to have fewer costs than more, but they are going through with it.

At that same event, actually, there was a member from the party opposite who was a candidate who was running for the nomination of the UCP who was there as well. It was interesting because this person was, you know, pretty much following me around this entire event. It was interesting for these business owners, who sort of got to talk about two different visions of what Alberta looks like going forward. One of them was going along and saying: "Well, you know, we'd lower the minimum wage. There are better ways to help the single mom than the minimum wage." Of course, I am a strong proponent that the right way forward with that is minimum wage combined with us investing in things like $25-a-day daycare and such is the way to help those Albertans who are most in need, to help businesses forward. Because when those who are most in need have extra money in their pocket, they tend to spend that money locally in the economy.

If you give a tax break to those who are most well off amongst us, you know, that money doesn't tend to end up at the local pub if somebody is making over $125,000 a year of taxable income. For those of you who don't know how tax brackets work, taxable income would be the amount of money that is taxable minus your about $18,000 basic personal tax amount. Realistically, in order for an individual in the riding of Calgary-Currie to hit that extra tax bracket that we introduced – and I think we rightfully and meaningfully introduced a progressive tax here in Alberta – you've got to be making about $140,000 a year.

Now, the opposition has quite clearly said that they want to return to a flat tax. For that individual who is now making over $140,000 year, to give them a tax break, the question I was proposing to these business owners was: "If we're giving that to somebody who is coming into your restaurant, who's making $140,000-plus a year, are they going to buy an extra beer when they get a large tax break? Is that individual going to come in and buy the two-piece fish and chips versus the one?" These business owners kind of looked at me, you know, and went: "Well, highly likely no. I mean, a person who is making $140,000 a year who is coming into my bar, for example, can only eat so much fish and chips and can only drink so much beer, and it's quite likely that they are already buying the amount of beer or fish and chips that one would buy when they come into the restaurant."

I talked to them again and said: "Okay. If you have a customer that comes into your restaurant who is currently making minimum wage or very near to it, you know, and if they have a bit of extra money in their pocket, do you think that when they do, they might buy an extra beer, might buy the two-piece fish and chips instead of the one when they have that bit of extra money in their pocket? Or perhaps they buy the same special they always do but come in multiple more times during the month. Do you think that would be a likely outcome of that individual having a little bit more money in their pocket?" And they said: "Yeah. That would make sense."

The Chair: Hon. member, you've reached the maximum of the five-minute speaking time.

The next five minutes will be for the minister to respond.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I think I'd like to address a little bit of what was talked about, the programs of this government, particularly the focus around wages. The focus on wages is seminal. You know, it was something that started many other provinces to do the same thing. We can see to our west in B.C. that they're talking about now getting to, I believe, $15 an hour, maybe shortly after the government of Alberta hits that. Ontario is talking about the same thing. It won't be very long before the entire country is readjusting what they believe is appropriate and right for people to make in minimum wages in this country. We know that in the United States it's also a focus. Many states have brought in legislation for the same thing.

Madam Chair, that's just one piece of the puzzle. The other piece of the puzzle, of course, is around ensuring that every dollar is appropriately valued in the government of Alberta and that there is quality or value for money with every tax dollar that's garnered. I can tell you that the focus on bringing down the deficit is paramount on this side of the House. The focus on containing costs is paramount on this side of the House. We're not reliant on or waiting for the world price of oil to go back up; we're doing what we can. We're managing where we can as a government.

I can just maybe say that the figures I talked about earlier, the amounts that I talked about earlier and the amounts that come out of these things – I want to specifically say that we are freezing salaries until September 2019 for all non-union and management across the public service. Since it was imposed in April of 2016, that freeze has saved $29 million per year in the APS alone. That's just for the APS. I believe it's about 27,000 or 29,000 workers in the APS. We have an ongoing hiring restraint in the APS as well, which has saved $204 million since the beginning of 2015, Madam Chair.

We have reduced health care costs by a hundred million dollars over three years by lowering generic drug prices, plus $28 million from the operational best practices review. That was in 2017-18.

And this was asked specifically by somebody. We've cut the salaries and eliminated bonuses for the highest paid executives in Alberta's agencies, boards, and commissions, saving nearly $16 million annually. Those folks are still working for those ABCs. They're still providing great service to Albertans, but frankly the previous government was offside with what remuneration should be for the highest paid executives in the ABCs. We've reviewed public agencies, boards, and commissions. There were 301 when we took over government, Madam Chair. There are now 263 ABCs that provide great service in this province, but we've saved $33 million over three years by consolidating or eliminating or downsizing those numbers of agencies, boards, and commissions.

I talked about the consolidation and transformation of government corporate services such as communications, IT, finance, and HR, saving $15 million to $20 million annually once fully implemented while achieving better results, Madam Chair.

Another thing we did was that we went back to every department, 21 ministries, and we went back to all of the agencies, boards, and commissions, and said that because we are in a constraint period of time, you have to give up a portion of your discretionary spending and make sure that we are spending properly. Late in the year we went back to them and said: 10 per cent reductions for discretionary spending for 2017-18, saving $8 million.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, you have five minutes and five minutes. Do you wish to combine your time with the minister?

Mr. Cyr: Absolutely. If he's willing. Thank you.

Minister, I have been patiently sitting and waiting to hear some answers from you and your office, and what I've heard repeatedly is that we can't use this three-page document in front of us in any way, shape, or form to substantiate the spending that we're about to approve, $8 billion. Do you agree with that statement? Yes or no, sir.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. I said that you had to be cautious about multiplying by six and figuring that that was the extent of that ministry's budget in 2018. You have to be cautious. It's not a direct line multiplication.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you for that answer. Now, you were saying that we can't compare this interim supply with past interim supplies for the two-month period. Yes or no? Is that correct, minister?

Mr. Ceci: I think I explained myself on this. I'm not comparing interim supply to interim supply. I think you can see this interim supply as an approximation of the budget that will be before us in eight days.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. Now, I'd like to look at the first page, support to the Legislative Assembly. I went and checked past interim supplies. I know you just said that you can't compare them, but I wanted to take a reasonable opportunity to look at this. In 2015-2016 we had $20,460,000 for support to the Legislative Assembly. In 2016-2017 we had $21 million. In 2017-2018 we had $20,597,000 in interim supply. This year we're putting forward $13,528,000. Now, what we're looking at here is a 34 per cent decrease. It's been stable, sir. I would suggest that in this case – $20 million, $20 million, $20 million, $13 million – suddenly it looks like something is happening there, sir. Are you planning on firing 34 per cent from our Legislative Assembly support, sir? Yes or no?

Mr. Ceci: You've gone down the road of comparing previous interim supplies and figuring that there is some chicanery going on here. That's not true. LAO will continue to provide the support to the Legislative Assembly they've always provided.

Mr. Cyr: Well, sir, this is distressing to hear, that again we actually don't have an answer.

Let's actually move on to the next one here, which is the office of the Chief Electoral Officer. In 2015-2016 we had $1,264,000. In 2016-2017 we had $1.2 million. In 2017-2018 we had $1.264 million. In 2018-2019, sir, it's $6.5 million. That is a 415 per cent increase for this office. Now, I understand that we've brought in some new rules, but would you not be able to explain exactly how it is that this increased by 415 per cent, sir?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know what I think is particularly rich about this conversation this morning? And I use the term "rich" ironically. What I think is particularly rich about this conversation is the sheer outrage of my friends on the other side of the aisle waxing on and on about their fiscal conservatism in the face of what they see as rampant spending when I am still trying to carve through an infrastructure demand list in my office that topped $2 billion, with a "b". It would appear to me that the outrage fomented on the other side of the aisle seems only in reference to our budget and not to their infrastructure demands for their constituencies. Perhaps – and this is just a suggestion – if you really want to embrace the fiscal conservatism in yourselves, you might want to start by taking a look at your infrastructure demands and maybe saying: there are probably some things I can do without.

Mr. Cyr: I'd like to thank the hon. minister. She does bring up some valid points.

But I will go back to the interim supply bill, which is what we're discussing right at this point. I would argue that comparing interim supply to interim supply over the years is a valid way of looking at how we're doing. Now, obviously, it's clear that we have no ability to compare these years, in the mind of the minister, and that's, in my opinion, shameful.

Let's talk about Justice and Solicitor General. I see that, for instance, capital investment in 2017-2018 was $742,000. Now, what we've got in this year, 2018-2019: it goes up to $2,742,000. They added $2 million, just a round number, to this line item. Sir, this is almost tripling or more than tripling this line item. What capital items are happening in this time period that weren't happening last year? That's a reasonable request to ask.

Mr. Ceci: The response will be something that you can spend countless minutes on when we have the full budget before us and you go into estimates and meet with the minister directly. That minister will be able to tell you about their expenditures on the specific capital items that are of concern to you. I can tell you that this two-month ask is to ensure that the normal course of government business continues and is carried out, and it gives this Assembly the necessary time to discuss and debate the full Budget 2018 through the Committee of Supply.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you. I'd like to discuss Service Alberta in this, going back to the fact that we should be able to use prior interim supply bills to be able to track exactly how we're doing our spending and calculations. In 2016-2017 we had an ask of it looks like $52,530,000. In 2017-2018 for expenses we've got $55,532,000. In 2018-2019 we see $78,500,000, Minister. That's a 41 per cent increase in expenses for that two-month period. We can see a stable line here of about $55 million. How is it that we can't explain this increase of 41 per cent through these statements? I would like an answer to that.

Mr. Ceci: You know, if the full two-month supply is not needed – and in many cases it won't be; they've given themselves some cushion – it will roll into the subsequent part of the year. Madam Chair, we are giving ourselves a cushion so that we can deal with the expenses. Really, this is not something you want to multiply by six, and I think I've given that caution to several people on the other side. You want to understand that we are going to be coming forward with a full budget in eight days, and it will have the full amount for every ministry. It'll explain the relative goals of those ministries and what they're trying to achieve in the business plans. That information will all be available for all members of this House. It will also have the full amount that is necessary to address the expenditures in that ministry.

Madam Chair, there is nothing that's here that hasn't been in previous interim supplies. I would caution that you not compare previous interim supplies from last year and the year before and the year before.

The Chair: That brings us to the end of that segment.

We'll return to the government caucus should there be any members wishing to ask questions. Hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, do you wish to share the 10 minutes or just take five minutes each?

Mr. Malkinson: We'll share. Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

You know, I was listening to the debate, and I was wondering if the hon. Minister of Finance could explain how, if you're taking a very small segment of time with budgeting – I think of my Visa bill. If my bank said, "MLA for Calgary-Currie, how's your financial situation?" based on my Visa bill of March last year and my Visa bill of March this year, if one was to look at it, you know, one would see that my Visa bill of March this year is about 90 per cent lower than my Visa bill of March last year. The reason for that is that I had a very large planned expense in March of last year. I'm a car guy. I bought a transmission. They're kind of expensive. As a result, my Visa bill is way lower this year. If you only looked at that one small segment of time – could the hon. minister perhaps mention why it is important that we look at the full year and the full-year budget plan as opposed to single, small points of time, which seems to be what the opposition has been suggesting?

An Hon. Member: In case we buy a transmission.

Mr. Malkinson: In case we buy a transmission.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. Yeah, I'm trying to caution: you know, don't look at this interim supply and compare it to '17's and '16's and '15's. If you remember, in '15 I think we had four months or five months of interim supply. Those aren't valid comparisons, and it's not valid, anyway, to do it. What's valid is to look at the budget, the audited financial statements of the budget. This June you can compare our results with the previous June, and you can compare those results with the previous June. Look at those things as opposed to these interim supplies and making calculations on them.

If you look at the budgets overall, you will see something like, you know, that operating expense increases in the '16-17 year were 3.9 per cent. This year they're going to be it looks like 2.2 per cent. In the first year of our government it was 2.7 per cent. Those are the numbers you should be looking at as opposed to interim supply and multiplying by six and comparing them with previous years.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. You know, going back to the theme earlier of chatting with constituents, I often talk with the constituents at the door about the importance of infrastructure spending and the decisions we made during the recession to keep people working.

Now, oftentimes constituents in my riding ask me whether our infrastructure spending is going to result in new schools in Calgary-Currie. You know, oddly, I say to them quite proudly that, in fact, it won't, but what it will result in is brand new schools in the area surrounding my riding, including new schools and modernizations in the neighbouring ridings of Calgary-West and Calgary-Elbow. Those important investments mean that the students that were overcrowding in the schools in Calgary-Currie and creating issues – I can think of one school in particular where students were actually being taught in a converted courtyard – are now having their school populations return to more normal rates, where each student is in their own classroom, and they're not having to use excess space as classrooms. What that means is that that allows students to learn in a proper learning environment, and that is good for the constituents of Calgary-Currie.

My question to the minister. As we go through, we heard, in fact, actually, from the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat early on talking about overall spending, and we heard the number of going back to B.C.'s level, which for us would be a 20 per cent reduction. I'm wondering. To the hon. minister: just in our interim supply, you know, in the short period of time we have, what would a 20 per cent reduction look like if we were to take the advice of that hon. member, and how would it affect families like, perhaps, the ones in Calgary-Currie?

Mr. Ceci: Well, you know, thankfully, we have not gone down that road. We have believed, frankly, that Albertans are worth it in terms of the programs and services they've come to rely on, support, and grown to enjoy. Frankly, the investment in those programs and services is to the benefit of our province and its long-term fiscal health as well as health generally. Going down the road of austerity is one we chose not to undertake from the start of this government. We didn't campaign on it, and we were able to be successful, with 54 MLAs being elected to this House to represent the views of Albertans. Austerity is something they rejected. They rejected the previous government because of, frankly, its scandals and its ability to not address the needs of Albertans over time.

They supported the continued progress in this province that was borne out when this government came in. We have been progressive in terms of things like taxes, investments in the capital plan, and support for addressing the social needs of Albertans through the myriad of new ways that have come to this province as a result of looking at the evidence around health care and the support of people with special needs and treatment needs.

Frankly, I think that this new view that has been brought to government has been a healthy thing because we've been able to say: austerity does not work. When you take the approach that we've undertaken, your economy grows faster than in those provinces that have taken the austerity approach, Madam Chair. We're not going back to those bad times that were present. We're going forward, and Albertans are following.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. You know, we were talking a bit about infrastructure and making sure that we were making the right choices. When we talk about those choices, in Calgary-Currie one of the things that I'm so lucky to have is that I actually have several C-Train transit stops that are right there in my riding. But many parts of Calgary and other major cities in Alberta, in fact, don't have those opportunities for transit. My question to the Minister of Infrastructure would be: with the upcoming budget, what would it look like if we started cutting back? I know that there's a massive infrastructure deficit, particularly when it comes to items of transit. What would a reduction, which is what the opposition seems to be suggesting, look like for Albertans in our major cities?

Ms Jansen: I'd like to thank the member for the question. You know, when we talk about infrastructure in this province, one of the great things that the Premier did in 2015 was to follow the advice of David Dodge. The advice was to build during the lean years in infrastructure. That was critically important, and we can see now the fruits of that thinking. What we have seen now is that we did the largest infrastructure infusion in the province's history, almost $30 billion, and that not only built critical infrastructure that we were starved for in this province, but it put lots and lots of people to work on some very good and meaningful projects.

Fast-forward a couple of years, and your question takes me back to a conversation I had a couple of days ago, when I circled back with David Dodge and had a conversation with him. I said: "So we're going forward now. We've talked extensively about the need to ensure that we are building in the lean years, and now our economy is improving." In fact, as the Minister of Finance has stated before, our GDP numbers in Alberta are fantastic.

The Chair: That concludes that 10-minute segment.

We will return to the Official Opposition. Do you wish five minutes and five minutes, or would you like to share your time?

Mr. Gotfried: If I can go back and forth with the minister, that would be preferable. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: So share the time?

Mr. Gotfried: Yes, share the time.

The Chair: Okay. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the minister for being here to answer some of our questions. There's one question that I'd like to ask that we've had a little bit of a challenge having answered in this House. It does relate to the interim supply estimates. The first one I'd like to ask is: is there any consideration within the interim supply estimates with respect to the legal obligations and financial obligations for the Enmax deal? We can go back and forth.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Is he going to sit down?

Mr. Gotfried: Oh. Sorry.

Mr. Ceci: I wasn't sure he was done because he kept standing.

The Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General has put forward, roughly, their needs for the first two months though you have to remember that those are based on front-ending some payments, bringing forward some payments in advance of when they would occur normally during the year or paying them off early, so that specific question needs to go to the Justice minister. I'm not part of the deliberations on the aspects of that part of their budget. Their budget is coming forward in eight days, and you'll be able to, through estimates, ask the minister that directly.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Minister, for the non answer yet again, but we'll move on.

With respect to Economic Development and Trade, we all know, of course, that Economic Development and Trade is an extremely important investment for us and one which we hope is highly leveraged on behalf of Albertans. We see that there's just over 59 and a half million dollars being allocated in the interim supply estimates. I've got a few questions, and I would ask in advance if you would answer them succinctly and as directly as you possibly can. The first one would be: could you explain to us what specific investment-attraction initiatives will be undertaken during these two months that require this funding?

Mr. Ceci: The person who can explain succinctly and will during estimates is the Minister of Economic Development and Trade. My staff worked with officials in every ministry, as I've said, to forecast what their requirements are, and for each department, Madam Chair, based on their expected costs, commitments, and timing of payments for the two-month period, that is calculated here at $8.7 billion.

Mr. Gotfried: Well, Minister, surely you must have some details to actually be able to approve and present this interim supply budget, so I'm going to ask another question. How much of this requested funding will be directed towards rural Alberta and, maybe even more specifically, to regional economic development alliances within this budget? Again, I'm certain that you've had a chance to look at some of the more detailed aspects of this before bringing this forward to this House.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Yeah. You know, what you're kind of asking about is the budget. In eight days the ministers of each department will be in front of estimates and answer all of these questions fulsomely. I'm not going to reveal the budget to you or anybody here today. What I am telling you is that the financial officials in each of the departments have put forward this interim supply request, which we have rolled up. The rollup is $8.7 billion, Madam Chair. That will help us get through and have the opportunity to fulsomely talk about each of those expenditures that this individual and others on that side are interested in. I can tell you that there is $7.7 billion in expense amounts rolled up in each department, and about $600 million of that is in capital investments across 18 departments. I can't tell you what each of those capital investments is. They're asking for that. That's the responsibility of the ministers. What I can tell you is that this interim supply gets us through till we have a fulsome discussion on budget, which will start in eight days.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Minister, but respectfully we're talking about the requested funding here, which we're discussing today, interim supply estimates, not the budget. We're talking about the allocation of the monies that you're requesting from us today. Specifically, you know, I think, again, we're looking for some detail here, that you've actually taken the time to take a look at what we're requesting. This is in the billions of dollars, Minister.

I'm going to ask another specific question. Is any of this funding being allocated specifically to the impacted coal mining towns? Again, I'm talking about the requested funding over the coming two months.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I hesitate to sound repetitive, but I can tell you that, for instance, you know, Agriculture and Forestry makes upfront grant payments to a significant number of agencies through the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation. I can't tell you what each of those investments of AFSC is about, but I can tell you that the ministry believes that they need this much for the two-month period, and that's what's being provided.

Now, the minister will be able to provide specific information in terms of this example. That'll be at estimates. It won't be here today. What we're here today to say is that $8.7 billion gives us a cushion to be able to present the budget in as fulsome a way as members opposite need it to be presented, and we will do that in a very few short eight days.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you again to the minister, but I didn't actually ask about AFSC. Surprisingly, I got some answers on AFSC, but not on what I was asking about, and it seems that we're not going to get it. We're short on specifics here. We're asking for information on billions of dollars of interim supply estimates funding, and there's an opportunity here actually to, I think, share some of this information with Albertans in a transparent manner and . . .

Mr. Ceci: It was an extensive example.

Mr. Gottfried: I'm speaking here, Minister.

. . . an opportunity, I think, for you to show your diligence in terms of requesting this funding from Albertans.

I'm going to ask another specific question here. How much of this funding will be allocated to the international offices of the Alberta government?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. The budget information, as this individual knows, is locked down until budget is presented. There are sanctions for anybody who breaks those rules, and I don't want those to occur to anybody in my position. We will share, can share, and intend to share. Whether it's about the international trade offices or AFSC or any other ministry and their capital plans, that information is part of Budget 2018, like it's been part of Budget 2017 and '16 and '15 before it. We have given ourselves two months of running room with regard to the expenditures here so that that side can ask as many questions in the estimates as they want to pose and bring forward as many amendments that they choose to. We're doing the regular, good work of governments now and before us to present interim supply and to get on with the business of running programs and services for Albertans.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Minister. Again, respectfully, you've come up with a number here which is to run the business of government, and we understand that that needs to be done until we get the budgets. You've been presented with some numbers by your ministries which I'm sure are realistic and based on some budgeted numbers. We're not asking to see the budget for the full fiscal year. We're asking to see some justification. I think that this interim supply questioning opportunity is for us to ask questions on behalf of Albertans on the allocation of this interim supply.

I'm going to ask again: how much of the funding will be allocated toward export development and promotion? Again, I'm sure that your ministries have got to come up with a certain amount of detail in terms of providing information to you to develop these interim supply estimates, which we are then trying to find out a bit more detail about so that we can justify that expenditure on behalf of Albertans.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Let me give it a try. The interim supply is normally allocated in roughly the same proportion as the previous budget in order to continue operations of the government until a new budget is introduced and debated and approved. I understand the wish in opposition to try and winkle out a little bit of information about what the next budget is going to . . . [interjection] Winkle out. Look it up, hon. member.

The Chair: That concludes that 10-minute segment.

The next round would go to the government side. Well, we've just run out the clock. I was going to say that we had almost one minute, but we don't.

Pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee will now rise and report progress.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration the 2018-19 interim supply estimates for the fiscal period from April 1, 2018, to May 31, 2018. The committee reports progress thereon and requests leave to sit again.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. At this time I'd like to move that we adjourn until we return to this House at 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:56 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, March 14, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon, members. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe that we have, seated in your gallery, a friend and former colleague of mine, Shannon Stubbs, Member of Parliament for Lakeland and the Official Opposition critic for Natural Resources, who has done a brilliant job fighting for Albertans with respect to the Vegreville immigration centre, our natural resources, and now on the criminal justice issue in rural Alberta. We welcome her to the House.

Introduction of Guests

Mr. S. Anderson: M. le Président, c'est avec fierté que je me lève à la Chambre aujourd'hui pour introduire l'école Corinthia Park school. These students – I believe there are about 60 of them – are accompanied by teachers Mme Nicole Côté, Mme Elizabeth Creurer, Mrs. Pamela Sims, Miss Kaylee Rattray, Mrs. Sharon Sereda, and by chaperones Mrs. Penny Matthews, Mr. Dean Matthews, and Mr. Jeff Fox. I would ask them all to rise right now, and if we could give them the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

You were doing well on the pronunciation for the first sentence. Then it got a little complicated.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you Woodbridge Farms elementary school. This school has a wonderful community garden, and I'd like to compliment the students on their knowledge of provincial politics. The students are with their teachers, Antonia Triska and Garth Baker, and their chaperones, Judy Andrekson and Shelley McElveen. I would like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly members of the town of Morinville seniors. They are here in the gallery to take in question period as part of a seniors' tour of the Legislature Building and the grounds. Hopefully, later I will be able to take a photo with them. I introduce to you – and as I call out your names, please rise – Ms Rosie Badura, Mrs. Janet MacDonald, Mrs. Vivian Rousseau, Miss Karen Wotherspoon, Mrs. Mary Benson, Mrs. Evelyn Briton, Mrs. Irene Grant, Mrs. Margaret Short, Mrs. Jennifer Berry, and Mrs. Moira Murdoch. Please extend to them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly our newest addition to the Airdrie city council, Ms

Tina Petrow. Tina Petrow was just recently elected. She is a mom, she is an entrepreneur, and she is a long-time community volunteer. Would you please greet her with the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Kaitlin Gareau. Kaitlin is a bachelor of social work student from Grant MacEwan University, and she is currently doing her field placement in my constituency office. Kaitlin has previous work experience with inner-city crisis relief work and is passionate about helping Albertans. I'd ask that she please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to be a social worker myself and honoured to have colleagues from the Alberta College of Social Workers join us here today in the Assembly. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Henna Khawja, MSW, RSW, a clinical social worker, and director at the Islamic Family and Social Services Association; Matthew MacIntosh, BSW, RSW, a social worker at Alberta Health Services; and George Jason, whom I've known for many years. It's so wonderful that he could join us here today. He's a retired social worker with an MSW, and he's chair of the Alberta College of Social Workers Social Action/Social Justice Interest Group, Edmonton. I'd ask my colleagues to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. minister, just to note that I was advised yesterday that the Saskatchewan Legislature elected a Speaker who is another social worker.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: My guests have not arrived yet, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions. First, I introduce members who are here because they're part of the provincial critical care strategic clinical network, seniors' health SCN, and the provincial ICU delirium team. They're here today to recognize World Delirium Awareness Day and raise awareness about delirium and build understanding about its impacts. The SCNs are leading the standardized approach to prevention and management in all settings, a key action in achieving the vision and outcome of Alberta's dementia strategy and action plan. I now ask Barbara O'Neill, senior provincial director; Dr. Jim Silvius, senior medical director, seniors' health SCN; and the other members of their team to please rise and receive our warm welcome.

The Speaker: You have a second introduction?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The second is a group who are volunteers and members of the Kidney Foundation of Canada, northern Alberta and Territories branch. March is National Kidney Month, which is an important opportunity to raise awareness of how to prevent kidney disease and promote early detection as well as access to care. The support and compassion of dedicated volunteers like our guests in the gallery today help make life better not only for those affected by kidney disease but also their families and their friends. I'd ask that Flavia Robles, executive director, and Manuel Escoto, communications and special projects co-ordinator, as well as members of the Kidney Foundation, including two recipients and one aspiring recipient and their moms, please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly guests here to mark national Dietitians Day, which is today, and Nutrition Month. Every March we celebrate Nutrition Month across Canada, which is an important opportunity to raise awareness about good nutrition and the importance of a balanced diet. It is also an opportunity to recognize the important role that dietitians play in the health care system as front-line providers. I would ask that my guests rise as I say their names and remain standing: Doug Cook, Jody Brudler, Karen Boyd, Colinda Hunter, and Sarah Morland. I'd ask my fellow members to please extend them the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly distinguished members of the social work profession. As you can tell, we are sharing these introductions throughout our colleagues today, so I'll ask our guests to rise as we call your names. Our guests are here with the Alberta College of Social Workers, and we thank all of them for the work that they do to make life better for Alberta families.

First, I'd like to introduce Lynn Labrecque King, Alberta College of Social Workers executive director and registrar; Megan Mierau, generalist with Children's Services; BSW student Christina Foreman with MacEwan University; and Christina's field instructor, Carola Johnson-Vervoorst, MacEwan University, field instructor with Norwood Child & Family Resource Centre. There are a few other people that will be recognized by my colleagues, but I ask all members to join me in giving these folks the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Further to my colleague's introductions it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you some more social workers: Ajay Pandhi, the ACSW council's vice-president; Sadia Sameeullah; Fozia Yusuf, a BSW student with the University of Calgary; and Fozia's instructor, Zakhiiyya Bhaidani, a University of Calgary field instructor with the primary care network. I ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three constituents of mine from the crown jewel of the Cowboy Trail, Sundre, Alberta. The first is His Worship Terry Leslie, the mayor of Sundre, and along with him Councillor Cheri Funke and CEO Linda Nelson. I'd like to ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other guests, hon. members? The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would be remiss if we neglected to introduce, sitting to the left of our MP, Shannon Stubbs, a newly elected councillor for the town of Vegreville, Ms Tina Warawa. Please give her a warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Federal Energy Policies

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In documents recently released by the federal government as a result of an access to information request, we've seen some disturbing news for the oil and gas industry. While our domestic energy industry has had countless regulations, reviews, and burdensome taxes piled on, it seems that foreign oil has been getting a free pass. According to the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, who made a recent reference request, Ottawa has been holding Canadian oil to a higher standard than foreign oil that is being imported into Canada.

It further went on to make the observation: by putting up roadblocks in front of Canadian oil companies, governments are literally losing out on billions of lost tax dollars, and the federal governments are often too much in the practice of obstructing trade to our open markets within the country; nowhere is it more apparent than in the oil and gas sector; in the name of environmental protection we see governments holding back our ethically produced domestic products and giving more free passes to foreign oil producers, often benefiting dictators and despots.

Mr. Speaker, it is time that governments in our country started standing up for Canada, for our job creators, and for the hard-working people across this great nation. We need more than just words and empty rhetoric from this government here and in Ottawa. We need action to support Canadian energy and defend the economic union that previous generations worked so hard to build.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Social Work Week

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a social worker and the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees' chapter chair for Edmonton and area human services workers before I was elected, I am so proud to stand here today, joined by guests representing our profession, to celebrate the important contributions of social workers and to recognize Social Work Week.

Social Work Week was from March 4 to March 10, 2018, and it was an opportunity for us to celebrate the vital contributions of social workers to our society through events, film screenings, and more, including a light-up of the Legislature in magenta. The Alberta College of Social Workers has over 7,000 members. Although the college specifically recognizes registered social workers during the week, the government of Alberta also recognizes those who work alongside registered social workers in the ministries of Children's Services, Community and Social Services, and others.

Bringing Change to Life was the theme for Social Work Week 2018. It is an ideal which social workers and their colleagues embody every day. These professionals help Albertans navigate life's challenges and work towards healthier lives. I encourage all members to continue to recognize the value of social workers throughout the year. Social workers support Albertans in many different areas, including disability services, employment services, income support, and child intervention. Their professionalism, compassion, and commitment to others is truly bringing change to life.

On behalf of the government of Alberta I sincerely thank social workers and those who work alongside them for their contributions in such an important and complex field. Please join me in recognizing all those who work in the social work field every day.

Thank you.

Rural Crime Prevention

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, it's no secret that Albertans are completely fed up with the spike in rural crime. The Official Opposition has been bringing this to the government's attention for months. Very little action has been taken by the government save one: the government rejected our request for an emergency debate on the matter last fall. Months later the government released news about additional funding for RCMP, support staff, and more prosecutors to possibly help alleviate some of the backlog in response times and court delays. It's a good first step, but these measures will take time, time to hire and train these people and get these resources where they are needed the most.

The problem that rural Albertans are facing is now, and the need is immediate. The speed of implementation is a real issue. Already I've heard from ex-members of law enforcement that have offered to return to the ranks to help fill the shortfall, and they were refused. Imagine that. If there is a pool of ex-cops and prosecutors that could step right into the breach and provide meaningful help until more assets are trained and deployed, why wouldn't we be hiring them on this program? It appears like a common-sense approach to take, but unfortunately these days common sense ain't so common.

I recently held a town hall with concerned citizens, the RCMP, and rural crime watch representatives. The anger and fear and frustration is very real. These people want action. These problems are not new; they are just becoming more and more commonplace. People are being victimized over and over again. Insurance costs are skyrocketing or it's being cancelled altogether due to repeated claims. People are becoming educated in protecting their property, but they continue to be victimized due to distances away from law enforcement. Response times are slow. The criminals know that, and they take full advantage of it.

One more thing needs to be said here. Of all the dozens of rural crime town halls that my colleagues have held all across Alberta, not one NDP government member has darkened the doors. Rural Albertans know that government is responsible for providing safety to its citizens. Does this NDP government realize that?

Support Motion 167. Thank you. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Calgary Southwest Ring Road

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud today to stand and speak about the southwest Calgary ring road. This project has been under consideration since 2003. The technical review of the project took eight years. In 2013 the Tsuut'ina Nation agreed to transfer lands to complete the project, and we are forever grateful to these friends and neighbours for working in partnership with us.

Mr. Speaker, we know that a major construction project like the Calgary southwest ring road cannot be undertaken without causing inconvenience for people who live in the area. There were many concerns raised by my constituents about the construction, and I have spent a lot of time working with them and with government to address those concerns.

In particular, I was able to stand by my word and advocate for a citizens' group about protecting Beaver Pond, or wetland 6. As a result of the active participation of my constituents and my continuous advocacy, the Minister of Environment and Parks carefully considered the recommendations and signed a ministerial order directing Alberta Transportation and KGL Constructors to undertake additional protection of wetlands disturbed by the construction of the southwest Calgary ring road.

Further community engagement has taken place through community meetings and presentations, some of which I have attended. These sessions are an opportunity for residents and stakeholders to ask questions about the construction process.

I want to thank Alberta Transportation and the construction partners for providing ongoing information regarding plans, traffic changes, and environmental considerations. I know that the proponents are striving to continue to provide adequate and up-to-date information. I will continue to have an open door for constituents who have concerns, and I want to thank everyone for their continued engagement. It is by hearing your feedback and incorporating the issues raised into the planning process that we can make this process better for everybody.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Respectfully, Members, I'd just like to remind you: please don't use names while we're in discussions in debate, and I would urge all of you to direct your comments through the chair.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Carbon Levy Rate

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When will the NDP government raise its carbon tax by 67 per cent?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, our government was very clear well over a year ago that we will sign on to the federal government's pan-Canadian framework with the approval of the Trans Mountain pipeline. Now, obviously, approval means nothing if it's not constructed. So, as always, we've been very clear that we will not move forward on the federal government's proposals until we see that that construction is fully under way and that approval is given meaning. That continues to be our position as it has been our position all along.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, how does the Premier define "construction under way"? The Premier is well aware . . .

The Speaker: Hon member, excuse me.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the Premier is well aware . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, if you'd direct your comments respectfully through the chair, I'd appreciate that.

Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

The Speaker: Noted.

Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. Kenney: I apologize, Mr. Speaker. I thought I was directing them through the chair.

Mr. Speaker, given that the opponents of our energy industry have committed themselves to doing everything possible to stop that pipeline, is it the position of the Premier that she will not raise the carbon tax by 67 per cent unless and until Alberta oil actually moves through that pipeline?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think it is reasonable for us to evaluate the outcome of the federal Court of Appeal decision and the degree and the state of play with respect to the pipeline's construction. The additional carbon levy planned by the federal government is not expected to come into play until 2021, and by then, we expect that the pipeline will be well into construction and that it will be fully clear to everybody that it will be completed. But we will certainly keep an eye on it because there is no question that the two were always connected, and they will stay connected.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the NDP's own adviser, Professor Leach, says that for the carbon tax to achieve the federal government's target, it would require a price of at least $200 a tonne. Environment Canada says that it would require a price of at least $300 a tonne. Does the Premier agree with these estimates, and if so, is it her ultimate policy intention to raise the carbon tax to between $200 and $300 per metric tonne?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I must say that it's this kind of Chicken Little behaviour that we have actually grown rather used to from members opposite. I'm surprised to see that coming from the new leader, quite frankly. It's right up there with the stuff we saw yesterday with the alleged claims around the sales tax. But the facts are that our government has committed to a carbon levy, that went up to $30 per tonne as of January. The facts are as well that we linked the movement with respect to the federal government to the $40 and then the $50 in connection with the successful completion of the Trans Mountain pipeline, and that's where we'll go.

Mr. Kenney: Well, there's a fundamental problem here, Mr. Speaker, because the NDP pitched Albertans on this punitive carbon tax for (a) social licence for pipelines, which does not exist. Trudeau cancelled Northern Gateway and killed Energy East. The B.C. New Democrats are doing everything they can to kill Trans Mountain. And Barack Obama vetoed Keystone XL. The other reason, they claim, is to help the environment, but the environment department says that it has to be 10 times higher than it currently is to meet the environmental objective. So what's the point of forcing seniors to turn down the heat at home in the middle of winter with their carbon tax?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker. I'm not actually particularly interested in relitigating the carbon levy, the question of whether climate change is real, and the fact that we need to act on it. I appreciate that the member opposite has many people in his caucus who do question whether it is real, but over here we do not, and we know we need to act. That's why we brought in a world-leading, a continent-leading climate leadership plan that is reducing emissions on a number of fronts, supporting working families while we do it, helping to phase out coal, increasing renewable energy, and supporting our nonrenewable sector as they diversify and develop additional technologies. It's a good plan.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, polling consistently suggests that about two-thirds of Albertans oppose the NDP carbon tax, yet the Premier and her government seem to insult those people all the time by calling them names. They simply understand what the environmentalists understand, which is that a carbon tax doesn't make any appreciable difference in terms of greenhouse gas emissions unless it is $200 to $300 a tonne. This is the fakery of the NDP's carbon tax argument. So my question is: given that Environment Canada says that it has to be $300 a tonne to meet the global climate targets, how high is the Premier prepared to go? It's a fair question. Why won't she answer it?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What our government will not do is turn back the clock, and what our government will not do is pretend that climate change is not a problem, and what we will not do is leave Alberta vulnerable to the changes in the energy economy that are coming, the way the previous government did. We will not do that because Albertans deserve a government that will lead for the future, and that's exactly what we are doing by taking action to combat climate change here in Alberta.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, here's the problem with the Premier's refusal to answer that question. Instead of reading what sounds like a press release written by Gerry Butts and Justin Trudeau, why doesn't she tell us how high she's prepared to raise the carbon tax? This is an issue because the NDP went through their last campaign without ever uttering the words "carbon tax" or "carbon levy." It didn't appear in their platform. They sprung it on taxpayers just months later. So we're asking the very legitimate question. Given that they hid their carbon tax agenda in the last election, what are they hiding from Alberta taxpayers in terms of their long-term intentions to raise the carbon tax? The Premier herself has said that it will have to go up. The question is: by how much?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've been fairly clear going out I believe six or seven years, and I think that's quite reasonable. I would suggest, however, that the member opposite needs to talk to people in his city that he theoretically represents with respect to what his position would be on the green line. Or he should talk to the people of Edmonton in terms of what his position is on the valley line. Or he should talk to those many, many new investors flocking to Alberta with respect to the incredible growth in renewable energy. The fact of the matter is that we are making great progress on a number of efforts to reduce our emissions. It's about time, it's long overdue, and we are very proud of that record.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Premier is not aware, but as a federal minister I announced a billion and a half dollars for the green line two years before the NDP got around to matching that. I'm glad they finally did.

Pipeline Approval and Construction

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, what I take from all of this is that Justin Trudeau is in charge of Alberta energy and environment policy. After all, Justin Trudeau got the National Energy Board to do his dirty work by invading Alberta jurisdiction over the regulation of upstream emissions, something protected in the Constitution by Peter Lougheed in 1981. Why has this Premier not objected to that violation of our jurisdiction?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, there are times, really, that I think the member opposite is missing Ottawa just a little bit more than is healthy for the debate here.

However, what I will say is that when it comes to supporting Alberta's energy industry and getting the pipeline built to tidewater, we absolutely believe that the federal government needs to step up and support the decision that it made in the national interest to get that pipeline built. Our government will not hesitate to do whatever is necessary to push the federal government to stand up for Albertans and for all Canadians because we know that's what the pipeline represents, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, for months the Premier and her government mocked and ridiculed me for suggesting that we get tough with the B.C. New Democrats on their threats to attack our economy and violate our Constitution, but finally they've come around – I guess it's a conversion on the road to election day – talking about being prepared to turn off the taps. Now we learn they're also prepared to follow our advice with respect to B.C. gas that moves through Alberta. So will they take our advice on one other point? Since they're taking all of our ideas – we appreciate it – will they also take our idea and just scrap the tax?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I will say is that, actually, this conversation is not about the member opposite at all. What it's about is Albertans and standing up for Albertans and doing whatever is necessary, whenever necessary to strategically ensure that we get the job done, that we are closer to securing than any other government in the history of this province has been. I am proud of it. We will keep pushing, and we will get the pipeline built.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I believe you have another supplemental.

Mr. Kenney: I'll take as many as you want to give me, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Or leave them out.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, we've just learned from federal documents that the federal government has zero regulations in place to assess carbon emissions from foreign oil imports, yet they shut down Energy East by imposing a regulatory mandate through the National Energy Board. Peter Lougheed fought and won for us to protect that regulatory authority. Why won't the Premier simply stand up and agree with me that it's outrageous that Justin Trudeau invaded our jurisdiction by getting the NEB into the business of upstream emissions?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, we know that putting a cap on emissions from the oil sands is a critical element in the argument to many, many people who have come to support our position with respect to getting this pipeline to tidewater. People in industry understand that as well as environmentalists. That's why people in industry supported it. We are not going to then turn around and undercut them, as the member opposite would have us do, as he's busily researching what Justin Trudeau is doing. We're going to continue fighting for this pipeline. We're going to get it built, and I certainly hope that the member opposite will join us in celebrating when we do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Electricity Power Purchase Arrangement Lawsuit Settlement

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The NDP's handling of power purchase arrangements may be the single greatest scandal of this government's short tenure, and that is saying something. Their ham-fisted mismanagement of this file has cost Albertans over a billion dollars, but yesterday the Minister of Environment and Parks said repeatedly that the resolution with Enmax will have "no impact" on taxpayers. This seems to defy logic. Maybe the Premier can help us out. To the Premier: can you confirm that this settlement will actually cost Albertans zero dollars in any way?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated yesterday, we can confirm very clearly that the resolution reached with Enmax will have no impact on taxpayers. In addition, what I can also confirm is that it allows us, as I said before, to accelerate the work that had already been under way between our government and many of our power producers to work together in the restructuring of our energy industry to provide greater stability, greater price certainty for consumers, and greater opportunity to attract investors and, ultimately, also to move towards renewable energy. We're very pleased with the outcome.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Clark: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is simply not true that this agreement does not cost taxpayers. It does. The reported transfer of carbon credits in exchange for an equivalent payment to Enmax appears to be essentially a net zero transaction at best, or maybe it's a massive payout at worst. We simply don't know. It's also been reported that this dispute cost Albertans $70 million a month. That means over the 19 months of this needless lawsuit, Albertans are $1.3 billion poorer. Again to the Premier: what was the point of going to court and settling for nothing while the Balancing Pool, which is backstopped by Alberta taxpayers, bled $1.3 billion?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the member opposite knows, when we originally took this matter to court, it was because we were concerned about a clause that the previous government had negotiated inappropriately, we would suggest, behind closed doors, with representatives from Enron at the time, that hurt consumers. We are glad that we have been able to come to a resolution with all of the various parties and to move forward with what was a long overdue restructuring of our electricity system to, again, as I said, provide certainty, to provide investor certainty, and to provide stability . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Clark: Well, Mr. Speaker, perhaps the poor outcome for Albertans is the result of the legal counsel the NDP chose. Long-time B.C. New Democrat Joe Arvai was hired to stickhandle the PPA lawsuit on behalf of Albertans. Now, if that name rings a bell, it's because the very same Joe Arvay was just hired by B.C. Premier John Horgan to fight against the Kinder Morgan pipeline in court. To the Premier: will you call on your good friend Mr. Arvay and ask him to do just as good a job for the B.C. NDP as he did for Albertans?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, I think that probably I will forgo that particular option, but what I will do, Mr. Speaker, is to talk about the incredible legal team that we have assembled on behalf of Albertans in our fight to get this pipeline built. In every legal skirmish that has occurred so far, we have stood up for Albertans. The ones we've got decisions on so far, we've won, and since then we've added the pre-eminent Peter Hogg to our task force, the Canadian leader in constitutional law. We will continue to do what's best for Albertans. We will represent them in every forum, exactly what they expect their government to do for them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Rural Crime Prevention

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a member of this Legislature for rural Alberta, I see first-hand the way rural crime is impacting my constituents, so I was pleased to see this government taking action to combat rural crime by investing $10 million in new resources. I am particularly concerned about how vulnerable rural Albertans are to property crimes. To the Minister of Justice: how will this new funding impact Albertans who are concerned that their property may be damaged or stolen?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. We've heard from rural Albertans all over the province about their concerns around this issue. In particular, I'd like to thank the member for bringing it to my attention repeatedly. You know, this funding will be sure to put boots on the ground as we move forward. We're ensuring that we're using GPS technology better to ensure that we're tracking both vehicles and farm equipment, which I think will increase our rates very much, and we're increasing co-ordination between peace officers and police officers, which will allow us to leverage all those eyes and ears.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, far too often our officers and RCMP get stuck doing paperwork when they should be out protecting our communities. What are you doing to ensure that officers spend less time at a desk and more time out protecting our communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. That's one of the main components of our plan moving forward. We had the opportunity to speak to the RCMP about this in detail because, after all, they are the experts on this file. They told us that one of the things that would help them out the most is to ensure that their officers are able to get out into communities and not be pulled back into the detachment to do paperwork, so we're hiring some civilian staff to take some of that burden off those RCMP officers. I think this will help visibility greatly, which is something we've been hearing about from Albertans all over the province.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the most important parts of addressing rural crime is ensuring that offenders are brought before a judge. What are you doing in this strategy to ensure that criminal prosecutions happen in a timely way?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're very proud to say that part of our plan to address rural crime includes hiring more prosecutors to work in those rural areas. They've had higher caseloads than prosecutors in other areas, so we're working with those prosecutors to ensure that we're able to get them the resources they need. There's no point in catching criminals if we can't also prosecute them and ensure that they're brought to justice.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This NDP government's mismanagement of power purchase agreements cost the Balancing Pool over $70 million a month, over $800 million in a year. The government this week repeatedly refused to say how much their settlement with Enmax is costing Albertans. Yesterday when asked, the Premier claimed: "The resolution with Enmax will have no impact on taxpayers. Absolutely none." The question is that we know taxpayers already paid $800 million for NDP mismanagement. How much more will we pay in legal fees?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, as has been said, we're very pleased that we've completed the agreement with Enmax. It's a fair agreement for them; it's a fair agreement for Albertans. Again, as has been said many times, it has no impact on Albertans.

Mrs. Pitt: Okay. Mr. Speaker, given that the government is responsible for the Balancing Pool and given that all Albertans use electricity and will be on the hook for Balancing Pool losses, the $800 million we spoke about arising from the NDP government's mismanagement, and given that the government's reckless policy decisions and legal entanglement resulted in an $800 million bill to date to the taxpayer, to the minister: will Albertans pay for those losses on their electricity bills – yes or no, very clearly – and if not, who is paying?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. As was clearly stated in the news release and previously, this agreement involves carbon credits as an offset to a payment to Enmax, which, again, is a company that belongs to the taxpayers of Calgary. This agreement is also going to help us move forward in our electricity transition. It's going to help us meet our greenhouse gas commitments. Again, it has no impact on Albertans. It's a fair agreement for Enmax. It's a fair agreement for Alberta.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, this sounds like a fairy tale for Albertans. Given that last year the government hired a Vancouver lawyer on a sole-source contract with a $500,000 retainer to handle this file and given that Albertans are on the hook for this government's policy decisions, especially the Balancing Pool, the question to the minister is: how many tens or hundreds of millions of taxpayer dollars have Albertans lost on this secret deal arising from this NDP government's mismanagement?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, when we talk about secret deals, this is all about a secret backroom deal that was from a previous Conservative government, and it did not stand up for the interests of Albertans. It's interesting that what was that government continues to stand up for business and not for Albertans. It's also interesting that they're now the new defenders of coal transition when, in fact, their leader was in Ottawa and was part of the government that came up with the coal transition, something they had no plan for, something they did not tell Albertans about, and they didn't figure out how they were ever going to pay for it.

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's been so nice to hear what's being said in this room for the last three days. I do hope that continues.

Carbon Levy Increase

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, given that the Finance minister is a fan of telling Albertans that everything is rosy and that things are looking up, up, up, given that unemployment in Calgary is up, up, up to 7.9 per cent, the second highest in Canada, youth unemployment is up, up, up to 13.1 per cent, the highest outside of Atlantic Canada, business closures in Calgary are up, up, up the last two years at over 2,000 per year yet this government continues to force these struggling Albertans to pay the carbon tax on their heating bills, at the gas pump, and at the grocery store, to the Minister of Finance: why is your government continuing to punish Albertans who have yet to experience any recovery in their financial situation by pushing the carbon tax up . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, you don't have to take my word for it. Take the Conference Board of Canada's word for it, RBC's word for it, CIBC's word for it, and that of other financial institutions, including ATB. They all say that our economy grew the fastest in the country last year, and they project that we are going to lead again this year.

Mr. McIver: Given that I'd believe unemployed Albertans long before I'd believe this minister, Mr. Speaker, and given that the chamber of commerce, whom I would believe first, has stated that Alberta's carbon levy is imposing thousands of dollars of costs on Calgary's small and medium-sized business and given that I'd take the word of 92,000 payroll job owners in Alberta that lost them in 2017, before the recession, and given that 2,000-plus businesses close per year – and I take their word – again to the minister: why won't the government scrap the carbon tax and other overhead costs for Calgary small-business job creators? Would you take their word for it, please?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to point out to the member that Calgary is the fastest-growing city GDP-wise in the prairies this year and is forecast to be the fastest-growing city in the country next year.

Calgary Economic Development beat their targets and has attracted and supported the expansion of over 90 companies that have created over 5,000 jobs in 2017 alone. Compared to a year ago, Calgary created over 20,000 new full-time jobs. Mr. Speaker, we are working in concert with the city of Calgary, Calgary Economic Development, standing up for businesses, attracting new businesses through our government's initiatives, something that the opposition would clearly not do.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister's stats are less impressive when you consider how many jobs were lost during the first year or two of this government's reign of terror* and given that Alberta lost over 10,000 full-time jobs last month and given that the government's own website claims that the carbon tax's economic impact needs to be offset by improved market access but given that the carbon tax has blatantly failed to get any new pipelines completed or even get the social licence, to the minister: why are Albertans, including unemployed Albertans, still on the hook for the job-killing, spirit-breaking carbon tax?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, we know that not all Albertans are feeling the economic recovery. That's why we're continuing with our plan, which supports those who do not feel the recovery yet. We're investing in income supports. We're working with the federal government around EI. We're putting money into transitional supports. What else – what else – can we do? We're going to do it. We're not going to cut the carbon levy, because it has led to the approval of pipelines. We're going down the road we're going down, which is the fastest growing road in this province and this country.

Social Service Delivery

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, we can all agree that those who care for Alberta's vulnerable deserve our support. In this House we should acknowledge them as the front-line heroes that they are, which is why I was so frustrated to learn that these tremendous Albertans were not consulted on the recent legislative changes that have severely impacted their ability to care for those with developmental disabilities. The NDP's labour legislation means that these selfless Albertans are on the hook for up to $250,000 a year in additional costs. These organizations now face the impossible choice of cutting services or closing their doors. Why did the NDP government not consult its front-line . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was very proud last year to be able to bring forward updates to workplace legislation that had been left stagnant for decades. We made a point of consulting with all Albertans and reached out to organizations, both through industry associations, service agencies, and Albertans themselves, who responded to a series of feedback surveys and other items. Making sure that we have fair working conditions for all Albertans, making sure that our workplace standards protect our Albertan citizens is very important. I'm very proud of the work our government did.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, it's not just the changes to the labour laws that have severely hindered our heroic front-line service providers. Given that this government has layered on the carbon tax, two minimum wage increases, and additional labour changes to overtime and given that these service providers simply cannot pass the costs along, again to the minister of community services. Your options are to cut services to the disabled, run deficits, or close the doors: what do you suggest these service providers do?

The Speaker: The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Our record is very clear. We have worked with disability sectors on all issues that matter to that community. Let's talk about the supports intensity scale imposed by that side. We repealed it. The safety standards regulation imposed by that side: we consulted them, repealed it. Last year we worked with them on minimum wage and all those issues. We addressed them, and we will do so going forward as well.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given that this minister's record is implementing a carbon tax and other labour legislation that has created a budget crisis for countless front-line agencies and given that this government has shown a pattern of implementing its ideological policies without consulting and given that this is impacting vulnerable Albertans or those that care for them, my question is: did they even think through the implications of this policy, or were they just hoping that our hard-working front-line service providers would make the tough choices for them?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Our government is protecting and improving the supports that Albertans rely on. Just take the PDD program. In two and a half years we have increased it by almost $100 million; the AISH program, around $100 million. If we were to take advice from them and reduce the supports by 20 per cent to make it equal to B.C., just in AISH alone every individual would lose $500 every month. Albertans opposed those kind of cuts, and we stand with Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We identified rural crime as a crisis over a year before this government made any attempt to even acknowledge it was a problem, last fall even requested an emergency debate, and the government opposed. Last week the government finally announced funding for new police officer positions, but this is all smoke and mirrors. Counties have been putting up their own money but still can't find officers to fill the vacancies. Minister, I asked you twice yesterday, and I shall ask again today: on what specific date will these new RCMP officers that you promised actually be protecting our citizens?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We know this issue is critical to all rural Albertans. We've been hearing from people across the province. That's why we worked in concert with the RCMP to come up with a plan that's their action plan, that will help support rural Albertans, that's supported by municipal councillors in those areas. They stood with us. These RCMP officers will not only put more boots on the ground, but the civilian officers will allow the RCMP officers we already have to get out on the ground and to do more work. Our strategic intelligence sharing will help them to target prolific offenders.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that one reason that crime is out of control is that property crimes aren't taken seriously and that repeat and multiple offenders are not remanded in custody despite long criminal records and serious criminal charges and given that these offenders are simply being released to continue preying upon vulnerable residents and that, as a result, public trust in the justice system has been eroded, Minister, will you commit today to calling your federal counterpart and working to end the revolving door that allows criminals to repeatedly victimize Albertans? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're absolutely committed to ensuring that every Albertan feels safe in their home. That's why we're working with the RCMP, who, after all, are the experts, to ensure that the things we're doing are the things that will maximize the safety of Albertans. Certainly, we've heard very positive feedback with respect to our GPS tracking programs that will target property crimes. In addition, we've already been getting results with our intelligence-led policing in central Alberta, where it was piloted. This allows us to target prolific offenders, who are responsible for a huge proportion of that property crime.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that not a single member of this cabinet, rural MLAs, or, most shockingly actually, the minister herself has attended any of these rural crime town halls to speak to victims and given that your announcement was just another knee-jerk reaction to a crisis you tried to ignore for as long as you could and given that if the government had actually consulted with stakeholders, it would know that just throwing money at a problem isn't going to solve it, Minister, when will your government start taking this matter seriously, and when are you actually going to talk to the victims of these crimes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, nothing could be further from the truth. We've been hearing from Albertans all over the province on this issue. We've been hearing from our MLAs on this issue. My colleagues have been out talking to Albertans on this issue. We're also working with the RCMP to ensure that we have a plan to strategically target these individuals so that we can make moves on safety. This isn't about throwing money at the problem. This is about ensuring that we're leveraging eyes and ears through rural crime watch associations, through peace officers, and through intelligence-led policing to ensure that we're doing our best to target those prolific offenders that are preying on Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Highway 15 Twinning

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Highway 15 is a vital corridor for our oil and gas sector as well as our agriculture producers to move equipment and goods. It's also an artery that serves thousands of workers. To the Minister of Transportation.

You announced budget funding to finish twinning highway 15 into Fort Saskatchewan and to finish twinning the highway 15 bridge. You identified it as a priority in the 2015 capital budget. Could you please provide us an update for the residents of Fort Saskatchewan and Alberta, which it serves?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the hon. member for her question and for her advocacy on this issue. The existing highway 15 bridge is very severely over capacity. Vehicles cross the highway 15 bridge more than 23,000 times a day, and congestion is a serious issue, especially during peak periods. Design on twinning the bridge has begun. Construction is expected to get under way in 2019, with completion of the highway twinning expected in 2022.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Minister.

The tragic news of the loss of a young woman was for Albertans, of course, an incredibly tragic thing to hear. She was only 17, and she passed just across the highway 15 bridge from Fort Saskatchewan. Now, we have been fighting for these improvements for decades. It's something that I'm clearly passionate about, as are the residents of the entire area where I live. To the minister: what are we going to do to make sure that safety is improved in this area?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, our hearts go out to the family of the young victim on the road. The member well knows, because she's been involved in getting the work done to twin that highway, that that bridge will be significantly safer. I expect that that work will continue until we've completed the bridge in 2022. That will very, very significantly improve safety on the bridge, as the member well knows.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the significant investment that this represents in the heartland region and in the safety of our communities, how will the improvements to highway 15 also support working families?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the twinning project will create hundreds of jobs in the area throughout the construction process and indirectly in surrounding communities. It also supports our government's economic diversification initiative, that will see two petrochemical facilities built in Sturgeon and Strathcona counties. It will also improve drive-times for local commuters and support economic development in Alberta by improving the connection between Fort Saskatchewan, Sturgeon county, the city of Edmonton, and the Industrial Heartland.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Petrochemicals Diversification Program

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last session I asked the Energy minister whether she'd consider doing another round of the petrochemicals diversification program. Now, I'm not going to go as far as the Leader of the Official Opposition and say that she took my idea, but it's nice to see. However, we need to make sure that these programs are delivering value for Albertans when we're using government money. Since the minister has opened a second round of this program, I hope that that decision was evidence based. To the Minister of Energy: what measurables were collected in the first round to make sure that this program was an effective use of taxpayer dollars, and are you confident this program delivered value for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for that question. Absolutely, we talked, through the EDAC report, to many Albertans, and they saw the value of the PDP 1 program, the petrochemicals diversification program. The way it works is that there's up to $500 million in royalty credits offered, but the catch is that the project has to be completed and operational before any of those can be redeemed. In the meantime we get municipal taxes; we get provincial taxes, federal taxes. People are working and communities are flourishing because of these projects.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you for that, Minister.

Given that the minister is confident this program is delivering value to Alberta taxpayers and given the positive response from businesses involved in the petrochemicals diversification and given that Alberta could benefit from further diversification in other areas other than oil and gas, to the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: is your department working with Energy to replicate this type of model in other places in our economy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the question. The answer is absolutely. Our Department of Economic Development and Trade has basically been tasked with making it easier to do business in the province. That's supporting our own entrepreneurs and our sectors like energy, but, as well, we introduced a year and a half ago two different tax credits that are sector-wide, that will support entrepreneurs and businesses in Alberta. The investor tax credit gives Albertans the opportunity to invest in companies in their own backyard, helping them to scale up, hire more people, and grow. Then our capital investment tax credit is a great incentive to encourage investment in Alberta today, which is going to create jobs and help to diversify our economy.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fraser: Given that the government may enjoy reannouncing this program every year for the benefit of photo ops and convenient Bill 1 material, it makes it unpredictable. If we're trying to promote innovation and diversification, we need to create stability, investment confidence, and not tie important programs to our political whims. To the Minister of Energy: will you consider making this petrochemical investment an ongoing program so that companies looking to invest have more certainty going forward?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we got a lot of good ideas from the EDAC recommendations, and we're acting on early ones. We saw the success of PDP 1, and we've announced PDP 2.0. We're also going to be working with companies who want to look at partial upgrading and also feedstock because this is a holistic plan, because we want a recovery and sustainability that are built to last in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Carbon Levy and Seniors

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Small-town Alberta is hurting from the NDP's carbon tax. Community volunteers are having trouble paying the tax, and what does this government tell them? Apply for grants to retrofit their facilities, which they can barely afford to keep open since this government imposed the carbon tax. In other words, pay loads of money to save some. Now, Minister, is this the best you can offer when they're struggling to keep the lights on in these facilities?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the question. You know, we created a made-in-Alberta plan that's making sure that we have a system that works for Albertans. Through our climate leadership plan and through the carbon levy 60 per cent of Alberta households are receiving a rebate. We also cut the small-business tax rate by a third. Alberta now has the second-lowest small-business tax rate in the country. I will add that Albertans still pay the lowest taxes in the country. It's about $8.7 billion less than what they would pay in Saskatchewan, the members opposite's best friends. As far as what Albertans are getting . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gill: Given that a specific example of a facility facing serious hardship is the seniors' centre in Sundre, where hard-working volunteers are doing everything they can do, Mr. Speaker, to keep a much-needed community facility operating, and given that their carbon tax bills are tipping them near closure and this government's solution is to lecture them about reducing their costs through retrofitting, which they cannot afford, Minister, why does this government think that their carbon tax cash grab is more important than the work of these valuable nonprofit organizations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the question. We're making life better by protecting front-line care and making life more affordable for seniors in Alberta. Approximately 260,000 seniors in our province are eligible to receive up to $300 annually for the carbon levy rebate. We've also provided a $500,000 grant to the four largest housing management bodies to conduct energy efficiency audits on provincially owned units. We are encouraging and providing supports for seniors and not-for-profits to reduce their energy consumption, which has the lifelong . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that another example of this unfair carbon tax comes from the minister of seniors, who has quietly clawed back the rebates from seniors living in subsidized housing, and given that the minister made this move because the NDP's carbon tax is forcing housing providers to cut services for seniors in their facilities to pay their carbon tax bills, Minister, where will it end, and are you just going to keep taking money away from our seniors, or will you do the right thing and just cut this tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. As my hon. colleague just said, 260,000 seniors are receiving up to $300 on the carbon levy rebate. We've given $800 million in seniors' benefits, actually, over the last two years to seniors. We're absolutely investing in seniors in our province so that they can live in dignity, and we've got their backs. We're supporting them all the way.

Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker.

Ranchers' Water Access

Mr. Barnes: At Christmas Alberta Environment and Parks sent letters to some farmers and ranchers advising them that water applications submitted over 16 years ago were being rejected and water access related to these applications revoked. Southeast generational ranchers Aaron and Rebecca Brower received such a letter. They were told that their application, filed 16 years earlier, was being closed and traditional water access cancelled. To the Minister: under whose authority were these essential licences cancelled?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: And forestry.

The Speaker: And forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for this very important question. I know full well the importance, obviously, of water to the ranching community. My family are ranchers just across the border in Saskatchewan, a very similar topography, a very similar climate. It's a dry climate. Water is obviously essential to their operations. The minister of environment has been clear in talking to those ranchers. Both she and I regret terribly that those letters were ever sent out. They were sent out in error. The minister of environment has been very clear that we're making sure that not a single rancher in Alberta will be stripped of their water access.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, after weeks of pressure the Minister of Environment and Parks finally released a statement assuring ranchers that their right to water access will be granted, but given that the minister failed to clarify that their water licences would be reinstated and she did not provide assurances that the original applications' priority would be based on their application prior to the 2001 deadline, again, Minister, will you guarantee the reinstatement of all these traditional water applications and that the priority of these applications will be based on their original submission date of 2001?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to restate that not a single rancher in Alberta is going to be stripped of their access to water. It's obviously essential to their operations. You can't raise cattle without water. Many of these ranchers use that same water for their own household use, so it's obviously very important. The Minister of Environment and Parks has been very clear in instructing her officials that they're to sit down with every rancher in that area to ensure that their processes are respected and that their access to water will continue.

Mr. Barnes: What a shame these terrifying letters went out right at Christmas.

Given that a local rancher was left without critical water access for his livestock and family because of repeated bungling by this NDP government and given that with the stroke of an NDP bureaucrat's pen the existence of a ranch that has been in continuous operation for over a century is now threatened, Minister, has anyone actually been held accountable for this ridiculous boondoggle, and what steps have you taken to ensure this isn't going to happen to hard-working Albertans everywhere again?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. You know, the Minister of Environment and Parks has been clear. You can understand that she was extremely disappointed that this situation ever arose. Obviously, water access for ranchers is vitally important. We're going to continue working with them. I'll continue working with my colleagues at Environment and Parks to ensure that water access for these ranchers will be maintained. For sure, I can guarantee that. I'll also continue working with the ranchers in that area for their historic use of the water as we go forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I was speaking in this very House about a PPA settlement resulting from this government's mismanagement. The environment minister said, "This settlement has no impact on Alberta taxpayers. It's a settlement between the two parties." Let's be clear. Those two parties are Enmax and the Balancing Pool. Given that the Alberta Balancing Pool is backed and guaranteed by this very government and since this government only has money from the taxpayers, it seems like an erroneous statement. To the Minister of Finance: is this a Balancing Pool problem that we have to pay for later?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's review some of the issues here. Just over a year ago we took action to protect Alberta families. You know, again, I talked about the backroom deals that started all this way back when in the Conservative government. We've settled – and I'm pleased to say that the last one with Enmax was settled – with the companies, and we've provided loans to the Balancing Pool. If we had not acted, consumers would be facing much higher charges, but thanks to our actions next year their costs will be 78 per cent below what they would have been had we not acted.

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government is ultimately responsible for the Balancing Pool and given the hidden bill for this settlement will end up being paid by the Alberta government, how much money are Albertans expected to pay on bailing out this NDP boondoggle?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Again, our priority is standing up for Albertans, Mr. Speaker. You know, we've stopped unfair electricity charges that would have resulted from the backroom, insider deals from the previous government. Our government is taking action for regular Albertans to deal with price spikes. Our Conservative opposition here continues to stand up for this backroom deal, that was bad for Albertans. We negotiated with the companies. We gave the Balancing Pool a loan. They're still continuing to defend the backroom deals that were not good for Albertans. We know what side we're on.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the government has been fighting a legal battle on this issue of power purchase agreements since 2015 and given that in this settlement the government has all but admitted that they were wrong and it is their fault, how many taxpayer dollars were wasted? Again, will you admit that the Balancing Pool will end up being paid for by your ministry, Minister of Finance?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I want to say, for I'm not sure how many times now, that the deal that was struck between Enmax and this government was fair for both sides. It was fair for Enmax, fair for us, and it's fair for Albertans. As clearly stated in the news release and as clearly stated here, it involved carbon credits that offset the payments to the company. This agreement will help us move on in our electricity transition and fix a broken system.

The Speaker: Hon. members, as has been requested, the Member for Calgary-Hays would like to clarify a matter.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During my question I used the word "terror." Somewhere between my brain and my mouth I meant to say the word "error." I was incorrect to characterize the government that way. I apologize to the government unreservedly. I apologize to everybody in this House and to all Albertans. There's no excuse, and I will be more careful in the future.*

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds we'll proceed with Members' Statements.

Schoolchildren's Transportation

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, this NDP government's policies are hurting Airdrie families and families all across the province. One example is how this government changed the rules when it comes to busing children to school. That was Bill 1 last session, and then, of course, there's a massive carbon tax, which also affects busing. The Rocky View school board is currently facing a $1 million revenue shortfall for student transportation, but of course the students need to still go to school somehow. So what does a school board do?

Well, Rocky View schools has taken the initiative to engage in extensive consultation with parents about how to handle this problem created by the NDP government. They held public meetings in Airdrie, Cochrane, and Chestermere, made presentations at school council meetings, and asked parents and staff to review various options through an online survey. Some options include transferring funds from instruction to transportation; increasing bus ride times, meaning some rural students may be riding on the bus for up to three hours each day; changing schools' start and finish times in order to accommodate more bus runs; and reducing the number of school days. I have been impressed by the way the school board has been handling this issue in working with parents and staff to decide next steps. Perhaps the NDP could take some lessons from them on how to do proper consultation. But the trade-offs in this case are, unfortunately, very significant, and families have this NDP government to thank.

It is time for a government that consults with Albertans and puts families first rather than an ideological agenda. Albertans deserve a government that actually studies the impact that their policies will have on families and communities. I hear many complaints from residents about the very policies this NDP government has the audacity to tell them are good for them. People know when something isn't working. Mr. Speaker, this NDP government is out of touch and needs to stop making life harder for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Economic Diversification and the Future Economy

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A shift is currently under way in the global economy. Artificial intelligence and innovation will drive the economies of the future, and we must ensure that our province has an opportunity to lead in the research and development of these industries. Companies like Google DeepMind here in Edmonton give us a small glimpse of what's on the horizon. In only four hours their AlphaZero program was able to teach itself how to play chess and beat the reigning AI program, Stockfish, 28 to 0. There are many breakthrough stories like this one happening throughout the industry, and they will have major implications for our local economy if we don't play a part in it.

In order to keep Alberta competitive, one year ago our government introduced the Alberta investor tax credit and the capital investment tax credit. Before our government introduced the AITC and CITC programs, high-tech companies faced challenges and barriers starting up and investing in our province. For far too long Conservative governments put all of their eggs into one basket, and when the global price of oil inevitably declined, not only did workers lose their jobs, but our government also lost the ability to support the important programs our communities depend on.

The results of these tax credits speak for themselves. To date the CITC has conditionally provided $60 million in tax credits, stimulating more than $1 billion in capital projects for manufacturing, processing, and tourism infrastructure. The vast majority of jobs created from these programs are full-time, and each dollar provided generates upwards of $2 in provincial taxes. Whether these funds are being accessed by companies like Google's DeepMind or Canadian-owned and -operated Aurora Cannabis, we can be incredibly proud that people are looking to Alberta to expand their operations because of these new tax credits.

I'm proud to be part of a government that is creating new opportunities within our communities and truly building a diversified economy for the future.

Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three pages that were incidentally omitted from my previous petition, related to calling on the government of Alberta to enable written protocols for all species on which restrictions on rehabilitation or fostering [animals] are placed under the ... Wildlife Rehabilitation Permits, so that orphaned and injured animals may be assisted.

I'd like to add those to the previous petition.

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Bill 2

Growth and Diversification Act

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today and introduce Bill 2, the Growth and Diversification Act.

This bill will enable government to reinforce two successful tax credit programs that have already spurred innovation, diversification, and job creation in our province. Mr. Speaker, we want to see this trend continue. This bill would create a new interactive digital media tax credit to ensure the growth of the digital media industry, a burgeoning sector that has great growth potential here in Alberta. Combined, these actions will encourage investment in new products, services, and capital projects, and these tax credits offer increased opportunities for more economic activity, diversification, and growth. This legislation would also include support for 3,000 tech spaces in postsecondary institutions across Alberta and new scholarships to help grow a future high-tech workforce.

We know that investment is a key driver of growth and diversification and investment in Alberta businesses and in our future workforce. This proposed bill will ensure that government continues to promote economic diversification and support employers and entrepreneurs in creating jobs and encouraging high-tech training opportunities here in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, furthermore, this being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of the bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Bill 201

Employment Standards (Firefighter Leave) Amendment Act, 2018

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured today to rise and request leave to introduce Bill 201, the Employment Standards (Firefighter Leave) Amendment Act, 2018.

I'd like to thank Parliamentary Counsel. I'd also like to thank the many fire chiefs around the province and in my constituency who consulted with us. This bill proposes to amend the Employment Standards Code to protect part-time, casual, volunteer firefighters from loss of employment because they are or have become a part-time firefighter. Currently employers can and in some cases have terminated employment for missed time due to fulfilling duties as a part-time firefighter. I'm hoping that my colleagues will take the time to consider this bill and will see fit to support this bill as it advances through the House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 201 read a first time]

2:50 Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Speaker, I rise to table a press release and federal ATIP documents obtained through the Canadian Taxpayers Federation that show that the Canadian government does not force the upstream and downstream emissions test on foreign oil imported into Canada, therefore discriminating against Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Newfoundland and Labrador.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of a document referred to by the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition in a speech yesterday in regard to the National Energy Board, clearly showing that upstream and downstream emissions played a significant role in the stopping of Energy East.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I referenced something in my question today. It's an article from CBC News entitled Calgary's Economic Growth Will Slow to 2.5% this Year, Predicts Conference Board of Canada.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe that we had a point of order today. The House leader for the Official Opposition.

Point of Order Remarks Off the Record

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on 23(h), (i), and (j) today. It has been awhile since we've had a point of order during question period in this Assembly, and unfortunately today we have to end that track record.

You know, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition has done a great job – two major things he's changed that I never thought I would see in my time in this place. The first is to bring significant decorum to this Assembly, which I think is to his credit, and the second is to get the government to fight for pipelines.

Today while the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills was asking a question of the Minister of Community and Social Services, the postsecondary minister, a minister of this government, heckled to him: you hate disabled people. We saw the chief opposition whip today rise and apologize to this Chamber for mistakenly saying one word inside his question. It is ludicrous that this government continues this behaviour. It is unbecoming of a minister of the Crown to act like this in this place. He should stand up from his seat right now and withdraw and apologize for that comment.

I encourage the government, through you, Mr. Speaker, to stop this behaviour and to start taking the business of this Legislative Assembly seriously and to stop playing games because Albertans have had enough of it. It's inappropriate for a minister of the Crown to act that way.

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I obviously didn't hear the comment, although I'm sitting right in front. But I have had the opportunity to confer with the Minister of Advanced Education, and he indicates that that's not what he said, so that's, I guess, that.

The Speaker: Any other members?

Regretfully, I did not hear the comment being made. I would just use this as an opportunity to remind all of us, however, that comments such as this, if they, in fact, do happen on occasion, you be conscious of the consequence of that and show respect not only to the other members but to the House and to the people of Alberta.

I want to thank all of you for the tone and tenor. As we all know, in this – it's certainly my experience – it's not just the words; it is sometimes the visual connections that have an impact on us.

With respect to this particular point of order I wasn't able to hear the comment nor see, but again I use this as an opportunity to remind all members.

Orders of the Day Committee of Supply

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Hon. members, before we commence this afternoon's consideration of supplementary supply, I would like to review, briefly, the standing orders governing the speaking rotation. As provided for in Standing Order 59.02, the rotation outlined in Standing Order 59.01(6) is deemed to apply, which is as follows:

- (a) the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may make opening comments not to exceed 10 minutes,
- (b) for the hour that follows, members of the Official Opposition and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (c) for the next 20 minutes, the members of the third party, if any, and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (d.1) for the next 20 minutes, the members of any other party represented in the Assembly or any independent Members and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (e) for the next 20 minutes, private members of the Government caucus and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak, and
- (f) for the time remaining, to the extent possible, the rotation outlined in clauses (b) to (e) shall apply with the speaking times set at 5 minutes as provided in Standing Order 59.02(1)(c).

During the first rotation speaking times are limited to 10 minutes. Once the first rotation is complete, speaking times are reduced to five minutes. Provided that the chair has been notified, a minister and a private member may combine their speaking time, with both taking and yielding the floor during the combined period.

Finally, as provided for in Government Motion 6, approved by the Assembly March 13, 2018, the time allotted for consideration is six hours, three hours this afternoon and three hours tomorrow morning.

Supplementary Supply Estimates 2017-18 General Revenue Fund

The Deputy Chair: I will now recognize the hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General to move the estimates.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I would like to move the 2017-18 supplementary estimates for the general revenue fund. If passed, the estimates will authorize an approximate increase of $720,000 in voted amounts for the office of the Child and Youth Advocate, $1.5 billion in voted expense funding, $35.7 million in voted capital financial transactions for the government. The estimates are consistent with the fiscal plan as presented in the 2017-18 third-quarter fiscal update and will authorize increases and transfers to the office of the Child and Youth Advocate and for the following 10 departments: Agriculture and Forestry, Children's Services, Community and Social Services, Culture and Tourism, Education, Indigenous Relations, Justice and Solicitor General, Labour, Municipal Affairs, and Status of Women.

The ministers responsible for these departments and I will be pleased to answer questions from all members of the Assembly. Madam Chair, these supplemental estimates represent the finalization of our budgets. As we've worked through the recession, that we're now beginning to come out of, obviously some Albertans have needed some increases in support. I think that at this time it's critical that we continue to invest in services for those people, including health care and education, because people still get sick and children still need an education regardless of whether we're in a downturn.

I'm very proud of those actions that we've taken. With that, off we go.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any members wishing to speak from the Official Opposition? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Thank you, Madam Chair. For our 20 minutes is it okay to go back and forth, hon. minister?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, you're okay with going back and forth?

Ms Ganley: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: Please proceed.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you. Respectfully, I will keep my questions as succinct and to the point as I can, and I would hope you have the opportunity to do the same with your answers. I guess I'll just, you know, quickly stand up and say that when we're spending $55 billion a year, it's disheartening to be standing here looking at an increase of over a billion and a half dollars, that wasn't budgeted. It's a big number, of course. It's a burden on the next generation. It's a burden on our economy.

But I want to start with page 2, near the top of the page, the financial transactions amount to be voted under section 3 of the appropriation act. We have a number, 35 and a half million dollars. Of course, one of the big components of financial transactions is debt and interest. Is the minister able to tell me how much of this is interest payments that the government didn't foresee last spring when they tabled their budget, and does any of this increase in interest have anything to do with the downgrades in credit?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. That number, as I understand it, is made up of multiple different components. I don't have before me all of the different components, so I'll have to undertake to get back to the member on that one.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Thank you.

Yeah. That's our concern, of course. We agree wholeheartedly to take care of Albertans that are in need and a temporary hand up where it's needed. We just want to make sure that the enrichment of bondholders in New York and Switzerland is not at the expense of everyday Albertans.

Madam Minister, I want to talk about the Education capital investment transfer next. On page 38 of the supplementary supply document it notes that 31 and a half million dollars will be transferred to capital investment from expense for infrastructure maintenance and renewal of school facilities. I would like to ask you, please, as kind of a three-part question: how many school facilities will be maintained or renewed with this money, could you please provide a list of the facilities for which you need this money, and is the transfer of any of this money related to the damage of any school because of a natural disaster? Of course, the terrible fires we've had may have had an effect. So if you could do that, I'd appreciate it.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you so much, and thank you so much for the question. The infrastructure supply is for all of the school boards. It's allotted to them based on enrolment and so forth. This is a movement of money for regular infrastructure maintenance for schools as they follow through with those normal procedures, right? It could be for painting. It could be for putting on a new roof. It could be for new furnaces and so forth. This is directed to all school boards, and they make their choices about how they make the infrastructure maintenance and renewal decisions based on each of their individual schools.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you for that. I was Infrastructure critic in 2012-2013. One of the things I remember: the government had a list rating the condition of schools, what kind of condition they were in. Unfortunately, once or twice a school that was rated good, if I remember right, ended up with a serious problem that not only affected the taxpayer but, more importantly, affected the quality of the education for the students. With respect, Mr. Minister, I'd like to ask you about your feelings on how accurate you think the school index of condition may be and what we've done in the last year to ensure it's as accurate as possible.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you very much. Yeah, it's very important, especially when we consider that we have almost 200 new school projects on the go, that we have a proper system in place to ensure that timely maintenance is being conducted on schools, because of course if you reach a point where, let's say, you're not working on the roof, then you end up, you know, with this domino effect of a structure being compromised. School boards do conduct their own maintenance procedures and so forth, but we also have, through our department, people to conduct evaluations on schools as well.

Yeah, I recognize your concern. Of course, if you don't have timely maintenance or if it's not being spent on those little things, then you end up with a big thing that costs considerably more money. You know, I think we definitely compensate school boards adequately in terms of infrastructure supply and maintenance, and we also entertain extraordinary circumstances for more extensive modernizations. Those are the ones that go into our actual capital projects, which can often be a school being rebuilt, right? When you see a major modernization, then the school is, like, as good as new when it comes through.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Thank you, Madam Chair. Line item 2.3 lists that the government is transferring 31 and a half million, as mentioned in this line item, to line 3.1 under capital investment, yet in line item 2.3 you are asking for an increase of $4 million. So the government is transferring out and transferring in. Can you explain how you are transferring money from this line item while also requesting additional funding?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. Well, thank you for that. What happens is that infrastructure supply and maintenance money is transferred as a matter of course, and we do it on a sort of go-forward basis. The additional monies are for extraordinary circumstances that have come forward in regard to the maintenance bills that schools have had. You know, I can tell you that globally, Madam Chair, through supplementary supply we're asking for an additional $18 million. That is to cover an increase in enrolment in our schools here in the province of Alberta. We saw that enrolment in our school authorities increased by 2.2 per cent compared to the budget percentage, which was 1.8 per cent. That additional increase of .4 per cent represents the entirety of the extra money that we require for operations. Materials and maintenance are part of that operational budget, so it can pretty much globally explain the individual line items that have made adjustments here in supplementary supply.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you for taking me there. That was where my next question was headed.

I understand $13 million is to address the increased student enrolment in public and separate schools, with the remaining $5 million to address increased student enrolment for private schools and early childhood service operators. Okay. Wonderful. For the $13 million being directed to address the increased student enrolment for public and separate schools, could you please tell me how many more students enrolled in the public and separate system beyond your initial estimates? To what point do you need this additional money? How many additional students are there? How much is being allocated to Edmonton public and Edmonton Catholic? How much is being allocated to Calgary public and Calgary Catholic? How much is going to urban schools across Alberta, how much is going to rural schools across Alberta, and please tell me: do your enrolment patterns indicate if there is a movement of students from rural schools to urban schools?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. Well, thank you for that. Globally, again, like I said, the supplementary supply request from my ministry is to meet the increase in enrolment that we've seen after we did our September 30 count of students here in the province of Alberta. Like I said, we saw an increase of 2.2 per cent in our enrolment from the budget estimate of 1.8 per cent, and that all breaks out individually according to enrolment in individual school boards.

Certainly, we can supply you the information around where the net increase is. I don't have that right at my fingertips. I mean, we can say generally that we're seeing net migration from other provinces and from other countries and from other regions in Alberta into suburban areas, number one – right? – so you see sort of the areas around Calgary and Edmonton and, well, Grande Prairie themselves, Lethbridge to some extent, Red Deer to some extent. Then, of course, you can see the reflection of enrolment, by dollars, to the public schools and to the private schools.

In terms of the actual numbers I would be happy to break those out for you and supply those for you. Thank you.

3:10

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, and thank you, Minister. I appreciate that. I would really like to get my hands on those numbers, and I'm sure our Education critic would as well.

Madam Chair, $5 million has been allocated to address increased student enrolment for private schools and early childhood service operators, with $1 million going to private schools and $4 million going to private early childhood service operators, I believe. How much did enrolment numbers increase with the private school system? Were these students previously enrolled in the public system, and how much of this money is being allocated to urban-based private schools versus rural-based private schools? Do you have any idea what those numbers are now, and would you comment, please?

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. Yes. Of course, by percentage you can see a general trend by the fact that we were allocating more money to accredited private schools and to early childhood services as well. Definitely, you can see that there's an increase there. In terms of the actual numbers I can certainly supply those for the hon. member.

Again, I find it encouraging in a way, because by seeing our enrolment continue to grow in the province of Alberta, we're seeing people making an investment to have children, to settle in and have a family, and to make that stake in our cities and towns and rural areas here in the province of Alberta. I mean, I think it's a great sign of hope and optimism. Certainly, even though we've experienced an economic downturn, people are still moving to this province and settling in, having families, and so forth. You know, when they do that, that ensures the long-term stability and diversity of our economy, and indeed, of course, then we have to make sure we educate those kids so that they can contribute to the future prosperity and quality of life for everybody here in the province.

Yeah. I mean, we made sacrifices in other areas to make sure that we're funding for enrolment here in the province of Alberta for our schools. It wasn't an easy thing to do, by any means, but I think it's worth it. We're seeing a continued reflection, starting to turn the corner on the economy, and certainly, like I say, families are making the decision to settle in and buy a house and have kids and go to school. You can't beat that.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Barnes: Are you able to provide a figure on how much of this money is being allocated to faith-based schools, and how many of our new children are being enrolled in facilities operated by private early childhood service operators? So faith-based and private early childhood service operators: do you have any numbers, please?

Mr. Eggen: Well, certainly, it's possible to do so. I think it's very important for us perhaps at this juncture to just remind people that we are continuing with funding for all of these different forms of schools. We have many different choices for education here in the province of Alberta. We have our public education. We have separate schools, Catholic education. We have charter schools. We have private schools, home schooling, and francophone as well. For each of those choices, the enrolment is growing, and in each of those we are funding as we have.

It's important to have stability. It's important to make sure that we use all the capacity that we have available to us, Madam Chair, because as this growth continues year by year, in some places we'll see even as high as 5 or 6 per cent growth in certain school boards around the province. You know, we need to make sure that we have all the capacity, all of the different forms of education available to us to make sure that there are spaces for kids. We have done that, and we are doing it again here in this budget, as you can see, with supplementary supply, disbursing the funds appropriately as the enrolment grows in each of those different choices and different places.

So, yeah, we can find that individual information for the hon. member. It's a good juncture and a good point in the session here to just remind people about those things.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you. Mr. Minister, I talk to Albertans everywhere that are very, very concerned about the deficit and the debt and the cost of the interest. You know, you're back asking for $21 million over last year's budget. Was there any attempt to reallocate hard-earned tax dollars within your department? Was there any attempt for savings or other mechanisms rather than coming back to the taxpayer?

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. I would say in this Chamber and to all Albertans that the investment in individual children's education is absolutely worth that investment, every single dollar, and to suggest in any way that you can make cuts – 20 per cent cuts, 15 per cent cuts, or whatever – to our education system here in the province of Alberta without critically damaging the quality of education that we provide and we demand for our children is absolutely incorrect. It's misleading, it's spurious, and it is damaging as well. You can't on one side have all of those things that you asked for and then also look for ways by which you can cut those same things. I mean, it's not only illogical, but it defies common sense. It defies gravity, and it makes – I wanted to put that [inaudible]. Just kidding.

You know, we know there are more kids coming to our schools – right? – tens of thousands more kids, and we're going to make sure that we educate them in the best possible way. Yes, of course, we always look for savings. We always look for ways by which we can save money in education, and we've been successful at doing so. It's just like when you have your road. You want to get across the river. You want to build a bridge across that river. It's not like you can sort of compromise and say, "We're going to go, like, three-quarters of the way" or "We're going to just make it out of Popsicle sticks" or whatever. You need to build that thing. When I have tens of thousands of new kids coming to our schools, we have to build that edifice that will educate those kids in the best possible way. There's no compromise, and that's not what we would want. That's not what Albertans would want, and the parents of those children certainly wouldn't want that as well.

I stand by our supplementary supply. It's a reflection of the increase in enrolment in our schools in the province of Alberta. That's a fact. I think it's something we should all be proud of, and I humbly ask for that difference in order to educate kids in schools in our province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Chair. I and our caucus, too, are all about and are fully in agreement on getting as many scarce resources as possible to the classrooms to help our kids, help our teachers, help people that work hard to do such a good job of providing our education. But that brings me to two things. That brings me to the carbon tax. Numerous rural boards across Alberta are complaining about the burden of the carbon tax, the burden it is placing on their transportation budgets, transportation budgets that, you know, I will note that in rural Alberta have had a decrease in funding of $3 million before the burden of the carbon tax. We're taking dollars from the classroom. We're taking dollars from the students. We're taking dollars from professional development. It's a mystery, the opposites of how these two things conflict and contradict each other. Could you please explain how you are underspending your transportation budget and you're imposing the carbon tax, and many of our school boards, especially in smaller communities, are struggling?

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Absolutely. We just had, for example, Madam Chair, a rural education symposium here last week, and it was great. We had more than 350 people show up for a number of days talking about challenges and opportunities for rural school boards here and across the province. It was very informative and very useful, and lots of people had some very, I think, innovative and creative ideas for us to ensure that we have equity for education for students and schools and school boards across the province no matter where they are located. Of course, that's a challenge, right? You have some schools and school boards that are . . .

3:20

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Your first 20 minutes have expired. We are now on to our second set of 20 minutes. Is it the same member that would like to ask questions?

Mr. Barnes: Yes, if I could, please.

Minister, do you want to finish your answer?

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. Great. Thanks. I was just getting going.

The issue around student transportation, say, for example: we know that the formula and the way by which we pay for student transportation needs to be modified for rural areas. You have some school boards that run school runs every day of thousands of kilometres, and, yes, you do have kids riding very long distances.

You know, we need to find ways to innovate. I mean, I have through Bill 28, as you may recall in the last session, asked, compelled school boards to look for ways by which they can co-operate between school systems so that you can share bus routes and so forth. We've looked and are looking for ways by which we can improve rural transportation, and I certainly know there's lots of room for improvement. Absolutely. Part of that, of course, is to make sure as a base that you fund each of these programs and fund through our main budget and supplementary estimates to meet the needs of enrolment. We know that as well in rural school boards sometimes the enrolment is declining. So, again, we certainly do need to entertain a way by which we can change that funding so that we can have equity between school boards and each school in the province regardless of its geographic location and so forth.

I do recognize those things, and it's important. I certainly heard it loud and clear at the rural symposium. You know, it's important always to have an intelligent and balanced and realistic conversation about these things as well, and school boards know that the importance of having education around climate change and having students engaging in those things is an important part of an education here in this province in 2018. So it's not as though you just take those things out, but certainly we're looking for ways by which we can assist school boards. I mean, we just had an announcement today from Municipal Affairs that it's going to be moving, I think, $15 million to established schools to apply for a solar panel program. I already put in place a $50 million solar panel program for new schools in the province as well. I mean, this is just an example of how you can use innovation.

Of course, we just talked about my infrastructure supply and maintenance bill. Schools are moving on changing their lights to LED, they're changing their heating systems, changing windows, and we will continue looking for ways by which we can do that. You save money, you reduce your carbon footprint, and you provide an education opportunity for children. All of those things are positive, Madam Chair. I recognize that we have to keep moving on these things. It's not as though we've solved the problem, but with constructive engagement such as I had experienced at the rural education symposium here last week, it makes me know and feel that we are heading down the right path and that we have school boards and parents and students and so forth working together with us in a constructive way to achieve all of those goals.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you for that, Mr. Minister, and I sure respect your answers. School boards, though, that are already running big deficits and are further going in the hole because of the carbon tax: it didn't sound like there was anything specific there about where they can balance this year's budget, where they can provide better service to their students. Again, it's a problem in rural Alberta, and I would hope that reallocation of assets would have an opportunity to help our rural students more.

Mr. Minister, the Auditor General came out a short time ago, and remembering what he said as best I can, basically the initiative to reduce class size has been a failure. All the money directed at this has not led to a reduction in class size, and now in line item 2.5 I see you list a decrease in funding required for the class size initiative of $1.7 million. Given the Auditor General's report, which indicated that the Ministry of Education has consistently failed to meet class size objectives, can you explain how underspending this line item would decrease class sizes in Alberta's classrooms? Minister, have you given up? Is class size the wrong thing to be talking about for all these years? Was any progress made? Please explain the $1.7 million reduction to what appears to be front-line teachers and workers.

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. Certainly, the Auditor General's report on the class size initiative line item was informative and constructive and useful, and my department and ministry are working to ensure that we meet all of the recommendations of the Auditor General in regard to the class size initiative. It's important that we have transparency and we have ways by which we can show demonstrable progress in improving the condition in the classroom for students, for teachers, and for the community at large. Each of the recommendations that the Auditor General had put forward in regard to the reduction of class sizes: we are certainly moving on those immediately and most rigorously as well.

Yes, certainly, improving classroom conditions in general and looking at class sizes as a means by which to do so is something that is front and centre for our government. You know, it's important that we have laid down this foundational work during an economic downturn in the last couple of years to ensure that we've held the line on the condition of classrooms to the teaching conditions in classrooms. Indeed, we've started to see some demonstrable progress, I think, that's reflected in the fact that part of the collective agreement that our teachers here in the province of Alberta signed included a fund, a $75 million fund, to improve classroom conditions, to be worked on between teachers and school boards with specific goals in mind: working on improving math and communication skills, critical thinking skills, and so forth.

I mean, I can start to see where in the last couple of years we held the line to ensure that, you know, we funded for enrolment, that we had these different funding mechanisms in place over the last couple of years so that we have solid ground by which we can stand on to move forward on reducing class size and improving classroom conditions in general. I've been working very hard to make sure that we can not just look at the status quo but make demonstrable improvements in these regards over the next number of years.

The specific line item, the change in the class size initiative around this supplementary estimate: I will get back to you to give you some more specific information as to the variation of $1.7 million down, but it is in no way a reflection of us not standing by this very important initiative and goal, which is to improve classroom conditions, to reduce class sizes, and to continue to produce some of the best education here in the province of Alberta that you can find anywhere in Canada or, I dare say, the world.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, hon. minister. I appreciate your time and your answers.

I want to switch gears to Children's Services. We're voting on an incredible 113 and a half million dollars, almost a 10 per cent increase from the budgeted amount. Madam Chair, through you to the minister: you're requesting an additional $113.5 million in supplementary funding. What costs has the government come up with in the last year that you were not able to predict and budget for accordingly? We're almost 10 per cent up here.

3:30

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think it's important to note that I was always taught not to leave free money on the table, so certainly we were happy to welcome funding from the government of Canada for the early learning and child care centre framework in Alberta. That amounts to $45.6 million, which is close to half of that number in terms of that. I'm happy to work with the federal government in order to deliver on that.

Madam Chair, certainly here in Alberta we're very proud of having a young population, and that continues. We continue to see significant growth in the number of children and youth, which directly impacts a number of the services and supports that my ministry provides to children and families, so the reality is that the demand for some of our programs increases as we support families to get back on their feet and overcome the stresses associated with challenging economic times. Through supplementary funds we can keep stable funding in place so that we can continue to meet the needs of Alberta's children and families and continue to invest in the future of our province. We work closely with our partners to make sure that all children grow up in a safe environment.

In most cases the funds will be used to address caseload pressures. Caseloads are not just numbers on a balance sheet but real people, real children in real families that we need to support to ensure that they have the best possible outcomes. Caseload pressures are as follows: $31.4 million for child intervention services, $5.3 million for supports for permanency, and $10.2 million for foster care supports.

Additionally, supplementary estimates for Children's Services, as I spoke, include the federal government transfer, which will allow us to invest in affordable quality child care, and we are also investing $4.85 million in child care accreditation to address growth pressures.

Certainly, in terms of child intervention, I think every member of this House is aware and has had it brought to mind that every child, regardless of whose care they are in, deserves to grow up in a safe, loving, nurturing environment, and in order for our children's future to be bright, we need to invest in the opportunities that allow children to thrive. So under child intervention we've invested a total of $31.4 million.

Children's Services, Madam Chair, has engaged in multiple practice initiatives to support staff to work with children and families in different ways with a goal of supporting families to keep their children safe at home. Our investment includes $1 million for family enhancement services to provide early wraparound services to families to ensure that children stay with their families and do not enter into care. This means investing in services like conflict resolution, parental skill development, counselling, or providing in-home support workers to help parents be at their best.

We've also invested $3 million in support in financial agreements to provide young adults who were formerly in care the support that they need for a successful transition to adulthood. Madam Chair, as the parent of an 18-year-old I can confidently tell you that when children become adults, they still need a lot of support and guidance. This additional investment has been used to address caseload growth driven by two factors, extending eligibility from 22 to 24 years of age and automatically enrolling youth when they turn 18.

We've invested an additional $11.2 million in child protection to provide supports for the most complex cases. Increases in child protection costs are being driven by two factors. The first is a growing number of children and youth receiving services overall. Madam Chair, the second is the greater complexity of cases where children require specialized placements that can provide intensive mental health support and treatment, behavioural therapy, and drug addiction treatment.

We are also developing training for staff and caregivers that will create greater understanding of indigenous culture and historical trauma and child development, helping them to better support children and families. The reality is that when you have caseload growth, you must invest in additional front-line staff to support service delivery in a timely fashion. As a result, $10.2 million was invested to address the salary pressure to meet the needs of the families that we serve.

In order to support equitable access to postsecondary education for children and youth in care, our government has invested $6.2 million in registered education savings plans. This addresses a liability related to the ministry's obligation as a parent to these children and also means that we can capture available federal and provincial RESP grants for children in care.

Under child intervention there is also a $200,000 reduction for approved in-year administrative savings.

In regard to supports for permanency the $5.3 million in funding will address caseload growth in the supports for permanency program, which provides supports for adoptive parents and private guardians of children who've been in permanent care. Every child deserves to grow up in a healthy, loving environment that supports their healthy development and prepares them for a bright future, and we recognize that many children who've been in care require additional support even after leaving care. This program provides much-needed supports for caregivers to meet their children's needs, whether through ongoing counselling, respite, or supports to maintain cultural connections.

The Deputy Chair: I just want you to be aware that you had agreed to go back and forth with the member.

Ms Larivee: Yeah.

The Deputy Chair: Okay.

Ms Larivee: That's absolutely fine. It was a very broad question, Madam Chair, basically addressing every single factor of what we're doing within this, so I felt that I was answering that very broad question by giving some details in terms of what we were doing. Certainly, if the member has an additional question, I'm happy to save some details around supports for permanency and foster care support and other important components of our budget for future questions.

Mr. Barnes: Well, thank you. I absolutely agree. Families and children are of paramount importance, and it's paramount that we have the supports there for them. Hey, I too have an 18-year-old. It's special watching them grow up and get on their own, for sure.

But I want to talk about what your department hasn't done. The House is still waiting to hear the final recommendations of the Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention. We talked about a whopping $113 million extra. Okay. Thanks to the federal government for $45 million more, that you people immediately spent. Are the staffing costs associated with finishing the work on the Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention, that we're waiting for, part of the remainder of that $60 million, $65 million given that this work was extended following the first panel meeting in January? Minister, second to that, if it is not within the supplementary budget and isn't being absorbed by the department, what other important work is not being completed by that staff while they focus on the final recommendations? Again, I'll ask you to be as brief as you can, please.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm thankful, again, to all the members of the panel for the work that they have done. Certainly, the member has spoken to the representatives from his side of the House at the table. Through the process of the panel it was decided, first of all, to extend that work because of the importance of the work, and that was certainly a consensus in terms of the direction of the House, but also the consensus of the panel was to have the final recommendations sent to the expert panel members in order to revise those recommendations.

I'm thankful that those recommendations were shared with the expert members. The experts have been working diligently, along with support from ministry staff, in order to make sure that they are what we would call SMART – I think we're all kind of familiar with that – specific, measurable, you know, details such as that. I'm thankful for the work of the expert panel members in doing that, and I certainly look forward to receiving the recommendations after they are done that work.

There's been a high priority in providing all the support needed to the panel throughout this whole entire process, but as we have not received those recommendations yet, the results of the recommendations are not reflected in this. Certainly, within the ministry we have utilized the resources that we already have to provide the support needed to the panel and to the panel members to make sure that we can move forward as quickly as possible on this.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Thank you, Madam Chair. We have heard from community not-for-profits and we've heard from child and family service providers that their budgets are being heavily impacted by the layering effects of the carbon tax, statutory holiday pay, overtime pay, the minimum wage increase. The layers of burden, many of them have called them. Their expenses have continued to balloon due to external factors that have forced many of them, unfortunately, to cut their services, run deficits, or even close their doors. Will any – any – of this additional 113 and a half million dollars that your department is requesting be directed to help these good agencies offset their costs?

3:40

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. We have an incredibly valuable relationship with a number of agencies that provide care to Albertan children and Albertan families in need, and I'm so thankful for the incredible work that they do.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

We are now at the last 20 minutes for the Official Opposition. Would you like to continue to go back and forth, or what would you like to do, hon. member?

Mr. Barnes: I'll continue to go back and forth.

The Deputy Chair: With the Minister of Children's Services?

Mr. Barnes: Yeah. Okay.

