Ms Fitzpatrick moved that the motion be amended by adding the following after "Be it resolved":

that the following proposed amendment to the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections,

Standing Orders and Printing for review and that the committee submit its report to the Assembly on or before June 19, 2018:

[Debate adjourned on the amendment March 19: Mr. Malkinson speaking]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thanks, Madam Speaker. I suspect that if you seek it, you will find unanimous consent to move to one-minute bells.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak in support of Motion 501, which recommends allowing a legislative policy committee to perform other work when the Legislative Assembly has provided it with a specific task. I do not support the amendment to send it to committee.

Madam Speaker, I want to thank the Member for Highwood for introducing this motion. Since the NDP took governance, our UCP experience in attempting to meet with stakeholders has been frustrating, to say the least. More importantly, it has been dismissive of stakeholders. For example, it's been almost three years now that the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship has been sitting on requests to present from the AAMD and C, now RMA; the Independent Power Producers Society of Alberta; the Alberta Used Oil Management Association; the Alberta Beverage Container Management Board; and the Alberta Recycling Management Authority.

Last fall, after our committee wrapped up its priority task, in October '17, the chair, who is the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, noted that the committee had now completed the tasks assigned to it by the Legislative Assembly. He then mentioned that a number of groups, namely the ones I listed above, had asked to make presentations to the committee. The Member for Calgary-Currie took time to run through the list and informed us that by now each group either would have had their concerns dealt with or they might have an issue that – and I quote from Hansard – "has been fixed or changed or is something that they don't need to bring through to this committee."

Madam Speaker, I was greatly surprised by these presumptions by a still novice member. In his defence, he and his ND colleagues may not understand the value that committees offer as a conduit to the Alberta Legislature because they have from the beginning blocked all attempts by opposition committee members to meet with the above stakeholders.

Madam Speaker, in October '17 the committee had just finished the task handed to it by the Assembly. The NDP members immediately tried to shut down any further work. Let me make this clear. The committee had a clear slate. All opposition members of the Resource Stewardship Committee then sought to return to the other important business we can do: consult with stakeholders about issues that affect resources in Alberta. The NDP would have none of it.

Besides meeting with stakeholders who reach out to us, Resource Stewardship should also be initiating our own consultations on many issues that affect Alberta's resource sector. Let's just look at a few of them. Our oil and gas sector has experienced many serious challenges in recent years; the caribou plan needs to meld with the sustainable goals of our forestry industry; and agriculture always has specific issues to explore: getting grain to market, for instance.

I could go on and on, Madam Speaker, but I think now I'll give the floor to my colleague from Highwood to close debate. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

There is time remaining on the clock. Are there any other members wishing to speak before I call on the member to close?

Seeing none, I will now call on the hon. Member for Highwood to close debate.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Much appreciated. If everybody recalls, this motion was introduced because current rules, the standing orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, did not allow for any activities to be undertaken by a legislative policy committee other than the specific tasks assigned to it even if there is ample time between meetings dealing with assigned tasks. Now, really, this whole committee – all we wanted to do with this motion was to improve consultation with stakeholders, let Albertans have their voice. I mean, it's all about streamlining process. There have been several groups that have been waiting years to meet with this committee. That's not consultation with Albertans. That's not doing our job. I mean, just to give you some background here, stakeholder groups have been trying to get invited to a committee to present, and in some cases the wait has been over two years.

This has been an ongoing issue, one that took head in December of 2017, when the government blocked a motion to do meaningful work in the standing committee. The MLA for Grande Prairie-Smoky introduced a motion, but it was voted down. It was voted down on the grounds that the committee could not undertake any activities other than the tasks that had been assigned even if those activities would have helped accomplish the task. Streamlining process, cutting red tape: what a concept.

On November 29, 2017, the Resource Stewardship Committee met, and the MLA for Grande Prairie-Wapiti expressed his disappointment that previously the UCP had brought forward a motion directing the committee to meet with stakeholders that had been waiting, waiting, waiting. He expressed that they had not met from October 10 to November 28, a full month and a half, yet, due to the current standing orders, were not able to meet with any of these stakeholders. The MLA for Grande Prairie-Smoky spoke up and said: due to the current business the committee could possibly be tied up for one whole year. They motioned that the "committee set up a working group that can meet with these organizations." But guess what? It was defeated.

On January 25, 2018, government caucus committee members once again voted down the MLA for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills on a common-sense motion to allow the committee to meet with stakeholders to hear their concerns directly. His direct concern was the "lack of [availability] of the Resource . . . Committee to address any other issues." He thought that Resource Stewardship, a very, very important committee, had been tied up for two years between the Lobbyists Act review and the Conflicts of Interest Act review. His frustration – and he was frustrated – was that the committee would be tied up until November 29, and many groups and individuals who wanted to present to the committee would be forbidden to do so under the Conflicts of Interest Act review.

The stakeholder groups had been trying to get invited to the committee to present, but like I said before, for two years they'd been waiting. Now, we brought forward several amendments or several proposals for several motions, but every time they got voted down. Committees sometimes don't sit for over three months at a time, but they're unable to call these groups due to the standing orders, that are outdated.

Now, we have to give Albertans their opportunity to speak, but I'm hoping that we'll vote against sending this back to committee. Isn't it a little ironic, sending this motion back to committee about the committees that are holding back meetings in the committees? I mean, it just seems ironic. You're just delaying the process once again. You have to give Albertans a chance. You have to listen to Albertans. This committee has to be functional and accountable to all Albertans. I'm asking you: vote against this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Now, we have an amendment on the floor, so I will be asking the question on the amendment.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on the amendment carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:23 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray or contemplate, each in our own way. Hon. members, on this 36th anniversary of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the 1982 Constitution Act may I ask that each of us reflect on how fortunate we are as Canadians to live in this wonderful country. In our deliberations today let us strive to protect the rights of all our children and grandchildren, all Albertans and Canadians to peace, order, and good government.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you students who are here from Muriel Martin school in the constituency of Spruce Grove-St. Albert. These students are accompanied by their teachers, Abigail Lawrence and Michelle Kennett, and chaperones Nicole Toshack and Jennifer Conneely. I would ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Mr. Speaker, my group will not arrive until 2 o'clock. May I introduce them then?

The Speaker: We will test the House.

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly four grade 6 classes from the Westlock elementary school. The students are accompanied by their teachers, Robert Weiss, Dan McDonald, Kate Schmidt, Maggie Courmoyer, Angie Bachand, Brock Pierce, and also their chaperones, Debbie Medcke, Michelle Holloway, Michelle Biggeman, and Adam Budgen. I would ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other school groups, hon. members?

Seeing and hearing none, the Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions. It's my absolute pleasure to rise and introduce to you and all members of the Assembly Janet Riopel, the president and CEO of the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce. Janet has devoted her volunteer time to various boards in the city of Edmonton. She is currently the chair of the Edmonton Oilers Community Foundation and sits on the advisory boards of the Edmonton airport and the Edmonton Community Foundation. Janet was honoured with the Queen's golden jubilee medal and has twice been named one of Alberta's 50 most influential people. I invite everyone to give her the warm welcome of this Assembly.

I have one more, Mr. Speaker. Secondly, I would love to be able to introduce to you now and to all members of the Assembly Guy Bridgeman, Brent Collingwood, and Alex Bonokoski of the River Valley Alliance. The River Valley Alliance is a not-for-profit corporation made up of seven municipal shareholders who are connected towards working on a world-class continuous and connected trail system along the North Saskatchewan River valley from Devon to Fort Saskatchewan. I invite them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is such a pleasure to be able to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my guests from St. Michael's Health Group, which provides long-term care, supportive housing, and numerous programs and services to the seniors in our community. I have spent many occasions both at St. Michael's Long Term Care Centre and the Millennium Pavilion Seniors Lodge, and it's such a pleasure to see the great work that they do in Edmonton-Decore, which, I can say, is absolutely second to none. Joining us here today in the public gallery are John Kopeck, our somewhat new president and CEO; Kay Willekes, director, human resources; Géraldine Journeau, director of finance and IT; and Charmon Balcom, executive assistant. I would ask that they now please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you special guests from the Canadian Transplant Association, Alberta chapter. Next week marks National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week, which is an opportunity to build understanding about the impact that donors can make and to encourage all Albertans to register their consent to donate. Thank you to the Canadian Transplant Association for the tremendous work that they do in raising awareness and helping to support transplant recipients. I encourage all Albertans to register to donate and to talk to family and friends about your wishes. I invite Neil Folkins, membership director, along with other board members and volunteers, many of whom are transplant recipients, to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Accessible Playground in Calgary-Klein

Mr. Coolahan: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to tell you about an amazing project soon to be completed in Calgary's greatest riding, Calgary-Klein. The Thorncliffe Greenview playground is being replaced by a new one which will be completely accessible in its design. The Playground Team, a subcommittee of the Thorncliffe Greenview Community Association, comprised of a group of dedicated volunteers, has been working tirelessly with a mandate of bringing together the resources needed to develop and build the new playground. They have also partnered with Variety – The Children's Charity of Alberta to raise funds for the project.

What does it mean to have an accessible playground? It means embracing all aspects of inclusion through the design, equipment, parking facilities, and location. It means including innovative equipment like the Merry-Go-All and an assistive zip line. It means that every child will get a wider range of opportunities for play and interaction and will be able to participate fully in activities without the limitations imposed by physical barriers. This playground will create a place for all Calgarians to congregate, socialize, and play. It will be a place where community members from different backgrounds, ages, abilities, and economic levels unite.

We all know that playgrounds foster cognitive, creative, and social development and encourage healthy and active lifestyles, and that is why I am proud to say that our government has given a $125,000 community facility enhancement program grant for this project. The old playground was both outdated and unsafe, with peeling paint and rusted metal structures. Our community truly needed a new playground.

I would specifically like to thank Maureen O'Brien and Amanda Ocampo for their amazing work on this project. It will be an honour to have this facility open up in Calgary-Klein, and I hope that many more will be built across the province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Economic Indicators

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are tired of being lectured to by this NDP government and by their Trudeau Liberal allies in Ottawa. What I've been hearing from some of my constituents is that Albertans are losing hope that the economy will ever turn around, the hope that good, well-paying jobs will return. Some oil field workers got back on the job this winter but did so at a lower salary and with a fraction of the crew on the job.

Statistics Canada job numbers for Alberta in March 2018 show that zero full-time jobs were created. Yes, zero. Any new jobs were in part-time employment. Sixty-one hundred private-sector jobs were lost in March. ATB Financial's chief economist, Todd Hirsch, says that people are making less money and that job prospects are still here, but they're at lower paying opportunities. But the Finance minister claims that happy days are here again. At 6.3 per cent Alberta still has the highest unemployment rate outside of Atlantic Canada. Calgary has the third-highest unemployment rate of major Canadian cities, at 8.2 per cent. Who could have imagined saying that just a few years ago?

It just goes to show that the NDP government and their Trudeau Liberal allies' harmful policies and regulations are continuing to drive away investment while other energy-producing economies recovered long ago. From the royalty review to the coal phase-out, from higher personal and corporate taxes to higher electricity prices, chasing foreign companies from the oil sands, and the infamous carbon tax, the NDP wants to tell Albertans that things are just great again, but Albertans aren't feeling it. The proof is in the 2018 budget, a budget that was deadpanned by anyone in the know.

Janet Riopel, president of the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce, says: are the difficult times truly behind us; that's not what I hear; things on the ground appear to be still as much of a struggle as ever.

Clearly, this NDP government is deeply out of touch with everyday Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

1:40 Father Albert Lacombe's Legacy

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One thing we sometimes take for granted in my constituency is the depth of history in the area. Many would be unaware that this community, 25 kilometres from downtown Calgary, was once a town with a profound connection to an incredible man, Father Albert Lacombe. In his final years Father Lacombe settled in the town of Midnapore and while there, amongst many things, started St. Patrick's parish and set up a centre for orphaned kids and those with special needs before his passing in 1916. These items were overshadowed by many of his significant accomplishments, including the founding of St. Mary's school and mission, standing up for francophone rights, negotiating a deal between the CPR and the Blackfoot Chief Crowfoot, and the several parishes he opened throughout the province of Alberta.

Today his legacy can be seen throughout my riding. St. Patrick's parish's original building still stands as the Russian Orthodox church after it was relocated to Millrise in the '70s, when the space became too small. This church now provides goodwill to the community, including supporting Syrian refugees through the leadership of the current Father Andrew. St. Mary's University stands in place of the old orphanage, and the Father Lacombe centre and Providence seniors' home behind the university provide support for seniors transitioning with mobility and dementia challenges.

Mr. Speaker, last weekend the Father Lacombe foundation carried on his good work with their annual legacy dinner, which drew people in through its amazing popular cultural themes. Funds raised from this dinner will support the building of their new chapel and healing gardens at the seniors' centre, that will allow seniors to have a calming place to gather in their final years. I was pleased to be able to attend this dinner with my partner last weekend.

I want to thank the board of the foundation for their ongoing support to the community and ensuring that Father Lacombe's legacy never ends.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Official Opposition and Government Energy Policies

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is at a crucial crossroads at this time, and our province's future hinges on a critical piece of national infrastructure. It is time to put partisan differences aside and work together to secure our province's future not only for this project but also for what kind of message we want to send to global investors for future investments. It is very clear where our UCP caucus stands on this issue. The last thing we need is an impasse in the Legislature for the sake of political territory. There is no political territory when it comes to the development of our resources such as the Kinder Morgan pipeline.

I personally think it's great that the government members, including the Premier and the cabinet ministers, have come full circle from protesting against the pipelines in the past to now supporting the pipelines. I think they can also work more closely with the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, who clearly has Alberta's best interest at heart and knows the path we all need to take. The Leader of the Official Opposition has been providing this NDP government with valuable advice and policy direction, which the government has been accepting. They never do immediately, Mr. Speaker, but a few weeks or a month after he makes a recommendation, they take the route he suggested. This is good. In fact, it's great for Alberta that the NDP is finally listening to our leader.

Mr. Speaker, now I ask the government to ask their best friend Justin Trudeau to do what our leader has been long calling for, to implement section 92(10)(c) and actually declare this project in the national interest, not just hold talks, and to tell Justin Trudeau to hold on to discretionary transfer payments to British Columbia. We all know that the NDP government and the federal leader, Justin Trudeau, all wanted to phase out our industry. If these people now believe otherwise, now is the time for them to show that to Albertans. I encourage the NDP government, for the sake of Alberta's long-term success, to work together to construct not only the pipeline but also the path of success for future generations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Canada

Connolly: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition believes that Canada is broken. I disagree. I along with most Canadians believe that we are a great country. There are broken countries in the world, nations that struggle with their human rights, who have little to no environmental protection and have an abysmal lack of labour standards. Canada is not one of those countries.

I am proud as an Albertan and as a Canadian to be working to grow a prosperous economy, to be protecting our human rights, and to be protecting our environment.

When the Leader of the Opposition says that we're broken, I have to wonder what he was doing for the last 10 years as a federal cabinet minister. Was he picking up the tools to build Canada, or was he bringing down the hammer on everyone who disagreed with him? I believe Canada is stronger than ever and that we will get through this. Our cultural mosaic makes us strong, and the diversity of opinion should be welcomed in a thriving democracy, not shunned. I wish the Leader of the Opposition would not so blithely dismiss the work of the many people who've built this country. I wish he would support the strong institutions we have built into our co-operative federalism, which include a strong court system that helps to defend our democracy.

We are working with governments across this country and with all Canadians to build this pipeline, to diversify the economy, to protect our environment, and to have each other's backs. The future of Canada is a bright one, where we will work together for the prosperity and success of every Canadian.

Ambulance Availability and Response Times

Mr. Loewen: The Grande Prairie ambulance service area is roughly 15,000 square kilometres in northwest Alberta. It has not only the largest city in northwest Alberta but also an incredible amount of agriculture, oil and gas, forestry roads, and work sites. This service includes hospital transfers, and at times it is normal staffing level to have only two ambulances available to service this area. This does not account for times when the ambulances are flexed out to other calls, and 25 per cent of the time there is no ambulance within 30 minutes of Grande Prairie.

Now, a stat call is an emergency call that comes in when there is no ambulance available. Quite often there is one stat call a day in the Grande Prairie service area, and once in the last three months there were five stat calls at once. These are alarming statistics. Also alarming is the dispatch system Optima, that selects the nearest available ambulance no matter where it is. Recently there was an ambulance dispatched from Cochrane to go to Fort McMurray, 750 kilometres away. Obviously, there are problems with this system.

Another issue is that the stats on ambulance wait times are calculated by comparing the time of call to the time of dispatch, which gives no real indication of how long a patient might wait. It only makes sense that the ambulance response time should be calculated by comparing the time of call to the arrival of ambulance to give an accurate assessment of the service provided.

The department sometimes suggests long wait times for ambulances are acceptable by the fact that often fire departments are dispatched at the same time and arrive quicker, but firefighters in rural Alberta are volunteers, and although excellent people, most do not have the training of paramedics and probably shouldn't be subjected to the possible trauma of not being able to save a life that they are expected to. Many first responders are speaking out on these situations with concern.

As the issues have been ongoing and complaints come from across the province, this is an issue that needs to be dealt with as it has been getting worse rather than better. Is there not a better system for ambulance usage than what we have right now? I would hope so.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got five copies of an article that appeared in the Financial Post, by Gwyn Morgan, entitled Trudeau's Cynical Politics Caught Him in His Own Trans Mountain Trap.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The loyal Opposition House Leader.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Construction Suspension

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been 35 days since all parties in this Assembly passed a motion calling on the federal government, the B.C. government, and the Alberta government to take immediate action to get Trans Mountain built – 35 days – and still this government has not taken any concrete action on this file. We now know that we are 44 days away from the project being scrapped altogether. When will the NDP government tell Albertans about the steps that are being discussed with Ottawa to bring clarity to this project for Trans Mountain?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, our government has been very clear that we have been pushing for and fighting for this pipeline since day one. The Premier has shown exemplary leadership on this. She has met with the Prime Minister, she has met with the Premier of British Columbia, and there is considerable progress. Having said that, we're going to continue to hold the federal government's feet to the fire until that pipeline is built, and we will have it built.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, sadly, there's a lot of talk but no progress. The main goal has to be certainty. It's because of this NDP government and their Trudeau Liberal allies that we don't have certainty on this project in the first place. Kinder Morgan said on Sunday: "Our objectives are to obtain certainty with respect to the ability to construct through BC." I'm not looking for rhetoric from the minister across the way; I'm looking for an answer to the question. What is this government doing to provide the clarity that Kinder Morgan is looking for within those 44 days so that we can get this project built?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can provide perfect clarity for the hon. member. This government will do everything necessary to make sure that pipeline is built. Not everything can be shared with the public at the moment, and it would jeopardize the project to do so, which is perhaps exactly what the opposition wants.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, again vague answers.

It's incumbent on this government to immediately – there is no more time left – create certainty for Kinder Morgan's needs. We need to move past the empty rhetoric of this NDP government. When asked if the government investment that is being talked about would reduce risks sufficiently for Kinder Morgan, they said: no; we would be looking for, let me say, final clarity. What is this government doing right now to provide that final clarity for Kinder Morgan? Because what they're saying is that what you're doing right now is not working.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll let Kinder Morgan speak for themselves, certainly not the hon. member opposite. But I can tell you that this government has said that it's prepared if necessary to take an equity position. That is also the position of the Leader of the Opposition, who also called on the federal government to take an equity position in this pipeline. Now, Andrew Scheer, the federal leader, has said: it's an idea that no one has supported. Does he speak for the United Conservative Party?

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the government finally followed the opposition's lead and introduced legislation to allow the Alberta government to turn off the taps to B.C. until they stop blocking the project. Really, they follow. However, B.C.'s Premier said that Alberta's NDP Premier told him that she did not think they were going to even act on that legislation. To be clear, our Premier told the B.C. Premier, who she's in intense negotiations with, that she did not plan to follow through on legislation she tabled in this House. What is the point of bringing forward legislation if our Premier is telling B.C.'s Premier that she's not even going to act on it?

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member and the opposition should listen to what the Premier actually says in this place rather than third-hand accounts through the media on their friend over there, the Premier of British Columbia. I want to be absolutely clear that we will get this pipeline built. We do not want to use that bill, but it will be there in case we need to use it. If necessary, we will use it.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader is now insulting the media, trying to say that we work with Premier Horgan. His leader and the Premier of this province used to work with Premier Horgan. Nobody on this side of the House did.

Now, we know that in 2016 when the Premier met with Horgan, she did not even try to persuade him on pipelines. Now we're hearing from the B.C. Premier that she's telling him she doesn't even intend to act on this legislation. Is the Premier saying one thing to B.C. and saying a different thing to Albertans?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the question remains why the opposition is taking the word of the media reporting on what a Premier, with which we are having quite a bit of vigorous discussion in case he hasn't noticed, is saying. You know, he can put words in people's mouths better than anyone I know, except his leader perhaps, but quite frankly we've had enough of it. The Premier has been clear in this House and in public exactly on the position of the government of Alberta, which is to get that pipeline built.

Mr. Nixon: The facts are that the Alberta Premier has not been clear. There are vague answers. There are vague things that she says that she may or may not be doing. That's all she's saying. She's not being clear with Albertans. When we stand in this House and we ask clear, simple questions about what this government is going to do to get this pipeline built, they will not answer; they will deflect. They'll call their friend Horgan a liar, I guess, is what just happened there with the Government House Leader. That's disappointing. Again, Mr. Speaker, through you to the Government House Leader: what specific actions are you taking today to make sure this pipeline will be built in 44 days? Because you are running out of time, sir.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you for that excellent question. Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Opposition House Leader exactly what we're going to do. What we've done is introduce Bill 12, Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act. This is a bill to make sure that that pipeline gets built, concrete action from a government that is on the ball and is going to get that pipeline built.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this side of the House has been calling for something like Bill 12 for a very long time. In fact, when that minister was making fun of us for calling for that, we were. But I digress.

Carbon Levy and Pipeline Approvals

Mr. Nixon: This government across the way has still not taken any serious action against the federal government and their friend Justin Trudeau or against B.C. and Premier Horgan against the ridiculous attack on our resources that is happening right now. They have not. But they continue to punish everyday Albertans with their ridiculous carbon tax. Again, Mr. Speaker, through you to the Government House Leader: will you finally stop raising the carbon tax and punishing Albertans and start standing up to B.C. and Justin Trudeau?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's interesting that the hon. member is suggesting that we should cancel the climate leadership plan, which is exactly what the Prime Minister said was behind their approval of the Kinder Morgan pipeline. If they have their way and the climate leadership plan is gone, then federal support for the pipeline may well be gone, too. That would kill the pipeline. Maybe that's what they want.

Mr. Nixon: All this government has is paper approval from Justin Trudeau, which he has not acted on, and a couple of cancelled pipelines.

Meanwhile we see that the West Country seniors' centre in Sundre is back in the news today, having to go hat in hand to the town of Sundre to be able to keep their doors open because this Premier and this government told them to fund raise to pay for the carbon tax. Again, Mr. Speaker, why is this government continuing to punish seniors and other people in Alberta on this so-called social licence when it has been proven over and over that it is not working?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, the Prime Minister was clear at the time that the Kinder Morgan pipeline was approved that Alberta's climate leadership plan was a key element in his decision in favour of the pipeline. It continues to be fundamental to getting that pipeline built. Getting that pipeline built is fundamental to Alberta's future prosperity, which the opposition would put in jeopardy.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has been clear. The Prime Minister has done nothing to get this pipeline built except sit on his hands. If this government is still depending on Justin Trudeau to get this project built, I would suggest that Albertans are very, very fearful of that answer.

Again to the minister. We now hear that school boards are having to reduce kindergarten programs and reduce teachers as a direct result of the carbon tax, that is not working to get this pipeline built. Is it your opinion that the school boards should spend money paying your carbon tax, or should they spend money hiring teachers to be able to teach our children?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Opposition House Leader should well know that questions should not be soliciting an individual's opinion but be questions about government policy. Government policy is to pass Bill 12 in this Assembly to give us the tools to make sure that pipeline is built. Again, getting that pipeline finished is critical to Alberta's future prosperity and is important to our children, our seniors, and all Albertans going forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Public Service Pension Plans

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many long-term Alberta teachers, including some of my constituents, risk losing tens of thousands of dollars in earned pensions due to poor co-ordination between the Income Tax Act, the Teachers' Pension Plans Act, and regulations. For years governments have informally promised revised regulations that would remove uncertainty about when or if they should retire, but none have been delivered. When will the Minister of Finance fulfill the commitment to teachers so they can make retirement choices with certainty that their earned pensions will be protected?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, all hard-working Albertans, including teachers, deserve to retire in dignity. The previous government shirked their responsibility on this file. They did not move forward on this file, and it is still with us today. I'm in discussions with the Minister of Education, and we are working on this.

Ms McPherson: The Alberta Teachers' Association claims that regulations to change the Income Tax Act caps would have impacts very small in relation to the value of the plan and would not result in increased liabilities for the two plan sponsors, the government and the ATA. The ATA also says that contributions from plan members would not need to increase if the regulation were to be fixed to resolve the ambiguity for over 600 teachers. When will the minister commit to making life better for these 600 long-serving public servants?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has her facts correct in terms of implications on the Income Tax Act and the benefit it will have for that number of retired teachers. We are, as I said, working on this, and we'll have something hopefully very shortly to return and talk to this House about and, obviously, those people who will benefit.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Finance minister is legislated as the sole trustee of the local authorities pension plan and the public service pension plan even though all other provinces use a joint worker-employer governance model. More than 300,000 Albertans in LAPP and PSPP deserve to decide how their pensions are run, with changes negotiated and agreed to by both sides. When will Alberta's public-sector workers and employers be in control of their own public pensions through joint governance?

Mr. Ceci: Well, let me set some context, Mr. Speaker. Of course, our pensions are doing well in this province, to the point where the employer contributions were reduced, saving our government money. We're committed to looking at this issue of joint governance. We're going to continue to work with our partners to ensure that their pension plans are well governed, and we'll have more to say on this in the near future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

2:00 Petrochemicals Diversification Program

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As someone who has advocated for the petrochemicals diversification program, I'm gratified to see the uptake from industry and the projects it has incentivized. I know that Inter Pipeline has begun construction on their $3.5 billion polypropylene production unit in the Industrial Heartland. To the Minister of Energy: could she update the House on progress at Inter Pipeline and other ongoing PDP projects?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we're focused on the right priorities for Albertans such as creating good jobs in a more diversified economy. This means getting Alberta off the boom-and-bust roller coaster we've been on for many, many years. The Inter Pipeline project is under construction, as the member notes, and at peak will have 2,000 people working on-site. That's not to mention all the procurement that is going on, and I can tell you that the company is making every effort to procure as much in Alberta as they can. It's well under way, and it's a great project for . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Minister.

That sounds encouraging, but what does it mean to my constituents in terms of direct jobs and other spinoffs? To the same minister: what is the total economic impact of projects announced to date, assuming all go forward?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, in addition to creating a new value chain which we do not have in Alberta, it's creating new markets, perhaps new manufacturing down the road. At the end of the day, when this project is built, it's going to be $3.5 billion of private-sector investment. It will be thousands of jobs in construction, and it will employ approximately 180 full-time jobs. While it's being built, we're enjoying taxes in the municipality and in the government. People are working. Again, it's a great project for Alberta, and it's history making.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Minister.

Given that the Official Opposition is against these types of industrial incentive programs and given your own understanding of international competition for these types of projects, again to the Minister of Energy: would these welcome developments have happened without the assistance of the petrochemicals diversification program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, when we looked at all these programs, we looked at the strengths we have here in Alberta, and absolutely resources are one of them. We have a skilled workforce, creative people. I can tell you that when I was down in Houston, we did learn that it's a competitive thing, and we need to find a way to get those investment decisions over the line. Indeed, Inter Pipeline has told me on more than one occasion that it was this very program that made the final investment decision go. We're following the same vision Premier Lougheed had many years ago, and we're very proud to do that, something the Conservatives ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. Thank you.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Medical Examiner Positions in Calgary

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A grieving mother whose daughter died under suspicious circumstances in December 2016 called my office. She received a final death report 11 months later, unacceptable by any standard. Both the minister and the Chief Medical Examiner assured Albertans in 2017 that with two new pathologists they'd reduce the turnaround time for death reviews by 50 per cent. Not happening. Now four out of five pathologists in Calgary are leaving or have left, presumably for better pay and working conditions. Given that extra-trained forensic pathologists in this minister's ministry are paid well below trained general pathologists in the health system, what is the minister doing to rectify ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We're proud of the changes that we made to the office of the Chief Medical Examiner to ensure that they have enough staff to deal with the number of issues we've asked them to deal with. It's presently the case that we do have some staff turnover, which is normal in an organization. All of those individuals have private and personal reasons to leave. We have secured replacements for three of them already, and that will not have an impact on services. We will continue working with them to ensure that they have everything they need.

Dr. Swann: That's an incredible statement, Mr. Speaker, when four out of five, 80 per cent, of the MEs are leaving Calgary. It's not going to impact services? I'm already hearing that it is.

Given many years of instability in the Calgary ME's office and now the loss of four out of five pathologists, when are you going to pay them equitably?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Again, in Canada there are, according to the most recent data, 50 working, practising forensic pathologists. We have 10 of them here in Alberta. All of those individuals that have left the Calgary office have left for individual, private reasons. There are different considerations, and obviously they're inappropriate to discuss in this House. We have secured replacements for three of those individuals already. We're well under way on the hiring of the fourth, and we will absolutely continue to support that office to ensure that they have everything that they need.

Dr. Swann: Well, let me ask the minister: if you're a lawyer with two extra years of training, how long would you stay with a firm that was paying you 20 per cent less than a standard trained lawyer? How long would you stay in a firm?

The Speaker: Hon. member, you're identifying an interpretation of an individual minister. Is there a way that you could ...

Dr. Swann: She doesn't have to. She doesn't have to answer it if she doesn't want to. It's obvious what the answer is.

The Speaker: No, it's not quite that obvious, hon. member.
The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, I'd like to send my love to those at the Humboldt memorial in Edmonton today.

Economic Indicators

Mrs. Aheer: Mr. Speaker, the government is completely disconnected from real, everyday Albertans. Perhaps within the dome they've been able to convince themselves that their disastrous economic policies have resulted in economic recovery, but I can tell you that the average Albertan doesn't feel that way. Here's the real story. The Calgary Food Bank hasn't seen any decline in their needs for services, still distributing 5,000 baskets every month. To the Premier: are you expecting to improve the economy through the repetition of sunny-side messaging alone?

Mr. Mason: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Aheer: Mr. Speaker, given that the government has kicked Albertans and their businesses and not-for-profits when they're already down with a crippling carbon tax and labour changes that make it harder for small businesses to succeed in Alberta and given that the Airdrie Food Bank spokesperson stated that our numbers have stayed high – they're not going down – and the drop-in programs are increasing even more, how does the government justify their storytelling that our economy has recovered thanks to social licence and a carbon tax that is not really worth the paper it's written on?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, 90,000 new full-time jobs over the last year and the unemployment rate falling to the lowest in two years are something that is very real. However, our government recognizes that that recovery is not a true recovery unless it's shared by everyone. That's why we continue to invest in things like social services, to invest in education, to invest in child care and school nutrition programs. We know that these are all programs and services that the Conservatives across the way would cut in favour of financing a tax cut to the top 1 per cent. That's not our priority.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the UCP has been listening to Albertans – we hear from them every day – regular folks that are struggling to get by and have not seen the magical end of the recession that the government keeps referencing. Given that the not-for-profits in my riding of Chestermere-Rocky View have seen a $5,000 increase due to the carbon tax alone – and that's actually not including fuel costs either – and given that new statistics show that the number of those receiving income supports who are Albertans who are ready to work but unable to due to the economic downturn has more than doubled over the past four years, how can the government honestly claim that the recession is over?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is absolutely committed to making sure that Albertans get the supports they need during these tough economic times. If we were to take advice from that side, who thinks that we should have frozen spending in 2015, many Albertans would not get the supports that they are getting from the income support program, AISH program, PDD program. They even suggested that we should reduce the spending levels to B.C.'s, which means another 20 per cent cut. It's threats coming from that side, that they're advocating for these . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Calgary-West

Police Release of Information on Serious Incidents

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister continues to claim that naming the deceased man in the Calgary shootout with the police might prejudice the case when, in fact, police often identify offenders to seek information from the public to assist in their investigations. Minister, if public safety and trust can be furthered by releasing the man's identity, why would you hide behind the notion of prejudicing the case?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is absolutely correct. There are instances in which the case can be furthered by naming an individual who has been injured by the police or has been a victim of crime or any other number of things. In those instances, those agencies and ASIRT also are guided by their policies, which are consistent policies to ensure that we're all following the same rules. If that is the case, then they would make that decision, but it's not appropriate for me to intervene and make it for them.

Mr. Ellis: Let's talk about consistency, Mr. Speaker, given that two days after Constable Forget was injured in Calgary, a Mountie was wounded in a shootout near Evansburg, Alberta, and the shooter was also killed and given that that shooter's name was made public because police wanted citizens to know that the threat to the public safety was over. Minister, yesterday and just a moment ago you spoke at great length about consistency. Can you explain the inconsistency in the naming of the offenders only days apart?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, there is no inconsistency. It's absolutely the case that they follow and are guided by principle. Sometimes the facts of a case are different, which means that the same principles applied to those different facts have a different result. In some cases, public safety is the overriding concern; in other cases, investigation of the matter is the overriding concern. We will always keep public safety front of mind, and we will always be guided by principle.

Thank you.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, given that the Canadian Victims Bill of Rights Act includes a victim's right to information, including details about the offender's conditional release, and given that ASIRT does not name people killed or injured in incidents and that that practice is inconsistent with the federal bill of rights, Minister, why are you not also concerned about this inconsistency?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is absolutely the case that there are a number of different concerns that operate in this particular area. With respect to this policy it is, in fact, not only consistent within ASIRT, but it's consistent with all of the civilian oversight agencies across the country. They've put a lot of thought into these policies. They are flexible to deal with different circumstances and different cases. We're quite confident that they are making those decisions in the public interest.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Highway 40 and Grande Prairie Economic Development

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two months ago the ministers of Energy and economic development attended the Growing the North Conference in Grande Prairie and spoke of the intensive energy development occurring south on highway 40. The minister of economic development acknowledged that, quote, industry moves very, very quickly, unquote, and infrastructure needs to be in place. Minister, can you please indicate why properly staged infrastructure is so important for economic development?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we know, for example, that up where both the member and I live, there's immense development happening in the energy industry, and we know that many of the roads up there were not made necessarily for that kind of activity. Certainly, the Minister of Economic Development and Trade and myself have been looking and working with other ministers to see how we can be ready for when that activity ramps up, as it is doing now.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Minister of Energy acknowledges that the Grande Prairie energy industry has experienced unanticipated explosive growth and given that the minister has also confirmed the importance of her government's need to, quote, do something, unquote, on highway 40, which has become a pinch point for industry, to the Energy minister: what do you mean by "doing something" on this dangerously overused highway?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. We recognize the importance of highway 40. It is a very key economic artery. It's important that it be improved in order to support the economic growth and to improve safety, quite frankly.

So we are widening 104 kilometres of highway between highway 16 and Grande Cache. It includes bridge and culvert improvements, a new bridge over the Berland River, new safety rest areas, intersection improvements, and passing lanes. There are many more. If the hon. member wants to come back to me, I can elaborate.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that two key ministries acknowledge the need for ensuring that infrastructure is in place to avoid restricting economic development in the Grande Prairie area and given that they confirm that the hazardous and restricted state of highway 40 is impeding economic growth and given that I thank the minister for securing the contract for engineering and design and tender ready for twinning, to the Transportation minister: will you put this on your priority list in next year's budget?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. member knows that that's a premature question, but it's very much on our radar. We've heard loud and clear from the communities along that highway and from the industries that use that road. We're paving 55 kilometres between the Kakwa River and the Canfor intersection, six kilometres between the Wapiti River and the city of Grande Prairie, and we're designing 18 more kilometres of twinning between Grande Prairie and the Norbord plant south of the Wapiti River.

There's more, Mr. Speaker. If he gets another question, he can ask me again.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Tax Policies and Economic Indicators

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Based on continuous engagement with my constituents I have been asked why the government employed progressive taxes, especially during the recession and downturn of the economy, when Albertans were losing jobs. To the Minister of Finance: how did the progressive tax help improve the economy of this province?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the questioner from Calgary-Glenmore. A progressive income tax is what exists federally in Canada as well as in every other provincial and territorial jurisdiction in this country. A progressive tax results in more stable revenue for government to fund important programs and services and build infrastructure like schools and hospitals that Albertans require.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What impact would a tax cut for the rich have on the bottom line of the government, and how would the majority of Albertans be affected by the tax cut?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Returning to a flat tax, as the Official Opposition is proposing, means that the richest 1 per cent in Alberta will see a $700 million tax cut. The vast majority of Albertans will see no benefit at all but will pay for the tax cut through overcrowded classrooms and longer ER wait times. Returning to a flax tax means taking services away from working people to benefit Alberta's wealthiest. Albertans deserve better than this half-baked idea.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta's economy is looking up, what factors and sources show the rise in the employment rate and boost in the economy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. The members opposite are in denial. They don't see any economic recovery at all. But let's lay out the facts. In 2017, Mr. Speaker, 90,000 full-time jobs were added, mainly in the private sector. Alberta led all provinces in GDP growth in 2017 at 4.5 per cent and will show a strong growth again in 2018-19. This is how we know we're seeing recovery built to last. The members opposite can keep their heads in the sand, but the truth is that things are looking up.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

PDD Administrative Review

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The public fatality inquiry report into Betty Anne Gagnon's tragic death included several recommendations to improve outcomes for persons with development disabilities in rural communities. Recommendation 6 was to "review and ensure that there are adequate programs, including transportation for persons with developmental disabilities who live in rural areas." To the Minister of Community and Social Services: what has been done to start the review, and when will Albertans see improvements from the review?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Betty Anne Gagnon died in horrible, horrible circumstances. My thoughts are with the family and those who are grieving Betty Anne's loss. Since 2009 we have made a number of changes that will ensure that we can avoid similar incidents from happening again. That will include changes in the file closure policy, changes in the transfer policy. We are also planning to launch a helpline where Albertans can report such incidents.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that yesterday the minister said that communication and co-ordination have improved by not requiring clients to reapply for services when they move, which is great, but that there's still more to do and given that the report notes that these changes do not address long waiting lists, lack of backup plans, lack of respite options, and lack of resources for service providers to plan, train, or offer services proactively, when will PDD services no longer be confusing and no longer require strong advocacy for vulnerable people to receive services?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are absolutely committed to providing services to those who rely on these services, and that's why we have added $150 million to this program. We have heard concerns with respect to access. That's why we are moving ahead with the review of the program, which will help us look at access to this program, look at outcomes of this program, and look at engagement means, how we can better engage with the community, with individual advocates, and with service providers.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the report detailed numerous times that front-line workers, family members, and service providers had the chance to intervene in Betty Anne's case but, very tragically, did not, resulting in isolation and stress for her family caregivers beyond their capacity to cope, to the same minister: what are you doing to protect and improve services for Albertans with developmental disabilities and their caregivers regardless of whether they have formally requested services from your department?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin by saying that no Albertan, no one, should go through the circumstances that Betty Anne went through. There have been recent changes which ensure that families are part of the planning process, and risk identification is part of that planning process. At that point we can identify the risk and prioritize the needs. We will work with our community partners on all of these recommendations. As I said, some improvements have been made, but the review will be an opportunity . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Fisheries Management

Mr. Loewen: The recent release of the 2018 Alberta sport-fishing regulations has been received with significant disappointment. Increased restrictions have been added to over 100 lakes. The input from large numbers of Albertans has been ignored. This creates a loss of tourism and economic benefit, not to mention jobs. The result of 20 years of significant fish harvest restrictions with closed commercial fishing and significant restrictions on pike, walleye, and even whitefish is that Alberta is further reducing harvest and consumption of our fish. When will the minister admit the failure of fisheries management?

Ms Phillips: The time to have admitted failure was over 40 years of mismanagement of our fisheries resources by the party that the hon. member now sits in. We have invested significantly in recovering our fish populations, Mr. Speaker, to the point where we have opened eight lakes to walleye fishing this year, many of which had been closed since 1996. We have reopened those lakes, demonstrating the importance of conservation and sustainable harvesting. We are taking sound management of our lakes very, very seriously. We are a leader in fisheries management, and we are increasing funding for groups to rebuild those damaged waterways.

Mr. Loewen: Given that your department initiated the eastern slopes fishing closure and you had to back down, saying that the science wasn't strong enough to support the shutdown, and given that it's the same department that came up with the regulations that have drastically restricted fishing in over 100 lakes, how can you suggest that the science is any more solid with the lake restrictions than with the eastern slopes plan you cancelled?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Once again, we have an Official Opposition that does not waste an opportunity to sneer at science or at the public-sector workers and the public servants that work very, very hard to protect our environment every day to make sure that there is something to fish and something to hunt and that we have a healthy environment with appropriate enforcement. I will leave that attitude to them. On this side of the House we're investing in things like whirling disease, native trout recovery, and, yes, we are seeing some rebound in some of our wildlife populations as a result of turning the page on the decades of mismanagement from his own party.

Mr. Loewen: Given that the buck stops with the minister when it comes to fisheries management and given that fishing is important economically and proper management of the resource could create many economic benefits such as tourism and commercial fisheries and given that the 2018 fishing regulations have completely ignored the public input showing that there was near unanimous support for slot-size harvest and shortened seasons for smaller lakes, both of which have been completely ignored, showing the consultation was a complete sham, why did you not listen to the people that you consulted with?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, on the northern pike and walleye species management frameworks we're engaging with Albertans for feedback on the draft framework and to move forward with the implementation and adjust some of those regulations. We're also investing significantly in whirling disease and native trout recovery, including habitat management. This is in stark contrast to the kind of ideological cuts that would be imposed on public-sector workers, who are working very, very hard every day to make science-based decisions and protect the environment in this province.

Government Procurement Process

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, to maintain the integrity of a procurement process that ensures best value for the taxpayer, pricing criteria must be clear, measurable, and consistent to enable comparison and provide proponents with sufficient direction to develop a submission. It should not include secret calculations or subjective elements, and conditional bids cannot be allowed. Doing otherwise may be fatal to the process. My first question is to the Minister of Service Alberta. Could she generally explain within the context of her ministry's procurement policies how it ensures RFP pricing provisions are fully disclosed to and understood by vendors to enable them to bid with confidence?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and of Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Certainly, it is the goal of all of our procurement efforts to ensure that there is a transparent process. In fact, this is something that is required by all of our vendors. So when we go through the procurement process, we have transparent criteria that we post publicly online. Then vendors can go onto the online posting and review. There is also opportunity to engage with government to answer questions if something is not clear to them, and afterwards there is also a process to contest if they believe that there has been something that's gone . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. W. Anderson: My second question is again to the Minister of Service Alberta. While I recognize that there may be exceptions, would a proponent that submitted conditional pricing that offended the RFP provisions be disqualified?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Obviously, it's very, very important to all Alberta vendors and businesses that we have a robust procurement system. This is something that has been under review by our government as we have found contracts dating back over a decade where that has not been the case, and we have found some very, very questionable practices. So I'd be happy to get back to the member with further detail about our policy, how the rubber hits the road with respect to his exact question.

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, my third question is to the Minister of Health. If she was aware that Alberta Health Services had accepted a bid subject to conditional pricing that offended the RFP provisions, would she direct that bid to be disqualified? If not, why not?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As has been answered in this House before, unsuccessful bidders have every right to bring their concerns forward through the courts or the New West Partnership. I understand that in the process that the hon. member opposite is referring to, this is currently occurring. Because it's still before the courts, I cannot comment any further.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Charter School Funding

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Charter schools are important for students who learn best in the tailored programs these schools offer. Charter schools are also publicly funded but are funded differently when it comes to inclusive education funding, such as the nutrition programs. That's harder to do with this government's carbon tax, which raises overhead expenses on all schools. Minister, do you think it's acceptable that schools spend more on keeping the lights on as a result of your carbon tax and less for programs that parents and teachers care about?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would answer that question with another question to the member opposite. I'm wondering if he thinks that it would be appropriate to cut funding to schools by 20 per cent or freeze levels at 2015 levels – we're not entirely sure because the members opposite won't come clean with their financial plans for the province of Alberta – and whether or not cutting taxes for millionaires would be an appropriate way to fund schools and these education programs that they seem to think are important.

Mr. Gill: Given that parents in northeast Calgary are upset because their kids can no longer take a yellow bus to their charter schools and given that one of my constituents wasn't pleased to be told that his 12-year-old child can take public transit rather than a school bus and given that the NDP are on public record always, for your information, Minister, opposed to choice in education and now lots of NDP supporters and special-interest groups want to get rid of choice in education, Minister, when was the last time you spoke to parents in northeast Calgary about the issue of transportation?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are focused on the priorities of regular Albertans, like making sure that our kids have great schools and that they can get there safely. That's why we reversed cuts that the previous Conservative government planned to make, including cuts to student busing. In fact, we've increased our investment in student transportation by over $20 million since taking office. If the members opposite had their way, they would cut tax breaks to millionaires, and all of our kids would be walking to school.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Apparently, northeast Calgary is not part of Alberta.

Given that choice in education for northeast Calgary is not an important issue for this minister and given that the Premier, when she was in the opposition, called private and charter schools "havens of elitism" and that that shows the NDP's opposition to choice in education, Minister, is your government intentionally pushing parents to enrol their children in public schools, and if not, why have you not addressed these important issues in Calgary northeast?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, our government has increased investment. We've funded for enrolment in every public school, including charter schools, in the province, and we're proud to continue to do so. Of course, the member opposite is concerned about choice. Here's the choice that Albertans will be facing in 2019. Do they want further enhancements for private schools and cuts to public schools, or do they want to invest in education for every Albertan regardless of the size of their wallet? I believe that the people of Alberta will make the choice that will benefit the most students, and that will be to continue to fund public education.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Government Policies and Economic Indicators

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Conference Board of Canada recently released their economic outlook. Fun fact: despite what the opposition would have you believe, it shows that Alberta's economy is among the leaders in growth in this country. Can the Minister of Finance explain what was done during the downturn to help Alberta's economy turn around so quickly?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the Calgary-Currie member as well. I can tell you what we didn't do. We didn't turn our backs on Albertans. We didn't make deep ideological cuts to programs and services just when many Albertans needed them most. The members opposite would try the same old failed austerity budget that led to thousands of teachers and nurses being fired and leaving this province. Instead, we chose to invest. We chose to build schools and hospitals and keep Albertans working. That choice is paying off.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the recent economic outlook report shows that Saskatchewan's economy is lagging behind and given that both provinces are dependent on resource revenue and that both provinces went through the same economic downturn, can the Minister of Finance tell us what choices Saskatchewan made during that same period?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Saskatchewan made the choice that the members opposite are still demanding. They cut services, like closing down transportation companies, cutting funding to libraries, and hiked taxes on new construction. In Saskatchewan jobs are stagnant, small-business confidence is down, and growth is lagging. Meanwhile here in Alberta things are looking up. More Albertans are working than ever before. Our economy is leading the country, and private investment is returning.

Mr. Malkinson: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's great news, that the economy is looking up. Obviously, more work needs to be done, of course, so my question to the Minister of Finance is: what are we doing to ensure that all Albertans fully feel this economic recovery?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. From the beginning our government chose to have the backs of Albertans through the worst recession in two generations. We invested in diversification like the petrochemicals diversification program, we invested in craft brewers and distillers, and we invested in infrastructure. The result is a more diversified economy with good, mortgage-paying jobs. This was a critical choice, but given Alberta's strong and broad-based recovery, it's clear we made the right decision. We have more work to do, but we'll make sure this recovery reaches every Albertan.

Public Service Size

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, given that in estimates the Finance minister, when asked if he thought the government was efficient, said yes and given that the public service here costs about 20 per cent more per citizen than it does in British Columbia and that when we asked the Finance minister, he said that the size of the public service was in the neighbourhood of 30,000 people in Alberta, does the Finance minister still contend and still agree with what he said in estimates, that that is about the size of the public service in Alberta?

Mr. Ceci: I think the member opposite is trying to pull a trick question, Mr. Speaker. There are about 27,000 direct employees of the government of Alberta. There are more than I think it's 270,000, 280,000 employees who receive government cheques. That's people who work in health care. That's people who work in education, in schools. That's people who work in advanced education. All of those people get monies through the government of Alberta, so there are many more public servants than there are Alberta public service direct government workers.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister actually agreed with what I said – so I don't know where the trick is – and given that he also said in estimates that the total number of people paid out of the public purse is actually north of 220,000 people, to the Finance minister: if the people that aren't in the 27,000, those in health care and education, are not public servants, who does he believe that they're serving?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, people who are serving Albertans are public servants, I guess. We're making sure that we are treating all public servants with the respect they need. We're making sure that they are well compensated, but we have some difficult challenges right now, so we're looking for common-sense agreements from all negotiated labour settlements, and that is happening as we speak.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the minister is as confusing in question period today as he was in estimates and given that he's not sure, it seems, whether the number of the public servants is 27,000, not including health care and education, or whether it's 220,000 – he's forgotten that number, but I'll help him out with that number; that does include health care and education – again I'll ask him: how many public servants are there, and if there are only 27,000, who do you think the hard-working Albertans in health care and education are serving?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, this sounds like Groundhog Day all over again and the same question being asked and asked and asked. Public servants are hard working. They're doing the job that needs to be done for all Albertans. They are properly compensated, and on this side, this government, they have the respect of this government. That side tried to cancel pensions of public service workers. That side tried to bring in bills 9 and 10, and remember what happened out there as a result of that activity? You had to back down. We're respecting people and their work, and that will always happen from this side.

Provincial Response to Pipeline Opposition

Mr. Loewen: Tzaporah Berman and Karen Mahon have been protesting the pipeline in B.C. The other day the economic development minister said regarding Mahon and Berman, "With all due respect... their positions and their opinions are quite irrelevant." Well, Mr. Speaker, this begs the question: if their comments and opinions are irrelevant – and I agree – why did the Premier appoint them to the oil sands advisory group?

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to respond to that, to answer. This opposition keeps putting an awful lot of emphasis on a couple of people. Now, they had some specific expertise that was useful, but they sure as heck don't speak for this government. They don't speak for the people of Alberta. This government has been clear that we are going to get that pipeline built. We're going to do that despite the best efforts of the members opposite to try and bring in irrelevant points.

Mr. Loewen: Given that the Premier put them in charge of that oil sands advisory group and given that the NDP government has said over and over again that the Trans Mountain pipeline was approved because of the carbon tax, an approval that is worth nothing as they are now talking about inflicting pain on B.C. residents, buying into the pipeline, and a myriad of other initiatives and threats to get the pipeline built, how can you say that the carbon tax is getting the pipeline built when there are multiple initiatives and threats that have nothing to do with Alberta's climate change plan and carbon tax that are required to actually get the pipeline built?

The Speaker: The hon Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, what is going on here is a repetitive series of questions going back to, over and over again, the same questions that have very little to do with government policy. What government policy is is to put in place a climate leadership plan that led to the approval of two pipelines, something that the Conservatives could not get done for over a decade.

Mr. Loewen: Given that this government seems to be embarrassed with these answers – and that’s the only thing repetitive here, the answers – and given that the city of Victoria pumps raw sewage into the ocean, including the area of Victoria that is represented by the Green Party leader, and given that the Green Party leader has joined forces with the B.C. NDP to stop the Trans Mountain pipeline, does anyone else see the hypocrisy of these actions, and did the Premier raise this at the failed Sunday meeting with Prime Minister Trudeau and Premier Horgan?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, it’s really unfortunate that the Official Opposition wastes perfectly good questions asking us to comment on political parties and individuals that live in other provinces. What’s important, I think, is this government’s actions, the bill that we’re bringing in to make sure that we have the levers to make sure the pipeline gets built, the fact that we are continuing to fight for that pipeline. Quite frankly, the Official Opposition is doing a very poor job, in my opinion, at defending the interests of Albertans and is more interested in trying some sort of weird guilt by association. Well, it’s not going to work.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe the daily Routine is now completed.

Pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) and the Budget 2018 main estimates schedule the House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 1:30. The legislative policy committees will convene this afternoon and tomorrow morning for consideration of the main estimates. Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, April 18, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon, everyone. It's a beautiful day out there. It's about time.

Hon. members, let us each in our own way reflect or pray. As we come together today for another day of thoughtful and considered deliberation, let us acknowledge that today we gather on Treaty 6 territory, a traditional gathering place for diverse indigenous peoples, and we give thanks for the contributions they have made to our province. Let us affirm our common commitment to enhance the lives of all those who call Alberta home and continue the pursuit of the common good.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the ambassador of Germany to Canada, Her Excellency Sabine Sparwasser, as well as Mr. Harald Kuckertz, honorary consul of Germany in Edmonton, and Mr. Hubertus Liebrecht, honorary consul of Germany in Calgary. Her Excellency's visit has offered Alberta and Germany the opportunity to discuss how to build on our strong relationship. There's enormous potential for our two jurisdictions to expand bilateral trade and collaborate, especially with the Canada-EU comprehensive economic and trade agreement now provisionally applied. We look forward to working with Her Excellency to further develop and strengthen our relationship with Germany. I see that my guests have risen. I would now ask the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Again the hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a number of incredibly sharp students that come from Overlanders elementary school in the riding of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. The students are accompanied by Sherry Germain, Robin Murphy, Kayla Nabe as well as by a number of chaperones: Melissa Schneider, Tracy Allen, Tim Martinez, Chad and Shelley Forsberg. I'd now ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly and for us to greet them and welcome them to our building.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand and introduce to you and through you students from l'école Beauséjour. I apologize to the students. I have a choice of doing this in English or French, and I'm going to choose English. With them are their teachers, Karen Levoir and Marilynne Blais, as well as chaperones Tracy Lord and Jason Bourassa. If they could all please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. It's my absolute privilege to introduce to you and through you the students, teachers, and chaperones from SouthPointe school in Fort Saskatchewan. We have 41 students with us here today with their teachers, Mr. Tyler Nyznyx, Mrs. Nikki Hammel, Mrs. Jordana Cohan, and chaperones Mr. Robert Marshall, Mr. Chris Smith, Mrs. Tracey Marshall, and Mrs. Jamie Nelson. SouthPointe school is the first school that has been built in Fort Saskatchewan in 35 years, for a city whose population has doubled, so I'm proud to introduce the first year of our students here in our Legislature today. I'd ask everyone to extend the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members a team from the University of Calgary who recently made an extraordinary achievement. DUO Collegare won a prestigious computer science competition called VHacks, which is a global hackathon competition organized by the Vatican to encourage interfaith dialogue and foster social inclusion across the globe. This talented team, coached by Dr. Bob Schulz and Megha Chopra, developed an innovative solution to the interfaith dialogue theme and won two awards against students from many of the world's best-known universities. You certainly made Alberta proud. Here today we have Sharon Wang, Raza Qazi, Eric Eidelberg, Sasha Ivanov. Francis Duahn is not here today. I thank the team for their contributions to making a peaceful difference in the world and ask them to now rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome

The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my sincere pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the town of Whitecourt Youth Advisory Committee. Twelve members of the youth advisory committee are with us today, accompanied by Mayor Maryann Chichak and staff of the town. This group of young citizens works with the town council to ensure that the needs and voice of community youth is heard. They are responsible for promoting awareness of youth services and programs in their schools. I would like them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly guests from the Edmonton and Area Land Trust. This year the Edmonton and Area Land Trust celebrates its 10th anniversary of conserving natural areas. The trust has secured 12 natural areas, including Golden Ranches and Hicks in Strathcona county. Here today are the executive director, Pam Wight, and directors Alex Nagy and Douwe Vanderwel, who is joined today by his wife, Wendy. I thank my guests for their commitment to preserving natural areas in our region and ask them to now rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two of Airdrie's newest residents, business owners Pamela Jarosz and Cody Fitzsimmons. Would you please rise. Pamela and Cody own Airdrie's first and only brewery, called Fitzsimmons Brewing, and they recently won an award, which is very rare for a first-year brewery, for East Lake Amber beer, which you can find on tap here in Edmonton at Beer Revolution. Give it a try. I highly recommend it. Please greet them with the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and of Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a number of employees from Service Alberta. Later today I will be tabling legislation that will better protect utility consumers, and it's because of the very hard work of our exceptional ministry staff that I'm able to table that legislation. I want to say to them: thank you very much for all of your hard work on this important issue. I'd like to ask the team to rise as I call out individual names, and I'd ask all members of the House to please join me in welcoming my guests. I apologize in advance to any of them if I mispronounce their names. First up is Chris Hunt, the executive director of the Utilities Consumer Advocate – Chris, if you could rise; I can't see you behind the pole, but I'm sure you're there – with Naina Jairath, Nola Ruzycski, Jeff Morton, Eli Mirton-Tamakloe, Agatha Grochowski, Patrece Walker, and Laurel Van De Keere. If we could all please give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce some members of the Alberta Health team who are here today. They're from the health information systems branch, and they are seated in the public gallery. April is Records and Information Management Month. Almost everything that is done in Health creates a record, and it's important to manage these records so that we can find important information when we need it. I'm proud to recognize the work that they do behind the scenes to support the health care system in making life better for Albertans. Now welcome Kim Wieringa, the ADM; Cathy Simpson, director, enterprise content management; and Jia Zhu, corporate records manager. Please stand and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you. It's my privilege today to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly somebody who should be familiar to yourself, Mr. Speaker, David Draper. David used to be a page here in the Assembly, serving all the hon. members in this House. He's currently the vice-president of finance at Delta Upsilon, the same fraternity I attended while at the University of Alberta, and he is currently pursuing his political science degree. David is also a strong volunteer in my constituency association and is here today because he misses watching what an NDP government can do. I see that he's risen, and I'd ask the members to please give him the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome, David.

Taber

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure you have heard that right now the people in and around Taber are battling Mother Nature's floods. Over a dozen families have lost the battle and have been evacuated to safety while overland flooding decimates their homes and land. Our hearts and prayers go out to them.

The residents of Taber and Taber county are strong, resilient folk who have in the past and will again rebuild. In the coming days and weeks you will see the community rallying around each other, helping selflessly and generously those who have been devastated. Mr. Speaker, these people have big hearts.

To illustrate this generosity, when I was first elected, in 2015, I was invited to attend a fundraiser for the TANGO Foundation, which stands for Taber Assisting Nations through Global Outreach. Started in 2013, this group of Taber physicians, eye surgeons, dentists, and construction workers has helped almost 8,500 people in third-world countries. Together they have donated almost $4 million in goods and services. I've often wondered what builds such amazing and caring people. I believe in large measure it is their strong religious roots and their deep connection to the earth through farming.

Taber knows how to kick up their heels and have fun as well, Mr. Speaker. Cornfest, held in August, is the largest free family festival in western Canada, and if you haven't been yet, you need to put it on your bucket list and make sure you go. My favourite event is the corn-stuffing contest. It involves two people per team. One wears oversized coveralls. The other team member stuffs as much corn as possible into the coveralls of his teammate. The team with the most corn stuffed in a given time wins. There are lots of laughs and lots to eat.

Mr. Speaker, I could talk for hours about the residents of Taber, but time will not permit it. Let me just conclude by saying that if the world had more people like the people of Taber, it would be a better place indeed.

Bow River Basin Council

Mr. Westhead: The Bow River Basin Council was established in 1992 as an advisory body to Alberta Environment. The council's mandate is to pursue co-operative strategies for water management and environmental stewardship of the Bow River basin. In 2004 the BRBC was designated by Alberta Environment as the first watershed planning and advisory council in Alberta's water for life strategy. It serves as a multistakeholder nonprofit organization assessing watershed conditions and developing plans to address concerns.

The BRBC envisions a future in which the Bow River is recognized among the world's best-managed watersheds, with the highest water quality of any densely populated river basin in Canada. The council completed several Bow basin state-of-the-watershed assessments and is currently working on the Bow's watershed management plan. This plan will put a special focus on riparian zones, aquatic ecosystems, water quantity and quality, and the effects of land use on surface water and groundwater.

With the Bow River closed to additional surface licence applications, stakeholder co-operation and conservation are crucial. The council includes representation from urban and rural municipalities, agriculture, recreation, industry, nonprofits, and First Nations peoples. The collaborative work of the BRBC represents value leveraging based on an in-kind value of donated expertise. This represents up to three times a project's actual financial costs or more.

As a result of the dedicated effort of its stakeholder members, the work of the BRBC has been recognized with both an Alberta Emerald award and the city of Calgary's environmental achievement award. I'm pleased to highlight the good work that the Bow River Basin Council does year after year to provide all those who rely on the basin with a well-managed watershed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Provincial Fiscal Position

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP government is fond of comparing Alberta's financial position to that of other provinces. They constantly crow about how our net debt is better than one province's or how our taxes are lower than another's. When the opposition, supported by many responsible Alberta families, points out how much debt is being racked up by this government, how many jobs have been lost, how much investment has fled the province, the government always seems to fall back to the same old line: well, we're still better than some other provinces in some areas.

Alberta is the greatest among many great provinces in this great country. There was a time when that fact was so apparent that no one was even arguing the point. Alberta was that far out in front. Previous governments along with millions of hard-working Albertans worked tirelessly to keep Alberta that far ahead. A perfect example is Alberta's low tax rates, which the government likes to compare to other provinces'. Well, economists and business groups often point out how the NDP has eroded this advantage by hiking corporate and personal taxes, introducing a carbon tax, increasing the minimum wage, and introducing a variety of labour and other regulations, which have made Alberta a more difficult place in which to live, invest, do business, and create jobs.

Mr. Speaker, nonprofits, charities, businesses, seniors' homes, school boards, and, yes, families have made it clear that this government's policies are not making life better for them. Albertans expect and deserve better. We have been better. Since Alberta's founding in 1905 countless Albertans have worked to build this province into the best place to live, work, play, and raise a family. I just hope that in 2019 we get a government which is more interested in selling Alberta's strengths to the world instead of saying: well, we haven't quite fallen into second or third place yet. Albertans want and deserve better.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Edmonton and Area Land Trust

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Edmonton and Area Land Trust is a conservation nonprofit that is the only land trust in Alberta that focuses on the capital region. Their work is to conserve and steward our local natural areas. Securing these natural areas provides habitat for wildlife and strengthens the ecological resiliency of the region. It also provides recreational areas for residents and visitors alike and helps educate the public about the many benefits of conservation. The group also plays an important role in providing input into policy and educational development.

Two of their conservation lands, Golden Ranches and Hicks, are located just outside my constituency. The group is also involved in the Beaver Hills biosphere reserve, a UNESCO-designated reserve.

As the fastest growing region in Canada, having those protected natural areas in our region truly is a gift to be treasured. These land trusts are important in Alberta because they respond directly to the needs and values of local communities. They also provide a vehicle for landowners to donate their land or to register a caveat on their land to protect its important conservation values in perpetuity.

For the past 10 years this group has conserved 12 conservation areas, with the goal to acquire two more in 2018. Of the lands they are conserving and stewarding, six of these properties have been secured with the assistance of government funds from the Alberta land trust grant program. This program has been crucial to their success, demonstrating our government's commitment to being a partner in conservation. As well as the ongoing support of this government the Edmonton and Area Land Trust could not do the work they do without the support and stewardship of hundreds of volunteers, and this week is volunteer week.

I would like to take the opportunity to thank the Edmonton and Area Land Trust for their tireless and valuable work preserving natural areas in our region. I am proud to continue working with them to ensure our government's support of their important work. Congratulations to the Edmonton and Area Land Trust on celebrating their 10th anniversary in 2018.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Edgar Corbière

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On Sunday, April 15, Alberta lost a great man, Mr. Edgar Corbière. I've spoken before about the amazing accomplishments of this man. In 1999 Edgar saw six covered wagons being drawn by horses, and it gave him an idea. That idea initially was to have some fun using horses to do things the old way, cutting hay and road building. He decided they should at the same time raise some money to assist cancer victims undergoing treatment. That first year they raised $3,500 and helped 12 families of patients receiving treatment.

Over the last 20 years Edgar's little idea has grown exponentially. The group has introduced new attractions like log sawing, a shingle mill, a blacksmith shop, cutting and threshing grain, homemade ice cream, and on and on. In August 2017, over the long weekend, Haying in the 30's raised $262,000.

I have to mention that this entire organization is built on volunteers and donations, and every penny raised goes to support families of cancer victims. The many buildings and attractions are donated, and these are held by volunteers to add to the experience. I was told that one of Edgar's favourite things to do was to bring beer and doughnuts to the volunteers at the work bees.

The event is held every August long weekend near the community of Mallaig, about 20 minutes north of St. Paul, and I would encourage everyone to put that on their bucket list as well. This year celebrates 20 years of Edgar's vision.

I want to read a quick testimonial of Edgar's generosity.

Words don't seem to be enough to express my thanks for the cheque I received last fall. A person doesn't realize how costly those trips to Edmonton for treatment are until you start going every 3 weeks... It was greatly appreciated and I can't say enough what a great thing you are doing.

Edgar, your legacy will live on far into the future. You've inspired many in your family, your community, and our entire province. Thank you for your enormous contribution. You will be missed.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Response to Pipeline Opposition

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin with a belated expression of happy birthday to our Premier.

Now, Mr. Speaker, yesterday her counterpart in Victoria, Premier Horgan, told his Legislature that the Premier of Alberta has said that she does not want to proceed with that legislation, Bill 12, the turn-off-the-taps bill. Why did Premier Horgan say that?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, unlike the member opposite, I have absolutely never wavered on this issue. We will do whatever it takes to build Trans Mountain. Now, the member opposite is trying to use other people's quotes about other people's quotes about other people's quotes to attack my resolve, but his own cousins in Ottawa are calling a federal backstop for this project disgusting. So can the member explain why it was okay for Conservatives to pour billions of dollars into protecting Ontario's auto sector but with the energy industry it's disgusting?

Mr. Kenney: The Premier is back to auditioning for opposition leader, Mr. Speaker, and she'll get plenty of chances to ask questions in the future.

Mr. Speaker, the question I have is that the minister of the environment in British Columbia, a New Democrat, said yesterday in the Legislature that clearly Bill 12 is a bluff: they, Alberta, don't intend to use it. Why would he say that? Could it possibly be because this Premier told John Horgan last Sunday that she doesn't intend to use the bluff?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've already said very clearly both publicly and as I articulated as to what I said privately, we will do whatever it takes to get this pipeline built. The country is fully aware of our resolve, and there is no question about that. But I would suggest that the member opposite ought not spend his time dining out on the opposition, aligning with the government of B.C., planning collective efforts to take the matter to court and delay it for months and months and years and years and instead stand squarely behind the efforts of our government to get this pipeline built.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, weakness invites strength from your adversaries. That's what's happened. This government folded on the wine boycott, they declared victory a month ago, and now today John Horgan, the Premier of B.C., is announcing that he's going to the court after all, seeking to delay further this pipeline. So I'll ask this again. Why did the Premier initially mock and ridicule the idea of turning off the taps? Why did she fold on her wine boycott? Why did she tell the Premier of B.C. that all of this is just one big bluff?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, none of that stuff happened, so that's the answer to that question. The fact of the matter is that the member opposite simply can't get his story straight. First he said that he supported investing in the pipeline. Then he said: well, only if the feds support it. Then his big brother in Ottawa said: "Well, no. The feds supporting it would be disgusting." Then he said no and that he wants to take it to court. It is hardly surprising that these guys couldn't get it done when they had the chance. I suggest that they support us instead of taking shots at us and support the leadership we are showing to get the job done.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, if the Premier really wants to talk about the positions of federal parties, I'm compelled to remind her that her federal party wants to shut down all the pipelines.

Police Release of Information on Serious Incidents

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, on March 27 Constable Jordan Forget was shot repeatedly in Calgary in the performance of his duties. On April 10 a knife-wielding man attacked another Calgary police officer. The government has refused to release the names of the assailants. Why is the government protecting the identities of these would-be cop killers?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's certainly the position of the government that we absolutely support our front-line officers. We've been willing to put our money where our mouth is on that multiple times. With respect to this issue ASIRT, who is an independent investigative body which is independent of government, has a policy, a policy which is consistent among such outfits across the country, so the government is not refusing to name the individuals.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, that minister is responsible for law enforcement in Alberta. She can't duck or dodge on this issue. The Calgary Police Association and the Alberta Federation of Police Associations have both called on the government to give transparency with the release of these names, which was the policy of that task force in the past. Let me repeat: why won't the Attorney General instruct ASIRT to release the identities of these two people who had tried to kill Calgary police officers in the line of duty?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, this is a matter which has an enormous amount of public interest, but a matter having a large amount of public interest is precisely the time at which it is important to allow independent investigative bodies to continue to be independent. I don't generally exercise operational jurisdiction over these agencies. We allow them to make their own decisions, and we think that that's very important in the interest of public transparency.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, last week in this Chamber the minister of social services said, "Our thoughts are with the family and loved ones of the deceased," the deceased being the person who tried to kill a Calgary police officer. That minister gave no expression of concern for the police officers who almost died in the line of duty, but he went out of his way to express condolences for the repeat criminals, the serious violent criminals. Why did he do that?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have been clear in this House on behalf of our government that our thoughts are absolutely with the officer and his family in this instance. We are absolutely aware that police officers put themselves in harm's way every day in order to protect us, that their families undergo having to worry about those individuals every day in order that the rest of our families can be safe. Our thoughts are absolutely with those police officers.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Justice System Delays

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Court of Queen's Bench in Calgary stayed charges on Nick Chan, a notorious gang leader, including the charge of first-degree murder. A year ago the NDP government told us that they were going to triage cases before the courts to ensure that serious, violent offences were brought to trial, but now we see the release of gang leaders and alleged first-degree murderers. Why did the government let this happen?

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to begin, of course, by saying that I think that I join with all Albertans in expressing the fact that organized crime is a scourge on our communities, and we must do everything we can to stop it. We must support our law enforcement officers in the very complex work that is associated with investigating and prosecuting that kind of crime. In the case at hand we've just been advised that the matter has been appealed. As a result, with it being in front of the courts, we cannot speak to it specifically.

Mr. Kenney: I'm not asking the government to comment on the appeal, Mr. Speaker. I'm asking them to comment on their failure effectively to prioritize first-degree murder prosecutions, which are now being released by the courts.

Now, in March Provincial Court Justice Renée Cochard stayed several charges in a domestic violence case for the same reasons. The government told us that they were giving prosecutors the tools to focus on serious and violent crimes a year ago. Clearly, that hasn't happened. Why hasn't it happened? Why are we seeing serious, violent criminals released before they can be brought to justice?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, I as well would like to express our condolences to the families and communities who are awaiting justice in this particular circumstance. I'm very concerned about these issues of court timelines. This matter, as has been stated, is under appeal, so I can't speak specifically to the case. However, our government has been clear repeatedly with the federal government that we need to see the appointment of additional superior court justices. This current government has recognized the positions we created, so it's certainly a step ahead of their predecessors. But we do need . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the latter point is simply false. There were, I think, one or two Queen's Bench vacancies when the Liberals came to office. There are now 12. So much for the effectiveness of the provincial NDP in ensuring that we have a proper complement of judges, but that's not the issue.

The issue is that that Attorney General a year ago committed to prioritizing the prosecution of violent and repeat offenders, but violent and repeat offenders are being released. This is not a question for a particular case. It's a question of a policy failure. Why did the government fail to keep its word to bring to justice violent offenders?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think it's important to correct the record on this particular matter. There are currently that number of superior court vacancies. That is because this government and our predecessors created federal court positions, indicating that Alberta needed a higher number of superior court justices, that Mr. Harper's government . . .

An Hon. Member: Name.

Ms Ganley: . . . sorry, the former federal government refused to acknowledge. You know, the current government has acknowledged, and we are making progress.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Legal Aid

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. "Like a shackled and starving foster child locked in a filthy closet for years, the Legal Aid program is a neglected and degraded shadow of its true potential and is robbing poor and disadvantaged Albertans of their futures." That's what the president of the criminal defence lawyers association, Ian Savage, had to say about the current state of legal aid. He said that the government knows how to fix the issue but would rather direct their resources elsewhere. To the Minister of Justice: how is this anything other than a complete failure of your responsibility to provide legal aid to vulnerable Albertans?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, when our government took office from the government that that member opposite was a member of, Alberta had the lowest per capita funding for legal aid anywhere in the country, and there was a crisis, a profound level of crisis in legal aid. Since that time, in the face of the significant fiscal pressures that our government inherited from the previous government, we have increased legal aid funding by 40 per cent. That is significant because we know access to justice is fundamentally important.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Savage also said that the organization would stop their volunteer services until this government got their act together. Specifically, he referred to the government's most recent budget as a complete slap in the face. I asked the minister in estimates what her rationale was for not increasing the legal aid budget from their spending forecast from the previous year. To the same minister: now that you've driven defence lawyers to essentially quitting over lack of funding, perhaps you'd like to try again to justify holding your funding flat.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is absolutely the case that when we inherited this situation from the former government, of which that member was a member, we thought that legal aid was underfunded. That's why we have increased the funding to legal aid over the course of our tenure by 38 per cent. That is a larger increase than anything else in my budget has received, and it's certainly much better than members opposite would have done in the same situation.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to Mr. Savage's concerns – and, again, the concerns are so great that it caused the defence lawyers to withdraw their volunteer services from Legal Aid – the minister said: they’ve been doing quite a good job, and obviously we’ve been able to increase their funding such that they’re able to keep up with the workload. Minister, there is clearly a complete disconnect between what you and the lawyers delivering these services are talking about. To the same minister: are you ignoring the problem, concealing the problem, or are you suggesting that these volunteers are liars?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If anyone had ignored this problem, it was the former government, of which that member was a member. That’s why we have increased funding to legal aid by 38 per cent. That is a larger increase than any other area in my budget has seen. We certainly hope that when the time comes, the member opposite will continue to support that. We will continue to work with Legal Aid to ensure that they have adequate funding, as do all areas of the justice system.

Canadians’ Views on Oil and Gas Transportation

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, the Angus Reid Institute released a nation-wide opinion poll today regarding the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion. The poll demonstrated that two-thirds of Canadians say the B.C. government is wrong to try to block the pipeline. This represents a 10 percentage point increase since February. In addition, a majority of Canadians support the project, including a majority of British Columbians. To the Minister of Energy: what has the government done to be so successful in influencing the opinions of Canadians that this project is in the national interest?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I’m proud that our Premier has the highest approval rating amongst Canadian leaders for the work she’s done to continue to support this pipeline. It’s proof that results are happening. Overall support of the pipeline is increasing, up 10 per cent since February. We’ve always said that if we show that we have a credible climate leadership plan, that we have support, that this is in the national interest, and that we have leadership in our Premier, this would happen. This is proof. I know this isn’t what the opposition wants to see, that we were getting things done. But indeed people are moving towards . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the Angus Reid poll also indicates that tanker traffic and a need for a visible and effective emergency response that people can have confidence in to protect Canada’s west coast is top of mind for Canadians, what assurances can you provide that this concern is being adequately addressed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, this is an important issue. We’ve always said that B.C.’s Pacific coast is Canada’s coast. It belongs to all Canadians, not just B.C. Albertans are Canadians, and we take coastline safety very seriously. That’s why I’m pleased to note that with the approval of the Trans Mountain pipeline comes a $1.5 billion investment by the federal government to look at improving the oceans protection plan. This will improve the spill responses and the marine safety, something that is important to us all. I will note that there’s a total of 157 conditions . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, to the same minister: given that the Angus Reid poll shows that a majority of Canadians, including a majority of British Columbians, agree that the B.C. government should give in and allow the pipeline to be built if Alberta cuts back on oil and gas exports and that cutting exports is one of the most likely consequences to occur, will the minister commit to using this tool if it becomes necessary?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we know that every day we wait, Albertans and Canadians are losing millions of dollars in revenue, to the tune of $40 million a day. That’s money that can be used for roads, schools, social programs, all kinds of good things. I know the UCP wants to join in further delaying tactics like tying it up in court because it serves their political interests. Well, Albertans and Canadians are tired – tired – of political gamesmanship on this file. They want to see this matter get resolved. They want to see the pipeline built, and so do we. To be clear, this pipeline will get built.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, this week the government introduced a bill that will allow the minister to control the flow of Alberta’s natural resources to maximize the return to Albertans. It’s a shame that it had to come to this, but here we are. Now, I understand that the industry is generally supportive of the bill, but I feel strongly that they should have assurances that the government will not retain the power to arbitrarily dictate to whom and how their products will be shipped and retain that power in perpetuity. To the Premier. This bill gives your government a huge amount of power. What controls will you put in place to ensure that if it is used, it will be used responsibly?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we took our time to get this bill right. There was consultation, legal advice, and we feel that this bill is going to be a great tool for us to use. The bill itself is an enabling bill, and it allows us to be very flexible, looking at different hydrocarbons as we move forward. Regulations will follow that will support that bill.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given the extraordinary circumstances under which this bill is being introduced and given that the situation it seeks to rectify will hopefully be short lived, again to the Premier. When this bill comes up for debate, we intend to bring an amendment that will add a sunset clause in the form of a legislative review in two years’ time. That will be when we have a better understanding of whether the government still requires these broad powers. When we do introduce that amendment, Madam Minister, will you support it?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly look forward to debating the bill in this House. As was referenced, it's sad that we've gotten to this state. This isn't legislation that we're going to use lightly, but to be clear, we will use it if need be. We are more than determined; we are relentless that this pipeline is going to get built.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given the potentially significant impact on oil and gas producers and shippers if you do have to use these powers and given that these are Alberta companies that have been operating within the bounds of the law and have done nothing to warrant being used as pawns in this political game, once more to the Premier: will you commit to compensating any company who is disadvantaged by any action that you need to take under Bill 12?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I met last Friday with many stakeholders representing hundreds of companies in our industry. Again, we all agreed that it's too bad that we've gotten to this point, but we are united in the fact that something needs to be done. We certainly have broad support for what we're doing. I can quote Mark Scholz of the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors: I think it's very prudent and shows bold leadership on the part of the Premier, and it's certainly something we're supporting. PSAC: PSAC recognizes the Premier and the government of Alberta for standing up for Alberta's energy industry to ensure that the Trans Mountain . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alleged Calgary gang leader Nick Chan was released from custody this week. He had been charged with first-degree murder, conspiracy, and directing a criminal organization. He was released because the trial had not taken place within a reasonable time. The triage protocol is not working. Minister, what are you doing so that violent criminals stop being released back into our communities, where our children are?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, of course, this case is of concern to the government, absolutely. We will continue to work on this issue. This case was in superior court. We do suffer from the lowest number of superior court justices per capita. That is a continual concern. I have written to my federal counterpart numerous times on this. I've written again to her just recently, and I'm happy to table that letter. In addition, we have a number of other strategies, which I'm sure I will get the opportunity to outline.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, this is extremely serious. Mr. Chan would allegedly pay $10,000 for successful hits on rival gangsters, and he is suspected of a triple murder in 2009. Given that this is not a case of being found not guilty – this is a case of running out of time; the courts are backlogged, and this minister has taken way too long to fix this – what is this minister going to do to fix this problem so that people can feel safe in our communities again?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely, this problem is of concern. That's why we've been advocating for more superior court justices. That's why we've been investing throughout the justice system. Certainly, we've taken steps with respect to this. We've taken steps to find efficiencies. We've also taken steps to add resources. I find it a little surprising that after singling out my budget to vote against the increases last year and again singling out to vote against the supplementary supply to support those things, the hon. member is able to stand up and accuse the government of not taking action.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, just a little over a year ago the Justice minister said, "Things will not be lost as prosecutions merely because of timing, but prosecutors are empowered to make the decisions necessary to focus on serious and violent crimes." Clearly, that has failed. What is this minister going to do to instill confidence in our justice system for the people in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we're extremely concerned about that. That's why, as I've said, we've been advocating with the federal government to get more superior court justices, we've been taking steps to ensure that our justice system is working efficiently, and we've also been making investments in our justice system to ensure that we're keeping on top of the resourcing. Resources are absolutely a component of this problem. This government has been investing while the opposition has been standing up to knock down those increases and to say that they're not worth it.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, what the Justice minister has said just now is manifestly untrue. The problem is that a year ago she committed to triaging serious, violent offenders in the criminal justice system through the prosecutorial service. She has failed to keep her word. We now have gang leaders suspected of triple homicide being released. Can the minister indicate: are there higher priority cases out there to which resources have been directed? Why a total failure in keeping her commitment to prioritize the prosecution of serious repeat offenders?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member
The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The prosecution service absolutely continues to work hard to prioritize those cases. There are a number of components to the justice system. The prosecution service is certainly one of them. Ensuring that we have a sufficient number of superior court justices is another one of them. In fact, Alberta became the jurisdiction with the lowest number of superior court justices, which had an impact in this particular case, under that member's government.

Mr. Kenney: Given that this minister seems more focused on covering for her ally Justin Trudeau than getting justice done, Mr. Speaker, and given that the Trudeau government has been in office for two and a half years and given that this minister a year ago said that she would prioritize the prosecution of serious repeat offenders, why has she so manifestly failed to keep her word?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, this is a problem that has occurred under the current federal government. We have absolutely been advocating for these justices. We are absolutely getting frustrated that they haven't been appointed. But I think that in this instance there is a sufficient deficit in justices to go around. Certainly, the current federal government didn't do anything about it, but neither did the former federal government when that member was sitting around the cabinet table.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister keeps trying to pass the buck and given that a year ago she said that she would prioritize the prosecution of serious repeat offenders, why was that commitment not respected with this particular case, a triple murderer and a gangland leader? Why is this kind of person getting off scot-free to go back into our communities when this minister said that people like that would face justice?

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, we are absolutely concerned about this case. As I've said, it is presently under appeal, so I can't speak to the specifics. I will continue to say that we have advocated for more justices. We have brought forward a budget and multiple budgets that have invested in the justice system. We have brought forward changes to ensure that we're able to bring forward these serious and violent matters. The members opposite have spoken out against all of those things.

Mr. Bilous: They voted against them.

Ms Ganley: And they voted against all of those things. This government has a record of investing in the system, of making the necessary changes, and those folks have a record of criticizing.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Carbon Levy Economic Impact

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is still trying to send a message to Albertans that the economy is in recovery and things are looking up, up, up, but for the average everyday Albertan and businesses this is just not their reality. Food banks in my riding say that this is not the case. One in Airdrie has said that the use has skyrocketed and that the demand has doubled and doubled again since 2012. When will you open your eyes and see that the carbon tax is hurting working families and nonprofits in this province? Why aren't you listening?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know what? We know that not every small business and not-for-profit in the province has felt the recovery. We do know that Alberta led the country last year in growth, that we're on track to lead the country this year in economic growth, and that's because of our incredible, resilient, hard-working businesses that have weathered the downturn. Our government has provided a number of supports to support diversification and small businesses. We're continuing to invest in Albertans and in our communities, and we will continue to do so. I hope the members opposite will support our budget.

Mr. Orr: That's why people are lining up at food banks.

Given that there are huge unemployment issues as well and even working families all over the province are now not making enough to cover their bills due to the increased cost of heating their homes, increased cost to buy groceries, which are all necessities of life, and given, Minister, that children are going to bed hungry in this province, that is slowly being decimated by the costs of the carbon tax, how can this government justify taking from the poorest in our society to line their own pockets?

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.
The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government has committed to investing in this province, investing in the people in this province. There are a number of programs that we've rolled out to support families. When it comes to the carbon levy, two-thirds of Alberta families are receiving the rebate. We're investing in efficiencies, in businesses, in not-for-profits, in seniors' homes. Our government is investing in Alberta and Albertans. It's shameful that the members opposite one day will call for spending, the next day call for cutting. Our government has a path to balance. We're diversifying the economy, we're protecting public services, and we're proud of it.

Mr. Orr: Given that this government has already given the go-ahead to hike the carbon tax 67 per cent in the budget, is the government going to at least perform an economic impact study to see how these increases will affect families and food banks, to see if they will be able to afford to keep the lights on and continue feeding the province, or do they even care?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we released economic modelling on the topic of the federal proposal under the pan-Canadian framework in October of 2016 and in the context of pipeline approvals, which we then achieved, unlike the members opposite. The economy will grow in part because we have rebates going to two-thirds of Albertans. But here are other reasons why the economy will grow: because we have a child benefit that is going to 300,000 Albertans, because we have expanded school nutrition programs to 30,000 children, because we've increased the minimum wage. Sixty per cent of folks who earn it are women. That's what we're ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Southern Alberta Flooding

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our thoughts are with the families and businesses who are being affected by the flooding in southern Alberta and those people who are concerned about their property and that of municipalities and First Nations. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what efforts are being taken to support municipalities and First Nations in their efforts to keep their communities safe?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. First off, I would like to say that I am thinking about the people from southern Albertan and actually have been in contact with multiple mayors down there about that. I'd also like to recognize the emergency management people down there, local officials on the ground, and the hundreds and hundreds of volunteers that are trying to protect lives and keep properties safe. We have field officers on the ground down there as we speak, and we are in contact hourly and providing assistance when needed and where needed at the request of the local municipalities.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Indigenous Relations: given that Siksika First Nation are under a state of local emergency and given that they are currently dealing with washed out roads, what assurances can you provide that the government is supporting in this emergency response?

The Speaker: The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to say that I spoke with Chief Joe Weasel Child yesterday at Siksika Nation to discuss the circumstances on Siksika and, of course, to ensure that we are offering supports to the nation from our province. He was quite aware that our Emergency Management Agency team is already engaged, that supports have been offered from Transportation and from Environment and Parks as well. We're doing the right thing right now on a number of fronts. We're ensuring the safety of the people in the Siksika Nation.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Again thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: given that the weather will be getting warmer over the coming days and given that there are concerns that the warmer weather will mean that these communities could be dealing with more water, what are you doing to prepare?

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you to the member for the question. The Alberta Emergency Management Agency and Environment and Parks are working collaboratively to assist the communities with advice, with know-how, people, and equipment. Also, our Provincial Operations Centre is open 24 hours a day, seven days a week. Mr. Speaker, we're continuously monitoring the situation. We know we have to work with the local authorities down there, who are doing a fantastic job, by the way, and we will continue to work with them so we can adapt as the situation goes along.

Electricity System

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, with electricity prices getting more expensive as a result of the NDP's ideological actions like the accelerated coal phase-out, the PPA debacle, and the introduction of a capacity market, to the Minister of Energy: how many billions of dollars of public money has been burned by the NDP's electricity policy to date, and how much per year will it cost going forward? Minister, Albertans are watching. They want to know the real numbers, not rhetoric, and if you don't have the numbers, will you please commit to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we have spent a lot of time in fixing a system that was broken for a number of years, relying on its volatility in order to even make money. We saw a situation where there was a lack of investment, so along with our climate leadership plan and going to 30 per cent renewables by 2030, we are fixing our system and doing a number of things. We're very confident. We're on schedule. Things are looking up, and we know that families can count on . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that I asked for the actual numbers and didn't get them, let me try again. Had the NDP not triggered the power purchase agreement's cancellation clause and accelerated the coal phase-out, the minister would not have to create the capacity market. Will the Minister of Energy admit that without the capacity market our Whac-A-Mole electricity policy has made the grid unstable and unreliable?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, all along in this transition in our electricity system we have consulted everybody, a lot of stakeholders in electricity. We know that the current system we had when we came into government was one of two in all of North America, and it relied on volatility. We're moving to a more stable system, one where there are more predictable prices, 30 per cent renewables by 2030, and the capacity market is part of that. That's a system that's used in many systems throughout North America. It's a well-known, well-respected system, and investors like that part.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that Keephills 3 and Genesee 3 are super critical coal-fired power plants with the lowest emissions of all coal plants and given that these coal-fired power plants could be made zero-emissions with carbon capture and storage technology, would the minister still order the shutdown of these coal-fired plants, putting families out of work, and creating uncertainty purely out of ideology, even if their emissions were zero?

Ms Phillips: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, in 2012 a certain government with a certain member around the cabinet table passed some regulations that phased out 12 of our 18 plants, and those phase-outs would have started in 2019. You know what the plan was to replace that generation? Zero. Goose egg. There was no plan to replace the generation. There was no plan for the workers or those communities. Now there is. We're phasing in renewables. We are making sure that we've got a coal transition worker fund of some $40 million. We are finding ways to invest in communities through community generation and other projects, and now these guys want us to spend billions of dollars on an unproven technology? The answer is no.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Health Care Accessibility

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, I think we can all agree that Fort McMurray has given a lot to the province over the years. However, in return we've gotten smears, ostracism, and now medical insecurity. From orthopaedics to pediatrics to obstetrics the constituents of the municipality of Wood Buffalo had to travel to Edmonton to access these vital services over 22,000 times in 2017. Our only dialysis clinic runs three days a week, making constituents travel to Edmonton for treatment. Does the Minister of Health think that rural Albertans deserve reasonable access to proper health care?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm incredibly proud of the work we've done to protect the public health care system and to expand services throughout our province. We knew what was coming in 2015, and Albertans voted no for that. There were a billion dollars' worth of cuts to the public health care system. There was a health care premium that would have been a tax on families throughout our province. That was resoundingly rejected. We know that on this side of the House, we've brought forward stability and we've brought forward reasonable agreements with our labour partners, that give that to the people of Alberta.

I look forward to finding out what the members opposite are going to do with our Health budget. I have a feeling that I know, but we'll see tomorrow.

Mr. Yao: Let's change gears here, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General talks about the duplication of the bureaucracy. Administration is so deep that it actually impairs the system. In the estimates last year I asked you about the 10,000 employees that were hired by AHS over the last several years. You could only account for 1,500 of them being front line. [interjections] Through . . .

The Speaker: Keep going.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, you can throw a tennis ball down the halls of AHS administration here on any given Friday and not see anybody. There are salaried doctors seeing four patients a day. Has this minister done anything to lean up the bureaucracy so that patients in Calgary do not have to wait 10 months for a hip surgery and that kids in Edmonton do not have to wait . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm so proud of the work that we've done on this side of the House to protect the front-line services that those members fight to cut every single day. You know what a billion dollars' worth of cuts would mean? It would mean longer wait times. It would mean fewer resources and less support. Instead, we have a government that's standing with the people of Alberta, that's expanding home-care services by 19 per cent in this budget alone because we want to support people in staying in their homes and doing so safely with the right support. We're building Willow Square, a long-needed facility in the member's own riding, because we know on this side of the House that Albertans deserve to live in the communities that they choose and to have the right health care supports. On that side of the House your colleagues keep advocating for us to privatize it. I know who's standing up for the people of . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

It seems to me, folks, that the tone is getting a little too escalated in here. You've got to calm down. Calm down.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, if they looked at the CIHI reports, they'd see that they're failing in every regard.

Mr. Speaker, an elderly constituent approached me last week about how he wants to spend his golden years in Fort McMurray and that given that he now needs dialysis and can't access the three-day-a-week clinic in Fort McMurray, he must spend his days in Edmonton. Minister, despite your best efforts with carbon taxes to discourage people from driving fossil-fuelled vehicles, they are forced to drive to Edmonton for a treatment. Would you allow this clinic to be open for a few extra days in the week and allow them to stay within their community?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we have a proven track record of standing up for the public health care system in this province and encouraging opportunities for us to make care closer to home. I'd certainly be happy to look into this specific instance just like we did in opening our dialysis clinic in Lac La Biche, something that the members opposite, when they were in government for many, many years, failed to do. They had people sitting on a bus out front. On this side of the House we're investing in important public health care services, including those in Fort McMurray. I'm so proud of the work that we're doing there as well in maternal health and mental health, and the list goes on. Instead of deep cuts, you should be standing with us because we are working to protect services and expand them in Fort McMurray while your colleagues are calling for deep cuts and privatization.