The Deputy Chair: Please go ahead.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you. Next question. On page 22 of the supplementary supply estimates document you state that you have found cost savings of $375,000 that have been "made available from lower than budgeted expense in other programs." Could you please elaborate on which programs these cost savings have been found in and if you will be adjusting your budget for these programs for the upcoming budget? Where specifically will these funds be redirected? Can you please comment on any other cost savings your department found or any other cost savings and more effective measurements and techniques you tried to implement?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. I will certainly be happy to answer those questions. The ministry proposed and Treasury Board approved $200,000 in administrative savings and a decrease of $175,000 from the capital grant budget. Within that, child care program planning and delivery was $100,000, and early intervention services for children and youth was $100,000. Child care subsidy and support: that's the capital grant of $175,000. Again, these savings were in addition to the $200,000 included in child intervention services.

Certainly, while we do feel the need, absolutely, to ensure that every child, again, has all the care that they need to grow up in a safe, loving, nurturing environment, we understand very much the responsibility within the department to find every saving possible to ensure that the dollars that we are spending are on the services that need to happen for those children and that we do everything we can to conserve dollars for that very important work. That was certainly the drive behind finding these administrative types of savings.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Minister. I appreciate that answer.

On page 22 of the supplementary supply estimates document you requested $47 million in additional funds "to address higher caseloads and increases in cost-per-case." I'm wondering: what are the factors that have caused such a drastic increase in caseloads? Why has the cost per case increased so dramatically? Why were these factors not considered just a short 11 months ago, when you submitted your budget last year? Forty-seven million dollars, Madam Minister.

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. Once again, you know, I'm really glad to see that Alberta continues to be full of new, young Albertans ready to grow and thrive and meet their potential, but that means that the growing number of children and youth in this province require an additional investment in terms of supporting them in situations in which their families and those children need support. Again, we've had a substantial increase in the number of children that need care.

Also, you know, the complexity of the children and families entering into the child intervention system varies in any given year, and it's certainly not something that we can predict with absolute accuracy in terms of what those families are going to need. On a case-by-case basis we work with those families and with those children to do what we need to wrap around them to provide the care and the support and the encouragement and the resources to make sure that they have the very best chance of staying together and succeeding and to ensure the very best outcome for those children.

I'm very proud of the work that our front-line staff in Children's Services continue to do in identifying those needs and working with those families and making sure that they have the support they need in order to have the very best possible outcomes. That's certainly what we're seeing reflected in this increase in the budget.

The Deputy Chair: The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to talk a little bit more about the $45 million that the federal government did provide for a child care subsidy and supports for early learning and child care centres, fully offset by a transfer from the federal government under the multilateral early learning and child care framework, I understand.

I have three questions. Is this a one-time payment or a funding commitment that will continue? Was this commitment from the federal government granted to Alberta before or after you presented your last budget? You cite that this money will be used to support the delivery of early learning and child care systems that reflect local and regional needs. What programs specifically are being implemented to ensure that Albertans are treated equally and treated fairly? Of course, I'm wondering if this program will have an impact on provincial taxpayers and on the provincial budget going forward.

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm really thankful that the federal government has worked with us and identified that affordable child care is an incredible priority for all of us for many reasons: in the interest of the children, in the interest of their parents, and in the interest of our economy. With that, just this fall, so well after the budget was presented and debated, we finally signed off on a bilateral agreement with the federal government in which we were allocated $45.6 million for this year. And it's not just for this year. That agreement is for three years that we would have that funding. Certainly, the commitment within the framework is to a 10-year span, in which we can renegotiate that. We're looking forward to continue to work on that. Of course, I would have loved to have seen more, and I hope that they continue to recognize the investment in that as we go forward, but it's certainly a great start.

I've spent a lot of time visiting the 22 centres, talking to parents and child care professionals, and at every centre I visit, I hear tremendous stories about the value to moms who have been able to get back to work and, importantly, to families to have the dollars that they need in their pockets to spend on their families. Madam Chair, that's what's happening. Those dollars are actually translating for these families, who desperately need those dollars, into spending them on their children here in this province and contributing to the economy in being able to get back to work. It's stories like hearing parents cry tears of relief and joy because they can afford to pay their rent, food, and pay for child care that continue to motivate me to work toward universal, affordable, quality child care in Alberta.

Certainly, with those dollars we're going to expand our early learning and child care centre pilots to about approximately 78 new ELCCs across the province, and I'm excited to see that that will create up to 4,500 additional child care spaces. I'm looking forward, again, to expanding that pilot right across the province and making that universal access and showcasing what that can look like to Alberta families and making sure they, again, have the dollars that they need and access to that quality child care that we know will make life better for their children and their families.

Mr. Barnes: Are any of the costs to the programs outlined in the supplementary budget a result of your government's policies such as the carbon tax, the labour law change to overtime and statutory holidays, or the minimum wage increase? Again, Madam Minister, you know, asking for an extra $113 million is a huge number in spite of some assistance from the federal government, and I'm wondering how much of the extra cost relates to your government's policies on the carbon tax, overtime, and the minimum wage.

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again, there are substantial caseload pressures, which are the primary drive behind the increased need for funding. Examples include our investment of $10.2 million for foster care support, which is, again, addressing the caseload growth pressures. Foster and kinship caregivers, we know, are amazing individuals who step up to offer temporary, safe, stable housing, demonstrating the best of Alberta in terms of showing what community really means. I'm particularly proud that, compared to last year, there's been a 15 per cent increase in the number of children and youth placed in kinship care rather than foster care.

I think we need to make sure, as we go forward, that we provide the resources to our foster parents and to their support. We need to continue to provide resources to supports for permanency. We need to continue to provide resources within the child intervention system to invest in our families, to invest in our children, to make sure that despite the challenging economic circumstances we've found ourselves in – thank goodness everything is moving up, up, and up according to the Minister of Finance – we've been able to provide the support needed to the families during those challenging times and to invest in Albertans and invest in those positive outcomes.

Those caseload growth pressures are the primary drive for this, Madam Chair, and that is the reason why we are coming back for supplementary estimates.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you, Madam Minister. I want to switch gears to the $3.3 million increase being asked for in supplementary supply estimates for Labour. I'm wondering: what specifically are the reasons that an additional $3.3 million is being required for workforce strategies? What was missed in the earlier budget, and what is this necessary for?

The number strikes me, interestingly. I saw a report the other day that the increase in the minimum wage, you know, will cost Alberta 10,000 to 20,000 jobs. I've talked to many greenhouses, I've talked to many small businesses that have reduced their hiring because of the labour changes, because of the increase in the minimum wage, because of the increase in the carbon tax. Unfortunately, you can bet that some other employers, whether not-for-profit, government, or private, will be forced to pay less, hire fewer people, provide fewer hours.

Of course, in Alberta we have the good fortune of a lot of great people. We have the good fortune of a lot of commodities, but the one thing that is true about a commodity market is that you end up being a price taker, not able to sometimes do more than just be the most efficient producer and competitor that you can be.

Ms Hoffman: Take your product to tidewater.

Mr. Barnes: That would help a lot, wouldn't it?

I guess what I'm concerned about: we've seen $700,000 in this ministry not spent. It was not spent, and it is now transferred from skills and training support, where, I think we all agree, huge improvements in the workforce and quality of life and opportunities for all Albertans can be made. We're seeing a situation where our unemployment rates – we've heard several times in the House just today and yesterday how Alberta's unemployment rate is second only to Atlantic Canada's. How incomprehensible, amazingly so, so sad that Calgary and Edmonton are numbers 2 and 4 in all of Canada for big metros and their high unemployment rates.

I saw that the U of C economist put out yesterday that Calgary's wage rates are back to 2005-2006 levels. Ten years is a long time ago. It's hard to make ends meet when you're a family and supporting a community. I'd like to ask one of the ministers: are you at least targeting this extra almost $4 million to do a full impact study on the effects that your government's layer of burden has had on our job providers and our employees?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. The $3.3 million in additional expense for the Department of Labour is to address skills training in Alberta. As we know, when we go through an economic downturn like this, it's very important that we're able to provide additional skills training to individuals.

Madam Chair, as everyone in this House will be aware, as the economy develops and as we all move forward as a province, sometimes individuals need to retrain themselves in order to maintain their ability to get into that labour market. This funding is required to address skills training for Alberta's unemployed, marginally employed, and underrepresented groups in the workforce. The request is fully offset by the federal government's expansion of the new labour market development agreement and the new workforce development agreement. Additional funding will primarily be invested in Labour's transition to employment service program, among others, which provides unemployed individuals one-on-one services that facilitate employment. These services include job matching, short-term training courses, and equipment required for the job.

To reiterate, the intention here is that it will be fully offset by federal funding, but I think it's worth taking a moment to note that these sorts of programs are absolutely critical, particularly at times like these, to ensure that individuals are able to get into the workforce and to maintain full employment. I think that it's certainly of value to us on this side of the House and, I would hope, to everyone in the House that we can get individuals into the workforce at this time, when the economy is starting to turn a corner and starting to take an upswing again. I think it's important to ensure that those values and benefits, with the economy as it continues to grow, are shared by all Albertans, Madam Chair. I think it's absolutely critical that people who work full-time not have to stop at the food bank on their way home to feed their children.

You know, in addition to changes we've made to protect the most vulnerable and to ensure that everyone has access to a decent income, ensuring that people who have been out of work have the ability, as the economy grows and as the economy comes back, to retool their skills and be able to get back into that economy so that they have the opportunity to benefit from it is a great program, and we're very proud of it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you, Madam Minister. I guess that just in the last couple of minutes I want to go back to the overall presentation of the supplementary supply estimates. Asking for a billion and a half dollars with a day's notice: you know, it's incredible sometimes how the government of Alberta has functioned. I want to just make sure, though – in the Q3 update I was probably surprised the most by two things. Number one is that your government had a $500 million cushion, that if oil prices were low, you were going to have this reserve transferred to cushion the total deficit amount. Of course, when oil prices ended up recovering a bit to $60, that didn't seem like it was necessary. I would just like some assurances from a minister somewhere over there that nowhere in the 2017-2018 supplementary supply estimates are there any contingency plans for transferring any reserves, whether they're nominal or real or not, that may impact on these numbers.

The other concern I still have from the presentation of the Q3 update last week and the budgeting is the total absence of the amount of money that's being borrowed for capital funding, you know, the total amount of the 9 billion to 9 and a half billion dollar deficit that your government is running up this year for operating expenses. Again, we've talked about putting the groceries on the credit card. That's what your government is doing. But you were quiet – you were absolutely silent – on the fact that another 5 and a half billion dollars of capital investment was being borrowed without a payback plan, without full recognition of the interest and the cost on future generations.

Of course, now, when we're looking through the 2017-2018 supplementary supply estimates, we see parts where capital has had, as I was talking about to the Minister of Education, an impact on renovations and repairs and $31 million that just a year ago was not allocated.

I guess, again, to the government. You know, we've seen you accumulate $50 billion in debt in just three short years, a reversal of our net financial position of almost $60 billion in just three years. Now I'm seeing – let's get the exact number here – a financial transactions amount to be voted on of almost $36 million. Of course, I'd asked that question earlier, and I appreciate the hon. minister's promise to get the answer to me, but again a lot of Albertans have expressed great, great concern to me that your government doesn't have a plan to get our operating budget back in balance and that your government doesn't have a plan to repay these billions and billions of dollars in capital debt.

Now we're seeing here, you know, some side of – I don't know – 2 per cent, 2 and a half per cent of the budget, $36 million, that could be going to front-line workers, that could be left in the pockets of Albertans. Are we going to have to be dealing with this down the road? Are we not going to have a plan to ensure that we are able to repay this? Hon. minister, if you don't mind, I just want to ensure that you have no plans for transferring reserves, nominal or otherwise, to cover any of this increased spending of a billion and a half dollars.

Ms Ganley: That covered a lot of different things. I'll try to cover all of them as we go forward.

The hon. member made reference to the cushion we put in the budget to deal with the volatility of oil prices. I think, Madam Chair, that that's a very reasonable step for the government to take. Certainly we make our forecasts on . . .

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

We are now moving on to the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

You have 20 minutes combined. Would you like to go back and forth?

Mr. Clark: I would like, with the kind indulgence of the minister, to go back and forth if that's all right, if we can do that. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Which minister would you like to address first so I can make sure?

Mr. Clark: Gosh, that's a great question. You know what? I will address my questions first to the Deputy Premier, just a couple if I may.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Deputy Premier, you're welcome to go back and forth. You're fine with that?

Ms Hoffman: I don't have any supplementary estimates.

The Deputy Chair: Yes, you do. Apparently you have questions today.

Hon. member, please go ahead with your questions.

Ms Hoffman: It's her. I'm not asking for any money.

Mr. Clark: Sure. I'm happy to address it to whichever member of Executive Council would like to respond. I do actually have a question about Health at one point.

I'll just open by saying a couple of things, Madam Chair. If you don't mind, I'll take a few moments here at the beginning. Also, my colleague from Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill will take a good portion of our allotted 20-minute time. I'll just start with some general comments and can certainly happily address my questions to the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General if she would so like to answer.

Here we are being asked to approve spending of a billion and a half dollars with scarcely 24 hours of notice. I think that that level of lack of transparency in terms of the spending that this government undertakes is frustrating to me and it is frustrating to Albertans. We often will need supplementary supply, of course, for some minor in-year corrections. I would understand that. But when you look at the third-quarter fiscal update, when the government brings in an additional $2 billion of revenue but finds an additional $1 billion of money to spend, it is tremendously frustrating for Albertans to see. Some of that, I will acknowledge, perhaps would come from student enrolment growth and things that I think Albertans would support. But there are many other areas where Albertans would expect any additional spending to be offset by reasonable efficiencies.

More to the point, this is a budget that is set every year, and we find that scant months after that budget is established, it's blown out of the water with this government seemingly being unable to find any meaningful ways of constraining spending. I would not look at the past budget as being what one would consider to be fiscally responsible. But even at that it gets overspent. This has happened every single year that we've been here. This government seems to have a chronic problem, which, unfortunately, seems just as bad or even worse than previous governments.

As we look at the remarkable amount of money that we're being asked to approve here on the first page of the supplementary supply estimates, what I want to ask the minister is: have all of the new or revised programs, initiatives, policy changes, et cetera, that have driven the requested increase been publicly announced? Can you please detail, if they have not yet been publicly announced, which specific unannounced programs this supplementary supply, in any of these ministries, is intended to fund?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I will seek guidance from you because I am happy to run through every single program that this is intended to fund as the member has asked me to do, but that will likely take us to the end of our 20 minutes. If you would like an answer to that question I'm happy to provide it, but you've literally asked me to comment on every single program in here. I'll do it if you want.

Mr. Clark: Why don't we limit ourselves to any unannounced programs, if you could tell us which amounts of funding here, that we're being asked to approve, relate to any programs that have not yet been announced.

Ms Ganley: Well, again, we have various ministers answering for various ministries. I'm happy to run through each and every program, and those ministers will be aware of whether or not those have been announced. I mean, if you want me to answer that question, I can launch right in. All right. I would propose to go alphabetically. The first one I have up is Agriculture and Forestry.

If you wouldn't mind running through your supplemental estimates and which programs those are and when they were announced.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Yeah. I mean, really what I'm asking is: the funding here that we're being asked to approve, is it all related to programs that have already been announced, that are out there publicly announced, or is there subsequent funding? I'm thinking of Justice, for example. There's a $10 million announcement that's happened in-year for RCMP funding; that's an example of something that I presume is embedded in these supplementary supply estimates. But are there things coming that we haven't been told about yet but that are embedded? Obviously, if they haven't been announced, as much I would love to hear you announce them here today, are there things coming from any ministry that we haven't been told about yet, or are we only approving dollars for programs that have already been publicly announced, or are there some other gems coming in the next short while, before the end of the fiscal year?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Again, that question translates over hundreds of programs. I'm happy to run through each of the programs. I can't tell you off the top of my head which ones have been announced, but if you'd like me to list them, I can start with my ministry if that's more appropriate.

Our supplementary fund is required to address several things, including spending pressures faced by the ministry. Specifically, they include $18.9 million for the RCMP contract, to address compensation increases. What that has to do with is the fact that the federal minister has announced that in the interim, while we are awaiting potential unionization with respect to the RCMP, there is an increase in the salaries for those RCMP officers. So for the province's portion of that, which represents the PPSA, which covers rural Alberta and urbans less than 5,000, that amounts to $18.9 million, and that includes both back pay and current compensation.

Another $8.2 million is for Legal Aid caseload services. That's just related to an increase in demand.

Another $3.2 million relates to the Justices of the Peace Compensation Commission. That's required by the Supreme Court, and that's how those compensations are determined. That committee had its outcome fairly recently, so that's one of the things that's in there.

There is $3.9 million for supplies and services, which supports the sheriff's branch commercial vehicle enforcement and correctional services.

There's $1.1 million for the Association of Alberta Sexual Assault Services grant. Part of that money is coming from Justice; part of it will come from Community and Social Services and, I believe, from Health as well. That announcement, I think, was actually last week.

An Hon. Member: On Wednesday.

Ms Ganley: It was on Wednesday, I'm told. So that's that.

And $0.9 million is for the biology casework analysis agreement for policing. What that is is that when we take biological samples, they are sent to a lab. There was a 10-year deal in which the federal government's costs increased, but they didn't charge the provinces any more. That deal has elapsed, so now the province is paying increased costs year over year for the processing of those samples.

Then $0.8 million is for the municipal police assistance grants. Once we get the total numbers on populations in from municipalities, those grants are based on population, so those go up. That is the Justice supply.

I hear that my colleague the Minister of Economic Development and Trade is happy to talk about his programs, and I'm sure all my other colleagues are.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow I believe has some clarifying questions.

Mr. Clark: Thank you. I think that's probably covered off that question, so we'll move on to the next one, then.

This part I'm a little curious about. The Q3 fiscal update showed that Health is expected to be $58 million over budget in-year for operating expenses, but we don't see any supplementary supply for Health. I'm curious how that all hangs together, what internal funds Health is finding that are happening without a transfer, how they're able to do that without seeing that show up here in supplementary supply.

Ms Ganley: Madam Chair, what I believe is before us in this instance is the supplementary supply estimates, so I have answers to those questions.

The Deputy Chair: To clarify, I believe the member has actually asked a question related to supplementary supply. If he wants to clarify it again, he can.

Mr. Clark: That's fine. I think what I'll do is end my questions here and hand my remaining time over to the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I was hoping to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry, but I can move on to Children's Services and go back if that's okay.

The Deputy Chair: If that is what you'd like to do, please go ahead.

Ms McPherson: Sure. Okay. I'm unsure if the first question actually applies to Children's Services. It has to do with the office of the Child and Youth Advocate. No? Okay. I'll move on from there. Thank you.

My first question. On page 22 what were the main sources of the higher caseloads and cost per case? What has changed in the way that child intervention supports for permanency and foster care support are delivered?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again, thanks to an increasing number of children, we did have increasing caseloads in terms of that, but we are, as I stated, working with children and families in different ways, so that certainly increases the complexity of practice when the focus is on keeping a family together and providing those supports in order to keep a child safely at home. We're certainly investing money in terms of wrapping services around families in order to make sure that children don't come into care, if at all possible that they can stay safely in their homes. That means, again, investing in kinds of services: parental skill development, counselling, providing in-home support workers, conflict resolution. In terms of making all those things happen and in terms of being able to deliver that kind of care with an increasing caseload, we needed some additional staff as well in terms of making that happen, so that would certainly be in regard to child intervention.

In regard to supports for permanency it is, again, strictly related to caseload growth. Children who have been in care oftentimes need additional support even after leaving care, so that's what supports for permanency is about. We want to make sure that we do continue to support those children and youth in order to have the very best future, including supporting young adults to transition to adulthood. Part of the reason why that caseload growth was increased was because eligibility was extended from 22 to 24 years, and we've also moved to automatically enrolling youth when they turn 18.

Lastly, the complexity of care for children has increased. The more we can keep the simpler cases in-home, the more it means that the cases that actually do come into care oftentimes are the most complex. Again, we have a growing number of children and youth, but the complexity of cases where there's very specialized placement that children need – that might include intensive mental health support and treatment or behavioural therapy or drug addiction treatment and making sure that staff have all the training that they need and caregivers have the training they need to understand indigenous culture, to understand historical trauma in child development and really provide the very best care, so a lot of care driven that way. Then, again, some caseload growth pressures for children placed in temporary foster and kinship homes as well is what drove an additional investment of $10.2 million into foster care support.

Hopefully, that answered the member's questions, and I will continue to hopefully answer her questions to the best of my ability.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the minister for the answers. Also, near the bottom of page 22 there is $16.5 million, roughly, for encumbrance from higher than anticipated caseloads in child intervention. I'm wondering what the sources are for that increased demand. Is any of that as a result of the first round of the child intervention panel recommendations?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. To be clear, in '17-18 the Children's Services budget was reduced by $16.557 million due to overspending in the previous year. So in order to meet the obligations of the ministry, Treasury Board has approved $16.557 million to cover that encumbrance and restore the budget. Obviously, there were some pressures from last year that we needed to recognize and deal with, that we realized at the end of the year. That broke down to child intervention services receiving an additional $8.2 million, supports for permanency an additional $1.8 million, foster care an additional $5 million, child care program planning and delivery receiving $557,000, and early intervention services for children and youth receiving $1 million.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thanks to the minister. On page 24, item 3 under capital grants originally allocated $250,000; $175,000 in child care grants appear to be allocated but not issued. Of the $175,000 granted, where did that go?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. Certainly, we're very proud of the work that we have been doing. In terms of providing support for a child care subsidy and supports, part of that, thankfully, is the $45.6 million, as I said, going to early learning and child care centres in terms of that and also the need to continue to support accreditation growth as well within child care subsidy and supports. We do provide a certain amount of support to various child care facilities throughout the year, and certainly there can be some variations in terms of what that support looks like. So we did decrease $175,000 from the capital grant budget as a result of a variation in that amount.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. If I could just go back to Agriculture and Forestry, I'd love to ask a question about that.

The Deputy Chair: Go ahead.

Ms McPherson: Great. Thanks. On page 18 the supplementary amount of $1,050,000 is requested to provide funding for wildfire aircraft inventory related to an encumbrance in 2016-2017. I'm wondering if this is due to extra use charges during the Fort McMurray fires and if this is equipment that's leased rather than owned.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Chair and to the member for the question. I think I want to congratulate the member. I believe that's the very first question ever asked of me by a member of the Alberta Party. I'm just saying. Yeah, that's a really good question. We all, of course, remember the wildfire season of 2016, where we had the Horse River fire, which devastated Fort McMurray. It's also important to note that the wildfire season in 2015 was actually even worse. We burned more trees, more timber in 2015.

The member is absolutely correct. The aircraft that we had helping support, you know, fighting those wildfires in those two years were used extensively, and because of such, the parts that were available to repair those vehicles, that were in storage, had been used. This is now replenishing the stock of those parts. Parts are on hand. Aircraft, as I'm sure you understand, is not like my old truck, where if there's a squeak in it, I'll just wait till it breaks. You can't let that happen in aircraft. So this is being able to restock the supply, those parts for those aircraft. It's important in keeping these aircraft up.

You know, I find it interesting that even with all that snow on the ground, we've had seven wildfires already this year, right? So the aircraft are going to be needed as we start to dry up in the spring. It's making sure that the aircraft are there, ready for our women and men in the field to be able to do the good work they do that protects our communities.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you very much. I do understand that wildfire season starts in March. I'm just wondering if the minister can let us know if the planes are leased or owned by the province.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thanks. These are the four aircraft that the government does own. We do have other aircraft and companies that are on contract, but these are the four aircraft that the government does own.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you. I believe I'm almost out of time, so I'll let my questions rest now.

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak from the Alberta Party?

Seeing none, I will now move on to the government side of the House. The government members have 20 minutes. Hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, would you like to go back and forth, or would you like to take 10 minutes?

Connolly: No, I'd like to go back and forth if that's all right.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Please go ahead.

Connolly: Thank you very much. I'd like to start off with some questions to the Minister of Education if that's all right. I'm very happy to see that we're keeping up with enrolment through the supplementary supply. I know that's been a problem in the past. I know that for many of us, it was one of the reasons that we ran with the NDP because I know the previous government was planning to not keep up with enrolment and refused to keep up with enrolment and for several decades wouldn't keep up with enrolment, which is why we had fewer resources in the classroom, which is why we had overcrowded classrooms, and which is why we have a huge deficit of teachers in the system.

I'm really proud to see that this minister has been able to build probably more new schools than any previous Minister of Education, at least in the past couple of decades. In fact, I've been at two school openings just in the past few months. One was in the Minister of Infrastructure's riding, right beside mine, l'école du Nouveau-Monde. I was so happy to see that we're finally building francophone schools as well. I know some of this money for supplementary supply and for the school facilities' infrastructure will be going to help our francophone schools.

A lot of the time in the past when schools were no longer needed by the CBE or by Calgary Catholic – I can only talk about Calgary in particular – those schools were then given to the francophone board instead of them having been able to build their own schools. This led to the francophone board having to pay a lot more for upkeep of these old buildings, having to pay a bit more for resources, and having a lack of resources compared to other school boards. So I'm really happy to see that we're finally putting money not only into the francophone board but into all school boards to make sure that they have the proper resources that they need. That's really something that the minister's supplementary supply will do, so I'm very happy to see that.

I'm also happy – once again when we talk about new schools, building new schools is the best way to lower class sizes. Like I've said many times, when I was in high school – obviously, in junior high and elementary school it was a similar story – I think it was in grade 11 or grade 10 that if everyone showed up to my English class, which was about 40 kids, there weren't enough desks for everyone, so we actually had to have one kid sit on the floor. If you were the last one to show up that day after everyone showed up, you would have to sit on the floor and do your work there. That's even with the teacher's desk. So a kid was in the teacher's desk, somebody had to sit on the floor, and we still did not have enough.

Mr. Eggen: Was that you, Michael?

Connolly: No. Luckily, I was always early. Thank God.

It's important to know that this was how our school system was and sometimes still is because a lot of times we don't have those resources. But we were able to build, I believe, 173 new schools in the past three years or finish 173 schools in the past three years. I'm incredibly proud of the work that our Minister of Education has been able to do for this province. Like has been said previously, right before we were elected, we had empty lots with big signs saying: new school will be built here. Those lots remained empty for years and years and years. So we are finally getting those schools, that were promised decades ago, built today, and we couldn't be prouder of the Minister of Education.

I was just recently at a few schools in my riding. I was at St. Rita, which is in Ranchlands, which is near my constituency office. We were able to give them a grant to improve their learning commons. A lot of my elementary schools, especially in Hawkwood and Ranchlands and Silver Springs, which are older neighbourhoods, are trying to improve their libraries, to build more learning commons, to have what a lot of them call a makerspace, where kids get to go and actually build things. They're so proud of that, but they need a little bit of extra funding. So I'm really proud that we're making sure that those schools have the funding that they need, whether that be through the Minister of Culture and Tourism, where that grant came from, or from the Minister of Education, because these schools do need upkeep and they are really putting forward incredibly gifted students.

I was just at another school in Silver Springs – it's called W.O. Mitchell – which, again, is a much older school, built in about the '70s. That school needed drastic upkeep because it was an older school. Now it contains the Spanish bilingual program, which, again, is an incredible program that we have in Calgary. We also have the German bilingual program. We have several languages that are in our ridings. I know that in the Member for Calgary-Bow's riding there is a German school, Bowcroft, that we were able to visit.

W.O. Mitchell I was just able to visit because I was giving them a grant. The minister of environment's office and the climate change office were able to give out 10 grants of up to $1,000 for students to improve their school, community, or Alberta in general through technology to improve their carbon output, whether that be in the school or, again, in the community. At W.O. Mitchell I was so proud to see what they were doing. It was a group of fourth graders. Only 10 of these grants, I believe, were given out across the province, and my riding actually got four of them, so I'm really proud of the work that the students in my riding have been able to do.

At W.O. Mitchell they have compost bins that don't really work, so they're going to reuse the compost bins to create a garden, and with the grant I believe they're going to buy or create new compost bins so that they can use that to fuel the garden. With the garden they're going to grow vegetables, which they're then going to use to create a stew to feed to seniors in the neighbourhood.

That's directly because the Minister of Education is seeing that we have these old schools that can be reused. It's directly in this supplementary supply that we're making sure that these old schools are still able to be used, still making sure that these schools are able to run properly, and making sure that we don't forget the students that are already at these older schools. A lot of my schools, again, have been there since the 1970s and so need refurbishment every so often or else they can't really work.

If the Minister of Education wants to explain a little bit about how we're keeping up with enrolment, how we're making sure that these older schools are being modernized, and how building new schools is helping us move forward in Education.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for his comments and questions. Yes, it's sort of an interesting process where for each of the budgets that I've built for Education, we've seen the enrolment into our schools here in the province of Alberta grow past our expectations. Again, as I mentioned before, I think this is a sign of hope and optimism not just for families making choices around building families and having kids and so forth, but it's a good sign for our economy as well. Let's not forget that Alberta has the youngest population in the country and the most driven as well in the country, so we're seeing quite remarkable growth in certain areas of the province. This supplementary supply request to have the $18 million is a reflection of that.

We saw remarkable growth, and we're meeting, Madam Chair, the physical needs and human resource needs for that growth as well. Just to give some numbers from this fall, we opened 53 new or modernized schools, which more than 36,000 students were attending. The scale of it is quite remarkable. We've hired more than 1,100 teachers as well to go along with this. Of course, you can't open a school without all of the custodians and the secretaries and the support staff that you need to make a school go.

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

It's a reflection, I think, of Albertans' commitment to education. We know that overwhelmingly Albertans want and are willing to make a commitment to our education even during tough economic times. Certainly, we made sacrifices in other areas in this government. I'm very proud of how this caucus, our cabinet, and our Premier said that we will make sure that we will invest in those children's education regardless of, you know, how it might be a bit of a difficult economic exercise to make it happen. As we move out of an economic recession, now here we are with all of these new physical resources available to us, new schools in the places where we need them. We will continue to build those schools and supply the teachers and support that are necessary along the way.

I think, hopefully, that Albertans learned an important lesson, which is that you must plan for the future. Planning for the future includes making investments in infrastructure and making investments in our children so that they have the very best education to move forward and to contribute and prosper here in the province of Alberta in whatever they may choose to do with their lives in the future. So, yeah, this supplementary supply is a reflection in a smaller way of our larger commitment to K to 12 education here in the province of Alberta, and I'm really proud of it, quite frankly.

You know, the infrastructure maintenance and renewal element of this: it's interesting to see that sort of highlighted because, again, we're working on ways to ensure that school boards are spending the money on infrastructure renewal and maintenance at every step of the way. They do a great job. I don't deny it. We want to make sure, especially with all of that new inventory of hundreds of new schools, that for the next 50 years we're spending at the right time on the right maintenance so that we get the maximum benefit from each of those schools along the way. That's part of what we're doing, moving that infrastructure maintenance and renewal funding into capital to ensure that it's tied more to the actual physical buildings and the maintenance that they require.

Thanks very much. I mean, I'm sure that all of you have attended new school openings here in the last number of months. I can tell you that it's one thing to see the beautiful buildings that are there – we've put in lots of features that enhance learning and so forth – but it's more the sense of community, that sense of a focal point for young families to be proud of, not just to go to school in but to have community events in, community league and sporting events and so forth. It's just a real source of pride for, I think, each individual community, and cumulatively there's a sense of pride for all of us as Albertans demonstrating that to our children and to their learning.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to be able to get up and ask some questions here. You know, I'm going to be honest. My knowledge of agriculture is not that great compared to some of the members in this room. However, I do know that members from the opposition make it seem like they're the only ones that represent rural communities in this House. But, of course, we know that's not true. We have a number of representatives here from the governing party that represent rural communities.

I'm specifically wanting to get up and ask this question of the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry simply because I've heard that he's done a number of town hall meetings throughout the province where he's been able to go and actually talk to a lot of the farmers who at one time were outside on the steps of the Legislature. He's been able to give them correct information about some of the programs that we've been doing. He's an incredibly knowledgeable and experienced individual, and he's been able to talk to a lot of these farmers about how our government is doing great things to help a lot of these farmers all across the province. Of course, this is an opportunity for me to learn from a colleague.

One of the things that I find absolutely fascinating is that, unlike other jurisdictions throughout our great land, we have the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation, and it's a really important aspect in the work of the Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry, of course. I see that here in the supplementary supply estimates there is a request of $56.8 million, and that's specifically for the provincial share of AgriStability indemnities and AgriInsurance premiums. I'm hoping that the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry can go into a little bit of depth on why that money is specifically needed, how that money goes to help farmers all around the province of Alberta.

The Acting Chair: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Chair and to the member for the very good question. He's right. There is, you know, $53.4 million of AgriStability indemnities. I'll just touch on that for now. AgriStability: I think you could talk to probably just about any producer in Alberta, any producer in the country, and they would tell you it's a program that works okay. It doesn't work great at times, but it works okay.

The program itself is funded 60 per cent by the government of Canada and 40 per cent by the province, and it is used for those times where there are large crashes in the price of a commodity. Part of the program as well: this is actually to cover losses, for the most part, for a lot of our producers. But a big part of this is for the cattle industry, where the ranchers lost – I think there was a large crash in the price of beef in 2016. It was about a 30 per cent decrease at that time. We haven't seen a decrease like that since the BSE scares of 2003, so that was a really big hit on our industry. How the programs works, then, is that it takes about a year or so for those claims to be ready from the government of Canada, the government of Alberta. So that's basically what that is for.

Interesting to note – I think it's a good time to bring that up now – on the AgriStability portion of the program is that at the federal-provincial-territorial ministers of agriculture conference in St. John's, Newfoundland, last year we made a decision to tweak that to make it a little bit better for our producers here in Alberta and, frankly, across the country, so that's what we have done. The whole business risk management suite of programs that is administered, as the member has said, through the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation is currently going through a review, looking to see what more we can do to tweak those good programs and perhaps make them even better.

The AgriInsurance you see there at $3.4 million. I think you could probably talk to any farmer in Alberta and realize that that's actually not a very big amount. We had a pretty wet fall in 2016. It went over, you know, to a fairly wet spring in 2017. But the year as a whole was a pretty good, solid average year last year. We had some dry conditions in the south, other than the 1.7 million acres of irrigated land that we have in southern Alberta, which did very well with the good heat and the good moisture and the good reservoir capacity that we have in our irrigation system. They actually did fairly well, but there were some dry conditions.

Also interesting to note, Member, is that, especially with cereal crops, when you have fairly dry conditions, the quality of the grains can actually be increased. There is often a higher protein content for those crops where we maybe didn't see the quantity, but the quality can be very good. So we had that. As well, we had very, very few hailstorm claims last year. It wasn't a very big hail season. We'll see what this year has to offer.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Otherwise, that $3.4 million in AgriInsurance went to cover those claims for those severely dry conditions that we've seen in southern Alberta. Like they say, God willing and if the creek don't rise, hopefully we'll have a good year this year.

Loyola: I believe I have around 30 seconds left, Madam Chair. I'll just cede my time, and I'll keep asking questions next turn.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

We will now move back to the Official Opposition. The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: You have 10 minutes. Would you like to go back and forth?

Mr. Stier: Yes, please. If the Minister of Children's Services would be so kind, that would be great.

The Deputy Chair: Minister, you're willing to go back and forth? Please proceed.

Mr. Stier: Thank you. Good afternoon, everyone. Thank you, Minister, for the co-operation. I'm assuming you would be responding today to Municipal Affairs questions, which are going to be my focus. Without further ado, I'd like to proceed if possible. Madam Chair, the problem is that I recognize that this person probably is the likely person to respond to those questions from what I observe in the House today.

I'd like to start with AEMA, if I could, Minister or Ministers. You know, the Alberta Emergency Management Agency is part of Municipal Affairs, and they provide assistance to municipalities and their citizens when there are huge disasters. I was certainly witness to those many times in my life, whether it was the flood in '13 in High River or the Kenow fire this year in the Pincher Creek region and Waterton park. That kind of funding is normally called DRP funding, I believe, and it's normally budgeted, from my years of experience here, at roughly around $200,000 because it's hard to predict a year in advance, which normally happens every year, what's going to happen.

I noted that on page 56, line 9, there's a figure of $18.6 million here this time around. I suspect – and perhaps correct me if I'm wrong – that it's probably as a result of the fires that have been experienced this year, but it may be other outstanding files on other things. Would the minister be able to comment on what that $18.6 million represents? Either one is fine to answer.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. As far as I understand, the conversation that we had was that Municipal Affairs was on the agenda for tomorrow to have questions asked about it. So while that's the case, I certainly can take a few moments to speak about this based on my previous experience within Municipal Affairs.

The member would be correct that the disaster recovery program is not something that we can predict, Madam Chair. Obviously, each year one never knows, you know, what kind of disasters might occur, but there are typically a number of things that happen across the province. I mean, obviously, the fires in southern Alberta are an example of a large-scale disaster that we were all very much aware of. However, there are unexpected events that challenge the emergency capacity of municipalities that happen on a much smaller scale across the province as well.

I certainly think that the Minister of Municipal Affairs would be happy to speak to that during his allotted time. I am sure that he would be happy to provide you with more details at a future time as well in terms of doing that. Glad that we can always provide support to municipalities in terms of disaster management.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Chair. I apologize to the minister. There seems to have been some miscommunication because it was our understanding that there would be someone on this file here this afternoon.

Anyway, if I could proceed, MSI is a topic that is well known within the municipal world. You know, the website says that the municipal sustainability initiative, or MSI, "helps support local infrastructure priorities and [helps] build strong, safe and resilient communities." It's the usual statements that are there every year, I think. We saw at one point $1.18 billion in MSI capital on the website, for 2017, and the estimate seems to be pegged at $1.65 billion. That's page 56, line 4. Regarding the additional $800 million that seems to be in there, I'm wondering if anyone knows what that additional $800 million was for. Was it unexpected? Stuff like that for that portion, please.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Chair and to the member for the question. You know, it's important to ensure that municipalities have the funds they crucially need to maintain their infrastructure for the citizens of Alberta. We heard from the Minister of Infrastructure this morning about how this government initiated the largest infrastructure build in the history of this province. That is going to go a long way in not only fulfilling the infrastructure deficit that was left with us by the previous government but also a long way to stimulate the economy, to have people, both contractors and the workers that work for the contractors, back to work. It went a long way.

This is part of that. This will not be an overall increase to MSI funding levels, but it will most certainly help municipalities with cash flow to assist them with those priority projects that they have on the go. This will, you know, get them an opportunity to put shovels in the ground. We're hoping for some warmer weather here. The snow will melt, and it'll dry up enough to get at some of those projects.

This isn't, you know, completely unusual. This was very similar to what happened in 2015 with the previous Conservative government. It's important to a municipality, it's important for the infrastructure builds, and, as we heard earlier, it's an important priority to Albertans. I think it's a very palpable question.

As well, the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association is meeting this week to talk about their concerns with some of our other ministers, the Minister of Economic Development and Trade and the Minister of Municipal Affairs, to ensure that their voices are heard by this government on a lot of their issues and, of course, without a doubt, on their infrastructure needs, infrastructure builds as we progress throughout the year.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you. Time allotment left, please, Madam Chair?

The Deputy Chair: Two minutes and 57 seconds.

Mr. Stier: Okay. I guess a quick one if I could. As the minister is aware, MSI was originally created in 2007, expired in 10 years. We're entering our second year after the deadline. I'm wondering. This $800 million we're just talking about now: is some of it being directed to developing the new plan, that is apparently in the works, for MSI? Can we have any comments on that, please?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Chair and the member. This additional funding is going to be allocated in the 2017-2018 budget. Obviously, I can't comment, you know, on the future of that budget. We're going to be hearing from the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board here next week on what that budget necessarily will be. But it's important to note that this isn't an overall increase and will be allocated in the 2017-2018 budget. More information on the MSI funding, obviously, will be announced as well in the budget. But I do want to thank the member for his interest and for his questions.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: You still have a minute and 45.

Mr. Stier: Okay. Thank you. All right. So I guess we don't really know what that $800 million was destined for, being used for exactly, but thank you for the response.

There was an additional $4 million being spent at one time on the Wood Buffalo fire. Was it reported in this budget or a portion of this supplementary as well? Is some of that remaining Wood Buffalo being taken care of with this $800 million?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.
4:50

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Member. That's a really important question. I'm not sure about, you know, that number, if that was included in one of the recommendations from the three reports that came out: one commissioned by the Department of Agriculture and Forestry, one commissioned by Municipal Affairs, and one by the municipality itself. Though I can't answer that question directly, it did speak to the need to make sure that we are listening to the needs of municipalities, whether Wood Buffalo or across the province. The needs in Wood Buffalo are somewhat unique, obviously, to take into consideration the tragedy they went through last year. A lot of that money, whether it's in Wood Buffalo or across the province, is to make sure that they have the infrastructure they need. In Wood Buffalo I would venture to guess a lot of that will be to do with being even more prepared. Even though we did avoid any direct loss and tragedy in that wildfire, we did lose a lot of structures.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister. Thank you, Member.

We will now move on to the government side. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, you have 10 minutes. Would you like to go back and forth?

Loyola: Yes. Back and forth, please, Madam Chair. My questions will be directed to our new mother, the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General. I'd like to take this opportunity to congratulate the minister, of course, on the birth of her child. I want to say how fantastic it is that all of our ministers who have had children – when they bring them into the House, you can see the faces. Well, I'm looking that way, so I tend to see the faces on that side of the room and how they all just light up when a baby comes into the room. I think it's wonderful. It gets us kind of working more amicably together, perhaps, when babies come in. I think that we need more women and more babies and especially nothing stopping more women in this House so that they can be here and help us make these really important decisions like the decisions of the Ministry of Justice.

I'd like to ask the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General – you know, I've had a few cases where people come to my office in the constituency looking for a request for legal aid, and I know that she has an amount here in the supplementary supply estimates dedicated to that. I'm hoping that she can go into a little bit more detail on that particular program and the money that she requires for that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm very happy to discuss this topic. And thank you very much to the member for the question. It's a topic that's near and dear to my heart. Legal aid, obviously, provides funding for individuals who are unable to access the legal system by any other means. It's a program which I think most participants in the justice system would agree has been underfunded for a number of years. The demand on that program has obviously increased because it's based on financial eligibility guidelines, so if an individual falls within those guidelines, they have access to the program. What that means is that if they find themselves accused of a crime, we are required to cover a certificate for that individual.

Of course, as people have had some lower incomes and there have been a few more people who haven't been working, the demand on that program has increased quite considerably. The increase that this government has put into that program has been over – with this, it's even more than 25 per cent, probably closer to 30 per cent. That's to ensure that during this time of economic vulnerability, those individuals who previously were working and find themselves unable to work have access to that program, and I think that's pretty critical.

A lot of this is defence against actions of the state, and I think sometimes people don't understand how important that is. When someone stands accused of a crime, they haven't yet been convicted of that crime, and I think it's important that they are allowed to make full answer in defence. Ultimately, the system is intended to get to the meat of the matter, and I think it's important that those individuals have access to counsel.

Another really important thing that legal aid does is that it provides access to counsel in a lot of family law matters. One of the reasons I think that is so important is because there can be a significant imbalance in power between one parent and the other parent. In addition, they can provide access to counsel for children in custody dispute matters, which is often very important. That imbalance in power means that when Legal Aid is able to step in for the parent who has less access to resources, I think that creates just sort of a fairer society overall, and it ensures that everyone is able to meet their obligations.

Really, in this case the increase to legal aid is a result of the fact that in order to continue paying for the services that we had committed to Albertans, we needed a little bit more funds to pay for those services. I think that at this time of economic vulnerability, it's important to keep that commitment.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you once again, Madam Chair. One of the things that, you know – one of the misunderstandings, perhaps I'll say, and one of the stereotypes that tends to exist out there because of the 44 years of Conservative rule in this province is that somehow the NDP are antibusiness. Of course, that stereotype and misunderstanding is promulgated by members of the other side of the House. Of course, nothing could be further from the truth, so I really wanted to give the opportunity to our Minister of Economic Development and Trade, who's doing an amazing job, specifically with – for me, whenever I'm out in the community, I talk about the Alberta export expansion program, the way that we're working with farmers and agriculture to add value to the agricultural products here in the province and, of course, innovation.

I see here on page 34 that there's a transfer amount of $10 million that's going to be put towards the Alberta carbon conversion technology centre. This is an incredible innovation that's being supported here in our province, and I want the minister to comment on that and give us more details about it.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and I'll thank the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for the question. I'm quite excited about this. This is a partnership between the province of Alberta, the private sector, and the federal government, so what this is technically, as far as on paper, is a transfer from the expense category over to the capital investment category. The $10 million that we've delivered through Alberta Innovates is for this facility, the carbon conversion technology centre. This was a partnership, like I said, between industry through COSIA, Canada's Oil Sands Innovation Alliance, the federal government, and Xprize.

What this facility does is that it's attached to the Shepard natural gas facility in Calgary. What they are doing is taking carbon dioxide emissions and turning it into useful products, so taking what was a by-product or a waste product or a leftover and converting it into useful products. One company, that was one of the quarter-finalists, is taking that and injecting it into cement, and what it actually does is that it makes cement about 30 per cent stronger. It's actually less expensive because you can think of it as a bit of a filler. It makes the cement greener. We're not just sequestering carbon; we're now turning it into a useful product.

There are a number of other companies that are in there commercializing their ideas. They've already been tested in a lab. This facility helps them to commercialize it and bring it to market. We are very excited to partner with industry. Here's a great example of an investment that not only aligns with our climate leadership plan but has the potential to deliver significant reductions in greenhouse gas emissions, diversifying our economy, creating new jobs, so we were quite excited when I made that announcement in March of last year. It was a little over 12 months ago – or exactly 12 months ago; pardon me – that we announced this facility. Obviously, it's up and running, and I'm quite excited at the opportunities.

This is another prime example of innovation that is going on in Alberta in our oil and gas sector, our energy sector, that will continue to ensure that Alberta is a world leader when it comes to the environment and the economy and our energy sector. So we're very proud to be partnering with those companies and other orders of government.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, once again. I see that I probably have about 30 seconds left. I want to congratulate the Minister of Economic Development and Trade on this incredible innovation that's happening right here in the province. It's projects like these that are going to help create a sustainable economy with great, mortgage-paying jobs here in the province. I look forward to more projects like this here in the province, that our government can participate in.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak on the Official Opposition side? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to go back and forth with the minister of agriculture if I could.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. You have 10 minutes.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you. If it's okay with the minister, I'd like to go doing that. Madam Chair, I'll be splitting my time at some point with my compatriot who is the critic for forestry, so I'll be going strictly on the agricultural side of it for now.

Under this ask of $257,223,000 in addition to the little over $4.5 million made available from lower than budgeted expenses elsewhere in the ministry, it's incumbent on us to find out what that money is for. Minister, I see that $56,881,000 is needed to fill a gap in the department's grant to Agriculture Financial Services. As you know, that corporation has in the past been somewhat beleaguered on the management side of things, so I was wanting to know if that is the province's share for AgriStability and AgriInsurance, since the last time around you were $35.5 million short. That's about $90 million dollars over the last few seasons that you've underbudgeted on that line item, and I was wondering if you could give me some background as to why the low budgeting and what those reasons might be.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Chair and the member for the question. As I'm sure the member is aware, you know, you can't predict what Mother Nature might do in any given year. You can somewhat predict what the markets might be doing.

I'll split this answer a little bit. A large chunk of that supplementary estimate of $56.8 million, $53.4 million, is earmarked for AgriStability. AgriStability was going to be implemented a lot because of the reduction in commodity prices for beef in the year 2016. Many people realize that the price for beef did go down quite a bit that year. We saw about a 30 per cent decrease. We haven't seen a decrease like that since 2003 or so, the BSE scare. It was a hit to our producers. It wasn't easy to predict, so it wasn't included in the budget.

This has been going on for over 10 years now, how we do budgets in Agriculture and Forestry. We have a base budget that supplies the ability to run the base programs, to keep the lights on, if you will, but we can't predict necessarily how the year is going to be. In AgriStability we couldn't predict necessarily that the market was going to take a crash. That's why we have to come back for supplementary estimates, to ask for the money to be able to pay our obligation around AgriStability.

It's also important to note that AgriStability is 60 per cent federal government and 40 per cent provincial. This is our share to ensure that the AgriStability program does what it's designed to do, and that's to pay out those programs. As I'm sure the member would agree, you know, that AgriStability needs a little bit of tweaking. We did have the ability to do some of that tweaking last year. It'll take shape now with the new Canadian agricultural partnership program and with AFSC.

Now, the second half was AgriInsurance, and that's actually, you know, a fairly low amount as compared to other years: $3.4 million. We had, as I've answered previously, a fairly good, average year last year in agriculture. We had some really good crops, you know, in northern Alberta. We had some fair crops in central Alberta. For the unirrigated acres in southern Alberta it was a fairly dry year. The irrigated acres because of the heat in the year did actually really well. We had, you know, about 60 or so specialty crops grown in southern Alberta, and I think that's amazing: 1.7 million acres of irrigated land in southern Alberta. They always have pretty good water. We had some good snow packs, as we do this year, so I'm looking forward to some good years there.

To summarize, we can't predict necessarily what the weather is going to do, how it's going shape up. This is how budgets have worked for over 10 years now. You know, look for the base funding, and unless nothing happens, unless there are no hail claims, unless everything is perfect in our total 50 million acres of agricultural land in Alberta, it's going to happen where there are going to be hail problems, a crash in commodity prices in whatever commodity that might be, or, like we saw last year, dry conditions.

Thank you.

Mr. Strankman: Thanks, Mr. Minister. I was able to attend yesterday at the supply management function with you and visited with – and I'll give absolute and great kudos to one of your staffers – Mr. Dave Burdek. He's well versed in this. Could you tell me some of the lessons that have been learned from the unharvested crop disaster, if you have some ideas as to how time and money could be saved? As you know, the funding to the producers needs to be timely.

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Chair, and to the member for the question. It is a very good question. Without a doubt, when we had those unharvested acres, we hadn't seen that many unharvested acres for about 50 years. It wasn't a situation that AFSC or our producers or the province or, frankly, anybody was used to in our collective memory. There were some lessons learned there without a doubt. We had an ability to direct AFSC to have a look at how they're doing inspections for those unharvested acres. They had the ability to speed up that process a bit and the ability to do a bit less sampling so that process would be speeded up. That was still going to be a judgment call of the inspectors. We need to trust in the training and the ability and the experience of our inspectors when they go out, you know, to make some of those judgment calls.

Without a doubt, we did learn some lessons there from, like I say, an incident that's only happened twice in 50 years. You know, the programs are there. The programs are robust. In many ways the AgriInsurance programs that we have with AFSC are the envy of the country, perhaps the envy of the continent. I have got a lot of confidence in how the programs are running, but whatever we can learn – sometimes those experiences are hard-luck experiences, as we had with unharvested acres because of extreme, wet conditions. If we can learn something from that to make our systems that much better, then we should take advantage of that. Sometimes those are hard lessons to learn after something happens.

It's hard to predict, again, what weather might do. Here's a weather event that was highly unusual. It is a bit of a reactive process, where we're learning something that's happened. Again, it's so hard to predict, next to impossible to predict, what exactly weather is going to do. But we did learn some lessons there and hope that they're incorporated in AFSC and that we don't anytime soon have that many unharvested acres in the province.

Mr. Strankman: Thanks, Minister. Last year there was $25,503,000 for the department's grant to AFSC's agriculture income support program, and you've touched briefly on some of that. The question this year is that you're asking for another $53,430,000 for income support. In previous years this is used, as you've discussed, for things like low beef prices, the bovine TB program. Could you itemize what this large amount is for in this case? In such years of the bovine TB issue, which was a good part in the southern part of the riding of Drumheller-Stettler, the federal government actually rebated the province back a substantial part of the AgriStability money, or there was a cost share. If you could go into that, please. Could you also advise if you're expecting any sort of rebate from the federal jurisdiction this year?

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Chair. I'm always looking for money from the feds, Member, but there are two different programs here. I want to address that first. There's AgriStability and AgriRecovery. It was the AgriRecovery program that took place with the bovine tuberculosis crisis that we had, and that's a different program. There are different parameters that have to be met for AgriRecovery to take place. It was AgriRecovery that you were mentioning, not AgriStability, that actually kicked in to assist our producers with the bovine tuberculosis programs that we had there.

You know, of special note to the producers down there that had this bovine tuberculosis issue: I want to thank them, the producers, the municipalities, and, frankly, the federal government and our own government for the quick response they had. I've heard from producers down there that they were extremely appreciative even though this was in many ways a tragedy, where many have lost their entire herds.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

We will now return to the government side. You have 10 minutes. Would you like to go back and forth, hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie?

Loyola: Yes, thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to turn my questions once again to the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General. But before I ask her a question, I just wanted to actually thank a number of my colleagues here from the government benches. Last weekend we joined a number of women and supporters of the Me Too movement out on the steps of the Legislature. I wanted to bring attention to that gathering, that rally, and the fact that a lot of the speakers at that rally were incredibly grateful for the amount of money that went to help with sexual assault here in the province of Alberta and in building more awareness around that and what we need to do. I think that it's very important for every member of this House to become more informed about the Me Too movement and – I've said this before in this House – especially me myself as a cisgendered male to acknowledge how I can be a better ally to women, especially those who are survivors of sexual assault, and how we can do better. We can do better in this province.

I'm really glad to see that a specific amount of money has gone to the Association of Alberta Sexual Assault Services, the grant specifically, in order to help a lot of those organizations, and I'm hoping that the Minister of Justice can elaborate on her feelings about why this is so important and why we need to continue to fund and create awareness around the issue.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, and thank you for the very important question. This, of course, voted supply amount is going to fall into Justice as well as Community and Social Services, a couple of other ministries. I think this initiative was ultimately spearheaded by the Minister of Status of Women, and I think this is a fantastic initiative. Obviously, the rise of the Me Too movement and a number of other factors have sort of combined to create a situation where women are finally feeling comfortable coming forward and sharing their stories. I think that that's just fantastic.

As a result of that, though, the demand for counselling services throughout the province has massively increased, and I think, on the one hand, that's really, really good because it means that people are going forward and they're seeking the help that they need in order to deal with their feelings and in order to deal with often the very traumatic things that have happened to them. But because there was such an increased demand for counselling, we were hearing from AASAS and their partners. That's the Association of Alberta Sexual Assault Services. Many of their members were having a lot of trouble meeting the need for counselling, so the wait times for folks to be able to get into that sort of counselling were getting quite lengthy.

Of course, as we all know, when someone is dealing with a traumatic issue like that, when they have the tenacity and the ability to come forward and to discuss that, it's important to deal with that trauma right away. Those wait times, we thought, were not acceptable, so we were able to provide this grant and to support that community organization in delivering these services to women throughout the province. We're very excited to have been able to do that, and we really hope that that's able to help many survivors.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Loyola: I want to thank the minister for that answer. I think it's really important that we continue to do our very best, all members of this House, to continue doing what we can to create more awareness around the issue.

I'd like to turn my questions now to the Minister of Community and Social Services, a good friend of mine. I cannot tell you the number of people who come into my constituency office on a regular basis that get services from this ministry. It's not necessarily a bad thing. It's just demonstrating that we have this incredible ministry that provides services. I know that it's stretched in terms of funding, but hopefully that will change as the recovery grows and the tax base grows as more people get more jobs with this recovery coming on and, of course, also by the fact that we have the $25-a-day daycare program, which means that more women will be able to get into the workforce as well and will also increase the tax base here in the province of Alberta.

To the Minister of Community and Social Services. I know that the economy is looking up, but we also know that there's a lot more work to do. We also need to ensure that no one gets left behind. How is your ministry protecting services that Albertans rely on?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you, Member, for the question. It's a quite broad question, so I can talk about all my supplementary estimates, I think, in answer to this question. What we have done in this estimate is that we have added $239 million to support the services that we provide. Essentially, we were faced with the choice that either we stand with Albertans and provide the services they need or we turn our backs. But we stood with Albertans, and we have pretty much strengthened and improved all services that Albertans depend on; for instance, employment and income support. We have seen a huge increase in the number of Albertans seeking those supports, so we were able to provide additional funding there to support the staff and to support Albertans who are seeking those supports.

Similarly, with the assured income for handicapped people, the AISH program, there were a number of individuals who were seeking those supports, and our caseload was a bit higher than usual, so we added $23 million to make sure that anybody who is qualified to get AISH gets the support that they need.

Persons with developmental disabilities program. That's another important program. It's designed to include individuals with developmental and intellectual disabilities. We added $46 million to make sure that Albertans with intellectual disabilities get the support they need and they deserve.

In terms of family supports for children with disabilities, we added $19 million to make sure that families are getting the supports they need with their loved ones who have intellectual disabilities.

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

We also added $5.1 million to community supports and family safety programs, line item 6, and I just want to touch on that a little bit. As the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General mentioned, we've worked with the Association of Alberta Sexual Assault Services from pretty much the day we became government. First, we provided them $800,000 to support an award-winning campaign, the I Believe You campaign, essentially to raise awareness about how to respond to survivors when they do seek out support and do disclose. They need and deserve to be believed. That campaign, coupled with other social media campaigns like Me Too, encouraged many survivors to come forward, and in 2016 we saw that increase in counselling wait times and for supports for sexual assault survivors. At that point we provided $1.6 million to specifically address the caseload counselling wait times. Then in the fall the Association of Alberta Sexual Assault Services asked for $8.1 million.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

We now revert to the Official Opposition. Member for Little Bow, would you like to share your time with the minister?

Mr. Schneider: If the minister is agreeable with that, back and forth.

As my colleague from Drumheller-Stettler mentioned already, this year the supplementary supply for Ag and Forestry is $257,223,000 in addition to $4.5 million made available from lower than budgeted expenses elsewhere in your ministry. Because I don't have very much time, I'll just ask some pretty pointed questions. Where did the $86,000 in savings come from that you mention in the supplementary supply description?

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Chair. I would make a small suggestion that there was a little bit of noise from my side of the House and I couldn't quite hear the question, but I know he's talking about wildfires, the budgeting. You know, last year we had, for lack of a better term, a fairly lesser fire season than we've seen in the past. There were only 1,231 wildfires in 2017, 49,000 hectares. It sounds like a lot, but when you compare that to previous years – we, of course, remember the Horse River wildfire in and around Fort McMurray, that devastated Fort McMurray. That was only one of the extreme fire events that we actually had that year.

On wildfire preparedness, $38 million more was spent in 2016 than in 2017. Actually, 2015 was a bigger year than we saw when we had the Fort McMurray fire, so there were more forest fires, more wildland fires in 2015 than 2016. Last year we were showing a little bit less of a wildfire season. But how do we do budgets? We can't predict wildfires, obviously. There's a base budget that will go a long way to supplying the crews with what they need: recruitment, getting equipment ready, putting the lights on, and getting ready for the fire season. Then, as the fire season progresses, we're able to find out and then know the actual costs of fighting those wildfires.

Mr. Schneider: Is any of the money that's being asked for through supplementary supply earmarked to improve communications between all facets of the fire response agencies? I think, as we've all seen, we do have a problem there.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Chair, and thank you to the member. Even though that's a really good question, that would probably be a better question addressed to Municipal Affairs.

Having said that, I know that even with the wildfires that we had in southwestern Alberta last year that came out of the national park, there were issues around communication. I think there's an ability, an opportunity for all levels of government within Alberta to be able to increase that. This funding doesn't necessarily go to address that. Those were actually some of the recommendations that came out of the Horse River wildfire as well. The three commissioned reports, that were commissioned by all three levels of government, you know, made similar recommendations. This budget won't necessarily address that. Like I say, that probably would be a question that would be best asked of Municipal Affairs.

This supplementary estimate funding will go a long way to pay for those expenses that were for fighting those wildfires. These are a breakdown for anything from, you know, extra wages and benefits to supplies and services to contract services to aircraft parts, everything that has to go towards making sure that we're ready to do what our women and men in the wildland fire service do, and that's protect their communities, protect Alberta, and protect lives, industry as well. They do good work, and this obviously is going to be funds available for them to continue that good work.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Minister. So no point in me asking questions about communications?

Mr. Carlier: You can ask.

Mr. Schneider: Do I understand that Municipal Affairs takes care of the communications for forestry?

Mr. Carlier: No. Without a doubt, you know, there are communication systems within forestry as well. Sorry, Member; I think you're wondering about the co-ordination between them. The co-ordination between the different levels of government, whether it's provincial or municipal governments or the emergency services, frankly: you know, that is being looked at through Justice and Municipal Affairs. We would have, I suspect, a say in that to make sure that Agriculture and Forestry is part of that co-ordination. It hasn't necessarily been focused as coming out of this ministry but others.

Mr. Schneider: There's a business called Viking Air down in Calgary. Now, they have purchased from Bombardier a piece of equipment called a Super Scooper. We won't rhyme anything with that, but this is a piece of equipment that has been fantastic, sold all over the world, to scoop water up for firefighting. Now, I understand that their board of directors has put forward questions to go out and sell the Super Scoopers to anybody that can stand to take one. I just wonder if your ministry had talked to Viking Air of Calgary about this newer technology.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Chair. Thank you to the member. Yeah, I'm aware of this company that is making these Super Scoopers, a somewhat unfortunate name, maybe, in some respects. It is something that this government supports. Important to note, though – you know, I'm not trying to anticipate your additional questions, Member – that the government of Alberta owns four air tankers. Other air tankers or aircraft that are needed to fight wildfires are on a contract basis. This is a Calgary-based company. I would encourage those contractors, if they're looking to retrofit or perhaps buy new equipment, to look at this company. It's a great Alberta product. I can't dictate that they should, but I'm hoping that they would consider it.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Chair. We own four tankers; we lease the rest. Is that a good hybrid, cross, mix? Is it better to own some and lease some? I mean, has your ministry done any kind of analysis as to leasing them all or owning them all? Just a question.

The Acting Chair: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Chair. Thank you, Member. You know, that's actually a fascinating question. I think that it has worked well in the past. I don't anticipate that there's anything to be fixed to make it work better. We have the ability with crossjurisdictional agreements, both within Canada and to the United States and even around the world, for resources of either human power or equipment to make sure that we have the necessary resources to fight our wildfires and, as well, to help out our neighbours in their wildfire-fighting seasons.

5:30

As we saw and as I noted, last year Alberta had a fairly – not a very big wildfire season. We didn't have a large number of wildfires. B.C. unfortunately did, right? So we had the ability to assist them. That assistance was mostly in the form of people power, not so much resources. But those contractors as well have the ability to go across boundaries. Also, we do contract people power as well, you know, boots on the ground. Some of those are contract crews. Some of them are crews that are on standby; others are not. Crews that are not strictly on standby will have the ability as well that if there's a wildfire season that's worse, like we saw last year in B.C., they're able to go across the border and do what they're trained to do and, frankly, make some money doing it. That's worked well. It's a bit of a comparison to our contractors as well. Even though our contractors are under contract to ensure the safety and well-being of Albertans, if our season is low, they do have an ability to go across the border and assist our neighbours across the continent.

I think that currently the system is working well or is working like it should be working, but I would welcome any suggestions, you know, like if the province of Alberta should be buying more aircraft. That might not necessarily be a bad idea.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: I think I've got 30 seconds, so I might only get the question in. Being that we're talking about B.C. and the fires that they had, has your ministry developed any new strategies to combat the pine beetle problem within forestry so that we don't experience those devastating fires that British Columbia experienced with dead and unharvestable wood, strictly a pine beetle issue? I just wondered if the ministry of forestry had done any more work . . .

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. Would you like to share your time with the minister?

Loyola: Yes, I will share time with the Minister of Community and Social Services, Mr. Chair. It's along the same vein as I was asking the Minister of Justice in terms of the monies provided for the Sexual Assault Centre and creating awareness around that. I believe it is in the $5.1 million for family and community safety that monies from this ministry have also been allocated, but I'm not a hundred per cent sure on all the details of that. To the minister of community services: I'm hoping that you can provide some more detail on some of the grant funding provided through your ministry for this particular issue.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Chair, and thank you, Member. As I was discussing earlier, we have worked with the Association of Alberta Sexual Assault Services from day one. Initially we provided them a grant of $800,000 for the I Believe You campaign, then $1.6 million for counselling wait times. Then last fall, when we met – the Minister of Justice, Status of Women, and my ministry – we were all working with them on a business plan, and they presented a business plan of $8.1 million for all three ministers. We did provide them $4.1 million in operational funding, and that was an ask above and beyond what we already provided them. So we funded their entire business case, and $5.1 million was the share that Community and Social Services provided out of that $8.1 million in funding.

Our hope is that this funding will go a long way in responding to the survivors who are coming forward and providing them with the supports they need, crisis support and counselling support. The funding that was provided by Justice and Solicitor General will go to facilitating survivors in court processes. If they choose to pursue those matters in the courts, then that funding will support them with the court process. That increase of $5.1 million in the community supports grant is exclusively for the business case that the Association of Alberta Sexual Assault Services provided us.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. I notice here, too, that there are two line items dedicated to persons with disabilities and the supports that are provided for them. I'm fairly familiar with the supports provided for adults in the province. Could you go into a little bit more detail about the difference in the supports for children with disabilities and what your ministry is providing for them, Minister?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Chair, and thank you to the member for the question. As you mentioned, the persons with developmental disabilities program, the PDD program, provides supports to adult Albertans with disabilities, and as the name suggests, the family support for children with disabilities program provides supports to families who have children with disabilities. Supplementary funding is needed to address the caseload growth in this area, and we are asking for $19.8 million. This year the family support for children with disabilities caseload is projected to grow by 10.7 per cent, nearly 12,500 people. There are many reasons for that, I guess, more awareness about the programs that government is providing and more families seeking those supports for their loved ones.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd now like to go back and forth with the Minister of Children's Services if she doesn't mind, just to ask her a couple of questions there. I'm going to start with a relatively broad question. I couldn't imagine not following through with the amount requested. I believe it's $46.9 million for child intervention to address the higher caseloads. To the minister: what would happen if we chose not to fund this? What detrimental effect would that have?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for the very important question. I think it's, again, important to recognize that caseloads are not numbers on a balance sheet. They're really about real people, real Albertans, real children in real families that absolutely need the supports that we provide in order to have the very best outcome. Those children, those families count on us to ensure that the supports we provide are there to keep their children's future bright and to invest in those opportunities for those children to thrive.

Certainly, some of the important work that we're doing is providing those wraparound services to families to help ensure that children stay with their families and don't enter into care. Certainly, what would be put into jeopardy by not providing those services, Madam Chair, would be that we actually would start to see an increase again in children in care. There's been important work done within Children's Services and with the staff, with tremendous commitment of our front-line staff, to wraparound families to keep children safe in their families, in their homes instead of the disruption of having to apprehend them and bring them into care.

We've seen a reduction in the number of children being brought into care, which, certainly, evidence shows is incredibly important to the children of this province. We want to be able to continue that. We want to be able to provide support to those families. We want to provide the services that they need to help parents to be at their very best and to keep those families together. Certainly, without this investment, we would be seeing children not getting the support they needed, families not getting the support they needed. Instead of being held together, families would be torn apart, and instead of children having all the opportunities they need to grow and thrive, they might not even be receiving the supports that they need in order to be able to move forward.

I'm really thankful for the support of everyone in this House to recognize the value of quality child intervention services. This government will continue to be committed to supporting the work that our committed front-line workers do to provide every child who comes into their care and every family that comes into their care with the support they need in order to have those good outcomes.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you once again, Madam Chair. Our government is working really hard to make life more affordable for Alberta families, and of course this ministry specifically has a lot to do with that. I'm hoping, Minister, that you can go into a little bit more detail on how the funds provided through your ministry ensure support for Alberta's children and youth.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for the question. We have a wide variety of services that we provide. We've talked about child intervention quite a bit, you know, and talked with other members of this House about supports for permanency and about providing supports for adoptive parents and private guardians to be able to support the children to the best of their ability with that additional support as well as helping those young adults who have been in care successfully transition to adulthood. So some amazing work is happening there.

I think one of the things that a lot of Albertans are excited about is the work that we're doing around supporting access to quality early learning and child care programs. Certainly, there's a lot of evidence to show that investing in those early years, investing in those years when we know, as evidence shows, that brain development is so important – that early childhood development sets the framework and the baseline from which children can grow into their full potential. Investments in those times have, certainly, a return that's greatly multiplied over time.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

We'll now return to the Official Opposition side. The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

The Deputy Chair: Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Chestermere is a great place but a long way from Sundre. A very different elevation, Madam Chair.

Mrs. Aheer: Is it the golden jewel?

Mr. Nixon: Yeah. Exactly.

The Deputy Chair: You have 10 minutes. Would you like to go back and forth?

Mr. Nixon: I'd like to go back and forth with the Justice minister if possible, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Please go ahead.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to start off with the $18.9 million that the Justice minister is asking for in supplementary supply, that's stated for the RCMP. Her department, you will know, recently announced a $10 million investment in RCMP officers and Crown prosecutors, $8 million for RCMP officers and $2 million for Crown prosecutors. My curiosity is up as I look at this number to know if any of this number will be going towards paying for part of that investment in the short term to get officers into our communities. The reason I would ask is that the reality – and I think that if the Justice minister has taken any time to come and talk to any of our communities, and I'm not sure she has, but if she has, she will have heard from the RCMP and from the detachments that they do not have enough officers in the depot in Saskatchewan to be able to fill positions at all, right now anyway.

In fact, Madam Chair, right now Lacombe county, which I have the privilege of representing, Red Deer county, which I have the privilege of representing, Ponoka county, which I have the privilege of representing, Mountain View county, which I have the privilege of representing, and Clearwater county, which I have the privilege of representing, are all going forward with investing their ratepayers' money in police officers in their community. Lacombe county and Red Deer county in particular have now been waiting upwards of two years to get an officer because of that investment. If this amount of money that I'm talking about right now in supplementary supply is being invested into the government's promise to be able to put boots on the ground in our communities, the question then becomes: how is that possible? If we can't get an officer with a two-year wait, how is the government going to be able to get officers in the period of time between now and when the budget comes down? You know, it begs the further question, Madam Chair, of how the government is going to follow through on their promise when there are no officers in the community. That is one of the first questions that I'd be curious to hear about.

I'm also interested in the $810,000 amount that's for the municipal policing grant. The same question: will that go to helping communities that are investing in officers or in administration staff? That's another issue. Again, if the minister has taken some time to talk to communities, I'm sure that she has heard that there's a need to invest in administration staff to be able to get our existing officers out actually working in the field and not in the office doing paperwork. And if that amount is being invested into those, will it be prioritized for rural communities, that are receiving an epidemic proportion of crime, as you know, Madam Chair?

I know that just recently, it seems, the government is starting to come around to recognizing what is taking place in rural Alberta, so I suspect that maybe they are looking at that with supplementary supply. Of course, the last time that we talked about this in great detail in this Chamber, the government denied that that epidemic was happening inside our communities and, in fact, denied an emergency debate, so maybe they have chosen not to put that in supplementary supply. But based on their announcements in the last few days, I find that interesting.

The other question I have is: in what ways is any of this supplementary supply by this ministry being used to deal with the unique problem that we're facing in rural Alberta communities in regard to crime? I think this minister has indicated in the press lately and in answers to questions inside this Chamber that the government is finally taking this issue seriously. The proof will be in the pudding, so to speak, Madam Chair. But we're excited to see at least that, you know, again, like with so many issues that we've talked about in this Chamber, we lead. The government is finally following.

The people back home in my communities right now don't have time anymore to wait. The people that are facing home invasions and constant victimization from crimes don't have time to wait, the people that are waiting on this Justice minister to pick up the phone – maybe she'll use some of supplemental supply to do that – to call the federal Justice minister and start lobbying for Criminal Code reform to make sure people in my communities aren't being convicted 51 times and then coming back and revictimizing people in our communities. [interjection] The hon. Member for West Yellowhead may think that's funny, but I can assure you that people in my community do not.

My first set of questions to the minister. What in the supplementary supply is she using for that rural crime problem? And will she use any of it to finally come and visit and talk to the rural people that are being impacted by crime in central Alberta, or will she continue to stay in Edmonton and not talk to us?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. There was a bunch of stuff going on in those questions. I'm going to try to address them in roughly the order in which they were posed. Obviously, we've been hearing from rural Albertans about their concerns, and we take those concerns very, very seriously. That's why we announced funding for a strategy to address what's going on in rural Alberta.

I'd like to note that since the member seems to editorialize, I'll feel free to do so as well. I'd like to note that when his leader was asked in Olds just recently about what their plan was, he said that they needed a year to develop their policy. I agree with the member. I think that the time for action is now, and that's why we're taking action right now.

With respect to this $18.9 million to address the RCMP contract, that's actually a number that relates to a slightly different thing although, interestingly, quite related to the issue that he identified. We've heard from a number of communities as well that there are concerns with being able to recruit and retain RCMP officers in certain areas. One of the reasons for that is, as the member will no doubt be aware, there was a Supreme Court ruling a couple of years ago that the RCMP were permitted to bargain collectively, so they have been in the process of attempting to pick a representative in order to do that. That process continues to be ongoing.

In the interim the federal minister – I can't remember his exact title – of public safety or public security had allowed an increase in the salaries of RCMP officers, and in part that was intended to address the fact that they're having trouble retaining people because while this process of waiting for the collective bargaining to work itself out goes on, those officers were not receiving any increases, so that had created that problem. As a result, he approved a certain number of increases over a couple of different years, and some of them are retroactive. So this $18.9 million is actually going to address that contract. Because the province contracts through the PPSA and we pay for policing for rural communities and for communities with 5,000 people or fewer, unlike other municipalities, this is our portion of that. Because the salaries of those officers have increased and there's some back pay that results from that, this number is going to pay directly to those front-line officers, so that's a contract piece there.

The $0.8 million for municipal police assistance grants: that requires a little bit of explanation. Alberta is actually, I'm very proud to say, a province that invests more into policing than any of our western neighbours. The way we do that is twofold. For rural municipalities and urbans under 5,000 the province pays for policing subject, of course, as the member has noted, to the fact that they can contract for additional officers by paying for those officers. For other urban centres they pay for their policing, and the province supports them in three ways. We support them through police officer grants, returned fine revenues, and municipal police assistance grants, which is noted here.

In this case the increase relates to the fact that those municipal police assistance grants are based on population, so because the final population numbers came in a little bit higher, essentially there's a little bit more money that's owed to those municipalities to support them in paying for policing. That's what's going on there.

The member also asked a question about civilian staff. That isn't represented here, but in the announcement we made with respect to the RCMP, that's exactly what we're doing. Part of that will be to hire 40 civilian staff. Some of them will be placed in crime reduction units doing intelligence-led policing, and some of them will be placed, 23 of them, in a special unit that will allow RCMP officers to call in and make certain reports. As the member will no doubt be aware, sometimes the uplinks in the cars, the ability of the officer to put their report on those uplinks from the cars, aren't able to make it. The result is that those RCMP officers have to drive from wherever the crime was committed back all the way to their detachments, and sometimes that's quite a long distance, as the member is no doubt aware.

Those civilian employees will enable the officers to phone in certain very basic reports and have civilian employees do that data input, and then those officers are able to stay in their communities. We've certainly heard from those communities that one of their big concerns is about visibility.

I think that answers all of the questions. I tried to write them all down. Thank you very much.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I will point out one thing in response to the minister. Our leader, as she pointed out, was referring to a year, but what he was referring to was that if we are fortunate enough to replace this government in a year, we would finally have to take action because the government has chosen until now not to take action. You know, it begs the question from hearing the monologue from the minister: what has taken her so long as the Minister of Justice to take action despite being warned by rural Albertans for over a year that this was taking place? For over a year to leave rural Alberta completely abandoned while being victimized is a real shame.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

We will now return to the government side. Are there any other members wishing to speak? Hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, you have one minute to go back and forth if you would like.

Mr. Malkinson: Oh, wow. Thank you, Chair. I was wondering. There is an amount in estimates for Economic Development and Trade regarding the Alberta carbon conversion technology centre. I wonder if the minister could tell us about what that's for.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister for Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and I'll thank the member for the question. Essentially, what we're doing here is transferring $10 million from the expense category over to the capital investment category. This isn't an increase, and the funding was required to address the capital investment for the building of the facility. This is a partnership between the private sector, the government of Alberta, partnering as well with the federal government to essentially turn carbon dioxide emissions into useful and usable products. It is an incredible story which I look forward to telling the House more about at my next opportunity.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. Oh. I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee shall now rise and report progress.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Chair. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration the supplementary supply estimates for the fiscal year ending 2017-18, reports progress thereon, and requests leave to sit again.

The Acting Speaker: Having heard the report, all those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: All those opposed, please say no. So ordered.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Given the time and the progress we've made today, I move that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 9 tomorrow morning.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:56 p.m.]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Prayers

The Acting Speaker: Good morning.

Let us each pray or reflect in our own way. Hon. members, time is precious. Let us use our time as public servants dedicating ourselves to achieving our common goals and working towards the betterment of our great province. Let us remember that strength and success are accomplished by working together. Listening, understanding, and respecting one another's views can open up new possibilities and new opportunities. Amen.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day Committee of Supply

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Good morning. I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Hon. members, before we commence this morning's consideration of supplementary supply, I would like to remind members where the committee left off in the rotation. When the Committee of Supply reported progress yesterday, there were three hours and two minutes remaining for consideration of supplementary supply pursuant to Government Motion 6, agreed to on March 13, 2018, and members from the government had nine minutes remaining in the rotation, to be followed by members of the Official Opposition.

The rotation in Standing Order 59.01(6), which was outlined yesterday, is deemed to apply, and for the time remaining, to the extent possible, the rotation outlined in clauses (b) to (e) shall apply with the speaking times set at 5 minutes [at one time] as provided in Standing Order 59.02(1)(c).

The rotation will then repeat for any time remaining. Speaking times are now limited to five minutes; however, provided that the chair has been notified, a minister and a private member may combine their speaking time with both taking and yielding the floor during the combined 10-minute period.

Finally, at the conclusion of six hours of consideration, including the two hours and 58 minutes taken yesterday, or earlier if no members are wishing to speak, the Committee of Supply shall vote on the supplementary supply estimates.

Supplementary Supply Estimates 2017-18 General Revenue Fund

The Deputy Chair: Are there any members wishing to speak from the government side? Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, would you like to go back and forth?

Loyola: Yes, Madam Chair. I'd like to go back and forth with the Minister of Community and Social Services, please.

The Deputy Chair: Minister, are you in agreement?
Please go ahead.

Loyola: Thank you, Madam Chair. Good morning to all. As always, it's a pleasure to be here in the House with all of you.

Minister, I'm looking over the supplementary supply estimate request, and I see here that you have $26 million for income support to people with barriers to full employment due to increased demand for financial benefits. I'm hoping that you can go into a little bit more detail about this line item and perhaps even give us a few case scenarios of people in the community that you may know that require funds from this particular line item.

Mr. Sabir: Which line item?

Loyola: It's the $26 million for income support to people with barriers to full employment, Minister.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you, Member, for the question. As you can see, the employment and income support programs are divided into two broad categories. One is: expected to work. The other one is: barriers to full employment. In general, the expected to work category includes those individuals who are temporarily out of work and are expected to get back to work, I guess, in a shorter period of time while barriers to full employment are those individuals who have multiple barriers other than just market conditions. They may have some educational barriers in terms of their abilities, different kinds of barriers. We have seen that caseload go up as well because the market conditions are tough. It's difficult for these individuals to get back into the market to get a job. In order to deal with that increased demand, we're adding this money so that we can provide for those individuals.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Madam Chair. I know that the last couple of years have been really tough. I've had a few constituents of mine that have actually come into the office, of course, requiring help with income support. To the minister: could you describe a little bit about how the process is for these constituents of mine to actually engage with your office, how it is that they go about applying for this, and the benefits of this program to these people?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you, Member. We do have Alberta Supports and Alberta Works centres throughout our province, and the locations are available online. You can look into what will be the closest office for whoever is looking for the benefits. An Alberta Supports centre will be able to assess their eligibility and provide them with all the benefits that they may be eligible for. Other than that, I believe that my office's information is also available online. For the most part they're administered by Alberta Supports and Alberta Works centres, and we do have Alberta Supports and Alberta Works centres throughout our province. There is an emergency hotline as well, which supports them after hours if there is some emergency. They can also help provide those benefits.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Yeah. I see that we have the Minister of Status of Women here in the House this morning, and I just wanted to ask her a few questions if she doesn't mind. First, before I launch into that, I just want to say how proud I am of our government and the fact that we have established this Ministry of Status of Women. When I'm out door-knocking in the community, when I'm out meeting people, people are so incredibly proud of what this government has done and specifically with the introduction of gender plus analysis in all of the legislation that we're bringing forward here in the province.

I have to say that the programs encouraging women to get more involved in the political sphere, no matter what level of government, have been inspirational to so many women. I have to say that in my neck of the woods in southeast Edmonton and not just in Edmonton-Ellerslie but, you know, in Edmonton-Mill Woods as well as Edmonton-Mill Creek, really, I can personally see it myself with the number of women who have come forward in order to really engage in the political process.

I also had the benefit of meeting with the Edmonton Federation of Community Leagues, that ran an entire program specifically trying to welcome and engage racialized women, who normally have a lot more barriers, I would say, to participating in the democratic process here in this country and all over the country, no matter at what level. I was so incredibly encouraged to see that funds from the Ministry of Status of Women were provided to the Edmonton Federation of Community Leagues for that particular program. When I sat down and visited with these women, there were women from Africa; for example, there was a young woman from Nigeria who was incredibly involved in the last municipal election. She didn't run herself because she didn't feel ready, but she was very involved with one of the campaigns for one of the city councillors. She used that opportunity to really learn what the process was like. She was encouraged because of the program coming through Status of Women.

Of course, there was a young woman from the Philippines. There were a couple of young indigenous women sitting around the table. Let me tell you, it was probably the best hour and a half that I've spent in such a long time, being given the opportunity. Now, of course, the Minister of Status of Women asked me to sit in on that meeting on her behalf. But let me tell you, as a man we sometimes don't get to see what all those barriers are for women and especially racialized women here in this country when it comes to running for office. Having the opportunity to sit there for an hour and a half and listen to the stories of these women was really enlightening for me. I know we're doing good work, but we still have more work to do, obviously.

Now, to the Minister of Status of Women: I see here in the supplementary estimate requested for the Ministry of Status of Women that you have $675,000 for the Association of Alberta Sexual Assault Services, and yesterday we were talking at great length . . .

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

We are now moving over to the Official Opposition. Hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, would you like to go back and forth, or would you like to take five minutes?

Mr. Cooper: I would like to go back and forth if it's okay with the minister.

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Community and Social Services. You are in agreement? Yes?

Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. Cooper: Excellent. Thank you so much, Chair. It's a pleasure to be here this morning and a pleasure to see the minister joining us. I look forward to some exciting back and forth while we discuss some very important matters.

I think I would just like to start by asking the minister, you know: in the supplementary supply it's a pretty substantial number for your department, in excess of $239 million. I'm wondering if you can just briefly – I hope that you'll be brief because I do have a number of questions that I'd like to discuss with you this morning – give us a bit of a sense generally about why a lot of the $239 million costs weren't anticipated. Obviously, you're asking for additional monies here in the supplementary supply. If you can give us a bit of an overview as to – I understand that they are here – what they are. Why did you get your budget wrong by $240 million?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thanks, Member, for the question. You can see what the numbers are there, but due to the downturn in the economy there were caseload increases which were not predicted. It's human behaviour involved as well when you're making those predictions. At the same time, I guess we were committed to providing the supports which are needed. Once somebody qualifies for these programs – these are statutorily mandated programs – we have to provide those benefits. We did our best based on the estimates, the advice I received from the department from previous years' averages, but we have seen the commodity prices such as oil going down having an impact on our economy. It was the worst, I guess, downturn in 40 years, so maybe it was not possible to predict everything with absolute precision, but one thing that Albertans were sure of was that government will stand with them when they need those supports. This addition reflects that commitment that government stands with those who are in need of these services.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I must admit that I'm a little bit perplexed. I hear the Finance minister every day telling us that everything is rosy and up, up, up, yet I hear the minister of community services telling us that his budget was devastated to the tune of $230 million because of how negative the impacts of the economy have been. It's a little bit perplexing to understand how both are true, but I guess I will continue.

I'd like to drill down a little bit deeper into the exact numbers that we're speaking of. On page 26 of the supplementary supply estimates document it states that you needed an additional $13.3 million for salaries, wages, and employee benefits. Can you elaborate on the factors that came to be that required such an additional amount? How many people was that? What is the percentage of service demand increase that required an additional $13 million?

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you, Member, for the question. I described what was happening in the past year, and when the Finance minister says that things are looking up, certainly things are looking up. We have seen 90,000 full-time jobs in the last year, we have seen the economy growing by 4.5 per cent, we have seen average weekly wages go up, we have seen manufacturing go up, we have seen housing starts go up, we have seen exports go up, we have seen motor vehicle sales go up, we have seen business incorporation go up, we have seen retail sales go up, and we have seen restaurant receipts go up. So things are looking up, and we are hoping that with the economy improving, we will see some easing of those pressures.

But back to your question. When we saw oil prices going down, the economy was hit hard. The caseload in income support almost doubled, and that $13.3 million for salaries, wages, and employee benefits was reflective of that increase in the demand. Daytime calls, for instance, to our income support contact centres increased 200 per cent, from 10,000 to almost 30,000 in 2017-18. The Alberta Supports contact centres are getting 29,000 calls per month, which is 10 per cent more than what it was in '16-17.

Also, the ministry opened 22 new Alberta Supports centres in '16-17 and 12 more in '17-18, so we added more Alberta Supports centres as well so that Albertans, regardless of where they live in the province, have access to the services, have access to qualified staff so they can reach out to government programs and services.

The Deputy Chair: The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Chair. I guess I have a couple of additional questions with respect to the economy being up or down or service requirements being up or down. If, in fact, it is a direct result of a down economy and if, in fact, the Finance minister is to be believed that everything is up, up, up, can we anticipate a $13.3 million reduction in the budget next year because, clearly, there's going to be a significant reduction in the need for services? If everything you've said this morning and everything the Finance minister has said is true, then the caseload is going to be dropping off dramatically over the next number of months because the recovery has been fully felt, according to the Finance minister.

My question is two-fold. One, should we anticipate a decrease in services over the next quarter or two, and if not, when can we anticipate to see a reduction in the expenditures? I just heard you say that you're opening a whole bunch more, but in fact if the economy is recovering and that was the need, why do we need to be opening those? I'm not saying that we don't. It's possible that we do. But why do we need to if, in fact, the Finance minister is to be believed?

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you, Member, for the question. First, why we are opening more centres. We are converting the existing Alberta Works centres, which were mostly dealing with the benefits that are available through Community and Social Services, while, in moving towards Alberta Supports centres, there will be 34 different benefits available not just from CSS but from other ministries as well. For instance, if somebody needs something relating to Children's Services, child benefit, seniors' benefit, those kind of things, it will provide a full suite of services. We need those to make sure that Albertans get the supports they need.

Second thing, while we see a dramatic reduction in caseload, we are seeing that that line is flattening. The thing is that when things go down, these are individuals who are let go right away. When things start picking up, the market picks up labour based on their skills and qualifications, and there is a lag when they get back into the market. But we are hoping that with the economy growing, we will see a reduction in caseload and a reduction in that line expense.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: I will provide some time in the next set of questions for you to answer, but I'll ask it now. On page 26 of supplementary supply estimates you request an additional $39.5 million for income support to people expected to work or working due to increased demand for financial benefits. Based on the Alberta office of statistics on income support caseload that's updated February 6 of 2018, the income support caseload has continually and steadily climbed since 2014-15. Given this relatively predictable trend, why didn't your ministry budget for these services accordingly prior?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

We will now go to the government side. Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Chair. To the Minister of Status of Women . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, sorry to interrupt. Are you going back and forth?

Ms Renaud: Sure.

The Deputy Chair: Is that okay, Minister?

Ms McLean: We could do that.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Please go ahead.

Ms Renaud: I understand that the Ministry of Status of Women uses a really amazing tool, an analytic tool, gender-based analysis plus, to assess how diverse groups experience policy, programs, and initiatives. I'm wondering if you could elaborate on the specific things we're doing to support gender equality within your ministry and the activities we're supporting.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you, and thank you to the member for the question. Status of Women has three priority areas. These are to reduce violence against women and girls, to improve economic outcomes for women in Alberta, and to get more women into leadership roles, and that includes leadership like political office, seats at decision-making tables like boards and commissions, CEO positions. That's some of the work that I've been really focused on in particular, given the recent downturn, in an effort to ensure that women are part of the recovery and that they have the opportunities equivalent to their male counterparts and to take advantage of the opportunities as they're starting to grow.

To that end we asked the Alberta Securities Commission along with the Minister of Finance to adopt, disclose, or explain the rules which were adopted, a policy that was adopted in Ontario and that has been shown to incrementally increase the number of women on corporate boards. We also know that it wasn't enough to be doing that outside of government. We had to look at ourselves as well and how government was performing with respect to our appointments on our boards as agencies, boards, and commissions are responsible for the majority of the spending of the public purse, when we look at the AHS board and how large that budget is, for example.

We took a look at what our own numbers were and discovered that under the previous government, under the Tories, only a third of those seats were held by women. This was likely due to a gender-washing, which essentially means that there was not an effort to look at desegregated data or to look at the impacts that are disproportionate often of programs and policies on women and girls and how societal norms, et cetera, disproportionately affect women and girls. So knowing that and taking a conscious effort in having that gendered lens, we reviewed our policies and our procedures for recruitment to our agencies, boards, and commissions. We made it more transparent.

We looked at the wording of different postings. The wording is very important for these kinds of postings, whether it's a job or an appointment, because typically women will self-select out of positions if they see words that they don't identify with, like "leadership." Unless you expressly define what that means or can mean in the context, women will often self-select out. Also, women, we know, psychologically tend to not apply for a job until they are overqualified for it whereas men will apply for a job based on their perceived potential, of their own perceptions.

So we changed that entire process, and as a result we are now at over 50 per cent of those seats on our agencies, boards, and commissions being held by women. That goes to show what can happen when you apply that gendered lens, the GBA-plus analysis. It helps to identify who benefits and who is left behind and then allows you the room and knowledge to mitigate for those impacts. That's what we've done on the leadership piece, and it shows real, concrete impacts.

So often I hear comments. We were just at the United Nations, and we were discussing impacts on rural women and girls across the world. Obviously, my focus was particularly with a lens to rural women and girls in Alberta. It was unfortunate to hear from some more conservatively minded individuals this perspective that for some reason women need to be, quote, qualified whereas for men that same standard does not apply when it comes to leadership positions. We've seen that play out time and time again in this province. So it's important that when we say words like "qualified," we actually define what that means and that those metrics are evenly applied. So often it's used as a way to say that women aren't good enough and that that's why, even though they make up 50 per cent of the population, there are legitimate reasons to not fill those positions.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, you have spoken for five minutes. If we could allow the member to ask a second question.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Sure. Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm so happy that we are using this tool to ensure that the policies that we make and the programs that we support and the initiatives we encourage are indeed accessible to everybody. People might not know that GBA-plus is a lens for race, ethnicity, religion, age, mental and physical disability.

Now, I was, of course, like most people, thrilled to hear about the additional funding for the sexual assault centres and funding to address counselling wait-lists, and that is particularly important, I think we've all seen. You'd have to be asleep most days not to notice that more and more women are emboldened to disclose. They're feeling safer, and they're talking about workplace harassment, abuse, assault. We're hearing it from all over. I think we're at a turning point. We aren't going to go back, and I'm incredibly thankful for that. Unfortunately, not everybody is at the same place. Some people still excuse that behaviour because they were young or they didn't know any better, but I think that this government is clearly drawing a line about what is acceptable and what is not.

In my previous work and in my work on the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities one of the lenses that we apply is disability. In particular, we know that women with disabilities face a very high likelihood of being abused at some point in their lives. Domestic violence is a very real problem for them as well, as is access to counselling. Many, many women with disabilities have additional barriers to counselling, not just financial or time but physical accessibility. I'm wondering if the minister could expand on this a little bit and tell us about how this analysis is going to support women with disabilities as well as women that are feeling strong enough and supported enough to come forward and disclose.

Ms McLean: Thank you for the questions. I'll note, particularly in light of the Me Too movement and the number of women that are coming forward of all stripes and socioeconomic backgrounds, that these are very important questions. These are very important topics, that we should all be listening to very carefully, paying heightened attention to. You know, certainly, while my friends in the opposition – the opposition whip, I'm sure, has important considerations. I would encourage him to listen to the question even though that has not been my observation.

To that end, I would love to take the opportunity to talk about how the additional funding for AASAS, which is historic and very important in this province, is something that has never been done in this situation before. In fact, I'm informed that across the country, the funding that has been provided to AASAS, the Association of Alberta Sexual Assault Services, is the most funding that any province has provided to rape crisis centres. When we talk about the most funding, in the scope of government we're still talking about small dollars, $8.1 million. I would certainly encourage the deputy Leader of the Official Opposition to pay attention to this point as well.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, we are now past your time.

We will go to the Official Opposition. Hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, will you continue to go back and forth with the Minister of Community and Social Services?

Mr. Cooper: Please.

The Deputy Chair: Minister, you're okay with that?

Mr. Sabir: Sure. Please.

The Deputy Chair: Please proceed.

Mr. Cooper: Just prior to the end of our time I asked a question specifically related to the fact that there has been a steady trend of increase in need for services. Given that this relatively predictable trend with respect to income support for those expected to work has been consistent over a long period of time, why did your ministry not budget accordingly for these services?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you. As we were talking earlier, you indicated that this caseload was increasing from 2014-15, and that was the time when we saw a decrease in the commodity prices and the kind of decrease we saw in oil prices, that was unprecedented, and a downturn we haven't seen in 40 years. What we were doing – we were absolutely committed to making sure that Albertans got the supports they needed, but sometimes it was impossible to predict those numbers with absolute certainty because the caseload was increasing at an unprecedented rate due to the unprecedented drop in the price of oil. More people were asking for money. However, whether it was forecasted with certainty or not, Albertans were certain of one thing, that they would get the supports they needed. Government will stand with them when they need those supports.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Yes. You did not just miss it by a little; you missed by $40 million at a time when, if you believe the Finance minister, everything is coming back up, up, up. The caseload must be just dropping off at breakneck speed if the Finance minister is to be believed.

On page 26 of the supplementary supply estimates document you note that an additional $26 million is required for income support to people with barriers to full employment due to increased demand for financial benefits. Now, it's my understanding that for Albertans to qualify for income supports due to barriers to full-time benefits, they must have a combination of the following factors: persistent mental or physical impairment; lack of formal employment, social skills, work history; age; et cetera. Can you explain why the number for this line item has grown since your previous budget and what the factors were that led to this increase?

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you, Member, for the question. You indicated the factors for barriers to full employment. This is a line item that is not directly tied with the unemployment rate. Rather, we have seen, historically, a steady increase. Over the period of the last year there was, I guess, more caseload growth. Again, it's a statutory program. When Albertans show up at any Alberta Supports centre or reach out to the Community and Social Services ministry, once they qualify and fall into the criteria you explained, they get the benefits that they are entitled to.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd just like to ask a couple of quick questions here with respect to supply and some comments the minister has made in the past and whether or not there'll be implications for this in any line items in supply. Minister, we understand that you had no intention of a PDD review until just a few months ago. I believe it was January 19 when the PDD review was announced. As such, it could not have possibly been budgeted for in the previous year. Does the work being done on the PDD review that was announced in January fall under any supplementary supply line item?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Member, for the important question. With respect to this program, in the last two and a half years we have done a number of things. We have always been open to working with the community on all issues that matter to them. For instance, when I became minister, the first issue I heard was the safety standards regulation, so I worked with the community. More than 2,000 Albertans participated in that consultation, and we repealed that regulation, that was not liked by anyone, actually, across the province.

Coming out of that recommendation report were almost 11 recommendations, and a PDD review was one of them. But there were other recommendations that could have been implemented in the short term, where the community can benefit right away, so we worked on a number of recommendations. Other than that, we also repealed the supports intensity scale.

When I was touring around the province last year, there was still a desire that we can learn from this review, that the community can benefit from this review, and we agreed to that. At this point we are consulting with the community with respect to the scope and process of the review, and the department is absorbing those costs. Once that process and scope is set out, we will see how we will support that review, and we will certainly provide what it takes to do that review in a meaningful way.

Mr. Cooper: Surely you will agree that there are some significant costs for a review of this size and magnitude. What I hear you saying is that you have so much buffer room in all of your other budgets that you can absorb all of those costs into the work that the department is already doing, or you're spending money on the PDD review that is either unbudgeted or not in the supplementary supply line items. Can you help me better understand which one of those two things is what's actually happening: you have tons of extra space and, as such, you can travel around the province and put the foundation in for what is a very important review, or you're spending money outside of what should be in a supply line item?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Member. I think that's not what I said, that you heard. What I said is that it's a two-phase review process. In the first phase we are gathering input and feedback from individuals, families, advocates, service providers with respect to the scope and process of the review. At that point, once we have that feedback, we will determine what the scope of the review is and the process we will take, and we will have a better idea of what it will cost to do that review.

The fundamental thing that I want to point out in this review is that it's different from previous reviews done by accountants. We are working with the community from day one because we believe in the slogan Nothing about Us without Us. From step 1 to the end we will work with them and include them in the most meaningful way possible so that they decide about their services, their future, how to improve this program.

The Deputy Chair: The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Chair. Last spring the House voted unanimously to create a disability advocate, and we have heard very little on this matter since then. Does the position fall under any budget line that's now in your supplementary supply, as it clearly would have been difficult to budget prior given that the vote was only last spring to have this? At times during that debate we had heard that the costs may be as high as $900,000. I'm curious to know exactly the status of the disability advocate. Is there a line item in your supplementary supply that will cover the costs of that? If there are no resources currently being spent on the office, is that because it hasn't been created yet? Are there any financial resources in your supplementary supply budget allocated to the recruitment of this position? Can you give us some sense of why we haven't heard anything, the actual costs, and why they're not included in supplementary supply if they aren't? Or if they are, please give some indication as such.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you, Member, for the important question. Yes, last session we created the disability advocate. I'm very proud to stand with a government that, within less than two years in office, was able to create the first disability advocate Alberta will ever have. With respect to that office it's not about just hiring one individual; it was about setting up a whole support office within the ministry. Then we reached out to . . .

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

We will now go to the Member for Calgary-South East for the Alberta Party.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, would you like to go back and forth for your 10 minutes?

Mr. Fraser: Yes, please.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Minister, is there agreement?

Mr. Fraser: Community and Social Services.

The Deputy Chair: Minister? Yeah.

Please go ahead.

Mr. Fraser: Minister, on page 26 the $81.4 million in unexpected expenses for employment and income supports suggests that Alberta is not experiencing the strong economic recovery that you've been boasting about. How many Albertans were served by this increase and from what parts of Alberta? Can you please explain why you did not take into account these increased demands?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Member, for the question. I think these numbers reflect those who received services from income support programs. As I said, it was the worst downturn that Alberta has seen in 40 years. It was an unprecedented downturn due to the decrease in the price of oil and other commodities. Out of this, $39 million is for those who are expected to work. Due to that increased caseload, we will provide those services with that. At this point there are 34,200 people, which is a 65 per cent increase from '15-16 in this caseload growth. And $26 million out of that $81 million is for barriers to full employment.

But we are seeing improvement in the job situation and the economy. Our economy grew by 4.5 per cent, the fastest across this country, and we have seen jobs coming back. Like, 90,000 jobs were added just last year. Our GDP growth is up. Wages are up. But what happens when we see these improvements is that there is always a lag in terms of people getting off this caseload and getting back into the market. So we will see a little bit of a lag, but we are seeing the flattening of the line, and we are hoping that this year we will see a decrease in this number and fewer people needing those supports.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thanks. One additional question on this particular issue. You're talking about the growth within the province, particularly that there may be more people here trying to find some economic gains and/or employment. How many people from out of province were approved through AISH in this last little bit, that would maybe explain some of these increases?

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you. AISH provides benefits to Albertans who are ordinarily resident. When somebody is a permanent resident or citizen and is ordinarily resident in Alberta, it will provide that benefit to those Albertans. So whoever received AISH benefits in the last year was qualified under the existing criteria, which is enshrined in our law. We don't provide benefits to somebody who is sitting outside the province. You have to be a permanent resident or citizen and ordinarily resident in the province in order to apply and qualify for this benefit. Does that answer your question?

Mr. Fraser: Let me clarify. Perhaps it's people that came here, that were on AISH in other provinces, that became ordinary citizens of this province, that could not receive work or could not receive employment through your programs. Was that anticipated? And are there any measures that you're looking at in terms of people that come from out of province that are already on social assistance, that have been approved by those provinces and that come here now looking for, maybe, employment through our programs and do not receive it? That, then, maybe explains part of this increase.

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Chair. I don't know if I'm following the question, but every province has a different program and different statutory or regulatory requirements in order to qualify for those benefits. The AISH program sets those requirements in the AISH Act and regulations. You know, one of the qualifications is that you need to be ordinarily resident in order to qualify for that.

If you are asking whether there is some influx from outside of Alberta on these programs, I was looking at some numbers from 2012-13, when there was an increase of $400 in the AISH program. If you see the caseload growth during that time, it was still not a huge jump out of the ordinary, that people started planning their move to Alberta around that benefit. There was still a steady growth in that program. This time around we haven't seen that kind of thing, that somebody is moving from out of province just to get AISH.

People qualify when they have disabilities, and if they meet that criteria, we will provide this benefit because it's a statutory benefit.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Chair. Could you please explain the $23.5 million in AISH caseload growth? How many individuals does that represent? Are there differences in the severity of these individual cases in terms of their conditions or financial needs compared to the pre-existing caseloads? Similarly, the $43.8 million in PDD caseload growth and $19.8 million in family support for children with disabilities.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Member. With respect to AISH, the $23.5 million, that was required to accommodate higher than expected caseload growth. The caseload is projected to grow by 6.7 per cent in 2017-18, and the total number will be around 58,800 individuals. That caseload growth is a bit higher than what we have seen before.

In terms of if there is a difference between what they get, AISH is in fact guaranteed, if I can put it that way. It's a guaranteed income program. It makes sure that your income from all sources doesn't fall below a certain limit, the legislated limit of $1,588. Sometimes when the economy goes down, people who have some part-time employment might lose that, and the government will have an obligation to make sure their income doesn't fall below $1,588. Sometimes that also increases the cost per case. In general, I guess, the program is to ensure that everyone who is on this caseload gets $1,588 minimum from this program from all sources. There are certain incomes that are exempt, nonexempt, partially exempt, so there are some exemptions available to them if they have some employment income, that kind of thing.

With respect to PDD funding it's $40 million higher than what we asked for initially – the caseload is projected to grow by 4.1 per cent, to more than 11,900 individuals – $3 million of that was used to support the minimum wage increase and to accommodate the agencies with more overnight staffing and those kinds of services, and $2.4 million for career and employment services for persons with developmental disabilities was offset by a grant from the federal government. So that makes a total of $46 million that we increased for PDD.

Similarly, in FSCD we have seen a significant caseload growth; that is, 10.7 per cent, making the caseload almost 12,500. That's why we added $19.8 million. I guess there were many factors at play: increased awareness among parents about these services, better diagnostics, technologies, and research.

In all of that, we can say that these are statutorily mandated programs. When Albertans qualify, government has an obligation to provide those benefits. During these tough times, certainly, these programs were more needed. We make sure that Albertans get the support they need.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Minister, you mentioned when you were speaking about PDD – and perhaps this is in some of the other questions that I've asked – the unanticipated. Are you saying that you guys did not anticipate your own increase to minimum wage, that that's why? When you initially funded this, you knew all along that minimum wage was going to be increased, yet you couldn't budget for that, and this is why we're where we're at?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

We'll now move on to the government side. Are there any members wishing to speak? Hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert, would you like to go back and forth?

Mr. Horne: Please. With the Minister of Indigenous Relations.

The Deputy Chair: Minister, you're in agreement?

Mr. Feehan: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Please go ahead.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Chair, and thank you to the minister for agreeing to go back and forth in sharing our time today. Now, of course, I think we can all agree in this House that the work of Indigenous Relations is so incredibly important, especially as we gather today on Treaty 6 lands and we acknowledge all of the challenges facing many of our indigenous people both on-reserve and in our urban communities.

Now, Minister, I notice that there's fairly little in the supplementary supply directly in relation to your ministry, and I wanted to commend you on that careful management of your budget. I did notice that there were some transactions with the climate office. You know, I've heard a lot of positive feedback in terms of that from my communities. As well, being a member of the Métis Nation, I've also heard a lot of comments from that community. I was hoping to get a little bit more insight, perhaps, on what work your ministry has been doing on climate change in relation to our indigenous peoples and how these are really helping communities right across the province, how much interest there is, and what the challenges are for indigenous communities accessing those funds.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much, and thank you to the member for the question. The climate leadership initiative has been a very important part of the work that we're doing with the indigenous community and, in many ways, is reflective of our ongoing commitment to the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples. I can explain that in a couple of different ways. One is that one of the commitments that we have made is that whenever Alberta does well, we should be ensuring that all members of the province do well. That includes the indigenous population within this province. As such, we have been working with the community to look at ways in which they can participate in the climate leadership initiative. Thanks very much to the carbon levy that has been put together in this province for the last couple of years, we've been able to have money dedicated particularly to what we refer to as the indigenous climate leadership initiative. In the past year that totalled approximately $35 million.

The decision was made to do two things, and we've been working with the indigenous community on those two things. The first was to describe seven programs that would allow the First Nations to participate in the actual care of the environment, reducing the carbon footprint. I think it's very important that we recognize that the indigenous people in this province have in fact been the caretakers of the environment in this province forever, frankly, however long back that goes. They have done so diligently and in such an incredibly good way that they've been able to pass on the environment from generation to generation and teach the next generation how they are to deal with the environment in a way that's positive.

When we put together the carbon levy and, subsequently, these programs, they were very excited about the programs. They were very excited about the philosophy of taking care of our Earth. In fact, they very often have commented to me that the very fact that we put together such an extensive program, starting with the carbon levy, has really allowed them to be supportive of a lot of the other work that we're doing in this province such as the building of the pipelines to the coast. I know that sometimes you read in the media that we are somehow violating indigenous rights by building a pipeline, but they've made it very clear that moccasins come in pairs. That means that while you're building the economy, while you're creating jobs, which, of course, are very much desired in the indigenous community, opportunities for employment, you're also taking care of the environment.

I can tell you that the social licence that we're looking for around the pipeline debate is clearly and absolutely reflected in the responses of the indigenous community, who tell us that without taking care of the environment, they could not be in favour of the work in the oil and gas industry. The fact that we are doing both together makes it responsible, reasonable, and consistent with the philosophy that you pass things on to your next generation in a positive way.

Coming from the carbon levy, we were able to design seven programs. The seven programs run the gamut that starts with the ability for communities to educate themselves and their chief and councils or the Métis settlements chairs and councils on all of the aspects they need to understand in order to participate in this new economy that we're building in this province and in order to be able to educate their communities about the programs that are available but also about the need to move forward and how we've designed the process to move forward.

In addition, we've designed programs that allow them to take immediate action such as the solar panel program, which allows communities to put solar panels up on any of their buildings. Now, of course, you may know that many communities are a bit ahead of us on this one, communities such as Montana, communities such as Louis Bull, that are already putting up solar panels on some of their public buildings. So we went to them and we learned from them. We are very excited about the leadership that they have shown to us, and we thank them for that leadership. We have used that knowledge that they have to move ahead in terms of the design of our programs. Initially we ran a pilot program in the fall of 2016 in which they were able to put up solar panels and we were to look at the design of the program and look at how that worked.

The second program that we . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, you have hit your five minutes.

If we could have a question asked back to the minister, please. The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Yes. Thank you, Chair. Now, Minister, there was one point or one transaction in here that I did take note of, and that is in relation to the Siksika Nation and some money for the repairing and rebuilding of flood-impacted homes in their community. I noticed that it was previously budgeted in 2016-17, but it lapsed due to the timing of some cash requirements. Of course, you know, housing, especially on our reserves, is a very important issue and one that, unfortunately, we haven't paid as much attention to historically. So I'm happy to see that that is something that we are addressing, but I was hoping to get a bit more information on why it lapsed and what we're looking at moving forward.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much for the question. As you indicated, housing is an extremely important aspect of all of our lives, and unfortunately in the floods of 2014 many people lost their homes, particularly the three Stoney communities and, of course, Siksika. Hundreds of homes, indeed, were lost and replaced. Fortunately, we were able to make some arrangements for building in all of those communities fairly efficiently. For the Stoney tribes it has been completed. All of those homes are built. We in fact have been able to extend a small piece to one of the Stoney tribes to add six additional homes recently, so it's been a very successful program, and we're wrapping that up very nicely.

The reason why we are bringing money forward from the 2016-17 budget now in the supplementary reading is largely for Siksika First Nation because the timing of the build in Siksika has been a little bit different. As a result, we're simply now asking for money which was previously budgeted for this very purpose and just bringing forward dollars that have already been booked against our books, our liabilities, and are now reducing our liabilities. So the $31,923,000 will now be brought forward in order to complete the final . . .

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

We will now return to the Official Opposition side. The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Chair. My questions will be regarding Agriculture and Forestry, and I will ask the Minister of Municipal Affairs if that's all right. I'd go back and forth with him if that's all right with the minister.

The Deputy Chair: Minister, are you in agreement to go back and forth?

Mr. S. Anderson: Yeah. That's fine.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Please go ahead.

Mr. Schneider: This year the supplementary supply for Ag and Forestry is $257,223,000 in addition to the $4.5 million made available from lower than budgeted expenses elsewhere in the ministry. Where my colleague left off yesterday is where I'm going to pick it up at. The Suffield fire last year caused a great amount of damage to special area farmers and ranchers. I think Municipal Affairs probably has a little bit to do with this anyway. Is any of the money within the Ag and Forestry supplementary supply earmarked for those interest-free loans that were announced last year?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on behalf of the minister in question. As you know, the wildfire budget is variable every year and dependent on the experiences of any particular year in terms of our decision-making. Each year we look at the particular costs that arrive at the particular time. Any of the particular expenditures, some of which you've identified, that have arrived in this year will be included in the supplementary budget. The costs vary from year to year depending on their nature, and the extraordinary wildfires in this particular year have resulted in this particular increase. I can tell you that as bills come in from that particular fire in that location, they will be paid for out of the budget that is available, including the supplementary budget.

Mr. Schneider: Is any other funding for either the Suffield or Waterton area fires being topped up? Same kind of a question: would Waterton be involved in the same supplementary supply, the bills for that particular fire as well?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you. If you are asking about Waterton directly related to the fighting of the wildfire, the answer would be yes. It would be included in the wildfire budget in order to pay whatever bills come out of this year's activities.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Okay. Thank you. Do we have any indication – I mean, I think it's probably provincial, on the federal thing – on when these ranchers will be fully compensated? I remember there was a bunch of cattle that died, a bunch of land that burned, et cetera. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much. The process for compensation when these events occur has been well established and has been used in this province for a period of time. It really does depend on when farmers are able to detail and outline the losses that they've incurred and provide the information necessary. So it's simply a matter of process. My understanding is that the process has been moving on at a good pace and that farmers can anticipate, you know, payment or compensation in the same time frame that they would typically experience it for other kinds of disasters that they have had to apply for in the past, whether it be hail and crop or other things that they typically look for in this area.

The Deputy Chair: The Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you. Just while we're over there in the southeast portion of the province, I wondered if there have been any programs developed to compensate or provide for special area leaseholders whose prairie grass and rangeland was burned up during the fire. Have there been any programs developed to compensate those folks?

Mr. Feehan: I know that the minister involved has been working very closely with the people who are affected by the wildfires. In this particular case the supplementary budget is looking primarily at the fighting of the fires itself. I will direct that question for further detail to the minister involved and seek that he provide you with information.

The Deputy Chair: The Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you. I guess while we're at it, you may have to ask the minister this as well. I wonder if they will also get grazing access on other Crown parcels, those folks?

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you. Again, I will defer the question to the minister. But I do know that these kinds of negotiations are fairly commonplace, and I would expect that these decisions will be made in the usual pattern that they are made whenever there are events of this nature.

Mr. Schneider: Has agriculture or Municipal Affairs, I guess, worked with Environment and Parks to work on an elk management plan to compensate for the loss of elk habitat caused by the fire? I mean, I think we started with a couple of hundred elk here several years ago, and I think, as we all know – we all determine that there are different numbers there – because of the fire there's been a loss of some of their elk habitat, and I wondered if there's been an elk management plan of some kind. Either one of you guys might know that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much. I know that oftentimes multiple ministries are required to deal with these kinds of issues, and I assure you that they are in constant communication with each other about this. Of course, in the event with elk this is a common experience that animals move their grazing habits, not only for wildfires but for a variety of other activities, reasons over the years. Environment and Parks is quite used to the fact that there are changes that occur and that they need to respond in new ways. I know that the indigenous community – I'm happy to speak to that – are out there in the field very often. We are working with them to look at ways in which we can co-manage these sorts of issues so that their wisdom, that they have from being there every day and seeing what's happening in the field, can be routinely used in government. So I anticipate that all of these people working together will develop plans moving forward in a good way that not only includes farmers and ranchers but also includes the indigenous community, which I think is a bonus for us all.

The Deputy Chair: The Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you. I guess in the same vein – and I don't know if this has been spoken about yet in cabinet – I wondered if there will be an increase in elk tags or a lengthening of the season for the Suffield hunt this year. We're all aware, like I said, that there is a rather large number of elk down in that area, and farmers are always complaining about them being in their haystacks and such. If we now have a habitat that is less than it was before the fire in Suffield last year, I just wondered if any discussion had taken place within cabinet about lengthening that hunt that you spoke about or actually adding a few more tags possibly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much. Environment and Parks, of course, works with the best information provided to them by scientists, who can tell us about the need to cull animals at different times or to provide different levels of tags depending on the needs in the community. As I said, we are working with indigenous communities to try to increase, you know, the roundness of our information with regard to these things. I anticipate that those scientists and those community members who have that knowledge will be consulted on this and that the usual procedures for determining the ebb and flow of how many tags are allotted each year will be entered into.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you. I'll just switch gears a little bit, but I'm staying with agriculture. AgriStability. Is there any idea of what the breakdown of AgriStability is, and are there any changes coming on the horizon as far as that program is concerned?

Mr. Feehan: Again, I'm afraid we'll have to defer some of that, you know, future forecasting to the minister when he is available. I will pass on the information to him about your request.

The Deputy Chair: The member.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Chair. So I guess we might as well pass on this one, too. Is there a reserve fund of sorts when issues such as bovine tuberculosis, for instance, or BSE break out, which happened in '03? Is there any reserve of sorts within the ministry when these kinds of issues or breakouts happen?

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you. Well, I do know that as part of the business plan each year there is a risk management . . .

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. members.

Are there any members wishing to speak from the Alberta Party? The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to go back again to the Minister of Community and Social Services and share my time. Is that okay?

The Deputy Chair: Please proceed.

Mr. Fraser: Okay. I just wanted to go back; we got cut off there. You had said that, you know, part of the $43.8 million increase for PDD caseloads was due to minimum wage. Again, I just wanted you to answer the question. If you knew there were minimum wage increases coming in your department, how come you were unable to budget for that in the last budget? If you could explain that.

Mr. Sabir: Yeah. I did mention that there was $3 million to support that increase. That increase came in October. Yes, we worked with our providers to make sure they had the supports. But that's not the major part of this line; $46.2 million was the total supplementary funding. For the most part that was due to the higher than expected caseload growth. It went to support individuals who need those supports to be successful and to be included in the community.

We have worked with individuals with disabilities on many different issues; for instance, the supports intensity scale. We reviewed it and repealed it. Safety standard regulation: we reviewed it and repealed it. We worked on a new contract and planned it with them for almost a year. As we have done in all other cases, it's our commitment to this community that we will not impose solutions on them. Rather, we will work with them on all issues that matter to them. Sometimes those issues change. Sometimes those individual goals change. Sometimes a service provider's philosophy of providing services changes. So all those things do sometimes cause unexpected expenses that cannot always be predicted and provided for in the budget. As I said earlier, our commitment is that we fully believe that Nothing about Us without Us, their slogan, and on all issues we will work with them to make sure that Albertans with intellectual disabilities have the supports they need.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again to the same minister. We talk about the increase of caseloads and unexpected or unintended consequences. Is a part of that that more people unable to obtain jobs under PDD attribute to this increase? Perhaps companies that once could afford it, because of minimum wage and other initiatives that this government has imposed, are turning away more people with PDD, and that is attributing to this particular increase?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you. I guess, let me put this program a little bit in context. This program provides from a few hours of respite services to intensive 24/7 care, with staffing 24/7 and everything in between. On that spectrum disabilities vary, individual goals vary, service providers vary, their philosophy of providing services varies. In all, this program is designed to promote social inclusion of those through various services.

When it comes to employment, it will depend on the individual's goal, if the individual has identified employment as a goal. There are four main categories within the PDD program. Home support will be, for the most part, provided to almost 80 per cent of individuals who are on PDD caseloads. They will receive those services. That's about the staffing supports at home that help them with their daily living. There is one stream of service, which is employment support. Another one is community access. If some individual will identify employment as their goal, then the program area will support them to pursue those goals, help them train, help them find employment. So it depends on the individual's goals. For the most part, this program caters to the needs of individuals. At the planning stage when they are approved, there is a specific plan that identifies their goals of this program in collaboration with the individual, their family, their providers. It's a collaborative process. Depending on the goal of the individual, if somebody has identified employment as their goal, the program area will provide that employment.

In over two and a half years we have added almost $100 million to this program to make sure that individuals get the supports they need. It's not a defined benefit like AISH, for instance, which is a defined benefit in that you get $1,588 from all sources, and your income cannot fall below that level. But for a person with the developmental disability program it's not a defined benefit. You will get the supports you need, and that will depend on your identified needs and identified goals.

Thank you.

Mr. Fraser: Again, in those identified goals for those folks that employment is important and, like you said, not a defined benefit – so assuming that that one particular individual who gains employment would not likely need more support. If that's the case, are you measuring things like minimum wage in your department, as you mentioned before, an unintended consequence that you were unable to budget for? How many people that are coming into your department now that normally could seek employment in some of these institutions are being turned away because of the minimum wage increase, and is your department looking at that?

Mr. Sabir: I think that with respect to minimum wage, I would say that we believe that all Albertans who are working have the right to a fair wage. They have the right to a fair wage so that they can put food on the table, they can have a roof over their head. Increasing the minimum wage certainly ensures that. Within our province there are more than 300,000 people who earn below $15. Out of that, an overwhelming majority, two-thirds of them, are women, often with children. When it comes to minimum wage, it certainly supports those women, it certainly supports to create a more fair society, and it certainly supports the government position that we believe that Albertans needs to be paid fairly.

In terms of minimum wage it has nothing to do with this program. These are individuals who have different kinds of abilities. Depending on their abilities, when they identify employment as their goal, we provide them training supports and all we can do to help them secure the jobs. If you're suggesting that by minimum wage somehow nobody is hiring them, that's not the case. We have seen a job increase of 90,000 full-time jobs in Alberta after the minimum wage increase just over the period of last year. Yes, there is more work that needs to be done, but we are seeing that things are improving.

Our economy is adding more jobs despite that minimum wage increase, and overall we are seeing that our GDP has a positive growth. Our economic growth rate is 4.5 per cent, the fastest in Canada. Our retail sales are up. Our exports are up. Every indicator that needs to be up is up in our economy. We are seeing positive signs, and that will have a positive effect on all of our programs. For instance, hopefully we will see a decrease in our income support expected to work caseload. When the economy grows, I think we all benefit.

Mr. Fraser: Minister, I would agree with that. The question was: because of the minimum wage increase, are more people that normally would be able to be employed through your department being displaced in other areas? That was the question. You're the one who raised the issue that you overspent because of minimum wage, so you brought that question into this House based on your answers. My question again: how many persons with disabilities are being displaced because they can't find employment from these employers that normally would employ? You're the one who said that perhaps these people – that's why you've had the increase. Can you explain that, and are you measuring that?

Mr. Sabir: I think that out of $46 million, $3 million was provided to support the service providers with their staffing requirements, mostly those who have overnight staffing. I know you are more interested in that $3 million, but there is another $43 million that is going to those individuals who need those supports. The bulk of that money that we added went to address the caseload.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister. Your time is up.

We will now go to the government side. Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to go back and forth with the Minister of Culture and Tourism if that's okay with him.

The Deputy Chair: Minister, are you agreeing?

Miranda: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: Please proceed.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Chair. We know that Alberta has one of the most vibrant and diverse arts and culture communities in Canada and that without a strong arts and culture program, we wouldn't have a strong province.

[Mr. Dang in the chair]

Minister, I understand that you introduced a new grant to support the screen-based production sector, which includes film, television, and digital media. I understand that this is replacing the Alberta production grant. Can you please tell me why you are asking for additional funds for this program?

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you. Thank you, Member, for the question. Strengthening and stabilizing Alberta's vibrant film and TV industry is part of our government's plan to support and create good jobs, grow our economy, and, of course, diversify it as well, thereby making people's lives better. The previous government had designed a bottomless grant program with very little financial accountability measures, and it was often oversubscribed. It left the province and the government, in fact, scrambling to keep up with the demand, and what we've done is that we've fixed that.

The screen-based production grant replaced the Alberta production grant, the previous one, to better reflect today's industry and introduce new funding criteria with specific application intake dates, for example, and stricter financial controls to our grant program. The new program was introduced on October 25 of last year. We made these changes to ensure that we are investing Albertans' money wisely. We introduced more robust criteria, as I mentioned, a more rigorous evaluation to ensure that we have the greatest benefit in terms of economic and cultural returns to the province. It will provide more incentives to productions that use Alberta crews and infrastructure like the Calgary Film Centre, for example, to ensure that all of the money that we're investing stays in the province.

As you may recall, there was a report from the Auditor General. We fully accept the recommendations of the Auditor General as we found that they coincide with what we had found in our evaluation of the grant process. It gave us an opportunity to deliver insight as well into what we had suspected was going on with the grant. As a result of these new grants, we have included elements such as clarifying the guidelines, more effective communication of the program guidelines being made to the grant recipients and other stakeholders, and enhancing the monitoring of these grants as well as developing a structured risk assessment framework.

Thank you.

Ms Goehring: No more questions.

The Acting Chair: No more questions.

Is there a member from the government side who wishes to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Chair. I would like to address my questions to the Minister of Municipal Affairs, and we can go back and forth.

The Acting Chair: Minister, go ahead. [interjections]

Dr. Turner: All right. Actually, I'll withdraw.

The Acting Chair: Is there anybody else from the government side who would like to ask questions? No? All right.

Members from the Official Opposition, is there anyone who would like to ask some questions? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I will touch on forestry this time, the Ag and Forestry ministry. This time we'll touch a little bit on forestry. Now, yesterday I asked the minister of ag about a communications question.

The Acting Chair: Hon. member, would you like to go back and forth with this question?

Mr. Schneider: If I could. That's what we did here a few minutes ago, if that's okay.

Yesterday, when I asked the minister about some communications issues with regard to, well, several fires, actually, and I asked about communications, he suggested that I would have to speak with the minister or ask questions of the Minister of Municipal Affairs. So you'll have to help me here, Mr. Chair, because I'm not sure. I'll just punt it out there and see who wants to take a shot.

We have already determined that there's $257,223,000 in the ask for supplementary supply along with the $4.5 million that was made available from lower than budgeted expenses in the Ministry of Ag and Forestry. Just a question: is any of this money earmarked to improve communications between all facets of fire response agencies? I think, as we all know, we've heard out of reports that come after those fires that we do have a communications issue between all the players.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Yeah. That is Municipal Affairs. Yes. There are a few different things that we're working on. AFRCS is the actual radio system that's being rolled out across the province that actually helped quite a bit in Fort Mac. We were able to bring radios up there to get everybody onside to try to communicate a lot clearer. We've taken recommendations from KPMG, from the report at Fort Mac, from the Kenow fire, one of the recommendations that we've actually implemented already. AEMA was already in the midst of implementing a lot of these, to be honest, because after every disaster we look at what's gone on and what's happened. Our communications are key.

When you look at Kenow in particular, we had Municipal Affairs, you had Environment and Parks, you had the federal jurisdictions, you had First Nations. You had all kinds of different people involved with that, right? So we had the information out there. You know, even though people have the information, sometimes, yes, the communication isn't quite as good as we would like it. Right now we are rolling out – well, we do have programs for education and for municipalities, in fact, in our Alberta Emergency Management Agency already. We have field officers that are working with municipalities on a constant basis on making sure they have that information on how to communicate.

We also have what's called incident command and then unified command, which is trying to make sure that everybody is on the same page as far as communication, that everybody knows their roles and responsibilities: who takes charge when, who calls the evacuations. You know, it was clear on our side, but it is something important for us to make sure we roll out. We are communicating with municipalities on an ongoing basis on that.

We also just did an emergency exercise, which the POC, the Provincial Operations Centre, does every year. This one was actually simulating a wildfire up around the Grande Prairie region, in the county where it would come into an urban area, and we did identify some things there to make sure that those municipalities understood their roles and responsibilities.

Communication is a huge one for us, but it's already in Alberta Emergency Management Agency in what they do already.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I wonder if I could get you to just expand a little bit on this AFRRCs, this new communication that you talked about. I think there was a press release shortly after the Fort McMurray fire that talked about a warehouse in Edmonton where some advanced communications devices had been somehow left or were not ready to go to work, maybe, during the Horse River fire. I guess, a question is if this was part of this AFRRCs. Were any of these new communications devices deployed during the Suffield or Kenow fires?

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you. I don't know what particular article you're speaking of, but when I talk about the AFRRCs radio, we did have some with AEMA that we could roll out and bring that are mobile, so we did bring them up there, and it did assist because sometimes, depending on the jurisdiction, the different types of radio frequencies and the radios they're using are different across first responders. There are a lot of folks out there that have had the AFRRCs rollout. You know, it's an expensive system. A lot of RCMP are getting involved. A lot of fire departments now have it. I can't remember the percentage. I'd have to get the percentage that have rolled out already across the province, but it's a pretty decent amount right now.

I don't know that article in particular that you're speaking of, but we did have communications come up there. In fact, once we were able to get them up there, it helped out quite a bit in those fires. You know, I'd have to get the particulars on Kenow. There are some folks, like I say, across the province that have AFRRCs, but we have people on the ground as well in those situations, our field officers with municipalities and with First Nations, so that they can all communicate back and forth, too. With Kenow they were all in an operations centre that was pretty tight and they were all pretty close to each other, but still in those extreme situations trying to get some of that communication is a bit tough at times, obviously, with everything that's happening, and people are stressed.

But any of those particulars, if you want to get some questions to me, I can get some more detail for you. That's no problem.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate that from the minister.

I'm just going to change gears a little bit. I spoke to the minister about this before. Given that early season fires are more common in old growth areas, obviously, like Fort McMurray rather than areas close to mountains, basically in the foothills, that tend to be at the later end of the fire season, a question that I've had is: I wonder if some of the expense for fighting some of these bigger fires could have been alleviated, I mean, if the tankers had been closer to those areas that are more prone. We had tankers, I believe, sitting at Hinton and Edson in the foothills of Alberta 85 kilometres from each other, when – you know, I'm not blaming anybody for anything. I'm just asking a question. Did anything that we learned from the Horse River fire lead us to believe that we should tend to have our firefighting tankers closer to the old growth areas of the forest that tend to be the ones that burn the most? I think I got that spit out right.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you. Are you talking about tankers like the ones on the ground or the air?

Mr. Schneider: Yeah.

Mr. S. Anderson: Okay. Sorry. I wanted to clarify with you. Like I said before, after every disaster we do look at, you know, what's happened, logistically where everything is across the province. I was up in High Level and talking to the folks up there. It depends on some of the airports as well that are capable of taking some of these big tankers. That is actually a pretty big consideration, to be honest with you. We do look at that after every disaster to try to figure out where we should have these tankers. I mean, you look at Alberta, and it's a massive expanse of land. Obviously, with the grass fires, any of the old growth fires it is a little tough to, you know, try to figure out what's going to happen every year. You do the best you can. But when it comes to the air tankers, a lot of it does come down to the airports that can actually handle the size and the weight of those guys. Yeah. So that's really what a fair amount of that is based on.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.
The Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the minister. I'll switch it up again. I'm going to just ask if the ministry has developed any new strategies to combat the pine beetle problem within forestry so that we don't experience the devastating fires that happened in British Columbia there last summer, with all the dead and unharvestable wood, a lot of which, as we know, is all caused by the pine beetle devastation. Just wondered if the ministry had come up with any ideas how we could tackle some of this.

Thanks.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much for the question. Of course, you're quite aware that we've been working across provinces and with scientists on this particular problem. I know the University of Alberta has been doing some extensive research in this area. I do not have anything new to report at this time, but we do anticipate that, you know, work will be ongoing, and we will employ the best information to come up with the best decisions as we move forward.

Thank you.

Mr. Schneider: I guess a quick question, and I'm not advocating this at all: would select clear-cutting be a solution? [Mr. Schneider's speaking time expired] Next time.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

On the government side are there any members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, back to the Official Opposition side. Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to turn to Culture and Tourism, and if it's okay with the minister, I'll go back and forth.

The Deputy Chair: Minister, you're in agreement?
Please continue.

Mr. Orr: Okay. Thank you very much. The ministry has already asked for 35 per cent operating expense budget up front on the interim supply, and it leaves me a little bit puzzled why in addition to that we're needing an additional $22 million to supplement last year's budget. I just wondered if you could give me sort of an overall view of what that $22 million supplemental will be for.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you. We have asked for the additional $21 million: $5 million for public access programming support to the National Music Centre so that they can provide programming, basically, to Albertans, and this is going to allow us to do that; $5 million will be going towards putting the money aside for a $5 million contribution to a potential bid by the city of Calgary for the 2026 Olympic and Paralympic Winter Games, if that actually goes ahead. It is tentative on whether we actually are able to reach an agreement with all levels of government. In addition to that, we have expanded the Alberta production grant, as I had mentioned earlier. The new Alberta production grant has obligations and will allow us to invest an additional $14,900,000.

10:40

The Deputy Chair: The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you very much, Minister. That helps.

The piece for the National Music Centre, then: obviously, that's come up since budgeted last fall. I just wonder if you could give us a few details in terms of why they have that need and why it wouldn't have gone into the budget for the next year. I'm going to assume that you've already committed to it or spent it in this current rotation.

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you. As you know, the National Music Centre is providing cutting-edge performance facilities and an extensive collection of memorabilia, historic facts in addition to being the storage house of Canada's musical memories. The government of Alberta has indeed invested in the National Music Centre to create access to these world-class facilities to help artists from across the province and around the world to develop their talents here. The investment itself will generate new jobs and economic opportunities in Calgary and create an entry point for visitors to become more familiar with the many unique destination opportunities in the province. Along with the city of Calgary and the government of Canada we have provided money for the project so that all Albertans and, indeed, all Canadians can benefit from this.

The capital fund has already been allocated, but there was a need for programming. Otherwise, you would have a facility and would not have enough programming in it. So we have through the OIP, the other initiatives program, provided the $5 million in funding to ensure that we have programs in place to facilitate all the fantastic work that they're doing.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Minister. I've actually been through the facility. It's an amazing place. They do amazing things. It is a very cool place. I'm a little bit surprised, though, that they would not have anticipated that operating expenditure and it wouldn't have been put in the original budget for the year. I guess my question is: why the unexpected need for the additional operating piece? Maybe the real question there: is that related to or partly due to the economy, a decline in visitor attendance and revenues generated?

Miranda: Thank you. There was an agreement that had been entered into between the government of Alberta, the government of Canada, and the city of Calgary, and it was always envisioned that there would be funding provided for programming once the capital project was done. Some of the programming that had been envisioned had not at the time of the budget been provided to us. The details had not been provided. So through discussions we understand that these new needs for programming emerged, and opportunities to provide these experiences and this unique programming for Calgarians, Albertans, really, emerged as a perfectly good, reasonable thing to invest in in order to promote the cultural aspect of the National Music Centre and allow for additional programming to be, I guess, set up in this new facility.

The Deputy Chair: Member, go ahead.

Mr. Orr: Thank you. I'd like to move on now and talk about I guess I'll say the past Alberta production grant since we've now moved to a new one. I guess my question relates to the department's lack of a timely response to deal with the issues. In fact, it seems that they weren't raised until the Auditor General raised them. Yet there's been a systemic overspending way back, to my knowledge, as early as 2013 and maybe before that. I just wonder if you've been able to truly pinpoint the reason for that overspending and why it's been systemic consistently for at least the last five years, not just once or twice.

Miranda: Thank you for that question. Indeed, as reported by the Auditor General, the way that it was set up, basically, was as a bottomless grant program. The financial accountability measures that should have been part of the program in the first place were not really there. There was a lot of discretionary ability left up to the ministry.

Now, the work that we did in order to arrive at this new program was initiated long before the Auditor General's report ever came out. As you might recall, we introduced a new program very close to around the same time as the Auditor General released their report. The reason for that is because we needed to first understand what the needs of the industry were and understand where the problems could potentially impede growth in the industry and, in fact, scare some of the investments away from the province. So we did stakeholder meetings. We have evaluated the program itself. We have done an extensive analysis of the different kinds of projects.

The industry itself has also changed. What initially was supposed to be a cultural aspect, the artistic side of it, became a more commercialized industry. Now we've started exporting shows, whereas before it had been mostly short films, you know, students from postsecondary education accessing this program as they had graduated to kind of get their names known. The program itself, to be fair, evolved from being mostly a cultural program to support screen-based production, to include a cultural and a commercial line.

Now, like I said, the stakeholder engagement that we did revealed to us that there was a need for us to, one, explain that we needed to have these controls and these measures and explain to them why they needed to be so that we could actually meet the objectives and stay within our budget. Otherwise, we would continue with this trend that had been set by the previous government of basically going back every year and asking for more money. We didn't want to do that. At the same time we needed to engage with these stakeholders so that they could understand where we were going, understand what the needs were. This new program now, for example, still has a cap of $5 million, but they're able to apply for an additional $2.5 million if they are using infrastructure such as the Calgary Film Centre and are ensuring that we're exporting Alberta as a province.

Any time that we have, you know, this geography, that we are so blessed to have, it does provide an incentive for tourism opportunities as well. Put together, we now have fixed the problems, and we have consulted with the Auditor General, who agrees. We agree absolutely with their findings because they actually confirmed what we ourselves had determined. The time that it took to answer the question more concisely, the reason that it took time from when we first found out about this problem to implement a new program, was the length of time that it took to engage with the stakeholders and come up with a solution that worked for government and the industry to ensure that we can continue growing the sector itself.

I have seen now that these new programs have created a new sense of . . .

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Are there any members from the government side wishing to speak?

Seeing none, are there any members from the Official Opposition wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. If I may, I'll just continue with where we were, maybe one last question on the old Alberta production grant. As we've already noted, there has been a continual overspend for the last five years: $5 million, $6 million, $5 million, $9 million, $5 million. Yet I do commend the ministry, in spite of that happening in that one particular aspect of it, for managing to keep your overall budget within budget and actually making up the overspend from other aspects of your ministry. I understand that it was a bottomless pit in the way it was structured, but the discretionary part, I guess, is what I want to kind of try and focus on.

The department did have some discretion there. I kind of wonder if there wasn't sort of a deliberate intent – and I'm not meaning this in a malicious way, but I'm meaning it in the direction of favouring a particular industry – to actually continue to grow that grant portion, even though it was over budget, until you had time to figure it out. I mean, to be over budget five years in a row and yet stay within the overall ministry approved budget says to me that it wasn't accidental or it wasn't something that the department wasn't aware of. It was a deliberate discretionary choice. I just wonder if you could comment on that for me to help me understand that.

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you. To understand, again, I think we really need to look at the history and how this evolved. As I was explaining, it went from being really a program for artistic expression, supporting a very small sector in the province at the time, to then becoming a much more lucrative production sector. Now you had Interstellar, you know, Brokeback Mountain being filmed here. We had all kinds of TV shows and movies being filmed in the province.

So there was absolutely a desire to grow this industry. We have seen what it looks like in places like B.C. and Ontario, which, you know, are the jurisdictions that have the largest amount of production. We have seen the entrance to the market of companies like Amazon and Netflix right now also entering into production, Apple TV as well. All these different things provided for a good investment. There was a good return on the money that we were investing, and it made sense. Unfortunately, the way that the program itself was created was that, in essence, as long as anybody with a program met the minimum criteria, they could apply, and they would be almost guaranteed to receive the funds.

In the regulations themselves there was no way for the minister to turn these down, right? The program was not built with those. So what I have done now is ensured that once I have reached the maximum of this particular budget line, then I can turn – and this is the reason why I explained it to the industry. I needed to have their buy-in on this so that they understood that if we reached that limit, I would not be going over that, and they would be okay with that. Of course, the industry continues to grow. It's something that we have to look at in the future and see how we can support this because there is a lot of potential to grow it to be the size of what it is in Vancouver or in Toronto, for example, where there are many studios using the facilities and increasing it.

I want to ensure that you also know that within the new criteria, like, we've clarified the requirements for the program, and we have communicated these to our stakeholders, of course, but we have enhanced monitoring of the grant so that it's ongoing every quarter. We're going to be able to see how much money is still left before we go into the next intake program. Then the structured risk assessment framework that I have referred to, basically ensuring that – one of the challenges was that when a production company came in and filmed, for example, season 1 of any particular show, usually they did that with a numbered company and not necessarily a name, so there was no continuity. Some of these grants that the Auditor General was referring to were companies that would basically come into the province, form a numbered company, dissolve, and then in season 2 would start up a new company with a new number.

So in order for us to have that continuity – the program regulations did not require that kind of monitoring, which is one of the reasons why some of these other companies were able to get funding sometimes. I think it was a few years back, anyways. From my perspective, having all of these elements built into this program and having the buy-in, especially from the industry, we're not in fact causing any kind of uncertainty but are actually having a little bit of an ongoing relationship with them so that they know what the limits and the limitations and the caps are. We're also able to ourselves monitor ongoing this budget, now that the program is set up as a quarterly intake, before the new intake period starts so that we can manage the cash flow and not get into the same situation because I don't think it's appropriate.

The reason why we've asked for the additional funding is because . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, you have spoken for five minutes, so we will revert to a question from the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you. One last question in this area, and then I'll move on. Am I to assume that none of the supplemental funding, then, will go towards some of the other cultural industries: Alberta book publishers, Alberta magazines, and Alberta audio production companies as well? There's nothing for them? Related to that question, I guess, then, is that – I mean, they get 2 and a half million dollars combined. There's $45 million for the new screen-based productions. It seems like a very heavy overweighting. You know, I'm pretty sure that book publishers in particular – well, I guess, quite frankly the others as well – have as much as 70 per cent of their industry revenue coming from export sales. Is there sort of an overweighting or an imbalance with regard to these other cultural industries?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you for the question. You know, when I look at this specific grant, I'm looking at an industry that, number one, like I mentioned before, helps with tourism because we're having the province itself being the backdrop for many of these films. The other thing, of course, is that it induces expenditures in places like hotels and food for the crews and the lumber that it takes to build these sets. So there are a lot of other pieces that putting money into this particular industry actually incents, which is the reason why it has become such a lucrative sector in other jurisdictions.

Now, with respect to the other cultural industries, there is absolutely room to grow, and there are absolutely a lot of different things that we can be doing like the screen-based production grant.

At this time this was the biggest expenditure that I had, one that I needed to bring under control, and absolutely my focus was to make sure that I worked with the industry to get it right so that we would not cause any panic and that we would continue to have a steady flow of productions coming into the province and incenting new productions coming to the province.

I know the Minister of Economic Development and Trade has turned his mind – and I have now as well – to digital media, for example. We also, as in the previous budget, you might know, introduced a tax credit for postproduction, which also helps in all of this.

Now, the thing about screen-based production that also needs to be kept in mind is that it is not just about the filming and the actors. There are also writers, screenwriters. There are all kinds of artistic work and artistic endeavour that go into it. So even though it doesn't necessarily go into, let's say, the book publisher profession or editors or what have you, there are still aspects of those cultural industries that benefit from having a screen-based production.

The other thing, of course, is that the scale of these productions is in the $45 million to $50 million range for one season, for example, and that's why they qualify for these $5 million grants. The investment that they make and the money that they bring into the province creates a very good return on that investment, similar to other cultural industries.

You know, it is a reflection of the economic times that we are looking at all of the opportunities to continue to promote this side of our economy, and I will be having further discussions with the industry to see how we can support them as we go.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Are there any members from the government side wishing to speak?

Seeing none, are there any other members from the Official Opposition that would like to speak? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. I have my questions, and they're going to be for the Minister of Municipal Affairs if I could. If we could go back and forth, I would appreciate that.

The Deputy Chair: Minister, you're in agreement?

Mr. S. Anderson: Okay. Back and forth.

Mr. Taylor: Municipal Affairs is important to everybody here, it seems like. These are really good questions, and I'm pleased to be able to ask these questions to you. According to the supplementary estimates $15 million was made available from lower than expected expense in other programs. Can you please provide details on what programs were underspent? There's another part to this question. I'll just finish it off so that you have both parts to it. Why wasn't this money spent as originally intended in Budget 2017?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you very much, Chair. Thank you to the member for the question. Actually, I'd like to get the details for you, if you wouldn't mind, so that I could give you the particulars on that. I don't actually have those in front of me, but I'd be more than happy to do that, to get you exactly what you're looking for. I just don't have that in front of me.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Okay. Thank you for that. I look forward to getting those answers to see where that money has actually gone and how it's being spent, which programs didn't quite make it.

11:00

According to the Alberta Emergency Management Agency's website "disaster recovery programs," often referred to as DRPs, "provide financial assistance for municipalities and their citizens who incur uninsurable loss and damage as a result of a disastrous event." A state of local emergency does not have to be declared in order for costs to be eligible to receive DRP funding. The DRP is administered by the AEMA, which is an agency under the authority of Alberta Municipal Affairs. My understanding is that DRP is budgeted for every year, an amount totalling $200,000, and then once the year is over and we know exactly how much we have spent, it is requested through supplementary supply, all of that. All that being said, is $18.67 million expected to cover all of the expected liabilities associated with the DRP for the 2017-18 fiscal year?

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Chair. Yes, we do, you know, a base budget, obviously, for disaster relief, but as everybody knows, with the changing world that we're in, more and more disasters are more and more extreme. To be honest, actually, in Alberta we have a lot of smaller disasters, which fall under the DRP, that we don't get funding for from the feds because we don't meet the threshold. You can prepare as much as you want and you can have the funding available as a base, but going forward, the federal government has changed what they fund us, so a lot of times we don't hit those thresholds.

A lot of this funding is because of that, because we've had emergencies come up. I mean, climate change is affecting all of us – more floods, more fires – and you can only prepare as best you can, right? So that's to cover a lot of those. You know, the DRP comes in from individual property owners. They come to their municipality, they make their applications, and the municipalities come to us with those requests. Each year is unique, and there are fewer or more requests, depending on the disasters that have happened. Quite frankly, we know that there are more and more, and we expect that to happen again this year, but we prepare as best we can.

That's basically what that is, paying out for disasters. You've got what happened in Fort Mac, obviously, some of the wildfire disaster recovery assistance programs, so that's where that falls. Inevitably, with climate change, it's going to get worse and worse, and we will have to be paying out more, unfortunately, and working with the Insurance Bureau of Canada on a lot of this as well. They're very far ahead on where they are with climate change, so they can bring forward programs that will help as well. It's kind of, I would say, a team effort all across the board.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Chair. I can't recall exactly, but $18.7 million is lower than in the past if I'm not mistaken. Is the amount outlined here, the total expected DRP for 2017-2018, lower than for 2016-17?

Mr. S. Anderson: Sorry. Is that lower than what's in here right now?

Mr. Taylor: Yeah. Is the amount outlined here the total expected DRP for the 2017-18 year?

Mr. S. Anderson: Yes. It's what we have put in here because of what we've had come forward. There is lag time, obviously, on a lot of these requests that come forward, so this is what we have to pay for what we've received, what has happened, and anticipation. Like I said, we can prepare as much as we can going forward, but we have to wait until these disaster relief programs are applied for. I'm not sure what's going to happen through this season coming up, but we will have to, you know, wait and see, and then those applications will come in. In the future I can't guess what it's going to be, but this is to pay for all the things that have been going on and the things that we have received relief requests for already.

Mr. Taylor: I'm just kind of curious because I'm watching the snowpack that's happening across Alberta. I mean, it's everywhere. We're getting quite a bit more snowpack right now. As we're speaking, it's snowing quite heavily, and some of the members that have to go south to Calgary, et cetera, may have trouble with the roads. Because you've seen more snow this year than we've had in previous years, are you anticipating something for this budget with the snowpack and the possible consequences that could come with flooding?

Mr. S. Anderson: Well, like I said, we do try to prepare as much as we can. There is a big snowpack this year. I mean, some people like it because they know it's going to give us a lot more water than last year. Obviously, we didn't get much snow last year, which was unfortunate, you know. It is something we always try to prepare for, but like I said, this money here is paying for – there is a bit of lag time with disaster relief funding, so it all goes on what we received from municipalities around the province. We will have, again, our base funding, and then we will have to re-evaluate as circumstances change. It's something that we have to adapt to as well, so we will be ready for everything as best we can, but it depends on kind of how the season unfolds, to be honest with you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Taylor: You alluded to the fact and were talking about the federal government and that funds would come from the federal government but that it's kind of hard to determine which funds are coming, how much funding is going to be coming. I guess it's based on the size of the event that's occurring. That is what I think you were alluding to. How much of this DRP money that we've had is expected to be refunded by the federal government in the end?

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Chair. As I said, a lot of what these have been are smaller ones, smaller disasters that weren't funded by the feds. These ones are all from us. That's why that money was requested, because it didn't fall under what the feds were giving us. Fort Mac, for an example, was a massive disaster, so that triggered the criteria and the circumstances where the feds would jump in. Because we've had all these small ones – they are big to us, but on a federal level they don't see it as such even though they add up to a massive amount of money for us – they don't jump in and assist us. It's all up to us to do that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you. Going to another part, which is, I guess, near and dear to all the hearts of the municipalities, the MSI, you read as per the MSI website that "the Municipal Sustainability Initiative . . ." – the MSI; I'll stick with that; I'll tongue twist myself on that one a few times – ". . . helps support local infrastructure priorities and build strong, safe and resilient communities." Again, according to the MSI website 2017 saw $1.18 billion in MSI capital. According to the supplementary supply estimate it appears that MSI funding is pegged at $1.65 billion due in large part to the additional MSI . . . [A timer sounded] I guess I'm timed out. I'll finish that later.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

Are there any members from the government side wishing to speak?

Seeing none, are there any members from the Official Opposition side wishing to speak? The Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Do you want me to start the question again?

Mr. S. Anderson: Did you have a little bit left?

Mr. Taylor: Yeah, I still have a little bit of the question left.

Mr. S. Anderson: Okay.

Mr. Taylor: MSI funding is pegged at $1.65 billion – that was what I was at – due in large part to the additional MSI funding of $800 million included in supplementary supply. Was this additional $800 million unexpected?

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you. You know, I like to joke around sometimes with my municipalities. When they ask about MSI, I say: oh, what's that? They sometimes look a little scared. MSI, obviously, is the biggest grant that Municipal Affairs gives out, $1.2 billion. We are by far the most generous and largest funder in Canada for that. Through the downturn we made sure that the funding was there for municipalities because infrastructure is important. You know, water and waste water, though some people might not notice it and it's not sexy, is unbelievably important, so we wanted to make sure that the money was there, and we've continued to do that. It's important to me as a resident of this province but also as Municipal Affairs minister. We have 342 municipalities that we have to take care of.

Continuing and going forward, with the $800 million that you were speaking of, as we recover, we want to make sure that our municipalities have what they need to fund their core infrastructure projects. You know, in going around the province this summer, we're in the largest infrastructure build in the history of Alberta, but it's still not enough. We're playing catch-up from a massive social and physical infrastructure debt that was left, and no matter what we do right now and how much money we put in, it's still going to be awhile till we catch up with the roads and hospitals and bridges and so on.

The $800 million that's being added to the MSI in the 2017-18 fiscal year, which the municipalities will receive in the 2018 calendar year, along with the other allocations approved in the upcoming provincial budget are to that goal, to make sure that we have core funding for them. It's not an increase in overall MSI levels, but it's going to give the municipalities the flexibility to continue with these massive projects that we have right now that they're trying to play catch-up on. It's just a way for us to give ongoing support and make sure that the money is there for them. That's really what it is.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Minister.

Can municipalities expect to see $1.6 billion directed to MSI in the coming budget, or was this a one-time bonus?

Mr. S. Anderson: It would be nice if we all got a bonus of that. No. Basically, what it is: this $800 million, like I said, is coming forward, but you'll see in the budget on March 22 the other details for MSI that are going to be there. Obviously, you know, in this province we were tightening our belts, and that's something we all have to look at across ministries. The details will be coming forward. One of my promises that I made when I was at AUMA yesterday with the mayors is to make sure that we work on MSI and work on this program going forward to find something that's sustainable, that's predictable, and that's long term, making sure that we consult with the AUMA, the AAMD and C, Edmonton, and Calgary. I'll be doing that going forward. In the budget you will see this $800 million, but you will also see the finer details of what's coming out. I can't actually speak of that yet until after the budget comes out.

Mr. Taylor: So they've had additional monies that have been distributed. Can you tell me when the additional MSI money was distributed to municipalities?

Mr. S. Anderson: Normally they do their budgets – right? – in the fall, and then into our budget cycle is when we look at when it's going to be distributed. We'll have more information on this one after the budget. They'll be finding out pretty soon about what it is. I can't give you an exact time on that. Sorry about that, Member.

Mr. Taylor: This might be another question that might be difficult for you to answer right off the bat, but I'll give it a shot and see what you can do with it. Can you please provide us with the amounts being allocated to each municipality? I know that municipalities in my riding would love to know that, especially ahead of time, because they have their budgets that they have to do. Doggone it, if they can see that ahead of time, it's a lot easier to do budgeting.

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Chair. For sure, I totally understand where you're coming from. You know, like I said, the MSI originally was supposed to be a short-term program. My promise to them was to say: I want to make sure that this is long term so that right in the middle of your budget cycle you don't have what you've feared for ages, that it's going to be cut overnight and it's gone. That's not happening. I'm going to work on that and have been working on that very hard to find wins for my municipalities.

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

I can't tell you the exact allocation because what's happening is going to be in the budget, but I will tell you that, you know, we still use the same formula, which is 48 per cent according to population as listed in the 2017 Municipal Affairs population list, 48 per cent allocated according to the 2017 education tax requisitions, and 4 per cent allocated according to road length as listed in the 2016 statistical information return.

I want to make sure that we have something stable going forward and try to legislate something for them because obviously right now, as I said, it's pretty unpredictable. They're kind of at the whim of the winds right now, so I want to make sure that they have that stable, predictable funding. They'll find out more after the budget.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have another question, just because you kind of brought it up, and it goes towards that same idea. Because we know that this MSI agreement is set to expire here – it actually probably expired, I think, a couple of years ago, and the government agreed to extend the agreement for a further couple of years, which is good – is any money being allocated in supplementary supply towards developing an MSI replacement?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Chair. It did expire last year, so it goes till 2019. The reason why I extended it a little bit longer is because, one, I was a fairly new minister when it happened but also because we were in the middle of the MGA, which is obviously the second-biggest piece of legislation in Alberta. We'll be working together with them on something going forward to make sure that they have stable, predictable funding in this program, but that's within our ministry already. It's not something that we have to have supplementary supply for. That's within our ministry. We're working on that type of thing already, so it's not to do with that.

Mr. Taylor: My question kind of is: do you have another 10- or 20-year plan that you're setting up? Will it be MSI, or will it be something else?

Mr. S. Anderson: We don't have a set time frame on it right now. We're going to be sitting down, as I said, with the AUMA, the AAMD and C, Edmonton, and Calgary and figuring out with our stakeholders what's going to work best for them. You know, some stakeholders like the formula of MSI; they think it works well for them. Some others think that it maybe could be adjusted. I don't want to predict what's going to happen there because it is going to be all about the consultation with these folks and understanding what they think is going to work best for them and for me to be able to facilitate that. I wish I had a crystal ball for you and I could tell you, but I'm not sure yet because we're going to be working with everybody on the ground.

I know that that's something that I pride myself on at Municipal Affairs, our consultation. I want to make sure that we do as much as we can with people and as often as we can. We'll know going forward, working on it with the people, what it's going to look like.

Mr. Taylor: We've talked about additional MSI funding that's been going on. Has any of the additional MSI funding been directed at MSI operating?

Mr. S. Anderson: No. It's strictly capital.

Mr. Taylor: Okay. If I understand things correctly, a cost incurred related to a disaster is allocated to the budget year in which the disaster occurred. Is that correct?

Mr. S. Anderson: Yes. That's what the supplementary supply is for, because of this, 2017-18.

Mr. Taylor: Can you explain what the additional $4 million is being spent on in relation to the 2016 Wood Buffalo wildfire?

Mr. S. Anderson: I don't have the actual specific details for you, the particulars of it. I can get some more information on that for you to give you a little more particular info. Yeah, like I said, it's still paying off a lot of the things that have happened, obviously, through the fire, but I'd have to get those exact details for you.

The Chair: That moves us into the next segment. Are there any government members who wish to ask any questions?

Seeing none, the opposition. Do you have any further members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much. I have a few questions for the Minister of Status of Women. If it's okay with the minister, I'd like to just sort of pose a few questions, and then if we could go back and forth, that would be lovely.

The Chair: Sure.

Mrs. Aheer: Yeah? Okay. I just, first of all, wanted to thank the Minister of Status of Women for bringing attention to the Association of Alberta Sexual Assault Services. I know we're only dealing with a small amount of money right now by comparison, the $675,000 that is with respect to the wait times and the crisis of wait times. I would challenge anybody in this House to say if they don't know somebody who's been impacted by sexual assault. Obviously, every single one of us knows somebody, and if we haven't had that conversation, I'm fairly certain that in conversations with other people those would be made very clear, especially with the Me Too movement and many, many courageous women coming forward.

11:20

A couple of the things that I wanted to ask about are with respect to – I'll put my four questions out there first, and then I'll have a few follow-ups. Why is the funding being asked for from this supplementary supply instead of your last year's budget? I was just curious, especially with the crisis in wait times. I'm just curious about why it's going about it that way, especially, I mean, as they're struggling with the counselling services.

The other question I have with respect to that: is that going to be a regular funding piece, or is this just sort of a one-time thing? The $675,000: is that going to be a sustainable funding piece?

The other piece that I wanted to ask is if the minister could elaborate on how that's going to work with the wait times, the process, specifically as it's related to programs within the Ministry of Status of Women, with protecting women and girls. I realize that we have a broad spectrum of people that are in this crisis that are waiting for these wait times, but is there anything directed specifically with regard to female genital mutilation or honour beatings or anything like that? These are specific parts of the portfolio that we share. I want to understand if some pieces of that are going to also be included in this.

How will you be measuring your success with the wait times? Are you going to be able to provide the House with updates as to how this crisis is being averted through these dollars? I'm hoping that we'll be able to see that that happens.

Maybe I'll give the minister a few moments to answer a couple of those questions, and then I'll have some follow-ups. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Chair. In your follow-up I would request that you repeat the first question because I didn't hear the stem of it.

With respect to the funding year over year, first of all, I'd like to provide a clarification. Status of Women does not provide program funding for anything. This is a flow through of Status of Women according to some budgetary accounting principles. It is going to be funded through the Community and Social Services department, so they will be the administrators of the grant, and the funds will actually be coming from them despite the fact that there's a number showing a flow through on our budget. That is because we do not provide programming whatsoever to anyone. We have a granting arm that is for small-dollar seed money for projects across the province.

I will do my best with the information that I have from Community and Social Services to answer your questions. The wait times issue is something, certainly, that I can speak to. The wait times for getting counselling at these crisis centres, which is a portion of what these funds will be going to, is currently in some geographic areas around eight to nine months. That is a significant period of time for someone in a crisis situation to be faced with and is incredibly discouraging.

We know that this is a priority. It's been a priority for our government, which is why when AASAS presented us with their business case for $8.1 million, as a government we decided to fully fund that. It is our understanding from the service providers that this will reduce wait times to the two-week window, which is their ideal, but in some circumstances or geographic locations it may be a little bit longer. Their ideal time frame is to be able to provide counselling services within two weeks, and that's after an initial crisis counselling.

The funds are through a grant. There will be ongoing dollars. There's an initial influx of dollars. Again, you would have to follow up with Community and Social Services for additional details given that it's coming through them, but my understanding is that there will be year-after-year funding and that there is a commitment in the agreement with AASAS to do that.

In terms of measuring metrics, this is not a government-run service. It is through front-line service providers, but we are providing support. They will be the ones tracking metrics. Again, you would have to follow up with Community and Social Services to see what requirements have been provided in terms of the grant as we are not the administrators of the grant and are not able to provide that level of detail of information.

In terms of what it is being used for, it will address seven underserved regions of the province identified by AASAS. Some of these regions currently have limited or no specialized supports, including High Level, High Prairie, Peavine, Rainbow Lake, Fort Vermilion, Fort Chipewyan, Fort MacKay, Janvier, Wabasca, Slave Lake, Athabasca, Hinton, Jasper, Edson, Bonnyville, Cold Lake, St. Paul, Lac La Biche, Canmore, Banff, Lake Louise, Lethbridge, Cardston, Taber, Pincher Creek as well as the urban municipalities where there are currently service offerings.

My information from CSS is that it will provide funding for 15 full-time employees in addition to one provincial co-ordinator, who will work closely with each region to build capacity and mentor staff. Each region would have one full-time regional co-ordinator, who would work with several stakeholders to identify service needs, service capacity, potential partners, raise public awareness, and educate the community, as well as one full-time system navigator or educator, who would work with survivors to access existing services.

The goal of this funding, as mentioned, is to ensure that every Albertan survivor, no matter their location, is supported. In light of the I Believe You campaign and the Me Too campaign we have seen large numbers of women coming forward to seek support services.

The Chair: Hon. minister, I hate to interrupt, but you've reached your maximum of five minutes.

Ms McLean: Thank you.

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you, Minister. I'll ask you my first question again just for clarity. Let me make sure I'm saying this correctly. You've asked for this funding. Now, you'll have to clear this up for me. You're saying that this is flow through, that the funding that is being asked for in supplementary supply didn't come from last year's budget. That's what I'm wondering, why it didn't come from last year's budget and why it's being asked for in supplementary supply, especially given the crisis. I was wondering if you could explain that to me. Maybe it's as a result of the flow through. You might have explained that already, but just in case that's a different answer, if you could explain that, that would be great.

Also, you had mentioned that you don't do program funding. Can you explain what you mean by that? If I also understand correctly, Minister, you were saying that these are all grants. They're small grants that come out of the Ministry of Status of Women for various things. It will just help to understand this. You've explained that the $675,000 is a flow through. I understand that. However, with respect to wait times in some areas – I don't mean to just direct it back to wait times. I understand that those dollars are specifically going towards helping with that, but we are in the portfolio of Status of Women and protecting women and girls. I'm just curious. If you don't have program funding – maybe that's just not for this; maybe you have other program funding. If you can explain that.

Also with regard to FGM and honour beatings . . .

The Chair: That brings us to the end of that segment.

We will move back to the government side if there are any private members here who wish to question the minister.

Seeing none, we will return to the Official Opposition, still at the 10-minute rotation if there are any who wish. The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Good. Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you for the opportunity to speak to supplementary estimates as presented this week. I must say that I shake my head in dismay that here we are two weeks away from the fiscal year-end, and the government is looking for more money to finish off the fiscal year.

Albertans do not necessarily believe the NDP when it says that the worst of the recession is behind us. Two weeks ago the Finance minister was all smiles and happy – happy days are here again – with the third-quarter report, reporting that the deficit is down $1.4 billion. But we have to recognize that, you know, the real deficit is only down $900 million.

The Finance minister did have the opportunity to exercise his option with regard to the risk adjustment. The risk adjustment was essentially money that wasn't earmarked to be spent; it was there to protect in case of unforeseen revenue problems or such. That $500 million risk adjustment removed shows that we are at a $900 million reduction of deficit. Now the government, through the supplementary supply, is looking for another 1 and a half billion dollars to finish off the year, 1 and half billion dollars over budgeted expenses for fiscal 2017-18.

The Chair: Hon. member, I neglected to ask you if you wanted to share your time back and forth or if you just wanted to go five minutes.

Mr. van Dijken: Well, we'll share time back and forth. That'll work.

The Chair: Thank you.

Mr. van Dijken: I believe that it's an insult to Albertans to try and play them down for not recognizing that this government continues to have spending out of control and fails to get their spending under control. All Albertans realize that this extra spending is going to be debt financing. You know, the guys on Wall Street and Bay Street think this is just fine because Alberta Capital Finance will need to go to them. They issue bonds, and they get sold on the market. That keeps them active, but Albertans are not very happy about it.

Then we also have to recognize that credit-rating agencies look at this and they consider, again, that we're in a period of reducing the deficit. But with the realization that the government is needing supplementary supply at a point in time when revenues are up over $2 billion, the rating agencies must think: what is this government up to, and why can't they get their spending under control? Then we take the risk of the credit rating taking a hit, and interest rates on those bonds go up.

I implore the government to continue to work on their spending constraints and ensure that the money is being spent efficiently and effectively. Then we may be able to get on a path to balance in the future. I know that's what the United Conservative Official Opposition is focused on, you know, the priorities of hard-working Alberta families. I also recognize that the NDP's Treasury Board voted to spend more money or move money around. They've done a number of those things, 37 times this year, and here it is now, the request to vote that money.

I do have a few questions with regard to some of the money being allocated in the supplementary supply. I'm needing some clarification as to why the decisions were made the way they were. The first question I would have is about the $800 million in MSI grants being loaded into the supplementary supply instead of into interim supply for the following fiscal year. I guess my question is: why was the decision made to put it in this? Was the money already spent? What does that leave us to expect in next year's MSI funding if we're now throwing $800 million into this year's grant program?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Chair. Thank you for the question. You know, as I said before, there was a massive infrastructure debt in this province left to us. When the opposition member speaks about priorities of Albertans, I'm not sure if he realizes that schools and roads and bridges and hospitals are priorities of Albertans.

I had the opportunity to go around the province this last year of being a minister, a year and a bit. Everywhere I go, there is a priority. Some of them are bridges. You know who crosses bridges? Farmers, ranchers, oil and gas folks that keep this province running. So when they ask us for money, where does the opposition think it comes from? Not magical fairies like they say. This comes from a real place. This comes from a spot where we go to pay for the priorities that Albertans ask us for, to make sure that that's built to keep this province going, that $800 million in MSI. I'd like him to go to my municipalities, 342 municipalities across this province, and say: we're going to cut all that funding so that you can't build all the things you need in your communities. That's not what we're going to do over here, Madam Chair.

There is massive growth going on around this province right now. I had the opportunity to be up in Grande Prairie a few weeks back and see all the growth that was going on up there. That is hard on the bridges. It's hard on the roads. It's hard on the communities. We just heard yesterday from some folks in Olds about thousands of jobs that are going to be coming up down there. Look at Cavendish coming in. Look at all the things that are happening around the EIA and all the building that's going on around highway 19 and around there, all the exports, all the cargo. We have to pay for that, and people want us to. Those are Albertans' priorities.

Making sure that that money is in the budget for these municipalities when they need it for their core infrastructure projects is number one for me. I want to make sure that I take care of my municipalities. I will continue to do that, and that's why we're doing this right now. There will be more details coming forward in the budget about MSI, as I said to one of the other members. We'll be working with AAMD and C and AUMA and Edmonton and Calgary and looking at a more sustainable, long-term, predictable funding model that's going to work for everybody and that will make sure we grow this province not just now but into the future.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Chair. The minister fails to recognize the direction of my question. I would like to see, possibly, if he'd answer the question. I guess the question is that in planning and in going into a fiscal year, there are projects that are identified and needs that are identified, yet this minister decides throughout the year to all of a sudden pretty much double his MSI funding. My question is: was that not foreseen before? Are these surprise expenses? Or did the minister fail to actually do proper budgeting when we voted the budget in 2017-2018 at the time? We take a look at where now the minister is deciding that he has to just about double his MSI funding. Why was that decision made through the year as opposed to making it when the budget was actually developed?

I believe that proper budgeting would allow us to let the municipalities know ahead of time what they can do or what's going to be coming their way. Now we see this unexpected increase, so that just leaves it in the municipalities' minds that: "Well, I guess maybe the minister is going to make a political decision at the time. We don't know." But if the proper budgeting is done ahead of time, maybe they can feel confident that the minister knows what he's doing. At the end of the day, the question is: why is that grant money showing up here in supplementary supply? Has the construction already started, or is this money that could have easily been put into the next budget here and recognized in the 2018 construction year?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Well, thank you. To the member opposite: I make decisions based on facts. I don't have a crystal ball to look at the future. What I do is that I listen to my municipalities when they come forward with projects and core infrastructure projects that they need.

The Chair: That brings us to the end of that 10-minute segment.

Any government members wishing to ask questions?

Seeing none, we will return to the Official Opposition. The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just have one question for the Minister of Status of Women.

The Chair: And again you want to go back and forth?

Mrs. Aheer: Yeah. Just the one question and then she can take the rest. I just want to understand what programs or availability of funds there are within the portfolio to deal with female genital mutilation, honour beatings, and honour killings. This is a major crisis for our women and girls, and I'd like to know what's being done within Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to take the opportunity as it's clear to me that, despite our lengthy estimates conversations in the past, for some reason this is not clear. Status of Women is not what you'd call a programming ministry like Community and Social Services, which runs programs out of their ministry. They come up with things that they do to serve the public good, things like the AISH program. There's no third-party organization that is out there in the world running that program, that we give money to. That is a government-run program. So when I say programs and services, that's what I mean.

We have a granting arm that has small dollars. It has its own particular requirements for applying to. If a community organization has a project that falls within one of our mandate areas, they are welcome to apply under that fund, which is budgeted at $500,000 a year. Sometimes through cost savings we have a little bit more money if we haven't hired a position, et cetera, so sometimes that goes up a little bit. But those are the dollars that come out of Status of Women. We are not a programming ministry, as I've articulated, in the way that Community and Social Services is.

I welcome community organizations with all different perspectives, all different ideals, all different policies and programs and creative strategies to solve a number of issues that face women and girls in this province. Frankly, those organizations are often best suited to know what the issues are facing women and girls in Alberta. I can tell you from our first and the last granting round that we had – for our second one the applications are now closed, and we're reviewing those applications. We had some fantastic applications with a variety of different solutions to combatting the number of barriers and issues that women and girls face, including issues around violence against women and girls in the province.

We rely on community organizations to come up with solutions and applications to solve the various problems that you've alluded to. The way that Status of Women is built – and we've had these conversations, again I'll reiterate, at estimates in quite a lot of length and detail – is that we are largely an internal organization of government, an internal department that provides support to other government ministries, advice through the GBA plus lens in order to be able to ensure that our policies and programs GOA-wide, within other departments, have that lens on them and that any programs and policies take into account how they impact women and girls, how they may disproportionately impact certain populations. As the Member for St. Albert mentioned, it's not just limited to a gender analysis. It will identify if a particular race, socioeconomic class, age group is being left behind or particularly benefiting. That gives us the opportunity to know where the gaps are that we may need to mitigate for.

That is the essential core work of what Status of Women does within government. We have, certainly, opportunities to partner with agencies and organizations that have policies or programs that fall within the mandate that we can participate in but that, for some reason, fall outside of the scope of our granting program. I hope that answers your query around what I mean when I say that we're not a programming or services industry by way of comparison to CSS.

What we are doing to combat violence against women and girls: our efforts are numerous. Like I mentioned, we've got a number of granting programs that assist with this. But one of the latest things that we've done, that I'm happy to provide some more information on because I ran out of time to do that, is our $8.1 million, government-wide investment that is really due to the application of the GBA plus lens.

When you ask why this wasn't in last year's budget, the answer is simple. AASAS had their business case prepared at a particular point and time in the fiscal year and came to us after our last budget was already completed. When they came to us with this, we knew that this was a priority for us, that it was a priority for Alberta women and Alberta girls, and it was essential that the government ensure that women and girls have these sexual assault services. So even though it was outside last year's budget, we made this a priority, to find funding to be able to fund AASAS so that they could enhance counselling services with the goal of cutting wait times for counselling; expanding immediate crisis services, including over the phone, walk-in, or at the hospital; increasing outreach and education . . .

The Chair: Hon. minister, once again you've run out of time.

Ms McLean: Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

Did you have any further questions, Chestermere-Rocky View?

Mrs. Aheer: Yes. Again, you didn't answer my question about female genital mutilation specifically. You're saying that you don't run programs. But I want to understand: how is it that female genital mutilation, an extreme, abhorrent act against our young girls, is not within the scope of Status of Women to be dealing with or at least within some aspect of the scope of how you deal with the other ministries? If you could please answer the question with respect to that and why the language on that particular horrific act is not within Status of Women. Protecting girls, domestic violence: it falls under all the categories which I understand Status of Women to stand for.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you. I certainly take umbrage with the member's characterization that Status of Women does not play a role in those policy decisions. I also take umbrage with the suggestion that I said anything to that effect. I think that it's incumbent upon members opposite to ensure that when they're characterizing the words of government, they're not doing it in a way to mislead the public, which I think may have been the effect of the words expressed by the member opposite. So I will caution the member that we need to make sure, when we're talking about women and girls, that we are not doing more harm than good, particularly when we're talking about use of language and words.

I'm happy to give additional information to the member about our gender-based analysis plus. Issues around women's health fall within the Department of Health specifically. So when we're talking about a variety of matters on women's health, including mutilation, these issues directly fall within the Ministry of Health.

However, they receive gender-based analysis plus support and training from our ministry in order to be able to assess the needs of Albertans and their own policy decisions and perspectives. I certainly encourage the member opposite, if she has detailed questions about the government's position on that, to ask it of the ministry that is ultimately responsible for it.

Our role in this is to provide support, advice, analysis, and research to the departments responsible, whether it's mutilation, whether it is violence against women and girls in other forms, whether it's sexual harassment, whether it's economic empowerment, whether it is indigenous women and girls as that primarily falls under the Department of Indigenous Relations. We provide support. Just like with the National Inquiry into Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls, we are cosupporting on that on the government side with Indigenous Relations, but we do not lead it. That is the structure of Status of Women and how we operate with respect to all areas.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Just so I understand correctly, Status of Women provides support. The medical pieces with regard to that are quite well known, but I'm wondering about the supports, Minister.

11:50

The Chair: We've reached the end of that 10-minute segment, so there won't be the opportunity to respond on that.

Going back to the government side?

Any on the Official Opposition? Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. van Dijken: Yeah. Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm going to continue questioning with regard to the MSI grant funding changes in supplementary supply. Earlier on the minister discussed making decisions based on facts. At the end of the day, the question was about understanding proper planning and due diligence in budgeting, so we need to ensure that that's highlighted. If he was not prepared to borrow the money last spring, why is he prepared to borrow the money this spring?

Mr. S. Anderson: A good question. Simply because things change over time; they don't stay static. Municipalities come forward with different projects that they have, and I'm there to support them.

The Chair: Hon. member, any further questions?

Mr. van Dijken: No further questions.

The Chair: Are there any further questions? No?

You're ready to proceed to the question?

All right. As there are no further members who wish to speak, I shall put the following questions.

Labour: expense, $3,300,000.

Municipal Affairs: expense, $809,076,000.

Status of Women: expense, $626,000.

The Committee of Supply has also approved the following amounts to be transferred:

Transfer from the Economic Development and Trade expense vote to the Economic Development and Trade capital investment vote, $10,000,000.

Transfer from the Education expense vote to the Education capital investment vote, $31,500,000.

Transfer from the Service Alberta capital investment vote to the Service Alberta expense vote, $7,200,000.

Transfer from the Service Alberta expense vote to the Service Alberta financial transactions vote, $1,000,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed? So ordered.

I wish to advise the hon. members that Standing Order 61(3) provides that upon the Assembly concurring in the report by the Committee of Supply, it immediately reverts to Introduction of Bills for introduction of the appropriation bill.

Introduction of Bills

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Bill 4

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2018

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 4, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2018. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to this Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a first time]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 4(2.1) the Assembly now stands adjourned until 1:30 this afternoon.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, March 15, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day Program

The Speaker: Hon. members, as you know, the Legislative Assembly is hosting Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day, which will be held May 6 to 8, 2018, at the Alberta Legislature. There is only one week left to apply to the program. This is an opportunity for all high school students from all corners of our province – for those of us who are from corners, it's really important to say that – from all of our constituencies to learn about what we do here and about the role of active citizens of our democracy. I would ask, hon. members, that you remind your high schools that this three-day program is fully supported by the Legislative Assembly Office, so there's no cost to the students whatsoever. Transportation and accommodation details will be arranged by our visitor services office.

The application form is available on the Assembly website until March 23. I urge you to support MLA for a Day by promoting student participation from your constituency and also through your personal involvement in the program.

Thank you.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure and an honour today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the Hon. Naggayi Nabilah Sempala, the Member of Parliament for the Kampala woman constituency in the Republic of Uganda. Ms Sempala has served as an elected leader at both a local government and a national level for many years. She's also an active community leader and human rights activist. As the women's representative for the Kampala district she's a fierce advocate for women's and children's rights. And her family is here in Edmonton. I would ask that the Hon. Naggayi Nabilah Sempala now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to introduce a group. They won't actually be here until 2 p.m., but I'm going to introduce them now and note that they will be arriving soon. It's the Alberta Girls' Parliament. They come every year to visit us and to learn about the legislative process. It's just wonderful to see so many young women who are keen on pursuing a career in politics and leadership. Accompanying the 36 girls are co-ordinator Mrs. Edie Jubenville, Ms Shannon Jaeger, Miss Julie Kitz, and Mrs. Gultaj Kara. I'd like to give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: I believe, hon. member, those guests – I just received a note – are going to be here in a few minutes.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce the members of the Education Advisory Committee. This provincial committee offers expertise to the visitor services office in their development of educational programming and represents different perspectives on teaching from across Alberta. With us today are Corvin Uhrbach, social studies consultant with Wolf Creek public schools and lead social studies teacher, Alberta Distance Learning; Wally Diefenthaler, who teaches secondary social studies students at the University of Alberta; Dr. Carla Peck from the University of Alberta's Faculty of Education; Justine Light, English language instructor in the English Language School at the University of Alberta and project manager of learning English with the CBC. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

We have a school group present from Fort Saskatchewan.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce to you and through you Lamont elementary school. We have students accompanied by their teachers – Tami Rickert, Tammy Marks, Cheryl Moser – and by chaperones Stak Porter, Pat Taylor, Erin Gowing, Kami Moncrief, Jodie Derksen, Kim Dickinson, and Crystal Weleschuk. They have been baking paska and also painting pysanka, so they are getting ready for the Easter season coming up. I want to ask the whole Chamber to welcome them with the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the wonderful staff and students and chaperones of George McDougall high school in Airdrie. I am a graduate of George McDougall high school. Go Mustangs. It's great to have you guys here today accompanied by – and please rise as I say your name – teachers Ms Lesley-Anne Petcoff, Mrs. Scarlett Yakachuk and chaperones Mrs. Lianna Smith, Mrs. Franca Broughton, and Ms Dee-Anne Weisser. Students, will you rise as well and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured today to introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly two distinguished guests from the Royal Canadian Navy. Visiting from Esquimalt, B.C., is Commodore Marta Mulkins. Commodore Mulkins is the commander of Canada's naval reserve, which includes 24 naval reserve divisions and approximately 3,200 officers and sailors across Canada, including HMCS Tecumseh in Calgary and HMCS Nonsuch in Edmonton. Accompanying Commodore Mulkins is Commander Frank van Staalduinen, commanding officer of HMCS Nonsuch, Edmonton's naval reserve division. Commander van Staalduinen serves part-time and, when not in uniform, is a perfusionist at the Mazankowski Alberta Heart Institute.

Last week we observed International Women's Day. Commodore Mulkins was the very first woman to command a Canadian warship, HMCS Kingston, from 2003 to 2005. Since her appointment as commander of the naval reserve in 2015 Commodore Mulkins has been serving in a full-time capacity overseeing the transformation of the naval reserve roles and missions as part of the modernized Royal Canadian Navy.

I'm also pleased to welcome members of the Edmonton Naval Community Committee here to meet with Commodore Mulkins.

I would invite all of my guests to rise, and I request that all members join me in welcoming these distinguished guests to our Legislature.

The Speaker: Welcome, and thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and privilege to introduce to you and through you Greta Gerstner from the Strategic Alliance for Alberta Students with Learning Challenges and Ellie Shuster, executive director of the Learning Disabilities Association of Alberta. These two outstanding Albertans have been very active in spreading a message and education on some of the seemingly impossible battles our children face when it comes to having a learning challenge in our school system. I want to thank them for their efforts, and I ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In honour of Social Work Week in Alberta it's my privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two social workers working in the department I have the honour to represent, Seniors and Housing, Tashia Swampy and Crystal Thompson. Tashia is a single mom like me and a First Nations woman from Samson Cree Nation. She incorporates her identity and way of life with conventional education to live her childhood dream of being a social worker. Crystal is a Cree woman from Alexander First Nation. She has worked extensively with urban indigenous people and has won awards for her leadership. Both today are wearing the beautiful ribbon skirts. I just want to thank them so much for their service. Would they both please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you very much. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House two very special guests who are constituents of the fine constituency of Calgary-West. First of all, Mr. Gordon Olsen is the chair of the Calgary Zoo board of trustees, and he reminds all members, including and especially you, Mr. Speaker, to come and visit the giant pandas starting in May. Mr. Olsen is also a member of the Calgary Saddledome Foundation, amongst other volunteer activities. He is accompanied today by his daughter Marie. Of course, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed will recall Marie from his time in Parliament as she worked as a page in the House of Commons while she was attending the University of Ottawa. My guests are seated in the public gallery, and I ask them to please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce the family and friends of Sana Ayesha Ghani, who tragically passed away earlier this winter. Sana Ayesha Ghani was a dedicated teacher, devoted to her students and work at Cadotte Lake. I will speak more on Ms Ghani's impact and legacy later today. Here today, though, are Sana's father, Mr. Mohamed Ghani; Sana's brother Mustafa

Ghani; Bassam Fares, executive director of the Muslim Association of Canada Rahma mosque; Dr. Amin of the Muslim Association of Canada Rahma mosque, imam; Eldon Okanee, principal of Cadotte Lake school; and Sana's friend Summer Dominguez, teacher and assistant at Cadotte Lake school. I ask my guests to now rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in recognition of acupuncturists and the service that they provide to Albertans every day. Alberta was the first province to regulate the profession, in 1988, and over the past three decades it has experienced substantial growth. Acupuncturists across our province make contributions to the health and wellness of Albertans for many conditions. Of interest, maybe, to the folks in this Assembly: it includes stress and pain management. I now ask Ling Duan, Lowell Ask, Paul Hu, and other members of the College and Association of Acupuncturists to please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House Frank and Lynne Hickey, who are originally from Saskatchewan. They came to Calgary almost 40 years ago and raised their four children in Alberta. Frank is a mortgage broker and past president of the Alberta Mortgage Brokers Association. Frank has a 40-year history as a stellar volunteer in the federal and provincial conservative movements, including managing countless winning campaigns, some of them against me. I can't tell you how relieved I am to now have him on my side. Lynne has happily supported Frank in all of his exploits. She's a successful businesswoman in her own right, operating Lynne's Window Treatments. I would ask that they please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my wonderful honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly someone that needs no introduction. Donna Kennedy-Glans is a lawyer, businesswoman, published author, former provincial cabinet minister, and founder of Bridges Social Development. During her extremely successful tenure in the energy industry Donna worked as a lawyer and negotiator at TransCanada and later as a corporate executive at Nexen, where she was their first female vice-president. I had the great pleasure to sit with her at both the caucus and the cabinet table during her term in office. What a lot of people don't know is that while we didn't know each other, we grew up about five miles apart in southern Ontario and both spent some summers working in the tobacco fields. I would ask Donna now to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Sana Ayesha Ghani

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to share the story of an incredible young woman and constituent. Sana Ayesha Ghani was a teacher of grades 6 and 7 in Cadotte Lake in northern Alberta on the Woodland Cree First Nation. With the assistance of Reconciliation in Solidarity Edmonton she helped her students publish a book of their own stories. Sana asked me if the Premier would provide a message to be printed in the book, and the Premier came through in a matter of days. A few weeks later Sana called me once more to ask if it would be possible to have the mayor of Edmonton meet with her students. We met, and Mayor Iveson spent a half-hour with us inside city hall, where two boys from Ms Ghani's class performed a traditional dance. Sana Ghani was the kind of woman who got things done.

Soon I was given a copy of Traditional X: Stories from the Rez, the storybook created by Ms Ghani and her students. In the preface, she wrote:

[The students] began asking me questions, sharing their insights. And one of [the] boys asked me, "Ms Ghani, you say you want us to change the world. But how do we do that if we're just sitting in the classroom, writing in our journals?" This was one of the most exciting challenges I've received . . . They needed to share their stories with people beyond their community . . . And so this project began.

This project was a great accomplishment which demonstrated to students that their lives were important and that they could tell their stories to the world.

Tragically, earlier this winter Sana Ghani, aged 29, was killed in a motor vehicle collision while driving from Cadotte Lake to see her family in Edmonton. Her loss is still raw. Her vision, dedication, and love for her students will be sorely missed. By sharing the stories of her students, she brought together the diverse communities of the Woodland Cree First Nation, where she taught; the Rahma mosque, where she worshipped; and now the Legislative Assembly, where we honour her memory by donating a copy of Traditional X: Stories from the Rez to the Legislature Library.

I'm tremendously grateful for the privilege of knowing Sana Ayesha Ghani. Thank you.

Energy Efficiency Programs in Rural Alberta

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Speaker, last week a constituent of mine described his frustration with the green slush fund program brought in by this government. I will highlight some of his concerns here. This family lives in Stettler and signed up for Alberta's energy efficiency residential program almost a year ago. Finally, in January a contractor came and changed out a few light bulbs for a more efficient style.

The homeowner's wife asked about the smart thermostat replacement, which was the overwhelming factor in their decision to sign up for this program. This constituent felt that this was a great idea, even noting that these thermostats were expensive, at $100 to $200 apiece. They were told that they would get a call in three to four weeks. Eight weeks later a call was finally received with an update on their request. The caller informed them that they would not be getting this thermostat because it wasn't worth the installer's time to come out from distant Red Deer. They didn't have enough HVAC-certified installers to warrant one coming out until more people signed up in the area, which wasn't likely in the near future. Now, Stettler and area do have some HVAC-certified companies. My constituent would love to know: why can't one of these local professionals install it and send the government the bill?

Mr. Speaker, this family has waited nine months to be told that because they are from rural Alberta, they simply aren't a priority. They believe that it appears that their rural tax dollars are being spent on people in urban areas, who largely voted NDP in the last election; they seemed to take priority. He expressed his frustration by wondering if those of them living in small towns in the country aren't worth the time because they aren't important enough to a politically governing party. Is this another example of a primarily urban party completely alienating rural Alberta by design, or is this Alberta energy efficiency residential program another flawed piece of legislation that picks winners and losers from other hard-working Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Alberta Party

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's something happening in Alberta politics, something positive. The Alberta Party is growing its membership and just elected a leader in one of the most civil races in modern memory. The reason for this is simple. Albertans want to see politics done different. Too much of our political discourse has become about what people don't want. Don't like the government? Vote for this party. Don't trust the opposition? Vote for that party. It's time to offer Albertans a choice that they can vote for rather than just something against. That's what the Alberta Party is offering to Albertans, something to vote for. Our promise to Albertans is to treat our opponents with respect, argue against policies and not people, admit when we get it wrong, and base our decisions on evidence instead of partisanship.

1:50

Alberta is a dynamic, growing province, and our political leadership needs to reflect just that. We can't become trapped by the old ways of doing things just because that's the way we've always done it. Instead, we're asking Albertans to be a part of a conversation with us, and it will be a conversation because we're here to offer our ideas as well. The time has come for our province to be bold, to look at new ways of delivering services, new ways of providing for everyday Albertans. We need government to start treating Albertans as partners, not bystanders. We will ensure that Alberta has a place where you are given every chance to succeed, and we will take care of those who need it. That's our vision, and we'll keep talking about our vision because we believe in what we're offering to Albertans.

Our caucus will continue to offer constructive, measured criticism of the government that focuses on facts and policy. We'll keep working to make sure that Albertans who want a pragmatic, centrist, and inclusive option have a voice in this Legislature. There are some who want Albertans to not have a choice by limiting their options to bad or worse. From now until 2019 we're going to show Albertans that you don't have to settle. You can ask more of your elected representatives, you can choose based on your hopes, not your fears, and, most of all, you can vote for what you support and not what you oppose.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Carbon Levy and Pipeline Approvals

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the hon. the Premier said that she would not impose her pending 67 per cent increase of the NDP carbon tax unless construction begins on the Trans Mountain pipeline, but she just imposed a 50 per cent increase of that tax after Justin Trudeau cancelled Energy East through the National Energy Board. Why should we believe her when she says that she's not going to increase it until construction is started, when she already did increase it without construction on Trans Mountain?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, again, our government has always been clear that we brought in Alberta's climate leadership plan, which had the imposition of a levy, first in January of 2016 and again in January of 2017, on the basis of the work that we did here in Alberta with Alberta industry, with Alberta communities, with Alberta environmental groups. That plan was independent. The issue subsequently around additional levies is definitely linked to the pipeline, and our government, as I've said before, will not move forward until we get the pipeline.

Mr. Kenney: Let me get this straight. Justin Trudeau killed Northern Gateway, that had been approved. He killed Energy East through the National Energy Board. He's doing precious nothing to get Trans Mountain built. But this Premier gave him the 50 per cent increase in the carbon tax that he wanted. Mr. Speaker, why is her close ally Justin Trudeau writing Alberta's tax policy?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's the member opposite that's not listening. What's happening is that Albertans are writing their own policy to combat climate change.

I believe, quite frankly, that it is time for the member opposite to come clear on his own position on that matter. Yesterday he said, and I quote: there's a legitimate range of perspectives about exactly to what degree anthropogenic causes are behind climate change. It sounds like bafflegab. Albertans deserve to know: does the member opposite believe that human activity is causing climate change? Yes or no? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, like two-thirds of Albertans, I am a carbon tax skeptic. Of course, there's climate change. I've never denied that.

What the Premier said yesterday is that she, quote, doesn't really want to relitigate the carbon tax. Well, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, Albertans are going to relitigate that at the next election. Today I'll be tabling – oh, anticipation. Would the government agree that Albertans should not suffer a further increase in this punitive carbon tax without being able to have their say in a referendum?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I've already said very clearly is that moving forward with additional hikes to the carbon levy will depend on the Trans Mountain pipeline, as I've said many times over the last year and a half.

But, Mr. Speaker, the member opposite did not answer the question. People are concerned about this issue. His Finance critic funded a climate-denying film and attended an event called Climate Dogma Exposed, and he's still on the front bench. The fact of the matter is that Albertans need to know: does the member opposite believe that human activity is the primary cause of climate change? Yes or no?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
The hon. member.

Federal Energy Policies

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, Environment Canada says that it's going to cost at least $300 per metric tonne in order for a carbon tax to achieve the federal government's greenhouse gas emissions. Her own adviser Professor Leach says: at least $200 a tonne. My question for the Premier is: does she agree with these estimates that to meet global greenhouse gas emission targets would require a price of between $200 and $300 a tonne? Does she agree?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I agree is that we need to take action to stop human-caused climate change. You know, I just cannot engage in a conversation about the best strategies to do that with someone who will not answer the question, yes or no, "Does he believe that human activity is the primary cause of climate change?"

Mr. Kenney: I see the hon. the Premier, Mr. Speaker, is once again auditioning to be opposition leader. We'd invite her to try to answer the question.

Here's another one since she won't answer that. Does she agree that the regulation of the production of oil and gas is an exclusive provincial jurisdiction under section 92A(2) of the Constitution?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, we've already had this conversation, and indeed this is a matter that we'll have an opportunity to discuss much further when we bring in our legislation to move forward on the control of supply, the strategic control of supply of oil and gas, further to the conversation that we had in our throne speech. The fact of the matter is that the issue of controlling emissions is something that matters to all Canadians. Putting a cap on emissions matters to all Canadians, and it should even matter to those people who have yet to determine or to advise whether they believe that climate change is significantly or primarily caused by human activity.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, that wasn't exactly a skill-testing question, so I'll answer it for the Premier. Yes, section 92A of the Constitution says that the regulation of the production of oil and gas is a provincial jurisdiction. The follow-up, then, is: why did this government do nothing to object to the federal government intruding into that hard-won provincial jurisdiction, won by Peter Lougheed in 1982, when the National Energy Board killed Energy East by getting into the regulation of upstream emissions? Why did they surrender this hard-fought provincial jurisdiction?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I completely reject the underlying presumptions that began that question. Nonetheless, what I will say is that the federal government does actually have an obligation to act in the environmental sphere to some degree. That's why they have a climate change plan, something that the member opposite pretty much ignored when they were in government. I'm wondering why that was because the fact of the matter is that, still, the member opposite has failed to address the fact that his front-bench Finance critic has funded conspiracy theory films combatting the notion of climate change, and he's failed to answer the question.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, I think I take from decoding that very opaque answer that the Premier doesn't think it's exclusive provincial jurisdiction, and that's why she surrendered this area to the federal government. She's the first Premier, this is the first government in our history to do so.

Rural Crime Prevention

Mr. Kenney: To change subjects, Mr. Speaker, yesterday the government could not answer the question about when additional RCMP positions will actually be staffed, when those RCMP officers will arrive in Alberta, so I'd like to give the government another opportunity to tell us: when will those positions be filled? When will those officers and those boots be on the ground here in Alberta?

The Speaker: The Justice minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We know that all Albertans are very concerned about this issue and about ensuring that our plan to combat rural crime is put in place as quickly as possible. The RCMP has already begun recruitment to those positions. The RCMP has already begun moving officers into those strategic crime-fighting units. So some of that work has already begun. As with any large organization, there's a certain amount of turnover that will be ongoing for a certain period of time. But that work is already under way because we know, unlike the opposition would say, Albertans can't wait to address this issue.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, Albertans are waiting. Some municipalities have been waiting for upwards of two years for funded positions to be filled by the RCMP. This government has done nothing to raise that, nor have they raised any objections to the federal Liberals, their close allies, repealing tough-on-crime laws. Now, we have the situation once again of a revolving door, Mr. Speaker, of serious repeat offenders getting back on the streets to reoffend, to create new victims in Alberta. Will the NDP government join us in calling on the federal government to restore those tough-on-crime laws to stop the revolving door?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I honest to goodness think that the member opposite thinks he's running to be Prime Minister, not Premier, and – who knows? – maybe ultimately that's his plan. What I will say is that we are focused on doing the job here in Alberta. It's not easy when the members opposite actually vote down supplementary estimates for Justice, which were geared towards paying the salaries of more RCMP officers, a mere hour and a half ago. I don't know if you guys talk to each other between these acts. Nonetheless, our Justice minister is working very hard to make sure that we have more resources in rural communities and everywhere else to combat crime, and she will continue that good work.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm running partly so that we have a provincial government that actually stands up and defends this province from bad policies coming from Ottawa, including the repeal of tough-on-crime laws by their friends the Trudeau Liberals and every one of those repeals supported by their federal wing, the federal NDP. So will the Premier take the opportunity to ask her federal friends in the NDP and Liberal Party to restore tough-on-crime laws and mandatory minimum prison sentences for serious, repeat violent offenders to keep Albertans safe and to stop the revolving door of the justice system?

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, those decisions are made in the federal sphere. In the provincial sphere we fund policing, and we work with the RCMP to ensure that there is the best allocation of those policing resources. Let me say that it is not helpful when the budget is pressed because of additional funding required for the RCMP as a result of decisions that are made with respect to their salaries when the members opposite don't stand up to support that. We are focused on ensuring that there are resources, and you will see there are additional resources coming in the budget to keep Albertans safe.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Education Concerns

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Education is an issue that affects all Albertans, and we're all responsible for ensuring that our next generation has access to quality education that respects the diversity and the unique needs of its students. As legislators we must be sure we're respecting the role and decision-making of parents and local school authorities. For example, the Calgary board of education recently released its list of capital and infrastructure priorities, and that list is informed by real-time, on-the-ground expertise at our local school authorities. To the Minister of Education: will you commit to following the most current capital plan as requested and laid out by the Calgary board of education?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for that question. Yes, it's very important to respect the local decision-making powers and the authority and the intelligence on the ground that school boards allow us. Certainly, I work closely with them. Today I was meeting with Lakeland school division here, just this morning, and they gave me lots of very good information that I will directly use in decision-making in the future. The same goes with the Calgary board of education and all the other 61 school boards around the province.

Mr. Fraser: I recently had the pleasure of speaking with an organization who was pushing to do more to address and identify potential early childhood learning challenges. What they were addressing is an increasingly important issue. The issue has grown to an extent that at the Calgary board of education the cost of providing appropriate programming for special needs, indigenous, and ESL students exceeds the funding provided by the province by $80 million. To the same minister: will the minister commit to fully funding these programs or at the very least commit to pushing for more early childhood screening?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, developing literacy skills at an early age is absolutely essential, and we're certainly seeing more expertise with teachers, that we encourage to use screening tools at an early age so that we can get the extra help that those students need. You know, certainly, the advocacy of such individuals as Greta Gerstner, whom we have here this afternoon, I appreciate very much. This sort of work directly with parents and with advocacy groups, with postsecondary institutions helps us to strengthen our education system.

Mr. Fraser: Well, we need to be responsive to experts, from teachers to counsellors and administrators. The most important voice we need to listen to for most children is their parents. The safety of a child is paramount, but as much as possible we need to keep parents informed and involved in what's happening to their children at school. The concerns of parents should be included at every level of our education system. To the same minister: how is Education working to ensure that conversations are happening between parents, educators, advocacy groups, school boards, and your department?

The Speaker: The hon. minister

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we've been working very hard to work with parent councils and school councils across the province. We've never seen such strong representation in the history of these organizations as we do right now in Alberta. We get a lot of good information that way. I encourage individual schools and boards and my department to work with these parent councils every step of the way. It's very important to have that conversation, to have that interaction so that not only are we giving the information on where a student is at any given point in time, but we're actually building and strengthening community and a sense of ownership of education for all Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Sexual Assault and Harassment Services

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Women all over the world have been galvanized by the #metoo and #timesup movements to address sexual assault and harassment. In Canada sexual violence is the only crime that has not declined. Reporting to police has also increased in both Edmonton and Calgary by 13 per cent and 25 per cent respectively. To the Status of Women minister: what is being done to support survivors of sexual assault and harassment?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Status of Women and Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Every Albertan deserves to live free from sexual harassment and assault. In recent months we have seen more and more courageous survivors, most of whom are women who stepped forward to share their accounts of sexual harassment and assault. To those survivors I want to say: we have heard you; we believe you; we stand with you. That's why we are taking action to support all survivors with a historic $8.1 million investment to the Association of Alberta Sexual Assault Services. These significant new dollars will go directly to more counselling, more crisis support, and more help navigating the police and court systems so that survivors who bravely step forward have the vital help they need close to home.

We know there's so much more to do but I'm proud to say . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to AASAS, Alberta sexual assault centres have experienced a 53 per cent increase in counselling clients since 2016. How will the funding address this?

Ms McLean: Thank you, Member, for the question. Every survivor deserves to be supported. With this increased funding sexual assault centres will have enhanced counselling services, with a goal to cut the wait times for counselling. This funding will expand immediate crisis services so that more survivors have immediate access. There will also be increased front-line supports in seven underserved communities in rural Alberta. All of this will help address the increased demand in sexual assault services across the province.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the funding will increase supports for survivors of sexual violence. To the Minister of Status of Women: how else is the government tackling gender-based violence?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member. Although sexual violence can happen to anyone, the vast majority of survivors are women. It is a crime of power and control rooted in gender inequality. Supporting survivors is one way to make life safer for women and girls in Alberta. That's why I was so disappointed to hear that none of the members opposite voted in support of the additional funding this morning for sexual assault survivors. In fact, one such member, the Member for Calgary-Hays, voiced his opposition to that funding.

Our government is taking concrete steps not only to make life safer for women and girls in Alberta but to make it better and fairer, too.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Abortion Rights and Freedom of Speech and Assembly

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, when faced with the painful decision of whether or not to have an abortion, some women have been confronted by protestors when entering clinics. I agree with the Premier that the behaviour by these protestors is most inappropriate, not compassionate, and probably hurting their own cause. They are nonetheless exercising their fundamental rights to freedom of speech and assembly. Can the Premier assure this House that any legislation brought forward will not impede the Charter rights of Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. We are working to ensure that we fund health care services for Albertans where and when they need them, and of course that includes women who choose to access abortion services being able to access those important health care services. We know that members of the Official Opposition have previously advocated to defund health services for women. We feel that this is the wrong move, and that's one of the reasons why we're standing up to make sure that they have their rights protected, their access protected, and their choice protected.