Small-business Economic Indicators

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, since the NDP took office, I frequently hear from struggling business owners about the oppressive cost burden, in many cases borne by them personally. From introducing and then increasing the carbon tax to rapidly increasing labour costs, small businesses have taken it on the chin. The government continually points to their small-business tax reduction as the offsetting solution. To the Minister of Finance: can you provide Albertans with any economic analysis indicating that the 1 per cent reduction in small-business tax compensates for the financial burden your government has heaped upon the small-business sector since . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that the member speaks with small businesses, as do I and the Minister of Finance on a daily basis. We've been travelling the province, talking about our budget and how it is supporting businesses, investing in things like infrastructure that businesses need, improving quality of life, which, again, businesses are looking for, supports within their communities. Our budget also is continuing to diversify the economy and support the job creators through a number of initiatives, which I hope, from the member's question, he will be supporting as bills 1 and 2.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, supporting job creators is not what we're hearing.

Given the Canadian Federation of Independent Business found that 92 per cent of business owners lack confidence in this government's commitment to improving the business climate and given that according to the government's own labour force data Calgary's unemployment rate actually increased in March, again to the minister: how can you look Albertans in the eye and tell them things are up, up, up when it is clear to many out-of-work Albertans that the only thing up is the unemployment in our largest city?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That couldn't be further from the truth. There are a number of indicators, including jobs. There were 90,000 jobs created over the past year, the majority of those in the private sector. Our GDP is up. Manufacturing is up. Exports are up. Small-business confidence is up. The Business Development Bank of Canada says that small-business confidence is up in Alberta, with 35 per cent of small businesses looking to hire more staff and 73 per cent of them saying that they're investing in their business this year, in 2018. The other thing is that small businesses in Alberta have a greater economic impact than anywhere in the country. We're proud of our small businesses, and we'll continue to support them.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, the minister's own statistics don't bear this out.

Given that the CFIB's most recent business barometer indicates that Alberta's small-business optimism remains stagnant and is the second lowest in the country and given the same report indicates that 18 per cent of small-business owners in Alberta are looking to cut back that staffing that he keeps referring to, again to the minister: entrepreneurs continue to lack confidence in your government, and almost 20 per cent plan to cut staff, so why do you continue to spin a completely different story to Albertans than is borne out by the statistics?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, thank you to the member for the question. Again, the stats that I'm quoting are coming from third-party independents. Whether it's the Business Development Bank of Canada, TD Bank, Royal Bank, ATB, they're the ones that are giving us the indicators. We know that our exports are up. We know that restaurant receipts are up. Housing starts are up over 10 per cent. Business incorporations are up. Retail sales are up. I can tell you that Calgary is the fastest growing city on the prairies this year and will be the fastest growing city in the country next year. Compared to a year ago in Calgary, over 3,100 full-time jobs . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Water Act Enforcement

Mr. Hanson: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. On December 11 last year I asked the environment minister about a Water Act enforcement order that was issued in August on land adjacent to the town of St. Paul. At the time of my question the landowner was already noncompliant for three months, and it's now been seven months. Minister, you said in December that all those aspects of the Water Act have top priority. Spring is here. The flooding has started. Why has nothing been done to enforce this order?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will take the matter under advisement and undertake to provide the hon. member the specific information that he is inquiring about on the specific case after question period.
Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this minister has restricted or closed access to trails in Alberta's backcountry to prevent damage to natural water courses, Minister, why will you not enforce this order where a landowner has literally filled in over a kilometre of natural water course, resulting in runoff backing up into residences in town?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, I have committed to looking into the matter for the hon. member. If it is part of a regulatory proceeding, we will provide him with that information as well.

Mr. Hanson: Mr. Speaker, the minister has known about this for seven months, and I brought it to her attention in December.

Given that the town of St. Paul is facing an estimated $130,000 in costs to try to prevent flooding into people's homes due to lack of action by your department – your department tried to stuff this issue back onto the town of St. Paul, Minister – why should the town and taxpayers have to pay for your negligence on this file?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will undertake to provide the hon. member and the House the information he has requested.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Flood Mitigation on the Bow River

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've had several constituents from the community of Bowness approach me about their concerns related to flood mitigation and upstream mitigation on the Bow River. To the Minister of Environment and Parks: what is your ministry doing for upstream flood mitigation measures?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To date the province has committed $91.8 million for 46 projects on flood mitigation on the Bow River through the community resilience program, the flood recovery erosion control program, and the watershed restoration program. It is crucially important that we continue to invest in Calgary as a response to the devastating events that we're coming up on the fifth anniversary of. That is why we have continued to make those robust investments in and with the city of Calgary to keep communities safe.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What role does your ministry play in deciding how these funds will be allocated?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've committed to $150 million over 10 years to bolster the city of Calgary's flood protection infrastructure, and we work with the city to determine the suitability of each project. The planning is done as part of a multiyear process to ensure that Calgary is flood protected. Planning is done in partnership with the city, but the city is ultimately the project manager and is responsible for the design and construction in consultation with their citizens.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that your ministry has been collaborating with the Bow River Working Group. Can you give an update to the House on the recommendations that they brought forward and how your ministry will be implementing them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We released in August the Bow River water management project, that was produced by the Bow River Working Group, and there are a number of initiatives that have come out of that report: discussions with TransAlta, discussions with the irrigation districts, feasibility studies on increasing the drawdown rate at the Ghost reservoir, initiating feasibility studies for some of the long-term projects that we know we may have to invest in over the long term. In the coming days we'll have more to say on next steps, but one thing is clear: we are working and investing to keep the people of Calgary safe.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 20 seconds we'll proceed with Members' Statements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

GoldenBucks Bakeshop in Edmonton-Meadowlark

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This month I had the opportunity to meet with Edna and Evan Estigoy, owners of GoldenBucks Bakeshop, located in the La Perle community in Edmonton-Meadowlark. GoldenBucks Bakeshop specializes in Filipino baked goods. Their empanadas, yam cakes, and candies can be found at Save-On-Foods and Filipino markets across the city. They also sell some of their products from their recently opened storefront in La Perle, but their main focus is on distribution, with aspirations to sell their baked goods in stores all across Canada. They explained to me that they are already in talks with retailers in Manitoba and Saskatchewan. Based on the quality of their products and ambitions to grow, I know it's just a matter of time before they expand to new markets.

GoldenBucks is a true Albertan success story. In 2016 owner Evan Estigoy was laid off from his career as a control systems engineer. Like many other Albertans, the Estigoys were faced with the challenge of supporting their family during the economic downturn. Edna and Evan turned to their Filipino heritage and their passion for baking and cooking for inspiration. In September of 2016 they became entrepreneurs and began producing and distributing their baked goods from a rental commercial kitchen with the little money that they had saved. By November of 2017 they had successfully grown their business and were able to open their own independent facility.

I'm proud of our government for supporting small businesses by dropping the tax rate by 33 per cent and introducing targeted tax credits to support investments.

It was a pleasure to sit down with the Estigoys this month to discuss some of the rewards and challenges of starting a small business here in Alberta. This is still the beginning for GoldenBucks, and I wish them all the success with their business here in Edmonton-Meadowlark. If you haven't already done so, I encourage you to stop by their storefront or pick up some empanadas the next time you're out grocery shopping.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to give notice pursuant to Standing Order 42 that at the appropriate time I will move the following motion:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government not to proceed with any further increases to the carbon tax until Kinder Morgan's Trans Mountain expansion project has completed construction and commenced commercial operations.

I have the appropriate copies.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to give oral notice of a motion for tomorrow's Order Paper, the motion being:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 4(1) commencing May 1, 2018, the Assembly shall meet on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings for consideration of government business for the duration of the Fourth Session of the 29th Legislature 2018 spring sitting unless the Government House Leader notifies the Assembly that there shall be no evening sitting that day by providing notice under Notices of Motion in the daily Routine or at any time prior to 6 p.m.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and Minister of Status of Women.

Bill 14

An Act to Empower Utility Consumers

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce Bill 14, An Act to Empower Utility Consumers.

Mr. Speaker, since 2003 the UCA has a proven track record of helping to educate and mediate on behalf of Alberta's natural gas and electricity consumers. To build on this work and the work of the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose from last session, I am introducing this bill to make several enhancements to the services provided by the UCA. These enhancements further our government's commitment to protecting utility consumers.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first tabling is a copy of the enforcement order that I referred to in my question to the minister.

The second one is a letter from Nick Clark, cofounder of Utility Network and Partners Inc. He starts out by complaining about the number of e-mails he's had from ministers of the Crown requesting donations to the NDP Party. His answer is no, and he goes on to further supplement that.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I rise to table page 2 of the executive summary of Alberta's Wholesale Electricity Market Transition Recommendation from the Alberta Electric System Operator, which proves that because of the coal phase-out and the increased reliance on intermittent renewables, the electricity system's reliability has been compromised, thus the need for a new market structure, ergo the capacity market.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the document to which I referred in my question to the Minister of Energy. That's the Angus Reid opinion poll that was released today showing that our Premier is leading the country as the most trusted leader on the pipeline issue and that the majority of Canadians support the project.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the most recent in a series of letters to the federal Justice minister as regards the appointment of superior court justices. I have the appropriate number of copies.

The Speaker: Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of a report from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, Economics, in which their business barometer shows the business barometer index as flat and the general state of business health trending downwards in 2018.

The second is a report of the Alberta government, Alberta Labour Force Statistics March, 2018, showing lower statistics in terms of labour force participation in March 2018 versus the prior month and the year prior and an increase in the unemployment rate from the previous month.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Acting Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Ms Ganley, Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, the Alberta Law Enforcement Review Board 2016 annual report.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we had three points of order today, the first being by the Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Allegations against Members

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today, I don't have the exact time, but it was sometime close to 2:30, sometime after 2:30, the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka in his questions used the expression or something to the effect that the government is lining its own pockets. Now, that is an expression, according to the Cambridge dictionary, "to earn money using dishonest or illegal methods." Another definition: "to make money esp. by using dishonest, immoral, or illegal methods."

Perhaps he doesn't fully understand the meaning of it. He may, indeed, have just intended to say that the government is receiving revenues as a result of the carbon levy, and that would certainly be true. But in his choice of language, Mr. Speaker, he has suggested something dishonest and personal aggrandizement of members of the government, which is completely unacceptable. Under 23(h), (i) and (j) I would respectfully request that you rule that the hon. member is violating those sections of our standing orders and ask him to stand in this place and apologize.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you often say in this place, context is everything. While the Government House Leader may present one interpretation of what that saying could mean, there are other interpretations of what that could mean.

Again, Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader should let the other side speak. Now, I know he is struggling with that today, but I would ask that he would let me talk while I have the floor. The hon. member said, and I have his notes, "How can the government justify taking the poorest in society to line its own pockets?" or, as he has told me – I don't have the benefit of the Blues; you do – "their pockets?" It was either "their own pockets" or "their pockets," from the best of his recollection.

The fact is this. This is a matter of debate, Mr. Speaker. As has been raised in this House many times, the government's carbon tax is taking money away from some of the poorest people in our province. The member was pointing that out. That money, in turn, is then going to the government. That is the member's point. The carbon tax is taking away from the poor, and then it's going to the government.

As for the context, what the Government House Leader is doing is clearly a matter of debate.

The Speaker: Hon. members, context. I recall at least one and I think two in the last earlier sessions. There was a fairly serious matter or point of order with respect to whether or not a comment made was aimed at an individual or at a group. In this particular instance I would say that there is no point of order. However, to the hon. member, as the Government House Leader has suggested, it may not have been your intention to reflect that, but I would urge you to be cautious, and that goes to all of the members. When we're using phrases such as that, how it's received by many people may not be intending the intention you made. In this particular instance I don't see a point of order, but nonetheless I would caution everyone.

I believe we have at least two other points of order from the Opposition House Leader.

Point of Order

Remarks Off the Record

Mr. Nixon: Points of order. Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first point of order that I raise, I rise on 23(h),(i) and (j), particularly language that will create disorder in this place. At the time that I raised the point of order, the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, I believe – I always get those two Fort McMurray ridings confused – was asking a question. The Minister of Environment and Parks at that point started to yell very aggressively and quite loudly at the hon. member, telling him to speak through the chair, that type of stuff, and continued to yell him down; something that happened throughout the day today by government members.

Mr. Speaker, at the time you, I believe rightly, stood up and called the House to order and tried to stop that behaviour. Now, it may have confused the government because you did not look at the government to tell them that they were making that noise; you looked at us. But at that point you did ask them to stop. Of course, there was no heckling at all from this side of the House, has not been all day. But we have a minister who continues to yell at our members, not allowing them to ask a question. They have a right to ask their questions in this Chamber. That's what they've been brought here to do. While I understand the government can't control their childish behaviour – we've well established that – we would ask that they would at least allow our members to be able to ask their questions and speak on behalf of their constituents in here, and we would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to protect their right to do so, as is the chair's responsibility.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, I hardly know where to begin with this. The protestations of the opposition since their new leader has taken his seat are absolutely too much to be believed. The level of decorum in this House is just fine. It is not excessive. But those people over there, before this new strategy was employed – and that's what it is; this is a strategy of the opposition – were one of the loudest, most obnoxious oppositions that I've ever seen in this place for nearly three years. There were repeated interventions as female members of the government were heckled and almost shouted down. All of a sudden a new strategy by the new leader . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, get to the point of order.

Mr. Mason: Under (h), (i), and (j), Mr. Speaker, it's pretty clear. It's pretty clear to me that the new strategy is to reform the little rascals and turn them into the little angels, who are pointing across the aisle . . .

The Speaker: Get to the point of order that we're at.

Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Mason: . . . and putting words in the mouths of our members and pretending to have their feelings hurt, Mr. Speaker. It's a political strategy, not a point of order. That's my point.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I noticed Calgary-Foothills, and now I see Airdrie. Is there additional information?

Mrs. Pitt: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak to this point of order and correct the hon. Government House Leader in further adding that there are particular members on the Official Opposition side of this House, more particularly the only two female members, that happen to continuously, actually, hear louder comments from the government side. Our members on this side of the House are feeling like they're not being protected, and they're not able to speak up for their constituents.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, is there something substantive you'd like to say?

Ms Ganley: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. I think I'd just like to add with respect to that particular point that the other day we had a series of these points of orders, where the members opposite were putting words in the mouths of our ministers, standing up and claiming to be victims, and then shouting me down as I attempted to speak. So I think that certainly this is going on all around the House, but I think the point here is that in this particular instance there is no point of order because the member was merely asking that comments be addressed through the chair.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

It seems that whenever I allow for additional members to speak to items, the distance from the point of order seems to increase. I do have the benefit of the Blues, which you may or may not have. It reads: "You could only account for 1,500 of them being front line [interjections]." That's what it is.

Hon. members, I tried to caution and advise, bring the House to where there was an exchange of comments across from one side to the other, but I did not hear specifically who was saying what. So, as has been in the past, I don't know how I'm expected to rule on a matter when I do not hear it. Again, folks, you folks can decide as to whether or not you want to continue, you know, exchanging in these kinds of discussions in time.

In this particular instance I'm not able to hear it, nor the comment, and there is no point of order.

There is, however, a – the Opposition House Leader.

Point of Clarification

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on 13(2) and ask you to explain your ruling. Clearly, we were not yelling or heckling our own members while they were asking a question. The Blues do show that there was shouting down of the hon. member asking questions, unless it's the assertion of this House that we were heckling our own member so that he could not ask the question. You did call the House to order, and the question we have that we'd like you to explain is why you won't look at that side of the House when they continue to . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, please. Please, hon. member. I advised you what I heard, and I could not identify a party. I think, hon. member, you need to accept that reasoning because I did not hear it. As to where I look, I look on both sides of this House.

Government House Leader, I'm not sure that you have anything else to add to this.

Mr. Mason: No. You dealt with it, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I can recall in this House when there was a considerable amount of exchange going on. I spoke to it over and over again with respect to volume, and that in no way needs to legitimize any comments that may have happened at this point in time. I submit that, firstly, the responsibility rests with all of the members. If tactics at one time or another change, I notice it on all sides with respect to that.

I have explained the reasoning, and I would therefore ask, hon. member, that you speak to your notice of motion.

Mr. Nixon: I've still got another point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: You've got another point of order?

Mr. Nixon: There were three called.

The Speaker: Go ahead.

Point of Order Gestures

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on 23(h), (i), and (j), particularly abusive language or motions that would create disorder in the House. At the time that we called the point of order to defend our members, when, as you pointed out, the Blues show that there was a disruption in the House that you were trying to get control of, the Government House Leader, keeping in line with the immature actions of this NDP caucus in this House, then started to make motions with his eyes towards this side of the House, with his hands, that would indicate, you know, traditionally inside this House that we were crybabies or we were crying about the abuse that we were being subjected to by the minister of environment.

I would ask that he withdraw and apologize for those actions. He's better than that, and he needs to get control of the immature actions of his caucus and himself in this Assembly.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, nothing could be further from the truth. I did have something in my eye, and I did rub my eye. Obviously, the hon. member took that completely the wrong way and seems to suggest, in fact, that I was suggesting that he was a crybaby. I didn't say that or intend it, but if the shoe fits, maybe he should wear it.

Mr. Loewen: Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I saw you. Please be seated.

If this Assembly is expecting that the Speaker will be responsible for the facial expressions and views across the House, I think you provide a challenge to me and to any Speaker which goes far beyond the capacity of an individual to control. I think it rests with all of you.

Opposition House Leader, I've heard your two points of order. I think you have a motion you're proceeding with under Standing Order 42. Is that right, hon. member?

Mr. Loewen: Point of order.

Point of Clarification

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on 13(2) to get you to explain your ruling on why you continue to allow the opposition to be abused and stand up for the majority in this House.

The Speaker: I've explained it, hon. member. We're done on that issue. Finished.

Motions under Standing Order 42

The Speaker: Now, are you prepared to move your motion? Would you please proceed with that.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Construction Suspension

Mr. Nixon:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government not to proceed with any further increases to the carbon tax until Kinder Morgan's Trans Mountain expansion project has completed construction and commenced commercial operations.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we are 43 days, I believe, possibly 42 days, away from the Kinder Morgan imposed deadline on this Trans Mountain project. This government still has not taken any action on that. It still has the carbon tax, which they continue to raise and continue to punish everyday Albertans with in every sector, from veterans, seniors, schoolkids, on and on. They brutally and savagely punish them with this carbon tax and can't even get their social licence or their pipeline built. We believe that they should suspend that at least until they can get their pipeline built and follow through on their promise to Albertans.

The Speaker: I believe the Routine for the day is complete.

Pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) and the Budget 2018 main estimates schedule the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 1:30 p.m. The legislative policy committees will convene this afternoon and tomorrow morning for consideration of the main estimates. This afternoon Families and Communities will consider the estimates for Education in the Parkland Room, and Alberta's Economic Future will consider the estimates for Executive Council in the Rocky Mountain Room. Tomorrow morning Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates for Municipal Affairs in the Rocky Mountain Room, and Families and Communities will consider the estimates for Children's Services in the Parkland Room.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, April 19, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let each of us reflect or pray in our own way. As we enjoy a breath of fresh air provided by Mother Earth, go in peace, go safely to your homes and the communities you serve.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you four hard-working individuals with the Association of Science and Engineering Technology Professionals of Alberta. As I say your names, please rise: Barry Cavanaugh, Mat Steppan, Jennifer Bertrand, and Adam Campbell. This is Adam's first visit to the Legislature. He's ASET's recently elected council president and currently works as operations manager for water and waste-water utilities for the city of Lethbridge. Adam is from Okotoks and currently lives in Lethbridge with his wife and lovely two-year-old daughter. Thank you, Adam, for your commitment to the public service and for your contributions to ensure the safety and success of engineering professionals across Alberta. I'd like to invite everyone to please give them a warm welcome to our House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a team of individuals helping to ensure the long-lasting success of Alberta's electricity system. This team is from my department and has put in literally hundreds of hours in meetings and policy work, all to determine how best to design Alberta's new capacity market. This legislation, which I will be introducing later today, will go a long way to achieving a stable and reliable and affordable electricity system for Albertans. As I call their names, I would ask them to rise: Stacey Smythe, Mike Fulsom, David Stanford, Helaina Zyp, James Lin, Kaitlin Boyd, Kelly Tai, Kimberly Budd, Steven Flavel, Hossein Hatami, Brenda Hawkins, Zackary Merilovich, Madelene Belanger, Russel Andrews, and Robert Chow. I would personally like to thank these folks for the hard work they've done and ask the members to join me in welcoming them.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, your guests may not have arrived yet. The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly representatives of the Alberta graduate provincial advisory council, which I had the pleasure of having lunch with today as well as several meetings over the past year. I'd ask the representatives to please rise as I name them. With us today we've got Willem Klumpenhower. Mostafa Sakr I don't think came in. We have Lindsay McNena, Jamie Czerwinski, Shawn Ang, Babak Soltannia, Masoud Khademi, and Nicole van Kuppeveld. I ask my colleagues here to please give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce some special guests who are joining us today to celebrate National Volunteer Week. They are seated in the members' gallery. These are specifically a group of very thoughtful and committed, passionate AHS volunteers and one volunteer co-ordinator. Volunteers are among the most devoted people in our health care system. Last year almost 15,000 individuals volunteered more than 1 million hours of service to the patients through Alberta Health Services. Whether it's greeting patients or helping them find their way, assembling patient blank charts, or knitting a baby's first blanket, these volunteers are an important part of our AHS team. I invite them to rise if they're able to or to wave otherwise – Ruth Smith Hill, Aaltje Fokkema, Ed Quao, Anne Christou, Max Li, Shakib Rahman, and Debbie Kennedy – to please receive the appreciation and warm welcome of our Assembly. And to your family members, please join us as well in rising and receiving our gratitude.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Jasleen Kaur Mann. She's a high school student and a constituent from Edmonton-Ellerslie. She's a dedicated volunteer who shows up regularly to the office, sometimes even unannounced. That's how eager she is to help. I couldn't ask for a better volunteer. So through you, Mr. Speaker, to Jasleen, thank you for your dedication, determination, for always getting the job done. I'm lucky to have you as a constituent and as a volunteer. I ask that we give her the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a very special day for me today. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some of the VIPs in my life: my mother, Valerie Cote, who was, you know, contrary to what people might think, the first NDP member in our family and a great inspiration for me; my stepfather, Alvin Brockman, who is an all-around great guy, and it's wonderful to have him here; my sister, Andrea Piquette, who is a surprise guest for me today and is welcome. You know, it really means a lot to me that my family is able to be in the House today. They have been tremendously supportive, and I certainly wouldn't be anywhere close to this place without their help.

I would also like to introduce Vanessa Goodman and Tammy Forbes. Vanessa is the manager of external relations for the North West Redwater Partnership, which is the subject of my member's statement later today. With her is Tammy Forbes. She is the director of strategic communications for Women Building Futures, which is a key labour force contributor to the partnership. I see they've already risen, so I would be, you know, really thankful if all the members would give a very warm welcome to them.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a tremendous honour to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mark Taylor. Mark is the executive director of the Alberta Party, and he's here helping democracy happen, building constituency associations, and getting our fabulous volunteers ready for the upcoming election. I see that Mark has risen. I'd ask you all, please, to welcome Mark with the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Aileen Jang. She is a pharmacist here in town and a business owner. She is greatly concerned about some of the regulations going on, and she's one of the organizers of the protests across this province that are being led by the pharmacists. I'd ask the House to give her a great greeting.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Yao: As well, Mr. Speaker, to the House I'd like to introduce Chris Relph. Chris was from Bathurst, New Brunswick. He worked for the Fort McMurray fire department as an EMT firefighter. I got along very well with him because we're both from New Brunswick. His service is today – right now – in Fort McMurray, and I just wanted to say some kind words about him.

Thank you. I'm sorry for misappropriating the time of the House.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Women's Equality

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reality is that women have the right to equality in Alberta, yet we still face barriers to equal treatment. Women not only had to fight for the right to vote, but they had to fight to get their sisters of colour that right, and they had to fight to get their indigenous sisters that right. They had to fight and still keep fighting so that legal health services are safe, protected, and free from harassment. We stand with our trans sisters, making sure that their rights are also protected.

The Equal Suffrage Statutory Law Amendment Act passed unanimously in Alberta on April 19, 1916, but it was a long fight to get there. Canadian women had been campaigning for better health care, working conditions, and against family violence. They also fought for reproductive choice and birth control. These brave women helped found political movements and brought new voices to politics. WHO states that the minimum number of women in decision-making bodies should be 30 per cent. In this House we see that – and maybe it's a good thing – 98 per cent of the women in this House sit on this side, so we have parity at the decision-making tables.

We need to continue working towards ending violence against women and girls, pay equity, getting more women in leadership positions, and increasing women's democratic participation. To do this, we need to see women from every walk of life in this Legislature and around every board table. We need all women to know their voices matter.

Most importantly, we need to let women tell us what they think the biggest women's issue is in Alberta. Women I have talked to have a large variety of issues that are important to them. For many mothers, especially single mothers, $25-a-day daycare is their priority. For those women with a family accessible and affordable health care for their children and elderly parents is their priority.

For women of a lower socioeconomic status opportunities for equal pay is their priority. As a woman my biggest issue is my children's education. Women in Alberta are diverse and have diverse issues, and we cannot be painted with a single brush.

Mr. Speaker, the reality is that women have the right to equality in Alberta. Thank you.

Israel

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, 70 years ago today the ancient longings of the Jewish people were fulfilled with the creation of the Jewish democratic State of Israel, born out of the ashes of the Holocaust, born out of centuries of pogroms and persecution. The Jewish people carved out of an inhospitable terrain a new homeland, a homeland that has been assailed decade after decade, invaded on five occasions, facing existential threats every day, but a nation that has persevered in fidelity to the ancient Covenant of the Jewish people, a land that has been home to Jews making aliyah from Ethiopia, from Asia, from the former Soviet Union, a land that has been an example to the world, carved out of the desert, creating one of the most innovative and successful economies on earth, but, most importantly, a secure homeland for a people who today face the new anti-Semitism, violence across the world, sadly including here in Canada, which perpetuates the most ancient and pernicious form of hatred, that of anti-Semitism.

Mr. Speaker, in the anthem of Israel, Ha Tikvah, it says that our hope is not yet lost, the hope 2,000 years old, to be a free nation in our land, the land of Zion and Jerusalem. Today we join with the people of Israel and with all Jewish people in celebrating that land of Zion and Jerusalem. Israel is the answer to the Shoah, and the people of Israel live. That is the message of Israel. [Remarks in Hebrew]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Provincial Strategy on the Kinder Morgan Pipeline

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Choices. Every day we all make choices. A parent chooses how to raise their child, an MLA chooses how best to advocate for our constituents, and the government chooses how to react to the issues of the day. The government has information that the rest of us don't have. At times they need to keep sensitive discussions behind closed doors, and that needs to happen even when the opposition is making noise or the media is asking difficult questions. In those situations the government can choose to play to the crowd. They can choose to try to win the daily media cycle or win the next three hours on Twitter. They can choose to govern for the headlines and maybe generate a nice YouTube clip or a meme they can use for fundraising, which is exactly what the NDP have done when it comes to the Kinder Morgan expansion project. They've been caught focusing on politics and the short-term win instead of taking a long-term view.

When Kinder Morgan announced their May 31 deadline to decide whether their expansion project will continue, the government had a choice. They could work quietly to negotiate the best deal for Albertans, or they could go for that headline. To the detriment of our province they have chosen the latter. They told Kinder Morgan exactly what they would do and how far they would go. When the Premier called the Kinder Morgan expansion too big to fail and said that the government was willing to buy the whole thing, they put all of their cards on the table. It's like walking into a car dealership and saying: "Here's how much money I have. Now how much is that truck?" Well, guess what? It costs exactly the amount of money that you have.

The Kinder Morgan expansion should go ahead, but if Alberta does end up buying a stake or even the whole thing, there is absolutely no chance now that we're going to get the best deal for Albertans. It didn't have to be this way. If the NDP had chosen patience and focus instead of a quick political win, the pipeline would have a better chance of moving ahead and Albertans would get a better deal.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Sturgeon Refinery Update

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to give an update on a project that I'm proud to have in my riding, the Sturgeon refinery. It is a good-news story. The refinery is now nearing completion. Nine out of 10 units are now in the commissioning phase. This past December the refinery produced its first diesel, and I was honoured to attend the celebration in Morinville along with my colleague the MLA for Sherwood Park. At the current stage of construction this refinery is able to process synthetic crude into diesel and other value-added products. Over 2 million barrels have been refined and shipped within western Canada already, and the refinery has started paying off.

The Sturgeon refinery is state of the art and a testament to Alberta ingenuity. It's the world's first refinery with integrated carbon capture and storage. At completion this refinery will capture 1.2 million tonnes of CO₂. The CO₂ is safely sequestered by injecting it into depleted geological formations deep beneath the Earth's surface. This is the equivalent of taking nearly 300,000 cars off our roads. The refinery also protects the environment by producing ultra low sulphur product with low carbon intensity.

From a peak of 8,000 workers to around 2,500 today this refinery has logged over 50 million hours of employment. During one of the worst downturns in recent memory this project has provided a decent income to thousands of Alberta families. Further, this refinery has stood out as a leader in ensuring an equitable and representative workforce through partnering with organizations such as Women Building Futures and working closely with First Nation communities. It is also known as a good neighbour by the farmers nearby and is a huge supporter of the local community.

Seventy-five per cent of Albertans want to see more refining done in this province. The Sturgeon refinery was the first new refinery built in years and was done with the novel funding arrangement that has made this project possible. The North West Redwater Partnership is to be commended for creating something successful and truly made in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

National Day of Mourning

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. April 28, the National Day of Mourning, is the day Canada remembers and honours the workers who have died, been injured, or became ill due to their workplace. Every year health and safety committees and investigators look at these injuries, illnesses, and deaths. Recommendations to make changes in the workplace usually occur after any investigation so that these occurrences are not repeated and any other lives are not affected. This year we will not be in the Legislature on April 28, so I have chosen to do my statement today about the importance of this to each and every one of us.

I have always felt a deep connection to health and safety in the workplace perhaps because I worked in an environment with the potential for danger for so many years. That danger could come from the work site, other staff, or the offenders. You might have heard over the last two years about two incidents of sexual harassment and sexual assault within two federal correctional facilities. These were incidents of workplace injuries, sexual assault, and sexual harassment which could have been prevented. These injuries have left at least three staffpersons, who were doing their jobs, damaged probably for their lifetimes. I will say again that they could have been prevented.

Taking action when a workplace is not safe is what the Day of Mourning is all about. We all hold a responsibility for making our workplaces safe. I speak about this because it is so important to remember those who have suffered, to push for change, and to keep on pushing until every person in every workplace is safe from preventable injury, illness, or death.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Health Ministry Communication with Clients

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sometimes when we are dealing and speaking about billion-dollar budgets, it can be easy to forget that the work that we do here is for the benefit of all Albertans. Looking through the budget doesn't help us connect to the people who need health care. It's not that this work isn't important. We need to ensure the sustainability of the whole system to help individuals, but we need to remember it's only one part of the story. The other part of the story is the Albertans who are facing serious illness. Albertans dealing with serious illness, whether it's their own illness or that of a friend or a family member, are incredibly brave. It's often a lonely journey, and whenever possible we should lend a hand and give them our compassion and understanding.

With that in mind I want to talk about some constituents of mine. Kira Palmer is the mother of her son Evan, who's been dealing with a rare disorder, spinal muscular atrophy, a disorder that is slowly taking Mrs. Palmer's son away from her. Mrs. Palmer along with other parents struggling with the same issue have been campaigning to get access to life-saving medication. I know the Minister of Health has been contacted by these folks, and to her credit and to the credit of her office they have responded, albeit through a form letter. The problem with a form letter, especially when dealing with such a heart-wrenching medical issue, is that it can make someone feel like they're stuck in a faceless system. A form letter doesn't make someone feel like they've been heard. For someone who is fighting for the life of their child, who just wants somebody else to understand the complexity and the nuance of what they are going through, a form letter isn't always appropriate.

Minister, this woman isn't asking for a miracle. She's asking for something much more human, something well within your power to give. She's asking for compassion, understanding, and a chance to be heard. I'm asking this minister to please meet with Mrs. Palmer. She's asking for half an hour of your time because that half an hour might mean a lifetime with her child.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Construction Suspension

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday at 4:30 in the afternoon the Premier told me at committee, "We are in a position now where we are very close to being able to establish the certainty that is necessary” for the construction of the Trans Mountain pipeline. At exactly the same moment the president of Kinder Morgan Canada was telling his investors: it’s become clear that this particular investment may be untenable for a private party to undertake; the events of the last 10 days have confirmed those views. Why did the Premier get it so completely wrong?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know that the member is desperately trying to cherry-pick quotes from here and there in order to create a semblance of failure that he can then celebrate. Heaven knows that he’s good at celebrating failure because his party has quite a long record of that on the matter of getting pipelines to tidewater.

That being said, what we know is this. Kinder Morgan said yesterday: we are actively engaged with the federal and Alberta governments, and those conversations will continue in good faith; nothing has changed in that regard. Nothing has changed, Mr. Speaker. We are working with Kinder Morgan and with Ottawa to get this pipeline built, and it will happen.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the question is about the Premier’s credibility. She’s been declaring victory on this from day one, doing a nonstop victory lap. In the face of another B.C. delay she pulled the wine boycott and said, quote: it’s a definitive victory. Yesterday Steve Kean, the president of Kinder Morgan, said on the issue of potential public investment: there are really two separate things; most of the investment is in British Columbia, where the government is in opposition to the project; that is an issue that, in our view, needs to be resolved. The question is: why did she get it so wrong? Why doesn’t she understand what the project proponent itself is saying?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, in fact, Kinder Morgan said exactly what they said on April 7: B.C.’s actions have put the project in jeopardy. This is not news. We are fully aware of that. That is why I have said that Alberta is prepared to take a public position. That is why we brought in Bill 12. That is why I flew to Ottawa and had some very detailed conversations last week with the Finance minister and then again on the weekend with the Prime Minister and again with the Finance minister. We are working very hard to get this pipeline built, and I believe that we will be successful.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, it seems that the Premier’s chief of staff was too busy posting videos of the opposition on Twitter to inform her that she was misleading a committee yesterday in saying that we were close to certainty when the company was saying exactly the opposite. How can Albertans take seriously this Premier’s observations about this critical issue, vital to our economic future, when she’s saying, “Don’t worry; be happy,” while the company is saying that the project may be untenable, and nothing has changed to improve its prospects of construction in the past 10 days? Why did they get it so completely wrong?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, as I’ve said before, Alberta is closer than ever to getting the pipeline built. Now, to be clear, if it was easy, there is a slim possibility that the members opposite might have been able to succeed when they had eight years to get it done, not a huge possibility, but it is ever so slightly possible. Nonetheless, we are working very hard, and we will win this fight because we have the facts on our side. We have Canadians on our side. We have recent polling that shows that we have the majority of British Columbians on our side, even in the Lower Mainland. The only people not on our side are the UCP and their leader.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Kenney: Yeah, right, Mr. Speaker. The party that surrendered to Justin Trudeau’s veto of Northern Gateway, surrendered to his killing of Energy East, surrendered to Barack Obama’s veto of Keystone XL, and did absolutely nothing but attack us for suggesting a fight-back strategy against British Columbia for the past nine months – instead of attacking the opposition, why doesn’t she thank us for giving her the policy ideas that have now become government legislation?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I’m sure that the member will be incredibly surprised to learn that this issue is actually not about him and that, in fact, our government has been working in a very determined fashion since well before his return to the Alberta political scene, a scene that he wasn’t actually on when he was in Ottawa, where he could have actually been fighting for pipelines but chose not to, but that’s a whole other issue. We’ve been working on this all along. We have been working with stakeholders across the board, industry experts, politicians from across the country, and ultimately we are convinced that we will get it done.

Mr. Kenney: You know, Mr. Speaker, it’s not about me; it’s about Alberta. Funnily enough, the NDP mentioned my name 209 times in the fall session of this place.

Mr. Speaker, the important thing is that they accepted our ideas after mocking and ridiculing them, and that’s fine. They’re welcome to good ideas, including the idea of being prepared to turn off the taps. Unfortunately, there’s one critical person who doesn’t believe that they’re serious about it. His name is John Horgan. He’s a New Democrat. He says that this Premier is bluffing. He says that she told him she has no intention of using the legislation. So why should we believe this Premier when the NDP in British Columbia doesn’t?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, while we’re in the business of counting up names and words in Hansard, I’ll just say that I’m pretty sure it wasn’t me that counted my own name. In any event, one thing that I did do was that I looked at how many times the word “pipeline” appeared in Hansard by the member opposite when he was actually a member of the government in Ottawa. You know what? Once. You know how often the word “Kinder Morgan” showed up? Maybe on the last day. I can’t remember; he might have been doing it then. The point is that when it comes to looking at Hansard and counting up words, what it shows is that someone wasn’t actually standing up for Alberta when they had the chance. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, while this Premier was standing at rallies with signs saying, “No pipelines, no tar sands, no oil,” I was standing up in Ottawa as part of a government that saw the construction of four pipelines that doubled shipping capacity in Canada, of which I am proud, but the real question is the Premier’s credibility. Her British Columbia New Democrat allies are telling us that she is making a bluff on the threat to turn off the taps. What is the use of using that threat if the other side doesn't believe that it will be used, and why has she blown her credibility with the B.C. New Democrats on this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will say that it is true that the level of credibility that I have with the B.C. New Democrats is very different than that of the member opposite. What I will also say, as I have said before in this House and in every other forum, is that the B.C. government knows full well that we brought in a piece of legislation that was designed to be used, that was designed to withstand legal scrutiny, that was designed to ensure that Alberta's interests are absolutely represented at absolutely the right strategic time, and we will not back down from doing the job when it becomes necessary.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Third main question.

Mental Health Services for Children

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, on another important subject, there's troubling new data about deteriorating access for mental health for Alberta children in particular. The Alberta Health Services third quarterly monitoring update indicates that the number of children who get access to mental health treatment within 30 days has declined from 82 per cent in 2014 to 67 per cent now even though the Premier said that improving the mental health and well-being of Alberta's children is a priority for the government. If it's a priority, why is access to that service deteriorating?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm really proud of the fact that we've actually increased access. We've increased services. For example, the Zebra Child Protection Centre: in 2017 we supported over 1,600 children and youth. We opened the Rutherford mental health clinic for children and youth in Edmonton and surrounding areas. We're building an eight-bed youth facility in Red Deer, and the list goes on. You know what? There is more to do, and that's why this side of the House is investing more in health care instead of pushing for rash cuts, because we know that we're headed in the right direction, but we know that there is more work to do, and we know that there are more families in need.

Mr. Kenney: This is one of the problems with the NDP, Mr. Speaker. They think that spending more results in better outcomes when the opposite is true in this instance. In 2014 in Edmonton 77 per cent of children got access to mental health services in 30 days or less. That's down to 45 per cent now, a 32 per cent drop since this government took office. They may be spending more money, but that money is not resulting in better services to children in need of mental health services. Why?

Ms Hoffman: Well, the truth is, Mr. Speaker, that we are increasing investment because we believe that these families deserve opportunities to access increased supports. Demand is also going up. I know the member says that we're doing worse, but we're actually doing more. There is increased need as well. That's why when the member says that we should be spending less, that if we spent less, we'd get better outcomes, he couldn't be further from the truth. We saw what happened when they moved forward with drastic cuts in the 1990s, closing 88 per cent of long-term care beds. I am so relieved that he isn't in a position to be able to do that to the children and families of this province who count on us for mental health supports.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, it's this government's record that we're talking about. In Calgary in 2014 91 per cent of kids got access to mental health services in 30 days or less. That's now down to 74 per cent. It's down province-wide. The government said that this is a priority. Then why are fewer kids getting access to timely mental health services? Does the minister understand the concept of ministerial responsibility? Instead of blaming some government from 20 years ago, does she have the capacity to stand up and take responsibility for this decline in services and fix it?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think the first thing to make really clear, which the member opposite didn't quite seem to pick up on, is that the demand for these services has grown, which means that we have more work to do in order to provide services to meet that demand. We are committed to doing that. Beginning the analysis by saying that more money won't help but that privatization will is absolutely the wrong direction to go in. Beginning the analysis by suggesting that we keep funding at the same level it was at three years ago is absolutely the recipe for failure and the recipe for pain and suffering on the part of these kids and their families. Thank goodness that they won't get the chance to do that.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the president of Kinder Morgan said that despite meetings between the Premiers and the Prime Minister nothing has changed in the past 10 days and that their project remains untenable. To the Premier: now what?

Ms Hoffman: Now what is that we're continuing to move forward on three fronts, Mr. Speaker, the fronts being that we are willing to take a public stake in this project. I wish the members of that party would say the same. This is so important. It's so important to the people of Alberta and of Canada that we can't threaten to have a board from Houston potentially impact our future. That's why we have taken this. We have also taken legal measures to be able to control the taps. If I were in the Lower Mainland filling up today at prices above $1.50, I'd be really worried about what might happen when this bill is passed, if it has to come into play, if their government doesn't get out of the way and let us get our product to tidewater. That's what's happening. We're fighting for this project, and we won't back down.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, Kinder Morgan is legitimately concerned about their ability to get this project built in this political environment, but it is that very same political environment that the Premier may force Albertans into by potentially buying the entire Kinder Morgan pipeline. Again to the Premier: if we do buy into this project, what makes you think that your government will be able to succeed where Kinder Morgan, a company that does nothing but build and operate pipelines, looks like they may fail?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said to the member opposite when we were in estimates yesterday, there are certain parts of the conversations and the negotiations that are going on right now that need to stay at the table in order to make sure that we get the best outcome possible. Suffice to say that the question raised by the member opposite is one that we have already taken into consideration. As he knows, the federal government has already talked about moving forward with additional federal legislation in order to address some of those matters. We are very confident that we are putting together the capacity to make sure that the pipeline can move forward.

Mr. Clark: Well, Mr. Speaker, I sincerely wish things would stay confidential, because about 10 days ago, when news about the troubles with Kinder Morgan came out, the Premier, frankly, overreacted. She immediately talked about buying the entire project, to the point of purchasing the whole thing. She said: it is too big to fail. That very clearly jeopardized Alberta's negotiating position on this project. To the Premier: why did you negotiate in public? Is there any scenario where Alberta will take a lesser stake, or are we boxed in, already committed to buying the entire project?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, there are multiple scenarios that would not involve us buying the entire project. I can assure the member of that. But the fact that I outlined the fact that Alberta was now prepared to consider taking a public position in the pipeline if necessary was a message to B.C. that they were going to be dealing with a much more determined set of investors if they thought that that was the strategy that was going to work for them.

To the member's previous points, let me just say this. You know, you can't bargain well when you walk into a car dealership if you tell them how much money you're going to spend, but at the same time, if you never walk into the dealership, you will never buy the car.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Calgary-Shaw.

Foster and Kinship Care Supports

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While serving on the Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention, I learned that foster and kinship caregivers provide safe, loving, and caring homes to thousands of children who need them the most, and they deserve the supports due this life-changing work. To the Minister of Children's Services: what is our government doing to ensure foster and kinship caregivers have the resources they need to look after the children in their care?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are so thankful for foster and kinship caregivers, who step up for kids in need and show us what community truly means. That's why our government's 2018 budget provides an additional $1.9 million for basic maintenance funding to support foster and kinship caregivers as well as those who have supports for permanency agreements. These supports help cover the day-to-day costs of raising a child in foster or kinship care as well as for potential adoptive or private guardianship families and supports for permanency caregivers.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we haven't seen these rates increase since 2014 and that foster and kinship caregivers have been advocating for these increases for some time, will the same minister update the House on what foster and kinship caregivers have been saying about these increases?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thousands of foster and kinship caregiver families across Alberta play a critical role in providing safe, loving, caring homes for so many children who need one. We share their commitment to ensuring that foster and kinship programs give both children and families the best possible outcomes. For too long caregivers weren't given the supports that they needed, and now the Conservatives, you know, want to potentially cut these supports and services just to give their rich friends a $700 million tax giveaway. Unlike the Conservatives, our government has these families' backs and is proud to stand with them.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that foster and kinship parents are at the front lines providing the supports that children in care deserve, will the Minister of Children's Services update the Assembly on what other work the ministry is doing to support caregivers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of us know just how challenging it can be to raise kids, which is why I'm so humbled by what these families do. Their work is selfless but should never be thankless, and every parent and caregiver deserves a break. That's why our government has also doubled the amount of rest and respite days available to caregivers. We will continue to listen to caregivers and the Foster and Kinship Association and ensure they have the supports they need to care for kids in Alberta.

Budget 2018 Revenue Forecasts

Mr. Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, last month this government unveiled a budget that is dependent on the success of the Trans Mountain expansion project. At the time the Finance minister said that his revenue projections were based on the fact that he believed Trans Mountain would be built, but yesterday the Kinder Morgan CEO said that the Trans Mountain expansion is untenable. The question I have for the Finance minister is this. Can he tell us how Kinder Morgan's decision to suspend nonessential activities impacts his budget projections?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The budget that was tabled, Budget 2018: A Recovery Built to Last, talked about three lines in the future needing to be present or that will be present. Those are KXL, line 3, and Kinder Morgan. Whether they're Kinder Morgan and line 3 or line 3 and KXL, we have our path to balance assured.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the budget also shows that there is a 67 per cent increase to the carbon tax that was hidden within that budget, and since this government has indicated that that carbon tax increase is directly associated with putting in pipelines, if they remove that carbon tax because we don't get the pipeline, what will that do to the projections in the budget?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, just with regard to the comment about being hidden in the budget, I want you and all members to know that the budget that we presented last year and this year are judged by I believe it's the Conference Board of Canada as being the highest grade in terms of transparency of financials reported in this country. We know with regard to the federal portion of the carbon levy that those will help offset the costs of programs and services Albertans need and will get us back to balance in 2023.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, given that this Finance minister soon expects us in this House to vote on his budget and given that this Finance minister presented a budget that is putting us on track to have $96 billion in debt based on if Kinder Morgan manages to get Trans Mountain built, to the minister: if this pipeline is not built – and we sincerely hope this does not happen – how much debt will Albertans be facing in 2022?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, of course, the other side keeps cheering that they don't want Kinder Morgan to be built and that they want the outcome to be negative for this province, but we are cheering for it to be built, and it will be built. The other part of the deficit and the debt is that we had a choice in this province. We could severely cut programs and services, like that side would do, and give tax breaks to friends. We won't do that. We're going to keep the programs and services strong and get back to balance in 2023.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Provincial Response to Pipeline Opposition

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. B.C.'s NDP government was always adamant about its intention to obstruct the Trans Mountain pipeline. Here in Alberta our caucus has long called for consequences if B.C. continued on this path, but the government chose to mock our calls instead of taking action sooner. Yesterday B.C. announced that it's moving forward on its court reference to further delay this project. To the Energy minister: why did your government wait so long to talk about consequences for B.C.'s obstructions?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, our government has taken strong leadership on this matter. Our Premier has been engaging people in many provinces, including British Columbia. She's been to Ottawa many times. She's talked to investors about the importance of this pipeline not just for Alberta but for all of Canada. Our Bill 12 that we've introduced is adding another tool in our tool box. I can assure members that we've got strong legal advice on this and that we are on strong ground on this matter.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that on February 22 this government chose to prematurely end its temporary wine boycott, meant to discourage the B.C. NDP from its pipeline obstruction, and given that the next day the B.C. government said that it was moving ahead with the court reference and specifically said that Alberta should take no comfort in this, to the Energy minister: what assurance can this government give that the next steps on this important file will get actual results, not a premature declaration of victory?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the court challenges are just an example of many roadblocks that have been set before us on this pipeline, and that's the reason that we introduced Bill 12 the other day. We are very serious about taking action should it be needed, and if there are continual roadblocks set before us, we will absolutely use that legislation.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the recent statements from Kinder Morgan, including yesterday's, indicate that they're still lacking much-needed certainty for this project and given that the Premier of British Columbia and his Attorney General have both said this week that they are not taking Alberta's Bill 12 seriously, what is the minister doing today to ensure that British Columbia stops its attempts to obstruct this project?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, if we weren't serious about Bill 12, I wouldn't have been in Calgary last Friday meeting with over a hundred energy stakeholders. I wouldn't have wasted their time on that. It might be that the British Columbia government is not taking it seriously, but I can assure you that British Columbians are, as are Canadians. Our support for this pipeline is up over 10 per cent just in a little over a month, and it will continue to rise. Make no mistake; this pipeline is going to be built.

Justice System Delays

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, Albertans need confidence that our justice system can hold violent criminals to account. Just this week we saw a gang leader accused of murder released onto the streets because of trial delays. The Justice minister promised to triage cases so that the most important ones would not be delayed. I'm not asking the Justice minister to comment on this particular case, but can the minister say not which cases but which type of cases got to court in the last year, on your watch, which were more urgent than a trial for first-degree murder?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Of course, we are concerned about this matter, and this is why the Crown filed an appeal yesterday, so I won't talk about that.

But let's talk about the member opposite's record. The Leader of the Opposition sat in Ottawa for a decade and ignored those issues. In 2012 a Herald article said Ottawa Silent on Alberta Plea to Ease Judge Shortage, while on this side of the House the Justice minister has taken steps . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Given that the minister doesn't want to answer this difficult question and given that the Minister of Justice has assured us that her triage protocol will prioritize serious and violent offences and given that charges of first-degree murder, conspiracy, and instructing a criminal organization were not triaged under this minister, to the Minister of Justice: how dare you say that your triage protocol is working when one of the most violent cases to come before the courts this year did not get the needed priority to avoid a judge calling the delay extreme and excessive?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. As government we are absolutely committed to making sure that Albertans are safe in their communities and that their justice system is working for them. That is the reason we have hired 50 new Crown prosecutors. We are hiring 10 more. That is why we created 10 new judicial positions, so we can address this backlog, which was ignored by the previous government in Ottawa, which the member opposite was part of.

The Speaker: I would just caution both sides of the House with respect to a case currently in the court, but I think you'll be conscious of that, hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, given that there was no justice, as the minister said, for the victims of the crimes that the court threw out this week and given that the Justice minister said last year that the triage protocol is explicit and it empowers prosecutors to make the decisions necessary to focus on violent crime and given that an accused charged with first-degree murder was released without a trial this week, again to the minister: as it is now clear that your actions from the last year have failed, what are you doing today to fix your own serious problem, which is to ensure that violent offenders stand trial before judges set them free for a lack of your timely process?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
I'm going to caution you again, hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will avoid commenting on that, but it's a serious matter. But we will talk about the record of the Conservative government in Ottawa, which was there for a decade and only created two positions. That certainly added to the backlog we are facing today due to the Jordan decision. On this side the Justice minister has worked hard on this issue from day one. We have created 10 positions, and we have constantly asked Ottawa to fill these positions so that Albertans can get the justice they deserve and they need.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Anticrime Initiatives

Mr. Nixon: It was very embarrassing to just watch what the minister did in those lines of questions on crime. Let's be very clear. The Leader of the Opposition in this House, when he was in Ottawa, passed over four dozen tough-on-crime laws during his time there. What has this minister done to pass laws to be tough on crime? I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that over and over we have been to this Chamber on this issue while this government has sat on their hands. What have you done to be tough on crime inside this Legislature?

Ms Hoffman: What we've done, Mr. Speaker, is that we've increased resources for front lines. Instead of grandstanding and pointing fingers, we've actually worked with Ottawa. We've created a number of different judiciary positions that should have been filled when your leader was in Ottawa, but instead we'll work to get them filled today. What did happen when the leader was in Ottawa? The appointment of a justice, Robin Camp, who was single-handedly the judge who blamed a rape victim for not keeping her knees together. When asked if members from Alberta were involved in that, I have to say that Peter MacKay, the Justice minister at the time, said that the current leader of the UCP . . .

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, what this government has done besides yell in this place is to actually freeze funding for police inside Drumheller and Calgary and other places for the next two years. They brought forward an announcement that, at its core, has just taken RCMP officers, that are already overwhelmed, out of their current detachments in our communities and put them somewhere else. This government has no idea how to handle this. Once and for all, what are you going to do to get tough on crime in our communities? We're sick of being abused. We don't want to hear your rhetoric. What's your plan? Your plan is not working. This week proves it.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have a budget that we've put forward that acknowledges that there is increased need in rural communities. We've also asked for justices to be appointed by the federal government. Again, the Globe and Mail interview: multiple people, including Peter MacKay, the former Justice minister, stated that the Leader of the Opposition, the UCP, here in Alberta, was the political minister for Alberta and that he personally signed off on the appointment of Judge Camp. That is a shame. That is an embarrassment, and I have to say as a woman that having somebody like that make a decision to tell me to keep my knees together if I were to be assaulted is shameful. That's not justice.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this government passed the budget last year, and still nothing has changed, so passing the same type of stuff within their budget now is not going to change anything because the problem is that this government and these NDP members will not go talk to Albertans that are being impacted by these decisions. Instead, they want to stand up here dodging questions and go with pure rhetoric all the time. Again, what steps are you taking right now to be tough on crime besides yelling at the opposition? What's your plan? You are in government, not us. We'll be there soon. What's your plan right now?

Ms Hoffman: Let me give you two tangible actions that we've taken on this side of the House. One is that we brought forward additional funding to help fight rural crime. The members of the opposition voted against that. Two is that we brought forward funding to support the victims of sexual assault. The members opposite voted against it, Mr. Speaker. I guess we'll find out in a few short minutes what the members opposite will do with the increases to the Justice budget because on this side of the House we're standing up with Albertans, we're putting our money where our mouth is, and all they've got is a lot of mouth. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Municipal Funding

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Municipalities in my riding, because I do listen to them all the time, were pleased to hear the announcement made during the budget speech of this government's intent to legislate the fiscal relationship with municipalities, fulfilling a decades-long ask by those municipalities. Given that our municipalities need the stability of a long-term commitment because they need to make three- to five-year plans, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: how will this achieve that stable and predictable funding that those municipalities need?

Mr. S. Anderson: Serenity now, Mr. Speaker. All right. Let's talk about something really good. Our government is committed to infrastructure for municipalities. I've listened to them, I know what they are looking for, and we want to have stable and predictable funding. We will aim to make legislative changes to have a new system operating by the time MSI expires. Legislating this fiscal relationship will allow municipalities to accomplish long-term municipal and regional financial planning to ensure stable delivery of the services and to accomplish key infrastructure builds that Albertans need.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that municipalities have been asking for stable and predictable funding, for those of us who listen to them, for years, how will they be engaged in this new funding agreement?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. MSI will expire in 2021-22. The new funding arrangement discussions: we will begin with municipalities that will be large and small. We will engage with our municipal stakeholders such as AUMA and RMA over the spring and the summer, when it comes, to ensure that the municipalities have a say in the development of this legislative relationship. The relationship between the provinces and municipalities is evolving, so our funding arrangements must evolve with that. The municipalities have indicated they need something that is sure, that is stable, that is sustainable and allows them to plan for the long term, and that is what we are going to do.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When we're talking to these municipalities and listening to them tell us what they need – to the same minister: when can these municipalities expect to see these upcoming changes?

Mr. S. Anderson: As I said, the MSI will expire in 2021-22. Following funding arrangement discussions this summer and pending those agreements, the government will aim to make legislative changes later in this year and to have a new system operational by the time MSI is set to expire. For many years we have maintained strong supports for municipalities. Mr. Speaker, I'm proud that our government continues to support municipalities, and I'm proud that municipalities all across this province, 340 municipalities, have stable funding right now. We will create a long-term legislative funding agreement with them.

212th Avenue S.E. Interchange Project in Calgary

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Constituents in my riding of Calgary-South East are continuing to feel the pressure of rapid population growth. As I've stated in this House before, transportation infrastructure is desperately needed to keep those neighbourhoods connected to the rest of Calgary and grow the economy in Calgary-South East. One important part of that infrastructure is the 212 interchange. To the Minister of Transportation: can you let us know when the 212 interchange is expected to be completed and whether it is on schedule?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I was very pleased to be part of negotiations with the developer and the city of Calgary, and we came up with, I think, quite a creative funding arrangement where each partner contributed one-third towards that, and that has been signed. We announced that some months ago in Calgary. Design work is under way, and I'm hopeful that the project will be completed in the next couple of years.

Mr. Fraser: Rightly so, you stated that the funding for the 212 interchange was funded by partnerships between Brookfield, the city of Calgary, and your government and given that this may be the last budget presented before the next election and a possible change of government, to the same minister: has all the necessary provincial funding for this project been allocated for this year's budget?

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much for the question. Well, I am not anticipating a change in the government, Mr. Speaker – I have to say that right off the bat – but obviously the hon. member is concerned that if the UCP was to form the government, this arrangement and many other arrangements, not just for infrastructure but for health care, for education, for all sorts of services that Albertans need would be in jeopardy, and I think that in that he's absolutely right. We need in this government to work very hard for the trust of Albertans to make sure that that does not happen.

Mr. Fraser: Given the government's legislation prohibiting spending announcements during an election period and given that the next provincial election falls during budget and the start of next year's construction season and given the possibility of cost overruns on construction at the 212 interchange, to the same minister: what's being done this year to mitigate the risk of cost overruns resulting in delays in the completion of this project?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, we are very serious in the Department of Transportation to make sure that projects are delivered on time and on budget, and we take great efforts to scrutinize the course of planning, engineering, and construction to make sure that we have the best possible prices, that we have the best possible prices on tenders. We've been able to get some very good prices on tenders, as a matter of fact, by investing at a time when people are looking for work and companies were looking for contracts. We've been able to achieve significant cost savings in that. We're going to make sure this project is on time.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Physicians' Hearing Tribunal Decision

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week there was a disturbing report that an Edmonton-area doctor sexually assaulted a female patient and twice assaulted a nurse and has been allowed to be returned to work even though this individual has a recurring pattern of behaviour. The hearing tribunal said that his "proven conduct was very serious and repugnant for a member of the medical profession." To the minister: does she agree that this is outrageous, that this predator is allowed to continue practising as a doctor?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, and thank you to the member for the important question. I, too, am deeply concerned by this. I think that any woman going to a doctor's office should feel confident that she's in good hands. Any woman working in a doctor's office should feel that way as well, Mr. Speaker. Immediately my office reached out to the College of Physicians & Surgeons to discuss this matter and our concern. We understand that there is legislation in Ontario to give greater teeth in response to this, and we're certainly considering that possibility along with other tools that we can do to ensure that anyone going to go a doctor's office has confidence that they're not being seen by somebody who has a history of assault.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is. It's truly distressing that a predator like this is allowed to continue working as a doctor.

Given that section 133(1) of the Health Professions Act states that the responsible college needs to provide their code of ethics for the minister to review, does the minister intend to raise this disturbing issue with the college responsible to ensure that this never happens again, and if so, when?

Ms Hoffman: Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, immediately after hearing about this specific case, we picked up the phone, reached out to the College of Physicians & Surgeons to find out how this could possibly happen and what we can do to ensure that it doesn't happen again. I have to say that I would expect, just like from my experience on the school board, when you send children to school, that you want to have every assurance that the people who are working with them are in a position of trust. It's the same when you're talking about people working in the health care system. We're working with the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta, and we began that process yesterday.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I mean, given that this so-called doctor assaulted an 18-year-old woman during what was supposed to be a routine examination in 2013 and given that section 135.1(1) of the Health Professions Act states that the minister can actually give direction to the college after consulting with them "if in the opinion of the Minister it is in the public interest or if in the opinion of the Minister [there's] a direction [that] would provide for matters related to health, safety or quality assurance," to the minister: will you commit to working with the college to restore this trust and confidence in the system?

Ms Hoffman: Just to restate, Mr. Speaker, this process began yesterday. We reached out immediately to the College of Physicians & Surgeons and began these conversations. We do need to make sure that the college has the appropriate legislative authority to be able to act in a way that would give me and other women confidence in this province. I wish that those measures that other jurisdictions had taken had been considered by governments in the past, but we're here today. We're certainly looking at all of the tools that are available to us because we want to ensure that every patient going to a doctor feels safe and that the college itself has the tools to be able to ensure that.

Taber Flood Recovery and Mitigation

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, when the fires in Fort McMurray raged, emergency services from the MD of Taber were some of the first to answer the call for help. When the floods in High River and Calgary surged, residents of the MD of Taber rolled up their sleeves, put on their rubber boots, and cleaned out flooded basement after flooded basement. To the minister. The MD of Taber is now in need of help. My ask is straightforward. Will you direct disaster recovery money to help them out when they come calling?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the important question. We all feel for the people in southern Alberta right now during the floods and are very sorry for what's happening. We have people on the ground that are helping right now. I'd just like to point out that the local officials on the ground are doing a fantastic job: the volunteers, the firefighters, everybody who's out there right now. We have said that we will give help whenever they need it. We have equipment on the ground right now. We have people on the ground. Disaster relief funding is a program. The disaster recovery program is something that comes after things are said and done here. We will work with the municipalities. In fact, I had some information yesterday . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that the MD of Taber did the right thing and was proactive in their efforts and given that they averted a major disaster by their quick response and given that 50 per cent of the roads in the MD have been affected by washouts, again I ask the minister: will you do the right thing and make sure that the MD of Taber receives proper funding through the DRP so that they are not left having to bear the burden of their mitigation efforts, that have saved the province tens of millions of dollars, for potential damage?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the member well knows – he should know how DRP works – it does come after people come to the municipality. They apply for that. We have special criteria that are in place. As I said, we will help when asked, and we have been helping when asked. Again, I do want to point out that they're doing some great work on the ground, public works down there, who have, you know, cleaned out ditches, dug big dugouts to hold water and that. They are doing some really good things down there. One of those things with the DRP is that we do have specific criteria for these disasters in place for a reason.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that three irrigation districts – the SMRID, the TID, and the BRID – proactively mitigated the loss of critical bridge and road infrastructure by quickly subcontracting 40 excavators to clear hazardous ice floes from the main irrigation canal and given that it was not their water problem to begin with, yet they still stepped up and did the right thing, and given that had they not subcontracted those excavators, the loss to critical infrastructure and loss to farming production this year would have been catastrophic, will the minister step up and, again, do the right thing and make sure that the DRP money to fix this problem is at hand?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have been engaged crossministry, actually, down there. Alberta Environment and Parks has been working closely with the impacted communities down there. Alberta Transportation has been giving updates on road closures. Provincial emergency social services has been engaged with local emergency social services with reception centres. Service Alberta has deployed 12 AFRRCs radios to support AEP's efforts in the Taber region and 12 radios to Taber for the local authorities. Pumps and hoses from the GOA provincial stockpile have also been sent to the region. As I said, when the DRP comes in, when the requests are there, we will evaluate.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, we've heard the Premier declaring victory over the Trans Mountain on numerous occasions. Let's be clear. The opposition would like to see this pipeline built more than anyone in the province. However, we have heard that the NDP in British Columbia says that they do not expect that Alberta will use this legislation. What assurances can the House have that that, in fact, will take place?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we've been taking leadership on this matter for a couple of years. As roadblocks have appeared with respect to the Kinder Morgan pipeline, we introduced Bill 12 the other day, which is going to allow us the power to be strategically thoughtful in how we employ the exports from our province, the resources that Albertans own. As I mentioned in a previous question, I met with industry last week, on Friday. I would not have wasted their time were we not intending to use this legislation.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given that we are about to rise and take a constituency break in just a few hours and given that Bill 12 has now been on the Order Paper for over a week and given that the B.C. NDP is saying that they don't expect this legislation to be used, why are we going to wait till the end of the month to even debate second reading of Bill 12?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, that's an interesting question. You know, this is a very important piece of legislation, and we need to make sure that we've had it thoroughly discussed, that the public is aware of its contents. I think it's a very portentous piece of legislation. We, of course, do not want to use the powers in that bill, but we're prepared to do so if necessary because we're prepared to do what it takes to make sure that that pipeline is finished and completed as we have planned.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given that this is a say one thing and do another government and that they've said that they've had a plan for months – and now he's saying: we want to make sure that we're heard on our plan, which, clearly, they haven't been speaking to anyone if they haven't been listening. They say that they have a plan, they say that they have legislation, and now they say that they need to wait. Which one is it? Do they have a plan or not?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, we absolutely have a plan. Now, on the other side – you know, we've just seen the government of British Columbia make a reference to the Supreme Court with respect to the federal government's authority. The opposition is now saying: well, that's just going to delay things. We agree. So why was it that the leader of the Conservative opposition stood up and said that he wanted to go ahead with the reference? Was he also seeking to delay the pipeline along with his ally Premier Horgan?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Women's Equality

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The I Believe You, Me Too, and Time's Up movements have all demonstrated the consequences of women's absence from the decision-making table. When more women are in positions of leadership, culture changes. To the Status of Women minister: what is being done to advance women in leadership?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the hon. member for the question. Women in Alberta are strong, talented, and make incredible contributions to our province, but for too long women in our province have faced barriers to attaining leadership positions. We know that a diversity of ideas leads to better outcomes and better bottom lines for this province. This is why we asked the Alberta Securities Commission to adopt, disclose, or explain rules to help increase the number of women on corporate boards. That's why our government launched programs like the Ready for Her initiative, where we encourage women to run for office, and that's why we're also providing much-needed dollars through grant funding to empower local nonprofits to advance women in STEM fields and in business.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For too long in Alberta women have been absent from public agencies, boards, and commissions. To the same minister: what has the government done to empower women to be present at the table?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The previous government did not make addressing women's representation on public agencies, boards, and commissions a priority. In 2015 women held only one-third of the seats on Alberta's public agencies, boards, and commissions. Our government changed the board recruitment process for Alberta's agencies by making it more transparent and easier for women to put their names forward to be leaders in our province. Today, under our government, women hold 53 per cent of these seats. It's only with deliberate action that we will see more women at that table. That's why we've also created a mentorship pilot project in Calgary for women looking to advance their careers.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Owing to movements like Me Too, gender inequality is at the forefront of public consciousness. I hear very often about issues like child care, the gender pay gap, and sexual harassment. What is the ministry doing to tackle gender inequality on a broader level?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For too long women in our province have faced barriers to work, unequal pay, and high levels of domestic violence. That's why our government is taking concrete steps to make life better, fairer, and safer for women of Alberta. We're investing in affordable child care, helping more women to enter or stay in the workforce, increasing the minimum wage to make real progress towards closing the gender pay gap, providing a historical amount of funding to sexual assault centres to support survivors, strengthening workplace protections against sexual harassment, creating the first-ever domestic violence leave that provides up to 10 days of protected job leave per year for employees by addressing the situation of domestic violence.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you very much. I'm here to table a petition by the pharmacists from across the province, sir, if I may read it out loud:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to reinvest at least 50% of any savings anticipated from generic drug cost reductions resulting from the 5-year agreement recently negotiated between the pan-Canadian Pharmaceutical Alliance and the Canadian Generic Pharmaceutical Association effective April 1st, 2018, into frontline pharmacy services and programs to ensure the delivery of better healthcare for Albertans and the sustainability and job security of the thousands of Albertans employed in pharmacies and drugstores across our province, including Alberta pharmacists who have a demonstrably positive impact on the healthcare outcomes of Albertans and do save the healthcare system money.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Bill 13

An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor has been informed of the contents of this bill and recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, in November 2016 we committed to modernizing Alberta's electricity system to ensure that we continue to deliver reliable energy, attract investment, and prepare for a low-carbon future while all the time protecting Albertans from service problems and price swings that they have experienced under the existing system.

To continue moving forward with this transition, a number of changes must be made to various electricity-related acts and regulations. More specifically, if passed, this bill will enable the creation of a capacity market, increase investor confidence in Alberta's electricity system by providing policy and regulatory certainty, protect consumers when electric and natural gas service providers breach service quality and compliance standards, and provide more options to Albertans who want to generate their own electricity from renewable or alternative sources.

Thank you. I move first reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices I'm pleased to table five copies of the following document: Putting Alberta's Financial Future in Focus, a commentary by the Auditor General April 2018. An electronic copy of this document will be provided to all members.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week I was questioning the minister on conditional pricing and RFPs. I'd like to table the required number of copies for the House regarding an example of conditional pricing and an RFP response.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of an article from the CBC: 'Catastrophic' Overland Flooding Shuts Down Southern Alberta Highways, Threatens Taber Homes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a letter from Irene, who says: "As a former resident of the Autumn Lodge in Berwyn I am writing this letter in appreciation to the Friends of the Autumn Lodges many members. You came to our aid when we asked as our voices were not being heard after the devastating news came on July 7, 2017 that we were being evicted."

I also want to table an article entitled Flag at Autumn Lodge Lowered to Half-Mast. It says in here: "We're victims. We used to be senior citizens, but the way they've done it, we're victims." He felt that "lowering the flag to half-mast was an accurate symbol of the mood inside the Autumn Lodge."

Thank you.

[Adjourned debate April 12: Mr. Nixon]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you. It's an honour to rise today. I would like to move forward an amendment. I know that after we presented the motion, there were a few other changes and tweaks we just wanted to be able to make to make sure that the right changes were made in the subcommittee in addition to the membership changes. Madam Speaker, I will give this to be handed out, and then I'll read it out.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. member.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I apologize to the members in the Legislature that are so diligently reading along as I read this out. Part A is amended by striking out “MLA Connolly, Ms Luff replace”. Part B is amended by striking out “, MLA Connolly replace Ms Luff,”. Part C is amended by striking out “Mr. Westhead replace Mr. Kleinsteuber,”. Part E is amended by striking out “and Mr. Sucha replace Mr. Kleinsteuber”. And the following is added after part F.

(1) On the subcommittee established by the Standing Committee on Members’ Services on October 25, 2016, that Ms Babcock replace Ms Luff, MLA Cortes-Vargas replace Ms Jabbour, and that MLA Cortes-Vargas replace Ms Jabbour as chair of the subcommittee subject to any subsequent changes in membership made by a motion of the committee.

Madam Speaker, it was clear to us on the day it was presented that we missed a few other items, and I propose to you that these should cover all of them and that we move forward with the great work of this Legislature.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any others wishing to speak to amendment A2?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[Motion on amendment A2 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to Motion 17? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have an amendment to put forward. I’ll distribute it to members right now. It’s a relatively simple amendment. I can speak to it now while it’s being distributed.

The Deputy Speaker: Just one moment.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Okay.

The Deputy Speaker: Do you have the original, hon. member? We need an original.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Oh. Right here.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I’m putting forward this amendment, that Government Motion 17 be amended in part G by striking out “Mr. Fildebrandt” and substituting “Mr. Carson”.

What the government has done here is decide to remove my membership from the Public Accounts Committee. I might say, in all modesty, that I think I serve pretty well on the Public Accounts Committee. I understand it inside and out. I chaired the Public Accounts Committee for about a year and a half and have served on it since the founding of this Legislature. I would dare to say that I’m possibly the only member of this House who actually followed the Public Accounts Committee before being elected because I think it’s that exciting of a business to do. Maybe Mr. Westhead did if he in his spare time would sit at home and watch Alberta Leg. online, Assembly Online. Maybe he did, too. I’m glad that he shares my enthusiasm for the good work of Public Accounts.

It’s a great committee, and it’s one of the more regularly meeting ones here. It does very important business of analyzing Auditor General’s reports, any reports of departments. I think I make a great contribution to it. The government has proposed to move me to Alberta’s Economic Future Committee, I believe, but I think my membership on any particular committee would definitely make the greatest contribution possible on Public Accounts, continuing the work I’ve done there. I would hope that my being removed is not that I’ve been doing too good of a job, but it’s just trying to reflect party balances in the Legislature.

What I’ve done here is propose that rather than my being removed – I do support the addition of Mr. Clark to the committee to reflect the Alberta Party’s numbers here, but what I’ve tried to do is maintain the relative balance of parties as much as they can be in the committee system, allotting for, you know, the way we try to fit independents and the smaller parties into our committee system. This still leaves the government with a very clear and, I might say, unhealthy majority on the committee. They still have clear control of it. It doesn’t change the chairmanship or the deputy chairmanship of the committee. It doesn’t change the overall general balance of party representation, but it allows me to continue the work I’ve done there.

Now, it’s nothing against Mr. Carson.

An Hon. Member: Names.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, sorry. I’m speaking to the amendment. Sorry.

The hon. member: it’s nothing against him in particular. If the government members were open to this amendment, they could make it any one of their members. I picked him, really, just out of alphabetical order. It’s nothing personal. I actually really like you. You’re a nice guy. If the government members were open to this, I would be willing to entertain a friendly amendment to this to make it any one of the government members. I’m sure you all don’t find the Public Accounts Committee as riveting and exciting as I do. Many of you do, but I’m sure maybe one of you – maybe one of you – would rather go to a different committee. Maybe the Member for St. Albert would volunteer. She raised her hand.

Anyway, if government members are willing to entertain this, it could be the member of the government caucus that I’ve proposed, again, nothing personal, or it could be anyone from that committee to volunteer.

I ask that members give this due consideration so that I can continue to serve my constituents and Albertans as best as I can in my capacity on the Public Accounts Committee.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) any questions or comments?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3?

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to Motion 17? Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[Government Motion 17 as amended carried]

Bill 10

An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We’re here to debate the merits of Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements. Our climate leadership plan is made in Alberta to diversify our economy, create jobs, and reduce greenhouse gas emissions. From home improvement rebates and incentives to install solar power to programs to improve energy efficiency on farms, we have a lot of ways to help homeowners, businesses, nonprofits, and farmers save money while reducing emissions. These programs have a big uptake and have been working well, but we can do more.

On this side of the House we know the importance of taking action on climate change. We are doing just that today by adding another tool to our toolbox in climate leadership programs. This new opportunity is properly assessed clean energy, or PACE. PACE is a program that will enable municipalities to work with Energy Efficiency Alberta to fund energy efficiency or renewable energy improvements to private property and then recover those costs through the owners' property taxes. From solar panels and high-efficiency heating and cooling systems to insulation in windows and doors, there are many options for improvements.

I've travelled a lot around Alberta and have toured many amazing energy efficiency buildings and projects, and I've seen first-hand how committed municipalities are to climate leadership. The cities of Edmonton and Calgary and our rural and urban municipal associations are very interested in PACE. They've asked for PACE enabling legislation, and we're listening. They want the ability to provide a PACE program as another option and incentive for their residents to make clean energy improvements. Many Albertans have told us that they want more programs like PACE in their communities so that they can reduce energy use and save money.

An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements will empower our municipal partners to take a larger role in advancing Alberta's climate leadership goals. Through this legislation municipalities will be able to pass a bylaw to offer a PACE program to their residents. The property owner will then be able to sign an agreement with their municipality in which the municipality works with Energy Efficiency Alberta to pay for the installation of the clean energy upgrade. It then recovers the cost through the owners' property tax bill over a number of years. It's as simple as that.

Of course, we know folks are interested in making energy efficiency upgrades, but the cost of running a business or raising a family can sometimes get in the way, making energy efficiency less of a priority. But with PACE it will be more affordable for Albertans because they will be able to pay for it over time with lower interest rates instead of paying for the whole cost up front or taking out a loan on their own. This is a win-win for homeowners, residential building owners, farmers, and businesses, who will ultimately save money and do the right thing for the environment.

What also excites me is that a program like PACE will lead to more jobs in Alberta's clean energy sector. We need a lot of skilled tradespeople and technicians to make these types of upgrades and retrofits, so enabling PACE is a huge opportunity to stimulate our economy, especially in rural areas.

On that note, I want to make it clear that PACE is not just for the big cities. We see PACE as a program that can be successful in any municipality, which is why the bill proposes that any municipal borrowing used to fund a PACE program will not count against a municipality's debt limit, and we plan to consult with municipalities and other stakeholders to get their input on PACE program design. The intention is that Energy Efficiency Alberta will administer the program and work with lending institutions to secure agreements for financing. This will help support municipalities who choose to pass PACE bylaws and make it easy for them to implement this program.

This government is committed to making life better for Albertans. This legislation is just one more example of Alberta taking the lead on energy efficiency and renewable energy. This bill will make it easier and more affordable for Albertans to make clean energy improvements that will protect their pocketbooks while reducing emissions, creating jobs, and stimulating our economy.

With that, Madam Speaker, I move that debate be adjourned.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2018

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's a privilege to move second reading of Bill 11, the Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2018.

For too long under previous governments decisions were often made out of the public view and in backrooms, away from the scrutiny of everyday Albertans. For decades Albertans had to simply get used to outrageous backroom deals that took pocketbooks and not the people into consideration. That meant decisions were not often being made in the best interests of ordinary folks, and instead these decisions only served to make things easier for those Conservative insiders and those at the very top who were lobbying for those changes. That's why from day one our government has worked to renew democracy for Albertans. The legislative improvements we're proposing will further those principles of open government and inspire more confidence in the policy-making process of our province.

Under the act lobbyists are currently required to provide information in returns to the Ethics Commissioner of Alberta and the lobbyist registrar, who is responsible for maintaining and administering a registry of lobbyists, that is publicly available. Our amendments to the Lobbyists Act would ensure that Albertans would have access to more information about what discussions are taking place because those being paid to influence government would need to register more of their activity. Albertans deserve better, and that's why I'm very proud of the work our government has done to move forward on our commitment to restore democracy in Alberta. This act was reviewed by the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, and I have taken their recommendations very seriously in bringing forward this amendment and this legislation.

As things stand, people who lobby government on behalf of their employer or business only have to register this activity after 100 hours of lobbying in a year. To put this into perspective, 100 hours is 25 four-hour games of golf. It's 50 two-hour dinners. It's 3,000 two-minute-long phone calls. A lot can happen in 100 hours. Proposed amendments would lower this threshold to 50 hours, and it would now include any preparation time in addition to any time a lobbyist spends meeting with a public office holder. The requirement for lobbyists to declare which departments are being lobbied and on which subjects remains. Lobbying is not a dirty word, but Albertans have the right to know who is being paid with the intent to influence our government's decisions.

The amendment proposed here to the Lobbyists Act would also restrict lobbyists from giving money, gifts, or other items that would place a public office holder in a conflict of interest. These rules will match the existing conflict-of-interest standards that govern the conduct for all public office holders. For example, the Conflicts of Interest Act, which is currently being reviewed by a standing committee, says that an MLA may not in most cases accept gifts or benefits that exceed $200 or tickets or invitations to events from one source that exceed $400. Employees of the public service may not accept fees, gifts, or other benefits other than tokens exchanged as part of protocol. Lastly, according to an order in council, members of the Premier's and ministers' staff will follow the same rules as elected MLAs and shall not accept fees, gifts, or benefits exceeding $200. We are proposing to ensure that the Lobbyists Act reflects these standards by prohibiting lobbyists from offering fees, gifts, or benefits the acceptance of which would contravene the existing Conflicts of Interest Act.

The bill would also prohibit contingency fee payment arrangements. Some clients currently only pay consultant lobbyists if their lobbying efforts are successful. This is known as a contingency fee payment arrangement. As the legislation stands, it's possible for consultant lobbyists to take the position that they do not have to register because they have not received payment yet. This change will better clarify that any lobbying activity conducted by a consultant lobbyist must be registered. This will inspire more public confidence in the way lobbying is conducted.

Additionally, the new legislation would close off another avenue that may be used to sidestep reporting requirements. Right now the act doesn't require lobbying activity to be reported if the lobbyist was proactively contacted by a public office holder or if the lobbyist is responding to a form of request for comment. We are proposing a change that would improve accountability by ensuring that lobbying activity is reported regardless of who initiated it.

I do want to be clear. These amendments are not intended in any way to prevent Albertans from contacting or engaging with public office holders on topics that matter to us. Our government values, appreciates, and relies on the input and feedback of Albertans. This is why nonprofits and those volunteering their time to advocate will remain exempt and not be required to register. As well, we have excluded members of committees or task forces established by government. They would not be considered lobbyists. The act already provides that a person who is paid to advise the government also cannot lobby the government on the same subject.

Another amendment that I think makes sense. The Ethics Commissioner has previously issued an advisory bulletin stating that grassroots communication can be considered lobbying. Grassroots communication is when someone appeals to the public to get people to pressure the government to endorse a particular opinion. As interpretation of this act is within the Ethics Commissioner's jurisdiction, a proposed amendment would include grassroots communication in the definition of lobbying. We're proposing this clarification because we want to ensure that lobbyists understand what activity is included in the definition of lobbying. Again, this does not stop everyday Albertans from being politically active or trying to convince their neighbours of one position or another. It also doesn't stop lobbyists from being paid to try to sway public opinion. What it does do and what the sum total of these changes is doing is to lift the veil of secrecy around many activities, require those activities to be done transparently, in the light of day, for all Albertans to see.

We've also clarified that communication between an organization and its members, officers, or employees or between a person in partnership and their shareholders, partners, officers, or employees will not be considered lobbying. We'd also like to be able to keep our list of prescribed provincial entities up to date through ministerial order rather than through the regulation, where it is now. Currently it is out of date.

We would also like to propose an exemption to include indigenous elders in the exemptions that currently exist for government departments; those appointed to boards, committees, or councils; employees, officers, directors, or members of public agencies; and prescribed provincial entities. As is already the case for public servants at other levels of government, they are not considered lobbyists. Neither are members or employees of indigenous governing bodies. In their traditional capacity indigenous elders are very much public servants in their communities. They are representing their people. Our government honours and acknowledges this practice, so we've expanded the exemption to include indigenous elders.

We would also like to ask lobbyists to state, where possible, in advance the end date of their lobbying activities as a way of keeping our registry up to date.

Finally, the act currently requires lobbyists to report the name of any government department or agency that funds their client or organization. It also requires lobbyists to include the amount of the funding. However, the act does not specify what time period, and that has caused confusion. We are suggesting an amendment where the act would clarify that lobbyists are meant to report on the period of 12 months prior to the filing of the return.

This is a quick overview of some of the many items that I hope to discuss with the House as we look into Bill 11. Our proposed amendments would not only clarify the legislation but provide a much-needed boost to transparency. Albertans do have a right to know who is trying to influence their government. When people have confidence in the way government and lobbyists are working and the way decisions are made, that's when we can all do our best work. So I would encourage all Members of the Legislative Assembly to support Bill 11, and I am looking forward to debating this bill with my hon. colleagues in the future.

With that, Madam Speaker, and with constituency break just around the corner, I would like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Acting Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Considering the time on the clock and the good work that we did today, I'd like to move that we adjourn until April 30 at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:25 p.m. to Monday, April 30, at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, April 30, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Hon. members, let us each in our own way pray or reflect about the rich contributions immigrants and refugees have brought to our nation and to our province. They inspire all of us with confidence in our collective future.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. R.J. Chambers. I would invite all to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 31 students from Eleanor Hall school. They are actually here for a week of School at the Legislature. They are with their teachers, Albert Perreault and Chris Lantz, and chaperones Audrey Degner, who is the First Nations, Métis, and Inuit liaison, and Lori Borduzak and Jim Laughy. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups?

Seeing and hearing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, it gives me the greatest pleasure to introduce to you and to the House my second visiting grandson from Calgary, Kiel Archuleta. He's artistic, he's athletic, and he has a real passion for the environment. I look forward to many years of working with him as he prepares for the Legislature in 2028. Please welcome him.

Beside him—I don't think I've ever introduced my chief executive, Carmen Remenda. She's been with the Liberal caucus for 25? Thirteen, yes. I knew it was close. Thank you, Carmen. Let's all give her a warm welcome.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I understand that when you're having so much fun, the time seems to race.

The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the House several representatives of Alberta's vibrant Vietnamese community joining us to mark Journey to Freedom Day, including Dong Tran, a representative of the Canadian Vietnamese association; Xuân Thạch Nguyễn, president of the Calgary Vietnamese association; Chí Hiếu Trần, president of the Calgary Vietnamese Veterans Immigrants Aid Association; Lily Le, president of the Edmonton Viets Association; Van Ut Ngo, president of the Edmonton Vietnamese veterans' society; and Amy Duong, the vice-president of the Edmonton Viets Association, together with several dozen members of the community. I invite all members to give them a warm welcome to the Chamber.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you three guests that I have here seated in your gallery today. The first is my little brother Tyler, who's one of the few people in this world that can look me in the eye. I'm glad to have him walking around the Legislature today because it makes me feel like I'm almost normal height for a change. I'd ask that he stand up. With him is my other little brother, Daniel, one of the funniest guys I know, and I will ask him to stand up. Up here chaperoning and no stranger to you, of course, is my dad, Pat Nixon. I can tell you that with these two guys in town it's a good thing he's up here keeping an eye on them. I'd ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some of our fantastic ND caucus staff. Here today we have a few groups. From the leg. services staff we have Jodi Learn, Nicholas Diaz, Andrew Douglas, Eric Rice, Emily Springer. During the legislative sitting I very lovingly refer to them as the leg. warriors because that's what it feels like when you start getting into night sittings. Their support is incredibly important to us. Alongside them are also two new caucus staff members who we are happy to have with us, and they are Sidney Sadik, finance and HR officer, and Keith Thomson, our new outreach assistant. I would like them now to rise and to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly guests who are here today from the Alberta Common Ground Alliance, including representatives from Alberta One-Call, ATCO Gas, the Federation of Alberta Gas Co-ops, the Association of Science and Engineering Technology Professionals of Alberta, Canadian Energy Pipeline Association, Telus communications, Alberta Roadbuilders & Heavy Construction Association, and the Alberta Public Works Association. April is national dig safe awareness month. The Alberta Common Ground Alliance is reminding all Albertans to visit clickbeforeyoudig.com before any digging project, no matter how big or how small. I will speak more on this later today. Now I'd like to ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In honour of the 22nd annual National Day of Mourning, that took place this past Saturday, I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly leaders from two local organizations that champion the cause of worker safety.

First I'd like to welcome the new president of the Edmonton & District Labour Council, Mr. Greg Mady, and the EDLC labour programs co-ordinator, Perri Garvin. The EDLC has a long history of raising awareness about workplace safety through ongoing advocacy to advance the economic and social welfare of workers and their families. They organize the annual National Day of Mourning event at Grant Notley park, which recognizes those workers killed and injured at work and recommit to working towards ending workplace deaths and injuries.

I'd also like to welcome Chris LaBossiere, the CEO and cofounder of the Edmonton-based education technology company Yardstick and proud resident of Edmonton-Centre, with the business located on 104 Street, as well as the executive assistant, Sue Broderick. Just a few weeks ago Yardstick launched a new homegrown technology, LearnerVerified, which responds to the global problem of e-learner fraud, which puts workers and the general public at risk. LearnerVerified is a moderate solution that uses facial detection and biometric data to authenticate e-learners. Yardstick anticipates that it will help to significantly reduce workplace injuries and fatalities around the world.

I see that all of my guests have risen, and I'd ask now that we provide them with the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly leaders of the Edmonton Sikh community. Harpreet Singh Gill, Pal Singh Purewal, Gurcharn Singh Sangha, Harjinder Singh Gill, Culzar Singh Nirman, Charanjit Singh Dakha, Maghar Singh Ubhi, Surinder Singh Hoonjan, Navtej Singh Brar, Avtar Singh Gill, Zora Singh Jhaji, and Ranjit Singh Powar have all demonstrated a commitment to fostering inclusion and celebrating diversity both within their communities and the province as a whole.

Our government knows that different cultures make our province stronger, as evidenced today throughout our Legislature galleries. We are very proud to recognize April as Sikh Heritage Month. I would like to acknowledge the many contributions of the Sikh community to Alberta. We know we will work very closely together to foster inclusion and a better place for ourselves and for our children.

I would ask them all to rise – they already have – and receive the very warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you Mr. Jason Gold. Jason is one of the bravest people I've ever met. Jason has been here before; I know he's going to be here again. In addition to being a member of the Alberta Party provincial board of directors, one of the many things that Jason did to contribute and make his community a better place was a tremendous amount of work in support of people who were displaced by the Fort McMurray wildfire. Jason, if I could ask you, please, to rise and receive the warm, warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Any other guests today? The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you Mrs. Kate Potter from Sexsmith. She's from the constituency of Grande Prairie-Smoky. She's a strong, intelligent, hard-working, and lovely conservative woman, and she's here to enjoy the Legislature today. Kate, if you could stand and accept the warm greetings of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member from Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you a constituent of mine. He's a young advocate for an organization known as Grassroots Alberta. His name is Josh Andrus. If he'd please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly. Josh is also the newly minted protege of the founder of the Taxpayers Federation, Mr. Kevin Avram. Josh, please receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

National Day of Mourning

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Saturday, April 28, the Calgary & District Labour Council hosted a memorial service at the city of Calgary's workers' memorial for the National Day of Mourning, commemorating workers killed, injured, or made ill by workplace hazards. We took the time to honour and remember the 166 workers taken from us too early. We know these people as our co-workers, colleagues, community members, family, and friends. Any death in the workplace is one too many.

Mr. Speaker, to honour her late husband, Darlena Upton courageously shared online how she lost Myles to a workplace accident. An eight-foot trench collapsed on him while he was repairing a broken line for watering livestock. Only 47 years old, Myles was known in his rural community as a kind man, a hard worker, and a devoted husband and father. He is missed every day. We remember Albertans like Myles who have lost their lives, who have been injured on the job, and we renew our commitment to improving health and safety in the workplace.

I'm proud to be part of a government that has passed An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans, the first significant update to Alberta's occupational health and safety laws in over 40 years. Taking effect June 1, 2018, these new laws give Albertans the same rights as other Canadians when it comes to workplace health and safety. These changes mean stronger rights and protections for everyday Albertans, including the right to know about hazards, the right to participate, and the right to refuse unsafe work without fear or recrimination. Joint workplace health and safety committees will ensure that work-site parties are sitting down to discuss health and safety in the workplace and will collaboratively find ways to address any issues.

Our government has the backs of families, and these changes make a real difference for everyday working people across the province and are making lives better.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Journey to Freedom Day

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is Journey to Freedom Day. It marks the fall of Saigon on April 30, 1975, when the democratic South Vietnamese republic fell to the communist north, causing widespread persecution of the opponents of the regime, some 60,000 of whom were executed, some 1 million of whom were put into communist re-education camps. An estimated 165,000 people died as a result of this political violence following the fall of Saigon.

These events led to a mass emigration of Indochinese refugees on the high seas in Southeast Asia between 1976 and 1983, during which time it is estimated that as many as a quarter of a million lost their lives as a result of marine accidents and piracy. Thankfully, many millions did reach shore, Mr. Speaker, and initially were housed in UN camps. Canada opened its arms with great generosity, receiving some 60,000 of the Indochinese boat people in the first few years and another 100,000 in the years to follow. Indeed, as minister of immigration I was honoured to partner with Canada's Vietnamese community to welcome hundreds of the stranded boat people from the Philippines, Cambodia, and Thailand to join us here in Canada.

To those representatives of our Vietnamese community in the gallery and to the entire community: we salute them for their remarkable story of courage, of heroism, of tenacity, and of fidelity. They have never given up the dream of freedom and respect for human rights for all of the people of Vietnam, and on this Journey to Freedom Day we join them in that aspiration.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Dig Safe Month

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every year thousands of buried facilities are accidentally damaged by digging activities. Services are interrupted in nearly every case, and incidents put our workers, our communities, and our environment at risk. Recently a number of communities have been impacted by incidents involving severed underground lines. In my own constituency the town of Athabasca lost nearly all telecommunications services for a full day. This affects many communities across the province. In 2016 there were 4,305 of these incidents, of varying severity, across the province.

Societal cost research shows that over $350 million in damage is caused every year in Alberta due to damage to underground infrastructure. Average societal cost of a single incident is estimated at more than $80,000. These incidents put a strain on emergency services, require expensive repairs, and result in lost business during service outages.

April is national dig safe awareness month, and many hon. members are sporting the Dig Safe pin here today. The Alberta Common Ground Alliance is reminding all Albertans to visit clickbeforeyoudig.com before any digging project, no matter how big or how small, even when digging a garden or putting a fence in your backyard. Clicking before you dig is a free service. Not clicking before you dig could cost everything.