2:10

Mr. Fildebrandt: I agree that these women should be protected, but I'm concerned about Charter rights here. Under existing law it is illegal for all kinds of protestors except for striking workers to impede the lawful entrance of people to a property. We have laws that make intimidation, harassment, and stalking illegal. Does the government not agree that the deficiencies in this area should be addressed through the Criminal Code more broadly and not a law limiting the civil liberties of a small, targeted group of people?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the important question. It is a fact that there have been times when women have had their access impeded because of people exercising their rights. It's important that we ensure that the women who are accessing their options are able to do so in a safe way without threats or intimidation. Of course, other jurisdictions have seen extreme measures and have had to respond with increasing legislation. This is one of the options that we are considering, and we look forward to ensuring that all women can access their health care without fear of intimidation or inability to access such.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I largely agree with the minister, but I want us to strike an appropriate balance here. The law that the government is considering ostensibly targets only a small group of protestors, but it will curtail the liberty of every man and woman if they agree with them or not. As the saying goes: I might disapprove of what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it. The Charter does not defend free speech and assembly that we agree with; it defends free speech and assembly that we do not agree with. Does the government not agree that we either all have free speech or we have none at all?

Ms Hoffman: We absolutely believe that it's important for people to be able to access the public health care services when they need them. We also understand that it's important for people to have abilities to make their opinions heard and the right to be able to say those. I am deeply concerned that there are members of this House, including those in the Conservative party, who have been taken over by antichoice organizations, whose goal is to legislate women's rights back, not forward. That's not okay.

An Hon. Member: Shame

Ms Hoffman: That is shameful.

It's 2018. Alberta women don't want the UCP leader to take their rights back to the 1950s. They deserve respect, and they will get that from this government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Carbon Levy

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week the Minister of Education responded to my question about the impact of the carbon tax and what is happening in my riding with rhetoric about what this government is doing to teach kids in Alberta about climate change. A well-rounded education is critical for students, so I would hope that the curriculum would also highlight the real and devastating impacts of poor initiatives like the carbon tax and what that can do to our economy. Can the minister assure me that our kids are getting a full picture and not just the portion that fits this government's ideology?

The Speaker: The hon. Education minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we are engaged in a very important process, which is to develop new curriculum, some of which subject areas are more than 30 years old. We are engaging literally tens of thousands of Albertans in this process. You know, one concern I have is that members opposite are trying to politicize this important curricular process, and by doing so, they diminish not only the integrity of the process, the people who are actually writing these things, but the information that gets to kids as well. So, you know, asking things and talking about things like that is actually what we're striving not to do. It is to make sure that we have an evidence-based, scientific . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mrs. Aheer: Well, Mr. Speaker, the government asserts tremendous influence over our children's education, and given that our children are the future of this province and given that the information that they learn in the schools shapes their perceptions, can the government please tell me if the curriculum being taught to our children in the schools reflects a balanced perspective, one that weighs environmental stewardship with the economy, the devastation of poorly thought out ideas like the carbon tax, and also the concern over the carbon tax? Or is the concern over the carbon tax, like the Premier said, quote, creating concerns that really don't exist?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, once again, it's very important to have an evidence-based, scientific approach to curriculum to defend against the very sort of accusations that are coming across from the member opposite here right now, which is to take an issue, politicize it, and then somehow twist it around from here out into the public. I mean, I find that shameful, I find that regressive, and that's not the way we run our education system.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Well, speaking of politicization, this government should think about what they've done with that with respect to pipelines.

Mr. Speaker, amazing volunteers for the food bank who drive to collect donations and support those in need use fuel and are being punished by this carbon tax. Given that this has been devastating for our not-for-profit sector and given that the need for these charitable organizations is growing, again, I ask the government: do they understand the effect their carbon tax has had on the ability for regular, everyday Albertans to give back to the communities that they live in, or are they satisfied to promote ideology that penalizes wonderful Albertans who are helping their neighbours?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we have started from day one to create an Alberta-made carbon plan, a climate leadership plan, which included carbon pricing. Right now our GDP growth is up. It'll be up again in 2018. Ninety thousand new jobs have been created. When we talk about education, as a former educator I fully support that we teach about climate change in our schools. But I also support and have asked the minister many times: let's educate about our energy industry and how one isn't exclusive of the other.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, tonight in Airdrie MP Blake Richards and I are hosting a town hall to discuss the very serious problem we are experiencing in Alberta. This is not the first of its kind. Members of the Official Opposition have been participating in well-attended town halls all across this province. Local law enforcement officers, victims, and residents have been coming together in an effort to find solutions so that families can once again feel safe. I often get asked why no one from the NDP government is attending these events. Minister, what reason would you like to give desperate Albertans tonight as to why this government does not come out to listen to them?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have been listening to Albertans. That's why we've taken action on this issue. We've been hearing from Albertans throughout the province, we've been hearing from their municipal leaders, and we've been hearing from the RCMP on this issue, and we absolutely believe that this is an issue that demands action. That is why, unlike the opposition, who would like to continue to study this issue, we have taken action, because people deserve to feel safe in their homes.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that the Official Opposition called an emergency debate on rural crime last year and given that only now, this month, the NDP government has finally acknowledged that there is a problem that requires some action and given that announcing funding for more officers is just a first step – it doesn't actually mean that there have been any recruits or new boots on the ground – Minister, when desperate Albertans ask me how long it will be before there are actually new officers in their communities, what answer can I give them? And I'd like a date.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That recruitment is already under way, so those officers are already coming into our province even as we speak. We've been dealing with the RCMP on this issue for quite a while. When asked what their plan was, the Leader of the Official Opposition indicated that they needed a year to study the issue. We don't think that that is the appropriate response. We think that rural Albertans deserve action right now.

Thank you.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, I did ask for a date, and I didn't hear one.

Given that yesterday I sat down with MP Shannon Stubbs and several colleagues to discuss her motion in the House of Commons to tackle this complicated issue, rural crime, and given that this motion calls for an assessment to be done of rural crime rates and trends, of resources and partnerships with other levels of government and given that all levels of government need to work together to address this crisis, Minister, are you working with your federal counterparts, and do you support Ms Stubbs' motion? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What we think and what we have been hearing from Albertans throughout the province is that they need action now. They don't need months of people sitting around and talking and more study. What they need is for people to take action on this issue. These individuals don't feel safe in their homes, and that's why this government is taking action to address that issue. What certainly doesn't help is the Official Opposition voting against the funds that would go to pay those RCMP officers to ensure that we can keep them working on the front lines.

2:20

Mr. Nixon: When I was Leader of the Opposition in this Assembly, I moved an emergency debate motion. The Minister of Justice spoke against that motion; so did the Government House Leader.

The fact is that the opposition has been bringing this issue forward for two years, has been advocating strongly to make sure it's fixed on behalf of our neighbours who are being victimized, while this government has sat on their hands. My question, Mr. Speaker, through you to the Justice minister, is: what has taken you so long to get into the game?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, we think this is an issue that requires action. We've been hearing from Albertans, and that's why this government is taking action. The Official Opposition votes against funding that issue. The Official Opposition is in favour of spending a year studying it. The Official Opposition would like a motion in Ottawa to sit around and talk about whether this is something we should take action on. We think Albertans deserve better. They deserve action now, and that's why we've taken it.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, given that we've been asking this minister and this government to take action for two years and given that they have not until just recently and given that they stood against a motion in this Assembly to stand up for rural Albertans on rural crime and given that the minister has not come once to central Alberta to talk to the victims of rural crime, to attend any one of our town halls, how can she continue to stand inside this House and say that she's taking this issue seriously? When will she bring concrete, real action into place to deal with the epidemic of rural crime in central Alberta, not paper action, not fake announcements but actual action? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I certainly think that those RCMP officers who are moving into those crime reduction units, that have been proven effective through a pilot project in central Alberta, would feel that it's a little unfair to say that they aren't real action. Absolutely, they're real action. Ensuring that officers can focus their time on the front lines, where rural Albertans have asked us to have them more visible, is absolutely concrete action. It's action that's absolutely necessary, and that's why we're moving forward with our plan. This plan will ensure that RCMP officers can spend more time in their communities. It will ensure that there are more RCMP officers on the front line. We think that this will be a very effective strategy.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, given that the RCMP themselves say that they cannot fill these positions for upwards of two years and given that most counties that have been trying to fill these positions themselves, because the government would not help them, have not been able to fill them for two years, what is the minister going to do for rural Albertans right now who are being victimized every day in our communities, who have asked this government for help? The minister knows she cannot fill those positions in any reasonable time. What will she do right now, today, for the people that are being robbed in our communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, what we will do is take concrete action to address the issue. What we will do is vote in favour of funding that concrete action to address the issue. What we will do is say that it is time to act, not time to sit around and consider our policies, not time to sit around and consider motions about whether this is an issue that needs to be addressed. These people need action right away, and that's what this government is doing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

School Busing Regulations

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the debates on Bill 28 the Minister of Education explained that the 2.4-kilometre requirement for receiving busing services to local schools would be reviewed in the regulations. I've had many conversations with members of my community of Westview Village who are concerned that the criteria only recognize the distance from the entrance of the community when there is a kilometre difference from the front to the back.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Mr. Carson: Can the minister tell us if examples like this will be taken into consideration during the regulations?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for that question. When we were looking at reforming the walk limit for kids taking buses, the 2.4-kilometre walk limit really stood out as a challenge, a problem. It's been many years in the making. We took action on this. This whole issue that the hon. member is now bringing up in relation to walking into complexes and so forth: I'm very glad that he is bringing up this issue, because this is exactly what we need to do to make sure that we build the right regulation so that kids are safe, they're getting to school, and they're getting a bus in a timely manner.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will there be opportunities for communities like Westview Village to receive special exemptions in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, by opening this up here with Bill 28, I've received a lot of very favourable response from school boards and parents and so forth. They know that that 2.4-kilometre walk limit just wasn't working, right? That's like from here to the hockey arena, for example. I'm not sure how many hon. members would walk that distance. So for young kids we're looking for ways to build a system that is more reasonable, that's safer, and that is in a more timely manner. Certainly, we can include individual submissions around people walking into complexes and so forth, perhaps using Google Maps or . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Carson: Thank you. Can the minister explain why these regulations were necessary in the first place and when we can expect the new regulations to be implemented?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As everyone knows, we had Bill 28 in here in the fall. We're starting consultations immediately, quite extensive ones, throughout the province so that we can have something in place over this next year and so that we have it for 2019.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Indian Tariffs on Pulse Crops

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over 6,000 hard-working Alberta farmers make their living growing pulses. In November India introduced a 50 per cent tariff on dry peas and a 30 per cent tariff on chickpeas and lentils. The chickpea tariff was raised to 40 per cent in early February and inexplicably hiked to 60 per cent after Justin Trudeau's disastrous trip. The agriculture minister was in India just three weeks ago, where he attended the 2018 Pulses Conclave in New Delhi. To the minister: what specific reductions in these tariffs did you discuss with Indian officials, and how is Alberta lobbying to reduce or eliminate these stifling barriers to trade?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very good question, a very important question. Indeed, I was in India. I had an opportunity to talk with government officials and industry officials. I was a keynote speaker at the Pulses Conclave, where I talked to not just Indian processors and growers, importers, exporters but actually to people that grow pulses from around the world. You know, tariffs are affecting growers and exporters and importers around the world, not just Canada. It is a measure that has taken place because of the bumper crop they had in India, and it has political overtones as well, as 60 per cent of the population in India are farmers. Without a doubt, I had an opportunity to talk to many people about this.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, given that Alberta's agricultural trade with India was worth approximately $82 million last year and given that the Trudeau Liberals have failed Albertans on pipelines, on carbon tax, and now they're failing Albertans on agriculture and given that Justin Trudeau embarrassed the entire country in India while also alienating their government with his conspiracy theories and frivolity, to the minister of economic development: has your government bothered to raise these concerning issues and negative outcomes with the Trudeau government, and if so, how?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. You know, as Minister of Agriculture and Forestry I'm in constant talks. Very often I'm in contact with the Canadian minister of agriculture talking about these very important issues and with India, you know, for sure. We also have some issues with our good cousins to the south around their trading practices of late. We have opportunity right around the world to expand our markets, to be able to make sure that the world gets an opportunity to enjoy the good products we grow here. That work continues.

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure he has a pulse on the lobbying here.

Given that Alberta's international trade office should be lobbying the Indian government night and day to reduce or eliminate these tariffs in support of our agricultural producers and given that India is projected to be the world's fastest-growing large economy for the rest of the decade, again to the minister: at your direction has the

New Delhi office done an assessment of how these hiked tariffs affect Alberta farmers, and what have you specifically instructed your ministerial staff to do in their defence?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The member is right. India is poised to be the third-largest economy in the world here in a few years. I found it fascinating as agriculture minister that my first trip to India last year was the first one by an agriculture minister ever from the province of Alberta; this year was the second one ever from the province of Alberta. I also had the opportunity to meet with officials in the state of West Bengal, which was the first time that anybody from the government of Alberta has ever visited that state. Without a doubt, we understand the importance India will have and understand that India will continue being a very important part. We'll continue doing that great work, making sure our products get . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

2:30 Carbon Levy and Health Care Costs

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, the carbon tax has spread its wings and reached every corner of the province. In Health particularly the departments have had to consider one of two options: decrease the life-saving services they provide or have taxpayers spend more of their hard-earned cash on something that will not improve Albertans' standard of care. To the Minister of Health: how much is the carbon tax costing Alberta Health and AHS in their operations, and how much of a decrease in the standard of care can we expect?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. We are very proud to be taking action on climate change not only so we can get those pipelines built, which is important, but so we can get the revenue from getting our product to that tidewater. That revenue helps support things like quality public health care, quality education. Instead of talking about 20 per cent cuts across the board, we're talking about getting top dollar for Alberta products so we can invest that in the people of this province, including health care and education.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, ambulance services spent over $18 million more than they were budgeted, and given how stretched ambulance services have been across Alberta, can the Health minister explain how much of this money is being spent on the carbon tax and how much is increasing life-saving front-line services and accessibility for all Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The reason why we put that money forward is to make sure that EMS is there when and where you need it. I have to wonder if the member opposite as a former EMS member – I commend him for all of his service in that area – agrees with the leader of his party, who's been pushing for 20 per cent cuts, who thinks we should be going after health care, including those front-line workers. I don't think so, but I'd really like to know. Do you stand with your leader, or do you stand with the front-line paramedics of this province? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, the Health minister should read the Auditor General's report on the duplication of bureaucracy.

Given that the government plans to raise the carbon tax to $50 a tonne, which will increase costs for heating and operating of hospitals, ambulances, the prices of disposable equipment, diagnostic imaging, and the list goes on, has the Ministry of Health performed an analysis on the new carbon tax increases and how that will affect the health care of Albertans?

Ms Hoffman: I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that when we launched our climate leadership plan, I was so proud that we were standing with industry, who knows that this will be good for them, the jobs that they employ, that we were standing with health care professionals, who know that the coal phase-out is the right thing to do for our environment. We were standing with working people from across this province, and we continue to stand with them. When B.C. tried to move up with their illegal blockades and slow down the process, it was working people from across this country who said, "That is wrong; we need to stand up together," including those who were working in health care. They're doing their part. We're doing our part. It's time that we got our product to tidewater so that we can all move forward with having a strong economy, diversified markets, and an even better health care system tomorrow than we do have today.

Ministers' AAMDC and AUMA Convention Participation

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, as you are aware, today Edmonton is joined by AUMA members from across this great province. It is a time when municipal leaders can engage in open dialogue with their provincial counterparts. It's an integral part and tool used to keep the communication link between municipalities and their provincial representatives robust and meaningful. Can a member of this government tell us how many municipalities were denied an audience with ministers during this conference?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the interesting question. We are certainly happy to engage in opportunities. I was proud to be a part of one of the panels yesterday and continue. There were some folks who asked for meetings, and we are very happy to arrange for those. It doesn't need to be just the three days here in Edmonton. Our front bench and all caucus members are travelling this province all the time and in cars because we sold the planes that the members opposite abused. We are throughout the province making sure that we're engaging with folks in their communities, and we're happy to arrange for those over the phone if they can't be done in person.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, last year during AAMD and C the minister of environment demanded that I leave a public breakout session and given that the excuse of her chief of staff was, and I quote, so that she could be open with those in the room, and given that I had not asked any questions nor had I caused any reason for her not to be open with those people that she represented, will the minister be blocking me or any other opposition members this year when we attend AUMA and AAMD and C?

Mr. S. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, we won't be blocking anybody: media, opposition members, our members, or anybody. We are open and transparent. We have a great relationship with AUMA and AAMD and C. In fact, every time I meet with them, they tell us how many different ministers they've met with, how open we are, how it's never been like this before in the history of their organizations.

I am happy to have those open relationships where people can text me and ask me questions all the time. We'd be happy to have you guys whenever you guys want. [interjection]

The Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to know that we will no longer be blocked from these open sessions.

Mr. Speaker, given that this government has proclaimed over and over again about how they are going to be transparent and open, will this NDP government assure the opposition members that they will no longer be blocking any of us, no MLAs from this opposition, from AAMD and C or AUMA sessions?

Mr. S. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I'd like the opposition members to actually understand that AUMA and AAMD and C are their own organizations and can do what they would like. We work with them hand in hand and in partnership. So if you would like to come to these sessions, discuss it with them, but we are always open to that, we always have been, and we always will be.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Agricultural Society Funding

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three and a half months ago I was pleased to hear the minister of economic development confirm that ag societies enrich the lives of rural Albertans, yet midway through the fiscal year the government abruptly withheld their operating funds, putting their community facilities and programs at risk. To the agriculture minister: will you please ask the President of Treasury Board not to play the same kinds of games with the funding for ag societies this year?

The Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. You know, I do believe I have a very good relationship with the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board. Having said that, I'm also having good relationships with ag societies right across this province. I understand the value that they have running curling rinks, Boys & Girls Clubs, 4-H clubs, curling rinks. Yes, I do like curling. I've met with ag societies in Whitecourt, Darwell, Sangudo, Alberta Beach. That's in my own district, across the province. I understand their importance and will continue to visit them and understand more about what they do.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we know it's Treasury Board and Finance that ultimately decides the level of operating funding that ag societies will receive in the coming year and given that ag societies need to have confidence that they can keep their facilities' lights on year-round, to the President of Treasury Board: as we've never heard why ag society funding was suddenly put in jeopardy last fall, would you please tell us now?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. As a government, as a minister, all this front bench and behind me as well understands fully the importance ag society is to the basic cultural fabric of rural Alberta, how important they are in maintaining halls. I was just this last year at a hall that celebrated its 80th anniversary. You know, these organizations are important to rural Alberta, continue to be the lifeblood of these small communities, and we'll continue to support them.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that last year ag societies were surprised to learn that even with the funding earmarked for them in the 2017-18 budget, this government almost cut it midstream and given that the ag societies' operating year will be almost half done before they see the amount allocated to them in this year's budget, to the Finance minister: can they at least count on the number in next week's budget and not be left in the lurch like last year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member as well. Last year I was very pleased to be able to apply this funding to these organizations, their full funding. Those cheques went out to the ag societies at the beginning of October. Like I've said already, I understand the importance of this. I'm sure the member knows that the Minister of Finance, you know, would have a say in it if I let anything leak from the budget that will be released next week. What I can tell the member and tell Albertans is: let's wait for next week, when the budget is dropped.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Support for Vulnerable Albertans

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ensuring that people in need such as the homeless, the hard to house, and those living with a disability are well supported is challenging. This is especially true for young people who may find themselves without a support structure when they leave the school system. To the Minister of Community and Social Services: how are we making sure that vulnerable Albertans are not slipping through the cracks?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Our government is committed to making sure that Albertans have access to the housing and support they need. Instead of making reckless cuts, we are investing $184 million to combat homelessness across this province. To ensure that Albertans with disabilities have the support they need, we have increased funding to AISH by $103 million and to PDD by $98 million. We have also increased FCSS funding by $25 million to support community-based programming. We also added ambient community supports.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what are we doing to ensure that these Albertans are able to find a home in an inclusive environment?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. We believe that every Albertan deserves a safe place to live with access to the supports they need for meaningful engagement and success in their communities. For instance, last year we implemented guidelines for LGBTQ youth housing and shelters to support the youth homelessness initiative and to support inclusion. We also repealed the PDD safety standard, which was treating persons with developmental disabilities differently than other Albertans. The community told us that . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans with limited finances may also face challenges finding housing. To the Minister of Seniors and Housing: how is our government supporting affordable housing for people who may have trouble paying for their housing?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you. Our government believes that everyone should have access to a safe and affordable home. Last year I launched the province's first affordable housing strategy. As part of this strategy we're creating over 4,100 homes for Albertans through our $1.2 billion investment. The previous government spent years neglecting housing, leaving $1 billion in outstanding repairs and maintenance. Now they want to impose a reckless plan that would give big tax giveaways to those at the top and cut the supports that vulnerable Albertans depend on. We see a better way. We're standing with working people and protecting the public services they count on. Affordable housing is . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. members, in 30 seconds we'll continue with Members' Statements.

Members' Statements (continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

WinSport

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise before you in recognition of our spectacular Olympic athletes and the world-class athletic facility in Calgary and in my riding of Calgary-Bow, WinSport. At the recent Olympic Winter Games in Pyeongchang 23 of Canada's 29 medals were won by athletes that have trained or competed at WinSport facilities at Canada Olympic Park. Forty-four of Canada's 55-member Paralympic team have also trained or competed at WinSport.

Mr. Speaker, it's been 30 years since Calgary hosted the 1988 Olympic Winter Games, a world-class event that Calgarians and Albertans are proud of to this day. WinSport's Canada Olympic Park hosted ski jumping and many other spectacular winter sports in the 1988 Olympics and has since become a multipurpose facility enjoyed by Calgarians year-round. Over 1.2 million people visit WinSport every year, and I'm very proud to have this organization and facility in my backyard. As a Calgarian who was born in the year of the 1988 Winter Olympics, I have witnessed the incredible value that this not-for-profit community organization brings to Calgary, Alberta, Canada, and to our athletes.

Mr. Speaker, two of the women from Team Canada's women's hockey team lived in Bowness and trained at WinSport. I'll always remember the day when I ran into women's hockey gold medalist Hayley Wickenheiser at my favourite local coffee shop, Cadence Coffee in Bowness.

I know that we are all incredibly proud of the athletes that showcased Alberta's legacy of athletic success on the world stage in Pyeongchang. We thank them for their commitment and their determination. I also want to thank WinSport for their continued support for athletes of all ages and levels.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Gay-straight Alliance in Spruce Grove

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am truly honoured to rise today and share with you and the Assembly the incredible work growing in Spruce Grove. In January a new after school GSA was formed. The Spruce Grove GSA is run by the Spruce Grove Youth Action Committee. Their mission is to come together to provide an accepting environment for LGBTQ youth and their allies.

Together they empower youth to support other youth and provide resources and encouragement so that youth can make informed decisions. Youth of all sexual and gender identities are celebrated and supported. Among their goals are to bring together awareness within our community of LGBTQ minorities, to promote self-esteem and integration of youth, and to provide a safe space for interaction with peers and for peer support. In the three months that they've been open, the Spruce Grove GSA has doubled in size and includes kids from six schools in the Parkland school division and from both Stony Plain and Spruce Grove.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to see this work in my community. I was so incredibly proud to attend the opening of this GSA. While I am a cisgendered man in a committed heterosexual relationship, there was a point in my life where I wasn't so sure about all that. I felt alone, different, and unsure of my own identity. I am so happy to see that, going forward, youth in communities across this province will have access to loving, safe, supportive communities regardless of who they are and who they love. Further, following the passing of Bill 24, youth have the right to share who they are with who they want, when they want.

I want to thank everyone who has organized or participated in a GSA for making the world a better place, and I want to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to share some of the great work in my community.

Chronic Wasting Disease

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, we learned nothing from the BSE crisis. Mad cow disease, an incurable and rapidly fatal infectious prion disease of the brain, devastated our cattle industry 15 years ago at roughly a cost of $10 billion in lost markets. Conventional wisdom at the time assured us that this could not be transmitted to humans. This proved wrong, and variant CJD cost over 200 human lives.

CWD, chronic wasting disease, is a similar, decades-old prion disease which began in deer and elk farms and is now growing across western Canada in the wild. It is spread easily from body fluids, not only from eating the meat, across the deer family, with weak and inconsistent provincial and federal control measures. Both game farming and wildlife management are provincial issues, but the federal food inspection agency, CFIA, sets the standards for meat safety and just last year relaxed the regulations for controlling this disease.

Paul Glover, the CFIA director, wrote the following: since 2010 CWD has spread and become firmly established in wild cervids in Saskatchewan and Alberta and cannot be eradicated with the tools currently available. End quote. This highlights the failure of co-operation between federal and provincial governments in control measures.

Recent U of C studies on CWD showed that it can be transmitted to experimental monkeys after they eat the flesh of infected deer. This is mobilizing the wildlife and hunting community, especially indigenous communities who depend on wild game. It's also the agricultural community's worst nightmare. We know that a significant number of infected deer and elk are consumed without being properly tested.

Dr. Neil Cashman, a noted neurobiologist and prion scientist from UBC, recently said, quote, we appear to be waiting till CWD is found in humans, end quote, before taking serious action on control and elimination of the disease.

This provincial government is negligent. We have learned nothing from . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

2:50 Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Bill 202 Alberta Taxpayer Protection (Carbon Tax Referendum) Amendment Act, 2018

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill, being the Alberta Taxpayer Protection (Carbon Tax Referendum) Amendment Act, 2018.

It proposes to expand the requirement for a referendum prior to the imposition of a sales tax to include a potential carbon tax and to also require a referendum of the Alberta people before the current carbon tax can be increased.

[Motion carried; Bill 202 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite copies of the TD Economics provincial economic forecast released today. In the forecast it shows that Alberta's GDP has led the country in growth in 2017, '18, and '19. It shows that jobs are up, GDP is up, housing starts are up, and while it's true that many have not felt the recovery, Alberta's economy is looking up regardless of what the UCP would want Alberta to believe.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we are at points of order, with two, in fact, to deal with.

Point of Order Remarks Off the Record

Mr. Nixon: Can I rise, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Yes, please.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for recognizing me. I rise on 23(h), (i), and (j). In question period today the Finance minister heckled and said to the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition comments in regard to whether or not he was a real Albertan and whether or not he was from this province.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I don't know your status and where you have come from. I certainly think you are an Albertan. You are the Speaker of the Assembly, and you are definitely an Albertan. I was born in this province, in Calgary. I'm a born and raised Albertan, proud to be from this province. My friend the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway immigrated to this province, and he most certainly is an Albertan. I'm sure that you would agree with me.

In regard to the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed he has lived in this great province for 27 years. He served this great province inside the House of Commons for almost two decades, is a member of the Privy Council of Canada, has served as a cabinet minister, has served his province with great integrity. The idea that the NDP, led by a minister of the Crown, would continue to question the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed's, the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition in this Assembly, status as a member, as a citizen of this province is insulting, and I think you would agree, Mr. Speaker.

It is certainly likely to create disorder in this House. It is right now. As I'm trying to explain to you the situation of the point of order, the NDP are still heckling us. This is just like yesterday. It's unfortunate that this continues, Mr. Speaker.

I think that you would agree with me that whether you are like the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, an almost three-decade resident of this province, or like me, a lifetime resident of this province, or like the Filipino community in Sundre, who work with us in our sawmills, have moved there and have only lived here for a few months, and that the Member for Calgary-Lougheed and I visited with just recently, we are just as much Albertans.

So I would ask, then, Mr. Speaker, that you rule that this should not continue in this House, that the Finance minister do the right thing – stand up, apologize, and withdraw his comments – and that the NDP stop doing this on a daily basis.

The Speaker: Hon. member, are there particular citations that you may have?

Mr. Nixon: As I said when I rose, Mr. Speaker, I rise on 23(h), (i), and (j), particularly language to cause disorder in this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is interesting, the tactics that are being followed by the UCP since their new leader has joined us, with his protestations of decorum and, you know, civility in the House. For the second time the Opposition House Leader has risen in his place and made accusations about statements that were not on the record that have allegedly come from members of our government.

Mr. Speaker, just yesterday the Official Opposition House Leader stood up and accused the Minister of Advanced Education of heckling, saying to the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills: you hate disabled people. That was yesterday. Now today the same Official Opposition House Leader is accusing the Minister of Finance and Treasury Board of accusing the Leader of the Official Opposition of not being an Albertan.

Now, yesterday we dealt with the accusation that was levelled against the Advanced Education minister, who denied saying it. Other people sitting very close to him didn't hear him say it. It was amazing, then, that in the Official Opposition, across the benches, they did hear him say this. Today, Mr. Speaker, we have the same situation, where the Minister of Finance denies saying what the House leader opposite is accusing him of. Nobody around him – and I sit very close to him – heard him say any such thing. It is amazing, again, that on the other side of the House they hear these things.

Mr. Speaker, clearly this is a tactic, a new tactic, of the Official Opposition, under the leadership of the current, new leader, that they have to attempt to suggest that members of the government have said things that they have not said. I would call on the Official Opposition to cease and desist from this disreputable tactic because our hon. members and ministers here have said no such thing. It is high time that the Official Opposition stopped playing games and got down to business.

The Speaker: Would any other member like to speak to the point of order?

Mr. McIver: I'm going to speak to the point of order and the hon. Government House Leader. Mr. Speaker, the tactics are on the government side. Making these personal insults repeatedly and then denying them is the tactic. It's disreputable to this House, it's not becoming of a minister of the Crown, and I would suggest that the government ministers cease and desist and that the hon. Government House Leader take it upon himself to instruct the ministers and members of cabinet to stop doing what they have begun doing.

The Speaker: To the Opposition House Leader. I don't have the benefit of the Blues for the matter that you're speaking to. I actually thought there was another issue that you may have been raising a point of order about. Do you have access to the place, the reference in the Hansard Blues where this statement was made?

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I don't have access to the Blues. You would have more up-to-date information on what Hansard may or may not have caught, but I don't have access to the Blues.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I think we've been doing reasonably well in here in the last four days. It seems to me, though, that this point, again, might be very similar to the one that I ruled on yesterday in that I never heard this comment being made. There seems to be a suggestion by the Government House Leader that the comments were not made. As is the common practice, as has always been a consistent practice, if I do not see or do not hear the allegation being made, it would seem to be difficult to rule on the matter. Therefore, I would rule in this particular situation that there is no point of order.

Opposition House Leader, I think you had a second point of order, is that right?

Mr. Nixon: I already withdrew it.

Orders of the Day Committee of Supply

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Interim Supply Estimates 2018-19 General Revenue Fund and Lottery Fund

The Chair: Hon. members, before we commence this afternoon's consideration of interim supply, I'd like to remind you where the committee left off. There are eight minutes of consideration remaining. When progress was reported yesterday, we had completed a rotation with members of the Official Opposition, so we will now proceed to members of the third party should any be interested in speaking.

If that is not the case, then we can go to any independent members should they be interested in speaking.

Seeing none, we will return to the government side. Are there any government members who would like to participate?

Seeing none, the rotation will now return to the Official Opposition. Do you have any members wishing to ask questions? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I will ask the government Finance minister about the interim supply. Are there any details specific to any ministry that he can share with the House where something more or less is going to be spent this year than in the same period of time in the last fiscal year? Since he's asking for all this money, I thought he might share a little more information than has been shared thus far about what indeed he intends to spend more or less money on.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. You know, this has been a challenging time period for Albertans, particularly in the area of income supports, Madam Chair. We have had the backs of Albertans this entire time. We know that the recession has been problematic for many, many people and their families. The government of Alberta, though, has desired to make sure that they get through that challenging time in the best way possible. Now those better times are in Alberta, but there is a lag with regard to people's incomes, frankly. Many lost their jobs. Tens of thousands of Albertans suffered as a result of the world price of oil dropping significantly, so Albertans were no different than other oil-producing provinces. They suffered greatly, and throughout that, we have made sure that Albertans who have needed income supports got them. It has meant that we have had to change some processes, improve processes, particularly in that area.

The kinds of things that were done differently there were as a result of the great number of people coming out for income supports, having a 24-hour answer line, a line that people could call and get information about income supports. We extended the amount of time that offices were open so that many people could get there. Many come from, of course, rural areas, and they need to find their closest location, so we extended times both on the early hours and the late hours so that people could access supports they needed for themselves and their families. We also increased the number of front-line staff so that those services could be delivered in as quick a way as possible for Albertans. All of those things were done, Madam Chair, so that people could get through this recession.

The lag: of course, we saw that in terms of personal income taxes as well. Because people didn't have as much money – they'd lost work and had income supports sometimes to supplement that lost employment salary – it meant that they didn't have as much personal income to be taxed. Just as we saw a lag in that, we're seeing an increase, frankly, in the amount of money being spent in the area of income supports.

Madam Chair, that's one significant responsibility that this government has undertaken. That's one commitment that this side has made sure that we've fulfilled. I would suspect that the other side would want to do the same things. I don't think they're necessarily heartless in that regard. But, you know, the focus we had, to make sure that people didn't suffer through this recession, was important, was something we made sure happened. That was a significant amount of money that we have made accessible to people who required it.

I will gladly answer other parts of questions should they be posed to me, but that's one area I know that was a commitment that we wanted to make sure happened.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Minister, for the answer. I appreciate that. Listen, I know that the minister is sincere about these things and he wants to do these things, so I won't say that the government is treating this like the lowest priority because they're not. That's the first thing they would stop doing. I don't believe the minister would do that. But, Madam Chair, you have to, you know, appreciate that when we wonder on this side if that's the thing they're not going to do, then that would be the lowest possible thing, so I don't think they would stop doing that first. This is an area where we agree them, that people in need need to be looked after.

I guess we're of the opinion that they should find something not as severe, as high and necessary a priority as what the minister just described to stop doing but to find something less important to stop doing. What he just pointed out was one of the things that we'd never want the government to stop doing, looking at Albertans in need, when we're a little bit troubled that the government couldn't have chosen to look at all the other things government does and find something less important than what the minister just described.

I've known the minister for a long time, and I know he cares very much about the issues that he was just talking about. I don't think for a second that the government would stop looking after those people. I don't. But I would hope that the government would find something less sensitive, less important, less urgent to the people of Alberta that they could stop doing so that they don't have to ask for more money with two weeks left in the year.

You'll have to just forgive us if we're just a little bit skeptical. Again, to be clear, I don't think I would accuse the government of stopping looking after the people in need. I would suggest and on our side we would suggest to the government that with two weeks left that they look for things less urgent to do less of and to redirect those monies to the urgent areas that the minister just described. I think all members of this House can agree that people that are in urgent need have to be looked after. They indeed can't wait two weeks. You know, there are some Albertans in certain situations that can wait two weeks for this service or that service, but the people, if I understood well, that the minister just described are amongst the people that cannot wait two weeks.

I hope that the government can forgive us on this side of the House for thinking that with two weeks left in the year and the massive amount of money that the government is asking for to get through the last two weeks that they can probably make better decisions. With all due respect, we have to remember, too, that they passed a budget in this House, and what we're dealing with is the government's mistakes, where they didn't get it right. To be clear, it's a big budget. We don't expect it to be perfect, but when it becomes clear at the end of the year that they're not perfect and they need more money as a result of them being inaccurate in what they estimated and what they thought and what they believed they would need, they shouldn't expect Albertans to pick up . . .

Vote on Interim Supply Estimates 2018-19 General Revenue Fund and Lottery Fund

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, but pursuant to Government Motion 8, agreed to on March 13, 2018, the allotted time of three hours has elapsed. I must now put the following questions.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

I wish to advise the Assembly that according to Standing Order 61(3) upon the Assembly concurring in the report by the Committee of Supply, the Assembly will immediately revert to Introduction of Bills for introduction of the appropriation bill.

The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Introduction of Bills

(reversion)

Bill 3

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2018

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 3, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2018. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor has been informed of the contents of this bill and recommends the same to this Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a first time]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 1

Energy Diversification Act

[Adjourned debate March 13: Mr. Coolahan]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein. You still have time left.

Mr. Coolahan: I will cede my time to my counterpart. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise in this House to speak to Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act. My colleague from Calgary-Klein spoke about the vision behind Bill 1. That vision is to diversify our energy industry as part of a diverse and growing economy, to provide good jobs for people and families, growing industries for our communities, and exciting new projects for export.

3:30

I will add to his overview by pointing out that Bill 1 acts directly on the recommendations from Alberta's Energy Diversification Advisory Committee. Our Premier appointed the committee because even after decades of development the people of this province are still not getting full value for our energy resources. The advisory committee brought together leaders from industry, training, labour, and indigenous business. Their recommendations are based on in-depth consultation with both industry and nonindustry interests. Bill 1 is the first step in acting on visions for our economy outlined in that report.

My colleague from Calgary-Klein already explained how Bill 1 will extend and expand the petrochemicals diversification program. I will look at other components of Bill 1; that is, partial bitumen upgrading. As components go, it's a huge one. The topic is already familiar to this House. Late last month our Premier hosted a news conference to thank the Energy Diversification Advisory Committee for its work and at the same time announced support for the full-scale commercialization of partial bitumen upgrading technology in Alberta. That support could reach up to a billion dollars in investment over the next eight years. Bill 1 creates a mechanism to make good on that commitment. Bill 1 provides the authority to create a new Alberta program to enable large-scale partial bitumen upgrading technologies by lowering the risk associated with their commercialization.

What is partial bitumen upgrading? Bitumen is thick, also solid. It needs to be diluted before it can move through a pipeline. Partial bitumen upgrading is an innovative process that reduces the thickness of oil sands bitumen so that it can flow through pipelines more easily and effectively without having to be diluted. That saves on the cost of the diluent. Because the bitumen won't need to be diluted, partial upgrading will allow more bitumen to move through the existing and future pipelines. This means we can get greater use of the safest, most efficient, and greenest way to transport our bitumen.

Another thing. Bitumen that goes to market without upgrading or refining faces significant discounts because of the higher processing costs at the other end. Partial upgrading will improve the quality of the product, and that will increase the number of refineries that are able to process it economically. So partial upgrading will help to reduce the oil price differential that is costing us billions of dollars every single year, and it will create a much bigger market for our product.

There will also be a cost to kick-start partial bitumen upgrading. The $1 billion that was talked about is what's likely to be needed to bring the five commercial-scale projects into production. Bill 1 authorizes that investment in a variety of ways, including grants, loan guarantees, royalty credits, and equity ownership. That support is expected to leverage about $5 billion in private capital investments. In turn, those projects are expected to create about 4,500 direct jobs per year. Also, hundreds of millions of dollars will come back to the government as revenue.

Let me say that those jobs and those services make such a difference in people's lives. In my work as the MLA for Edmonton-Manning I've knocked on thousands of doors and met with hundreds of families. Many of my constituents are still looking for work or working more than one low-paying job to make ends meet, and even those who have a job are worried about what happens if there's another hiccup in the price of oil. They're tired of the boom-and-bust roller coaster, Madam Speaker. They're tired of waiting for the other shoe to drop. They want stability. They want certainty. In short, they want an economic recovery that is built to last. So, to me, any endeavour that creates jobs and generates revenue is about much more than statistics. It is about how people live, support their families, and make their lives better. When we say that the partial bitumen upgrading will help Albertans get better value for their oil sands resources, I see the measure of that value in the prosperity of our communities and in good jobs and services for families.

In short, the provision under Bill 1 for partial bitumen upgrading will attract billions in investment and create thousands of Alberta jobs. The bill will make the oil sands even more competitive by reducing costs, increasing pipeline capacity, and creating new market opportunities. This bill will unlock the full potential of the oil sands to contribute to Alberta's economy and quality of life. I think those are very good reasons to support Bill 1, and I urge my colleagues in this Assembly to do the same.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act, put forward by the hon. Minister of Energy. There is a lot going on in this bill, yet there is also a whole lot of nothing. Almost everything in this Bill 1 can be achieved already through other statutes and the minister's authority vested in the Government Organization Act.

The real substance of Bill 1 is not in the bill, but it's out there in the trio of press releases from Alberta Energy over the past two weeks and the report from the Energy Diversification Advisory Committee, a report called the EDAC report. Bill 1 is a nice piece of window dressing, and it gets everyone excited that the NDP is going to put Albertans back to work after three years of them being in office. The prize is beautiful, and, yes, Alberta has very cheap feedstock to supply diversification of the petrochemical industry, but Alberta faces a 10 to 20 per cent premium on capital. It's expensive to build here, and the EDAC report does say so.

I see that the minister is announcing programs offering up to $800 million in loan guarantees for partial upgrading, which is an experimental technology. I see another $500 million in loan guarantees for straddle plants to collect the ethane needed for the petrochemical plants. Instead of offering the money, the minister could have ordered the industry to do the ethane extraction without compensation, just as Trudeau is doing with the methane leak regulations. With these announcements I start asking myself: if the government needs to cosign the loans, has the market already spoken and said no to Alberta?

Madam Speaker, let's review the litany of activities the NDP government has done to scare away capital and shake investor confidence in Alberta. I just want to talk about how we got here. First, we had the royalty review, done at the start of the downturn, encouraging capital flight and spooking the oil and gas industry. Despite the downturn, the royalty review did much to convince corporate Calgary to hold on to their capital for another year. And when the results of the review were released and we found out that all was well, just as the Official Opposition had said before, and only a few tweaks around the fringes would be done, there was a huge sigh of relief from the industry, but there was also anger that the NDP had contributed to spiking a construction and drilling season.

Then we had Bill 2, An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue. This is where the Minister of Finance raised corporate income taxes from 10 per cent to 12 per cent and personal income taxes went on a tiered system and went up for many people. Tell me: who wants to invest where the taxes just got higher?

Next was the infamous Bill 6, the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, igniting a rural revolt against this NDP government. Bill 6 would make farming and ranching more expensive, attacking the family farmers and ranchers and pitting the Hutterian Brethren against those who choose not to live in a religious community. People had to give up their private, superior insurance for farm workers in order to take on the more expensive, with less benefits, WCB's. Who wants to invest in agriculture and start a farm if the government treats you this way?

Somewhere in there, the NDP raised the carbon tax and started the coal phase-out, ignoring the advice from the public service and triggering the mass dump of the power purchase agreements, PPAs. Who wants to be held to a contract where you lose money? Not a single businessperson. Ask one of my constituents who's a business owner. He and his wife are business owners. They came here to hear the debate on Bill 1. No one in business wants to lose money, but somehow in NDP land it's okay to lose money supplying electricity for the masses.

This one act alone is costing the taxpayers hundreds of millions if not billions of dollars in order to backstop the purchasing pool. It's crazy, Madam Speaker. The NDP come to the table filled with good intentions, trying to drive the power prices lower only to find out that the prices can't go lower because the stuff costs money. So they saddled the taxpayers with the bill and tried to hide the misdeeds from the electricity bills as long as possible.

We could talk about Bill 20 now, Madam Speaker, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act, but I think the Auditor General's report from February 22, 2018, shows just what kind of a boondoggle this slush fund of spending on all things green really is. The only good thing to come out of this is the funding for the green line in Calgary, which the city of Calgary overpromised and underdelivered by only building half the distance but at the full cost of the entire line.

How else has the market said no to Alberta, Madam Speaker? Let's invite radical Tzeponah Berman and Karen Mahon to mess around with the oil sands industry. That was all about Bill 25, the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act. In comes the 100-megatonne cap on oil sands production, and exactly as the Official Opposition predicted would happen, the exodus from the industry was on. The multinationals left. Companies like Shell, Statoil, ConocoPhillips, Chevron, Total, Murphy, Marathon all left, and we ended up consolidating the industry under CNRL, Suncor, and Cenovus.

The NDP saint, Tommy Douglas, would be proud of our Premier for kicking the multinationals out and making the Athabasca oil sands all Canadian. That's what he wanted, and he said so in a speech from the late 1970s. But the markets spoke. The consolidation of the oil sands meant layoffs, and downtown Calgary was decimated, with office vacancy rates soaring over 30 per cent in some of the most prime real estate anywhere in the country.

But the NDP wasn't done yet. They brought in Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act, and Bill 34, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016. Both bills did a lot to mess up our electricity system in order to force added renewable electricity onto the province. We have over 16,000 megawatts of installed generating capacity in Alberta, and we are now using roughly 10,000 megawatts. Why do we need more? The NDP set a target of 30 per cent renewables, and 30 per cent renewables makes the electrical grid unstable. We can't guarantee the electricity because the grid would be unstable. But you know what, Madam Speaker? Saint David Suzuki would be very proud of this NDP's actions.

There was no protection for the landowners in bills 27 or 34. If a wind farm wanted to set up and got landowner permission and then went bankrupt, the landowner is left to clean all that steel and concrete. That's bad, Madam Speaker. Not only that, Bill 27 will force the construction of new electrical transmission lines all over Alberta to collect all that wind- and solar-generated electricity. The cost of those transmission lines will be paid by the ratepayers and guarantee the transmission line company a 9 per cent rate of return per annum. No wonder Warren Buffett's Berkshire Hathaway bought AltaLink. The law as written is a licence to print money.

Madam Speaker, the NDP knows how to send market signals. Yes, indeed, they know: "Come and invest here. Look, we have the capital investment tax credit and the Alberta investment tax credit. If you fill out all the paperwork and navigate the red tape on a first-come, first-served basis, you might get a tax credit, but we won't tell the members of this Assembly, the elected officials in this House, who is getting the tax credits in budget estimates." I asked those questions, Madam Speaker, and the NDP government said that, no, they can't give me that information. Instead, the NDP will have a press release and a photo op for the Minister of Economic Development and Trade with the lucky recipients of our tax credits. They won't tell the members of this Assembly because they are not allowed to know who gets the free money. So there you go. A litany of market signals that the NDP has sent to the whole world, and the market's response has been to bypass Alberta.

Now we have Bill 1 here, that is essentially saying to the market: "Please, please come back. We have the grants and loans and handouts for you to show that we are not all that bad." We pray that those grants and loans and guarantees are enough to cover the existing reality of the high capital costs, high labour costs, and lower productivity in the winter. We hope it is enough to cover the bad NDP boondoggle policies that chased the investors away from the market in the first place.

Bill 1 may be a charm offensive, but we can do better, Madam Speaker, and we will do better. We'll try and make Bill 1 better while we wait for a change in government.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Just a quick question and an observation. The Member for Calgary-Foothills talks a lot about the rear view of what's been happening, and we're trying to move forward with this bill. Inter Pipeline and the chemistry association during that announcement certainly didn't feel like looking back. They wanted to move forward. I would just like to ask the member under 29(2)(a) what his plans would be for diversifying our economy.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-Klein for asking me that question. Yes, we did meet with those stakeholders, the Chemistry Industry Association and others, who have told us – and I'm guessing they told NDP members exactly the same thing, too. I asked them: "Hey, you're coming and telling us all these things. Have you told the government also the same thing?" Every one of the stakeholders I met: yes. But the government chose not to listen or not to act on their suggestions.

What they asked, Madam Speaker, was to look at the big picture, the big picture being that Alberta is the third-largest province in petroleum resources. They say that we have to diversify the economy. We get that. Alberta has been on diversification because agriculture and forestry and tourism are all contributing to our GDP. At the same time, the energy sector, which has been the bread and butter of not only Alberta but the whole of Canada, needs to be built on its strengths, not to be undermined. That's what this government did. Ever since they came into power, that's what they did. That's why all those multinationals left. If the member heard me saying . . . [interjections] It does.

Also, the Finance minister, who is actually heckling me, yesterday at about 11:30 a.m., if you look at the Blues, instead of asking questions of this side of the House, was answering, saying: oh, in 2015 we got the mandate; we got 54 MLAs, so we got a licence to do whatever we want. If that is the mandate he's taken ever since – there were three by-elections. He knows the results. I don't want to go into that. There are two more by-elections coming very soon. If Albertans are giving them the mandate, we will see what mandate they'll get. If they want to run on their record . . . [interjection] At least, they should start listening to Albertans now.

What the industry stakeholders were saying is to look at the big picture, that we are sitting on $11 trillion of resources. Let's leverage that for the benefit of all Canadians. Because of your government policies, they are chasing the investments away. That's the big picture. If all those multinationals wouldn't have left, we would still have job opportunities for Albertans here. If we had those hundred thousand Albertans working here, they would have paid taxes. Then we wouldn't have the deficit in the budget because we would have gotten an additional $5 billion in revenue.

Instead of doing that, they're doing these Band-Aids of giving grants and loan guarantees and all these unsustainable policies. They're not admitting the flaws in their policies and not addressing them. They still have another 14 months to go. They have time on their side. If they really want to listen to the stakeholders and Albertans and the voters in the last three by-elections and the upcoming two by-elections, if they get the message, then they will act in the interest of Alberta and Canada. But if that is not their motto, if they're just there one time, if that's their one-time life opportunity won and done, then they'll take us on this path, which is what my stakeholders were telling me, including the Chemistry Industry Association.

If that is the path they're on, God help Alberta. But we won't let them do it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: We're not doing 29(2)(a)?

The Deputy Speaker: We have no more time for 29(2)(a). That time has expired.

Mr. Mason: Oh. Thanks very much.

Well, Madam Speaker, I understand that there's some bad weather in Calgary and parts of southern Alberta, and a number of MLAs on both sides of the House have requested an early adjournment to allow them to get home for the weekend. Therefore, I move that we adjourn until 1:30 Monday afternoon.

I would like to wish all members of the House a safe journey this weekend.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. minister, before we can do that, we have to adjourn debate on the bill that's under discussion.

Mr. Mason: Oh. I thought I had said that. First, I'll move that we adjourn debate on the bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: And on the motion by the Government House Leader to adjourn.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:53 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 4th Session (2018)

Activity to Thursday, March 15, 2018

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sittings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, March 19, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I hope you noticed that it was very springlike last week, largely as a result of the warmth and welcome of this House, I'm sure. So as the snow came, I would hope that you'll bring that warmth back so the snow will know its day has passed.

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon, hon. members.

Please bow your heads. Let us reflect as we commence proceedings today in this Assembly. Let us contemplate our opportunity to once again work together to find a way in which our collective efforts will make our world and our province better. As we move forward, let us also reflect on all the families who have shared the burdens of public life.

As is our custom, hon. members, we pay tribute to members and former members of the Assembly who have recently passed away.

Mrs. Mary Jean LeMessurier
June 12, 1929, to March 11, 2018

The Speaker: Mrs. Mary Jean LeMessurier was elected as the Progressive Conservative Member for Edmonton-Centre on March 14, 1979, and on March 23 of that year was named to the cabinet as the minister responsible for culture, a position she held for two terms of service. In 1984 Mary LeMessurier – we're working on the French and the English – became the first woman inducted into the honorary Kainai chieftainship of the Kainai Blood Tribe. In 1986 she was appointed Alberta's agent general in the United Kingdom and in Europe. Among the honours she received were the establishment of the Mary LeMessurier award for the study of history through the Canadian centennial scholarship fund and being appointed a member of the Order of Canada in 1998. Mrs. LeMessurier passed away on March 11, 2018, at the age of 88.

In a moment of silent reflection I would ask that you remember Mrs. LeMessurier as you may have known her.

Hon. members, please join me in the singing of O Canada led by Mr. R.J. Chambers in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, with our admiration, respect, and gratitude to the members of the families who shared the burdens of public life and public service, today I would like to welcome the members of the LeMessurier family who are present in the Speaker's gallery. Please rise as I call your name and remain standing until all have been introduced: Tim LeMessurier, son of Mrs. LeMessurier; her daughters, Willa Jamieson and Jil Lee; and her daughter-in-law, Tammy Banting. Please receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of incredibly bright, intelligent students from the Belvedere elementary school in my riding of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. They are here all week for the School at the Legislature program, which, I must say, is an incredible program. I love the fact that another one of my schools is taking advantage of this program. I've heard nothing but positive things about it, a tribute to the folks running it. They're accompanied by two of their teachers, Shannah Calp and Lona Ani, along with a chaperone, Gesenia Gonzalez. I'd ask them all to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you. M. le Président, c'est avec fierté que je me lève à la Chambre aujourd'hui pour introduire the students of l'école Father Jan. The students are accompanied by their teacher, Natalie Jurick, along with their chaperones, Tim Dakin, Sherlyne Javier, and Sarah Moellenbeck. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups today?

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly four outstanding educators. Frank Durante, Patricia Makowski, and Norman Martin are recent recipients of Canada's outstanding principals award for 2018, and they're joined by Superintendent Mark Rawlek. Principals and superintendents play an important part in supporting students to achieve their dreams, and today I would like to have them stand, please, and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today the Minister of Community and Social Services will be introducing Bill 5, An Act to Strengthen Financial Security for Persons with Disabilities. This bill will build on the work I did as the MLA for Calgary-Currie in bringing forward Bill 201, to allow AISH recipients and their families to have the ability to save for their future. I'd like to introduce a bunch of people who were very helpful in the consultations. Those would be Joan Lee, CEO of Vecova Centre for Disability Services and Research; Gordon VanderLeek of VanderLeek Law, who was very helpful with my consultations on the original bill; and Tina Trigg, who is a family member, and this bill will help make life better for her and her disabled daughter. I ask all these members to rise, and I ask all members of the House to join me in giving these esteemed guests the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two central Alberta constituents, friends of mine. The first is His Worship Mike Yargeau, the mayor of Penhold. I'd ask that he stand up. Along with him is a councillor for Penhold, Mike Walsh, one of the few people in central Alberta that can actually look me in the eye. That's because he's really, really tall. Stand on up, Mike. I'd ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I will be introducing Bill 5, An Act to Strengthen Financial Security for Persons with Disabilities. In the House today are families who will be better able to provide for their own children if this act passes. They're here today with advocates and workers who have helped to call attention to the need for this change. I'm pleased to ask the following families and advocates to rise as I call their names: Kathryn Burke; Donna Desjardins from Inclusion St. Paul; Bruce Uditsky, CEO of Inclusion Alberta; Braden Mole; and Frances Urtasun. I ask all members to please join me in giving these guests the warm traditional welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a group of individuals from northwestern Alberta. If you could stand as I call your names: Cameron Cardinal, councillor for Mackenzie county; Duffy Driedger, councillor for Mackenzie county; Carol Gabriel, Mackenzie county; Josh Knelsen, councillor for Mackenzie county; Ernie Peters, councillor for Mackenzie county; Jacque Bateman, councillor for Mackenzie county and also northwest Species at Risk vice-chair; Amber Bean, councillor and member of northwest Species at Risk also; Eric Jorgensen, councillor, Mackenzie county, Northwest Species at Risk Committee member; Her Worship Crystal McAteer, mayor of High Level, committee member of Northwest Species at Risk; Byron Peters, deputy manager, Mackenzie county administration, lead for Northwest Species at Risk; Kathleen Rukavina, producer, Long Sleeve Productions; Terry Ungarian, reeve, county of Northern Lights; Lisa Wardley, deputy reeve, Mackenzie county, Northwest Species at Risk chair; and Len Racher, CAO, Mackenzie county. If we could please give them the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. Member for St. Albert, do you have a guest?

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the Minister of Community and Social Services will be introducing Bill 5, An Act to Strengthen Financial Security for Persons with Disabilities. If the act passes, some Albertans will be better able to provide for their futures and their families' futures. We have in the House today families who will be directly affected and the advocates who have worked hard to bring this issue forward. I'm pleased to ask the following to rise as I call their names: Shyla Masse, Lesley Tabler, and Sherwin Tabler. I ask that all members join me in giving these esteemed guests the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a dear friend of mine, Robert Nygaard. Robert is a councillor and volunteer firefighter for Big Lakes county, in Faust. He is in town for AAMD and C. I owe a lot to Robert for all of his support. He's a key volunteer on the Lesser Slave Lake NDP constituency association. With that, I ask Robert to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mauri Stiff. Mauri, please rise. Mauri is a constituent in Airdrie, and she's here today to witness all the fun that we have. Please give her the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

LGBTQ2S Rights

Connolly: Mr. Speaker, this evening the University of Alberta is holding a panel – I'll be attending along with the Minister of Culture and Tourism – on the Supreme Court of Canada's historic Vriend decision. The Chancellor's Forum features speakers on how only 20 years ago the Supreme Court unanimously ruled it was wrong to fire Delwin Vriend because of his sexual orientation.

The leader of the UCP was an MP at the time. In fact, he was my MP. He often spoke about his extreme views on LGBTQ2S rights. He said he didn't support the Vriend decision. He called on Alberta MLAs to fight the Supreme Court's ruling because it was, quote, a virus. A virus, Mr. Speaker. It's hard to fathom why he called LGBTQ2S rights a virus, but I bet he wasn't talking about the flu.

The Vriend decision was a historic moment, when Alberta's LGBTQ2S community won their rights. I now sit as a proud member of this Assembly, but I now also sit across from that same former MP. He caused harm when he fought so hard against the most basic rights of myself, other members of this Assembly, and the entire LGBTQ2S community. Frankly, I don't know how to feel about that. Should I feel good that after 13 years as my MP fighting against my rights that we now serve as equals in the Legislature? Or should I feel angry that Canada still has politicians who believe that LGBTQ2S community members are lesser citizens for who we love and how we identify? What pains me most is that he may not even realize how much harm he caused for so many by fighting against our human rights for decades.

But I want to give him a chance to state why he thought it was okay to fire a person for being gay, and I welcome him to apologize to Alberta's LGBTQ2S community for his degrading comments. In fact, I welcome him to join me at tonight's public event and make that apology, just as I welcome the progress we've made as a province and as a government to protect the rights of LGBTQ2S people and to put people first.

Caribou Range Plans

Mr. Loewen: While the government is trying to show that it is defending industry in Alberta by its present position on the Trans Mountain pipeline, Alberta industries are also concerned about caribou plans that could negatively affect them. As with the pipeline issue and carbon taxes, we need this NDP government to stand up for Albertans.

When the Trudeau government does nothing to exert its authority on pipelines and, in fact, cancels them, this government says nothing to its Ottawa friends. When Trudeau says, “Carbon tax,” the NDP ask: how high? Now the federal government says, “Make plans for caribou,” and the NDP jumps to create parks and shut down industry. What’s worse is that they’re trying to do even more than the federal government is requesting. All of this is driven by their ideology of antipipeline, pro tax, and create parks at any cost. There has already been a massive loss of investment in Alberta due to this government, and this ideology will only further the losses until they start trying to make life better for Albertans by supporting and defending Albertans’ rights.

This government’s response to the caribou issue has been wrought with controversy and lack of meaningful consultation. This has caused a lot of anxiety in the communities who rely on resources from the caribou ranges. The province lacks regional plans in most of these areas but is determined to create protected areas with little information on what will and will not happen in these areas. The NDP government also lacks species management plans, begging the question: how can you make such a dramatic change to wildlife management when you have no plans? Some scientists are saying that even if all the recommendations are implemented, the chance of success in creating sustainable caribou populations is about 60 per cent.

This is alarming; 13.4 million hectares, 23 per cent of Alberta, is considered caribou range. We need a plan that will allow both industry to work and caribou to be preserved. It should not be about creating parks and protected areas in order to live up to some arbitrary 17 per cent committed to by the federal government. This should be about the people and the communities, who are more than willing to work with government to create suitable, realistic, and common-sense plans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Rural Crime Prevention

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government prides itself on social policy, but there is no quality of life when people are not safe. The core of social policy is enshrined in the Charter: “Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof.”

A citizen’s basic right of safety and security must be protected, yet rural Albertans have been and are daily denied this right because of the failure and lack of action of this government’s social and criminal justice policies. This government constantly talks about rural Alberta needing to feel safe, yet criminals are now routinely, repeatedly, and repetitiously targeting rural communities for the most part unopposed.

Police response times are 30 minutes to several hours, so there is effectively no restraining force. If police do arrive, they may not exceed speed limits to chase these attackers, who race away laughing without consequence. Police are understaffed and overwhelmed with paperwork, so they can only deal with the most serious issues, and property crimes are mostly ignored by force of necessity.

When police do apprehend an individual, Crown prosecutors are ordered by the minister to triage the charge, so often the case just gets dropped. Police officers have expressed their frustration with spending a morning preparing documents and then having the Crown tell them that the case will be dropped.

Only the most serious cases are given the restricted resources of police, prosecutors, judges, and courts. When a case does go to a judge, the majority of offenders are simply released onto the streets again within hours and return to victimizing citizens. The majority of cases are committed by prolific repeat offenders.

This is a complete failure of social justice and fundamental social policy, that innocent citizens are preyed upon multiple times over by the same criminal elements, and the system de facto permits it. The system protects the rights of criminals, who, in turn, abuse the rights of innocent people. The system is thereby complicit in the victimization of its own citizens, and this is a monstrous failure of social policy.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty’s Official Opposition.

Provincial Response to Pipeline Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the weekend Tzeporah Berman participated in an illegal protest in Burnaby to block the Kinder Morgan pipeline. This individual was appointed by the NDP to co-chair their oil sands advisory group. Will the Premier now admit that it was a mistake to give Ms Berman the credibility of that position, somebody who is willing to facilitate in breaking the law to stop pipelines?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member knows, we’ve long since had Ms Berman leave that role. As we know, since then she’s taken a position with which we do not agree, which is very much on the edge, I would suggest. Frankly, though, what I would also suggest is that positions on the edge are not helpful. So whether you are chaining yourself to things out in B.C. or denying climate change here in Alberta across the aisle, either version doesn’t help get the pipeline built. Our position of dealing with both issues will get the pipeline built.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the problem is that this was a perfect demonstration of the NDP’s lack of judgment, to have appointed somebody who is willing to break the law in their hostility to our energy industry.

The NDP has failed to – the federal NDP has come out in favour of the Leap Manifesto, keep it in the ground. The B.C. NDP is doing everything they can to block our pipelines, NDP mayors in Vancouver and Burnaby. Can the Premier identify a single political party or organization that’s moved from no to yes on pipelines as a result of her carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Interestingly, there was a poll out this weekend in B.C. which showed that support for the pipeline is growing and that opposition against the pipeline is dropping down.

I’d like to take this opportunity right now, actually, to offer my thanks to our minister of environment, who was in the Lower Mainland over the last few days making reasonable, calm, environmental, progressive, sustainable arguments in favour of the pipelines, speaking to people on open-line shows and standing up for a reasonable approach to getting the pipeline built, Mr. Speaker. That's the way we're going to get this done, and my thanks go to my minister of environment.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the question was whether the Premier could identify a single party, mayor, organization that's moved from no to yes on pipelines as a result of the carbon tax, and let the record show that she could not identify one because there aren't any.

Will the Premier admit that her own federal party, her B.C. cousins, the NDP mayors in British Columbia, all of the environmental organizations, if anything, have ramped up their opposition to our biggest job creator since the NDP carbon tax came in? Will she admit that the whole social licence gambit is a complete and utter failure?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, what I will suggest is that based on the commentary of the people who are making these decisions, which include the federal government, we have taken the right path to get this pipeline built and that denying that climate change is primarily caused by human activity is not the way to get this pipeline built and that allowing people to take that approach is not the way to get this pipeline built. So it's a darn good thing that people on this side are taking action.

The Speaker: Second major question.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, let the record show that all evidence to the contrary, the NDP still thinks their social licence scam is working. It's not.

Carbon Levy and Pipeline Approvals

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, last year the Premier went to Vancouver ostensibly to promote the Trans Mountain pipeline. She met with her NDP counterpart John Horgan, the now Premier. After that meeting he came out and talked to the media, and he said that our Premier, quotes, had no intention of persuading him, close quotes, to support the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion. I'd like to ask the Premier: were his words accurate? Did she not in fact have any intention of persuading John Horgan to support Trans Mountain?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, as I've said already, we are very pleased to see that the opposition against the pipeline, according to polls, is in fact decreasing, and we're going to continue the good work that we are doing to make sure that that happens. One thing I can say for sure is that we will not win the hearts and minds of the people of British Columbia by pretending that climate change is not caused by human activity. The evidence shows – let the record show – that the member opposite has still not declared that he believes human activity is causing climate change.

Mr. Kenney: I have said that, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is going to get a lot of chances to ask questions after the next election.

Let the record show that she will not contradict John Horgan's characterization of her failure to persuade him.

Mr. Speaker, I have a simple question for the Premier. By how much will the Alberta carbon tax reduce greenhouse gas emissions?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our climate leadership plan as a whole will reduce greenhouse gas emissions. It'll flatten the curve and bring Alberta towards meeting Canada's overall climate goals in terms of the actual megatonnes. I'll let the minister of environment get into that.

We know that the carbon levy is a key part of that strategy, Mr. Speaker, and we know that another thing that it is a key part of is the green line, the LRT in Edmonton, renewable energy, and the just transition away from coal. All those things come as a result of the carbon levy, all those things the member opposite would abandon.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I funded a billion and a half dollars for the green line without a federal carbon tax.

Now, the Premier, let the record show, does not even have an estimate of how much the NDP carbon tax is supposed to lower carbon emissions because the government doesn't have an estimate.

Let me ask a different question. At what level does the Premier or the government believe a carbon tax has to be established in order to achieve the Paris climate targets? What is the level? Does she agree with $300 a tonne by Environment Canada? Does she believe it should be $200 a tonne, Professor Leach's recommendation? Or do they have another number? What's the level to achieve the Paris targets?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have, of course, a $30-per-tonne carbon levy on an economy-wide basis and a system of output-based allocations to control foreign competitiveness. That was part of the recommendations from Dr. Leach and the climate leadership plan, which also contains the projections around greenhouse gas emissions.

Market-based mechanisms are enabled in article 6 of the Paris agreement, Mr. Speaker, and it is widely acknowledged that carbon pricing is the most efficient and market-friendly way to achieve greenhouse gas emission abatement.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Mr. Kenney: I thank the hon. minister for her non answer, Mr. Speaker. I can only infer that the NDP agrees with Environment Canada that you need a $300 tax in order to achieve the Paris commitments.

Caribou Range Plans

Mr. Kenney: On a different matter, Mr. Speaker, people in northern Alberta are deeply concerned about a threat to the forestry industry and many other job-creating industries as a result of the government's plans with respect to caribou range plans, which could potentially take as much as half of the land in northern Alberta out of economic use. I'd like to ask the government if it will commit to a full socioeconomic assessment prior to proceeding with any caribou range plan.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The fact of the matter is that members of our cabinet as well as members of our caucus have held numerous stakeholder meetings with people who, we are hearing very clearly, are concerned about the caribou plan. That's why we put it out for consultation. I'm sure the member opposite will be happy to know that just today a letter was sent to the federal government wherein we indicated that we would not be moving forward on the strategy until there was a full socioeconomic study and until we were able to work out a plan with the federal government where they would join with us in helping mitigate any problems that would arise.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: I thank the Premier very much for that answer and that commitment, Mr. Speaker. Can she further commit that the government will make an estimate of the impact on jobs in the Alberta economy as the result of any potential range plan?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it kind of goes without saying that that is part of the socioeconomic assessment that the ministers have indicated to the federal government that we want to see completed, so that's exactly the kind of work that we will do. We will also work with the federal government to have them come alongside us in terms of looking at the support that would be needed to ameliorate any changes that would occur. That's the information that was sent by our ministers to the federal government today.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, people in central Alberta share some of these concerns. Can the Premier commit that land will not be removed from economic use in central Alberta and the west country without a full social and economic consultation and study?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, this morning the Minister of Energy and I did write a letter to the federal government indicating that we were suspending some aspects of caribou range planning pending the socioeconomic analysis that the Premier spoke of earlier. What I will say is that the federal Species at Risk Act is an extremely inflexible instrument that has already had negative economic consequences in the southeast, as you well know, for the sage grouse. It is unfortunate that while the hon. member opposite was in government, he did not stand up for Alberta and get that act changed, but we are going to do our best to make sure that we protect jobs on this.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-South East.

Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've spoken to this Legislature numerous times about the need to empower our front-line health care workers. Paramedics and nurse practitioners are highly talented and well educated about providing appropriate care, but they're denied the authority to make decisions well within their expertise without the supervision of a doctor. This prevents them from using their best judgement about who does and who doesn't need acute emergency medical treatment. Allowing these professionals more flexibility will lead to shorter emergency wait times, better patient outcomes for Albertans, and save money. To the Minister of Health: when will you allow these qualified medical professionals to practise to their full scope of abilities?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. I was very proud to work to make sure that we brought paramedics under the Health Professions Act, something that I know paramedics have been waiting many, many years for under previous governments, and that was something that I think moved us along that path. We recently, just a couple of weeks ago, expanded the community paramedicine program again to ensure that paramedics are working as close to where patients are and have the ability to not be seen as experts who are there to transfer but as experts who are there to also deliver exceptional front-line care. We continue to work with registered nurses, licensed practical nurses, and other allied health professionals to ensure that we are finding ways to move forward in supporting their scope of practice.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fraser: Allowing for more discretion in treatment options is important, and we want to get people out of the emergency departments. It's equally important that they be given the appropriate resources to do their jobs. Under this government EMS funding has been unreliable at best. Recent increases barely covered the last NDP cuts to EMS funding. To make matters worse, call volume is at an all-time high. With the next provincial budget coming out this week, EMS are understandably nervous about the direction that this government is headed. To the same minister: will you finally commit to the level of funding that EMS needs to properly do their job, or can they expect more surprise cuts?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, thank you so much for the question. Under the former government, of which the member was a member and his new leader was the Health minister, right before the last election they were proposing $1 billion of cuts to health care, which we know would have impacted front-line EMS workers. What we've been able to do is reverse those cuts, provide stable, reliable growth to Alberta Health Services and their budget in turn, and ensure that we have abilities to make sure that while numbers are up, certainly, response times aren't. We look forward to being able to present the budget later this week, and I look forward to finding out if the member will stand with front-line paramedics or sit with the Official Opposition and cuts.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, this minister should tell the truth. Those cuts were to management and not front-line staff.

Minister, I get it. Your health care is complex, and you have a difficult job. However, you have the power to make improvements immediately. I'm hearing from paramedics that their situations are getting worse: long waits in hospitals, not enough ambulances, putting more strain on our EMS workers. Since you have the ability to resolve both of these issues, the fact that we're talking about this again is troubling, to say the least. Minister, you're the final authority on health care. You need to take responsibility and fix these things. Will you take responsibility, and will you fix it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I'm so proud to have the responsibility to reverse the cuts that were coming from the member opposite and his then government. You couldn't find a billion dollars' worth of cuts if you fired every manager all across western Canada. This would have had devastating impacts on the people of Alberta. The people of Alberta spoke up, and they made sure that they elected a government that would protect front-line care, protect their workers, and I'm proud to do just that and find ways to improve it at the same time. We are doing it. We're proud to as government. Feel free to continue to sit with the opposition for deep cuts instead of standing with the front lines that you used to serve with.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm waiting to feel the warm winds of spring in here.

Ms Jabbour: To the minister of environment: my constituents are very worried about the proposed caribou range plan and how it will impact our economy and people in the north. Many believe the rumour that our government plans to turn the north into a park. As you know, I've been strongly advocating on this with your department since day one, which is why you visited High Level last August to meet with industry stakeholders, municipal government, and indigenous groups, something we greatly appreciated. Can you update us on what you learned from these sessions, how that has informed the process, and where things are at now?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to acknowledge the hon. member for her hard work on this file and her efforts to advocate for her constituents and for northern Albertans across the province. In my meetings in High Level I heard many community and industry concerns about the impacts of range planning, and that is why we undertook a robust approach to public consultation. Certainly, we've listened to the results of those public consultations, which is why we are suspending consideration of conservation lands and some aspects of range planning pending a full socioeconomic analysis.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: like me, you represent a constituency where logging and forestry operations support families and communities. I know that stable and secure access to fibre is vital to the ongoing prosperity of our forest communities. What is our government doing to ensure that the forest industry continues to thrive in our province given the issues surrounding fibre access and caribou range planning?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and the member for the question. Forestry is a critical sector of our economy. Over 15,000 hard-working Albertans work in forestry, and the industry is a key economic driver in at least 70 Alberta communities. In my own constituency the forest industry is a key economic driver that supports families, communities, and prosperity. I've spoken to hundreds of constituents who are concerned about the impact that the caribou range plans might have on their livelihoods and their communities. These folks want a balance. They want to preserve the caribou and protect Alberta's forest industry and the community it supports. That's why we have made the decision to defer planning until we're able to understand the impacts on forestry and how we can support those communities.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Energy: we've faced this issue together as neighbours. You've been hearing the same community concerns, and I know that you are with me in advocating for a strong northern Alberta. Can you tell our constituents what you have done about what you've been hearing?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely. As a northern MLA and as Minister of Energy I've talked to lots of Albertans, many up my way who do share concerns that the caribou range plan could have an effect on the communities. I share our government's belief that Albertans deserve a realistic caribou plan that protects jobs and the economy. As our economy recovers right now, it isn't the time to put in policies that are going to affect our economics. We're securing our economic recovery. We're slowing down, you know, the . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Emergency Medical Services (continued)

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. EMS response times continue to be at or near crisis levels, especially in Calgary and Edmonton. Red alerts where no ambulances are available are virtually a daily occurrence, adding risks not only to the lives of Albertans but also to the beleaguered paramedics. The latest data available from AHS indicates that EMS staff's median wait time of one hour transferring between EMS and nurses is equivalent to just over $20 million in salaries lost each year. To the minister: given years of frustration what are you doing to reduce the number of red alerts?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. We are incredibly proud of the work that paramedics do every day in responding to the call on the front lines, and we are also very proud of the fact that when somebody calls 911, they know that emergency responders in our province are the best and the best equipped to serve them. Expanding the community paramedicine program very recently is one tangible example of reducing transfer times. When we have the ability to serve somebody where they are rather than transferring them, that certainly goes a long way. And we look forward to continuing to find ways to invest in initiatives like the power stretcher program; 350 ambulances are to be equipped with those by the end of this . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Swann: Madam Minister, we're talking about red alerts, and we're talking about wasted time in the ER. What is causing the unreasonable wait times, or should we say waste times, in our ERs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the very important question. Certainly, nobody wants to be waiting in the hallways. They want to be providing care on the front lines, and I've heard that loud and clear from our EMS providers. One of the biggest reasons why they are in those positions today is because under previous governments there was failure to build the infrastructure so that patients could be admitted and receive the proper care in a timely fashion. Usually it's that they're waiting for a bed somewhere in a hospital because for decades we saw the now Official Opposition, when they were in government, neglect to fund the critical infrastructure for the province of Alberta. That's why I'm so proud that we're moving forward with Grande Prairie, with south Edmonton, with Calgary cancer.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Swann: Minister, AHS appears to be paralyzed on this issue. What are you doing to reduce the 650,000 hours per year paramedics spend in ER waiting for the nurses to take their patients?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Again, it goes back to ensuring that there is the space and the staff to be able to serve and to ensure those safe transfers of patients. Making sure that there is a new hospital being built in Grande Prairie, the one that opened recently in High Prairie, the one that opened recently in Edson, the one that we're building in southwest Edmonton, the Calgary cancer hospital, and ensuring that that critical infrastructure that was so necessary to the province and to the front lines to be able to have somewhere to ensure that their patients can receive safe care is a big piece. The other piece is making sure that people can work to their scope of practice, including the paramedicine program, that is ensuring that patients who don't need to be transferred and waiting in a hallway certainly aren't doing that.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Loewen: The NDP government's caribou draft plan in response to the federal government's species at risk regulation is causing substantial concerns by affected industry and communities. Already there is reforestation of seismic lines taking place before consultation is finished. Rumours of knocking down 10-foot trees to plant seedlings are circulating. Presently the cost of reforestation is about $16,000 per kilometre. Knowing that reforestation can happen naturally and that 150,000 of the 250,000 kilometres of seismic lines could cost $2 billion, do you think that this is money well spent regardless of who is paying for it?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we've held numerous stakeholder meetings on the topic of range planning, and we have listened to communities. As a result, we have written to the federal government to ask for three things. We have asked them to partner with us on a socioeconomic impact study, we have asked them to really step up in terms of an infusion of federal funds to restore habitat, and we are asking for them to listen to us as we will bring a delegation to Ottawa to discuss these matters with them. I'll have more to update the House on in supplementals.

Mr. Loewen: Given that the minister just said today that she suspended the parks from further consultation, not cancelled but suspended, and given that the minister has also agreed to do a socioeconomic impact study and went to the feds about that and now I hear, too, that she's asking for federal funds, I guess my question is: what took so long, and what have you done to represent Albertans by lobbying the federal government on the 65 per cent undisturbed requirements?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll take the 65 per cent clarity question out of that whole basket of questions. That is, in fact, the requirement under the Species at Risk Act, that the plans articulate over a period of decades. We're talking decades here for a 50-year plan, the restoration of habitat. That is why companies have worked with us on those long-term restoration plans, whether it's the forestry companies or oil and gas companies. In fact, I just met with Encana yesterday on this matter. There are a lot of really good ideas out there. There are a lot of firms who want to work with us on this and make sure that we hold off that federal . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Loewen: Given that the moratoriums on timber harvest are already causing job losses, contrary to the promise the minister has made, and given that these moratoriums have caused overharvest in some areas, breaking their own regulations, how much longer do Albertans have to suffer from these moratoriums before the proper plan is in place, that protects jobs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we are recovering from the largest economic downturn in the history of the province, and that's why we've made it very clear to the federal government that caribou range plans need to have the requisite amount of flexibility. We have also heard concerns from communities, and that's why we're suspending consideration of conservation lands. We will not sacrifice jobs of hard-working Albertans. As for tenure, we continue to work with those companies – Weyerhaeuser, West Fraser, and others – to find solutions. Certainly, those firms are in a solution space with us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are common-sense people, and they want common-sense solutions. If left to them, we would have a caribou recovery plan that is practical and effective in areas where it makes sense. Instead, we have a government that trumpets economic diversification on one hand and on the other hand plans to unnecessarily sterilize large swaths of forest. To the minister of economic development: can you please explain how shutting down sustainable forestry enterprises creates jobs?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, I've answered the question a few times now, but let me say it once more for the folks in the back. We have, in fact, written to the federal government announcing that we are suspending consideration of conservation lands recommended in the caribou task force report and some aspects of range planning pending a socioeconomic analysis. We will redouble our efforts to work with industry to develop solutions that avoid the imposition of an environmental protection order. Certainly, that Species at Risk Act is a very inflexible instrument, and that's why it is really unfortunate that the Member for Calgary-Lougheed didn't fix it when he had the chance.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Banff and Jasper national parks could not sustain caribou herds despite a thoroughly protected habitat and given that 52,000 square kilometres, almost one-third of the caribou range in northwestern Alberta, is already protected, Minister, how much land are you willing to sterilize for a species that could not survive in parks with pristine wilderness and absolutely no industrial activity?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is not true that oil and gas companies and forestry companies are looking at this as a zero sum. Many have come to us with very substantive and practical solutions, and they are actually making those real on the ground. That's because they, too, understand the risk of a protection order. We understand that as a province, having heard from communities, we need more time to get this strategy right. Certainly, over the last two years we've gained a strong understanding of the health of the herds and the science and what measures need to be taken to reach the requirements under the Species at Risk Act. That's the message that we will be taking to Ottawa as well as the other measures that we've asked Ottawa to consider.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that problems multiply when we try to rebalance nature such as the protections that have resulted in expanding grizzly numbers in northwestern Alberta and given that this government plans to create pens for moms and calves but grizzlies will have no problem digging under the fence to get at the trapped animals, Minister, is the caribou management plan an effective one, or will it simply rub out the forestry sector and the caribou as well?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am not going to engage in amateur wildlife biology right now. We have proceeded in terms of understanding the health of the herds, we are proceeding based on science and evidence, and we are asking the federal government for assistance in this matter. That's why we will be going to Ottawa with a united voice from Alberta, that's why we've asked for their assistance with a socioeconomic study, and that is why we have suspended some aspects of caribou range planning. We have heard loud and clear from the communities in the northern ridings. The members for Peace River, Whitecourt-St. Anne, and Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley have been advocating for their constituents as well.

Thank you.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Peace River recently stated that the government's caribou plan would not result in any job losses or negative impacts to the economy and that the government would not be creating any park spaces, but when the minister's caribou plan was released, it so severely restricted 1.6 million hectares of land, it may as well be a park. Job losses are inevitable. To the minister. Only one can be telling the truth, the hon. Member for Peace River or the minister. Who is it?

Ms Phillips: Well, how unfortunate, indeed, for this stream of questions, Mr. Speaker, that were essentially answered in the first set by the Premier. Look, you know, we have suspended some aspects of caribou range planning, and we're looking for some assistance from the federal government, as I have indicated now several times. We're also suspending consideration of conservation lands in the north. The hon. member knows very well the results from the emergency protection order that came in for the sage grouse for his own constituents in southeast Alberta. It's probably time for him to have some hard questions of his leader, who did nothing for nine years to fix that problem.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, despite being frozen out of government consultations, the northwest Species at Risk Committee conducted extensive stakeholder consultations. They drafted an extensive report outlining specific ways to effectively protect the caribou without harming the local economy, yet the minister has failed to meaningfully engage the northwest Species at Risk Committee. To the minister: why has the government refused to involve them when they've come up with common-sense solutions for the caribou and that's exactly what is needed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The perspectives of municipalities and others were incorporated into the draft plans. Having said that, we are just starting to see the economy looking up, and now is not the time to proceed without a full socioeconomic impact assessment, that we can only do with federal assistance. We need more clarity from the federal government in terms of what kinds of resources they want to put towards this particular project, and that is why I am suspending some aspects of caribou range planning as a result.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, to say that the local response to the government's draft caribou plan was not positively received would be a huge understatement. Response to the plan has been overwhelmingly negative, but when asked, the minister offers feeble assurances that the local feedback is being considered by her government. To the same minister: how has the feedback received from local stakeholders been incorporated, specifically included in your government's caribou protection plan?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The president and CEO of the Alberta Forest Products Association says, "It is encouraging that the Government of Alberta has engaged with stakeholders to hear our ideas and work together to conserve caribou." We will continue consulting with all the stakeholders, the local and industry leaders. In doing so, I want to be crystal clear that we are committed to the protection of the caribou herds but not at the expense of jobs or communities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

North Saskatchewan Land-use Plan Consultation

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past several months the minister of environment's staff have been having secret, invite-only meetings inside my constituency about the possible closure of land, similar to what she did in the Castle. Despite requests from stakeholder groups, municipalities, and even the media this minister has refused to consult the people in my community about potential job losses, economic impacts, and the recreational impact to my community, that has one of the greatest backyards in the world. So my question is: why is this minister avoiding people that do not have her world view, and will she start to have a conversation with our community finally?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we have released the regional advisory council's advice on the development of the North Saskatchewan regional plan. That regional advisory council was appointed by the party that the hon. member now sits in, and we are consulting with the public on that advice. There couldn't be a more open and robust public consultation process than regional planning. It's set out in law how we undertake that. It's important work, and all Albertans are welcome to give their feedback. The process is structured that way.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, that's not what I asked. Given that this minister still will not come and talk to this community, given that she will dispatch her deputy minister only to talk with outside interest groups, some of them from outside of our province, the question is very, very simple: will the minister consult with our community, or will she continue to only talk to foreign influence groups that are pushing an agenda inside our constituency? Will she come and talk to the people of Rocky Mountain House and Sundre about the future of the Bighorn, or will she continue to hide in Edmonton from the people of Alberta?

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I in fact met with the Alberta Outfitters Association last week. They are the member's own constituents. They were here to discuss with me some problem solving and some ways that we can work together in parks and on public land. I met with the mayor of Rocky Mountain House a couple of weeks ago and discussed the economic development and tourism opportunities that are available through the regional advisory council's advice. I would encourage the member to spend less time on conspiracy theories and more time on providing his reactions back to his own party's regional advisory council.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, conspiracy theories? The minister just stood up in this House and said that she met with the mayor of Rocky Mountain House. I know the mayor of Rocky Mountain House. This minister has not met with the mayor of Rocky Mountain House about this issue or the town of Rocky Mountain House, the county of Clearwater, the media inside Clearwater, the town of Sundre, the county of Mountain View. This minister has met with nobody in regard to this issue, including West Fraser and anybody that has significant demand of or importance in this area. So will the minister meet with this community? Yes or no? Stop dodging the question. Stand up and answer it. We're tired of it.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're asking all Albertans to provide their feedback on the North Saskatchewan Regional Advisory Council's report, which we have released publicly. That process takes into account a large amount of stakeholder consultation, which we are committed to doing. It's not just municipalities although they are important. It's tourism operators, it's the private sector, it's the city of Edmonton who depend on the west country for their water supply. This is a very busy landscape, the North Saskatchewan regional plan, and that's why we're going to take the time to get it right.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Rural Crime Prevention

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government committed $10 million to address rural crime. Some welcome expanding crime reduction units and starting a paperwork processing centre, and others like Red Deer county councillor and Alberta rural crime watch director Jean Bota want more work on issues surrounding crime. She said: let's look into the layers; we can't police our way out of the situation. To the Minister of Justice: is the government engaging with affected stakeholders in public, up front, or has the government decided the details based on selective engagement? Is public engagement at the bottom of the list?

The Speaker: The hon. Justice minister and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we've been hearing about this issue from municipalities, from rural Albertans, from the RCMP, from people across this province for quite a while now, and that's why we think that it's time to act. We're absolutely open to hearing from people about their concerns. In fact, I just had an excellent meeting with a number of municipal leaders as well as some members of the opposition that I think was very productive on this issue. We think it was time to act, and that's why we've taken the actions we did, but we're still open to hearing feedback from everyone.

Ms McPherson: Given that the government hasn't explained how the $8 million to hire 39 RCMP officers and 40 civilian staff and the $2 million for up to 10 additional Crown prosecutors will achieve measurable results that address underlying issues and given that preventing the issues that lead people to turn to crime to feed their drug habits has been proven to be more cost effective, again to the Minister. Albertans want to know. Where are human services, health, and community-based wraparound supports in your plan to address the problem?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, this is only one part of our plan. In fact, I've had multiple conversations with multiple different people around this. In fact, our police partners keep telling us that many of these issues can't simply be enforced out. That's why our government is absolutely committed to continuing funding to front-line health care services, to continuing to invest in mental health supports. That's why we have continued that funding throughout government to social services, to health, to all sorts of departments. We know that it's more effective that way. I hope the hon. member will support the budget, that does just that.

Ms McPherson: Given that experienced Crown prosecutors are needed to address the backlog of rural crime cases and given that the government's March 6 job posting for a chief Crown prosecutor in Wetaskiwin will cost Albertans over $180,000 a year and given that Crown prosecutors are hired at $100,000 to $180,000 per year, again to the Justice minister: which experienced Crown prosecutors can you hire for $100,000? If you're not hiring experienced Crown prosecutors, which senior Crown prosecutors do you plan to relocate to train junior prosecutors in rural Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We've certainly heard from Albertans across the province that it's not enough simply to apprehend the criminals. We also need to have prosecutors in place. That's why we're working to increase that complement across the province.

2:30

Certainly, we've been working with the Crown prosecutors' association. They do have some concerns about the wage freeze that's been in place, and we're having those conversations ongoing. I think it's important that we're able to compensate these professionals in such a way that they're able to perform their functions. So we will continue to have those conversations, and we'll continue to ensure that they are available for the people of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to actual policy measures of this government, in the past they've shown little regard for the impacts on communities. Now they have put together a draft caribou protection plan without meaningful consultation to truly understand the impacts that any plan would have on working families and industry. To the Minister of Environment and Parks: can you give working families the assurance that your caribou protection plan won't put thousands out of work?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we have held numerous stakeholder meetings. They have been attended by hundreds of Albertans who are concerned about caribou range plans, and that's why we've listened. The whole point of putting out a draft plan is to hear from people, and we have heard from people in northern Alberta. That is why we are suspending some aspects of caribou range planning and suspending consideration of the conservation lands.

I also want to say very clearly that we are redoubling our efforts to work with industry to develop solutions. We'll be having meetings with industry representatives as we go forward, but there is no question that we need to make sure that we guard against the imposition of a federal . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this minister committed to a balanced approach, protecting both caribou and jobs, and is coming now a little late with a new plan and given that she has no clear understanding of the wide-ranging impacts, including job losses, that would come from restricting a significant portion of the region's land because she has not completed the socioeconomic impact study previously, will the minister commit today to providing her department the resources it needs to complete the proper consultation before they finalize their caribou protection plan?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I've written to the federal government this morning to ask for their assistance with the socioeconomic analysis, and we will be suspending some aspects of caribou range planning pending the outcome of that analysis.

Over the last two years we have gained a better, more science-based understanding of the health of the herd and the measures that need to be taken to fulfill the very stringent requirements of the Species at Risk Act. It is unfortunate that we were left with such an inflexible legacy by the Harper government and the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, who did nothing to stand up for Alberta when he had the chance.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am looking forward to what aspects of the plan will be changed.

To the same minister: will the government adjust their caribou protection plans if it is found that working families will be negatively impacted by these plans in any way?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we are recovering from the largest economic downturn in the history of the province. We've made it clear to the federal government that now is not the time to impede that recovery. We will conduct those socioeconomic impact analyses on the federal requirements. We are also asking the federal government to make a substantial investment in terms of what will be required in order to reach that 65 per cent habitat requirement over a period of decades.

I really want to acknowledge the work that the hon. Member for Peace River has done on this file and her efforts to keep it at the forefront . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, there are numerous concerns over the Alberta draft caribou range plan that this government recently submitted to the federal government. One such concern that is being raised is over the idea of the possibility of designating protected areas, that would limit forestry across Alberta. Minister, this caribou plan could cost the northwest region $90 billion in potential resource revenue. As such, the minister says that she's heard from Albertans, so I guess my question is: has your ministry completed any economic analysis on what the possible closure would cost the Alberta economy in northern areas that may be closed to forestry activities, and does that cost include any compensation to companies that harvest in those areas?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the forestry companies and energy companies and communities understand full well the risk of an emergency order. Certainly, southern Albertans, for which the hon. member also is an MLA, understand the negative consequences of an emergency order like we saw with the sage grouse. We want to avoid that situation, and so do the forestry companies and so do the oil and gas companies. That's why we are ensuring that we are doing a full socioeconomic analysis, but we're also asking the federal government to really come to the table in terms of their investments. Until we see that, we have suspended some aspects . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Schneider: That answer doesn't provide any certainty to the forestry industry, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the caribou herd that once lived in Banff national park was wiped out in a freak avalanche decades ago and given that this government worked with the federal government to recently reintroduce bison, a species that has been absent from the park for a century, Minister, why was there no mention of a plan to repopulate the Banff caribou herd, a herd that did exist in a national park area with no development or industrial projects?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reason why the province of Alberta has not engaged in caribou recovery in a national park is because the Constitution is the thing. That's the answer to that question.

The fact of the matter is that an emergency order is not in Albertans' best interests, but neither, too, is a plan that doesn't accurately balance the need to make sure that we have economic growth and jobs. That is why we have asked for a more fulsome socioeconomic analysis and paused some aspects of range planning pending that analysis, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Schneider: Well, I wonder why this government is picking winners and losers with wildlife.

Mr. Speaker, given that several herds have their ranges primarily in protected areas – for example, the A La Pêche herd has substantial areas within the parks already – and given that the majority of the caribou mountain herd's territory is already in protected areas, Minister, exactly how are more protected lands going to help increase the caribou herd population in Alberta when the herd in Banff national park was already so vulnerable that an avalanche was able to wipe that herd out?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The risk of an emergency order is real, and that is why, for example, companies like EnCana and Jupiter Resources and others have been working really productively with us in the Little Smoky-A La Pêche area. There is a tremendous amount of economic potential in the tight oil and the rich gas plays in that area, but there are also some really good ideas around road sharing and infrastructure sharing and so on. Companies have really stepped up to the plate on that, and we will continue to work productively with them on those suggestions. They know the risk of an emergency order. It's really too bad that other members of this House . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Presently this government's wildlife species plans are old or nonexistent. Plans for important interrelated species that affect caribou, like moose, do not exist. Mule deer plans are from 1989; black bear plans from 1993; and wolves, the key species interacting with caribou, 1991. Minister, how can you claim to be making science-based decisions for caribou when management plans for those interrelated species are decades old, even nonexistent?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you Mr. Speaker. The reason why there are no range plans required under legislation for species that are not at risk is because they're not at risk. So black bear and moose: those populations are stable. In fact, they are not listed. We are required to file range plans with the federal government under the requirements of the federal Species at Risk Act. This is not a choice. That is the law of the land.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the front bench and the backbench: given that this current range management plan for Little Smoky-A La Pêche caribou herds includes government poisoning of moose carcasses and aerial wolf kills in order to save that caribou herd and given that your submission to the federal government is over 200 pages long but there is barely any mention of predator control beyond talk of expanding this into other regions, Minister, has there been any research encouraging local trappers and First Nations people to help manage the population of wolves instead of your present culling methods? If not, why is this not detailed in the interactive plan?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: The short answer, Mr. Speaker, is yes. We are involving the AWN in those predator control programs, and there are a number of things that Environment and Parks has undertaken for some years in order to protect this federally listed species. Those are requirements under the act to maintain the health of the herds, about which we know a lot more after two years of careful work on this file.

2:40

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Given that a Quebec study showed that bears have a large effect on caribou calf mortality and, obviously, we have a lot of bears in the caribou ranges here in Alberta and given that biologists say that there has been little studied about predators other than wolves and their effects on caribou and given that the effects of bear predation in your plan is almost nonexistent, Minister, if your plan is science-based, where is the science on caribou calf mortality from bears?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Range planning is a very complex process. There are about 15 ranges that I have to plan for, and they're multi-year initiatives. That is why we have asked the federal government for some assistance on this matter in terms of ability to know more about the health of the herds, more about predation, and so on. There's a robust amount of monitoring and science, in fact, that is being undertaken by our department, and that will continue at least under this government, that values science.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we will proceed with Members' Statements in 30 seconds.

Hon. members, my apologies to the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. I missed you in the first roster, but please proceed.

Lorelei Beaumaris Community League

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today to honour Lorelei Beaumaris Community League and their accomplishments in the fantastic constituency of Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Lorelei Beaumaris is a vibrant, diverse, and fun community league with a wide range of programming for all ages and a dedicated team of volunteers who understand the value in community engagement. This also happens to be my community league. Dance classes, soccer, preschool ice skating, and free community events are all ways that Lorelei Beaumaris offers opportunities for families. The soccer programs for children and youth, managed by volunteers, have been a great success year after year. This past indoor season the under-10 girls' team won gold in the city of Edmonton finals, and the under-12 boys' team won gold in the intercities. Congratulations to both teams and the volunteers who coached, organized, and mentored all of these youngsters to gold.

This past fall our government awarded a CFEP grant to Lorelei Beaumaris for $64,409. That grant went to renovations of the community outdoor ice rink. As a result of dedicated volunteers, specifically a father-daughter duo, this rink won the first on the rink award two years in a row from the Edmonton Federation of Community Leagues. Together we celebrated the grant and the award just a few weeks ago. I had the heartwarming experience of helping an excited three-year-old named Maggie learn to skate for the first time. It's these moments, like with Maggie, that you can see and feel the benefit when a government invests in communities and when people invest in each other.

Thank you to the volunteers who plan and host events all year long, who spend countless hours and effort to support families. Your government thanks you for all that you do and for all that you continue to do.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Rural Crime Prevention Funding

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was so disappointed to see the UCP vote against funding to combat rural crime.

Before I was elected as the MLA for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater, I was an insurance agent in Athabasca and Boyle. I've worked with too many people who were dealing with the aftermath of thefts and break-ins, something I've also experienced first-hand. There are stories from every corner of this province of people and families being affected by rural crime. We can see that in some places the problem is getting worse.

It requires real action, something never seen while the Conservatives were in office. I was proud to see our government stand up and vote to provide law enforcement with the tools and resources that they need to combat crime. I was proud of the real steps that our government has taken to make life safer for rural Albertans. I was proud to see that our government is making public safety a real priority, but that priority, it seems, is not shared by the Official Opposition. Instead of standing with our rural communities and our law enforcement officials, they chose to vote against the funding needed by law enforcement to keep our communities safe.

The Leader of the Opposition tells rural Albertans that regardless of the cost something needs to be done and that he'd support more funds to fight crime. However, rather than voting to support our rural communities, his caucus chose to vote down these resources. They chose to vote against law enforcement and against services to support people impacted by crime. Albertans expect their elected officials to walk the talk when it comes to public safety and fighting crime. Through their actions the UCP showed that they have the wrong priorities when it comes to rural Alberta. I am proud to be part of a government that has the backs of rural Albertans and is investing in the resources to tackle these challenges head-on.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I'd just like to remind the House that during Members' Statements it's been a long practice here that we do not make comments, good or bad, when the members' statements are being made. I ask you to continue to remind yourselves of that.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Carbon Levy and Pipeline Approvals

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I was amused by the media report where the Government House Leader said: not wanting to raise the carbon tax means a lack of commitment to the environment. What was he thinking? Let's take a look. Sure, the NDP has attempted to buy favour with voters by offering them free light bulbs and shower heads. They're trying to buy favour with Albertans' own dollars. So far Albertans are not giving them the favour they're buying. The government itself has been forced to admit that they won't meet their own emission targets despite their carbon tax and other punitive policies. The problem is that that's where the good stuff ends and the negatives to the carbon tax just get started.

Andrew Leach, an architect of the NDP's plan, points out that an Alberta-only or Canada-only carbon tax will lead to carbon leakage; in other words, the transfer of emissions from Alberta to other places without carbon tax and with low standards, be it Saudi Arabia, Venezuela, or Russia. Mr. Speaker, 759,000 barrels of foreign oil come into Canada each day. The NDP and Trudeau Liberal policies make Alberta product less affordable, further promoting offshore oil imports.

To make matters worse, the NDP's allies, the Trudeau Liberals, have enacted a new approvals process that now means companies won't even try to build new oil and gas projects in western Canada, yet they never target auto plants in Ontario or cement plants in Quebec.

It's not just the emissions that move elsewhere in the world. Well-paying jobs move along with them. We've already seen drilling rigs cross the border to Texas and North Dakota, with companies noting that it's unlikely they'll ever return. So it seems that the NDP's environmental plan really only increases exports of investments, jobs, and economic activity to other jurisdictions.