This year they have also partnered with the Canadian Football Hall of Fame and the Grey Cup to raise awareness of these issues. Just as football teams have their own playbooks to guide them on the field, the Alberta Common Ground Alliance promotes a safe-digging playbook for excavating around buried utilities. Not to stretch the football analogy too much, Mr. Speaker, but whether we're going deep on the football field or into the ground, safety should always come first.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Alberta Summer Games 2018 in Grande Prairie

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a few months Grande Prairie will host the 2018 Alberta Summer Games. It's been 18 years since our community last had that honour, and everyone is excited about it. Close to 3,000 of Alberta's best young athletes and top officials will participate in the multisport competition from July 19 to 22. A variety of athletic pursuits are on the agenda, from soccer and football to mountain biking, kayaking, track and field, swimming, and many more. The games will also provide athletes with opportunities to forge friendships because that is an important part of youthful development.

While the competitions are the focal point, the games' cohosts, the city of Grande Prairie and the county of Grande Prairie, hope that the 5,000 to 7,000 people expected to visit for the games have the opportunity to discover the region's cultural and outdoor offerings. Allow me to point out that the logo for the 2018 Alberta Summer Games includes a dinosaur. That's because we are home to the world-class Philip J. Currie museum, which is located near a rich fossil bed.

Mr. Speaker, the people are proud to host the 2018 Summer Games and to showcase our region, but a lasting legacy will result as well because the games will generate funds that will go towards projects and funding for our sporting communities. There is no one more proud, and I would like to highlight that 2,000 residents will be volunteering their time to ensure the games are a success.

Mr. Speaker, hosting is a valued part of our culture in Grande Prairie. I invite everyone to come and see how well we do it.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Federal Carbon Pricing

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the government of Saskatchewan filed a reference at the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal challenging, effectively, the constitutionality of the federal government's threats to impose a federal carbon tax on provinces. While the Saskatchewan government is defending its taxpayers from Justin Trudeau, our NDP government surrendered and agreed to raise their carbon tax by 67 per cent. My question is: will this government join the government of Saskatchewan in challenging the Trudeau tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What we have indicated that we will do is to move forward with the climate leadership plan, as we put forward in November 2015, because our view is that we need to take seriously our responsibility to address climate change while still working to build our energy industry and to support the good work that they are doing to become more sustainable and to lower their emissions per barrel. That's the work that we've started, that's the work that is paying dividends, and that is the work that we will do.

Mr. Kenney: The Premier says that it is paying dividends.

With the cancellation of Northern Gateway by Trudeau, his killing of Energy East, his surrender on Keystone XL, and his doing precisely nothing to ensure the construction of Trans Mountain, Mr. Speaker, that begs the question: why is the government of Saskatchewan defending its taxpayers from a threatened federal tax on this consumption of energy when our provincial government is instead abetting this tax-hiking agenda of the Trudeau Liberals?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, in fact, what we are doing is that we are working very carefully and very aggressively and with great rigour to get a pipeline to tidewater. This is a pipeline that has been approved as a result of the overall work that this government has done on the climate leadership plan. This is a pipeline that has been approved and that will get built, unlike what happened under the watch of the member opposite and his former boss, where not one pipeline was built to tidewater. We will get the job done. We will not fail like the members opposite.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, speaking of pipelines, I've discovered that in 2015 the Premier, who was then the NDP leader, said that she was opposed to the Northern Gateway pipeline. She's admitted that she was opposed to the Keystone XL pipeline. Her federal party, of which the NDP is legally a part, opposed the Keystone XL and the Trans Mountain and the Northern Gateway pipelines. I'd like to ask the Premier: does she regret her opposition to Northern Gateway, which is part of the reason that we now find ourselves stuck with only one potential coastal pipeline?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, when it comes to Northern Gateway, it was actually the incompetence and the failure of the previous Conservative federal government to do the job right. That is the fundamental reason for why that pipeline failed.

With respect to Keystone our government just a few months ago announced that we would support the Keystone construction going forward by committing barrels to it. We've actually put our money where our mouth is, and the thing is going forward. Finally, as I've said before, our government has done nothing but work to get the Trans Mountain built, and we will get it done, Mr. Speaker.

Carbon Levy and Pipeline Development

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the reason why we are now so dependent on this one remaining project, Trans Mountain, is because of the cancellation of Northern Gateway, the federal government killing Energy East. In April 2015 – she can try to pass the buck if she wants – the Harper government approved the Northern Gateway pipeline, on which she said in April 2015 that, quote: Gateway is not the right decision. She also said that she was opposed to Keystone XL. Will the Premier now rise and admit that she got it wrong in opposing Northern Gateway and Keystone XL?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Interestingly, what happened with respect to Northern Gateway is that the courts ultimately said that Gateway was not the right decision because the members opposite failed to consult appropriately or respectfully with the people that it was impacting.

In addition, as I've said very clearly, our government has put significant money behind Keystone to make sure that it gets built. That was a decision that was taken by our government. As well, our government has done nothing but advocate for Trans Mountain, and that is why this time it will get built.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has told us various times that she will not raise her carbon tax by 67 per cent unless Trans Mountain is completed. I'd like to ask if that is still the policy of the NDP. I ask because on April 18, before we rose, we brought forward a motion, to the Chamber here, saying that the government would not proceed with any further increases to the carbon tax until Kinder Morgan's Trans Mountain expansion project has completed construction and commenced commercial operations. The NDP refused to allow that to go to a vote. Why? Is that still their position? Why did they vote against their own position?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What we have indicated very clearly and as I've said all along, our support for the pan-Canadian framework was incumbent upon the Trans Mountain pipeline being successfully commenced and all of the objections to it removed so that it is very clear that it is under way and that it's going to be built. That continues to be our view. We actually believe that we are very close to getting it done, much closer than the member opposite would like. I would suggest that the member opposite work with us because support is growing and success . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Okay. We'll give this another shot, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier then join with us and, I would hope, all parties in adopting a motion indicating that Alberta will not raise its carbon tax by 67 per cent unless and until the Trans Mountain pipeline is built?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think I've really answered that question several times already and indeed did that at the very outset, when we worked with the federal government with respect to the pan-Canadian framework about a year and a half ago. Our position remains the same.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I think the member opposite needs to focus on supporting the growth in support of this pipeline rather than taking potshots from the side. I appreciate that he's very familiar with failure on this issue. We are getting very close to success, though, and I would suggest that he start contributing to it rather than trying to detract from it.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, a motion that is based on the government's policy is not a potshot. That is constructive. We'll bring it forward again, with the expectation of support.

Alberta Energy Regulator Application Timelines

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, with respect to our energy industry Imperial Oil has announced that it will be making no further major investments in Alberta's economy in part because of endless delays on projects. In particular, they've been waiting now four and a half years for approval on their Aspen oil sands project, using cutting-edge technology that shrinks the carbon footprint of bitumen extraction. Why is it taking four and a half years for the government of Alberta to give a green light to a $2 billion job-creating investment?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the project that the member opposite is referring to is in fact subject to the review of the Alberta Energy Regulator, an organization that, in fact, was created under the watch of the members opposite when they were in government, that is still staffed by the folks that the members opposite put in place. But you know what? We have been working with the AER to help them find ways to work faster while at the same time maintaining the breadth and depth of the review that they are doing because they are contributing to ensuring that our energy industry is the most sustainable and responsible in the world, and we'll continue that work.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's not going to be much of an energy industry if it takes us several years to approve projects such as this, waiting for $2 billion to flow into the economy to create jobs. I understand that the AER is a separate regulatory body, and I respect their independence, but the system doesn't seem to be working. Will the Premier agree with me that just in principle four and a half years is too long to get to a yes or a no on a $2 billion job-creating investment, and shouldn't we fix that system if it's not working?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, in fact, as I just indicated, our Minister of Energy has been working with the AER to find ways to streamline the process and make sure that things can go faster while at the same time maintaining the level of rigorous review and responsibility that has helped position Alberta's energy industry as one of the most responsible in the world, and that's something that we are very proud of.

But while we're in the business of quoting energy CEOs, here's one that I'd like to go with. Quote: I would tell you that the support we have received from the current federal government – that support would not have been evident a few years ago under the previous one.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, does the Premier understand that the four-and-a-half-year delay on the $2 billion proposed investment by Imperial is just illustrative of a much deeper problem? Does she understand that we have lost tens of billions of dollars of capital from our oil and gas sector going to oil and gas elsewhere around the world, including the United States? What is her plan to attract that capital back to Canada? What is her plan to cut red tape and to speed up the approvals process to move at the speed of business?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I know that the member opposite loves to lecture and explain things to people, but for his benefit we are fully aware of all the things that he just said. As a result of that, we have been doing nothing but working on finding ways to attract investment to Alberta's energy industry, up to and including working very, very hard to get our pipeline capacity increased and to get the pipeline to tidewater and to undo the nine or 10 years of failure that Albertans were subjected to because of a Conservative federal government and a Conservative provincial government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Nonrenewable Resource Revenue

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently in the news there has been speculation about how oil prices could be driven higher by the reductions in OPEC production, decreasing production in Venezuela, and political instability elsewhere in the world. Some are forecasting that oil could even go as high as a hundred dollars, and that price differential will go down as demand begins to exceed supply. However, getting that value requires access to export markets. To the Premier: with all the delays in getting pipelines approved and built, is Alberta going to be in a position to take advantage if prices for oil head higher?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member opposite outlined something that I think most Albertans are incredibly aware of, which is, of course, that we have a problem with pipeline capacity. We need to have more pipeline capacity. That's why we're very pleased that with the federal government we've had line 3 approved and also the Trans Mountain pipeline approved. Of course, as I've said before, our government is working with TCPL to support their work on getting Keystone done. We understand that pipeline capacity needs to be increased. We are working on every front to ensure that that can happen because we understand that all Albertans and all Canadians benefit from a healthy energy industry.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Previous fiscal updates have shown that when this government gets unexpected resource revenue, it tends to spend that money before Albertans even find out about it. Last year's Q3 update saw the government collect an extra billion dollars over budget in royalties and then shovel it out the door just as fast as it came in. In the face of mounting debt and deficit, that could be seen as irresponsible. To the Minister of Finance: will you stick to the spending outlined in your budget and commit any unexpected resource revenue windfall to reducing the debt so that future generations don't get burdened with debt?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. Q3 brought good news to the province here, Mr. Speaker. We were able to prepay $800 million to municipalities so that they could better address the important infrastructure needs and keep Albertans working. We certainly understand that if the price of oil goes up, there will be potentially some benefit to Albertans – that's a good thing – but we will stick to our budget. We're committed to making sure we deliver the best value for Albertans.

Mr. Fraser: While everyone in this House would be happy to see energy prices return to a healthy level, we need to be doing more to reduce government reliance on resource revenue. Recently the outgoing Auditor General suggested that Alberta would benefit from long-term financial planning as a part of introducing more certainty and predictability to government spending and revenue collection, which is especially relevant given how optimistic your budget's long-term projections were. To the same minister: will you detail some actual plans for getting us off the resource roller coaster and release some realistic long-term financial projections?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, the AG's report reinforces our position that Albertans need to get off the resource revenue roller coaster. The previous government spent recklessly and cut drastically, depending on the price of oil that day. We're doing the job to balance the approach so that we can support working families in this province and continue to drive the economy forward, as it did in 2017 at 4.5 per cent GDP growth.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Supports for Seniors and Caregivers

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My riding of Calgary-Currie is a growing and diverse neighbourhood and is home to many different generations of Calgarians, including seniors. To the Minister of Seniors and Housing: what are you doing to support seniors and their caregivers?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much to the member for the question. Seniors are vibrant members of our province, and we are committed to supporting them. It was my pleasure to join that member in Calgary-Currie last year to talk to some of the seniors living in the constituency. We know that seniors would like to age in their communities, close to loved ones. One of our core programs, the Alberta seniors' benefit, provided financial assistance to more than 150,000 seniors last year. That's just one of the many examples of our government committing to protect vital public services for working people.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know our government is committed to supporting seniors and has made a significant investment in programs to support them. However, my constituents want to know specifically what we are doing to support seniors in our community. To the same minister: what are we doing to help seniors in Calgary-Currie?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Again, having the opportunity to visit Calgary-Currie and talk with seniors there meant quite a lot to me. The Minister of Seniors and Housing has also done the same, and that is why earlier this year we were pleased to announce that our government is investing $250,000 in planning funding for Spruce Cliff Downs. Last year the minister toured this facility, and the Member for Calgary-Currie strongly advocated for the need for new units. This investment shows our government's commitment to protecting public services.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As our economy recovers, many seniors and their families in my riding are still having trouble making ends meet. Seniors are especially vulnerable. To the same minister: how are you ensuring that vulnerable seniors are not left behind?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government invested more than $3 billion in seniors' programs just last year. We are supporting seniors to access up to $40,000 for home repairs through the seniors home adaptation and repair program. Our opposition's reckless plan would give big tax giveaways to those at the top and cut the support seniors depend on. Our plan is focused on Albertans' priorities: jobs, affordability, and protecting public services.

MLA Compensation and the Provincial Budget

Mr. Fildebrandt: As MLAs we have a lot of priorities and policies that we need to balance, but perhaps the most fundamental duty of any legislative body is to oversee the management of our public finances. At its most basic, if a government can't balance its budget at least once a decade, we're not doing our jobs. To focus our collective minds on the task, I'm proposing that we cut all MLA pay by 5 per cent until the budget is balanced. Can the Premier support this?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, this matter refers to an item that is on the Order Paper for later today, and it is therefore out of order.

The Speaker: I believe that the hon. Government House Leader may be correct on that matter.

Is there another subject matter that you wish to direct to the government, to cabinet?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, I understand why the government might not want to answer the question, but I'm not referring to any motion on the Order Paper.

The Speaker: No, no.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I'm not referring to a bill. I'm not referring to . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm going to pass to the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Electricity Regulated Rate Cap

Mrs. Aheer: Mr. Speaker, with the return of money-losing power purchase agreements to the Balancing Pool after this government hiked the province's carbon tax on heavy emitters and the Balancing Pool's finances crumbled to the tune of close to $2 billion – we don't even know what those updated numbers are – and given that in the deregulated market consumers are protected from volatility, can the government please explain how a 6.8 cent cap, which is actually more than double what Albertans pay right now for electricity, is supposedly going to protect consumers?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, 2001, 2002, 2006, 2007, 2013: those were all years when the pool price of electricity was more than $100 per megawatt hour. Here's the common denominator: Conservative government. Today we are at about a third of that. The reality is that Albertans have been exposed to an electricity price roller coaster. We've taken them off that ride, and we're fixing a broken system with common-sense reforms that will reduce price spikes and uncertainty.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, everything that this government is doing now is actually ensuring that the taxpayer is on the hook for all of the risk while the companies that they choose reap all of the rewards. With respect to that, given that the Minister of Energy has extraordinary powers to bring renewables online and the related infrastructure without consulting consumers or the Legislature and given that this could cost anywhere from $800 million to $2.5 billion just in transmission upgrades and given that the ratepayer and the taxpayer are the same person, can the minister please explain to Albertans what this cost is going to be for the average Alberta family?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, 2001, 2002, 2006, 2007, 2013: those are the reasons that we're fixing a broken system that was given to us by the Conservative government. As we move to a more stable and affordable system, we've capped energy bills to protect families and businesses from rate spikes. Our government is on the side of regular Albertans. I'm not sure why they aren't.

Mrs. Aheer: Mr. Speaker, the minister had actually said that Albertans are responding to the costs that are rising on their bills and asking questions, rightfully, and the minister also said that the government's actual focus is on developing a clean grid, and that's not even with consulting Albertans. When will the government take responsibility for the fact that the government's mismanagement of this file will ultimately take way more money out of the pockets of Albertans despite the smoke and mirrors that she's using to disguise the costs resulting from these NDP policies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One correction on that question: we have consulted. We've consulted with Albertans, we've consulted with industry, we've consulted with environment groups as we come together with this plan. The Conservatives over there seem to want to keep defending insider deals that cost Albertans thousands and millions of dollars. We are acting by capping and protecting Albertans from price spikes. The deregulation caused the roller-coaster ride that we have been on. We're fixing that. We're implementing common-sense reforms and reducing uncertainty. Again, we're on the side of Albertans. I'm not sure why they aren't.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Police Release of Information on Serious Incidents

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta lacks consistent rules for naming perpetrators of serious crimes and victims of homicide, and the result is a confused and possibly misinformed public. ASIRT's decision to withhold the name of a man killed in a shootout with police because protecting his family was more important than the public disclosure has highlighted a serious issue. Minister, why do you insist on sweeping this under the carpet? This is not going to go away.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think we've been clear on this issue several times. This is a decision and a policy that were put in place by ASIRT. ASIRT is an independent organization, and they have to be able to operate independently and exercise their decision-making independently of government. It is the case that their policy is consistent with those policies across the country, and that is, I think, a very reasonable position for them to take.

Mr. Ellis: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the minister keeps insisting that ASIRT is independent and given that ASIRT was created to ensure that police are not investigating other police and that ASIRT is supposed to answer to the director of law enforcement, also known as your deputy minister, Minister, is ASIRT a force unto itself, or will you admit that it falls under your authority, or are you just not in charge of your ministry?

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, in the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General there are a number of things that need to operate independently. ASIRT is under the ministry – they're there to perform an important function – but it is important that they are able to perform that function based on where the evidence leads them and not where political direction leads them. There are a number of things under my ministry that are in the same position. For instance, Crown prosecutors also are permitted to exercise jurisdiction.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, given that a year ago the minister said that it's important to have consistency when it comes to naming homicide victims and given that she also said that she would work with the Alberta police chiefs to develop a consistent naming policy yet we still see some police services naming homicide victims one day and not the next day, Minister, how can Albertans have faith in our justice system when police and ASIRT are allowed to arbitrarily and randomly conceal names from the public?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member is right. It is important to have consistency across the province. That's why I asked the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police to come together to create a consistent policy. Police chiefs have done that due diligence. They consulted with the Privacy Commissioner as well as victims of crime, and they adopted a new standard that was released in August.

Thank you.

Carbon Levy and Seniors' Expenses

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, 42 per cent of Albertans are finding it difficult to cover their monthly expenses. That problem gets even worse for our fixed-income seniors, who are living on a fixed income in our community. Now, what does this government do? They bring in a carbon tax that raises the cost of everything. They bring in a rebate that they give to seniors, but then they turn around and claw back 30 per cent of that rebate just to seniors in our communities. My question is: is it this government's policy to continue to allow seniors to be disproportionately punished by this ideological tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Making sure that we support our seniors is a high priority for our government, and that means making sure that while we diversify the economy and invest in energy efficiency, seniors also have the resources that they need. I'm so proud that at a time when the opposition was advocating for slashing public services, including the health care that our seniors deserve and the education that their grandkids rely on, we are investing more than ever in seniors' lodges, the Alberta seniors' benefit, and the carbon levy rebate. Last year there was more than $3 billion in services for seniors.

Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister can just look at her notes and go off canned answers – they're saying that they're standing up for seniors in our communities? That is one of the most ridiculous things I've ever heard. The fact is that they're allowing 30 per cent of seniors' carbon tax rebates to be clawed back. They're making them have to pay stuff. This is a government that told seniors in my community to fund raise to pay for the carbon tax. Again, is it this government's policy to make seniors disproportionately pay for the carbon tax? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we're making life better by protecting front-line care and making life affordable for seniors in this province. Approximately 260,000 seniors are eligible to receive up to $300 annually for the carbon levy rebate. We've also provided $500,000 in grants to the four largest housing management bodies to conduct energy efficiency audits. We continue to work for seniors, not against them. We've protected more than $800 million in seniors' benefits over the last two years.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, given that all this government has done is actually raise the carbon tax by 67 per cent at a time that 70 per cent of Albertans are feeling that their economic situation is getting worse – that's all this government has done. The Premier indicated that if Trans Mountain was not built, we as a province would not see the carbon tax go up by 67 per cent. I moved a motion that the Premier and her colleagues voted against. I will move it again just shortly. Will this government support that motion? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for allowing me to talk about the pipeline. With the lack of capacity that we're experiencing going to the coast, $40 million a day into the Canadian economy is being lost. That's money that we could be using to help seniors. It could be helping to build hospitals, schools, other social programs, rural crime, you name it. That's money that's being left on the table. We're fighting very hard on this side of the House for that pipeline. The opposition needs to join us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

High School Construction in St. Albert

Mr. Horne: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. St. Albert is a community that has been growing consistently, and that growth has put many pressures on our infrastructure. In particular, our school system has seen a 30 per cent growth in K to 9 enrolment over the past five years. Now, in that time we have seen several K to 6 and K to 9 schools built. This demographic wave is soon to put that same pressure on our high schools. St. Albert has been advocating for more high school space for several years now. I was very pleased to see that through Budget 2018 Paul Kane high school will be replaced. To the Minister of Education . . .

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I got the general idea of the question. We're very happy to announce that Paul Kane high school will be a part of the 20 school projects that we announced during our budget this year. Certainly, the hon. member is correct that this is one of the areas. Suburban, metro Edmonton is one of the highest areas of growth. Building a replacement school in St. Albert was long overdue. The previous government ignored this need for many, many years. Now we're building a new replacement school, 1,500 spaces in a beautiful location in St. Albert. Very proud of that.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Paul Kane high school has been a centrepiece for the community for many decades now. To the same minister: why replace Paul Kane when a modernization and expansion could prove more cost-effective?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we always defer to the needs of school boards. It's good to have local government as part of that decision-making process. Certainly, it was important because of the advanced state of disrepair at Paul Kane and how it was ignored by the previous government. It's past that point where you can actually do that modernization. It gives us a chance to upgrade CTS and other modern equipment and computer processes, to build a school that is going to have reduced energy use, increased energy savings, and it's just a great way by which we can contribute to the city of St. Albert.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Thank you. Now, Paul Kane is only a piece of the space crunch that our schools will be facing. Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: how does Bellerose composite high school fit into the St. Albert space solution?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, again, we deferred to the decision-making processes of school boards to make determinations, and we like to help to satisfy what needs they see. Certainly, there are a lot of needs not just in St. Albert but right across the province. We are now in the midst of more than 200 school projects across the province of Alberta. It's something that we should all be very proud of. Our economy is growing, and our young population is growing as well. We have the youngest population in the country, and we have to make sure that we have schools and teachers for each of those kids to make sure that they have the best start in their lives.

Provincial Debt-servicing Costs

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, for decades Albertans benefited from Conservative governments not having to siphon substantial sums of tax dollars to pay interest, and Albertans received lower taxes and more services instead. In contrast, this government will be spending $2 billion to pay the cost of this government's massive debt increases this year and $3.7 billion annual interest by only 2023. To the minister: why do you prioritize Bay Street bankers to the detriment of Alberta families and Alberta communities?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you what our priority is. Our priority is standing up for regular Alberta families. That's why we stopped the opposition, whose plan was to lay off tons of nurses and teachers, a billion dollars in cuts to health care. The Leader of the Opposition is talking, in local weekly newspapers and so forth, that 20 per cent cuts seem realistic. That's not realistic. It's not realistic that you can say that you're going to protect health care and cut billions of dollars. The math doesn't add up. You know what? It's time that you guys came clean with Albertans.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that in 2015 Alberta's NDP chose to follow the past example of former Ontario NDP Premier Bob Rae over the financial cliff and given that both governments destroyed wealth, killed jobs, accumulated debt, and ballooned bureaucracy and that families and communities have suffered from reckless fiscal mismanagement by paying interest instead of receiving services and that the term “Rae days” is now synonymous with failed government policy and a government in trouble, to the minister again: why are hurting Alberta families and communities with your losing playbook?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, you know, the Leader of the Opposition, when he was in government – let’s just look at this whole thing about who’s hurting Canadians. When the Leader of the Opposition was in Ottawa: six straight deficit budgets, $58 billion deficit in just one year alone. He added, that government added $145 billion to our national debt, and they paid $309 billion in interest rates. Why don’t they talk about that? There is nothing we can learn from that side except going down the wrong road. We’re not going to do it. We’re going to continue to support Albertans. We’re going to continue to invest in this province.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Barnes: Given that in the years since he was Ontario’s Premier, Bob Rae has reflected and changed his view – “As I grow older, I have had to discard some ideas and policies because they no longer make sense. This strikes me as entirely healthy. I would invite others to do the same” – to the minister: why, then, are you planning $96 billion in debt, $4 billion in annual interest, and destroying job-creating investment when another big government, a former NDP leader, now knows how wrong this is?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. You know, let’s fast-forward to today, Mr. Speaker, or even look at last year: 90,000 full-time jobs over the past year were added in this province, most of them in the private sector. We know that not all Albertans are feeling that yet, but they are starting to feel it. We are continuing to support good jobs. We’re continuing to build a diverse economy, where the Conservatives want to take us back to the future and continue to invest in boondoggles that don’t help this province. They had situations in place where salaries were excessive, perks were there. We’ve changed all that. We’re cutting their waste.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon minister.

Carbon Levy Revenue Utilization

Mr. Loewen: When the climate leadership plan was first announced, the Premier and the environment minister promised that the carbon tax would be revenue neutral. It didn’t take long before we found out the truth, that it wasn’t revenue neutral at all. Why did this NDP government try to deceive Albertans with something they knew was not true?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, our climate leadership plan got us two pipeline approvals, Trans Mountain and line 3. We are doing this in the best interests of not just Albertans but of Canadians. Our plan will cut emissions drastically, a projected 30 per cent reduction by 2030. We’ve capped oil sands emissions at 100 megatonnes. To do all that, we’re reinvesting back into industry as well as helping everyday Albertans manage their costs.

Mr. Loewen: Given that after the government backtracked on the revenue-neutral aspect of the carbon tax, they said that every dollar of the carbon tax would be recycled right here in Alberta and given that it didn’t take long for an Ontario company to be hired with the carbon tax dollars to install light bulbs, which the government admits sent carbon tax dollars to Ontario, showing that the recycled-dollars-in-Alberta promise was also not true, when will this government just come clean and tell the truth about the carbon tax, that it’s just a tax and it’s not making life better for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we’re supporting good jobs in a diversified economy. We’re investing $1.4 billion in innovation projects. All that is funded by the climate leadership plan: $440 million for oil sands innovation to help companies increase production and reduce emissions while adjusting to the improved rules for large emitters; $225 million for innovation projects across sectors that support research, commercialization, and investment in new technologies that reduce emissions; $240 million for industrial energy efficiency projects that help companies reduce emissions.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Loewen: Given that the government talks about how their good friend Justin Trudeau approved the Trans Mountain pipeline because of the carbon tax and given that approval appears to be not worth the paper it’s printed on and given that this government has had to resort to wine boycotts, to threats of inflicting financial pain on B.C. residents, and even offering to pay for the pipeline in an attempt to get the pipeline through, this is ultimate proof that the social licence sale job on Albertans is just as much a sham as the rest of the promises this government has made on the carbon tax. So, please, will you quit inflicting pain on Albertans and scrap the tax?

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not sure what the question was there, but I’ll continue: $63 million in grants for bioenergy projects, including biodiesel and ethanol; $400 million in loan guarantees to support investment in efficiency in renewable energy measures. When we talk about small business, we’ve reduced the taxes for small business. That’s created 90,000 new jobs in the last year. Our opposition continues to want to rail against the federal government, to rail against the plan, but we know the plan is working. We are caring for our seniors. We are taking climate leadership seriously.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Federal Response to Pipeline Opposition

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, a recent poll commissioned by CBC indicates that pipelines are top of mind for Albertans. Janet Brown, who conducted the poll for CBC, stated that many people in the province believe that “the future of the economy depends on the ability to build pipelines,” yet this government can’t bring themselves to support our leader in calling for the suspension of federal discretionary transfer payments to B.C. for as long as they oppose the Kinder Morgan pipeline. To the Minister of Energy: why do you not support cutting off these discretionary transfer payments?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we're working hard since day one to get the approval for pipelines, which we did back in November 2016 because of our climate leadership plan. We're fighting every day to get our natural resources to tidewater because we know that's the number one competitive advantage that gives our industry what they need. At the end of the day, there's only one outcome for this province, and that's to get Trans Mountain built.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we wouldn't be in this mess if the government had stood up for Northern Gateway when they had a chance and the federal government hadn't killed Energy East by meddling with the NEB and given that the only actions this government has taken to date were to adopt suggestions put forward by our leader months ago, suggestions the government initially dismissed out of hand, to the minister: instead of following months behind, why don't you catch up with our leader in calling for the federal government to suspend discretionary transfer payments to B.C. until they stop their objections to the pipeline? Are you not tired of catching up?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, it was our climate leadership plan that got the two pipeline approvals, and it's our climate leadership plan that's going to get it. You know, the Conservative leader did not do a thing when he was in Ottawa to get any pipeline to any tidewater. Let's be clear about that. We are working very hard on this side of the House to get that pipeline built, and – make no mistake – it is going to be built.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government has presided over two pipeline cancellations and given that one participant from the CBC survey stated, "It's all been talk and there hasn't been any action," and given that Premier Horgan has openly stated that he doesn't believe Alberta will actually turn off the taps and has stated that the Alberta Premier told him that she wouldn't use the legislation, again to the Energy minister. B.C. doesn't believe you'll take action. Albertans don't believe you'll take action. You haven't done anything yet. What proof can you offer Albertans today that you will ever take action?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know that the member opposite is used to governments making promises and not following through on them or governments claiming grandiose plans and spending many years in Ottawa failing to get a product to tidewater, but on this side of the House we set our path, we set our mind very clearly on this outcome. That's why we brought forward a climate leadership plan that resulted in two approvals. That's why we won't back down. That's why we brought forward Bill 12, why we want to ensure that we have every tool absolutely necessary. Mark my words: that pipeline will get built, and we invite you to the party when it does.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Flood Recovery and Mitigation

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Rosedeer Hotel and Last Chance Saloon in Wayne, Alberta has been a fixture in the Rosebud valley since 1913 and has survived numerous high-water events over the last century. The flooding occurring in the last few weeks was a close call, and other than some damage to the grounds behind this historic business, they are confident that they will be ready to return to business after a bit of hard work. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what programs, if any, are being made available to businesses and landowners impacted by recent overland flooding?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Obviously, we all know that there are a lot of people dealing with flooding across the province right now, and particularly up north there are some ice jams that are happening. We have people on the ground in a lot of communities across the province. Alberta Emergency Management has field operations people out there, and Environment and Parks has folks out there. We do have some programs through us in Municipal Affairs, which are the disaster relief programs, which come after. They take assessments on what has happened and what goes forward. We're looking forward to continuing to work with municipalities and understanding what they might need going forward.

Mr. Strankman: Again, Mr. Speaker, given that my colleague from Grande Prairie has asked this question during budget estimates and given that despite updating her answers previously and given that flood mapping should be a priority in light of our history, Minister, in estimates in 2016 the assistant deputy minister of Environment and Parks stated that there was no update to the 70 per cent completion rate of flood mapping but there were new studies of priority river systems being done. Now, given that we are in 2018, I think it's fair to ask: what is the current completed acreage?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the member for the question. Yes, there is updated flood mapping going on through Environment and Parks. As technology is involved, it's getting more intense, and there are more and more extreme events going on across the province, so there are a lot more factors to take under consideration. We are doing that, and we'll continue making sure that we get it done right the first time.

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Speaker, it's a given that flood mapping will be a living document and sometimes land and waterways change, and given that this is a complex and costly process involving both provincial and municipal governments, Minister, what steps has your department undertaken or has your department laid out objectives to further achieve a higher level than 70 per cent of Alberta's flood mapping being completed? I am sure that many affected Albertans would like to know.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you. To the particular question that the member has: I appreciate that. Whatever details he would like, we could get specifically from Environment and Parks, but I know that we have been working with folks on the ground across the province. As I said, we have been adapting as technology has changed, and we will continue to do that. We would be happy to get particulars for the member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Postsecondary Education Concerns

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The demand to attend postsecondary has always been high in Calgary, but with the downturn and the price of oil, the need is greater to help diversify our economy. There is a strong criticism that for many years Calgary did not receive adequate funding for postsecondaries compared to regions like Edmonton. To the Minister of Advanced Education: what is being done to ensure that funding to postsecondaries is fair and equitable?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for his question. We know that the recession was a difficult period for Calgarians and that many sought to upgrade their skills during that time. That's why our government has been proud to increase funding for our universities and colleges every year that we've been in government. These increases are ensuring that postsecondary education remains accessible and affordable, and without this funding, students would have been left out in the cold with crumbling classrooms and sky-high tuition. If the Conservatives ever get the chance, they'll cut postsecondary funding sharply just to give tax cuts to millionaires and billionaires and make postsecondary education out of reach for many Alberta families.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you. Given that past Conservative governments generally provided roller-coaster funding that was disruptive to student life and that semesters do not resolve around a fiscal calendar like governments do, what are you doing to provide stable, predictable funding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to the member for that question. We've heard from students that being able to plan ahead for costs is just as important as the tuition freeze has been. As I stated previously, we've been proud to increase funding every year. Our increases have meant a 2 per cent increase to the operating grant of every university and college, keeping pace with cost growth and protecting equality. In Budget 2018 we were also proud to provide backfill funding to compensate for the tuition freeze on top of the 2 per cent increases to the operating grants. This has meant an additional $100 million in operating funding just in Calgary alone. This funding has been clear and consistent, making it easier for both our institutions and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we hear concerns related to the equity of funding for certain universities and given that there are concerns about postsecondary universities' performance measures, to the same minister: what is being done to ensure that postsecondaries perform properly with our valued tax dollars?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Thanks again, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for that very insightful question. We've seen the impact of not funding schools properly, and students and institutions are still suffering from the cuts of the past. Our government has been clear that we expect that the funding that we provide is being best used to the benefit of students and in keeping their education affordable. I've been meeting with students, staff, and the postsecondary boards regularly, and we will continue working with everyone in the postsecondary sector to ensure that this is exactly what happens. We know that stable and predictable funding is so important to our postsecondary institutions and our students, and that's exactly what . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

University of Alberta Honorary Degree Awards

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, we all recognize that the Senate of the University of Alberta is independent in its decisions to grant honorary degrees, but I would like to know if the government would join with the Official Opposition and a growing number of Albertans in expressing concern about the honour being granted to Dr. David Suzuki, who says that human beings are an invasive species, that immigration is disgusting and crazy and should be stopped, who says that the oil sands are the moral equivalent of slavery, who says that economics is the product of brain damage, and who says that Alberta's major employer should be shut down immediately. Does the government share my concern about the honorary doctorate being granted to such an individual?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, I share concerns about some of the statements that Dr. Suzuki has made in the past. However, I'm also very deeply concerned about freedom of speech on campuses, something that the members opposite have expressed as a priority in their upcoming policy platform. I'd ask the member opposite to explain to the House why freedom of speech should be extended only to anti-abortion activist groups and the likes of Jordan Peterson and not to David Suzuki. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, freedom of speech and David Suzuki don't normally fit into the same sentence because he usually charges $50,000 for a speech. That's anything but free. And the same David Suzuki, who the minister is now defending, has called for his political opponents to be imprisoned. He said that former Prime Minister Harper should be thrown in jail because he didn't agree with Dr. Suzuki on shutting down Canada's energy industry. Again I'll ask the government: do they agree with the decision of the University of Alberta Senate in this respect? Dr. Suzuki is free to say anything he wants anywhere he wants. It's not about speech. It's about giving him the honorary degree.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the hon. Leader of the Opposition is in an uncomfortable position because he wants it both ways. He wants to be a champion of free speech, yet he doesn't want somebody like David Suzuki to receive an honorary degree from the University of Alberta. Our position is quite consistent. We're champions of freedom of speech. We are also champions of academic integrity, and that's why, regardless of what our opinions of David Suzuki are, we're going to allow the university – we have no say in what the university is going to do, and we're defending the right of the University of Alberta to continue . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, this is not a complicated question. It has nothing to do with speech. Nobody is seeking to inhibit Dr. Suzuki's speech. What we're seeking to do is to question the wisdom . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Kenney: What we're seeking to do – I'm sorry. They're certainly not circumscribed in their heckling, Mr. Speaker.

What we're seeking to do is to question the wisdom of granting a high honour to a man who says that immigration is disgusting and crazy and should be stopped, who wants his political opponents thrown in jail, who says that our oil sands are like slavery and economics is like brain damage. Why can't the minister just stand up and say: we completely disagree with David Suzuki, and he shouldn't get . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course, I have said already that I wouldn't necessarily be the first to give Dr. Suzuki an honorary degree. The decision is not mine to make, though. The decision is the University of Alberta's to make, and it's very concerning to me that somebody who is applying for the job of Premier of Alberta is threatening, intimidating, and harassing an independent institution into reversing a decision that is well within its purview to make.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order.

Hon. members, in 30 seconds we will continue with Members' Statements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Red Deer Community Activities

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As usual, I stand to sing the praises of my great constituency of Red Deer-North. Today, however, I want to talk about what we can do to give back to the great people and the great communities we were elected to represent.

We know that Albertans have a strong sense of community and family. I am constantly astounded by how much people do for those who are suffering. My calendar is filled with walks and other events that work to raise money for those whose health is affected by diseases. As a former health care worker this community passion for health care strikes a very personal chord. Whether I am walking for Alzheimer's, juvenile diabetes, cancer, or multiple sclerosis, I am always in awe of the people walking beside me. Survivors, family members, and friends all share their time and their conviction that research will someday end or lessen the suffering. There are children, parents, and grandparents present to support their loved ones and to reinforce the importance of living every day for one purpose, an even better tomorrow for everyone.

But it does not stop there. Sponsors step up to the call of their community and support both the causes and the people participating. Volunteers step up who give of their time because of their conviction that people working together can achieve anything. The encouragement and support from everyone involved is tangible. It is a feeling that everyone who participates can experience and relish. Whatever the cause, I urge all of you to stand together with your communities and help them fight the battle or heal the scars that these conditions have left.

Mr. Speaker, I am so proud to be able to give back if even a little to the community of Red Deer, that elected me, and which is so very active in its fight for a better life for all.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Service Alberta and Status of Women Minister's Remarks

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Rt. Hon. Margaret Thatcher once said that "if they attack one personally, it means they have not a single political argument left." Usually when we hear baseless political attacks from the NDP anger machine, we can take those words and ignore the attacks for the nonsense they are.

Last week, however, we saw some comments on Twitter from the Minister of Service Alberta and Status of Women that undoubtedly crossed the line and that cannot be ignored. The minister made accusations that implied that the conservative movement in our province and in our country was somehow responsible for the rising tide of anti-Semitism. Mr. Speaker, this was a slander of millions of regular Canadians who have voted for Canadian conservative parties, parties which have been leaders in the world in supporting the Jewish people and in combatting the unacceptable hatred of anti-Semitism.

Mr. Speaker, this is not an issue to be used as a cheap political attack. It is an immensely serious issue that we should be working together to solve. The minister owes an apology to those she slandered, and frankly she owes an apology to the Jewish community for using this serious topic as a tool for a partisan attack against Canadian conservatives.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition from a pharmacist regarding the new funding framework for pharmacists if I might read it out.

We, the undersigned . . . hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to reinvest at least 50% of any savings anticipated from generic drug cost reductions resulting from the 5-year agreement recently negotiated between the pan-Canadian Pharmaceutical Alliance and the Canadian Generic Pharmaceutical Association effective April 1st, 2018, into frontline pharmacy services and programs to ensure the delivery of better healthcare for Albertans and the sustainability and job security of the thousands of Albertans employed in pharmacies and drugstores across our province.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the appropriate time I intend to move the following motion pursuant to Standing Order 42.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to recognize April 30 each year as Journey to Freedom Day in commemoration of the more than 60,000 Vietnamese refugees who came to Canada in search of freedom and prosperity, following the fall of Saigon and the end of the Vietnam War in 1975, and be it further resolved that the Legislative Assembly recognize the valuable contributions of Alberta's Vietnamese community to our province.

The Speaker: The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give notice pursuant to Standing Order 42 that at the appropriate time I will move the following motion.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government not to proceed with any further increases to the carbon tax until Kinder Morgan's Trans Mountain expansion project has completed construction and commenced commercial operations.

I have the appropriate copies for the pages.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Feehan, Minister of Indigenous Relations, pursuant to the Metis Settlements Act Metis Settlements Appeal Tribunal annual report 2017.

The Speaker: I believe, hon. members, that there were three points of order, the first one being from the Government House Leader rebutting comments concerning, at the time, Grande Prairie-Smoky, I believe.

Mr. Mason: I'd like to withdraw that point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I will also withdraw mine. There are some people in the gallery waiting for the next business, and I think we should proceed.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I believe that there's a point of order by the Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Point of Order Anticipation Points of Order

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My point of order is referring to a matter raised by the Government House Leader in question period during my question today. I will begin by referring to the House of Commons Procedure on the role of the Speaker during question period and then points of order and questions of privilege during question period.

The Speaker has implicit discretion and authority to rule out of order any question posed during Question Period if satisfied that it is in contravention of House rules of order, decorum and procedure.

It goes on from there, but I'll go to points of order and questions of privilege raised during question period.

Generally, points of order or questions of privilege are not entertained during Question Period. In his 1975 statement concerning the conduct of Question Period, Speaker Jerome indicated that any points of order or questions of privilege arising out of the proceedings of Question Period should be raised at the end of Question Period. Despite this directive, there have been instances of points of order or questions of privilege being raised during Question Period, but they have been deferred, at the request of the Chair, until after Question Period. However, if a situation arises during Question Period that the Speaker believes to be sufficiently serious to require immediate consideration, for example unparliamentary language, then the matter is addressed at that time.

Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader in response to a question I posed – I believe he didn't cite a section, but if I may anticipate, he was referring to anticipation in section 23(e) of the Standing Orders, which says that a question may not be asked if it "anticipates, contrary to good parliamentary practice, any matter already on the Order Paper or on notice for consideration on that day." Now, if the minister wasn't listening too closely, he may have actually had a point, but I was not referring specifically to any motion or bill on the Order Paper. My question was of a general nature. Surely, it involves a topic matter, but previous rulings by yourself and many, many other Speakers have generally allowed some latitude as long as we're not referring to specific bills or specific motions on the Order Paper.

I will very quickly refer you to the exact wording of what I said today, and you can judge for yourself if it includes specifically referring to a bill or a motion. I will go right to the end of it, to the question. "To focus our collective minds on the task, I'm proposing that we cut all MLA pay by 5 per cent until the budget is balanced. Can the Premier support this?"

Now, I am proposing things. I have proposed an alternative budget. I've proposed a number of ideas in my time in the Legislature here, and I am proposing this. I'm not referring to a specific motion, I'm not referring to a specific bill, so I would believe that any ruling on anticipation would not be proper if applied in this case.

It's also important to note that points of order are not to be dealt with during question period unless they are of a "sufficiently serious" nature. I don't believe that any unparliamentary language was used. I don't believe the question even created disorder. I think people were rather polite and restrained during it. So I don't believe that the matter should have been dealt with at that time. The Government House Leader was free to raise a point of order, but it would have been appropriately dealt with afterwards. But because it was effectively a point of order posed as an answer to a question, I did not have the ability to argue a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

This was effectively a backdoor point of order that should not have been ruled on at that time without proper debate as we're having now. So I would request that the Government House Leader's intervention be ruled out of order, that it was essentially a backdoor point of order that should not have been dealt with at that specific time, and that I have my question rotation returned to me for tomorrow's Routine orders.

Mr. Mason: Oh, Mr. Speaker, where to begin? Well, let's start with the first point, which is that the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks is arguing that the point of order was made at the wrong time in the Routine. Now, normally you stand up and register your point of order, and it's dealt with at the end of question period. But he put a question to the government that was clearly out of order because it was on the Order Paper. In my answer – and it was an answer, not a formal point of order – I simply stated that the question anticipated something already on the Order Paper and was out of order, and I sat down. I was prepared to stand up and respond to supplemental questions as well.

It is also wrong of the member to say that any time a point of order is made or a ruling of the chair that everybody has to have a chance to stand up and debate the matter. That's not the case. You, Mr. Speaker, as the arbiter of the rules of this House, have every authority to make rulings without first asking for submissions, particularly when it's a matter of routine like whether questions are in or out of order. That's not normally something that you can deal with in the routine of dealing with it after question period. By then, of course, it's too late.

Now, there are a couple of other things, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is suggesting that because he used the words that he was proposing it that he somehow escapes 13(2). No, that's not quite the right one. I'm sorry.

Some Hon. Members: Standing Order 23(e).

Mr. Mason: Let's see. Standing Order 23(e), which I'll just repeat, Mr. Speaker:

A Member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that Member

(e) anticipates, contrary to good parliamentary practice, any matter already on the Order Paper or on notice for consideration on that day.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what he did. He referred to a matter that was on the Order Paper. The fact that he used the word "proposing" and didn't specifically name his bill is completely irrelevant. He is still in violation of that rule.

Now, a couple of other points, Mr. Speaker. First of all, it's a responsibility of the member to stand up at the time the actual offence or purported offence occurred. This hon. member went out of the House, came back, and made his point of order at that time, so he quite literally missed his opportunity to make his point of order.

Most substantial, Mr. Speaker – I think this is the greatest thing that the hon. member is offending the rules by today, among many – is that if someone has a problem with the ruling of the Speaker, they have two options. They can stand up under Standing Order 13(2) and ask the Speaker to "explain the reasons for any decision on the request of a Member." The only other recourse, Mr. Speaker, if one disagrees with the Speaker, is to move a motion of nonconfidence, and of course that triggers an immediate vote. If the vote is in the positive, the Speaker is removed from his office and from the chair. Those are the options that we have in this Assembly.

In this particular case, Mr. Speaker, I think you acted quite correctly, in accordance with the rules, and I would respectfully request, on multiple grounds, that the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks's point of order be ruled out of order.

I would request unanimous consent to continue with Orders of the Day, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: I'm still dealing with the point of order, I believe. Past practice has been that if we've done the Routine – so we're going to continue with the point of order, hon. member.

New information, hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow?

Mr. Clark: Yeah. I just want to add briefly. I was hoping perhaps that we'd have the Blues available to us. Unfortunately, this is the one piece of the Blues that is not quite available yet.

I just want to reiterate the hon. Government House Leader's point, that it's very, very clear, not just from the Standing Order of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta 23(e), that a member would be called to order by the Speaker if that member "anticipates, contrary to good parliamentary practice, any matter already on the Order Paper" – that's any matter already on the Order Paper, not just a bill – "or on notice for consideration on that day." Very clearly, this matter is. When the member did ask about the 5 per cent, those words are right here in Motion 502, which is on today's Order Paper. No less an authority, of course, than Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, sixth edition, section 409(12): "Questions should not anticipate a debate scheduled for the day, but should be reserved for the debate."

I think that very clearly, Mr. Speaker, there is no point of order here, and I believe your ruling was correct. Thank you.

The Speaker: To the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, certainly that has been the practice and normally is the practice, that we would wait until the end. Now, it hasn't been that way, but generally I would say that the point that you're making is correct, that I would or any Speaker in past practice would wait until Oral Question Period is complete. However, in this situation, as several members have cited, under 23(e) it says, "A Member will be called to order," and I believe, as I think the Member for Calgary-Elbow indicated, it was related to a matter which is on the Order Paper today, Motion 502. At the time that's why I asked, hon. member, if you had another question in your supplemental that you may wish to address. But you chose not to opt that way, so I had a responsibility and a duty, in fact, as 23(e) suggests, to rule the question out of order. For closure, I ruled that it was a point of order, the comment made.

Motions under Standing Order 42

The Speaker: I believe we are at Standing Order 42. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Journey to Freedom Day

Mr. Kenney moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to recognize April 30 each year as Journey to Freedom Day in commemoration of the more than 60,000 Vietnamese refugees who came to Canada in search of freedom and prosperity, following the fall of Saigon and the end of the Vietnam War in 1975. And be it further resolved that the Legislative Assembly recognize the valuable contributions of Alberta's Vietnamese community to our province.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank all members and all parties for their unanimous support for this motion, a motion that echoes a private member's bill which was adopted in the Senate and House of Commons of Canada and became the Journey to Freedom Day Act in 2015. I would like at the outset to acknowledge and thank Senator Thanh Hai Ngo for his leadership in this respect. He was the initial mover of the bill in the Senate which has become the Journey to Freedom Day Act. I'd like to thank Senator Ngo for having proposed to myself that the Alberta Legislature replicate this important historical recognition here in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that the Vietnamese war of the 1960s and '70s was a long, tragic, and bloody affair, which ultimately led to the loss of hundreds of thousands of lives both of combatants and of innocent women, men, and children. While we acknowledge the great suffering that occurred during the war, in adopting this motion, we also acknowledge what is often forgotten, which is the suffering that continued in the immediate aftermath of the war.

On this day in 1975 the southern Vietnamese republic fell to the communist north. Saigon fell. People will remember or will have seen archival images of Vietnamese in Saigon seeking desperately to find any way out of the country. They had good reason to be afraid of the new communist regime that took total control of Vietnam at that point, Mr. Speaker, because it was a regime that had already been culpable of incalculable human rights violations. The people of South Vietnam had every reason to fear reprisals, repercussion, persecution, and violence as a result of their resistance to communist aggression. That's exactly what happened following the fall of Saigon on what is known as Black April Day in the Vietnamese community around the world, this day, April 30.

Mr. Speaker, in the days and years that followed, suspected enemies of the communist regime in Hanoi were rounded up. They were imprisoned. Some 65,000, it is estimated, were summarily executed. It is further estimated that some 1 million were put into communist re-education camps, particularly the senior members of the military of South Vietnam, the political leadership, intellectuals, the so-called bourgeoisie, small-business owners, and anyone who resisted the ideological agenda of the Hanoi government. A million people in re-education camps. Many of them never left those camps.

Others faced widespread political violence. There was a program of agricultural collectivization. We've seen that. Of course, history has seen similar programs of collectivization result in the violent persecution of small landowners throughout South Vietnam.

Further, Mr. Speaker, there was widespread religious persecution of several different faith communities, including many of the Buddhist community in South Vietnam as well as Protestants and Catholics and members of other faith communities who faced arrest and detention. Countless churches and temples were bulldozed and destroyed because these places of faith represented an imagined threat to the regime insofar as they did not succumb to the ideology of the government in Hanoi.

As a result of these and other acts of political repression, starting in late 1975 a wave of emigration began from Vietnam, including members of some ethnic – I should add, Mr. Speaker, that, of course, there was also persecution based on ethnic origin. We often refer to the Indochinese. Many of the ethnic Chinese living in Saigon and in South Vietnam were targeted because they were seen as the bourgeoisie, the ownership class. So an ideological obsession with class became focused on many of the Vietnamese of Chinese ethnic origin.

For all of these reasons, there began a huge wave of emigration. Of course, like in most communist regimes, borders were tightly controlled, and people could not freely leave of their own volition. Hard for us, I think, in our free society to imagine that, Mr. Speaker, to imagine being unable to get on a plane or a boat and just freely leave of your own volition. Exit from the country was tightly controlled, meaning that for people to leave that Indochinese peninsula required that in most instances they hire human smugglers or leave underground by darkness of night, you know, putting together their life savings to buy passage on often massively overcrowded vessels, large and small.

The momentum picked up, and by 1978, 1979 hundreds of thousands were leaving Vietnam. On the high seas in Southeast Asia they encountered terrible tragedy yet again – they'd been victims of violence in the war and then persecution following it and now on the high seas – as many of these vessels were massively overpopulated and sank and capsized in heavy seas. As I've said, it is estimated that some 250,000 people, Vietnamese refugees, lost their lives during the great emigration. Many also fell victim to pirates in Southeast Asia who threatened these refugees. Either they were to hand over everything they owned or had with them or they would be drowned in the sea. Mr. Speaker, those who survived found their way to beaches and shores from Malaysia to Philippines, from Cambodia to Thailand and even as far away as Hong Kong.

Because of this humanitarian disaster the United Nations, particularly the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, worked with partner nations, including Canada, to begin to develop a resettlement program. At first, the boat people were placed into camps, and these were by no means ideal places. They were often very rough living, but at least it was dry land, and at least there was, in most instances, food and water and basic medical care although many more tragedies did occur in some of the informal camps where people were living illegally in countries in Southeast Asia. But the UN over time brought a framework of humanitarian care. UNICEF and the United Nations food program also provided important support.

Then began a large program of resettlement. Sadly, Mr. Speaker, the government of then Prime Minister Trudeau was approached by the UN in 1978 about becoming a major recipient of the Indochinese boat people, and the then government refused to do so, sadly echoing the none-is-too-many policy of Canada's approach towards European Jewish refugees before and during the Second World War.

But then there was an election, a change of government. The Progressive Conservative government of the Rt. Hon. Joe Clark took office, in which served a truly great and recently deceased Canadian, the Hon. Ron Atkey, who was appointed minister of citizenship and immigration in the Clark government. Ron Atkey realized that this was a moral test for Canada as to whether or not we would respond to the pleas for help from the Indochinese boat people and did so in a spectacular way. The public servants of citizenship and immigration Canada of that era, some of whom I know, deserve great credit for the way in which they sprang into action to set up a resettlement program that was really unprecedented in Canadian history. This also marked the birth of the privately sponsored refugee program where local community groups, typically faith communities, churches for example, across Canada came together and started raising funds to sponsor Vietnamese refugee families. For every individual who was sponsored by a private community organization, Minister Atkey agreed to match them with a government-assisted refugee. Over the course of about 18 months in 1979 and 1980 Canada welcomed to our country as permanent residents the initial 60,000 Vietnamese boat people.

There are communities all through Alberta who participated in this program, and I know that many who join us in the gallery today were the beneficiaries of that remarkable generosity. Not just our great cities of Edmonton and Calgary, Mr. Speaker, but little towns gathered together and held potluck suppers and quilting bees and 50-50 draws to raise a few thousand dollars to welcome a Vietnamese family to their small towns, small towns that might have had one hundred per cent Caucasian populations, that were eager to do everything they could at that time to welcome these people, many of whom did not speak English, were completely unfamiliar with this new country and particularly, I imagine, its cold winters at the beginning.

Mr. Speaker, it was the beginning of a love affair where these 60,000 Vietnamese boat people, later joined by another 100,000 over the years that followed before the end of the UN program in 1984, demonstrated their deep gratitude and love for this country, for the new beginning that it offered. I always say that Alberta is the land of fresh starts and new beginnings, and it was exactly that for several thousand of the 60,000 Indochinese boat people of that period.

Let us, with the passage of this motion, express gratitude to those communities, those families and individuals in Alberta who welcomed thousands of Vietnamese boat people and in so doing provided hope to the hopeless and comfort and security to those who had been so gravely afflicted by that political persecution. The Journey to Freedom Act, adopted by the federal Parliament and replicated in part through today's motion, is really about that whole story. It's about that journey of people who struggled through great adversity and persecution, who would not give up, many of whom lost members of their families and lost everything, lost all of their property, their homes, their farms, their businesses, and in many cases their loved ones, yet they kept fighting to survive. That is the journey to freedom. It represents Canada as this beacon of freedom.

As I remarked in my maiden speech in this place some weeks ago, over the doors of this Chamber are inscribed the three words of Alberta's motto, Fortis et Liber. Strong and free. Well, Mr. Speaker, for the Vietnamese boat people freedom is not an empty word. Freedom is a dream that we can never take for granted. The Vietnamese refugees have shown through their remarkable contribution to Canada that we can never take for granted our freedom or our democracy and that freedom is never free and that the price of liberty is eternal vigilance.

While Canada was generous to those boat people, they in turn have repaid that generosity over and over again. One of the most beautiful ways in which I saw that generosity expressed was in working with the community as minister of citizenship and immigration between 2008 and 2013 to open the doors of Canada to several hundred of these stranded boat people, who had for one reason or another never gotten into the UN program. They were in the Philippines, Cambodia, Thailand, in small pockets. The UN shut down the program in 1984, and they were basically living in those Southeast Asian countries as illegal aliens, as unregistered, undocumented migrants. They didn't have access to citizenship or legal employment or any social support, and the Vietnamese community here did not forget about those left behind. They continued to raise their voices, asking Canada once again to open the doors to those left behind.

Unfortunately, the previous government when approached in 2005 refused to do so, but I was very honoured, when I heard about their plight in 2007 and '08, to create a special program at citizenship and immigration Canada. And we now have here in Alberta Vietnamese boat people from Cambodia, Thailand, and the Philippines. In fact, I visited some who were living underground in Thailand a few years ago. Mr. Speaker, the resettlement of those Southeast Asian Vietnamese refugees during my tenure did not cost Canadian taxpayers one cent. The community raised every dollar to welcome these people to Canada, paying it on. We thank the community for its sacrifice and leadership.

Mr. Speaker, we do not forget – we do not forget – as the members of the community and I wear, and many of us do, this emblem called the heritage freedom flag. The design and the colours go all the way back deep into Vietnamese history, back hundreds of years. This was the flag of the South Vietnam republic. As minister for multiculturalism in Canada I was proud to formally recognize this as the flag of the Vietnamese-Canadian community because it symbolizes their values and their belief in freedom, democracy, and human rights.

Let me close, Mr. Speaker, in remembering, as I proudly wear this emblem, as we do, that those are rights which are not enjoyed and cannot be taken for granted by the people of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam today. Let me quote from the Vietnam country summary of the human rights situation in Vietnam published by Amnesty International.

Arbitrary restrictions on the rights to freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly continued. A crackdown on dissent intensified, causing scores of activists to flee the country. Human rights defenders, peaceful political activists and religious followers were subjected to a range of human rights violations, including arbitrary detention, prosecution on national security and other vaguely worded charges in unfair trials, and long-term imprisonment. Prominent activists faced restrictions on movement and were subject to surveillance, harassment and violent assaults. Prisoners of conscience were tortured and otherwise ill-treated. Suspicious deaths in police custody were reported, and the death penalty was retained.

Let me now quote from the Human Rights Watch country summary on Vietnam.

Vietnam's human rights record remains dire in all areas. The Communist Party maintains a monopoly on political power and allows no challenge to its leadership. Basic rights, including freedom of speech, opinion, press, association, and religion, are restricted. Rights activists and bloggers face harassment, intimidation, physical assault, and imprisonment. Farmers continue to lose land to development projects without... compensation, and workers are not allowed to form independent unions. The police use torture and beatings to extract confessions. The criminal justice system lacks independence. State-run drug rehabilitation centres exploit detainees as laborers making goods for local markets and export. Nevertheless, increasing numbers of bloggers and activists have called publicly for democracy and greater freedoms.

In adopting this Journey to Freedom Day motion today, in remembering those who lives were lost between 1975 and 1982, in thanking Albertans and Canadians for opening our doors of hospitality and protection, as we do all of those things, let us not forget the estimated 160 political prisoners in Vietnam like Father Nguyen Van Ly, the Catholic priest who's been in jail for seven years for the crime of preaching independently and not succumbing to the abusive authority of the state. For all of them, Mr. Speaker, we speak for them today in calling for their freedom and celebrating the freedom of those who have joined us in Canada.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we begin, if you would like to have some refreshments in the House while this discussion is going on, feel free to get that.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's really my pleasure to rise today and be able to speak to this motion because this is a motion that really speaks to my family and my story as well because, like many in the gallery today, both of my parents were refugees from Vietnam.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

My father's family sold everything that they owned so that their two oldest sons could board a boat to Malaysia. They went in a convoy like many of the other families. Very fortunately, their boat wasn't attacked by pirates, but the other boat in the convoy was. That's a story that is very common among those who made it to the refugee camps in Malaysia and elsewhere, who made it eventually here to Canada.

Madam Speaker, I remember my father telling me that he thought he would drown as the storms raged on during his trip in the boats. He was under the decks and the water was rising and they had to tell everybody, "Bail; you have to help bail" because this was the reality for the refugees leaving Vietnam. They lost many of their friends and family as they made the trips.

My mother's family sent their eldest daughter in the same manner to come to Canada as a refugee so that she could work hard and make enough money to bring the rest of the family over. Now, I remember that aunt telling me that she was in Saigon as the tanks rolled through the gates. She went and watched it. She told my mother, her little sister: "Stay at home. It's too dangerous. You can't go out." My father later told me that bullet holes, as the Americans were retreating, appeared above his door in his bedroom, and he could see them when he woke up in the morning.

Madam Speaker, this is the story of so many refugees. These are the stories of people in the gallery. I want to say that my story happens to be a success story. It's the one that I'm able to tell and I'm able to remember and speak on. I look up in the gallery and see so many who took the same path. I look up and see so many other success stories of successful Vietnamese Canadians, successful refugees, who add to the success of our province. They're people who came to enrich their lives. They contribute greatly to our culture and our economy. They're our friends and our neighbours. They're our business owners.

Some of my family's lifelong friends continue to be Vietnamese Canadians, who care deeply about our country and are so proud of our heritage. So I'm proud to say that our family made it here to Canada. I'm proud to say that Vietnamese refugees contribute greatly to this province and to this country, and I'm proud to see that we were welcomed here and welcomed into this great nation with such open arms. Madam Speaker, it's very clear that Vietnamese refugees came with hopes and dreams for a better life. They came with hopes and dreams that Canada could offer them everything that they couldn't have, the freedoms here that we have every single day of our lives.

It's really my pleasure to be able to speak and encourage every single member of this House to vote in favour of this motion today. It's something that I think is important for Vietnamese refugees around Canada and around Alberta especially to be able to see and recognize that they are success stories. They are the ones who made it. We have rights and freedoms here that are amazing opportunities for us to be able to live and succeed in.

Once again, I urge all of my colleagues to vote in favour of this. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very happy to be able to stand and support this motion. This was certainly an event that happened many years before I was born, but I've had the opportunity to hear stories of many of my constituents who fled Vietnam in 1975 and in the years after. These are truly incredible stories and demonstrate the strength, courage, and determination of people who were forced to leave their homes against their will. As the MLA for Calgary-East I see the positive impacts of Vietnamese Canadians and the impacts that they have in our community every day.

Before I moved to Calgary, I had never had pho, but now I rarely go a week without it. My favourite restaurant for lunch is Mekong, which is close to my house and my office. It's affordable, friendly, and always delicious, and in east Calgary you're never far from a bowl of hot pho. There are at least 10 Vietnamese restaurants on International Avenue alone. My go-to tailor is Vietnamese. Hong reliably fixes my zippers, hems my pants, and patches elbows on my husband's favourite shirts. When my daughter needs a dress for a wedding or a party, we go to Jeannie's Boutique, where she can get something pink and sparkly and where they always recommend a fantastic pair of matching shoes. These are just a few businesses that I go to frequently in east Calgary, and there are many more businesses like this all over Alberta, run by families of hard-working people, many of whom came here as refugees after the fall of Saigon or who were children of people who did.

When International Avenue started commissioning murals to represent the area's diverse cultures, a Vietnamese mural was one of the first ones. It was painted to show a scene of a Vietnamese flower market and celebrates the Vietnamese community in Calgary. The avenue is truly a hub for the Vietnamese community in Calgary, and I would encourage all of you to come visit.

I'm fortunate to have spent time with the Calgary Vietnamese Women's Association, who promote volunteerism and active participation of women in the community. Recently they worked to bring an art installation by a Vietnamese artist that she was unable to display in Vietnam. The installation was entitled Pink Rules, and it reflected on the way that gender rules can be oppressive to everyone in a society. This organization also puts on successful community events, including holiday parties and their upcoming Mother's Day lunch, which they are partnering with the Korean Women's Association for.

This is a community that left their home country with nothing, who fled under unimaginable circumstances that are just unimaginable to many of us who were born here in Canada. Many left family members behind, not knowing what would become of them, and through these incredibly difficult circumstances they built businesses, put down roots, and became an invaluable part of our community here in Canada. This is a community that can count among its members MLAs, MPs, Senators, artists, actors, scientists, and businesspeople, and they should be incredibly proud of their achievements. One of the great strengths of Canada is that we have consistently accepted people fleeing violence and persecution abroad, people who come seeking safety and freedom, and we are a greater country because of it.

I am very happy to support this motion to recognize April 30 as Journey to Freedom Day and to thank the Vietnamese community sincerely for the incredible contributions that they've made to Alberta and continue to make to Alberta every day.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my privilege to rise and speak in favour of this motion. I, too, have a very personal connection with this actually on two fronts.

I was just a kid at the time, but my uncle actually was one of the very first folks to sponsor a full Vietnamese family into his home. The older parents were there, and then they had a number of young children that came with them. He sponsored them and provided for them, gave them jobs, built a relationship that lasted and in which the children actually stayed in his home for about 10 years. He paid for their education, their university, got them established, set up, and today I know that one of them is an accountant doing very well. I would just say that the contribution that all of these Vietnamese people have made to Canada has been nothing but positive in my experience. I've seen them contribute in so many ways, in so many good ways. For me, it was an incredible lesson in what it means to be Canadian and what it means to care for other people, to look beyond our own personal, immediate concerns and to think about the desperate plight of others as well, and a great lesson for me also just growing up to see how they did that.

My second direct encounter was about 10 years ago. In one of the churches that I served here in central Alberta, they had a 30-year reunion. Prior to my time that church had actually sponsored three families, I believe it was. Almost all of them now live in Calgary.

It was such an important experience for them, the support and the friendship and the sponsorship, that 30 years later they wrote and asked if they could have a reunion back in that rural community church to meet those people, to share with them. We had a fantastic day. The Vietnamese folk that had come over as boat people were concerned and sharing that their children who had been born here and for whom it was, in a way, but a story – they wanted some of that history for them to be able to grasp that and understand that, so their reunion was important for them to meet the people that had sponsored them and provided for them and helped them get established. I just consider it a real privilege, the Vietnamese people that I know, and I'm very proud of the fact that Canadians have done what they have done to make this a reality.

I definitely stand in favour of the motion. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the motion?

Are you ready for the question?

[Motion carried]

The Deputy Speaker: On Standing Order 42 the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Carbon Levy Increase Postponement

Mr. Nixon:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government not to proceed with any further increases to the carbon tax until Kinder Morgan's Trans Mountain expansion project has completed construction and commenced commercial operations.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll be very brief. I move that simply – we already have once before, and it's been voted against by the government, but I move it now. As you know, in question period earlier today the Premier indicated yet again that the carbon tax will not be increasing if we can't get Kinder Morgan built. This gives the NDP an opportunity to prove to Albertans that that, in fact, is true. Yet again I will give them that opportunity to show that to this House.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 203

Long Term Care Information Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Today I am very proud to stand and speak to second reading of my private member's Bill 203, the Long Term Care Information Act.

Madam Speaker, there are more than 170 institutions in Alberta that offer long-term care. These facilities exist in nearly 100 communities across our great province. They serve close to 15,000 Alberta seniors. As Alberta's population ages, we know that we can expect these numbers to grow as well. It's expected that the number of seniors in this province will grow by 20 per cent by the year 2020. Meanwhile, the prevalence of dementia has increased by 21 per cent since 2010. We will all live with a growing population that needs long-term care, and of course there is a good chance that each of us or a loved one will need long-term care at some point in our lives. It is our responsibility as legislators in this Chamber and as Albertans to help those in need. This bill will take an important step toward helping seniors and their families find the best long-term care solutions for them.

Madam Speaker, for many years I worked as a health care professional in long-term care facilities. I know how much the families of those living in the facilities cared about their loved ones. I witnessed it every day. I know how much effort they put into finding the best place for their loved ones to live. I also know that the decision about which facilities would best meet the needs of their loved ones is an important one and can often be a difficult one, especially considering these families are already going through a very difficult and stressful transition. I know how much effort these families put into finding the best place for their loved ones to live.

I also know that there were many times that we would have people walk through the door of our facility looking for more information. Sometimes they would be looking for very basic information like: how many beds are there in the facility? What would it cost for their loved ones to live there? Does the facility have room for their loved one? What kinds of services did the facility offer? How many health care professionals were there on site? It was heartbreaking to see families already dealing with the stress of supporting a loved one through a difficult transition into care also have to deal with the stress of making a special trip to our facility to find out basic information that could have been provided to them much more easily.

All the information these families were looking for should have been available to them elsewhere, Madam Speaker, but it was not. It was not possible for people to easily find out even the most basic information about long-term care in Alberta. I think that's a shame. It's a shame that we were not able to provide that information to the people who in many cases have dedicated their entire lives to living and working in Alberta, building this province into what it is today for us. When I started to think about this bill, I thought about all those people who came looking for information, and I started to do some of my own research and learned very interesting things about the kind of information out there about long-term care facilities in Alberta. I found that there were some facilities that had been closed for years but that were still listed as open online. I found that there was no online directory to provide all the basic information people needed to begin making their decisions.

I talked to my health care colleagues. I talked to the people in my community, friends, neighbours, and even my own family about what kind of information they wanted and needed to make up their minds about where their loved ones should live. Many of their experiences reflected what I had heard in the course of my own work as a health care professional.

We must keep in mind that while these facilities provide crucial medical care to residents based on needs determined by medical professionals, these facilities are not just hospitals and are not just there to provide medical care. These facilities are home to almost 15,000 Alberta seniors. Everyone deserves to feel comfortable and happy in their own home.

Just like those of us living in our own homes have chosen specifically where we want to live based on a wide variety of factors, so too do long-term care residents have a wide variety of factors influencing what makes them comfortable living in care. Some will feel happier and more comfortable in larger facilities that offer a wider variety of activities and services while some will feel happier and more comfortable in a smaller facility. For others, knowing whether there are specialized services like foot care or salon care available on-site will make all the difference for them.

To each their own. Some will feel happier paying additional fees for higher levels of services while others may not be in a position to afford additional services.

What I heard from my health care colleagues confirmed what I knew from my own experience and, really, what common sense tells us. Decisions about long-term care are made not just with medical care in mind but with a person's unique personality and needs in mind. We should make these decisions as easy as possible for Albertans.

With this information in hand I held consultations with a range of stakeholders. Madam Speaker, in particular I want to mention that I was able to talk with a great number of resident and family councils, and they were so grateful for the work that our government had already done to empower them as advocates for their loved ones and were incredibly supportive of this bill, considering the challenges they had very recently had to endure to get their loved ones into the facilities that they were now calling home. I'll be happy to discuss those consultations more in my closing statements and in Committee of the Whole.

I look forward to debating this bill with my colleagues. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure today to rise to speak about the Long Term Care Information Act and the long-term care system in Alberta. I am optimistic to watch this system evolve into one where each individual has the ability to make their own fully informed decision on their own terms, where the government believes that a person is smart enough and self-preserving enough to be able to make the decision that is right for themselves.

That is why I believe that the concept of this bill is quite beneficial and a great direction in which to move the health care system. I commend the hon. member from across the way for suggesting such a bill. It demonstrates knowledge on her part from her previous life working in these facilities, and it identifies something key that perhaps might be missing or, at the very least, could be enhanced. To that effect, although I think there is great benefit in being able to make these fully informed decisions, I was struck with curiosity as to how many people are actually getting by right now.

Madam Speaker, I found two such sites on Alberta government websites that provide some such information. The first one is a document entitled List of Publicly Funded Designated Supportive Living Accommodations and Long-term Care Facilities on the open.alberta.ca website. Increasing access to information is vital for a properly functioning government. Again, I appreciate the intent of this bill, but again I wonder about the current sites in existence. The second site that we came across is on the Alberta Health website, and it was a searchable page with information on supportive and long-term care accommodations in Alberta, which is even broader than the mandate of this bill. So, with that, I wonder why this government doesn't simply redefine some of these websites that it has, clarify them, add some more information to them, enhance these sites, perhaps even whittle it down to one.

In a province with numerous outstanding recommendations by the Auditor General, where users of the long-term care system sit on wait-lists and those in facility living see a number of abuses, from being overcharged to exceeding their allotment of care, I was confused to see that the side of the issues that is being tackled by this bill has, in essence, supposedly been addressed by Alberta Health itself. Every improvement that helps Alberta families to determine what is right for their loved ones is so imperative. As such, I also have such a hard time understanding why, if this was such a gap in our current system, the Ministry of Health didn't simply go ahead and do these things. With a more than $20 billion budget it is unlikely that they didn't have the capacity to get this done without this bill mandating it. Was Alberta Health not willing to create the registry without legislation demanding it? It makes me wonder.

I want to focus on the issues that the private member's bill could have addressed in the area of long-term care. One of my constituents told me with a heavy heart of the terrible way her husband was treated in one of these facilities. When she came to visit the man that she had spent the majority of her life with, he was in a state of disarray. He was soiled, he was uncomfortable, and when she went to ask the staff attendants why they hadn't cleaned him up, she was told that her husband had exceeded his allotment of care. To me, that is shameful, Madam Speaker, that some of these facilities would limit the amount of time that they have to address certain patients, recognizing that they are wards of these facilities and need to be treated in the most noble fashion we can. These are seniors. These are the people that built our province, built our country, and here we have someone who has exceeded his allotment of care, and therefore they were not going to clean him up, the feces and the urine that were in his bed, that he was covered in, that slipped through his adult diaper.

I can honestly say that I have experienced such things when I was picking up patients from certain places to transport them from a facility far outside of town to Edmonton or Calgary or even to Red Deer, in particular when I was working in central Alberta. I had to go across all sorts of communities to pick up patients, and there was one, I remember, where they were in a similar state, and we had to clean them. We just cleaned them on the way to the hospital, but I remember thinking to myself, "Hey, I shouldn't have had to do that," but I did, obviously. I say that I shouldn't have had to do that because it should have been done already. This patient should have been cleaned up. This was 20 years ago, yet I remember quite vividly in my head when I was told of this particular incident. It's not uncommon.

Last year the Auditor General released a report stating that there are many outstanding recommendations in the long-term care system that have yet to be addressed. Two in particular that have still not been considered since they were pointed out by the Auditor General in October of 2014 were:

- develop a system to periodically verify that facilities provide residents with an adequate number and level of staff, every day of their operation [and]
- develop a system to periodically verify that facilities deliver the right care every day by implementing individual resident care plans and meeting basic needs of residents.

Basic needs of residents. Why does the Auditor General still mark these as unimplemented?

Why did a private member's bill not go to improving the quality of life of seniors in continuing care? Yes, access to information is important, and, yes, everyone should have their options laid out in front of them. That's why I was so relieved to see that the information was readily available on an Alberta Health website. If there is any missing information that should be included, I have a hard time seeing why it was not simply added and updated. What push-back could a private member have run into in order to decide that this needed to be legislated and that it could not have been completed in any other way?

The concept of allowing someone to make their own informed decision is one that I believe is in the best interest of all Albertans. It's the epitome of the freedoms that we have in this nation, this country. If an individual needs more personalized assistance in choosing a long-term care facility, an individual may call 811 and be redirected to a continuing care placement co-ordinator, but if they want their decision to be their own, I'm happy that they already have the ability to look online for facilities that suit their needs.

However, in terms of access to information a new online registry created under this bill will be equally as accessible as the current websites are. For someone who has trouble finding the current publicly available resources online, this bill does not go to addressing that issue. How would they find the new one? I guess the fear is, Madam Speaker, that the system could become too convoluted, which might be typical of government, recognizing that we have two very similar sites currently, government websites that provide this information, and that through this private member's bill possibly we'll have three such sites. Or I would certainly accept it if the people who work behind the scenes, who actually have to do these jobs, decided to do some cleaning up and streamlining and enhancing of these current sites and made sure that they have a lot of this data available.

And if I might address the fact that if a person is looking for accommodation of their own, for a hotel – and I am actually looking for a hotel in the good member's constituency right now, in the community of Red Deer. When I go online, there are a dozen sites, and on each site I can look at the facility. I can see an address. There is a map attached to that. I can see images of the facility. I can see the amenities that they have. I can see the type of food that they serve. I can see everything that the site has to offer. You know, the one site offers business services and an in-house restaurant. They explain the hours of all these amenities that they have. They even show, in some of these cases, some of the areas around these hotels and other accommodations that might be beneficial to choosing that particular hotel.

You can't help but wonder why government sites can't provide a lot of that same information. When I think of this bill and of the good Member for Red Deer-North's intent, of what she's trying to accomplish, it makes me wonder why they don't have that already. [Mr. Yao's speaking time expired] That's it? Ten?

The Deputy Speaker: You're out of time, hon. member.

Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to stand and speak in support of this private member's bill, Bill 203, the long-term care transparency – it's actually the Long Term Care Information Act. I'm somewhat chagrined in making that mistake today since in discussing this in anticipation of today, we actually made that suggestion, that we change the name. I do want to express my appreciation to the Member for Red Deer-North for involving many of us with experience in health care as well as in social services in developing this bill. I think she's done a phenomenal job of creating something that is really going to be to the advantage of Albertans.

As we like to say and as our Premier likes to say, we're making life better for Albertans; in this case, Albertans that require long-term care. There are a lot of us, including probably me in the very near future. We need to make the information about long-term care accessible, transparent – I think that word applies there – and easy to access. I guess I'm being a bit redundant there. But we need to have a system that isn't out of date. I think the Member for Red Deer-North mentioned this in her opening speech, that much of the information that is on the current government websites is out of date.

One of the strengths of this bill, in my opinion, is that it mandates that this information be updated at least every six months, hopefully more often, so that the information is current and people actually don't have to waste a lot of time at a very stressful period of their lives searching through a whole variety of things and maybe even, you know, affecting climate change by driving all over the province doing inspections on these sites.

I think the idea about having a one-stop shop for getting this information that can be relied on – and I think this is really key, that the information is reliable. The MLA for Red Deer-North did make this point in her comments, that the information needs to be verifiable – I guess that's the best way to put it – and it has to include information that is really useful to the families as well as perhaps to the individuals who are looking for long-term care about the costs, about what the sort of optional costs are, about the resident and family councils, how they work.

I think this was one of the things that was perhaps missed by the member opposite, that the Resident and Family Councils Act, which I'm really proud that this government brought forward last year, is designed to give residents and families the ability to be able to deal with issues such as were mentioned, about a person exceeding care. I think that's something that could be brought forward through the resident and family councils if they're functioning right. Those resident and family councils are going to be in public institutions; they're going to be in private institutions. I think this is something that's really important, that we need to have a common set of rules and information sharing involving not only Alberta Health Services or other governmentally related institutions but the many, the multitude of private institutions that provide this kind of service. You know, it is a pleasure to be part of this government, and that Resident and Family Councils Act was a signal achievement by this government. It was passed through Seniors and Housing. Sorry. That was passed through Health.

The Minister of Seniors and Housing also had an act – again, this was two years ago – called the Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act. This act is very complementary to private member's Bill 203, in my opinion. For an individual or a family that's trying to deal with an individual who's thinking about long-term care, they need to have all the options available to them. The seniors' housing adaptation and repair program gives these families a lot of leeway in terms of deciding whether or not it's more appropriate to stay in the home that they may have had for decades. Or should they move into an intermediate, transitional type of housing, or is it more appropriate to go into a supportive living or long-term care facility?

By having this option through the seniors' home adaptation and repair program to make modifications to the home to make it more livable, to make it safer, I think the family members feel more comfortable that the individual or the individuals involved can be safely left at home and cared for there, and the community often benefits from that sort of thing. I think this is really a nice, complementary thing.

Going back to this particular private member's bill, it is critical that we give people in this situation all the tools they need to make these decisions. These are very difficult decisions. Probably everybody in this Chamber is aware of and maybe even in their personal lives has been affected by this sort of decision: when do we move grandma into long-term care? Or sometimes it's a child, actually, or a person with a developmental disability that needs this sort of thing. Having through Health Link, which is what is being suggested in this bill, an accessible, reliable, and verifiable source of information is very key.

Another current bill that I want to bring up that's going to add to this is the bill that the Minister of Municipal Affairs has proposed, in which families can get energy upgrades in their homes. Those could be used to keep individuals in their own homes for longer periods of time. I think that's another piece of this thing that's going very well.

You know, in summary, I think that this private member's bill is vitally important to increasing the quality of life for a lot of Albertans, and I'm very pleased to be providing support for it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It really is an honour to rise today and speak to Bill 203, the Long Term Care Information Act. Our province was built on the backs of our seniors. Their hard work is the foundation of our great province, and we owe it to them to make any transition to long-term care as easy as possible.

Finding somewhere for an elderly or ailing relative to stay for long-term care can be really, really stressful. In the spring and summer of 2016 my own dad was very, very ill and in the hospital. He was not able to return home again. We weren't able to provide him with the kind of care that he needed at home. We were told by the social workers at the hospital that we would have to make a decision about what long-term care facility we would like to see him go to. We were given a pamphlet, and that was all the information that we got. It was really difficult to try and make a decision based on a booklet from the hospital.

For those reasons, I think the bill is a really, really great idea. I think it'll be very helpful during what can sometimes be a really stressful situation. Now, it's not always very stressful when somebody has to go into long-term care – you may have a lot of notice about it – but when that event happens, if it is something that you have to address under stressful circumstances, I can see having a navigator, a web navigator, like what's being proposed, as being very, very helpful in those circumstances.

I do have a few concerns about how the bill is written and about some of the information that's being included, and I'd like to make some suggestions about regulation that could include more information that would make it easier for decision-making during a stressful time. One of the things that I think could be really helpful to include is listing languages that staff are able to speak. For an elderly relative – I'll just use elderly as an example – going into care, if they don't speak English or they don't speak English fluently, it would make a huge difference to know that they're going to a long-term care facility where staff are on hand that speak the language that they understand. For any programs that are offered, what languages are those programs offered in? Again, for the same reasons, just for familiarity and being able to participate in any programming that's available.

Culturally or religiously appropriate meal choices: do they offer kosher or halal or vegetarian meals? This can mean a lot to somebody, especially when they're ill. There's a lot of stress in having to make food choices or dietary choices that aren't in alignment with what their beliefs are, and it can make a stressful situation even worse.

Do facilities have the space for cultural or religious ceremonies, pastoral care, and what faiths are able to be accommodated?

Something else that could be helpful is listing the average time from the application to a space being made available. I know that when my dad was in the hospital, we were told by the social worker to make our top three choices. Often what will happen is that the first choice doesn't have any space available, so you have to go to your second choice. Understanding that gives a lot more context to the decision-making process, and I think it would be really very helpful in those circumstances to have that information.

Also, what community services are available close by? Are there recreation facilities? Is there a park close by so the family can get out and have a picnic with their relative? What churches are close by? That kind of information can really be helpful in the decision-making process.

I think a comprehensive assessment of the information that's going to be useful when people are making those decisions is imperative to the success of this kind of a site. I know from my own professional experience that in going live with any kind of information site, it is really imperative to understand exactly what the needs are. I think the member has done an excellent job of identifying a lot of the needs, but doing a more full evaluation I think would be really useful.

I believe this was alluded to earlier: advertising it, making sure that people understand that this sort of information is available and that it's easily accessible and that they can use it whenever they want to to help make a decision. I think that would go a long way to making the site a lot more successful.

Finally, I just want to acknowledge the member for her compassion and her knowledge. Her professional knowledge of this situation informed her choice to create this private member's bill. As private members we don't get a lot of opportunity to have much direct influence over legislation like this. I just want to let her know that I think she's done a really great job and that it's obvious she cares a great deal about the people that she worked with prior to becoming an MLA.

I'm happy to support this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to speak in support of this bill. You know, what I appreciate the most about being in this Assembly at the moment is that we all come from very different backgrounds, and we bring our backgrounds to our work in the Assembly. We bring the care and passion that we've had but also the experience and expertise. I think that this bill is just so perfect for my colleague from Red Deer-North because she has spent so much of her working life in this area. Her bill reflects not only her experience and expertise but her overwhelming compassion for seniors in long-term care.

The preamble of this bill says: "Whereas providing support to individuals who need long-term care is a priority for all Albertans." I really appreciate it when we talk about priority for all Albertans. The decision around long-term care doesn't involve only the seniors who may be going into long-term care, but it really also involves the family, the friends. So this bill is not only going to benefit seniors but also whole communities because a decision is, I think, all the time a family affair, and friends are involved.

The preamble continues: "Whereas providing information about options for long-term care in an easily understandable and accessible format is an essential component of supporting Albertans who need long-term care." You know, as MLAs I'm sure we all speak to our staff about the issues that are brought daily into our constituency offices. I know that in my own riding of Sherwood Park people phone my office all the time to try to get information about long-term care because they find the existing information confusing and not all in one place. This bill is also really going to help MLAs because our offices will have a place that is easily accessible to all Albertans who have questions, and I really appreciate that. My office will be able to give out where the information is, and then they may be able to help the constituents with some of the other issues, knowing that they have accurate information on long-term care accessible and in one place.

The preamble continues: “Whereas enhancing transparency and accountability in the long-term care system will benefit all Albertans.” Our government has been bringing in a number of bills around transparency and accountability. I see this as a continuing of the government’s work to make sure that Albertans see what government is funding, always being transparent and accountable. I want to really thank first of all the MLA for Red Deer-North for understanding how important this was to the government, to make sure that the information is accurate.

One of the issues that I have dealt with a lot as a constituent is the fact that once you get into long-term care facilities, you never know what the cost of services will be. A couple of years ago I was helping an elderly gentleman whose wife was in a facility and who told me that he had to pay $1,500 a month so that his wife would be able to have somebody bring her to the dining room and help her eat the food. I’m sure that when his wife went into this facility, he had no idea that this cost was going to be something that he was going to have to pay. So I really appreciate that this information will be accessible.

I also think that what the MLA has suggested about the operator’s name and the description of an operator – is it private, public, or not-for-profit, is this just one facility, is it linked to other facilities, how many residents live there, and what are the kinds of services and all the details of services? – is something which is going to be very important.

Then I was thinking about, you know, as someone who comes from a francophone community, how one of the things that the francophone community often asks me is: which long-term care facilities can they go to where staff speak French? So I really appreciate that this may be something which will be part of the details in this registry.

Then I think of dietary constraints. Will the long-term care be able to meet the needs of somebody who has a kosher diet or halal, as was talked about previously? Or they may have a preference in what they might like to eat.

Then I thought about what is happening as we’re seeing that we have many in our communities who’ve been in long-term same-sex relationships. How will that be accepted in a long-term care facility? I’m really hoping that those are the kinds of details which may be forthcoming in this online registry so that every single senior and their family members can see the information that they need to make the best decision for their loved one.

I’m actually facing this issue at the moment. I have a mother-in-law who’s 92, and it’s something that I’m going to be looking at in the near future. Because I know her so well, I know the kind of facility that I will want to put her in. I’m going to want to have a facility where there’s a lot of card playing. But I also know that she loves to cook, so I’m going to look for a facility where the residents, if they’re able, may have access to a kitchen so that she can continue cooking muffins and cookies because it’s something that gives her a lot of joy. It’s something that makes her feel that even though she’s frail and has limited ability, it’s something she can do to give back. I would hate for her to be in a facility where there is not any access to a kitchen so that she can continue while her health is still very good.

I think, again, these are the things which I’m hoping, that this registry will allow every single family member and friends to work with the senior to be able to make the decision. I think about how our government has really helped seniors. I mean, we’ve done a number of programs to help seniors stay at home such as the SHARP program. We have the seniors’ benefit. We’re also increasing the number of long-term care beds that are available in the province. This bill will be part of the way that our government is helping seniors in our province make sure that as they age, they’re in the right place for them, that helps them keep their dignity and their ability to think, that they can continue their lifestyle, that they can have their loved ones near by.

One of the things that I particularly like about the bill is that it’s going to allow families who live far away to access information. Because as we know, in this day and age very few family members actually live next to where their seniors are. Like, they may be living in Ontario or they may be living on the other side of the world, but by having an online directory, it’ll make it easy for all family members to participate and to be able to be part of the decision-making for their loved one.

I would like to close by hoping that every single member of this House will support this bill, that they will see this as a valuable tool for seniors and family members to make the right choice about the institution that they will be in, and they will know that this bill comes from someone who has long-term experience in long-term care. I just know that this bill is the kind of bill that would help families and seniors.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Sorry. Which?

The Deputy Speaker: Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: My apologies to the Member for Calgary-Greenway, but I eagerly await his words.

I want to thank the Member for Red Deer-North for bringing this bill forward. My former assistant Cole Kander, who is running against her, won’t be too happy to hear that I’m supporting a bill from her, but I would chance to say that it’s probably a bill that you two would probably agree on, and I want to commend the member for bringing this forward. I know she’s got extensive experience in this field. We all come with different backgrounds to this place, and I think it’s a valuable addition to the different voices we have on this topic.

Also, I want to thank the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park. It’s a constituency name which is often mixed up by multiple speakers in the House with Strathmore-Sherwood Park. I may disagree with how they redrew the boundaries, but that would be one particularly large constituency. But I really appreciate her remarks in particular. She worked in Bassano for some time. We often chat about her time in Bassano. Bassano is the centre of a major seniors’ care initiative that I’ll speak to in a few minutes.

You know, this bill is like most private members’ bills. They are required by the standing orders to be limited in their scope, so they’re very rarely revolutionary. And I don’t think this bill is revolutionary, but it is a small step in the right direction. It is going to provide valuable information to seniors and to the families of seniors seeking care for their elders. In particular I want to draw members’ attention to section 2(1)(j) and (k). They’ll provide the description of the accreditation status of the operator’s facility under the Nursing Homes Act or the Hospitals Act as the case may be. Subsection (k): “results of any inspections conducted under section 12 of the Nursing Homes Act or any investigations conducted under section 27 of the Hospitals Act.” That is very important information for folks to have.

Our seniors’ care varies pretty widely across Alberta, even in my own constituency for seniors’ care facilities run by the very same company. In Brooks we have two AgeCare facilities, Sunrise Gardens and Orchard Manor. You know, there are great folks working there, but I hear no end of complaints about a lot of the care there, the quality of the food, or leaving seniors in their filth without being taken care of, falling out of bed and not being taken care of in a timely manner. I hear these complaints all the time. I visit both of these seniors’ care facilities. I try to do it at least twice a year, so four visits, two visits to each of the two facilities at Christmas and generally once in the summer, and I meet with my seniors.

You know, it’s difficult to tell what is a true, substantiated complaint and what is just someone saying what I would probably do if I was a senior. But I hear their complaints, and I hear it at these two AgeCare facilities, the two in Brooks. I hear a lot of complaints from constituents about the families, often the adult children of seniors in that care, and from the seniors themselves. In Strathmore the AgeCare facility there is Sagewood. It’s the exact same company, and I’ve rarely ever heard a complaint about it. It’s fantastic. I’m sure if I look hard enough, I will find complaints. Much of the business of our constituency assistants is listening to issues people have, and they certainly reach out to me.

You know, we’ve also got Meadowlark in Strathmore, which is more of an assisted living. You have your own home, and it’s more independent. There are a lot of different models here, and it’s important that we provide the information necessary to seniors and to the children of seniors looking after their parents so that they can make the most informed, best decision possible.

I referred to the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park earlier and her time in Bassano, and I wanted to just take a moment to reflect on what’s going on with seniors’ care in Bassano for what’s approaching a decade but at least a solid five years of fundraising and organization. Folks at the Newell Foundation have been trying to raise money and put in place the infrastructure necessary to upgrade the Bassano hospital, to integrate it with an assisted living seniors’ project. It’s a not-for-profit. It would offer a wide range of different assisted living standards depending on how independent or not some seniors are.

The project was approved, and I commend the government for providing the funding for it, but there was a refusal on the government’s part to integrate it with the Bassano hospital, and it is a critical part of this project that it be integrated with the hospital. They could share services like meals and laundry. They would have ready access to care on the site, and it was a potentially really great and innovative not-for-profit model for seniors’ care in Alberta that may have provided an example for others to follow if it was successful. So I’d ask members opposite to reconsider the declined approval for integrating the Bassano seniors’ project with the Bassano hospital because that project simply is not going to move forward unless that integration is allowed to happen. It’s a nonideological issue. I can’t really see a left/right dichotomy here. It’s simply allowing a not-for-profit to be integrated with a hospital.

Nonetheless, this bill is still a positive step forward. It won’t directly address anything like the Bassano project, but it’s going to provide valuable information for Albertans and, as I said, seniors and their children to look for the best care possible. I do believe that a nongovernment centralized model that has for-profit and not-for-profit seniors’ care in Alberta is the best way to go, but if you’re going to have competition, for the market to function properly, you have to have information so that you can compare different products, compare different services. In some very small communities there might not be a lot of options, but even in places the size of Strathmore, the size of Brooks, there’s at least more than one facility in most cases. So if people have this information, they can make a better, more informed decision in the marketplace of choices for seniors’ care.

I don’t need to add much more that members on both sides haven’t added already. Again I want to thank the Member for Red Deer-North for bringing this forward and encourage all members of the House to support this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It’s about time that you noticed me. Thank you. I appreciate it. You know, it’s an honour to rise to speak to Bill 203, introduced by the Member for Red Deer-North. Caring for Alberta’s aging population is a sacred trust of the government, and I think that we should be working in good faith to care for our seniors. Bill 203 addresses long-term care, which falls under the Health ministry. The critic in the Official Opposition, the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, already spoke on it, and I’m also pleased to rise and address this bill in my position as the Official Opposition’s critic for Seniors and Housing as Alberta’s continuing care system is a continuum that straddles the Health and Seniors ministries.

Madam Speaker, let’s focus on the concept of this bill, which in reality is an idea that could easily occur with a simple direction from the Minister of Health. In other words, there is no need to create legislation that creates the database proposed in this bill. It is especially important to note that the information is already online. This bill would compile it in one online registry. Clearly, we’re not talking about reinventing the wheel, which is great, but we are talking about a direction to collect and compile it. If the intention of Bill 203 is to create an easily accessible and searchable database, I think it makes sense and that everybody would agree on it.

When families are at the point of seeking long-term care options for their loved ones, it can be a very stressful process. They are already in care. Alberta Health Services needs to be seeking to place them in care outside a hospital setting, so I think it could be a stressful process. Speakers before me have already spoken at length about that and their personal experiences. Why is that important, Madam Speaker? Because seniors who have been admitted to hospitals and are going to need a higher level of care in the future do not need it in an acute-care setting. I don’t think it’s good for them personally, and it’s using acute-care resources that could be going to Albertans who need to be admitted to hospitals for acute medical needs. For families, it’s particularly hard to see their loved one, who may have recovered from the medical situation that sent them to hospital – they often do not fully recover until they’re receiving long-term holistic care that they can receive in a more homelike setting.

Creating a one-site portal that provides this information I think is a worthy exercise, but it does sound like something the minister can do without the legislation. I think we know that the answer to that is yes, so I don’t know why Bill 203 is coming before this House. It is because, in my humble opinion, this is just not a priority for government, it seems like, taking care of long-term care for seniors.

How many department resources would it take? Perhaps the Member for Red Deer-North would be able to answer that question. It doesn’t seem like it would involve that much work if we’re going to address the issue with long-term care. As the seniors critic for the UCP I would welcome an opportunity to talk about this government's admitted plan to move to an expensive public system. How expensive is the new strategy? We have been looking at fully public projects that are coming in at 10 times the cost of previous private-public partnerships just because the government wants to move ahead with their own ideology, not serve and respect the taxpayers' dollars. Madam Speaker, that is an incredible difference, 10 times. We can't just ignore that.

This NDP government's decision to abandon a cost-effective and efficient system for building seniors' facilities means that far fewer long-term care units will be built. With the amount of money that's gone into the two announcements, we could have built 10 times more facilities, and we still have to get those answers from the government, their rationale on why those facilities are costing 10 times more than the previous model, just for the sake of NDP ideology, in which only the government should build and operate and maintain infrastructure and provide services. The money will not stretch as far as it has in the past. Madam Speaker, the seniors need us to do that for them and their families, provide them, you know, with care and to respect the taxpayers' dollars.

Alberta's population of seniors is set to increase by 70 per cent in the next 13 years. If we really need to support seniors, Madam Speaker, and their families, maybe the government should also be thinking about going back to the partnership program and giving the explanation of why these new announcements are costing 10 times. A bill like this one deflects from that priority because, as I've said many times, the government just wants to move ahead with their own ideology, and that's basically what it is. But then it's easier to accomplish, and they deflect from the more urgent needs of long-term care.

Madam Speaker, once again we're seeing that this NDP government focuses on the smaller pieces while hoping that Albertans do not notice what they are doing. I mean, we were just looking at the video yesterday or maybe today on social media when the now Premier was speaking against Energy East, and now the whole government side thinks, like, that they're the biggest champion of pipelines. I mean, the hypocrisy is amazing here, right? If this government wants to ask Albertans their priorities with long-term care, they're likely to find them saying: please provide spaces to ensure that my parents have the care when they need it. They would just presume that the government was doing it in the most practical way possible, but the two announcements that we had from this government show otherwise. On one hand, we had a public investment that doubled the number of seniors' spaces, and now the NDP government is reducing those spaces to almost 10 times less. From a pragmatic point of view, it doesn't make any sense.

To wrap up, Madam Speaker, I don't think that Bill 203 is a piece of legislation that needs to come before this House. The Minister of Health can make that change without introducing this bill. The initiative is fine and can prove of value to Albertans acting as advocates for loved ones who need to find placement. But it's deflecting from a very real issue that the NDP is hoping will go under the radar, and that is, like, moving everything ahead in this province with the NDP ideology and the world view. The members on that side of the House think that that's gone under the radar, but, no, it hasn't. Albertans are seeing through it. I mean, CBC had the latest poll a couple of days ago.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak about Bill 203, the long-term care transparency act. I want to thank the MLA for Red Deer-North for bringing this forward in this Legislature.

As a fellow former health care aide it's something that is really close to my heart. I had the privilege of working at Good Samaritan in long-term care for three years. It's challenging work. I was talking to some people in our community the other day about, you know, what it means to be called to certain careers and certain work. Growing up in an area that had a lot of seniors, especially senior women, pursuing a health care job and working trying to give back to those people in a way that was meaningful for me was something that I really wanted to do. It's been a challenge to see wages for that come up over the last 10 years. I'm 35 now, but when I was working, it was from the time I was 19 to 22. I know that wages have come up over the years. At the time, after three years of work, I was making, I think, roughly $12.50 an hour.

As I've shared before, it's tough work. It's back-breaking work. Unfortunately, there are a lot of WCB claims that come out of that line of work because you are working with a lot of people that need a high level of care, and a lot of that is with people that have lost their mobility over time. Part of that time was working with patients with physical frailty, and then the other part of that time was with patients that had dementia issues, you know, no less challenging. That work encompassed a great number of things: medication, meal assistance, bathing, toileting, getting ready in the morning, and getting ready for bed at night. We had other, of course, complements of staff that helped us do our job: the people that cooked in the kitchen, the people that served, our housekeeping crews, nurses, physio, recreation therapists. It's a lot of people that come together to give care for people that need it in our assisted living facilities, our lodges, our long-term care facilities.

It was actually really disheartening when we heard people from the Conservative Party here say that that wasn't a real job, that looked across the way and said that none of the people over here – you know, health care aides, nurses, social workers, teachers – had ever had a real job. I can say for certain that it certainly felt like I had a real job at the time when I was doing that heavy labour.

It's really important to know what these different facilities have to offer. I just went through the experience of finding my mother housing that is assisted living. She has mental health issues that, unfortunately, because of their nature have turned with age into a lot of physical mobility issues, you know, not knowing how to take her medication on time for many years. The home care that we added money to in our budget was incredibly useful. That was something that really created a big change in my mother's life: light housekeeping, helping her get into the shower, things that were very difficult for me and my siblings to come in from a dispersed area and come together to help her with. It's really good to invest in those things at home.

There's been a huge neglect of housing that hasn't been built in this province for years, a huge neglect of maintenance. I know from working at Good Samaritan that we had to be very careful when we would run water for baths because they were old pipes, so you didn't always get hot water. That facility doesn't even exist now. It's been torn down because it was not maintained over the life of the facility. In Lamont just recently we saw the building of a new lodge. Same thing: we needed an entire new lodge because the facility previous to it had had no substantial investment for decades. When you have to build from the ground up, putting that level of capital into it is huge. That's why it can be, you know, a good measure in the meantime to put a lot of money into home care so that people, while they're at home, can actually have a better quality of life.

You know, when the opposition calls for billions of dollars to be cut out of our budget and is asking us to balance the budget on the backs of these people, it's just incredulous. You can't say that we need to balance the budget but then, of course, ask for facilities to be built in these constituencies, facilities like Willow Square up in Wood Buffalo. It's going to be 144 spaces for people that need housing. You know what? I can't wait to see the information about all of these facilities up online so that families can actually see what is available. When someone doesn't even know if something is in their community or if they're going to have to send their family hours away to find appropriate housing, that's a really stressful time.

You know, just from my own experience, my mom didn't want to move into assisted living. It meant that she was going to lose a substantial amount of autonomy, being able to cook for herself when she could, picking up her own groceries, doing her own laundry, trying to do those things that gave her a feeling of empowerment and confidence. It was really hard to try and show her that there were really great things that could actually give her a greater quality of life in assisted living. She actually fell into this really awkward phase in her life. Because she was 63, she couldn't move somewhere that was for 65 or older. It was only because she has very complex mental health needs that she was able to qualify to go to Sprucewood Manor, and it was very difficult to get that information. It was very difficult on a family that has been doing our best to take care of her for more than 20 years. Just to find a place that could allow her to live on one level and not have to be isolated in her apartment half the time because her legs were too sore and her knees were too sore to be able to go up and down stairs – she was in a basement apartment at the time.

You know, it's small things like this that actually have massive, huge impacts, small policy changes that can actually have ripple effects into helping families take that piece of the burden off themselves. Now when I go to visit my mom, I don't have to spend hours cleaning her apartment and changing her bed and cleaning the rugs. I can actually go and focus on my time with her and spend time with her just talking about the activities that she's been doing, telling her about what's going on in my life. It's actually real quality time that doesn't have to have that extra level of stress.

You know, the cuts that this opposition wants would just have a massive, direct impact on building housing in this province and those front-line services. When I was working – it would have been between roughly the time of 2001 and 2004, so we would have been coming off about five to 10 years of massive, deep cuts. It's those things that are leading to some of those issues that we are trying to address: staffing levels, having buildings that are kept up, where do we have housing, and what's the quality of it? The fact that we can . . . [Mrs. Littlewood's speaking time expired]

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Along with the many other speakers here I rise to speak in support of Bill 203. It's been a long time coming, something like this, and I'm just so glad to have it here. A lot of us have parents who either are in or will soon be in long-term care facilities, and we know the challenges not just of finding an appropriate place where the support will be good and the care will be right for the person but finding it while we manage to keep our own lives afloat and we keep our jobs going.

I was a full-time teacher supporting my family, and my mother needed quite urgently to go from her assisted living placement, which was very suitable for her when she was younger, into something at a higher level of care. All of a sudden I was told, "Find it now," but I didn't have the information. They were basically holding her in the hospital until we could find a place, and that was an extremely stressful situation. We found a place that I think was probably as good as we could get, but we didn't know many of the amenities that would be available and services that would be available. We had to figure those out as we went along. Luckily, the staff were very caring and were very amenable to talking with us and assuring us what they could do. It worked out fine, but to know all that ahead of time would have made the world of difference. The level of care that people need and the kind of care at different stages in their life varies so much that that information is wonderful.

My father was diagnosed with Alzheimer's, and all of a sudden I had to look at walking that tightrope that you do in wanting a facility where he would be able to have some independence and be able to do the things he enjoyed doing yet have the safety and security so that he wouldn't be off wandering through town and being lost, which did happen one time. We were just lucky it wasn't more often. Even a really good facility can occasionally let people slip through the cracks.

But you need the information. You need to know what is available, and you need to know what it costs. I've read horror stories of people going into a long-term care facility and then finding out that it's an extra couple of dollars a day to get walked to the dining room. I know about places like that, where the cost to have somebody oversee medication is another extra cost, where to have someone help a person put on the stockings, you know, for fluid retention is another cost, and so on and so on and so on. For a lot of people on a very fixed – very fixed – income, that makes it just about impossible. But what are they going to do? They do need the care.

As much as I really like the job that home care does, sometimes it is really hard to arrange to have consistent staff come in to do home care and to make sure that they're there at the right time. The right people at the right time on a regular basis can be difficult, and I think that's something we need to work on next. So when you've got this bill out of the way, we can work on getting the bugs out of that.

But for right now I think that this is a very good tool for seniors and for their families to be able to help make the transition into long-term care as smooth as possible. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 203, the Long Term Care Information Act. At first glance such a small bill should not cost a lot to carry out; in fact, it could probably be absorbed by our current in-year spending. I believe at this moment that the bill looks like it would have positive impacts, but we wait to hear back from some stakeholders. I've not had a whole lot of stakeholders rushing to call me, and I hear from other MLAs that they have not had a whole lot of feedback at this point yet with regard to Bill 203, but that might seem to indicate kind of a take-it-or-leave-it attitude in the sector about this bill.

One thing needs to be recognized: there already exists a list of long-term care facilities in Alberta. I believe that it can be improved, absolutely. It is unclear if the bill plans to use the same template as the existing list but with possibly more criteria. If so, what is the purpose of creating an entirely new registry as some of the information is readily available in a list format online at this point? The goal that this bill is trying to serve has already largely been completed, with this information already on the Alberta Health website. In short, it looks like Bill 203 may appear to be somewhat redundant, but the web pages could be updated and, if needed, have some extra columns added for more information.

Alberta Health is capable of creating this website without legislation, I would suggest, and it is unlikely that within the massive Health budget there is no capacity to get this done without there being a bill mandating it. I'm sure that IT consultants, that are prevalent across government, would like another contract. Bill 203 has no clear plan for the functions of this website, whether it will be information only or a one-stop shop for registering with facilities, whether it will have any substantive differences between the existing websites, and what the purpose of creating a new one is over improving an existing one.

The UCP supports efforts to improve the long-term health care system and improve access to information. However, this bill does not represent a substantial solution to fundamental issues in the system. There could have been more useful initiatives in Bill 203 that would address some other issues, issues like wait times for tests and surgeries and placement in care. Instead, Bill 203 tinkers around the fringes but might show some promise. Issues like divorce by nursing home might be better able to be resolved with information like this out there. You know, no one wants mom in one home and dad in another home, possibly a hundred kilometres away, or grandpa and grandma, whichever the case may be. That's not a good situation, and it's not common sense.

Having information available to the person in need of this type of care is beneficial for the person to be able to make an informed decision about a facility rather than a facility being imposed by a continuing care placement co-ordinator. No one wants to be told where they will be forced to live. People like to be able to make the decision themselves along with their family. Even then senior citizens will balk and stammer at their children that, no, they will not go to a nursing home. They refuse to leave the home that they have lived in all these years and raised their family in, being surrounded by all their memories. It is a difficult stage in life for a lot, and it's important that families are able to work through it in a way that is going to create the least amount of anxiety and difficulty as they manoeuvre through that decision-making process.

Admission to a long-term care facility is based on need, and residents can begin the application process to long-term care by calling Health Link, a centralized government authority. One thing we can be sure about is that the population pyramid for Alberta shows that we are going to need a lot more continuing care and long-term care facilities in Alberta. As the baby boomers retire – and they are – long-term care is going to be a growth sector for some time to come, and all efforts to help the sector grow will be welcome.

Thank you for that, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and thank you very much to the Member for Red Deer-North for bringing forward this legislation today that we know will make life better for Albertans, make life better for Albertans who are themselves looking for placement in long-term care but also for family members in times that are often confusing and stressful, thinking about aging loved ones and their needs changing, whether it is that they're aging indeed or whether it's that they have a new chronic condition. It's trying to make life a little bit easier, a little bit clearer, and giving folks the right information to support themselves in making the right decision around their care.

I think there is nothing more important than supporting folks during difficult times of transition. I do sincerely want to express my appreciation to the Member for Red Deer-North for bringing up this initiative. It came from her own lived experience, helping people to navigate these systems, and then saying: you know, it would be so much easier if the government had a really clear place on the website where all this information was available and accessible. I appreciate the expertise that she brings from her lived experience.

I also have to say that I am not shocked but that I am disappointed that the Member for Calgary-Greenway continues to lobby for private health care, saying that we're making bad decisions around having public builds in communities like Fort McMurray, where I am so proud that we're building the Willow Square long-term care facility. This facility has been needed there for decades. I've visited the folks who live in the current long-term care space that we have in the hospital, on the top floor. The staff there do an amazing job, but I can tell you that it makes a big difference to have access to outdoor space in your home. It makes a very big difference to have outdoor space. For the Member for Calgary-Greenway to say that this important public build – we are honouring the community's wishes and the wishes of his own Health critic when he said to us: we need to build at Willow Square. This is something where I think that if I were a member of that caucus, hearing attacks on this important public build, I would feel really disrespected. So I have to say to the people of Fort McMurray: we respect you.

To the member from Fort McMurray, who's been advocating for this project in spite of his own caucus colleagues who keep pushing back, saying that they should be building more private care facilities and not moving forward with these important public builds: we stand with the people of Fort McMurray. We're going to move forward on this project. We know it's the right thing to do even when the members opposite keep ragging on us to move forward with shutting down these important public investments. Ensuring that people have a clear record of what options are available to them and where in the province is a value that this side of the House shares with our caucus. We are very grateful that the MLA for Red Deer-North brought this bill forward to enable ease of access to information to support Albertans during this difficult time of transition.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, for giving us the opportunity to debate this in a thoughtful way and to be able to move on this important initiative. Thank you again to the Member for Red Deer-North and to everyone who's ever worked in long-term care. We know that this is difficult work. We know that it is work that is valued, and we are proud to be a government that values and respects this. We're going to continue to work in ways that support Alberta families.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but the time allotted for this part of business has now concluded.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Members' Salaries

502. Mr. Fildebrandt moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services to reduce by 5 per cent the salaries payable to members of the Executive Council under section 1 of the Executive Council salaries order and the indemnity allowance and other allowances payable to Members of the Legislative Assembly under sections 1(a), 3(2), and 4 of the members' allowances order and to not approve any increases to these reduced salaries and allowances until such time as the Minister of Finance tables a balanced budget for that fiscal year in the Assembly.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my honour today to put forward Motion 502. Motion 502 calls for members of this House to ask the Standing Committee on Members' Services to reduce all MLA pay and indemnities by 5 per cent until the budget is balanced. We have been running deficits for more than a decade now, since 2008. In that time, our net financial assets have gone from healthy savings in the bank to a debt that is going to soon come to nearly a hundred billion dollars. Our net financial assets have declined by $128 billion from the time that the former government went into deficit in 2008 until the current government proposes, theoretically, to balance the budget sometime in the next decade.

This motion here is to try and focus the mind. As legislators we all come at things from a different point of view in many cases. I'm sure members across have a pretty radically different idea of how we should balance the budget, but I do believe that most of them at least theoretically believe that the budget should be balanced at least once or twice every decade. And I will say that they didn't create the deficit – they inherited one – but they are responsible for it now. They are the government today, and it's time to move forward. Regardless of who the blame lies with, we have to do something about this. Continued deficits will put critical public services in jeopardy for future generations.

The purpose of this motion, cutting MLA pay by 5 per cent, is not designed to reduce MLA pay. It is designed to focus the mind, to get us focused on a particular task. It doesn't prescribe how they should balance the budget. I have my own idea, and I hope they have an idea. They have no idea. It doesn't prescribe how we should balance the budget – I think we would have different prescriptions about how to do it – but it is trying to get us to collectively take some ownership over the idea that our most fundamental role as legislators, not just as cabinet but as legislators, is to oversee public spending and finance responsibly.

Now, I've brought this forward in the spirit of nonpartisanship. I've not prescribed how we should balance the budget. It's not supposed to be a Conservative motion, a Liberal motion, a socialist motion. It is just trying to get us focused on the general task at hand. I'm not saying that MLAs are paid too much or too little, but I am saying that it is reasonable for us to have performance measures. Now, we do this in the public service already. In this government many of their own senior bureaucrats have pay at risk, which is essentially a kind of reverse bonus. You have your salary, that you're entitled to every year, but if they don't meet certain performance measures, then at least some of that salary is clawed back. A private member with no extra pay in this House currently receives a salary of $127,296 a year. A 5 per cent rollback would bring that to $120,931. The Premier has a salary of $270,504. This would bring it down to $256,978.

This would be a temporary rollback. I don't want to get into the business of how much an MLA should make. Should it be more? Should it be less? I believe that that is a decision that should be set by an independent body free of all of us, who obviously have an interest in that decision. It should be an independent body that makes the recommendation. That was attempted once, but then it became political again. It needs to be independent and arm's length from all parties. I don't believe it should be the Members' Services Committee setting what our pay is and everything else. It needs to be arm's length, but because it's not, I think it's reasonable for us to include pay at risk, performance measures for MLAs.

If we are seeing our net financial assets plummet by $128 billion in just a little over a decade, that means we have to fix something. I don't want this to be simply tokenism, that we're just going to cut MLA pay and that's it and not do anything. I want this to be pay at risk, performance pay, designed to get us thinking about the critical task of balancing the budget.

Now, the NDP have put forward a plan. I don't mean to be too mean here – I would like their support – but their balanced budget plan has given no details about how they will get to a balanced budget by whatever date they're going by now. It might be 2024; I have a hard time keeping track. But if they are confident in their balanced budget plan, if they are confident that they will balance the budget by the date that they have set, then surely they should have no problem voting for a motion that would see MLA pay cut by 5 per cent temporarily. If they're confident in their balanced budget plan, they'll get that 5 per cent back relatively quickly.

Deficits cost regular people. They cost regular people by the need to cut government spending and social services as interest begins to crowd out real program spending. They hurt real people when we have to raise taxes on them to pay for the interest on the debt, let alone to pay back the principal of it. Deficits do hurt real people, so we need to take some ownership over that. To all parties, all members, regardless of what side you sit on, I believe that this is a reasonable proposition.

Now, the party whip notwithstanding, I do know that there are members on this side of the House, who I've spoken to privately in times past, who have supported this idea that MLAs should take a temporary pay cut until the budget is balanced. I know that among my former Wildrose colleagues, there were certainly a number who supported doing just that. I'm not sure what the party whip has ordered, but I do know that in their hearts some members do support that.

I shouldn't engage in speculation and conjecture, but I'll go ahead and do that anyway. I've been told that the House leaders of the three recognized parties in this House got together a long time ago and tried to just – they want this issue to go away: as few speakers as possible, that all the parties get together and just vote it down so it doesn't become an issue. I hope that that is not the case; I truly do. Please prove me wrong, that this is mere speculation and conjecture, that this is merely the grapevine around the Legislature or the living wall, that I think is costing us a fortune. I hope that this is not the case because I think this is an opportunity for members in all parties, like we did on the previous bill, from the Member for Red Deer-North, to set partisanship aside, to set ideology aside, and to try to do something for the greater good of Albertans, that we can show that we are in this together.

You know, people in the oil patch during the height of the downturn would have been grateful for a 5 per cent pay cut. So many of them just got a 100 per cent pay cut. Many of them had 30 per cent and 50 per cent pay cuts, and their salaries and wages in many cases have not recovered. So many Albertans would have been grateful for a 5 per cent pay cut after the unemployment and economic downturn that we have had.

We are going to be paying the bill for these deficits for decades to come. This is a chance for all of us to show that we are in it together, that this is not merely cutting MLA pay for the sake of it but that it is doing it with a measurable, targeted goal with a timeline. If members in all parties, with the various dates they're proposing to balance the budget by, are confident in their plans that they can follow through on it, then they should surely have the confidence to vote for this right now.

5:10

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the motion?

Seeing none, the hon. member to close debate.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, speculation and conjecture are not always wrong. This is exactly what I was told would be the case, that, unfortunately, too many people don't want this to be known. They don't want this to be an issue. I know that if I voted against cutting MLA pay by 5 per cent until the budget is balanced, I would have a hard time looking my constituents in the face.

I have been proud to vote largely as an independent long before I was an independent. I've defied the party whip many times. I'm very proud to be the MLA who has voted against the NDP more than any member of this House. It's a distinction I carry with pride in Strathmore-Brooks. But I am disappointed. I've never seen a private member's motion or a private member's bill with literally zero speakers other than the member proposing the motion.

Now, clearly, the House leaders must have been talking to each other. You know, we like to see parties working together across the aisle. We want to see bipartisanship, multipartisanship. There's a saying in Washington that when both parties agree on something, it means that both parties are screwing you.

I know there are members here who in their hearts support it, and I'm sure that some of the members not here very specifically support this. It is sad to see the whip of partisan politics stifling the ability of people to represent their constituents and their own conscience in the House. We know what happens in all parties, but it is sad seeing that it's outright collusion between the major parties in this House. I hope that their silence is just a sign that they agree with me and that we'll have unanimous consent, clearly, but I fear that that is simply not the case.

But I want to thank members for listening. I guess you get out to go to dinner early. Perhaps it's just that everybody is hungry, and that's why no one is standing to speak to this. I would ask, members, that if you're not willing to speak, you at least agree to a standing recorded vote and have your name recorded so that constituents, your constituents, know if you agree with this decision. Then you should be proud of this decision. You should be willing to stand by it when you ask them to re-elect you.

Madam Speaker, I'll close debate by thanking you and the members for their time. I hope that the silence is just a sign of the unanimous consent of the House to pass a motion calling on MLAs to take a 5 per cent temporary pay cut until the budget is balanced.

Thank you.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just noting that we have accomplished a great deal of work today and noting the time, I would like to ask for adjournment of the House until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Bill 10

An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements

[Adjourned debate April 19: Mr. S. Anderson]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Good morning, everyone, and thanks, Madam Speaker. A pleasure to be here today to speak to Bill 10, which is An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements. It's a pleasure, again, to rise here today. Bill 10 is an act that enables municipalities to create what's being called the property assessed clean energy, or PACE, program. Essentially, it enables municipalities to pass a bylaw, I understand, where they provide a mechanism for property owners to finance affordable energy efficiency, renewable energy, and water conservation projects or upgrades to their property. It does this, apparently, by allowing repayment to be collected through property owners' municipal tax bills.

It's commonly assumed that one of the biggest barriers preventing a property owner from upgrading their property's energy efficiency is the large initial investment required. There are very few people that can afford to spend tens of thousands of dollars these days installing solar panels, converting to geothermal, replacing their existing windows, et cetera, or upgrading their insulation. Bill 10 attempts to address these challenges, providing a unique financing tool which allows property owners and developers a mechanism to finance these kinds of improvements and upgrades to their property through the new tax assessment mechanism. Therefore, the repayment comes through monies collected through the owner's municipal tax bill.

When the government first tabled Bill 10, I was cautiously optimistic, actually. However, once I began to dig deeper into the legislation, I began to have concerns with the legislation itself. To begin with, I have concerns that a lot of details are being left, as usual, to regulations. We've dealt with this in the House on many different bills over the years, and it continues to be a problem and is very problematic in this one as well.

Another concern I have is: what requirements are being placed on property owners when they sell a property with a PACE program charge on their property tax? Obviously, there needs to be a level of buyer beware if this is implemented, and anyone looking to purchase property should be expected to do their own due diligence, as they should, before purchasing in order to understand what obligations they are taking ownership of. But PACE programs are still not very common, and it's unlikely that a majority of Albertans will know they even exist for some time, I expect. Unfortunately, there's nothing concrete in the legislation itself that addresses the issue of notifying prospective property owners that a property has a PACE property tax obligation. This absolutely needs to be addressed.

While it might seem that I have nothing but problems with the legislation, let me say this. I absolutely understand the government for keeping this legislation optional to municipalities. One of the concerns I heard from my friends in the Rural Municipalities association was that the legislation would create an obligation on the municipalities. Bill 10, in fact, does not mandate or force any municipality that doesn't want to participate in this venture so far. However, the legislation is enabling in nature. It allows municipalities the ability to ultimately decide if they want to institute a program or not. If a municipality decides that it isn't interested, from what we understand so far, it's up to the council to simply decide whether they wish to do nothing or carry on with business as usual.

If a municipality decides that offering a PACE program to its citizens is something worth while, however, their municipal council will be enabled through this legislation to pass a bylaw establishing the program in their municipality. Nothing is mandatory, therefore, as is clearly stated in their information briefings that we obtained, and we do appreciate that.

As a former councillor I remember how technical, tedious, and time consuming bylaws can be to draft. Having legal counsel review all of the minor details that have to be perfected before a bylaw can even be introduced is often very tedious and sobering. There is a real cost, not only in human capital but in fiscal capital as well, to municipalities when they seek to make such major changes to an existing system, particularly an assessment that's been there for decades.

While many bylaws are relatively straightforward – for example, the property tax bylaw that is being used today – this is the first time that something like this has come to the province, and the technical nature of the program itself is fairly complex. I have concerns that municipalities that are interested in establishing this program will have to spend an inordinate amount of time, energy, and funds to develop and create a proper working bylaw for this purpose.

While there is PACE legislation in a number of U.S. states according to the ministry, it is not clear how transferable an American-style PACE bylaw will be, if it is transferable at all. I understand that they modelled a lot of the things in this legislation from the country to the south, so it remains difficult for us to really understand how well it's working and what the pitfalls may be. While the government has verbally committed to supplying interested municipalities with a bylaw template, there's nothing in the legislation, actually, that ensures that that is the case or even that the bylaw template will actually be workable for all Alberta municipalities.

Something I heard from a number of municipalities, actually, specifically small and mid-sized cities and some of the rural and smaller urban centres, was a concern that Bill 10 would result in municipalities being tasked with administering their PACE program. Many of these municipalities are already stressed or at the breaking point in terms of capacity. There are very few municipalities, if any, that would be able to take on all the additional responsibilities required to administer such a program.

Now, the government has said, in fairness, that municipalities shouldn't be concerned since the administrator that's being proposed here may be – and the operative word "may" is in legislation everywhere; it's in here today – the Energy Efficiency

Alberta agency. Unfortunately, I've been through Bill 10 a couple of times, and I can't find absolutely anywhere in the legislation where it refers to the Energy Efficiency Alberta agency or describes any specific rules on administering the program except under part 7, section 390.9(h), which states:

The Minister may make regulations respecting clean energy improvements, including, without limitation, regulations . . .

- (h) respecting clean energy improvement programs, including the administration of clean energy improvement programs.

Furthermore, section 4(b) of Bill 10 would amend section 252 of the Municipal Government Act to include the following:

- (2) For the purposes of subsection (1), a borrowing made by a municipality to pay for costs associated with clean energy improvements as defined in Part 10, Division 6.1 does not count against the debt limit or debt service limit of the municipality.

If Bill 10 isn't going to leave municipalities on the hook for administering the program, why would they need to have the ability to borrow to pay for costs associated with the program? This does not seem to compute. It's a little bit confusing. Basically, the government is asking for members of the Legislature, in this case, to trust it. Unfortunately, this government over the course of its current mandate has given members of this Assembly precious few reasons to trust it to do what it says. I'm sorry, Madam Speaker, but I will believe it when I see it, not a second before that.

Moving to another of my concerns with Bill 10, which is that municipalities will be getting into the lending business, during our briefing for Bill 10 the government was adamant that, unlike the existing PACE programs in Halifax and Toronto, where two cities are responsible for not only administering the program but financing it as well, Alberta's proposed PACE program will be funded through private lenders, apparently. The Toronto and Halifax models see PACE funding taken from those cities' operating reserves, in fact. This means that the critical services the citizens of those cities depend on possibly could be going unfunded.

As I just mentioned, the government has told us that the proposed legislation being debated here today would see lending institutions as the financiers of the PACE program in Alberta. However, if we take a closer look through the legislation, it is anything but clear about who is actually responsible for the funding of the program.

Now, during the technical briefing that a lot of us attended, there was a slide presentation that indicated various things, but it certainly is not explicit in the bill itself. For example, referring to section 7 again, section 390.4(1) states:

A municipality and the owner of a property shall enter into a clean energy improvement agreement before a clean energy improvement is made to that property.

So they're talking about what kind of an agreement is necessary. Bill 10 doesn't say that the lending company and the property owner enter into an agreement; it says: the municipality and the property owner. It doesn't necessarily make it clear what we're talking about here. If anything, the legislation is stating, from what we can observe, that the municipality appears to be the lender.

Again in section 7, section 390.4(2) describes what a clean energy improvement really is, and I quote again:

A clean energy improvement agreement must, subject to the regulations . . .

- (c) indicate that the owner of the property will be liable to pay the clean energy improvement tax.

It also says that it has to

- (d) include the amount required to recover the costs of the clean energy improvement and the method of calculation used to determine that amount, [and]

- (e) state the period over which the amount required to recover the costs of the clean energy improvement will be paid.

Those terms I've just mentioned are commonly found in most lending agreements between a lender and a borrower. In fact, despite the government's insistence that municipalities are not responsible for lending, Bill 10, in fact, seems to state that they are. Unfortunately, once you have a chance to really dig down into the red meat of this legislation itself, it becomes apparent that Bill 10 is nothing more than an attempt to get government directly involved in a unique lending business for home improvement. There are already plenty of options for people who are interested in upgrading their property, including the CHIP home equity mortgages for seniors program and home improvement lines of credit in regular financial institutions.

I have a number of other concerns that I haven't had a chance to address today, including how this legislation will impact a property owner's ability to obtain a mortgage, concerning the likelihood of interest rates increasing, and the new, more onerous stress tests that have been imposed by the federal government.

To close, Madam Speaker, I simply have too many unanswered questions and concerns, and I'm unable to support this bill in the current form. Here we are at second reading, so I will be happy to hear what the members from the government side have to say regarding some of these concerns. Hopefully, during the Committee of the Whole process we'll be able to determine what is really behind this bill, what some of the answers are to the questions that I have just raised, and what kind of thoughts there are behind this legislation. As it is right now, we are not able to support this bill in its current form.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements. We are aware this bill is a measure to enable bylaws for property assessed clean energy, or, as the acronym states, PACE. These bylaws will allow property owners to finance green energy improvements and tie the financing to their property taxes. Well, I can say that I wasn't entirely surprised to see yet another bill from this NDP government that expands powers of taxation. If you can count on this government for anything, you can count on it to find new and creative ways to increase taxes on everyday Albertans. I'm sure the government will tell us that this is an entirely voluntary program. It will tell us that we are overstating what this bill will do, and certainly they will tell Albertans that this is not a tax increase. So let's get this out of the way to begin with and be clear about what we are talking about.

On the face of it, what PACE will enable is for property owners to finance energy improvements such as solar panels and pay back the cost through increased property taxes. Now, it is true that this will be a voluntary program. It will be up to property owners to decide whether or not they want to make these improvements, and in that sense it is not mandatory. This financing program is already available, Madam Speaker. I believe that through Enmax you can actually have them install solar panels on your home – I think the cost is around $30,000 – and they will then amortize the payment of those solar panels back through the utilities. In reality we have a market-driven force that is already offering these services to Albertans, yet the government has decided to get involved in this. Once again, when we see the government getting involved in a program where the market is already willing and capable and there's already demand for it, I question what the motives for this intrusion in the market are.

Now, it is our responsibility as legislators to look a little deeper and consider what the longer term consequences of this program may be. In doing this, we need to realize the implications of the fact that the financing of these projects becomes tied to properties rather than to individuals. If it was the other way around, it wouldn't be an issue. Individuals could seek financing for these energy-related projects, and they would be responsible for the costs and responsibilities moving forward. However, given that the financing becomes tied to the properties, the decisions made by one individual or entity under this program will need to be borne by any future property owners through their taxes, property taxes, I might add.

This raises a whole host of potential problems that we need to be cognizant of. Perhaps the biggest issue is the impact on property affordability for Albertans. In the challenging economic circumstances that we face, too many Albertans are struggling to pay for basic necessities, and we need to be very careful with any legislation that will increase this burden. I'm sure that the government would agree that we want to be careful not to cause nonmarket increases to the cost of property and housing in Alberta.

We also want to make sure that we do not increase the tax burden on Albertans. According to the Fraser Institute the average Canadian already spends more on taxes than they do on food, housing, and other basic necessities combined. While there is a worthwhile discussion on the benefits of green energy improvements, we need to ask ourselves whether it is wise to place these interests ahead of the affordability of life for Albertans. Ultimately, it doesn't matter if you own property or if you rent it. It doesn't matter if it is commercial or residential property. When the government encourages these improvements, the costs are ultimately passed on to businesses and consumers.

Madam Speaker, if individuals want to make decisions on energy-related improvements or other property improvements, then they should do so within the scope of the free market. To my mind, the government should not be using programs like this to influence the free market and unencumbered choices of individuals or other entities.

Madam Speaker, I would also like to address some of the concerns here surrounding the nature and conditions of the financing of this bill. Normally when a person seeks out a loan, they approach a financial institution, which will look at a variety of factors to determine whether or not it makes sense to issue the loan. Under the auspices of this proposed legislation, traditional factors such as income and credit are not considered; rather, loan eligibility is based on property information. This raises the question of whether the government has considered issues surrounding solvency of these loans. As it stands, some people find themselves in financial situations where they are unable to pay their property tax bills. These people are often Albertans who are struggling financially. Is it fair or compassionate to offer financing to these people that they may be unable to pay in the future? I think the government should refrain from taking actions that would extend irresponsible financing for nonnecessities that may place further burden on vulnerable Albertans.

You may notice a theme developing here. I've raised concerns around market intervention, concerns surrounding negative impacts in relation to property affordability, concerns surrounding unconventional financing conditions. In keeping with this theme, I would like to address the proposed market restrictions that would apply to those who would choose to access this program. Specifically, people who would want to make improvements under PACE would be restricted to doing so through government-approved installers. Now, Madam Speaker, if the purpose of this government is to stimulate growth in the economy and get Albertans back to work, they have to ask themselves: how much is the cost to the government, to other taxpayers in order for them to do that?

I have always been an advocate, Madam Speaker, for allowing the conditions in the market to be able to increase the size of your economy through natural and organic measures such as stimulating investment, incentivizing foreign investment to come in. In this situation this is a government program that when taken away, those jobs will be in jeopardy. So it is a short-term fix to a long-term problem, and I'm not in favour of that and never have been.

Now, if the government's intention is to ingrain efficiency in this program, then they are doing the right thing. Through this government approval process they are restricting the market and trying to pick winners and losers. This is definitely a common theme with this government. If we really wanted to encourage the increased adoption of green energy improvements, then we would let the market work and let the market decide who the most effective and efficient installers are. Instead, this is just another example of the government-knows-best ideology that plagues this NDP government and, in fact, hinders the adoption of the very improvements that the government has placed a priority on, namely jobs for Albertans.

Madam Speaker, this legislation is simply not adequate in its current form. It is poorly thought out, it needs drastic improvements, and it leaves far too much to regulation. We live in a time when solar photovoltaics are less expensive and more accessible than they have been at any given time in the past. As in this case, with numerous other energy efficiency improvements available to property owners, I believe that in the future, as we increase our ability to provide those photovoltaics, there will be a time when there will be a natural gravitation by the market forces to putting these things in. But at this point the cost comparatives do not incent regular Albertans to be able to move to this. Yet here this NDP government is stuck in the past, thinking the answer is yet another government program. The future is brought to us every day by the free market, whether the NDP recognizes it or not.

It is for this and all these reasons that I have mentioned above that I cannot and will not support this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today in the House to speak on Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements. Bill 10 allows municipalities to pass a bylaw creating a property assessed clean energy program. A property assessed clean energy program allows homeowners to finance energy efficiency, renewable energy, water conservation projects, and upgrades to their property. This is done by allowing homeowners to repay this investment through their property taxes.

I think most reasonable people would love to have major upgrades to their homes and have it be done. Every homeowner has projects that need to be done, and I'm sure people would love to save money on their energy bill by pursuing green renovations. The question becomes: who pays for these renovations? Is it the government's responsibility to encourage homeowners to invest in certain capital projects or to regulate the market to allow these renovations to take place? As has been the case with this government, taxpayers have traditionally been on the hook to pay for energy efficiency upgrades. For example, one can look at the residential no-charge energy savings program put forward by this government last year. This program wasted taxpayers' dollars on hiring contractors to install LED lights and low-flow shower heads in homes across the province. While the goals of this program were notable, taxpayer money was wasted, which pushed us further into debt.

While many homeowners did see the benefits of lower utility bills as the result of this program, one can see that the cost to taxpayers just wasn't worth it, which brings us to the bill that is before the House right now, Bill 10. Now, Bill 10 is a better bill than some proposals that we have seen from this government previously. For example, the risks of this project are no longer on the taxpayer but on the private lenders. However, too many questions remain for me to support this bill.

One such risk is that the property assessed clean energy programs do not have to provide the same disclosures to homeowners that traditional lenders have to provide. This would cause financial problems to the homeowners down the line if they ever get overextended on their financial obligations, and we know that too much debt on a home is just as bad as too much debt on a government. As I said earlier, in this economy, with this government burdening families with their tax grabs, household debt is slowly and steadily increasing. Do we really want to create a program that would encourage families to go further into debt?

Another such risk is that homeowners that have used property assessed clean energy programs to finance projects have had a much more difficult time when selling their homes. This means that homeowners may be stuck living in homes until a payout is reached. Regulations and consultations can be done with realtors to mitigate this problem, but we never see the results of those regulations prior to the bill being passed. How do we know in the future that there will not be a large group of people who can no longer sell their homes? What do we do then? What do they do?

Furthermore, one should acknowledge the concern with organizations that do not pay property taxes. How can they access the funds to make improvements to their buildings? One would think that energy efficient projects would be just as desirable for nonprofits as they would be for homeowners. In my riding there are many nonprofits and charities that do amazing work. However, they often have big capital needs that need to be taken care of. Nonprofits and charities also pay for water and electricity. I'm sure they would love to be able to take advantage of this program. However, they do not pay property taxes, so are they excluded from this program? How can they get capital to finance much-needed improvements?

I don't believe it's the government's job to try and direct you to buy green energy projects. The government's job is to set the conditions so that private citizens can prosper, something this government has failed to do. The government's role shouldn't be to encourage you to buy one product over another or to pick winners or losers. Homeowners should be the ones making the decisions on how they would like to upgrade their house, if at all, and the government needs to stay out of it and focus instead on growing the economy and creating jobs. They could start by removing the job-killing carbon tax that has been burdening Alberta families for years.

I think there are too many questions on this bill right now for me to be supportive of it. The government is telling us to trust them, that they will get the regulations right. They're saying to trust them, that it will all work out. How are we supposed to trust them? We don't know what the regulations are going to be before the bill passes. It's just a little too risky. This may not work out at all, but what do we do then? The last three years haven't worked out when Albertans have trusted this government, so why would it work now?

In closing, Madam Speaker, I'll be voting against Bill 10. While the goals of this bill are notable, I believe it is an overreach by the government, with too many questions remaining unanswered. But I look forward to a rigorous debate and conversation that, hopefully, will be able to conclude and maybe teach us what they really mean with this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to my hon. colleague from Highwood for his insight into the conversation on Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements. You know, the hon. Member for Highwood made some interesting comments there and raised some significant concerns, and I do hope that we'll hear some significant dialogue from members of the government side in regard to the sort of intent with this bill and, certainly, why current financial institutions are not enough and why government intervention is necessary at this point in time to further this project.

I know there are a number of questions that my hon. colleague has, particularly around affordability for those entering the housing market and what an improvement or additional increase in property tax would mean to those trying to access capital to purchase their first home. We know that there are a number of concerns around that already given income-testing increases and the high prices currently in our economy, housing prices. Certainly, we know that having this caveat on the title in particular would create more challenges, particularly for young people, for millennials, I would say, right now entering the housing market and having access to that capital. That would work against them.

I know that, you know, my hon. colleague has some significant questions surrounding that because we've all got younger people in our life. I certainly am very close to the millennial area, and that would be definitely a concern for those in and around my age group. The hon. Member for Highwood has children and nephews and nieces and those that are going to be facing these, as many people do in this room. There are some challenges around that, so I hope that my hon. colleague from Highwood will get some answers to his questions, particularly as to why current financial institutions and the ATB bank in particular aren't necessarily the way to do this. Maybe it is. Maybe this is the bank that the government is choosing to facilitate this loan program through. I'm not really quite sure what the plan is.

I know my hon. colleague has concerns around that for those that default on paying their property taxes. Is the municipality now responsible for that? Probably that's the case, and in turn that puts some burden on the taxpayer, increased burden on the taxpayer in particular. Solar panels are a movable asset, quite easily movable. If a mortgage was defaulted on and a bank were to take over and those solar panels were to go missing, what is the process for that? Who is responsible? Does the caveat on the title still exist for those upgrades, or does the municipality step in? Does the province step in? There are a lot of questions in particular surrounding that area that I think my hon. colleague would need some answers on.

I'm just wondering if my hon. colleague from Highwood has any additional comments or questions that maybe would help further clarify questions to the government in getting some of these answers that I know he so desperately seeks as well as other members in the United Conservative caucus. I hope that the Member for Highwood would be willing to offer some additional comment in regard to that just to help facilitate this conversation and this debate here today.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, my colleague raises some interesting points. I mean, young families now who are just starting off – buying homes, getting mortgages – and putting themselves into a debt situation to start their futures, once again to try and take advantage of an opportunity, potentially could put themselves deeper into debt without their knowledge of it because it's going to be based on their assessment of their taxes. Again, their homes may not be marketable in the future, so there's another additional burden on these young people, and I hope my colleagues across the way will be able to explain what that means.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements, is something that I was very happy to see come forward. Both out in the community and in talking to many stakeholders in my community, their biggest concern with energy upgrades has always been access to capital. Two examples of this came to mind when I first saw the legislation. One is a bit more personal.

You know, my dad has been talking about trying to put solar panels on his house for about 15 years now, and every time he looks at it, he just hasn't been able to both make retirement work and also put solar panels on his roof. An act like this is one more tool to make that accessible for him. Indeed, I've heard those concerns echoed by many of my constituents when I'm out in the community and knocking on doors, everything from somebody needing to replace a furnace, that could potentially fall under here, or new windows. There are so many improvements that can become very cost prohibitive if you haven't had the opportunity to plan for it long term.

The other stakeholder that immediately came to mind was, of course, my local food bank. They've been talking about how to reduce their bills for quite a while. Their concern was that there are a lot of rebates, but they need the start-up capital. For an organization like the food bank to get that capital, that means that it's money that they have to take away from their operating services, so they've been very hesitant on pursuing a lot of energy efficiency things. Of course, they already have LEDs and some of the most efficient freezers they can find, but to tackle energy efficiency further, they really need to start looking at things like solar panels and a new heating system. So I was very happy to see this come forward.

Now, of course, this legislation will only impact property owners. I haven't had an opportunity to talk to my food bank yet to determine whether or not they own their property, but it is certainly within the capacity of a not-for-profit that does or for the property owner on behalf of the nonprofit to pursue those energy upgrades.

I was very happy to see this, and, you know, this is legislation that will see more investment in green jobs here in Alberta. Certainly, I know this is something that the electricians have been talking about quite a bit, and I've been hearing them wanting something a bit more for a number of years now, so I'm happy to see that we are now starting to look at how we can make it more accessible for all property owners to pursue these types of investments in their homes.

I was very happy to see that. Of course, this is something that the municipalities will have to make the decision on to pursue. You know, very soon I would hope that we will see several municipalities move forward with that.

You know, I think that this is a great piece of legislation. I think it empowers a lot of Albertans right across the province, and we'll really start to see the investments right across the income levels. I was happy to see that, and I hope everybody will support this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was listening intently to the Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert, and I just have a couple of questions that I'd like to ask him if he would be willing to answer. The first question. He said that this would make it more accessible. Well, we already have programs and already have the private market that are actually doing this. Enmax, as I said in my statements, has already offered the program for those people who want to buy in. My question is: is there a need for additional? Were there studies that were done? Was there an outcry or a demand by Albertans that this government received in order for them to be able to get this mandate to be able to move forward on this bill?

The second question I have. First of all, it's going to be downloaded onto municipalities, so they now become tax collectors for this type of a program, and they also become provincial government program deliverers. So this is a provincial government mandate that they are downloading onto the municipalities. The question that I have is: will they be compensated for this extended increase in scope and mandate?

If the Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert could answer those questions, it would be very helpful to this side.

The Deputy Speaker: Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Yeah. Thank you. To address the first question, of course, all of the current programs are mostly rebates or things that you need start-up capital for. What this legislation does is provide the start-up capital for these improvements so that things like the food bank don't have to fund raise for years and take money away from things like their programming that they already have and so that they can, you know, reduce their costs so that more of their expenses can go directly to programming. The same, of course, can be said of residents and constituents.

On the second piece, of course, the municipalities are already collecting property tax. Funding under this legislation will be collected with property tax, so they're already doing that. My understanding is that the administration will be under the climate office. While I haven't heard anything from the minister on whether or not there will be any expected costs to the municipalities, I can't foresee too much of a massive shift in their current operations.

Mr. Hunter: I appreciate the answer. First of all, to my first question, my question was whether or not the market is sufficient, and you said that it wasn't sufficient because other organizations might have to do fundraising to be able to do this. In reality, Enmax will come into your organization or into your building, and they will amortize it through the payment of your utilities. I said that this is already the case.

Once again, if the member could give us clarity on this side – it would be very helpful – if there was a need by the public or by Albertans to be able to have this expanded scope of delivery. If you could answer that, that would be very, very helpful.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's a privilege to rise to speak on Bill 10. I just want to make a few comments, address some of the questions that have been raised by some of my colleagues on this side, and also address something I think I heard from the other side as well.

Generally speaking, the Alberta Party caucus is supportive of renewable energy. We're supportive of programs and initiatives that make not just renewable energy but home energy efficiency improvements more affordable to Albertans. These, I think, should be seen generally as good things. Of course, we always have to be prudent and cautious in terms of how we go about implementing such programs, and with this particular bill I do have some questions. My general inclination and I think the general inclination of our caucus would be likely to support the bill, but again we do have a few questions and want to dig into a few things.

Just in terms of first principles and the fundamentals and basics of the bill I would note that what this bill does is simply enable municipalities to choose to pass a bylaw that would establish a property assessed clean energy program, or a PACE program. That does not compel any municipality to do so.

In terms of the question that was asked by Cardston-Taber-Warner about whether this is something that is a result of demand from Albertans or just something the government dreamed up all on its own, this is something, as I understand it, that is a result of consultation with municipalities, with home builders, with Albertans who have said, you know, that this is the kind of thing that they'd like to see. I take the government at their word that, in fact, municipalities are asking for this. This is not a unique program that is the first ever conceived of here in Alberta. In fact, we're by some measures a little bit late to the game on this and catching up in implementing such legislation.

In terms of impact on the municipalities themselves one of the things that I think is important to note in the bill is that Energy Efficiency Alberta could administer the program on behalf of a municipality if the municipality so chose. I think that's an area that smaller municipalities may find compelling. They may not find that they have the sufficient expertise internally or would choose to want to ramp that up, spend the money to do so. I'm pleased to see that.

You know, in terms of the model itself it's not unique. When my neighbours approached us and said, "We thought maybe it might be a nice idea to pave our back alley, make it asphalt instead of gravel, reduce the dust so that the kids have somewhere to play," we had the option to pay for that through our property tax over time as opposed to having a significant capital outlay in the beginning. We pay a small bit of interest in doing that, and it comes out of our property taxes every month. It also, I would strongly suggest, enhances the value of our home and all the homes on either side of the block. I look at this program as something quite similar.

I also would note that it isn't just solar. Eligible improvements under section 7 of the bill include, yes, solar power but also upgraded insulation, windows and doors, high-efficiency heating and cooling systems. It's more than just solar panels on the roof.

You know, one of the questions I believe it was the Member for Airdrie asked: "Well, let's say that there's a foreclosure, heaven forbid. What happens if the solar panels that were on the roof go mysteriously in the middle of the night?" Well, the same thing that would happen if someone were to foreclose on their home and decide to take fittings and fixtures that are part of the house. If you took all the interior doors with you when you foreclosed, I can assure you that the bank would not look upon that very favourably and would come after you for that. I can only imagine that the same things would apply for solar panels or your upgraded windows or anything else. So I would say that that as an objection to this bill is a spurious one.

Speaking of the UCP, I would ask them: what is their plan for renewable energy? What is their plan as it relates to climate in any way, frankly, aside from doing their version of crossing their fingers and hoping it isn't really a problem? I would suggest that this is the sort of thing that as a government we ought to be considering: ways of reducing energy costs, reducing heat leakage from our homes in our 10-month winters that we seem to suffer here. Whatever we can do to insulate our buildings, both commercial and residential, in a more efficient and effective way should be seen as a good thing.

So to the degree this bill achieves that, I'm certainly quite interested in supporting these sorts of initiatives, in fact, if they do meet those objectives.

When I go and tackle a bill, the first thing I do is that I look for data. I look for the evidence. I found a very interesting study out of the United States done by the director of the Housing Finance Policy Centre at the Urban Institute and a senior financial methodologist at the same institution. They did a study and determined that after taking financing cost into account, the return on a PACE program for residential homeowners in the United States ranged from $199 all the way up to $8,882. In their words: "That is, the homeowner recovered more than their investment."

The other very interesting and noteworthy thing is if we think about, you know, what if we were to want to sell our house. Let's do a kitchen reno. Let's renovate the bathroom. That's going to increase the value of the house. They compared those types of renovations, other home improvements like kitchen and bathroom remodelling. Recent studies showed that the homeowner recovers only 60 per cent or so of that cost. The data that I'm seeing tells me that a PACE program is far superior to other renovations that homeowners would undertake, so it tells me there's likely to be a positive return on that investment.

The other thing I would say is that these types of programs, although they have existed in the United States for some time, are still relatively new, so mortgage lenders and homebuyers are just learning how exactly to value these sorts of things in the property market. What this study concludes is that perhaps there may be in fact increased value beyond what is currently understood, that it's more likely that this would go up than down in the future in terms of value. I think that's intuitive in the sense that if we were to ask, "Are homebuyers 10 years in the future more or less likely to want an energy efficient home? Are they more or less likely to want a home that already has solar panels installed and a means of paying for that through the property tax?" my gut feel tells me that it's more likely. This study would suggest the same thing.

I do have some questions, of course, devil in the details. When we have a bill that would put regulation as the first step – we'll write some regulation and let you know in the future – that always raises some questions for me. Municipal Affairs is particularly good at tabling bills, doing substantive consultation, and coming back and passing the legislation. That's what we're doing with Bill 8. I would wonder if that may have been a model they could have adopted for Bill 10. I would perhaps give them a pass on this if there is some urgency in seeing this move forward. We may not necessarily want to delay, so I could understand that.

The other concern I have is that when we're doing these sorts of things and we want to create a situation where Albertans use less electricity in particular and find some savings there, as this government moves to a capacity market, less and less and less of Albertans' electricity bills will be the cost of energy, and more and more and more of those bills will be fixed for administrative charges, for transmission. The way the capacity market is being dressed up as transmission could mean that in fact there's really no incentive to shut the lights off because your electricity bill is going to be what it is. The cost of electricity has been capped at 6.8 cents, which is a shell game to Albertans. They see that number, but of course all of us as taxpayers will ultimately foot the bill for that. There's substantial concern there.

The question is: will we actually be in a situation in two and three and five years down the road where it even matters whether we have solar panels because the cost of electricity is so high that we're bumping up against that cap for the next four years? It really doesn't make a difference. That's a real, real concern that would be a potential unintended consequence – I hope unintended – of the changes that are going on in the electricity market but would actually serve to potentially undercut the value of a bill like this. Why would we bother installing solar panels when, frankly, it makes no difference in terms of our electricity bill and would make no difference in terms of the electricity generated on the grid and therefore would make no difference to carbon emissions?

The changes that this bill is bringing in and the opportunities that it presents do need to be seen holistically. Unfortunately, because of the real hash that this government has made of the electricity market generally, the good intentions of this bill and the good mechanics – this seems like something that really can work – may not actually serve the purpose that this government intends because of other mistakes they've made, because of other paths they've chosen that are, frankly, ill-advised and unnecessary. It's a shame because there are other ways of ramping down coal. There are other ways of putting more renewables on the grid. There are other ways of encouraging natural gas electricity generation that didn't involve literally $1 billion or more of lost money to taxpayers, of additional money this government has had to borrow. It's a real shame. It didn't have to be that way, and here we are. I hope that that is not the case.

Given what we know now, I can tell you that the Alberta Party caucus is inclined to support the bill, but we certainly do have some questions.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's actually not a surprise to hear that the Alberta Party, a.k.a. the liberal party of Alberta, is deciding to support another government program. But you know what? He did actually bring up some very good points here.

One of the points that I thought was important to bring up – I don't know whether or not he could answer this question. Maybe members from the opposite side who have been quite quiet on this issue here today could stand and speak to this. The question that I have is: so solar panels are installed. They're now being collected by municipalities in terms of property taxes. If a house was sold and a person was to take those solar panels, because they can be removed fairly easily, who would then become the collector of that asset? Who would become the repossession agent in this situation? Would it be the municipalities? Would it be the Department of Municipal Affairs? Would it be third parties?

You know, these are the types of things that someone has a substantial investment, and those solar panels are now an investment and an asset. If someone was to actually take those and remove those from the home, now you have them taking an asset that is supposed to be amortized over a 10-year period or however long it is. Who would be involved in making sure that that asset is reclaimed so that it isn't a writeoff on the government books? This is the question that I think we need some clarity on.

Now, I recognize that the member is not government, that he is in the third party – and I appreciate that – so I don't know whether or not he or the members opposite could answer this question. I think it's a pertinent question, that I'd love to see someone give us some answers on.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Clark: Well, lucky for all I'm not a lawyer, so I can't answer that question. Perhaps the one lawyer who I believe is in the House at the moment, the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, could offer an opinion. I understand that this would be the sort of thing that is not likely to be on the plate for the municipality. If a mortgageholder defaults on that mortgage and then starts stripping things out of the house before they take off, I am quite certain the bank would come after them and chase them down. Banks don't tend to be gentle about that sort of thing.

You know, it's a fair question. I suspect that there is a process for that. Actually, if the minister would like to weigh in or if there's anyone on the government side who has some insight into how that would work, I do think it's a fair question, especially if there's potential risk for cost to taxpayers. I'm interested to know if the minister happens to have any insight as to how that may work.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements. I know our colleagues in the NDP have this campaign to push the green energy sector in every way possible, and there's nothing wrong about that, being green or believing in anthropogenic climate change like I do. Bill 10 is one of those excellent ways to help homeowners who want to be green afford to be greener. I bet there are hundreds if not thousands of Albertans who want to buy solar panels for their homes to generate electricity, heat their water, and heat their homes in winter.

Actually, a couple of years ago, Madam Speaker, when I visited my colleague the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, I observed that there were solar panels on her rooftop. Like that, I have many friends who could afford to have those solar energy panels.

The NDP have made this so simple. Just apply to the property assessment clean energy program – the acronym here is PACE – to be run by your municipality. The municipality will get reimbursed through Energy Efficiency Alberta, who administers the program. Repay for those solar panels over time through your property taxes, which are administered by the municipality. In exchange you get a caveat placed on the home.

PACE seems to be supported by stakeholders, including Build Alberta, the Alberta Construction Association, and the Pembina Institute. It's not out of place to mention here, Madam Speaker, that our environment minister has good friends at the Pembina Institute. Former Ontario Liberal minister Glen Murray is the executive director there. If you recall, Glen was around the cabinet table when disastrous policies were brought into Ontario trying to force the green economy. He has a team of 44 people working for him at their think tank and a board of nine people.

The Rural Municipalities of Alberta are rather mute, though one could see large barn owners wanting something like this. The Alberta Urban Municipalities Association had this to say: “This program will make it more affordable for Albertans to upgrade their properties without having to put money down, and gives municipalities another tool to make a positive environmental impact and help address climate change.” Did you hear that, Madam Speaker? No money down. What is this, some kind of furniture commercial for The Brick or Leon’s or easyhome? I don’t get it.

The NDP government introduced easy solar – no money down, 10 easy payments over 10 years – but there’s a real danger here of people getting overextended in the amounts they owe to get solar up and running on their homes. Albertans already have the highest gross personal debt per capita in all of Canada, and that is before we talk about the $96 billion debt that the NDP will have created before 2023. People with PACE tax assessments have difficulty selling homes. Who wants to buy something with a caveat on it and still be paying out the solar installation? These are genuine concerns, Madam Speaker. I’m not trying to be critical here. I’m trying to be practical and ask reasonable questions, hoping they’ll make this bill better to get everyone to support it. But as it is presented today, there are so many concerns.

Maybe the solar installation is botched and the home leaks water – and the buyer and seller don’t know that – and there is massive mould growing up in the attic. That could be another possibility. Or maybe the solar gets installed, and the home seller walks away with all the equipment, leaving the new buyer with a bill and possible repairs.

Only government-approved installers get to work on these projects. That’s another problem, Madam Speaker. It means that Energy Efficiency Alberta is picking winners and losers again.

What about condo corporations? I see nothing here about them.

It’s very much buyer beware going into this PACE program, Madam Speaker. What about the financing? Is it coming out of the carbon tax? Someone has to answer that. Meanwhile we have debt piling up. That’s not common sense. I get that people want to install solar panels on their homes, but the reality is that solar panels remain expensive and out of reach for the vast majority of people. I can’t see the difference here between PACE and taking out a bank loan to do the job. They are both financing schemes, and ultimately it is the homeowner who pays.

Bill 10 is a niche boutique program for a small group of people who can afford it. Not everyone can afford it, Madam Speaker. This is not something that Martha and Henry want. Martha and Henry just want to make sure that they can be in the same continuing care centre together and not be divorced by nursing home. Martha and Henry want to make sure that their fixed incomes will pay the property taxes, the insurance, the utility bills, the groceries, and put gas in their truck. Martha and Henry won’t be running around out there installing PACE solar power on the roof of their house. It will be only the people who have a little more money than Martha and Henry, who could probably go to the bank and do it already. They may be already doing it.

With that, Madam Speaker, I would ask to adjourn debate.

Bill 11

Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2018

[Adjourned debate April 19: Ms Gray]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It’s a pleasure to rise and speak today to Bill 11, the Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2018. As you know, the more open, the more transparent a government can be, the better off the people are. Things that we can do to ensure that we have an open and transparent government are all steps in the right direction when it comes to being more accountable, being more accessible to the population that we serve.

Now, I think it’s interesting that we’ve seen the government introduce a number of pieces of legislation over the last couple of years to try to move the needle. Some of those things have been quite helpful, some of them not as helpful. Some of those things have required a lot of push-back from the opposition before the government chose to listen to the people, and I think that, on balance, there have been some positive steps. I think that the Lobbyists Amendment Act will be one of those things in the end. That’s not to say that everything within the Lobbyists Amendment Act is perfect. I think there are some unintended consequences of the Lobbyists Amendment Act that I hope to address this morning. I think it’s important that we have some fulsome discussion around those sorts of things so that we can do our very best to make sure that we get the best piece of legislation moving forward.

You know, accountability is absolutely essential to a healthy democracy. It’s so critical, and it’s critically important that as elected officials there are some checks and balances in place in our system to ensure that the interests of Albertans are always put before any sort of personal interest either of a politician or, in fact, a lobbyist. From time to time lobbyists get a bad rap, if you will, for the work that they do, but many of those individuals do very, very important work that actually helps to make our democracy stronger and more healthy. I know that they can be a great resource to folks inside this Chamber when it comes to understanding issues and sometimes quite quickly.

You’ll know, Madam Speaker, that this government has a very poor track record when it comes to sending pieces of legislation to committee so that the opposition and other members of the Assembly can get the sort of feedback directly from Albertans or directly from stakeholders. In many ways lobbyists actually play that role, under the current confines of our system, so that we can reach out to them, get information about a piece of legislation that specifically affects their industry. So they are an important part of the process.

Not all lobbyists are bad although there are some that aren’t ideal. That is exactly why we need to have things like Bill 11, the Lobbyists Amendment Act, so that we put the checks and balances in place for the safeguarding, most importantly, of Albertans. It’s for the protection of Albertans that we have legislation just like this, so I am, on balance, pleased to see it come forward. I’ve received some very good feedback from stakeholders as well as the office of the Ethics Commissioner.

Madam Speaker, you’ll know that this legislation in many ways comes to us twofold: one, the requirement to have the Lobbyists Act reviewed; and, two, through committee, where there were a number of recommendations that were made with respect to changes to the Lobbyists Act. So this particular piece of legislation has had some opportunity to have discussion. That’s not to say that there might not be reasons for additional discussion specific to the changes, but at this point it certainly has started off from the committee making some recommendations and from receiving input from the Ethics Commissioner.

I’d like to spend a little bit of time discussing the change in the reporting threshold for organizational lobbyists. As we know, this legislation will bring the threshold down from its current 100 hours of meeting time to only 50 hours, which also will now include any preparation time that an organization may or may not take in order to get ready for the meeting hours. While I do agree that a set amount of time is important given that there is some significant confusion in other legislation in other jurisdictions – I use Nova Scotia as a bit of a case – when lobbying time is defined as 20 per cent of the time at work during a three-month period, it's very difficult for anyone to determine what that 20 per cent might be. So, on balance, I think that in having a set period of time like we see existing and like the recommendation being made of 50 hours, having very clear-cut guidelines is important.

Having said that, 50 hours when you're including prep time is certainly not a great deal of time for an organization. My concern, Madam Speaker, doesn't fall with the large organizations: the unions, the larger pro-business advocacy groups that are also considered to be lobbyists, or the professional lobbyists. My concern is with a lot of the smaller organizations that may only have one employee.

Specifically, I'm thinking of organizations that are part of a larger organization. A good example of this would be the Chambers of Commerce. The Chambers of Commerce provincially is a large organization. It has all of the capacity to deal with the lobbyists registry and the act and understanding all of the ins and outs of that. But there are literally hundreds, almost 200, I guess, much smaller and medium-sized chambers that maybe only have one or two employees. If they engage in the larger organization's efforts, you know, come to their annual general meeting, where there would be training and discussion around lobbying efforts, come to their political action committee – Political Action Day, I think it's called, where members will meet with them here in Edmonton – and now with any prep work that they did to get ready for those meetings, the 50 hours can come quite quickly for these smaller organizations.

As such, there is a fair amount of work in terms of semiannual returns and recording the activities as well as the information that they might communicate to their membership in the form of grassroots communication. So I have some reservations around this particular requirement in the legislation being moved from 100 hours down to 50 hours and then also adding the prep time.

Now, I recognize that the Ethics Commissioner has made this recommendation and that the office of the Ethics Commissioner is in support of limiting the hours to 50, but that's not to say that it's actually a great fit for smaller organizations. Perhaps the minister would consider a hybrid of options like: if you have one or fewer employees, you would be allowed to advocate on behalf of your organization up to 100 hours, and if you have three or more or whatever, then you would fall under the new legislation of 50 hours, including the prep time.

I look forward to discussing this particular matter further with the minister. As well, I wouldn't want to presuppose a decision of the Assembly, but my guess is that when this passes second reading, I look forward to passing an amendment around this as such.

I just want to highlight some concerns from the Alberta Chambers of Commerce that they have highlighted with respect to Bill 11. I think that it's fair to do so. I know that the minister has also heard these concerns as this was a letter that the Alberta Chambers of Commerce CCed me on and that is, as noted, to the minister. I'll be more than happy to table it in the House because I intend to provide some content from it.

The letter suggests that they represent over 25,000 Alberta employers in the province and that the Chambers of Commerce is writing to express some concerns regarding Bill 11.

The proposed changes to the reporting thresholds requiring registration with the Alberta Lobbyist Registration would have unintended consequences not in the public interest.

Reduction of the lobbying time threshold, from 100 to 50 hours, and the inclusion of "preparatory time" and "grassroots communication" as lobbying activities, would dramatically change the reporting requirements for many community-serving organizations. In turn, the proposed requirements would increase administrative burdens on organizations with limited staff resources, including local chambers.

Changes to the reporting requirements may force chambers to limit activities which benefit their local community by connecting government with constituents. Organizing traditional community activities like luncheons with elected officials is one important example [that may be affected]. Developing and circulating regular newsletters to local chamber members and community partners is another.

This is the grassroots communication portion that they have expressed some interest in.

Often, at the request of government, these communications include educational content and resources directed at the business audience.

It is essential that government engage with business at the local level. Grassroots communication is critical to that engagement. As such, in amending legislation, it is critical to avoid the creation of red tape that could unnecessarily limit healthy communication activities which support an informed and civically engaged public.

I think it's important that we heed some of the feedback from the Alberta Chambers of Commerce. Obviously, they represent an incredible number of employers as well as business members and also active community members. I think that it is very, very important that we strike the right balance between ensuring that lobbyists who have that as their main function are required to do all of the necessary reporting under the act and that smaller organizations, who may not actually have a paid lobbyist but have paid employees who do lobbying work, aren't actually limited in their ability to communicate with their membership. I think that by moving the definition of grassroots communication, we run the risk of having a chilling effect on those who want to engage in the political process but have some reservations about whether or not they'll be a lobbyist.

Now, for clarity's sake, the organization that is encouraging the grassroots communication is the one that's required to report the grassroots communication plan or efforts, not necessarily the individual. But, you know, I have significant reservations around moving the definition inside the act and, as such, having a chilling effect, where organizations may or may not be aware that they are engaging in an activity that should have been reported. You have smaller organizations who now have some reservation about that same sort of thing.

We need to be very, very, very cautious about how we engage with this 100 to 50 hours and make sure that we get that right. You know, I can think of some other examples of stakeholders, from my time as a member, who may be affected. I want to be clear that nonprofit organizations remain exempt, but I also am acutely aware of some of the confusion that can happen as a result of this legislation.

I think of individuals who have been engaged in grassroots communication personally because of an issue that has become important to them, whether it's advocating on behalf of a child, advocating on behalf of individuals with developmental disabilities, or whatever the case may be. They've wound up as a fierce advocate, and they are regularly trying to create change. I can think of one example, a constituent who, after discovering that their child had a disability, set up a support group, and that support group then pooled resources, and those resources were then used to advocate on behalf of that organization.

My concern is that we put in legislation that may have a chilling effect on cases just like this, whether it's on behalf of a disabled child or it is inside the education system or the health system or several policy drivers where they felt the government wasn't serving them well, and that their engaging in grassroots communication would then somehow become a lobbying activity. We need to ensure, we need to go to great lengths to encourage people to engage in grassroots communication and speak up for issues that are important to them and make sure that we do everything we can to communicate exactly where the Lobbyists Act applies and where it doesn't. I can see many situations where people may believe that the Lobbyists Act applies because of the language that has been used inside the legislation specifically around grassroots communications and exactly what that means and does not mean.

We need to do what we can to encourage individuals to speak up, to speak out, particularly on issues where the government has been coming up short. You know, Albertans are the key part of the democratic process. This whole thing isn't about us; it's all about them. We need to make sure that the legislation that we pass has clear guidance, direction and does not have a chilling effect in any way, shape, or form or even the appearance of a chilling effect for those who want to engage in grassroots communications.

I also am concerned that from time to time other organizations that may have wanted to engage in grassroots communications but are concerned that the 50-hour threshold will then become an issue for them because of the people advocating on their behalf will then elect not to have some of those larger social media campaigns, letter-writing campaigns, whatever it may be, and then we'll actually have a net negative of people engaging in the process.

You know, I think that, specifically about the reporting and the biannual reporting and signing up to be a lobbyist in the lobbyists registry, it's often easy or easier for us when we engage in this process on a very regular basis. We get to know the system, and we understand how it works, but we can also forget that it's often overwhelming and confusing for those that don't have to engage in or think about it every day. That's particularly why I think of some of the smaller organizations. I think of, as I've mentioned, the chambers. I haven't mentioned them yet, but I think ag societies are a good example, and there are some organizations that are closely associated with ag societies who are not actually nonprofit, who would then fall under these guidelines and the act.

I think that, on balance, you know, larger ag societies – I think of the Calgary Stampede, that gets 12 million bucks a year or whatever the grant is, which is a significant amount of money. They have massive capacity to engage. But I think of the Acme ag society in the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, and my concern is that this legislation may have a chilling effect.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As always, it's such a pleasure to stand in the Legislature, and I'm honoured to be able to rise and speak to Bill 11, the Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2018. I have to say that when I was first elected and put on the Resource Stewardship Committee, this was one of the first bills that came across our desk at that time. Fast-forward to this point now, where we're finally being able to deal with this, and it gives you an idea of the complexity of the bill, the complexity of the issues that came down from the office. It also gives you some idea of how difficult it is to be able to balance the desire of people to be able to get to government and to be able to get to the opposition to be able to influence decision-making in this House, which is Alberta's house. We don't want to ever stop people from being able to access us and bring their concerns forward.

As my colleague has mentioned, the importance of democracy and accountability can't be underrated. We have such a privilege in living in a country where as representatives we are elected by our constituents to represent their interests in this Assembly, so we have a massive duty to them and to all our Albertan families. Our actions and choices in this place need to be representative of their interests and not our own, so our actions need to live up to the incredible amount of trust that is placed upon us, that voters gift us with.

I'm pleased that we have legislation such as the Conflicts of Interest Act and the Lobbyists Act, which aim to ensure that our actions in here are all above board and that those groups that are lobbying the government are also responsible and transparent with the information that is coming across our desks and the privilege of being able to influence government. When you think about other governments around the world where democracy isn't an option – you know, Russia and Libya and Cuba and Saudi Arabia – I feel so privileged to be able to stand in this Assembly and support measures that create a space where government is held up to the expectation of transparency and accountability.

With regard to the bill, Madam Speaker, there are a couple of legislative changes in the bill that I'd like to highlight. I think these are some very positive changes. The fact that consultant lobbyists will no longer be able to establish contingency fee payment arrangements is a really positive step. We know that the legislation currently allows for contingency payments as long as they are disclosed on the lobbyist's return, but the fact remains that the job of a lobbyist is to act as a facilitator and as an advocate on behalf of their clients. The desire, of course, is always to help push for strong public policy for the betterment of Albertans, and the fact that a lobbyist may only be paid for their time and hard work if they're successful at actually engaging with government and having government react in a way that moves forward their proposal I really think sends the wrong message.

I mean, I've been involved with a ton of different groups, especially with not-for-profits, and we want to make sure that the access to government is never just an elitist act. We're talking about people here who have a vested interest in a particular situation. There are a bazillion of them that come up, and we want to always make sure, for those that are being paid to bring those ideas forward, that all of that hard work, the research, the time, the outreach, and quite often bringing a perspective to government that we may not have had – I can honestly tell you that in my three-year journey here I've learned more about things from the people who have come into our offices to tell us about those particular things. You just never would have had access to the institutional knowledge that comes from those people, the anecdotal information and lived experience through all of those kinds of things. So it's absolutely imperative that they are in actuality being paid for their hard work and time and that that actually happens and not as a result of the outcome with government. It really sends the wrong message.

I'm also pleased that the current contingency fee arrangements will be grandfathered in for the next 24 months. I do realize that there are people already out there that are in the process of already working with government that could very easily be left high and dry as a result of legislation that doesn't grandfather them in. That's very thoughtful and is a really good piece of this legislation. I'm very grateful that that was done. I think the lobbyist groups will actually benefit from the change, but in the interim I think it's very important that those who have already worked very hard to get a voice in with the government have that opportunity and the opportunity to get paid if things work out for them to their benefit.

Another measure that I was pleased to see was the addition of the indigenous elders that are recognized by their communities in the list of individuals that are actually exempted from the Lobbyists Act when acting in their official capacity. Elders in these communities serve as essential leadership for their roles in the communities, their prominence, their wisdom, the lived experience, the earned respect that an elder has within their own communities in order to receive that designation. There's consistency and balance and harmony and, again, history, historical spirituality, and institutional knowledge as well about particular nations. That is an imperative piece that shouldn't be penalized with paperwork. It's absolutely imperative to ensure that the voices of those populations are represented and that they're elevated and amplified to government. This change actually recognizes that leadership and the impact that those elders have on their communities, and it's absolutely something worth supporting. I'm very grateful that that has been put in there.

I think also that the implication of that First Nations piece may be worth the government looking at other cultures and other new Canadians and other groups like that as having the ability to have a similar designation as far as that goes. The great thing about speaking about elders in the communities is that it's actually a designated leadership position within those communities. If you're looking at new Canadians and other leadership roles within other communities, I think it might be worth the government actually taking a look at the legislation to see if that designation doesn't also need to be applied to other groups within those communities. Their lobbying is actually based on a cultural perspective and an understanding of what's happening within those cultures and the communities that are growing within those groups. I think it would be a very, very useful tool for government to have that designation potentially extend towards those groups.

I'm not sure how you would designate leadership within other cultures because it's not a specific designation, but it might be worth looking at it in the broader sense to see if there's something that we can't do in order to – whether that's maybe a religious leader or community leader. I'm not sure how that would work. It would have to be a broader definition. But I think this is a really good start in understanding how culture plays a part in lobbying government. I think it's a really good start, and I think it would be worth looking at it in a broader context.

I also want to highlight a change from an administrative standpoint that is incredibly important, Madam Speaker. Lobbyists will now be required to state in their return filings the end date of the lobbying project they are reporting on if possible. I would love to understand the definition of if possible. I think that's a very interesting position to put in a piece of legislation. Again, opening some interesting doors. I get it. Now, I don't know if it can be designated that, instead of if possible, extensions can maybe be asked for if they're not meeting their 30-day requirement or whatever that is. It might be something that the government wants to look at. That's a very broad opening, if possible. I don't know. How do you apply for if possible? I don't think it's really designated within the legislation. Just something to think about.

Currently lobbyists already have to state the start date for a lobbying project, obviously, and they're also reporting on or also required to inform the lobbyist registry, the office, when they will be completing or terminating a lobbying project within 30 days of doing so. So within that 30 days, is that the if possible? Does it go beyond that? Is it an extra 30 days? Is it a year? You know, what is it?

I think that for the office there needs to be some clarity, too. That's a tremendous amount of paperwork already, and then if you have this open-door policy of when you can end, I think that it could be very difficult for the office to be able to bring that all back together and make sure that all of their paperwork is in order. Again, we are dealing with some professionals, but we're also dealing with, you know, some smaller organizations. That could be a very broad definition, and I would suggest that maybe some regulations or some information regarding that be put in there.

The new legislation will help the office to monitor if lobbyists are complying with the notice of termination. If they don't know the end date of the lobbying project at the outset of their registration, that would be very, very difficult to monitor, I would suspect. If the lobbyist complied within the 30-day requirement to file a notice, there is a termination that comes to remove the registration from the active registry. So that compliance is the most important piece – right? – to ensure that the registry is up to date. I can't even imagine how many. It would be very, very difficult to track, update, organize, and get everybody to make sure that those registrations are terminated if the date of termination is left up to if possible. This is an issue of public access and transparency and accountability, and for the sake of all of those things I think that that might be worth while looking at to clarify it a little stronger.

I also support the change that will give the lobbyist registrar the authority to terminate the registration of a lobbyist if they fail to file a semiannual return to renew their registration, file particulars or changes to previous returns, or file their notice for the end of the lobbying activity. I think, again, you know, you want to simplify the process, for sure, to make sure that lobbying groups have access, but there do need to be some hard-and-fast rules as to how this job ends. I would also assume that in terms of the group that's lobbying as well, it's always better to know your start date and your end date. You get your work done. You have your process. I think that for government as well in terms of efficiency this is incredibly imperative.

It would be interesting actually to find out – I don't know if anybody can answer this for me – how many open-ended lobbyist groups we have right now that haven't filed for termination, to see what is necessary. Maybe it's not that big of a deal. Maybe they terminate fairly regularly, and that's why it's such an open-ended piece. If somebody could maybe give us some information on the numbers of that, I think it would be a very interesting look at how the lobbyists are terminating their registrations, how that works, if it's been fairly consistent, if they're following the times. I think that might be very helpful, again, in clarifying the legislation.

I think that we can all agree that the jobs of the lobbyist registrar and the office of the Ethics Commissioner are incredibly complex and difficult and that they are what play the essential role in transparency. It's very difficult to ask them to do this job properly if they have no recourse to enforce that mandate. Again, if there's information, you know, opposing that, showing that that's not necessary, I'd love to find out a little bit more about that.

There is one piece in here that I'm not quite sure that I understand, and that's that the office of the Ethics Commissioner has a recommendation for the registrar to be given the ability to issue interpretive bulletins and advisory opinions, Madam Speaker. It's not included in the legislation. The Ethics Commissioner already has the authority to do this, but feels that given the fact that the registrar regularly provides advice and opinions on the very, very complex and broad world of the Lobbyists Act, on interpretations of the act to the lobbyists as part of their duties, they should also be given the authority to use the bulletins and the advisory opinions. In a study of the crossjurisdictional pieces many other jurisdictions actually lean really heavily on these advisory bulletins as important tools for providing clarity to lobbyists rather than creating new legislation.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

11:40

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to speak on Bill 11 today with regard to amendments to the Lobbyists Act. I'd like to preface my comments by saying that in broad terms I support the notion of registration of lobbyists and that I think it is important for transparency of government that we know who has registered themselves to talk to whom within the government.

But I will also say that, in my view, the increasing role that lobbyists play in our democracy is in some ways a testament to a failure; that is, the notion that individuals or, for that matter, business entities or other entities indeed need to engage the services of lobbyist firms in order to open doors, in order to exert influence on decision-makers. The fact that there is a market and, in fact, quite a lucrative market for these organizations to exist to me exemplifies that there has been a failure at some level within our system whereby it is no longer possible for private individuals, for business entities, for nonprofit organizations, or for groups advocating a certain position on a certain issue – they now need to have other parties act on their behalf.

That being said, the reality of it is that we have these entities that exist within our democracy and that they do perform an important role. I agree with the comments made by my hon. colleague the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, stating that the activities of lobbyists should not necessarily by default be viewed as being in some ways bad or nefarious. The activities of lobbyists, in fact, are to provide sometimes a navigator, if you wish – maybe I shouldn't use that term specifically – to provide a person to help steer through the shoals of government, to open specific doors, to assist in getting face-to-face meetings with people that, you know, require the access to people who will make decisions. From that standpoint I think that the activities of lobbyists are – I don't even like to use the term "necessary evil" – a necessity within our current democracy.

But if we're going to have that, I think it is important that there be certain parameters in place to make sure that we can have a level of confidence that the activities of these lobbyists are such that we're not seeing undue influence being exerted. In that context, Madam Speaker, I'm a little disappointed in Bill 11 because despite the good work that was done by the Resource Stewardship Committee, despite the long and laborious review process, in my view there are still holes in this legislation. I will certainly be proposing amendments during committee stage that will try to make this legislation a little bit more robust, make it a little bit stronger, but there are still holes within the legislation.

Now, this government in the past has certainly prided itself on stating that it is advocating on behalf of open and transparent government and that it wants its legislation to represent the gold standard of legislation in Canada. Well, this particular legislation, although it is an improvement over the existing Lobbyists Act, at very best wins a bronze or maybe just an honourable mention, thank you for coming. It is a long way away from being the gold standard because, in fact, it falls short of many of the requirements within the federal lobbyist act, which requires much more stringent reporting on behalf of lobbyists, not just the start and the end date of their lobbying activities. Indeed, they must report on when meetings are held, who these meetings were with, and what the broad-based subject matter was, and that information is accessible to the general public.

The current registration, which basically just says who is lobbying, whom they're going to lobby, and what the broad subject matter is, like I say, is a good start, but this legislation does not do anything to make that more robust. It includes some additional provisions, which have already been outlined by previous speakers, but it does not really go to the extent of the federal legislation, which is certainly, in my view, more stringent, more strict, and a better representation of what we should be aiming for if we are indeed aiming for the level of transparency that this government ascribes to.

One example where this legislation will fail – and it is an example I'm particularly familiar with, Madam Speaker – is the example of lobbying that is done on behalf of tobacco firms. Now, this legislation does nothing to solve a problem that is ongoing and that this government used to rail against when they sat over here in this corner, and in about a year's time they will be relegated to this corner once again. This government railed against the influence of big tobacco, against the former government with regard to issues like higher tobacco taxes and specific tobacco reduction initiatives.

Well, you know, it's sad, but the truth of the matter is that right now there are no fewer than four different firms and 10 different registered lobbyists representing big tobacco that have registered to meet with and to lobby various departments and divisions of this government, including the office of the Premier, the Minister of Health, Executive Council, Alberta Health Services, the Ministry of Treasury Board and Finance, the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General, and the Legislative Assembly as a whole.

Now, people say: well, what's the problem? Well, the problem is that those lobbying activities are in direct contravention to a framework from the World Health Organization that Alberta and Canada have been signatory to since 2004. The framework convention for tobacco control is an international convention, an international treaty that Canada signed on to in 2004. It was one of the first international treaties of this type. Article 5, section 3 of that framework specifically enjoins government officials from having closed-door meetings with tobacco lobbyists. Yet we have 10 lobbyists, including, I might point out, one lobbyist who has very close ties to this government, who have filed the appropriate paperwork to allow them to lobby this government on issues, including tobacco reduction, including tobacco taxation.

While most of the groups are lobbying for a reduction in tobacco use, most of the people who are interested in preventative health care were encouraged by the early steps of this government, including adding menthol to the flavoured tobacco legislation, which was a positive step, and increasing tobacco taxes in their first budget, in October 2015. Since that time this government has done nothing to move the needle forward on tobacco reduction, on encouraging the reduction in tobacco use amongst our youth, and, in fact, is leaving unproclaimed large sections of pieces of legislation that would be very effective in reducing tobacco use, especially amongst vulnerable youth.

One has to ask the question: why? Why has all that momentum, all that hubris of the halcyon days, the early days of this government, ground to a halt? One must only surmise that it is because of the backdoor, behind-closed-door activities of lobbying firms who are well financed. Big tobacco has lots of money, and they have lots of vested interest in making sure that the measures to reduce tobacco use amongst Albertans – the single most effective measure that could be taken to reduce overall death and disease in this province is to reduce the use of a product that causes the death of 3,800 Albertans every single year, more than 10 per day. This government has done nothing to act on legislation that has already been passed to reduce tobacco usage.

It's baffling, Madam Speaker, why that wouldn't happen. Not only would it reduce the pain and suffering associated with the negative effects on health by tobacco usage, but it's baffling that they wouldn't do it simply for no other reason than the fact that they are interested in bending the health cost curve, which I've yet to be convinced of. But if they are in fact interested in that objective, then why are they not going after the low-hanging fruit that is represented by a reduction in tobacco usage? One can only surmise that the reason they aren't is because big tobacco has been actively lobbying this government behind closed doors in direct contravention – in direct contravention – of the framework on tobacco control and has been influencing the government in that way. Bill 11 does absolutely nothing to stop that, absolutely nothing.

If this government is really interested in fixing the problems, if this government is truly interested in taking a look at what is deficient in current legislation and actually addressing it in an effective way, surely one of the things that should be included in this legislation is a clause, a section that specifically enjoins government from participating with lobbyists in contravention to a signed international convention or treaty. I looked through Bill 11 for that specific clause, and it isn't there. From that standpoint and from the standpoint that Bill 11 lacks a reference that would make it as robust as federal legislation that's already on the books and that requires lobbyists to log individual meetings with individual members, whether they are MLAs or senior members of the bureaucracy – that's not required in this piece of legislation. That is required under the federal legislation but not here.

More specifically, because of the failure of this legislation to address an activity that is not some theoretical activity, that isn't something that might happen, that in fact is happening, that this government refuses to take on, the issue of dealing with powerful lobbyists, you know, one would have to ask the question. We're involved right now in a $10 billion lawsuit with big tobacco, trying to sue big tobacco, as are all nine other Canadian provinces, for health care costs that are a direct result of tobacco usage by our citizens. You know, one would have to ask: if we're involved in a legal case, why does big tobacco have four different firms and 10 different lobbyists registered to lobby? The people we're suing. That's one of those questions that I don't think has an answer, but it's certainly baffling as to why that would go on.

In addition, Madam Speaker, one would have to ask the question: why has this government been so inactive, so disappointingly inactive after its initial promising phases to actually do something positive about tobacco reduction? It's not like they had to come up with new legislation of their own. All they needed to do was proclaim the existing legislation, that has already been passed and is already on the books, yet they refuse to do it.

In addition, Madam Speaker, this government is not acting on legislation that has an expiry date. Some of these pieces of legislation, if they're not proclaimed within the next year, will in fact expire. Once again one asks: well, why are they waiting? These pieces of legislation were passed in most cases with all-party support within this place because the benefits of having measures to reduce tobacco use were widely recognized. For some reason influences on this government have stepped forward and stopped this government from its forward progress. And now that we're dealing with cannabis, of course, it seems that tobacco has taken a back burner position because of the urgency of bringing in cannabis legislation.

Madam Speaker, I am concerned that there are deficiencies in Bill 11. I will be raising amendments that I hope will be supported by the government side in order to address those deficiencies, but in its current form Bill 11 certainly has got significant problems. Though it's well intentioned, it does not meet the needs of Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), questions or comments?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise to speak to the second reading of Bill 11, Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2018. These changes capture something that Albertans have known about and been concerned about for far too long. For far too long powerful interest groups made backroom deals with the previous government, that were made for private interests, not for the public good. These deals weren't always made transparently, and that's why Albertans wanted change. That's why from day one our government has worked to renew democracy for Albertans.

Now, the Lobbyists Act, which came into force in 2009, allows Albertans to see which individuals and groups are seeking to influence government decision-makers and on what subjects. The act recognizes that lobbying public office holders is a legitimate activity but seeks to bring transparency to this activity. When we formed government, we promised to ensure that transparency, honesty, and fairness would be more than buzzwords for us, and we have been fulfilling that promise from day one with our historic reforms to the way that corporations and unions interact with the democratic process.

We are continuing in our commitment to the principles of transparency and openness by modernizing and updating the act. Our changes are informed by the work of the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in its review of the act and the office of the Ethics Commissioner's recommendations. The all-party committee found the same thing we did, that there were a number of important changes that could be made in order to update our lobbying legislation and ensure that we had the same transparency measures that exist in other provinces.

The amended Lobbyists Act will restrict lobbyists from giving money, gifts, or other items that would place a public office holder in a conflict of interest. These rules would match the existing conflict-of-interest standards that govern the conduct of all public office holders. This is so important as it will ensure that the old backroom deals, the old gifts in exchange for influence will be prohibited. We believe in transparency, and we believe in good government. At the same time, we are ensuring that lobbyist legislation doesn't capture those that it is not meant to capture.

On another note, public servants in other levels of government are not considered lobbyists and neither are members and employees of indigenous governing bodies. We are proposing that indigenous elders acting in that capacity should not be considered lobbyists. This is in line with exemptions that currently exist as public servants in other levels of government are not considered lobbyists and neither are members and employees of indigenous governing bodies. In their traditional capacity indigenous elders are very much public servants in their communities as they represent their people, not personal, business, or financial interests. I'm very excited to ensure that we continue to learn from the wisdom of our elders and to ensure that they aren't inadvertently caught up in lobbying legislation.

I'm very pleased about our proposed changes to the threshold requirements. Organization lobbyists under the current act are required to register if they, combined with anyone else in their organization, lobby for a total of 100 hours in a year. That's a huge amount of time when you think about it. How many phone calls, how many golf games, how many meetings can you get in before hitting that 100-hour threshold? Our threshold was out of step with other provinces' thresholds, and we are taking action to bring us in line to ensure greater transparency and openness.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2.1) the House stands adjourned until 1:30 this afternoon.

Grant MacEwan made a special visit to grant royal assent on the same day, and miniature flags were distributed to commemorate that historic occasion. Proclaimed in force on June 1, the flag act established our provincial flag as a blue flag with the shield of the armorial ensigns of the province centred thereon.

Please be seated.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

May Day

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to recognize to you and through you to everyone in the Chamber May Day. I'm honoured to rise today to acknowledge an important day for working people all across our province. Today marks International Workers' Day, or May Day as it is more commonly known, a day set aside each year to recognize and honour all of the work that the labour movement has done and continues to do for everyday working people and their families.

It is thanks to the labour movement that Albertans today all enjoy things such as an eight-hour workday, the weekend, overtime and vacation pay, basic safety standards, and the end of child labour. These are things that we often take for granted, but these are things that we have today because workers across the world fought and bled for these rights. Today I just want to thank the workers who fought for these changes and recognize the contributions they've made to our province. Our province and our country are better for it.