When the NDP asks, "What's your plan?" the easiest place to start is by undoing the considerable damage they have done, with Bill 1, Carbon Tax Repeal Act. From there we can return to a thoughtful conversation on how to protect the environment for the whole world's children and grandchildren, starting with those right here in Alberta.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased on behalf of some 8,000 Albertans to table a series of petitions raising the concerns about the planned caribou range plans, asking for a comprehensive socioeconomic assessment to be made before the government proceeds with such plans, and calling for the government not to set aside additional parkland in this process. I'm honoured on behalf of these Albertans to present these petitions.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Bill 5

An Act to Strengthen Financial Security for Persons with Disabilities

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce and move first reading of Bill 5, An Act to Strengthen Financial Security for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Speaker, all Albertans should be able to plan for their children's future. This legislation amends the AISH Act and the AISH general regulation so Albertans can establish trusts for family members and loved ones who are receiving AISH benefits without affecting their AISH eligibility. This legislation continues this government's work to improve the quality of life for Albertans with disabilities.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a first time]

2:50 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of Investment Intentions of Canadian Entrepreneurs by the Business Development Bank of Canada. In the report it states that 73 per cent of small and mid-sized businesses plan on investing in their business in 2018 and that the average investment amount per business in Alberta is $330,000, the highest across Canada.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am so pleased to table today the requisite copies of a letter from the ministries of Environment, Agriculture and Forestry, and Energy to the federal government showing our government's commitment to supporting jobs, communities, and our economy, stating our decision to suspend consideration of conservation lands recommended in the caribou task force pending the outcome of a socioeconomic impact study.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of an excerpt from the Conference Board of Canada's Metropolitan Outlook. In this excerpt it shows that Calgary and Edmonton are leading the prairies in terms of GDP growth and that in 2019, just like 2017, Calgary will lead the country in GDP growth. This report shows that things are looking up in Calgary.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the Hon. Mr. S. Anderson, Minister of Municipal Affairs, pursuant to the Government Organization Act the Alberta Boilers Safety Association annual report 2017.

On behalf of the hon. Ms Ganley, Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, responses to questions raised by Mrs. Pitt, Member for Airdrie, Mrs. Aheer, Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, Ms Miller, Member for Red Deer-South, and Mr. Ellis, Member for Calgary-West, on April 3, 2017, and April 4, 2017, Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General 2017-18 main estimates debate; and response to Written Question 18, asked for by Mr. Ellis on November 27, 2017; namely, in each of the calendar years from 2013 to 2016 what was the average completion time for a death investigation and what was the longest time spent completing a death investigation at the office of the Chief Medical Examiner?

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 201

Employment Standards (Firefighter Leave) Amendment Act, 2018

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very pleased today to rise to speak to my private member's bill, Bill 201, Employment Standards (Firefighter Leave) Amendment Act, 2018.

Bill 201 proposes to amend the Employment Standards Code to protect part-time, casual, or volunteer firefighters from loss of employment because they are or have become a part-time firefighter. Currently employers can and in some cases have terminated employment for missed time due to fulfilling duties as a part-time firefighter. The need for this bill was brought to my attention early on in my tenure, and I heard over and over again from fire chiefs around Alberta and those in the field that this important piece of legislation was needed to protect the employment of those who risk their lives for our communities on a daily basis.

I'd been an MLA for less than six months when I received a phone call from a young man from southern Alberta. He had been a volunteer firefighter for one of the municipal districts in my constituency. I say "had been" because his regular, full-time employer had recently given him an ultimatum. Quote: quit your job or quit firefighting, because as long as you work here, you aren't a firefighter. End of quote. Now, my initial thought was that there had to be some protection in Alberta's labour legislation preventing termination based on an individual's participation as a volunteer firefighter. How wrong I was. Alberta had no protection for volunteer or part-time firefighters.

In Alberta emergency services are stretched so thin in rural Alberta that rural Alberta routinely experiences code reds. If that is the case, why would we refuse job protection for those who volunteer or work part-time as an emergency first responder? It was at that moment I decided that something needed to be changed.

These part-time and volunteer firefighters not only respond to fires but everything from medical emergencies, chemical spills, and traffic collisions, most often in the rural communities that they serve, but these rural communities cannot feasibly afford to staff the fire halls with full-time firefighters. They have to rely on part-time and volunteers to meet these sometimes life-threatening emergencies.

Now, since the recession hit, it has been made very hard and is harder for these fire halls to keep their volunteers. An article was written up in Global News called Answering the Call: Who Pays the Cost of Dwindling Volunteer Numbers? It stated that volunteer fire departments were struggling to get residents to sign up. The mayor of Parkland county said that they needed 40 volunteers to become members of a new, state-of-the-art fire hall that opened in the Acheson industrial area. Ironically, he said that when the spots were not filled, they'd have to look into a full-time contingent, and the cost would be over $6.5 million. Municipalities are struggling to hire full-time firefighters. He said, "That burden is then assumed by the business community here as well as residents in the benefiting area."

Also, in the same article the Alberta Fire Chiefs Association said, and I quote: when people don't sign up, it also results in longer response times; a long-term problem is that residents in communities will be eventually relying on services in other communities, which will ultimately come at a price. End of quote. That was the chief of the Alberta Fire Chiefs Association.

In May 2017 in a CBC article, Volunteer Firefighters Harder to Recruit and Retain During Alberta's Downturn, Chief Says, it talks about how volunteers make up more than 80 per cent of Alberta's firefighters, and this explains how the economic downturn has hit recruitment and retention hard, especially in smaller communities. An example of that is Rocky View county losing about 16 per cent of its volunteers each year. According to the fire chief, "We'll do our training and then we'll print out our roster sheet and we'll already start losing people."

Many fire halls in rural Alberta cannot hire full-time firefighters, and they are finding it hard to fill rosters with volunteer, casual, and part-time firefighters. The inability to fill these rosters is due to many scrambling to find regular work and knowing that these struggling business owners will not hire those who cause staffing disruptions.

The real problem is that if you can't fill the roster, you can't fight the fire, and you can't save lives, which leads us back to the reason I decided to designate my private member's bill for firefighter leave. I was surprised and disappointed to discover that volunteer firefighters can lose their jobs for responding to emergencies. I realize that businesses are doing what they can during this economic downturn, and that's why I've included in the amendment that the leave would be unpaid.

The purpose of my bill, Madam Speaker, is not to add another regulatory burden to the business but to help protect not only the firefighters but the communities where these firefighters work and live. These are primarily rural communities, not urban communities, not urban settings. Nobody from the urban centres volunteers in the rural centres. This is all about rural Alberta. Businesses in the community will ultimately pay the price in higher taxes if fire halls need to be filled with full-time firefighters.

My hope is simple, that this bill will close that loophole and prevent anyone who volunteers their time, their energy to protect their communities from having to worry whether they have a job to come back to. My hope is that all members in this House today will support Bill 201 and give the real heroes of our communities their support, that they so graciously deserve.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, can I just confirm that you are moving second reading of Bill 201?

Mr. W. Anderson: That's correct, yes.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Speaker. An eminently sensible bill: I don't think anybody who cares about emergency response can fault the intent here. I guess the question I would have is – and I should be aware of this – are EMS not, in some cases, volunteers in some areas of Alberta? I don't know the answer to that, but if that is the case – and I believe it is – that there are some EMS programs that are staffed by volunteers, who work as they're needed, then would the member consider a friendly amendment at some point that would include volunteer EMS people? They're all in the same boat, and they're all critically important to serving a community.

Those are just some comments and questions. I'll certainly be supporting the bill, but I think it would be stronger if we included volunteer EMS as well.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. member for St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Lac La Biche.

The Deputy Speaker: Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: You know, the one that's disappearing. Everybody should know that one by now.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's an absolute pleasure to get up and speak to Bill 201, to protect our volunteer firefighters and temporary fire workers. You know, I want to start by thanking the firefighters in the province for all that they do, both in their duties as first responders and first on the scene to save lives in events or emergencies, in their roles combatting fires and keeping our communities safe but also for all the volunteer work that they do in our communities. I know a lot of them, especially in the St. Paul area. These guys: you see them out working for the ag society; you see them out working for the Lions. They're everywhere in the community, and they're the folks that make our communities better. The braveness and altruism that a person must possess to put the safety of their community above themselves are irrefutably noble.

Now, we can talk about all the volunteer firefighters from all over Alberta that left their families, ran up to the front lines in Fort McMurray during the fires and also in southern Alberta during, you know, last fall, when we had the fires in southern Alberta. Especially up in the Fort McMurray area they didn't realize the long-term health effects it could have on them. A lot of these guys left their jobs, and their employers supported them in that act. I think that most employers in Alberta will actually support this bill as well. There may be the odd one that doesn't, but I think most of them realize that these guys are out there protecting. It could be their house that's on fire when they get called out, Madam Speaker. So these employers know that, especially in small communities, we depend on our volunteer fire departments.

It's disappointing, actually, to see that the bravest among us do not have job security under the current legislation. We hope to change that here today. If somebody undertakes a socially beneficial task but does not have the security of knowing that they'll have a job to come back to, they feel dissuaded in assuming this role. I can attest that I had employees that worked for me in my previous role in the oil field. I knew that, you know, three or four guys on some of my crews often would get called out, especially in the springtime, when the grass fires were rampant and that. It was just something that we accepted and expected would happen, and we just made sure that everybody covered up those gaps. I think, again, that you're going to see a lot of support for this provincially.

Since there's no legislation that guarantees job security for these firefighters, they typically opt to stick to their job, and that has caused the number of people enrolling to be a firefighter on a casual, part-time basis to drop. I'm actually surprised when I realize that this legislation isn't there protecting these guys, too. We've all seen photographs of the volunteer fire department in St. Paul or Ashmont or in our small communities. You know, some of these have 24, 25, 30 volunteer firefighters. These guys are doing that without any protection for their jobs, that their families depend on, which is really surprising, that they would even put that in front for their communities.

When the number of people becoming volunteer, part-time, or casual firefighters is low, fire departments are obligated to hire more full-time positions, which can be very costly and really is not an economic reality for most of our small towns. They depend on their volunteer fire departments. If someone is willing to provide this community-enhancing service for free but is dissuaded by the possibility of job loss, the cost of full-time firefighters must be absorbed by the fire hall and then relayed back to the community it serves. Again, most of our small communities just can't sustain that type of reality. Full-time firefighter-filled rosters weigh heavy on the costs of the community they benefit. Especially in a rural town the costs can at times be so major and disproportionate to what they would be in urban centres that full-time staffed fire halls are not sustainable.

Let's not forget that especially up in – I want to speak specifically for the area that I represent. We have volunteer fire departments in towns like Wandering River, St. Paul, Smoky Lake, where these guys respond to accidents, highway accidents on some of the busiest and potentially most dangerous highways in the province. You know, everybody talks about PTSD. I'm sure that some of these guys are going to suffer from that in the future as well. So we really need to do whatever we can as a government to protect even the full-time jobs of these guys so that we can continue to recruit. As per this bill, firefighters need job security. They need to know that their job will be waiting for them when they get back from serving their community.

I was saddened to hear that there were currently no job protections in this area, but we can't allow employers to hold it against them if they must leave from time to time to fight fires or respond to emergencies. We want to know that if ever we are caught in a sort of emergency situation, first responders are fully staffed and able to be on the scene as soon as possible because every minute counts. We only have to put ourselves in the situation where one of our loved ones is in a car accident and we have our ambulances in Edmonton or somewhere out of the area and it takes them a long time to respond. Our volunteer firefighters are very often the very first people on site.

Furthermore, not only should we be protecting our goodwill firefighters from being fired from a job they hold because they must go and fight fires; we also must ensure that a prospective employer cannot discriminate towards a potential hire with the knowledge of this person being a part-time firefighter. I'm very disheartened to hear of accounts where a person was told to give up their part-time role as a firefighter or be terminated from their job. This is not the message that we want to send. We do not want to dissuade anyone from filling the fire hall rosters and being on hand to attend emergencies as they arise. I haven't personally heard of anybody – or nobody has come forward to me – stating that they were refused employment or fired for just cause for this, but I will be looking into it. I'll be talking to my local firefighters and just find out how they feel. But I really do believe that most of our employers are behind this.

This bill will serve both firefighters, who deserve the right to protect employment, and also fire halls that benefit immensely from volunteer and part-time firefighters on their roster, especially those that cannot afford full-time ones. In particular, rural towns depend the most on volunteer, part-time, and casual firefighters as it would be too costly for them to hire a full roster of firefighters.

An article was published in 2014. This article, entitled Answering the Call: Who Pays the Cost of Dwindling Volunteer Numbers, indicated that volunteer fire departments were having trouble getting residents to sign up. In particular, the mayor of Parkland county, Rod Shaigec, specifies that they needed 40 volunteers in order to become members of a brand new, state-of-the-art fire hall that had opened in the industrial area. He continued to say that when spots are not filled, they are forced to look into a full-time contingent, hiking the cost to upwards of $6.5 million. He then goes on: "That burden is then assumed by the business community here as well as residents in the benefiting area." Everybody has to pay; taxes go up.

The Alberta Fire Chiefs Association stated that when people do not sign up, it results in longer response times. Again, I'd just like to remind you that we're not just talking about grass fires and house fires here. These guys get called out to all kinds of emergencies. Specifically, like I said, they're protecting our highways in a lot of these small towns around St. Paul, Wandering River, and Bonnyville as well.

I think it's clear that volunteer, casual, and part-time firefighters are a considerable asset in our communities, that must be supported. We should not by any means be dissuading them from supporting our fire departments for fear of losing employment or not being able to find employment in the first place. I sincerely hope that this bill will close that loophole so that firefighters will not have to worry about whether or not they have a job to come back to.

Due to uncertain economic conditions volunteer firefighter numbers have been dwindling in rural communities. In the face of an economic downturn people would rather cling to the security of their jobs than risk losing them by having to leave from time to time to respond to fires or other emergencies. I believe that that could be a cause of dwindling numbers for sure, especially when you don't want to risk that you're the guy that's going to be first on the layoff list if you're, you know, running away to a fire once a week or once every two weeks.

Due to the lack of legislation to mandate job security, there is a disincentive to signing up for this position causing these decreasing numbers. We need to end this time of uncertainty for those who are selflessly helping our community and implement legislation to help them feel secure about going to volunteer to save lives and keep us safe. With this bill we will ensure that those who are already enrolled as volunteer, part-time, or casual firefighters no longer have to dread getting a dispatch call for fear of leaving work and how that will portray them to their employer. It will also have a beneficial effect on the enrolment of new firefighters, who will not be painted with the harsh title of unhireable if they're proud to be a supporter of the designation of firefighter.

I will support this bill with the same tenacity that a volunteer firefighter has shown in protecting his community. In closing, I encourage all members of this Assembly to support this bill put forth by my hon. colleague, and I again salute all of the volunteer, temporary, and part-time firefighters in Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you very much for recognizing me today. I rise today in support of Bill 201, the private member's bill from the hon. Member for Highwood. I think that, first, I'd like to commend the member for bringing forward this piece of legislation to this House. I think it's important that we recognize the importance of our volunteer firefighters in communities like where I come from and where you come from, Madam Speaker. I know that in Sundre, Rocky Mountain House, and Rimbey and everywhere in between, we are one hundred per cent serviced by volunteer firefighters. Our communities could not afford anything different.

It's not just responding to fires, as the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills said. Our firefighters deal with significant things, including medical emergencies. We are at a time right now where we see, under this government, unprecedented red alerts with the EMS situation, and unfortunately right now in rural Alberta our volunteer firefighters are the ones who have to pick up the slack, as a result of that, when people have car accidents or are facing a medical emergency, sometimes in very remote places. If it wasn't for our volunteer firefighters, we would not be able to service those populations.

Madam Speaker, as you know, I used to live in a very, very remote place, running a backcountry facility that was located on the Forestry Trunk Road of the Red Deer River, about 45 minutes to an hour of gravel away from pavement, with only about three or four neighbours most of the year. Then all of a sudden, on a long weekend 60,000 Calgarians and Edmontonians and people from Red Deer would come and join us in our backyard. As you can imagine, 60,000 people arriving in a remote location like that can result in all sorts of interesting circumstances. If it wasn't for our volunteer firefighters in Sundre and Rocky Mountain House and everywhere in between, we would not be able to handle it. You know, everything from significant injuries, quad accidents, carbon monoxide poisoning, drinking and driving, car accidents, those types of things: you name it; they have to go out and deal with those situations.

I drive, like you do, Madam Speaker, across a very large constituency on a daily basis. The reality is that if I have a car accident or anybody else in my constituency has a car accident, the first people that will be there to help them are volunteer firefighters.

Now, the nature of being a volunteer firefighter means that you have to have some sort of other income source to be able to provide for your family or your livelihood. You're giving of your time to be able to come and help people that are in sometimes very dire circumstances and often putting yourself in danger to be able to respond to help those people. The idea behind the hon. member's bill is to make sure that people that are putting their time forward and volunteering in those capacities do not end up in situations where they may lose their employment or they have to be nervous about responding to fires.

We also saw the incredible circumstances, the very upsetting and tough to watch circumstances that took place in Fort McMurray a while back, and while they would have had paid departments around Fort McMurray, many of our volunteer departments all across the province answered that call to quickly go and help that community through that.

You know, the idea of a wildfire is something that communities that I live in worry about every year. Pretty shortly here, first, we'll start worrying about floods, Madam Speaker, and then right after that we'll be worrying about fires, and if it wasn't for our volunteer firefighters in the community, able to respond fast to those situations, we would lose lots more property, even including whole towns. I mean, I think the last big fire I can think about that we fought in our community was the big fight to save the hamlet of Nordegg, the historical community west of Rocky Mountain House, and almost all of that was fought by volunteers on the ground at first before we could get professional firefighters out to help them.

Interestingly enough, the facility that I used to run, Madam Speaker, that was far away, burned down about 10 years ago now. There was a fire. We woke up in the middle of the night. As you can imagine, an hour away from pavement and probably about an hour and 45 minutes from the nearest town, you're a long way from help. The first people that arrived were volunteers locally within the community, and volunteers further abroad within the community came and helped us put our facility out of fire. While we could not save the main lodge, we were able to save the rest of the facility as a result of those hard-working volunteers that answered the call that day. All of those firefighters would have had jobs that day that they had to depart from when their pagers rang, and they had to answer the call and drive out to Mountain Aire Lodge to try to save us.

I can think of some other situations similar to that. You know, I spent a night with some volunteer firefighters and volunteer paramedics, interestingly enough. We do have those in our communities from Caroline, which has a whole volunteer EMS department. A 15-year-old girl had broken her neck while on a quad trip. She was from Calgary, and she was in a bad accident. We couldn't get a helicopter to her that evening because of weather, and those volunteers spent the evening on the side of a mountain giving medical treatment to this young lady, who ended up walking and made a full recovery, thankfully. Again, those were volunteers. I think all of us would agree that we would not want to see them lose their employment or end up in a situation that is negative towards their future career aspects because they have chosen to risk their lives to come and help us in our community.

I'm interested in what the government's response will be to this legislation. I think that in general I would suspect that this government has already indicated that they would not want to see people lose their jobs for many different, important aspects. I would think that they would add "volunteering in your community to be an emergency services professional" to that list of reasons that you should not lose your job.

Despite the fact that these individuals are volunteers, I also think it's important to recognize that they are professional firefighters. They go through a tremendous amount of training and give up a tremendous amount of their personal time beyond just volunteering to answer emergency calls and go through the training. In fact, the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright is a volunteer firefighter. I commend him for his service, and I'm always interested to hear the training that they're going through. I know that my friend the hon. Member for Airdrie decided to join some of her fire department the other day to go through that training and found out how, really, it's not that easy, Madam Speaker. Despite the fact that they probably don't have coveralls in my size, I also don't think I could keep up with them.

It's important to recognize that not only are they answering that pager call and then going into, you know, significantly dangerous circumstances sometimes, whether icy road conditions to go help people in a car accident, remote locations for search and rescue operations for people that have been hurt, or, of course, fighting fires inside rural communities – some of these fires are very, very big, Madam Speaker. I think that given the community that you come from, you've probably seen some forest fires up close and personal. It's a pretty scary thing for our firefighters when they have to go respond to that.

A common one that we get in our community is that it starts in the grasslands and moves really, really fast across our ranch communities, and volunteer firefighters, before the government firefighters can arrive, are the ones that manage to keep it in control and at least save property and livestock and animals. Of course, we know we lost an amazing volunteer firefighter in southern Alberta just last year fighting a fire, so I think we can all recognize the importance of volunteer firefighters in our community and recognize the contribution that they make to our community both in the risk to themselves as well as the significant time commitment to be able to complete that job.

Now, I was surprised and disappointed to discover that volunteer firefighters can lose their jobs for responding to emergencies. I had no idea that that was a possibility or a real thing until the hon. member brought forward his legislation and began to discuss that with me. I think most of my constituents would be surprised that the people that we depend on on a daily basis for emergency situations could be in a spot where they could lose their career or their job because they chose to respond to that pager call.

You know, Madam Speaker, it is scary for us, yourself and myself and others in this Chamber and across Alberta that live in remote rural communities, to think about what would happen if one day nobody responds to that pager call. If nobody responds to that call to come and help somebody, it would be devastating and, I think, in some ways would change rural lifestyle significantly and to a point where we may not be able to live with that.

It's not just a rural Alberta situation. Though we live in these communities that depend on volunteer firefighters on a daily basis and members on both sides of the House live in those communities, it's actually a very big urban issue as well because the large majority of the emergency calls from my communities, nonfire calls but a large majority of car accident calls or backcountry rescue calls, those type of things, are for people from the large cities coming in and enjoying our communities.

I think many people who depart from Calgary or Edmonton on a weekend to go camping in a place like, you know, Rocky Mountain House or Sundre or Drayton Valley or west of those types of places or out by Athabasca in the north or in Peace Country, where you're from, Madam Speaker, would probably just automatically think that there's a service there that would be able to come and get them if they get into trouble because that's what they're used to in their communities. They come from communities with professional, full-time firefighters, that are on the payroll for the cities or the municipalities that they live in, and they probably don't really know until they have gotten themselves into a situation where they needed our firefighters to help and also when they realized that those were volunteers . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak about this important bill. This bill proposes to amend the Employment Standards Code to protect part-time, casual, volunteer firefighters from loss of employment because they have to become a part-time firefighter, and there are other aspects of this that I'd like to add to later on in my speech.

I want to thank the member opposite for the thoughtful idea of working on this issue and for the important opportunity it provides to talk about workplaces, community, and volunteerism. I know all about volunteerism because of the hours that I've volunteered for many organizations in the community I live in. We can all agree that firefighters are the foundations of our communities, whether we're talking about Fort McMurray or all the way down to Fort Macleod or whether I'm talking about firefighters in Edson, Hinton, Jasper, or Grande Cache, and we can agree that it is an important aspect of our communities.

When it comes to protections for workers, we are on the side of everyday Albertans, and we're working every day to make life better. That's why, for example, we've taken steps to introduce two major pieces of legislation last year that finally brought the Alberta workplace laws into the 21st century, because they lagged behind the rest of the country for many years. It's something that we did, and I'm very proud of the effort that we did to do that. We did this to make sure Alberta workers are being protected and for family-friendly workplaces that are safe, healthy, and dignified.

Now, when it comes to the private member's bill, it certainly touches an important aspect of our emergency services, the ones that we do well to honour – voluntary, part-time, and casual labour – and we all know that because of the firefighters that volunteer and that kind of thing. By working with all our partners in municipalities – local emergency management offices, employer associations, and unions – we can make sure we are supporting a vibrant and sustainable volunteer and part-time firefighter service.

I know that quite well because, being on the executive for the local union for many years, one of our aspects on our committee was looking after the part-time firefighters that existed in the mill. Some of these employees also volunteered for firefighting service in the community. Sometimes it was difficult for these employees to get excused from their duties at the job because you can't always just stop and leave a job unattended, especially in an operating environment like the mill. It did create issues from time to time, especially on emergency things and like that. I know that full well for what I'm going to talk about in my speech.

The other aspect that this doesn't really look at is the value of search and rescue. Search and rescue falls in the same category as the firefighters because we worked with them on search issues, especially if it involved children. You needed to be there when the RCMP called you. I'm a search and rescuer, have been for many years. I've gone through extensive training on this and these kinds of things to assist. This is the same issue that really needs to be looked at for all emergency responders because we all do those things. We volunteer to cover for those issues. Especially when a child has gone missing, you want to be on top of it immediately. That's where, when a call goes out, you're there as soon as you can or immediately to help organize the search that is needed.

Also, the other aspect of it: it's not only children; it's, as our people age, the Alzheimer's. They just wander away from the homes or their houses or whatever, and they get lost. That's where it's important, when I'm talking about the fact that it should be included in emergency services that are provided by search and rescue, because those organizations are invaluable when it comes to finding lost people or whatever. In some cases we've been called out at all times of the night. That's why we have to have our packs and everything ready to go at a moment's notice. As soon as the call comes in, you grab your packs, your search and rescue gear, and you're out the door. It's important when we're talking about these issues that maybe we might consider those things.

The issue that we need to move forward on this: it's important that we have to work with employers. We don't want employers taking steps to not employ part-time or casual firefighters – we don't want that to happen – because of the potential cost to their business in accommodating sudden or undefined leaves. That wouldn't work. We all know it doesn't work and that kind of thing. We don't want to encourage employers to do this.

It's also not a rural versus urban question. That's something that we've really got to look at. It's an Alberta question that we've got to look at. We need to work with all of our partners, like I said: municipalities, counties, local fire halls, the fire chiefs, the firefighter unions. Of course, me being with search and rescue, we had to work with the RCMP. Of course, quite often we worked in conjunction with the fire department on some of their rescue efforts as well because we had the experience in some of the issues, and they relied on our experience and know-how when we went out on searches and these kind of things. It's important that we do this, and we want to make sure that whatever we're doing with this bill, we get it right. That's the important aspect of it.

3:30

I also want to thank all the firefighters in our region and our search and rescue personnel that stand up every day and put their lives in jeopardy for whatever things that we do. I think it's important as the Member for West Yellowhead that I acknowledge the time and tasks that it takes them for their training and everything else to do that. I really want to thank them for all the work that they do.

I also want to thank the member for the good work he's done in Highwood, and I look forward to continued discussion about this important issue. I really think, like I said, that we should look at all our emergency services, emergency personnel, that put their lives out there doing whether it's firefighting or search and rescue or these kinds of things. I really think that we should look at that.

Other than that, that's all I have to say on this at this point. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's really an honour to be here to be able to speak on Bill 201. Thank you to the Member for Highwood on bringing this forward. This is a very important bill. It's so important.

I'm a volunteer firefighter. Well, I was a volunteer firefighter. I stepped down from that position just recently as a result of my heart incident. You know, like I say, it's an honour to have been part of the volunteer fire department. In Wainwright that volunteer fire department, Madam Speaker, has been around for 110 years, so people time after time after time have donated their time, their efforts to be able to volunteer, just to be able to keep our communities safe and be able to work in amongst the community and make sure that their friends, their neighbours, people travelling through are safe. This is a super important bill, in my opinion, that this member brought forward. So, like I said, I'm pleased to be able to speak on it.

You know, it takes a lot of good people willing to give of their time to be able to make a fire department work. It's not just when the tones go off. That's what you see. We often will have our radios on, tones go off, and we're going out the door. Tones are going off, and I don't even know often what we're going to. I'm already driving, and we're almost to the fire hall – sometimes we're at the fire hall – before we actually know what we're going to. But they hear the call, and they're off, and they're going.

Now, having volunteer firefighters able to do that and able to secure that is so important, being able to make sure that they're not going to have a chance to lose their job because they heard that call, they heard the tone, and they took off. You know, these are people that are willing to go into danger. They're going into the fire as opposed to everybody else, who's running away from it.

The danger could be a fire. It could be a car accident. It could be anything. Again, the Member for West Yellowhead talked about search and rescue. That's a primary function for us as well, to train for that and to be able to take care of search and rescue.

Often, Madam Speaker, what you'll see is that we'll have a car accident, and people become disoriented. It's 20, 30, 40 below – we've seen this many times – and they've wandered off. We don't know where they are, so we have to do a search. We have to find out where that person is. Or people have taken off, they've gone into the backcountry, and they've gotten lost. They have no idea where they are. They're able to get a message back to us that they're lost, but now we've got to find them. They've said that they know they went down towards the Battle River and they headed towards the west. That's all we've got to go with, so we do a search and rescue from that.

That's a very important point that the Member for West Yellowhead brings up, that that is one of the functions of volunteer firefighters. We train. We train for that. Every Tuesday we do training, and it's from 7 o'clock till usually 9, 10 o'clock at night. We're training for any variety of different things, whether it be putting out fires, extinguishing fires, whether it be tearing off the roof of a car using the jaws of life to extricate somebody from an accident. It might be just doing ladder work, going up a ladder, using tools up on the ladder. There are so many things that we do.

But it takes more than just great people; it takes a great community. The great communities that we have, you know, in Wainwright, Edgerton, Irma, they all realize that this is something that's a necessary part. I think everybody in our communities has been touched by somebody in a fire department. They know the accident that's happened, and there were these people in their community that were helping them out and keeping them safe, and they stand behind them.

But not always do you find that happening, that people are standing behind it. When I first wanted to join the fire department, that was back in about 1980. That's quite a long time ago. I know that people are doing the math. I wanted to join the fire department, but way back then I was a baker. They said: "No. You can't join the fire department. We don't want you leaving this area, perhaps causing a fire to be able to put out a fire. There's no way." I would understand that I couldn't leave during that time, but there are other times in the bakery that, yeah, we're not making anything that has anything to do with a fire. This is kind of a protection. It would be able to enable our communities to have that staff that we need.

Recruitment and retention is a huge issue for our fire chiefs, being able to find people to be able to go on to it and then train them and then to retain them. That's really difficult. That's one of the biggest challenges that is out there for the fire chiefs at this time.

Another issue that I want to bring up. If we had to go to a full-time fire department, well, most of these communities would not be able to afford it. The volunteer, part-time makes this so it's affordable. You cannot take a community of, say, 500 people that you would have in somewhere like Edgerton and be able to say that we need to have that staffed 24/7 with firefighters and make it happen. It just wouldn't work. The cost to hire full-time is just too prohibitive. Frankly, we need to have the volunteers, and we need to make sure they have the mechanisms and the tools to be able to be hired and to be able to be retained.

This bill, in my opinion, maintains a good balance. First, the employees need to be employed by the employer for at least 90 days – that's what the bill says – so it's not like you're just going on to the fire department. There are 90 days of this. They've looked at that. They've addressed the issue. He has to be employed. This bill, you know, does not require the employer to have to pay for the occasional unpaid leave. When he leaves, you don't have to pay for that, so he's finding a good balance between the employer and the employee. When that guy – person. I shouldn't say "guy" because it could be a man or a woman going out to that fire. In our fire hall there's a very good mix of both of them. When they leave to do that job, they don't have to pay that person at that work, but they will be paid as a volunteer firefighter at that point. It strikes a really good balance in my opinion. We need to look at that and be able to appreciate the thought that's gone into this.

You know, when you look at this: what do we do in the fire department to make someone's bad day a little bit better? That's what we're trying to do as volunteer firefighters. We know that we're going out to an incident, we know that there's something bad that's happened, and we're trying to make that bad day better. We can't always do that. We've had days on the fire department – and it was a clear day. There was nothing that you would find exceptional about it. It wasn't a cold day. It wasn't icy. It wasn't anything. But we had three fatalities in the town of Wainwright area one right after the other, almost simultaneously. It was just like bang, bang, bang. There were three different fatalities.

We were able to get enough volunteers to be able to come out to look after that. Well, we had to leave the first scene. We made sure the scene was secured. It was a fatality. We're not helping that person anymore, but we're going to try to help the family and control the traffic and the incident that's there. But there was another call out. There was another, you know, head-on collision. We had to be called out to that. And there was another one. It was a fatality. Again, it was a third one on a day that you wouldn't expect it. It was a clear midday, no reason. These things happen, but it takes a lot of people, a lot of volunteers to be able to look after three fatalities in the town of Wainwright.

We're looking at about 6,500 people in our town, so we have about 30 volunteer firefighters at any given time. Typically speaking, you're going to get about a dozen people that are able to come out to a call. People are out of town. You know, they're doing something that they can't even hear what's going on. They've had to put their radio aside.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my privilege and pleasure to rise this afternoon to speak to Bill 201, Employment Standards (Firefighter Leave) Amendment Act, 2018. I have to say that I'm very sympathetic to the content of this private member's bill, and the member is to be commended for bringing this forward.

I have to say that I'm also one of the members who was unaware that volunteer firefighters did not in fact have this leave protection already in place, which is, you know, a bit surprising. I mean, this is something that – I talk to volunteer firefighters in my riding all the time, and it wasn't something that had been brought up with me. I have to say that I'm quite happy to see this idea going forward.

I don't think it's possible to overstate the importance of volunteer firefighters to rural Alberta. I know that members previously have made some very good comments, you know, that it's a lot more than just firefighting. I'm actually not too sure about the Canadian statistics. I know that in the United States a full 70 per cent of firefighting calls are nonfire related in origin, so I'm thinking that our numbers are probably pretty similar. Of course, without firefighters responding to search and rescue, responding to highway and road accidents, we'd be in a real bind.

I mean, this is something that we actually found out several years back when along highway 63, a big part of it that I represent, we had actually firefighters in my home, you know, where I'm actually from originally, Plamondon, who got so burnt out by constantly having to respond to terrible accidents along 63 that they and the Wandering River fire department said that they would no longer reply to roadside accidents. As a consequence, there had to be brought in a special unit to deal with that. When the other members are talking about just how prohibitively costly it would be to shift to an all-professional service if you had volunteers not stepping forward, I mean, I've seen that kind of impact quite close up.

Now, I also got a chance to see just how critical volunteer firefighters are for supporting the efforts of our full-time paid firefighters. I think other members have alluded to that some volunteer firefighters actually did go out to McMurray to combat that fire. As a matter of fact, my constituency assistant's husband was one of those members as well as people from Boyle, where I live, and from all across the region. But more than that, I mean, if members can recollect just how dry that spring was and how close we were to a perfect storm, if we hadn't had our volunteer firefighters out putting out fires like the Opal natural area, you know, all the little sparks that could have created large fires right across northern Alberta, we'd have had a much bigger issue at play. I think we could have lost a lot more than Fort McMurray that spring. So it's absolutely critical.

I mean, there's another aspect to providing fire protection for people in rural Alberta. As I alluded to in my member's statement earlier today, I was an insurance agent for some years in the Athabasca and Boyle areas. As anyone who has gone to insure a farm or rural residence is aware, you know, the distance from a fire hall is pretty important for determining not only what your rates are going to be but, in fact, determining these days whether you can find insurance at all. Of course, if you can't actually get fire insurance, you can't generally get a mortgage and build in the first place, so it's not only critical for health, safety, and well-being, but it's also critical, I guess, for economic development as well. So that's a lot of responsibility that we have riding on the shoulders of not too many individuals.

I know that I live, actually, just about half a block down from the Boyle hospital, where we have the STARS air ambulance. It's one of the places where it will stop and then stabilize patients, you know, before they get airlifted out to larger hospitals. You hear that copter going and it's, like, minus 40 below and it's 3 o'clock in the morning when you can hear that coming in, and you just have to think about the sacrifice of those individuals that maybe work the next day, maybe worked all day that day, and they've got to get out of bed, drag themselves out, and go out and deal with tragedies that most of us almost would never see in our lives. Or they've got to respond to put out a fire, and sometimes they get there in time and sometimes they don't.

It's a heck of a sacrifice for people that have to find other ways to make a living, and I think that it's far too much of a sacrifice to then have these same individuals potentially worry about whether they're going to have employment when they get back. You know, I think that's too much of a sacrifice for society to ask of these individuals. At the very least, there should be some protections for them so that when they're out protecting us, they're not going to face repercussions when they get home or potentially lose out on opportunities that otherwise they should have. I think that's a very important reason why some type of protection needs to be in place for this.

Now, one thing I would have to say, though, in looking over the bill, is that I think the intent is excellent. However, this isn't something that I've actually had an opportunity to talk to people in my riding about. I haven't had a chance to talk to the fire chiefs that I know on just how this is going to work in practice. I think, you know, that like so many things that come before the House, sometimes the devil can be a bit in the details. I really hope that we can get this bill right because our volunteer firefighters definitely deserve to be protected, and by protecting them, of course, we're protecting ourselves.

You know, it goes even further beyond that. I mean, who'd want to become a volunteer firefighter if this is what you're risking? Now, to the great credit of so many people across this province, people have been standing up, but I do know that it's not getting any easier to fill some of the rosters of these local fire departments. I have heard of situations where there have been delays caused by the fact that some of these departments have been undermanned. I'm sorry; "understaffed" would probably be the correct word for that. If it's already becoming an issue recruiting people to serve on these volunteer firefighting departments, if there's anything we can do to make that role more attractive and less of a potential sacrifice, I think it's definitely something that we should look at.

Like I said, you know, I'm concerned about a few of the details, but I'm definitely completely in support of the principle behind this private member's bill. Once again, I'd like to commend the member for bringing this to the House for discussion today.

With that, I would like to rest my comments. Thank you for your time.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure today to rise to speak about my colleague's thoughtful bill to support our firefighters. In my past life I worked 14 years for the Fort McMurray fire department. I had the honour of responding to emergencies alongside an amazing crew of people over all those years as we tended to emergent situations.

Firefighters risk themselves to ensure the safety of the community they serve. The job they do every day along with other emergency services is the reason that we are all here today not looking over our shoulders, worried about certain issues, certain emergencies. That is why I support this bill. Being a firefighter is already such an imperative role in our world, and those who take it on as a volunteer for the sheer value that it would provide support to the public and to their communities deserve our utmost respect. Firefighters have a counterintuitive job, running towards the flames rather than away while carrying 50 pounds of gear, with not a flicker of hesitation.

You know, this leads me to describe how disappointed and frustrated I am to hear about some of these issues that do affect volunteer firefighters. I was fortunate. I was a professional firefighter, Madam Speaker. I got paid to do my job. I did my shift, and I was done. Volunteer firefighters are in their communities – yes, mainly in smaller communities – and they're on call 24 hours a day, seven days a week. It is disappointing to learn that they don't have any job protection should they actually leave their job to perform this role of a volunteer.

I have to reaffirm that this bill isn't just beneficial to those members who would volunteer as firefighters, but it is beneficial to the communities they volunteer in. Quite honestly, these volunteers should not have to worry about coming back to a job and then finding out that they have lost that job. An employer should not be able to hold it against them if they leave from time to time as the need arises for their services.

Also, I'm really surprised and I find it very unacceptable that firefighters or volunteers might be discriminated against when they're applying for a job. It would be very disconcerting to find out that an employer would not be open to hiring someone who's a volunteer for their local fire department because of the thought that he might miss that person for one to two hours in a day, possibly more.

Consequently, this continued shortage of volunteer firefighters does disturb me. We need to do everything we can to encourage this, and people have to understand that firefighting is a more difficult job than people think. Whether you're a volunteer or professional, as with any job you have to learn the nuances. You have to be educated in that profession. You need to understand that firefighting is not just about putting water on fire. Even volunteers get the very same training that professional firefighters do, whether it's fighting a fire or extricating a victim from a car accident. You know, the basic course that firefighters receive here in Alberta and across North America is collectively called firefighting 1001. It's made up of theoretical things like building construction, dangerous goods, pump operation, basic rescue, and also just learning about other very specialized equipment.

Building construction is a very interesting course in this profession. Our construction methods and engineering standards have provided us with very strong homes that can withstand our very extreme weather. You know, if you think about it, only in the northern hemisphere do people have homes that are built to withstand 40 degrees below and 40 degrees above zero. Our homes are designed to retain heat and to be somewhat sturdy. We can thank, you know, advances in engineering and our building code for doing this.

Again, there's a lot of education that's required in this, especially for a firefighter. We have to recognize that they're not going to run blindly into a home. They need some education. This education takes a lot of time. There's a lot of time invested in becoming a volunteer. They have to assess the amount of the structure that's on fire, as an example. They need to try and understand the construction of that home. They need to anticipate whether those floor joists have five minutes of stability left or 15 minutes.

Personally, I'm not a fan of any of these new floor joist systems. When I say new, I mean that for the last 20 years they've gone with these I-beams, and they're very fragile. They're made up of chipboard and glue. They last not very long, which is very disconcerting.

Firefighters need to gauge the intensity and the risk factor when they enter a building. Once they enter that building – again, this is that additional training that these volunteers get – they go into a building blind. You cannot see a thing. Not one thing. You are walking blind. Your only hope is to feel a wall and step in front of you very carefully and work your way through that entire building when you're trying to search and rescue, trying to find somebody in that building. It is a very difficult and awkward position, but we do it. These people, volunteers and professionals, overcome certain fears, whether it's claustrophobia or a general fear of dying, in order to provide this public service.

This training requires a lot of money and time. It is good that we have a society where people are willing to volunteer for this role in their communities because, quite frankly and with all due respect to our rural areas, there is little economic sense in supporting a full-time fire service. It is very expensive.

Don't get me wrong. We have to also understand that we have fire departments for a reason, and it's not just for the fact that we can have lower insurance rates. Insurance, you say? Yes. Fire departments do have an influence on insurance. So the next time that you're filling out your home insurance policy, pay particular attention to the questions that ask how far away the nearest fire hall is from your home or business. Notice the question about where the closest fire hydrant is to your home, as an example.

Madam Speaker, we have to remember that we have emergency services because when we are in trouble and when we need help, we have evolved to knowing that we can call 911, one number, and get help regardless of the emergency, whether we need something that reflects the law and we require police or we require someone because of a medical emergency, we're going to ask the EMS and paramedics to arrive, or in the cases, in particular, that we're referring to here, disasters like a home fire or a car accident, some issue where people require rescue. We recognize the need to have a system in place that we can count on to alleviate the emergencies that we're in. We'll never know when we'll get into a car accident or slip and fall or have armed bandits sneak into our property to steal. Again, fire departments are part of this system alongside police and EMS.

Now, things like EMS and police are actually more justifiable in small and more sparsely populated areas as they are able to function with very few people. An ambulance only needs two people, at minimum a couple of EMTs, maybe a paramedic in there. Police, for better or for worse, can get by with one constable and one response unit. Ideally, though, we don't like them to work alone, but that is the harsh reality of our policing.

Fire departments are different. They are organizations that require a lot of people working in unison to achieve its goal. For instance, on your typical house fire you'll have at least one overall commanding officer. He is running the firefighting. He's making sure all his crews are doing their appropriate duties. He might have some assistance in that area. If he sends two people into that fire, whether it's to rescue or to extinguish, he needs to have two people outside, fully geared, ready to go in case they fall. Those are our safety requirements. For every two in, we need two people out.

Not only that, but you're going to have two guys on the roof. They're going to be ventilating that roof. That means they're going to cut a hole in that roof. That's to allow a lot of that smoke to escape to help that visibility as well as that heat to escape so that the rest of the house is less likely to have those prime conditions for a fire.

You also have firefighters who are operating that fire truck, that pump truck. Now, those are amazing feats of engineering, those million-dollar fire trucks. They take that big diesel engine, and when you shift it into pump, it shifts from turning wheels on a fire truck into turning the pump so that they can push vast amounts of water.

You'll have firefighters spraying water on these surrounding structures as well, so not only is the house that is on fire the main target of their response, but the fire department response crew also has to worry about the surrounding buildings. We don't want that fire to spread.

The point is that there are so many other duties involved, and it requires a lot of manpower – sorry; people power – to extinguish a fire safely. That is why it is so noble to see in our smaller communities a group who is willing to volunteer.

The Deputy Speaker: Other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to talk about Bill 201, the Employment Standards (Firefighter Leave) Amendment Act, 2018. It's a really great idea that's come forward from the member.

We did extensive consultation about employment standards and labour legislation last year to look at how the laws were impacting a wide range of industries, employers, nonprofits, health care, and some of that work would have been done around looking at employment legislation and as to how it applies to fire services.

Of course, we know that we have 14,000 part-time, full-time, and casual firefighters in the province, and 80 per cent, fully 80 per cent, of them are volunteers, and 8 per cent of them are women. You know, the idea of how it used to look, just a team of men going to battle fires: the face of that is changing. I know that when I made the visit to the Beaver Emergency Services Commission in Tofield, they have two there, and I know that when I go to visit, whether it's in Vegreville or Fort Saskatchewan or in Bruderheim, they all have female members of their services.

I know that in visiting with these volunteers and hired firefighters, recruitment is always an issue. When I went to look at what resources were online, I see that there is a document that is almost 140 pages that is laid out to help local fire services figure out how to address that: how to bring more people on, how to bring new people on, how to fill the positions that they have.

In Tofield, that I referred to, the Beaver Emergency Services Commission has 34 spaces, and right now I think that they have 31 or 32 that are staffed up. For them, it speaks to the kind of work that they've been doing ongoing and the culture around it, but there are many small municipalities where it's proven far more challenging for, I'm sure, a variety of circumstances.

If you just look at the letters that it suggests in this package of material that the service could send to your family to give a bit of information on what you're taking on, you're going to see that your family member is probably going to miss some birthdays, miss some anniversaries, miss visits from in-laws. You know, these impacts are very real. People get called at any hour, day or night, and they have to go out to things like major car collisions. They are often there to control fires, to control the damage that might be happening to a broader area, to clean up environmental spills. They're tasked with, really, not just an important job but a critical job, and that's why we try to do our best to have policy that supports these brave men and women to be able to go out and do something very phenomenal that not all of us have the guts or the gumption to do.

The impacts that this can have on people that join can be wide ranging, so it's important that when we have amendments to the WCB, we're looking at how we best support these people, whether it's making sure that they have PTSD coverage, making sure that we make changes like we saw this year that will cover ovarian and cervical cancer that a firefighter incurs because of exposure in this job. It reduced the maximum exposure period – that used to have to be 20 years for male firefighters – down to 10 years for them to receive compensation. These brave people come into contact with all sorts of carcinogens that are in buildings, in farm buildings, in vehicles. Even just grass fires are quite dangerous.

Making sure that they're well trained is a huge part of it. I had the opportunity last week, as I mentioned, to go to Tofield and spend a Thursday night with the service there and got a bit of a snapshot. You know, I did everything that I could do with them, suited up for the evening, but it was definitely not the same as for the people that go faithfully to those practices every Thursday night.

You know, it's a really great idea. It's thoughtful to think about how we best support these volunteers staying in these positions. As I was saying before, there are some small municipalities that are quite challenged with making sure that their rosters are full. I know that from going to the Bruderheim dinner that recognized these men and women. The awards that they hand out for lengths of service: they're handing out awards for shorter times because it's harder to keep people long term. They have to meet the sort of one-year point that will make that person more successful in staying long term. It's like: once they cross this time period threshold, it becomes much easier to keep them on staff. But they have to feel like they're a part of the team for that initial period, so it means, you know, making sure that on a regular basis the fire service is recognizing their efforts.

I know that firefighters are absolutely the foundation of communities. They are more than just teams of people that get together and fund raise with barbecues and a lot of pancake breakfasts, as my experience has wonderfully been. I've never eaten so many pancakes and barbecues in my life. It's going and making sure that we're connected with these people. You know, they are just always giving back to their community. It doesn't matter what it is. They're incredible volunteers.

You know, in my own constituency I represent fire services in Vegreville, Tofield, Chipman, Mundare, Andrew, Bruderheim, Strathcona county, the Lamont county regional fire service, Fort Saskatchewan. They step up to the plate whenever they have the opportunity to. In Fort Saskatchewan they had the opportunity to help support, at the Legion, people that were coming out of the Fort McMurray wildfires. I know that, as was mentioned before, there are volunteer services that actually sent members up to Fort McMurray to help fight. In Fort Saskatchewan we had five people that were able to go and support the efforts there and do their part.

You know, as I was saying, we do need to make sure that these workplaces are safe, healthy, that we properly respect the work that they take on. That's why we were updating legislation last year. Of course, when it comes to this private member's bill, it touches on something that is incredibly important across the province. I've met a lot of members that volunteer in rural Alberta, and it's that voluntary, part-time, casual labour, people that are able to support their communities, that make their communities safe, make their communities vibrant. It's very true. This is a huge, important piece when it comes to economic viability.

4:10

You know, the issue that I'm experiencing here is that there wasn't enough consultation. I spoke to the Beaver emergency services, and I asked them who I should be talking to on this, and they said: the Alberta Fire Chiefs Association. Apparently, they are going to be working on this as a policy piece, on how to better support volunteers becoming engaged. That work hasn't been done yet. I would like to see more consultation with our associations that represent our really important men and women that do this, and that's why I have a referral motion.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, your time was just about done, but I will allow you to table that motion. Do you move the motion?

Mrs. Littlewood: Yeah.

The Deputy Speaker: You won't have any more time to speak to it, but you can certainly move the motion, and then we can discuss it.

This will be known as referral motion 1. I'll just give a moment for the pages to distribute this so that all members will have an opportunity to read it.

Any hon. members wishing to speak to the referral motion? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's interesting that we would be placed in this position. I find it quite, I would say, unusual, a piece of legislation that is responsible, in my humble opinion, for supporting a profession – I guess they wouldn't necessarily call it a profession but a job – that's filled by Albertans supporting their local people, local community people, local support. I have personal examples of how this would be brought forward, and I think the timeliness of this Assembly could have been proceeded with, unlike in the case of this amendment that we have in front of us.

The member opposite moves that the motion for second reading of Bill 201, Employment Standards (Firefighter Leave) Amendment Act, 2018, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 201, Employment Standards (Firefighter Leave) Amendment Act, 2018, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

Madam Speaker, the Economic Future Committee fills an important role, but they have a significant agenda in front of them, and I find it frustrating that the government seeks to create more meetings, more bureaucracy. Certainly, a previous government found themselves in a great deal of water above boiling when they were supposedly reimbursed for meetings that they never even attended. Those situations have changed now.

Madam Speaker, I personally support the bill as previously worded – I simply find it awkward at very best – to continue forward with the short work that we could do in this Chamber, and now we're going to be extending it to some other committee and hearing and such. There has been no mention even of the timing of how this would be brought forward to Alberta's Economic Future Committee. It's awkward timing, so I'm fully with question as to why the government would do this.

In my own personal case these part-time firefighters fill an important role, and there are local incidents where these people provide a valuable service. Yes, the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo has commented that in the cases where there are professional people forward to fulfill these roles in rural areas and in many areas throughout the province, some 80 per cent of Alberta is actually protected, Madam Speaker, by volunteer firefighters.

It's an ironic situation that we find ourselves in, that we have to go to a committee. How long will it take? The government has made no comment of when this committee might even hear this resolution. Madam Speaker, it seems that for whatever reason the government is trying to bury, deflect, delay, sidetrack – and it may be a sidetrack down a dead-end track – hearing interesting information that would support and protect Albertans on a daily basis.

One of the things that came to mind was the recent situation that happened within 10 miles of my home, where the high school principal with five children in his house was responded to at 5:30 in the morning with the carbon monoxide overdosing going on, and it was only through the presentation of a carbon monoxide detector that these people were saved. There would have been a serious need for extensive mental counselling if those people would have come into this gentleman's home with as many as seven dead people if the local firefighters wouldn't have been able to respond and help them.

This is an important situation. When, figuratively, lightning or an event like that strikes near to your home, near to your heart, near to the potential need that this government seems to be deflecting by just referring it to committee, Madam Speaker, it's unusual. I don't understand why they find it entirely necessary to create these deflective actions. They've done that with other motions, and I'm speaking from personal experience. We're talking about referring it to a committee, which is somewhere, again, in a figurative world of never-never land. This is an important situation. Some of the members of the government have actually spoken in favour of this, and I don't understand why they think it has to be referred to a committee.

Madam Speaker, I'll rest for now, and if there are other speakers that want to speak to this, I'd be happy to listen to their arguments to you. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's obviously an issue that a lot of members in this House are very passionate about, why we all want to make sure that we're supporting our part-time firefighters and ensuring that they're doing an excellent job for our communities. I think we've heard countless speeches today about how they are doing that, the incredibly powerful role they make in our communities, the economic impact that they can have.

But I think that when we talk about amendments like this and when we talk about the need to do this, it also comes down to the fact that it is incredibly important, as it was during employment standards, to consult with the associations of firefighters which this would impact. I think that's where we come back down to in introducing an amendment to a committee. When we contact folks, representatives from the firefighters association, and they haven't heard and had the chance to provide input into this, that's a concern.

I think that more so than characterizing it as, you know, putting it to the side or trying to really bury this under some committee referral, it is to really acknowledge that this government is and has been committed to speaking with firefighters, the associations, the part-time volunteers, and to making sure that they are part of this process. In fact, it's because we've been talking to them that we know that it's a complicated process and it's important to strike the right balance. Of course, I would put to the members that if we were to put forward a situation where a full-time firefighter was also a part-time firefighter, what occurs in that situation? If you haven't worked out those kinds of loopholes, which are likely to happen, especially in small communities where they volunteer in addition to the work that they do full-time, we need to make sure how we're going to address those issues. That is why it's important to take it to committee.

Of course, when you talk about the crossjurisdictional, where people have put this in place, Alberta Labour was able to confirm that this hasn't been done in other places. I think that, at the end of the day, we need to make sure that we are taking a careful approach when it comes to this bill.

I think that members on both sides truly acknowledge the work. I know that I myself have met with the Strathcona county firefighters, who do an incredible job, who not only have come to meet one on one with MLAs, but they have preparation for how the legislation that they're hoping to change would impact them, the benefits. I think that they want to be part of the process because they were during the employment standards. I want to be able to go back to the firefighters in Strathcona county, to know that they had provided me with information, to be able to have the conversation about what this impact would be for them. I know that many other members in this Legislature would have the same opportunity.

I also acknowledge that the member proposing the bill did so with good intentions. It is with those same good intentions that we want to make sure that we are moving on this issue carefully and respectfully to those involved, to support our communities, to support the very important work that we need to have of fire safety in our areas. I'm hoping that all of my colleagues will support my call and the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville's call to make sure that we strike this right balance, to continue working with our partners in municipalities, local emergency management offices, employer associations and unions, and that we can make sure that we are supporting a vibrant and sustainable volunteer part-time firefighter service.

I think, for those reasons, this amendment actually is incredibly important. It's something that demonstrates that this government and the members in this House have continuously been willing to work with the opposition to make sure that we move forward on this. I also know that in those conversations the members opposite might hear what the main concerns of firefighters are and what a lot of the associations have been talking about.

Just from initial reactions – I'll be happy to table this afterwards. In some local community newspapers there was definitely a quote: "If the legislation comes into place, it's out of our hands, but what we can control is maintaining a good relationship with that employer. If that's a good relationship, there won't be any issues. Locally, if some issues could be solved with maintaining good relationships with the parties, employers, firefighter departments" – I think that's from the fire chief. It just talks about the fact that you need to work out how this is going to look and how that's going to impact those very associations and those members that are volunteering their time. I think that's a legitimate reason to bring that to committee, to have those conversations, and to make sure that the member is actually talking to those folks.

I mean, I remember that during the employment standards a lot of the firefighters came to the Legislature and met with numerous MLAs, and they told us: you know, one of our top issues is around our pensions. They met with the opposition at that time. They met, and they were told that for them they're actually not in favour of the movement that they are advocating for when it comes to pensions, that they would take those away. I think when it comes to that, the members on the opposite side have to actually go to the firefighters and talk to them about their wholesale issues and not just pick and choose which ones they will be supportive of. In doing so, we can actually demonstrate that we're willing to work with the many people involved in doing this.

I also acknowledge that it's difficult as a private member to do a comprehensive consultation across the province on an issue that impacts so many. I mean, you have limitations as a private member, but I also think that for that very reason it shouldn't be taken that this is something that we want to sweep under the rug at all.

I think it's been very much said by the members that have spoken from this side of the House, Madam Speaker, that this is an issue of importance for all of us and that we will work towards finding the right balance. I think, you know, I mean, that's probably why the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville ran out of time, because she wanted to cover so many of the items that are important to take into account.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. I look forward to the rest of the debate on this.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to the amendment on Bill 201. There are many times in the cut and thrust of debate that we can sometimes use referral amendments to deal with the problems that are in a bill. That's why we have committees, and that's why we use referral amendments to send bills that perhaps have some problems with them to that committee to do some honest investigation of what those problems are and how we can make that bill better and come back with recommendations that will allow a bill to become better. That is not what is happening today. I am not confronted with a bill in Bill 201, Employment Standards (Firefighter Leave) Amendment Act, 2018, that has any significant problems here. This referral motion is nothing more or less than an attempt by the government of the day to try and sidetrack a very, very good bill for the people of Alberta.

Madam Speaker, I remember being eight years old and probably for the first time in my life understanding the importance of the fire service. We had just returned from Ontario back to Saskatchewan. We were going back to see my family in Shaunavon, Saskatchewan, for the first time, and a fire broke out on a neighbour's property just less than half a mile down from my aunt and uncle's place. I can remember going there and seeing the barn, with all of their equipment and with animals being put in danger and with the farmer wondering how they were going to recover from this fire, and at eight years old it really made an impact on me just how important the firefighting services are to the people in our communities.

We have just spent time listening to members from both sides of this Legislature explain the benefits of this bill, and I have not yet heard a convincing reason for why we would take what is obviously a good bill and sidetrack it by placing it before this amendment, a referral to committee. This bill, Madam Speaker, has clearly identified the issues for why this bill is needed. Bill 201 has identified that we need to protect part-time, casual, and volunteer firefighters from a loss of employment due to their volunteer firefighting.

Madam Speaker, if there's one thing that government is supposed to do for its people, it's supposed to be able to bring us together in community and be able to protect us and safeguard ourselves. This bill does exactly that. It is helping the government of the day to help safeguard and protect our people and help them to live in community. Why would that be needed to be referred to a committee? We are simply doing the job that we have been elected to do. It makes no sense to this MLA that we would sidetrack a good private member's bill by referring it to committee, especially when we've even heard on both sides of the House today the benefits of this bill. If we are here to protect and to safeguard the people of Alberta and to provide them with a legislative basis to do so, then this bill fits that criteria.

Volunteer firefighters are critical for safeguarding and protecting the communities that are in my constituency, Madam Speaker. I am unaware of any of the communities in my constituency that are not dependent upon volunteer firefighters. They are a necessary part of being able to protect the safety and safeguard the community which I am a part of.

Madam Speaker, there could be many reasons why you would send a bill to referral. I just don't see how any of them apply to this bill. I know that we've seen that there's been evidence brought before this House this afternoon that talks about the need for an ability to protect the firefighters that are choosing to volunteer, the people that are choosing to be volunteer firefighters. We know that there are municipal levels of government that are struggling to find volunteer firefighters. Why would we sidetrack this piece of legislation when we could be addressing the needs that have already been identified by the municipalities for more volunteer firefighters and when we could support them in that through this piece of legislation? It mystifies me why the government would choose to do this.

We know that when we have volunteer firefighters, Madam Speaker, those spots are now not filled by full-time contingents; rather, they're filled by volunteer firefighters. That actually saves the communities considerable money because if we have volunteer firefighters and full contingents of volunteer firefighters, those small communities in my constituency don't have to depend upon other communities for their fire service. It's important for the people in my constituency to have volunteer firefighters.

In fact, in Alberta in May 2017 in a CBC article entitled Volunteer Firefighters Harder to Recruit and Retain During Alberta's Downturn, one of the individuals in that article states that "volunteers make up . . . 80 per cent of Alberta's firefighters." How is it, then, that we cannot come together in this Legislature for a bill that is obviously so very good for the people of Alberta and support it when 80 per cent of our firefighters are volunteers? Madam Speaker, until just recently I've heard nothing but support for this bill, and that's as it should be. When I look at the importance that these people, these volunteer community members bring to the table, it's incredible that we wouldn't support that.

Madam Speaker, I can remember coming home from school one day to see all of a sudden one of the houses just literally half a block away burning. If it had not been for the members of the Drayton Valley fire department, not only that house but many others would have been in danger. How can we refer this to committee when we should be supporting these individuals through a bill like this?

Madam Speaker, I had the privilege of going to Thorsby just about two months ago to be part of the ceremony where they were handing out long-term service awards for volunteer firefighters. It shows you that we've got, you know, people that have devoted their lives. Some of these individuals were getting 10- and 15- and 20-year service awards, yet at the same time these volunteer fire departments are having a hard time keeping people. The ones that have been around for a long time are not going to be around for very much longer. Eventually we all get to the point where we have to move on. It's important for us to support legislation like this, that allows for people to have the capacity to volunteer as firefighters.

Madam Speaker, we often will refer to committee for all sorts of reasons. We might refer a bill to committee because it has a large expenditure of capital and we want to make sure that that capital expenditure is actually good for the economy of Alberta or for that industry in Alberta. I see nowhere in this bill where we're going to be expending huge amounts of capital. That cannot be the reason why we're referring this to committee. Sometimes we'll refer something to committee because we need more information; we need to be able to see how it will serve the needs of the community. This bill has been very forthright and very easily understood by everybody in this Legislature as to how it's going to serve the interests of the community.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the referral amendment? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Now, I've met with many firefighters in southern Alberta and, certainly, in Lethbridge in both formal and informal settings, so I'm going to begin by saying thank you to the member representing Highwood for bringing this private member's bill forward. I'm also going to thank the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville for bringing forward the amendment. I'm going to get to my support after I share a little with you. I feel I must rise to support the bill and the amendment, and I'll do so by sharing an event in which I participated.

In early October 2017 I was part of a tour of different sport and tourist venues with the selection committee for the 2022 Can-Am Police-Fire Games. There were a multitude of conversations that happened over that weekend, but the most powerful was when I had a conversation with a firefighter from Cardston county, who was in the heart of the Kenow fire. As part of the tour we visited Waterton national park and saw the damage that the Kenow fire had done. We also saw the damage that didn't occur.

This firefighter shared with me that he and another firefighter worked on the pumper truck, which was sitting halfway up the hill to the Prince of Wales Hotel, a historic site. The water was being pumped from Waterton Lake by the first pump up to the pumper truck, where additional pressure was applied so that the water would go up the hill to the two ladder trucks, which were on top of the hill on either side of the hotel. He told me that they were working on the truck when the fire advanced to within 50 feet of them. His voice cracked with emotion as he shared that the crew on the water pump could move into the lake if the fire went in that direction, the firefighters on top of the hill on the ladder trucks could go over the top of the hill and into the lake if the fire went to them, but he and his partner had nowhere to go. They couldn't go over the hill because the fire was all around them. They knew that they would die if the fire advanced to their truck. I have to say that I couldn't hold back the tears as he shared that story with me.

We drove around the entire community. Not one home or business was lost. The only building destroyed was the tourist information centre, which was at the entry to the community or the outskirts of the community. He shared with me the work that was done by the team prior to the fire's arrival in the community. The entire community was surrounded by hoses 50 feet back from the buildings on the perimeter. The hoses and sprayers soaked all of the perimeter buildings and the forests behind the perimeter in that 50-foot barrier and into the centre of town.

He also shared with me that when the fire was roaring across the grass fields towards Cardston county – as the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo had said, normally with a grass fire they surround it – they had to run into it because it was the only way to stop it. They all knew that they were probably running to their deaths. Fortunately, they didn't die. I asked how all of the firefighters were dealing with PTSD following this experience. He said that it was very difficult and that because you thought you were running into your own death, it came back at you many times. He said that that happens with many fires but in particular with this one because they were literally running across the fields where the fire was roaring at them. He said that therapists were available to everyone involved immediately following the fire and as needed as time goes by.

Since September 11, 2001, I've become very aware of the risk front-line responders – full-time, part-time, and volunteer – face in these situations. Every day, every instance a firefighter knows that when he or she answers a call, they may not come home at the end of their shift or the event, yet they still go forward and do this job to protect us, our families, and our homes. There aren't any words that truly express my gratitude to every firefighter in this province, especially those that volunteer. My local firefighters receive my thanks every time I see them, every time I hear a siren passing me. In fact, I do something tangible. At Christmastime I provide the four fire stations with homemade cookies to just give them a little of my thank you. My supporting this bill is another concrete way that I can acknowledge what you do and say thank you. To every volunteer: thank you for stepping up. I know this bill will be truly meaningful for each of you.

Now, having said that, I will tell you that I worked in corrections for 32 and a half years. I was a union rep during that time. When I saw "firefighter leave," it immediately kicked in a couple of things in my brain because I know that if things aren't properly written to address every conceivable possibility, somebody is going to say, "No, it doesn't say that exactly," and that firefighter is going to lose their job. I do not want that to happen.

I totally understand how important firefighters are to every community in this province, and if I'm going to put something forward and support it, it's got to be the best. I think sending it to committee so that we can do further work on this to make sure nobody can turn around and say, "No, I'm not doing this for you because you're volunteer staff" – I absolutely have to make sure this is right because I respect and appreciate every single firefighter in this province and every volunteer who steps up to do that job.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak about this referral motion for Bill 201, and I'd like to start off by thanking the MLA for Highwood for bringing forward this bill. It's really an important bill, and I think it helps to recognize the importance of volunteer firefighters in small communities.

I wanted to talk a little bit about the culture in small towns. We are from a similar area. I grew up in Sexsmith, Alberta. When we moved there, there were 300 people. Sexsmith is, well, probably now about a 12-minute drive from Grande Prairie, but at the time it was about a 15-minute drive. If something were to catch on fire, say, somebody's garage or their home, to rely on the paid firefighters, the fire department in Grande Prairie, would mean that people's homes, their property, their lives would be at much greater risk, to have to wait that long for the fire department from the nearest large community to arrive. So we relied on volunteer firefighters. There were a lot of instances, especially in the summer, grass fires and that sort of thing, where the volunteer fire department in Sexsmith would help. They helped their neighbours. You would have a problem, and your neighbours would show up to help you.

I think of a recent example in Sexsmith. In 2015 one of the grain elevators – they only had a few left – caught fire. It took eight fire departments, so a number of volunteer fire departments from around the area, to come and put the fire out. I remember that when I was a kid, we had a grain elevator go up as well. You can see one of those from many, many, many miles away. It has a huge impact on a community. Everybody is up in the middle of the night when there's a fire at a grain elevator. It just really focuses how important it is to have a volunteer firefighting department in your community and how valuable it is to have those people.

This bill certainly acknowledges that by protecting volunteer firefighters, ensuring that they're able to get the training that they need when they need it and not compromise their employment at the same. It does a really good job of showing how important volunteer firefighters are to small communities and how important their skills are to the community as well.

As far as the referral motion I'm not in favour of the referral at this time. I don't think that's the best use of committee time. There are definitely a number of stakeholders that are waiting to speak with the committee, and this bill is pretty straightforward. It's not a money bill. There isn't a lot of due diligence required that hasn't already been undertaken. For those reasons, I will not be supporting the referral motion.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to this referral motion. You know, for me, when I look at the original bill and this referral motion, I'm saddened because this bill was proposing to assist casual or volunteer firefighters with the potential of loss of employment for the good work that they do, which, to me, is not even a backhanded reward for protecting our communities.

You know, I've been lucky enough. I've lived in urban areas most of my life. I've been, in fact, several blocks away from fire halls almost my entire life, and I can tell you the security that that feeling gives me, knowing that those firefighters can arrive at my house literally within a matter of a few short minutes. I can't imagine somebody in a rural area not having the support of at least a volunteer firefighting crew that can be there.

This is about safety for our families, this is about security, and this is about being able to sleep at night, Madam Speaker, about being able to count on those people in the community that are giving of themselves in a way which is very much akin to, I think, military service, the reserve. I don't think anybody would argue against letting somebody who is going to defend our country or defend peace, as the case may be, do their reserve duty. I used to work with some individuals who were with the British military. These were senior executives with the company who every year did their military reserve service, without question from that company. This bill was meant to protect those individuals and allow them to do their duty as well without the fear of losing their jobs or the fear of not getting a job, which is possibly the case for many of these individuals now.

Madam Speaker, I have another concern, too. I think we're in a position now – we are elected by our constituents to represent them, to make good decisions, to ensure that the decisions we make are in the best interests of our constituents, of the people of Alberta, of the communities of Alberta. I think the opportunity is there for us to do so, but I have other concerns with respect to this referral. I very much enjoy and respect the work that we are able to do on committees. We do it. I think we all work hard. I think most of us try to bring nonpartisanship to those. But I have concerns. I sat on the committee and continue to sit on this committee that this bill is being referred to, and it concerns me because we spent 18 months for a one-paragraph recommendation, that probably will go nowhere, and we did not . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 8(7)(a)(i), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a private member's public bill to close debate, I would like to provide the hon. Member for Highwood the opportunity. I should also add that even though we are on an amendment and will be voting on the amendment, it is still common practice to allow the member to close debate.

Go ahead, hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for recognizing me and for the opportunity to close this debate. Make it right; make it right; make it right. That's what I've heard from the other side. Let me just tell you folks on the other side that we introduced this bill in 2016, two years ago. It sat on the Order Paper. Yeah, it was a prorogued government, but it sat there. Nobody said a thing. Make it right.

Now it's 2018. The only thing we changed was the title. I get this common discussion, mixing urban and rural. Are you putting a division between urban and rural firefighters? Come on. Urban firefighters are union folks. We know that. Rural firefighters are not. We understand that.

Referring this bill to committee is what I'm absolutely opposed to. Referring it to committee will not help volunteer or part-time firefighters. It's going to go back to an anemic committee, it's going to sit there, and it's going to die on the Order Paper. We know that's the intent. Come on. Let's make it right. The right thing to do is to work with rural, part-time, volunteer firefighters. No, they're not union folks. I apologize for that. But let me tell you right now that they're dedicated, they're committed, and they're personal friends of mine.

And we did consult with numbers of fire chiefs. I said it in my opening statement. Several fire chiefs and firefighters in the rural constituencies were spoken to, not the urbans. I've spoken to the urban folks as well. They have other issues. Yeah, they've got pension issues. Yeah, they've got other issues, but they're not rural firefighters. They're not volunteer firefighters. They're full-time firefighters.

The financial burden on the municipalities to hire full-time firefighters is going to almost bankrupt them because we all know that municipalities cannot run deficit budgets. Now, where are they going to get the money from? They're going to take it from infrastructure, from everything else that's required to build and hold those municipalities in perpetuity. You cannot put that burden on them. This is just about rural volunteer firefighters. Make it right. Do the right thing. Do not send this to committee.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: We will now be voting on the referral motion to Bill 201 as proposed by the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment REF1 carried]

Amendments to Standing Orders

501. Mr. W. Anderson moved:

Be it resolved that the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta be amended by renumbering Standing Order 52.04 as Standing Order 52.04(1) and by adding the following after suborder (1):

(2) Suborder (1) does not prevent a Legislative Policy Committee from undertaking a hearing or inquiry during the same period of time that a matter stands referred to the Committee by the Assembly if the hearing or inquiry does not interfere with the work of the Committee on the matter referred to it.

Mr. W. Anderson: Madam Speaker, I'm most pleased today to rise in this House and speak to and introduce Motion 501. The issue that surrounds this motion is most concerning for a lot of Albertans, and

I felt compelled by my colleagues to bring this issue, that isn't a new one, forward to this Assembly for debate.

This motion is being introduced today because current rules stipulated in the standing orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta simply do not allow for any activities to be undertaken by a legislative policy committee other than the specific task assigned to it even if there's ample time between the meetings dealing with the assigned task.

Madam Speaker, this is one more avenue that can be taken and resolved today for members of this Assembly to improve consultations with stakeholders, to help committee members craft thoughtful changes to legislation and policy. There have been groups that have been waiting for years to give timely feedback on bills and policies that directly affect their lives. In some cases these stakeholder groups have been trying to get invited to a committee to present for well over two years. This is just not acceptable. Albertans deserve better. We must and can do better. As my colleagues can attest to, this has been an area that can certainly be improved upon.

This issue, however, is not a new one. It's one that has been going on for years. UCP members have brought this forward to committee multiple times. The government continues to block this essential change. The committee sometimes does not meet for up to three months at a time waiting for the next phase and review to happen, and it is not able to meet because the standing orders do not grant them so. It's not as though these meetings would be held in vain. Government is voted in by the people. We shouldn't just hear from these people every four years; we should be giving them spaces and time to come in and meet with us throughout the year. These people have a right to share their input with the government. They are, after all, the ones who help us legislators do our job in the most efficient and effective manner. If we are supposed to represent them properly, then it only makes sense that we hear them.

Our simple request today is that we change the standing orders to allow committees to hold additional meetings in between other important committee business so that Albertans can be given a voice at the table. We have a government that refuses to consult with Albertans. This lack of consultation has just shown the people of Alberta that their views do not matter to the NDP. When the NDP continue to block committees' important work, our caucus will stand up and fight for Albertans.

I implore all members of this House to stand up for Albertans today, stop wasting precious time, and allow these groups into the committees to present their case. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand up and speak in support of Motion 501, a motion that's near and dear to my heart. I sit on the Resource Stewardship Committee and have for the last two and a half years. You'd think that a committee called Resource Stewardship in Alberta, being that our major industries are oil and gas, would be a very important committee, but in the two and a half years that I've sat on that committee, we've never been able to address one issue with regard to the oil and gas industry. Given the very recent caribou issue that's forefront in northern Alberta and western Alberta, we haven't been able to discuss that at all. Our committee has had their hands tied by the standing orders. We've made numerous attempts to have that changed and have the committee agree with us. As a matter of fact, just this last January 25 I put a motion forward in committee to have this addressed. Again, I think that was the third time that we put that motion forward trying to get this addressed, and it was shot down again.

The frustrating part is that there are times when we were doing the Lobbyists Act review that we were waiting for reports from the Ethics Commissioner. She was given a four-month time span to come up with her report and do her investigation. During that time our committee could not have a meeting with AAMD and C, who have been trying to get a meeting with us for two and a half years.

These are the things. It seems very frustrating that, you know, even in the interim, while we wait for reports that we know are going to take months to have put forward, an important committee like Resource Stewardship can't actually deal with any of the important issues regarding oil and gas, especially in the midst of a downturn. I mean, every time that the government side gets a chance during question period, they always refer to the worst downturn in the economy in Alberta history. Resource Stewardship, one of the most important committees that we have to deal with these issues, can't even talk about issues that are going to stall things, like the caribou issue.

Now, the response that we got from the members opposite, and specifically the Member for Edmonton-Decore, who seems to be quite vocal on this, is that it is a matter of inconvenience or something. Well, to me, during that time it was probably far more inconvenient for anybody out in a rural riding like myself to come into Edmonton for a committee meeting. I don't see why it would be inconvenient for the Member for Edmonton-Decore to drive across town to attend a meeting. We've had plenty of opportunities where we could have had the AAMD and C.

One of the other responses that we got after I gave my motion in January was: well, we've just had the AAMD and C meeting, and, you know, there was a forum held with all the ministers present, and everybody had a chance at that time to present to the government. Well, if you've ever been to one of those – and I'm sure you have, Madam Speaker – there's a lineup at the microphones. They're only given an hour to ask questions. Each member, mayor, councillor has a chance to ask a question. There's a red light that stops them at 30 seconds, and then the government takes as much time as they want to answer. Calling that an opportunity for consultation is a bit of a joke, I think. It's far better to have the people that are concerned with that particular issue from the AAMD and C. I'm sure that they would send a committee to our committee with some pretty specific asks and concerns that we could deal with at that time.

The same goes, I believe, for the recycle group in Alberta that's been trying to get a hold of us and come and talk to committee, the Resource Stewardship Committee, specifically. They've been denied for two and a half years as well.

Referring things like the Lobbyists Act review: I think that possibly there should have been a special committee struck for that rather than putting that onto the Resource Stewardship Committee, so that we could get some important work done. I'm sure that there are people in the House here that have specific interests in the Lobbyists Act that weren't on the Resource Stewardship Committee at the time and weren't able to have their input into it. I think that rather than saddling our standing committees with some of these assignments, we should strike special committees, especially when we're dealing with issues like the Lobbyists Act review that have to be done in a certain period of time, that take up a whole year.

Now, I believe we're on the third assignment since I started with that committee, which is going to take us up until November of this year, where again from now until November 29, I believe it is, we won't be able to speak to anybody else in Alberta about anything other than the assigned task that we're on.

So that is why I'm supporting Motion 501. I don't understand the government's reluctance to move along our committees and allow us to work on some important things that Albertans want us to talk about. We're here for a reason. We've got, you know, 12 months of the year that we can be meeting in committee. Even while we're in session, there are evening sessions that we could be holding and having special committee meetings with some of these people. We've got the AAMD and C in town this week, and we could be holding a special committee meeting with them tonight. It wouldn't be that hard. All the committee members are here in town. The folks who are in town: it would be convenient for them. They're already in Edmonton. So why couldn't we do that? Unfortunately, we're not allowed to because we have an assignment and the standing orders prevent us from fulfilling that.

I know that some of the members opposite that sit on the committee are very reluctant to move this forward, but I would hope that they would see the advantage of actually letting our committees do what they're supposed to be doing and maybe referring some of these special assignments to a special committee.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I wasn't sure I was fast enough. I'll start again this afternoon by thanking the Member for Highwood for bringing forward this motion. I think it's a really practical motion, and it could be really useful to us. We have been dealing with a lot of legislation in a number of the standing committees rather than dealing with stakeholders and the issues that are concerning the different committees. What has been happening is that stakeholders end up having to meet either with individual members of committees or with caucuses from the committees, and we aren't getting the benefit of the conversations that happen within those discrete areas. We don't hear what questions other members of the committee are asking the stakeholders, we don't hear what the answers are, and I think it takes away from the multipartisan approach of a standing committee and turns it into a partisan activity.

Special committees, as was mentioned earlier, can be struck if we do need to address issues directly. I think that that's a really useful tool, and we should take more advantage of it. For these reasons, I will be supporting the motion.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Motion 501. A motion gives an indication as to the direction that the Legislature would like to adopt on a particular issue, and today we bring before you in Motion 501 a motion that asks the Legislature to consider amending the standing orders. Now, each of us as MLAs received this little book, and we get updates to it all the time. It's called the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. As we take a look at these standing orders, they outline for us how this Legislature is supposed to work.

We are looking at a motion today that asks us to change the way our legislative policy committees will function. We're asking that suborder (1) does not prevent a Legislative Policy Committee from undertaking a hearing or inquiry during the same period of time that a matter stands referred to the Committee by the Assembly if the hearing or inquiry does not interfere with the work of the Committee on the matter referred to it.

Madam Speaker, we're going to stand today and ask that this Legislative Assembly consider changing the current rules that are stipulated there to allow them to undertake any activities that they may deem important in between the tasks that have been referred to them. Madam Speaker, this would make our committees more efficient, and I would support this motion.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the comments that we've heard so far. Clearly, there is a good case to be made that we need to take a closer look at changing the standing orders to allow for further committee-initiated reviews. I would note that there is a standing committee of the Legislature, that being the Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing Committee, whose mandate is expressly to review proposed standing orders. I believe that that committee is the appropriate venue for the discussion of this proposal to take place.

For that reason, I have an amendment that I would like to put forward, and I have the requisite number of copies. If I may read the amendment while they're being delivered. Thank you.

Ms Fitzpatrick to move that Motion 501 be amended by adding the following after "be it resolved":

that the following proposed amendment to the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing for review and that the committee submit its report to the Assembly on or before June 19, 2018.

As I said, Madam Speaker, I agree with the intent behind this motion. Committees already have the ability when no matter has been referred to them to initiate their own reviews, as the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill has identified. I think it's fair to say that there are times when despite a matter being referred to a committee, that committee could still do other work without impacting that review; for example, while the committee is awaiting public feedback or while Parliamentary Counsel is doing their research. I do think it is vital that we do need to maintain the primacy of business referred to the committees by the House as a whole.

I appreciate that the motion explicitly maintains that a hearing or inquiry must not interfere with the matter referred to it. I appreciate and support that wording. However, I do believe there needs to be significant discussion about what this would look like. Would it mean thorough studies taking place in parallel with what has been referred by the Assembly? Does it mean squeezing in a meeting with stakeholders every time the committee has a gap of a few weeks between meetings? Does it mean inviting lobbyists in to present to committees on matters other than what the committee is studying? These are just a few of the questions that spring to mind when I review the proposed change.

I urge all members to support my amendment, which would see those questions and potentially others discussed by the appropriate committee in due course. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Members wishing to speak to the referral amendment? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm disappointed in this amendment. I'm a little bit shocked at the behaviour that we've seen and the process that we've seen from government members today in regard to private members' business before this place. We've seen now two issues that we've been dealing with today be sent off to a committee. The problem with that – I don't have to tell you – is that the members across the way will only send things to committee when they don't want to deal with them. They send them off to committees that don't meet so that they will essentially eventually die on the Order Paper and not have their day in front of this Assembly.

Just a few moments ago we saw the members across the way do the exact same thing they're trying to do now to a bill that would have protected volunteer firefighters across this province. Now we see them coming forward with an amendment to send this to a committee that has not met in almost two and a half years. In fact, it's famously called the no-meet committee, unfortunately, Madam Speaker, because of some of the behaviour that we've seen with that committee in the past as far as members being compensated to be part of a committee that never meets. We have fortunately dealt with that, but the fact is that this committee still does not meet, has not since late 2015, early 2016. Prior to that, they hadn't met in several years.

5:30

Again, every time that this government has taken a private member's piece of business and sent it to a committee, it has never come back to this place. Never. As soon as this government sees a reasonable amendment or motion that they know politically, back home in their constituencies or for certain members of the NDP, is going to cause them trouble, they then send it off to committee so they can look at the reporters and say: oh, we just sent it off to committee. They know darn well, Madam Speaker, that this motion will never ever be debated at a committee, and it certainly will not make it back to this place.

The problem with that and why we are so frustrated by that is that we see things like the carbon tax, that has a negative impact on Albertans all across this province, that is impacting families, charities, municipalities, everybody in a negative way, and we on this side say, "Hey, we've got to make sure that we get this right; can we send this to committee?" And they won't do it.

Bill 6, one of the worst pieces of legislation we've ever seen come from this Chamber, the 29th Legislature. Again, this side of the House begged for it to go to a committee for a serious conversation, but, no, it doesn't go. What goes is legislation from this side of the House, private members' business that this government does not want to face their constituents in voting down. Instead, they're trying to take a politically expedient path by sending it to committee.

Another great example was a private member's bill brought forward by the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, which he brought forward to make sure we could take the biggest money out of politics, which is government money during elections, taxpayer dollars that the government has access to. This government – and there was a lot of press at the time – decided to send it off to a committee. Madam Speaker, this House still has not seen that, in over three years, come back to this place.

This is a tactic by this government to stop legislation or motions that they find politically troubling for them, that they don't want to vote for but that they don't want to tell their constituents that they did not vote for. It is ridiculous, it's unacceptable, and it has to be called out, Madam Speaker. To send a motion to a committee that does not meet – and everybody in this Assembly knows that this issue will never be discussed in that committee – is ridiculous and appalling. Let's just be very, very clear on what's happening here.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, it's no surprise that the members opposite like to create their own facts, eh? They like to spin things and, like, make it seem like what's true is not true and what's not true is true perhaps. The member opposite from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre just got up in this very House and said that the so-called, quote, unquote, no-meet committee has never met in the past two years. Do you want to know a fact? This committee, Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing, which the Member for Lethbridge-East has the privilege of chairing, actually did meet. [interjections] Yeah. Like, the members across like to laugh at the fact that, oh, they've been caught trying to twist the facts, right? Actually, the last time that the committee did meet was on November 24, 2015, and we were discussing morning sittings, right? This committee is dedicated to doing the work of this Legislature when called upon.

Now, one of the things that I wanted to share, being the chair of the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, is that another way that the members opposite like to distort the facts is that they like to say that, well, we didn't want to meet with stakeholders, when it was expressed multiple times in committee that it was the standing orders that kept us from having to deal with any other business. Now, the standing orders are the rules of this Legislature. They're the rules that dictate what committees can do, when they do it, how they do it. That's what the standing orders are for. But, you know, what do you expect from libertarians? They want to deregulate as much as they can, take away the rules of this and that. They'd rather just not have any rules whatsoever. They wouldn't even want government to exist perhaps, which is kind of ironic since they want to become the government. God forbid that that should be the case. Madam Speaker, it's so important that we have rules.

Now, you know, I have the privilege of working out with the fine members of the Legislative Assembly security almost every morning in the Legislature gym downstairs. They're fine, upstanding individuals. They follow the rules, they're members of integrity, and they know what their job is and how they serve this Legislature. They know better than anybody else, just as much as we should know, that they have to follow the rules, right? I mean, after all, that's what rules were invented for. Now, I understand – I understand – that sometimes you don't like the rules, but rather than break the rules, you should work to see if you can change them.

You know, let me just share with you, Madam Speaker, that this is an approach that I take with my children because I don't like to be a dictator in my house. I don't like to tell my children what they have to do and when they have to do it, but that's the role and responsibility of a parent. However, I also tell my children that if you don't like a rule or you don't like a decision that I've made, then use your words and make an argument to suggest an alternative. Stick with the rules, or work to change the rules, but don't break the rules.

What better way to help change the rules than to send this very motion, Motion 501, to the committee that's actually responsible for reviewing the standing orders of this very House. Now, the members across the way are saying: oh, the government just wants to kill the motion, doesn't want it to come back to the House. But that's the responsibility of this committee. That's what it was set up to do. Now, you'd think that the members across the way would encourage actually sending something to committee for greater review so that we could actually do the job of what that committee is called to do. I mean, after all, it's right in the name of the committee, Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing.

Madam Speaker, I also wanted to state that, you know, members across the way are saying that stakeholders don't have the opportunity to share what their feelings are and what they'd like to see with this government. Of course, I can speak for the ministers here. They try to be as accessible as they possibly can to all stakeholders, including those of the AAMD and C. They try to get to those meetings, be there, listen, and do as much as they can. Stakeholders also have the opportunity to have meetings with MLAs and to share their perspectives. Of course, we private members of the government caucus do our due diligence, and we are very responsible, and we communicate the opinions of those stakeholders to our ministers whenever we can.

Now, I hear the members across the way just laughing it up. They think that this is the biggest joke ever, but of course the biggest joke is the fact that they like to twist the facts. Now, I would venture that it's just as important to them to make sure that we hear from stakeholders. I don't deny that. It's very important. I've even made the argument as the chair of the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship: let's get the business out of the way, that we need to do, so that we can meet with stakeholders and get that job done.

Madam Speaker, like I said, I find it very important that we pass this amendment to Motion 501, that we send this to the committee that actually has the responsibility for doing such things, the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing. I hope that all members in this House will vote in favour of this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

5:40

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, you just can't make this stuff up. You really just can't make this stuff up, the irony of this government taking a private member's motion, a motion about encouraging committees to be able to do more work, and – what do they do? – they make a motion to send it to committee. Now, honestly, you can't make this stuff up. I can't even believe that we're here discussing this, to be honest. Now, what's interesting, too, is that this committee that they want to send it to won't be able to do any other work other than this until it's done, which was the point of the motion, to allow committees to do more than one thing.

I know that the member opposite there from Edmonton-Ellerslie says – well, you know, it's like a gotcha moment, where he said that they actually did meet. They actually did, two and a half years ago. They actually did meet. It was a great aha moment for him, I know. But two and a half years ago was the last time they met, and now the government is deciding to send this to the committee that hasn't met for two and a half years, that now will not be able to do any other work until it's done this unless, of course, they pass this. But they're not going to pass it. They're obviously dead set on sending it to committee.

Now, I know they're sending it to committee and saying, "Well, this needs to be discussed in committee," but, Madam Speaker, we've been discussing it in committee for over a year. That's what we've been doing. We've been discussing this. Every time this committee meets, we discuss this. We say: come on; let's be realistic here. The committees are hopefully made up of intelligent enough people to be able to decide whether they can take on another task or not. I would hope that we have people on the committee that could make that decision for themselves, not that it has to be hidden in the standing orders, that they're not able to make that decision for themselves. I really believe that the committees can make that decision for themselves. They have to be qualified enough to make that decision.

Now we'll get on to distorting the facts, that the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie talked about. He accused us of saying that they didn't want to meet. Well, we give them every opportunity to meet.

I think we tried to pass three different motions, actually, maybe even four, to allow us to meet with these groups, and every single one was voted down except for the last one, that the chair called out of order, which probably wasn't out of order because we started a new session. He claimed that since we'd already discussed it, it couldn't be discussed again. But when you start a new session, then that should restart that, too.

Now, he said that the standing orders, speaking of distorting facts, kept us from meeting. We couldn't meet because of the standing orders. Well, Madam Speaker, I made a motion, that was in order – legal counsel agreed and approved that it was in order – that we could meet with those groups by forming a working group or a subcommittee. You know what happened? The government members voted it down. That was fair within the standing orders. So when the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie gets up and says, "Oh, no; the standing orders said that we couldn't do it," no, that's not correct. The standing orders said that we could. I made the motion, it was in order, it was approved by legal counsel, and they voted it down. So when he talks about twisting facts, I guess that's pot, kettle, black right there.

So this is simple. This is very simple. You pass this motion allowing committees to make the decision for themselves on the work that they do. Now, when the work comes from the Legislature here, then obviously that takes precedence. The members of the committee can make that decision.

Now, I went through and figured it out. In the last year we'd met in that committee five times, for a total of 12 and a half hours. That isn't being overworked as a committee member. But, obviously, the government felt that they were being overworked because they voted it down. They keep putting this off.

The groups that wanted to meet with us. The Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, elected representatives, directly in the communities that we represent. They're here in town this week. How great it would have been while they're in town to meet with them. But nope, can't do that.

The Independent Power Producers Society of Alberta. I would say that this government seems to be concerned about power all the time, power generation and distribution, all these different things. You'd think that they would want to meet with them. I would like to meet with them if for no other reason than they want to meet with us.

The Alberta Used Oil Management Association, another organization that wanted to meet: they might have something very important to discuss with us, but unfortunately we'll never know.

The Beverage Container Management Board is another group that wants to meet with us.

The Alberta Recycling Management Authority. Recycling: what's wrong with that?

Why can't we meet with these people? Some of their concerns could be timely, and by delaying two and a half years to talk to them, to listen to them, all of a sudden their issues are gone, or they've already passed, and we've given them no opportunity to express their concerns to us.

Madam Speaker, we spend lots of time in committee waiting – waiting for reports, waiting for the next meeting to come up, waiting for all the different things that we do in committee – and during those times when we're waiting, there are other things we could be doing. Again, this is as simple as dirt, to be able to meet with a couple of groups like this. It would take us a couple of hours, and we'd have that opportunity. Those people would know that they were listened to. We'd be able to understand their concerns, and we could carry on.

Again, Madam Speaker, I just don't understand. I can't believe that we're sitting here discussing committee work, and it's going to be sent to committee. This government only does this when they want to kill something. This is about consultation. This is about listening. This is about meeting with groups that have concerns.

Obviously, this government has failed in consultation. Bill 6: classic example of no consultation. Carbon tax: no consultation. It wasn't mentioned in the election campaign.

Caribou issues. There was a group here today in the Legislature. They wanted to be listened to. They don't feel like they've been listened to. They don't feel like they've been consulted. This is what this is about. This is how we could keep from having this reoccurrence of concerns about consultation.

The Castle: again, no consultation. Lots of different issues here that could be taken care of if we just took a little time to meet with these groups when they wanted to meet with us.

Now, I know that they've come up with some pretty feeble excuses on why they didn't want to work with this during committee. They've had lots of time to think about this, the government side. We've given them plenty of time. We've been talking about this for over a year. These groups have been waiting for two and a half years to actually be able to talk to us. I can't believe that with all the time this government has had to think about it, the only thing that they can come up with is to send it to committee. I find it just absolutely appalling. I can't believe that we're at this point. Again, you can't make this stuff up.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

5:50

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to get up and speak in favour of referring this to committee. I think this would be something that our colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills would be very much in support of since I know that he has gone on at length in this House about the importance of committee work, that it's vital to democracy.

The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky actually talked previously quite a bit about how AAMDC is coming up this week and how important it would be to meet with the various organizations that are up here for that meeting, you know, made the point that we would actually be out there. As Members of the Legislative Assembly I'm imagining that we will all be attending that.

Now, in some ways I feel like he actually made a point for us on this one in that as MLAs we are all going to be out there. We are going to be out there talking with those individuals, you know, talking with the power producers. On his suggestion that we could have a committee meeting to do that, the only time that one would be able to do that would be after hours when the House isn't sitting, which means that we would be having meetings starting at 7, 8, 9 o'clock at night. That perhaps might not be the most convenient time for that when we could be where they are already, at these meetings. So I appreciate the member for making our point on that one.

Now, I'm also a member of the Resource Stewardship Committee. I've made the point multiple times when these suggestions were brought forward in committee that the standing orders as they exist currently are very clear that while there is a matter from the Assembly referred to the committee, that takes priority and that is the subject that we are talking about.

You know, when I spoke to that motion at the time in committee, I made the point that the proper place to bring that forward is here, so I actually thank the member for taking our advice on that one and actually bringing it forward here in the House where we can address it. Except it's got one little more step to go, and that is for it to be discussed in the committee whose job it is to make these sorts of decisions. I think, perhaps ironically, that the standing orders as they exist currently would require that committee to meet and talk about this subject. After due consideration, the standing orders could be modified as necessary based on the concerns that come up with that. So I'm glad that, you know, this has moved forward to the correct place where it can be properly addressed.

I hope that when it goes to the committee of privileges and elections and printing, I believe, that it does get due consideration. I always want to make sure that if this motion to change the standing orders is to go forward, it is used appropriately and not used to filibuster, you know, the things that have been referred to committee. Often when bills are referred to committee, they have a set timeline to them that is put there by this Assembly. So I'd hate to see that that would be used as a way to filibuster.

As I mentioned previously, to say that we're refusing to consult with Albertans is, of course, absolute hogwash. You know, I only have to look so far as my colleague who brought forward his private member's bill on daylight saving time, which actually went through the committee process, and how many people came forward to him before he brought that bill forward and how many people came forward and talked to him in committee and how that report came forward to this Assembly. That, hon. members, was a lot of consultation.

I think even of my own private member's bill, Bill 211, which unfortunately did not pass due to the House being prorogued, and I think of the consultation I did on that bill. I did two consultations in Edmonton, two in Calgary, one in Lethbridge, and one in Medicine Hat to make sure that I got a fulsome understanding. I didn't do that through committee. I went out and did that through my ability to do that as a private member MLA, as we all have the ability to do. So to say that committee is the only place where we can do consultation is absolutely ridiculous. Committee is, I think, for certain things a great place to do that, and I think the standing orders as they exist, you know, reflect that.

When committees take their own initiative to explore a topic on their own, it's usually on a specific issue as opposed to meeting with a specific stakeholder. If the topic that we're going to look at, for example, is recycling, well, we would want to make sure that we have all the information available to us and invite all stakeholders, not just one industry group but other industry groups and stakeholders and local community members that would have an opinion on that particular subject. I think that's appropriate when you have an overall subject.

You know, I note for the Lobbyists Act in Resource Stewardship, which is the committee that this was brought forward in, we had meetings in 2017 on January 12, February 21, June 14, July 4. We also met on the Property Rights Advocate on October 10 and on the Conflicts of Interest Act on November 29. Those are meetings of the Resource Stewardship Committee right there. Of course, one could say: "All right. Well, I guess there is a gap in March there." I think the opposition is sometimes being a little enthusiastic in their interpretation of the truth in that there is, you know, nothing else that's going on.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. member.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Nixon: Madam Speaker, I could have point-of-ordered this several times in the last few minutes by rising on 23(h), (i), and (j), certainly, language that will cause disorder in this House. Repeatedly we've seen government members across the way today imply that members on this side of the House are not telling the truth or are playing fast and loose with the truth. The member just said similar comments, in fact.

It does nothing to help the debate in this place, Madam Speaker. It is certainly against the tradition of this place, and I would ask that you caution members to not continue to do that.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the point of order? Hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, do you wish to speak to it?

Mr. Malkinson: I think I can take this opportunity, if it would be suitable to the House, to rephrase my last comment.

The Deputy Speaker: I would caution members. We've had rulings before from the Speaker that we don't use language that implies not telling the truth on either side.

Continue.

Debate Continued

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. To say, you know, that there is nothing happening in those gaps of time, I think one ought to remember that we're in this Chamber doing work, just like we are doing right now, discussing bills that are coming forward. Personally, I'm very much looking forward to discussing Bill 5, introduced just today, because that particular bill, of course, is very similar in spirit to my private member's bill. I'm happy to bring that forward, and I'm looking forward to the debate on that particular bill.

On the committee meetings, in 2016 there were 88 committee meetings, by my count. In 2017 there were over a hundred of them; I stopped counting at that point. In 2018 so far my count is that there have been 12 committee meetings since January, and of course we are not even done March yet, Madam Speaker.

I think, you know, that the correct place for this to go forward is to the privileges and elections committee, where we have the time to weigh the pros and cons of this particular suggestion in the correct committee to do that. The standing orders as they currently exist would, of course, require that committee to do that.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but pursuant to the standing orders the House stands adjourned until 7:30 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, March 19, 2018

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Good evening, everyone. Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 3

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2018

The Acting Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 3, Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2018.

The act will provide funding authority to the offices of the Legislative Assembly and to the government for the period of April 1, 2018, to May 31, 2018, inclusive. Two months, Madam Speaker. The approval of this act will provide the funds necessary to continue the business of the province while the Assembly takes the time necessary to prepare, present, review, and debate the government's 2018-19 budget plans.

I respectfully urge my colleagues on both sides of this House to support this bill. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to second reading? The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I look at Bill 3, Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2018, and I'm surprised that the government thinks that we could even have a discussion on it. Actually, I'm not surprised at all. We're working with a few solitary, isolated figures, and that's it. Not very much detail in this bill, as with all the other bills this government presents. This government is asking us to write them a blank cheque for the first two months of the fiscal year, from April 1, 2018, to May 31, 2018. That's one-sixth of a year. The Minister of Finance and Treasury comes to the Legislature seeking permission to spend millions of dollars, and we have only the sketchiest of information.

Now, members are offered an opportunity to ask the minister about these very large monetary requests, but do we get an answer? I don't know. It's up to the members to decide. I don't think we got the answer that Albertans are looking for. Let me quote from last Thursday's Hansard when the Member for Calgary-Hays asked the Minister of Finance about interim supply. The member asked:

Are there any details specific to any ministry that he can share with the House where something more or less is going to be spent this year than in the same period of time in the last fiscal year? Since he's asking for all this money, I thought he might share a little more information than has been shared thus far about what indeed he intends to spend more or less money on.