Today, on May Day, I'm incredibly proud to be part of a government that is continuing the work started by the labour movement and is committed to making life better for working people and their families each and every day. In just three short years our government has made the workplace more fair and family friendly. We've ensured that working people have the same protections as every other worker across the country. We've updated the workers' compensation system to ensure it provides the meaningful rehabilitation and fair compensation injured workers deserve. And we're ensuring that those Albertans who are working for minimum wage are being fairly compensated and no longer have to stop at the food bank on their way home to feed their families.

Mr. Speaker, our province was built by everyday working people, and it's because of them that Alberta is the prosperous place it is today. To the working people across the province: our government has your back, and we'll never stop fighting on your side.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Sexual Violence Awareness Month

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On January 10 in the Kathua Rasana village a little eight-year-old girl was taken from the world. Her death is a shame to humanity. Her little body was subjected to multiple rapes over many days. She was drugged, torn away from her family, and brutally murdered in a temple near her home. Her name is Asifa, and eight men – one retired government official, four police officers, and one minor – have been arrested at this time. The men planned the kidnapping for a month to scare and intimidate the nomadic herders of that area. Her family tried to get her back, but they were told that their little girl had run off and eloped.

This brutality on its own is more than enough to take our breath away, to make us pause and imagine for a moment the feeling of being helpless. The friends of these rapists protested that the men were innocent, and their lawyers gathered to protect them, but Southeast Asians of all religious backgrounds filled the streets demanding justice for Asifa. How do we rise above this horrific story as humans?

Today marks the beginning of Sexual Violence Awareness Month. As a woman born in Canada, a woman of Southeast Asian descent, I have a responsibility to speak out for my sisters, our daughters of Southeast Asians, and all victims who may not have a voice. We have a responsibility to stand up for them and to shine bright lights into these dark corners and say loudly: we will not stand for this, not in Canada, not in India, not anywhere.

We must continue to fight against sexual violence, honour beatings, honour killings, child marriage, female genital mutilation. We as a nation profess freedom. We must fight to teach what that freedom is, especially to our new Canadians, and protect new Canadian girls and women to make sure they understand their rights in this country. We as Canadians look at the heinous crimes like this one perpetuated against Asifa, and we think that we're immune. But it can happen here, and we saw this with our own little Serenity.

Let's fight for our sisters, for our daughters, for victims, and for survivors. We owe it to Asifa. We owe it to Serenity and to the women and girls everywhere.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Early Learning and Child Care Centres

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Wednesday I joined the Premier, the Minister of Children's Services, and several colleagues for an incredible announcement, the opening of 100 new early learning and child care centres that charge parents only $25 per day. This is revolutionary for parents in our province.

This announcement took place in my constituency at Norquest College's 1000 Women Child Care Centre, and as we left the stage, I watched multiple women who work or have children in care there approach the Premier to thank her for this investment and tell her how much help it has given to them and to others.

When I arrived home, I saw many women on social media expressing the same, including a friend of mine who lives and works in Fort McMurray. She tagged me in a post saying: "It's insane how much of a huge difference this makes for families. We paid $1,400 a month for quality child care and now pay about $500. I know so many women that are forced to stay home with their children not because they want to but because they can't afford to pursue a career and a family." Several other women responded to her post with comments like, "It's about time" and "Wow; they should have had that years ago when we needed it."

Mr. Speaker, this is amazing, and it's part of our government's core commitment to making life better and more affordable for Alberta families. Through the Africa and Intercultural Child and Family Centre new Canadians are being empowered to upgrade their skills and education to pursue good careers here. Through the Bissell Centre low-income families are freed to increase their income. Across the province about 1,400 more people will be empowered to re-enter the workforce, contributing to our economy and improving their quality of life.

Mr. Speaker, this is what can happen when we work together through government for the common good, when we fight for Albertans, unlike the members opposite, who are focused on fighting for drastic cuts to finance massive tax giveaways for those who need it least. Thankfully, our government is listening to and on the side of women and families in Alberta as we fight to build a recovery and an economy that will last.

Government Services in Medicine Hat

Mr. Barnes: Since its founding by the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1883, Medicine Hat has been known by a number of different monikers, including the Gas City, the Hat, and Canada's sunniest city. Cypress-Medicine Hat is known as a place where your word is your bond, your family is your focal point, and community is always there to offer a hand up when you need it. Unfortunately, the government of Alberta has begun referring to my home as inconvenient and too far away.

Last week I met with a local entrepreneur who is working hard to get his business opened, but it sat dormant for two months waiting for an audit by Alberta Transportation. When he contacted Alberta Transportation about the delay, the person he spoke to told him that Medicine Hat is too inconvenient. It was only after sustained pressure that someone made the long, difficult trek from Calgary.

Sadly, this wasn't an isolated incident. Another local Medicine Hat group is working hard to get approval from the Minister of Community and Social Services for a service dog testing centre in Medicine Hat so that people for whom travel to Calgary and Edmonton is actually difficult can have their dogs certified locally. Unfortunately, the minister's office and department officials have stopped replying to them altogether. It must be too inconvenient.

Yet another example of the NDP's disregard for Medicine Hat resulted in Medicine Hat losing critical investment to Louisiana when Methanex chose to expand their operations in the United States. Make no mistake. This is a result of the NDP government's big-spending, big-taxation ways, picking winners and losers in an escalating failed plan of corporate welfare. This government has ignored and largely forgotten Albertans' small and medium-sized centres as well as the rural areas of Cypress-Medicine Hat, where it is rumoured that even more services will soon be centralized. Instead of responsibly spending and responsibly taxing Albertans to encourage families and communities, this government has decided to leave rural Alberta and Medicine Hat in the dust by racking up billions in debt and billions in interest.

The United Conservative Party doesn't take anything for granted. An Albertan is an Albertan.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

First Responders

Mr. Westhead: This past week I had the honour of attending the 40th anniversary of the Redwood Meadows emergency services. The service has been staffed by dedicated, professional volunteers since the community was founded and has a rich history. During the dinner an emergency call was received, and it was incredible to watch these heroes spring into action at a moment's notice. It's an important reminder of what first responders across the province put on the line to keep our communities safe along with the sacrifices made by the family members and friends who support them. They never know when they'll be needed, yet they are always ready and always vigilant.

The draw of the mountains and the wilderness in the Banff-Cochrane constituency leads many adventure seekers off the beaten path and sometimes into harm's way. Emergency response in the backcountry provides a challenge, a challenge that skilled and talented first responders are well trained for. Just recently Canmore fire rescue's Deputy Chief Keri Martens and firefighter Mike Halprin successfully completed Canada Task Force 2's training boot camp and were selected to be part of Alberta's provincial disaster response team. This is an incredible accomplishment, and I'd like to extend my congratulations and thanks to them for their dedication.

Whether it's a helicopter high-angle rescue crew responding to a fallen hiker or a lookout observer scanning the forest for signs of wildfire, first responders help us rest easy knowing that they are watching out for us and that they are there for us in times of need.

To all the first responders in the Banff-Cochrane constituency and across the province: thank you for your dedication, thank you for your professionalism, and thank you for your perpetual vigilance in keeping our communities safe.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Pipeline Approvals

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the Premier prepared to admit that the reason we now find ourselves and our economic future so dependent on the Trans Mountain pipeline is because the other coastal pipelines, Energy East and Northern Gateway, were killed by her friend Justin Trudeau? Is she prepared to admit that if those projects were still viable, we wouldn't be so dependent on the Trans Mountain construction today?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, as we discussed yesterday, the challenges with the Gateway pipeline actually arise from the decisions taken by and the process of decision-making of the previous federal Conservative government. Even with Energy East it is quite clear that there were a number of regulatory problems with respect to that caused by federal governments, both the current and the previous, as a result of having to start the whole thing over again because of an inappropriate NEB set of appointments. Long story. What we know is that they failed. We will succeed.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Premier bizarrely continues to make things up with respect to Energy East. It was cancelled . . . [interjections] The NDP are still heckling. The anger machine never stops over there. [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, if I might, Energy East was cancelled by TransCanada after the National Energy Board forced them to take into account up- and downstream carbon emissions, and the Premier still covers for that decision. You know why? Because she's unwilling to call out her ally Justin Trudeau on this or anything else. Why won't the Premier stand up and speak truth to power and criticize . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what I'm doing is dealing with the matters that are before us at this point, and that is the active pipeline to tidewater that we are working with the federal government to get. I know it is very hard for the member opposite to accept that when that happens, it will be the first pipeline to tidewater in many decades, including the long period of time during which the federal Conservatives sat in Ottawa and the provincial Conservatives sat here and neither of them could get the job done. We will get the job done. We will stand up for Albertans, and we will get the job done.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, in April 2015 the Premier, the then NDP opposition leader, said that, quote, Northern Gateway is not the right decision. It wasn't until June of the next year that the Federal Court asked for additional consultations, and it wasn't until November 2016 that her close ally Justin Trudeau arbitrarily vetoed that project. Is the Premier willing to admit that she was wrong to lobby against the construction of the Northern Gateway pipeline, and, secondly, did she tell Justin Trudeau that Alberta would not object if he killed Northern Gateway?

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What we did was that we talked to the federal government, right after they were elected, about the need to get a pipeline to tidewater. We said that we needed one of those pipelines to go west and that we would work with them to get one of those pipelines to go west. We are now working with them to get one of those pipelines to go west. We are very pleased because – guess what? – one of those pipelines is going to go west to tidewater, and Albertans will benefit, finally, as a result of that.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Kenney: Well, I think that's as close as we're going to get to an admission from the Premier that she told Justin Trudeau he could go ahead and veto Northern Gateway, that had already been approved, Mr. Speaker. She said that she wanted one pipeline to a coast. There were three projects, two of them killed by her ally Justin Trudeau. Her carbon tax didn't get either of those built. Is she willing now to admit that she was wrong to oppose Northern Gateway and to oppose Keystone XL and to surrender to Trudeau on Energy East?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the member's interpretation of that is completely incorrect. What I will say is that our government has been very clear that we support getting the Trans Mountain pipeline to the west coast because that's what our energy industry needs. We also worked with the federal government to get line 3 approved. We also committed 55,000 barrels to Keystone to get that pipeline going forward. We understand that increasing pipeline capacity is exactly what the energy industry needs. We are standing up for Albertans. I wish the member opposite would start doing the same.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, part of the deal with the NDP's punitive carbon tax was that if we just made seniors pay more to heat their homes in the winter and working people pay more to drive to work, somehow we would get all these pipelines built. Now the NDP is prepared to raise that carbon tax by 67 per cent. But get this. A report has been released from Ottawa indicating that the federal government wants to raise the carbon tax to $75 a tonne, not just $50 a tonne. That would increase gas prices by 18 cents a litre. Has the NDP made a secret deal with the Liberals to raise the carbon tax to $75 a tonne?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the member opposite is daydreaming and making things up. The answer is: absolutely not. Our view on this matter is exactly as we have said all along. We are proud to be able to make progress finally on combatting climate change. We absolutely know that that's something that everybody wants us to do and that those in the energy industry themselves understand needs to be done. We cannot pretend it's not there. We cannot deny the climate signs around it. So we are moving forward exactly as we have been very clear with Albertans on all along.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: I think we just heard the Premier say that the NDP does not intend to raise the carbon tax to $75 a tonne, but how can we believe them given that they did not tell Albertans about the carbon tax in the first place in the last election, the biggest hidden agenda in Alberta political history? Given that they didn't tell the truth about their carbon tax . . . [interjections] They're heckling again, Mr. Speaker. They can't stand the truth. Given that they didn't tell Alberta voters the truth about the carbon tax, how can we believe them now when they say that they're not going to raise it to $75 a tonne?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the member opposite really just needs to stop asking hypothetical, made-up questions. This is really getting quite ridiculous. You know, what we said very clearly was that we were going to take action to address climate change. What we did was that we took action to address climate change. We also said that we would fight to get a pipeline to the west coast. What we are doing is fighting to get a pipeline to the west coast. This is what Albertans need. The member opposite should stop throwing stones from the side and get onboard to stand up for our province.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, we will get onboard and stand up for this province by repealing the NDP's carbon tax as the first act of a Conservative government, a carbon tax which they are now planning to raise by 67 per cent.

The Premier has told us that she won't intend to do that unless Trans Mountain is built. Yesterday we brought forward a motion asking for the Assembly to confirm the government's stated position – no increase in the carbon tax without construction of Trans Mountain – and the NDP wouldn't let it go to a vote. Why won't they reaffirm their position in a vote in this Chamber for no 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know what? I have made my position on this matter absolutely clear on the record here as well as publicly in every possible setting. But you know what? I will not be lectured by a member of the Official Opposition who instructs his whole caucus to run away from this building when it is his job to talk about defending women's health. He won't talk about that, but he's trying to lecture me on parliamentary motions, on something where I've already taken a position publicly. Why won't he take a position publicly on that issue?

Mr. Kenney: Not only are we going to scrap their carbon tax, Mr. Speaker; we're going to stop the desk thumping and all the disrespect that we hear from the NDP caucus. [interjections] There they are, heckling again. The anger machine doesn't have an off button.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans want a government that will actually deliver a lower cost of living for them rather than making it more expensive for them to heat their homes and drive to work. But the NDP agrees with Justin Trudeau that we should continue increasing the carbon tax. Environment Canada says by a thousand per cent, to $300 a tonne. Today the study says to $75 a tonne. Given that they didn't tell the truth to Albertans in the last election, how can we believe their assurances now?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have been very clear that we will move forward past the pricing which is in the climate leadership plan if and when we get full construction in place with respect to the Trans Mountain pipeline. We have also laid out a budget plan. I know it's hard for them to imagine because they haven't put down a draft budget or a shadow budget since they've been elected Official Opposition, an unprecedented dereliction of their obligation. Nonetheless, we've laid out a plan to 2024, and it does not include any of the things that the member opposite is throwing across the aisle just for fun.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think that Environment Canada did this study just for fun. They did it because they're dead serious about continuing to raise the carbon tax. The NDP's hand-picked adviser on the carbon tax, Professor Leach, says that it has to go to at least $200 a tonne to achieve the Paris targets. Environment Canada says $300 a tonne. Now this latest report is an interim $75 a tonne. You know, the Premier doesn't seem to understand. The NDP has a credibility problem here because they were not transparent with Albertans in the last election, so how can we believe them now when they say that they will not raise the carbon tax to $75 or $200 or $300?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've said, we've laid out a budget which takes us to 2022. Those folks can't even lay out an alternative budget for today. But when it comes to believing people and believing in credibility, how can we believe an Official Opposition that runs screaming from the Legislature when it is their job to debate a bill that speaks to protecting women's health? How can we trust them to ever show up for their job?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

School Transportation and Bell Times

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This past Saturday in Calgary hundreds of parents gathered to express their frustration about changes to school transportation that came about as a result of this government's Bill 1. The Minister of Community and Social Services will tell you that that meeting got heated. Parents are justifiably upset with having to send in some cases their 10-year-old children on two city buses, a C-Train, and then across a busy street just to get to school when last year these same kids were on a yellow school bus. To the Minister of Education: what do you have to say to these parents?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. Certainly, we have been seeing lots of room for improvement around student transportation. That's why in fact we are consulting right now on transportation for busing right across the province of Alberta. We have put significant investments into reducing school fees, and we intend to carry on by making life more affordable and of better quality for our students and for our families by furthering those investments here in the immediate future.

Mr. Clark: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm very glad the minister mentioned that survey because I have heard from several parents in my constituency who took that survey. They feel the questions directed them to the answers the government wanted to hear and were frustrated that there were no questions about the impact the transportation changes have had on school bell times. I can tell you that a grades 5 to 9 school in my constituency starts their day at 9:10 in the morning, and the K to 4 feeder school that feeds into that school starts at 8:05. Many families have kids in both schools. It's a tremendous hardship. Again to the minister: why bother consulting parents when you already seem to know the answers?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the hon. member should try actually filling out the survey themselves to see that it is a very useful way by which we can gather information to make better decisions about busing across the province. If you fail to do those things, if you just simply overstep the boundaries of where school boards are making decisions, then that's simply not democratic. We respect school boards in this province, we respect the decision-making process, and we are making sure that we invest in public education to make life better for Alberta families.

Mr. Clark: Having an hour between the time your younger child and your older child has to start and then finish school is not exactly making life better, Mr. Speaker.

Many parents, Mr. Speaker, choose to put their children in alternative programs like French immersion or traditional learning or many others. These are the kids that have been impacted most by the transportation changes that came about as a result of Bill 1. Now, once more to the Minister of Education: Minister, will you reconsider these changes and end the discrimination against kids in alternative programs?

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, Bill 1 allowed us to put more than $54 million, up to $60 million, into Alberta families' pockets to make life more affordable. If anybody wants to argue against that, then certainly they are trying to extend the bounds of reality. What we are trying to do here is make sure that busing is reasonable, it's safe, and it's timely for students. School boards make those decisions, and we will support that with proper data from the survey that we're taking. People can take that survey up until June 15. We encourage everybody to do so, not discouraging as this member opposite is trying to do.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Economic Recovery Initiatives

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's try a couple of questions here that are based in reality, unlike the first three questions.

Mr. Speaker, previous governments left Alberta workers vulnerable to fluctuations of world oil prices. Can the Minister of Economic Development and Trade tell us how this government responded to one of the deepest and longest recessions in Alberta history?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for his very important question. Our government set into motion immediately when the economy was starting on its downturn because of the global collapse in the price of oil. We presented our plan, investing in infrastructure, in fact the most historic infrastructure investment the province of Alberta has ever seen. Part of the reason for that is because previous governments failed to adequately invest in critical infrastructure: roads, bridges, schools, hospitals. So our government invested in that. That's part of the reason that we see the economy starting to pick up. There are a number of other different tools that we've been using, and I'm happy to expound on them in the next response.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how has our economy performed since we began undertaking these initiatives?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, what we have seen and what we do recognize, first of all, is that, you know, the economic recovery that we're starting to experience in the province hasn't yet been felt by every small business and every business throughout the province. That's why our government is committed to continuing to support job creators, businesses, and entrepreneurs throughout the province through a variety of programs. I can tell you that our two tax credits that we introduced a couple of years ago in this House have been working very, very well. Our capital investment tax credit has leveraged more than a billion dollars of investment in projects, creating thousands of jobs right now, when Albertans need them, helping our companies to grow and expand.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Second supplemental.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The opposition has put forward their own ideas of how to manage the economy. Can the economic development minister tell us what their plan would mean for Alberta jobs and Alberta workers?

Mr. Clark: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud of the plan that our government has put forward. I can tell you that economists have said to us that had we listened to the advice of the opposition, brought in an austerity budget, fired thousands of teachers and nurses, our economy would still be in a recession. We wouldn't be experiencing the recovery that we now are experiencing. We are focused on supporting job creators. We know that 90,000 new jobs have been created in the past year. We are on track to lead the country in economic growth once again this year. We led the country last year. We're going to continue supporting our job creators, and we're not going to be taking advice from the opposition.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dental Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm still hearing many concerns about access to affordable dental services for low-income and vulnerable families, roughly 1 in 6 Albertans, many of whom develop complications and end up in the emergency room. A fee guide was introduced almost six months ago. It may or may not be doing anything because it's optional for dentists, especially given their high staff salaries and office expenses in Alberta. To the minister: how are you monitoring dental fees, and what indication do you have that the fee guide is making any difference to vulnerable and low income?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Albertans told us very clearly that they were concerned about the high costs of dental services in the province, that under the former government the dental fee guide had been taken away 20 years ago, the only jurisdiction in Canada that didn't have one, and that, in turn, our fees were far higher than in any other jurisdiction in Canada. In other jurisdictions where they have a fee guide, about 90 per cent of the dentists' bill in line with that, and we of course took that into consideration when we brought a fee guide forward here in Alberta. For those who are low income, there are low-income benefit opportunities as well. If there are specific individuals you'd like us to follow up with, we'd be happy to.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Swann: Well, precisely, Mr. Speaker. There's been no substantial increase in the public health dental services for lower income Albertans. I don't mean low, low income. I mean medium to low, and the services are now straining to the breaking point, I'm hearing from cities that are providing these services. When will your ministry adequately fund these public health dental services?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. I'm really proud of the dentistry programs we do have, including those in Edmonton's Boyle McCauley. Calgary has Chumir and CUPS and so forth. The Alex has a mobile bus that goes and works with – I met many families who receive those services, and those are continuing to be expanded as well, and we are also working to make sure that those Albertans who don't have coverage today have reasonable fees. That's why we brought in a fee guide. The other government removed it 20 years ago. Our fees skyrocketed, and we are working with the college of dentists to make sure that we get those in line and that they're fair and reasonable.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Swann: The Alberta Dental Association still does not require dentists to post their fees online. Will the minister take steps to ensure that all dentists post their fees online?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The most useful tool that we have is being able to say: do you charge in line with the fee guide? I have to admit that I felt a little awkward doing that when I made my first dental appointment for this year because we didn't have a dental fee guide for 20 years, so it takes some time to get back into the practice. I'm proud to say that my dentist's office immediately said that yes, they did, and that they were proud to be able to do so. I've seen a lot of advertising where people advertise that they charge even below the fee guide, advertisements coming in my own mailbox, for example. Certainly, dentists have the ability to do that. We're making sure that Albertans have the tools through an abridged version to be able to exercise their rights as consumers as well.

Provincial Debt Repayment

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the outgoing Auditor General released one final report prior to the end of his distinguished career as AG. Putting Alberta's Financial Future in Focus stresses the importance of long-term fiscal reporting for Alberta's fiscal future. On page 21 this report of the Auditor General stated that "a surplus of $3 billion per year . . . for 25 years would be needed to pay off the debt expected to be accumulated by 2021." To the Minister of Finance: are you committed to 25 years of $3 billion per year surpluses to pay off the debt that you have so recklessly accumulated?

Mr. Ceci: First of all, let me say congratulations, and I hope the AG has the best time in retirement. He served the government of Alberta and this Finance minister well for the time that I've been here. You know, Budget 2018: Mr. Speaker, for the first time ever we offered Albertans a six-year plan to carefully and prudently return to balance. That's what we are hearing, that that was important. We've done that. It's in our budget this year, and it's something that we've put there and that side never did.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister just chose not to commit to that balance and given that if we go further into the future it would take surpluses of $4 billion per year for 25 years in a row to pay off this debt this government has promised to accumulate by 2023 and given that a vast majority of Albertans are seriously concerned that this government is on track to rack up $96 billion by 2023, again to the minister: what is the expected date that you will pay off entirely your forecasted debt of $96 billion?

Mr. Ceci: Back to the AG's report that was just released, you know, that reinforces our position that Alberta needs to get off the resource revenue roller coaster. We are doing that, Mr. Speaker. We're diversifying the economy. We're taking a balanced approach to look across the sectors of this economy and building those up so that we're protecting programs and services for Albertans and working families. You know, the Conservatives: they would give tax cuts to their rich friends and blow a $5 billion hole in the budget. That's not going to get us back to balance.

Mr. McIver: Given that the speaker has twice not committed to balancing the budget in the last two minutes, given that Albertans are seriously concerned about the government's lack of concern for the debt they are accumulating, and given that the hard-working people and families of this province expect and deserve a government with a realistic plan to pay back any and all provincial debt, to the minister: how can you expect any Albertan to take your financial plan seriously when you have no realistic plan to pay back nearly $100 billion and you refuse to give one?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, that side couldn't balance a budget at $100 a barrel. This side has struggled. We struggled with $26 a barrel in January of 2016, and we are on track to balance in 2023. We're on track to make sure the programs and services Albertans require are solid and stable. That side would cut them all. That side would cut 20 per cent of the budget and fire thousands of teachers and nurses.

Electric Power System

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, yesterday in response to a question about electricity the Minister of Energy said, "our government is on the side of regular Albertans." I found this quite interesting given an article that I came across about electricity transmission in our province. This article states that transmission companies receive a guaranteed 8.75 per cent return on equity bills. My question to the government is whether they think these guaranteed returns to utility owners like billionaire Warren Buffett are truly taking the side of regular Albertans.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the previous government left our electricity system in tatters. It was falling apart. They were jeopardizing the viability of all the major power producers in this province. We're fixing the problem, and we're guaranteeing that electricity prices will not go up in the way that they did in the past because that side, the Official Opposition, would have us go back to a deregulated system that would cause huge price spikes. We're going to make sure that that doesn't happen.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, the only one that would actually agree with him is Warren Buffett.

Mr. Speaker, given that we have heard time and again this NDP government trying to shift the blame for some of these problems to others and given that Albertans elected us to this Legislature not to cast blame on the past but instead to address the issues of the present, will this government stop with the blame game, stop shirking its responsibility, and tell us how it intends to address escalating transmission costs for Albertans, seeing as they have seen a threefold increase in these transmission costs?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the transmission costs are a direct result of the massive building of transmission infrastructure by the previous government. Again the hon. member is attempting to shift the responsibility for his party's decisions when they were the government onto our government. We're the ones that are trying to fix the mess that they left Albertans, and that's what we're going to do.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given this NDP government's ambiguous agenda to force and accelerate the transition to green energy and given that the renewable generation sources like wind will require the construction of additional transmission lines, can the government tell us how much the ratepayer and taxpayer will have to pay owners like Warren Buffett in order for these construction projects to go forward?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, this government is committed to a transition to a substantial amount of electricity generated by renewable sources, and that's something the people of Alberta support. This hon. member keeps going on and on about all of the things that are allegedly wrong with the direction of this government, but in fact we're the ones that are moving the system forward. We're protecting prices for homeowners and for small business, and we're making sure that we have an electricity system that works for all Albertans whereas they would cause the collapse of the entire system, had we not stepped in.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Student Test Results Reporting

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a former educator I understand the complexity of assessing the trends of diploma exam results. However, I have a relatively simple question for the Minister of Education. Minister, do you believe that reporting the test scores and aggregate academic success of Alberta's various schools plays an important role in holding the entire system accountable to ensure that our children receive the best possible education?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, we are currently engaged in a substantial development and reform of the curriculum in all subject areas and all grade levels, and of course when you're building new curriculum, you need to make sure that you're building assessment. You can't use the old assessment with new curriculum. Certainly, it's important to have assessment that gives you the information in terms of surety and so forth, and we did that. And you know what? We're going to assess the system, and we're going to find that putting that investment into education that we did over these last three budgets will result in a better education for all of our students while this side of the House voted against that same budget, that had actually invested in education.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the provincial executive council of the Alberta Teachers' Association has asked ATA members to reaffirm a resolution asking your department to instruct media on how they should be reporting the results from province-wide achievement tests and given that Thursday is World Press Freedom Day, again to the minister: if passed by their members, will you follow the ATA's directive and tell the Alberta media how to do their jobs?

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, last time I looked, myself and this government work for the people of Alberta, and we work for the children of the people of Alberta. We make investments in education for those children of the people of Alberta, and we will continue to do so. Over these last three years we have put in budgets – I'm so proud of our caucus – that funded for enrolment, for increases in education because education is growing, while these guys will choose to make massive cuts, laying off teachers, leaving kids in the lurch. I think I know which side I'm going to choose.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that all public entities should strive for the highest levels of openness and transparency and given that for parents in Alberta to have full faith in our education system, they need to have confidence that all partners in the system are committed to these ideals, again to the minister: do you think this is an appropriate ask for the ATA to make of your government?

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, once again, Mr. Speaker, we are, in fact, the government of Alberta here in the province of Alberta, and we are doing a very fine job in building and strengthening education across this province. We have more than 200 school projects, the biggest infrastructure build in the history of this province, and we are making sure that we make the proper investments in education even during an economic downturn, making sacrifices in other areas to make sure our children get the very best education not just in this country but one of the very best education systems on the entire planet.

Carbon Policy Economic Impacts

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, during Economic Development and Trade's estimates I asked the minister if his department had completed an economic impact study prior to shutting down coal-fired electricity. The answer was obtuse, and he chose to deflect blame on the previous government. I would like to ask him again for the record if he or any of the government departments did an economic study of the impacts of shutting down coal-fired plants prior to enacting their crippling carbon tax.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the question. Let's take a little stroll down memory lane. Back in 2012, when Stephen Harper was the Prime Minister of the country, the Leader of the Official Opposition was one of his cabinet ministers. They brought forward regulations that would close 12 of 18 coal-fired facilities in Alberta. Guess what? They had no plan for a transition, no supports for the community members or workers, and no supports for the communities. I'm very proud of the work our government has done. We have the backs of workers and families and communities, and I'd be proud to expound on that answer shortly.

Mr. Taylor: It sounds like a stroll down fantasy lane. No answer.

Given that no study was undertaken by this government and given that simply blaming the previous federal government is just a cop-out to deflect from this government's short-sightedness, Minister, will you commit here and now that prior to the increases of punitive carbon tax, such as the 67 per cent increase proposed by Justin Trudeau, you will undertake a fulsome economic impact study and publicly release it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud of the work that we've been doing with communities and workers. I'm proud of the work the Minister of Labour has done introducing a fund of $40 million to help workers transition, whether that's transition to retirement, whether that's education or retraining, because the world is transitioning away from coal. We have laid out a plan very clearly to 2030 that provides the opportunity for our power companies to phase out coal or convert to natural gas. The reason that those plants are able to convert is because of the work that this government and the Minister of Environment and Parks have done, because the previous government wouldn't even allow . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Taylor: Well, we still have a massive PPA settlement to have to deal with.

Given that we now know that this government has plans to use any surplus money derived from their federal pal Justin Trudeau's punitive carbon tax to help pay down the debt this government has racked up, Minister, will this government finally admit that using money from consumers to pay down debt and to bankroll their green slush fund is simply a backdoor PST and in no way a levy, as they claim?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know what? I'm proud of our climate leadership plan, the fact that that plan has led to the approval of the Trans Mountain pipeline, that our government has worked diligently – and we'll ensure that that pipeline gets built. We've said it time and time again. The opposition has heard the Premier speak to this. The opposition would roll back our climate leadership plan, jeopardize this pipeline. It would throw away the green line in Calgary. I'd love for the Leader of the Opposition to explain that to the city of Calgary, that their green line will no longer be funded if they become government. I wonder what other projects would be cancelled around the province if the Official Opposition were ever government.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Naloxone Kit Availability

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The AHS website says: "Naloxone kits are available free of charge to anyone at risk of opioid overdose . . . If you get a kit at a community walk-in clinic or Pharmacy you do not need ID or a prescription." I've spoken to someone who last week had trouble getting a kit at one pharmacy that wanted ID and approval but had no problems at another pharmacy that didn't require these things. To the Minister of Health: what steps have been taken to ensure that all pharmacy staff across the province are trained to consistently issue naloxone kits without ID or prescription?

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very important question. I'm really proud of the work that our government has done to make naloxone kits free and available across the province through harm reduction agencies, through family medical practices, and through pharmacies. We are working with the College of Pharmacists in particular to make sure that the message is clear with their membership that any time that any Albertan walks in to a pharmacy and requests a kit, they are given one free of charge. It is up to that individual whether or not they wish to leave their name with the pharmacist, but those kits are available. I'd be happy to follow up with the member about the specifics.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms McPherson: Given that the purpose of supplying naloxone is to save lives and given that naloxone is proven to buy crucial minutes in the case of an opioid overdose, to the minister: what metrics are being collected to ensure that the naloxone program is saving as many people as possible from overdose, and how is the program ensuring that people aren't being excluded?

The Speaker: The associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I think the best way that we can make sure that people aren't excluded from access to naloxone kits is to make those free of charge and as widely available as possible. To date, we've given out more than 49,000 naloxone kits across the province. We're working with partners in the nightclub and entertainment industry on how they can support their staff and other workers in diverse industries who might be at risk of seeing someone who's at risk of an overdose so that there's that widespread accessibility of those kits across our province so that if they're needed in an emergency, they are available.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms McPherson: Given that thousands of people use public transit and services such as taxis and ride sharing every day and given that these modes of transportation can often be the way to get help in the case of an overdose, the question is: if the naloxone kit program is to have the intended effect of saving as many people as possible from dying of opioid overdose, will you work with local transit authorities and taxi commissions across Alberta to ensure that naloxone is available on trains, buses, and in taxis?

Ms Payne: Thank you to the member for the important question. That's a great suggestion. We are working on a number of fronts in that respect, and I'll make sure to raise it with the commission. But I would ask that the hon. member maybe raise the issue with the leader of her party, who, when he was Health minister, declined $1.4 million in no-strings-attached grant funding from the federal government at a time when one Albertan a day was dying in the overdose crisis.

Southern Alberta Flooding

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, this year's flooding is not a new occurrence in southern Alberta. Now, several of my colleagues have had overland flooding in their constituencies, including First Nations land. In 2013 the Siksika Nation experienced some destructive flooding and spent upwards of $4.5 million to fix needed roads and other infrastructure without reimbursement to date, and of course they're battling flooding now. What Chief Weasel Child asked me is: what has the Alberta minister of indigenous affairs done to help his band recoup those expenses from whichever federal agency is responsible? Sir, have you advocated for Siksika Nation in this regard?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We've been working very closely with Siksika band to ensure that the build that was required subsequent to the 2013 flood did proceed ahead. Unfortunately, the previous government made some terrible mistakes in terms of declaring that people could build back in the flood plain if they chose to do so, and that resulted in some delays in the move from the flood plain up onto the hill, which has now been completed. Now we are on track to fix something that they left broken.

Mr. Schneider: Given that numerous counties and MDs have now experienced spring overland flooding and given that many local states of emergency have been declared, I have a follow-up for the government ministers. Yesterday the Minister of Municipal Affairs stated, "We do have some programs through us in Municipal Affairs, which are the disaster relief programs, which come after." My municipalities have road and irrigation infrastructure and bridge destruction. Can you tell me or get back to me with what programs are available specifically, and are these all programs that reimburse for cleanup and repair costs after the fact?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very, very good question. You know, without a doubt, the unseasonably cold spring and the unseasonably warm temperatures – they got 50 per cent more snow than they usually get in southern Alberta – have caused some hardships for families and communities. We as a government recognize this, and we'll do whatever we can to ensure that the systems are in place, as they have been, to ensure that the assistance that they get will be there.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Schneider: I appreciate that, Minister.

Now, given that flooding claims can be a little dicey when it comes to homeowners dealing with insurance claims and given that dealing with insurance recovery can be a long and stressful process, Minister, what recourse do these community members have if their insurance is inadequate, nonexistent, or simply their claim is refused? What recourse do they have for an event for which they are not at fault and can't be reasonably expected to control?

Ms Hoffman: You know, I'll be really happy to get back to the member about specific questions around insurance, but I have to point out the fact that here we are standing in our Chamber, where they just voted mere days ago against a budget that allowed for increased investment in these areas to protect Alberta families. I have to point out the fact that I feel like the contrast couldn't be more stark, Mr. Speaker. You guys need to decide which side of your mouth you want to speak out of because, really, nobody can understand what you're saying because you're not speaking straight with Albertans. Time is up. Tell us what your plan is, and tell us where you want to see the cuts so that you can increase these investments. I have a pretty good feeling it's teachers and nurses.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Motor Vehicle Registry System

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has the weakest vehicle registry system in Canada and the highest level of auto thefts. It is a system built on trust, where untrustworthy people steal, sell, and transfer autos illegally. This weak registry system promotes criminal activity. While people should act responsibly and lock their valuables, the government must do their part and protect the registry system. Minister, your part is to act responsibly and fix the registry rules. What is your plan, and when will we see it?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for the question. Obviously, registry agents are very much on the agenda for Service Alberta. They play a very important role in delivering a wide array of services, and we are constantly looking at how to make that product better. It's an important part of the job we do, and we know that as we go into the future, we have that on our agenda while the Conservatives would just give tax breaks to their rich friends. Our priorities are helping to improve systems. Theirs are helping to give breaks to their friends.

Mr. Orr: Given that constituents in Lacombe-Ponoka are concerned that in Alberta no proof of ID is needed to buy or sell a vehicle – a simple handwritten bill of sale exchanged on the street or fabricated is all that's needed – and given that you can register a car with that and that no one confirms the VIN or verifies the vehicle even exists and given that criminals steal and sell vehicles to auto wreckers with false or even no ID, why is no proof of ID required to buy or sell a vehicle? Are you going to change that going forward, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope that what I'm hearing is not advocating for more red tape, but I'm assuming it isn't. Moving on, certainly always happy to take suggestions forward to Service Alberta, and we would be happy to make sure we look into the member's concerns.

Mr. Orr: It's advocating to clean up the criminal activity.

Given that scrapyards or auto wreckers are on the honour system to check the VIN of an auto to see if it is stolen before buying and demolishing it – the reported vehicle just disappears – and given that the police can't track it and given that a simple change to always require the VIN to be searched and recorded would help police, Minister, this requires your leadership. Will you require the VIN to be searched and recorded every time a vehicle is sold to a scrap dealer?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member. You know how we reduce crime? We don't vote against budgets to help deal with crime in this province. So I would say that if you're really intent on helping deal with crime, whether it's rural or whether it has to do with vehicles, you would not vote down a budget to increase supports to those areas. Just a suggestion, Member.

Thank you.

Electric Power System Oversight

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, the NDP Whac-A-Mole electricity policies keep driving up power bills, and these changes are being done without key people in charge of key institutions. The watchdog, the Market Surveillance Administrator, still does not have a permanent head seven months after the last one left. Does the minister think that the government will get off the hook when mistakes are made implementing their ideological policies without the watchdog in place?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I take issue with the member's characterization of the government's policies. They're very practical policies. They're designed to make sure that we have reliable electricity prices, and those prices are capped to protect consumers, whether they're homeowners or small businesses. This government is in fact following a very, very sensible approach to electricity regulation.

With respect to the appointment of the oversight, Mr. Speaker, there is a process in place, and it is being followed.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that the Balancing Pool's CEO, Bruce Roberts, left the same day we debated this year's Energy budget estimates and given that the power purchasing agreement debacle had also triggered the departure of the previous CEO and numerous board members, can the minister elaborate on why he can't keep the leadership of the Balancing Pool in place? Would it have something to do with the NDP government's political interference in voice mode?

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member throws around allegations and conspiracy theories. You know, pretty soon I think we're going to be talking about whether or not aliens are driving up prices for the electricity system. In actual fact, the relationships that he's trying to forge between different events are in his own mind and don't represent the fact that the government is on the right track in making sure that we put our electricity system back on track and protect consumers. That's what we're doing.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that the Alberta Electric System Operator has to prepare the provisional rules for the capacity market and given that the Alberta Utilities Commission has to adopt those provincial rules being prepared, to the Minister of Energy: does the pending retirement of Willie Grieve, chair of the Alberta Utilities Commission, impact the timelines for implementing the capacity market?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll be glad to look into this in a little more detail and get back to the member with some specifics, but I want to suggest to you that the government's program with electricity and implementing the capacity market does not depend on one individual. It's a government policy. It's being implemented by many, many very qualified professionals in our system. I don't expect that there will be any effect on the timelines.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Agriculture and Forestry Minister's Trade Mission to India

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every member on this side of the House understands the importance of trade missions. Building relationships is the way to open markets and building a diversified marketplace. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: can you inform this Assembly of the goals of your most recent trade mission to India?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. This past winter I travelled to India in order to promote the high-quality products that Alberta produces and that India consumers value. The India market holds vast potential for Alberta agriculture, particularly in the areas of pulses, pork, and canola oil but also food processing, fibres, irrigation, and machinery. There may also be opportunities for Alberta's forestry sector as Meghalaya is a major grower of soft- and hardwoods and would benefit from Alberta's knowledge.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: were the goals of this mission accomplished?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. This mission has helped further establish Alberta as a significant producer of high-quality agriculture and agrifood products as well as a partner in research and technology. Alberta has renewed and expanded its MOU with Meghalaya to cover co-operation in all agriculture areas. The West Bengal government is interested in partnering with Alberta to develop their pork industry. Throughout Pulses Conclave as well as during meetings with state governments I was able to highlight Alberta's favourable investment climate and address issues of pulse tariffs and fumigation.

2:40

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can you elaborate on the MOU and the incoming missions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The MOU will see the creation of the Meghalaya-Alberta centre of excellence for piggery, creation of a Meghalaya-Alberta agriculture working group, and the creation of a strategic plan to articulate and guide specific activities. The MOU also reinforces the relationship between the two regions, which will help identify existing trade barriers and advocate for a reduction to these barriers. As well, the MOU provides incentive for continuing targeted and focused reciprocal visits.

Rural Crime Prevention

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, a few weeks back an incident occurred in the small rural community of Chauvin, Alberta. A group of approximately six or so men and women were suspected of committing property theft throughout the small town. A group of citizens had noticed some suspicious activity near some vehicles at around 6:30 a.m. Using WhatsApp, members started relaying their suspicions throughout the town and calling the police.

Eventually the group was spotted again. They had succeeded in convincing a town local to give several of them a ride to Lloydminster. Noticing this, several dozen locals surrounded the vehicle, telling their oblivious friend to exit the vehicle and take out the keys as they had doubts that he would have ever reached Lloydminster. After several of the males inside tried to leave the vehicle and dump some of what they suspected were stolen items, they became aggressive and tried to get physical with the locals. When that proved futile, they returned to the warm vehicle, and when the police arrived, they were apprehended.

Mr. Speaker, we don't condone vigilantism. This type of scenario is likely going to play out more and more as our government dithers on this important issue. Although the police have described this as a textbook example of community involvement done right, it could have gone very, very wrong for the unsuspecting citizen. While everything went right in the instance, I can't help but wonder: what if? That scares me.

We all know that the UCP have been bringing up this issue over and over, holding town halls and asking for emergency debates dating back to last year. The government has done little to help the immediate situation and has accused us of fearmongering.

Mr. Speaker, it's time to make Alberta safe from those that would prey on them. Know that the courts and the cops can do little to deter them under the current situation.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the appropriate time I intend to move the following motion pursuant to Standing Order 42.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government of Alberta to intervene in the government of Saskatchewan's reference to the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal concerning the constitutionality of the proposed federal Greenhouse Gas Pollution Pricing Act and oppose the federal government's attempts to impose a carbon tax on provinces.

I have the appropriate copies for the pages.

The Clerk: Tabling Returns and Reports.

Tablings to the Clerk.

An Hon. Member: Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: You're actually in the wrong place. You should have done that before. This is Tablings to the Clerk. I'll allow it today. I need to remind members, though, that in the Routine it should have been before this time. Tablings were called for. I'm going to allow it.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Calgary-Foothills, you have something to table. Is that correct?

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a press release from HSBC bank, who announced on April 20, 2018, that they are withdrawing from financing coal-fired power plants globally. In addition, HSBC has pledged to not provide financial services for "new offshore oil and gas projects in the Arctic" and "new greenfield oil sands projects."

Mr. Speaker, I also rise to table five copies of HSBC's energy policy, which further clarifies that HSBC will no longer be providing financing for oil sands mines in situ or new pipelines dedicated to the oil sands sector. Mr. Speaker, HSBC is the second global financial institution to attack Alberta . . .

The Speaker: Keep it as a surprise for them to read.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, it's time for Albertans to boycott this bank. Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you for the opportunity to be able to table this. I made reference to this article in my question, and so I wanted to make sure that I tabled it today. The article is entitled Why Warren Buffet Is One of the Very Few Making Money off Alberta's Mostly Unprofitable Electric System. I have all of the copies.

The Speaker: Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During my question today I made reference to page 21, where it says that a surplus of $3 billion would be needed for 25 years to pay off the expected debt by 2021, and I'd just like to table that.

The Speaker: I'd just remind members again that it's Tabling Returns and Reports, if you'd in the future use it at the right location.

I believe we have a point of order. The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Point of Order

Questions outside Government Responsibility

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to start my point of order referencing the second supplemental question from the Member for Edmonton-Decore. I'm going to start with the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, third edition, 2017. On page 497 there's a very, I think, important quote from Speaker James Jerome. It says, "If the essence of Parliament is Government accountability, then surely the essence of accountability is the Question Period in the Canadian House of Commons."

Now, the reason I quote that, Mr. Speaker, is that the role of private members in this Assembly is to hold the government accountable. When I explain to my constituents what quote, unquote, government is, I explain that it's the front bench of the Assembly, and each of us as private members, whether we're on the government side or whether we're on the opposition side, has a solemn duty to hold government to account. Their job as private members on the government side is not to hold the Official Opposition to account.

Now, I have no great affinity for the policies of the Official Opposition such as they are. I don't know many of them yet, but we'll leave that aside for another day. Regardless of that, Mr. Speaker, I will quote a couple of things here from Beauchesne's. If we go to section 410, "In 1986 the Speaker put forth views in light of . . . recent conditions and precedents" of what question period ought to be and the role of oral questions, of course noting that "time is scarce," section 410(3); 410(5), "The primary purpose of the Question Period is the seeking of information and calling the Government to account," and 401(10), "The subject matter of questions must be within the collective responsibility of the Government and the individual responsibilities of Ministers.”

If I turn now, again, to House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 508, in talking about the principles and guidelines for oral questions it says here, chapter 11, page 508, “While there may be other purposes and ambitions involved in Question Period, its primary purpose must be the seeking of information from government and calling the government to account for its actions.”

I certainly could go on, Mr. Speaker, but at this point you’ll remember two occasions that I can recall very fondly, I will add. On December 5, 2016, you made a ruling on page 2281 of Alberta Hansard and again on page 1613 of Alberta Hansard, October 30, 2017, when I raised this issue of puffball questions. At the time you cautioned the government because those questions strayed into the territory of, let’s call it, exuberant celebration of the wonderful things that government is alleged to have done.

While you found at that time that there was no point of order because you, I think, rightly, much as I find puffball questions to be disagreeable, said that, you know, we ought to have the greatest possible latitude in asking questions in this House. I would agree with that, but if I look at Erskine May, 24th edition on page 363, subheading 13 – and I do think this is probably the essential point here given the question that Edmonton-Decore asked – it says: “Questions are out of order if they relate to opposition party policies rather than to the Government’s responsibilities.”

The question that was asked as the second supplemental by Edmonton-Decore was: Mr. Speaker, can the minister tell us what dastardly things would happen as a result of this Official Opposition’s policies, should we all have the tremendous misfortune of having them as our government? Now, that may not be a direct quote because I do not have the Blues in front of me, but I would suggest that was broadly, thematically what the member was asking. I would ask, please, that you find there is a point of order and that the government backbench refrain from asking such questions in the future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Member, to the last quote that you indicated, what was the source?

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The source is Erskine May, Parliamentary Practice, 24th edition, page 363, subheading 13: “Questions are out of order if they relate to opposition party policies rather than to the Government’s responsibilities.”

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member put a great deal of effort there in researching his point of order. He might have saved himself the trouble. I’m glad that he understands the difference between questions that he considers puffballs, which are requests for information from the government, and questions which attempt to hold the opposition to account, which are clearly not in order.

Accordingly, the second supplemental is:

The opposition has put forward their own ideas on how to manage the economy. Can the economic development minister tell us what their plan would mean for Alberta jobs and workers?

This is clearly attempting to get the minister to comment on the policy of the opposition and is not a request for information with respect to government policy. Therefore, I concede the point of order, and I will undertake to discuss this with our members and the staff that support them.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I, too, thought the member had made a good case.

Motions under Standing Order 42

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Federal Carbon Pricing

Mr. Nixon: On the 42, Mr. Speaker? Okay. Thank you.

Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, the reason we moved this motion is that the Saskatchewan reference raises an important question, and that is: can the federal government selectively impose a tax on one province but not on another based on whether or not they like the province’s climate plan?

Canada has constitutional divisions of powers, as you know, and this is a question of jurisdiction. Alberta has had a proud history of standing up for provincial jurisdiction. Former Premier Lougheed stood up for Alberta and fought for section 92A of the Constitution, which says that the province “may exclusively make laws in relation to . . . development, conservation and management of non-renewable natural resources.”

Now the current federal government is trying to impose a job-killing carbon tax on provinces, one that will have serious economic consequences. Alberta’s government shouldn’t just rubber-stamp this raised carbon tax that Alberta is imposing on us. Alberta was once a leader in standing up for provincial jurisdiction, and Alberta should once again be a leader. I call on all members of this House to support this motion and make that clear.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 6

Gaming and Liquor Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

[Adjourned debate April 12: Ms Goehring]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-West

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I’d like to rise to speak to the second reading of Bill 6, Gaming and Liquor Statutes Amendment Act. The media is reporting that the Alberta gaming and liquor and cannabis commission has received about 450 applications to open a marijuana retail store so far in the province of Alberta, and the applications, of course, are still coming.

Bill 6 is the second phase of the government’s attempt to ensure it has laws in place for the legalization of marijuana. It is, however, a bit of a hodgepodge, Madam Speaker. The bill was brought in to deal with this oversight and the use and retail of the soon to be legal recreational drug. It includes marketing restrictions and enforcement as well as provisions to assist the commission in order to handle higher caseloads of appeals. Now, Bill 6 also fills in some holes in the act introduced during the last session, and as legalization comes closer and also when it becomes a reality, there is little doubt that we may see the government introduce other amendments to the statutes to fill more holes that may be discovered. We hope that does not mean the government is simply writing legislation as quickly as it can to get it on the table. This, of course, is a very complex issue, and due diligence needs to take place.

This government claims that its top concern is, of course, the safety of children and public health, but in reading Bill 6 it is clear that this is not entirely true because the NDP has chosen for the most part to align its public consumption rules with tobacco rather than alcohol. At this point when marijuana does become legal, people will be able to walk down the road smoking marijuana unless, of course, municipalities come into play and they invoke some bylaw. Now, I've said before that you cannot, of course, walk down the road with a beer, but certainly the NDP have created modest rules for public consumption in regard to marijuana. That's why so many municipalities are scrambling to consult with their citizens to pass bylaws with stronger restrictions.

Now, in the end we'll see a patchwork of consumption rules around the province, making it hard for citizens to know if they can or cannot consume marijuana in public in any given place depending on the location and jurisdiction that they may be in, whether it's parks or festivals, and that goes, again, to something I've been talking about for a while, which has to do with consistency. We're not seeing that consistency throughout the province. Clearly, from my perception, the NDP appears to be fine with this. We in the Alberta United Conservative caucus have been trying to highlight this problem for months, and the NDP certainly have not listened to the words that we've been saying.

Now, Bill 6 does contain some positive enforcement sections, most particularly allowing prosecution based on evidence that a substance had an odour of cannabis or appeared to be labelled or packaged as cannabis. This section aligns with the rules of liquor. It means that peace officers can determine the presence of marijuana without having to go through a lab test, which would clearly be time consuming and potentially costly. When the federal government legalizes edible cannabis products, allowing officers to identify it through packaging and smell, this, of course, will prove very, very important. The addition of this section is the common-sense amendment, likely inadvertently left out of last fall's Bill 26, and will be important when enforcing the minor ticketed offences of youth possessing cannabis in proper transport in a vehicle and consumption in public in the restricted places identified, of course, in Bill 26, Madam Speaker.

Now, I just mentioned youth possessing cannabis, and that brings me to a question about possessing marijuana in schools. Albertans aged 18 and over can possess up to 30 grams of marijuana on their person. As you know, Madam Speaker, I mean, there are many kids that are in high schools that are the age of 18, so what does that mean for the schools? Bill 26 prohibits smoking or vaping on school property, but it does not deal with possession, so students aged 18 will be able to possess the marijuana. That, of course, in my opinion, is a concern.

Now, perhaps it is the intention of the province to leave it up to the school boards to make rules about bringing marijuana to school. What about consuming medical marijuana on school grounds by students or even staff? Are schools also dealing with this on an individual basis? I'll put those questions out there and hope that at some point the minister will be able to address them. You know, if it's a hole in the act that needs to be plugged, this of course is the time to do it.

There's a lot more that I, of course, can address in regard to Bill 6. I want to take a few moments to point out that it addresses the need to amend a number of other acts, including the Drug-endangered Children Act. Now, under that current provision of this act, children cannot be exposed to any kind of indoor grow operation. Well, when cannabis is legalized, Albertans are to be allowed to grow up to four plants in a household as per federal legislation. If Bill 6 doesn't adjust the Drug-endangered Children Act, we would have a strange contradiction in law, and of course we would have conflict. Still, it's curious that one day indoor marijuana grow ops are deemed a serious danger to children and the next they will be allowed up to four plants, at least four plants – this is how the act reads – whereas children exposed to illegal manufacturing of drugs, indoor cannabis grow operations, et cetera, are victims of abuse. Well, we'll see if there are any further changes to the wording of the act as marijuana becomes more prevalent in the homes.

Now, this is not a criticism, of course, of Bill 6. I'm just pointing out that society is changing and is evolving, and the federal government's decision is to legalize this controlled substance.

Now, Alberta United Conservatives will continue, of course, to monitor marijuana use in our province and deal with the concerns as we can. We cannot take for granted that the laws enacted today prior to legalization will take care of all the issues that may arise. While this government has told us its priorities are children and public health, we want to see those assurances reflected in legislation.

Statistics Canada has released new data as early as yesterday that noted that Albertans are already using cannabis. In fact, our medical use is the highest per capita in the country, just here in Alberta. It will be interesting to see if these figures are also reflected in recreational use when marijuana is legalized. We certainly need to prepare for it, and I think, judging by Bill 26 and Bill 6, that we're likely to see the government bringing forward more bills in the future sessions as well. This, of course, as you know, Madam Speaker, is a very fluid and ongoing process.

Now, I do not discourage this government from doing this. If it doesn't get it right the first time or misses some aspects that need provincial laws, at least it appears willing to go back and plug those holes. That's always a good thing, Madam Speaker. Of course, the Alberta United Conservatives take this issue very seriously, and for that reason we want to work with the government of Alberta to make sure that our province has a cannabis framework that works for all Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Speaker, for your time.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was kind of hoping that maybe we could have some 29(2)(a), but I guess that's not appropriate at this time.

I rise today to give my thoughts on Bill 6. Madam Speaker, you might remember a previous version of Bill 6 that caused quite a lot of consternation in this Chamber and outside for some extended time, but we're here today to talk about the Gaming and Liquor Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. [interjection] Yes, I'm hearing some comments from the government side saying that this is a different Bill 6. I'm quite aware that it is a different Bill 6, just to reiterate that. Hopefully this legislation won't be as contentious as that. To the members opposite on the government side, they may remember the fact that there were 1,800 Albertans on the Legislature steps to comment on that. I don't hear any voices from those people out there today, so obviously there is not this contention.

This act seems to be designed to primarily deal with the shortcomings of previous legislation, of the previously described Bill 26, An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis. It deals with some unrelated regulatory changes that also fall under the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission. I guess that I should refer to that entity as the Alberta gaming and liquor and cannabis commission as that is one of the proposed changes, a change that makes absolute sense as it leaves no uncertainty about what government entity has the power when it comes to cannabis legislation and enforcement.

There are other aspects of this Bill 6 that make sense to me as well, Madam Speaker. While I personally am quite content with a cold glass of a beverage brewed with the freedom that Alberta farmers have to sell their barley to the marketer of their choice unreined by former federal legislation, and the acronym of that will not pass my lips. Just for the members opposite to realize, there are some 73 small private enterprises of small craft breweries created in the province because of the freedom of certain federal legislation and some of us who made certain commitments to achieve that. I understand the frustration that some other establishments experience when it comes to some of the more archaic rules governing the sale or production of alcohol here in Alberta.

Since I've mentioned beer, I'd like to start with the changes that will allow some home brewers and winemakers to actually go outside of their homes to make product for their own consumption. Prior to this change it was strictly, as the name implied, homebrewed. In some cases, some people used that product for gas-line antifreeze, but others drank it. Under this act homebrew fans can finally go to commercial breweries and in collaboration with other home brewers batch brew using those premises' professional equipment as long as the product is for personal consumption and in no way sold commercially. This puts us in line with numerous other jurisdictions that already allow this. It has been a long sought-after change by numerous homebrew guilds and will be a welcome change.

Another aspect that has been in other jurisdictions and has been discussed by frustrated staff and patrons is the change that will allow for the alteration of liquor products. This will mean that fans of the cocktail movement will be allowed to consume infused and premade cocktails at their favourite licensed establishments. This allows bartenders the freedom to infuse liquor with other flavours, barrel age some quantities of liquor, and premake some popular cocktails such as pitchers of sangria for the upcoming patio season. Once again, this will bring Alberta in line with other Canadian provinces.

While I have discussed primarily the changes of two liquor regulations, I want to point out that this act also closes a loophole in previous legislation that wasn't made clear. That was the question of commercial establishments allowing for the on-site consumption of cannabis. It was asked several times if the new regulation would allow the set-up of cannabis bars or vaping bars for cannabis use. This act closes that bit of ambiguity and makes it clear that this is prohibited.

Madam Speaker, not everything in this act is, at least in my view and humble opinion, completely positive. I understand that while this act has no immediate plans to allow for government markups on cannabis similar to that provided for alcohol in Alberta, I've been told that currently the medical market for cannabis is about $10 a gram. Much of the talked-about benefits of legalization was to get rid of the black market and illegal sales of cannabis. My concern is that should government use markup as a cash flow similar to that placed on alcohol, we run the risk of prices rising above a sustainable market price, leaving the black market as a viable alternative. Similarly, I wonder about the rise of interprovincial trafficking. Out there where I live, within six miles of the social experiment known as Saskatchewan, there are lots of back roads and there are lots of areas where various culpable products transmit across the border. I find it easy to say that some people find the price prohibitive in Alberta, bringing product in from neighbouring jurisdictions due to price and running afoul of our laws simply as a matter of economics. I hope this has been considered and accounted for.

Another concern I need to raise is with the new AGLC board structure. It will increase the board's size from seven to nine members. Now, to me, at least, that indicates that taking on cannabis as well as liquor and gaming may prove onerous. I have to mention that this section of the act will also extend the time frame of board hearings from 60 to 120 days. As the AGLC is also the enforcement arm of this act, I have concerns that businesses that may or may not run afoul of cannabis and liquor and gaming laws will have to wait that much longer, double the time, in fact, to get a board hearing. Madam Speaker, that's a bit concerning, and I hope that this gets dealt with in a timely manner as justice delayed is justice denied.

Madam Speaker, I understand that this act will come into effect once the federal government enacts its legislation. While I may be tempted to fault the government for not foreseeing these problems with their previous act, I can acknowledge it's a changing reality with the impending federal laws so that it won't come as a surprise if subsequent governments are compelled to make other modifications and regulatory changes to account for the unforeseen or unintended consequences.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm happy to speak to this bill today. The bill put forth today, the Gaming and Liquor Statutes Amendment Act, 2018, brings some valuable additions to the existing act that regulates cannabis. As legalization of cannabis is approaching, we will be analyzing more of the gaps in our system and discussing with stakeholders about how these regulations are affecting them and if there have been any unforeseen effects. As every decision made in this Chamber has a long-reaching impact on Albertan workers, employers, and families, we have a duty to consider how every decision in which we have a hand will affect the safety of Albertans moving forward. As legislators it is our responsibility to seek the input of those who our decisions affect and dig deeper to consider how effective, efficient, and helpful these bills are. We must prioritize the safety of the public and the health of our children and always work with this in mind.

Bill 6 is consistent with laws that currently have been governing the consumption of alcohol and tobacco in cases of minor ticket offences thus far. This bill allows for peace officers to determine the presence of marijuana through smell or packaging when they come across it illegally in the possession of youth or illegally transporting it in a vehicle and having this evidence be permissible in courts without the need for lab testing. This beneficial amendment will help the court system. Rather than seeing it clogged with challenges to minor public consumption offences, it will free the system to serve rightfully and more effectively in the manner to which it was intended. This specific point falls in line with the spirit of legalization, and that is to allow the court system the ability to focus more thoroughly on all nonminor marijuana related challenges.

However, Madam Speaker, this bill will continue to show us that the NDP have chosen to mirror their public consumption laws with tobacco rather than alcohol, and that forces me to ask: have they considered how mimicking the tobacco laws will affect the public health? I can't help but wonder if that's not a little bit short sighted. When marijuana becomes legal and the consumption begins to be widespread, it will be up to municipalities to put in place a bylaw to restrict public smoking. Have Albertans been consulted and consented to being exposed to marijuana smoke in parks or walking down the street? How will this affect the children or an asthmatic? Has this effect been considered, and if so, why is this bill not reflective of the restrictions necessary to ensure that no Albertan must jeopardize their health or their family well-being for the choices of others?

I might take into account the smoking laws around, well, public smoking. We have to understand that when someone smokes marijuana, the smoke that comes out of it, that is exhaled, still has qualities of that drug as it floats in the air, and people can receive those inebriating effects just by inhaling that smoke. For many people that is not their thing. It is not their desire to be inebriated, and we have to be careful of such things. By leaving a blank space in this respect, we will have a patchwork of bylaws across the province not consistent with one another, causing confusion for citizens. Again, each municipality is going to try to address these issues of this second-hand smoke in their own way. Not only this, but it will make enforcement a challenge with inconsistencies that police must try to follow. It begs the question of why this difficulty was not considered and if the consultations were done properly.

Madam Speaker, another point I'd like to touch on is the sale of the cannabis. This area was vague in the bill, and it has left me with some questions. As per the bill "the board may, in accordance with the regulations, issue a cannabis licence that authorizes the sale of cannabis in a location where things other than cannabis accessories or prescribed things are sold." Assuming this means that the sale of marijuana will be permitted in rural Alberta locations that are not stand-alone locations, it strikes me as uneven, inconsistent, and unfair that businesses in cities are not being allowed the same relaxed rules as rural Alberta. If cities must abide by stricter regulations when performing the same job than they would have to do in rural Alberta, are we relaxing any sort of rules for these vendors? I would be intrigued to hear why different parts of the same province are having different rules applied to them once again.

These inconsistencies across the province are consistent with your government. You know, your wait times in Calgary are 10 months for a hip surgery versus seven months in Edmonton versus Medicine Hat. They're all over the place. In one province we have so much diversity, and it makes you wonder why in a centralized model we don't have consistent wait times, where they take best practices. In this case it is the same thing. It's about ensuring that there are best practices right through the entire province and not putting the burden of creation of bylaws on these municipalities, who have to spend a lot of time and effort on this.

Furthermore, the enabling regulations for this subsection are contingent upon demand. If the demand is apparent in cities, will the regulations be implemented there?

Madam Speaker, it seems that multiple aspects of this bill have called for uneven distribution of legislation across the province, but in terms of bylaws and subsections being enacted in various parts of Alberta, although I support the notion of ensuring Albertans' health and safety with the upcoming legalization of marijuana, I fear that the bill might create as many problems as it solves. We want this legislation to take a look at what the most common and imminent challenges will be and create effective solutions.

As such, I'm cautiously optimistic that we are on the right track, but we will need to keep a watchful eye on what comes up as legalization rolls out. It is inevitable that unforeseen obstacles will arise, and we will be closely listening to families, ensuring that they have their voices heard in the direction of their province.

Now, another topic I wish to touch upon, still following on sales, is the AGLC, the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission. Inherently there will be increase in workload for the board once marijuana is legalized. With this legislation we can see that they are preparing for an influx of additional work to oversee cannabis sales. Expanding its mandate is not without cost. It seems that the unforeseen costs of legalization are already piling up. The AGLC board will be increased from seven to nine members, and that's reasonable under the circumstances. However, the time frame for the board to hold hearings is also increasing quite dramatically, doubling from 60 to 100 hearings.

I suppose this is a mere indication of how much work they will be taking on with the legalized cannabis sales. It would be a challenge for the board to predict the incipient work upon the beginning of legislation, and we will be closely monitoring the level to which they are equipped to handle this unprecedented territory. I'm certain that as legislators we are prepared to adapt and mould the legislation to address the specific difficulties we see in our jurisdiction and not stick to a one-size-fits-all model. Nevertheless, we will be determining that as this legislation proceeds.

Madam Speaker, another section of this bill goes to reinforce its similarities with tobacco legislation. A previous bill, Bill 26, included a restriction on individuals smoking in businesses. However, that bill failed to implement anything regarding the responsibility of the business itself to prevent this from occurring. Bill 6 fixes this gap by placing the onus on the business, and with this bill the responsibility will be placed on the business to ensure that people are not allowed to smoke or vape on their premises. A beneficial section, it will ensure that enforcement of laws is understood and the responsibility of every party involved as well. This was an important change to make as it emphasizes that we must all stay vigilant to uphold the law.

Madam Speaker, part of the preparation to the upcoming legalization of cannabis is ensuring that our existing legislation is updated to reflect the upcoming needs of Albertans. I'm glad to see that this bill also updates some existing regulations to stay in tune with our province's new direction. One of the updated bills is the Drug-endangered Children Act. Whereas households will soon contain marijuana plants, this legislation has a provision that allows children to be in the same premises as where four cannabis plants are being grown. It means that any premises that has more than four cannabis plants is considered a grow op, and it's still considered an offence for a child to be in the presence of one.

Now, although this bill has included provisions to reflect upcoming legislation, I wonder if the safety of children was considered, especially in the case of young children, who like to get their hands on anything within reach. Does this clause have the potential to jeopardize their safety? We will need to look closely and to monitor the feedback not only from Albertan families on this but, again, also with law enforcement that will likely be involved if this amendment causes a situation to arise where a child's health and well-being go awry.

Bill 6 also contains a couple of additions unrelated to marijuana legalization. One of these that I believe will be interesting to see in action is allowing you brews and establishments to alter liquor products. This could be in terms of premixing cocktails, adding flavouring, infusing food with liquor, and creating barrel-aged liquor. This surely will cause a lot of excitement in some sectors but also concern with ensuring the safety of the public. When mixing drinks there's a challenge in ensuring proper quality control. This could cause some worry in the public on the safety of the drinks themselves such as in respect to questionable alcohol content. However, this bill doesn't clarify that no retailer may alter marijuana products in the way that this bill allows for alcohol drinks to be altered.

Madam Speaker, I wonder about marijuana in schools. I wonder about how it coincides with the tobacco laws. If I understand correctly, I mean, a minor can have cigarettes on them – a teacher can't do anything about it – as long as they smoke these cigarettes off the grounds. But, you know, I can't help but wonder if kids are going to be bringing marijuana into the school with the intent of smoking it during lunchtime or something like that or, worse yet, even distributing it within the school. That's something that we have to consider, where we should be mimicking liquor laws, quite honestly. It is about consumption and possession, and that is something to consider for this government.

You know, I've read a lot of studies and you read a lot of the anecdotes, and there are a lot of people that think that they can, for example, operate a vehicle. My concern is still that a person is inebriated, and from my personal experiences as a paramedic I have great concerns around this. I mean, a lot of people say that marijuana is not nearly a harmful drug, and to their credit I've only done a couple of calls that dealt directly with marijuana. But it was the third call that really triggered me, that we have to address the lowest common denominator, Madam Speaker.

We had a fellow that came off night shift from whichever plant he worked at – this was several years ago now – and he was driving home. It looks like he might have ingested something. Whatever it was, he went off the road, and he sheared off a light standard, you know, the big light post on the side of the highway. I did not know a vehicle could take one of those down. I thought the vehicle would fold before the light standard did. But he took down the light post. It was one of the highway ones. It was a big one. Yeah, the guys saw that there was marijuana on the side seat. It's a pretty obvious conclusion that we can come to that he was inebriated from marijuana.

Again, when I hear all these people say that, yeah, these guys can drive, they can operate, they can do all sorts of things even while under the influence of marijuana, I have to go back to that one person that sheared a light standard. What if that wasn't a light standard? What if that was a sidewalk, and he went veering down it? We had a very bad experience in Toronto, where it was a deliberate action on their part, but there's nothing to say that someone couldn't experience that same event, where they're ingesting marijuana and then fall asleep, black out, whatever it is, lose his train of thought, and he's off the road.

Again, when we are looking at a lot of these laws and discussing these issues, we do have to address a lot of these things. I had someone say to me: well, Tany, how can you address the laws for that one single person?

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to just have the member kind of continue on there. It seemed like he was in the middle of, you know, his thoughts and comments. I thought it was very interesting to bring a little more personal story to this bill and these actions, legalizing cannabis, and some of the dangers and the problems that we could see. I think it's good that we have some of those stories told so we can have that opportunity to reflect.

You know, legislation like this is necessary legislation. The federal government is passing this into legislation, passing into law that it will be legal, so we have to do something. As we go forward here, we need to have this open discussion with the government on Bill 6 and how it's going to affect people in Alberta and how it's going to affect how cannabis is distributed in Alberta and how it affects our families, our communities, and that sort of thing.

Yeah, I'd like to hear the member continue on.

Mr. Yao: Why, thank you, my good man. Madam Speaker, this is a serious issue, so we must discuss this thoroughly. Again, it is about that lowest common denominator, that person that can't handle their inebriation or takes it too far and operates machinery. They operate a vehicle, and they could hurt or impair somebody. It's sad that we have to address that one person, if you will, or that very few.

We have to recognize that all of our laws surround very few people that would actually commit such a thing, whether it was murder – I mean, in an ideal world no one here wants to murder each other, but there's always one. There's always one that would go over the edge and push those limits. That's why we have those laws, that someone cannot murder that other person. And we have to consider that when we are doing such laws that deal with inebriation and with marijuana consumption and how it's slightly differently from cigarettes and how it deals differently from alcohol.

Madam Speaker, I cautiously support this bill in filling the gaps that the upcoming legalization of marijuana will create. But I do want to reiterate that the lack of foresight has created a situation where municipalities will be forced to create bylaws, thus causing a patchwork of legal oversight that causes nothing but confusion for Albertans and difficulty for law enforcement.

Many communities here in this province are covered by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and they are going to encounter, going from jurisdiction to jurisdiction, where the laws might be slightly different based on the consumption of marijuana. The government could do the proper thing and make sure a lot of these laws are standardized and that this province, which is bringing this in, is leading the way in ensuring that municipalities don't have to invest more time and money than they have to and not recreate the wheel but allow some sort of standardized laws to be put in place.

There's still a lot of work to do, and we are off to a good foundation in terms of legal framework in anticipation of the legalization of cannabis. However, again, we do have to stay vigilant, we have to seek feedback, and we have to consult. You guys are learning consultation, and that is a good thing. Thank goodness you're taking lessons from us. We will continue to help you with that consultation.

Mr. Mason: What have you been smoking?

Mr. Yao: Oh, my goodness. The Minister of Transportation's accusations over here are really disappointing, Madam Speaker. He may think he's quick witted.

Again, we have to stay vigilant because of people who might take this a little bit lighter. It is a very serious issue. I truly recommend that all members of this House look into all these aspects and truly consider it and the implications of such things. I mean, the good news is that we can look internationally and see some places where a lot of this has succeeded and there have been no major incidents. We consider Canberra in Australia. That's the capital city, so their Ottawa. They put a border around that city, made it its own state, and they legalized it many, many years ago in Canberra, Australia.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise to speak to Bill 6, Gaming and Liquor Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. As mentioned, it proposes to amend both An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis, still awaiting proclamation, and the Gaming and Liquor Act to help prepare the province for the impending legalization of cannabis, coming sometime this year I think is all we can say, perhaps in the fall. The legislation builds on the two previous cannabis-related bills and An Act to Reduce Cannabis and Alcohol Impaired Driving. A large focus of this bill is on granting the renamed Alberta gaming, liquor, and cannabis commission new tools to oversee and enforce the province's fledgling cannabis market. The bill also proposes consequential amendments to the Conflicts of Interest Act, the Corrections Act, the Drug-endangered Children Act, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act, and the Reform of Agencies, Boards and Commissions Compensation Act.

The bill would prohibit cannabis retailers from naming themselves or employing signage, symbols, or graphics that are commonly associated with medicine, health, or pharmaceuticals, including, without limitation, the terms "pharmacy, dispensary, apothecary, drug store, medicine, medicinal, health, therapeutic or clinic." This is important, I think. These are not pharmacists that are dispensing this, they're not physicians necessarily, and it's important that people understand that this is not under the aegis of a health professional.

The act will empower the gaming, liquor, and cannabis commission to make policies respecting the advertising, display, and promotion of cannabis and cannabis accessories. It will also prohibit cannabis retailers or any employee or agent from altering in any way or permitting others to alter in any way cannabis that is offered for sale at licensed premises. The importance is obvious. Part of the problem today is that people don't know what they're buying. It may or may not be pure. It may or may not be the strength that is advertised or promoted by the individual pushing the drug. We're seeing already signs that in some cases it's cut with fentanyl and ending up with tragic results.

This act would also make it an offence for the owner or operator of a premise to allow smoking or vaping where it's expressly prohibited and currently anywhere that's not allowing smoking. This enables enforcement against the owner or operator of a premise similar to those existing for alcohol and tobacco. Eminently sensible. It also permits a court to rely on a law enforcement officer's ability to infer that a product is cannabis based on its packaging, labelling, and smell for the purposes of dealing with offences under the act, mirroring the current practice for alcohol and tobacco.

This act authorizes the Alberta gaming, liquor, and cannabis commission to destroy or dispose of or order cannabis retailers to destroy or dispose of cannabis that is returned or otherwise deemed unsaleable or unsafe.

Finally, under the Gaming and Liquor Act this enables bars to blend or infuse alcohol with flavouring to create store specialty drinks. Such drinks, however, cannot be infused with cannabis, appropriately. The combination of these two drugs is not well researched. It's certainly expected to cause more impairment and should never be allowed.

The act also permits adults to make their own wine, cider, or beer up to a quantity permitted under the regulations in places licensed for that purpose or in the adult's own home.

It increases the maximum administrative fines for infraction of the Gaming and Liquor Act and regulations from $200,000 to $1 million.

Madam Speaker, it's estimated that approximately 250 private retail cannabis shops will be operating in Alberta after the federal government legalizes cannabis on or about July 1 of this year. You-brew operations currently exist in seven other provinces. The Alberta government has opted for private bricks and mortar cannabis stores and public online sales. About 60 Alberta communities have combined liquor-grocery stores, but provincial officials expect online sales to cover much of the cannabis demand in remote locations.

Budget 2018 projected a $90 million loss to the provincial government over the next two years while the fledgling cannabis industry is set up in Alberta. I hope that reflects the fact that we're going to try to keep taxes as low as possible to undercut the black market. That's very appropriate and responsible, in my view. Let's find out how it works in the first two years and see what's possible in terms of return on investment. Hopefully, that return on investment will go into mental health and addictions support services. In 2021 the cannabis industry is estimated to generate a profit of about $37 million, so not a big cash cow as some have anticipated.

As a physician I support the naming and branding restrictions that Bill 6 seeks to impose on recreational cannabis retailers. These licensees are clearly not pharmacists, and to allow them to suggest that they're offering anything in the way of health care and medicine would be outrageous and unacceptable.

I also support any and all efforts to make cannabis unattractive to young people. In keeping with the recommendations of the Canadian Paediatric Society and the Canadian Medical Association, anyone under the age of 25 is probably playing a risky game if they're using cannabis on a regular basis or even a semiregular basis. There's growing evidence that there's no safe dose of cannabis in a developing child's brain, a youth's brain, and it has all kinds of negative impacts where it's being used in the young, developing brain, not least of which is an addiction potential or, certainly, a dependency potential.

I still think that the government has missed the boat by establishing 18 years as the minimum age. I think there's lots of evidence that this is not safe under the age of 25. I would have preferred 21, as I've argued in this House. Recognizing that alcohol and tobacco are legal at 18, I think we could have made the cannabis legal age 21. For those majority of young people that try to follow the law, it would have delayed some young people's access to and use of the drug.

In relation to allowing the court to rely on a law enforcement officer's ability to infer that the product is cannabis, I think we have to rely on increasing investment and research to help define what impairment looks like, to help define what tests – whether it's a spit test, blood test, or behavioural measures – can be used to help us keep our streets safe and keep people driving heavy machinery or on the roads out of harm's way. I think it behooves, I guess, all of us as citizens to identify signs of impairment, to confront it, to refer it, and to indeed challenge those who might be impaired. And the definition of impairment means that people don't necessarily recognize they're impaired. If your senses are impaired, if your mental functions are impaired, it by definition means that you're not necessarily able to identify that impairment by virtue of the impairment itself.

I'm very pleased to support this bill. I don't have any other particular amendments apart from those concerns I have about age. I dare say that while people complain that this is going too quickly, my strong argument is that it is high time we got this out of criminal hands, stopped the criminal convictions, standardized the doses so that people know what they're dealing with, treated it like alcohol and tobacco, which cause much more damage than cannabis in any of the research that I've read, and that indeed we come to grips with the rules around that, which we wouldn't necessarily do unless it was becoming legal. You set a date when it's going to become legal, and you work towards that. Everybody redoubles their efforts when they realize that the time is getting shorter and shorter, and we actually get serious attention to an issue that I think is long overdue in being attended to.

As many know, Canadian youth are the highest users of cannabis of any population, that I'm aware of, per capita. For whatever reason, Canadian youth are interested in and are using cannabis, and we need to have in place some good, strong guidelines, standards, limited advertising and promotion, and ensure that we do this as well as we can given that it has both positive and negative impacts.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd just like to speak today on Bill 6, the Gaming and Liquor Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. Obviously, it's a good thing to see Bill 6 because it closes some of the holes in Bill 26, and it amends the Gaming and Liquor Act. It does, you know, amend some of the other acts, too, in small ways. I guess in that respect, it's good to see this bill come forward to close some of those holes that were left in the last one, and it's good to see the government working to make sure that these things are done and that they are trying to fix things that maybe were missed in the first go-around.

Now, of course, this is kind of a companion piece to last fall's Bill 26, An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis. Again, it's good to see this coming forward and getting some of these other things taken care of. There are still concerns, of course, with this bill. There are, obviously, some other concerns with, you know, the speed at which the federal government has been working on this. Of course, we would like to on this side of the House kind of keep monitoring how this implementation goes forward, how the legalization comes forward from the federal government, and how that is going to affect Albertans and stakeholders and the public at large.

Of course, paramount is public safety and the health of children. That needs to be our priority here as we look at these different things that come before us and how we can deal with them. It makes me think of the situation with impaired driving and how, when it comes to cannabis, there really hasn't been anything that's really solid as far as some way to test, you know, the driving on the street when the police stop a driver. That's obviously a big concern.

I remember reading in the past year that somebody had done a study on THC levels and how it affects impairment. It was interesting to see that in that particular study – of course, I'm sure there are lots of studies out there – the THC levels didn't necessarily match the impairment level. In fact, I remember that one was ahead of the other in kind of a curve going up, and then the other one followed. When we look at things like that and think how complicated this is going to be for roadside testing and even testing once you get somebody to the police station and have lab work done, it's going to create a lot of problems until this gets all sorted out, especially if the main way that you would think that we'd be using to test it may not fully capture the actual impairment of the individual. When you see situations like that and studies like that, it makes you wonder if this was maybe done just a little too quickly without figuring out all the details first. That's probably one of my greatest concerns, how that's going to affect public safety, especially on the roads.

Now, one thing Bill 6 does do is allow police officers to determine the presence of marijuana through smell or packaging when they come upon people that are smoking it illegally or maybe youth possessing it or illegally transporting it or anything like that. That's similar to alcohol in similar situations as far as the peace officers having a little bit of an opportunity to use their discretion and determine what it looks like. If it looks like it, then it gives them the opportunity to investigate further, and this evidence will be acceptable in the courts without the need for lab testing. You know, I guess we have to have a certain amount of leeway for our officers and their discretion to deal with this as they come across it in the streets and in vehicles. This is consistent with the laws for alcohol, like I said, and in cases of minor ticketed offences.

Now, we do want to make sure that the courts don't get clogged with challenges to minor public consumption offences and stuff like that. I mean, obviously, all issues of criminality need to be dealt with, and they need to be dealt with properly, but we don't need to clog up our court system with things that just don't make sense to do so. Obviously, we have a situation in our court system right now where we seem to be running out of resources to take care of criminals. We've even seen recently where hardened criminals had to be let loose because we didn't have enough resources in our courts to take care of them properly or the resources were misguided or put in the wrong area. So there are problems there, and obviously with minor offences we need to make sure that they don't take up time that is better used on something else.

Probably one of the most controversial things to me – when I talk to people in my constituency about this, it's one of their biggest concerns, too – is that it only makes sense that cannabis is treated the same as tobacco as far as where it's smoked in buildings and close to entrances of buildings and that sort of thing, but the government has chosen not to make it the same as alcohol as far as public consumption and everything. I think that's one concern that I've heard in my constituency quite a bit.

This is about protecting public health and keeping our streets safe and our public areas safe. You know, it's not legal to walk down the streets or be in a park consuming alcohol, but of course now we have the situation here where it's legal to do so with marijuana. Obviously, if we treat it the same as alcohol when it comes to transporting it, driving under the influence, and that sort of thing, I would think it would make sense – like I say, one of the concerns that I've had expressed to me is that it would be treated the same as far as the public areas. I don't know if the public really expects that people can be in a playground, a public park, or whatever, using marijuana. The people that I've talked to have said that that doesn't make sense to them.

Of course, what that'll do is cause the municipalities to make their own rules in those regards, so it puts the onus on the municipality to do some of these things that with alcohol they don't have to. If you've got different municipalities across the province, you know, different MDs, counties, towns, cities, whatever, making different rules for the consumption of marijuana in public places, then when Albertans travel to different places, they'll have to be guessing. I'm not sure how it'll be signed or whatever. It could be a little confusing to them to try to decide: "Okay. Am I allowed to do this, or am I not allowed to do this?" Or if they see somebody else doing it and they're from a community where that's not allowed, they're going to go over and say, "What are you doing?" and it could be perfectly legal there. You have a lot of situations that could happen when the onus on this is put on the municipalities to make rules.

Now, what it'll do is that with this kind of open consumption idea, it doesn't matter where Albertans go; they're going to be exposed to this everywhere. Again, it's not so with alcohol consumption. Many of the people that I talk to think it should be likewise with marijuana. Of course, by having kind of a patchwork of rules that different municipalities and towns and cities might have, it could be challenging for police to enforce, too. I mean, everybody will have an excuse. It's like: "Well, you know, I can do it in the other town. Why can't I do it in this town?"

Another thing that Bill 6 does is that it opens the door to permitting cannabis sales in existing businesses such as a separate section of a rural general store in communities too small to support a stand-alone cannabis store, which is similar to liquor sales. I guess the idea is to allow some form of retail sale for marijuana in rural Alberta rather than solely through online systems. When we get into this part of the bill, it just seems a little bit vague and maybe not quite clear to me. Anyway, I'll just read from it. It's on page 2 of the bill.

(3) Despite subsection (1)(b), the board may, in accordance with the regulations, issue a cannabis licence that authorizes the sale of cannabis in a location where things other than cannabis accessories or prescribed things are sold.

I don't know. That paragraph there just doesn't make sense to me as far as, you know: "a location where things other than cannabis accessories or prescribed things are sold." I don't know if there needs to be something cleared up there as far as making it clear how that actually works with the legislation. That's one of the issues that I see in here, too.

Now, it adds a section to place the onus on a business not to allow people to smoke or vape on their premises. Bill 26 included restrictions on people smoking in businesses, but it failed to include the responsibility of businesses, which is consistent with tobacco. So the onus is on the business to make sure that this doesn't happen on their premises.

Now, Bill 6 amends a number of other sections in other acts such as the Drug-endangered Children Act. What it says in there basically is that any premise with more than four plants is still considered a grow op, and it remains an offence to allow a child to be present in one. That's another section that's changed, and I think that's obviously a good idea to have that in place.

The AGLC board, which provides oversight to liquor and soon cannabis sales, is seeing an increase in its membership from seven to nine, and the time frame for the board to hold hearings is being doubled to 120 days from 60. Obviously, it's going to create a little more work for that board. That only makes sense that there'll be some more help with that. Like I say, this adds a whole new level to the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission as far as what they have to do. Obviously, this longer time frame gives an idea of the volume of work that the board is expecting due to legalized cannabis sales. There's going to be quite a bit more work.

Of course, this is yet another cost, you know, to society, the legalization of marijuana. I mean, the federal government is putting this through, and it's up to us as legislators in Alberta to deal with this. I think it's important that we work on this and, I guess, keep the communications open on this. As Albertans see this come into effect and everything, they're going to have ideas. They're going to see things that they don't like or that they do like about the system. Hopefully, we can react to those things and make better legislation.

Now, Bill 6 did include a couple of things that were unrelated to marijuana legalization. One of them is allowing you brews and establishments to alter liquor products such as premixing batches of cocktails, adding flavouring, infusing food with liquor, and creating barrel-aged liquor. Of course, that has nothing to do with marijuana legislation, but it's been included in this bill, too. Another thing is that altering liquor products, you know, prompts some public and consumer safety concerns due to quality control, questionable alcohol content of premixed and blended products. Obviously, there are a few concerns that could happen because of allowing the you brews to alter liquor products, so hopefully the government will have some regulations and everything will be in place to have a bit of control on that.

This bill makes it clear that no retailer can alter marijuana products, which is good to have that clarification.

You know, it just seems like we have to keep working as legislators in Alberta on this situation. Again, the federal government is coming up with this. We have to deal with the regulations within Alberta and work with that.

Again, it seems like the biggest concern for me is the impaired driving and how the police are going to enforce that on the highways and be able to test for it and having something that we can have confidence in that that actually is working as far as when the police stop someone and they do a roadside test. You know, we need to have some confidence that what they're doing is working and that we know that when they do this roadside test, they'll be able to pull people off the road that are impaired, that are a danger to our streets and to our families on the highways. I think that's obviously one of the biggest concerns.

Then, of course, it seems like it might even be tough to properly gauge the impairment even once you bring somebody back to the station and have a proper test. Like I say, there are some studies out that would show that even a blood test may not be accurate as far as showing the effects of marijuana on the body and on the mind and on the ability of a person to drive and react properly in driving situations. With those kinds of difficulties it makes it tough to have confidence that we are going to be in a situation where the streets will be safe. Like I say, I just want to caution people on that.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak?

Mr. Nixon: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the House for unanimous consent to revert quickly to introductions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd just like to take the opportunity – and thank you to the House for your permission – to welcome Albert and Karen Kamps from my riding. Albert actually sits on the board of Alberta Milk and represents the dairy producers of Alberta. He just informed me a few minutes ago, too, that 12 per cent of the dairy production in the whole province is in my riding. I didn't know it was that much. I knew there was a lot of it. Anyway, Albert and Karen also actually represent a large and very industrious Dutch community that lives in my riding as well. Welcome.

Also, I'd like to introduce my wife – she doesn't like me doing this, so I kind of snuck this in; I didn't tell her I was going to – my beautiful wife, who has stood by me for more years than I can count.

An Hon. Member: You should know.

Mr. Orr: I think it's 43.

If you could give them the warm welcome of the House. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Welcome.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 6

The Acting Speaker: Is there anybody else wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Perfect. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to get up and speak to Bill 6. It's a lot more fun speaking to this Bill 6 than the last Bill 6 although we did speak about Bill 6 for a long, long time and definitely got the attention of a lot of Albertans. Anyway, this is indeed just a very, very important bill.

You know, I understand the need to push this forward because it was kind of pushed onto us by the federal government, but my concern is that we're kind of pushing off a lot of the responsibility onto municipalities that may not be geared up right at the moment to do so.

I understand that the uptake of licensing around the Edmonton area especially has been quite active other than, I believe, only one application out of Sherwood Park. But the ones in Edmonton have been quite prolific, and my understanding is that the city of Edmonton council is right now looking at licensing fees. I think they're starting somewhere around $8,100, but some speculation from the police is that the cost to the municipality might be upwards of, like, $100,000, so it may be very difficult for them to recoup some of the extra costs.

Now, that being said, when it becomes legal, unless a municipality passes a bylaw restricting it, people can walk down the streets smoking a joint. That's, I guess, one of the biggest concerns that we hear – I don't know if you're hearing it here in Edmonton, but we definitely hear it out in rural Alberta – that, you know, you can't walk down the street with a beer in your hand, but you can walk down with a joint in your hand, so there's kind of that little bit of discrepancy. And a lot of people say that it stinks. I mean, even if it's illegal, you can still walk around and smell people smoking it, and you don't know whether there's a skunk in the area or someone smoking pot.

That being said, we were over in Amsterdam a couple of years ago, and, you know, it's been legal over there for quite a while. Of course, when you visit Amsterdam, you have to go to the old downtown and have a walk around there. There were quite a few of the coffee shops, as they call them, and we didn't see a lot of it spilling out onto the streets. Mostly people just stayed in there, so we really didn't see that much of an issue. Yeah, the odd partygoer sitting around at a coffee table out in the street was getting a little rambunctious, but overall the people there didn't seem too concerned about it.

One of the things I'd like to just get some clarification on, though, is that when it comes to section 86 of the bill – let me just flip over to that. Just some clarification on it. I started making beer in Edmonton about 35 years ago, and at that time there were only two places around where you could buy beer- and winemaking supplies. Those were the old Army & Navy downtown and one private operator over on the south side. Now – I don't know how many – probably hundreds of different brew places around town supply them.

Some of the places I've gone into and talked to the owners. One of the concerns or questions that they have – and maybe we can address it in this bill if I can get clarification on it. Maybe it's already existing in here and covered; otherwise, possibly put an amendment forward during Committee of the Whole. Some of these operators that are supplying beer and wine have a lot of people walk into the store and say: "Well, you know, I live in an apartment, or I live in a condo, and I don't have a lot of room, but I'd sure like to get into making my own beer and wine. Is it possible to make it here at your facility?" I understand that in most of the other provinces we do have that. Anyway, the question is that a lot of these places do have room, and they have warehouses, and they would like to set up a place where people could come in, buy a wine kit, buy a beer kit, make their own product at their facility, pay an extra fee to the supplier, and then take their product home when it's all done. They'd have the experience of making their own beer and wine.

Section 86 says, "An adult may make wine, cider and beer, up to a quantity permitted under the regulations, in a premises licensed for that purpose or in the adult's residence." So my question is: does that clause open the door for, say, Wine-Kraft downtown to apply for a licence that they could make beer or wine on the premises and have people come in, buy a wine kit, and make it on their premises? It is something that a lot of these guys have asked for, so I'm hoping that if it's covered in that clause, I could get some clarification on that. Otherwise, I would possibly put an amendment forward, so if I could get some clarification, that would be great. I think it would be something that would be well accepted by a lot of the suppliers in town and in the province.

Now, the other question that I had. Some clarification again, because that section is a little bit vague. It says, "Despite subsection (1)(b), the board may, in accordance with the regulations, issue a cannabis licence that authorizes the sale of cannabis in a location where things other than cannabis accessories or prescribed things are sold." My understanding from previous discussions and debates in the House was that it was quite specific that a marijuana dispensary had to be a stand-alone facility. Now I'm seeing that this is kind of going the other way. I wonder exactly what the regulations and criteria are going to be for that, whether it's only for, like, a small-town, isolated little general store that could attach that onto it and doesn't sell liquor as well. Or is it liquor? Why would we be giving concessions when a lot of other places, liquor stores that would also like to be in the marijuana business can't do it, right? That's my understanding. So I'd just like a little bit more clarification exactly on what the regulations are going to be or the criteria around that so that businesses will have a better understanding of what their options are.

The bill also amends a number of sections under the act such as the Drug-endangered Children Act. The above-mentioned amendment allows children to be on premises where four cannabis plants are grown as per the new legalization laws. Now, there was a write-up in one of the papers just the other day about property values and resale and the damages to houses even with four plants if you're increasing the moisture in the home. I don't know exactly what is entailed in that, whether it's due to hydroponics or what it is. Now, the concern there is access to kids. I mean, kids will tend to eat plants, little kids. We had to take our son in when he was just a toddler because he grabbed a piece of I think they called it dumb cane. It was a big, leafy plant, but it can actually paralyze your mouth and your throat. We had to bring him in, the poor little guy. They had to give him ipecac and make him throw up three or four times before they let us go home. So that is a concern with that section, that, you know, unless there are some restrictions on keeping it out of the reach of kids, it will be accessible to children.