The minister responded with no details, just vague comments, certainly not any figures or details at all. He did repeat his well-worn mantra of having Albertans' backs. I think that's the mantra they try to play every time we ask them any questions. But, Madam Speaker, we do not see a government taking care of people's backs. I don't want to get into that detail; otherwise, we'll run out of time here. We can talk about the carbon tax. We can talk about Bill 6, but I'd rather stick to this bill.

We see a government focused on pushing through its ideological agenda, the NDP world view. The agenda is not making lives easier. The carbon tax, again, as I said, is a good example of that. Alberta still has a shockingly high unemployment rate. Calgary alone: 7.9 per cent unemployment rate, the second-highest of any large city in Canada. Families are having a hard time making ends meet. I agree with the minister claiming that it's coming down because the unemployed people are probably moving out of this province to other jurisdictions to find jobs.

Small businesses are collapsing under the weight of this government's ideological legislation, which includes, as I said earlier, Bill 6, minimum wage, and that despised carbon tax. Just how high is the carbon tax going to go? Our leader asks the hon. Premier every day, and we still have to hear the answer: up, up, up. The Member for Calgary-Lougheed, as I said, has pointedly asked the Premier, but no answer.

On top of this issue, we have an NDP government saddling future generations with crushing debt. Those generations are going to look back on us and wonder why we let it get out of hand, why we let it go so far, like, billions of dollars of debt. Then we have this interim supply bill that is asking for billions of dollars with no accounting of where it's going to go. I guess that's how this government operates: no accountability to Albertans.

Madam Speaker, taking care of taxpayers' money is a sacred task for legislators. We come to this House and ask questions and are looking for answers to help guide us. As my colleague the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat asked the Finance minister during the period when members on this side of the House are offered an opportunity to pose questions to the government: Minister, we're being asked to approve over 8 and a half billion dollars with only a dozen pages of details and less than 24 hours to read and prepare. He, too, received a vague comment. The Finance minister, in answer to the question about whether any expenses related to the carbon tax, responded:

I can tell you that in my own department there is I think it's in the neighbourhood of a couple of million dollars that are expended on the administration of that climate leadership plan. I can get more specific information and have that for when we do estimates and I sit down and talk with members of the opposition and members on this side specifically about my own budget and my own department.

That wasn't helpful at all.

Mr. Ceci: But it's accurate.

Mr. Gill: He applauds it.

It's a couple of million, when he's coming to the Legislature asking for $8.5 billion, and the only information we received on those kinds of massive funds is a dozen pages. We thought we might get details when questioning the ministers in this Chamber, which is what we thought is supposed to occur. We were not enlightened at all but were not surprised at the same time. Why did this government not prepare the budget prior so that we can consider this in its entirety? By the way, we also asked this question, Madam Speaker, and didn't get the answer, as usual.

The government asks a lot of us, Madam Speaker. It's requesting billions of dollars and not accounting for it. So what I hope they consider tonight is that when they do this, they are asking a lot of taxpayers where the taxpayers want this money to go. Of course, we have seen how much taxpayers count to them; they are simply there to supply the money. I mean, like, we have all seen the latest polling results. That's why this government's polling results are low, because this government does not believe in respecting taxpayers' money.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. What a wonderful evening it is – isn't it? – to be here in the House discussing interim supply. I'm just loving every moment of it. What I love most is the way that our hon. members and friends from across the way like to characterize the work of this government. You know, it's like, oh, you'd imagine that the sky is falling, right? Well, I am so proud of what this government has done in just the last three years.

I remember being a university student, and every year my tuition would just go up and up and up and up and up, right? You know, coming from a good, working-class home – my parents didn't have all the money that perhaps other families do – it was a challenge. They used to work really hard. I'm really proud of my parents. They both had full-time jobs, and on top of having two full-time jobs, we would also clean, provide janitorial services at night. For 17 years that's all my parents did.

When I was old enough I would go help them because I'd see how hard they were working. When I think back to the times when, you know, my mom and dad would get home around 5 o'clock, I usually would have something prepared to help them out. I'd have something cooking on the kitchen range just so that I could help out around the house. They'd sit for about an hour. They'd have their meal, they'd have enough time for a quick coffee, and they were back out the door again.

It surprises me because, you know, a lot of the times the members from across the way – I'm not going to say all of them – like to characterize us as perhaps being too privileged or lazy or, I don't know, as if we don't work hard as well, as if we don't know what it's like to put in a hard day's work, because according to them only people who own businesses know that kind of hard work. There are a lot of working people in this province who may not be business owners, but they know how to work just as hard. Some of them have two jobs, three jobs, little contracts on the side to help them make it to the end of the month.

I know that so many – so many – constituents that live in my riding are new Canadians. You know, one of the things that they tell me constantly is: we came to this country so that our kids could have a better future. Some of them are working those two, three jobs, contracts on the side so that they can send their children to postsecondary institutions in this province. You can bet – you can absolutely bet – that this tuition freeze is helping out those families, making life more affordable for these new families, these new Canadians who came here and are doing the very best to contribute to this society, to this province.

I know so many of them. They come and see me at my constituency office or I see them in the community or when I'm knocking on doors. You know, I go door-knocking in my constituency, and I'm happy to say that I'm at that stage now where people open the door and they're like: hey, Rod. Oh. Sorry. I forgot that I'm not allowed to mention my name in the House.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member.

Loyola: It was a mistake.

The Acting Speaker: It's parliamentary practice in this House that we do not use names, nor do we mock the parliamentary practice. So if you could be respectful of the practice and continue and stay on the bill, please.

Loyola: My apologies, Madam Speaker. It was a sincere mistake. I didn't mean it. I didn't mean it. I actually caught myself after I said it, and I apologized.

We've frozen tuition specifically to help these families. And not just new Canadians: there are a lot of people in this province who are benefiting from such a decision. We're trying our best to make life more affordable for all Albertans with the decisions that we are making.

You know, just the other day I was asking the Minister of Children's Services what it would be like if we weren't to fund the programs that she has the responsibility for. I don't even want to imagine what that would be like. Imagine if we had to stop helping people on AISH or income support because this interim supply bill wouldn't pass.

You know, the other thing that I'm extremely proud of is Economic Development and Trade and the fact that in the last year we put forward two tax credits – two tax credits – that we could help Alberta businesses with, the capital investment tax credit and the Alberta investor tax credit, making sure that we were supporting small and medium-sized businesses here in this province, making sure that in this difficult economic time we're at least doing a small piece to help get us back to recovery, help get us on that right path and the minister of development and trade doing his very best to get out there and connect with as many people as possible so that we can encourage and get more investment here in the province of Alberta.

Education, funding for enrolment: the minister has done his absolute best in a very difficult time. Yeah, we weren't able to reduce school fees by the entire amount, but we did what we could in this economic context so that we could make life more affordable for those families.

You know, I was very happy. Perhaps the best thing, especially in my riding, has been the fact that we've been able to build four new schools – four new schools – since being elected. Four new schools have been built in the constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie. Those families are incredibly happy because there was such incredible pressure on the existing schools there, on Ellerslie Campus and Michael Strembitsky. The names of the schools: I'm not joshing.

Let me tell you that families were coming up to me and telling me how difficult it was, the fact that they lived so close to the school, yet there was such an enormous amount of pressure before these other schools opened that they couldn't take their kids to that particular school. That was after years and years and years of promises that the schools would be built. I mean, people were moving into the neighbourhood, and they were being told: yeah, a new school is going to be built right across the way here for you. They waited, and they waited, and they waited.

Right now I'm just going to put in a plug to the Minister of Education. Hopefully he can communicate to the Infrastructure minister that now what I would really love is a high school in Edmonton-Ellerslie. We've gotten quite a few schools, but now it'd be lovely to get a new high school for Edmonton public. The other thing that I'm extremely proud of is the fact that we've updated the labour laws in this province. We've come a long way. To be quite honest, we're just doing what other jurisdictions across this great country have done in terms of bringing up our labour law to that extent.

The other thing is increasing the minimum wage for those same people who are working two or sometimes even three jobs. It's well known that if you put money in the pockets of those people, they're going to go out and spend it in this economy so that things can get better instead of it sitting in a bank account somewhere, in savings, which is also good, too. Don't get me wrong. But it's important that people have the money so that they can make ends meet by the end of the month.

Madam Speaker, one of the other things that I'm incredibly proud that this government has done, of course, is the creation of the Ministry of Status of Women. What incredible work has been done so far in this province in the Ministry of Status of Women – thank you very much to the minister, who's championed that – in terms of our funding for sexual assault centres here in the province of Alberta, that we're doing everything that we possibly can to respond to the rights of women and campaigns like Me Too and doing our very best in order to move this province along.

Another important part, of course, is the savings that have been made within the agencies, boards, and commissions. Now, I don't know about other members in this House, but I was incredibly surprised to know that we were funding – well, not “we” like ourselves but the taxpayers of this province – golf memberships for the people who were in these positions and also the fact that it wasn't a transparent process in order to actually sit on one of these agencies, boards, and commissions, that people were just being named. Friends of friends of the government were just being named. Now it's a different process, and every opportunity that I have, I go out there and I tell my constituents about the fact that now it's a more transparent and fair process and that you can actually apply to be part of the agencies, boards, and commissions, that we're trying to increase diversity on these agencies, boards, and commissions. More women, more people who are ethnically diverse that also call this province home now have the opportunity to apply to these agencies, boards, and commissions.

I think that it's incredibly important that we continue the work that we're doing because, of course, there's so much more work to do. Don't get me wrong. We can continue doing more work. I mean, trying to reduce school fees a little more, doing our very best to make sure that that dollar in the pocket of each Albertan goes a little bit further: at the end of the day, that's what we're trying to do here.

In terms of infrastructure – I'm going to go back to that for a bit and just talk about the fact that building hospitals, the cancer institute . . .

Connolly: Centre.

Loyola: The cancer centre. Pardon me. I'm confusing it with the one here in Edmonton.

. . . the cancer centre in Calgary, the new hospital in southwest Edmonton. That's going to also help the people from my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie, less stress on the Grey Nuns hospital, all of this is going to . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any comments or questions under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Absolutely. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate being recognized today. I was interested in – I was listening, anyway, to the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie's speech and to him talking a lot about some of the things that he was proud of or indicated that he felt the governing party that he belongs to did. One thing I noticed that he left out was the talk about the carbon tax, well, the fact that his party never told Albertans about this carbon tax that they brought through when they campaigned. In fact, this was a surprise tax that they put in place on everything after not telling the good people of Alberta what they intended on doing with them, something that Albertans, you know, if polling is to be believed, over two-thirds of them, are upset about.

What was interesting was talk about all the things he was happy about. You know, in my community, Madam Speaker, we have a seniors' centre, the West Country seniors' centre. Right now it's been in the news a lot lately. Some of them came and visited me not too long ago with tears in their eyes, particularly Ray Sharp, who's one of the board members there. He's worked very, very hard to put together that seniors' centre, a place for our seniors, who built our community, to be able to come and recreate.

Ray's wife has some medical conditions that don't allow them to travel more. In fact, she can only be out of the home for a couple of hours at most, and then he has to return her home. Ray has dedicated this time to keeping care of his spouse of many decades.

He came with tears in his eyes, talking about how there was a good chance that this West Country seniors' centre, that is so important to them and to people all across the community, may have to close the doors. He was very upset about it. We talked about this, of course, at a press conference. He'd been calling the Premier's office over and over and over. The response he got back from the issue management people of this government was: go and have a fundraiser to pay for your carbon tax. Go and have a fundraiser to pay for your carbon tax. They told that to senior citizens in our community, who are just trying to take care of each other and have somewhere to recreate. Go and have a fundraiser to pay for our carbon tax. That's shameful, Madam Speaker. That's shameful.

I noticed that nobody in the government is standing up to talk about that, to talk about the serious consequences and punishment that they're putting on our communities. They talked about AISH. What about the AISH recipients who are paying a carbon tax right now? Further to that, what about the nonprofits that are the social safety net of our communities right now, that are having trouble keeping their doors open because of this government's carbon tax? I noticed they didn't talk about how proud they were of that. I certainly hope they weren't. [interjections] You know, the government is heckling me right now, Madam Speaker. It's not funny.

We've got Meals on Wheels, a very important thing, I'm assuming, across the province. [interjections] The hon. Municipal Affairs minister is heckling, too. I hope he gets up and shares some of his thoughts later. Here is a government that brought forward a tax that is punishing people, that is damaging our social safety net, and that has the ridiculous audacity to stand up inside this House and say that they're proud of the carbon tax and what they have done but ignores . . . [interjection] The minister of postsecondary is heckling away. He's probably one of the ones who told the senior citizens to hold the fundraiser, the way he's acting right now.

Mr. Schmidt: You want to take the money, probably, and give it to billionaires. How's that?

Mr. Nixon: He says that I want to take money from seniors and give it to billionaires. No, Madam Speaker. This government is the one that is taking money from the seniors in my community. I am the one who is coming to this House and bringing it up. The hon. postsecondary minister's government is the one who's calling those senior citizens and telling them to hold a fundraiser to pay for his ridiculous carbon tax. That's what's happening right now. But when they stand up and they talk about it, they don't talk about it at all. They don't want to hear about the damage that they're doing to our communities.

I was talking to people from Athabasca the other day, when I was up in Two Hills. They were talking about how much their heating bill has gone up and how upset they were with their representation for not standing up in this House and defending them because Albertans are not proud of what this government has done. They're disappointed in what this government has done.

I would like to hear the hon. member speak more about that, address the fact that his government's answer to the seniors in my community on this important issue is to raise the rates on fixed-income seniors. This is the place that they have to go recreate, and this government's answer is: go hold a fundraiser to pay for our carbon tax, or raise the rates on fixed-income seniors. This is the place that they can go recreate in our community.

As you can see, Madam Speaker, they're getting upset as we raise it today because this is the part that they don't want to talk about. They don't want to talk about the negative impact that their policies are having on people. They don't want to talk about the impact that their carbon tax is having on people in this province. They want to stand here and talk about all the things they're proud of but forget about the damage that they're doing. Now, Madam Speaker, I cannot imagine . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, just before we continue with the debate, I just want to remind everyone that we are on the debate for interim supply. I've allowed the dialogue to drift on both sides, and I think I've been fair now. If we could please go back to Bill 3, appropriations for supply.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It took every fibre of my being not to call a point of order in the last couple of speeches. I decided that I would allow you to run the show here. But I appreciate your comments, and I will restrain my comments here to Bill 3. I very much appreciate the opportunity to speak to this bill although I have to say that I wish I didn't have to. I wish we didn't have to be here because we don't have to be here.

There's a reason that the standing orders have us starting the spring sitting of the Legislature at the beginning of February. Standing orders have us come in on the second Tuesday of February, and that is to allow the government time to come in and get, quite literally, the House in order and put a budget before Albertans in time for us to get past the 31st of March, which is barely eight days away by the time the budget drops, and not have to bring in interim supply.

Notwithstanding the fact that we spent a scintillating three hours in Committee of Supply and had an opportunity to quiz the minister on the specifics of exactly what happens in interim supply, the lack of detail makes it very difficult for us to make comparisons. We recognize, of course, that not everything in the government operates in a perfect, linear, 12-month calendar. There are fluctuations in funding requirements at different times of the year, so we wouldn't expect to take a ministry's budget from last year, divide it by 12, and for the couple of months multiply again by two to come up with a number in terms of what we would expect to see in each department for interim supply. We've had some answers to what those allocations are here that are being requested in Bill 3, but there's a lot of information that's left out in the open.

When you do a year-over-year comparison from the last interim supply to this one, there are some differences, and that is cause for concern. It leads us to wonder if the government is trying to find ways of fudging this a little bit, finding ways to add a little bit of spending that may not otherwise have seen the light of day. It is quite challenging to do that when you don't have the opportunity to go into an estimates process and the very detailed process that we're about to go through here. Of course, that won't happen until eight days before the end of the fiscal year.

The challenge that that presents for the departments is that it makes it very challenging for them to plan, not knowing exactly what their budget is going to be until eight days before the end of the fiscal year. Even then, of course, there's always the possibility that things will change in the debate process although that doesn't seem to happen nearly as often as I might like, much as those of us on this side of the House will try. It does make it very difficult for departments to plan when fully one-sixth of their year goes by before they have their new budget formalized and in place. It is a tremendous challenge for the departments, and I know that from talking with people in a variety of different departments. They tell me that they would certainly prefer clarity and a budget sometime in the month of February, which is why standing orders are what they say they are.

This government loves to run down the prior government and all the terrible things they did and to say how this government is undoing all of that damage. Well, that government would do this quite often as well, and this is something, frankly, that I, unfortunately, see this current government emulating far, far, far too often. It's unnecessary, and it doesn't make for ease of planning within the departments.

Planning matters and governance matters. I would hope that those of us in this Chamber are here because we've a passion for governing our province well. Unfortunately, when we have to continually bring in interim supply, it does not represent good governance practice because it doesn't follow the standing orders.

It does also get in the way of other important business that I would hope government would be setting about tackling. How do we create more and more sustainable, full-time jobs in this province? How do we attract back that capital that's gone away from this province and doesn't seem to be coming back, certainly not in the oil and gas sector? I can tell you from talking with many of my constituents recently that there are grave concerns about companies moving capital out of this province. They look forward to hoping to have a new government in place after the next election that will help attract capital back into this province, not eliminating the carbon tax, as our colleagues here to my right would do, but fixing the carbon tax.

There are flaws within the carbon tax system. The Alberta Party very much believes that a carbon tax is an economically efficient way of reducing emissions. From the way this government has implemented that, though, I'm not confident and convinced it actually achieves those outcomes.

Of course, planning proper infrastructure builds — schools, everything from flood protection infrastructure to hospitals to roads and bridges and those kinds of things — and actually making sure that those projects are executed on time and that the dollars actually get out the door to get that work done.

Making our health care system sustainable. I was having some interesting conversations at an event earlier this evening with a variety of different stakeholders from an economics background, from a health care governance perspective just on what it's going to take to make our health care system sustainable. Unfortunately, I don't see enough creative thinking from this government. What I see is a lot of narrow thinking in terms of how things need to happen. I don't see the substantial change required that's going to change the structural cost problem we have in our health care system. One way we're going to do that, of course, is by unlocking the wonderful people who are within the system and working on the front lines in a variety of different aspects every single day.

It makes it very challenging to support interim supply. I understand that without it the government ceases to operate, and of course I don't think any of us want to see that. This government has put us in a position where we have no choice but to pass this legislation just simply to keep things going when there's a perfectly reasonable way of this government doing that, and that is to come back to this House far sooner, bring a budget in time so we can debate and pass that before the end of the fiscal year, which is how the system is set up and is meant to be.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? Comments or questions?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for . . .

Mr. Hanson: Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, ma'am, the now defunct constituency of Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

I just want to talk briefly on a couple of issues, specifically Education. I was going to stick to Education and Municipal Affairs, but the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie kind of prompted me to comment on Advanced Education as well because he talked about freezing tuitions. Now, I see in the paper today that the Advanced Education minister is in an argument with the University of Alberta board of governors and the president over what they've seen as necessary cuts and an increase in the budget to student residences. It's fine to say that you're freezing tuitions, but these institutions still have to survive, and they have to find ways to do it.

Now, getting back to Education and Municipal Affairs specifically, I know that the government doesn't want to talk about it – and possibly the Member for Calgary-Elbow doesn't want to talk about it either – but the carbon tax is a very big part of what they do in Education and Municipal Affairs. Interestingly enough, I was just at a bit of a luncheon on Thursday evening, sitting with a bunch of school boards from all over the province. I was at a table with some folks from Hinton and area, up in the Jasper area. We were talking about it, and, you know, they were talking about different ways that they could cut costs in their budgets and try and cover some of these costs, the ever-increasing costs to them.

I suggested that there was a way that we could cut some costs that would benefit all the school boards in Alberta. It wouldn't discriminate against rural or urban school boards. One of the trustees asked me, "Well, what was that?" I said, "Well, we could make you exempt from the carbon tax." Well, the Member for Sherwood Park was sitting at the table, and she jumped up and said, "We're not here to talk about carbon tax." But, believe me, everybody in that room wanted to talk about carbon tax. You were the only ones that didn't want to talk about carbon tax.

Postsecondary and school boards: they want to talk about carbon tax. That's all part of their budget, which is part of this budget. My question is: how much of this interim supply goes to cover that? You know, I understand why they want to call it a levy, because if you didn't call it a levy, they wouldn't be able to tax school boards and municipalities. But how much of the money is the province putting in? We're basically taxing our own tax dollars or pulling out of our own tax dollars to pay for this carbon tax, which doesn't make a lot of sense.

I've got a meeting on Friday with a whole lot of very angry bus drivers from my community. They're going to come into my office and talk to me about carbon tax and how it's affecting them and what they can do. They used to have a program where, if fuel prices reached a certain level, they would get a rebate back from the province, but now on top of that, they're paying a carbon tax. That is a very big concern, so I ask the question: how much of the Education budget goes directly back into school boards paying into the carbon tax? Do you think it's fair that we're penalizing some of these school boards that are already struggling with falling ranks? You know, does the government think it's fair that we not exempt them?

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre was talking about seniors and Meals on Wheels. We talked about that when they first introduced the carbon tax, about exempting some of these folks, and we never got any response, other than no, from the government. Do you really think it's fair that we're penalizing all of these groups to cover your green slush fund?

Another thing that I heard with regard to Municipal Affairs was on the MSI funding, and I heard it on the radio. The Minister of Transportation was on the radio. He was talking about how they're going to tie a portion of the MSI funding to green energy projects, so basically you would possibly not get that funding. I'd like some clarity on that.

Mr. S. Anderson: It's facts and information.

Mr. Hanson: The Municipal Affairs minister is laughing about it, but I did hear it from the Transportation minister's mouth on 630 CHED, so I'd like some clarification on that. Is there something in the MSI funding model that is tying it to green energy projects? It would be interesting to know. I know that a lot of the municipalities in my area are interested to know that as well.

Again, really, I know that the government doesn't like talking about the carbon tax. They try to avoid it at every possibility, but those groups – and I know that the AAMD and C is going on this week. I would encourage the Municipal Affairs minister to stand up and listen to what these folks are saying about how the carbon tax is affecting everything that they do. You know, it's a tax on taxpayer dollars, which doesn't make any sense. It's like taking money out of their pockets, and they're very frustrated with it. They're trying their best to make ends meet in a tough situation. We talk about the situation in Alberta.

I do agree with the Member for Calgary-Elbow that we're talking about this bill because we didn't come back to the House soon enough and get the budget out in a timely fashion. We could be avoiding a lot of this discussion over that. I do look forward to budget estimates, though, and, you know, specifically picking apart some of these things. I hope that a lot of the questions are surrounding the carbon tax so that we can actually get some words in Hansard from the government when they're forced to answer our questions in estimates.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. S. Anderson: Just a clarification for the member; that's all. The MSI has zero to do with the carbon levy. I think what you might be referring to is the grant that I announced the other day to the AUMA, which is $54 million from the climate leadership plan for the Municipal Climate Change Action Centre, which goes to programs that support municipalities across the province with renewable energy, community generation, municipal fleet greening, and community infrastructure. I think that's what you were referring to, so that's what that was.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Hanson: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the clarification. I may have misheard, but I thought it was tied to MSI. I'd have to look back at the transcript from CHED and see if that is actually what he said.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Yeah, I would like to just take a few minutes and talk about the interim supply bill. You know, I guess I was looking at things like Children's Services. Of course, I know the people on the other side want to talk about how heartless we are over here and that we don't want to see money spent on things like Children's Services and everything, and nothing could be farther from the truth. But what I do want to point out is things like the carbon tax and its effect on nonprofits. There are lots of nonprofits doing very good work in their communities, and of course this carbon tax has added costs onto all of them.

Another thing I wanted to point out is that I had kind of an interesting conversation the other day with a young lady that worked with Big Brothers Big Sisters. Of course, in their fundraising and different things that they do, she sometimes works late evenings and different things like that. Of course, her preference would be to be able to take time off in lieu of the time she worked extra. But with the recent labour legislation, of course, that opportunity isn't there anymore. Now Big Brothers Big Sisters has to pay time and a half on her extra time. I think it's one of the things that we brought up at the time. We asked the government to consider this a little bit more as far as how the labour legislation affected people's rights to choose how they wanted to be paid. Of course, this is a first-hand situation where this labour legislation is costing a nonprofit organization money that neither of them would want. I mean, the employee didn't want it to happen, and neither did Big Brothers Big Sisters.

Now, when we look at the interim supply here, this is billions of dollars. I mean, I think that sometimes we sit in this Legislature and we look at billions of dollars and we think: ah, whatever. I mean, I think we get somewhat numb to these big figures. But I think that Albertans aren't quite that numb to these numbers. I think that when they see us spending billions of dollars and talking about, you know, a few hundred million here, a few hundred million there, whatever, I think they have a reason to be suspicious as far as why we're spending the money and where this money is going, because this is their money; it's not our money. It's their money, that we're entrusted to spend, and we have to spend that wisely. Of course, there are lots of good programs that the government spends money on, there's no doubt. But there are obviously places where things could be changed and, I think, money could be redirected to better places.

The Minister of Advanced Education was heckling about a few things to do with his ministry. You know, we look at the cost of the carbon tax on these universities and colleges and how that affects them, the freeze on tuition and everything. I think these organizations are having a tougher and tougher time all the time making ends meet and trying to figure out how to adjust their budgets for things like the carbon tax and other legislation that this government brings forward.

Now, because of this government and the massive amount of money that it's spending and the massive amount of debt that it's racking up and the interest costs and everything, I think that creates a lack of trust, that Albertans have, that their money is being spent properly. I think Albertans are smart enough to know that when you have, you know, such a large budget, there has to be room for some savings and there have to be things where money could be shifted from one thing. It's all about priorities and where the money should be spent. We know that families in Alberta are hurting. We know that small business is hurting. We know that a lot of these things that are taking place in this Legislature, the bills that are being passed here, the things that are being brought forward by this government, aren't making life better for Albertans. It's making it worse.

Now, we have problems here, of course, like that we've lost a lot of investment in Alberta. These investment dollars: it isn't like they just didn't get spent; they just got spent elsewhere. You know, when people have investment money, despite the nature of the term, they want a return on that money. It's an investment. They're not just coming to Alberta to give it away or taking it to Saskatchewan and giving it away. They're investing it, and they expect to have a return on that. Of course, if the return is greater somewhere else, then that's where that money is going to go. So we need to be conscious that money can be transported easily, that it can be moved to different jurisdictions very easily. That's why we have to be careful as we make decisions here in Alberta that we need to be competitive with the rest of the world.

Now, again I do want to say that there are some great things that the government does and that the government spends money on, but we just need to be a little more conscious, I think, of where this money is being spent and redirect it to the places where it's needed most. I just want to leave that, I guess, at this point and just remind everybody that, you know, again, these hundreds of millions of dollars that we look at in these budgets: it's not just money; it's Albertans' money, and we were elected to be responsible for it.

Thank you.

8:20

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, I will now call on the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance to close debate.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. Yes. After hearing numerous points of view with regard to interim supply, I do want to remind everyone – and I think it's been said several times – that the budget will be presented on Thursday of this week at about 3 p.m. I will have the opportunity then to make a budget speech, and then every member of the House will receive copies of the budget to pore through, and as they look at all of the important directions and numbers in the budget and the programs that are getting funded, they'll be able to better track the various issues that they have identified as concerns. Soon, in estimates, we will have the opportunity as ministers and members of this House to go through that budget in detail with respect to ministries. I look forward to that opportunity with respect to Treasury Board and Finance, and I know my other colleagues do the same.

Thank you very much for the opportunity, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Minister.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a second time]

Bill 4

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2018

The Acting Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you again, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 4, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2018.

The supplementary amounts provided in this bill reflect the fiscal picture outlined in the third-quarter fiscal update released on February 28. These amounts are necessary for the government to conduct business and fulfill its commitments for the current fiscal year. The additional amounts mainly relate to support for the municipal sustainability initiative, wildfire disaster recovery and emergency assistance, child intervention, child care subsidy and supports, persons with disabilities and assured income for the severely handicapped, employment and income support, the provincial share of the agricultural insurance premium and indemnities, compensation increases for Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the justices of the peace, and the Alberta production grants.

I respectfully urge my colleagues in this House to support this bill, and I thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for letting me address this supplementary supply bill here. The government, as we are well aware in this House, over the last three years has passed three budgets, all of them with deficits, significant deficits. Budgets that this government has passed have racked up an accumulated debt that is into the billions of dollars. This government is shortly, as the hon. Minister of Finance just finished saying, going to be passing a budget. It's going to be coming to us this Thursday.

Mr. Ceci: Not passing, introducing.

Mr. Smith: Introducing. Thank you.

While I am not necessarily a prophet, I do predict that there's going to be another deficit, to the tune of billions of dollars, in this coming budget. I believe that by the next general election, we could probably have somewhere around a $50 billion debt, that this province is going to have to address and deal with.

Madam Speaker, now we have the government coming to us with a supplementary supply request to cover additional costs, costs that are going to be added already to a deficit-driven, mismanaged budget. The government is asking Albertans to come to the table once again. As a member of the opposition we will not be supporting this government in the way that they spend the hard-earned tax dollars of everyday Albertans. It's hard to support a supplementary supply bill that asks for even more money, that will create even more debt, that will continue to spend our children's inheritance.

Madam Speaker, my decision is not built on any one program or set of asks in this supplementary supply bill. Rather, my concerns are for how this government has approached the entire economy, the spending of the government, and this supplementary supply ask. There are some requests in this supplementary bill that are reasonable and on an individual basis would have had my support, but when the supplementary bill is taken as a whole and when I consider its entirety, it will not have my support. When the government has so badly mismanaged the economy, when they've passed bill after bill and regulation after regulation that has negatively impacted the citizens of Alberta, I know that my constituents would not want to see me support an additional ask for money from this government.

It may have been different if the government had been willing to listen to the opposition and to the people in my constituency. If they had been willing to, for instance, admit their mistake and realize that the carbon tax had not purchased any social licence, was not going to have any real environmental effect, if they had been willing to listen and perhaps revisit the carbon tax, if they had been willing to more strongly support the Trans Mountain pipeline, if they had been willing to reduce taxes and the taxation burden on Albertans, or if they had been willing to bring back an Alberta advantage, then perhaps our economy could have sustained an additional ask for money. But this government hasn't listened to the people of this province, and I will have to vote against this supplementary supply bill.

Now, as the shadow minister for Education in the United Conservative Party I had the opportunity to make sure that the minister received questions with regard to Education and his asks on the supplementary supply bill. I believe that the answers to many of the questions that were asked of the minister about why he would need additional monies in this supplementary supply bill were insufficient for me to support his requests.

We asked why the minister would transfer $31.5 million from operational funding into capital investment. The minister responded that the $31.5 million would go to painting and new roofs and new furnaces, and I have no doubt that's exactly where that money would go to. But he did not answer why his budget was $31.5 million off. We see by the minister's own admission that the student population across Alberta is growing, yet we are taking $31.5 million out of operational. I guess this also begs the question: why was his budget so off on maintenance and renewal?

The government rates school conditions. I believe the Department of Infrastructure has an index that they use to ensure that the schools are appropriately maintained. Since the minister is asking for more money for maintenance and renewal, one of the questions we were wondering was: well, what does that say about the school evaluation index? The minister in his answer admitted that the Department of Infrastructure conducts evaluations and that local school boards do as well, and he pointed out in our questioning that school boards are adequately compensated in terms of infrastructure supply and maintenance. If they're adequately supplied with infrastructure and maintenance, then why is he coming back and asking for more money? So we still have no real explanation for why the minister needs to put an additional $31.5 million into infrastructure maintenance and renewal.

While the minister asks to transfer $31.5 million from budget line 2.3 to budget line 3.1, he also asks in supplementary supply that $4 million would be transferred back into line 2.3. So he's taking money out, and then he's transferring money back in. When asked why he would transfer money out only to put some of it back in, the minister referred to extraordinary circumstances. He did not bother to explain what those extraordinary circumstances were, so as taxpayers we're left wondering why he would do this, which once again provides very little clarity as to why this supplementary bill needs additional monies.

In the supplementary bill the minister decreased funding by $3 million from the Education transportation budget and another $1.7 million in funding for the small class size initiative. It left us wondering: how does reducing the transportation budget by $3 million while at the same time burdening school boards with a carbon tax benefit education? It just doesn't seem to make sense. Taking out $3 million from the Education transportation budget with no clear plan as to how you're actually going to address the shortfalls in transportation that the schools boards are facing is not, I would argue, going to improve education.

Taking $1.7 million out of funding for the small class size initiative without a clear plan for actually addressing the Auditor General's concerns regarding the use of that small class size initiative and the fact that we have never met our targets: how is that going to improve education? The minister even admitted in this House that he was not sure why he was reducing small class size funding by $1.7 million and that he would have to get back to the Legislature about that.

In conclusion, it is for these reasons that I will not be supporting the supplementary supply bill. The budgetary decisions of this government over the past three years have placed the Alberta economy in danger. This supplementary supply bill does not move us off the path of continuing debt and deficit. The opposition did not receive convincing answers to our questions as to why the government needed the monies outlined in this supplementary supply bill, Madam Speaker, so this MLA will not be voting in support of this supplementary supply bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to get up here and speak to this bill. You know, we often hear a lot about opposition saying that – we've heard it before – they don't want to vote in support of this. They don't feel that there are enough details in it, keeping in mind, of course, that this is just purely to provide the government with two months of spending until we are able to pass the budget, where we will be able to thoroughly expand and thoroughly explore all the various spending levels in this particular budget.

I want to comment. The opposition often says, you know, that they want us to spend 20 per cent less. I think back to just this weekend when I visited Alberta Health Services, actually. I went and saw some doctors and OTs there in regard to my grandfather. Those hard-working individuals who work to help Albertans when they are in need of medical assistance, whatever that could be, those doctors and nurses and OTs and the various other specialists work very hard in order to make those hospitals as inviting as possible. I saw them putting up the display of the Easter Bunny. Where I was in particular there were children coming there to visit some of their grandparents. Some of those grandparents, being near the end of their lives, perhaps aren't doing too well.

I think of if we were to do 20 per cent less in those hospitals. Would that mean that there's going to be no free time for, you know, the nurses or the doctors or the OTs to take a spare second to liven up the hospital a little bit for those that need to be there, that there would be no Easter Bunny during Easter? I don't know. But I think it's important that we think about what those sorts of cuts would mean, what those cuts would mean to teachers, what those cuts would mean to policing in this province, which seems to be a bit of the topic du jour.

You know, often I hear noise from the back about the carbon levy. I remember that when we first brought that out, my grandmother did ask me about that. My grandmother and my grandfather live in a 1961 house with a 1961 furnace with 1961 windows and with 1961 insulation. It's probably nearing one of the worst-case possible scenarios when it comes to energy efficiency. Plus they also have three deep-freezers. My grandparents are from the Depression, and they enjoy not wasting any food.

So my grandparents asked me about the carbon levy. Of course, they remember that we promised to address climate change as part of our platform, which we did. We went out, had a group of experts come back to us with what the best recommendation was on how to address climate change. Everyone agreed that the carbon levy economy-wide was the best way to do that, but of course we did provide rebates to individuals such as my grandparents who might be adversely affected.

Now, of course, my grandparents have many opportunities to take advantage of programs for more efficient furnaces and windows and light bulbs and such, to take advantage of, you know, the carbon levy and the rebates that it provides. I thought I would calculate it out. I asked my grandma: what was your biggest hydro bill in the last two years? Then I took that bill, and I extrapolated it for 12 months.

After the carbon rebate, assuming that they used the most amount of gas and electricity they'd ever used in a two-year period in that one month and having expanded it out for the whole year, do you know how much extra they would have paid, assuming they used that much power for the whole year? Of course, as we know, thankfully, here in Alberta winter does not last all year, although it sometimes feels like it does. It would have cost them somewhere in the neighbourhood of about $150, which works out to a little bit more than 10 bucks a month, again assuming that winter lasted all year, which of course it doesn't. You know, my grandparents' response to that was: that's pretty much the price of a teen burger combo now at A&W, and we're not too concerned about it.

I think of the good work that we do here, you know. I think of my colleagues in the front bench, think of the hon. Minister of Community and Social Services, who's doing great work in regard to helping those on AISH and persons with disabilities.

I think of our hon. Minister of Status of Women, who's doing great work to encourage more women to run for office through the Ask Her campaign. Maybe it's just bias because I'm in politics, but I always like to see more people from more backgrounds involved in politics.

Of course, we have our Minister of Seniors and Housing, who's been doing great work in my riding, in particular. The riding of Calgary-Currie has a lot of government-subsidized seniors' homes and low-income housing that are definitely in need of some repair, and our minister has been stepping up to that. Passing interim supply helps that good work to continue.

Of course, our Minister of Advanced Education has frozen tuition fees, something that is – I surround Mount Royal University on two sides. Many of those students are constituents of mine, in my riding, as are many of the faculty and staff there, who appreciate a lot of the good work that our minister is doing.

Of course, we have our Minister of Transportation, who has repeatedly said in this House that the ring road in Calgary will get built and it will get built on time. Again, considering that that road goes around the riding of Calgary-Currie, that is going to be a key infrastructure project to help the constituents of Calgary-Currie and the citizens of Calgary get around. Same goes with our transit projects, the green line and other transit projects right across this province.

Of course, we have our Minister of Energy, who has gone out and proven that we can produce renewable energy in this province at a price that is cheaper than anyone else has seen in Canada, and we have made the commitment to make sure that our indigenous friends are a part of that.

When I go to the doors in Calgary-Currie, there are always two issues that come up. One is the $25-a-day child care. I'm so proud of our Minister of Children's Services in getting that done. You wouldn't believe how many people ask me about that and how important it is to them that we are moving forward with that project. I am looking forward to having the first one of those open up in my riding.

The other thing they ask about, which is probably most relevant to today's conversation, is that somebody always asks me a question about the economy and the budget and how we are on the way back to balance. So for the hon. Minister of Finance: we have a plan to get back to balance by '23-24, and I'm so looking forward, when our next budget comes up, to being able to see that plan. because I know we have been taking concrete steps to reduce costs but at the same time spend money in the services that matter most to Albertans and to help the constituents and citizens of Alberta through this downturn.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to the supplementary supply bill this evening. You know, I believe that other members of the loyal opposition have stated that supplementary supply bills can really be considered as overspending bills or lack-of-planning bills, which is really of no surprise to those of us on this side of the House. All of the funding in this bill is required because the government didn't commit enough funding at budget time last year. Let's hope that they can get it right this year although many of us are worried about what that's going to look like. These are among the reasons that I won't be supporting this bill as we move forward.

I understand that things come up during the year sometimes because of natural disasters or other acts beyond our control, but these things are under our control, the spending and supplementary budgets that we're being asked for now. So, yes, I understand there's the odd time that this makes sense and is justifiable, not just bad planning and potentially mismanagement. I would suggest that the lack of management skills is coming to roost with us here.

However, looking through the document, I can't help but think that the government could have done a better job at this time last year in committing the funding where it was needed even if that spending appeared to be fiscally irresponsible. I know that this is basically a series of four-letter words on the government side, but someone, anyone in the government could have made a tough decision and said: "You know what? We signed off on this budget. We told Albertans that we would spend X number of dollars. We made that commitment to the people. Therefore, we'll not spend more than that during the current fiscal year. We will not layer more debt on the shoulders of hard-working Albertans."

But, Madam Speaker, that's not what we're here to discuss; we're here to discuss this bill, supplementary supply. We could have heard: we are going to make a few tough decisions and stay within our allocated budget. You know why? Because the average person on the street understands what it means to have only a certain amount of money to work with in their daily, weekly, monthly, and yearly budgets. Every operating business that I talk to knows what it means to stay within their budget. Otherwise, they're not in business anymore.

Mr. S. Anderson: Do they have to deal with disasters?

Mr. Gotfried: Yeah. Businesses have to deal with disasters, too.

You might want to go on vacation this year as an individual or as a family, but if you don't budget properly, if you don't spend your money responsibly and demonstrate some restraint in other areas, it's just not going to happen. You have to make those decisions. You have to make tough decisions as an individual, as a family, as a business. That's what Albertans are being forced to do in this tough economy, where one member of the household is unemployed or underemployed or their wages have been cut or their salaries have been cut or their opportunity to make money has been cut because of their business struggling. They understand what it means to tighten their belt and to ensure that they live within their budget. If this government were in that situation, they'd book the trip anyways, stay at an all-inclusive, and party like it's 1999 because, hey, someone else, in fact someone else's kids, will just pay for it later. Maybe another government that understands how unsustainable such behaviour is might actually be on the horizon.

This government has had not just one but three budgets to demonstrate a commitment to restraint in spending, and have we seen it? No, we have not seen it. We have not seen it. We've seen mounting deficits and mounting debt. Three times this government has failed not only our current population, but they've put in jeopardy future Albertans as well. Unborn Albertans will bear the burden of the debt that they're generating on the shoulders of unborn Albertans. How responsible is that?

The level of spending, as demonstrated by the supplementary supply bill, is just completely unsustainable in most Albertans' real world. Austerity, strangely, has gone from being not a nine-letter word but a four-letter word. It seems like government is going out of its way to rise to the challenge of how much money they can spend in any given year and then pile it on the next year and pile it on the next year and pile it on the next year until we end up with $71 billion in debt.

Yet even with all that money ostensibly stimulating the economy, real Albertans continue to struggle. For example, there are 26,000 more unemployed Albertans than there were when this government took office. In February alone the province lost 10,500 full-time jobs. Calgary's unemployment is the second highest in the country among major cities, and Edmonton is tied for third. The CEO of the Edmonton chamber says that difficult times are not behind us and that things on the ground are still struggling as much as ever. Yet we hear other stories from that side of the House. Every time we come into this place and ask the government, "Why? Why are you spending so much money? How can you not find any efficiencies?" we're not asking for front-line cuts. We've never asked for that. Everybody always says: 20 per cent front-line cuts. No. We are asking for efficiencies, Madam Speaker. We hear: why do you continuously need supplementary . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, can I just interject? Sorry. My apologies.

Just a reminder to all of the members in the House that we're in second reading; we're not in Committee of the Whole. If you could please keep the tone down – the walking around, the turning around of the chairs, all of that – and listen to the speaker, I'd appreciate it.

Thank you.

Please continue.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Albertans expect a reasonable level of responsibility and accountability when it comes to government spending and government debt, the spending of their hard-earned tax dollars, while the government continues to choose not to listen to the overwhelming majority of Albertans when they say that they're getting it wrong on the economy, when they say that they're getting it wrong on debt and borrowing. I know that the people of Calgary-Fish Creek, whom I represent, the overwhelming majority of them, want me to come to this Chamber and advocate on their behalf because they understand the long-term ramifications of irresponsible, out-of-control spending. That's what we're facing here from this government.

They understand that by the end of the NDP's term we will be spending billions of dollars a year on interest alone, bigger than most of the budgets. That's $385 per month for a family of four for them to pay that back, and that's for 25 years. That's 300 payments of $385 a year to pay back what this government is putting them in debt for. Every time the government doesn't follow their own budget and they come back to this Assembly to add to that pile of debt, there are consequences for Albertans. The government would have us believe that there are no consequences, that they have no other choice, that the money never stops, that more and more debt is okay, and that you can just create a new tax or reach deeper into the pockets of hard-working Albertans to pay for whatever spendthrift idea crosses your mind. Wrong, Madam Speaker.

Well, unfortunately for them and for all Albertans who will now have to pay for this ever-mounting pile of debt, there are consequences. Government does not operate in a vacuum. Government debt is taxpayers' debt. The financial decisions made by the government through the Minister of Finance have real-world consequences which will be borne out for a generation, perhaps longer, perhaps two generations, for us to pay that back. The consequences aren't felt today when you keep pushing the inevitable down the road, but how long can you continue to write cheques, Minister, in bold red ink without having to at least think of the long-term and potentially financially catastrophic consequences? It's unfortunate that this NDP government is choosing not to acknowledge those consequences, the consequences that will be borne, again, by future generations of Albertans. Is this robbing from Peter to pay Peter, or is this robbing from Peter's unborn grandson to pay Peter? Patently irresponsible, Madam Speaker.

Of course, the government members will go to their usual talking points about whatever spending restraint is brought up. I'm sure there are a number that members are scrawling down now so that they can pop up and tell the opposition how we don't support this and we don't support that, how we don't support the carbon tax, which is true, or that we must not like health care and we must not like education. Well, we do, and we like it to be sustainable, and we like the spending to be done in a way which is efficient and that we can get to the front lines. That's what we believe in, Madam Speaker. To support them, I would say that, you know, I will support the supplementary supply for the government when you go through every dollar of every line item in the budget and say, "Yes, that was the most efficient way to spend the money to improve the lives of Albertans," when anyone in the government can sit down and say that hard-earned taxpayer dollars are not being wasted, that there is no redundant bureaucracy, no doubling up of efforts, no inefficiencies and no waste, and that we have true accountability to the people of Alberta.

Madam Speaker, I hate to tell you this, but that just isn't the case today. It's clear that the only way that Alberta's finances will move back towards balance is with a change where austerity is not a four-letter word; it's a nine-letter word. We would spend more money efficiently, effectively, and with accountability to everyday Albertans, yes, those Albertans, the ones who lack job security because of poor economic fundamentals, investment-repelling policies, overtaxation, and the burden of overreaching regulations. Oh, and did I mention the carbon tax? It's been mentioned a few times. That is on the backs of Albertans, hard-working Albertans.

Spending is spiralling out of control. We need a change in the way we do things while still delivering a high and perhaps higher level of service. Government resources are not infinite. No. No matter how hard this government tries to make it seem like they are, we must pay for that. We must pay for what we consume. We must develop sustainability and public finance over the long term but not so long that we punt the debt ball down the field for future generations, Minister. Everyday Albertans are struggling no matter how many strained smiles the Finance minister puts on during his media forays, which I'm sure we'll see later this week. We need to focus on those people, their children, their grandchildren, why we are here and whom we must face with confidence that we have done the best that we can do each and every day. We need to create a fiscally responsible situation today and tomorrow for our province that does not sacrifice the future in order to pay for reckless decisions and out-of-control spending.

Supplementary supply is another perfect example of this government's inability to make any sort of spending decision that doesn't involve writing a cheque, as I said earlier, all written with bright red ink. Or maybe that's changed to orange ink. But you get the picture. [interjection] It's kind of like red, isn't it?

For the past three years we've seen an enormous deficit, unrestrained spending, and mounting debt, only to come back in March to watch the government vote themselves even more money for that same fiscal year. The people that I represent can't do that in their homes, Minister. Madam Speaker, the businesses that I represent can't do that in their businesses, or they would quickly be out of business, and we'd have more bankruptcies in this province. So why does this government think it's okay? That is a question for all Albertans to ask, but today I will be voting against second reading.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just want to take a couple of minutes. I have some things that I don't think I've heard yet tonight. I, too, will be voting against the supplementary supply bill. Fifty-six billion dollars this year and no plan to pay it back. No plan to pay back the 9 and a half billion, 10 billion dollars that we're putting on our kids' credit card just to cover our operating expenses. Again, I've said it before. I can't imagine. When we've seen this government raise personal taxes, corporate taxes, and then actual total revenues fall by 15 or 20 per cent, their plan is not working. A plan without a plan to pay back the operating portion is a huge disaster for credit ratings and for our kids and grandkids.

Madam Speaker, it applies to our capital borrowing as well. You know, the debate in this House used to be, through some of the Klein years and the '90s, when infrastructure money was paid for on an annual basis, and into the 2000s: do we borrow for capital? Well, my goodness, we have a plan now that doesn't even plan on paying back the capital debt that is borrowed, never mind – never mind – the operating debt.

I look at where we may be a year down the road. When I was talking to some financial experts about a week ago and said that my fear was that by the time we consider this minister's borrowing for operating, borrowing for capital, funded and unfunded pension liabilities, we could be $85 billion in the hole just a year from now, the experts told me that I might be below by $20 billion. When we think of the state of our economy, when we look at the layers and layers of burden that this government has added, when we look at the private investment they've driven away, it's going to be a tough job for our good job providers and our commodity producers. It's going to be a tough job to dig out of this hole. So, as my hon. colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek just said, for us to stand up here and give the hon. Minister of Finance a blank cheque is ludicrous.

I sometimes get frustrated when the government crows a bit about saving here and there. I want to talk about two clear instances where the savings weren't there. I think of when the government decided that public ownership was where it was at for laundry in the capital region. Our estimates, Madam Speaker, were that that cost the taxpayer $200 million. This side of the House believes totally in emergency response, money for fire-related costs, funding for sexual assault victims' services, money for additional police. When we see our government make a decision that appears to be based on ideology, not what is best value for hard-earned tax dollars, it's forcing a wealth creator to work harder, to give up more of their freedom of choice, or maybe, as the chairman of EnCana just did on the weekend, decide to leave our jurisdiction.

I think of one a little bit more local. The Medicine Hat diagnostic lab was the most efficient laboratory, I believe, in all of Alberta: a wonderful owner, wonderful employees, wonderful service, second-floor premises. You could have run in and out of there in five minutes. Madam Speaker, the importance of that is that it freed up our time to do our lives, our work, our time with our family, those kinds of things. This NDP government announced about a year and a half, two years ago that they were moving it to the mall area, the high-rent area, completely renovating a new place, and, of course, changing the employee structures from non-union to union. Here we are later, where I have no idea how much the costs have increased, but it's got to be 5 or so million dollars a year. When I talk to the people of Medicine Hat and Cypress-Medicine Hat and they tell me that what used to take five or six minutes to get a procedure done now takes 35 or 40 minutes in spite of good front-line workers, it's a lose-lose.

Madam Speaker, what I guess hurts me the most, deep down, is that when this was first announced, even though, just looking at it from the outside, it was clear that it was going to be a move to a much, much higher cost structure, I did everything I could to bite my tongue, and I just asked for the business plan. I said: "Okay. Prove to me, Alberta Health Services, that this is the right move." It took a year to get the business plan. Parts of the business plan were only two months old, meaning that this decision was another decision on ideology, not with respect for the taxpayer.

Madam Speaker, we take these dollars, these hard-earned tax dollars, that add up. You know, they don't add up to more dollars. What they add up to is more policemen, more funding for sexual assault victims, more funding for our families and communities. That's exactly what they add up to, and it's a shame that this government hasn't paid attention to it.

In the quarter 3 update last week was the $771 million that this Finance minister, this government had taken to pay the first part of the Balancing Pool and the power purchase agreements. My goodness, $771 million divided by – I don't know; what does a policeman make? – $100,000, $120,000 a year: how much of that money could have gone to help communities? How much of that could have gone to sexual assault victims' services?

Madam Speaker, we're not going to stand up here and give this hon. Finance minister a blank cheque to put our kids and grandkids a hundred billion in debt, to only look for efficiencies when it might suit them politically, and to continue to kill jobs and investment in Alberta.

Madam Speaker, before I sit down, I'd like to encourage the hon. minister and the government to have a little more transparency when they put these numbers out. Again, I think back to the Q3 update, to the $500 million that they had, a nominal reserve, I think it was, in case oil prices fell, and that he needed to transfer what we have left of savings to cover his high spending. When the government didn't do that, it got played as if it was a saving, an efficiency. No, it wasn't. It was just not the use of a nominal account.

Madam Speaker, it's time that we call a spade a spade. Let's say what the true direction of Albertans' money is and where it's going. That comes to nominal accounts. It comes to when we're going to pay our operating spending back. I hope that in the next year we see something from this government that legitimately comes up with a plan to start paying back the 5 and a half billion dollars plus of capital borrowing, yes, last year and the billions and billions of dollars of capital borrowing that this government has put on our economy's back.

Madam Speaker, in closing, you know, I can't accept that in three years this government needs to come back to us and ask for another I think it was a billion and a half dollars in supplement. My goodness, what's that? About 3 per cent, I guess, of our savings. A billion and a half dollars: what could we do with that? What could we do with that money if we'd left it with our hard workers, with Albertan families and communities? What could they do to create jobs and grow their opportunities and choices?

Madam Speaker, I'm pleased to say that I will be voting against this government's request to put us deeper in debt. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, I will now call on the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance to close debate.

Mr. Ceci: Well, seeing that we have had a robust debate on this portion of tonight's work, Madam Speaker, the supplementary supply, of course, provides us – and when I say "us," I mean all of government and the services that government delivers notionally in Agriculture and Forestry, Children's Services, et cetera, et cetera. It provides that support so that that can continue.

At Q3 I stood up and talked about a number of these things, and I also talked about the reduction in the deficit this year of $1.4 billion, Madam Speaker. That is excellent work by those same departments that require some additional funding to get the job done. For instance – and I know that the Minister of Community and Social Services has talked about this – those monies are to ensure that the statutory services that are in law for Albertans, namely in income supports and in other programs, are provided. To not provide that level of support for people would have been, frankly, wrong because they're a statutory service. Albertans should not be feeling like they shouldn't come forward and request the support of their government when they need it.

When I was a social worker many years ago, Madam Speaker, I can remember talking to many people who said, "You know, I need support, but I'm embarrassed to go and ask the government for it." I said: "You know, you have paid taxes. You have helped build this province. This is statutory, and it is your right to go forward and request the support and to expect the support." The Minister of Community and Social Services fulfilled that obligation that he has to Albertans with this additional supplementary supply, and that goes down the line in terms of other kinds of expenditures that are here.

As somebody on this side said, I'm very honoured to continue to stand up and represent the views of this government with regard to finance matters and government supports and government services because those are in the interests of Albertans. Those have the backs of Albertans. Those supports are what Albertans have elected us to continue to do, and we'll continue doing that now and in the future, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Minister.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. At this time, given the wonderful progress that we've made this evening, I'd like to move that we adjourn until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 9:11 p.m.]

Bill 1

Energy Diversification Act

[Adjourned debate March 15: Mr. Mason]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise in the House this morning to add my own comments to the debate on Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act. My colleagues from Calgary-Klein and Edmonton-Manning have outlined good reasons for supporting this legislation: adding ethane to a second round of the petrochemical diversification program and supporting partial bitumen upgrading. As they have both pointed out, Bill 1 has three components that act on the recommendations of the Energy Diversification Advisory Committee. I would like to speak to that third component.

The third area for energy diversification under Bill 1 has a long name, petrochemical feedstock infrastructure, so I'll break it down. The petrochemical industry relies on natural gas liquids. These liquids are mostly ethane and propane. They are called feedstocks because they're the building blocks for other products, products that make our modern life possible. From plastic in kids' toys to fabrics, from antifreeze and fertilizers to cellphone cases. That's the petrochemical feedstock part.

The infrastructure part is how feedstocks are collected. Mostly that's through straddle plants or reprocessing facilities on major natural gas pipelines. Straddle plants extract certain natural gas liquids, including ethane, from the transmission pipelines, and then they ship them to other processing or manufacturing plants. Bigger supplies of natural gas liquids are essential for industry to build and operate world-class petrochemical processing facilities right here in Alberta.

Bill 1 provides the authority to create a petrochemical feedstock infrastructure program to encourage construction of new extraction facilities that will provide new supplies of feedstocks for a growing petrochemical sector in Alberta. The program will provide incentives to attract investments into needed infrastructure such as fuel extraction, straddle plant construction, and fractionation or separation plants.

You see, Madam Speaker, a lot of ethane in our natural gas pipelines is not being recovered, and it needs to be recovered to add new world-scale manufacturing plants here in Alberta, to debottleneck the system, and to avoid sending all that ethane down the pipeline for others to recover and process and extract value from. The new program under Bill 1 will help companies to build new ethane recovery infrastructure and grow Alberta's ethane processing industry. Bill 1 authorizes grants and loan guarantees up to $500 million to help make this happen, and it also authorizes the Ministry of Energy, subject to the approval of cabinet, to direct the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission to use its financial tools to implement the program. That's a lot of support for a good purpose.

All of this dovetails very nicely with adding ethane to the petrochemical diversification program. My colleague from Calgary-Klein explained how Bill 1 expands that program to attract more petrochemical processing to Alberta. Building the infrastructure that recovers the feedstocks to be processed will be a major factor in building those petrochemical processing facilities. Long-time, stable, and competitive feedstock security is a major concern when industry is thinking about investing in petrochemical processing. Bill 1 is truly a strategic step to realize a more diverse energy industry.

Like my colleague from Edmonton-Manning, I also bring to this debate a personal understanding of the benefits of more feedstock infrastructure. I grew up mostly on a farm near Plamondon, Alberta, not too many years ago, and one of the individuals that I looked up to when I was growing up was my uncle Romeo. Now, my uncle Romeo was the oldest son of my grandparents. He had seven children, all born on the farm. He'd made a promise to his father that he would stay and work on the farm until their youngest child went to university, and he kept that promise. When he was about 32 years old, the youngest child of my grandparents started at the U of A. So he packed up his family, and he moved to Edmonton, and he became a worker for Celanese Canada.

Now, Celanese Canada was a huge petrochemical and chemical and fibre plant that was just on the other side of the river. It's out of Clareview. It actually was set up to take advantage of Alberta's feedstock. Ethane was one of the main components that they worked with. This provided stable, high-quality employment for him, that, you know, he was able to raise a family on.

When I graduated from high school in the late '80s, it was during the bottom of that bust. I mean, those were the bad years, you know, the last couple years of the Getty government and then the austerity under Klein. In the oil patch there was no work to be found. There was, really, almost no work to be found anywhere. The only decent opportunity I was able to find, because my uncle was working at Celanese, was to be able to get on there. That's actually how I got through school myself, working as a summer student for Celanese Canada, making cellulose acetate, which is, you know, a derivative from natural gas feedstock.

What's so important about that and why I relate that story is because this kind of explains why these types of projects are so important. When oil prices and natural gas prices are down, that's when petrochemical and chemical processing tends to be up. By investing in natural gas feedstock infrastructure, what we're doing is providing a supply for a robust Alberta petrochemical industry that can help ensure that, you know, when the next bust happens – it's always cyclical – we have some countercyclical elements of our economy to be able to keep those well-paying jobs, raise families, and go to school.

I think that this type of project is critical. It's in fact one of the main reasons that I put my name in as a candidate in 2015, my great frustration that the previous government had left us in a situation where we could go bust the way that we did. I mean, this is also something that I think has a lot of resonance in the communities that I represent. Of course, I represent a big chunk of the Industrial Heartland, and they're very strong proponents of this type of infrastructure, for obvious reasons, and so are the communities that surround the Industrial Heartland.

You know, the previous administration didn't do everything wrong. I mean, one of the far-sighted projects that they brought forward was the North West partnership. That's really kept a lot of people employed that otherwise would not find work.

Of course, we have other great news coming out of there because of our own government initiatives. That's the Inter Pipeline, which is going ahead, and then we've got Pembina, that looks like it's going ahead. Then, you know, with any luck, there'll be a lot more projects going ahead there, too. This is also, of course, a critical part of the puzzle and something that's very welcome.

What does it mean? It means jobs that often do more than grow a community. They're jobs that can help a community survive by keeping the next generation closer to home, attracting new workers and their families, providing much-needed jobs to indigenous workers from nearby First Nations or Métis settlements. You know, for me and for many Albertans the best benefits will be local and personal. It means, you know, that my family members and my friends and the people that I care about will find decent employment.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I'm proud to stand in support of Bill 1. I'm excited by the vision of a growing petrochemical processing industry fuelled by a strong feedstock supply. I'm even more excited by the benefits to communities and families at the local level. I believe that when they consider the benefits to Albertans and to the communities they represent, my colleagues will share in my excitement. It's what Albertans want.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), questions or comments?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Good morning. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act, an act to diversify energy in Alberta. It's interesting that we're here today proposing all sorts of various goodies here in Alberta to offer to various corporations in Alberta in an effort to diversify our economy. The irony, that we are here handing out goodies to incentivize companies to invest here, is spectacular. There's an argument to be made, a very strong argument, that many Albertans share, that the reason why we're trying to incentivize to bring investment back to Alberta is because the NDP government has scared it away in the first place.

The economic damage caused by this NDP government is so significant that we find ourselves in a situation where we need to beg people to come back and invest here, but we can't do that without stability, Madam Speaker. We can't do that, and we've seen that very clearly with this pipeline struggle. Industry has recognized in many cases that this isn't a stable place to invest their money. You could listen to any investor, and they will tell you that they are pulling out of oil in Alberta. Why? Because it's not stable. It will not offer proper return on investment.

We find ourselves here, this government, trying to throw whatever they can in an effort to bring some jobs back to Alberta. I hope it works. I really do. My heart is quite saddened, listening to my constituents in Airdrie talk about job losses, now into two, three years of job loss. Madam Speaker, they can't find a replacement. They can't access the programs that this government says are there to upgrade their skills or change markets or, you know, that type of thing. It's simply not there.

I think there are a lot of things in Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act, that are interesting, Madam Speaker. There are some good things. You know, there's use of a mix of incentives to encourage the petrochemical industry to establish new long-term facilities and to grow in Alberta. Well, while I recognize that this is good, I still point out that we shouldn't have to be in this situation in the first place. There are challenges in this bill that need to be further investigated and expert witnesses brought in. I would certainly like to hear from this government's Energy Diversification Advisory Committee, that has reported back to the government that this is necessary. I would be curious to know . . . [interjection] Sorry. It's my floor right now, Minister. Thank you.

Madam Speaker, while I continue with my time on this floor, talking about the damaging policies that this NDP government has put forward to scare investment away, now we are here with Bill 1, an act to diversify in an effort to try and bring them back. I hope it works. I really do.

I have some concerns about loan guarantees, some concerns about equity investment and grants. I have some concerns that these projects will even get shovels in the ground, Madam Speaker. We've seen that with the pipeline. We don't have shovels in the ground. Why? This government has done a very good job of scaring them away, actively supporting protestors against this pipeline in various parts of this province.

So we find ourselves with Bill 1, an act to diversify our energy industry, because investment has been scared away in many other areas by many members of this government, and right from the top, Madam Speaker. Investment is not stable in Alberta because of the NDP government. I can assure you that members of the Official Opposition will help aid this province during the reign of this government in doing what we can to help Albertans, to get them back to work so that they can take care of their families, so that they can buy groceries.

You know, it's sad they're going to pay more for these groceries thanks to the carbon tax in this province, Madam Speaker. I mean, any companies that they're going to attract here through this Energy Diversification Act are also certainly going to be paying the carbon tax, and that would need to be addressed. That will be a factor as to whether or not the money that the government will give them is enough in the first place to actually make money in this province. They're not coming here for government handouts that are not stable and not proper in the first place. But there's a case to be made that this bill should certainly be referred to a committee for further study.

With that, I would like to move an amendment. [interjection] Madam Speaker, I've been informed that it just became spring.

Would you like me to wait?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes.

This will be known as referral amendment 1.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker, I will read it into the record. I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 1, Energy Diversification Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 1, Energy Diversification Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

Madam Speaker, this should be a very simple amendment for the government to vote for because just yesterday – I've been informed 17 hours ago – this government moved two amendments, on a motion and a private member's bill, to refer to committee. It was very important that there was further study done. And, I must say, a very simple motion they had to refer to a standing committee. The irony in this is just absolutely fantastic. The government takes issue with very, very tiny, little, simple motions. I get that it's hard and very difficult. I get that. Albertans understand that it's hard for this government to do the right thing, too. However, work needs to get done. It needs to be proper and it needs to be right and there needs to be an opportunity for members of this Assembly, all members of this Assembly, to hear from expert witnesses, hear testimony, to hear from the NDP government's Energy Diversification Advisory Committee on the creation of this.

Surely, Madam Speaker, after the speeches that the government members made yesterday over the importance of referring to committee and proper consultation and all the things that they find very difficult, they would the very next day have no problem supporting the opposition's amendment to refer to committee so that things get done properly. I do this out of concern for the government because they have a history of not consulting with Albertans and moving ahead with very risky ideological policies that put Albertans at risk, and I know the government does not want to put Albertans at risk. I really don't believe that they do. So I think that there would be no issue with members of this Assembly supporting an amendment to refer to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship. There should be no problem with ensuring that Albertans are being put first in the legislation of the government.

I'm concerned with Bill 1 in its effort to be a Band-Aid solution to the very real problems in this province. We know that for the past several years this NDP government has done almost everything possible to drive investment away. I don't know if Bill 1 is enough to get anything back, but I could be wrong. I could be very wrong. This is the kind of work that can be done in a committee, in an all-member committee, where we can all hear. I bet you, Madam Speaker, that most of the government members, the backbench, has not even heard from this government's Energy Diversification Advisory Committee or any other stakeholders that would be impacted by this legislation. Or perhaps, maybe, some of their friends are already lined up at the trough, and they'll be benefiting from this. [interjections] But I could be wrong. I could be very, very wrong. It sounds like industry has lined up here. [interjections]

I think if the government and the ministers who are speaking right now over me would like to put their money where their mouth is, they would prove it in committee. Perhaps if they would have moved the motion yesterday to study more than one thing in committee, we'd be really efficient in getting this thing done. But this government isn't interested in what Albertans have to say, Madam Speaker. This government isn't interested in respecting the constituents in opposition members' ridings. This government has a hard time with consulting Albertans and doing the right thing.

Madam Speaker, myself and my colleagues will always stand up for Albertans. We will always fight so that they are heard, that their voices are brought forward, and that this government listens. The members of the Official Opposition in the United Conservative Party have Albertans' backs. They know it, and they will put their money where their mouth is in 2019 at the polls, where it matters and when it matters, and this party and its members will take Alberta back. We will give it back to the people of Alberta. It will be prosperous. Families will be healthy. Families will be happy. Families will be working. There will be no carbon tax. Life will be more affordable, and life will be less hard because we've ousted this NDP government.

With that, I urge all members of this Assembly to vote for this referral amendment, do the right thing, bring the voices of Albertans forward. Let's debate this and hear expert testimony in committee.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

An Hon. Member: We're not speaking to the amendment?

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a) first.

No questions or comments?

Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?
Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Yeah. Thank you, Madam Speaker. That was interesting.

Okay. About this amendment, I mean, really I think that the Member for Airdrie made it clear that this isn't actually a serious amendment, the referral amendment. It's actually just sort of a petulant display of tit-for-tat on the fact that we referred one of their motions to committee. I think the member has an issue understanding the fact that this bill is actually round 2 of the petrochemical diversification program. Round 1 was extremely successful – extremely successful – and we want to continue on that success. We want to enhance that success.

The assertion that nobody has spoken to experts or the diversification committee is false. Actually, after the throne speech I spoke with the diversification committee, and what they said to me was: make sure that when you're talking about this bill, you add the fact that it was us along with industry that came up with everything in this bill, together. So it wasn't just the government putting this together or the committee at all.

If you don't want to believe the merits of this bill and why we should be moving forward, how about we listen to some of the industry experts? I was actually at the press conference at which these people spoke, and I'll give you a couple of quotes here, Madam Speaker.

Bob Masterson, CEO, Chemistry Industry Association of Canada, says:

This is an incredibly courageous move on the part of the Alberta government. We believe that governments at all levels in Canada need to work with industry to compete for new chemistry sector investments. To do nothing means that some other jurisdiction will use our energy resources as feedstock to create value. Taking a balanced approach to share risk and secure new investments here in Alberta will create wealth and opportunity for Albertans. It's the right thing to do.

I think we're on the right side, Madam Speaker.

David Chappell, senior vice-president of Inter Pipeline, said:

We are pleased that another round of this program has been announced because the incentives it provides, combined with abundant low-cost feedstock, place Alberta among the top locations to construct world-scale petrochemical facilities. Investments like Inter Pipeline's Heartland Petrochemical Complex will support strong communities and Albertans for many years to come.

Finally, Rod Frank, the mayor of Strathcona county, said:

We applaud the government for its decision to support more value-added processing. We know this will help drive major firms toward investing in our region, bringing new opportunities and benefits to the people of Strathcona County and communities around the Industrial Heartland.

Madam Speaker, I just want to say that I'm going to take the advice of these experts and the advice of the diversification committee. This government and this side of the House is not going to delay moving this forward, delay more investment in Alberta, by referring this to committee. It just doesn't make any sense. Let's read the bill, let's understand how successful the first round of this has been, and let's move this forward.

With that said, I will not be supporting this referral amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)? The Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. That was interesting. It's interesting that this government is touting, bragging about their big corporate friends and the money that they are giving to them. You know what? That's the difference between this NDP government and the United Conservative Party: myself and my colleagues have the backs of Albertans. We care about the people, not the big money and the corporations. This government loves to parade around with their big corporations, not the people.

Where were the people? Where was one quote from a regular, average, everyday Albertan? Where was one quote from an unemployed – and there are many of them – average, everyday Albertan? I heard crickets from this government when it comes to talking about actual everyday Albertans, Madam Speaker, but when it comes to big corporations, these guys are hand in hand on stage, taking pictures every chance they get.

I don't know about you, Madam Speaker, but I know that Albertans are interested in what's going to support their families, what's going to allow them to buy their overpriced, carbon-taxed groceries, thanks to this NDP government, at the grocery store, not running around with their big corporate buddies in an effort – or maybe an "I'm sorry." I think it's an "I'm sorry," maybe. Maybe that could be the attempt. "I'm sorry for really, really messing things up the last couple of years, but I've got some grant money you can have now if you'll stand on stage and take a picture with me." I suspect that's how things are working, and Albertans are smarter than that, absolutely smarter than that. I don't think that the average, everyday Albertan is getting duped by this NDP government, but I think that's something we could figure out in committee, maybe.

I think we should bring in these corporations that the government likes to hold hands with. Let's ask them what this means for Alberta families, what this means for Alberta jobs. That's not what anybody in the government has said anything about yet. We've been talking about big corporations that this government likes to partner with.

An Hon. Member: My case in point.

Mrs. Pitt: Sorry. Give money to.

They considered success in a previous piece of legislation by the amount of money they actually gave out. That's insanity, that you're successful because you gave money to corporations.

Well, you know what? My constituents in Airdrie are not going to be happy to hear that, Madam Speaker, my constituents who are selling their homes, moving into a rental property to pay rent just to get by because there are no jobs, no good, mortgage-paying jobs. This government doesn't care about those people. This government doesn't care at all, and it's very evident by this debate. I'm saddened – I'm saddened – that the government of the day has the backs of big business, big corporations, and not the backs of Albertans. It's unfortunate. It's more than unfortunate.

Again, like I said before, there is hope. There is hope in the 2019 election when we wipe this NDP government from this government and replace it with a government that has the backs of Albertans. I hope that the rest of this debate will be focused more on Albertans than the friends of the NDP government because that's the debate that should be taking place in this Assembly. It's about Albertans. It's about moms and dads. It's about kids. It's about grandmas and grandpas. It's about Jane and Joe and Sue and Bobby. It's about being able to pay for hockey, Madam Speaker. It's about being able to pay for swimming lessons. It's about being able to afford to get them there as well. It's about being able to afford to give to the food bank for those that really are less fortunate. Unfortunately, food bank rates are at an all-time high in this province, an all-time high, thanks to this . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to discuss this amendment put forward by my colleague from Airdrie. Now, this amendment, which asks the Legislature to refer this bill to committee, is another in, well, I guess I would say, a long line of bills that probably should have been referred to committee. It's a good idea, seeing how eager the government is to send things to committee as of late. So the timing on this couldn't be better.

Now, this bill sets out certain goals that the government certainly believes in, and in order for this bill to achieve the goals that it sets out, it really should be sent to committee for scrutiny. As seems to be typical practice of this government and its legislation, this particular bill runs true to form of either being purposely vague or being an omnibus bill. I think we can safely say that this is not an omnibus bill, so we default to what else it could be, and that is that this bill seems to be a little bit vague. It's a robust eight pages long. To be perfectly honest, Madam Speaker, this bill reminds me of what a minister of the province of Alberta's job description might look like. It is veiled in under 10 pages but is known as the Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act.

A good portion of this bill, quite frankly, appears to be mostly redundant, as the Government Organization Act already gives ministers the ability to create programs. Let's just see here. I believe I have a preamble to what the Government Organization Act actually allows the minister to do. The Government Organization Act provides for the establishment of government departments, including the designation of ministers, the appointment of deputy ministers, the hiring of staff, procurement of expert services, and the formation of boards, committees, or councils to advise on and/or carry out matters under the minister's administration. The act also addresses matters such as the delegation of powers and duties, the development and delivery of programs and services, the formation of agreements, collection of fees, provision of grants, and acquisition and disposition of property. Ministry specific powers, duties, and functions are outlined in the accompanying schedules of the act.

Clearly, a minister can create programs, create services, create agreements, et cetera, et cetera, as outlined in the Government Organization Act. The point is, once again, that there seems to be some redundancy here with Bill 1.

Now, that being said, I yield to the fact that there is some substance here. It's merely a question of what that substance amounts to. Since industry met behind closed doors with the EDAC, or the Energy Diversification Advisory Committee, it's clearly nearly impossible to say what industry and government talked about during those meetings, when, in what we could consider collectively, they came up with the framework for this bill.

That, as it turns out, is an important aspect to the amendment that we have put forward here today, the amendment to refer this bill to the appropriate legislative committee. Now, that would give the committee the opportunity to have a conversation with this Energy Diversification Advisory Committee so that we could all hear about the decision that was made. The committee members could ask questions of the advisory committee, could ask questions of that committee about if they believe that the bill as presented covers the discussions that they had with government. The committee could also ask if there were discussions about ideas that could have also been added to Bill 1 but were not included in the bill.

It's, for lack of a better term, a bit of a consultation that includes members from all facets of this Assembly. The public, too, would likely be interested in being involved and have questions along with opposition parties of every stripe and would benefit from the insight and thought processes that led the consulting industries to believe that this is a good bill. That, Madam Speaker, is what this amendment is all about. It gives the opportunity to explore and ask questions that the government may or may not have thought to ask or discuss during their meetings.

After all, Members, we are accountable to the public. I think my colleague from Airdrie made that clear. I note, thus, under section 4(1) of this bill that it states: "The Minister shall annually, and more frequently if the Premier directs, report to the Executive Council on the Minister's progress in establishing and implementing any programs under section 2." Anyway, I guess, if the public disagrees with the direction that this bill takes us, we will see that determined in about 18 months.

I would like to touch on one of the main aspects that this bill hopes to achieve, that being potential investment in partial upgrading of our resources. Now, I have to admit that the cynic in me wonders if this bill is nothing more than a plan B of sorts, you know, in case the government's much-touted and trumpeted social licence ideology fails. What if this social licence, that we hear about on a regular basis, fails to produce the actual completion of the pipeline or pipelines? Pipelines that have been completed under the federal government, that this government doesn't like to hear about, are the Kinder Morgan anchor loop; the Enbridge Clipper, that was completed in 2010; the TransCanada Keystone, which was completed in 2010; the Enbridge line 9B reversal, which was completed in 2015. Hopefully, to be perfectly honest, the cynic in me is wrong and this diversification is a roaring success.

You know what? With a downturned economy, Alberta could use some of that kind of language. But like I've said already and my colleagues will also say as well, I'm sure, I and many Albertans would feel more confident if we could ask industry what they think through a referral to the standing committee as in the amendment that my colleague from Airdrie has made.

I think it would be fair to say that there are some outstanding questions on this bill that need to be asked. For instance, does partial upgrading in fact increase the price per barrel of Alberta oil by $10 to $15? Does partial upgrading free up pipeline capacity since diluent is no longer needed to make the round trip? I guess the question here would be: why are we considering investing in partial upgrading in order to free up pipeline space when perhaps the discussion should be about investing in full refining instead? That seems to be an important aspect here as there are questions about what the actual economic benefits will be.

The Alberta Chambers of Commerce, however, has a number of concerns. First, the chamber states: "The full mechanics and economic modelling for the announced funding are not fully understood at this time. We do not know which recommendations made by the advisory committee to the Alberta government have been adopted." Bingo. The Alberta chamber feels that it cannot see the good or bad implications of this announcement for Alberta business and the provincial economy without complete information and understanding of the implications of the announcement. It's a message that we try to give here on a regular basis, right back to consultations in 2015 on Bill 6. We ask for economic impact studies of every kind of bill that passes through this House, and now the Alberta chamber is stating the same kinds of things.

The comment made by the Alberta chamber adds more credibility to the fact that this bill should be sent to committee. The chamber states that it is "not aware of any economic analysis that conclusively demonstrates . . . greater economic benefit to Alberta as a result of refining here."

The chamber is also blaming "the cost environment [as] the primary reason private investment has not invested in upgrading and refining capacity" in Alberta already. They go on by suggesting that the cost environment in this province continues to become less competitive as a result of layering costs arising at all levels of government, the provincial government included. These costs take form in regulatory complexity and regulatory delays, cost of labour and labour regulation, and taxes.

The words of the Alberta chamber.

Another reason for this bill to be sent to the appropriate committee is that the chamber raises a lot of good points. How would members of this Assembly ever know if those good points were ever raised in discussions between government and the EDAC? Members of a committee could be asking those types of questions so that Albertans could understand that what is being proposed here is good for all of us.

Not of less consequence is another comment by the chamber.

Limited pipeline capacity is the number one barrier to securing full value for Alberta and Canada's natural resources. That means securing Albertan's future is best achieved by building transportation infrastructure. Furthermore, for taxpayers, building pipeline infrastructure is the most effective and fiscally prudent approach to energy economic development because business takes all the risk.

What a great comment.

Even a noted economist cautioned that the citation of a University of Calgary study estimates the impact of partial upgrading could be worth up to $22 billion in GDP growth for Alberta over a period of 20 years; however, that economist prefers to refer to a lower number, somewhere in the region of $9 billion, which removes the economically induced effects instead. So here we go again: economists that are on opposite sides of whether or not upgrading, partial or not, is of any value to the economy.

Another additional factor to consider is how the newly launched U.S. tax reform bill changes what we know or what we think we know. This change that has occurred south of the border now means that Alberta is no longer the most competitive jurisdiction before incentives are even factored in.

Low natural gas prices have spurred the petrochemical industry globally. The first wave of investment in North America totalled $240 billion Canadian, with 62 per cent foreign direct investment. Canada's share, however, was only 2 per cent, not the historic 10 per cent. That was due to co-ordinated and comprehensive investment attraction programs offered throughout the United States in the order of 10 to 15 per cent of the capital cost of projects. According to IHS Markit, Alberta has been the most competitive jurisdiction for the petrochemical sector. This has been eroded by incentives in other jurisdictions now.

Despite having the lowest feedstock costs and the low-tax environment, the market spoke, and Alberta and Canada have lost their historic share of petrochemical developments for a variety of reasons, including no incentives to counteract the high labour and capital costs; lower productivity due to winter, which we cannot avoid; regulatory complexity delays; labour relations; in other words, red tape. I have a member, that sits just in front of me, from Cardston-Taber-Warner, that has been on this red tape file for two years and pushing and pushing and asking questions of the government to reduce that complexity, and it goes unnoticed.

Taxes, of course. The U.S. tax reform bill now means that Alberta is no longer the most competitive jurisdiction before incentives are even factored in. These are long-term global projects, with highly skilled, well-paying jobs, that are being lured to Texas, Louisiana, and Pennsylvania and not Alberta because of investment incentives in place in those states like performance-based grants for land and/or infrastructure improvements, job training and facilities, industrial tax exemptions, modernization tax credits, payroll rebates, performance-based incentives, and on and on. These are incentives that are being offered across an invisible line, that are making a big difference in the industry itself in North America. The United States is proving that they are interested in business coming and doing business in their country.

That's something that we've lost. We need to try and . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, I was really enjoying the speech from our Member for Little Bow, that came as a result of our Member for Airdrie bringing this forth, this amendment. I felt like he had some more thoughts that he would like to be able to share. He just didn't have time to finish, and I wonder if he would be able to finish these thoughts.

The Deputy Speaker: The Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the Member for Battle River-Wainwright, or whatever it's going to become.

Yes. As I was saying, the United States is proving that they are interested in business coming and doing business in their country, something that we've lost here. I mean, a lot of this can be blamed on the Trudeau Liberals as well. There are a lot of changes being made that actually add red tape, and as I was saying about my colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner, red tape in any country is certainly – certainly, regulation is required. We have as good a regulation here in Alberta regarding environment as there is. Adding a regulation and taking one away, one for one, has always been a good idea. I know there are places in this country that actually remove two for every one that's added.

An Hon. Member: Quebec and B.C.

Mr. Schneider: Quebec and B.C., I guess.

The fact that the States is incentivising business to come is a reality in what we face in this global economy, Madam Speaker.

While I reiterate that I hope sincerely that the goals of this bill are achieved as, obviously, any benefit that could help spur industry and job creation, quite frankly, in this province would be considered a good thing, I can't help but wonder, given the last almost three years of this government's guidance, whether these goals are actually achievable.

10:50

That, again, is why I believe it is so important that we now make sure that we get this right, I guess, and refer this bill to the proper standing committee for some more study, ask questions of government, ask questions of industry, the EDAC, find out what those discussions were. You know, there's always a chance that there could be ways to improve this bill. That's what our ultimate goal here always is, to try to make the bill as palatable as possible for all Albertans because clearly there's a lot at stake here.

We can look at each other's sources of economic numbers with regard to how many jobs have been displaced in Alberta, about how policies have driven business out of Alberta rather than into the fold, I guess. We've heard the Alberta chambers suggest that complications to business are unknown because they aren't aware of any economic study to tackle that question.

We can again consider the voice of business in Alberta, which is the Alberta chambers, that talked about limited pipeline capacity being the number one barrier to securing full value for Alberta's and, quite frankly, for Canada's natural resources. That means that securing Alberta's future is best achieved by building transportation infrastructure. Furthermore, for taxpayers, building pipeline infrastructure is the most effective, according to the chamber, and fiscally prudent approach to energy economic development because business takes all the risk.

We need this bill to get to committee so that a bunch of other great questions and a bunch of other great ideas that are out there, that this bill raises can be looked at more closely on behalf of all Albertans so that every member that represents every political stripe on the committee is represented and can ask those questions and, hopefully, move forward with – maybe the bill is exactly where it should be. That's always a consideration. It's just that as we stand here today, I've just named what the one organization called Alberta chambers – and that's kind of the voice of small business in the province – sees as a problem here.

I think that's all I wanted to talk about. Thank you, Madam Chair. I encourage all members . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Amendment?

An Hon. Member: On the referral.

Dr. Swann: Oh, no. I'm speaking to the bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay.

Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to the amendment on Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act – and I believe it is a good amendment – to send Bill 1 to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship. We know that industry has been speaking to the government through the Energy Diversification Advisory Committee, who has come up with 36 recommendations. Why not give industry the opportunity to come before the Legislature and tell us, through committee, why Bill 1 is so important to them and why the programs the minister is announcing are essential to the growth of the economy and the future of Alberta? I do believe that it's important that all members of this Assembly are fully informed on the decisions being made here, and having the opportunity to witness through committee and hear from stakeholders in committee would give us that understanding.

You know, the implications of this bill are not small. There's a potential of $2 billion in play here in grants and loan guarantees, so I think it's important that we recognize the size of the commitments that are being taken here and that we fully understand the direction that this minister and the Executive Council would like to go. You know, I don't know about you, Madam Speaker, but $2 billion to me is a lot of money, and I don't take that lightly.

So I want to hear from industry, the natural gas industry and particularly those who are involved in the different fields at play, the Duvernay and the Montney, and to understand why they need programs such as this to actually move into a diversification model and why we aren't already stripping the liquids out of the gas before shipping to Chicago. Is it crucial that this type of a program come forward in order to get that work started and continue to evolve our energy industry? I would like to hear that from industry and get an understanding of that. I want to hear from industry and why they need those grants and loan guarantees to construct straddle plants needed to strip the liquids.

Bringing industry into committee ensures that we can eliminate any biases from the decision-making. Currently we're faced with a bill that would allow the minister to proceed with loan guarantees and grants. It does puzzle me a little bit, why we are strapped, why the minister or Executive Council is not able to move forward tax credits. That's probably a logistics thing, but the fact that the minister and Executive Council can move forward with grants – I would like some clarification on how we're going to ensure that bias is left out of the equation and that we are moving forward with the best projects for all Albertans.

After all, Madam Speaker, as much as myself, members of the UCP would like to meet with, say, Alberta Federation of Labour on important matters, do we really trust the agenda of its president and the co-chair of the Energy Diversification Advisory Committee, who is known to be an NDP operative? I think everybody here could recognize that there are concerns from this side of the House with regard to the co-chair on that committee in that there could be some bias there. I believe that by bringing it to committee with some industry witness there, we could possibly remove some of that concern of bias in the decision-making. And doing that, sending Bill 1 to committee, then helps to restore trust in the process, I believe.

But it's not only the upstream oil and gas that is of concern here. We have the petrochemical industry, who is very much chomping at the bit to get all that cheap and plentiful feedstock to their plastic plants. You know, I was able to, during our break, partake in the Industrial Heartland Association's annual stakeholder engagement session, where they report to the community, essentially, the projects that are being proposed, the updates on how things are going in the heartland. We also had an opportunity, as many of the government members – the MLAs were also invited for some elected-official engagement and went on a bus tour. I felt that that was very good engagement and helped me to learn more about the different stages of where things are at in the Industrial Heartland, part of where some of these projects will exist.

The Member for Calgary-Klein talked about the first round of these programs being very successful. What I did learn is that I believe it was Inter Pipeline has projects started. We drove right past there with the bus, a project that I believe is going to be good for the continued evolution of the energy industry within Alberta. In my view, that project may have gone forward without the incentives. It may not have. They came to a final investment decision because they were at that stage in their project development. The other project: the way I understand it right now is that that final investment decision will be made later on in the year. So we don't know exactly where the success of these programs really is until many years later.

You know, there are parts of Bill 1 that I fully endorse. There are other parts that I have concerns with, so I think that it is important that we are able to digest some of that through committee work and ensure that we are being very responsible with the resources that Albertans have entrusted to us and that we do the fiscally proper thing on ensuring that we are, from my standpoint, not just allowing our Executive Council to make these decisions for us and trusting them but that we get more information for ourselves.

I spoke about Inter Pipeline. Inter Pipeline does believe that with their production of polypropylene products, they have a chance to change the global market and that it will change the fundamental nature of the plastics market. What we quite possibly are going to see here is that other parts of industry will come to Alberta, primarily for the low feedstock costs. That's one thing we did learn with the engagement sessions. What is bringing investment to Alberta right now is the low feedstock price. We also learned in the Alberta's Industrial Heartland Association's stakeholder annual report that that's not enough, that there is concern over the tax regime that's within Canada as opposed to the North American market at this time. There was a gentleman there that showed very effectively how that tax differential made a significant difference on the return to investment and tipped the scales in favour of the United States market at this time. Those types of decisions, those final investment decisions: they're long-range decisions, but they do take into account what's happening currently in each of the marketplaces.

We have low feedstock costs in Alberta. There's no doubt about it. The world recognizes that, but they also recognize that we also have winter here. Low productivity in winter is a concern with capital builds. The other concern – and I know the chamber of commerce has spoken to this – is the fact that we have significant complexity to our regulatory regimes and to some of the approvals that need to be sought and the timelines that it takes to get those approvals in place.

We talk about Inter Pipeline, recognizing that there's a potential to change the fundamental nature of the plastics market across the globe and that the world could rush to Alberta. With the cheap feedstock, there's also potential that other industries will be coming here, and we can look at the manufacturing of maybe car parts in Nisku or what can start to evolve from these types of projects. It's only left up to the imagination. Then we have to ensure that the infrastructure is in place to allow that economy to actually thrive with proper transportation, whether that's pipeline, rails, marine, road, air travel, and ensure that that's all there.

For many MLAs Bill 1 and also the announcement from the minister are possibly the first time they have heard of the partial upgrading technology, and I believe that if we move this into committee, we could learn more about that. We are asked to make an informed decision. The experts have not come in to actually explain what it is and how it works and the benefits of why the investment community, Wall Street, Bay Street, and so on are not able to get the money for it and get some understanding of why the loan guarantees are a necessity of Bill 1 and how that can – is this necessary to overcome that hurdle, or is this something that is not necessary and that would not put an extra liability on the bottom line of our balance sheet?

Let's get MEG Energy also in here to tell us the values and virtues of partial upgrading, and let's learn how it is different from full upgrading to synthetic crude or to western Canadian select, whichever. Maybe industry can tell us about only doing partial upgrading instead of full refining to the final product. There's, you know, much debate about the potential of full refining in Alberta. It's very important that we fully understand as legislators here that if we are going to get involved with directing private investment, let's say, incentivizing private investment, we fully understand the implications of those decisions so that we can have a better understanding of the consequences of those decisions.

I understand that the cost of capital in Alberta is higher, absolutely. That possibly gives us an explanation of the higher cost of public construction. But the question is: why? We need to get a good understanding of that. Is it the regulatory red tape, or is it the transportation of the steel? Is it the low productivity and high cost of our labour? Is it winter? Yes, winter does have an effect. Will these programs give the support needed to overcome that cost differential? The only people that are able to tell us that are the investors themselves.

Like I said before, you know, we can't consider success of a program based on uptake and applications. The success of a program is going to come many years down the road. But we as legislators are required to try and make the decisions that will allow us to stay as competitive as possible in the global market without overreach.

We also need to hear from diluent shippers and producers and how this will impact them, if it is going to change their operations in the industry. We should be concerned for their business viability also and how that will affect it because that is a consequence of the decisions being made here. When we take public funds to incentivize a competitor, which would be partially upgrading and removing the need for diluent, we have made a decision here that's going to significantly impact that investor's decision-making and his past decision-making.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Yeah. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity. I was interested in what the hon. member said, but I wanted to ask him to reflect on a few other things. For example, in the bill itself and the discussion around the bill what's missing for me is the evidence that the government has made the effort to know what's gone on in the past for diversification. For example, during this session – not this session but, rather, this term of office; the session just started a week ago – we've tabled documents. One chart comes to mind particularly, one that talks about Alberta's economy in 2004 – the size of Alberta's economy back then was in the neighbourhood of $60 billion – and the fact that back then, when Alberta's economy, GDP, was about $60 billion, the oil and gas industry occupied about one-third of that. So by those rough numbers the oil and gas industry was about $20 billion and the rest of Alberta's economy was about $40 billion.

On the document that was tabled in the House, it shows that Alberta's gross domestic product 10 years later, in 2014, was in the neighbourhood of $660 billion and that oil and gas had dropped to 25 per cent of that total. Again, backing up the math as best I can standing on my feet here, you figure that at a quarter of that $660 billion, the oil and gas industry, then, had grown from about $20 billion to something over $160 billion in those 10 years. Of course, Madam Speaker, that really indicates that there was diversification, probably, even within the oil and gas industry.

If you look at the rest of Alberta's economy – and I know that the government likes to say that nothing happened before 2015 – the fact is that on diversification of Alberta's economy, the non oil and gas part of Alberta's economy back in 2004 was in the neighbourhood of $40 billion. Using the numbers that I described earlier, it means that the non oil and gas part of the economy was somewhere in the neighbourhood of $500 billion, just short of that or just around that. In other words, Alberta's economy outside of oil and gas had grown from about $40 billion to about $500 billion during those 10 years, which, of course, included a dramatic amount of diversification.

Now, I know that the government doesn't want to understand that, they don't want to believe that, and they don't want to agree with that because they like to tell Albertans that there wasn't any diversification before they earned the right to be government, but the fact is that there was a tremendous amount of diversification that had happened before the current people in charge of the government had arrived as people in charge of the government. Of course, since then they have done their best to undo that good work by driving 35-plus billion dollars of investment outside of Alberta and, really, undoing the horsepower that actually drives diversification, because nothing makes diversification easier than when money is flowing like water and there are different businesses in all sectors of the economy making money. A lot of it is spinoff from oil and gas, surely, but it actually provided a lot of horsepower for other industries, of course, and a lot of diversification that took place.

When we're thinking about this amendment, I want to know how the hon. member feels about these really important aspects not being discussed and potentially being ignored by the government and about the value of discussion in committee, where we actually talk about these things and actually talk about different industries. The $500 billion from 2014: obviously, it's a little bit different now. Certainly, some elements are probably smaller since this government arrived, with all the investment that they've driven out, but the fact is that there are probably some areas that have survived as well. You know, before we start offering the incentives and the subsidies, I think it would be, in my view, better if we actually took some time to demonstrate that we had a better understanding.

As the hon. member speaking said, there are certainly good projects coming forward, the Inter Pipeline project to take the liquids out of the natural gas and create plastics and other things. Of course, under this government's time in office that will actually be harder to do because energy costs have gone up because of the carbon tax, and that will actually make it harder for people to buy the energy to melt the polypropylene and to make plastic products. That will actually make it harder for diversification.

Nonetheless, the government indicates they're making an effort through this bill, so I just wonder, to the hon. member that was speaking, you know, whether he thought . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In general I think there's strong support for diversifying our economy. We would argue in the Liberal caucus that there is a fundamental redesign, though, needed in our tax system to actually provide the incentives so that we have sustained change in our economic diversity.

These subsidies will provide less sustained and less viable and more risky stimulus. One of the areas that we have advocated for some time was a carbon levy that's revenue neutral, thereby shifting taxes that would enable the province to reduce its revenues from personal and corporate income taxes but would stimulate, again, more of the economy. This is something that taxpayers really care about and, relative to lowering corporate taxes, would encourage economic diversification more organically instead of the interventionist approach, which doubles down on corporate subsidies.

We need to challenge in the same way the Energy Diversification Act on the grounds that this act is largely unnecessary. As everyone knows, the minister can implement such policy measures at any time and indeed did so prior to the bill being tabled. There was a list of about six different kinds of programs to be established, with some specific, such as the petrochemicals diversification program, and some general, to increase access to capital. If the intent is to compel the Energy minister to establish certain energy diversification programs, I'm unclear why this would be necessary, again, since the minister is already doing this.

Bill 1 is also silent on a timeline for when the Energy minister is supposed to establish certain energy diversification programs, without specifying that this would be immediate or soon or as soon as practicable. The minister's obligation to establish programs really ends up being an open-ended one. Suddenly the requirement that "the Minister shall establish programs" starts to sound a lot more like the minister may establish programs without a timeline. The simple fact is that the government already can and will establish programs that it considers priorities and not because a statute of its own creation says that it has to. The standing legislative authority is provided in section 8 of the Government Organization Act, which deals with ministerial powers and states very clearly that "a Minister may establish or operate any programs and services the Minister considers desirable in order to carry out matters under the Minister's administration."

It's also worth pointing out that the Energy Diversification Act wasn't required for the government to make its first announcement of $500 million in royalty credits for the petrochemical diversification program back in February 2016. Yet now Albertans are being told that such visionary legislation is needed to launch a second round of the petrochemical diversification program. This is another example where the government has chosen to extend a program, for example the summer temporary employment program, and this they did by simply renewing funding for it, without the need for a massive theatrical production.

It's interesting that the former leader of the NDP was quoted in the 2015 provincial election declaring in relation to the Sturgeon refinery: "I think it's a mistake to get directly involved in loan guarantees and government financing of private projects," which is a complete reversal of where they are now. This was from the Calgary Herald of April 2015. In the case of the Sturgeon refinery we know that the government's decision to backstop the project was largely a political one made by a very small number of bureaucrats and Edmonton region Conservative MLAs. In reality, the decision and any future ones that involve energy diversification should be evidence based and guided by truly independent expert opinion. That's hard to come by under these kinds of political influences.

This brings us to the recommendations of the Energy Diversification Advisory Committee. Was that committee co-chaired by the Alberta Federation of Labour president, a close ally of the NDP and vocal supporter of more government-backed value grants, loan guarantees, royalty credits, and equity investments? Was that advice political, or was it expert? How do we distinguish between the two?

It's interesting that the preamble of the Energy Diversification Act includes a kind of disclaimer that essentially says: the Energy Diversification Advisory Committee told us to invest more public money in energy subsidies, so that's what we're doing, but don't blame us if it goes wrong.

In 2018 the University of Calgary School of Public Policy revealed that Alberta already spends more than any other province in Canada on business subsidies, which, of course, includes all those financial tools – grants, loan guarantees, tax credits – that the NDP felt compelled to re-endorse the use of in the Energy Diversification Act. If Alberta's per person subsidies to business are already the highest, wouldn't that suggest that the province is already making considerable use of these financial tools even without the Energy Diversification Act being enforced?

Again, the School of Public Policy reported, "Alberta also stands out by having the least transparent public reporting of business subsidies." That lack of transparency persists under this new Energy Diversification Act and actually seems to become more entrenched through section 4. Section 4(1) requires the Energy minister to annually report directly to the Executive Council on progress made in establishing and implementing programs that enhance economic growth and energy diversification. Section 4(2) requires the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission to annually report directly to the Energy minister on any projects supported by the commission. Why are the Energy minister and the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission not being required to report to the Legislature? This looks a lot like secrecy or at least a lack of transparency.

The Auditor General has also raised concerns about the lack of information available to taxpayers to be able to assess the risks and rewards of government involvement in energy diversification. Most Albertans would be surprised to learn that the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission doesn't prepare a business plan or make its annual report public. Why is this, and why aren't these glaring deficiencies being addressed in the Energy Diversification Act?

Bill 1 also borrows a bit from the Redford government's Bill 34, Building New Petroleum Markets Act, which was passed in the fall of 2013 but never proclaimed. It does so by stating that the Energy minister may direct the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission to use any financial tools available to the commission and to the Petroleum Marketing Act. Well, the NDP obviously believe that this needed to be formalized.

We know that the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission is already accountable to and receives policy direction from the Minister of Energy in alignment with government policy. For example, even without the Energy Diversification Act we know that the former PC government was firmly in control of the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission's financial involvement in the Sturgeon refinery. The Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act also requires the commission to make all reasonable efforts to fulfill its mandate in alignment with government priorities. It's also required to participate with the Energy minister in setting its long-term objectives and short-term targets.

I'm not sure, Madam Speaker, what would be accomplished by referring what is essentially a fait accompli to committee. It's clear that this government has already embarked on and intends to continue with significant subsidies to the industry at the same time as they're talking about diversifying, so I will not be supporting the amendment.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today and speak to Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act, and particularly to the referral motion on the floor, which is what we're discussing at the moment. I guess the reason for the urgency of referral is, in fact, that the outcomes of the bill are quite unclear. As has already been discussed all morning long here, there are lots of concerns, lots of potential issues, and while the bill may have great intentions and may be trying to accomplish some positive results for Albertans, the actual achievement of that clearly is in question.

If industry needs anything, it needs clarity of policy, and this does not give that. It is clear in some respects that – I mean, the intentions here are positive in that, you know, it's intended to diversify our petrochemical industry. It's intended to try and improve our pipeline capacity. It's intended to include First Nations and Métis groups in employment and some of those kinds of things, but there are also a lot of issues, as has been talked about.