That being said, if I could get clarification, I guess, on a couple of those areas: the brewery section and the home-growing and whether there are going to be some regulations there regarding small children and then the vagueness of that section where it allows cannabis to be sold in a location where things other than cannabis accessories or prescribed things are sold. Those would be my questions to the government. If we could get some clarification on those two issues, I'll be happy with that.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 6? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I thank you for allowing me to rise and to speak to Bill 6, the Gaming and Liquor Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. We've heard some wise words today. We're well aware that this is a companion piece to last fall's Bill 26, An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis. I will suggest that as we progress and we move through this piece of legislation, the United Conservative Party will be monitoring the implementation of the cannabis legislation. We'll be seeking feedback from stakeholders and from our constituents and from the public in general as we move forward. I have received feedback consistently since last fall on this issue of the legalization of marijuana and how we're going to deal with it in Alberta.

Madam Speaker, I can confidently say that I believe that everybody in this House wants to see the public safety and the health of our children become paramount in this piece of legislation and in the implementation of the marijuana laws as we go forward in this province.

Madam Speaker, I had an opportunity – that's not a word I want to use. I had the chance to work with a family in my constituency who were very concerned about their son and the mental health issues and the addiction issues that this young man was dealing with. They were convinced that this young man's addiction and his mental health issues could be drawn and a straight line could be made through the young man's dependency on marijuana and his addiction to marijuana. Unfortunately, over Easter this same young man, after battling with his own demons, took his own life. I met with the parents. I went to the funeral, and I met with the parents a week and a half later. They were convinced, after many years of struggling to deal with their son, that marijuana was the core of the problem.

I would echo the comments by many in this House that whatever legislation we pass, we're going to have to ensure that we deal with the dependency and the addiction issues that come with adding this drug as a legal substance to our society.

I would agree with many that have stood up and talked about the fact that marijuana, it would appear, is unsafe for anyone under the age of 25 as we look at the brain development as we grow. Madam Speaker, I am very concerned about how we move forward and how we deal with schools and with the children in our schools. I believe that this is going to be an issue that I'll address in a few minutes.

Madam Speaker, Bill 6 allows peace officers to determine the presence of marijuana through smell or packaging so that they can begin to address people that are smoking illegally or address youth that are possessing marijuana illegally or the illegal transportation of the substance. That's a good thing. I'm glad to see that we're starting to fill in some of the gaps that were necessary to be addressed and that this piece of legislation starts to address that.

It's important that the evidence that is collected by peace officers is going to be acceptable in the courts, and Bill 6 helps us to take a step towards that. It is consistent with other ticketed offences that deal with minors and cases of minors having alcohol and tobacco, so I believe that this is a wise step and a good step. I believe that it's done in such a way that our court system isn't going to be clogged up with minor offences.

Bill 6 also reminds us, though, that the government mirrored the public consumption laws of tobacco and not alcohol when they addressed the legalization of marijuana and how we're going to address it. It does leave a question as to whether or not this allows us to be able to protect the public health. That is one of our duties as legislators.

It's clear that municipalities are now going to be taking on a new burden, that municipalities are going to be faced with the need to pass bylaws that can restrict where marijuana can be consumed, where it can be smoked, and where it can be sold. Albertans will by necessity be exposed to this on a much greater basis than we have in the past. As has already been said, while we cannot carry a beer down a public street and be consuming alcohol in public, we will be able to smoke on the public sidewalk. You will be able to smoke in your backyards, where it will become an issue for your neighbours. We will begin to have a patchwork of smoking laws and bylaws across this province as people go from community to community to community, which could be confusing. But that may be the best that we can do. It is going to be hard on our enforcement, our police officers and our peace officers.

Madam Speaker, in section 90.12 of Bill 6 it addresses cannabis sales. It opens the doors for permitting cannabis sales in existing businesses. I was driving to the Legislature today only to hear – and I believe I've got it right – that the establishment called the Second Cup is going to be opening up a place for the retail sale of cannabis. In rural areas where you might only have one general store in a community, now as you go into that general store, you will also be able to see and be able to purchase marijuana.

I'm glad to see that in this bill there is some consideration given to signage and to how we will advertise for the sale of marijuana, that any business signage must not use any term commonly associated with medicine or health or pharmaceuticals and that no licensee or employer or agent may alter in any way the cannabis that is offered for sale. I believe these are good, wise restrictions to be placed on business.

I want to spend just a minute or two on my concern with regard to schools. I have spoken with the RCMP in my constituency, across the constituency, and they have grave concerns about how schools and police are going to deal with the consumption and rather the possession of cannabis when it comes to schools. I have talked with educators, and I have had educators tell me that not one school board across this province is prepared for the legalization of marijuana and how to address the possession of marijuana in the schools. Not one.

I've even had, as of today, discussions with the Minister of Education, asking both in budget estimates and today: how are we going to start to be prepared to deal with the fact that an 18-year-old student can legally purchase the substance? While they might have to smoke it off the school grounds, they have the capacity to bring it legally into the school. We have schools that go from K to 12, and when I sent my five-year-old son and my five-year-old daughter off to school, it was not with the expectation that they would be going to a place where marijuana would be possessed by the students around them. This is an issue that we're going to have to deal with.

I'm waiting as we go through this bill to see if the government has the capacity to address this huge concern. The police are concerned about it. The school boards openly admit that they are not prepared to deal with this. This falls on our plate. Because we have chosen to treat marijuana through the tobacco laws rather than through the alcohol laws, we have created a problem for the schools across this province. This falls on our shoulders. We have a duty and we have a responsibility to address this.

Dr. Swann: How do you suggest we proceed?

Mr. Smith: Well, I believe that we might want to consider referring it to a committee. We might want to consider asking the committee to do more legwork on this. Let's bring the school boards in. Let's bring the police in. Let's ask them: how can we best address this issue? I know that when I brought it up in budget estimates to the minister, he was a little surprised by it, yet we should be able to address it.

Now, if the government can come forward as we go through this bill and show me how we can wisely address this, then my concern will be abated. That's what this Legislature is supposed to be about at its best: the give and take of ideas, the capacity to listen and to work together. So if the government can come forward and show me as we go through this bill that we are going to be responsible in addressing this issue and this concern, that we can give guidance to municipalities and to school boards – remember, school boards can't make laws. The best that school boards can do is make policy. We need to give them some direction, and we need to give them the capacity to deal with this issue.

Madam Speaker, I am glad that I've had the opportunity to bring some of my concerns before the House, and I would move to adjourn debate on Bill 6.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 7

Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act

Mr. Schneider moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 7, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 7, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Debate adjourned on the amendment April 12: Mr. Stier speaking]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am happy to be able to stand and to speak to the amendment to Bill 7 and to the referral motion on Bill 7, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act. As we know in this House, a referral motion asks the Legislature to place a bill under discussion before a committee, and there are some very good reasons why we do that.

We ask the government and we ask the people in this Legislature to refer it to committee so that a bill can have broader and further discussion, so that the ideas of that bill can be placed before a committee and free up the valuable time that is in this Legislature to move on to other business and then to bring that bill back before the House once we've had further consideration of the pros and the cons, once we've had a chance to potentially call stakeholders to come before the committee to ensure that there's been a proper consultation with regard to the bill and to make sure that at the end of the day, ultimately, that bill, in this case Bill 7, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act, actually serves the people of Alberta and that it does so in a way that moves our province forward.

Now, Madam Speaker, we understand that Bill 7 proposes that we would begin to develop and to encourage a successful local food sector throughout the province and that we would begin to regulate agricultural products that are produced or processed in the province and that will ultimately be marketed and sold as organic products within the province.

We understand that Bill 7 is three parts. It's got three parts. It's designed to support Alberta's local food producers. The first part establishes organic standards, that the local food produced in Alberta that wants to be labelled as organic must now meet the Canadian standards established by the Canadian Food Inspection Agency; the second part of this bill, Madam Speaker, deals with local food week and brings and allows this act to coincide with the Open Farm Days celebrations, that are usually held in the third week of August; and the third part establishes a local food council to help promote and to support local small producers. That might include groups like farmers' markets.

In Drayton Valley we have a farmers' market, and this might fall under that umbrella. The U-picks: I spent a wonderful night last summer going to a U-pick outside of Drayton Valley and getting all the saskatoons that we would need for the pies that I would love to be able to consume over the course of this past year. They would fall under this.

This Bill 7 moves towards starting to allow and to present the legislation that's going to be needed for the province of Alberta to have organic food products. Presently the province of Alberta has no standards for food to be called organic food. Any goods sold outside of Alberta or Canada would and have to meet standards set federally, standards that are set by the Canadian Food Inspection Agency. Presently any food product that is labelled organic, including food for human consumption or livestock feed or seeds, all of that is regulated by the Canadian Food Inspection Agency.

The Canadian Food Inspection Agency standards ensure that organics or organically labelled products actually demonstrate that the organic claims are truthful, that they actually are organic, that they're not misleading, and that all of the commodity-specific requirements that need to be met have actually been met. The Canadian Food Inspection Agency oversees and monitors and enforces the requirements of the Canada organic regime.

Now, Bill 7 sets out regulations dealing with the standards of labelling, and it provides for regulatory offences, which will give teeth to the legislation.

Madam Speaker, when you go into something for the first time, you better make sure you've done your consultation. You better make sure that you have asked the people that are going to be most affected by this piece of legislation that indeed they are in support of this legislation. By sending this bill to committee, we can ensure that the Alberta legislation and the potential regulations truly will harmonize with the federal standards that are set. We can study them. We can make sure that the people and the stakeholders that are involved have the capacity to agree with the bill as it moves forward, and it's going to be important to ensure that all regulatory pieces resulting from Bill 7 meet the criteria set out by the Canada Food Inspection Agency in order to be certified organic.

There has been some concern expressed that the certification process for identifying organically grown food could take up to three years, and for anyone involved in that business, that's got to be a concern. This committee would be the perfect place to ensure that we study this issue. We certainly do not want to proceed down a path that is going to stymie food production that Albertans obviously choose and desire. We do not want to burden them with a certification process that is too cumbersome for them to be able to actually move through and to be able to support Albertans with the food products that they obviously desire.

By sending and referring it to committee, this is the perfect opportunity to bring some of those stakeholders in to be able to get their input into the process of certification, how to best streamline that process for certification, and to be able to ensure that the food grown meets the CFIA and the Alberta standards without taking an inordinate period of time.

Now, Madam Speaker, I'm sure that we would all agree in this House and you would agree with me that there's actually a very significant demand for locally produced food and that that demand continues to grow in Alberta as more consumers become interested in knowing where their food comes from and how it's produced.

I can only speak to the buying patterns in my own family. For at least the last 30 years, since we've lived in Drayton Valley, we have always made the conscious decision to purchase our meat locally. We have always purchased our beef from a local farmer, we've always purchased our pork from a local farmer, and we've always purchased the lamb that we buy from a local farmer.

[Mr. Dach in the chair]

Just a month and a half ago I purchased from a local farmer out near Thorsby, a friend of mine, a man by the name of Vince Holwa. He was just in the process of slaughtering some hogs, and we purchased a complete hog from him, and now we have a freezer full of some amazing meat. Why did we do it that way? Not only do we want to support the local farmers in our community, and we have for 30 years, but we know what they put into the meat, we know how it's butchered, we know how it's prepared, we have a relationship with that farmer, and we believe that that provides us with a higher quality of meat. For my family it's never been an issue of whether that's more expensive or less expensive; it's a decision that we make because we understand that we want to buy locally.

Bill 7 moves that forward. Alberta's local food industry is a key part of our economy. Farmers' market and direct farm purchases exceeded $1 billion in 2016. That shows you that there's a demand. According to a 2016 survey 92 per cent of Albertan households have bought local food from supermarkets and 80 per cent have bought local food from farmers' markets. We Albertans support the idea in many ways of buying local food products, and the number of Albertans spending more than $1,000 per year at farmers' markets has doubled since 2008, so it's becoming a trend. It's clear that Albertans desire locally grown food, and often they choose to purchase locally grown food that is organic.

Referring Bill 7 to committee would allow local stakeholders and farmers to provide input into the bill to ensure that it meets their needs as well. We do not want any unintended consequences to interfere with the production of locally grown food. We need to make sure that as we move forward on Bill 7, it actually has the intended consequences, the intended goals for which it is being put forward before this House.

This bill, Bill 7, chooses to establish a local food council to help promote and support small producers, local small producers. It establishes the council to provide a report no later than 12 months after establishment of said council "containing advice and recommendations regarding provincial policies, programs, pilot projects or initiatives to support the continued growth and sustainability of Alberta's local food sector."

Well, we have some questions on this side of the House. Who will be on that council? What stakeholders should be represented from Alberta's local food sector that would sit on that council? This is a great avenue for discussion, one that I believe the committee would be very well equipped to be able to have and one of the reasons why this Assembly should refer this bill to committee. What are the costs associated with this marketing council? Do we even need a marketing council? Is there perhaps not an existing group that could receive this task? These are the kinds of questions that we could be asking at the committee level, that would allow us to be able to ensure that Bill 7 is indeed the best piece of legislation that we can present to the people of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this bill needs to be referred to committee. I believe that it needs to be studied and that the present government, while it is reviewing agencies and boards and commissions and has eliminated, and sometimes justly so, some of those agencies, boards, and commissions, we need to be very careful before we add another one in the establishment of the local food council. I'm not arguing that we don't need it. What I am saying is that before we create it, we must make sure that we actually do need it, and by referring it to committee, this would allow us the capacity to do so.

Bill 7 also has some concerning parts when we think about the scope and the power that Bill 7 is going to give to the minister and to the government. You know, I realize and I believe that all of us that serve in this Legislature do so out of a sense of duty and of public service, and I believe that all of us want to see what is best for Albertans. But I do believe that in a democracy we believe in this concept of limited power, that no one individual, no one government should have the capacity to ignore the will of the people or have an inordinate amount of power. Power must always be checked, must always be balanced.

Bill 7 gives power over all agricultural products produced or processed in Alberta. That's a lot of power. Bill 7 gives tremendous power to the minister under regulations, section 20(o). If I look at the bill here, Bill 7, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act, it says:

Regulations

20 The Minister may make regulations, and if you go to the very last one:

(o) respecting any matter the Minister considers advisable for carrying out the intent and purposes of this Act.

That is an awful lot of power, and I'm not sure that it's needed. By referring it to committee, we could have that conversation. Maybe at the end of the day it is, but at least the committee would have the capacity to have the debate, to ask the people that are going to be actually affected by this piece of legislation whether or not they feel comfortable with that kind of power being provided to any minister.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any hon. members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?
Seeing none, the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you. Now, I just want to take some time today and speak on Bill 7. I think, you know, overall, Bill 7 should be lauded for its purpose, which is to support locally grown food. Obviously, that's something we would all like to see, more industry and more, I guess, local products being produced and being consumed by the people of Alberta. It helps having this part of the economy stay in Alberta, so I think that that part of this bill is really good.

Obviously, for the things that we can produce in our climate here, what we grow here is a great benefit, again, not just economically, but it does reduce the need for trucking across the country or across North America. Of course, that saves money, it saves the environment, it gives us fresher food, and we have a little better idea of what went into these products that are grown.

We know that when we buy local, we're buying from our neighbours and are directly supporting our local communities. These are the people that we see every day on the streets, that we meet at different functions in our communities, so it's nice to be able to support the people that we live and work with. Again, then we know where these things are produced. We can often drive by the field where some of these things were produced. We know what's going on there, and we can have confidence that what we're buying is good produce.

This demand for locally grown food is growing. You can see this by stopping at any farmers' market. I know I quite often go to the farmers' market and buy fresh produce there. I enjoy the fresh baking of course – that's always good – and saskatoon pies and fresh bread and buns and that sort of thing. One thing I do enjoy is a vegetable called kohlrabi. A lot of people maybe don't know what it is. It's an excellent vegetable that I can't often find in a grocery store, if ever. I grow it myself in the garden, and if I go to the farmers' market and they've got some good kohlrabi there, then I'm going to be buying it. It's something that I really enjoy, a nice, crunchy vegetable. It's something that grows well in our climate here. Again, the one place that I can consistently find it is in a farmers' market.

Of course, U-picks. You know, I have a cousin that has a U-pick strawberry farm. He does all sorts of vegetables and stuff like that, but he specializes in strawberries. He has raspberries, saskatoons, and has a good business there and employs quite a few people in the community, having that U-pick farm. Again, that's something that's getting more and more popular all the time. People enjoy going to these places and picking their own vegetables and berries right off the tree, right off the vines, or whatever, so that they know exactly what they're getting.

It's also interesting that when you go to the grocery store now, if you watch labels, you can find locally grown products. You can see the eggs that were produced locally. You can see the vegetables and that sort of thing that are grown locally, so it is good to see that locally grown product right in our grocery stores. It's an important part of our economy. In fact, reports show that it's over a billion dollars a year. I'd say that that's a lot of green right there, a billion dollars a year.

This bill, Bill 7, will do three main things. The first is establishing organic standards, and this will be done by creating Alberta standards that align with the Canadian standards that have been established by the Canadian Food Inspection Agency. This could be advantageous for producers that export their products outside of Alberta or even Canada because if these purchasers from outside of Canada, outside of Alberta know what the standards are, then they'll know if they want to purchase it or whatever. So there is some kind of benefit to having those standards.

But one of my concerns is that the process of inspection and certification may be costly or burdensome for some producers. I'd be concerned that there'd be some producers that could easily qualify but either don't want to or can't take the time or energy or whatever to go through that process to have the inspection done and have the certification done. Of course, if people are in that situation, this bill could be negative to them because even though they fully qualify to the standards, they won't be able to use that label on their product. So I can see this being, you know, negative to some people that are in that situation, people that are living in farther out areas, where to have somebody come and inspect and go through that process is going to be burdensome. You know, I've heard that certification may take three years, so that'll put some of these producers at a disadvantage as they go through this lengthy process.

There's no information on the cost of certification. We don't know if that's going to be a cost to the producer or how that all works. There are a lot of questions, I guess, that need to be answered within this bill so that the producers can make the decision whether they would like to support a bill like this or not. Like I say, if there's any kind of cost, this could be, again, burdensome on producers.

Now, another thing this bill will do is to establish a local food week. This allows for promotion of locally grown produce during the same time period of other farm recognition days. I think it's always good to recognize our agriculture producers in our communities. I think they're a very important part of our community, of course. Again, when you look at any small community in Alberta, almost every one will have a farmers' market at least one day a week, where local people can go and buy produce from other local people that has been grown right there. I think it's good to have an opportunity to recognize the people that produce the food in our communities.

The third thing this bill will do is establish a local food council. Now, the details are kind of vague on this council. At first blush it sounds good, but without the details it's really hard to say. It would be nice to have the producers that would be affected by this bill involved in working out the details on it. The best opportunity for that would be in a committee setting so they could present to us as legislators and we could listen to their concerns and ideas directly. It would allow the direction of the bill and the regulation that follows to be guided by the people that will be directly affected. I think that's important.

I know we've seen many times this government push through legislation without proper consultation. Each of these times we've given the government the opportunity to put the brakes on and allow for further consultation and input. One of the ways to do that is to have this go to committee so that people can present to us directly. In the Legislature here people can't present to us, but in committees they can. That gives the opportunity for people that would be most likely affected by this legislation to come and directly have input to us. But it seems like when consultation is needed most, that is when this government kind of bulldozes ahead with their plans, and the government actually often suffers for it when they don't take that time to listen to their constituents and listen to the people that are most affected.

You know, that's what we want to do on this side. We want to be helpful. We want to make good legislation for the people. That's why we come through with these amendments like this, to give that opportunity to have more input, to make sure that we get the legislation right from the start, because when we do consultation after a bill is presented, it's usually considered damage control, and when we do consultation before, that's the proper way to do consultation. Of course, at this point here we're in a situation where the bill is already on the table. We should have had more input before on this, but now we're past that opportunity, so now the opportunity we have is to take it to committee.

Some of these changes to some of these bills would be pretty minor changes, but the results could be big, and they could make a really big difference to Albertans. We need to take that into consideration, that even the smallest changes can make a big difference in people's lives.

Now, just further on this proposed council, it's a little disconcerting to see that the minister will be appointing the members of this council. It says here in the bill:

The Minister shall, in accordance with section 7 of the Government Organization Act, establish a Local Food Council to provide a report containing advice and recommendations regarding provincial policies, programs, pilot projects or initiatives to support the continued growth and sustainability of Alberta's local food sector, including the following matters.

These are the things that this council would be responsible for.

- (a) potential barriers and challenges for local food producers and local food processors, including specific challenges faced by small producers and processors;
- (b) local food aggregation and distribution;
- (c) risk management tools for local food producers and processors;
- (d) increasing access to local food;
- (e) consumer awareness of local food;
- (f) certification opportunities for local food producers and local food processors.

Again, those are some of the things that this council is going to be responsible for.

Like I say, I'm not sure that the minister appointing each of these people on this council is really the best way to go. I would think that there would be better ways to choose members of this council, by going to the groups that are already available, that are already in place right now, that are representing different parts of the agriculture economy, and getting them to propose people or put people on this council.

Again, we're not even sure if this council is necessary. Maybe if we had this consultation with the ag producers, they would say: "No, we don't need this. A lot of these things are taken care of in our local farmers' markets, bringing awareness and different things like that, you know. I mean, we can take care of this stuff, so why have this council that the minister appoints to oversee some of these things?" Again, those are some things that we could learn in committee if we had the opportunity to take this bill to committee.

Now, it says:

The Minister shall designate a chair of the Council.

So he's going to be appointing all the members, and then he's going to be appointing the chair, too. I'm not sure why, for instance, the members of the council couldn't appoint a chair themselves, but I guess the minister maybe wants to be involved as much as possible. Again, I'm not certain that that's necessary or even desired by the people in the industry.

Not later than 12 months after a Council is established under subsection (1), the Council must submit a final report to the Minister providing the advice and recommendations of the Council on the matters referred to in subsection (1).

It goes on to say:

The Council is dissolved on the date the Minister accepts the Council's report or such later date determined by the Minister.

So, again, just kind of some guidelines for this council that the minister would appoint and appoint the chair for, too.

Now, we get into this part where it comes into, I guess, kind of the regulations and enforcing regulations. I'm just going to jump ahead to section 12, where it says:

The Minister may, on terms and conditions specified by the Minister, designate any person or class of persons to act as an inspector for the purposes of this Act.

So what we have here is the minister determining who would be an inspector for the purposes of this act and designating any person or class of persons to act as an inspector. Again we have the minister making these decisions here and no real guideline for us to go by as far as passing this legislation, as far as, you know: what kind of qualifications is an inspector going to have?

I mean, it says here: "any person or class of persons to act as an inspector." I would think that people in the industry would probably have a pretty good idea of what kind of person they would want to have as an inspector. Again, if we had that opportunity in committee to listen to these people and understand what they want, they might have some really good ideas of what kind of person should be appointed to be on these councils.

I just want to go into the complaints part here, section 10:

A person may, in accordance with the regulations, make a complaint to the Minister regarding the advertising, labelling or offering for sale of an agricultural product that the person suspects is not certified in accordance with section 8.

Of course, that allows that any person could make a complaint to the minister on any of these issues.

It goes on to say in section 11:

On receipt of a complaint under section 10, an inspector must verify that the producer or processor of the agricultural product that is the subject of the complaint holds the appropriate certification in accordance with section 8.

Here again we have the inspector come into play. After the ministry gets the complaint, the inspector is sent out to verify what the complaint was.

It goes on in subsection (2) under section 11:

If the producer or processor of the agricultural product holds the appropriate certification, the inspector must notify the complainant of the producer's or processor's certification status and conclude the inspection.

Obviously, if the person is properly certified, then it ends there.

It goes on in subsection (3):

If the producer or processor of the agricultural product does not hold the appropriate certification, the inspector must conduct an investigation.

So all of a sudden we're getting to the point here where if the inspector feels that there's something wrong, then the investigation starts.

Now I'm going to jump to section 13 here. It says:

(1) On receipt of a complaint under section 10, an inspector may conduct an inspection or investigation to determine whether a person is complying with this Act, the regulations or an enforcement instrument.

(2) In conducting an inspection or investigation, an inspector may do one or more of the following:

- (a) subject to subsection (4), enter, at any reasonable time, any place, including any means of conveyance or transport, where an inspector has reason to believe that ...

Okay. Let's just look at that a little more carefully. When an investigation starts ...

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the referral amendment?

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 15 Appropriation Act, 2018

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'll just begin here by saying thank you very much for the opportunity. It's my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 15, the Appropriation Act, 2018.

This act will provide funding authority to the offices of the Legislative Assembly and the government of Alberta for the 2018-19 fiscal year. The schedule to the act provides amounts that were presented in greater detail in the 2018-19 government and Legislative Assembly estimates tabled on March 22, 2018. These estimates were subsequently debated by standing committees and voted on in Committee of Supply.

Madam Speaker, after the worst recession in a generation our economy is recovering, and things are looking up. In fact, in 2017 Alberta led the country in economic growth, at 4.5 per cent. We saw 90,000 new, full-time jobs created, primarily in the private sector. With more than 2.3 million jobs now in this province, there are more Albertans working today than ever before in this province. Exports are up. Manufacturing is up. Housing starts are up. We're expecting to be near the top of economic growth in Canada once again in 2018.

That's all good news, but there is still a lot of work to do to make sure that each and every Albertan and business feels the positive effects of this recovery. That's why we continue to fight for new pipelines and better market access. In recent days this has been demonstrated through our government's Bill 12, Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act. Through Bill 12 we would ensure that the interests of Albertans are optimized before authorizing the exports of natural gas, crude oil, or refined fuels from this province. By maximizing the economic benefit of our natural resources, we are defending Alberta's workers, our provincial and national economies, and protecting the funding that is aiding our transition to a greener economy. We are committed to getting this pipeline built. Workers from every corner of our country would stand to benefit from this project, creating prosperity that makes all of Canada better through schools, hospitals, roads, transit, and ports.

This brings us back to Budget 2018: A Recovery Built to Last. This budget is built on three pillars: diversifying the economy by fighting for market access, adding value to our energy products, and supporting new and developing industries; the next pillar, protecting vital public services by making sure loved ones get the care they need, young people get the best education possible, and no one is left behind in this province; and the third and last pillar, returning to balance by investing public dollars where they are needed most, eliminating waste, and controlling spending to return to balanced budgets by 2023.

Madam Speaker, a growing and diverse economy benefits all Albertans. It supports job creation and helps move Alberta off the resource revenue roller coaster. Budget 2018 includes a range of initiatives to add value to our energy products and support developing industry. We recognize that overreliance on energy revenue leads to boom-and-bust budgets, and Alberta is well positioned to build on our natural strength in the energy sector. Initiatives included in Budget 2018 will help to make the energy sector more resilient to this cycle and will boost provincial resource revenues. For example, this budget enhances the competitiveness of Alberta's oil sands industry with $1 billion in loan guarantees and grants over eight years to support up to five new partial upgrading facilities. This plan represents up to $5 billion in private investment and more than 4,000 jobs in construction.

Budget 2018 also includes $500 million in royalty credits to initiate a second phase of the successful petrochemicals diversification program, or PDP, which will grow investment in Alberta-based natural gas processing. The intended outcome of the program is up to three world-scale petroleum facilities in Alberta, resulting in approximately $6 billion worth of new investment and also the creation of approximately 4,000 construction jobs.

Finally, in terms of diversification within the energy sector Budget 2018 encourages the construction of new extraction facilities on major pipelines with $500 million in loan guarantees and grants to the new petrochemical feedstock infrastructure program. These facilities recover natural gas liquids like ethane and propane that can then be used to manufacture a wide range of products, and like the other programs I just mentioned, they represent incredible economic opportunity for this province.

Going on, Budget 2018 does so much more than just diversify the energy industry. It takes concrete steps to help grow other sectors of the economy and create exciting new opportunities for investors, business leaders, and other entrepreneurs. The Alberta investor tax credit and the capital investment tax credit have already supported more than $1 billion in private-sector capital projects, and this success will continue as Budget 2018 will provide $60 million a year for these two programs through to 2021-2022. This funding will help foster new investment, encourage innovation, and accelerate growth and new industries.

In addition, our government is providing $20 million a year by 2020-2021 for a new interactive digital media tax credit. This tax credit will make it easier for existing companies to bring on more employees and encourage Alberta entrepreneurs to launch new companies.

To help ensure that forward-looking, tech-focused Alberta businesses and entrepreneurs have access to a labour force that is prepared to fill the jobs of the future, Budget 2018 will create 3,000 new postsecondary technology spaces over the next five years. Budget 2018 also creates new scholarships to attract students in areas such as life sciences, clean tech, and health innovation. Drawing more great minds to our province and labour force and keeping more bright young Albertans here so we can continue to diversify and push our economic growth into new areas is an important aspect of ensuring our recovery is built to last.

I should also be clear about something Budget 2018 does not include. It does not include new taxes, and it's also contributing to Alberta's country-leading growth when we do not include new taxes. Our incredibly favourable tax system has attracted a great deal of economic activity to this province. Budget 2018 holds the small-business tax rate at 2 per cent, and we remain committed to an Alberta free of a provincial sales tax. Both factor into Alberta's tax advantage, with that growing to $11.2 billion this year. This means that Alberta businesses and families would pay $11.2 billion more in taxes and carbon levies if they were in any other province in Canada.

The second pillar of Budget 2018 is protecting vital public services. Madam Speaker, during the economic downturn government supported Albertans by investing in health care, education, and social services and taking steps to make life more affordable for families. While some voices in our province called for massive cuts to Alberta's services that we all depend on, we have chosen a different path, one that provides stable funding of essential services while controlling spending growth. Budget 2018 includes several actions that protect the public services that Albertans rely on. This includes supporting the delivery of publicly funded health care with capital investments in high-quality health facilities such as the Calgary cancer centre and the new hospital in Edmonton. It includes shifting to better community-based care by adding hundreds of continuing care beds.

It also includes supporting the rapidly growing population of young Albertans by fully funding enrolment growth in the K to 12 education system and reducing school fees, keeping education more affordable by extending the postsecondary tuition freeze for now the third year, and helping working parents by creating an additional 4,500 affordable child care spaces through the early learning and child care development centre program and making life more affordable for lower and middle income working families with continued support for the country-leading Alberta child benefit and the Alberta family employment tax credit.

In addition, funding for our core capital plan in this province is $26.6 billion over the next five years. While this funding is returning to normal historic levels after significant investments during the depths of the recession, we will continue to deliver on critical public infrastructure projects.

Just like businesses and investors need some level of certainty to plan for their future, so do Albertans. Through the actions I've just mentioned, Budget 2018 provides Albertans with this certainty. By providing stable funding growth, targeted below the growth in population plus inflation, Albertans will have the certainty that their kids will receive a great education, their loved ones will have access to top-quality medical care when they need it, and the most vulnerable in this province among us will have the supports they need when they need them. And it means accomplishing all of this while keeping growth in operations costs down while our population continues to grow. After all, if our recovery were based on hollowing out public services and leaving vulnerable Albertans behind, it would in fact be no recovery at all.

With regard to Budget 2018's third pillar, a return to balance, we are charting a course to balanced budgets by 2023. This has not been an easy task, Madam Speaker. The recession hit Alberta and Albertans hard, and revenues are not expected to surpass prerecession levels until 2019-20. Alberta's economic recovery and a growing population are certainly helping increase revenues, but these factors alone are not enough. A recovery built to last with a return to balance means finding savings as well. That's why through Budget 2018 our government is focusing tax dollars where they need to most: eliminating waste and controlling spending and finding efficiencies. We're managing public-sector compensation, which makes up over half of our annual operating budget, with practical collective agreements, salary freezes for non-union employees, and by keeping the size of Alberta's public service flat.

As the economy recovers, we're reducing government stimulus and returning capital spending to more normal levels while still taking on critical infrastructure projects. I'm incredibly proud of this plan because it protects the things that matter to Albertans while still taking a responsible fiscal approach. Even with the debt that will be accumulated as we reach balanced budgets, Alberta is still projected to maintain the lowest net debt to GDP ratio in all of Canada.

Madam Speaker, to summarize, Budget 2018 helps ensure we are in the midst of a recovery that is built to last. We are taking steps to further the diversification of our economy while still protecting vital public services and charting a path to balance. Things are beginning to look up, and I expect 2018 to be the continuation of the broad-based economic growth we experienced last year. Budget 2018 maintains our commitment to support and protect the services that make a difference in the lives of all Albertans, and it is our pledge to return to balanced budgets but do so in a manner that supports Albertans by continuing to invest in health care, education, and social services.

I along with my government colleagues look forward to implementing Budget 2018 and continuing to make the lives of all Albertans better. I urge my colleagues and all members of the House to support this bill today.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Minister.

Are there any other speakers? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and talk about the 2018-2019 budget and Bill 15 and the intent of the bill. Before I dive into the intent, I want to talk a little bit about the unfortunate situation that Alberta, Albertans, our next generation, and our economy find ourselves in. It starts with $56 billion in debt. Just three years ago that number was $13 billion. Today it's $56 billion and $1.9 billion in annual interest – $1.9 billion in annual interest – making it Alberta's fifth-biggest line item in our expenditures, that the Alberta taxpayer has to pay, that Alberta families, communities, and citizens have to do without some level of services. That's $1.9 billion in interest. Incredible. Incredible.

Because the second reading stage is about the intent of the bill, allow me to talk about our NDP government's three stated pillars and exactly how wrong this Finance minister and this government got it. Protecting public services is a stated goal. Madam Speaker, what has happened here is that this government and this Finance minister have put every important priority of Albertans, of Alberta families and Alberta communities, at risk. That risk is because of overspending. That risk is because of not looking for value. That risk is now the interest – the interest – that Alberta taxpayers have to pay to the rich, whether it's bondholders in Switzerland, New York, or Toronto. That's $1.9 billion that is leaving our economy. It's leaving the pockets of middle-class, average Albertans and headed to the wealthy, that $1.9 billion.

Let's compare this to Seniors and Housing. I mean, there's so much to love about Albertans, but one of the things that maybe makes me smile the most is that when I ask Albertans what's important to them, of course, it's helping those that need it, it's helping those that need a temporary hand up, but usually the first thing that Albertans say is that they want to help our seniors, the people that built our province, the people that made it possible for us to enjoy the standard of living that we do and the services that we do and all they've built. To me, the main comparison is $700 million to Seniors and Housing in this budget; $1.9 billion to rich bondholders in Toronto, New York, and Zurich. What a contrast. What a difference.

Of course, we know that this Finance minister has been the benefactor of six credit downgrades. So far this one has just almost had universal bad news and some issues from credit agencies of a serious miscalculation and serious errors. But we've seen interest rates bump up a little bit in the last two or three months. There are a lot of experts that are talking about half a point to three-quarters of a point, or from 25 to a 75 basis point increase in the next little while.

Madam Speaker, as this $1.9 billion in interest increases by the $7.9 billion that this Finance minister is planning on overspending by next year, not counting the $6.4 billion in capital spending this year for our roads, our schools, and our hospitals, with $5.9 billion for next year – in three budgets and three cycles we've seen this Finance minister and this government be over budget three times between a billion and a billion and a half dollars. We are going to be another $17 billion, $18 billion, or $19 billion in debt at this time next year, and if interest rates are a bit higher, the projected debt-servicing costs: two and a half billion dollars. My goodness. Two and a half billion dollars. I maintain that that interest puts every single important priority that Albertans have in jeopardy. And what we've seen, to me, is that it looks like this government's plan is a permanent wall of debt.

We see we have an estimate in 2024 of a surplus of $700 million. But, Madam Speaker, I want to remind you that in the government's campaign documents it was projected and was promised: a $25 million surplus. That was promised this year. There is a huge difference between $25 million in Albertans' bank account and $8.8 billion and paying interest to rich bondholders around the world. The credibility of that number. Does he mean that number? This government, if they're successful and re-elected: do they really mean that?

I would suggest to you that when we look at the capital plan dropping from $6.4 billion down to $4.8 billion at the same time as this government talks about the Calgary cancer centre, which we need, and the Edmonton hospital, which looks like it's essential as well, how are they going to balance even more of their big spending promises without going deep on the backs of our kids and our grandkids and without putting every single important priority of Albertans in jeopardy? Pillar 1, protecting public services: this Finance minister, this government have done exactly the opposite and put them all at great risk.

Diversifying the economy. Sad news in Medicine Hat yesterday: Methanex, one of our great companies, one of our great job providers, announced that Louisiana in the United States is the place to be. Everywhere I go, when I talk to our wealth creators, our job providers in Alberta, they are terrified of this government's big spending, of the 20 per cent increase in corporate tax that this government has already delivered, of the huge increase in personal taxes, of a carbon tax that has greatly increased the cost of everything. They know that for their success, which in business, as we all know, isn't easy, which in all business takes tremendous skill and tremendous commitment, this government's reward will just be taking more and more and more of their hard-earned wealth.

That's why this recovery is not being felt. That's why, when I talk to Alberta families, Alberta communities, especially those that are focused on building our province in the private sector – Madam Speaker, too many are still working in northern B.C., too many are working in Saskatchewan, and too many are investing their money outside of Alberta. With this happening and with your goal being to diversify the economy and with the 20 per cent increase in Alberta corporate taxes having driven out so much of our business, exactly the opposite is happening. Again, like with protecting our public services, where the Finance minister and the government have done exactly the opposite, that's what they've done again.

You know, sometimes when you get talking to somebody who's in this every day, somebody who's working on the front lines, you hear it the most accurately. I was talking to my chartered accountant a short time ago, and he said to me that before this government raised corporate taxes 20 per cent, before they raised personal taxes from our 10 per cent flat tax to now 15 per cent on top of their ally Justice Trudeau's 33 per cent tax rate – it's actually 48 to 49 per cent that we're paying – it was rare that Albertans would come in and say: "Look at my tax planning. Make it as efficient as possible. Get my money out of Alberta." He said that that is a regular occurrence now, where Albertans are coming in and saying: "This government is not trying to find me value. This government doesn't care about me and my wealth-earning potential and the jobs I provide. Although I don't want to do this, look for some tax efficiency." Madam Speaker, this government has done more to hurt diversification of the economy than to help it.

Return to balance. I believe this government's plan is a permanent wall of debt. I think that if they're re-elected, $96 billion will be on the low end. When I look at the numbers, in their first three years they've increased spending 16 per cent, and they're planning in the next five years on only increasing spending 16 per cent. I don't believe it. I don't think Albertans believe it. Albertans know it's time to start caring about how hard some people work to earn wealth and create jobs. The best proof I have of that was three years ago. When this government wanted to be elected, they said that by today we'd have a $25 million surplus. Madam Speaker, $8.8 billion in the hole is one long, long way from $25 million to the good.

Madam Speaker, this Finance minister, this government have absolutely failed on all three of their pillars. They have done more to hurt diversifying the economy, they have jeopardized every single important priority of Albertans, and they have no intention of returning to balance. It's about a permanent wall of debt, a permanent wall of interest for our kids and our grandkids and our economy.

I want to talk about some of the other risks that this minister hasn't addressed. First of all, the interest rate risk. If rates go up half a point, if rates go up one point, if instead of borrowing at around 3 per cent, we start having to borrow at 4 per cent and we owe a hundred billion dollars, Madam Speaker, that's a billion dollars. What can we do with a billion dollars to help Albertans instead? What could we do if we left that billion dollars in Albertans' pockets so they could help their families, so they could help their friends, so they could help their communities? That is why this Finance minister and this government have put every single important priority at risk.

Credit downgrade. We've already seen six since this last budget and almost universal criticism of it and some other credit agencies talking about how bad it was. If we face more credit downgrades through this government's overspending, through this Finance minister's big plans of spending other people's money, through maybe a downturn in our economy, what is that going to do on the backs of our kids and our grandkids?

I want to talk about the utility risk. This government is headed towards a market of 70 per cent natural gas, 30 per cent renewables, but we all know that if you have a renewable, you have to have a backup. The sun doesn't always shine; the wind doesn't always blow. So it will pretty much be a hundred per cent natural gas market based on capacity.

Madam Speaker, we are enjoying historically low natural gas rates. Can you imagine if these rates double? Can you imagine what the Alberta taxpayer is going to have to subsidize the Alberta ratepayer? There's a cap on our rates at 6.8 cents even though under the old system we were as low as 2.5, 2.7 cents. There is no cap on how much these people will go back to the taxpayer for, so how much of that risk is factored into this? If a budget is truly a plan of where we may be in the future, I am concerned. If we face an increase in the price of natural gas, if we face an increase in interest rates, if this Finance minister gets his seventh downgrade, can you imagine what that's going to do to our economy? Can you imagine what that's going to do on the backs of our children?

Madam Speaker, there's great risk, other risks, in this plan that this government and this Finance minister put forward. Even though it was told to Albertans that the carbon tax was revenue neutral, even though that was stretching the definition of revenue neutral in every possible, conceivable way, we're not even going there anymore. We have a government that now is admitting that by 2021 their 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax will be diverted to general revenues.

Keeping in line with their ally Justin Trudeau, keeping in line with a carbon tax that we've heard from around Alberta has been a hardship for seniors, for communities, for agriculture, for pharmaceuticals, for any utility user, Madam Speaker, the tax is going to be greatly increased, and that money is going to go into general revenue in 2021 so that this government can continue its high-spending ways without looking for value.

Another element of risk that this risky budget has baked in it is the Trans Mountain pipeline. I believe the numbers are 2021, 2022 where the increased revenues are based on additional revenues that might or might not be attributable to extra access for our good, our great oil and gas producers through more access to markets through the Trans Mountain pipeline.

Well, the May 31 deadline is looming large. There are no shovels in the ground. There is opposition, of course, in British Columbia even though, thank goodness, it seems like overwhelmingly the average British Columbian, the working families in British Columbia see all the benefits for Canada, see all the good reasons for this to happen.

You know, I'd be remiss if I didn't talk about the safety. When I was Energy critic a short time ago, some people in Calgary took me to a new company that has developed fibre optics that can go in the pipeline, on the pipeline, or within a metre of the pipeline that instantly – instantly – tell the operators about any changes in compression. It's amazing how good our producers are, amazing how safe we've made this industry, amazing that with all of these things happening, we're still looking at a situation with Justin Trudeau, the federal Liberals, the Leap Manifesto, the NDP in power here, the NDP in power in British Columbia, and a pipeline that costs us I think it's $41 million a day. The lack of access, Madam Speaker, is costing all Canadians jobs, social programs, and those kinds of things, and those kinds of things are very important to us.

Madam Speaker, with this risky financial plan that this government, this Finance minister put forward, they are already counting this even though it's already greatly delayed. Of course, we hope very, very much that it happens. We hope it happens soon. But, again, if these things don't happen, we're looking at probably another credit downgrade. We are certainly looking at more debt, more interest costs, and less in services.

Madam Speaker, I just want to close. When I'm out talking to people in Cypress-Medicine Hat, when I'm out talking to Albertans, you know, one of the things that concerns them almost as much as $1.9 billion in interest this year, $56 billion of debt, and a government that has a desire to have a permanent wall of debt, where we'll pay interest to rich bondholders forever and ever, is the fact that this government, this NDP government, never seems to look for value.

I'll just give you some examples. Everyone remembers the laundry situation here in Edmonton, where the desire to publicly own and publicly be involved in the delivery of an essential part of our health care maybe cost $200 million.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to rise and speak on Bill 15. Now, the hon. Finance minister is looking for the House to sign on to his fiscal plan. I understand why, because that's his job, but he's had lots of opportunities to convince the opposition, people on this side of the House, that his plan is good, and he keeps rebuffing and ducking and diving with his words when we give him a chance to explain why we should support this fiscal plan.

As recently as today in question period a reference was made to the last Auditor General's report, where it said that by 2021 this Finance minister would have Albertans in so much debt that the Finance minister and his government would have to have a $3 billion surplus for 25 years in a row in order to pay off the debt that was accumulated by then.

So I asked him what I thought was a pretty obvious question then, you know, the question being: "This is what the Auditor General said that you need to do. You say that you're going to balance the budget. Are you going to do it?" He had a perfect answer, to say yes, but he didn't say that. He talked about anything else he could think of. So I gave him a second chance. I said, "Well, if you can't commit to balancing the budget at that point, what about the promise you have made, balancing it in 2024, after you've got Albertans" – and remember, Madam Speaker. I know you know this. It's all Albertans.

But when I think of this, I think mostly of young Albertans because if this government was to stick around that long, I wouldn't live long enough for this government to pay off a substantial part of this debt if they would even get to dollar one. I figure I'm going to be dead in 30 years, but our children and grandchildren, who are going to have a lot more future than I do to be in Alberta, to think about, and to be concerned about, could end up in chains for 40, 50 years, paying off a debt that this government has put them in, that they will be unable to get out of if this government is given permission to go on that long. It's not criminal, but I wonder if it ought to be. Here's the sad thing about it. Twenty, 30 years from now young Albertans will be paying for 2018 light bulbs that the money was borrowed for. That is astounding.

Now, I understand the government's need to borrow for infrastructure. It makes sense. You know, to a certain degree, building infrastructure and paying it all off on the same day is really the opposite side of a wealth transfer. Everybody in 2018, for example, would pay for a road. People would drive on it for the next 20 years and not pay for it. So you know what? There is actually a case to be made, if you build something like a road or a school or a hospital, for paying for it over 20 years because you can really make the argument that the people paying for it over those 20 years are the same people that might get to have kids in that school, that might get to drive on that road, that might get to go to that hospital when they're sick. That makes sense.

But when you've got a government borrowing billions of dollars a year for the groceries, for operating expenses, they're going to have Alberta's children paying for 20, 25 years for things that were bought and consumed in 2018, 2019, gone, either recycled or in the landfill, never to be seen again except for the payment that our children and grandchildren will be making for decades and decades and decades to come because of the financial mess, the deep financial hole, the financial abyss. This government and this Finance minister are driving our province off a cliff. It's so obvious. It's so obvious that Albertans are getting it. Albertans are getting it.

I know that the government likes to say: well, if you don't support our budget, you're against schools and roads and hospitals and social services. Nothing could be further from the truth. The fact is that we're against burdening future generations with massive amounts of debt for things that will be gone and consumed within the next year or two or three.

Let's even say that some of those light bulbs are 10-year light bulbs. Let's say that they're the best. Our young people, our children, and grandchildren, through their Alberta taxes, will be paying for those light bulbs 20 and 30 years from now. Let's just say that all those 10-year light bulbs can be fully recycled then, and I hope they can. Even then, under this government's guidance our children and grandchildren will be paying for those light bulbs, that have been in the landfill or have been recycled 20 or 30 years ago. There will be no light coming from those light bulbs anymore. By that time I'm not even sure whether the world will use light bulbs. We'll obviously need light. Who knows what the technology will be? But our children and grandchildren, under the leadership of this government and this minister, will be paying for things that are consumed right now 20 and 30 and, if this government is left in control, 40 years from now. Ridiculous.

Here's what I'll give the government credit for. They admit it. You know, these numbers that I'm talking about come out of the government's documents, the government's own documents. Their budget that they're so proud of, that they're looking to have the money approved for today, says that by 2024 they'll have us $96 billion in debt. That's not something crazy – and it's crazy; it's crazy as can be. But it's not something crazy that I'm saying; it's something crazy that I read in the government's budget documents. To their credit, they're admitting how bad their plan is, how indefensible their plan is, yet they have the courage to come into this Chamber and ask us to support it. For us to support it would be a complete betrayal of Albertans' children, grandchildren, certainly anybody of low income that will suffer, paying for years on end for things that have been long consumed and long gone by this government without a decent, without any plan to pay it back.

Now here's where it gets worse. What they call a plan is not a plan at all. Their plan is to hope that no one figures this out and notices before the election next year, but, Madam Speaker, Albertans have caught on. I think the jig, as they say, is up. Albertans have figured out that the gang across the aisle, that is in government, can't shoot straight. They have no plan, and in fact the plan that they have won't balance. They'll need at least two pipelines to get this budget balanced, and they're putting all their eggs in the basket of Justin Trudeau, which, I've got say – now, there's a high-risk manoeuvre if ever I described one. You know what? To our Prime Minister, Justin Trudeau, their very close ally, in lockstep with this government, with this Premier, with this cabinet – Justin Trudeau: they're in lockstep with that person.

Here's the problem. You know what? The government, to their credit – again I'll try to give credit where it's due – has taken some advice from our leader and brought forward some ideas that they borrowed from our leader, first after saying that his ideas wouldn't work, ridiculing them, making fun of them, and then waiting a couple of weeks and adopting them as if it was a brand new idea that they cooked up in the NDP kitchen. But they're not even actually committing – at least they're saying that they're going to do that, which is good, except they're not actually taking any action. They had a temporary wine ban for B.C. That got the government's attention. That was our leader's idea long before they did it, and we actually praised them for that. But then they folded their tent three weeks later, or was it less than three weeks?

An Hon. Member: Less.

Mr. McIver: Less than three weeks.

They folded their tent in less than three weeks on the one good idea they did take action on. At the first sign of an excuse to go from doing something to doing nothing, they took that excuse, and they went straight to the speed of zero.

What have they done since? Well, they say that they've talked to some people. Very good. They've put Bill 12 on the table. Very good. They've said that – you know, after following our leader's lead, they talked about being tougher, about turning the taps off. This is all good except they haven't acted on it yet, but at least they say that they might. At least in here they say that they might. But the problem is that if they need these two pipelines to balance their budget – apparently, the Premier told the Premier of B.C.: oh, don't worry about that legislation; we're not going to do it. I guess that when it comes down to survival, even sometimes NDP teammates, it's everyone for themselves, so the Premier of B.C. is throwing our Premier under the bus, saying: didn't even try to convince me, promised me they wouldn't even take action, so we've got nothing to worry about in B.C., at least not from the current Alberta government, not from the NDP government.

They're certainly concerned about action should our leader be the Premier after the next election. We don't know whether that will happen or not. That's up to the voters. I don't know. If I could predict the future, Madam Speaker, I'd be a lot wealthier than I am today. Predicting the future is not my business, so we're certainly hoping to have our leader as the leader of Alberta after the next election, but of course we don't know whether that will be the case. I'm sure the Premier of B.C. is more worried about that.

My point is that the financial underpinnings in this budget are dependent on at least one pipeline, I think, probably two, and even if the federal government agrees to help finance this pipeline, how is it going to get built unless the Prime Minister, this NDP government's bestie, close personal friend, lockstep partner in all of this is, is willing to have the courage to push the protesters back to where they're legally protesting? Everybody in this House is in favour and supportive of legal protesting, but when you actually break the court order and stop people from doing the legitimate work that they ought to be doing, at that point you need some leadership from the Prime Minister to get the illegal protesters to stop delaying the work that is required to actually get the pipeline built. Without the courage to do that, I'm not sure if it matters who owns the pipeline – the government of Alberta, the government of Canada, some partnership between them, some private business – because if you can't actually stop people from chaining themselves to the heavy equipment, I don't think you're going to get anything built.

These people across the aisle know about chaining themselves to heavy equipment. Some of them carried signs in the past, cheering on those people that would chain themselves to heavy equipment, so they actually could teach me quite a bit about that. I'm sure they could teach me way more than I know about it. But I know enough to know that this budget is underpinned by a partnership with Justin Trudeau, and that's just to get the first pipeline built.

The budget documents don't indicate how they could balance the budget if the pipeline does get built, so even if the best thing that could happen to this fiscal plan, something that we are certainly hoping for – if there's one thing that we definitely want this government, this Premier, this Finance minister to be right about, it's that that pipeline will get built. That's what we want. We don't want anything more than that. That's what Alberta needs. That's what Albertans want. That's what the Official Opposition wants, and I think that at this point it's even what the government has come around to wanting, so we're on the same page as them.

But here's the problem, Madam Speaker. Even if we continue to give suggestions to the government – and as I said, I give them credit. They've taken some of our leader's suggestions and promised to put them into action and at least given themselves a fighting chance of being successful. Let's just look at the best possible scenario, and if that happens, we can all high-five each other: congratulations, government. We'll be cheering you on. You got this done. This budget still won't balance the way this government is running it because they haven't a blessed clue on how to do it. They don't appreciate how expensive the debt is for Alberta families. They don't appreciate that the people they're hurting the most by driving jobs and investment out of Alberta are the people that they promised most to support, the single moms, the families of low . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to speak on Bill 15. Appropriations: an issue that exercises all of us and should as it sets the tone for our financial future as well as the present, what we can do now and in the future, and what our families in the future can do. We talk about financial management, assets and liabilities, and the need for a balanced approach, a recognition that expenditures require sustainable revenues, and how those can be spent in the most constructive and sustainable way.

I've been influenced by the economist Paul Krugman, who is very much a supporter of countercyclical spending. When the economy is down, you spend, you borrow, you build, you keep people employed, you maintain services that people really very much need during an economic downturn. I recognize this government for valuing those principles.

In fact, as Dr. Trevor Tombe of the U of Calgary has indicated, debts are not all bad. We have to borrow to make provision for things and for people that are needed at the time, especially when we are looking at long-lasting investments such as, of course, our children, our institutions, education, health care, and so on, capital investments that are much needed and were badly neglected by the former PC Party, which left us, in fact, in a very vulnerable deficit position, if you want to talk about deficits. A pretense that we were balancing the budgets, but of course we weren't. We were racking up higher infrastructure deficits, maintenance deficits, social deficits, and environmental deficits, most profoundly in relation to our management of groundwater and surface water in some cases but also in relation to our climate change inaction under the former PC government.

At some level I support what this government has done in terms of borrowing, employing, diversifying, and moving us towards a clean energy future. I think they have been bold. I think they have been addressing the real issues of Albertans in a meaningful way. I think that while I may differ in the pace and scale of borrowing and the pace of the infrastructure build-out, that might have been done in a little more paced fashion, I fundamentally believe that this has been the appropriate approach for Alberta at this time. It has protected both people and institutions. It has begun to address some of the climate change negligence, I would call it, by the previous administration, which increasingly appears hypocritical and disrespectful of decent public accountability for at least the last 15 years of their reign in terms of our management of institutions, services, and the revenue-expenditure balance.

Propagating fear and distrust is easy in politics. It's always been used to gain public attention. Sometimes it even gets support from people who don't watch the show too carefully and don't recognize that asking for increased spending on the one hand and then criticizing spending across the floor is such an easy game to play. Unfortunately, for the majority of Albertans, who don't watch this Legislature, it's easy to befuddle people and to bring them into a sense of uncertainty, distrust, and fear. Given the deficits left by the PCs on all these fronts – infrastructure; social, including housing and mental health; and environmental – the big holes had to be filled to some extent.

If there is one critique I have, it's the lack of careful, thoughtful ministry examination of their own portfolios, especially Health, in my view, which has a notorious overspending problem of waste, excessive executive salaries, excessive management. We're talking between 42 and 45 per cent of our budget today. I haven't seen any evidence that there are serious efforts to find efficiencies and to shift management priorities and focus increasingly on prevention and early intervention, that would not only save money but would actually reduce demands on the emergency room, which is inundated, on hospital beds, which are always over capacity, and reduce the morbidity and mortality rates, in fact, if we could get more money than 3 per cent of the Health budget into early intervention and prevention.

I guess I don't know. I will be looking at each of the particular portfolios to say whether I can support it, but I'm quite sure I won't be able to support the Health budget and the lack of serious attention to reform and improved efficiencies and effectiveness in our health care system. But in the main I find that the approach has been positive. It has been countercyclical spending, which I believe most international economists are now saying is appropriate at times like this and necessary to protect people and the long-term viability of our institutions.

My other addition, I guess, is: let's talk as adults here, an adult conversation, about revenue and talk about a PST, talk about a sales tax that will share the load of our need to reduce our dependency on borrowing and begin to pay our share in this generation so that we, in fact, do not leave major, significant spending on interest rates to our children and grandchildren. Let's talk reasonably and responsibly about a 1 or 2 per cent sales tax, that would bring in a consistent $2 billion to $3 billion a year, that everybody pays and that everybody shares in because we want to move towards balance. That is, to me, a responsible approach to the fact that we've had years and years of unsustainable financial management, and now we have gone gung-ho on institutional and service spending without a clear plan to start to address that in a responsible way, which has to include a PST.

I don't understand why in Alberta we have this allergic reaction to all paying our way. Yes, there need to be efficiencies and change, especially in the Health budget, but, yes, we also need a more reasonable revenue stream when we are the lowest taxing province in the country and we are the lowest in terms of, well, an absolute absence of any consumption tax, which is one of the fairest taxes that I know to bring everyone into the picture and ensure that we all pay our share in terms of spending and the implications of that spending on our total financial capacity.

Those are some of the comments I have, Madam Speaker. Certainly, this government was left a mess. They have gone very quickly, very boldly. They have racked up a massive debt, that I think we all recognize. We want to see a more clear plan going forward. I think that includes the UCP opposition. Where's your plan? I haven't seen that. It's easy to criticize. Again, I hear a request for funding on this side and then criticism of funding. It strikes me as quite hypocritical to not even have an alternative plan except cut, cut, cut, I guess, which is what one is left with.

My plan is to start talking about a PST as the only viable and responsible way to face a future that otherwise is going to be, as we've all recognized, many years of debt servicing and uncertainty and questions about our viability. But given the fact that we have the lowest debt-to-GDP ratio in the country and we have the lowest taxes by billions, I think we have some margin to work with. We have some margin in terms of a sales tax and particularly a harmonized sales tax, which wouldn't cost us anything to administer, to fall into line with the rest of the country, start to pay our share in this generation, and, I guess, just be more honest – yeah, more honest – with ourselves and our children and our grandchildren about what needs to be done rather than the posturing and politicization of a situation that's increasingly serious and that none of us wants to leave to chance.

Debt servicing at 2 and a half billion dollars to 3 and a half billion dollars a year is not anything to laugh at. Let's all start working together on finding a common solution, which, to me, is staring us in the face but nobody wants to talk about and that everyone calls political suicide. Well, with all due respect, that's BS. We know that every province that has it has started to bring their finances into some kind of balance.

Those are my comments. I think that's why the Liberals are considered the centrist party. We see both sides of the issue. We want to see balanced, honest debate. We want to see reasonable thought about the longer term future, not just the next election. We want to see less fearmongering and more acknowledgement that we all are benefiting from the infrastructure build-out, the human services that are there, the maintenance of roads and bridges, the concerns that are being addressed with respect to emergency measures.

Let's try and minimize the politicization of a situation that is obviously not ideal since our oil prices have dropped through the floor. But let's be honest about how we got into this position and how we collectively can find a way out if we're prepared to have an adult conversation about revenue as well as more responsible management of our institutions, again, particularly the health care system, which has not been brought under reasonable control, from my perspective.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll end there and potentially adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate lost]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Mr. Nixon: Madam Speaker, I don't want to speak, but I would like to move for unanimous consent to move the bells to three minutes. I suspect that if you seek it, you will get it.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Minister of Treasury Board and Finance, would you like to close debate?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. You know, there have been some interesting presentations and discussions here. I can just reiterate that the government of Alberta, this side of the House, is firmly committed to addressing the needs of Albertans today and in the future. We're doing that by providing good-quality services and programs, investing in the future, and diversifying our economy.

I'd like to close debate.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Tuesday, May 1, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good evening. Please be seated.

Government Motions

Election Commissioner Appointment

16. Mr. Feehan moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur in the report of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices tabled on April 10, 2018, Sessional Paper 67/2018, and recommend to the Lieutenant Governor in Council that Mr. Lorne Gibson be appointed as Election Commissioner for a term of five years commencing May 15, 2018.

The Speaker: The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At its April 5, 2018, meeting the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices passed a motion recommending that Mr. Lorne Gibson be appointed as this province's first Election Commissioner. I understand that Mr. Gibson has considerable experience and knowledge of elections and of election finance rules. He has previously served as Alberta's Chief Electoral Officer as well as having had a role in overseeing elections in other provinces and indeed outside of Canada.

I encourage all members to support this appointment. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, anyone wish to speak to the resolution? The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to speak to the motion that's before us. I'd like to start out with a quote from Senator Blanche Lincoln: voters must have faith in the electoral process for our democracy to succeed.

Mr. Speaker, on April 5, 2018, the NDP members of the Standing Committee on Leg. Offices voted to appoint an individual as Election Commissioner who did not have all-party support. I've been involved in a number of the search committees that we've put in place over the last couple of years, with a very good working relationship during search committee meetings, and we were able to come to unanimous support in all committees. But from the outset of this committee in December it became very apparent that the members from the governing party were prepared to move forward in a way that I would consider to be somewhat haphazard, a little bit reckless.

We have long been disappointed in how members of the government caucus chose to conduct themselves throughout the entire search process. It became evident at our first meeting, at the end of December, that government MLAs were determined to proceed in a reckless fashion by forcing the Legislative Assembly Office to compose a job posting and a position profile for a brand new position in less than 48 hours and then, on top of that, deciding to open the competition during the Christmas holidays, including a costly run of print advertisements that required an LAO employee to come into the office on their holidays to make certain deadlines despite the Official Opposition's strong advice that this would be a waste of money and put undue strain on our support staff.

You know, Mr. Speaker, in December it started to become very evident that the members of the Legislative Offices Committee were preparing to move forward in a very reckless manner from the fact that we were starting with a new position – a new job description was necessary – and that even upon recommendation not to advertise during the holiday season for this position, the members of the governing party on that committee decided that, yeah, we will proceed in that manner.

Then in January the committee was asked to spend an additional $20,000 for a second run of print advertisements because not enough applications had been received at that point, which is exactly what members from the Official Opposition had pointed out in our December meeting, that it would be a terrible time to advertise, during the Christmas holidays, during the Christmas break, and that we should probably ensure that we get job descriptions put together in a reasonable manner that gives the LAO the time necessary to do a proper job on that. But then we went ahead in January, and the committee needed to approve another $20,000 for advertising because the first round was not effective.

We also took issue with being strong-armed by government MLAs who would declare that a consensus had been reached on issues in camera and would try to force votes with little to no discussion when we returned to the record. Perhaps it wasn't surprising that when it came time to select a candidate, instead of an openness to hear the concerns from the Official Opposition, government members used their majority to confirm a candidate who, while qualified – and I must reiterate that, Mr. Speaker. Official Opposition members on the committee did not feel that the individual was not qualified, but there were other outstanding issues that gave us pause for concern, and we felt that those issues were enough to cause question for Albertans on whether or not this was the right choice for Election Commissioner.

Government members used their majority to confirm a candidate who, while qualified, has a long and adversarial history with the Legislative Assembly here in Alberta. We felt there were a number of other strong, qualified candidates, yet the government members chose a candidate that did not have unanimous support of the committee. The selection of an Election Commissioner should not be a partisan exercise, and indeed there was an opportunity to confirm a consensus candidate. However, the government members of the committee have chosen to act in a partisan manner, which is certainly not in the best interests, I would say, of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, it should concern all Albertans when a committee is charged with the search for the position of Election Commissioner, a new position within our electoral system. The position was established, essentially, through I believe it was Bill 32, An Act to Strengthen and Protect Democracy in Alberta. Yet when the search committee moves in this manner, it gives me great concern that we are possibly seeing a government working not necessarily in the best interests of democracy, accountability, transparency within our democratic system but moving in a somewhat reckless fashion to appoint an individual that appeared to be high on their radar right from the start.

I say again that I do not believe that any of the members from the Official Opposition that were members of the committee ever put into question this individual's ability and qualifications with regard to elections, but we did have concern with regard to the history of this individual and the government of Alberta. We see an individual here who, although having served as Chief Electoral Officer in the past in Alberta – committee members from all parties had concerns on the 2008 election and the performance of that election, and the individual was dismissed. The individual decided to sue the government, failed in successfully suing the government. So we have a situation here that there's a tarnished history that should concern all Albertans on whether or not this individual can move forward in a manner that is free from any stigma or baggage from past.

I believe that I will not be supporting this motion, as in committee. I was not in support of the motion to begin with.

I believe that all Members of the Legislative Assembly should take a close look at the process that was put in place and how it played out and possibly take a second look at: is this the right individual for the position of Election Commissioner, the right individual that would give confidence to all Albertans that we are in fact protecting and strengthening democracy in Alberta?

With that, I do have an amendment I would like to move at this time. Do you wish me to proceed, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Yes.

Mr. van Dijken: I move that Government Motion 16 be amended by adding the following after “May 15, 2018”:

and be it further resolved that following the passage of this motion, the Election Commissioner’s salary be posted publicly on the website of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices.

Mr. Speaker, we did have considerable discussion within committee to look at the possibility of posting the salary publicly. If we take a look at the advertisement that was put forward – there was a range; I’m trying to find it here – we had a range advertised that would put this individual in a salary class that would qualify for the sunshine list.

Appointment will be made for a term . . . with provision for reappointment.

The salary for the position is $152,818 to $212,801.

I believe it’s important for Albertans to be able to see what the individuals that are hired for public positions are paid over and above what would be considered the limit on the sunshine list.

What’s interesting with this is that if we wait for the process to play out the way it traditionally would, Albertans will not be able to understand what the Election Commissioner position is being paid until June 2019. I think it’s prudent for this Assembly to disclose this information, and I think that if there’s nothing that the government is trying to hide with regard to this position, they would agree that it is prudent to disclose this information. It’s going to be public information in June 2019 regardless. I believe that it’s an important part of the information and that accountability and transparency of this government could be called into question if this is not disclosed at this time.

I would encourage all members to support this amendment motion, and I look forward to hearing more discussion on that possibility.

The Speaker: Hon. member, the amendment you proposed is, I believe, A1 and has been circulated.

Are there members who wish to speak to the amendment? The Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s a pleasure to rise today to speak to the amendment to Government Motion 16 moved by my colleague the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. This is a very important amendment that we have in front of us here today. This is an amendment about transparency in this House and to the public, specifically in regard to elections and the election system and the way that we police and investigate election law here in Alberta. I know that transparency is important to every single member of this House. I’ve heard it a number of times from members on the government side, repeatedly, over and over again, in many different circumstances, so I know that the government is certainly in support of a motion like this, that shows transparency to the people of this province.

The amendment reads that the new “Election Commissioner’s salary be posted publicly on the website” so that the public can see. This new position, of course, was created through a piece of legislation that was passed in this House by the government members to create a redundant position, so to speak. Those are not necessarily my words, although I agree with them, but the words of the Chief Electoral Officer in this province, Mr. Speaker, who many hold in high regard, who has acted in an extremely ethical manner throughout the course of his career. When asked to present to the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices in regard to election investigations, he spoke very candidly and very honestly and actually had no issues handling current complaints that came into his office in regard to investigations.

So it’s interesting that we’re here in the first place, but we are, and this committee had undertaken a search process to hire and fill this new Election Commissioner position regardless of its redundancy. Here we are, and I think that in the interest of full disclosure to the public, it’s important that this salary, in accordance with other sunshine rules, be posted on the website.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, we’re only one year away – as we think, we are only one year away from the next general election. There’s lots of work to be done and lots of information to get out there by members of the government side. Of course, the Official Opposition is trying to get lots of information out to the people so they can make an informed decision when it comes to choosing their next government. The salaries, as most Albertans would agree, especially within quite a high range – I would argue that probably the top 1 per cent of citizens in this province make this kind of salary. The top 1 per cent. That’s just within the salary range that’s been publicly posted on the search on the website for this commissioner. So the top 1 per cent of Albertans make a salary like this. There’s quite a range, and I think that Albertans would more specifically be interested in how much the government members of this committee have agreed to pay this individual that sits in the Election Commissioner chair.

Like I’ve said before and like we’ve discussed before, this certainly is a matter of transparency. I know that members of the United Conservative caucus think that transparency is one of the most important things in our democratic system, and many Albertans would certainly agree with us, Mr. Speaker. That’s why this motion, put forward by my honourable colleague, is extremely important. Surely, the government would agree that, you know, this is not anything unusual in regard to any other independent office of the Legislature position. It’s not at all.

I don’t think the government wants to hide anything. Certainly, I know that it’s not the intent of this government to not be transparent. I don’t think this government wants to be sneaky. I don’t think they want to, you know, pull the wool over the voters’ eyes. I don’t think that’s the intent of this government, Mr. Speaker. So, surely, this would be an amendment to the government motion that would pass. In my heart of hearts – and I hope I’m safe to assume that in the government’s heart of hearts, they believe that a government should be transparent. This is exactly the kind of motion that they should move.

In closing, I would like to urge all members of this Assembly – the government side of the House, members of the Official Opposition, independent members, members of the third party – to vote in favour of transparency here today. It’s an easy thing to do, Mr. Speaker. I can’t possibly see any reason why any member would think that it wouldn’t be in the public’s best interest. After all, that’s what we’re here to do: act on behalf of the public, their best interest. It is an extremely interesting thing to know just how much the new Election Commissioner is to be paid, so let’s pass this motion unanimously. Let’s post the salary of the new Election Commissioner on the website and show and prove to the people of Alberta that we in this Legislature are transparent and that we hold the interest of the public in such a high regard.

Again I urge you to pass this amendment to the motion. I will certainly be supporting it. Thank you.

The Speaker: Any questions under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Airdrie? Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that the Member for Airdrie is proud and respectful and responsible regarding the democratic process, and I know she was involved in this committee, so I'd like to have her further describe her heartfelt belief in the actual requirement that these people have to publicly disclose their wages and that they be responsible to the people that they serve.

Mrs. Pitt: Well, thank you to my hon. colleague from Drumheller-Stettler. You know, my thoughts are with the people in his constituency as they experience some flooding events in the area.

To answer the question that the members asks, in my experience in this role as the MLA representative of the people of Airdrie, I know that when I was sent here almost three years ago – in four days it actually is three years ago, Mr. Speaker – the people of Airdrie gave me a very clear mandate as I was talking to them, knocking on their doors, and they wanted the sun to shine. This is certainly an example of just that. There are so many people frustrated by the way in which the speed of government moves, so when presented with an opportunity, given the mandate that the people have given me in Airdrie to let the sun shine and to do it quickly, I for one will always jump at that opportunity. That is exactly the opportunity that is presented here today with this amendment to this government motion. I couldn't think of a better way to represent the people than by letting the sun shine and doing it quickly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any other questions under 29(2)(a)? The hon. member.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Not having had the benefit of sitting on the committee, I'd just like some clarification if possible. Let me get this straight. We've got an individual that was accused of something during the election. My understanding is that even the current Premier had issues in her riding during the 2008 election with this individual. The accusations were found to be serious enough that the government actually fired the individual.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I want to remind you that you're speaking to the amendment now.

Mr. Hanson: Yeah. I'm getting to that. I'm just trying to get clarification here because we're talking about the high rate of pay for an individual, and we want to post it.

So then the individual sues the government of Alberta unsuccessfully, and now the government members of the committee are all in favour of ramrodding and hiring this individual again for some reason, and we have to debate whether we want to disclose how much money we're going to pay this individual. I'm just a little shocked. Could you please clarify? Am I correct in what I was saying here?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Pitt: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The candidate that we're referring to was not fired in 2008. He was actually not rehired by the committee for numerous reasons, which I'm sure we'll get into during the course of this debate here this evening.

There are a number of curiousnesses around the appointment of this new Election Commissioner, certainly, but the government has an opportunity here today to help shed some light on this situation and an opportunity to show that they're not hiding anything. I don't think they are. I really don't think they are. I think they're going to vote in favour of this because it makes sense. It's common sense. The people in their ridings are certainly going to want to know, as many of their constituents . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre on amendment A1.

Mr. Shepherd: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the distinct honour of serving as the chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, which means, then, that I also have the opportunity and the honour of serving on behalf of the people of Alberta as the chair of the select special search committees when we are conducting search processes for officers of the Legislature. I endeavour in that work to remain neutral, as the chair should, and I think all members of the committee have generally expressed that I have conducted myself in such a manner in this work.

Now, on this particular issue I've had the opportunity to chair three committees now: for the Ombudsman who was appointed last year; for the new Auditor General, who was just sworn in this week; and then, of course, for the Election Commissioner, Mr. Gibson, who we're discussing here tonight. In each of those processes we have followed the due process which is set out under legislation as to the disclosure of salary, that being that under legislation the legislated process is that after an individual has earned their salary, in the following year that salary is posted online and made available for disclosure to the people of Alberta. That is true for all individuals, Mr. Speaker, all public servants who are above the threshold that is set out on the sunshine list and are therefore required to have their salary disclosed. That is the appropriate practice. That is the practice that has occurred on the two previous search committees, and indeed I would suggest that is the appropriate practice which should take place here.

I say this, Mr. Speaker, as the chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, where it is our due purpose to work with and to oversee the budgets and business plans of the officers of the Legislature and to indeed uphold the work that they do with the utmost respect, as it should be, on behalf of the Legislature and the people of Alberta. To suggest that in this situation because members of the opposition may have some discomfort with this particular candidate, for reasons which they have partially explained but that they have the opportunity to explain further if they wish tonight – those concerns do not to me suggest that there is any reason that we should be abrogating the due process set out in legislation, that is expected by all officers of our Legislature, indeed by all members of the public service to whom the sunshine list applies.

Should we choose to make an exception this evening, Mr. Speaker, and target this particular individual for reasons which the members opposite can only explain – to single him out for special treatment, indeed, I believe, would cast a chill and a pall over our other officers of the Legislature and our public service. Should they not have the expectation of the due process of the law? Should they not expect that members of this House would treat them with the due respect of their position and that they should be able to have the expectation that members of this House are not going to attempt to circumvent or abrogate the law for whatever particular personal purpose they might have?

Indeed, as I look forward to having the opportunity to explain, there are things that have occurred in this House in the treatment of officers of the Legislature which have suggested that. Indeed, in my view, that is disturbing. It has been called out in the press. It was called out by members of this House who were in opposition at the time, including our Premier. Mr. Speaker, this motion that is before us, I dare say, approaches an insult to the officers of the Legislature.

We are not abrogating transparency. Our government is the one that brought forward the legislation which extended the sunshine list in this province. This was not something that occurred under the previous government, who instead appointed many people to agencies, boards, and commissions at salaries far above the range that is set out for Mr. Gibson – far above – almost approaching four times the amount. Those individuals were not particularly targeted. They also were afforded the due process of the law.

Setting aside any comment on the qualifications of Mr. Gibson, how anyone feels about his appointment, about whether or not people have any particular concerns, there is a due process that is in place. There is legislation that is in place. If members opposite feel that that legislation is inadequate, then by all means I suggest they may consider a private member's bill. Perhaps they would wish to include that as part of their party platform and can advocate for that at their policy conference this coming weekend.

But, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe it is appropriate in this context to try to introduce a motion that circumvents that law and indeed would treat our officers, our public servants with disrespect and call into question whether any future person who was hired above that threshold that is set out in the sunshine list could have trust that they would be afforded the due process of the expectation that legislation would be upheld on their behalf.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I will be voting against this amendment.

The Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Edmonton-Centre? The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I actually want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Centre. He did an absolutely spectacular job of chairing this committee. Things got very passionate at times, and he did an excellent job of keeping things under control. I want to thank you personally for your efforts and for the work that you did on this committee. It's no wonder that you've been used to chair other committees, because you did a great job.

I wanted to talk a little bit about due process versus law, for one thing. You're using those words interchangeably, Mr. Speaker, and I think that maybe that's something we need to talk about. If we're talking about due process, due process for us in this House is actually what we do for Albertans, not for people that we hire here, especially in this particular situation. This is a redundant position, a position that was not required, and it was specifically told to us in this Legislature that the position need not happen.

Now we have a person who's been hired in a position that is within the sunshine list, a position that the election officer said didn't need to happen, that he was completely capable of handling on his own. Now the government is choosing to spend taxpayer dollars on another person to do this job and questions why we're asking to have this dollar amount brought forward: because, first of all, as they know, we don't think that this position was necessary, with all due respect to Mr. Lorne Gibson, who's very qualified; also, because, actually, due process is here for Albertans. If we're asking you to look at it differently, the reason is because we believe that due process needs to be looked at in terms of the people who are actually paying for us to be here. That's actually what matters, especially because this person that has been hired, Mr. Lorne Gibson, is going to be interacting with every single person who is working towards being in this Legislature and all of the families and volunteers and everybody else that may have issues with coming forward.

The reason why this amendment was brought forward was to make sure that we're doing exactly what we said to do. The whole reason that this person was supposedly hired was for transparency and accountability, but at the same time, due process is the reason for not having transparency and accountability. I'm confused. So I think maybe it's time to ask the question.

The Speaker: Your question is addressed to the Member for Edmonton-Centre?

Mrs. Aheer: Yes.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, I understand that the members feel that this position was not necessary. I understand that they did not want to see an Election Commissioner in the first place. They had the opportunity to raise those concerns when we debated Bill 32. They made those concerns quite clear, and indeed they had the opportunity to make those clear once again on the record when we discussed this at the committee.

But that is irrelevant, Mr. Speaker, to the motion that is in front of us. The motion that is front of us is attempting to circumvent and go around the tenets that are laid out in legislation about how the sunshine list in the province of Alberta operates. It has nothing to do with whether or not they like the candidate, with whether or not they feel that creating this position under Bill 32 was appropriate. That has nothing to do with whether or not the salary of the Election Commissioner should be made available before the time that it is duly appointed to be done under legislation, under the law.

Again, to choose to go around that and target this individual simply because they dislike the legislation which created his position, simply because they do not want this particular individual as the candidate to hold this position, to target him for that reason for exceptional targeting, to reveal his salary, to me, Mr. Speaker, seems highly inappropriate. That suggests to any future candidate that puts their name forward to be an officer of this Legislature that if members of this House, for whatever reason, decide that they don't like them, they can target them for an exception to the law. That is not a message I want to communicate to people who serve this House and, indeed, all.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak to amendment A1, moved by my colleague from the wonderful constituency of Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. This is an amendment to get some additional transparency and openness around the salary of the Election Commissioner.

You know, I heard the Member for Edmonton-Centre, and I, too, would like to thank him for his work as the chair of the committee.

Having said that, I don't sit on the committee – Mr. Speaker, you would know that – but I have had the pleasure of hearing the debate this evening as well as having some discussion. I also had the opportunity to read the minority report from my colleagues about some of the things and the concerns that they highlighted in that, particularly around the process that took place with respect to this particular hiring.

I'd like to just point out to the Member for Edmonton-Centre, who aptly highlighted the fact that he's overseen three of these processes, that I know that there have certainly been some irregularities, or certainly the process took place at different speeds from the other hirings; for example, the Auditor General as well as the Ombudsman and others. I know that I had the opportunity to review some of the meeting dates in terms of the speed at which the government members on the committee were insistent on it happening. We actually heard the Minister of Transportation today talk about the appointment of the MSA, how it's been over seven months that that seat has been vacant. His response was needing to follow the process and making sure we take time to get it right. But, Mr. Speaker, you'll know that the legislation was rushed through this House, and then the government members got together and rushed this process to get to the result where we are today. So there have been a number of challenges around exactly how this has taken place.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre – and, again, I appreciate the good work that he's done on this as well as some of the other recruitment committees that he has overseen – talked about the fact that he, in fact, has done this three times now and that he has stayed independent in that process, and I also believe that he has. But one of the big differences between this process and the last process or the other processes – and, Mr. Speaker, you'll remember that we sat on a selection committee together where we selected the Clerk of this Assembly, and that was also done in a unanimous fashion.

But this is very different. This we see: the government members insisting on one thing and the opposition expressing some serious concern around the selection of that particular individual. Also, along the road, the process that was followed in terms of it was rushed, and it seemed very clear that there was a need to get this finished by a certain period of time. In fact, I asked the question here in the House about that, and they talked at some length about wanting to have it finished in the spring and that sort of thing.

Now we see a situation where the salary is not going to be disclosed, and we all know, Mr. Speaker, that, in fact, it will be disclosed at the end of next year. I heard the Member for Edmonton-Centre speak about how any future candidates will know that their salary is going to be released and that that will put a chill on the application process. Well, I couldn't disagree more because the reality is that the salary will be disclosed.

I think it's important that when we have the opportunity to provide as much information to the public as possible – and I also would submit that he's right in situations like this with respect to previous legislation. It should have been done like this in the first place. It doesn't preclude us from being able to do what we're asking to do today. While I understand that the chair would prefer that the normal process take place, it doesn't prevent us from doing this. All candidates that apply to be a legislative officer, you'll know, Mr. Speaker, are fully aware of the fact that their salary will be released, so this in turn would not have a chilling effect in any capacity. It also allows for openness and transparency, for all Albertans to know just exactly what that salary is.

Mr. Speaker, you'll know that I wasn't on the committee, so I don't know the salary that this particular individual is going to get, but what I am very, very, very interested to find out – and hopefully the members opposite will vote in favour of this amendment so that we can all find out sooner than later.

But what I'm very interested to find out is if, in fact, the Election Commissioner, who, you know, some would argue, isn't nearly as robust a position as the Chief Electoral Officer in terms of the total people that they oversee, the total number of tasks that they have to accomplish – you'll know, Mr. Speaker, that the Election Commissioner has a very prescriptive role that is quite narrow in its scope and that the Chief Electoral Officer has a very broad role, that is very broad in scope. I'm very interested to find out – and hopefully that's this evening, but if not, then when the salary is released – if it will or will not, in fact, be higher than that of the Chief Electoral Officer. I look forward to having that information. I think that it's fair that Albertans would know those sorts of things in advance of that date that is so far away in the future.

These are the types of things that Albertans have come to expect of government. What we see is a say one thing, do another government from this NDP. They say that they want to be open and transparent, and then when they're provided the opportunity to be open and transparent, they duck and cover behind process. They use process when it's beneficial to them all sorts of times. We heard the Minister of Transportation say that they've taken seven months, Mr. Speaker, to ensure that there is an individual that's overseeing the market surveillance agency – I believe that's the name of it – that is heavily involved in the electricity industry, but fewer, I believe, than 90 days to rush this process through and make sure that the Election Commissioner is appointed. Now they're using process of a different form to hide behind releasing the salary number.

It is a very, very, very reasonable amendment. There are all sorts of good reasons for every member in the Assembly to vote in favour of this particular amendment, and I would encourage all members of the Assembly to do just that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Malkinson: That's correct, Mr. Speaker. It was great listening to the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, who, of course, you know, on the opposition benches is perhaps the strongest member when it comes to his understanding of the procedures in this House. I've heard him go many times toe to toe with our House leader, often unsuccessfully. But he has, I would say, probably about the best batting average of anyone.

He was going on and saying that this amendment is important, that there are serious concerns. Well, Mr. Speaker, I wonder what those serious concerns are. Is the reason that, you know, we need to know this wage right away because we're worried about the office budget for the new commissioner? Well, that's already been approved by the committee. Is he worried about it becoming public? Well, as my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Centre already explained earlier in debate in great detail, in fact there is legislation called the sunshine list that will have that information become public in its due time, like for all other officers of the Legislature whose wage is at a level that requires disclosure.

Now, he says, you know, that we are a say one thing, do another government. I disagree with that. I would say that we are a say one thing and do what we mean government. We passed, Mr. Speaker, Bill 32, which triggered the search committee, which was there to get big money out of politics, which was to ensure our elections were fair. We decided to pick a candidate, Mr. Gibson. With the debate that's gone on so far, it seems to be that individual members of the opposition are trying to make hay out of this issue, which is, frankly, contrary to any HR practice I have ever seen, whether in this House or whether in the private sector.

You know, the Member for Airdrie claims that disclosing a salary before the new officer is even in the position is somehow normal, that it's usual. I would say that it is, in fact, very unusual. I would say that the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, again, being one of the more knowledgeable members on parliamentary procedure and how this House works, ought to know that, Mr. Speaker. He ought to know that.

So I disagree with this assertion that this amendment is needed, that it's required. I would say that this amendment is, I would perhaps suggest, of a purpose to attempt to cast shade over a new officer of the Legislature and is unnecessary and counter to the good parliamentary procedure of this House.

Mr. Gibson is well known throughout Canada for his expertise in elections. It is sought out by the government of Canada. He has been working with the conservative government of Saskatchewan over the last number of years. With that, I think his knowledge is truly – without a doubt he was the best person for the job. That is why a majority of the members on the committee voted to recommend Mr. Gibson.

I believe that this particular amendment is not helpful. I think we should vote on this. I will encourage all members of this House to vote against this amendment. It is against normal practice. It is not helpful to having Mr. Gibson start setting up the office, and it is unnecessary.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cooper: I would like to publicly disclose the payment of $20 for your generous comments.

The Speaker: Hon. members, every day is a surprise in here. That is the first one I've seen. I'm not sure if that's in order or not. [interjections] I didn't think it was. I'm sure you were jesting – right? – hon. member.

Mr. Cooper: Of course.

The Speaker: Of course.

Might I just remind all of you: it's not a science, but it is a bit of an art form. Standing Order 29(2)(a) is intended to address questions and additional enlightenment to the House rather than consuming all of the five minutes yourself. I urge you all to rethink that as we move forward.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills he apologizes for that. Although it was in jest, he didn't want to disrupt the dignity of the House. That's what I'll say about that although I will say that I'm sure that in the next election, when he puts on his brochure that he's the favourite UCP member as voted on by the NDP, that will not help his re-election prospects at all. I'm just saying. I thought it was appropriate to do that.

Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, Leg. Offices used to disclose at one point all of the salaries of the officers, but be that as it may, it's a little rich for the government members to talk the way they do. Listen, I don't have a beef with them taking great interest in talking about the salaries of the agencies, boards, and commissions. They did their very best to make political hay out of that with no regard for the individuals involved, and that's fine. Actually, I'm okay with that. I'm okay with that because that's part of their job in the same way it's part of our job to talk about the salaries of people that the taxpayers are paying for. It's the way it goes.

I also note that the minister of postsecondary didn't seem to have a problem with disclosing I think it was the salary of the president of the University of Alberta. I'm not sure that that was normal. Nonetheless, he did it, in my view, for political expediency at one point and, I think, irritated the individual whose salary he disclosed. But it's not about irritating people; it's about transparency, Mr. Speaker. It's about: if you're paying somebody's salary, especially in a key position, you have the right to know how much salary you are paying for that person in the key position. It's fair ball.

I heard some comments from the Member for Edmonton-Centre about: it's the law. Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't disagree with him, but this is the place where we make the law. That's why we come here. That's what we do here. When you want to stop making law, then maybe you want to stop coming here, as I would say to any member.

It's a little rich for the government to go on at length time after time after time and on issue after issue after issue and claim to be in favour of transparency and be in favour of being open to disclosure and to all of a sudden, when it suits their – I don't know what their political purpose is. That's what's really funny. You would think that the folks on the other side would be lining up and jumping in front of each other to say: of course we'll let the taxpayers know what they're paying for the services of an independent officer of the Legislative Assembly. I believe that they know what all the other independent officers of the Assembly are making.

This is not really out of the realm of what's ordinary except that they seem to have some motive – and I don't know what it is – to not disclose this particular salary. It's very unusual that they're this emotional and this upset and this wound up – wound up, I would say – about protecting one piece of information when so many other similar pieces of information are already available. You know, I could tell also because even the Government House Leader can't wait to get on his feet. He's just been not quiet for two seconds while this has been going on though he hasn't yet been recognized by the chair, which is interesting. It tells me that we're on the right track in asking for this, Mr. Speaker, when we get the most accomplished and experienced members on the government side that can't contain themselves at all.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: I'm sorry. I can contain myself no longer, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is making suggestions about what I'm saying in this House which are simply untrue. I'm just sitting here. I made, you know, one little comment, under my breath, I might add. He's just carrying on and simply being rather distant from the truth in this matter.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I wonder. I'm just looking. Do you have something in your eye?

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Point made. That was skilfully done.

I would say to you that when you have the most accomplished members of the other side of the House unable to contain themselves, it's a pretty good sign that as opposition we're on something that has made the government very uncomfortable in their skin. That's usually a sign that the government is second-guessing their own position on an issue. It's a good sign that the government is second-guessing their position on this issue because it's a position they ought to be uncomfortable with. It's a position against transparency. It's a position against openness. It's a position against what's in the taxpayers' interest. It's a position which is against what I believe is in the best interests of Albertans.

You know what, Mr. Speaker? If you had an employee, you would probably know about what you're paying them. If you had a big business and you had a thousand employees, you might not know what you're paying every one of them, but I can assure you that you would know pretty close what you're paying to your key employees in the key positions of influence. This is one of those situations where an employee is being considered to be hired in a key position of influence. The government wants to hide the salary. It doesn't make sense. It's inconsistent with transparency. It's inconsistent with accountability. It's inconsistent with openness. It's inconsistent with everything the government claims – and "claims" is the key word – to support.

Of course, when it suits their purposes, they're very keen to jump up and disclose salaries of people on every agency, board, and commission, the University of Alberta, senior executives, you know, by the minister, but for some reason – for some reason – the government is so secretive and protective about this one number, which will become public at some point anyways. It really ought to cause the voters and the taxpayers of Alberta to say: what is it that the government is trying to hide? I don't know what it could be. It's a number.

Everybody deserves to get paid when they go to work. Nobody should be troubled that if this person gets hired, they get paid to go to work. It's the way the world works. I would submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that – well, I'd have to test my own resolve – many members of this House may not show up next week if they stopped getting paid. On the other hand, I give credit to members of this House, on all sides for the record, the government side and the opposition side, that many of us might actually show up next week because this is such a privileged place to be even if we didn't get paid.

However, what's interesting is that the government seems so reluctant to disclose this one particular number for this one particular key potential employee of the taxpayers. It really begs the question: why? It begs the question: why? It begs the question of why they get on their high horse and try to talk as if they're above the issue when this isn't an issue that you want to be above. This is an issue where, like the opposition, you want to be on the same level as the taxpayers and the citizens of Alberta, protecting their interests, not above them saying: "Oh, no; you couldn't possibly. This information is okay for us, but it's not okay for you." That's what the government is saying. The opposition is saying: "We're like you. We're like you, Albertans. We should all know that it's not a big deal." The government is saying: "No. We're above you. We're allowed to know, and you're not." It's inconsistent.

Now, the government can still save themselves at this point just by voting for this amendment, in which case the public might say: "Okay. The Member for Calgary-Hays might not have gotten it right. He might have been too hard on those nice government people in accusing them of being above the public and not giving the public information that they can have." But so far it hasn't happened. So far I haven't seen an indication that the government is prepared, as the opposition is, to be on the same level as Alberta taxpayers, as Alberta voters and say: you're potentially going to pay this person.

Listen, all work – first, let me say this, Mr. Speaker; it's important to say this – is valuable, all work has dignity, and all work matters. There's no such thing as unimportant work. In fairness to all of the public servants, I think it's more important for the public to know the salary of a key player in the civil service than it is for them to know the salary of every rank-and-file employee in every important job that matters to Alberta citizens that is out there. This is a different matter.

Mr. Speaker, it goes even beyond that. It goes to democracy. What is the salary of someone that may have a key role in major decisions that may decide the next election of Alberta? Now the issue gains great importance. The issue really comes to the confidence of Albertans in the democratic process, and that's really at the nub of what we're talking about here.

If you were actually talking about an individual that might have a role in deciding one or more seats in the next provincial election, the next time that the voters and taxpayers get to go to the polls in Alberta and decide who they want to lead their province, and the government is saying, "Oh, no; you can't have key information about those people that can make these decisions, that could turn one or more seats in the next election" – I don't know. I think that if I was an Albertan at home watching this, I'd say, "I'm uncomfortable with the government's position." In fact, I'm pretty sure I'd say, "I'm really comfortable with the opposition's position," because when I vote for somebody, I want it to be – listen, I'm not saying that it's going to happen, but I'm going to say that it gives confidence to the public that the interests that affect them will be dealt with in a balanced way when key pieces of information about key players are open to the public. Simple as that. I think that now we're talking at a level that all Albertans, from every walk of life, could understand and appreciate.

Actually, I think the government appreciates it while they're hearing this now, and I'm not sure that they thought about it in the way that I'm talking about it before now. Maybe they did. But I'm kind of hoping, Mr. Speaker, that they're thinking now, "Well, when I go back to my constituency on the weekend, I don't want people stopping me in the grocery store and in the park and wherever else I go," because we all get stopped everywhere we go, "and saying . . ."

Mr. Mason: Slow down.

Mr. McIver: There we go. The Government House Leader, Mr. Speaker, has got something in his eye again, I think.