As has been mentioned earlier by the members from across the aisle here, the question of success is not clear either. Is success just handing out money? Are we successful if we hand out so many millions of dollars? And in the process who do we benefit? I find it reasonably interesting that people who are beneficiaries of massive handouts of money would stand up in praise of a bill. Why wouldn't they? But, really, are these handouts benefiting regular Alberta taxpayers, or are they benefiting shareholders? The definition of success here is clearly unclear. Today I really think we need to realize that while there are some pros, potentially, to the bill, we don't really know what success is going to look like.

Tragically, over the last three years we've had an NDP government that has repeatedly brought in harmful fundamental policies to our economy that have had the very clear effect of driving investors out of our province. In essence, the policies that they've brought forward, the fundamental economic policies, have told investors that they were, quite frankly, better off investing somewhere else. Everything has been done to make sure that they receive that message. Now, three years later, we're beginning to see some of the results of that, some of the harm that those policies have caused. It kind of looks like we're trying to just create a bandage here for the problem. That's what the bill is, a Band-Aid.

Albertans find it hard to trust the ideas pushed forward by this government. They can parade guys up who they hand out money to on a stage and get them to give all kinds of praise and good statements to it, but who do regular Albertans want to trust? They're not being listened to. The Alberta government's policies have made Albertans' lives harder, not better, and it's no wonder. This government deceived Albertans about their intentions when they ran their last election campaign. They implemented the largest tax increase in Alberta's history. They openly mocked anybody who wants to challenge their tax-and-spend regime. The impact has been negative both on the lives and the businesses of Albertans across our province. Since the 2015 election this government has enacted a suite of policies that serve only their ideological agenda and not the best interests of everyday Alberta families.

Albertans just don't believe that the worst of the recession is somehow behind them. Just because spring has arrived this morning, it doesn't mean that spring has arrived economically for our province or for the people of our province. The reality is that there are tens of thousands of families across our province still struggling to make ends meet, and that's true in the energy industry directly. It's also true in many of the spinoff industries. The Hotel & Lodging Association has been very clear about the fact that while only the mountain parks are prospering, the rest of the province is struggling. A slight uptick maybe in room usage, but a decrease in room rates able to be charged, so the benefit is muted.

Home sales are struggling across the province. I met with some of the major home builders just recently. Restaurants are saying the same thing. There may be a little bit of increase in demand, but the reality is that the increased costs of carbon tax and labour legislation and wage legislation and all these other things have really put them in a very, very difficult place. The industry, to quote them, is not healthy.

The government would like to legislate this new bill. In reality it's a conundrum because in one respect it offers insufficient guarantees and grants to draw the much-needed investment back to Alberta, considering the massive size of investments that are needed. On the other hand, it's going to be a significant cost to Alberta taxpayers, and Alberta taxpayers are going to pay the burden for it. What they really need to do is fix the problems they created in the first place. They'd be better off repealing many of those harmful policies instead of choosing a Band-Aid or an interventionist approach to try and somehow create a few winners who will stand on a stage with them, yet the rest of the province struggles and languishes and experiences difficulties.

We have huge concerns about a government that's deeply in debt, spending $800 million in loan guarantees for partial upgrading, another $500 million in guarantees for feedstock infrastructure programs, and another $200 million in grants for partial upgrading. These are huge expenses to come out of the taxpayers' dollar for people that are already struggling.

The challenge is that some of it is still quite experimental, and the economic studies to justify the whole thing haven't happened yet. Commercial-scale partial upgrading is actually a bit of an unknown. I mean, do we put 50 per cent into the cost of upgrading partially and get back 10 per cent of the benefit? How is that going to be helpful at all? Financial markets don't like risk, and we don't know what the risk here really is yet.

We can't afford a Band-Aid to try and make things look better for this government as they're coming up to an election. Really, the government should have listened to common-sense solutions before pushing forward all of their ideological agenda. It would have prevented the investors, many investors, from leaving.

We could possibly support some of these efforts of diversifying the economy and support growing our petrochemical centre, but when the government is consistently implementing these kind of ideological policies that hurt the economy overall, hurt Alberta employment, hurt Alberta families, we have to take a stand and challenge the impacts of some of that sort of stuff.

Madam Speaker, this is clearly a political exercise more than anything else, meant to distract from the NDP's record. In less than three years this government has increased Alberta's debt by $45 million, and then just last December, days before Christmas holidays, when everybody was distracted, they quietly authorized a staggering $37 billion in borrowing. Then just last week supplemental supply. They made a budget, a huge deficit budget, yet they still needed more, another billion and a half dollars on top of that that they didn't account for. Right now Alberta is spending a billion dollars a year just on the interest payments. That's a horrendous loss of resources and benefits and services to Alberta's people.

Unfortunately for Albertans, this bill is just an attempt to cover up some of their previous ideological agenda. This legislation will enable the minister to use any financial tools available, and I stress the word "any." Albertans should be very conscious of that and very careful. They are essentially saying that they can do without limits whatever they want here. It reminds me of the beginning of this term where, first of all, they raised the debt ceiling, then they immediately removed the debt ceiling, and then they immediately plunged us into an endless process of deficits and debt, which has not yet stopped growing and, by this act, will continue to grow. Therefore, it does need to go to committee and to be talked about.

These programs are questionable at best when we start handing out credits and grants and free money and gifts all over the place. A huge piece of this legislation which is a cause of concern for me is that there's no real accountability here. The government just reports to itself. Nothing is made public. This is public money. By democratic principle the public should have the opportunity to have clear reporting. Just to allow the minister and the Premier and the Executive Council to do this is dark corporate money, Madam Speaker. It needs to be transparent, and it should be publicly reported. To not report it is shameful. It's a pattern and a practice that should not be used in this day and age. The people of Alberta have a right to be consulted. They deserve to have a report because it's their money that's being contributed to this. I think that needs to happen.

I'd like to talk a little bit about the petrochemical diversification program if I could. The first two rounds, of course, were out there. The claim is that they created 4,000 new construction jobs and 200 full-time operating jobs. That's interesting because last month alone the province reports that we lost 10,500 full-time jobs in this province. We have a negative net loss of 6,500 jobs, and these interventionist government programs to a few select individuals so that they have a good story to go to the electorate with just simply don't solve the problem systemically across the province for all the people of our province. It's just not appropriate.

I'd like to share a little story with you of the consequences, the real, personal-life-experience consequences of some of these kinds of interventionist policies. I received an e-mail the other day from a person in central Alberta who is concerned. He says this:

I think you should know that the new 2018 employment standards have hurt not helped my employment situation.

Here's an Albertan who has actually been hurt by some of this government's policy.

He says:

I am a serviceperson (journeyman tradesman) . . .

He works actually for a kitchen cabinet company.

[I've] always had a flex time agreement whereby I would bank hours and take them off when convenient and helpful.

I mean, everybody has to go to the dentist or take their kids somewhere or one of the many things that are just life.

He said:

The old rate was hour for hour.

And that benefited both: I could take time off, my employer was happy with it, and nothing was lost.

The new standards changed that rate to one hour equal to one-and-a-half hours. This moved me beyond what the company and industry can afford to pay so I have now lost all overtime and extra hours. I now lose pay when [I have to take] time off.

This has not benefited this particular individual.

He goes on and says:

The thought might be [that] the company could just pay more.

I mean, I know; it's the evil corporate guys. They always have money, right?

But we are in a highly competitive industry [where] the profit [level] has been at or below zero for a few years. Much of our competition is either . . .

Get this.

. . . out of province or out of country.

Do you know where most cabinets in this province come from these days? They come from either the U.S. or China. Many of them are shipped in and installed here. You're competing on an international market.

He says:

So they do not have the recently added burden of the carbon tax.

And I could add labour legislation and a bunch of other things.

So we are already at a cost disadvantage and there is simply no room for more input costs like [jacking up] overtime wage rates.

Because of the competitive nature of the industry there is also no room to pass [it] on to [consumers].

He goes on and says:

[The] government may have intended this move to be helpful to working people,

Now, listen to this. I found this really enlightening.

but while intentions may be nice, they are really irrelevant in the final outcome.

The final outcome is that this guy is losing money because of the realities of that bill.

He says:

Incidentally, because the company is not realizing a return on their investment, which is profit,

the reduction in the business tax is also [quite] irrelevant.

His final statement is:

I write only with the hope that in the future policies will actually help instead of hurt.

Here's a guy from central Alberta who has been hurt by this government's policies. We've had endless numbers of these policies that have actually hurt our economy, hurt families, hurt individual workers, and they're speaking up about it. This government cannot tell us that their policies systemically and generally across this province have been helpful or have benefited Albertans, because this one right here is very clear that it has not been, and he has suffered the consequences of it.

These policies are in fact hurting families and hurting businesses. Calgary currently has the second-highest unemployment rate in Canada amongst major cities. Edmonton is tied for third place. These are indications of the fact that things are not going well for our Alberta citizens.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate on this matter.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 2

Growth and Diversification Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my honour to rise today and speak to Bill 2, the Growth and Diversification Act.

Bill 2, Madam Speaker, would enable the continued success of two of our tax credit programs, the investor tax credit and the capital investment tax credit. I can tell you that already these two tax credits, from when we first rolled them out, have resulted in thousands of jobs, in hundreds of millions of dollars of investment on the investor tax credit side. On the capital investment tax credit side we have conditionally approved in the first two rounds of intake about $62 million worth of tax credits that are leveraging $1.2 billion worth of investment. I can tell you that companies not only here in Alberta but around the globe are even more interested in investing in our province. They are doing exactly what they were designed to do, and that is to spur investment right now while our economy is recovering. They are part of the reason that our economy has recovered at the pace that it has, and despite the gloom and doom that the opposition spout about, I can tell you that last year Alberta led the country in growth, at 4.5 per cent, and that – guess what? – Alberta is on track to lead the country this year again in growth.

In the past year the economy has created over 90,000 full-time jobs. These are new full-time jobs, Madam Speaker, and most of them are in the private sector. Once again, I know the opposition likes to talk about, you know, that these jobs are all created through the public sector, which couldn't be further from the truth.

The other thing that the tax credits have done and why I'm so proud to be sponsoring this bill is that they will continue to help diversify our economy. These tax credits are programs that have existed in other provinces, in some provinces for decades. For example, the investor tax credit has existed in the province of British Columbia since 1985, Madam Speaker. Companies, entrepreneurs, businesses have asked government after government, PC governments, to introduce these tax credits to help diversify the economy. Previous PC governments wouldn't give them the time of day, said, "No, no, no; we don't need to do this." That's part of the reason that our economy is so reliant on a single sector.

We listened to our entrepreneurs around the province. They asked for these programs. We took the best practices from other jurisdictions, designed a made-in-Alberta tax credit program to support our companies. There are a number of incredible success stories of companies that have taken advantage of this program, and I'm quite excited that we are building on our success. Through Bill 2 we will continue to diversify the economy.

Now, for those members that maybe are a little less familiar with our two different tax credit programs, the investor tax credit is a 30 per cent refundable tax credit for eligible companies. They simply register. They get the green light that they can go out and, as they're raising capital, issue tax credits, 30 per cent tax credits that, again, have helped companies scale up.

In Alberta, Madam Speaker, we have a number of different programs delivered through entities like Alberta Innovates that really are designed to help our start-ups. There are a number of incredible incubators and supports, whether it's through TEC Edmonton, Startup Calgary, and our regional innovation networks around the province that support our start-ups. One of the areas that we heard from companies that they could use more support is when they are in that scale-up stage. They've already used, you know, friends' and family's money; they've used their savings. Now they need to scale up. That's exactly what the investor tax credit does. It allows Albertans to invest in companies in their own backyard and helps derisk some of their investment.

The other aspect of the investor tax credit that I very much appreciate is the fact that it is sector-wide. This doesn't just apply to one sector or another. This is open to companies in all sectors. We've heard from a number of companies that have received the investor tax credit who have said: you have helped Alberta companies be even more competitive with our other jurisdictions, our neighbouring provinces. Again, what we've done is encouraged Albertans to invest in companies within the province.

The capital investment tax credit, again, has allowed for a significant amount of investment to occur. Right now we've seen and heard of many different companies that are investing at the moment. One of them, a successful candidate of the capital investment tax credit, is Aurora Cannabis. They are constructing a state-of-the-art cannabis manufacturing facility that's 800,000 square feet. It's probably one of the largest in the world that they are constructing, that essentially will be a facility that will manufacture cannabis here in Edmonton that will then be distributed internationally. Aurora Cannabis signed an agreement with the government of Italy. They have agreements with the government of Germany. And all of the manufacturing is taking place here in Edmonton out at the International Airport. That facility will employ up to 330 people when it's finished construction. These are good-paying, long-term jobs, Madam Speaker.

As well, Seven Generations up in Grande Prairie was another successful applicant of the second intake. They've been conditionally approved, and they are building a natural gas processing facility in the Montney-Kakwa River area, creating about 150 construction jobs and dozens of direct permanent jobs once it's operational.

You know, it's very encouraging to see, Madam Speaker, the number of applicants, the uptake that these programs have secured. There is a real desire and interest. We see that the programs are working, which is the reason that our government is continuing to work with industry to diversify the economy.

Despite what the opposition says, there is a role for government to play. I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that when I talk to companies around the province and internationally, they recognize that there is a role for government to play. What we are doing through these programs is levelling the playing field between Alberta and other jurisdictions. Despite how the opposition may frame it, I can tell you that there are programs like this that exist in other jurisdictions, and because Alberta has not had these programs previous to our government, it left Alberta and Albertans at a competitive disadvantage. So what we've done is levelled the playing field.

In Bill 2 as well we have introduced the interactive digital media tax credit, which I'm very, very excited about. As you know, Madam Speaker, Edmonton and Alberta are home to a company called BioWare, an incredibly renowned digital media gaming company, that has been asking, again, government after government for a program that will help level the playing field. I can tell you that the provinces of British Columbia and Quebec have significant programs to support their digital media sector. Alberta has not, and because of it we've lost a lot of our talent. We have incredible postsecondary institutions here in the province of Alberta. We have incredible graduates that come through our programs. Unfortunately, a lot of companies haven't stayed in Alberta because, again, they can receive support in other provinces.

Through Bill 2 we'll have an interactive digital media tax credit program, Madam Speaker, that will offer a 25 per cent refundable tax credit on eligible salaries and wages of employees of IDM companies. They've told us over and over again that their biggest cost is labour. Again, these are very well-paid jobs and positions. These are permanent full-time jobs that, again, are good mortgage-paying jobs. We want to encourage companies to stay in Alberta. We want to encourage companies to start up here in the province. Standing with me as we introduced this program, should Bill 2 pass through this House, were a number of companies with BioWare, like Beamdog and others, that have said, you know, that they are thrilled that the government has listened to industry.

This is one of the ways that we are diversifying our economy. I can tell you that in the 1990s there was only a handful of studios that existed here in the province of Alberta. We now have 55 studios around the province. We want to see them continue to grow.

There are approximately 540 full-time workers in this sector at the moment. We know that this tax credit will help companies grow even faster. But I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that the salary that the average worker at these interactive digital media companies earns is about $70,000. That's a very, very good wage. We, again, want to see more Albertans have the opportunity to work at these companies, to start their own company. I can tell you that the digital media sector contributes between $50 million to $80 million to Alberta's GDP. We know that that can continue to grow.

With this bill, a number of tools that we are introducing or continuing will help us continue to diversify the economy. My hope is that it will be supported by all members of this House in that, you know, our government has made it clear that we stand with business. We are playing our role in supporting them. Those are the job creators, Madam Speaker. Feedback has been very, very positive on our programs. Again, I'm proud of the work that our government has done, our MLAs have done, going out and engaging with the business community throughout the province, who has said: "These programs are exactly what we need. Please continue them." We've listened, and we're doing just that.

Again I encourage all members to support this bill. Our government is not only talking about diversifying the economy; it is through actions like Bill 2 that we are supporting diversification of our economy and our businesses. I'm proud of the work that we're doing. Again I encourage all members to support Bill 2 and to continue to support the economic recovery that we are seeing around the province.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

11:50

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to speak about Bill 2, our second economic investment tool that we have proposed this session. We have here poised a bill that will help stimulate investment and growth across the province. This bill grows off two highly successful tax credit programs, the capital investment tax credit and Alberta investor tax credit, to ensure that companies with the potential to grow have support available for investment attraction to our province.

The new interactive digital media tax credit would encourage the growth of the digital media industry through a 25 per cent tax credit for eligible labour costs and includes support for 3,000 tech spaces in our postsecondary institutions across the province for the next five years. New scholarships would help grow a future of a much more high-tech workforce. Currently in Alberta we do have the youngest, best educated workforce in the country, so we are very proud to be able to continue to support that.

The bill would also include provisions to allow for more work on unmanned aerial systems research, which would of course open the door to new technologies and sector growth. We had the opportunity, with the Minister of Economic Development and Trade and the Minister of Municipal Affairs, to visit Aerium Analytics, which is headquartered in Leduc, near the Edmonton International Airport. We can see that Alberta has players that are already finding success in this industry. They have been able to produce drones that are part of a wildlife management system that includes habitat relocation, pyrotechnics. What this is is a live falcon that actually comes in to assist in helping to keep airport runways safe. Each one of these is hand painted to look real and lifelike, is able to circle the airport and keep other birds away. The program also provides jobs that are controlled by workers from their station. So it creates new jobs in a new sector that helps support local economic development.

Of course, the capital investment tax credit and the Alberta investment tax credit programs have helped stimulate the economy, together incenting more than a billion dollars to be invested right here in Alberta. Of course, that investment is the key driver of growth and diversification, which we need to continuously strengthen in Alberta for attraction process.

The government learned from the Amazon bid that there are areas for improvement if we are to continue to attract big investment. If we can really capitalize on these two very successful tax credit programs, we can continue to send those signals to investors that Alberta remains open for business for the long haul.

With the Alberta investment tax credit we see that $30 million in tax credits has helped secure $100 million in investment. Also, investing $60 million in tax credits through the capital investment tax credit has been able to stimulate more than a billion dollars in capital projects between manufacturing, processing, and tourism infrastructure within the province of Alberta. Of course, as we see our economy start to improve and recover, we need to make sure that we continue these programs that help support our job creators in the private sector.

Of course, there is incredible opportunity in the sectors for women and other underrepresented groups because we do see that there is so much potential to help incent companies to better engage these workforces in the province. We're doing that through enhancing those tax credits. So if someone has the majority of their board of directors and their CEO made up of members of underrepresented groups, then we know that they are not only showing a commitment to inclusion and diversity in their business, but also we know how that helps create better, more financially stable businesses. We know that the inclusivity and making sure that we are bringing in more women – when we look at Fortune 500 companies, those with the highest representation of women on those boards significantly outperform other businesses that have the lowest percentages of women on those boards, so we know that it actually just makes good business sense to incent companies that will identify and hire those women to come and be a part of it.

I like the quote of Arlene Dickinson. I'll have to paraphrase it, but she tweeted something along the lines that capable women are not unicorns. It's just a matter of finding those women and knowing that they're talented, they're capable, and they can help be a part of Alberta's economy. Of course, that is what truly represents good governance on these boards, bringing in people with diverse experiences and having companies that actually represent what Alberta looks like.

Part of the bill that we're talking about here is the interactive digital media tax credit program. It would offer a tax credit on eligible labour expenditures to companies that develop interactive digital media products in Alberta. These eligible expenditures would apply to technical and creative staff costs. We know that this is important because we have been disadvantaged compared to other jurisdictions in Canada and the United States where they offer similar programs. When the talent here gets to a certain ability to develop or be involved with these industries, we lose them to other jurisdictions where they have been able to grow beyond what we have been able to do here in Alberta. While these companies are amazing, they would actually be able to not only retain but attract the best talent.

We see that Alberta has been doing a really good job of growing our knowledge economy. We see that Google selected the University of Alberta for its DeepMind project. It's a small industry there right now, that is developing, but we know it has incredible potential. It allows us to leverage companies that are interested in doing high-tech things, whether it's in food processing or manufacturing. We need to have these incredibly well-educated and talented people within Alberta to grow that economy here.

We also know how important that diversification is to growing our knowledge economy. We know that our natural resources are absolutely a strength of ours. We are showing that commitment through Bill 1. We know that that will be a part of our economy going forward, but we have to be able to look towards the future and see how we continue to compete across multiple sectors as opposed to just one sector.

I think it's also good to talk about how we can support good Internet connectivity when we look at how this is going to roll out because, of course, to have good digital media talent, we have to look across the province. So this, coupled with how we develop Internet connectivity in rural Alberta, I think, will be really important to work together.

We know that the growth has been incredible. Back in the '90s there were just a few studios, and now there are 55. They employ 540 full-time workers. They make an average of $71,300, so these are good family-supporting jobs, and the industry contributes between $50 million and $80 million to our GDP. We have been talking to these stakeholders, and they've been advocating for a long time because they know that we have been unfortunately disadvantaged compared to places like San Francisco and Quebec and Ontario, where we have been losing some of our best talent. So through this program we will be able to, as a province, through a policy, be able to better support these industries.

With that . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2.1) the House stands adjourned until 1:30 p.m.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, March 20, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a real pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature three classes from St. Mary elementary school in the riding of Edmonton-Whitemud. It's actually quite close to my constituency office in Riverbend Square. The students are accompanied by their teachers, Mr. Richard Harris, Mrs. Olga Dos Santos, Ms Nancy McNeill, and Mrs. Jennifer Hudon, and also their chaperones, Ms Luiza Klebek, Mrs. Jill Davis, and Mrs. Kristina Givens. I'd ask them to rise – I think they're spread throughout the gallery – and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the school group from Muriel Martin school. The students today are accompanied by their teachers, Mrs. Jody Bialowas and Mrs. Heather McDonald, and they are accompanied by parents – I'm sorry; I'm going to butcher this – Mr. Justin Douzich and Mrs. Kira Douzich. I would ask them all to rise today and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups?

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Merci, M. le Président. Je suis heureux de présenter à vous et aux membres de cette Assemblée des représentants de la Francophonie albertaine. Ces personnes sont ici aujourd'hui pour célébrer la 30e Journée internationale de la Francophonie et le premier Mois de la Francophonie albertaine. Aujourd'hui nous accueillons des représentants de la communauté qui appuient et qui favorisent la promotion et le développement des communautés d'expression française à l'Alberta. Grâce à leur travail et à leur dévouement, appuyés par de nombreux Albertains, notre province est accueillante et inclusive.

Je vous présente donc M. Marc Arnal et Mme Marie-Laure Polydore, membres du conseil d'administration de l'Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta; et Mme Isabelle Laurin, directrice générale. Se joignant à eux aujourd'hui sont des conseillers et des administrateurs scolaires des quatre conseils scolaires francophones de la province, M. Étienne Alary et Mme Malorie Aubé, conseillers du Conseil scolaire Centre-Nord; et M. Donald Michaud, directeur exécutif de la Fédération des conseils scolaires francophones de l'Alberta. Et finalement, je souhaite souligner la présence de ma merveilleuse équipe du Secrétariat francophone au ministère de la Culture et du Tourisme. Je souhaite à nos invités de belles célébrations et leur demande de se lever afin de recevoir les souhaits de bienvenue traditionnels de l'Assemblée.

Merci.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly members of the board of the Sixties Scoop Indigenous Society of Alberta, or SSISA. Over the past few months SSISA leaders and members partnered with Minister Feehan and myself to engage with '60s scoop survivors across the province on what a meaningful government apology should look like. Today I'm honoured to introduce from SSISA Adam North Peigan, the president; Sharon Gladue-Paskimin, vice-president; Sandra Relling, treasurer; Kathy Hamelin, director; Lena Wildman, director; Lew Jobs, director; and Orlando Alexis, director. The SSISA board members are joined today by Shelbi Relling, Petra Jobs, and Shandan LaMarche. I ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Ellie Shuster and Greta Gerstner. You know that there's nothing I like doing more than talking about educational issues in Alberta today with fellow educators. Today I had the pleasure of meeting Ellie and Greta, who represent the Strategic Alliance for Alberta Students with Learning Challenges. They were advocating for students with learning challenges by ensuring that there is appropriate teacher training, mandatory early screening for learning and developmental challenges, and the appropriate supports for students. This is an amazing group, and I would ask them to stand and the Members of this Legislative Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my constituent Elisabeth Bourdouleix and her brother David and her parents, Shirley and Xavier. Elisabeth is a sixth-grade student at l'école la Mission, one of two francophone schools in my constituency of St. Albert. It is my honour to welcome her here today to learn about the work we do as provincial representatives. I ask Elisabeth and her entire family to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today for me to introduce Meg Ohsada, an artist based in Calgary who resides in Canmore. She's not only a celebrated artist but also an award-winning athlete representing Canada at the Special Olympics as a figure skater. Meg's work entitled Three Sisters is a beautiful representation of the famed mountain range, with felted wool, that is currently on display at the Alberta Hong Kong office as part of the Indefinite Arts Centre tour of east Asia, which I'll speak more about in my member's statement. Meg is joined by her parents, Noriko and Kaoru, as well as J.S. Ryu, CEO of the Indefinite Arts Centre. I'd ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms McKittrick: M. le Président, it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you Mr. Rob Sproule, co-owner of Salisbury Greenhouse. Rob is joined by his wife, Megan Hahn, and their children Aidan and Brynn Sproule. Salisbury Greenhouse is a third-generation family business that has served Sherwood Park since 1965. Rob has been instrumental in developing the school garden project, which assists schools in establishing schoolyard gardens. Thank you, Rob and Salisbury Greenhouse, for demonstrating that, truly, gardening is all about community. I look forward to spring gardening soon, too. I will ask Rob, Megan, Aidan, and Brynn to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.
Oh, I'm sorry. Another introduction?

Ms McKittrick: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I should have mentioned.

Mr. Speaker, it's also my pleasure to introduce to you and through you guests from the Wecan Food Basket Society: the program manager, Suzanne Rigsby; the board chair, Sacha Deelstra; and the vice-chair, Paige Nelson. For 25 years the Wecan Food Basket Society has given people the opportunity to purchase nutritious food at an affordable price through their food basket program. Wecan has 25 locations throughout Edmonton and surrounding area. Their vision, that every person has the right to enough food to live a good and healthy life, has significantly helped to address the issue of food security in our communities. I thank Wecan for their great work and ask them to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.
The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce guests from the University of Alberta Faculty of Pharmacy and Pharmaceutical Sciences, who are joining us during Pharmacist Awareness Month. We value the significant innovation and contributions made by pharmacy professionals to the health and wellness of Albertans. I now ask that Dr. Neal Davies, Dr. Ravina Sanghera, Jody Shkrobot, and Andrew MacIsaac, who are seated in the public gallery, please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.
Hon. members, are there any other guest introductions? The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Ross Ford, the reeve of the county of Warner, in my riding. Ross is a strong advocate for reasonable species-at-risk legislation. I'd like him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Journée Internationale de la Francophonie

Connolly: Merci, M. le Président. C'est avec une immense fierté que je suis ici aujourd'hui pour célébrer la Journée internationale de la Francophonie. Plus tôt ce mois-ci notre gouvernement a proclamé le mois de mars Mois de la Francophonie albertaine. Cette proclamation réaffirme l'engagement de notre gouvernement de favoriser la reconnaissance de l'histoire, des réussites, et des contributions des Albertains d'expression française.

Les Albertains et les Albertaines d'expression française ont de quoi célébrer cette année, en commençant par l'adoption de la première politique en matière de Francophonie de l'Alberta et l'établissement d'un conseil consultatif en matière de Francophonie. Avant cette adoption l'Alberta était la seule province, avec une autre province, à n'avoir aucune politique à l'appui de la communauté de langue officielle, et nous sommes fiers d'avoir remédié à des années de négligence. Et, M. le Président, il aura fallu plus de 30 ans pour que le drapeau franco-albertain devienne un emblème officiel de la province d'Alberta. En fait, les populations d'expression française de l'Alberta sont parmi les plus nombreuses et les plus diverses au pays, en plus d'y connaître l'une des croissances les plus rapides.

De toute l'histoire de l'Alberta aucun autre gouvernement n'a compté autant de ministres et de députés qui parlent français.

À titre de vice-président de la section de l'Alberta de l'Assemblée parlementaire de la Francophonie, je parle d'expérience en réitérant la présence grandissante du fait français en Alberta, au pays et même dans le monde entier. Je ressens une grande fierté quand je vois que l'énergie ne cesse d'augmenter au sein de la Francophonie de Calgary et de toute la province, et je remercie le ministre de l'Éducation d'avoir autorisé, après des années d'inaction, la construction de nouvelles écoles francophones, qui garantissent à notre communauté sa place en Alberta.

Je suis fier aujourd'hui d'affirmer que nous continuerons d'appuyer nos communautés franco-albertaines.

Merci.

[Translation] Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with incredible pride that I stand today to celebrate Journée internationale de la Francophonie. Earlier this month our government proclaimed March as le Mois de la Francophonie Albertaine. This proclamation fulfills our government's commitment to improve recognition of French-speaking Albertans' history, achievements, and contributions.

French-speaking Albertans have much to celebrate this year, starting with Alberta's first French policy and the establishment of a Francophonie advisory council. Up until now Alberta was one of only two provinces without a policy supporting the official language community, a legacy of neglect that we are proud to correct. And, Mr. Speaker, it took over 30 years for the Franco-Albertan flag to become an official emblem of the province of Alberta. In fact, Alberta has one of the largest, fastest growing, and culturally diverse French-speaking populations in the country.

Our government has more ministers and MLAs who speak French than any other government in the history of Alberta.

As vice-president of the Alberta section of the Assemblée parlementaire de la Francophonie, APF, I can speak from personal experience about the growing French-speaking presence in Alberta, across our country, and even the world. I am incredibly proud of the growing strength of our Francophonie in Calgary and across Alberta, and I have to thank the Minister of Education for finally building, after years of neglect, new francophone schools, which secures our community's place in Alberta.

Today I stand proudly and say we will always stand with our Franco-Albertan communities. [As submitted]

Ryan McBeath

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, it is with a very, very heavy heart today that I rise to say a few words about a young man of such promise who lost his life one week ago. Only a senior at the Olds high school, in many ways Ryan McBeath was Alberta's son. An honours student, a friend to everyone he met, Ryan genuinely brought joy to those around him. A promising young player, Ryan played most of his midget hockey in Red Deer, ultimately playing triple-A midget with the Optimist Chiefs, and was an associate player for the AJHL Drumheller Dragons. Praised by his teammates for his physical and mental toughness, Ryan was a leader on and off the ice.

Our community, our region, and our province have all lost a great young man of outstanding character, who always tried to play his game and live his life in the right way. Ryan's loss is not fair, and looking for reasons is senseless and can only provide cold comfort. Far better to remember this young man, how he lit up the lives of so many, and do our best to live up to his memory.

It is my hope that we can use this tragic event to each love our families and care for our community a little more. I ask that each of you take a moment to reflect on the impact of Ryan's life and say a prayer for those who loved him and who feel his loss so deeply. To the Minister of Education, who was Ryan's cousin: know that all of us in this House are with you today as you mourn the loss of this special young man.

On behalf of our community I want to thank the Red Deer Rebels, Don Cherry, all of Ryan's friends and teammates, the Olds high school, and everyone who continues to help us remember one of the best that our province has had.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

School Nutrition Programs

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. March is Nutrition Month. As parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Education I have visited school nutrition program sites throughout the province. Hungry students cannot concentrate on learning. This program is a universal program which every student can access.

After a successful pilot the government expanded the program to include all 62 school authorities for the 2017-2018 school year. Each board receives funding to support the delivery of nutrition programs tailored to their school communities, feeding students and modelling nutrition best practices. Each program is as unique as the schools and communities in which they are located. This government investment, in partnership with communities, is making a difference in the health and learning outcomes of children, in nurturing a greater awareness of food security in our communities, and in the challenges faced by many to put healthy food on their tables.

Strathcona county family and community services, through the parent link centre, is a community partner with Wecan Food Basket Society. Every month Wecan provides members with fresh meat, fresh fruit, and a variety of fresh vegetables for a flat rate of $25. They continue to provide individuals and families who are struggling come month-end with enough healthy food to make it to the end of the month. This year they are celebrating their 25th anniversary.

Salisbury Greenhouse, under the leadership of Rob Sproule, who I introduced earlier, has worked with many of our local schools to develop vegetable gardens and teach children about growing their own food. This program has been a success, and it's expanding to most schools in partnership with Strathcona county's urban agriculture strategy. Woodbridge Farms school is a great example of how they have incorporated their community garden into the curriculum. Thank you to Salisbury Greenhouse for your commitment to healthy eating and education for our students.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate how community leadership and provincial support from the Ministry of Education for nutrition programs is giving students the opportunity to learn about healthy eating.

Thank you.

Government Energy Policies

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, when I have discussions with Albertans about this NDP government, they often tell me that they have a hard time understanding or even believing what the NDP stand for. Frankly, I don't blame them. I have a hard time keeping track of their latest public stance as well. One would almost think, by listening to the Premier of late, that they have seen the light about the UCP's positions and ideas and are ready to get onboard.

Let's take pipelines for an example, Mr. Speaker. Members of the NDP have in the past been found at pipeline protests. That's a fact that Albertans haven't forgotten. Even the Premier on at least one occasion found herself amongst these antipipeline activists. Now, one year before the next election, we see a complete 180-degree change in their attitude. The NDP caucus is so excited to share their new-found support for pipelines that they have taken to texting hundreds of thousands of Albertans to spread the good news.

Mr. Speaker, if you're having a hard time following their flip-flops, just think of how confused Albertans are. Even when it comes to resource development more broadly, Albertans have a lot of conflicting information coming at them. On the one hand, the Premier tells people that she is a champion for our industry and that she is doing them a great favour by buying them social licence through saddling them with the unpopular carbon tax. On the other hand, their own Alberta NDP constitution, which you can find on their website, under appendix C states: "Meeting human material needs must not use more of Earth's resources than can be renewed within each generation." If the NDP's pipeline protestations haven't got Albertans scratching their heads, this statement in their constitution surely must.

Mr. Speaker, if the NDP want Albertans to believe they have really changed the way they feel about Alberta's oil and gas industry, they may want to change their constitution to reflect their new New Democratic Party position.

Indefinite Arts Centre

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, the Indefinite Arts Centre is Canada's oldest and largest disability arts organization. This organization serves more than 300 artists living with developmental disabilities who come to the centre to create incredible works of art with the support of the centre's dedicated staff and volunteers. The centre was recently given a grant by the ministry of community services so that they can expand their hours and give artists increased studio time.

On January 17 Indefinite Arts held its Launchpad event at the Dialog design gallery in Calgary, where artwork was on display from more than 30 artists. Seeing their work first-hand isn't just meant to change the way we think about people living with developmental disabilities; it's also meant to reignite a sense of pride in our province, knowing that the government of Alberta and indeed all Albertans play a critical role in supporting organizations like Indefinite Arts Centre.

Mr. Speaker, you'll be pleased to know that the works of those 30 artists featured at the Launchpad event have recently made their way to Asia in order to showcase a whole new side of Alberta on the global stage. Those works of art had their opening last week and are currently on display at the Alberta Hong Kong office thanks to support received from the consulate general of Canada in Hong Kong, the Ministry of Economic Development and Trade, and the Alberta Foundation for the Arts. With the art created at the Indefinite Arts Centre eventually making its way to Seoul, Korea, for display at the national disability arts and culture centre, Alberta will be showcased not only as a great place for trade and investment but also as a place embodying inclusivity, diversity, and creativity.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to ask all members of this House to join me in congratulating J.S. Ryu, the CEO of Indefinite Arts Centre, their entire team of staff and volunteers, and, most importantly, the artists like Meg Ohsada, whose works will be proudly representing Alberta in Asia this year.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Carbon Levy Rate

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At various times the hon. the Premier has said that she will proceed with a 67 per cent increase in Alberta's carbon tax if a pipeline is approved or if construction begins or if construction is completed or if oil moves through that pipeline, so I'm here to ask today: what's her position today? What is the necessary condition for her to increase her carbon tax by 67 per cent?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I've said quite consistently since before the Kinder Morgan pipeline was approved by the federal government and since then is that when the federal government came out with the pan-Canadian framework, Alberta would support it in return for ensuring that the pipeline is completed. Now, to be clear, it may well be that the pan-Canadian framework will come into effect while the pipeline is still well in construction, and we'll certainly give that some consideration then. The issue is that the two go together, and we will ensure . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Will the Premier commit to not raising the carbon tax above $50 a tonne under any condition?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I've said many times is that looking forward at least six years at this point, we have absolutely no plan to go above $50. Indeed, we would not even get to that point if, again, as I say, we don't see the Kinder Morgan pipeline well into construction, with everyone clearly understanding that it's going to be complete, something that I actually do think is going to happen. That's the position that we've taken. It's the same position we've taken all along. The two go together. The climate change leadership plan and the pipeline go together. That's why we're going to get it built.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, in the Premier's view, a carbon tax has to be how high in order to achieve Paris greenhouse gas emission targets?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I think what's really important here is that the member opposite ought to stop reaching out to reports that have nothing to do with this government in order to fearmonger and in order, quite frankly, to distract the attention of Albertans from the fact that he can't even get folks in his caucus to agree that human-caused climate change is real. I suppose that part of the reason for that is that we can't get the leader himself to say the words that human-caused climate change is real. The fact of the matter is that our plan is going to reduce emissions. We are proud of that, we are making progress, and we're going to keep doing it.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Once again, human-caused climate change is real. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Kenney: What's not real is that we don't have a Premier, Mr. Speaker, who's actually willing to answer straightforward, factual questions. So let me try. I think this is maybe the sixth or seventh time. Does the government of Alberta have a position about how high a carbon tax has to be in order to achieve global greenhouse gas emission targets? Is she accusing Environment Canada of being fearmongers? Do they agree with Environment Canada that it has to be $300 a tonne? Do they agree with their own adviser, Professor Leach, that it has to be $200 a tonne? These are not unreasonable questions. It would be nice if the Premier tried to answer them.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What we agree with is the plan that we have implemented thus far because we have made a decision that we in Alberta are going to do our part as Canadians to bring down emissions. As a result of the climate leadership plan that this government brought in, we will see emissions reduced from a business-as-usual case of well over 310 megatonnes down to around 225 megatonnes by 2030. What we see there is real change, real improvements, something that had been long overdue under the leadership of the previous Conservative government not only in Alberta but . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Yet again she refuses to answer, Mr. Speaker.

Today the Finance minister donned his virtual reality goggles to prepare for his virtual reality budget, which he says is going to be balanced by 2023. Does that projection of balance include the 67 per cent increase in revenues from the carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, what we know is that we have said very definitively to Albertans that we will lay out a path to balance that they can look at and they can evaluate, unlike the members opposite, who can only talk about things like a $700 million tax cut for the top 1 per cent without ever talking to Albertans about what they'd cut to achieve that. We will lay out our path to balance on Thursday, and I suggest that the member stay tuned.

Mr. Kenney: So for the record the government is refusing to rule out a carbon tax increase in their fiscal plan, Mr. Speaker.

On the latter point the Premier talks about how this government raised personal and business taxes as well as property taxes. Is the Premier aware that three years later – three years later – revenues from personal income and business taxes are down even though they've raised the rate? Will she admit that this is a fiscal failure of her government?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I will do is say that as a government we have a responsibility to look at all the evidence and to understand that sometimes more than one factor contributes to certain outcomes. In this case what we had was a precipitous drop in the price of oil and the largest recession in a couple of generations and a number of people who lost their jobs. Absolutely, income tax and corporate tax went down because we were in a recession. Thanks to the decisions of this government, we are now coming out of it. Things are looking up, jobs are up, income is up, exports are up, and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Provincial Fiscal Policies and Energy Policies

Mr. Kenney: What's up, Mr. Speaker, since the NDP came to office, is unemployment. What's up are business bankruptcies. What's up are taxes. What's up is the debt, which is on track to being quadrupled, nearly a billion dollars a month that they are borrowing.

But the question for the Premier is this. She says that we're just the passive victims of commodity prices. Will she acknowledge that investment in oil and gas all around the world is up, partly driven by investment that has fled Alberta?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, absolutely under no circumstances will I acknowledge such a thing. In fact, what I will do is say that our government has the backs of Albertans and that we are coming out of this recession and that, in fact, we have managed to recover about 90,000 jobs. We know we have more to do. That has been our commitment from the very outset. What we won't do is cut our way to success. We will not give a tax break to the top 1 per cent of friends and insiders and somehow claim that that is the path to economic recovery because what the evidence shows is that it is not.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, what the evidence shows is that they raised personal income taxes and taxes on employers and that revenues are down from those sources, one of the reasons that they've been mortgaging our future with the quadrupling of our debt, projected by the bond-rating agencies' six credit downgrades.

Mr. Speaker, the question is this. Does the government absolutely commit that it will not raise the carbon tax as part of its fiscal plan?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, what I've said is that the member opposite can stay tuned for the budget on Thursday. Of course, you know, we know full well that at this point we plan to go along with the federal plan, which does involve an increase of $40, then to $50 in 2021, so that's not news. What I will say, though, is that the member opposite – when you look at those folks, those 100,000-plus people who lost their jobs a couple of years ago, if you had gone to them and said that our answer is to give those who are still employed, making lots and lots of money, a billion-dollar tax break, I'm pretty sure . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier said that Tzeporah Berman, her hand-picked co-chair of the oil sands advisory group, only came out with views that were opposed to our energy industry after her appointment. It was a great shock to the NDP, even though the same person said in 2011 that we need to shut down the tar sands and that our oil sands feel like Mordor, another word for hell. So will the Premier admit that it was just a big mistake? Her environment minister is now blaming the energy companies for appointing Tzeporah Berman, who is now supporting law-breaking activity to stop the pipeline. Can they just admit that it was a bad call?

2:00

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I can admit is that the climate leadership plan has put us closer to building a pipeline than ever, and what I can admit is that while I understand that the member opposite thinks he can make hay by waving the white flag and predicting the demise of the pipeline – and probably he's inclined to do that because after 10 years in Ottawa he couldn't get a pipeline built – the fact of the matter is that the climate leadership plan is part of an overall strategy that this government embarked upon to get a pipeline built to tidewater. We are closer than ever. I hope that the member opposite will celebrate the success when it happens.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Carbon Levy and Greenhouse Gas Emission Reduction

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I door-knock in my constituency or pretty much anywhere all around Alberta, the issue I hear more about than any other is the carbon tax, and when the Alberta Party's new leader, Stephen Mandel, travels the province, the same thing happens. Now, most Albertans agree with the need for action on climate change, and so does the Alberta Party, but there's confusion about the connection between the way this government's carbon tax is structured and actual emission reductions. To the Premier: what specific metrics do you have that show the connection between your carbon tax and actual CO₂ emission reductions?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, what we have are the projections through our climate leadership plan, which show that we are likely to see reductions in emissions from business as usual at around 320 megatonnes to roughly 225 megatonnes by 2030. That will happen through a number of different strategies. The implementation of a carbon tax or a carbon levy, which, of course, is something that most experts believe brings about behavioural change that results in a reduction in emissions, combined with the additional incentives that we are applying to renewable energy and to innovation is how we . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, unlike the Official Opposition, the Alberta Party believes that climate change is real, it is human caused, and it is a problem that we must innovate our way out of. But, having said that, the Albertans I talk with tell me they don't understand that connection between increasing their home, farm, and business heating bills and solving climate change. Again to the Premier: what percentage reduction of natural gas demand for home heating, businesses, farms, and not-for-profits do you expect as a result of your carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, most experts in the field will outline that there are a number of features to any program that is designed to reduce emissions. One of them, through a carbon levy, through a carbon tax, is to slowly bring about change in people's behaviours, whether they are individuals or otherwise. Now, as the member opposite knows, 60 per cent of Alberta households actually get a rebate, so in fact they can come out ahead if they are able to make the changes that we talked about. In addition, that money is going towards efforts to reduce emissions, whether it be through efficiency, through renewable energy, through innovation, and we know that that . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Clark: So if they get a rebate, they're not going to consume less, so we don't produce less carbon, so your plan has no effect. But here's the challenge. Total consumer and commercial demand only makes up about 13 per cent of natural gas use in Alberta, so it's important to fish where the fish are, and the carbon-emitting fish are not in the home heating pond. They're not with commercial users or farms or the many not-for-profits, who have been unfairly targeted by this government. To the Premier: given that your carbon tax won't have the stated effect of actually reducing carbon emissions, will you commit to eliminating the carbon tax on home heating, small businesses, farms, and not-for-profits?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I will commit to do is to carry on with the climate leadership plan, that was developed in consultation with industry leaders, with communities, with indigenous communities, with environmentalists, because as a whole this package is designed to reduce emissions across the economy, across the full sector. Some have more to contribute than others, but it doesn't mean that everyone doesn't have something to contribute. We have implemented it in a way that supports families, supports communities, brings down emissions, and innovates and actually ultimately generates more economic growth, and we're proud of that.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Red Deer College

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 1, after a very long, 25-year struggle, our government announced that Red Deer College is finally on the road to degree-granting status, ensuring that students will no longer have to uproot their lives to complete their education. This announcement means that students and their families will no longer have the financial and emotional burden of leaving the community that they are a part of. Would the minister be able to elaborate on the process that RDC and the province will embark on and maybe give a time frame for this exciting transformation?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank my hon. friend for her advocacy on behalf of the community of Red Deer in helping make this happen. Our government is committed to ensuring that every Albertan has access to affordable, high-quality education regardless of their location in the province. Many Albertans go to RDC to fulfill their dreams, and that's why I'm very proud to support this initiative to give it degree-granting status. But becoming a university takes time, and we know that offering additional degree programs doesn't happen overnight. That's why our government is going to work with Red Deer College and the Campus Alberta Quality Council to make sure that the degrees that they offer meet the needs of the local community.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is something that Red Deer has been waiting for for many, many years. When will they be able to start offering degree programs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We are still very early in the process, but we are committed to making sure that Red Deer College goes down this path to degree-granting status. We're working to make sure that all of our colleges and universities have the resources they need, and that's why we've provided annual 2 per cent increases in their operating grants every year along with additional backfill funding to support the tuition freeze. Our opponents, on the other hand, would of course make significant cuts to universities and colleges to pay for their billion-dollar tax break for wealthy individuals and corporations. We're not going to let that happen. We're going to make life better for students.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government recently announced that it intends to provide funding for postsecondary programs in the tech sector. Will this funding be available for RDC?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for that question as well. I was very pleased to announce with the Minister of Economic Development and Trade our $43 million investment in the creation of 3,000 new tech spaces in universities and colleges all across the province. This is a really exciting initiative that will support the development of the high-tech sector here in Alberta. We are also going to seek the advice of experts on how we should allocate those monies and where those spaces should be created, and I look forward to engaging in that process and supporting students in receiving the high-tech education that Albertans need.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Pharmacy Funding Framework

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a recent poll 95 per cent of Albertans said that pharmacists were the most accessible health care professionals. Now, Alberta's 5,000 pharmacists are trusted front-line health care professionals in every sense of the word, and that's why it's baffling to understand why Alberta Health forced the provincial Pharmacists' Association, the RxA, to sign a nondisclosure agreement during recent negotiations on a new pharmacy funding framework. To the Health minister: for a government that prides itself on openness and transparency, why was it necessary to muzzle trusted front-line professionals with a gag order?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. We respect that negotiations happen at the table, and like is the case with all organizations that we're negotiating with, including unionized groups, what we asked for is: before you communicate with your members, please let us know what you'll be saying. That is standard practice, and we're proud to continue that. We're also proud of the fact that we came up with an agreement that sees a 4.3 per cent increase, which is very reasonable, to ensure that we have access for drugs across Alberta and that we're making sure that that results in the best outcomes for patients.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's certainly not what the pharmacy association has told me. Given that the pharmacists administered over 50 per cent of the flu vaccinations in Alberta last year and given that Alberta Health has failed to meet its own vaccination targets for the past three years and given that the new funding framework cuts the fee paid to pharmacists for administering flu vaccine to a level where it is no longer economically viable for them to provide this service, to the minister: in the interest of public health will you at least consider restoring the previous fee paid to pharmacists for administering flu vaccinations?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the formula was reached in the past with the previous government, which the member was a part of, and that fee was 50 per cent higher than the next-highest jurisdiction in Canada. So what we've done is that we've brought that fee in line to still be the highest in Canada but not to be an outlier by 50 per cent. We did that in partnership with pharmacists, the RxA, and I'm really proud of the fact that we came to a good outcome there.

2:10

Dr. Starke: Well, you did it behind closed doors under a gag order. Given that pharmacists are taxpayers, too, and they support effective measures to reduce health care spending, provided that it does not harm patient care, and given that the RxA provided the government's hired third-party negotiator with over 40 recommendations for cost savings, none of which were incorporated into the final agreement, to the minister: why did your hired-gun negotiator ignore the recommendations of Alberta pharmacists?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What we did is that we sat down at the table in a respectful way with our budget, which has, as you'll see from last year's budget, a 4.3 per cent increase, and we said that these 12 per cent increases that were reached because of policies under the former government are not fair to Albertans, they're not fair to patients, and we need to find a way to be more sustainable. What we did is that we sat down with both parties and agreed on a formula that will get us there. I understand that perhaps the member opposite wants to defend policies that saw skyrocketing costs at the cost of patient outcomes, but on this side of the House we're always going to put patients first, and we're going to do so in a sustainable way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Oil Sands Advisory Group Former Co-chair

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On May 4, 2017, the Deputy Premier stated:

We brought people to the table who traditionally have been adversarial, and instead we got good results, which includes two pipelines. I'm not going to apologize for getting good results for Alberta.

Will the Deputy Premier now admit that having Ms Berman on the panel didn't result in two pipelines and, in fact, resulted in her own appointee fighting against pipelines and fighting against Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the reminder that we have, because of this government on this side instead of a Conservative government here and a Conservative government in Ottawa, actually gotten approvals. We've gotten two significant approvals that are important for our economy. Construction has already started on line 3 – it's well under way – and we absolutely are moving forward on Kinder Morgan. We will not stop at anything that is in our way. We're going to keep moving forward, keep getting good outcomes for Albertans, and that includes getting our product to tidewater, something that the Official Opposition's leader failed to do over many years in Ottawa.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, I'm asking specifically about the government-appointed woman who is currently fighting our pipelines, right now, as we speak.

On May 4, 2017, again, the Deputy Premier said:

Ms Berman has been effective in working with a number of industry leaders. A number of people joined the table and got good results for Alberta, including two pipelines, and we're going to make sure that we continue to get good access to international markets, which helps Albertans.

What happened?

Ms Hoffman: What happened is a trip down memory lane. We got two pipeline approvals, Mr. Speaker. Two. Line 3 is well under construction, getting our product to the east. Kinder Morgan has had the approvals. We're moving forward. We're not going to stop any time soon because we need to make sure that we get our product to tidewater, something that this province has deserved. We have everything in this province except for a coastline, and that's why we need to work collaboratively to make sure we can get our products to that coastline so that we can get the very best price and so that everybody in Alberta has the opportunity to benefit from the prosperity that we have here. That's why I'm so proud that we have both of those pipelines approved. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, we've got police officers right now on the ground getting injured by protesters in B.C., one of which happens to be Ms Berman. Will the government admit it was a mistake to put Ms Berman on the panel in the first place?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, what I will admit is that we brought forward a climate leadership plan shortly after taking government, one that had been ignored by the previous government, that had 44 years to do so. We had a Conservative government in Ottawa for many years that failed to act in a way that could ensure that we got the kinds of approvals that brought us forward to getting Kinder Morgan approved. So what I will admit is that on this side of the House we came up with a plan. Our plan got approvals. We've already got one pipeline well under construction, and the other one will be forthcoming. This side gets results; that side complains.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Carbon Levy Rate (continued)

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In November 2016 the Premier said in relation to her government's carbon tax, quote: we have never outlined that $30 was where it was going to stop; people who talk about effective carbon pricing acknowledge that as time progresses, it needs to go up. Unquote. Premier, just how effective do you plan to make your carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, our price on carbon is at $30 per tonne, which is where the price on carbon in British Columbia has been for some time. The federal government has announced their intention to bring in a federal price on carbon. So Alberta had a choice. We could move forward with a plan that worked for Albertans and that resulted last year in Canada's fastest economic growth and this year in Canada's fastest economic growth. We could take that plan, or we could take a plan made by Mr. Trudeau in the Prime Minister's office. We chose a made-in-Alberta solution.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier has said that she had no choice but to introduce a carbon tax because a federally imposed one was coming down the pike anyway so we had best create our own made-in-Alberta version and given that the Premier is now saying, "That plan was independent. The issue subsequently around additional levies is definitely linked to the pipeline," Premier, why did you ally yourself with the Trudeau Liberals and burden Albertans with an unnecessary tax when your Ottawa friends have done nothing to ensure the building of this pipeline?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the pipeline was approved with specific reference to the climate leadership plan. But it's also really important to note that a federally imposed carbon-pricing framework would not serve Alberta, so we got to work right away. We rolled up our sleeves, we worked with industry on a system of output-based allocations for our large emitters and an economy-wide price that works for all Albertans. We are seeing record economic growth in terms of setting the pace for the country. We're seeing diversification as well.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gill: Mr. Speaker, the environment minister must be talking about some other province's economic growth because it's not happening here.

Given that the NDP's besties, as we know, Karen Mahon and Tzeporah Berman are protesting against pipelines and that today the environment minister said on the radio that the oil and gas industry wanted these two protestors on the advisory committee, Premier, since your government has failed completely to obtain a pipeline, will you tell Albertans the truth now, that the carbon tax had nothing to do with the pipeline and that your social licence, your carbon tax have completely failed?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the situation we inherited, the dead end that previous Conservative governments both federally and provincially drove us into, was one where we couldn't get our products to tidewater, and we were having nonstarter conversations on Alberta's climate record. That's why oil companies engaged with environmental groups far before our government took office, companies like Suncor and Shell, CNRL, Cenovus, Conoco, and had those conversations on how to get out from that dead end that certainly Mr. Harper's government had driven us into and 44 years of provincial Conservative governments had driven us into. We are the government that pulled us out of that dead end.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Carbon Levy and Education Costs

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. School boards across Alberta have voiced serious concerns about the carbon tax. The Rocky View school division recently wrote a public letter to parents stating that they anticipate having a $1 million shortfall in the transportation budget. This school division pays $360,000 per year in carbon tax alone. They've become so desperate that they are considering transferring funds out of the classroom to cover the transportation budget shortfall. To the Minister of Education: can you explain how transferring money out of the classroom to cover the cost of the carbon tax will improve educational outcomes for our children?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I have been engaged in constructive conversations with the Rocky View school board in regard to transportation, in regard to their very fast-growing student enrolment population. You know, we built six new schools in the Rocky View district here in the last couple of years – I'm very proud of that – and it's indicative of the investment that we have made in Rocky View and right across the province, more than $790 million, more money than would have been invested if the Conservative government was to have taken the government in the last election.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess no answer there. I'll try again.

Given that the High Prairie school division recently stated that they would pay roughly $62,000 in carbon tax at the initial $20-per-tonne price and given that this cost increased by $31,000 because of the increase in the price of the carbon tax, which the board chair described as being comparable to the cost of hiring an additional teacher, again to the minister: can the minister explain how having fewer teachers in the classroom is a positive step forward for rural education?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said before, we have made significant investments in school boards in regard to enrolment, in regard to capital expenditure, and in regard to transportation as well. We had transportation on our list. We had it as part of the bill in the last session, to review the long outdated transportation formulas and so forth. We're working hard, and we're making investments using the carbon money to invest in infrastructure in schools, to make them more efficient, to save money, and to provide education opportunities for students around climate change.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the minister told school boards in the fall of 2016, "You will not be left in a deficit position as part of the climate leadership plan," and given that he went on to say of the carbon tax, "We will work to ensure that you are first in line for the money from the funds,” and given that the carbon tax is causing transportation and budgetary shortfalls for school boards across Alberta and given that the minister is pulling $3 million out of the transportation budget, again to the minister: will you go back to the drawing board, sit down with school boards, and figure out a way to stop handcuffing their budgets with your inane . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I have had constructive engagements with all of our school boards. We work together to find solutions in order to move students to school in a safe manner, to ensure that there are teachers in the classroom, and that we make those capital investments in schools. What is not constructive is when certain people from the members opposite use this same information to try to promote themselves, to try to use this as a political wedge issue, and to not represent the information and the situation as it really is in our fine school system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Trampoline Safety Standards

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year a resident of my riding suffered an injury while attending a local trampoline park. A tragic injury led this young man to suffer a broken neck, resulting in paralysis from the chest down. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what standards are currently in place to protect the safety of consumers?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for the question. I know she is a fierce advocate for her constituents and has been on this issue. Currently the international standard is set out by the American society for testing and materials. Alberta is a member of this body and contributes on proposals to organizations. The government is working with the Safety Codes Council, industry, and safety systems experts to determine the appropriateness of government regulation in this industry. The government of Alberta is committed to the protection and safety of Albertan consumers.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how are the standards developed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned, the American society for testing and materials, the international safety standards organization, has developed standards for trampoline parks operating in North America. The elevating devices and amusement rides administrator represents Alberta on ASTM standard committees and provides regular input on development of standards created for the amusement ride industry. The safety of Albertans, obviously, is a top priority for our government. I was deeply concerned to hear of this accident and accidents like this, and we will continue to work to explore solutions.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: as I know this issue affects not only Sherwood Park but everywhere throughout the province, what steps are you and the ministry taking to address the concerns?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. The ASTM recently released an updated standard for trampoline parks, in early 2018, and the government is working with the Safety Codes Council to review it with industry and safety system experts. I've also instructed my department to explore other potential regulatory solutions and my legal department to examine the potential precedent such a solution would entail across other muscular propulsion activities. I encourage all Albertans involved in extreme sports or any sports to take appropriate precautions and be aware of the risks involved in those activities.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Carbon Levy Rebates for Seniors

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When this government rolled out carbon tax rebate cheques, they bragged about how the money would be used to help those less fortunate like seniors. Low-income seniors living in subsidized housing pay 30 per cent of their gross income for rent. Revenue Canada does not consider these rebates as income, yet we have been told that the minister of seniors very quietly decided to allow the government housing foundations to include these rebates as seniors' income for rent calculation purposes, forcing seniors to pay higher rent. To the minister of seniors: is that really so?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we're making life better by protecting front-line care and making life more affordable for seniors in Alberta as part of our overall investment in affordable housing and in seniors' services. We've got 260,000 seniors eligible to receive up to $300 annually from the carbon levy rebate. We've also provided a $500,000 grant to the four largest housing management bodies to conduct energy efficiency audits on provincially owned affordable housing units. We're continuing to work for seniors, not against them.

Mr. Orr: So seniors' rent is included, and they do pay higher rent.

Given that the government has committed to the federal carbon tax scheme, which would see a further 67 per cent increase to the carbon tax and, we assume, a proportionate increase to seniors' rent, funding carbon tax, really, on the backs of low-income seniors, has the government bothered to do any analysis whatsoever on how this will impact seniors in our province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, rather than having a federally designed carbon-pricing system imposed on us, as the Leader of the Official Opposition would prefer given that he spends a lot of time thinking about Ottawa, I prefer to have a made-in-Alberta solution. That's why we have the seniors' rebates that we do and the rebates for all low- and middle-income Albertans, and that's why we are investing in things like energy efficiency retrofits and so on. We'll have more to say about that with respect to seniors' programs as we go ahead.

Mr. Orr: Wow. What a dodge.

To the minister of seniors again. Since we know that this tax affects everything that low-income seniors buy, from gas in their cars to groceries at the store, how could you as minister use this rebate to force a carbon tax increase in rent from an already low-income senior who depends on subsidies, especially after they spent their lives building this province from the ground up?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, low- and middle-income Albertans, two-thirds of Albertans, in fact, are eligible for a rebate, $300 per individual and more for couples.

In addition to that, this government protected more than $800 million in seniors' benefits over the last two years. Those are seniors' benefits that would have been on the chopping block had the members opposite been making decisions, Mr. Speaker, and that's because they'd have to do those cuts in order to pay for tax cuts for their wealthy friends.

Provincial Renewable Energy Contracts

Mr. Cooper: This government has made a complete and utter mess of the entire electricity system. It all started with a rash and ideological decision to make changes that forced companies like Enmax and Capital Power to turn back their power purchase agreements. This was allowed because of a change-in-law clause that the government knew about or should have known about. To the minister. You're currently signing multiyear, multi hundred million dollar contracts for renewable energy. Is there a change-in-law clause in any of those contracts? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, certainly, we have taken action over backroom deals, that were made many years ago by the previous Conservative government, to protect Albertans. In the deregulation we saw price spikes, which we have taken action against so that customers can see a reliable electricity system and predictable bills.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, it sounds to me like the minister wasn't a hundred per cent sure, so I'll give her another opportunity to answer the very simple question. Is there a change-in-law clause in the renewable contracts? Yes or no? Or is the minister unsure?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, as we transition to 30 per cent renewables by 2030, we are working hard to protect Alberta families from price spikes, which we've seen in previous decades. You know, we struck deals with our power companies in the transition. We are transitioning towards fair bills, a reliable system, and sustainability in our system as well.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given that this minister made a decision that cost Albertans well over $800 million based upon a change-in-law clause, the question is very simple. Is there a change-in-law clause in the renewable contracts that she is currently signing? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's interesting that our Conservative opposition here is defending a backroom deal that was made many decades ago regarding a change in law that was done in the backrooms and was in favour of the businesses rather than regular Albertans. I'm pleased to say that we've struck the last deal with Enmax. It's fair to Enmax, it's fair to our province, and it's fair to Albertans. It has no impact on Albertans. You know, as I've mentioned many times, these are deals that are good for Albertans. It's interesting that our opposition continues to defend backroom deals.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

International Cargo and Passenger Air Service

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Attracting and retaining international passenger and cargo flights is an integral part of supporting international market access for Alberta. If you can't get your product to market, you have no market at all. To the Minister of Transportation. Key international cargo and passenger flights provide lift to our growing economy. What are you and your department specifically doing to attract and retain these key trade links?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of initiatives that our government has undertaken, including partnering with our two airports, Edmonton International Airport and YYC. They participated on previous trade missions. We're working in lockstep with them as they continue to attract not only companies but also attract those crucial cargo flights. As the member accurately points out, we need to get our products to tidewater, and our government has been very proactive on this and will continue to work with our businesses to increase their market access to markets around the world. We have 12 international offices, and I'm very proud of the work that we're doing with industry.

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, given that China is obviously a key market for a variety of Alberta products and given that the minister of economic development has been to China numerous times and must understand the importance of retaining current international flights and given that it has been brought to my attention that both Air China Cargo and Cathay Pacific Cargo are experiencing challenges, to the minister: could you please provide an update on the status of these flights and what you and your government are doing to retain them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned earlier, there are a number of things that our government is doing working with our airports to support the expansion of flights. Under our government we've seen a number of new flights, both passenger and cargo. We continue to work closely with Edmonton International, which is where the Air China Cargo flights are coming out of. I can tell you that it is absolutely critical that we get our products to market. On that front both the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry and the Minister of Energy and I myself have participated in trade missions in order to expand critical trade, and because of it, exports are up.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, given that as of Saturday the twice-weekly Cathay Pacific Cargo flight, carrying 135,000 kilograms of payload per flight from Alberta to Hong Kong, will be cancelled and given that the three-times-weekly Air China Cargo flight, carrying 101,000 kilograms of payload per flight from Alberta to Shanghai, has been suspended and given that neither Economic Development nor Transportation had any contact with at least one of these carriers over the last three years, again to the minister: how can you say you're supporting key trade links when it seems nobody is minding the store?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The premise of the member's question is false. I can tell you again that our government has been working very closely with our airports that work directly with the airlines. We've also had conversations with the airlines in order to look at ways to enhance our cargo service. We will continue to support our businesses and to support our airports in their endeavour to ensure that our businesses are getting their products to the international market. I'm proud of the work that we've done, and I wish the members opposite would be as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Psychiatric Hospital Beds in St. Paul

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I had such good luck pressuring the Health minister for the Lac La Biche dialysis unit that I thought I would try again. The St. Therese health centre in St. Paul was designated as a psychiatric hub for a large portion of northeastern Alberta by AHS. To the minister: are you aware of the significant stress this has put on health care delivery in my community of St. Paul as well as added costs incurred by AHS for transportation, accommodation, and the hiring of contract security to supervise patients because they cannot access beds in the psychiatric unit?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. I've been really proud of some of the investments we've made in his riding. Very recently we opened a new dialysis unit in Lac La Biche, for example, which we know is really good news for northeastern Alberta.

I'd be happy to discuss this matter with him and see if there's something that we can do to address the concerns that he might raise or gather more information that might be helpful in his understanding of the situation as well.

Mr. Hanson: Given, Mr. Speaker, that of the 20 available beds in the psychiatric unit only half of them are being utilized and given that the ER department is often unable to deal with other patients because it is acting as a holding area while waiting for a bed to open, Minister, surely even you must be able to find efficiencies in a $20 billion budget to open existing beds and help alleviate the stress that this lack of beds is having on health care delivery in our community?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We have been effective at finding a number of different efficiencies and using them to invest in communities, including communities in the member's own riding, like the investment of that important dialysis unit, which expands capacity and other opportunities. On this side of the House we believe in public health care. We believe in investing in communities that we know require these services and that are major employers in these communities as well. We're proud to protect and defend public health care. I look forward to opportunities to discuss that in estimates because I'm confident that while the member asks for increased resources today, tomorrow he'll be asking for cuts.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you. Given, Mr. Speaker, that I've made personal requests for a meeting with the minister's office to address this matter and given that a letter was sent to the minister signed by virtually every physician and psychiatrist at the hospital stating their real concerns for patient safety, to the minister: why have you not responded to this crisis situation in St. Paul, and when will you meet with us to address the important issue of public safety?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. As I said in my first response, I'm happy to take some time to meet with the member and discuss this matter more fully with him and with the right staff in the room to support that. As you might imagine, I have a very full calendar. I'm proud to have it that way. This afternoon I'll be meeting with a number of municipalities from AAMD and C; actually, I think it's called RMA now. Of course, I'd be very happy to take the time to meet with the member. This is standard practice in my office. I think we've done it in the past, and I'm happy to do it again.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Misericordia Hospital Emergency Room Capital Plan

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Budget 2016 our government committed capital investments for the Misericordia over four years to improve care for patients accessing the emergency department. This funding is long overdue as more than 51,000 patients visited the Mis emergency in 2015-16, double the capacity of the 48-year-old facility. Construction of the new department is set to begin by late 2018 after the project scope and competitive bid process are finished. Can the Minister of Health please update the House on where we are in the process and if construction will begin on time?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Alberta has the fastest growing economy in Canada, as we know, and things are looking up in Alberta and in our capital city. Growth means more pressure on our older hospital facilities, made worse by years of neglect and budget cuts under previous governments. Albertans can't wait for important services and infrastructure. That's why our government is making investments that matter. Planning and design are well under way, and I would like to thank this specific member for his advocacy in this area.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister please share with the House how this investment will improve the care for those in my community and communities across this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It means shorter wait times and better access to care for patients across Edmonton and northern Alberta. This is the first major investment in the Misericordia's emergency department in nearly three decades. It's shameful how Conservatives operated in Alberta. When times were bad, they cut services for Albertans; when times were good, they cut taxes for the richest of their friends. This government is different. This government is protecting the services that Albertans count on.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Carson: Thank you. Can the Minister of Health reassure the community that these improvements to the emergency department will not interrupt the services that people require while the Misericordia is under construction?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Misericordia hospital is absolutely critical to the emergency room services that we provide in Edmonton and to folks from northern Alberta as well. About 50,000 Alberta patients go to that emergency room every single year. While we make improvements, that won't change. The new emergency department will be built strategically to minimize disruptions. Patients will still get the highest quality of care without compromising ambulance access or the needs of the front-line staff who are there.

Unlike Conservative governments, who knew how to cut, we're building for the future, strengthening the care Albertans rely on, not cutting. We're building.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, this government has made a complete and utter mess of the electricity system. Estimates range between $800 million and $2 billion that they have cost Alberta taxpayers because of their mismanagement of the PPA agreements, including a change-in-law clause. To the minister of Environment or Energy. The question is simple. Is there a change-in-law clause in your renewable contracts? Yes or no?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, there is a change-of-law clause. It is a well-drafted commercial change of law that is proportional to whatever change in law that the government has made. So if there's a tiny change, there will be a tiny change in cost. This is what the clause should have looked like way back when the Conservatives made their backroom deals decades ago.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, let me get this straight. Given that you claimed that you didn't know about the change-in-law clause previously and now you're writing them into your contracts and you have used this as an excuse to cost Albertans billions of dollars, will you now admit that you were wrong previously when you cost Albertans $800 million because of a change-of-law clause contract?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I will admit is that decades ago the previous government got it wrong. They did not do a proper change-of-law clause. What happened was that losses that were accumulating before the change in law were allowed to be accounted for, so a tiny change in law made the government responsible for huge losses that were there before. What we've done is that we've properly written it into these where a small change in law, small accounting for losses.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, it wasn't a tiny change in law. It was a massive ideological change that this government implemented on the PPAs. I find it very interesting that the minister says that they were backroom deals that they didn't know about, yet today they are including a change-in-law clause in the very contracts that they're signing. My question is very simple. Will the minister now admit that they were wrong and cost Albertans over a billion dollars because of their lack of knowledge of the change-in-law clause then?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. What I will admit is that his colleagues, who he continues to sit with, negotiated contracts that had clauses in them that were totally unfair to consumers. What I will admit is that this side of the House makes sure that we stand up for the people of this province. That's why we worked to address this, that's why we reached fair settlements with all of the impacted parties, and that's why moving forward, we have fair clauses that acknowledge that if there's a small change in law, there'll be small changes in accounting, unlike what the members opposite did, which was to create a giant loophole that put all of the risk back on the people of Alberta. That wasn't fair. That wasn't just. This side fights for justice and for the people of this province.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've received some suggestions that there may be tweeting out of the Legislature, and I would just use this opportunity to remind all of you that that's not been an acceptable practice.

I would also give you 30 seconds before we go to the next member's statement.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Journée Internationale de la Francophonie

Mr. Kenney: Merci, M. le Président. En tant que je suis chef de l'opposition officielle et leader du parti conservateur uni, je tiens à marquer et à célébrer la Journée internationale de la Francophonie aujourd'hui. Je vous salue d'avoir organisé une réception là-dessus, M. le Président. Je suis désolé que je l'ai raté.

M. le Président, la première langue européenne parlée au Canada était le français. C'était la première langue européenne parlée dans les Territoires du Nord-Ouest et ici en Alberta. La communauté francophone depuis notre début en tant que province, en tant que pays était centrale dans notre identité et notre histoire. On peut voir les noms qui nous entourent: Grandin, juste à côté d'ici, ici à Edmonton, fondé par l'évêque Grandin; St. Albert, St. Paul, Falher, toutes ces communautés qui étaient historiques, les communautés fondatrices de l'Alberta, fondées par les francophones, y compris notre communauté métis, évidemment.

Mais nous avons vécu l'élargissement de cette communauté avec l'immigration. J'étais très fier, en tant que ministre d'immigration, d'avoir le plan d'action pour renforcer les communautés francophones en situation minoritaire, et je suis très fier de ceux et celles qui sont venus en Alberta avec leur capacité francophone, comme mes amis, par exemple, Roger Fodjo, un ressortissant camerounais, un romancier, écrivain, un homme d'un grand intellect; mon ami Dicky Dikamba, un ressortissant congolais, qui a organisé le travail acharné des bénévoles pour la communauté franco-africaine ici en Alberta. Nous avons des milliers de familles qui envoient leurs enfants aux écoles francophones d'immersion pour continuer cette grande tradition.

Alors, à tous les francophones de l'Alberta, je vous salue célébrez cette journée.

[Translation] Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As Leader of the Official Opposition and the United Conservative Party I would like to mark and celebrate International Francophonie Day. I salute you for organizing a reception downstairs, Mr. Speaker, and I'm very sorry to have missed it.

Mr. Speaker, the first European language spoken in Canada was French. It was the first European language spoken in the Northwest Territories and here in Alberta. And, Mr. Speaker, since our beginnings as a province and as a country the francophone community has been central to our identity and our history. We can see in the names that surround us: Grandin here in Edmonton, founded by Bishop Grandin; St. Albert, St. Paul, Falher: all of these communities have been historic, founding communities of Alberta, founded by francophones, including, of course, our Métis communities.

But we have also seen the growth of the francophone community with immigration. I was very proud as minister of immigration to have had an action plan to reinforce minority francophone communities, and I was very proud of those who came to Alberta with their ability to speak French, like some of my friends: for example, Roger Fodjo, an immigrant from Cameroon, a novelist, writer, a man of great intellect; my friend Dicky Dikamba, a Congolese immigrant who is a relentless volunteer organizer for the Franco-African community here in Alberta. We have thousands of families who send their children to francophone and French immersion schools to continue this great tradition.

So to all of Alberta's francophones, I salute you and celebrate this day with you. [As submitted]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give notice pursuant to Standing Order 15(2) that at the appropriate time I will be rising on a point of privilege regarding the deliberate misleading statements made yesterday by the Minister of Environment and Parks. I have the appropriate number of copies of the letter that was provided to your office by the required time this morning.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of an excerpt from the Bank of Montreal's provincial economic outlook. In the outlook it states that Alberta is leading the prairies in GDP growth, job growth, housing starts, and has the lowest percentage of debt to GDP in 2017. It shows, as I said, that we have the lowest net debt to GDP in all of Canada. Things are looking up in Alberta.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of the two documents from Momentum, a Calgary nonprofit that works to help those living in poverty learn the skills they need to get out of poverty and stay there. These documents demonstrate that nonprofits like Momentum already engage in sustainable practices by looking at three key factors when purchasing resources: environmental, social, and economic sustainability. Nonprofits in Alberta are leading the way in sustainability and not, as the opposition says, suffering because of government policies which promote sustainability.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of an excerpt from ATB Financial's economic and research team, titled It's Taking Longer to Find Work in Alberta. An expert: unemployment last year "was the highest it has been since . . . 1976."

The Speaker: The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite copies of many letters addressed to the Minister of Health. I recently was at a sold-out fundraiser, Time is Muscle, which is to say that time without treatment equals critical loss of heart muscle, in Alberta's central health region. Doctors have revealed that 35 lives a year are lost or irreversible heart damage occurs in patients waiting for or travelling in ambulances to receive heart therapies that should occur within minutes in Red Deer. Millions are spent on transportation that should fund life-saving care. So we hope that she will read at least one of these letters and that soon this crisis will be resolved because it is a matter of grave concern.

2:50

The Clerk: Tablings to the Clerk.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I referenced today during question period . . .

The Speaker: I'm sorry. I was looking at my note. I think this is not the time, hon. member. If you have a tabling, if you could do that tomorrow. Thank you.

Hon. members, I believe we had a point of privilege raised by the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Privilege

Misleading the House

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to a point of privilege. As you know, points of privilege should not be taken or entered into lightly. Points of privilege are a serious matter, and it's unfortunate that we have to address this issue today in this Chamber. But it needs to be addressed, as do many other serious matters that we address inside this Chamber on a daily basis.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I want to make, first, a number of references and then point to a number of facts that will lead to my belief that the Minister of Environment and Parks and MLA for Lethbridge-West misled this House yesterday, March 19, 2018, and, in fact, made misleading statements in this Assembly.

With respect to privilege and issues of contempt, you will find in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, third edition, 2017, chapter 3, page 82, where it speaks of breaches of privilege, a list of a number of those breaches, one of which says – and I'll spare you, Mr. Speaker, reading all of them; this is the one that I think we are talking about today – “deliberately attempting to mislead the House or a committee (by way of statement, evidence, or petition).”

Mr. Speaker, you will also find, in Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice, 24th edition, page 254, section 15, under Misconduct of Members or Officers, under the heading Members Deliberately Misleading the House, the following: “The Commons may treat the making of a deliberately misleading statement as a contempt.”

Mr. Speaker, as was indicated in my notice of breach of privilege, which, I might add, met the requirements of providing the appropriate written notice, as laid out in Standing Order 15(2):

A Member wishing to raise a [point] of privilege shall give written notice containing a brief statement . . .

as I did, Mr. Speaker,

. . . to the Speaker and, if practicable, to any person whose conduct may be called into question, at least 2 hours before the opening of the afternoon sitting, you will notice that the written notice that I provided was stamped by your office at 11:12 a.m., providing more than two hours' notice.

Mr. Speaker, on March 19, 2018, yesterday, the Minister of Environment and Parks, in response to a question from myself, said the following:

I met with the mayor of Rocky Mountain House a couple of weeks ago and discussed the economic development and tourism opportunities that are available through the regional advisory council's advice. I would encourage the member to spend less time on conspiracy theories and more time on providing his reactions back to his own party's regional advisory council.

The minister clearly stated that she had a meeting with Her Worship Ms Tammy Burke, the mayor of the town of Rocky Mountain House.

But last night we found out from the mayor of Rocky Mountain House that there was no such meeting. At no time was there any such meeting. To be clear on that, Mr. Speaker, there was no meeting with the mayor. At no time, I should say, had the mayor actually met with the minister in regard to the Bighorn backcountry, which is what the question was about, or met with the minister about economic opportunities that the minister referred to in her answer. The mayor and the minister have not had a meeting. The mayor did inform us – and I will table an e-mail from the mayor confirming this – that she did once see the minister in a hospitality suite at a reception in Edmonton on March 5. However, Her Worship was clear that there was no meeting, just a brief, “light conversation,” that is common in a hospitality suite.

As such, the statements from the minister, the statements that the minister made in this House, are clearly in contempt of this House. It seems that there has been no meeting, that no meeting took place, again, in regard to the Bighorn backcountry, which was the content of the question being debated yesterday, or in regard to economic development, that the minister refers to in her response. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, to be clear, that the mayor of Rocky Mountain House and the minister did not have a meeting. The minister of environment showed contempt for this Assembly because she chose to answer a question by referring to a meeting that did not take place, thereby misleading this Assembly.

Just as highlighted in Erskine May – again, in March the minister said in her response to a question in the House the following. Sorry. I jumped spots on you, Mr. Speaker. As Erskine May's Treatise on the Law, Privileges, Proceedings and Usage of Parliament, 24th edition, page 254, states with respect to the United Kingdom, “The Commons may treat the making of a deliberately misleading statement as a contempt.” It is a three-part test for that to happen. First, as articulated by the former Clerk of the New Zealand House of the Assembly, David McGee – for those following along at home, it can be found in the third edition of this book, Parliamentary Practice in New Zealand, on pages 653 to 654. The three parts of the test are as follows: one, it must be proven that the statement was misleading; two, it must be established that the member making the statement knew at the time that the statement was incorrect; and three, that in making the statement the member intended to mislead the House.

Let me address the first part of the test first, Mr. Speaker. As confirmed by Her Worship Tammy Burke, the mayor of Rocky Mountain House, no such meeting took place, which certainly confirms that the first test is met. The minister stating that a meeting took place that did not take place is clearly misleading this Assembly. The minister or the Government House Leader may try to argue that speaking briefly in a crowded, noisy room at a public function for a brief moment is a meeting. I would argue that that is ridiculous and further proves misleading of this House if that is the assertion. To argue that you would say that every time you or I say “hi” or have brief, idle chit-chat anywhere is a meeting is ridiculous. In fact, as I said, I think that would show that there was more intent to mislead this House. Last night and tonight MLAs will be at hospitality suites for AAMDC. One of us briefly saying “hi” and shaking hands and speaking for a few brief moments to someone is not a meeting. Clearly, attempting to pass such in this Assembly is misleading. Mayor Burke described this brief encounter as, I quote, light conversation at best.

In regard to the second and third test, the second test is that it must be established that a member knew it was a misleading statement and, three, that in making the statement the member intended to mislead the House. The fact is established by Mayor Burke that there was never a meeting. The minister of environment knows that there was no meeting, and by stating that a meeting happened that did not in fact happen, the minister clearly knew her statement was misleading.

But what is more alarming, Mr. Speaker, is that in my second supplemental to this question I challenged the minister on the fact that there was no meeting with the mayor, because I knew there was not, clearly saying the following:

The minister just stood up in this House and said that she met with the mayor of Rocky Mountain House. I know the mayor of Rocky Mountain House. This minister has not met with the mayor of Rocky Mountain House about this issue or the town of Rocky Mountain House.

The minister at that point could have risen and acknowledged that that meeting never took place, that maybe she was mistaken. She could have withdrawn her comments. Instead, she chose to let the misleading comments stand, deliberately and knowingly allowed her misleading comments to stand on the record in this House. At that point the minister knew that she had misled the House and clearly confirmed that she had deliberately and knowingly misled the House as she attempted to avoid answering a serious question that was being asked in this Chamber.

Mr. Speaker, the community I represent was very upset to hear the minister's statements. Immediately, the mayor began receiving phone calls about the situation from very confused residents. The mayor, of course, had to confirm that no such meeting had taken place. Clearly, utilizing the mayor's name – a brief encounter in a public place with brief moments of light conversation, as described by the mayor of Rocky Mountain House, is not a meeting, and saying such to this House rather than answering the question is deliberately misleading the House to avoid the issue and is a breach of privilege of the members of this Assembly.

Also, Mr. Speaker, it does a great disservice to Her Worship Mayor Burke and her constituents. While Mayor Burke is not a member of this Assembly and the question is not about the impact on Mayor Burke as far as a point of privilege, at the very least the mayor is owed an apology from this minister, and the community of Rocky Mountain House and the community of Clearwater county are owed an apology for this minister's behaviour. I will stress that both those communities have been trying to get a meeting with the minister for a long time and would be happy to meet for real at any time.

Mr. Speaker, I will close with this. It's very clear to me and I hope it is clear to you that the minister of environment, a minister of the Crown, misled this Assembly while attempting to deflect a question in question period. By misleading this Assembly, she has misled Albertans. As such, it is my hope that you, too, will find the same, that a prima facie breach of privilege has occurred.

I'm also willing to move that this matter be referred to the appropriate standing committee. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

3:00

The Speaker: Hon. member, I was taking notes. What was the third point out of New Zealand that you raised?

Mr. Nixon: One second, Mr. Speaker. You can find it in the third edition of Speaker McGee's book, Parliamentary Practice in New Zealand, on pages 653 and 654.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Regarding this matter of privilege, having just heard the allegation and the details now, we'd like time to review and to make our case tomorrow.

The Speaker: I'll defer the matter until tomorrow.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 3

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2018

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to stand and speak today on interim supply. You know, we're being asked to approve billions of dollars in spending, and the government has provided us with little information or context. It's like asking us to sign a blank cheque and give it to them. This government is chronically underprepared, and it results in less transparency and accountability to Alberta taxpayers.

[Mr. Dach in the chair]

When we asked really good questions that sought more specific information about where interim supply money was actually being spent, the Finance minister and the rest of Executive Council stonewalled or outright failed to provide any specific information. Unacceptable for members to be told they need to wait until the budget is announced on Thursday before they'll find out where this money is going to be spent. We're talking about interim supply now, remember. This Legislature is being asked to provide this government with a cheque for $8.5 billion without knowing where any of this money is going.

You know, the minister sitting here said: just support the government. He asked the opposition just to support the government in interim supply. That's what we were supposed to do. Well, I wonder, if things go a different way and the minister is sitting in opposition next year, if he'll just support the government when they come in with interim supply and don't answer any questions. If the government would have been prepared, they would have had the budget done on time. We wouldn't need this interim supply as well.

The minister was asked by my colleague – you know, he said that the business tax was increased from 10 to 12 per cent, which resulted in a 20 per cent increase to this business tax. The minister said: well, that's not 20 per cent. So if from 10 per cent to 12 per cent isn't 20 per cent, I wish the minister would tell us exactly what percentage increase that would be. According to my calculations it's 20 per cent, so maybe the minister can get us that answer.

Since it seems we can't get answers to questions or aren't even supposed to ask them, then maybe I'll just stand up here and make comments like the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie did, who obviously doesn't understand budgeting and the infrastructure and the building process in this province. He brags about all the new schools that were built in his constituency. Well, I can you tell that it was no thanks to them. He scoffs at the signs that we put up with nothing behind them, Mr. Chair, but, you know, behind every one of those signs today there's a new school.

You know, the process is that Infrastructure gets direction from Education on where the new schools will be built. They can't start designing, doing the testing, applying for development permits until Education says: this is where you're going to build the next school. Once that's been decided by Education, then Infrastructure has a job to do the soil testing, to get the development permits, to design it, get it tender ready, and that takes sometimes a couple of years. In some cities it takes a year to get a development permit, Mr. Chair.

But it wouldn't be fair to all of a sudden not tell a community that there's a school going there, keep it a secret until you start building it, because sometimes, Mr. Chair, people with young kids are looking to move to a community, and if they see that, well, there's no school there, they're not going to move there. But if they've got a one-year-old and see there's a sign that a new school is going up, they'll be happy to move there. Plus, young families in a community with no school might tend to move away, but if there's a sign up saying that there's a new school coming in two years, they'll be fine with staying.

The previous government built 250 new schools. So far this government has announced 30 schools and hasn't built one. They've made 30 announcements and haven't built any, so for him to stand up and say, "I got these schools built in my constituency" is truly not right, Mr. Chair. Not one new school has been announced and built and opened by this government, but there were lots that these members liked to cut the ribbon for and take the credit for that were started and budgeted by the previous government.

Same as hospitals. Lots of new hospitals being opened, like in High Prairie, Edson, Grande Prairie, Medicine Hat. They were all projects that were started by the previous government. There's a new hospital announced in Edmonton, and, you know, that's a good thing for Edmonton, but when they announced the hospital, they didn't even have a site, so they couldn't put up a sign, Mr. Chair. But they announced it. Now they do have a site, and they do have a sign up. Amazing. They criticized us for that, and now they're doing the same thing. The other part is that they put the sign up, but they still don't have the project budgeted for. They put, you know, $300 million in the budget, but we know that hospital is going to cost way more than that.

To criticize the way we did things in the past and then do the same thing but worse is a little bit rich, but good for Edmonton for getting a hospital. But just so the people in Edmonton know, the regional hospital being built in Grande Prairie services the whole northwest region. Well, all the people coming to that new hospital, Mr. Chair, used to come to Edmonton, so building a new hospital in Grande Prairie has freed up a lot of spaces in Edmonton. That's something that people don't always think about. Good for Edmonton for getting a new hospital, but the Grande Prairie one helps the residents of Edmonton as well.

You know, a good announcement today from the Minister of Municipal Affairs on behalf of the agriculture minister about funding the ag societies, a three-year commitment to funding that. That was done at the new rural municipalities association. I'm not sure what they're going to call their acronym, whether it's ARMA or just RMA. That was a good announcement and something we've been asking the government for. But when I asked the question last week, the Finance minister said, "Well, we can't tell you what's in the budget," yet today he announced that he hasn't announced the budget yet, so I thought that was a little strange as well.

You know, we're supposed to get up here and talk about the interim supply, but we're not supposed to ask questions or get any answers. I could go on about why there's $200 million less in the Transportation budget in this interim than last year, but we won't get an answer, and I don't expect to. Maybe it's not a fair question, but we're supposed to be here to debate the interim supply. I'm supposed to get up and speak about it, so that's what I'm doing. When other people get up and speak and make statements that aren't necessarily friendly with the facts, I've got to get up and make statements that might correct them. So if we're not allowed to get answers to our questions, I just wanted to clear up a few of the misconceptions in this House.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other hon. members that wish to speak? The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you for your comments in regard to the interim supply. I have just a couple of things that I think need to be perhaps filled out or corrected.

As the Education minister, of course, we were moving forward on schools that were approved to be built. I found out very quickly that the financing was not in place to build those schools so we needed to scramble. We needed to make some adjustments because the previous government failed to build schools for a long time, for a generation, and then they announced a flurry of schools just before the last election. You know, as we said, we had some signs sitting in fields, and then the sign would fall down, and there's still no school there. We went ahead and built those schools, but the first thing I had to do was actually move capital into the budget to actually build those schools. Quite frankly, between that deficit, that capital that wasn't there and the government's admission that they were not going to fund for enrolment, Education was sitting on the edge of a precipice, Mr. Chair, a precipice that would not allow schools to be built, that would not allow spaces to be available for a fast-growing population. It would have been chaos.

I mean, Albertans made a choice around that. I think education was a big part of the choice they made in the last election. The people spoke, and you have a fine, fine government here now, who is making life better for Albertans, investing in education, making sure we got those schools built. You know, that's it. That's what happened.

Certainly, interim supply is an interesting thing because, of course, you have movement during the course of the year. In Education the movement that we saw was an increase in enrolment from 1.8 per cent to 2.2 per cent. That differential was the sum total of our interim supply that we're asking here for the Legislature to consider. Again, respectfully to the Education critic across the way last night talking about maintenance money, an adjustment that I made was that I moved that maintenance money from operating to capital. This was part of a way by which I could compel boards to make sure that they were spending money that was meant for infrastructure maintenance and so forth on infrastructure. That was the sum total of that part of our interim supply for Education. In fact, it was exactly no change in the budget that we debated and voted on last year.

So the sum total of my interim supply was to cover off the increase in enrolments in the schools across our province, which, again, is indicative of a sense of hope and optimism. You know, we're seeing more families moving to Alberta, and we're seeing lots of those families having children, right? There's no better sort of a way of indicating the health of an economy than for people to be having children and, you know, filling up our schools and buying houses and laying down roots and building a future for themselves and for their kids. So I'm pretty happy about that. Yeah. We've got a long way to go – right? – to the recovery from the economic downturn, but I certainly can see signs of optimism in Education, and I'm very proud of that.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti. Way up there.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I didn't want to turn this into a debate with the Education minister. I thought it was a Finance debate, but that's good. I don't have the numbers, you know, in front of me for the years back. When we budgeted for those schools, it was a five-year budget, and the money was in there. But I do know that in the second year of this government they transferred a hundred million dollars out of capital. The minister said that he had too much money in the capital build plan, and he transferred it out. So I find it a little funny, his statement today. I can go back and look a couple of years, and I think I can confirm that number. So when he said that they had to transfer it in, when he transferred it out: we might have to debate that at another time because I'm not prepared.

I will give the minister credit. You know, he talks about growth in his schools. The growth he's seeing today is nothing compared to what we saw five and eight years ago at 8 per cent growth. That's why we needed to build all those schools, because Alberta was growing way faster than it is today. But I will give the minister credit – we started those schools, and lots of them were built and open before this government came along – for finishing them all and opening them. There are some great new schools in the province today because of the stuff we started and he finished. I'll thank him for finishing them; they're good schools. Our students in Alberta will enjoy them for many years to come. I don't know; we'll have to wait until after Thursday, I guess, but hopefully there are announcements in the budget that this government will announce more new schools in the future as well because there are still more to be built, Mr. Chair.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other hon. members wishing to speak to Bill 3? Thank you. The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak to Bill 3, Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2018. I thank the hon. Minister of Treasury Board and Finance for bringing Bill 3 forward.

Before I make formal comments on this Bill 3, it was interesting. I was following the back and forth between my hon. colleague from Grande Prairie-Wapiti and the Education minister. My colleague identified the issue of when people are taking credit for the work the other government did before but not even giving them due credit. Still, the member is very fair in giving credit to the Education minister where it is due for finishing the projects. I think we'll add value to the debate here if we actually be fair to each other.

On one hand the minister said: "Oh, we got the mandate. People spoke." But in this House, you know, they keep blaming the previous government, saying, "Oh, those are the ones who are responsible." You've had the mandate for three years now. You're into the mandate of the third year. What did you do to fix all those things? People in Calgary-Foothills sometimes ask me those questions. "Why do they keep blaming the previous government? Why don't they do their job?" I just wanted to make that point, Mr. Chair.

Also, coming back to Bill 3, the hon. Finance minister has exposed himself with respect to the government of Alberta's budgeting process by presenting Bill 3. The fact that we need an interim supply bill means that the Department of Finance is behind the eight ball by a month or two. The budgeting process is out of kilter and out of synchronization with the rest of the fiscal year, so we need to get it back on track.

The Legislative Assembly is being asked to approve billions in spending, and the government provided us with no information or context in the Committee of Supply. It just goes to show that the government is chronically underprepared. Being unprepared results in less transparency and accountability for Alberta's taxpayers, Mr. Chair, and we have that here. We don't have the details of the interim spending. We'll only see that when the main budget estimates are tabled with the main budget.

When we ask really good questions, like my colleague said before, that sought more specific information about where interim supply money was actually being spent, the Finance minister and the rest of Executive Council stonewalled those questions or outright failed to provide any specific information. I guess that's why they call it question period, not answer period, Mr. Chair. Albertans see that on television and streaming online, and they don't like it.

Albertans told the UCP Official Opposition that they didn't like the decorum, so we fixed that. Ever since we've had this new leader of our party, he asked us to maintain the decorum of the House. We heard that, and we implemented that. Now if we could just get the government to answer the questions with real answers, not stonewalling, or with a commitment to get back to members with real answers, we'd really appreciate that and Albertans will appreciate that.

It's unacceptable for the members to be told that they need to wait until the budget is announced on Thursday before they find out where the money is going. Again, like the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti said, another contradiction in this House is that when we ask, they say, "Stay tuned till Thursday," and in the meantime, I mean, they go outside to make announcements about funding for some scheme or another scheme. We're the elected representatives of Albertans, and I don't see why the government can't share the information with us in this House, in this temple of democracy.

Even then, when one gets into the budget estimates and all the fancy titles that program funding is hidden under, I think we can do better with the transparency. Wouldn't it be something if we had an interactive estimates online where one could click the estimates line item and drill down to lower levels to see what is in it and drill down all the way to the invoices and receipts level, Mr. Chair? That would be true transparency. We would be the most transparent of all.

Now, the interim estimates as presented are only supposed to be for about a two-month period. If the total spending in this two months is $8.5 billion, the full 12 months is shaping up to be in the vicinity of $51 billion. This would be down by $5 billion from the third-quarter update on expenses of $55,947,000,000. But for our purposes we are talking about $7.717 billion roughly in expenses and $559,244,000 in capital and $160,211,000 in financial transactions in Bill 3. I suspect that the minister is front-loading some money here to get it out the door for grants and such, but at the end of the day the Legislature is being asked to provide this government with a cheque for 8 and a half billion dollars without knowing where any of that money is going to be spent.

In terms of revenue we only know that $239,907,000 in funding from the lottery fund is being transferred to the general revenue fund, and we don't know where the rest of the revenue, which is approximately $8.25 billion, is coming from for this other than it is coming from the general revenue fund.

With respect to the $43,759,000 in expense for Alberta Energy, given that this represents 20.9 per cent of last year's entire budget, if this is for two months of operations, it looks like the minister is foreshadowing a 25.6 per cent increase in the overall expense budget for 2018-19, Mr. Chair.

Now, last week the government announced the coal community transition fund, supporting 12 projects in 17 communities across the province with about $5 million. Is this money in Bill 3, or is it in Budget 2017-18, or is it contained in Bill 4? We don't know, Mr. Chair. What I do know is that the NDP is going to fund work to expand economic hubs, including agribusiness, transportation and high-tech industries, tourism development, strategic planning, and feasibility studies to help communities diversify and expand their local economies. Nor do we know how much of the expense will be used to cover the cost of selling oil and operating the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission.

Mr. Chair, we need a real budget, not an interim supply. I know we'll have to wait till Thursday, but I ask the Minister of Treasury Board and Finance to get his department's act together and use some common sense so that the budget can be presented and debated, examined, and scrutinized on time before the end of the fiscal year.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 3? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Why, thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 3, Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2018, in Committee of the Whole. It's a pleasure to be here with you this afternoon. I hope that the minister understands that a bill that requests the approval of $8.5 billion in spending is a rather difficult bill when the bill provides less detail than a family's weekly shopping list. At least with the list we would know how much of each thing to buy.

The truly unfortunate thing about this bill is that it's totally unnecessary. Had this government convened the Legislature as per Standing Order 3(4)(a), which states, “for the Spring Sitting commencing on the second Tuesday in February and concluding no later than the first Thursday in June,” had the government just done the bare minimum that the standing orders require, we would have had plenty of time to debate the budget prior to the end of the fiscal year 2017-2018 on March 31, just a couple of weeks from today, eliminating the need for any sort of discussion around interim supply, be it supplementary or interim supply.

This government could have provided the maximum amount of transparency for the dollars it spends, but instead it took the option that allowed for the minimum level of transparency. I know that the government is getting very, very, very good at doing things that provide the minimum level of transparency. In fact, you’ll know, Mr. Chair, that we have seen at basically every turn the government providing the lowest level of transparency possible, whether it’s them impeding the ability of outside groups to present at committee, which would increase transparency; whether it’s utilizing tools like interim supply, that don’t provide the same robust transparency; whether it’s impeding important legislation that could go to committee as well.

We have seen time and time again this government have a lack of respect for transparency, particularly, Mr. Chair, you’ll know, around the area of access to information. This government is putting together a horrible track record on access to information. A horrible track record. In fact, there are three or four investigations currently at the Privacy Commissioner’s office. The use of this tool is a continuing and ongoing challenge that the government will have if it continues to not do what’s right and not provide the most fulsome forms of transparency possible.

As I just mentioned, the government is seeking the approval for billions of dollars in spending, and they provided members a full six pages of information on what programs the money is being spent on. In fact, the department-specific information, if you can call that specific, was only three pages. Now, I will concede – hooray – that members did get three hours last week in the Committee of Supply, when we had the opportunity to ask ministers and the rest of Executive Council questions about all of these monies and where they were being spent. Unfortunately, for all of the questions we asked, we didn’t get much in the way of answers from Executive Council members.

I thought the questions that members of the Official Opposition and some of my fellow colleagues on this side of the House asked were, in fact, good questions, questions that deserved substantive answers. When it was asked of the Finance minister if he had any idea how much of the interim supply was related to either collection of the carbon tax, payment of the carbon tax, or special grants through the climate leadership plan, he said: those types of specific questions can be answered at budget estimates. One of the challenges, Mr. Chair, that obviously you will observe, is that that same Finance minister was requesting the approval for billions of dollars and essentially asking the Official Opposition to: hold your questions and ask those later, but I’d like to spend the money now. I’m not sure if he’s aware or not, but that’s not how this process is supposed to work.

When my colleague for Cypress-Medicine Hat asked the Finance minister what his specific plans were for capital funding outlined in interim supply, what projects they were going to, and did the amount of money being asked for equate to 16 per cent of the yearly amount, the minister’s response was: the government is on track to spend $9.2 billion on capital in 2017-18. To give the minister credit, that is at least a bit more specific an answer. Too bad it had nothing to do with the budget for 2018-2019, or, as I refer to it, the matter at hand.