I don't think that they want to be saying, "Why are you hiding a key piece of information about a key player that might have a key role in deciding some of the seats in the next election?" I'm thinking to myself that they might say: "I don't know. I might actually be prone to supporting a party that would share that information with me as opposed to a party that would hide that information from me."

But, Mr. Speaker, the government has this decision to make. The opposition has provided them a wonderful opportunity to say to the people of Alberta: "We're equal with you. We're not above you. We trust you to have key pieces of information about people that could affect how your vote is considered in the next election and who it's considered for." I would think that the government members might actually be more comfortable with their answer in the grocery store or at the park next weekend when they can say: "Yeah, I believe in transparency. It's not just something we said and then ignored. It's something we said and stood behind, and when the opposition brought this forward, of course we supported it. Of course we did. Of course we trust you to have this information, voters and members of the public of Alberta, because we are equal with you, not above you. We believe that you're entitled to this piece of information as much as we are because you have a direct interest. It potentially could affect you and your family, the decisions that this particular key player could make, and consequently we are okay with having transparency about that." I still remain hopeful that the government members will look at this and say, "Yes, we are equal to the voters, not above them, and we are going to support this amendment."

The Speaker: Any questions under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Calgary-Hays? The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for kindly recognizing me. I'm sure that that's something you would afford the Government House Leader from time to time as well when he gets up to speak.

I just wanted to offer some points of clarification for the Member for Calgary-Hays. He mentioned me a couple of times, Mr. Speaker, and I'm very flattered that he's paying so much attention to me this evening. He suggested, perhaps, that I revealed the salary of the University of Alberta president for political purposes, and I have to just stand up and say how deeply offended I am that he would make such a suggestion. Far be it from me or anyone on this side to deal in public-sector salaries for purely political purposes. You know, normally I would ask the member to offer an apology for making such deeply offensive statements, but I know that they are often too busy asking me to apologize for the things that I say about them. So in the spirit of generosity – I'm letting the milk of human kindness flow through my veins here – we'll just call it even on that point.

But I do want to just remind the member opposite, because he seems to be so keen on promoting transparency, that in fact one of the reasons that he finds himself on the opposition benches today is because his government refused to offer that kind of transparency when offered the chance prior to 2015. In fact, the reason that the public knows the president of the University of Alberta's salary, among all of the other presidents' salaries, is because of legislation that this government passed. We extended the sunshine list to cover all public-sector employees in all agencies, boards, and commissions, something that the member opposite refused to do when he had the chance, when he was in government, Mr. Speaker. So, you know, it wasn't me who personally, secretly revealed the contract that the president of the University of Alberta had signed with the board of governors. It was legislation that let the sunshine in and let all of the people of Alberta know the salaries that every university president was taking.

Like I said, I will offer my forgiveness pre-emptively to the Member for Calgary-Hays so that he doesn't have to, you know, go through the process of apologizing to me for making suggestions that I would be revealing this information for political purposes.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you have used half the time already, so you're getting to my discussion earlier about 29(2)(a). I'm waiting with bated breath to hear you move.

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, please forgive me. I'm a little bit clouded at this late hour. It's taking me longer than normal to get to my point.

I do have a question, Mr. Speaker, for the Member for Calgary-Hays, because he's very keen to know the salary that this official is going to be paid. I know that that party opposite is campaigning on tax cuts for rich people. They really love to give tax cuts to people who make, you know, salaries that are in the range that they're talking about. I'm wondering if the member opposite is so keen to learn this person's salary so that he knows whether or not they're going to be offering him a tax cut in the next election and if that would perhaps change the member's opinion, because I know that they really like rich people. They seem to have something against this particular person. I'd just like the member opposite to tell us, knowing that he is a rich person, that the parties opposite are particularly fond of favouring, if that would change his opinion of this particular . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, let's give the hon. member a chance to respond.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, since the hon. minister was so gracious, far be it from me to be less than gracious at this point.

But I would say, as an answer, that unlike the hon. minister's party, we're interested in giving tax cuts to all Albertans, rich and poor. Should we be blessed with the opportunity to be the government and Bill 1 ditches the carbon tax, every Albertan will get a tax cut, rich or poor, on that important day, and we can't wait to deliver on that promise. But we need to be humble. We need to work hard. We need to earn every vote. We need to actually earn the trust of Albertans. We should never take it for granted. [interjections] Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I'm answering the hon. minister's question. So, yes, we will be happy to offer that tax cut to all Albertans, rich and poor.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Why, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak on the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock's motion.

Mr. van Dijken: BMW.

Mr. Yao: BMW.

"Be it further resolved that following the passage of this motion, the Election Commissioner's salary be posted publicly on the website." Mr. Speaker, transparency and accountability: two words that are not in the New Democratic dictionary. I'm actually very concerned here because we have to look at what the question is, what is being asked. What is being asked for is the salary of a public servant being posted. Now, there is that technicality that he hasn't been paid for it yet, but I would question that. At any job people have an expectation as to what their salary is and should know it, especially if it is a salary that is paid for by taxpayers. Perhaps the public should know what they're paying and what they're paying for.

Mr. Speaker, believe it or not, your salary – and you are in one of the highest positions in the province of Alberta, sir. Your job is to herd cats. Your job is to make sure that all of these politicians toe the line and maintain a certain level of . . .

An Hon. Member: Decorum.

Mr. Yao: . . . decorum. Thank you for that.

So when you look at what we're asking . . .

The Speaker: I'm going to take that as a compliment.

Mr. Yao: Yes, sir. It is, absolutely.

But, I mean, in the scheme of things, we've got to think about what we're asking. We're asking for a salary to be disclosed so that the public knows. I wish there were some media here, and maybe they're listening. Maybe they could do a poll in one of their newspapers asking the question: should the Election Commissioner's salary be disclosed? Do you not think the public would like to know? I hope that if there are any media listening, they consider polling their readers, their viewers, all, and asking that question.

Furthermore, sir, I am surprised at the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Centre. He talks about the fact that it is a disturbing situation that we are asking for a salary to be disclosed, that it is insulting to somebody that the salary be disclosed, that it may not be appropriate practice to disclose the salary of this public servant who is an Election Commissioner, which, as has been expressed by my colleagues, is a new position. Someone mentioned it's redundant, like many of the members over there.

Mr. Speaker, there is a concern about transparency and accountability and about the salary being disclosed. It is about ensuring that everything is on the up and up, that everything is being treated fairly. It'd be surprising to find out after the salary is disclosed that, say, perhaps he makes more than the Chief Electoral Officer – wouldn't that be something? – or is paid an outrageous sum of money, even above and beyond what the Premier makes. Wouldn't that be something? Hidden until June 2019, right after the election, well, the anticipated time of the election: it makes a person wonder what they are hiding and why.

Both sides talk about publishing salaries of public servants, and we all agree, because for everyone in here, our salaries are disclosed. Every single expense is scrutinized. We all have to go visit the Ethics Commissioner to ensure that even our personal dealings do not conflict with our government or legislated elected positions. That's why I am appalled – appalled – sir. I'm appalled that they wouldn't want to disclose this salary. You know, it's very disappointing. I had higher hopes for the group over here. For them to fight this one aspect of this bill, to disclose a salary, is disheartening to many out there.

I guess, in the end, sir, I think it would be appropriate practice to disclose his salary. His position is no more important than anyone else in this House and in the higher levels of government. It's disappointing. It's unfortunate, especially for a redundant position.

I know this government understands redundant positions because in, like, the Ministry of Health, as per the Auditor General, there is duplication of the administration at the highest levels. I wonder if the Health minister has spent time in the last three years taking a look at any of those positions that the Auditor General talked about and has looked at any of that duplication and if she has even considered some of the comments he made about how this duplication of bureaucracy at the highest levels of Alberta Health is actually impairing our health system. At the very least, you wonder if they couldn't eliminate some of that duplication of administration at the highest levels and route some of that money down to the front-line services. Certainly, that's how we would ensure there are front-line services.

Again, Mr. Speaker, this is disappointing. It truly is. We're asking for a salary to be disclosed, a single salary of a new position. When you put out the ads for this job, did you actually advertise a salary range in there? Did you demonstrate anything? If we know the range, why not identify how much exactly this person is being paid? How much was the deal that was settled upon, that this individual will get X number of dollars?

Mr. Malkinson: It'll be disclosed.

Mr. Yao: Yes, disclosed in June 2019, long after – well, ideally for them after – the next election, because I think that perhaps they feel the salary that this fellow is getting might be a detriment to the next election. That's all I can think of for why they would want to hide this. It's disappointing. If it's legislated, they also have the ability to repair that, to fix that, to ensure that this salary is disclosed.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I do express my concerns as to why they're fighting this, and I would be disappointed should they not vote in favour of this amendment provided by my hon. colleague, which is a reasonable amendment. It is just unfortunate, sir. It's very disappointing. I'm sure that the people of Alberta will see this and have the same questions as we do as to why they wouldn't disclose a single salary, yet we live in an environment where salaries are disclosed, where we talk about transparency and accountability.

With that, sir, I thank you for your time, and good luck.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Five minutes.

Mr. Malkinson: Also correct, Mr. Speaker. Otherwise, I may be trading bills with the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Listening to the hon. member's comments, you know, there were definitely some names being called over there that we are redundant. The hon. member seems to be very confident that he is going to be on this side of the House, and I would perhaps suggest that my takeaway from that is that I should be investing in tinfoil stock.

Specifically, to provide an answer to some of the member's questions, yes, in fact, the Election Commissioner's wages will indeed be disclosed. He asked if the range is public, and yes, indeed, it is because there were ads that went out for it. You know, the hon. member did go on at length to say that this position is redundant. Bill 32 specifically created the Election Commissioner. The Chief Electoral Officer would be responsible for the administration of the electoral process, but the new Election Commissioner's job would be to ensure that our democracy runs smoothly, Mr. Speaker, both inside and outside of the election period. A similar system is already in place federally as well as in Manitoba and has been very successful in ensuring fairness and accountability in those jurisdictions.

My question for the hon. member. Ensuring electoral fairness, accountability, and to make sure that nothing nefarious is happening in our elections: how is that redundant? Mr. Speaker, that is my question for the member.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, he just explained the role of the Chief Electoral Officer. Again, all those things are right in there. The Election Commissioner is a new position. It is redundant. You can look at the job description. It's pretty straightforward. I do understand, again, how this government would create this new position and enjoys building the bureaucracy. Again, when we look at the Ministry of Health, we see that duplication. We see that heavy administration.

It's just so unfortunate that they would not consider providing the salary of this. I mean, the question, sir, is: what are they hiding, why are they hiding it, and to what extent would they want to hide it till June 2019? They have the ability to ensure that this information is provided. They have the ability to ensure that the people of Alberta, citizens that are paying their salaries and that are paying the salary of this Election Commissioner, have comfort knowing that they're paying a fair price for this. It'd be interesting to find out afterwards if it was an outrageous salary. I'd be interested to see the backlash of it.

You know, maybe you're building this second position because you had no trust in the electoral process. Certainly, everyone wonders how the government got into place in the first place, don't they? I mean, maybe there was some suspicious stuff.

The Speaker: Careful. Careful. [interjections]

Keep it down, folks. Keep it down.

Mr. Yao: Why, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate when you shut down the government side once in a while there because their heckling is harsh, sir. Their heckling is harsh. All we hear is heckling from that side all the time. That's just their way, sir. I'm not going to fault them for it. It's just the way they are.

Now, back to transparency and accountability, sir. Again, what are they hiding? Why are they trying to discourage us, why are they trying to bully us over here from asking these questions about what the salary is? It is interesting. You know what? Ultimately, the citizens of Alberta will find out, and they'll understand, the sooner the better, the repercussions of holding something out from the people that pay you. Then, you know, there will be – there are always repercussions, sir. There are always repercussions.

Mr. Mason: A day of reckoning.

Mr. Yao: A day of reckoning, yes, sir. Minister of Transportation, I agree wholeheartedly. A day of reckoning.

The Speaker: The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon on amendment A1.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to be able to stand up and speak to amendment A1 from the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. I would like to get into a conversation that I had last night, that I think speaks to the amendment that's before us today. I had the opportunity to meet with five or six people last night in my constituency, all of them businesspeople. All of them were wondering how they were going to meet the taxation demands that are being placed on them. Prices are rising. Taxes are rising. Their companies have faced very hard times and difficult times over the last three years. One company has gone from a company of 40, 50 people down to literally a family of four or five individuals.

These are the people that are wondering how our tax dollars are being spent. They're suffering. So when we come in here and we do not take the finances of this province seriously, they get very frustrated. They're wondering why we cannot find the savings that are necessary to be able to balance budgets and to be able to live within our means. When we focus in on the issue that's being addressed here for amendment A1, they would want to know what this individual, this Election Commissioner, is going to be paid.

Part of the problem that I've heard tonight is that this committee that has recommended the appointment of this individual did not function in a fashion that was expected, I think, by either the people of Alberta or that the people of that committee should have expected. When we are appointing somebody to a position that's as important as an Election Commissioner, there should be a nonpartisan atmosphere and a co-operation amongst the members of that committee, and when that has not occurred, then the trust tends to be broken. When that trust is broken, then the opposition must do its job. The opposition must begin asking questions. The opposition must begin asking questions that maybe the government isn't going to feel comfortable with. Some of those questions will revolve around the salaries that we pay the individuals in government.

I'm sure this Election Commissioner is very qualified – I've heard people say that in the House today – but I also know that this individual is not without controversy and that one of the questions that the opposition has brought forward is: why would we be willing to spend significant amounts of taxpayers' dollars on an individual when there is some controversy behind that individual? So asking, I believe, for the salary of this individual prior to June 2019 is not an unreasonable thing.

I believe that everybody in this House must remember – and sometimes we have to be reminded – that our bosses are the people of Alberta. They're the ones that elect us. They're the ones that place their trust in us. We, I believe, quite wisely as a Legislature have made the decision that we will have a sunshine list, and we have placed ourselves on that sunshine list. I believe it's a good decision. I believe that we had all-party support with that decision. I also believe that because the people of Alberta are our bosses, they should have the right to know, when this individual is hired, what they are going to be paying this individual.

I don't buy the line that this will put a chill on the hiring of future bureaucrats into the government of Alberta. That doesn't sound right to me, and here's why. Anybody that places their name into the realm of asking to be hired by the citizens of Alberta through their Legislature understands that their salary, assuming that it reaches the threshold, will be made public. Because they understand that before they ever place their hat in the ring, it will not be a shock to them, and it should not be an issue when it comes to the Election Commissioner.

We understand that in this Legislature we have a rare privilege of being able to make the rules and the laws of this province. We can decide in this Legislature whether we will publish the salary and expect that salary to be made known prior to the hiring of this individual. We have that capacity. I believe that the people of Alberta would support that, and I believe that if we came together in this House tonight in a nonpartisan fashion in support of this amendment, we would be doing the job that this committee obviously had a tough time doing. We are talking about a foundation stone in our province of Alberta. It's the democratic political system that we all support in this House. It must be run on a nonpartisan basis, where there is openness and transparency at every level.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment A1 is a reasonable amendment. It, I believe, respects the taxpayers of Alberta. It respects the voters of Alberta. It creates an openness and transparency that will provide confidence to the people of Alberta that with whoever is being hired, they are getting good value and fair value for their money. We know that this has created problems for governments all over this country and, in the past, in this province. When we find out that the people that are working on our behalf are receiving compensation that is not fair value, where they are being overcompensated – as a matter of fact, I'm sure that probably most of us, if we stay in this job long enough, will probably have somebody come up to us and say that we are overcompensated.

You know, I think that the process that we're going through here tonight is a valuable one, but I would hope that the government and the people on the government benches would be listening and considering the people of Alberta and their need and their desire to be able to be sure that the people that work on their behalf, the people that serve them, that an Election Commissioner, that is supposed to be serving the people of Alberta, is receiving fair compensation for the job that they will be performing.

I would ask that this House would consider supporting this amendment. I believe that it would be the first step in a process that has been far too partisan, that would become far easier for us to be able to explain to the people of Alberta if, when we meet in this House, we can do so beyond partisanship in a way that actually reflects the needs and the desires and the wishes of the people of this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon?

Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, it's always such a privilege to be able to rise and speak to, well, pretty much, I mean, anything. It's just a privilege to be here all the time. This is especially important.

The Speaker: You're not under 29(2)(a)?

Mrs. Aheer: No, sir. I'm talking to the amendment. Thank you.

I just wanted to say, Mr. Speaker, that I'm going to cover a few points that have already been covered, but I think it's worth while saying it again. There have been many comments from the government with respect to the chilling effect of releasing the salary – I just can't imagine why – that it's highly inappropriate, that we're targeting Mr. Gibson, a whole bunch of different things along those lines.

I just wanted to read – and I will happily table this tomorrow – from the StarMetro Edmonton. Just to be clear, as we know, there was a range, so declaring the salary is really not that big a deal because, interestingly enough, the Election Commissioner is going to be somewhere within that range. This comes from this particular article. "The election commissioner, when appointed, could earn up to $212,801 in annual salary for a period of five years." That's actually stated in the newspaper. It's no surprise. There's no chilling effect. There's transparency there, and it gives a fairly solid idea of where we might end up as a possibility at the top end. What is actually disclosed in that newspaper: that's the top salary for the most years. We're talking about a person who comes to us with a tremendous amount of baggage, to be truthful – not to say that he's not qualified; he certainly is – and potential stigma that actually will not rest with us. It will rest with the government.

To be clear, the part that I think is the most confusing, sir, is that this will be disclosed. There is pretty much a very, very strong idea of what that might be in a newspaper that's already been revealed, and truthfully the member's amendment gives the government the ability for full transparency before it's done. Talk about stepping above and beyond on behalf of Albertans. I mean, as you know, Mr. Speaker, in Bill 32 we adamantly opposed the appointment of this person. Adamantly, very vocally we did. So to the credit of the member, the member is giving the government, actually, the opportunity to clarify the need for this person to justify their salary to Albertans and especially when it was very clear on this side that this person, we felt – I mean, I'll read again from this article. We "questioned the need for an elections commissioner, arguing Chief Electoral Officer Glen Resler is more than capable of handling such investigations as part of his existing role." We didn't just make that up.

It's quite interesting to me that already in the newspaper – I mean, maybe the government already spoke with the folks in the media and gave them an understanding, which is interesting. If you're not going to disclose it to Albertans, how would the media get that? It's not like they're giving the range in there: "when appointed, could earn up to $212,801 in annual salary for a period of five years."

Here's the interesting thing, Mr. Speaker. We're simply giving the government the opportunity to do the right thing. I understand that it's not the normal process. I understand that it's not the way things have been done before, but again this is a fairly controversial appointment. It's not like it was just something that happened, that a person was appointed. You know the most amazing part about this? We actually had an opportunity for consensus. Given that and given that there is an obvious concern here, an obvious concern for transparency and accountability, what a wonderful way for the government to start off on this, because this is their choice. This person is their designated person to take on this role. What a wonderful way to start it off.

Instead of using the processes, the reason, or that Mr. Gibson is being targeted or that there is a chill or that it is highly inappropriate, they would have the opportunity to be highly appropriate to remove all of the language from it and give the opportunity for Albertans to see the government be transparent with their hard-earned dollars. Remember that this is not our money. This is Albertans' money, and every Albertan who volunteers, participates, tries to be elected, works in any capacity for any politician will be impacted by this person.

The truth is that if the government was willing to share that information, it might add some credibility to their decision. I think it was a wonderful opportunity, brought forward by the member, for the government to actually be able to do that. I don't know why that language is being used in a different way in order to cloud the idea of allowing people to know what that disclosure is, that dollar amount, when we all know that it will be disclosed eventually. It makes absolutely no sense to suggest that in any way that would change Mr. Gibson's decision to be here or come here. He's already made the decision. He knows what he's getting paid. He knows how long his term is for. I'm sure – I'm fairly certain – that he's probably told people. I'm sure they've asked.

Is he under the same rules and regulations? He's not allowed to disclose what he's making? Is he not allowed to tell anybody? Is he under those same rules? Does he have to follow that process, Mr. Speaker? I'm just curious, because that would be interesting. If he doesn't have to follow the process and isn't under the same rules and regulations, as was said by Edmonton-Centre, of the due process, are there any concerns or things that we need to be worried about should he disclose what he's doing?

We had just an amazing group of folks that applied for this position, and Mr. Gibson was definitely well qualified, no doubt, but for the government to be able to justify this decision for this person – you know, I wanted to bring up a couple of other things just to give you some ideas about why we were concerned on this side. The year that this happened, in 2008, it was the lowest voter turnout. It was deemed as being poorly organized. A couple of the things that were really major issues, Mr. Speaker, were around voter lists and polls. People did not know where to poll, and they were getting the wrong information as to where to vote, and on top of that, they weren't on voter lists. Every single constituency reported this back.

Now, my understanding is that for whatever reason that was part of this particular issue and part of the reason why Lorne Gibson did not have his contract renewed in the first place. It's interesting, because people will say that he was fired, that he was let go. None of those things, Mr. Speaker. In fact, he just didn't have his contract renewed. So he comes with that stigma. He comes with that baggage. Why not pass an amendment that begins with clarity . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'll just remind you: speak to the amendment. Keep to the amendment.

Mrs. Aheer: Yes, sir.

Why not acknowledge this amendment that gives credibility to the government, that has chosen a controversial figure, and start everything off on the right foot? Albertans are going to know. They're going to research. They're going to find out. They're not going to be pleased about this decision. I can guarantee you that if partisanship in any way shows its face in this, the government will wear that. So why not start off on the right foot, show transparency and accountability, show Albertans that you care about their hard-earned tax dollars? That is actually our responsibility up here. Give them the privilege of understanding what we are privileged to understand in here. Allow them to understand that the government feels that this is a necessary step in making sure – again, to quote from the article First Election Commissioner Tasked with Rooting out "Dark Money," that's his goal. That's one of the reasons he's being hired. If that is the goal of this government, if that's what they're wanting to do, why not use this member's amendment to start off on the right foot? If that's the reason, that would resonate with Albertans, I'm sure.

But they've chosen a person who has a history here, who has a history with previous governments. They're not willing to disclose what he makes, and then, on top of that, they say that we're targeting him. Well, no, we're not. We didn't agree with this appointment in the first place. We're not targeting any person. We're targeting the fact that the office exists at all, and therefore, based on that conclusion, we believe that Albertans also deserve to understand how much we are paying for a person that this side of the House did not believe was a necessary requirement, especially given the fact, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Resler himself had said that he's quite capable of handling the work within his office.

Like I said, I'll happily table this tomorrow.

I believe sincerely that the most important thing that we can do as legislators, Mr. Speaker, is to provide Albertans with clarity and understanding about the decisions and the choices that we make. We've made it very clear that we're not thrilled with the decision that was made on this particular person, but the government can give back to Albertans by justifying their choice and letting Albertans know what the cost is for this person. There's going to need to be a justification for that as we go forward because this person will be hired soon.

Mr. Gibson will be coming on soon, and he will be performing his duties very soon, and Albertans are going to want to know how much he is being paid for this job. The member across the way had mentioned that we'd said that the government is redundant. No. We believe this position is redundant. If you're going to justify having this position and you're going to pay, potentially, as much as $212,000, well, almost $213,000 in annual salary for a five-year period, I think you owe that – because that's not a small amount of money.

If that is what the final decision is going to be by this government, I think you owe it to Albertans to let them know what they're getting, the value for their dollar, in a person that is going to be very involved with every part of the election campaigns at a very grassroots and in a lot of places, Mr. Speaker, a family level. A lot of us have our families, our aunts and uncles, brothers and sisters, and everybody working on our campaigns. I'm sure that everybody in this House has had the support of their family, and all of them will be scrutinized, potentially, by this person. So I think that, just with respect to that, they have a right to know how much he is being paid and that they are going to receive value for the dollars that they work so hard to give us to use in appropriate ways in this House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any questions to the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View under 29(2)(a)?

Any other members who would like to speak to the amendment? The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, I will not be supporting the amendment. It's very interesting that the entreaties that we get from the other side about behaving in a nonpartisan fashion seem to be comprised primarily of agreeing with the Official Opposition, and that is a nonpartisan move, but what they are doing is, of course, in their view, nonpartisan. But, quite frankly, there's a disagreement on this issue. It's clear that the Official Opposition has disagreement with the creation of this position, and they made that clear during the debate on the bill, but that's now the law of the land. And it's clear that they don't particularly want this particular individual in that position. They've made that clear. Nevertheless, the disclosure has been provided for under legislation, and it will be followed by – and the public will know in due course – what the salary is.* We're going to proceed in accordance with the law and not in accordance with the whims of the Official Opposition, who are clearly operating out of a fit of pique at not getting their way with respect to this matter.

So, Mr. Speaker, you know, I think that we should not be supporting this motion. But as the hour grows late and we have other business to attend to, I am proposing that we adjourn debate on this government motion and move on to other business.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 2 Growth and Diversification Act

[Debate adjourned April 4]

The Speaker: The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak to Bill 2, the Growth and Diversification Act. This bill is yet another example of classic NDP economic philosophy. This government and their ideological allies believe that every problem arising in economics and society can be solved with the meddling hands of government. I can tell you that I support growth and I support diversification, but I'm not sure that this bill will effectively promote either. For the three years we have seen this government in action, what we have seen is the exact opposite of what this bill claims to promote.

Mr. Speaker, what promotes growth? I would argue that it is lower taxes, less regulation, and a government which doesn't treat wealth-creating private enterprise like the enemy.

How about diversification? I would suggest that diversification will only come when innovators and entrepreneurs have access to capital, and it is well apparent that much of what this government has done has sent both domestic and international investors fleeing for other jurisdictions. With Alberta business reeling from the destructive policies of the NDP, what have they decided to do? To grace us with yet another government program to try and reverse some of the damage that they have caused.

Mr. Speaker, I would encourage the government, if they truly want growth and diversification, to reverse their antigrowth and antidiversification policies, scrap the carbon tax, reverse their 20 per cent increase in corporate tax, and remove the shackles of regulation that they have placed on free enterprise in this province. Albertans have already suffered the consequences of NDP legislation that was not completely thought through. We look at the legislation that they've brought forward with electricity, how with the first bill dealing with electricity they've created the problem with the Balancing Pool, with companies turning back their contracts, that, of course, the government had to bail out. So we see time and time again this government meddling in business and with contracts that they know nothing about, creating more and more problems that they have to create more legislation to solve. Electricity was a classic example. Of course, their response to the contracts turning back was to sue Alberta companies, costing more money of taxpayers.

I'm worried that this legislation will be yet another example in this worrying trend. Mr. Speaker, I would also like to point out that this isn't the NDP's first shot at this. In 2016 they passed the Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act. While that legislation may have its merits, it certainly hasn't performed the economic miracles that the NDP might have expected it to.

Now, I do just want to take a brief moment in order to comment on something I think this bill gets right, the move to add 3,000 new tech spaces in Alberta postsecondary institutions. I think that is a correct one. In a modern economy the market demands new and changing skill sets, and it is important for our public universities to reflect the skills that are needed by Alberta employers.

Moving on and diving a little deeper into the details, I just want to spend some time to explore some of the ideas this legislation promotes in terms of tax credits. Mr. Speaker, Ronald Reagan has a famous saying on economic policies of the left-wing governments like this one: "If it moves, tax it. If it keeps moving, regulate it. And if it stops moving, subsidize it." He wasn't talking about Alberta's NDP, but if he was, it would have been entirely accurate. This NDP government came to power, and the first approach they took was to tax our industries to death. Between their increase in corporate taxes and their job-killing carbon taxes it was tantamount to an outright attack on the wealth creators of Alberta.

Now, we all know that Albertans and our businesses are resilient, and despite NDP tax increases Albertans kept working to better our province. Just as the saying goes, the regulations came in droves, from Bill 6 attacking farmers and ranchers to overbearing labour legislation on job creators to the premature shutdown of our coal communities. The NDP may have chosen orange as their official colour, but there is certainly no colour they like better than that of red tape or red ink.

Mr. Speaker, that brings me back to tax credits. After the NDP had launched their first bunch of tax increases and their second of overregulation, then they started to notice when our industry stopped moving. It is a shame they didn't notice before their policies contributed to the closure of thousands of businesses and elimination of hundreds of thousands of jobs. We warned this government about this legislation and the damaging effects it would have. We told them what would happen. We told them that there would be downgrades to the economy and there would be job losses, there would be loss of investment in Alberta, but of course this government didn't listen. They kept on going ahead with their ideology and their plans to destroy our economy. They wouldn't listen to any common-sense ideas that we brought forward.

Now that that has all happened, the NDP has taken to subsidy by tax credit. Mr. Speaker, just as NDP policies have failed in the past, I have no more confidence that they won't fail now as well. A large part of this bill rests on support for industry through tax credits. Tax credits can incent economic activity, but I would question whether they will come anywhere close to making up for the disincentives created by the NDP's other policies. You see, the NDP bring about legislation that kills the economy, and then of course they try to bring in legislation to correct it, where if they had just left a lot of these things alone, we wouldn't have the problems that we have right now.

I would also question the wisdom of the sector-specific credits that this bill extols. When we start handing out favours to specific people and specific industries, we start picking winners and losers. Mr. Speaker, quite often government gets it wrong, and they pick losers. They put money into companies that couldn't make it on their own, and the only way to keep them going is to keep giving them subsidies. That isn't the best use of taxpayers' money.

If you want diversification, you should let the market decide which areas to diversify in, not the government. If you want to use tax credits, then let's have them available to a variety and range of sectors, not just those that the front bench opposite happens to grace with their favour on any particular day. This kind of narrow targeting has been the ongoing strategy of this government, and it is immensely unfair. Not only does it effectively penalize those in industries which do not receive support through tax credits, but it also serves to distort market allocations of investment and resources, something we know to produce the most effective and efficient economic activity in the vast majority of circumstances.

We also need to look back at the way tax credit programs have performed in Alberta in the past. Were the objectives of past legislation met? Did the relief get to those who needed it the most? What kind of returns did we see? Before we utilize the power of government, we should see if these industries can attract private capital and succeed on their own.

The point has been raised by the government that some of the tax credits addressed by this bill, particularly the digital media tax credit, these targeted tax credits, exist in other provinces, and Alberta needs to offer them in order to be competitive. Mr. Speaker, just because another province does something doesn't mean Alberta needs to follow suit. In fact, our province has a long history of going its own way. For decades this meant, because of our free-market policies, Alberta was not only the most competitive place to do business in Canada but one of the top places in North America and the world.

Mr. Speaker, you know, while I'm standing here talking and listening to some of the comments from the government side, I'm kind of reminded of the government's Bill 1. That was supposed to create jobs. Lots of money available; created one job, the job for the minister. He's the one that's beaking off the most right now. We'll let him keep talking, and we'll let the facts lay where they may, a complete failure, Bill 1. That's the minister's responsibility right there, so keep talking, Minister.

Meanwhile, Ontario and Quebec, which have policies similar to this, have seen fleeting investment and a poor business atmosphere for years. Now, the government certainly has a disconnect with the average Albertan, but I can guarantee that if you asked the people on the main streets of this province, they will take the Alberta way over the alternative.

Also, looking at the implementation of the Alberta investor tax credit, which was introduced last year and offers many similarities to what is being proposed, we can see that there were critical problems in that process. There are no assurances that this new tax credit would not run into the same troubles. We don't even have access to program and application details for this proposed credit, details that would be necessary to facilitate a proper and fulsome debate on it.

Mr. Speaker, there was a day not too long ago in this province when the Alberta advantage gave our companies a leg up against those in other jurisdictions. That is all that Albertans and our businesses want. They want a chance to make something without the government getting in the way. They want a fair playing field, a reasonable regime of limited taxation and regulation. They want to stop the outflow of investment dollars and talented people. They want, instead, to make sure the things leaving our borders are our economic products, whether it be oil and gas or anything else.

Mr. Speaker, we had a chance to discuss some of this in estimates, where we've seen this government's regulations stopping billions of dollars of investment coming into this province. Now you can hear the government members beaking off over there, talking and sniping, comments back and forth here, but obviously they can't understand the failure of what they've done. They don't understand the failure of their meddling in the electricity market. They don't understand how regulations are stopping business in Alberta.

Now, obviously, time and time again we've told this government: "Don't do this. Don't do that. It's going to hurt the economy." What do they do? They keep going that same direction. We've seen the same thing with pipelines, where we told them a long time ago and the B.C. government told them a long time ago that there were going to be problems with this. And what did they do? They did nothing. They sat on their hands and waited and waited and waited until it was too late. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Keep going.

Mr. Loewen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that.

This is the fundamental misunderstanding of the NDP when it comes to this kind of diversification legislation. In the period between 1985 and 2013, when Alberta was absent of socialist government, the energy sector as a percentage of GDP went from more than 36 per cent to less than 25 per cent. This wasn't a result of weakness in our energy industry, nor the result of diversification handouts or boutique tax credits; it was the result of a competitive marketplace and a government that generally knew how to keep its nose out of private industry.

So, Mr. Speaker, this government, again, doesn't seem to be able to understand how to diversify the economy. They don't understand that what industry wants, what companies want, what investors want is an opportunity to come into a jurisdiction and to be able to set up business in a reasonable amount of time, in a reasonable cost factor, and to be able to create wealth based on that. But this government seems to think that the only way that that will ever happen is if they take tax dollars from Albertans, for instance the carbon tax, and give it to people to come in to invest in Alberta.

But people have been investing in Alberta for years and years and years. Billions and billions of dollars of investment have come into Alberta from industries, from investors from all over the world. Why? Because they had an opportunity to make a return on their investment. They saw opportunities; they came in to invest. Why did billions of dollars flee Alberta in the last three years? Because they saw this government in place creating a lack of opportunity for investment, uncertainty in the market. That kind of uncertainty drives away investment.

That's the problem with this government, Mr. Speaker. They continue down the same road that's failed. The NDP have failed in every province in Canada, and this government continues down the same road. That's the problem that we have in Alberta today, billions of dollars of lost investment.

We had a situation south of Grande Prairie where there was a group that had multibillion-dollar corporations that wanted to come in and set up shop south of Grande Prairie. Because of government regulation and not being able to respond quickly enough to these companies, they took their investment dollars and went elsewhere. They didn't just not spend the money. They just took the money and spent it somewhere else, where they didn't have to go through years and years of approval process and everything. These people, when they look at an opportunity to invest, they think of multiple things. They think of return on investment and how long before they get to that return of investment.

We have a situation right now with the pipeline, Mr. Speaker, where this company has spent over a billion dollars and spent four and a half years fighting to get to build a 7 and a half billion dollar pipeline. It's this regulation that binds these companies down. It costs them money, and pretty soon they walk. This is happening in Alberta right now.

The Speaker: Okay. Under 29(2)(a) a question to the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky. The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to offer some comments on the statement that we heard from the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky. In fact, as one of the members of cabinet whose ministry is touched by this bill, I feel the need to dispel some of the myths and some of the points that the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky made.

In fact, the purpose, of course, of creating this legislation was to support the economic diversification here in Alberta. I think the need for that was really highlighted by Amazon's decision to not locate its second headquarters in Calgary. Certainly, we heard from Calgary Economic Development that it was a lack of tech talent and access to high-technology workers that was part of the reason that Amazon made that decision. It's interesting, Mr. Speaker, because I noticed that yesterday Amazon actually made a decision about where they're going to locate another headquarters. It turns out that it's in Vancouver, British Columbia. Now, our bill is actually modelled on similar measures that the British Columbia government took in enhancing tech-related education spaces in its postsecondary education system.

I'm very pleased that the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky actually supports that initiative. I just wish that he had actually voted for the budget that actually allows us to take action on that initiative. I find it troubling that we have this repeated pattern from the opposition. They say that they want to take action on something, but they refuse to actually put up the money to do that. We saw that with rural crime. We're seeing that now with the development of tech spaces in our postsecondary education system. Perhaps one day, you know, our opposition members will realize that in order for government to function and to do the good things that they want to do, we actually need to pay for it, and we can't actually pay for it by giving tax cuts to millionaires and billionaires like they want to do.

The repeated claim from the side opposite is that it's tax rates. Because we increased corporate taxes, because we increased personal taxes, and because we implemented a carbon tax, we are scaring investment away, scaring it away to places like Vancouver, British Columbia. So while I was listening to the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, I actually investigated what the tax rates in British Columbia happen to be. What is the carbon tax rate that they pay in British Columbia? Mr. Speaker, you would be surprised to know that it's $30 a tonne, just like it is here in Alberta. My mind was blown. My mind was blown. You would also be surprised to hear what the provincial corporate tax rate in British Columbia is. It's 12 per cent, just like it is here in Alberta. And if you looked at personal income taxes, personal income taxes for people who earn more than $90,000 a year are higher in British Columbia than they are here in Alberta. So it's really quite shocking to me that if the theory that the member opposite is proposing is that high taxes drive away investments, why did Vancouver end up being the second headquarters for Amazon?

I'd like the member opposite to address a couple of these issues. I'd like him to tell the House why he thinks that a $30 carbon tax scares away investment in Alberta but attracts it to B.C. Why does he think a corporate tax rate of 12 per cent in Alberta scares away investment but attracts it to B.C.?

The Speaker: Let's give him an opportunity to answer that.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd be happy to answer that question. The first thing he talked about was myths. I tell you what. Six credit downgrades: that's no myth. That's reality.

Now, Mr. Speaker, he likes to talk about Amazon. He picks one company that didn't come to Alberta and went to Vancouver instead, went to B.C. If you can't compete against B.C. with its high taxes, then there's obviously something wrong here in Alberta. I can tell you what's wrong. It's this government. [interjections] I did say very clearly that there were a myriad of reasons why companies won't set up here and why investment is fleeing Alberta. It's not always just taxes; it's regulations and what it takes to build and do business here in Alberta. This government has made it more expensive to do business here.

Now, we talked about how we didn't vote for a budget. [Mr. Loewen's speaking time expired]

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I move that we adjourn debate.

Government Motions

Election Commissioner Appointment

16. Mr. Mason moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur in the report of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices tabled on April 10, 2018, Sessional Paper 67/2018, and recommend to the Lieutenant Governor in Council that Mr. Lorne Gibson be appointed as Election Commissioner for a term of five years commencing May 15, 2018.

Mr. van Dijken moved that the motion be amended by adding the following after “May 15, 2018”:

and be it further resolved that following the passage of this motion the Election Commissioner’s salary be posted publicly on the website of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices.

[Adjourned debate on the amendment May 1: Mr. Mason]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Now, we’re here this morning to talk about the amendment to bring just a little bit more transparency and clarity to this Motion 16, that we’re dealing with here. It was interesting listening yesterday to the linguistic gymnastics of the government when talking about this amendment that we brought forward. I just want to read out here from a news article. What we’re referring to is Bill 32. It says: the role was created with the passing of Bill 32 in December; the law’s stated goal is eliminating so-called dark money, election campaign contributions whose source isn’t made public. Now, the Member for Calgary-Currie was quoted in this same article. He says: he’s going to be tasked with setting up an office and enforcing new legislation helping to root out dark money, that has plagued our electoral process for too long.

Madam Speaker, when I see this issue of rooting out the dark money in politics, I see that we have an issue here where we want to bring this gentleman that’s been hired, his wages, onto the sunshine list and have that brought in immediately. I don’t know if anybody else fails to see the irony of the fellow that’s hired to root out dark money and a government fighting tooth and nail to keep from having him on the sunshine list immediately so that Albertans can see what this gentleman is going to be making. Honestly, you just can’t make this stuff up. We sit here in this Legislature and we debate lots of different things, some stuff good but some of it pretty senseless. When you think that the person that’s here that’s going to be hired to root out dark money can’t make it onto the sunshine list, as we would like to see right now – it’s all about transparency and clarity.

If that’s the goal, then obviously this is a pretty simple process. This position was just created. We’ve heard how they went through this expensive job listing process. They did it through the Christmas holidays. They’ve done all sorts of things, you know, in order to get this position taken care of. Of course, now we have this person that the government has selected, and now we want to find out just a little bit of information about what this person is going to be making.

Another thing that was interesting in listening to the government talk about it: “It’s, like, you know, you guys just want to target him. This is all about targeting this one person that’s been hired.” Well, Madam Speaker, I don’t understand. I guess that they’re suggesting that we want to target him so we can find out how much he’s making. The government says that we’re going to learn this information in June 2019. Does that mean that between now and June 2019 the government is going to choose to target him to make it public how much he makes?

Of course, I guess that would call into question – this government has talked about how it brought forward all this legislation about extending the sunshine list, making it more open, extending it so that more people fall under the criteria of the sunshine list. Obviously, I guess, by their definition of targeting, the government has chosen to target thousands of people. But that’s not the case. They want to use these words like “target” when we’re talking about one person, but obviously this is a sunshine list of a large group of people, and we have this opportunity to learn what people are making from taxpayers’ money. I don’t understand how they can suggest that we’re targeting one person while the government is targeting thousands of people based on that definition. It has nothing to do with targeting people. It has to do with transparency and clarity, and that’s what the sunshine list does. There’s nothing wrong with that, and there’s no reason why we should have to wait. They hide behind: well, the rules are that we can’t find out for a year.

Well, Madam Speaker, that’s what we do here. We make rules. We make legislation. We make amendments. We come up with different things to bring transparency and clarity to the people of Alberta. I don’t understand how this government can sit here and fight against something that’s so clear and so plain and hide behind regulations and rules and stuff like that like we’re not here to make regulations and rules. That’s what we do here. That’s our job. So I don’t understand that.

Now, there were some comments yesterday. You know, we were talking about this position as redundant, but of course the government has suggested that this isn’t redundant, that this is a brand new position, that this is so great and everything. I just want to point out that here in the job posting that the government put out for this job, it says:

As Alberta’s first Election Commissioner, you will be responsible for ensuring compliance with, and enforcement of, certain obligations of entities regulated by the Election Act . . . In this capacity, the Election Commissioner will be responsible for fully investigating complaints, levying administrative penalties, issuing letters of reprimand, entering into compliance agreements, and recommending prosecutions.

As this position requires you to investigate potential wrongdoings by political entities including candidates, political parties, and third parties . . .

It’s very interesting to see this job description.

We have been suggesting that there’s some redundancy here. Even the Chief Electoral Officer has been suggesting that there’s redundancy here. But I want to look through this list here:

“investigating complaints, levying administrative penalties, issuing letters of reprimand, entering into compliance agreements, and recommending prosecutions.” Has this not been happening in Alberta for the last 30, 40 years? So this is something completely new, that actually now somebody is going to be investigating complaints and levying administrative penalties? I don’t think so, Madam Speaker. I think this has been going on.

In fact, if I look back to the duties of the Chief Electoral Officer, they are to monitor compliance of political entities, including political parties, candidates, constituency associations, and most recently third-party advertisers. Elections Alberta is assigned the responsibility for ensuring filing, examination, and public disclosure of financial documents submitted by political parties, constituency associations, and candidates. Another large part of the finance regulation is enforcing the legislation relating to the collection of contributions, investigating complaints of breaches of the act, and applying administrative penalties or consenting to prosecution if warranted.

Madam Speaker, it seems very clear here that these things were going on before this Election Commissioner idea came along. I think that’s pretty plain. But, of course, this government wants to make it sound like they’ve come up with some new and great idea that’s never been thought of before. Well, that’s simply not the case.

We have lots of different issues here with this. This is a simple amendment, very simple. We are going to know eventually how much this person has been paid. All we want is that we want Albertans to be able to know that now. How much is this person going to be paid? There’s nothing hidden or secretive or dark about asking for clarity and asking for the sunshine to shine in on this. That’s what we’re asking. It’s very simple. This government: of course, they do verbal backflips trying to figure out how to make this sound like they shouldn’t do this. But, realistically, Madam Speaker, this is what we do here in this place. We come up with ideas. We come up with legislation. We make laws. We make regulations. We do all of these things here, and we have an opportunity to provide some transparency and clarity, and this government is doing everything it can to stop that.

It’s not about targeting anybody. It has nothing to do with that. Otherwise, the whole sunshine list is targeting people. It isn’t targeting anybody. This is simply asking for transparency and clarity. That’s what the sunshine list does. We have this opportunity to do this, but this government obviously wants to hide something, and I don’t know why. Why would they bother trying to go through all this trouble to hide something from Albertans? I just don’t understand this.

Now, during this whole process – I mean, this person may be well qualified. I understand that there were some other well-qualified people, too, so I’m not sure how the decision was made or how the people on the committee decided which person to choose. But, obviously, the person that they chose is somebody that had sued the government in the past. Now, I’m trying to understand why anybody would hire somebody that sued you in the past and actually lost. It was a wrongful dismissal suit of some sort. They weren’t actually dismissed; their contract ran out. Then they decided to sue.

I’m trying to run this through my mind here. One of the first warning bells that would go off for me: if I was sitting there looking at a group of applicants and I was looking at one that had sued the organization that I represent, the government of Alberta and the people of Alberta – when somebody sues the government, they’re suing the people of Alberta, too – and lost, had no grounds for the lawsuit. And here we are hiring that person.

Now here we are, and all we’re asking for is some clarity and some sunshine to shine in on how much this person is going to make. Simple. And what do we get? Any kind of obstruction that the government can possibly throw up. Madam Speaker, it just doesn’t make any sense. I don’t understand why this government just doesn’t pass this amendment. If transparency and clarity were what this is all about, it should be no problem.

Now, this Election Commissioner position was just created, and it was created in Bill 32, An Act to Strengthen and Protect Democracy in Alberta. As much as that sounds like a glorious name for a bill, to strengthen and protect democracy, here we have an opportunity to strengthen and protect democracy right here in this House by bringing forward this amendment and passing this amendment that will provide transparency and clarity to this part of this process, which is on how much this person is going to get paid.

Now, again, this government talks about how they’ve extended the sunshine list and made it so great and so large and encompassed so many more people and that they have been bringing all this transparency to government, but when we ask for one little portion of extended transparency, this government is fighting it tooth and nail, and it doesn’t make sense. Again, it has nothing to do with targeting this person. It has everything to do with transparency and clarity, which is the point of this. Now, Madam Speaker, this government, of course, quite often says one thing and does another, and this is another fine example of that.

Another example would be the carbon tax, that, of course, they didn’t campaign on. I guess that in that case they didn’t say anything – they hid it from Albertans – and then, of course, did a different thing, which was introduce a carbon tax, the largest tax increase in Alberta history. This government has a long history of saying one thing and doing another. It would be interesting to go back and list all the different things that this government, the members of the NDP Party and the NDP MLAs, railed against before they were elected, railed against previously. All of a sudden, once they’re in government, they just walk into it and say: this is great; we’re just going to carry on. There’s a long history there of saying one thing and doing another, and this is just another example of that.

Madam Speaker, I don’t understand why we’re going into such extended debate on this. This is very simple. The government should just say, “Yes, we’re going to help pass this amendment,” and away we go. Simple. They can pass the bill if they want. They already passed this thing in committee. They’ve done all that work already. They’ve got the majority. They’ve got control of this. All they have to do is come onside and say: yes, we want to have a little more transparency and clarity. But if they don’t jump onto something like this, obviously transparency and clarity are not the primary goal of this government and obviously not a primary goal of Bill 32, An Act to Strengthen and Protect Democracy in Alberta.

Madam Speaker, as we go along here, I hope that the government will listen and take our advice and bring this forward to Albertans so that Albertans can look at it. That’s who judges this. That’s who judges the work that we do in this House, Albertans. I think that if the government was to sit back and look at the polls, they would probably realize that Albertans aren’t behind them. The vast majority of Albertans aren’t behind them. Obviously, I know they’re going to try to do as much as they can to change that around before the next election, but they’ve got a long hill to climb. This would be one of those first steps on that hill that they could climb to bring transparency and clarity and maybe try to gain back some of the trust that Albertans have lost in this government. It’s pretty clear what’s going on.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, when we start to talk about clarity and being able to understand what our public servants are making, I truly believe that this amendment is a good, wholesome amendment that's going forward. I would like to hear more about how you feel that this amendment will bring clarity and more accountability to government when it comes to public salaries.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much. Yes. Obviously, this whole process was brought about to strengthen and protect democracy in Alberta, and a part of democracy is informing the public of what the government is doing. In a democracy, if the people of Alberta don't know what the government is doing, then how can they decide whether they choose to support something or not? That's our job here, I believe. We're here to protect democracy. We're here to strengthen democracy. We're here to bring transparency and clarity.

I always say that if you want to make an informed decision about something, you need information. What's lacking here is this information. We've asked for this information to be brought forward so that the people of Alberta can see it, a very simple request. It's something that's going to happen eventually anyways. We're just going to speed up the process so that as we go into this new position, the people of Alberta have the information they need to decide if this is right or not. If they know how much this person is getting paid, if they know what this person's job description is, which is very much like, in fact almost identical to the Chief Electoral Officer's, then Albertans may decide the same thing, that they don't like this, and they'll have an opportunity to tell this government they don't like it. Unfortunately, what's going to happen is that if this is hidden, Albertans won't have the information to make an informed decision on this. I don't think that's right. I don't think that's what we're here for. I think we're here to bring the information forward.

In fact, that's what our goal is in opposition, to analyze what the government is doing, bring it forward to the people of Alberta, and then let them decide if the government is on the right track or the wrong track. Obviously, with the way the polls are right now, I think that the majority of Albertans feel that the government is on the wrong track, and that's very clear.

Like I say, this is a simple opportunity for the government to be transparent and clear as far as what is happening with this hiring, how much he's getting paid, what his job description is, and how it differentiates from the job of the Chief Electoral Officer. Once Albertans have all this information, they can decide what's right or wrong, and then the government can decide whether they want to follow what Albertans are saying about this. Other than that, the people are kept in the dark. You know, we're talking about dark money, taking the dark money out. Well, like, bring some sunshine to this money, then. Simple.

We can bring this forward – we can give the information to Albertans – so that Albertans can make a decision on what they think about this process, the portion of Bill 32 that brought in the Election Commissioner position, created this new job, ran through an expensive job listing process through the Christmas holidays, which didn't make any sense at all. You know, it appears that this government had a candidate in mind and that they were going to ram this through no matter what, and they're not going to tell any more information on this if possible. Like I say, this is a fellow that sued the government, that sued the people of Alberta. That alone should have set off warning bells to the members of government that voted to have this person in place.

If transparency and clarity are the goal here, we need to have the full information, the full information that Albertans can have to make an informed decision. This is something that we can take care of here. Again, we seem to be going on to a bunch of different things. We can see that this position is redundant. We can see, written right here, what the job description of the Chief Electoral Officer is, and we can see what the job of the Election Commissioner position is. They're the same. There's no difference.

It isn't like we've been sitting here for years without anybody investigating any complaints or dealing with any of the issues around elections and election financing. We've had that job being done, so this isn't anything new.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my honour to rise and speak to the amendment brought by our colleague. I think it's an important amendment, especially when it's bringing transparency, taking the dark money out of politics. I think it sheds light on all those things that government always wanted to say and that they claim they do.

On the Alberta NDP's own website – I was actually searching right now – it says, "Moving Alberta Forward." Let me read it for you. I think it's very interesting, Madam Speaker. "The Alberta NDP is fighting to protect the things that matter to you and your family."

Mrs. Littlewood: Agreed.

Mr. Gill: Agreed. Thank you very much for heckling. If you agree, why would you not agree with my colleague and support his amendment? If you agree, then why would you not agree with transparency? Why would you not agree on this amendment? It's easier to put your head down and heckle.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, through the chair, please.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Sorry. I just had to answer that.

"The Alberta NDP is fighting to protect the things that matter to you and your family," but they will not protect this amendment. They will not protect, you know, having this individual's name added to the sunshine list before the next election.

I mean, the whole idea of Bill 32 is to take dark money out of politics. We have colleagues on this side of the House who spoke at length about the Chief Electoral Officer – Madam Speaker, I was on the search committee – on the public record, in front of the NDP members, and said that his office is totally capable of doing all the job description under Bill 32. So this position is redundant. If this government wants to take the dark money out of politics, let's support this amendment.

Every time we talk about salaries, the Finance minister and the front bench always brag about how they have changed the ABCs and, you know, brought more light to the sunshine list. You know, if that's the case, why can't we do it with this Election Commissioner? This government always claimed that they're making life better for Albertans and families, but, Madam Speaker, this office is going to cost $1.5 million, maybe more, annually. We never needed to create this office to begin with because, as the Chief Electoral Officer already said on the public record, his office was totally capable of handling every complaint and doing all the jobs.

It just bothers me. Like, why would we not support this simple amendment and make the salary available for Albertans, the very people we're trying to serve? Madam Speaker, we were all sworn in to do our jobs and to do our jobs to the best of our abilities on behalf of Albertans. By not supporting this simple amendment, what are we trying to hide from Albertans? Over 4 million people are looking to this House to do the best we can for them, yet the government wants to hide this information from Albertans. It just bothers me.

Like, I don't understand why we have hypocrisy here. At the same time, we're not surprised on this side of the House. We saw it with Bill 6. We saw it with the changes in the carbon tax. We saw it with the Finance minister. According to the 2015 election we would have been in surplus; yet we're on track to close to a $200 billion deficit. We have seen this government misleading Albertans every step of the way where they can. So this doesn't come as a surprise to us. But at the same time, when the whole idea was that this bill was going to take the dark money out of politics, why are we not being transparent with Albertans? What are we trying to hide? What is this government trying to do? Is this some sort of, like, hidden agenda? I don't know. That's what we're trying to figure out. Why would this NDP government not support this simple amendment?

The Government House Leader spoke a little bit yesterday. Maybe he will stand up and give a rationale today, Madam Speaker, on why they will not support this simple amendment. We cannot get our heads wrapped around this simple amendment. This is, like, taking dark money out of politics? This is supposed to be this government's brainchild. So let's take dark money out of politics. Let's be transparent with Albertans. Let's show them where their tax dollars are going. I don't understand why we're not supporting this amendment. We've seen the redundancy of this office. We've seen the stigma that this candidate had. But that's not the point right now. The bill is there. The office has been established. The person has been hired. That's okay. I think we're well beyond that point, but now let's be transparent in that regard.

So I ask all the members of this Assembly – and I hope you're true to your constituents and not to your party ideology – to be honest with Albertans. Let's represent those who sent us here and support this amendment. Let's be transparent to Albertans, the taxpayers, who are paying every single one of our salaries here.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to respond to some of the questions and concerns that were brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Greenway, of course echoing some of the previous language and concerns that have been brought forward by other members of the opposition regarding this particular amendment.

Again, Madam Speaker, to be clear, we are not in this case as a government, on the government side, asking for any exception to the rules here. We are not asking for anything to be hidden. We are not asking for Mr. Gibson to be treated any differently than any previous individual who has been hired into the role of a legislative officer. Indeed, in this House on June 1, 2017, we introduced the motion to appoint Ms Marianne Ryan as the Ombudsman for the province of Alberta. No member of the opposition rose at that time to introduce an amendment suggesting that Ms Ryan's salary needed to be revealed before June of this year though she was appointed and has been serving admirably in her role since her appointment last year and her swearing-in last July, which I had the honour of attending.

Likewise, on March 13, 2018, not that long ago – it should be within recent memory for all members of this House – we rose in this House and introduced the motion to bring Mr. Doug Wylie in as the new Auditor General. Mr. Wylie was sworn in this past Monday. No member of the opposition at that time rose to insist that there should be an amendment to ensure that Mr. Wylie's salary be made known to the people of Alberta before its due time as laid out under legislation in June of next year.

So when I hear members of the opposition, Madam Speaker, standing and claiming that there is no intent to target or to single out an individual, I have to ask, then, and perhaps I could ask this member: why is Mr. Gibson different from Ms Ryan or Mr. Wylie or any other officer of the Legislature that has been appointed through the due process in this place and has then been afforded, frankly, the protection of the law, which exists for specific purposes that were fully debated in this House before being enacted as legislation and which I do not recall hearing a member of the opposition speak against at that time?

Now, Madam Speaker, again we heard from the Member for Calgary-Greenway that he dislikes the fact that this position was created. He dislikes the fact that members of the government voted for this particular individual. This has been mentioned repeatedly by this member and other members opposite. My question then is: why does that continue to be brought up if that is not their reason for bringing forward this amendment? And if that is their reason for bringing forward this amendment, does that then not amount to targeting and singling out this specific individual for the reasons which they themselves have repeatedly outlined in this House?

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

There's still time under 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the questions from the Member for Edmonton-Centre. You know, he did actually bring up a lot of good points about why this search committee is being treated, quote, unquote, differently – I'm paraphrasing – than the other two search committees that we all served on together. Very valid and very good point. You know why, Madam Speaker? Because the two search committees that we served on together, the search for the Ombudsman and the AG, the committee worked on an almost unanimous vote. We did not have a split. But in this particular case we had a division and split from the beginning. We had Glen Resler, the Chief Electoral Officer, who came on the public record in our committee and – let me repeat myself again – said that his office is totally capable of . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have to say that this is a good amendment. When we start looking at ensuring that transparency and accountability are first and foremost in the Alberta government, I believe that this a good measure of saying: let's find out exactly where our independent offices sit. I don't think it's unreasonable that when we create a new office, there's transparency in that process. Now, we have government members saying that we are targeting. Well, absolutely we need to acknowledge that this is a new office. We need to be making sure that when it is set up, it is completely transparent for Albertans to see that it is functioning at what we would expect.

Now, I do have to say that I reference the NDP platform more than I should, but it is good to see where they were sitting on the 2015 election. Inside of that platform there's a quote from the Calgary Sun editorial board, March 31, 2015.

This good dog/bad dog treatment of Alberta voters by the PCs is transparent, predictable and insulting. But then again, for a party that feels democracy belongs to politicians and is lent out to voters when it suits them, this should come as no surprise.

This is in the platform. This is a quote. It's got a nice picture of the Legislature. What we've got here is a government moving forward with a brand new office, trying to bring more accountability to the election process. This is a good dog/bad dog process. They are trying to go out there and say: we want to be more accountable. Well, the opposition wants the same thing. We want to make sure that Albertans have fair, accountable, transparent elections. There is no doubt in that, but we may differ on how to get there.

At this point we've had some contention when it comes to the search committee. For those that don't understand how these search committees work, I had the honour of sitting on the search committee for the Auditor General along with the member that had spoken previously. What happened was that we put out the advertisement saying that this is what we are looking for in an individual. Then we take those resumé or people that are interested in these positions. We take that. We compile that into a list. We have an independent group, normally somebody outside of the process, more or less rate these individuals. Then what happens is that we as a group sit down and discuss who it is that we feel best fits this.

Now, that doesn't mean that we always agree. That's not what I'm getting at. But when we rush the process as it appears that we have done with this search committee, that is problematic. What happens here is that we end up with potentially somebody that doesn't fit what Alberta needs. I'm sure this individual is very qualified, but could there have been somebody better? I have to say that my time on the Auditor General search committee was very productive, and I'm very thankful on how that went with the government. We worked hand in hand. I truly believe that they were trying to find the right person as our next Auditor General. We worked as a group. Does that mean we agreed in that committee on every single point? No. But we worked through those through compromise. That is a functioning, well-organized machine that I believe worked well. We ended up with an Auditor General who I truly believe is going to work well for the next eight years.

Getting back to the amendment, what we've got here is an individual that we have put forward a request for a salary of this individual. Now, I for one would like to know where they sit. From what I understand, what we've got here is an announcement date of June 2019. That seems to coincide with our fixed election date. What is it that the NDP or this government is hiding? Why is it that they need to have that announcement after the election? What is it that we cannot disclose to the public on a brand new office? That's the key here. This office did not exist until now. This is the difference. This is not targeting that individual. This is saying: let's make sure that this office is performing the way we hope; let's make sure the costs are in line; let's make sure that we end up with what intention the government had to move forward with.

Good dog/bad dog, going back to this article. What we've got here is a government that's bringing forward transparency legislation to try to bring in accountability to the electoral process, but when it comes to transparency to the actual wages of this new commissioner, what we're seeing now is a lack of transparency. I believe that what we need to do is we need to make sure that Albertans know. This is important because in the end without transparency, especially within the electoral system, we have problems.

Now, I would like to mention that the opposition is given the opportunity if they disagree with the findings of the committee to do a minority report. We've been through three search committees – and they can correct me if I'm wrong – but the other two search committees that were done, neither of them had minority reports. This is an important fact. This is something we need to understand.

In the minority report what we've got here is – and I'd like to state this for the record:

It became evident at our first meeting at the end of December that the government MLAs were determined to proceed in a reckless fashion by forcing the Legislative Assembly Office to compose a job posting and position profile for a brand new position in less than 48 hours.

That's shameful. It appears that we're rushing the process on an incredibly important position. I encourage everybody to get out and read the minority report because this is important.

It is important to show that we have not followed the appropriate procedure in order to hire this individual. It could be that had we not rushed this, this individual could have been completely endorsed by all parties in that committee. But what happens here is that we ended up deciding that it appears that there was one individual in mind. What we've got here is an individual who has had legal proceedings against the government of Alberta. We have an individual that clearly has experience with the Alberta electoral process. We have to balance. What is it that he's bringing to this office? We've got some concerns, but we also have clear ability to show that he has the capabilities to fulfill this role. When we've got these individuals before us, we need to make sure that we take the appropriate time and not rush through this.

Moving on, what I've got here in the minority report is:

We have long been disappointed in how members of the government caucus chose to conduct themselves throughout the entire search process.

This is in the minority report, again.

Now, I didn't find that with the search committee that I was on, and you're going to find that many of the members that were on the Auditor General search committee and this search committee are very similar. So what's changed? This is a good question. One was a very functional committee that worked well, in my opinion. A second committee with many of the same members suddenly falls apart and we end up with minority reports. That seems really strange to me.

For a government that is claiming that they are completely transparent on this, I don't see that that is a fact, in my opinion. Let's disclose what this individual is being paid. Let's discuss whether that is appropriate to the position. Let's also remember that our Ethics Commissioner, who I have incredible respect for, does not have a full-time position.

We have to make the decision on if is this a full-time job, even. We have to discuss: is it appropriate that we have an individual that is being paid a wage at a potentially higher number than the advertised range here? I've got the job posting in front of me. The salary for the position is $152,818 to $212,801. We don't know if that individual is even within the range. This is where it's making sure that we have clarity on where they are sitting in this process. If we are giving them an entire full-time wage and they only have a quarter-time job, that is problematic. In the end, we are all responsible to the taxpayer for ensuring that they get the best value for the money that they are paying into the Alberta government, especially when we are running almost a $9 billion deficit.

It is important that, again, we go back to the fact that when it comes to salaries, in this case a brand new office, an office that is newly created, that position gets added immediately to the sunshine list because we have no idea where they're starting at. We have no idea where this office is going. We have no idea what the typical year for this office is. It appears that we're going towards an election year. So what happens here? Will we be creating an office that duplicates an already existing office, Elections Alberta? Will we continue to see that these two commissioners are struggling to find out whose territory they're in? Who makes that decision?

When we've got a commissioner from Elections Alberta showing concern with the fact that we're moving in this direction, that is problematic. The question here is: are we going to be taking functions that are already done by Elections Alberta and duplicating those same things within this new office? I don't believe it's unreasonable to ask that question because in the end if this is just a make-work project, I don't believe that is what Albertans are looking for. What we are looking for is accountability, transparency, and a well-run government. It is hard for us to be able to go forward with this and not understand what this individual, whoever is taking this job, is going to be paid.

So I am going to encourage the government. Why are we not putting this immediately on the sunshine list? This needs to be something that we consider. This is not something that is partisan because I truly believe that we have seen two successful committees before all agree on process. Yet when we get to this one here, it appears that the process doesn't seem to be meeting what the opposition was hoping for. I really will challenge the government here. When we start to go off the rails with process, it appears that we are no longer trying to get all-party discussion on these things. That's where these comments start coming in as it appears that the government is starting to ram things through.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the thoughts of the member that just spoke, and indeed I appreciated his participation in the process to find a new Auditor General. It was a pleasure to have him on the committee, and he made some excellent contributions. I think it is, in fact, a fantastic experience for any member of the Assembly that has the opportunity to be part of that process, to see how that works. Indeed, it's an honour to have that opportunity.

I did want to though address a couple of things that the member did bring up. He spoke about the fact that the Election Commissioner is not working full-time hours, and that, Madam Speaker, is true. She actually currently is working full-time hours, but that's on a temporary basis while she is currently setting up the new lobbyists registry and then will be returning to a portion of the full-time hours that she was earning earlier.

But I did want to clarify, in case there was any confusion with the comments that he was making, that no officer of the Legislature is ever paid a full-time salary for doing less than full-time work. If an officer of the Legislature is not working full-time – for example, say that they are at .7 or .8 – while they are given a particular salary within their range, they would then earn .7 or .8 of that salary amount. So the Election Commissioner being hired at a full-time position, which is currently what was the will of the committee, therefore will earn the full amount of his salary. If his hours were to be reduced, the amount of the salary that was set would also be reduced according to the appropriate percentage. So I thought it was important to clarify that element for the record.

Now, I would also note that the member talked about the committee process being off the rails. Several times during the debate on this amendment, Madam Speaker, members opposite have pointed out that, well, the law may say one thing, but in this House we make the rules and we decide the regulations. Well, accordingly, in all fairness, that is also true of the committee. A majority of members of the committee determine what the process is and how quickly that process will happen.

So if it is appropriate for us to stand up in this House and say that, for the reasons that have been put forward by members opposite, it is a good reason to change the procedures that have happened for every other officer of this Legislature. Then equally so, Madam Speaker, if a majority of members of the committee wish to move in a different direction than they have in previous search committees for said officers, well, I suppose the same applies. As chair I act at the will of the committee, so if it's okay for a majority of members in this House to say that this officer of the Legislature should have his salary revealed before the due time set out in the legislation, then I suppose it was equally fair for a majority of members of that committee to decide that they wanted to move faster at some points than perhaps they had in previous search committees.

I can recognize again the concerns that were brought forward with that, and of course I am continuing with comments and questions as allowed under 29(2)(a), despite any complaints or concerns from across the aisle. I would just ask the member who had spoken if he feels, then, that if a majority of members in this House should have the ability to change the rules in this case, for reasons that they've put forward, whether or not one considers those reasons to be good, a majority of members of the search committee do not also have that same right regardless of anyone's opinion of whether that decision was appropriate or not.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you. I've got something like 30 seconds left. I have to say that whenever you've got a search committee, it comes down to compromise. It comes down to making sure that you have the appropriate time to be able to make those decisions. And you know what? Government does have the voting ability to be able to push through anything they want, but I don't believe I saw that with the Auditor General committee. I believe that we were able to have constructive conversations to be able to debate what was before us, and the people that were before us, they deserved that. Each and everyone of them took the time to put... [The time limit for questions and comments expired]

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll try and be brief, of course, but I sort of just want to express my support to my colleague from Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. You know, of course, he has the amendment here, which I will just read. "Be it further resolved that following the passage of this motion the Election Commissioner's salary be posted publicly on the website of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices." I think that is a very reasonable amendment.

I certainly have listened to the arguments on both sides. I believe that transparency is something that is vital to the success of any organization. I believe that, especially when this particular individual is going to allegedly have a huge impact on the electoral process in what his job is supposed to entail. Certainly, of course, the people of Alberta, leading up to the election in 2019, I believe, need to know not only who this individual is but the transparency of what this individual is getting paid. I do not think that is anything that is unreasonable.

I think a few points have been brought up regarding the concern that this individual sued the people of Alberta. I think that is something that also is of significant concern. I'm sure, as has been indicated in this House, there were probably many qualified people. You know, that brings me to, I guess, a thought process which is: did this government possibly specifically want this individual to be in this position no matter what concerns may or may not have been brought up?

That brings me to something that, quite frankly, I was thinking of as I was listening to the debate going back and forth here. As many of you know, of course, I was with the police service, and part of my training was to be a trained observer and a professional witness when the time called. You know, I remember sitting over on that side, Madam Speaker, and I remember the colleagues that I used to work with, and I see a lot of similar faces. That has to do with something which is called confidence, I think. I think that might be the parliamentary term. Maybe overconfidence.

There are probably 60-plus unemployed individuals that I used to work with. I've listened here, and as I listen to my colleagues from Calgary-Greenway and Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, I think back to the PCs. There were individuals that they wanted, too, that they wanted to force through as well, and they didn't care what the opposition had to say. The people of Alberta saw that. They saw through that. They recognized that, and now those individuals are no longer here. So I think the individuals on the government side really need to sit back internally and reflect as to what is going on here not only in this Legislature but what's going on here in Alberta.

We have an individual here. I think this is a very reasonable amendment. What is this individual getting paid? We can talk about what those previous – I mean, I'll just say this. I had an opportunity to work with the Member for Edmonton-Centre. You know what? I had a great time working with him. You know what? I thought he was very fair and reasonable. I thought that what we needed to accomplish, we got accomplished. But, again, it goes back to what I was saying before. Something from somewhere, somebody from higher up says: "No. We want this individual. We want that person. So I don't care what you have to do. We're going to force this person through whatever needs to happen." Again, this occurred under the PCs. Is this occurring here? I don't know, but it certainly brings to question what is going on here. Why do we not want to have the transparency to reveal what this person is making?

I think the other concern, Madam Speaker, has to do with what the Chief Electoral Officer was saying, which is: hey, I'm capable of doing this job. Well, then, why the duplication? Why? Like, you know, we sit here and listen to the Finance minister talk about him saving money, or he's trying to do this, and they did some stuff with the ABCs, yet they've just created a position which is duplicative of something that the Chief Electoral Officer already has the ability and capability of doing. Again it brings it into question, right? If the people on the government side don't realize that the people of Alberta are watching this, then they're sorely mistaken because there are 60-plus unemployed PCs right now that are going, "Ah, the government is watching, and the people of Alberta are watching," right?

I seriously may suggest that the government may want to reconsider their position on this for the sake of transparency, you know, for the sake of public trust. What is the secrecy here? Why would we not be able to know what this individual is making? I think that any time you have secrecy, it brings into question public trust, and without public trust you're not going to have a government. I can tell you that right now from first-hand experience of the very short six months that I sat on that side. I think my friend from Cold Lake brought up a good point. June 2019, after the election: that's when this is going to be revealed. That again comes into question: why? Maybe it says that in the legislation, right? Again, this is a reasonable amendment that is being brought forward, to sit there and say: "Hey, why don't we just be transparent with the people of Alberta. We'll release the information on what this individual is making." I think that's fair. I think that is reasonable.

As I've indicated before, this person is going to be an integral part of the election process. It's not like this person will have a silent role to play in the upcoming year. From my understanding, this person is going to be involved in nomination processes, I believe – right? – as well as, you know, all processes that are eventually going to lead up to the 2019 election. So again we have some concerns, of course, in regard to that, right?

Look, I mean, this is really about being transparent with the people of Alberta, letting them know that the Chief Electoral Officer really had the ability to do this role as well. I'll be honest with you, Madam Speaker. I just really question: what is this position that is being created, especially when, again, the Chief Electoral Officer and the money that is being put into that department are capable of doing the exact same job?

I just want to say again that I certainly support my friend from Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock and his amendment that he's brought forward, and I certainly hope that everybody in this Chamber considers supporting this amendment as well.

Thank you very much for your time, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-West. I wanted to just ask a question, and I'll give a little bit of background. The government has been mentioning – I don't know – that there are some personal concerns here, I mean, to use the language of the Member for Edmonton-Centre, that we've singled out this particular person or that it's targeted or that it puts a chill on the ability to have discussions with people who are coming forward. I just wanted to say that I believe that I speak on behalf of our caucus that no matter who had been chosen for this position, I can guarantee that we would be asking in this same situation.

Specifically, you cited some very important pieces of historical things that have happened and the importance that we have to make sure that we relay information to the people of Alberta. It's one of the reasons that we're all here, right? I was wondering if you wouldn't mind speaking a little bit more to that, about the importance of – this wasn't a "who" decision. This is a "what," being the position itself, because as everyone knows in this House, we were not in favour of Bill 32 in any aspect.

The second piece, being that we have a responsibility, based on what our other member said, with respect to: this is a completely new office, so whatever processes might be there – we're not trying to break with process. This isn't part of the process; this is a new office.

Thirdly, we have a responsibility because we're concerned about redundancy, because Mr. Resler has told us that he's more than capable of handling this. If you could please speak to that a little bit with respect to why it is that we want this amendment to go forward.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you. Certainly, thank you to the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View. You know, I mean, certainly, my friends who are on the committee are what I would say are the experts on this side as regards not only this particular amendment but, obviously, the process that went forward in regard to this – look, again, it goes back to transparency. Look, there have been, over the last, we'll call it – I'll talk about the history, okay? There is a reason why the Progressive Conservatives are no longer in government after a long, long period of time. There are many reasons. I'm sure we can cite various reasons. However, when we really start to look at it, prior to 2015 – I would almost suggest that it's probably the last eight to 10 years – we'll say that the overconfidence, the arrogance really started to take place. From my perspective – again, the trained observer, the professional witness – they weren't listening. They weren't listening to the people of Alberta. When you're not listening, you're losing.

Then we see that not only were they not listening to the people of Alberta, but you had this sense of secrecy and questions. You know, I remember talking to our beloved friend Mr. Bhullar, right? He would tell me something, and I'd be like: well, that's reasonable, but why did you guys not articulate it? That's what I am observing on this side, which is the lack of articulation and explanation to the people of Alberta if what you are saying is indeed reasonable. I'm sorry, but I'm watching some of the same consistencies that occurred in the last decade of the PC government, which sadly appear to be occurring here. This is, sadly, a prime example of that.

No, to me, it wouldn't have mattered who this individual was. First of all, I question why we have this entire new role. However, if that is the will that needed to be forced through, I would certainly be supporting, no matter who it is, how . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Madam Speaker, thank you. Thank you very much. I rise today and offer my support to my hon. colleague from Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock's notice of amendment to Government Motion 16. It was moved that Government Motion 16 be amended by adding the following after "May 15, 2018":

and be it further resolved that following the passage of this motion the Election Commissioner's salary be posted publicly on the website of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices.

Excellent motion, excellent attempt to increase transparency for 4.11 million Albertans.

Before I delve into the reasons why I think this motion is essential and why I support it, I'd also like to have a bit of a shout-out to commend my four UCP colleagues that sat on this committee and took the time and the effort to put together their dissenting report. Of course, those are, again, the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway, the hon. Member for Airdrie, and the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, that, again, took the time, the effort, the courage to put this out to all Albertans, to let them know where they thought the process could have been improved, where they thought that some missteps were made along the way in the overall essential, you know, direction.

But I want to come back, Madam Speaker: why more transparency? Why is it essential that we all – whether we're in government or family or business or friendships, why is more transparency essential? The top three things, to me, are: first of all, it builds trust; secondly, it increases engagement in education with others that are involved in a process with you; and of course it increases our ability to measure, to measure the effectiveness, to measure the efficiency, to see if this is taxpayer money well spent in this case.

Madam Speaker, first of all, I want to talk about building trust. Governments everywhere have seen what their fate is when they lose trust with their electorate, have seen what happens when they start to do things too fast, behind closed doors, without proper consultation, with pretend consultation, many of these things that we've especially heard of this government being guilty of, more in the last year than when they were first elected, but it's their direction, that they're taking.

I want to talk about the benefits of building trust for a second. Madam Speaker, I want to tell you a specific example. In Cypress-Medicine Hat, almost down in the southeast corner, is one of Alberta's most successful Hutterite colonies, the Elkwater Hutterite colony. I've had the opportunity to have a couple of tours of it, and it is absolutely amazing how excellent these family farms are, how productive they are, how good they are at raising cattle, raising crops, how good they are at being environmental stewards, and just the other things that they have done off their farming operations, from their own water to their own electricity to the continuous improvement that this colony exhibits. God rest his soul, but it was run by John, now by Dan and Reuben, who have capably – capably – carried it on.

I went out for breakfast about three years ago, and I had breakfast with the entire colony. I said to John: "What's the secret? How are you guys so darn good?" He said: "It's simple. Absolutely everybody in this room knows everything. Everyone in this room knows what our overall goals are, what things cost, what we've hedged. Everyone is entitled to have complete disclosure, complete transparency." Again, Madam Speaker, I'm so proud to know that Dan and Reuben have carried this on, and they are absolutely as successful in that business as a group of families can be.

I would say to the government: why not copy a winning formula? Why not reach out to 4.1 million Albertans? Obviously, the Official Opposition has highlighted some serious red flags with this committee, with this process, with timing. I'm going to touch on that. I guess, you know, it's come up that maybe it is a coincidence that the salary will be finally disclosed in June 2019, one to three months after the fixed election date. Why not just take that right out of people's minds and agree to this motion? We're going to know anyway. Let's build trust. Let's build trust, Madam Speaker, with 4.1 million Albertans.

Again, I know that I've heard that in the last year especially this government is stumbling even more with their consultation, with their desire to do that, but for the good of Alberta let's start somewhere. Let's build some trust, and let's put this number out, put it out as many, many other Albertans are on our sunshine list. Of course, my colleagues have talked at great length about the benefits of more direct transparency and sunshine.

Madam Speaker, in addition to building trust, the second main benefit I can think of is how it increases engagement and education.

Unfortunately, in the greatest province in Canada, in the greatest jurisdiction and place to live in the whole world, we have some challenges. I was talking to people the other day who need some help and need some training who can't get through to anybody in Edmonton. They're wondering if it's because of the six hours that Medicine Hat is away from Edmonton or if it's government policy or if it's big, inefficient government. These are the kinds of things that I have heard consistently for six years in my constituency office.

Madam Speaker, it's even worse. We've all FOIPed things on this side. Many Albertans have FOIPed things only to have 95 per cent of it come back blacked out. And the cost. The number of times that people have come to me with an item that if the information could have been made public, transparent, as the hon. colleague from Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock is trying to do here – if that information could have come forward, we could have really engaged and educated 4.1 million Albertans to make our programs stronger, to make it easier to help each other. An Albertan told me the other day about how they had to face a financial outlay of $4,500 to get some FOIP information that our tax dollars were paying for anyway, that our tax dollars were generating anyway. The $4,500 was a hardship, so they didn't do it. Maybe it's just as well because 95 per cent of it would have been redacted anyway. That's the world that 4.1 million Albertans are living in.

What this side is asking for is one little simple – what is it? – 13 or 14 months earlier presentation of a number that we're going to be paying. I'm sorry; the taxpayers of Alberta are going to be paying. We're just asking for a little transparency, a little earlier disclosure. Based on some of the controversies that my other colleagues have talked about, this increased engagement and education would go a long, long way to help Albertans feel that they're getting some value for their tax dollars.

The third reason that transparency is crucial is that it increases our ability to measure. As hon. colleagues from Bonnyville-Cold Lake and from Calgary have just stated, in these circumstances especially this is crucial. Madam Speaker, this is a brand new office, a brand new position. My goodness, when I first started to make myself more aware of this in the last few days, to become aware that our current Chief Electoral Officer indicated – I think he said that this position was redundant because he and his staff could do the work.

At a time that we're running an $8.8 billion operating deficit, a $16 billion capital deficit, at a time that we have gone in just three short years $56 billion in debt, let's start to care and think about the poor taxpayer out there who's working hard for his family, his community, and the people of Alberta. Let's start to be able to measure if we're getting value for taking the money away from people and families, at least what we're doing with it. The only way to truly measure something is if we have the information. You can't manage something if you can't measure it, and you can't measure it if you don't have the information.

It is that simple, Madam Speaker. This government in just their third year is once again closing the door, shutting the door not on us but shutting the door on Albertans, the 4.1 million Albertans that we represent as the Official Opposition. Our job is to hold them accountable and to get this information out to those 4.1 million Albertans so that they can determine if this government is doing the right thing with our hard-earned tax dollars.

One of the maybe smaller things in the dissenting report, but it rings true with what I'm saying: my four colleagues talked about how the government committee members were in a hurry and right at Christmas rushed out the advertisements, requiring an LAO employee to come into the office on their holidays to make certain deadlines despite the Official Opposition's strong advice that this would be a waste of time, but apparently this good employee, this good person, did it.

Then the majority on the committee, the NDP appointees, the NDP people on the committee – in January the committee was asked to spend an additional $20,000 for a second run of print advertisements because not enough applicants had been received at that point. There's no such thing as just $20,000, Madam Speaker. This is $20,000 that could have helped an Albertan, could have been left with Alberta families and communities. Like here today, it's another example of this government not listening. It's another example of this government just in their third year deciding that they know best, deciding that in spite of the fact that the Chief Electoral Officer said that this position and this office were redundant. He could have done it with his people and saved more than $20,000 and probably been way more effective. He's totally been an excellent government official, and he's totally right there with this stuff anyway.

No, no. This government charged ahead. I'm not sure of the reasons why. I hope it wasn't out of ideology. I hope it is for the right reasons, to make our systems better for Albertans. But, Madam Speaker, charge ahead, charge ahead. It has been adequately and eloquently explained by colleagues as to what the difference was with this hiring compared to earlier hirings where the committee agreed with the process, where the committee was, point number two, involved and engaged and were part of the process, where building the trust actually happened amongst all committee members, opposition and government.

Here we have a situation, Madam Speaker, where we've obviously gone off the track right from the start. At Christmastime there was obviously disagreement and discussion about the best way to do this, which wasn't listened to, costing time and $20,000 of hard-earned money.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. Go ahead, please.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciated the thoughts from the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. As usual he shared many of his usual concerns, not in any way to suggest that any of them are not appropriate or not focused. Indeed, I hear the concerns of his constituents. I'm not sure all of them were necessarily relevant to the Election Commissioner, but that aside, one thing that the member did bring forward is that he expressed some concern that some might interpret the fact that the salary would be released along with all other salaries on the sunshine list, to be clear, in June of next year and that June of next year could in fact be just a few months after the next election. So there was concern. I'm sure the member was not making any accusations there, but he expressed concern that some may interpret that in a manner to suggest that that was the government's attempt to perhaps try to hide this particular salary until that time.

I guess my question to the member, then, Madam Speaker, would be: is the member suggesting that when, years ago, government brought forward legislation that set up the rules by which the sunshine list would operate and indeed set out the date under which salaries would be released, government was in fact considering and thinking about the fact that a couple of years hence it would be looking at creating a position of Election Commissioner, that the process would be ending at a particular time, that a particular individual would be selected, and that in fact we would then also need to time that with when the next election would be and therefore set the revelation of all public salaries for the entire public service to coincidentally line up with that fact? That seems to me to be a bit of a conspiracy theory.

Now, of course, it's not dissimilar from the regular accusation that's lobbed and has indeed been brought up in the House today, so I think it's fair to comment on, that we somehow knew in 2015, when all polls were stating that it was going to be a rout for the provincial Conservatives, that we would somehow form a majority government and that in the process of navigating that election and taking on that new stress in planning and everything, we sat down and planned out exactly what we intended to do in terms of finding a climate leadership plan and therefore had a hidden plan to institute the carbon levy at a time when we were not even convinced, Madam Speaker, that we would be sitting on this side of the House.

Now, I can appreciate the use of a bit of hyperbole, Madam Speaker, to make a point. Indeed, there are arguments which members opposite can make if they wish in regard to why this salary should be revealed. But to that member I would ask if he is indeed positing such a conspiracy theory because, frankly, it strikes me as a bit ridiculous. Perhaps the member would prefer to stick with arguments that would stray a little more within the realm of credulity.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Sure. I'd love to respond and talk about it. Yeah. I just want to come back again to my four colleagues and their openness, their willingness to put out immediately at every step of the way the problems that they were having with the direction of the committee. The first sentence, Madam Speaker, in their dissenting report:

We have long been disappointed in how members of the government caucus chose to conduct themselves throughout the entire search process.

We have long been disappointed in how members of government caucus chose to conduct themselves throughout the entire search process.

It became evident at our first meeting at the end of December that government MLAs were determined to proceed in a reckless fashion by forcing the Legislative Assembly Office to compose a job posting and position profile for a brand new position in less than 48 hours.

We're going to set up an office that costs a million dollars, we're going to hire a person for between $152,000 and $212,000, and we're going to set the parameters for this in less than 48 hours? Well, it's no wonder that not a month later $20,000 further had to be invested in the process, $20,000 that perhaps . . . [The time limit for questions and comments expired]

Thank you.

10:30

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to the current amendment before us with regard to Government Motion 16. The motion is with regard to the appointment of the Election Commissioner, which is a brand new office, a brand new position, and the amendment that we're proposing is simply that the salary for this new position would be posted publicly, a very simple little request.

In order to speak to this, Madam Speaker, I would like to actually refer back a couple of times here to the election platform of the NDP caucus and the letter that prefaced the whole thing by the person who is now our Premier. It says, "We can clean up the Legislature in Edmonton to have honest and open government that isn't all about gaming our democracy." I think that the reality here is that we need to take a careful look at the motion that's before us and consider the amendment because I'm about to show that there are so many ways that this is a concern and should be a concern for the people of Alberta. It just really does smack of gaming our democracy in too many different ways.

First of all, I'd like to suggest that my first concern is that we have here an appointment without full support of the all-party committee. There was an all-party committee that met on this. There was not full agreement on that. In fact, there was actually a minority report that was provided. If the government was really concerned about making sure that they were respecting all committee reports, the government would look at the fact that there was not a unanimous presentation from that committee, that in fact there was strong enough concern about it that an actual minority report was presented.

I find that interesting because the NDP campaign platform talks about cleaning up the Legislature, and then a little bit farther down on page 8 I read that "we will respect the independence of all-party committees." There is an opportunity here for the government to fulfill their election platform that they "will respect the independence of all-party committees" rather than just taking the partisan side of those who tried to push it through. So we have the government here actually pushing this through when there was significant dissent expressed from the very beginning of the report and tabled in writing. I think that that's one of the concerns about this and why I'm going to suggest that it, in fact, is a bit about gaming the system. That's what's happening here.

Secondly, this is also a new office that's been created entirely in duplication of an existing office. I mean, the Chief Electoral Officer has been very clear publicly on the record that his office is already handling this responsibility. They're already doing it. They have the capability of doing it. It won't cost anything more substantially. So you have to ask: why are we creating an entirely new office to do something that's already being fully covered and adequately covered by government? I'm going to suggest that it's partly about gaming our democracy for political gain.

There is excessive cost, then, as well with regard to this whole thing. We have a government that has not been able to exercise spending discipline. They promised us in their campaign that by now we'd actually be in a surplus position. Instead, we're delivered another multibillion-dollar deficit, and then we have expending going on here that is kept in secret, that's not open to the public, that's not being reported, that is just literally cloaked in darkness because they don't want to reveal it until just after the next election. If that's not gaming our democracy, I don't know what is.

Why does this need to be kept secret? Why does it need to be hidden from the people of Alberta? I think Albertans have a reasonable request there that they should be able to know, particularly from a government with an inability to manage their spending: what is the secret cost of this one going to cost Albertans as taxpayers? It's certainly not open. It's entirely about gaming the system in ways that I think are inappropriate.

Then if you go down to page 8 again of the NDP campaign platform, section 2.4, they talk about the fact that "we will ensure the Chief Electoral Officer can effectively investigate breaches of the Act." Well, now, that's a great statement to make, and I have no problem with that except that I wonder why there's a problem. There haven't been issues with the Chief Electoral Officer not being able to investigate breaches of the act. In a way this is a bit of a straw man problem that they've put up so that they can solve it. If the issue is with the Chief Electoral Officer not being able to do his job, well, then, why not empower him? Why not give him the extra resources? Why do we need to create a whole new office with a whole new position that has raised a lot of questions, that has created a lot of concerns? Why not just allow the Chief Electoral Officer to effectively investigate and do what he's been doing? As I said, it's an imagined problem in which they want to appear to fix something in their campaign platform so that they hope they'll get elected again. This is a feel-good thing that is all about a pre-election movement, and the costs of it are not going to be revealed until after the election. It really does appear to be gaming the system.

Then there's the issue of the fact that also in their election campaign platform, section 2.5, they claim they "will extend the sunshine list," but in this case they're not going to extend it. They're not going to make it public. They are going to keep it hidden. There are so many problems with this particular motion, and some of those, a lot of those, would be resolved by embracing the amendment that's on the table before us today. It would go a long way to establishing trust in the minds of Albertans and in the minds of the public. I think that if the NDP are concerned to try and win the next election by being open and transparent, as they claim they want to be, that would go a lot farther than ramming these kinds of things through in ways that are inappropriate.

We all know the last government went astray. It took them 44 years to go astray. It appears this government is going astray in the same way in less than three years. It's gaming the system for the next election in a very apparent kind of way. For a party that has wrapped itself in the cloak of honest and open government, transparency, cleaning up the Legislature, respecting all-party committees, this is really disappointing. It's really breaking the trust of Albertans. To be entrenched in this position when you have the opportunity to embrace an amendment that would really, really clear up a lot of the doubt and the suspicion and the questions – I find it extremely difficult to try and understand why they would continually resist this kind of a motion, that would actually create trust and open up transparency and honesty and openness.

I'm not going to rub salt in the wound. Albertans already feel that sting. I just want to say that this is a motion that would go a long way to support Albertans, to make things better for Albertans, to help them understand what the government is doing, and to create credibility and trust.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to my hon. colleague for the comments that he made. You know, we've had a lot of talk around transparency during this debate and the United Conservative Party's lack of understanding in regard to why the government is opposed to being transparent. There are so many questions to be raised from the government's opposition to such a simple amendment and providing that transparency.

What has changed in particular for this independent office of the Legislature is that it's new. This is something that's new to this province. This office hasn't existed before, and I think people would be very interested to have the full picture of what this office is intended to do. In addition to that, this is an officer that is very closely tied with elections in this province, obviously, and it would be in the public's best interest, which is what we are here to do and here to serve, to have that kind of information released prior to the next election.

I don't understand why the government is opposing such a very clear and easy way to transparency. It's not that hard. It's really not that hard. I think Albertans are going to be very disappointed to know that this government is not interested in transparency at all. It begs the question: what is this government hiding? What is this NDP government trying to hide by refusing to support an amendment that shows that they can be transparent? What is so difficult about that? Are they stacking the deck? Is that what's happening? Is this another piece that might make you believe that this government is taking steps to move things in their favour? Maybe. They could help disprove that theory here today by passing this amendment.

I wonder if my hon. colleague from Lacombe-Ponoka has any additional thoughts as to maybe why this government is choosing not to be transparent and what he thinks about this government stacking the deck.

The Acting Speaker: The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yeah, you know, it really is baffling, quite frankly, and it really does smack of gaming the system here. We have a problem that isn't really a problem that all of a sudden needs a solution, but we're not willing to be public and transparent about the costs of that solution, that there was not all-party committee support for. These are all things that the current government has championed themselves to be protectors of, and suddenly now they aren't. It really is an issue of public trust. What is hidden here? What is not being told to the people of Alberta until after the next election? Trust is the essential element of government integrity, of government respect, and of the trust of the people for a government. Without trust the people will not follow.

I learned a long time ago in leadership that you can't lead by driving people – you can't herd cats – but you have to inspire and lead and win integrity, win trust, and invite people to follow you. But they're not going to follow you into the dark. They're not going to follow you when there are all kinds of murky questions about this whole process and why it's pushed forward. What's the urgency of it? What's the disagreement over it? Why can't simple matters of it be made public?

These are questions that raise a lot of doubt in people's minds, and I just really do believe that government needs to do better than that. This government could, should do better than that, and it's puzzling why they won't in this particular case. As I said earlier, I mean, all governments defeat themselves, unfortunately. That's the way it is. That's where I see a government motion like this going, with all these issues associated with and tied to it and all the problems that are surrounding it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 14

An Act to Empower Utility Consumers

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to move second reading of Bill 14, An Act to Empower Utility Consumers.

The Utility Consumer Advocate, UCA, was established in 2003 and since that time has established a proven track record in educating Albertans and helping them navigate natural gas and electricity issues. The UCA also acts as a mediator, provides practical solutions, and, if needed, refers utility consumers to other departments or agencies for additional assistance where appropriate. In the last year the UCA assisted over 24,000 Albertans over the phone seeking information or assistance related to their electricity or natural gas services while over 194,000 visited the UCA website. Over 5,200 of the total calls received involved the UCA providing trained mediation services to deal with consumer, service, billing, or disconnection issues arising between Albertans and their utility provider.