When the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat asked the minister how much interest is going to the cost of servicing all the debt that he’s currently racking up and how much all that extra interest is going to cost the province over the next few years, the minister didn’t answer any of his questions. Instead, he attempted to convince members that increasing corporate taxes from 10 up to 12 per cent wasn’t the same as a 20 per cent increase in corporate taxes. In fact, he thunderously proclaimed that one of his proudest days as Finance minister was when he eliminated the flat tax and increased taxes on Albertans. There were so, so many questions that were not answered, or there wasn’t time to have them answered.

Alberta has the highest unemployment rate outside of Atlantic Canada, and tens of thousands of families across our province are struggling to make ends meet. Instead of having their backs, this NDP government focused on implementing ideological agendas and making the cost of everything more expensive. Not only is this NDP government saddling our children and grandchildren with massive debt, but do they think that the money will ever be paid back? These are the types of questions that ought to be asked.

We need to respect taxpayer dollars carefully and consider priorities, yet we see this government doing the exact opposite of that. How much of this money is being spent to cover the increase in the carbon tax specifically on fuel to the provincial government? Every layer of government is paying the carbon tax. How much exactly is it costing, and how is that reflected in their supply requests? These are the types of questions that should be answered, yet the government chooses and continually chooses to not do that. How much of the budget is for the collection of the carbon tax? Again, no answer from the Minister of Finance.

What is the current debt to GDP? It should be a very simple question to answer, yet unfortunately we did not receive that from this minister. Can the minister please provide a breakdown on how much of the interim supply budget is going towards risk management and insurance? I think that is a very, very, very reasonable question that he should provide a response for, and I hope that he will provide that response in writing in the very near future.

Mr. Chair, interim supply is allocating around $900,000 towards capital investments and financial transactions. I’m hoping, through you to the minister, he can please provide some background on what exactly that money is being spent on specifically.

The Automobile Insurance Rate Board does a lot of important work in terms of regulating automobile insurance premiums for private vehicles. How much of the interim supply has been allocated to the AIRB?

I hope that the Minister of Finance will be able to provide the answers to those questions in the very, very near future.

Mr. Chair, it is a little bit frustrating to continually see this government move in the wrong direction with respect to supply requirements, with respect to interim requirements. It’s my hope that, moving forward, they will be much more respectful of the standing orders and provide more robust debate at the appropriate times in the future.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other members wishing to speak to Bill 3? The Member for Calgary-Currie has the floor.

Mr. Malkinson: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It is a pleasure to get up and chat on this interim supply. You know, interim supply, despite some characterizations to the contrary, is quite a common part of the Westminster system of parliament, and it is quite common here in the Legislature. By necessity, of course, it is just purely to allow the Ministry of Finance to keep paying our doctors and nurses and our police and all of the other government services while we finish passing the budget. Of course, the spending that is going to be coming forward in the 2018-19 budget will be introduced on Thursday, where all members of this House will have ample opportunity to see where all that money is going forward.

You know, on suggestions that for our interim supply we need to be able to have an interactive website or app set up where we can drill down to descriptions, right down to the receipt level, as suggested a little while ago, I think perhaps it would be impractical although with technology anything is possible. Considering how much noise we get in regard to spending, I'm not sure if that is something that would be a worthwhile endeavour at this time.

To the interim supply itself. You know, it's $29 million for the Legislative Assembly; $7.7 billion in expenses – and that amount is, of course, across all 21 departments – $559 million in capital investments across all 18 departments; $160 million in financial transaction amounts across 12 departments; and $240 million for transfer from the lottery fund to general revenue.

You know, as had been mentioned previously by the Minister of Finance himself, certain ministries have expenses that go right out at the beginning of the year, so to look at these interim supply amounts and multiply them by the remainder of the year would not at all be accurate. It is purely to keep everything running for an additional two months.

Now, to say that we're here and haven't been able to answer questions in in-depth detail on our upcoming budget: of course, that opportunity will be just two days from now, on Thursday, March 22. Of course, several ministers throughout the course of debate have gotten up and spoken and answered specific questions. Our Minister of Education did that just recently, a couple of minutes ago.

You know, it's been a very interesting day for debate in general. I find it interesting that this, I think, is one of the first days that I've ever been accused of not standing up for Albertans but somehow being a shill for big business, which, of course, I take exception to because this interim supply contains measures to help those Albertans, which we are all here to do, things like keeping our $25-a-day daycare program moving along, things like providing money for policing in this province, something that I know is very important to many Albertans in this province and, as well, very important to many members opposite, things like making sure that schools have the teachers they need during that time. So to say that we're not standing up for Albertans who are struggling at the moment is something I take exception to.

Also included in interim supply, through the Ministry of Community and Social Services, of course, there would be monies to help those Albertans who are at this point still out there looking for jobs. And things are looking up, of course. There are 90,000 new jobs, manufacturing is up, unemployment is down, and new car sales are up. All those measures that one would say are, you know, an example of the economy improving I am onboard with.

It is interesting. We often, you know, hear from the opposition that there's not enough detail. Well, I note that for Bill 4 the opposition actually had a chance to vote for more officers to help fight rural crime, had a chance to vote for sexual assault centres but chose at that time to not do that. Of course, again, our budget, when it comes out on Thursday, will fully explain all of our various initiatives that we have coming forward for the next year. It's interesting that when there's even just a little bit of detail in supplementary estimates, they chose to vote against those things that I had been hearing often about in the news in January and February and chose to vote against them at the earliest possible opportunity, which is something that doesn't make sense to me. I find it so odd, going back to what the Member for Airdrie was saying previously, that on one day I am in the pocket of big business and the next day not doing enough to support them. That is something that is, of course, quite interesting.

When it comes to schools, I remember, being in Public Accounts, that there's an Auditor General's report – the exact month I don't have off the top of my head – where it actually specifically talked about how the previous government announced previous schools. The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti was quite correct that there were many schools announced, but the Auditor General found that there was no plan to fund them at all. Of course, the Auditor General specializes in getting to the root of process in these sorts of things. I would trust his opinion in that.

We have been clear as a government that we will fund the new schools and the modernization of schools that Albertans need so that an Albertan who's got children that need an education have a place for their children to go in the public school system. I know that right around my riding of Calgary-Currie I have gone to a brand new school opening, personally, I've gone to a school modernization, and I've also gone to the opening of a charter school, actually, around my riding.

What's that doing? You know, someone may ask: why am I talking about schools that aren't built in my riding? Well, my riding is a much older area of Calgary, so it has a large amount of schools that were built in the '50s and '60s. Many of those schools are overcrowded precisely because, really, there have been no schools in the area built since then. As Calgary has expanded out and my riding went from being on the outskirts of Calgary to, you know, arguably inner city, all those students from those outer areas were having to come into the schools in my area. By having these new schools and modernizations built around my riding, that is relieving pressure on the schools in my riding.

I've already seen it from tours of the schools that I did in February, that the population in those schools is going down. Libraries are no longer being used for classrooms. Libraries are being used for their intended purpose, as libraries. The same thing goes for music rooms, which are being used for music as opposed to a permanent classroom, which allows schools, I think, to function better and, you know, allows for a better educational experience for our children.

In closing, I want to mention that I am fully in support of interim supply. It is a very common practice in the Legislature just to get us through to when we pass the budget. Of course, we will have ample opportunity to duly explore all of the programs and all of the ministries when we do estimates in our various committees.

In fact, I am quite looking forward to that. I think Albertans will be very impressed with what they see in the upcoming budget and, in particular, on our path to balance numbers because that is something that I do get asked about at the door. The residents of Calgary-Currie are always very excited to hear about the work we are doing to keep our costs under control. Albertans do remember the wild cost swings. When oil prices were high and the economy was growing, previous governments continued to run deficits even at $90-a-barrel oil. Mr. Chair, at $90-a-barrel oil they couldn't balance the budget.

Between 2010 and 2014, for example, oil prices averaged $90 a barrel, the economy grew by more than 5 per cent per year, royalty revenues averaged $9.3 billion a year. Yet during this time the previous government ran deficits in all but one year. Since then, of course, due to the dramatic drop in the price of oil, we had a choice. We could either dramatically cut back on the services that Albertans depend on, or we could take the advice of leading economists like David Dodge and invest in Albertans.

Let me go back to those schools. Those schools and modernizations that we chose to actually fund and make sure they got built, each one of those schools was providing much-needed jobs during the downturn for tradespeople all across this province. That expands out into the economy because that means the individual who is supplying the doors, supplying the electrical components, the lights, the roofing, the cement for the foundation, the operators of the excavators: all of that is good, much-needed jobs in a downturn. You know, economists agree that the choices we made are allowing us to come out of this recession stronger and sooner than we otherwise would have if we hadn't made those choices.

This interim supply is just a very small part of that, to get us through to when we can talk about our budget on March 22, where we will show our path to balance, which I think Albertans will be quite impressed with, to see that we have been keeping costs under control while focusing on the things that make life better for Albertans: things like $25-a-day daycare, things like funding for sexual assault centres, things like police, things like investment in our oil and gas industry as well as helping to diversify our economy and, of course, in education, to make sure that if there is a student entering Alberta's education system, the full funding that that student needs is there. The funding that that student gets shouldn't depend on whatever the price of oil happens to be that quarter. That's not something we believe in, that's not something I believe in, and I don't think that's something Albertans believe in.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate you recognizing me and giving me this opportunity to talk on Bill 3. You know, there are lots of things to be concerned about with this, but I'm going to ever so briefly take us back to the basics.

If you look at our Standing Orders on page 2 – you know, if some members of the House are like me, sometimes if you're reading a book before you go to sleep, you fall asleep. Your head hits the book, and you wake up with your face in the book, without having read much of it. But even if that happened to the government, I would have hoped they would have gotten to page 2 before their head hit the book. This is one of the things that it says on page 2 – it says a lot of things – under (4)(a): “the Spring Sitting commencing on the second Tuesday in February and concluding no later than the first Thursday in June.” Now, it also says: unless the government decides differently. Clearly, the government decided differently.

My point is not that the government did something wrong. My point is that under the normal fashion of operating this place and a normal government, which I don't really think we've had for the last three years, had they started on the second Tuesday in February, then they would have been in this House a lot sooner, perhaps been working on their budget a lot sooner, perhaps knew what the heck they were doing a lot sooner, perhaps be able to explain it to Albertans a lot more fully, having done the work over the Christmas break that they should have been doing.

I think it demonstrated very clearly what they weren't doing. They demonstrated it, to start with, by starting to meet in this important Chamber at such a late date, which I think is a pretty strong indication that the government didn't have their act together and did not know what they were doing and were in no position to explain it decently to Albertans. Of course, that extends to what actually happens in the Chamber. Again, as some of my colleagues have said here, the government is basically asking for an $8.5 billion blank cheque from Albertans, and they think it's just fine to not give them any information.

Now, I was here for three hours of estimates on that, and it was three hours of my life I'll never get back. To be clear, Mr. Chair, I think the work we do in this Chamber is extremely important and can be extremely valuable to Albertans. Albertans are owed a good performance by all of us in this House. But I'll tell you what we did not get from the Finance minister was a good performance. We had members from the opposition asking very reasonable questions, “What are you going to do with the 8 and a half billion dollars?” He didn't give any information. He kept making inane responses, “Well, you can't multiply it by four.” Okay. Good. We got that. Nobody is asking you to multiply it by four.

I mean, I'll tell you what. I recall what I did. I heard several of my colleagues asking the minister very reasonable questions about health care, education, social services, transportation, infrastructure and getting nowhere. I even went to the extent of saying to the minister: “Well, let's just pick a ministry. What are you going to do more or less than last year?” He said, “Well, I can't say.” Well, can't say or won't say, I'm not sure. But he didn't say. So I remember that I said, “Minister, I'm going to make this as easy on you as I possibly can.” I said to the Finance minister, “You're the person in charge of $54 billion, $55 billion, $59 billion, whatever.”

I don't know if they're sure what they are going to put in the budget at the end of this week. We'll find out Thursday. But if you're the person in charge of 50-odd billion dollars, perhaps you should have a clue of where one or two of those 50-odd billion dollars are going. Right, Mr. Chair? It seems reasonable, wouldn't you say? I thought so. The Finance minister and President of Treasury Board was unable to articulate a single thing that a single dollar out of the eight and a half billion dollars was going to go to.

With all due respect, Mr. Chair, it's okay – you know what? – if the minister wants to disrespect me. He shouldn't disrespect anybody, but if he wants to disrespect the opposition, that's one thing. But the fact is that he's not getting the eight and a half billion dollars from the opposition. He's getting it from Albertans, which means he's disrespecting Albertans. This government is disrespecting Albertans. To waltz in here several weeks late, compared to the standing orders, not prepared, ask for eight and a half billion dollars to get started on the next year, and be able to give next to zero details about what they're going to do with it: that is as disrespectful to the 4.3 million, 4.4 million Albertans as anything that I can think of.

Now, Mr. Chair, I don't know what your household is like, but in my home if I was going to say to my wife, “I want to take out of our bank account a quarter of the money that we're going to spend this next year,” she might say, “What are you going to spend it on?” You know what? I think that would be a reasonable question for her to ask. I think I would rightly and properly owe her an answer. And if I were to say, “Well, none of your business; just trust me, it's going to be good,” I'm pretty sure I wouldn't get anywhere near any bank card, bank machine, chequebook, anything where I could spend a quarter of our family's annual income without an explanation of what I was going to spend it on.

Yet that is what this government is demanding that 4.3 million, 4.4 million Albertans do. They take a quarter of the year's budget and say: “Give it to me. Trust us. We're really good people. You know, you don't need to trouble yourself with the dirty little topic of money.” That's what this government has said to Albertans. The problem is that it's not the government's money. There's no such thing as government money. It's Albertans' money.

So when you think of that, that is as disrespectful, as arrogant, as thoughtless – I don't know – with an air superiority that is really hard to imagine. Now, I get it. Listen, this is not the first or the last government to have supplementary supply. That in itself, on its own, is not necessarily the biggest problem in the world. The biggest problem in the world is that they want a blank cheque for eight and a half billion dollars, and they're completing disrespecting all Albertans that are actually paying that money. I can't imagine anything much less respectful than that or much more disrespectful than that, if you prefer, Mr. Chair. Yet that is what this government boldly went forth and did, and it is boldly going forth and still doing that today.

That government and these ministers get asked very polite questions: "What are you going to do with the money, folks? You know, reality check. It's not actually your money. You're spending it on behalf of Albertans." The government boldly said, "None of your business." They just said, "We don't have to tell you, and we're not going to."

Now, I appreciate that the Finance minister shouldn't have to know where every nickel is going. I didn't ask him to know where every nickel is going, and I don't recall any other member of this House asking him to remember where every nickel is going. Somewhere in his ministry he has to have it written down. But, for goodness' sake, you would hope that he would have an idea where a few of the nickels were going.

For goodness' sake, you know, if the minister was the least bit respectful and caring about the feelings and how hard Albertans work to earn the money that the government takes from them, you would hope that he might have a few shining examples of bold new government initiatives that were going to be good for Albertans, something that he could brag about, something that he would hope Albertans would be proud of. But the minister didn't offer up even a crumb. We could make the assumption that there's not a single thing he's going to do that he could be proud of. We could make the assumption there's not a single thing that he's going to do that Albertans would like. I don't know.

I certainly don't believe that the government is going to do everything wrong. They've been a pretty poor government, but they haven't done everything wrong. The kids are getting educated and hospitals are open and social services are getting delivered, so they're doing some things right.

But this is an example of where they let their true feelings about Albertans show, where the cabinet, in particular, and all members on the government side should be ashamed of the fact that they're asking Albertans to write a blank cheque for 8 and half billion dollars, and they're not telling them hardly a single thing about what they're going to do with the money. That is something I just cannot get past, and I think there are a lot of Albertans that can't get past it. Now, we're going to find out Thursday what's in the budget, and I'm sure that we're going to hear a lot of talk about how great it is.

I'll tell you how disrespectful it is. The Finance minister went out today and put on some virtual reality glasses and trotted around and talked about things that he might do. Well, why didn't he actually tell us in this House about his virtual reality things that he talked about today? That would have been at least respectable. I don't know whether that's contempt of the House or not, when you know the answer to a question and you choose not to answer it, because whatever he said today, he obviously knew when he was asked questions about what you know you are going to do, and he chose not to even share that. Even the government's own party members should be offended by the fact that the minister wouldn't share with them in this House what he was going to do, though he shared it outside of the House today, even though he's asking for an $8.5 billion blank cheque. It's despicable, but there it is.

The government shouldn't be surprised if they don't get support from the opposition on this incredibly disrespectful, incredibly bold, incredibly late to the party, incredibly lack of details, incredibly rude, disrespectful request for an 8 and a half billion dollar blank cheque from Albertans. I'm sure they won't be surprised when they don't get my support for it, and I'm sure they won't be surprised when they don't get support from the opposition for it. Those Albertans watching at home: it's your money. They're asking you for 8 and half billion dollars, and they haven't told you anything about what they're going to spend it on. Disgraceful.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other members wishing to speak? We have the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane recognized.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just have a questions for the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays. You know, I hear that he's disappointed with the approach that our government is taking in terms of the interim supply, but I just wonder if he could enlighten the House about how often, when he was in government, his party used the same tool.

Mr. McIver: Well, I thank the hon. member for the question. I would say that most years if not every year we had supplementary supply, and I said in my remarks, hon. member, that supplementary supply isn't the biggest crime in the world. It's not the biggest problem, and I stand by that. I'm not a big fan of it. When I was in government, we had supplementary supply. I wasn't a big fan of it then; I'm not a big fan of it now. But to answer your question directly, something that your minister never did for me, respectfully, we did it, too. It's a tool to get you by the year.

Now, you know what? I would say that if there was a time that previous governments didn't give any detail on it, then they deserve that criticism, too. I would think that we gave more. I don't actually – you know what? It's four years ago. I just flat don't remember, okay? But not giving details about billions of dollars, not any details – you know what? There are things the government could do. They could say . . .

An Hon. Member: How convenient.

Mr. McIver: No, it is convenient. The hon. member there, that doesn't have the floor, is chirping. He says, "How convenient." I say: yes, it is. How convenient. That's my complaint. The Finance minister chose something really convenient, really disrespectful towards Albertans. That is exactly the road he went down, and it was wrong. It was wrong, and it will always be wrong when that happens.

You know what? I'll try to help him out here for the next year that he comes forward with supplementary supply. He could say: well, there are some construction projects we want to get started on early because we don't know how long the construction season is. He could have said: the opposition have been complaining about lack of service in some area of health care, education, or social services, and we don't want to wait because we've talked about improving the service there, and we don't want people to wait for that. There are probably a thousand and one examples of things that the minister could have said, and he chose to say none of those things.

I hope I answered the question for the hon. member. I think it was a straight-up question. I tried to give you a straight-up answer. Again, I'm not a big fan of supplementary supply. I think it's always going to be around. I hope I'm never a fan of it. If we get where we want to go in a year and a half and we end up being in government again, I wouldn't be surprised if there is supplementary supply. But you can hold me to the fact that if we ask for supplementary supply, should we be fortunate enough – I don't know whether we will or not because you don't know what Albertans will decide – ever to be in government, I would hope we give more respectful answers than the ones we received this week, full stop.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other hon. members wishing to speak to Bill 3?

Hearing none, are you ready for the question?

[The clauses of Bill 3 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Acting Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Let's move on.

Bill 4

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2018

The Acting Chair: Are there members wishing to speak to Bill 4? The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise today to speak to Bill 4, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2018. This government is going to spend $1.5 billion in the next two weeks to top up their already heavily loaded 2017-18 budget. I can't say that this surprises me. We've not seen this government even try to minimize their spending one iota. They want us just to sign off on a huge cheque without having to justify the big spend. Now, we know that some of this money is needed, and we would obviously agree with fire-related costs, emergency response, funding for sexual assault victims' services, and, of course, most obvious, additional police. However, they have lumped all of that together with us agreeing with their tax-and-spend policies, which we cannot justify, especially when there are no details to go along with the big ask.

Last week we spent over six hours in this House asking the government questions about what exactly they would be spending the money on. All we got was no answers. The government used the airtime to stonewall and deflect our questions. Instead of sounding like a government in charge, they deflect much of their answers.

With the amount of debt that this province is incurring, we will now be making over $1 billion in payments annually, interest-only payments. Alberta's debt is projected to reach $70 billion by 2019-2020. Yet this government wants us to sign away on the dotted line and give them an additional $1.5 billion. We will have no hand in the economic destruction of this province. The Fraser Institute said, "Provincial debt service costs in Alberta are rising quickly every year, placing a bigger and bigger burden on Albertan taxpayers." We cannot support this.

Did you know, Mr. Chair, that in 2019-2020 debt-servicing costs will exceed $500 per Albertan, more than double what they were in 2016-2017? That's just not right. In less than three years this government has increased Alberta's debt by $45 billion. Alberta has had six credit downgrades since this government took office, and I truly hope we're not heading for another one. The taxpayers in this province cannot afford it, and in a high-risk scenario accumulated deficits could be much higher than the predicted $38 billion over the next three years, which is $11.7 billion more than this government forecasted.

After last week spending several hours asking questions in this House, we know as much about supplementary supply today as we did before we even started asking our questions. This is truly due to this government's refusal to answer any of our questions. The government really could have reduced the need for this supplementary supply if they would have included the known costs in the annual budget, but that did not happen, so here we are today.

According to the Minister of Finance it was considered his proudest day as Finance minister when he raised taxes on Albertans. He said, "Frankly, it was one of the proudest days of my Finance minister career when we were able to eliminate the flat tax in this province because it didn't make sense." Really? Is it because it didn't bring in the revenue stream that would be needed when this government went into billions of dollars of debt?

Despite the massive increase in taxes since this government took office in 2015 and further increases to come, government revenue from income and corporate taxes are both lower than when this government took office. Doesn't this signal something to this government? Are they analyzing where their problems might be occurring, or are they just going to forge ahead with their disastrous economic ideology?

Well, without being able to take a peek at the financial books, I can tell you where the problem is. The problem is government spending. This government has a spending problem. If Albertans ran their household budgets like this government does theirs, they'd be in massive debt, and in quick order they'd lose their homes, cars, and credit. No one runs a budget this way. Yet the government wants us to sign off on something that should have been dealt with last year. We need to address the issue of this increasing debt and deficit.

Out of good consciousness I can't support this supply bill. Where is the compassion? Where's the belt-tightening this government has talked a lot about lately. Where is it? We need to do more than just talk the talk. We need to walk the walk. You need to walk the walk. Albertans know the difference. They do not see through this talk. Polls have shown that Albertans are losing their confidence in this government. It's what I've also been hearing in my constituency. UCP MLAs have been warning this government about their spending habits since day one. Unfortunately, the government has doubled down on their spending, with no plan to get the province's budgetary house in order. By the end of their term Albertans will be in debt over $70 billion, with some estimating it could be closer to $90 billion. How? How does a government spend that much money in such a short period of time? We can't and I can't support this. With no plan for dealing with the areas where we see a tremendous amount of spending, I won't and my colleagues won't support this.

The government raised the alarm when we didn't support them with our votes, but let's just take an issue such as rural crime. How is this a surprise to government? It wasn't a surprise to us. The UCP members have been raising this issue of rural crime for well over a year. Why didn't you address this in the budget last year? Why didn't you listen when we wanted an emergency debate? No, there has been no active listening coming from this government, only reactive spending. The United Conservatives have been talking about this issue for years, but this government denied there was even an issue. I find it ironic that this is the year they finally want to play catch-up. We have supported additional police officers in rural Alberta for years. You want more money? How about answering Albertans about when they can expect these officers that they promised? Why are you refusing to answer questions from Albertans but expecting them to open up their wallets?

We all stand here in the House representing the constituents from all the different parts of the province. I have been a voice for my constituents and so have my colleagues. This government refuses to listen to the many voices of this province when they refuse to hear us.

UCP MLAs have been to many town halls filled with concerned and outraged citizens, real victims of crime. This government and the MLAs can't be bothered to come out and listen to any of these folks – the stories, the heartache, the loss – but you all stand there with your hands out. I feel sorry for any rural Albertan having to live through this ordeal and to know that it could take over a year for help to arrive. It's simply not good enough. It is true that it could be a minimum of 1.5 years at the earliest for additional officers to arrive. That's preposterous. These communities are under siege now. They need help today.

We can't cut the government a blank cheque when they refuse to answer our questions. That would be unwise of us given this government's history. I and my colleagues are opposed to adding more debt to taxpayers when they should have been taken care of a lot earlier.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other hon. members wishing to speak to Bill 4? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you for recognizing me, Mr. Chair. I just want to start off by commenting on what we are really debating here. We're debating more than $1.5 billion in spending that the NDP did not properly budget for, $1.5 billion that they dropped on this Legislature a week ago, expecting a rubber-stamp, allocating only six hours of debate in Committee of Supply. That is one hour of legislative scrutiny for every quarter billion dollars of taxpayers' dollars, Alberta taxpayers' dollars, money that is on top of the multimillion-dollar deficit that this government already burdened Albertans with this fiscal year, all this with very little, limited information from the government and no substantive answers even given during the limited time allocated that we received.

Government ministers tell us not to worry, that we will have access to more information when we get to estimates in a few weeks. Simply, the government is asking us to just trust them. I'm sorry to say, Mr. Chair, but the government, especially when it comes to budgetary matters, has not earned that trust or that level of trust from the opposition, from constituents, or from Albertans at large.

Mr. Chair, there is a reason why this supply bill is separate from the budget for the fiscal year. It deals with matters from the current fiscal year, matters which have not yet gained legislative consent and deserve their own independent scrutiny. This is an important debate. It is important to our province and important to its people. This is not something to be rubber-stamped. It is something to be debated wholeheartedly, as is consistent with the duties of this House and its members.

Mr. Chair, I would like to narrow it down to a few specific topics here and dig a little deeper into their spending. On revenue according to the Finance minister his proudest day as Finance minister was when he raised taxes on Albertans. I'm going to quote it. I know it was just quoted, but it's important that Albertans hear this because I don't think that they agree. The Minister of Finance says, "Frankly, it was one of the proudest days of my Finance minister career when we were able to eliminate the flat tax in this province because it didn't make sense." Despite taxes being raised, government revenues from income and corporate taxes are both lower than when this government took office. The problem is that government has a spending problem, which supplementary supply completely fails to address.

On the debt this government fails to address the issue of increasing debt and deficit. This government is talking a lot about compassionate belt-tightening. It's interesting, though, Mr. Chair, that I didn't hear those words in the throne speech, so I'm not sure whether or not this is going to be a quick, compassionate belt-tightening or whether or not it's actually going to be for the remainder of the time that the government is in session. By the end of their term the debt is going to be anywhere between $70 billion and $94 billion for Albertans. What's interesting is that as UCP MLAs we've been warning this government about their spending habits since day one. Unfortunately, just to note, Mr. Chair, so have credit agencies.

Unfortunately, the government has doubled down on their spending with no plan to get the province's budgetary house in order. With no plan of dealing with the areas where we see a tremendous amount of spending, we prudently need to oppose supplementary supply.

Mr. Chair, I would also like to address the issue of rural crime in relation to this bill. I just want to say that I am glad that finally after months of ignorance and denial, this government has stopped denying the existence of the rural crime crisis. The opposition and Albertans have been trying to get this issue addressed for too long. For too long Albertans have been victimized at an alarming rate while their government buried its head in the sand.

That said, Mr. Chair, I was shocked at the audacity of the NDP to attack us on this issue. Let's be clear. We don't oppose measures to address rural crime. We oppose the reckless spending habits of this NDP government. Regardless, I want to lay out the facts on this issue. Rural crime should not have been a surprise to this government. We have been warning them for a long time. Opposition members have been raising the issue of rural crime for over a year. If the government was serious about addressing this issue of rural crime, they would have addressed it in last year's budget. United Conservatives have been calling for action for years while the NDP denied that the rural crime crisis even existed. It's clear that the NDP is now scrambling and playing catch-up on this issue.

Obviously, Mr. Chair, UCP supports additional police officers for rural Alberta. However, the NDP has repeatedly refused to answer when Albertans can expect these new officers in their communities. In fact, some have stated that it could be a minimum of 1.5 years, or one and a half years, at the very earliest before any officers arrive. This does little to help communities under the siege that they are under today.

The NDP should not expect the opposition to cut a blank cheque, and I don't think that they would be willing to cut a blank cheque if they were here in our seats. They shouldn't expect us to cut the blank cheque for their spending when they refuse to provide answers to legitimate questions. There's a reason why standing orders offer us the opportunity to be able to go into Committee of Supply, because this is a House of 87 members, and 87 members have the opportunity to be able to scrutinize and to vet the spending decisions, especially the spending decisions of any government. It's unfortunate that when we take a look at the interim supply estimates, we are given very little information that we can go on.

The NDP should not expect the opposition to sit back while we're dealing with Albertans' hard-earned money, especially during this time, Mr. Chair, when I've had the opportunity of being able to chat with many people in my riding who say that it's just very difficult, that they're really struggling, that they just need a break. There have been a lot of things that have come down, a lot of changes that have been made by this government. I have no doubt from speaking with many of my colleagues in the NDP that the intentions were the best intentions. The problem is that the government is not – they'd get an A if it was for intentions, but it's outcomes that we have to be able to grade the government on, and unfortunately the outcomes that we see have been devastating to Albertans and to families, especially in Calgary, where we have some of the highest unemployment rates, especially amongst young people, who have a 13.1 per cent unemployment rate.

These numbers don't speak to the actual individuals, Mr. Chair. They don't talk about how many thousands of young people are out of work, and it's interesting because on this issue alone, I specifically as the Labour critic had the opportunity of sitting down with two separate Labour ministers and talking to them about the plethora of studies that have been done. This isn't the first time that we've gone down this idea of increasing minimum wage. It's been done in other places, and as I showed the ministers, actually let them see, both of them, what the outcomes in these other jurisdictions were, the answer that I was given – and it was very sad that I got this answer – was: "We're not going to do an economic impact study. We're going to assess as we go." The sad thing about that is that if you assess as you go, well, at some point you're going to find out what those numbers are. We now know that it's 13.1 per cent unemployment.

If that minimum wage goes up again, there is also going to be a material effect on young people. We're already seeing that the unemployment amongst young people is skyrocketing. How much higher does it have to go before the minister says: "We now have the evidence. We need to stop. We need to stop adding onto the burden for these young people." These are our future, Mr. Chair. These are the people who we rely on to provide a wonderful Alberta and to be able to give them the kind of Alberta that we had the privilege of growing up in.

I know that the NDP, the members opposite, often say that it's been disastrous over the last 44 years. Well, I can say as one Albertan that Alberta has been good to my family. It's been good to me. It's provided me with opportunities that I don't believe I could have received anywhere else. And I've had the opportunity to be able to talk to many people who have come to this province not from just other parts of Canada but from other places in the world. They've come here because there's opportunity. They've come here because there are opportunities to start a business, a small business. Remember that entrepreneurs are the lifeblood of any successful economy, so having the opportunity of being able to come here and potentially being able to start a business and being able to provide a phenomenal life for your children, for your wife, for your husband, these are the types of things that we should be striving for.

Yet, unfortunately, what we've seen with the policies, with the legislation that's come from this NDP government is anything but that. It's taken our once-prosperous Alberta to a place that most people are questioning whether they want to stay, and that's sad to hear when I talk to people. They talk about how they'd come here from Saskatchewan and tried to get rid of the NDP or they'd come here from B.C. to try to get away from the NDP, and then they come here and they say: I can't believe that we actually now have the NDP in Alberta. So these are the concerns that I have. These are kind of some of the macroconcerns that I have.

But in terms of this bill, Bill 4, we're in a situation where, Mr. Chair, in taking a look at this, I cannot in good conscience support a bill that is so lacking in detail and so lacking in the kind of transparency that this government has said many times that they want to provide. I oppose this bill because Albertans expect fiscal responsibility. I oppose this bill because Albertans deserve legislative scrutiny. I oppose this bill because my constituents elected me to hold this government to account, not to rubber-stamp its ideological agenda and endless deficit spending.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane has the floor.

Mr. Westhead: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I just have a question for the hon. member or perhaps any member from the opposition. The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner referred to his leader and his party's preference to return to a flat tax, a flat income tax structure, and I just wanted to perhaps point out and ask for a reaction that there have been studies showing that in Alberta under Conservative rule for the previous 40 years with the flat tax, or for a significant portion of those 40 years with the flat tax, Alberta's inequality level in terms of income inequality was the highest in Canada.

You know, places like the International Monetary Fund, which isn't traditionally known as being a progressively minded organization, point out that high income inequality is bad for economic growth and bad for GDP growth, so the IMF says to focus on the poor and the middle class for the highest growth. So I just wonder, you know, with a proposal to return to a flat tax, going against the advice of institutions like the International Monetary Fund, how the member might respond to that, also just keeping in mind that every single province in Canada has a progressive income tax structure, including the government of Canada, I just wonder what the member's response to those questions might be.

4:30

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for . . .

Mr. Hunter: Cardston-Taber-Warner, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you for recognizing me. I appreciate the Member for Banff-Cochrane's question. However, I actually never said anything about the flat tax, so I'm not sure where he's actually coming up with that. I don't have the benefit of the Blues, but I can say that I actually did not say anything about the flat tax in my speech. I appreciate his question, but I'm not sure exactly how to answer that.

I will say, though, that we are in the process of having a policy debate in our party, and I look forward to a robust debate about the information. I think that it's important for Albertans to know. I appreciate his comments, but I think that he's going to have to wait, just as we have to wait until Thursday for the budget.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other hon. members wishing to speak to Bill 4? I see and recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's always a pleasure to get up in this House and speak with you all. I wanted to address the supplementary supply. Perhaps just to get started here, I want to talk about transparency. You know, the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner was talking about how there's no transparency, but when you actually look at the supplementary supply estimates, it couldn't be there in more detail. For example, in Agriculture and Forestry: $204,914,000 to go to wildfire disaster/emergency assistance to provide for wildfire management; $56 million and change for the department's grant to the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation for the provincial share of AgriStability indemnities and AgriInsurance premiums. It's all written right there.

I'll remind the House that the members across the way actually voted against every estimate as we were going through second reading. They actually voted against providing these monies. Some of the members are getting up and saying: "Well, we support this. We support this." Well, then why did you vote against it?

You know, there were amounts in there for the municipal sustainability initiative. I mentioned wildfire disaster recovery and emergency assistance; monies allocated for child intervention and childcare subsidies and supports; persons with disability and assured income for the severely handicapped; employment and income support; the provincial share of, as I already mentioned, AgriInsurance premiums and indemnities; compensation increase for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and justices of the peace; and rural crime. These members across the way actually voted against all of this in second reading.

Now, it's really important that we understand that this is so that we can provide services for Albertans. That's what all these programs here are for, to provide services for Albertans. That's our job as government. You know, I already mentioned how the members across the way, in their libertarian way, would much rather we not have government. Right? Less government, fewer regulations.

Going back to the flat tax, you know, that my hon. colleague here mentioned, the fact is that the flat tax was actually contributing to inequality here in the province of Alberta, less money in the hands of your average Albertan. Having greater inequality actually does not help business. It actually makes it worse in the province.

Now, so many times the members across the way talk about how the government is just asking for a blank cheque. A blank cheque. Well, I would venture to guess – well, I would state that it's not a blank cheque. It's all written right here exactly what that money is going to be used for, the services that are going to be provided to each and every Albertan. It's the exact opposite of a blank cheque.

What we don't know, though, are the contributions that were made to the campaign for leadership of the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. That's what we don't know because he refuses to disclose those amounts that were contributed to that campaign. To this day we don't know. It's the exact opposite of what we're doing here, making sure that we're providing services for Albertans.

Now, so many times the members across the way like to remind us: this is not your money; it's Albertans' money. Exactly. It is Albertans' money. It's their tax dollars that are going to provide these very important services that they will benefit from. Whether that's Agriculture and Forestry or Children's Services or whether it be Culture and Tourism, whatever the case may be, it's all written right here. The exact opposite of a blank cheque.

You know, so many times the members from across the way talk about the public debt as if it were the personal debt of each and every Albertan. In my opinion, that's quite misleading because this is public debt, which is not the exact same thing as personal debt. When you go out there and you tell Albertans, "Oh, yeah, you're going to have $5,000 of debt because of the decisions that are being made by this government," in my opinion, you're misleading them. Now, I want to ask you: how many people here . . .

Mr. Carson: Mortgages.

Loyola: Exactly. You know exactly where I'm going, my friend.

How many people would actually have all the money in their hand, or let's just say in their bank account, to buy a home before they actually moved into it? Now, I don't know many Albertans, especially hard-working Albertans who, you know, maybe have two or even three jobs, who have all that money in the bank before they can actually buy a house and actually move into it. Thank goodness we have these financial instruments called mortgages.

Ms Renaud: That is radical.

Loyola: A radical, radical idea. Sounds like an ideological thing, yes, indeed.

Now, for those of you who aren't clear on this – no, I'm not going to go there. I know that each and every one of us in this House knows what a mortgage is, an incredibly important financial instrument that provides the citizens of this great land with the opportunity to be able to purchase a house and pay for that house as they go. Now, I don't know many people who have the $300,000 or $350,000 or even half a million dollars up front to actually buy a house right off the bat. I don't know many people like that. I don't think I've ever met someone like that in my life. Well, at least, I don't know. Maybe.

All I know is that I didn't have that kind of money when I got my house, and I'm still paying my mortgage. I've probably got another eight years to go on my mortgage, but at least I have a roof over my head the same way that other Albertans do that have taken advantage of this very important financial instrument so that they can actually live inside a house with a roof over their head, a place to call home, where they can raise their children and make sure that that family has the security that they need to be contributing citizens of this fine province.

That's what we're supposed to be here to do, help those individuals so that they can get the services that they need. Whether it be these children going to schools – you know, thanks to the Minister of Education for clearing up some of the misunderstandings from the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

By the way, Mr. Chair, I happen to know that "wapiti" is a Cree word. It's a Cree word.

Ms Renaud: For flat tax.

Loyola: It doesn't stand for a flat tax. It's actually a Cree word that means white rump. You know, knowing the sense of humour of my Cree friends, I don't think that they were just talking about the four-legged animals.

You know, sometimes the members opposite like to get up and think that they're schooling us as if we don't know, as if we're not Albertans, as if we don't know what it's like to function in this economy. I'll remind all the members of this House, especially those on the other side, that for the first time in a very long time in the history of this province we have a pretty good diverse group of people on this side of the House. People were social workers, nurses, right? We have people who participated in unions, students, young people, seniors, older people. We've got a pretty good diverse crew over here on this side of the House . . .

The Acting Chair: Hon. member, if I may, I'll interject for a moment. I've exercised a fair bit of discretion. If you could relate your arguments back to Bill 4, come full circle, I'd appreciate that.

Loyola: I'm getting there, sir. I'm getting there, sir.

The Acting Chair: Thank you.

Loyola: I will come full circle.

The Acting Chair: Resume.

Loyola: The reason why I bring that up, Mr. Chair, is because this diverse group on this side of the House also have lived the experience of being a citizen of this province and participating in this economy. They also understand what it's like to actually participate and sometimes be on the giving side of some of the programs and services that are provided by the ministries of this fine government. For that reason, we understand that the amounts denoted here in supplementary supply estimates, which are clear as day, as transparent as can be, the exact opposite of a blank cheque, are going to provide services for the people of Alberta, Albertan taxpayer money dedicated to the services that Albertans need. The exact opposite of a blank cheque.

Again I want to remind all the members of this House that during second reading the members opposite actually voted against all of these things. I want to go through that list again because they're so important, Mr. Chair. The municipal sustainability initiative: they voted no. The wildfire disaster recovery and emergency assistance: they voted no. Child intervention, child care subsidy and supports: they voted no. Persons with disabilities and assured income for the severely handicapped: you guessed it; they voted no. Employment and income supports: they voted no. The provincial share of AgriInsurance premiums and indemnities: they voted no. I believe that those are going to help the rural constituents that many of them represent. Compensation increases for Royal Canadian Mounted Police and justices of the peace. They voted no, Mr. Chair. As well, Alberta production grants. And they voted no. It's hard for me to understand. They get up in this House, and they say: "Well, it's Alberta taxpayer dollars. It's not your money." So then why are they voting no for Albertans' money to go back to help Albertans?

Mr. Chair, I think it's time for all Albertans to really understand that government, unlike the members across, who would rather have less government and less regulation, which would lead to less safety . . . [interjection] Look at them laugh. They laugh when I say that it's going to lead to less safety because that's the way they look at it. That's their world view, their ideological view. They would prefer that there be less government. You know, they always lob across words onto this side of the House, saying that we're the ideological ones, that we make decisions based on ideology.

An Hon. Member: How much time left on the clock there?

Loyola: Don't worry. I've got enough time.

They like to claim that we're the ideological ones, but, Mr. Chair, I would say that they're the ideological ones, trying to put their ideological world view on all Albertans, when we know full well that the amounts being requested in the supplementary supply estimates are Alberta taxpayer dollars that are going back to help the Albertans that actually need it.

With that, I'll end, Mr. Chair. Thank you very much.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm not even really sure what that was, but back to supplementary supply, which the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie was attempting to discuss, I think. I think that's what he was trying to talk about. I'd like to explore the mortgage debt analogy that the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie spent a considerable portion of time discussing in the Chamber today. It was quite interesting, but I don't know where he was going with it, to be honest. Let's talk about another little bit of economics. Let's talk about some debt. He seemed to indicate that nobody on this side of the House has ever had a mortgage. I don't know if that's true. I know I certainly had a mortgage.

Loyola: How is this relevant?

Mr. Nixon: How it's relevant is that I'm responding to the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, Mr. Chair, who you gave a tremendous amount of latitude as he spoke about the mortgage situation. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, if you'd like to rise again and speak, I'm sure we would listen with riveting attention again.

Mr. Chair, I would ask that the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie yield the floor. It's my turn now. I listened quietly while he presented. [interjections] I know the government is struggling to allow me to speak, Mr. Chair, but it's my right to speak in this Chamber on behalf of my constituents, and it's your responsibility to make sure that they allow me to speak.

The Acting Chair: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has the floor.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Where I was going with this is that the mortgage analogy of borrowing money to be able to buy an asset, I think, is what the hon. member was referring to. He used a household analogy, which is fair. Actually, I think that the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays used a similar analogy earlier this afternoon. The problem with this point from the member is that he's forgetting about the incredible amount of debt and borrowing against my children's and my grandchildren's future that this government is undertaking.

Now, if you want to talk about household debt, if you have a mortgage for a few hundred thousand dollars for a family to purchase a home but then you continue to come home week after week, Mr. Chair, and you and your spouse or your partner determine that you're going to continue to borrow more money, hundreds of thousands of dollars every month over and over and over until it becomes millions or, in the case of this government, billions and eventually a hundred billion dollars, there are going to be significant consequences eventually to that because you're not going to be able to afford to make the payments. The interest is going to become a tremendous burden on your household. That's what's happening with this government.

We see it already happening right now. They're going to be between $90 billion and a $100 billion in debt in 2019, the next time that they go and face the boss, the people of Alberta, at the ballot box, and they're going to have to explain that level of debt. But the consequence of that debt is what generations of Albertans will be paying. Sadly, these members across the way will be long gone, and Albertans for generations will be paying the consequences as a result of these members' actions. They don't want to talk about that.

This was the point earlier from the Member for Calgary-Hays. They continue to come to this Chamber and ask for a blank cheque. Again, if you want to use a household mortgage example, if I come home every weekend from this place and my spouse is telling me, "Hey, we're going to continue to borrow more money and borrow more money and borrow more money," I certainly hope at some point she would say: "Whoa. What's going on here? We can't borrow money forever." You know, the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays did a great job talking about the blank cheque and the similar situation, which is what this government continues to ask for, with minimal details. They just say: "Hey. We'll bring in this. Give us this money. Just trust us. Everything is going to be okay."

What makes it worse, though, when you take it out of the personal analogy to somebody's house, as the member tried to do, is that this is about Albertans' money. It's not about his money. It's not about my money. It's not about the money of the people in this Chamber, though we are Albertans and do contribute through our tax base. It's about Albertans' money that they're spending. Not only are they going to be facing – unborn Albertans right now will be paying the consequences of this government's action. Albertans now are having their money spent.

The other issue that the hon. member raised is rural crime. What's interesting about the rural crime issue are a couple of things. The first is that this government for almost two years did absolutely nothing on the rural crime file while across the province people were being victimized and abused from every corner of this province, particularly in rural Alberta, particularly in central Alberta, where I'm from. Members have come and said over and over and over: "Hey. This has to get fixed. We have people who are being robbed. We have people that are being hurt and are scared in their homes, people whose acreages have been robbed four, five times, people – Mr. Chair, this is really interesting and sad – who have been robbed by the same person, even though that person has been convicted and then returned and robbed them.

Now, when I was Leader of the Opposition in this place, I brought forward an emergency debate motion that this government voted against or pushed so that it could not go to a vote, stood up against it. They didn't care about rural Alberta. The only time they started to care about rural Alberta, Mr. Chair, was when their poll numbers started to plummet, and now we see a government in mad panic. That's fine. I get it. They're trying to adjust the message, which is fine, but they have to be factual, which is that they have not stood up for Alberta on this issue for two years.

Now, the question is: can they do it now? I certainly hope that we will finally get to see this government start to make some improvements on that issue. The problem, though, is that nobody on that side of the aisle – nobody on that side of the aisle – has taken the time to come to town halls that are happening all across this province, to sit in those halls, to talk to constituents that are being robbed. I've had over a dozen with my Members of Parliament in my communities. At all those halls have been Members of Parliament, myself, municipal politicians, and local police officers, as well as senior police officers in the province of Alberta. What has been missing is government members. Not one government member at any of those halls, certainly not the minister, talking to the people that are being victimized right now.

If they had come to the hall, and this is why this is relevant to what we're discussing today, Mr. Chair, they would realize that one of the big issues – there are many issues when it comes to rural crime. It's not just a staffing issue. Staffing is part of it. One of the big issues, particularly when it comes to staffing, is that there are no officers coming out of the depot to fill these positions. There are no officers. Red Deer county, which I have the privilege of representing in this Chamber, and Lacombe county, which I also have the privilege of representing in this Chamber, have both been trying to spend their own money to buy officers. They went forward. They said that they've put it in their budget. They've earmarked some money for this issue. Two years have gone by: still no officers because there are no officers to fill it.

One of the great questions on this announcement is: where are those officers going to come from? Second, are they going to come from other areas of the province? Are we going to now make a situation worse in certain detachments because we have to pull those officers out and put them into a detachment? Very legitimate questions that should be asked, but this government won't go talk to the communities, so they're not able to ask.

The other thing they have not addressed at all when it comes to rural crime – I don't see anything in here about this emergency issue that we're seeing across rural Alberta – is this. Our police officers are being forced to play catch-and-release, which is fine when it comes to fishing. I'm an avid angler, Mr. Chair, as you know. Catch-and-release fishing is great, but it's not good when it comes to criminals. I've got officers all across rural Alberta, all across my communities right now who are catching criminals and bringing them to court. Those criminals are being convicted, and they're right back on the street revictimizing my community; 51 times is a story that I heard the other day, 51 times that somebody was convicted and back out robbing people in my communities.

The Justice minister has not picked up the phone once to call the federal Justice minister to say what is going on. This government has shown no plan on how to make property crime a serious issue in this province, how to stand up and make it a serious criminal issue with serious consequences if you're going to be robbing our farms. Instead, they want to stand up while debating interim supply and act like they're experts when it comes to a certain issue, and this is what concerns us, which is why we're asking questions about this interim supply that's in front of us. Clearly, from what they're saying, they have absolutely no clue. They have no clue.

Now, I resent it because we've seen it so much from this government. The communities that I represent in this place have seen it so much from this government. They come here and they act like they know what they're talking about. But they do not know what they're talking about. It started with Bill 6. How do we know that they know what they're talking about right now? That is why we come and we ask questions in this place. Instead, what we have is a government member standing up inside this place over and over and over talking about flat tax, which nobody has talked about. It's certainly not in interim supply. Talking about their ideological beliefs or what they believe that I believe, et cetera, is fine. It's interesting to listen to even though factually they're wrong more often than not. But how can we trust them when they're asking us to vote for this?

It is our responsibility – we're talking about billions of dollars, Mr. Chair – to come here and ask what is going on. When the government stands up and shows such a fundamental misunderstanding of something like rural crime and tries to act like they're experts on it despite the fact they haven't talked to anybody – they stay in Edmonton because they don't want to go out and talk to their constituents any more. I don't know why. I suspect it's not pleasant. I don't know what's going on. Maybe Albertans are frustrated in their ridings like they are in mine. But to stand up in this House and act like you know what you're talking about when clearly you do not – how are you going to fill those officer positions? How is that going to happen? What are you doing about fixing the Criminal Code? What are you doing?

Ms McLean: That's federal.

Mr. Nixon: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta said that that's federal. You know what, Mr. Chair? The minister needs to get on the phone with the federal minister right now and say: our constituents are being victimized, and we need this changed. They shouldn't sit in this House and laugh about it. They should stand up and . . .

The Acting Chair: Hon. member, may I ask you to stay a little closer to the topic at hand, Bill 4. It goes both ways.

Mr. Nixon: Exactly, Mr. Chair. I think that's fair.

It's unfortunate that the government has participated in that. I am talking about the funding that is in this bill. The member across the way who is presenting on behalf of the government has presented himself as knowing about the facts that are associated with this funding, but he does not know about what it. He has just proven it. What he's saying is not true. I withdraw that, Mr. Chair. What he's saying is misrepresenting the facts or shows his misunderstanding of what is taking place. [interjection] You know, the Minister of Education is telling me to sit down. Again, Mr. Chair, I have the floor, not the minister.

Well, the minister may not want to or like to hear about what is going on or want to continue to make things up. That's disappointing. They've stood in this House repeatedly today and passed off that this document we're here to debate today has to do with these issues, but then when we stand up and we ask them questions, within minutes it falls apart. [interjections] Again, the Minister of Education is struggling because he wants us just to accept what they're saying, but it's not true.

An Hon. Member: That makes no sense.

Mr. Nixon: See, they say that it doesn't make sense. Well, Mr. Chair, if they took time to come and talk to some people in the community hall instead of sitting here in the Legislature underneath the dome, talk to real people that have been impacted, they'd find out very quickly that what they're saying is not the facts that are on the ground. They are not the facts. [interjection] The Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater is now upset. I was in his constituency on Saturday talking to people that have been robbed. They've been very clear that this is not true. I'm talking about the funding on this, which is what they were talking about. His constituents were extraordinarily clear how disappointed they are in this government and in him directly on how they've handled this issue. He does not understand this rural crime issue. He does not understand this rural crime issue. He does not.

Now, Mr. Chair, although they want to come and make this part of this debate, the funding – we keep asking: where is it? – it's not. You can't get officers in two years, so you're certainly not going to get them in the next few days before the budget is tabled. That's impossible. You would know that if you went out and talked to people. You would know that our detachments are operating under significant reduced percentages of officers already because so many are on leave for legitimate reasons – maternity, stress leave, et cetera – that is now compounding the issue of stress because they're short-handed. So we have a serious personnel problem.

The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie wants to stand up and continue to attempt to say that he understands the rural crime issue. His facts are wrong. His facts are wrong. You can't get the officers in that time. He's not dealing with a revolving door inside the courts. No comment on how we're going to deal with the judiciary. No comment on how we're going to deal with large, spread-out detachments. No comment on how we're going to deal with the changing dynamic of the criminal element in our communities, which is now transient and working across our communities. It's not, you know, little . . .

Mr. Piquette: That's what the crime reduction units are for.

Mr. Nixon: I think the hon. member just heckled to me, "That's what harm reduction is for," but that's not what harm reduction is for. That's a different issue. I'll tell you what's harm reduction on this issue, Mr. Chair. It would be to have people that continue to rob our farms go to jail for stealing our property. That would be harm reduction.

The Acting Chair: Hon. member, we're rambling on a lot of different topics here. I wish we could stay on the central issue, Bill 4. This is the second time I've had to remind you.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chair, fair. Back to Bill 4 and, specifically, what it may or may not fund.

The Acting Chair: So we'll stick to the matters at hand, and Bill 4 is the argument that we're speaking on.

Mr. Nixon: Well, what I'm speaking about, Mr. Chair, is directly on the comments that Edmonton-Ellerslie provided to us in regard to Bill 4, where he indicated all these crime issues that were being dealt with. I just listed a whole bunch of issues, and that's not being dealt with inside this bill. So the question is: what is being dealt with inside this bill if that's not what's being dealt with inside this bill? The hon. member should not stand up in this House and continue to say that those are the issues that are being dealt with in Bill 4 if they're not the issues that are being dealt with in Bill 4.

In closing, Mr. Chair, it's disappointing to continue to see a government bring forward a request for blank cheques repeatedly, not wanting to give out solid information on what's happening, taking issues from elsewhere and then trying to put them on the bill, but clearly, once you start to talk to them, they don't have a clue what they're talking about. They're just adding to it, pretending like they're champions with this bill, that this bill is now a champion for rural Alberta when it's not – this is about the bill – standing in this Chamber repeatedly talking about, you know, how they're going to deal with the rural crime issue though the bill has nothing to do with rural crime and they don't know how to deal with the issue. When we look at Bill 4, Mr. Chair, it has nothing to do with what the hon. member is referring to when we ask him questions.

Instead, what the government should do is stand up and actually talk about what Bill 4 actually has to do with, not continue to stand in this Chamber and tell us that it has to do with something that it does not. It's very counterproductive, very, very disappointing to continue to see the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie do that. I would also challenge him, Mr. Chair, to take some time to actually talk to some Albertans that are being impacted by rural crime and to talk to some police officers to see if their bill, Bill 4, actually will be addressing any of the issues.

Mr. Piquette: Have you talked to any RCMP officers?

Mr. Nixon: Again, I mean, I don't know why the hon. member from Athabasca is so upset. I've been in his constituency. They're worried about the same thing that I'm worried about. I gave a speech there on Saturday, and all the questions and answers were about confusion about what the government is doing on this file, that they have now presented to say that that's what they're dealing with here. If that's what they're dealing with here, how are you dealing with it? You say that you're dealing with rural crime in this bill. How are you dealing with it? How are you dealing with the RCMP officer shortages? How are you dealing with the problems we have with the judiciary? How are you dealing with the capacity issues that we have in courthouses? How are you dealing with the fact that property crime is not taken seriously in our communities? How are you dealing with the fact of the drug issues that we're seeing that are causing crime in our communities? And the list goes on and on.

So if that's what this bill is about, the question to the government is: how does this bill address all of those issues? At this point they've shown no evidence of that. They've shown no evidence of that in this bill.

Mrs. Littlewood: Harm reduction, health.

Mr. Nixon: The Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville just heckled at me that it's got, again, to do with harm reduction. In Nordegg, where the store is getting robbed every week, the harm reduction techniques this government is looking at in Calgary and Edmonton are not going to help the people in Nordegg.

That, again, shows me, Mr. Chair, that this government doesn't even know what this bill is. The members that are sitting here debating it don't even know what this bill is. They want to pass themselves off as experts and say that this bill is bringing in harm reduction – I don't see anywhere in here about harm reduction, but if that's their argument, then let's look at that – and that that will somehow address crime west of Rocky Mountain House or in Ponoka county. It's gotten so bad now in Lacombe county and Ponoka county that citizens have to work together to patrol around the clock to protect their properties and to protect their neighbours. Could you explain to me how that bill will deal with that issue between now and when the budget is tabled on Thursday?

It is a ridiculous argument that the hon. member keeps making. He can make it, but he should at least make sure that he understands the full rural crime issue. Police officers are just a start; they're one small part of it. There are no police officers in the depot to fill those positions. It's the RCMP that say that. It comes up at every town hall. I hope that the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie will come. I think there's another one coming up next week, during the constituency break, around Rocky Mountain House. He's welcome to come and visit us in Rocky Mountain House and hear from the people that are concerned about this issue. It would be enlightening for him, I'm sure, and would help him in the future when he's talking about bills to not bring something to a bill that has absolutely nothing to do with the bill.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other hon. members who wish to speak to Bill 4?

Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

[The clauses of Bill 4 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Acting Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Chair. At this time I'd like to move that the committee rise and report.

The Acting Chair: Hon. member, did you mean to say to rise and report bills 3 and 4?

Ms Larivee: Yes, to rise and report bills 3 and 4.

The Acting Chair: Thank you.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Dach in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 3 and Bill 4.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

5:10 Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Sweet moved, seconded by Mr. Malkinson, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 13: Ms Ganley]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to address my response to the Speech from the Throne. I'm honoured to rise today in the traditional territory of Treaty 6 peoples. I would also like to acknowledge that this land is important to the Métis nations of Alberta.

Along with other Albertans, elected members of this Legislature, and the members of my NDP caucus, I have been considering commitments made by our government in Thursday's Speech from the Throne. I was very pleased and impressed by pledges made to the women of this province and our government's decision to make choices that were in the best interests of families during the downturn. A century ago Alberta was the first province in Canada to elect women to its Legislature. Today we enjoy the most women in cabinet positions and in a provincial caucus in Canadian history. Our government continues to recognize the contributions that all women make to families and communities across Alberta. We are working hard to ensure that women feel safe at home and at work everywhere in this province. Our government takes this very seriously.

Our government faced very difficult challenges when we first came into office. Oil prices were at an all-time low. Schools, hospitals, seniors' facilities, roads, bridges had been neglected and allowed to fall into disrepair under the previous government. In response we expanded and upgraded the Grande Cache high school, which now has an enhanced trades training facility, which would have been left from the previous government. We also completed new facilities for high school and French immersion in Jasper, complete with solar panels on the roof to help with greening the economy and greening for the school.

We completed the new hospital and are building a new medical clinic and a new seniors' facility in Edson. AHS purchased the Mountain View seniors' home from the Good Samaritan Society and brought long-term care back to Hinton, which was missing for many, many years, the only community in West Yellowhead that didn't have it. We have built and renovated library facilities for Jasper and Grande Cache. Our government has funded upgrades to water treatment, sewage management systems in Grande Cache, Marlboro, Edson, Yellowhead county, Hinton, and Jasper.

Our commitment to developing and repairing infrastructure during the downturn was a very good idea because costs were lower than during the boom times. It was a great investment and proved very worth while in West Yellowhead. This work created and maintained employment and business income during a most challenging economic time, supporting families and communities dealing with unemployment and economic hardship. I can relate that to the community of Grande Cache. I am proud to be part of a government that put the needs of Alberta families first and successfully took on the task of prudently managing our economy and resources towards stable economic growth.

As the Lieutenant Governor noted, things are continuing to look up. Several successful free-enterprise banks agree, and here's what they're saying. Regarding Alberta's economy, RBC's December 2017 economic outlook report states: "We expect key economic sectors such as energy and capital investment to reach a more sustainable 'cruising speed' after their initial post-recession blast-off in 2017." Great news. RBC also states: "We project slightly faster growth in employment in 2018 (1.2%) compared to 2017 (1.0%) as the recovery spreads to more [sections] of the economy."

TD Canada in their provincial economic report Walking Tall into 2018 says, "Alberta is in the midst of a sharp rebound after contracting by 3.7% in each of the last two years." TD also stated: "Strength has been fairly widespread across industries, with manufacturing, retail, housing, and exports all gaining momentum."

Given these realities I'm very confused as to why the Leader of the Official Opposition continues to claim that our government is driving economic activity out of Alberta. I'm totally confused why they keep pushing that idea. I am happy that our government will continue to work to diversify our economy, especially in the energy sector, most notably by committing unequivocally to ensuring Canadian tidewater access for Alberta energy through the construction of the Kinder Morgan pipeline. Our Premier has stated that she will go as far as Peter Lougheed did when he faced a similar threat in the '80s. It's quite a commitment. The Kinder Morgan pipeline will be built.

This pipeline will pass through West Yellowhead and ensure unprecedented economic benefits for my constituents. Many construction jobs will be created. Businesses across West Yellowhead will enjoy the tremendous economic benefits. Moving our energy resources to tidewater will result in us receiving fairer prices for our products, putting more money into the pockets of Albertans, ensuring long-term economic viability for all communities. It will promote higher levels of investment by industry and support diversification of our energy sector, which has been ignored for many years. As the Lieutenant Governor noted, we will be forging a path to balanced budgets and a way forward that avoids our province's boom-and-bust history and wild swings in government spending that create so much uncertainty for Albertans.

I am proud that our government has worked and will continue to work to expand and diversify our economy on all fronts, including electricity, energy, manufacturing, tourism, technology, and many other sectors. I'll give you some examples in West Yellowhead: $200 million worth of upgrades to highway 40, which is long overdue. What about the replacement of the blue bridge, which has been requested for years and ignored by the previous government? This bridge will improve access to Grande Cache and area for energy, forestry, and tourism industries. That old blue bridge has been there forever.

Coal transition funding assists workers and communities with expanding their economic options as we move towards a greener economy. Turning Point Generation, a private, for-profit enterprise, for example, is spending $20 million to build a green power storage facility near Hinton, a great economic benefit, a great issue for greening the economy because of this project.

Here's another one. The town of Hinton has partnered with the province and private, for-profit industry to develop a groundbreaking geothermal energy project in their area. This will utilize abandoned and orphaned oil wells to access thermal energy which lies close to the surface in the region and is expected to bring construction jobs, to save money to heat buildings, with the possibility of growing food, of greenhouses, and another possibility of producing electrical energy.

Loyola: And what's wrong with that?

Mr. Rosendahl: Yeah. What's wrong with that?

Our government is committed to diversification through expanding education and training, business development, and working to improve equality for all Albertans. We're supporting Grande Prairie Regional College with transitioning to university degree granting status and setting up a local campus in Grande Cache, which will help the people in Grande Cache to get degrees and other university training. Hinton will see a full social work degree program come to West Yellowhead in September 2019, which I've been pushing for with GPRC. I personally worked with Grande Prairie Regional College to bring a dual credit entry-level trades training program to Edson in 2017 and class 1 driver training in Grande Cache to help the residents up there when they got laid off from the mines so that they could seek additional training to look for other work.

To support the forest industry, we have committed extensive resources and are partnering with the town of Hinton to contain the mountain pine beetle, which is now in our area and which is a serious problem for our forestry sector.

We're also seeing the development of a new coal mine – oh, but we hate coal, right? – a brand new mine opening up east of Hinton, Cline energy. I just saw huge pieces of equipment that were taken up to the mine last week. But we don't like coal, really.

We're working hard also to promote tourism and other non energy related options; for example, developing access to the dinosaur tracks up in Grande Cache. How many people even know that we have dinosaur tracks up in Grande Cache? It's a huge tourism opportunity that we can be taking advantage of.

We have also made many commitments and contributions to nonprofit, community-supporting organizations across West Yellowhead.

We have been working hard to create a balance between protecting the environment, caribou populations, and the needs of industry. Jobs are important in our area, especially in the forestry sector and oil and gas, work in that area where the caribou are.

We have committed to make government work for Albertans. We continue to honour our commitments to all Albertans, including those who are marginalized and vulnerable. We have committed to protecting Albertans from crime, especially in rural areas. We know that we've got lots of work to do on that, but we continue to work on that.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Sucha: I think the Member for West Yellowhead has some other insightful comments that he would like to share about his constituency and some of the benefits that he's been seeing.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Well, thank you. I do have a few more, for sure. The other thing is that we continue to work with indigenous peoples and all Albertans, like we said, to address the inequality and combat also the opioid crisis that exists in our area. We've got to really work hard on this. We are committed to bringing a safe injection site to Edson, which the Leader of the Official Opposition disagrees with, but we're promoting this because it will help reduce crime and save lives. As the Lieutenant Governor said in the throne speech, "This recovery is proving things can be done differently and that good things happen when governments proudly stand [up] on the side of working Albertans." I am proud that our government is committed to working together and looking to the future with optimism.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was a wonderful speech.

Mr. Sucha: It's 29(2)(a).

Mr. Gill: Oh, is it 29(2)(a)? Sorry. I will sit down.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Under 29(2)(a), any hon. members wishing to speak?

All right. Other hon. members wishing to speak?

Now I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to provide a response to the Speech from the Throne. I would like to point out two statements from the Speech from the Throne and to specifically discuss these two points. "When government fails to work for people, inequality rises." The members on the other side of the Chamber may be surprised to learn that, actually, we also agree with that statement that when government fails to work for people, inequality rises. Yes, we do agree. However, I question how much the government agrees with this statement. This is their own.

Let me explain why I ask this. This government has taken an incredibly big step – it's a big one – to introduce a carbon tax. That is the opposite of the people's mandate. Two-thirds of Albertans do not want this carbon tax, so why do we still have that? If we go back to that quotation, it is clear that this unfair carbon tax creates inequality. As the UCP critic for Seniors and Housing I will point to some of the serious problems the carbon tax is creating for our seniors, the seniors who helped to build this province. Now those seniors are facing challenges because of this carbon tax imposed by this socialist government.

Here's an inexcusable example that relates to those rebates that this NDP government boasts about every time seniors and the carbon tax are mentioned together. Mr. Speaker, the minister of seniors signed a ministerial order in July that claws back a portion of rebates for seniors living in subsidized housing. How is that, like, fair to seniors? Is that creating equality or inequality? Maybe the government can answer that. The most vulnerable seniors are seeing that these rebates are being clawed back. These are the fine folks who helped build this awesome province. The clawback is occurring because seniors have to declare the rebate as income, and their rent is based on their income.

5:30

Mr. Speaker, when the NDP trumpet their carbon tax rebates, I believe it is important for Albertans to know that the government is giving and taking at the same time. How is it creating equality? By the way, it is not just seniors facing this clawback. Other Albertans, like single mothers, have to declare income, too.

This move by the Minister of Seniors and Housing was done so quietly. No doubt the minister would have preferred not to shed light on this ministerial order she signed. They claim to shed light on every other single thing. Why not discuss this with Albertans when she signed this ministerial order to claw this back from seniors?

Interestingly, Mr. Speaker, this year's Speech from the Throne does not even mention the carbon levy – let me use the NDP word here; I'm sorry – the rebate, but last year's did. I'll quote: "All the while, carbon levy rebates will continue going right to the bank accounts of two-thirds of Alberta households." Rebates are going, quote, right back to the accounts of Albertans, unquote, but it's not staying in their accounts because the government is clawing it back. I don't understand. Like, what is this government trying to claim here? [interjections] Well, let's depart from that point now. I see the heckling started on the other side because it's a bit of a sensitive topic for the government side because they didn't campaign on the carbon tax in the 2015 election.

Let's depart from that point and look at the other inequalities created by the carbon tax that the government no longer wants to talk about. I'll just mention a couple, rural residents and small businesses. Our hon. House leader talked at great length today about the seriousness of crime in rural areas. Rural residents were told – and I still can't believe this – that if they want to avoid the effect of the carbon tax, they should simply take a bus. Like, seriously? Who would say something like this to a resident who's never seen transit on their gravel driveways, range roads? It was coming not from a backbencher, the usual hecklers; it was coming from the Premier herself. That is even more disturbing, disrespecting of rural residents. This statement still echoes in the ears of rural Albertans. Let me tell you that they will remember that whenever the next election is held. They will.

As for small business, no talk about it. They have been crushed by a cascade of legislation, costs associated with it. The carbon tax is one of many unfair impositions. Yet – I repeat – the carbon tax, which continues to resonate through our economy and hurts individuals, including seniors and rural residents, was not mentioned in this year's Speech from the Throne. Perhaps this NDP believes that if it stops acknowledging its presence, probably Albertans will forget about it. I don't think so. That's wrong.

Mr. Speaker, let them continue to think that way if they wish. We in the UCP will continue to address it in this Chamber and when we go to our constituents across this province. And in a little more than a year, when people have a mandate, they will address that issue. We will not stop fighting on behalf of them because this is not the right thing to do. Perhaps the tax isn't mentioned because the NDP realizes that really there's no need for it. It has damaged them politically, so now let's not talk about it. The Premier still hasn't answered the Leader of the Official Opposition on how high she wants to go, because we've all seen that it hasn't brought us any pipelines.

Every time in QP the government side stands up – and last session, like, we were almost getting tired of seeing two fingers and two pipelines. Every question has the answer, "We got two pipelines approved." We see that Tzaporah Berman and Karen Mahon, the same people this government appointed, are protesting in Burnaby. It has brought them no pipeline. This government wanted Albertans to think that the carbon tax equals pipelines, but that'll never happen. The environment foundation: it doesn't exist.

Mr. Speaker, I'm curious. The NDP mentioned the carbon tax in the last two throne speeches but not this one. I don't know. The other one that didn't include a carbon tax plan and all the great things that it was going to do for Alberta was the first one, in June 2015. I wasn't here at that time. I don't remember that. It seems that we have come full circle now. This government is kind of, like, realizing how out of touch they are from average Albertans, that their socialist ideology, NDP world view is actually kind of, like, getting push-back, so maybe we need to stop hiding stuff. That's why the minister of seniors, when she signs a ministerial order to claw back from seniors, does not announce it to the public. That's why the Speech from the Throne this year does not have a carbon tax or levy, whatever you want to call it, sir.

We have one more Speech from the Throne from this government. Will it announce that it is going to be $50 per tonne, the carbon tax? Is it going to go that high? I don't know. Why didn't the government disclose this in the throne speech?

Or will the government actually take advice from the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, our leader, and then, you know, just scrap the tax? So far they have been following advice, when we talk about the wine ban and taking the repercussion approach. Our leader has said that if B.C. does not work with us, there will be serious consequences. At that time, the Premier said: this member wants to build a wall around Alberta, and hopefully he probably also wants B.C. to pay for it. That was her stand, but now she wants to talk about the same thing. Hopefully, the government and the Premier herself will listen to our leader and maybe cut the carbon tax, but that is a question for another time.

Thank you very much for this opportunity, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other hon. members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?
The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I might have heard the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway say that rural crime wasn't mentioned in the throne speech. I want to give him an opportunity to correct the record because it was actually mentioned in the throne speech, and I will read an excerpt just to refresh his memory. It says:

Across Alberta, from our rural communities to our urban centres, every Albertan deserves to feel safe. Today in Alberta, especially in rural areas, people are concerned for the safety of their homes, their property, and the well-being of those they love. That must change.

Your government invests more than half a billion dollars annually into police services across the province. Our police officers serve and protect Albertans with a bravery and dedication that is unmatched.

I just wanted to make sure that the member knew and give him an opportunity, if he wanted to, to correct his remarks.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did mention the impact of the carbon tax on rural Albertans. I didn't say that rural Albertans were not mentioned in the throne speech.

An Hon. Member: Rural crime.

5:40

Mr. Gill: Rural crime. No, no. I just meant the carbon tax impact on that and then how the Official Opposition House Leader talked about rural crime. That was the comment on that.

Again, my comment was on how the Premier wanted rural Albertans to take a bus, like, if you're being impacted by the carbon tax, just take a bus. That was what I was saying. And another: the environment minister said that if you want to contribute to lowering greenhouse gas emissions, maybe eat less meat. But I didn't talk about that. I mean, like, we're talking about taking freedom away here. You know, Fortis et Liber, strong and free: Mr. Speaker, that is the coat of arms of our province. We're telling people to take the bus. We're telling Albertans who built this amazing province to eat less meat, take a bus. What kind of a province are we creating for our future generation?

Hopefully, I answered the hon. member's question. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under 29(2)(a), are there other hon. members wishing to speak?

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm actually going to respond to the Speech from the Throne, unlike the previous speaker. I cannot really figure out how the speech was a response to the throne speech. It was a rant against his favourite subject, which is the carbon levy. It really wasn't a response to the Speech from the Throne. It wasn't something that would really inspire me as an Albertan to figure out that things are happening in Alberta that are good for Albertans.

I am actually going to respond to the throne speech because I think it was a really good throne speech. The Lieutenant Governor read it and recognized the work that Albertans from all corners of the province are doing. We all know that the Lieutenant Governor is very dedicated to recognizing the volunteerism that makes our Alberta communities great and attractive to all parts of Canada and the world. The previous member who spoke and I share something in common. We actually chose to come to Canada and to make our home in Alberta because we know the values that Albertans have and what a great place Alberta is.

The work the government is doing, as highlighted by the Speech from the Throne, which is the real purpose of the Speech from the Throne, is to ensure Canadian tidewater access for Alberta's natural resources. That is very important to my constituency and to my fellow Industrial Heartland MLAs. Actually, I would hope that every single one of the 85 MLAs in this Assembly also thinks that access to tidewater for our oil and gas is very, very important. It is at the heart of our ability to ensure all the services that we enjoy, from the preschools to postsecondary education, the hospitals and community-based health care, the roads and bridges in all of our constituencies, the emergency services, support for Albertans who need income assistance, who need counselling and affordable housing.

The Trans Mountain pipeline is also crucial to those seniors which the hon. member mentioned. Without the Trans Mountain pipeline we cannot build the long-term care, the assisted living, or the lodges that our seniors need. The constituents that I have spoken to have really appreciated and supported the throne speech's strong language on defending all workers and remaining vigilant that there are no roadblocks to getting this pipeline built.

The government's support for diversification of the petrochemical industry has already borne fruit in the Industrial Heartland and in the area around Red Deer, and I'm hoping that it will bear fruit in the Grande Prairie area, too. We all know that Inter Pipeline has started to build its facility. The building of the Inter Pipeline facility will ensure that many workers are kept employed over the next few years and will, of course, also add value to our economy by processing the feedstock into value-added products.

Mr. Speaker, I personally find it so depressing when members of the opposition are constantly refusing to accept the factual information that the Alberta economy is doing much better and that we're on the path towards recovery. We know that the recovery is not affecting everyone equally, in the same way. But the government's focus on economic diversification will mean that in the years to come a great variety of employment opportunities will be available to all Albertans and there will be opportunities for retraining.

One group of workers that I really admire is the oil and gas workers who have formed Iron and Earth. Knowing that they needed to explore employment in the renewable energy sector, they are creating new employment opportunities for themselves. If you don't know this organization, I would really urge you to find out more about them. This is one example of how Albertans are embracing the energy diversification opportunities available in the renewable energy sector.

The government's leadership on the need to diversify Alberta's economy is recognized world-wide. Provinces and countries which have not diversified their economy have stagnant GDPs and find it hard to find employment opportunities for all of their population. The government has recognized that diversification requires a diversity of tools, including the capital investment tax credit, job creation in new industries, and investment in postsecondary education for these industries. What I appreciate so much about the Speech from the Throne and the work of the government is that the government has realized it's not one simple solution, but it has to be a whole panel of solutions to be able to restart the economy and to ensure employment for everyone.

As parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Education I have been able to see first-hand how important the investment in schools and education is to rural and urban Albertans. Young people are the greatest resource to communities, and investment in their education and well-being is an investment in the future of our communities and the entire economy of Alberta. That's why the investment in infrastructure for schools has been so important to the future of the economy of Alberta.

Last month I visited Greenshields, near High Prairie. This small community worked hard to put together the resources to build a public separate school, community theatre, fitness, and ice arena together in one building with many multi-use spaces. This is the kind of infrastructure investment that will benefit students, seniors, families, and businesses in Greenshields and the surrounding areas for generations to come. The investment in education, infrastructure, and classroom improvement is and will continue to benefit Albertans. Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of investment that the Speech from the Throne speaks about.

The throne speech reminds us all of the work the government has done to put regular people first. Long-standing executive perks and insider excess has been eliminated. Salaries for executive and board members have been reduced, and this is an ongoing exercise, as the Minister of Advanced Education has been speaking about the excess salaries in universities. Unions and corporate donations have been eliminated from the political donation area, and the Lobbyists Act will be reformed in the coming session.

Mr. Speaker, I am so personally grateful for the work that the government is doing on the opioid crisis. Guided by the emergency response commission made up of a diverse group of Albertans, the government is continuing to initiate addiction programs, including the proposed safe injection sites. I am so thankful that the government chose to put an opioid treatment program in the Strathcona community hospital. Addictions affect all parts of Alberta, and the government has recognized the need in rural Alberta. I am dismayed when I hear members of the opposition speak against the harm reduction approach of the government and the innovative programs offered such as safe injection sites, needle exchanges, and the prescription of alcohol to treat alcohol addiction at the Royal Alex hospital.

We all come to our role as MLAs from various backgrounds. Mine has included working with communities to create programs to support these addictions, and I know that it's never easy to create the right programs in the right places to meet those with addictions. I just want to commend the government for taking this issue seriously and using a diversity of approaches in different communities. I hope not to hear any more negative comments from the opposition.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that all Albertans will read the Speech from the Throne and see the optimism in the economic recovery, opportunities for diversification and new jobs, investment in education, addressing of inequality, and unwavering commitment to the Trans Mountain pipeline. I think we as MLAs have to demonstrate to Albertans that we are optimistic, that we really believe in the work that the government is doing, that we believe in the work that our industries are doing, our nonprofits and so on. It's really our role to be optimistic and to try to work hard. It is not our role to be constantly putting things down and to be so depressing about what's happening in Alberta.

There are so many good things happening here. You can just come to my riding and see what's happening in the Industrial Heartland. Mr. Speaker, the pipeline we talk about every day is actually starting in Sherwood Park. Maybe some of you didn't know that. The Trans Mountain pipeline starts in my riding, so I have a lot at stake with it. It will actually pass close to my constituency office, in the utility corridor that runs by my office. For me, I am optimistic that I will look and see the construction from my office windows.

I urge every member of this House to be optimistic and to work hard to ensure that the program the government has proposed in the Speech from the Throne becomes a reality.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any questions, comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I was so intrigued by the member's speech in response to the Speech from the Throne. I was so intrigued as well that she added that the new pipeline is actually going to start right in her riding. I'm hoping that she could comment on that, the importance of the fact that the pipeline is starting in her riding and what that means to the constituents of her fine riding. I'm also hoping that if she doesn't mind – I know that she has dedicated an enormous amount of time and effort to NGOs, working with several NGOs throughout her life. If she could comment on both those things, I would really appreciate it.

Thank you.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, hon. member. Yeah, I actually would like to speak maybe a little bit more about the role that NGOs are playing around sustainability. Today I tabled documents from an organization in Calgary called Momentum. Momentum has been leading this work with nonprofit organizations in terms of ensuring that our nonprofit organizations are also becoming very sustainable, that they do not use a lot of paper, that they use renewable energy, that they source locally and so on. It's really a passion of mine.

I've heard too many negative comments from the members opposite about our nonprofit organizations. For me, nonprofit organizations are actually leaders in our community. I would like to really encourage everyone in this House to work with our nonprofits to ensure that they become sustainable not only in their environmental practices but also in their economic sustainability. I do want to encourage you to read the information that I've tabled today from Momentum and to share that with your own nonprofits.

You know, I think we all know the area around Baseline. It's an area that I actually share with the Minister of Advanced Education. We can see the refineries. The Imperial refinery, which is in my riding, is actually one of the oldest urban refineries. Then we have the Suncor refinery. We probably have all seen the big tanks that contain the oil. We see a lot of not only the refineries but the shops that produce a lot of the material that is being used in the refineries. We actually also have in our riding AltaSteel, which is a company that takes the steel that has been used and melts it down and constructs new rebar.

I would urge all members to not only explore the riding but to also see the part that I love the best about Baseline Road, the pipeline bridge. I don't know how many of the members have seen the pipeline bridge, but I believe this is where the new Trans Mountain pipeline is going to go, from one side of Baseline to the other. That's why I'm so passionate and I'm so thankful for the work that the government is doing to ensure that our oil and gas get to tidewater.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under 29(2)(a), any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you so much. I would like a 29(2)(a) to the hon. Member for Sherwood Park. You mentioned that you like social profits and nonprofits. When I was the seniors critic a few years ago, I met with a large group of nonprofits that were specific to seniors, and they told me they met with a member from the government side. It was the Member for Sherwood Park that they actually met. The comment they made to me that was made by possibly yourself, and I would like you to confirm these comments . . .

An Hon. Member: Does this have to do with the throne speech?

Mr. Yao: Well, it certainly has to do with her comments that she just made right now.

The comments made by these nonprofits were that they were told that this government does not like nonprofits because they take away union jobs. Yes. So I'd like you to confirm that for me. I got this information from the nonprofits, including some very established people. I would like to know that. I would like to understand why you would make such comments to such a group. They did confirm for me that it was the Member for Sherwood Park that said that. I would love to hear about your explanation that you gave these nonprofits, these groups that are focused on providing services to seniors.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: I appreciate the title, but I'm no longer the Deputy Government House Leader. The discussion on the Speech from the Throne responses have been very, very interesting, and I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time I'd like to move that we adjourn the House for the evening until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:57 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let each of us reflect or pray, each in our own way. On this World Down Syndrome Day let us reflect on the amazing progress that has been achieved already in improving the lives of those who live with the syndrome every day. At the same time we have much work ahead of us in combating stigma and other issues that those same people – our friends, our neighbours, our loved ones – still face. Let our deliberations today aim to make their lives and indeed our community and province better than before.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce to you and through you the wonderful students of Wes Hosford elementary school. Today they are with their teachers, Dr. Ingrid Manchier, Ms Kristin Budney, Ms Tanya Landiak, Mrs. Jill Desmond, and Mr. Rich Henderson. I was really delighted to see that they actually also had a student teacher from the U of A with them. They are also here with their chaperones, Brendan Nimmon, Robyn Karch, Mrs. Vici McTavish, Mrs. Carrie Hohl, and Mrs. Vanessa Wilson. I would ask that everyone give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two school groups today that I'd like to introduce to you and through you. First of all, there are 15 students here from the Spruce View Mennonite school accompanied by their teachers, Mr. Stadel, Anita Martin, and Mr. Galen and Mr. Helbeat. If they could please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Jabbour: The second one – and I should have mentioned that these are from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. There are 30 students from the Spruce View school. They are accompanied by their teacher, Miss Michelle Long, student teacher Mr. Colby Reimer, and Helen Morgan, Shallen Sundsten, Brenda Murdoch, Mandy Betk, and Emma Spencer-Cook. If they could all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups today?

Seeing and hearing none, the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly Morris Flewwelling and his wife, Hazel Flewwelling. Mr. Flewwelling served for many years as a Red Deer city councillor and later as mayor of Red Deer. He received the Alberta Order of Excellence in 2014 in recognition of his significant contributions to our community. Mr. Flewwelling is currently the chair of the board of governors for Red Deer College. I will speak more about Red Deer College later today. I'd ask the Flewwellings to now rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you Portia Clark, Gareth Hampshire, and their children Yasmin and Jarvis. They are seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask that they rise while I introduce them. Gareth and Portia have been fixtures with CBC Edmonton for many years. Portia was the host of CBC Radio Active while Gareth has shown a knack for finding unheard voices in his reporting. They are moving with their children to Halifax, where Portia began her career with CBC and where she'll cohost CBC Radio's Information Morning. Please join me in welcoming them to the Assembly and wishing them well on their next adventure in Nova Scotia.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I do have a second introduction. It is an honour to introduce guests from the Weehelp Foundation, located in the constituency of Edmonton-Glenora, who are seated in the members' gallery. Weehelp collects items throughout the year and hosts pop-up kids shops each fall and spring at affordable prices, with all proceeds from the events donated to the Stollery Children's Hospital Foundation and other charities. Last year they donated over $80,000. The next pop-up event takes place April 28. I'd ask that Andrea Peyton, the CEO and founder, along with volunteers Patrick and Taryn please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my new constituency assistant Dan Thompson. Dan brings over a decade of hospitality experience to my office, which can be translated to the experience that my constituents receive every day. I'd ask that he please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce a few guests today who work and study in the field of community health. Debbie Lynam is a social work student at MacEwan University, currently observing her placement at Friends of Medicare under the instruction of Sandra Azocar, their executive director, who also joins us today. Sam Akinsiku is a graduate of environmental public health from Concordia University and currently a student of community support work at NorQuest College. Alyssa Pretty is a recent graduate of the University of Alberta's women's and gender studies program. Earlier this year she took on the role of communications and administrator officer at Friends of Medicare. I thank my guests for the important work and advocacy they do, and I'd ask them now to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly some of the happiest people in the city of Grande Prairie, the Grande Prairie College board of governors and senior leadership team. You know, I was in Grande Prairie a few weeks ago to announce that Grande Prairie Regional College is on the path to becoming a university. These people will be instrumental to the college's success as they complete the work to make that dream a reality. I'd ask the attendees to please rise as I say your name. We've got with us Natalia Reiman, board chair; Don Gnatiuk, future constituent of mine and current president; Blaine Badiuk, board member and president of the students' association. We also have board members Scott Roessler, Nan Bartlett, Jane Manning, Chantal Fontaine, Pattie Pavlov, Mary Ann Eckstrom, Lorne Radbourne, Laurie Nock, Gordon Pellerin, and members of the leadership team Susan Bangrove, Angela Logan, Carmen Haakstad, Mark Evans, and Kazem Mashkournia. I'd ask the members of the Assembly to please give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Ryan Smith, a friend of mine from sunny southern Alberta. He is a newly minted councillor at Vulcan county, my alma mater. He's in town attending the Rural Municipalities of Alberta convention over at the Shaw. This gentleman also served as my legacy Wildrose CA board chair. I'd ask Ryan to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you two members from the diverse constituency of Drumheller-Stettler, the first being Mr. Nathan Horner and the second being Mr. Kyle Toporchak. They're two wonderful young gentlemen who are going to be taking over operations in rural Alberta, and my respect goes to them. Would they please receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and of Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Esmahan Razavi, who is my new ministerial adviser for Status of Women. She is with us here today in the gallery. She is instrumental in women's rights in her own right. She cofounded Ask Her in Calgary. She's part of organizing the women's march and ran herself for municipal council. She's a great contribution to our ministry, and I look forward to working with her for a long time. If I can have her rise, please, to appropriately embarrass her, and I'd ask you all to give her the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Rural Crime

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One of the biggest concerns for all Albertans lately is rural crime. That's why we as opposition as well as many Albertans were disappointed when this NDP government refused to hold a debate on the issue when we proposed it in the fall session. This continues to be a huge issue in rural Alberta, and it's getting worse as thieves become more and more brazen.

I'd like to talk to you about a recent incident in the Lac La Biche area that happened to Shawn and Bonnie McDonald. Mr. Speaker, you may remember them as I have spoken about them in the House before. They own Black Scorpion Contracting, which was one of the companies who, at their own expense, toured highways 881 and 63 during the Fort McMurray evacuation, providing gas and diesel and support to many of the evacuees. On March 14 in broad daylight and on camera, I might add, Shawn's truck was stolen from his yard. Just hours later the truck was found, but unfortunately the contents, including their son Sid's hockey equipment, were not recovered. Sid was scheduled to play in provincials in Rocky Mountain House the very next day.

One of Shawn's employees, Elson Walker, contacted Lac La Biche Sporting Goods owners Albert and Teri Moghrabi and told them about the situation. They immediately got Elson to pick up Sid from school, brought him to their shop, and completely outfitted him so that he could play in the provincials. This is what happens in our rural communities when things go wrong; we make them right. I wasn't surprised when I heard of the generosity and fast action of Albert and Teri. They care about their community, and this is why we need to continue to support our local businesses.

I do have a message for the thugs that continually harass our rural residents. You will not wear us down or break our community spirit. We'll do what it takes to change our justice system to make sure that these repeat offenders get put away where they belong.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today to recognize the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. The United Nations' 2018 theme is Promoting Tolerance, Inclusion, Unity and Respect for Diversity in the Context of Combating Racial Discrimination.

Yet racism, xenophobia, and intolerance are problems prevalent in all societies. News sources from around the world have been reporting increases in racially motivated hate crimes and a rise in organized hate groups. In Europe we've seen the rise of far-right movements protesting against immigrants and a march in Poland that was reported as one of the largest gatherings of far-right activists in Europe in recent years. In the United States we've seen right-wing racist groups become emboldened in numbers and in their actions.

And we are not immune from this right here, Mr. Speaker. In Canada last January we witnessed with horror the fatal shooting of six men in a Quebec mosque, and 17 children were left without fathers. In Alberta we have our own emboldened groups disseminating a public message of intolerance and division. In June of last year a group called the Worldwide Coalition Against Islam demonstrated in Calgary, and members of that same group showed up outside a Red Deer school in May to wave banners and spread misinformation.

Mr. Speaker, while we can take some comfort that in both of these cases Albertans stood firm and did not let the hate-mongers sway their commitment to their fellow humans, we must at the same time register some alarm that these events are happening in Alberta at all. Free speech is a cherished right; spreading hatred is not. We must be ever conscious of the difference between these two.

As a father of mixed race children who are beginning to ask tough questions, I tell them that we must be vigilant against those who use race and religion as political tools to sow division and hatred. We must be determined to continue the work of eliminating racial discrimination forever.

Entrepreneurship

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, we live in an amazing province. Alberta, the province where I was born, the province I love, is blessed with an enviable abundance of natural resources. From flowing pastures and forests to fertile agricultural land and majestic scenery, from rich mineral deposits to the hidden bounty of Earth's energy, oil and gas, we have been handed an opportunity to not only do well but to do good.

I've seen Albertans' unique and indomitable spirit, which harkens back to our pioneer roots: strong, determined, resilient, compassionate. That is who we are. But I also see another kind of spirit: smart, innovative, ambitious, risk takers. Yes, an entrepreneurial spirit, which I often refer to as agripreneurial, in honour of the strong foundations built by agrarian pioneers, a spirit not driven by government intervention nor policy but through determination, the quest for a better life, health, and education for family and community and the compassion and generosity which naturally comes from so many of those blessed to create abundance and wealth through their focus, determination, and hard work. That is the spirit of Alberta which I love. In my lifetime I have seen this spirit in action, creating endless opportunity, facing adversity with optimism and resolve, pulling together to seek – no, seize – our place in the global village in which we live, developing our rich resources in a responsible manner which benefits ourselves, our neighbours, our fellow Canadians, and our planet. That is who we are.

But today, Mr. Speaker, we face new challenges and, sadly, a new form of abundance, driven by ideology and the policies that follow it, in our political realm, the abundance of crippling debt, the burden of overtaxation, the shackles of overreaching regulation, which threaten our spirit and our way of life. I do not take this challenge, this threat to opportunity and the prosperity of future generations lightly and, to that end, will stand steadfast today and in the days ahead against a tax on the spirit of Alberta, which I hold so close to my heart.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Red Deer College Degree-granting Status

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 1 the people of Red Deer and central Alberta were thrilled to hear that Red Deer College was being given the opportunity to become a university. Red Deer College has been providing comprehensive educational programming to central Alberta for over 50 years. The college plays a critical role in the city of Red Deer and in central Alberta. University status for Red Deer College will provide our students with the opportunity to reap the rewards of higher education. It empowers students to attain their educational goals and fuels our economy with the knowledge and skills attained by the students.

Mr. Speaker, this announcement means more than just better educational opportunities. This announcement means that students will not have to uproot their lives to pursue their educational aspirations. It also means that they can pursue those dreams with less cost by being able to study close to home. In conjunction with the present tuition freeze, our government is making life much better for Albertans.

Degree granting provides greater options and opportunity for students all over Alberta. A greater variety of educational programs enhances options and places Red Deer in a strong position to embrace economic growth. Alberta's third-largest city will gain a competitive advantage with a highly educated population.

Mr. Speaker, Red Deer College also has the ability to draw athletic talent from across Canada. Further investment in the state-of-the-art Gary W. Harris Canada Games Centre will support programming with in-class and practicum experiences. It will also serve the health and well-being of the students and citizens of Red Deer alike.

I'd like to thank the Premier and the Minister of Advanced Education for sharing March 1 with myself and the Member for Red Deer-South. It was an important day for Red Deer, and we will continue to grow and embrace the vision of a strong and proud Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Rural Crime Prevention

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to set a few things straight about the crime epidemic that has been plaguing rural communities across the province for the better part of two years. For two years my United Conservative colleagues and I have been warning this government about the escalating crisis, and for two years the NDP have brushed these warnings off as fearmongering. Last fall we welcomed more than a hundred victims to this gallery, who looked on as this government refused an emergency debate on the dramatic escalation of crime rates in the communities.

Finally, the Justice minister announced funding to begin to address the issue a few weeks ago, including funding 39 new RCMP officers. On the surface this is welcome news, but what the minister has failed to acknowledge is that there is a national shortage of RCMP officers and that the wait for reinforcements will take years. Nonetheless, she continues to give countless rural Albertans false hope. These officers are not coming, Mr. Speaker, not today, not tomorrow, not next week or next month. We'll be lucky if we see them on the ground in our communities within two years. If the minister intends to shuffle officers to her crime units from existing detachments, I fear that that will make things even worse for our already understaffed detachments.

We've also got a very serious issue with the revolving door in our justice system, that allows offenders to be arrested, convicted, and then immediately released, free to rob the same people again. This is an issue the recent NDP announcement does not address. For this government to sit back and pretend like they have solved the problem is misleading and shameful. The Albertans who have been victimized over and over again deserve more than disingenuous lip service. The people in my constituency who have been robbed and victimized repeatedly, often by the same people, deserve more than cheap talk from a minister who can't even be bothered to take the time to meet with them.

It's clear to everyone but the NDP, Mr. Speaker, that when it comes to rural crime, this NDP government has absolutely no idea what they are doing.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Response to Pipeline Opposition

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. About a month ago the NDP government in Victoria announced another delay tactic to try to stop Trans Mountain pipeline, a reference to the courts. They still haven't come forward with the question, and it means yet more uncertainty. That is exactly their goal. This Premier responded by surrendering, by ending the B.C. wine boycott. In Victoria their response was yet more regulations, yet more uncertainty. My question to the Premier is: does she regret having surrendered in the face of yet more delay tactics by her NDP friends in B.C.?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for that question. Of course, I would characterize the history somewhat differently. Our government worked very hard to get the federal government to approve this pipeline, and we are working very hard to make sure it gets built. When we saw a change in tactic from the B.C. government in January, with point 5, we reacted very quickly, very strategically, very effectively, and we said: pull point 5, or the wine ban stays. They pulled point 5. We stood up for Albertans, and we will not stop standing up for Albertans.

Mr. Kenney: The problem is, Mr. Speaker, yet more delays, yet more uncertainty, and after that, they introduced more draft regulations that will impose additional costs and jeopardize the pipeline. Now, my question for the Premier is: why did she not insist on playing a role, on being consulted in framing the question that the B.C. government will be putting to the courts in its reference case? Why has she given her NDP ally John Horgan a blank slate in framing a question that will obviously be tilted against the interests of Alberta and our economy?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What we will do and what we have done is to stand up for Albertans and stand up for this pipeline in every legal forum where it becomes necessary. That's what we've done up until now, and up until now we've been successful on every occasion. Our government does not have the ability to tell another government how to create a question. What we can do is work with the federal government to ensure that they enforce their jurisdiction, as I believe they will do. They made the decision, it is their authority to make the decision, and they did something those guys could not.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess what we've just heard there is that they didn't even try to have input on the B.C. reference.

Now, she talks about the federal government. Mr. Speaker, the federal government could solve this right now in removing the delay tactic of the B.C. reference by doing its own federal reference to the Supreme Court of Canada, because as far as we know, B.C. might go to the trial court, the appeals court, the Supreme Court. It could take a couple of years. We don't have time. I'm sure the Premier agrees with that, so will she join with me in calling on the Prime Minister, under section 53 of the Supreme Court Act, to get ahead of B.C. and make a reference directly to the Supreme Court of Canada?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, in fact, we have been engaging with our legal counsel about what the best strategy is going forward, and we will do whatever we can to make sure that we support this project as effectively as possible. We have looked at a number of different legal strategies, not the least of which is the one that the member opposite raises, but our priority is to not actually add additional uncertainty to the issue or additional opportunities for it to be delayed, which, ultimately, is where we think that particular strategy might end up. We'll keep a very firm eye on it. We've got excellent legal counsel, and we will stand ...

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the last time the B.C. government did a court reference, it took over two years to be resolved. It had to go to three levels of court. Her NDP allies in Victoria are absolutely clear – they have been from day one – that they will use every tool available to stop Alberta's energy, to harm our vital economic interests. So why is this Premier being so passive in the face of this attack by her NDP friends? Why does she not call on the Prime Minister either to declare the pipeline as being in the national interest under the Constitution or go directly to the Supreme Court to stop the British Columbia New Democrats' delay tactics?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, when I think of the word "passive," what I think about is being in Ottawa for nine years when there was a Conservative government in Ottawa, in Edmonton, and in Victoria and not getting a pipeline built. That's my idea of passive. Quite honestly, what is not passive is standing up for Albertans strategically, setting out very clearly what needs to happen, eliminating point 5, and getting that result. That's exactly what we did, and since then we have made it very clear that we will stand up for Albertans exactly as we need to. There will be legislation coming forward on exactly that point.

Mr. Kenney: Legislation apparently based on what we asked the government to do eight months ago, Mr. Speaker, but better late than never.

Now, she says that she got a deal out of her NDP friend John Horgan, with whom she used to work in the last NDP government in B.C., but, Mr. Speaker, just a couple of weeks after she surrendered on the wine boycott, guess what happened? The NDP in B.C. brought in yet more draft regulations, creating yet more uncertainty. Is the way she measures success on this more and more delay coming from her NDP allies in Victoria?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the way I measure success on this is not sitting in office for nine years and getting no outcome. That is the measure of success that those folks over there seem to think is the way to go. I appreciate that they are a bit nervous. They're a bit traumatized perhaps by their own failure over the course of that nine years. But in two and a half years in government we have an approved pipeline as a result of our climate leadership plan, we have the federal government committed to getting it done, and we are waiting for a Federal Court of Appeal decision. That is the only delay in place right now. The pipeline will be built.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the Premier can repeat that nonsense as much as she wants. She knows that four pipelines were built under the previous federal Conservative government, increasing shipments of oil by 1.8 million barrels per day, and that a coastal pipeline was approved, that was subsequently vetoed by her close friend and ally Justin Trudeau after she introduced her job-killing carbon tax, the same Prime Minister who killed Energy East, the same Prime Minister who is doing nothing to get the Trans Mountain pipeline built. I've asked her this before. Who has moved from no to yes on pipelines as a result of the NDP carbon tax?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what we know is that we have a pipeline approved as part of the overall climate leadership plan and the pan-Canadian framework. The members opposite actually want to jeopardize that pipeline in the interest of serving their climate-denying ideological agenda. That is not something that we are going to do. We are going to push forward. And by the way, the Gateway pipeline was actually cancelled by the courts because of the elbows-up bullying tactics used by the members opposite. That's not going to happen here because we understand that there are multiple obligations. We are meeting all of those, and the pipeline will be built.