Madam Speaker, this legislation contains a few key enhancements for consumers that build on the great work of the UCA, that I would like to discuss. First, the legislation extends the Utility Consumer Advocate's education and mediation mandate to include water in addition to electricity and natural gas utilities. As I mentioned, the UCA currently assists to resolve disputes between consumers and electricity and natural gas utility providers. However, the UCA does not have the mandate to become involved in water utility related matters at this time. We know that Alberta's water utility companies are well operated, well maintained, and very reliable. But sometimes consumers may occasionally find themselves in a dispute with their water utility company and need help, and it can be hard for a consumer to know the real cause or how to prove it when utilities are complex and the issues are so very technical.

Albertans have told us that this made them feel powerless, with nowhere to turn for help when a massive bill arrives, and their only options are to pay the bill or face disconnection. That's why I'm proud to say that this bill will empower Albertans by giving them a helping hand to resolve their billing issues. If passed, the bill would expand the mandate of the Alberta Utilities Consumer Advocate to create a one-stop shop for Albertans to resolve disputes with all their utility bills by increasing the UCA's role to include water, sewage, and drainage. Water customers would then be able to call the Utilities Consumer Advocate for help to resolve concerns regarding their water bills. This results in the consumer being put on more of an equal footing with the utility and reduces the stress of tackling these issues alone. In these cases, the UCA will act as a neutral third party, there to facilitate resolution between utilities and their consumers.

Madam Speaker, this bill will also strengthen the UCA in another important way. Building on the work by the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose – and I would like to thank him very much for his work in this area last session – these new provisions will authorize the UCA to provide important sources of information to Alberta's power and natural gas consumers. Right now, when a consumer calls the UCA's contact centre and asks for help in choosing a power or natural gas provider, the UCA can tell them about the rates and packages that various companies offer in their area, both on the regulated side or the contract side. In addition, the UCA also has information readily available on its website regarding the number of times it has been contacted by a customer of a certain company. This information comes in the form of mediation reports listing the type of call or complaint received by the UCA, by company, for the last month. These reports are updated regularly and are available on the UCA website.

If this bill is approved, the UCA would be able to provide Albertans with richer and more detailed information on the state of compliance of a power or natural gas company. If this bill is approved, the UCA would be able to collect and aggregate compliance information from places such as the Alberta Utilities Commission and the Market Surveillance Administrator. As a result, the UCA will be able to provide greater details about the company's overall compliance record, including the number of complaints the company has faced, the number of investigations conducted, and any administrative orders or penalties that the company has incurred. Madam Speaker, consumers will benefit from this type of information being available because this information will be far more user friendly as the UCA will be able to summarize, aggregate, and present the otherwise technical details in a clear and straightforward fashion.

Finally, this improved accountability and increased transparency will create a strong incentive for providers of electricity and natural gas to improve their practices. In the end, it will be utility consumers that benefit from increased competitiveness in the market and allowing them to make more informed decisions when selecting a provider.

In closing, I would like to thank our stakeholders for their important input on this bill. We consulted with the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, Rural Municipalities of Alberta, and various utility companies on this bill. They provided valuable insight into this bill. I'm confident this bill will empower utility consumers by giving them more support and information to make well-informed decisions.

I look forward to continued debate on Bill 14. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak on Bill 14, An Act to Empower Utility Consumers. I must say that when this bill was brought forward by the Minister of Service Alberta, I had a mixed reaction. I had, first, a sense of relief because I know that the everyday Albertans like the ones I have the privilege of representing in Bonnyville-Cold Lake are facing economic challenges, and when their cost of living continues to rise, even paying basic utilities like heat, electricity, and water can be an obstacle. Albertans undoubtedly need relief, and I hope that in some small way this bill might be able to provide some of those who are struggling to get by and suddenly find themselves facing an exorbitant utility bill.

But, Madam Speaker, I must say that I was somewhat surprised to see this move by the NDP. After three years of sitting in this place across from the government benches, it's often seemed that the other side has had little concern surrounding the rising utility costs that Alberta families have been seeing in the last few years. In fact, it has been a more common occurrence to see the NDP put forward legislation explicitly driving up utility costs for Albertans. I am glad to see that the NDP have finally taken and allowed for a short hiatus to bring this bill forward and listen to Albertans' concerns.

That said, I think it is important to stress just briefly the wider situation that Albertans face when it comes to utilities. Let's take a quick look at natural gas. In May of 2015, when the government was elected, residential gas rates in the province averaged around $2.25 per gigajoule. Fast-forward this to the spring of 2018. The price Albertans can expect to pay for their natural gas is more than $1 more per gigajoule. Now, of course, we Albertans understand the nature of the fluctuating commodity prices, but there is a problem here. The market price of residential natural gas has actually fallen, not increased. So far this year the market price has consistently averaged below $2 per gigajoule.

"But what's the $1 increase?" you might ask. That isn't the market price. It is the NDP price, the distorted price that Albertans are now forced to pay by this government. At the current carbon tax rate of $1.50 per gigajoule, nearly half the cost of the residential natural gas price is a tax. That is shameful. An Alberta family that may face a $100 bill for natural gas prior to the other fees and charges is actually paying $45 in carbon tax. And the NDP aren't done yet. We already know that they have a plan to increase this cost by another 67 per cent. Plus – who knows? – given the chance along with their ally Justin Trudeau, that could easily be doubled or tripled in the future.

Now, Madam Speaker, I know that up in the ivory towers of the Prime Minister and the Premier $45 a month does not seem like a whole lot of money. But for those struggling Albertans who are trying to get by, that is groceries for the dinner table. It is birthday gifts for their sons and daughters. To the ordinary Albertan it has a real – a truly real – impact. While we consider this bill, one that purports to empower utility consumers, let's keep in mind the challenges that consumers face every day, challenges that this government has made worse time and time again.

Moving on here, I want to dive into this bill a little bit more and explore the historical and future role of the Utilities Consumer Advocate. Members may know that the Utilities Consumer Advocate was originally created during the tenure of Premier Ralph Klein in order to provide residential and small-business consumers the opportunities for education, advocacy, and mediation in regard to their electricity and natural gas bills. This, of course, left out the third major household utility, which is water. This is a gap that this bill is attempting to address. The Utilities Consumer Advocate is engaged in mediation thousands of times a year, in the last fiscal year served more than 22,000 Albertans who had issues with their natural gas and electricity bills. Frankly, to expand their role to cover water bills is a measure of just common sense.

I think it is particularly important to point out that this legislative change does not come out of a vacuum. It is a legislation that addresses real problems that Albertans have faced. Some of the most extreme examples have received media coverage as well. Something as simple as a leaky toilet can end up costing thousands of dollars to unaware consumers in additional water charges. For example, last November Global News reported that a single mother from Fort Saskatchewan faced nearly a $2,700 water bill for a residence that normally would have averaged less than $100 per month. While these are not situations that every Albertan will run into and while it is extreme, it is important that we provide tools for those who find themselves in this kind of situation. These issues have caused problems for municipalities, which are the level of government most directly involved and responsible for the water utilities.

The city of Calgary announced in the fall that it would forgive and be absorbing the cost of abnormally high water bills. Since then Calgary taxpayers have paid nearly a million dollars to cover the issue, with a further estimated annual cost of $1.5 million going forward.

I am glad that the minister has decided to bring this legislation forward now to try and provide tools to address abnormally high water bills, but I am sure that Calgary taxpayers and consumers would have appreciated these measures back in the fall, when the city decided to take action. Dare I say that the minister and the government of Alberta might have had their priorities out of order when they put their attacks on Alberta veterinarians ahead of supporting utility consumers.

But, as I said, at least the government has come to address this issue now. It is also important to recognize that while providing mediation and investigation services to the consumers is an important part of the solution to the issue, education is a priority. According to Enmax 37 per cent of the abnormally high water bills are due to leaky toilets and 29 per cent are due to undetermined causes. Providing consumers with more information will help to make people aware of causes, that will hopefully contribute to reductions in wasted water going forward.

I would also like to briefly go over the new public reporting measures that are new to the UCA's powers, not only for water but for the electricity and natural gas utilities. These are also useful in providing the public further information. We see this bill allowing public reporting on customer services and complaints, on compliance and regulatory issues, and other enforcement. This is a measure that will help to increase transparency on disputes and related measures that may arise.

That said, this comes back to the overriding concern about the effect that this government's policies have on utility costs for consumers. The most important measure that consumers need is transparency on the true and total cost of government policies on their utility bills. Now, while we are never going to see the NDP give the UCA the power to hold government to account on their energy costs, we in the opposition will certainly fill that role.

I already spoke about the burdensome costs of natural gas, that have been precipitated by the carbon tax, but I have not had the chance to address the disastrous electricity policy of this government and the effects that it has had on its consumers. From the debacle of the PPA agreements, or power purchase agreements, to the shutdown of our newest and most efficient coal-fired generation plants to the government's imposition of the so-called green energy fund, the actions of this government will have long-term negative effects on electricity bills for the ordinary Albertan.

The scary thing is that they don't seem to be done yet. Undoubtedly, this is an attempt to transition to a capacity market, which will hit the wallets of our ratepayers. What have they done to try to smooth this over? They have built in taxpayer subsidy rates to cap and hide the true costs. When you look at our electricity bills in this respect, they have really done the opposite of providing openness and transparency to the consumers.

Madam Speaker, I do plan on supporting this bill because on this side of the House we support Alberta consumers. That said, I am deeply concerned that this is a tactic of the government, trying to say that they are standing up for consumers to distract them while they are simultaneously hitting the pocketbooks of the average Albertan with every opportunity they have.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

11:20

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. With Bill 14 we are making life more affordable for families by expanding the Utilities Consumer Advocate's free mediation services for water bills. Albertans told us that they have felt powerless when they were hit with unusually massive water bills and had nowhere to turn for help. We listened and are taking action by empowering consumers with free expert help that will mediate on their behalf and help them to resolve their water billing issues. The UCA has a proven track record for protecting natural gas and electricity consumers in Alberta and mediating on their behalf. Adding water, sewage, and drainage to their mandate makes it a one-stop shop for Albertans to resolve disputes with their utility bills.

We are also expanding the UCA's ability to report on how gas and electricity companies are performing so that Albertans can make informed choices when buying power or natural gas. Reporting would include quality of customer service, number of consumer complaints, details of investigations and penalties, and how well they are complying with laws and standards such as orders from regulators. We are beefing up the UCA's role in reporting so that Albertans can sign up for plans with confidence, knowing that their utility will serve them well.

My colleagues may remember that I introduced Bill 208 last session, pertaining more so to electricity and natural gas concerns. While the bill did not pass, I am pleased to see that its contents were not lost. The UCA already discloses valuable information that comes out of their mediation services related to common complaints. But with these amendments the UCA can provide information from a range of other sources to disseminate even better information to Alberta consumers, that will help make informed decisions. This information is already collected by various entities such as the Alberta Utilities Commission and the Market Surveillance Administrator. The information that the UCA will disseminate relates to consumer complaints, investigations, penalties, and compliance activities. For example, the UCA can now report on the performance of electricity, natural gas, and water utility providers and the state and level of compliance.

When compliance and service quality information is transparently available to the public, businesses have an incentive to improve their service and practices to retain customers and attract new ones. While much of this information is already publicly available, there is a difference between being available and accessible. Albertans lead busy lives, and much of this information is difficult to find. This makes it inconvenient to search out information from three or more separate sources when deciding on an electricity or natural gas provider. This is doubly true when the information is of a particularly technical nature. The UCA can solve these problems by collecting, aggregating, and explaining this information in a single, user-friendly location. This is great news for both consumers and utility providers, to provide the best and most competitive utility services for Albertans.

In closing, I'd like to offer my support for these amendments and to thank the hon. minister for ensuring that the contents of Bill 208 will not be forgotten. I do support this bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's always an honour to rise in this House to discuss a bill that is before us and affects all Albertans. This morning is no exception, of course. This morning we're talking about Bill 14, An Act to Empower Utility Consumers. Now, this bill purports to provide transparency by performance reporting of the activities of electricity and natural gas providers so that consumers can shop in confidence. To me, I guess this means that the Utilities Consumer Advocate will now have the ability to publicly report performance of power and natural gas utilities. This appears, on its face, to be a good thing for consumers, a great step to take.

Now, the Utilities Consumer Advocate was set up by the previous government, with a mandate to educate, advocate, and mediate for Alberta's residential, farm, and small-business electricity and natural gas consumers. As the minister stated in her introduction to this bill, she said something along the lines that the Utilities Consumer Advocate has a proven track record of helping to educate and mediate on behalf of Alberta's natural gas and electricity consumers. That is lofty praise, certainly, lofty praise from a government that continues to take shots at the previous government at every turn. But I digress. This bill will further impress that mandate to include water bills as part of services provided by the Utilities Consumer Advocate. These mediation services are a free service, which, given the huge increase in disputes, is probably a good thing, Madam Speaker.

I guess what this now does is set up a kind of catch-all, a one-stop shop for mediation utility disputes, which is great. But I wonder about the underlying cause of these issues and whether these reports will address these issues so they don't continue to plague ratepayers. I mean, let's be honest. This government championing the fight against spiking utilities seems to go somewhat sideways from what we've seen in the last three years. After three years of this government being in power, they have seemed determined to do nothing but raise the cost of utilities for all those Albertans. They increased the rate of decommissioning our efficient coal plants, causing uncertainty in coal communities across Alberta and, well, making life less affordable for Albertans with the green-scheme-induced carbon tax, a tax that I always take the chance to remind everyone that they did not campaign on in the election of 2015.

So you'll forgive me if I tend to be somewhat skeptical about aspects of this bill. After all, this is a government that was taken completely by surprise by the power purchase agreements, when companies exercised their rights to walk away, as this government has made these agreements clearly less profitable. Hardly the stuff to be made confident by, Madam Speaker.

I suppose it's more than welcomed that after three years of steady increases to the cost of living for Albertans, the NDP do appear to be taking notice of the concerns of Albertans in regard to skyrocketing utility bills. I really hope that the government did its homework this time and actually engaged in meaningful consultation with municipalities on this bill as this is an area primarily of municipal responsibility. Let's face it. Municipal government is the grassroots government of Alberta, and, in my opinion, if things were operating right, these municipalities would be considered partners of the government of Alberta.

Let's face it. The consultation record of the government, I suggest, could best be described as spotty. I really hope that by expanding the Utilities Consumer Advocate's mandate to provide consumers with the information and tools that they need to understand and manage their utility bills, that can only be a good thing, in my opinion.

The problem I see is that if the government is unwilling to address the rising cost of electricity and natural gas to ratepayers, then it's kind of a moot point that they're willing to address concerns surrounding water bills. After all, the carbon tax on everything made these bills increase. You have to wonder where it will stop. Maybe if Albertans support what we're doing over here on this side of the House, this tax on everything will stop sometime in 2019. We will wait and see how that plays out.

Now, consumers, at the very least, will have the Utilities Consumer Advocate to check up on and report their findings on things like whether a company has a record or a history of complaints, whether their record is compliant with current laws, of course, and standards and, equally important, that there will be an established record of customer service performance. I think that's important.

I guess this will be sort of a Better Business Bureau of utility companies, Madam Speaker. While your options for utility companies may be limited by geography, at least now there will be a historic account of these companies', let's say, transgressions, should they have them, that is. This will at least give some background if mediation between a ratepayer and a utility company has to occur. Anything that helps the little guy cannot hurt. The little guy is who we're all kind of looking out for as we create legislation in this House. We hope that the average, everyday Albertan in downtown Alberta actually gets a little help now and then.

Speaking of that little guy, what I'd really like to see, Madam Speaker, is for this government to stop hurting that little guy, the everyday Albertan. Especially after the January 1 increase to the tax on everything, the Main Street, Alberta, fella is beginning to hurt, as are nonprofits, school boards, food banks, and the list goes on. We've talked about all those things in this House before. Some of these things, certainly, this side of the House believes should have an exemption on them so that they can continue.

I recall a lady from the Sundre aquaplex, who would be from the riding of my friend in the front row, saying something along the lines that their operation is really being hit hard. She kind of talked about that. She said that it's not just that particular organization that's being impacted, it's the community as a whole. She said: our little organizations are what keep Sundre going, and without these facilities in the community, we wouldn't have a community, but because of the carbon tax, we had to increase our rates, but we couldn't increase them as much as required to keep up with the cost of the tax because the people that would be paying that would also be paying the carbon tax as well. In their opinion, they could not double-dip those people.

I suppose that if this government really wanted to help utility companies, they would slash their carbon tax and put a little more money back into taxpayers' pockets. Now, the U of C energy economist Jennifer Winter recently wrote that a $50-per-tonne carbon tax will cost a typical Alberta household $1,111 per year. Before the government starts yelling about rebates and making life better for Albertans, Madam Speaker, the Canadian Taxpayers Federation has already determined that 55 per cent of Albertans received no rebate cheque or, if they did, it was less than what that particular person would have paid in carbon taxes. So $1,100 is a lot of money and, certainly, money that the little guy that's walking down Main Street, Alberta, could use.

While the government members may shake their heads in disagreement on what I'm talking about, I'm going to have to again provide an example of what some of this government has brought on to folks. Let's again take the example of the landowner too far from a natural gas line to provide inexpensive gas to heat his home and his outbuildings. Places like this exist in this province. His cost-effective and efficient solution to this was to use a modern, coal-burning furnace. They are still available. It would seem that that would solve the problem, but not so fast. The government indeed decided to accelerate the phase-out of coal and then added in a carbon tax to fund the green slush fund. This cost-effective solution now spirals out of control. Instead of an economic solution for this Albertan that has no access to natural gas, this taxpayer now pays $53.09 a tonne in carbon tax on stoker coal that sells for $45 a tonne. Well, now, that is simply outrageous.

If making life better for Albertans is to simply burden rural farmers and ranchers with an ever-increasing carbon tax, if that was this government's goal, well, I congratulate you on your achievement. Now, this isn't my opinion. Remember the federal briefing note from January of last year, the one that showed that the national carbon tax will cost farmers $3,705 on average when implemented at $50 per tonne? Given the nearly 50,000 farmers in Alberta that run upwards of $180 million a year, give or take – $180 million – that's money that could be put back into the economy instead of back into the great green slush fund. I mean, it's been proven and written about many times. Any money that a farmer or rancher actually earns goes back into the economy and turns over several times, that same amount of money.

I don't like to be a cynic. I really want to believe in this bill. I want to support it. It really could be a positive step that this legislation will allow the Utilities Consumer Advocate to provide public reports on power and natural gas utilities. That could provide a degree of accountability and consumer confidence in the utility market that ratepayers desperately need.

As mentioned, this act will also now provide an outlet, a means, I would say, to settle water bill disputes. It may not solve all the myriad of problems, but it is somewhere to start as consumers will finally have an outlet for water bill disputes. It won't help water rate disputes as those rates are set by municipalities, but it can address billing issues. So mark one down for the little guy in Alberta.

Now that I think about it, there is also the added benefit of using an existing entity to rectify these disputes. After all, why create another agency when you have publicly stated that you're trying to reduce the number of ABCs in the province? I only wish that this government took this approach with other pieces of legislation. No need to hire additional bodies to fulfill this expanded mandate. It would be great if government did more of this more often. After all, it seems that the only jobs this government ever creates are in the public sector, so this is indeed a nice change of pace.

I guess the major flaw I see in the bill is that this entity, the Utilities Consumer Advocate, can't compel the utility companies that may be offside to change. What I mean to say is that if a company is a chronic offender and the reports of the UCA prove that, what power does this entity have to order utility companies to get better, to improve customer service? It's not that I don't think that information isn't valuable. It's just that if enough complaints are borne out, I guess we have to rely on these reports coming from the government for them to take action. Hopefully, this will be the exception and not the rule. Hopefully, things bear out like the government has said and the vast number of cases will be mediated in such a fashion that ratepayers are saved from erroneous billing errors and save themselves money in the end. That would be what I'd like to see continue to happen.

Madam Speaker, while I may be able to get behind this legislation, I can't help but have a healthy dose of skepticism. That being said, I look forward to more debate in this House to solidify the position of the minister.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's always a pleasure to rise and comment in the House. I'd like to comment on Bill 14, An Act to Empower Utility Consumers. My colleagues have spoken about the ways in which the UCA, which is the Utilities Consumer Advocate, already assists Albertans with respect to their gas and electricity utility issues. I'd like to discuss, however, what these changes will mean to a typical Albertan. This bill ensures that Albertans with concerns about their water bill will have a new resource to access.

We're making life more affordable for families by expanding the Utilities Consumer Advocate's free mediation services to water bills. Albertans told us that they felt powerless when they were hit with unusually massive water bills and had nowhere else to turn. We listened, and we are taking action by empowering consumers with free expert help that will mediate on their behalf and help them resolve their water billing issues. The UCA already has a proven track record for protecting natural gas and electricity consumers in Alberta and mediating on their behalf on these issues. Adding water, sewage, and drainage to their mandate makes it a one-stop shop for Albertans to resolve disputes on utility bills.

As was stated already, the UCA was created in 2003. Sometimes disputes can arise, and disputes also can take on a life of their own, particularly when they have been going on for a long time. For example, prior to 2003 we had a gas company that went around in the community of Hinton and convinced consumers that they needed to lock their gas bills because the gas prices were going up. Many consumers ended up signing long-term contracts, locking their gas prices because of what they were convinced was going to happen with gas prices in the community. What happened was that they locked these in for five years at three to four times the going rate, and there was no way to get out of these contracts. It's unfortunate that this had occurred prior to 2003.

You can see how situations like that hurt consumers. This is why the involvement of the UCA is so important. As an impartial third party they can bring parties together and ultimately reach a fair resolution. I'd like to stress, however, that the UCA's assistance does not always end there. For example, many billing disputes or disconnections may result from nonpayment by the consumer. In this instance the UCA can also be a key link connecting an Albertan who is vulnerable or relies on services such as income support or programs through Alberta Works. Additionally, the UCA works directly with consumers and providers to prevent disconnection if that should occur and to help facilitate the reconnection of power or natural gas. From this, it's clear that the UCA can have a significant positive effect that extends well beyond a single dispute. This is another reason I'm pleased that more Albertans have access to the UCA.

Adding water to the UCA mandate is important. Put simply, there isn't a provincial organization in place that educates consumers about the water utilities. It helps them mediate water utility companies on issues such as unusually high water bills. With its experience and successful track record regarding mediating and educating consumers of natural gas and electricity, adding water utilities to the UCA's mandate is a natural fit. Plus, given that electricity, natural gas, and water comprise the three main utilities for most any home, it's practical to set up the UCA as a one-stop shop, as we already mentioned, to go to if they need help or information on all three.

Has there been demand? Yes. In the last year we've heard from Albertans that they want somewhere to go when they have an issue with their water bill. The UCA's contact centre received 179 calls relating to water issues, including billing, consumer service, disconnection, education, and metering. "Is 179 calls a lot?" is the question that can be asked. The UCA received roughly 25,000 calls for natural gas and electricity issues in the same time frame. We strongly believe that there are many other Albertans we haven't heard from simply because consumers don't routinely reach out to the UCA about water issues at this time.

The other issue that I want to bring forward is what's happening in the community of Hinton today, the fact that the community is going to be switching over to a new water system, and that concerns many of the residents. By the UCA looking after water issues, it will provide an opportunity for the residents to contact the advocate's office in the event that there may be disputes down the road.

I'm certainly in support of this, and I really think that this is something that the whole House needs to support. I've got to thank the minister for bringing this bill forward, and, like I said, I offer my full support for this bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll now recognize the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today and speak to Bill 14, An Act to Empower Utility Consumers. This bill adds water as part of the free mediation service to the already existing gas and electricity services that the Utilities Commission provides, and it also increases the public reporting and performance of some of the utility providers as well.

I am pleased to speak in support of the bill. I think it is an important bill, and it's brought forward to expand the Utilities Consumer Advocate's ability to accomplish these tasks for these three areas of utilities, as I've said, both power and natural gas and now water as well. I think it will be helpful for many consumers. I think that the goal of the bill should be to be able to have a respectful and co-operative market system functioning well, and hopefully it will contribute to that.

I must express, though, that while I'm in support of the bill and in support of the concept, I am somewhat wary of the intent of the current bill, mainly with respect to the fact that the current government has not had a very good track record of empowering or mediating for Albertans and hasn't done much to advocate for them in terms of the extreme cost increases to two of the utilities that the commission will be looking at, power and natural gas. It's good to protect water consumers, which needed to be added to the list, but at the same time for the power and natural gas consumers, while they're on the list of those that the Utilities Consumer Advocate will be able to speak for, the increases that they've experienced have been extreme.

You know, I find it interesting in one respect to note that while the advocate has received 179 calls with respect to water, the calls with regard to electricity and natural gas are 22,790. You try to put that into perspective a little bit. There's a massive, massive disproportion there in terms of the urgency and importance. Now, maybe that will balance out in the future once consumers know that they can call about water. We'll see. On the other hand, maybe it reflects the fact that the real pain being felt by consumers is actually in the power and natural gas area. We'll have to watch and see where that goes.

I guess I'm wary of the intent of this bill even though I am supporting it. On first look the bill does seem to serve a good purpose, and I think it will serve a good purpose. The reasons for my wariness or my concern are largely with regard to the fact that in the last few years both our Premier and the Prime Minister have said that while they care about consumers, they are also advocates of carbon tax increases and increases in the price of that. Their primary stated goal is to increase the costs of carbon-based energy. They claim these actions will help Albertans and Canadians – and I quote – make better decisions. Wow. That sounds pretty coercive, quite frankly, to try and force behavioural change by economic pain. Where I come from, if you inflict pain on people in order to make them do things – that doesn't strike me as very appropriate in any world, quite frankly.

Both the Premier and the Prime Minister have stated that their goal is to increase the cost of carbon, and the intent is to force us to make better decisions. It's in the areas of power and natural gas, that are affected by carbon, that the advocate has received by far and away, many times over, the largest number of calls. Obviously, there is pain there for Albertans. They are expressing it, and they're frustrated by it. There needs to be better advocacy for them.

I am wary of the track record of a government whose purpose is to increase the prices of everything, quite frankly, and now comes forward with an act that's supposed to protect consumers from price increases and from unexpected jolts to their bills and unanticipated costs, that they didn't know were going to be happening to them.

There have been a growing number of complaints, though, with regard to water. I admit that. It's been in the media: Calgary, Fort Saskatchewan, even in my riding. The little community of Ponoka has had a huge number of concerns voiced and raised, to the point of consumers trying to initiate some kind of public action to try and get some results on it. Much of this, of course, has been caused in Alberta by the move by many municipalities to move from just a flat monthly fee for the consumption of water to the installation of meters that measure the amount of water actually consumed and billed based on that metered reading and the change. With that change and that measurement of consumption, some people have, as has already been said in this House, received exponentially exorbitant bills, that really are a challenge to them.

I do give credit to the town of Ponoka, though, to the management there, where they have adopted a policy, in light of all of this and, quite frankly, in light of some public action, of actually trying to notify consumers when their consumption all of a sudden seems to be going up because the kids left a hose on in the yard and it's running day after day or because there's a leak in the toilet. It's amazing how much water over a period of 24 hours and then days and weeks will flow through a leaking toilet. In many cases the challenge here is that the consumers themselves need to fix the leaks in their system, and it creates these incredible jolts to their family economy. The town of Ponoka has taken the position that as soon as they notice a significant increase in water consumption, they've actually been calling the consumer and advising them, warning them that their bill is going to be going up and that they need to take a serious look at why all of this water is flowing through their meter.

I think that's a great demonstration of how a utility provider or water provider could in fact make a difference. The installation of new meters that register this make it possible. I would hope that something like that is in the spirit of this bill, quite honestly. I think we need to avoid a confrontational model as much as possible and try and find positive solutions, and that's a great example of it, in my mind.

I think it is important that we understand these things and that consumers do have, when conflicts do arise, a neutral third party that can mediate, that can take action and, hopefully, make things better. But as I've said, to go after the utility providers when the government itself is actually the primary driver of utility costs on two out of the three utilities that we're talking about here, driving the cost themselves and with no accountability to government about this, when obviously the massive number of calls to the utility advocate are with regard to power and natural gas over water, I think it's a bit disingenuous, quite honestly. It's trying to look nice, trying to sound great in front of the consumers' eyes while at the same time driving up the price of power and natural gas in exorbitant ways.

I mean, I'm speaking about our nonprofits struggling under the weight of carbon tax increases and power bill increases that are going to be coming through changes in our electricity system. We don't see government standing up and championing the protection of those bill increases for those people with regard to those issues because they're the ones who drove the costs up themselves. They're the ones who have pushed these costs. Why don't we see a bill to protect consumers from excessive increases in power and gas bills driven by government here?

Schools are facing the same thing. Many schools, school districts in the province are actually to the point where they're cutting back front-line services. Their reserves are gone. In my riding the school board is cutting in half the number of coaches for disabled students, cutting in half the number of social workers because their costs are driven so high, and it has a lot to do with the carbon tax increases and all that goes with it.

The Alberta milk industry, the dairy producers, I learned just yesterday, have taken the effort of compiling the data of all their members across the province. It's costing them $2 million a year to the industry to pay just the carbon tax alone, driven by government, with no consumer advocacy for their benefit. And now we're going to offer them a few cents, maybe protection for some water, while at the same time we drive up the costs of the other two utilities, that are far more significant and far more serious. I don't think Albertans are going to see the glory and the wonder of this when they stop and take a minute and think about it.

Prices on almost everything we consume have skyrocketed, and there's no advocate now to hold the government to account for the cost escalation that they have pushed. I don't see the government recalling any of their legislation or implementing any new legislation to help direct the economy in a more positive direction. I'm sorry, but I find it a bit insincere when government wants to appear like the good guy, the good woman, whatever, on one-third of the three utilities that everybody has to pay. I just think that there's an imbalance here. You know, it's one thing to try and be the superhero of consumer protection, but I think what we're seeing here belongs more in comic books than in the Legislature.

Every day it seems like we get a new piece of legislation from this government that it's brought in over the last few years, and the intent has the direct effect of raising the cost of utilities for everyday Albertans, continually pushing the costs for them. The job-killing carbon tax, the early phase-out of coal: all these things have hurt Albertans across our province. Why aren't we standing up and protecting them from these much, much greater utility cost increases than the water ones?

That's not to depreciate the need to protect consumers with regard to their water utilities. As I've said, I fully support that, and I will vote for the bill. It has a good value to it, and it has a good benefit, but it's small comfort in face of some of the other realities that we are facing with regard to utility realities and the utility experience of consumers in this province.

As I've said, the Utilities Consumer Advocate is a good tool. This expansion of it will create a space where consumers can go to get help when water rates are not being abided by. There is a wealth of good information that they can access that will help them navigate the system, someone to help them work their way through it. I also would hope, though, as I suggested earlier, that it does create a respectful and co-operative marketplace, that also the advocate will in some cases need to advocate on behalf of the utilities, because truthfully not every consumer is a victim. Sometimes the consumers themselves are acting wrongly, and I hope that there's a balance there and a fair and equitable justification for both consumers and the utility providers. I think that's important in order for us to have a respectful and co-operative marketplace that creates trust, that will create a good delivery of service for people, and that it will be positive all around.

I would say, though, in closing, as has already been suggested, that there really are no teeth in this bill. There's no opportunity for any kind of enforcement. That might be something worth looking at, particularly for utility providers that develop a consistent and an ongoing record of challenges.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you several grade 6 school groups from River Valley school in my hometown of Sundre. There are a lot of them, I believe, on all sides of the gallery. They're here today with their teachers, Ms Jennifer Cheung, Mr. Marc Doucette, and Miss Sonja Logan, as well as their chaperones: Jason Spurrier, Nancy Svatos, Lacey Sewepegaham, Chris Hunter, Jenna Grant, Krista Saunders, Jason Sykes, Jim Harper, Shawn MacNeil, and Alison Butler. These are great kids from a great town. I enjoyed visiting with them the other day. Let me tell you that they are some of the best grade 6 classes in this province, and I'm glad to see them here at my work. I'd ask that they rise, all of them, and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. M. le Président, c'est avec fierté que je me lève dans cette Chambre aujourd'hui pour introduire the students from l'école Father Jan. They're accompanied by their teacher, Guylaine Lefebvre-Maunders, and their chaperones: Mr. Kelly Warawa, Mrs. Danette LeRoux, Mrs. Heidi Pisani, and Danielle Evanson. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other school groups, hon. members?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three distinguished guests from 1 Field Ambulance primary care clinic in Edmonton. Here today are Major Heath Robson, Jill Washington, and Beth Gallant-Loggie. Major Robson is a clinic manager of one of the largest Canadian Armed Forces primary care clinics and networks in the country, serving CAF members in Edmonton, Yellowknife, Suffield, and Calgary. Jill and Beth are social workers specializing in addiction counselling and recovery. They have developed the rapidly growing aftercare program, which looks to change the narrative around addiction and engage patients, friends, and the chain of command to become more positive, proactive actors in the recovery of members. I would now ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly the chair of the Special Areas Board, Mr. Jordon Christianson. Jordon was born and raised in the small community of Oyen, which I've had the pleasure of visiting, in eastern Alberta, where his family farmed and ranched south of town. He attended the University of Saskatchewan, where he received a bachelor of science degree in agriculture. In '99 Jordon began his career with the Special Areas Board as an agricultural fieldman in Consort and then moved to a field services administrator position, where he was responsible for the approval of industrial activities on public land in the special areas. From there he became the director of property administration, and in September 2015 Jordon was appointed chair of the Special Areas Board. But he still remains active on his family's farm. Between the Special Areas Board and the farm he continues to build relationships throughout the region while maintaining a strong connection to the land and its native prairie. Jordon is seated in the public gallery, and I ask that he stand and we all join to give him the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: What the minister didn't announce is that he's from southeastern Alberta. That's good.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two groups to recognize today. The first is patient advocates from the Edmonton patient support group for Bladder Cancer Canada, who are seated in the members' gallery. May is Bladder Cancer Awareness Month, a time to focus attention on advocacy, prevention, research, and, of course, a cure. They ask that you help spread the message far and wide by using #yellowhelps and perhaps describing how Bladder Cancer Canada has helped loved ones along the way. I also recognize that they're wearing a lot of yellow today. I invite Michele, Dick, Merv, Hildegard, Randy, Ruby, Reg, Bette, Scott, Gloria, and Tom to please rise and receive our warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. The second introduction I have is the Scleroderma Society of Canada and the Pulmonary Hypertension Association of Canada, who are seated in the members' gallery. They work to improve quality of life for patients living with scleroderma and PAH through education and supports, research, and public awareness. Thank you for your advocacy and for your partnership. I invite Jeannette, Arnold, Margaret, Susan, Yvette, Gillian, Miaya, Kristy, Anna, Ruth, and Joanne to rise and receive the warm welcome of our House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Violence Prevention

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like all of us in this Chamber, I was horrified by the vicious attack that took place in Toronto last week and incredibly saddened at the senseless loss of 10 vibrant lives. It's hard to comprehend that such an act could take place in our country and on our streets. It's hard to understand the motivation of an individual to commit such a sick attack. Ten innocent lives taken and more injured. While the investigation is ongoing, it has already served to shine a light on a dark corner of the Internet where sad loners can fester and hatred grow. It turns my stomach to know that there is an entire online community of men who feed this rage.

Mr. Speaker, this must stop, and we must be part of the solution that puts an end to this scourge, which is why my United Conservative colleagues and I proudly support the government's proclamation of May as Sexual Violence Awareness Month. It is clear that more can and should be done to address the attitudes that all too often excuse the alarming and dangerous behaviour that precedes sexual assault, domestic abuse, and violence against women. We must encourage a culture where this behaviour is noticed and addressed before violence occurs, not recognized after the fact.

My heart breaks for the eight women and two men who lost their lives on the corner of Yonge and Finch last week, 10 people who tragically found themselves in the wrong place at the wrong time, 10 human beings who each led unique lives filled with purpose and promise, 10 who are desperately missed by all who loved them. Let us keep them in our hearts as we work to stomp out violent hatred in all its forms.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Energy Industry and Trans Mountain Pipeline

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I stand to talk about the future of Alberta and the future of Alberta's energy industry. I know that a lot of people both inside and outside the province think that Alberta's energy industry is about big oil and gas projects and pipelines, but to me, Alberta's energy industry is about people.

It's about the thousands of workers in my constituency of Edmonton-Castle Downs and my family, who rely on the energy industry for good-paying jobs that help them support themselves and their families. It's about the 4.3 million people who live in Alberta who rely on government services like health care and education. It's about the thousands of people in our health care and education sectors who go to work every day to make life better for Albertans. It's about our children, who deserve a future where they can count on good jobs and educational opportunities. It's about their children and the people of Alberta for generations to come, who need to live in a province that is not only a leader in energy production but a leader in environmental protection and social justice.

Right now, Mr. Speaker, it's about the people all across western Canada who know that the right thing to do is to allow the Kinder Morgan expansion to proceed. The majority of people in both Alberta and B.C. are in support of the Kinder Morgan expansion. They know how important this project is to their future, and they are looking to our government and the federal government for leadership against those who would stop it.

That's why I am so proud of our government for putting forward Bill 12, Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act, because the fight isn't just about the energy industry in Alberta. The fight is about a future that looks greater and better for everyone in our country.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

British Columbia's Environmental Policies

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During all of the environmental preaching and pipeline bashing we have heard out of British Columbia's NDP government, one thing has left me truly baffled. While Albertans were made to feel guilty by their own NDP government for needing to drive to work and having to heat our homes in the winter, a B.C. mine is leaking acid waste into one of the richest salmon runs in the region and has been for over 60 years.

As Albertans were yearning for social licence with a carbon tax cherry on top, British Columbia's motto must have been Do as I Say, Not as I Do. In this ecological delusion they've demanded pristine environmental sanctity, all the while being responsible for about 40 per cent of the 120 million cubic metres of untreated sewage and runoff sewage that entered Canadian waterways in 2016.

The upcoming Kinder Morgan decision has left Alberta's workers waiting anxiously, with their hard hats in one hand and an uncompromising sense of hope in the other. They understand that with or without environmental policies, Calgarians cannot get by much longer with the third-highest unemployment rate amongst Canada's major cities and over 156,000 unemployed Albertans throughout the province. The green infrastructure that B.C. idealizes from their high horse cannot be built from a largely unemployed population. Moreover, the prevention of a pipeline leaves us little option but rail, risky, costly rail. Mr. Speaker, Warren Buffett had it right.

However, it seems to be out of sight, out of mind for Premier Horgan's pipeline protestors. They choose to protest Alberta's ethical oil while turning a blind eye on their own provincial capital dumping 145 billion litres of untreated sewage into the ocean. Hypocrisy at its finest.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

University of Calgary Dinos

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the end of the spring semester at the University of Calgary I'd like to take this time to reflect on the accomplishments of their varsity teams. In the 2017-18 academic year we saw the U of C Dinos make accomplishments like women's volleyball winning the Canada West championship for the first time since 2005, the men's cross-country team winning the Canada West championship for the first time since 2008, the women's rugby second straight Canada West title, the Dinos sweeping the Crowchild Classic hockey games at the Pengrowth Saddledome – sorry, MRU – the men's football team win its eighth Hardy Cup win in 10 years. I'll never forget the 59-yard field goal. And dozens of medals were won in cross-country, swimming, and wrestling.

But the largest underdog win came from the Dinos men's basketball team. After beating Brock and McGill in the U Sports Final 8 tournament, the Dinos entered the championship as the clear underdog compared to the large-statured Ryerson University. Dinos head coach Dan Vanhooren even mentioned that in looking at his players' physiques, you could confuse them for a soccer team. Despite that, with the game tied at 77 with nine seconds left, Dinos player Mambi Diawara scored the game-winning two-point shot to crown them their first national championship. This is the first time in eight years that Carleton University didn't win the big championship, a team that upset the Dinos just two years ago.

Following the tournament, players David Kapinga and Mambi Diawara would go on to represent Canada with a silver medal win in men's basketball at the Commonwealth Games just last April, and they would be joined by students like Jackson Payne and Allison Beveridge, who won medals in gymnastics and cycling, as well as alumni Erica Wiebe, who won gold in wrestling.

I'm sure I speak for all members in this Assembly, including the Member for Calgary-Varsity and Minister of Service Alberta and Status of Women, when I congratulate all Dinos athletic players on their amazing accomplishments this year.

Organ and Tissue Donation

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, last week was National Organ and Tissue Donation Awareness Week, and it's meant to raise awareness about the critical need for more donors across the country. Approximately 4,500 Canadians are waiting for a life-saving organ transplant. The sad reality is that, on average, 250 Canadians die each year waiting for a transplant. Making that important decision to donate is the first step to saving lives.

Mr. Speaker, a couple of weeks ago I received an e-mail from a constituent saddened by the Humboldt tragedy. The event reminded him of the loss of his own son in 1987, also a junior hockey player. Fortunately, before his accident his son had signed the organ donor card and made the family aware of his wishes. His son's heart allowed another man to live for 28 more years. Then in 2006 my constituent's wife received a heart transplant, making them the only family they know of that have seen it both ways. My constituent and his wife, during her physio visits at the U of A hospital, saw a number of fine folks pass away because there were no donors.

The death of an 11-year-old boy put him on a speaking tour, wearing his hat as a Rotary president in the Peace Country. The Rotary was good enough to endorse his crusade. He spent three years and six figures of his own money to try and advance the cause. His goal was to achieve a national registry. My constituent informed me that it finally came to a vote last fall in Ottawa. The NDP and the Conservatives voted for it. Trudeau, however, whipped the Liberals to a no, and he still hasn't heard a rational reason from anyone as to why.

It strikes him that this would be an ideal time to revisit the issue, and a push from Alberta certainly could help. Albertans have a valuable role to play. Albertans are encouraged to join forces with health care providers, governments, and Canadian Blood Services to help us create a day when no one in Alberta dies waiting for a transplant.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Sustainable Economy

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the start of the first Industrial Revolution in the mid 18th century, successive waves of invention have driven economic development. From whale oil to fossil fuels, the invention of water power, steam power, electrification, the internal combustion engine, the space age, and an increasingly digital world: all of these things drove societal change.

Today we find ourselves at the beginning of a sustainability revolution, a revolution that includes renewable energy, the restoration of ecosystems, zero-waste circular economic products, sustainable farming, biomimicry, and nanotechnology. History reveals that each time technology reaches maturity, it is subject to a period of adjustment before ultimately being replaced. History reveals that there are always people who fear and resist change. Scientists and academics all over the world have told us that if the world is to maintain and raise living standards while avoiding the worst impacts of climate change, resource depletion, and ecosystem degradation, economic change is vital.

We know we must work towards becoming a less carbon-intense society. We have to methodically co-ordinate, support, and fund transition to clean technology and energy. This takes time and the political will to do what is tough and right. It takes vision and leadership and the ability to bring changes like the carbon levy, one tool that helps change behaviour, the economy, and our future.

The leader of the UCP has really only just arrived at a place where he finally believes man-made climate change is a real threat to our future. He was a minister in a government that systematically muzzled scientists. It is clear he has no vision for a future that is sustainable and green, let alone the desire or political will to make the hard choices to get there. Who loses if he's allowed to take us backwards? Our children and their children.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to table the required number of copies for the House regarding a confirmation of Transport Canada's CADORS report.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Bill 12 Implementation

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A question for the Premier: under what conditions would the Premier use the proposed power to restrict the shipment of Alberta oil to British Columbia?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have been very clear that once we get Bill 12 passed, we will do whatever is necessary to protect Alberta's interests, and we will strategically deploy our resources on the basis of the circumstances at the time to be absolutely firm in protecting Albertans' interests and getting that pipeline built. We know that we're making progress. Just today we've seen yet another poll to show that support for our pipeline is growing significantly in the province of British Columbia.

Mr. Kenney: Since the Premier didn't answer the question, I'll ask it a second time. Under what conditions would the Premier use the proposed power to restrict the shipment of Alberta oil to British Columbia? I'll repeat: under what conditions?

Ms Notley: As I've already said many, many times, Mr. Speaker, we will do what is necessary based on the best strategic decisions at the time. Previously the member opposite went around suggesting that perhaps we wouldn't do it. I've been very clear that we would do it if it was the thing that needed to be done, and this bill has been designed for us to use it in very short order. You know what isn't helpful? It's as if we're at a card game and the member opposite is standing behind me trying to signal our moves to our opposition in order to help them. This is not helpful. He should get on team Alberta and stop cheering for team B.C.

Mr. Kenney: I think we're starting to see a pattern here, Mr. Speaker. Actually, we have for weeks: a simple, very direct, straightforward policy question answered with a lot of partisan bombast and personal attacks. It's unfortunate. But since the Premier still hasn't tried to answer the question, I'll ask it a third time. It's really a very simple, straightforward, objective question about the government's policy, no partisan torque. Under what conditions would the government use the proposed power to restrict the shipment of Alberta oil to British Columbia?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, I mean, the bill itself is very clear. The purpose of the bill is to ensure that Albertans get the best value for the resources that we own, and we will strategically deploy our export of that product in a way to ensure that we get the best value for the resources that we own. That will depend on the circumstances at any given time. The bill is crafted in a way to make sure that we can do that quickly when necessary, but it is very much based on the circumstances at the time.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Kenney: I'll infer, Mr. Speaker, from the third failure of the Premier to answer a very simple question, that she doesn't know under what circumstances, that she's making this up as the government goes along.

Bill 12 Pipeline Approval

Mr. Kenney: Now, we're just 30 days away from the prospective cancellation of the pipeline according to Kinder Morgan, which said just last week that the project remains possibly untenable. Contractors working for Kinder Morgan are laying people off. They're scaling down. Unions are saying that the uncertainty has trickled down into people's lives. Mr. Speaker, is it the Premier's view that she won't use this power until after Kinder Morgan potentially cancels the pipeline?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's absolutely not true, nor is the previous assertion that we don't know when we would use it true. However, we do retain the right to exercise these authorities in a strategic way that gets the pipeline built. Now, I appreciate that the member opposite doesn't have experience with that because he's never managed to get a pipeline built to tidewater, so in building on the same failure, perhaps that's what he wants to set us up for. That's not what will happen here. We are working very hard to get this pipeline built, and as I've said before, it will be built because we know that that is the job Albertans expect us to do.

Mr. Kenney: Did we see what just happened there again, Mr. Speaker? A very straightforward policy question, with a nonresponse, followed by a partisan attack. It's a very clear pattern.

Mr. Speaker, the question is this: what's the point of this purported power to restrict the shipment of Alberta oil to British Columbia if it's not used before the potential cancellation of the pipeline? What's the point of leverage that is not applied? Why has she brought forward this bill while Premier Horgan has gone back to court to further delay the pipeline? Where is the leverage?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Quite honestly, I think that a lot of it's already happened, but at the end of the day the stated purpose for the bill is outlined very clearly in the bill. It's interesting that the member opposite talks about the government of B.C. going to court because, of course, that's where he wanted to go. He wanted to send the whole matter to court, which, to be clear, was not a good idea. We are working very, very hard to get this pipeline built. We are in daily conversations with the people, ultimately, who have the authority to make it happen, much like the member opposite was part of a group like that some years ago who didn't make it happen.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Well, another non answer, another partisan attack, Mr. Speaker. That's what happens when a head of government can't actually articulate or defend their own policy.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday, however, we did get a bit of an admission from the Premier that she surrendered to her close ally Justin Trudeau on the Northern Gateway pipeline when she told us that she insisted on one pipeline to a coast. Is that why Justin Trudeau felt there would be no push-back from the Alberta government if he vetoed the Northern Gateway pipeline and killed the Energy East pipeline? Will the Premier take some responsibility for that?

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, speaking of defending one's own policy and speaking of Northern Gateway, I think it's very interesting that we now have even better insight into why the member opposite and his federal government failed to get a pipeline built to tidewater. We learned that three years ago, when asked on national TV why he wouldn't stand up to defend the decision to support Northern Gateway, the member opposite said, and I quote: no particular project is a national priority. That's what the member opposite said about Northern Gateway. Now I'm starting to see what it looks like when you don't fight for your decisions, unlike what this government is doing every day. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Third main question.

Mr. Kenney: Another partisan attack, followed by desk thumping and heckling, Mr. Speaker. The anger machine doesn't know when to stop.

Physicians' Disciplinary Policies

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, on a different matter, when we were last sitting, the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View raised a very troubling case of a physician in Alberta who has been charged with sexual assault but was allowed to maintain his medical licence. The Minister of Health, quite rightly, undertook to raise this with the College of Physicians & Surgeons. I'm wondering if she could please update the House on what response she has received. And has the college decided to change their policy in this respect?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm deeply concerned by this. Women and all Albertans should feel safe while accessing medical care. Doctors are in a position of trust, and patients have a right to know if there have been disciplinary histories for those they've put their trust in. We've definitely raised this with the College of Physicians & Surgeons – we did that immediately – and I want to assure everyone that they today believe they require some additional tools to be able to keep Albertans safe. We're very keen to work with them on making sure that those are in their tool box as we move forward. Unfortunately, that wasn't done previously by the former government.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, can the minister clarify, please, whether or not the College of Physicians & Surgeons has agreed that they will withdraw licences to practise from physicians who are charged with sexual assault or are under investigation for that kind of terrible crime?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Some governments are further ahead of us in their work in this regard. For example, Ontario recently took legislative steps to prevent sexual abuse by amending the Regulated Health Professions Act to expand the grounds for mandatory revocation of a medical licence. That hasn't been the case in other jurisdictions. But when I raised this as one step that we might be considering here in Alberta, the college said that they would certainly comply with us in making that the case were this House to adopt legislation that would enable them to do so. We're definitely working in close partnership to make sure that all Alberta women can feel safe when they're going to the doctor.

Mr. Kenney: I thank the hon. minister for the substantive answer, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister is telling us that the college will not do this unilaterally but requires legislation. Why could the college not take its own disciplinary action to withhold licences from physicians accused of sexual assault? Secondly, I can assure the minister that we would co-operate with the expeditious passage of any legislation granting the college that power.

Ms Hoffman: I'm excited to hear that the member is willing to show up and vote on a bill that is certainly important to women accessing health care services, Mr. Speaker. That is certainly good news. We are keen to work with the College of Physicians & Surgeons to address this. They have been willing partners.

It's good to hear that the member of the Official Opposition plans on showing up in this regard. Really, Mr. Speaker, I've heard the quote that 90 per cent of success is about showing up. As an Alberta woman I'm concerned about what the track record of that member has been, but I'm glad he plans on showing up for this vote.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Coal Community Transition Climate Leadership Plan

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government has said in the past that they would ensure that no single community would bear the brunt of the early phase-out of coal. That makes for a good sound bite, but it doesn't match the reality of the situation. The coal community transition fund is a good first step, but with some communities facing economic impacts in the hundreds of millions of dollars, it's barely a drop in the bucket. Coal communities are wondering: what comes next? To the Premier: will you commit to giving these communities all the support they need when it comes to transition?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We want coal communities to continue to be places where workers can earn a good living. It is a priority for us in this government, and that's why we are currently making sure that these workers have all the support that they need. You know, we're calling on the federal government as well to step up and pull their weight in supporting these communities. We've provided workers with direct funding to help bridge their income to re-employment or retirement. We are covering all the angles on this issue. Happy to work with the member if he has suggestions to help us going forward.

2:00

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, our caucus had the opportunity to speak with representatives from Parkland county. They laid out the difficulties that the coal phase-out poses for them, and it was pretty bleak. But they weren't there to complain; they were there to discuss solutions. They laid out several ways that the Parkland community could diversify and mitigate the loss of revenue. One piece was upgrading their highway infrastructure, a project that currently sits on the unfunded list. To the same minister: since your government accelerated the coal phase-out and pulled the rug out from under Parkland county, will you also accelerate their infrastructure funding and help them get back on their feet?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question and for his engagement with Parkland county. I, in fact, grew up in Parkland county, and we have engaged with that community. The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade, through his coal transition task force, engaged with that community and others, Hanna and elsewhere, to make sure that that $40 million fund meets the immediate needs of workers. Now, of course, there are other community investments that we can make. For example, we are looking at our options around community power projects and how communities can avail themselves of that. Of course, there are infrastructure investments that we can and are making.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, climate change is real, it's man-made, and it's a serious issue that we need to address. However, we need to make sure that any plan to address climate change doesn't leave Albertans in the lurch. Decisions like the coal phase-out, changes to electricity systems, and the carbon tax have real economic consequences, but there is little to no information available to the public about the total economic impact that this government's climate leadership plan has. To the same minister: will you commit to a detailed, Alberta-wide assessment of the economic impacts of the climate leadership plan whether they're positive or negative?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the climate progress report was posted on the Alberta Environment and Parks website in December 2017, which is a very detailed analysis of actions taken so far and actions that are planned for the future. One of those actions that we have taken is making sure that the federal government took action on coal-to-gas conversions for the communities that the hon. member has visited. The previous government did not allow for coal plants to convert to natural gas, which saves jobs and keeps those plants running for a lot of those workers that he's talking about. We got that job done.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Klein.

Aids to Daily Living Program

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta aids to daily living, or AADL, assists Albertans with long-term disabilities or chronic illnesses. The program's cost-sharing function plays an important role in ensuring that hearing aids, which can cost thousands of dollars, remain affordable. To the Minister of Health: can you please outline who is eligible for these benefits?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. We know that aids to daily living is a vital support to Albertans, which is why we've increased their funding by $3.6 million in Budget 2018, something that I was proud that members of this side of the House, members of the government, voted to support. There are a number of groups who may be eligible for hearing aid benefits: children under 18, postsecondary students, seniors over 65, and low-income adults between the ages of 18 and 65 as well.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There has been a great deal of confusion surrounding AADL's eligibility criteria for supports for Albertans with hearing loss. Can you please clarify how this applies to adults between the ages of 18 and 24 and how these policies are being communicated to the public?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much to the member for his advocacy on this issue and certainly for helping to share these messages. Adults between the ages of 18 and 24 who are enrolled in postsecondary or whose income is below a certain threshold qualify for AADL benefits if they don't already have access to other benefit plans. There is also a cost-share component which can be waived for low-income Albertans. Certainly, we are updating this information at every opportunity we get a chance to, but when other MLAs help spread the word, that's helpful, too.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Health again: given that AADL is a cost-share program and given that the current eligibility criteria for hearing aids excludes most Albertans aged 18 to 64, what is your ministry doing to provide other supports for those with hearing loss?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you. Making sure that people have the supports they need to lead healthy, dignified lives is a priority for our government, and we know it's a priority for Albertans who are in need. That's why we've increased funding for diagnostic care with allied health services. We will always protect the health care system. Unlike the opposition, who's lobbying for deep cuts that we know would lead to front-line layoffs and reduction of services, Mr. Speaker, this government, Alberta's NDP government, is fighting every day to make health care even better for the people of this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Methane Reduction Strategies

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two weeks ago during estimates of Environment and Parks the deputy minister said this about the federal government's methane regulations: "If we left it to a bunch of pointy-headed, condo-dwelling, cappuccino-sucking Ottawa bureaucrats to come up with the methane rules, we're not going to like the results." Well, the federal regulations are out, and the deputy minister was right; we don't like the results. The federal minister has declared that their rules take precedence. What direction can our minister give to Alberta industry stakeholders who have been waiting months for clarity and are now faced with even more uncertainty?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is true that my deputy has a colourful way of expressing himself, but this is why the Alberta Energy Regulator has come out with their directive, which was a result of the Methane Reduction Oversight Committee, a multistakeholder group of Albertans who worked very, very hard on a difficult file, which is to achieve our methane reduction targets in a way that is less prescriptive and less costly to industry. We have published that directive. We published it ahead of the federal government, and it will be that directive that guides our work in our methane reduction strategies.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that we are shaping up for yet another battle with Ottawa over these methane regulations, which are critically important both to our industry and to our efforts to make meaningful and measurable steps to limit greenhouse gas emissions, and given that Alberta and Ottawa's draft regulations are both coincidentally 124 pages long, but that's where the similarity ends, to the minister: could you provide Albertans with a concise summary of the key differences between the two sets of methane regulations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll be pleased to follow up with the member because I do not think I can give a concise summary in 35 seconds. What I can say is that our regulation came about as a result of a multistakeholder process that involved a number of Albertans, Alberta companies, indigenous people, and others. It is less prescriptive than the federal regulation. It intends to get to the reduction target but in a way that is less costly for industry, and that was the way that we chose as the government because we understand that the industry wants to do the right thing but they want to do it in the most cost-effective way possible.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the federal regs developed by the aforementioned "pointy-headed, condo-dwelling, cappuccino-sucking Ottawa bureaucrats" have been endorsed by industry critics such as Environmental Defence and the David Suzuki Foundation and given that they are urging the federal government to supersede the made-in-Alberta methane regulations that were developed with Alberta stakeholders and given that this is yet another example of how the self-flagellation of our economy by the NDP carbon tax has failed to win over the vocal critics of our industry, to the minister: what specific measures are you taking now to ensure that our methane regulations will in fact take precedence in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The action that we are taking is that the Alberta Energy Regulator has published their directive, and we will move forward on that basis. Some more action that we are taking, for example, is ensuring that we have clean tech funds available to companies who want to reduce their methane. We've published the methane reduction offset protocol, and we've got more funds to come for measuring and reporting for small firms. We're going to get this job done. We don't need the federal government to tell us how to do it. We'll have a made-in-Alberta plan.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Oral Question Period Questions and Responses

Mr. Kenney: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, a few minutes ago I asked a series of completely nonpartisan questions about a very important issue about sexual harassment conducted by physicians. I complimented the Minister of Health for her answer. I offered to co-operate with her. Her response was a highly partisan and personal attack. My question for the Premier is: does she think that is appropriate, and are her ministers encouraged to respond to nonpartisan, substantive policy questions with partisan and personal attacks?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you. I am very proud of the work that our government is doing to stand up for women, ensuring that when they go to a doctor's appointment they can do so safely, without bullying, harassment, or intimidation. Whether that's outside the office or inside the office, Mr. Speaker, it doesn't matter. Women in Alberta deserve to access health care safely. This side of the House is making that a priority. We certainly welcome the opposition to join us in that should they choose to, but I won't apologize for standing up for women. I will do it every day, and I will do my job and expect others to do theirs as well. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please. Order.

Mr. Kenney: The original question was about sexual harassment of women by physicians, this last question was about decorum and civility in this place, and what we're getting, Mr. Speaker, are yet more and increasingly loud partisan attacks. I'd like to ask any minister from the government, perhaps the House leader: is the NDP government committed as a general goal to respect for decorum and civility in this Assembly?

Mr. Mason: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. You know, I've been here since, well, long before the election, but since this opposition was elected, and the kind of attacks that I've seen from them, particularly on our women ministers, are all a matter of record. They've been put on the record a number of times. Now the new tactic of the new leader is to turn the little rascals into little angels and say: mom, mom, look at what they're doing over there. Quite frankly, it's a ploy, it's artificial, it's disingenuous, and it's not going to work.

Mr. Kenney: So for the record, Mr. Speaker, it's the view of the NDP government that decorum and civility in the Assembly is a ploy that they will not fall for? Is that the standard which they think Albertans expect of members of the Legislature on either side? Is the government willing to work with us, perhaps on revisions to the standing orders, to reduce the unnecessary noise in this place and to increase the mutual respect and civility of this as a democratic Chamber rather than a ping-pong match of insults and partisan attacks?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's very clear that the civility and the decorum in this House are of great importance to all sides. But in terms of the partisan attacks that the member is crying crocodile tears over at the moment, one only has to look to the Twitter feed, the social media activities of that opposition leader to realize the full extent of nasty, partisan political attacks.

The Speaker: Calgary-Fish Creek.

Carbon Levy Economic Impact

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not only is the carbon tax not making life better for Albertans, it is also making it more expensive for them to stay healthy and active by heaping significant costs on facilities like rec centres, arenas, and pools. These facilities are squeezed between reasonable recovery of the carbon tax and their commitment to the families they serve, themselves burdened by this punitive, all pain, no gain tax. To the minister of the environment: why burden these volunteer-managed, nonprofit facilities which contribute so much to the health and vibrancy of communities across Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have of course been investing in community-level infrastructure and in municipalities across the province with the largest capital investment in Alberta's history to build this province, to pull us out of the recession, and part of that was investing in a number of our community facilities. In addition to that, a few weeks ago the Minister of Municipal Affairs announced $54 million for investments in arenas and pools and curling rinks and other community infrastructure, among some other projects, in order that folks can get in there and do those retrofits, put tradespeople to work, and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, given that many Albertans are enriched by attending places of worship for the faith community of their choice and given that these faith communities compassionately give their time and money each and every day in support of struggling Albertans and given that the NDP's carbon tax cash grab and free light bulbs appear to be more important than meaningful, front-line contributions to making life better for Albertans, again to the minister: will you do the right thing in benefit of charities, nonprofits, and all Albertans and scrap the carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's talk about the faith community. Let's talk about the meeting I had with the Catholic Oblates on the subject of climate change and the Pope's encyclical. Let's talk about the faith round-table I had just down the road from the hon. member's riding in Calgary. Let's talk about McKillop United church in Lethbridge, that has made those investments in retrofits into their own church. The faith community understands our responsibility to one another and to future generations.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, given that small businesses in Calgary-Fish Creek continually bring up the carbon tax as a hindrance to hiring new staff, expanding operations, or in some cases their ability to just break even and given that even before the most recent hike the Calgary Chamber found that 73 per cent of businesses reported that their costs will increase due to the carbon tax, again to the minister: how can you say that you are making life better for Albertans when you keep making it harder and harder for locally owned and operated small businesses to make a humble living or to even simply survive your job-killing policies?

Ms Jansen: You know, Mr. Speaker, no matter how many times you repeat it, it doesn't make it a fact. If you want to talk about small-business confidence in Alberta – and I'm assuming that's where he wanted to go with this – the BDC says that small-business confidence is up: 35 per cent of small businesses are looking to hire more staff in this province; 73 per cent say they will invest in their business in 2018. That speaks to me of a confidence in small business in Alberta. You're welcome.

The Speaker: If I could maybe just get some advice from the opposition with respect to the negotiated schedule. Was the intention that we would go to the list that I was provided with? Could you help clarify? Thank you.

University of Alberta Honorary Degree Awards

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most of the country is baffled that the Alberta NDP is defending the University of Alberta's decision to give an honorary degree to a man who compares our oil and gas industry to slavery. It is the utmost disrespect not only to hard-working Albertans in that industry but to all Albertans. So, Minister, why doesn't the government agree with us that this individual should not be receiving an honorary degree?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question and for the opportunity to clarify my previous statements. I was clear every time that I've been asked on this matter that I don't agree with the University of Alberta's decision to award David Suzuki an honorary degree. I've also been quite clear that our government will defend the university's academic freedom in this and all cases and remind the member that this wasn't our decision to make in the first place. Our government, of course, has been focused on fighting for working Albertans by getting this pipeline built, something that the members opposite failed to do when they were in . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this Alberta NDP's caucus, members, cabinet ministers, including the Premier, have on the public record opposed our oil and gas industry and given that our oil and gas industry is one of the most ethically operated industries in the world, Minister, how can Albertans follow your answer and believe in your answer that you just gave me 10 seconds ago?

Mr. Schmidt: Let's talk about records for a minute, Mr. Speaker. On election night of the federal election in 2015, the member opposite was seen on TV saying: Trudeaumania, baby. So how can we believe anything that he says when it comes to credibility and anything that he says in support of what his party purports to believe in? Our government has been clear and consistent from day one that we intend to get this pipeline built to tidewater, and we will get it done.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I sensed at points in the last week that there were jovial emotions in the room. It seems, though, to be shifting a little bit, so I want to encourage the exchange about personal perspectives. We've seen some evidence of that today, but I know as hon. members you will all respect the principle that I'm addressing and will adjust accordingly.

I think we have a second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that after enormous pressure from the Official Opposition we just rid ourselves of Tzeporah Berman and Karen Mahon, who, by the way, are now proudly protesting against the construction of the Kinder Morgan pipeline, and given that this NDP government may have its eye on a new, like-minded adviser, maybe the minister can answer my question. Once Dr. Suzuki gets his honorary degree, will he become our oil sands adviser?

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, you know, the Leader of the Official Opposition was just talking about decorum in this place. I think decorum includes asking reasonable questions about government policy and not creating tinfoil-hat conspiracy theories that are actually not worthy of answering or being asked in the first place in this House. So I ask the hon. members to actually act out what they purport to believe in, restore decorum to this House, and ask reasonable questions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

2:20 Teachers' Association Resolution on News Media

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I asked the minister about a resolution the Alberta Teachers' Association executive council has asked the ATA members to reaffirm. This resolution asks the Department of Education to instruct media on how they should be reporting results from a province-wide achievement test. Now, perhaps I caught the minister off guard, and he thought I was asking about something else, because his answers had nothing to do with my question. To the minister: if passed by their members, will you follow the ATA's directive and tell the Alberta media how they should be doing their jobs?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I heard the member's question loud and clear yesterday and said what I would say again here today. We are the government of Alberta here, and we make choices around how we govern and how we govern the Ministry of Education specifically. We use standardized testing, and we are building assessments in keeping with new curriculum. For both of those projects certainly we have lots of people with different opinions on how that might be achieved. I think the member opposite has an opinion on that, too. We take different things into consideration, but ultimately we take into consideration what is best for our children.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that, as I stated yesterday, for Alberta parents to have full faith in our education system, they need to know beyond a shadow of a doubt that all major partners are fully committed to openness and transparency and given that this directive seems to fly in the face of this ideal by essentially asking the government to tell media how they should be reporting on external data, again to the minister: just for clarity and one day before World Press Freedom Day do you feel this resolution represents an appropriate ask of your government by the ATA?

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, obviously, we'd never tell the media how to do their job. They do a fine job here in the province of Alberta reporting on the news of the day. So I'm not exactly sure where the line of questioning is going here, but certainly what we do do is make sure that we invest in education properly. We make sure that we have the very best choices for our children, and we make sure that the public can see that and the media reports on it, that they know that we have one of the best education systems in the country and, indeed, on the entire planet.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, given that parents across Alberta have the right to know how their school is performing compared to other schools and given that our caucus trusts parents to understand the complexity and the nuance involved in that aggregate data and given that I understand that the ATA is looking to protect teachers, again to the minister: do you side with parents and their right to access aggregate data as has been responsibly reported on for some time in Alberta, or do you side with the ATA in believing this information should be withheld?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, you know, we are working hard to build strong assessment protocols. I've made lots of reforms in regard to assessment. We're making lots of new curriculum, which we are informing and working with the public to do so. So to try to somehow attach some arcane thing that one group happened to have said, nothing to do with what we do as a government, is probably a little bit misleading and certainly not focused on what we're doing, which is improving education, making those investments. If he's interested in that, maybe he could have voted for the Education budget last week. That would have been . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members, lest I forget, I would like an opportunity at some point to discuss with the government House leaders – I'm assuming that I adjust the sequence of speakers accordingly, I trust.

I think we are at Calgary-Northern Hills.

Emergency Management

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This spring will mark the second year since wildfires threatened the communities of Wood Buffalo, including indigenous communities and beyond, in 2016. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Based on the trend over the last decade and assuming there will be more weather-related disruptive events in store for us, how will the newly amended Emergency Management Act address the lessons learned and the recommendations given based on previous disasters?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Many of these updates are in response to post-incident assessments from previous disasters because it's important that we learn from each event and we can improve to respond to the next one. Just as an example, the KPMG report after the Wood Buffalo fires recommended a review of this legislative framework, and that is what we are currently doing. The main update to this act, to this creation of this, is the local authority emergency management regulation, or LAEMR, which we are working on with the emergency management community right now. This regulation will ensure that all municipalities across the province have clear direction on emergency management practices so they are better prepared to respond to disasters and keep Albertans safe.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we move into the spring and a possible emergency disaster response season across the province, how are we better prepared to liaise with, co-ordinate with, and engage with valuable community partners in our emergency response to support Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Field officers from the Alberta Emergency Management Agency and regional representatives of Alberta Environment and Parks have been on the ground in many communities across this province to provide advice and help during the recent floods. The government has also provided flood equipment and mitigation equipment to all communities that have requested support from the provincial stockpile, and these include pumps, hoses, temporary dams, sandbags, sandbagging machines, and generators. Alberta is a leader in emergency management because we understand the importance of preparation and mitigation, and we will continue to be a leader.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Given that the summer months lead to drier conditions, wildfire preparedness becomes essential to ensure the safety of Albertans. How has the ministry implemented lessons learned from past wildfires to ensure potential concerns coming into the season are addressed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Along with Ag and Forestry the Alberta Emergency Management Agency is always monitoring the wildfire situation across Alberta. We routinely assess potential concerns and connect with public safety partners every single day. We work with communities year-round, advising them on their emergency management plans and understanding their risks, and fund programs such as FireSmart to help communities. We know you can never be too prepared for disasters, so ongoing training and teamwork is crucial and essential. Collaboration is key in Municipal Affairs, and we will continue to connect with communities around the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Suffield Elk Herd and Grazing Land

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Suffield base fire near Bindloss saw almost 100,000 acres of grassland destroyed, putting even more pressure on the sensitive native grasslands to handle grazing for so many elk, so it's imperative now more than ever that definitive action be taken. To the environment minister: will your government have a concrete plan in place to deal with this out-of-control herd should these elk do extensive damage to surrounding ranchers' properties and crops?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The department does in fact already have a plan to reduce the size of the Suffield elk herd. As I understand it, the herd has been almost halved at this point in the last three or four years, and we will continue to take those management actions to ensure that that herd is compatible with the other uses for that land, including people's private property, fencing, and grazing dispositions.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Given that the population of elk was never supposed to exceed 800 animals and given that Environment and Parks has no definitive publicly released wildlife management plan to deal with this problem, Minister, given the loss of foraging opportunities for this herd and the possibility of increased damage to the surrounding private lands, are you planning on increasing the number of tags or lengthening the hunting season to ensure this problem does not spiral out of control?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll be pleased to have department officials share the management plan for the Suffield elk with the hon. member. There is a considerable plan that is shared every year with stakeholders and affected municipalities, landowners, grazing lease holders, and others. Having said that, the wildlife regulations, the hunting regulations are reviewed every year, and we are looking at exactly those kinds of tools that the hon. member raises with respect to landowner tags, hunting seasons, and so on.

2:30

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the environment minister has acknowledged that farmers and ranchers are responsible stewards of the land and given that the loss of grazing pastures due to a fire was caused by others' negligence and given that the loss of grazing land could cause unforeseen hardships for area farmers and ranchers, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: are there any plans to allow grazing access to other Crown lands or provide some sort of program until such time as the burnt-up grasslands have recovered enough to sustain normal grazing?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We will take the hon. member's suggestions under advisement. Grazing lease policies and dispositions and so on are administered by the Department of Environment and Parks, and we would be pleased to engage with the landowners that have been affected, if they are in fact his constituents, and get him some answers on that matter. In the main the hon. member is right that we have acknowledged that grazing lease holders are an important part of environmental sustainability for the entire province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

East Central Francophone School Principal

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Minister of Education, it has now been over 40 days that l'école du Sommet students and parents have been waiting for answers regarding the suspension/dismissal of their principal. The lack of information from your office only feeds the speculation and rumours and drives a wedge between the parents and their elected board. I have asked you previously to speak to these frustrated parents. Minister, do you have any information on the status of this situation?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. Certainly, we take this matter very seriously and are monitoring the situation very closely. It's my understanding that the east central francophone board did send a letter to all parents at the beginning of last month to provide some information around the principal's absence. The same school board has engaged and has conducted a very thorough investigation in regard to the circumstances around the suspension. That's the status of the circumstances right now, and as you can imagine . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there are less than two months left in the school year and parents and students are worried about falling grades due to the high stress levels in the school and given that parents are also concerned that students may have been taken off school property to be interviewed without parental consent, Minister, do you feel that this is a safe and nurturing environment for these students, and can you confirm or deny the parents' concerns that students have been taken off school property without consent, and did your department authorize this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, it's very important to respect the process and the due procedure around the school board and its investigation in this particular matter. As I said, I know that they did and have been conducting an investigation around this particular HR matter, and I think that that process has been moving expeditiously considering the difficult circumstances. I recognize that it's caused a great deal of consternation. I am very concerned about that, and certainly we hope to see a conclusion to this situation.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that parents have expressed their extreme frustration to your department and have in most cases not even received a reply, e-mail, or phone call, let alone any information regarding their concerns, Minister, are you aware that parents and students will be holding a demonstration at the francophone school board office in St. Paul tomorrow at 11:20? More importantly, why did it have to get to this stage, and when will you speak to these parents directly?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, it's very important in regard to a very sensitive HR matter that you follow procedure. This is the procedure that follows through the locally elected school boards, and they are the ones that are conducting the investigation. It's not Alberta Education, and that is the protocol and the procedure by which you proceed in these issues. I know that it's caused a great deal of consternation and problems in the community and at the school specifically, to which I am very sympathetic, and I hope for an expeditious resolution to the circumstance as soon as possible.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Government Procurement Process

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, it's absolutely critical that vendors accurately and clearly respond to RFP questions, no misrepresentations as to facts, capabilities, and resources. It's also critical that the procuring authority conduct due diligence of proponent submissions to ensure that what is being represented is accurate. If it's determined during such due diligence or at a later date that there was misrepresentation that was material, the procuring authority must have and exercise the right to disqualify the proponent. My first question is to the Minister of Service Alberta. Could she generally explain within the context of her ministry's procurement policies whether material misrepresentations by vendors are addressed?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely, our procurement policy is very robust. We have the best advice from our legal counsel throughout government, whether the procurement is being done within goods and services, within Service Alberta, or whether it's procurement that's being done within another department or the Department of Infrastructure. I'm happy to assure the member and get him additional information if he would like.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question again is to the Minister of Service Alberta. Given that I recognize there may be exceptions, would a proponent that made a material misrepresentation that offended the RFP provisions be disqualified?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. Again, it would be situation to situation. The facts of a particular situation of procurement would need, obviously, to be reviewed to determine whether or not there had been material misrepresentation, at which point we would seek legal advice from our department. Wherever there is something that happens in a procurement where there are grounds for disqualification, then disqualification would occur.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question is to the Minister of Health. If she was aware that Alberta Health Services had accepted a bid which included material representation that offended the RFP provisions, would she direct that bid to be disqualified, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the opportunity to answer a health question, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I welcome the member to bring forward any particular concerns that he might have. I understand that he might be speaking to a case that's under a review process right now. If that's the case, certainly the review is under way, and that's the proper manner for these to be taken forward. We have every expectation that every dollar that's invested by the province of Alberta, whether directly or indirectly, is done so in a respectful and appropriate manner.

Spring Flooding

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked a series of reasonable questions about flooding in the Little Bow riding and, frankly, I'm afraid I'm going to need some clarification for my constituents. Now, yesterday the Minister of Indigenous Affairs somewhat glossed over answering my question in order to take a shot at the previous government. Siksika Nation has suffered flooding this spring but suffered severe flooding in 2013. Minister,

I ask this reasonable question again. Have you advocated for the $4.5 million outlay by the Siksika Nation for the 2013 flood to be reimbursed by the federal government?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. I know that we have been working very closely with the Siksika Nation to deal with the flooding issues, initially, of course, the flooding issues arising from the 2013 flood. We of course have agreed with them to allow them to be the general managers of the build on their community and have supported them completely in fulfilling that process. As they fulfill that process, funds are reimbursed by the federal government, which we support in any way that we possibly can.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that spring flooding is occurring throughout the province, not just in my riding, and given that these municipalities have already begun cleaning up and rebuilding important infrastructure, Minister of Municipal Affairs, what they want to know is whether their government is going to take this situation as seriously as it is out there and make their intentions known as to whether emergency funding will be forthcoming and when they can expect this news?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I've said in this House before that we've had people on the ground out there, our emergency management folks, Environment and Parks, helping and assisting not only with advice but supplies as well from the provincial stockpile. I was in Calgary yesterday and made an announcement about more funding. We will bring forward $10 million to assist some of these municipalities, and we will be communicating with them and seeing where the highest priority is and go from there.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, what has happened in Alberta has been somewhat devastating. Given that communities have called for a local state of emergency because of an event that they have little control over and given that several communities took expensive proactive actions to mitigate flood damage in their communities and given that when disaster strikes, these communities need to be confident that their government will be there for them, Minister, how many communities to date have declared local emergencies due to flooding this spring, and when can they expect to see meaningful programs for help?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I know my phone and my e-mail and my alert app have been going pretty busy the last couple of weeks with all these states of emergency. They change daily, so I don't want to give you a number right now because I might be off by a couple. Some of the supports, as I said yesterday, the $10 million we brought forward are for mitigation and proactive stockpile and things like that and also looking at how we can reimburse, how that's going to look. We are going to communicate with the municipalities. Then we do have the disaster relief program, which is something that happens after the events have happened...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Orders of the Day
Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 12
Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act

The Speaker: I recognize the Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the Minister of Energy I ask leave to move second reading of Bill 12, Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act.

I will speak to the details of Bill 12 shortly. First, however, I would like to state how frustrating it is to have to table this bill at all. Alberta has been playing by the rules. This is not an action that anyone wants to take, and we do not take it lightly. This frustration is made ever more intense by the B.C. government's blatant hypocrisy, as it was recently announced that approval has been given to construct a new 13-kilometre underground pipeline to Vancouver International Airport that would supply aviation fuel from an upgraded marine terminal and adjacent fuel storage facility on the south arm of the Fraser River. In other words, when a project falls under their own jurisdiction, they seem to allow it. When it doesn't, as is the case with Trans Mountain, they oppose it.

The bottom line, Mr. Speaker: the B.C. government cannot continue to delay the Trans Mountain pipeline project without economic consequences. The B.C. government cannot continue to impact Alberta's economic recovery, and the B.C. government cannot continue to keep Albertans from jobs, jobs in construction and extraction, jobs in engineering and accounting, jobs for the people of Alberta and in my constituency in Calgary-Klein and — you know where else? — jobs in British Columbia. Recent polls show that the majority of British Columbians support the building of the Trans Mountain pipeline.

Through this bill we are standing up for Alberta and for a healthy Canadian energy sector, including the working women and men it employs. We're all aware of roadblocks that have resulted in delays to the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion, and we all know, too, why this project is essential to Canada's energy sector, but it does bear repeating. Historically the biggest customer for Alberta oil and gas has been the United States, but in recent years that has shifted dramatically. Today the United States is our biggest competitor. Because there is one buyer, the oil and gas resources that belong to all Albertans are being sold at a discounted price. This is not a responsible approach. As Albertans we deserve to get the best price for our resources.

That is why we need access to new markets. That is why our government supports the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion. We believe that Albertans deserve to get better value for the resources that we all own. This pipeline will help us do that. And it won't just benefit Alberta. As I said, Alberta's natural resources are owned by Alberta, but the truth is that the benefits derived from these resources are shared across the country. After all, Mr. Speaker, when Alberta works, Canada works. As such, pipeline capacity is of the utmost importance to everyone across our country. Without the market access created through the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion, the Canadian economy is losing $40 million in revenue every day. Citizens from every part of our country will benefit from this project. It will generate revenues to support the services that Albertans and Canadian families need: schools, hospitals, roads, and transit.

Those revenues will also protect the funding that is aiding our transition to a greener economy. I think it's important to remind people of that, Mr. Speaker, since I know that there are people who believe that opposing the Trans Mountain pipeline means protecting the environment, but I ask them to consider the following. There is no meaningful progress on addressing climate change in Canada without Alberta's participation. Moreover, our Premier has stated that a climate change plan that leaves working people behind is not a viable plan, but through the made-in-Alberta climate leadership plan we are demonstrating how good jobs that support working families and environmental protection can and do go hand in hand. It's a plan that caps oil sand emissions, cuts methane emissions nearly in half, puts a price on carbon, and phases out coal-fired electricity while investing in renewables. It's also a plan that directly resulted in federal approval of new pipelines like the Trans Mountain expansion.

Mr. Speaker, it's worth noting that as Canadians learn more about Alberta's energy sector and about the work that has been done to make the industry more environmentally sustainable, support for the Trans Mountain pipeline is rising. Today a majority of Canadians, including 55 per cent of British Columbians, according to a recent poll, support Trans Mountain. That's in large part thanks to the hard work of our Premier and others in our government, who have been travelling across the country telling Alberta's story.

Unfortunately, the government of British Columbia still insists upon putting up roadblocks, which brings us to the need for Bill 12. Through the passing of Bill 12 we would ensure that the interests of Albertans are optimized before authorizing the export of natural gas, crude oil, or refined fuels from Alberta. This legislation would give the government authority to, if necessary, require any company exporting energy products from Alberta to acquire a licence.

At this point I'll go into a few specifics about what the legislation contains, starting with the licensing requirement. First, to be clear, companies would not be automatically required to apply for an export licence. They would only be required to do so if the Minister of Energy deems it necessary, and as per section 2(3) of the legislation the first step in this process is for the minister to determine whether requiring export licences is in the public interest. Criteria for this decision include establishing

- (a) whether adequate pipeline capacity exists to maximize the return on crude oil and diluted bitumen produced in Alberta,
- (b) whether adequate supplies and reserves of natural gas, crude oil and refined fuels will be available for Alberta's present and future needs.

Should the minister determine that such a decision would be in the interest of Albertans, she may then establish the terms and conditions of such a licence. These are outlined in section 4(2) of the legislation. The minister may deem any terms and conditions she deems appropriate. These conditions may include but would not be limited to

- (a) the point at which the licensee may export from Alberta any quantity of natural gas, crude oil or refined fuels;
- (b) the method by which [these resources] may be exported from Alberta;
- (c) the maximum quantities... that may be exported from Alberta during the interval or intervals set out in the licence;
- (d) the maximum daily quantities of natural gas, crude oil or refined fuels that may be exported from Alberta;
- (e) the conditions under which the export... of [these resources] may be diverted, reduced or interrupted;
- (f) the period for which the licence is operative.

In addition, the minister may impose different terms and conditions upon licensees for different types of refined fuels.

The Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act also outlines the steps that would be taken if anyone fails to comply with the requirements of this act, any future regulations, or the terms or conditions of a licence. Companies could face fines of up to $10 million a day for as long as the offence continues, and individuals could face fines of up to $1 million a day. These details are included in section 7(2) of the legislation.

Along the same lines, the minister, as per section 8, “may make an order directing an operator to cease transporting natural gas, crude oil or refined fuels.” These operators include the holder of a pipeline licence under the Pipeline Act, the operator of a railway under the Railway (Alberta) Act, or the registered owner of a commercial vehicle under the Traffic Safety Act. Understandably, there will be specific questions about this legislation and how it will be implemented. Many of these answers will come through future regulations.

For example, if a company is ordered to acquire a licence for the export of applicable resources, details about the application process can be established via regulation. Potential future regulations may address but would not be limited to specifying other applicable fuels, applications for a licence or an amendment or renewal of a licence, fees for a licence or licence renewal, the terms or conditions to which licences are subject, and the method used for the measurement of natural gas, crude, or refined fuels.

The Preserving Canada’s Economic Prosperity Act would ensure that government has the tools in its tool belt that we need to protect the best interests of Albertans, including receiving the maximum value for our province’s natural energy resources and protecting the jobs and livelihoods of thousands of Albertans and Canadians. As I’ve stated, decisions about how best to utilize those tools have not been made.

Again, no companies would automatically be required through Bill 12 to acquire a licence to export natural gas, crude oil, or refined fuels. They would only be required to do so if ordered by the Minister of Energy. This legislation is about giving the minister more tools to get the pipeline built. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize that the powers in this legislation should not be taken lightly.

Our government pledged to industry from day one that there would be no surprises, and we’ve been true to our word on that. If we use this legislation, again, there will be no surprises. We will be fair, we will be thoughtful, and we will be strategic. Let’s be clear here. This isn’t a step we want to take, but we will if it means long-term benefits for our industry, for our province, and for Canada.

We know we’re on the right side of this issue, Mr. Speaker, and that’s not just here in Alberta. That’s what people across the country think. As I said earlier, national polling shows that two-thirds of Canadians support construction of this pipeline. That’s an increase of 10 per cent support since February, so it’s clear that the work of this government and our Premier is winning Canadians over. We will win. We will get this pipeline built, and we’re asking every member of this Assembly to stand with us united to get the result we all want and that this country needs, a strong and stable energy industry for years to come. Together let’s get this job done.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 12, Preserving Canada’s Economic Prosperity Act. I would like to thank the hon. Minister of Energy for bringing this bill forward. The Leader of the Official Opposition and the MLA for Calgary-Lougheed has only been talking about this for seven months and counting. Extraordinary times call for extraordinary measures, and Bill 12 has extraordinary measures.

Our fight is not against the hard-working people of British Columbia, but it’s a fight against NDP mayors and the NDP Premier and the NDP federal leader, Jagmeet Singh, and the NDP’s fellow-travellers like Tzeporah Berman, Karen Mahon, Greenpeace, the Tides Foundation, and their sugar daddies in the United States of America. It is unconscionable that a province would thumb its nose at the federal government and its neighbours over a matter which is exclusively federal jurisdiction. The federal government and the National Energy Board have approved this Trans Mountain pipeline expansion after a federal review. Mr. Speaker, the B.C. NDP is trying to pretend that they’re trying to save their coast. It’s not their coast; it is Canada’s coast.

British Columbia’s delay tactics, by taking the Kinder Morgan Trans Mountain pipeline expansion to the courts, not only affect this pipeline investment but also affect investment in all areas of the economy. As you know, Mr. Speaker, capital is liquid, capital is global, and capital flows to the areas of least resistance. With that, it takes the talent also. The capital will take the talent away, so then that will result in a brain drain in Alberta and Canada.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 12 is a loaded economic weapon. Make no mistake. If the NDP government aims Bill 12 at British Columbia and pulls the trigger, there will be consequences. As we said, we support this bill, we asked for it, but at the same time, as the critic for Energy it’s my job to talk about some of these consequences and some of the risks and how we mitigate those risks. It’s up to the NDP governments of both Alberta and British Columbia to mitigate those risks and do it in such a way that it doesn’t hurt their residents.

With the refineries down for maintenance in Edmonton we know what higher prices for gasoline and diesel look like. As supplies decline, the price increases, over $1.60 per litre in the Lower Mainland of British Columbia. What would those prices look like if the supply through the Kinder Morgan pipeline were halted? One cannot snap their fingers and have tankers from Washington state or California show up on a moment’s notice to save British Columbia with cheap petroleum again. Is British Columbia prepared for $2 or $3 for a litre of gasoline? We’ll see.

Mr. Speaker, the United Conservative Party Official Opposition is prepared to help the NDP government. We’ll help you load this economic weapon by supporting Bill 12. But will the NDP government pull the trigger? Mr. Speaker, Albertans know how we got here. This Premier was radio silent when Energy East was killed, when Northern Gateway was killed, and when Keystone XL was vetoed by Obama. This Premier didn’t say one word. A couple of days ago, when the hon. opposition leader asked if she actually discussed it with the Prime Minister, she, I think reluctantly or by mistake, admitted that she chose one of the two projects to the west coast, which means that she was not in favour of Northern Gateway. Probably she told her good friend Justin Trudeau to kill that project. That’s why we’re asking the NDP: are you prepared to handle the consequences of using Bill 12 to penalize the government of British Columbia for its intransigence?

News reports say that the Alberta NDP is not going to act on Bill 12. News reports say that our Premier told B.C. Premier John Horgan and Saskatchewan Premier Scott Moe that she wasn’t going to act on Bill 12. If it is a fact, it’s a shame.

Industry is very skittish about Bill 12. If petroleum products are halted in provincial pipelines from accessing the Trans Mountain pipeline, industry will definitely demand compensation. Are you ready for that? Nonetheless, there is support for Bill 12 among the industry. I spoke to many of my stakeholders, and they said that they’re in support of this. The Explorers and Producers Association of Canada and the Petroleum Services Association of Canada are supportive of Bill 12 to help resolve the impasse over the Kinder Morgan Trans Mountain pipeline expansion.

If Bill 12 is used to stop petroleum access into British Columbia, Washington state may become an injured bystander. Although the government of Washington state was there to oppose the Trans Mountain pipeline together with his bestie John Horgan, he knows that the state of Washington will also face the collateral damage. Thirty-five per cent of the petroleum going to the five refineries in Washington state comes through the existing Trans Mountain pipeline. With Alaska's petroleum exports in decline, Alberta's exports to the west coast's PADD 5 are more important than ever.

Cutting off the flow of petroleum to an American state triggers NAFTA, Mr. Speaker. Experience has shown that when provinces cause NAFTA disputes, it's Ottawa who has to pay the bill, not Alberta, not the provinces. We are to make sure that the federal government pays that. Just look at Danny Williams in Newfoundland. He moved to penalize AbitibiBowater by expropriating a hydro dam and water rights. He accidentally expropriated the pulp mill, triggering NAFTA and forcing Ottawa to pay hundreds of millions in compensation.

What a poetic justice it would be, Mr. Speaker, if the federal government, who refuses to invoke section 92(10)(c) of the Constitution Act, 1867, to push the pipeline through, is instead slapped upside the face with a NAFTA challenge worth hundreds of millions of dollars. That might be the best use for the $20 billion that Alberta sends to Ottawa each year and never gets back.

Section 92(10)(c) reads:

Such Works as, although wholly situate within the Province, are before or after their Execution declared by the Parliament of Canada to be for the general Advantage of Canada or for the Advantage of Two or more of the Provinces.

There you have it, Mr. Speaker. Ottawa could avoid a lot of problems by invoking this clause, 92(10)(c).

But they chose not to. Why? Because the Prime Minister, Justin Trudeau, is on record calling for the phase-out of the oil sands. Trudeau's principal secretary, Gerald Butts, is a true believer in all this shut down the oil sands business. He's even hiring former employees of the Tides Foundation, the radical environmentalists who are funding the protesters in British Columbia.

Saskatchewan is incensed with British Columbia, too. They have brought in their own version of Bill 12. They call it Bill 126, An Act Respecting Energy Exports.

We live in a federation. We do so in a bargain called the Constitution Act, 1867. The division of powers is outlined in sections 91 and 92 of the Constitution. British Columbia did not join Canada until 1871. B.C.'s main demand to join the country was the construction of a wagon road across the mountains to connect the province to the east. Ottawa went one better and promised a railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway. Then they say the rest is history, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you so much.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise in debate on Bill 12, the Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act, on behalf of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. I am delighted that the government has come forward with this legislation given that I've been calling for the measures included within it since last July. I did so because last July the New Democrat Party came to office in British Columbia with the support of the Green Party on a commitment, signed in their coalition government agreement, to, quote, use every tool in the tool box to prevent the construction of the proposed Kinder Morgan Trans Mountain pipeline expansion project. The very existence of the current NDP government in Victoria is dependent on using every tool in the tool kit to prevent the construction of this pipeline.

I took the position that Alberta needed a fight-back strategy, that we needed to demonstrate that if the government of British Columbia were to prevent or delay or create uncertainty around the construction of Kinder Morgan, there would be very serious consequences. As I said at the time, if British Columbia's NDP government starts a trade war, Alberta must end it, and the NDP government in B.C. must understand that there will be very serious consequences should they proceed with their threatened blockage of this essential national infrastructure project.

Over the course of last summer, Mr. Speaker, I articulated in speeches, interviews, and opinion articles elements of what would constitute a fight-back strategy. First of all, I suggested that we begin with persuasion and diplomacy and, if such measures were not effective, that we should find high-profile but symbolic ways to demonstrate our resolve on the construction of this pipeline, including, I suggested, funnily enough, a boycott of B.C. wines.

Then I went on to suggest that perhaps we should find a way to conduct periodic safety inspections of B.C. goods being exported through Alberta to the rest of the country, based on the premise that if they would not allow Alberta to export its major product through west coast ports, we should protect our own environmental interests in the shipment of goods and services from British Columbia to the rest of the country. Indeed, I think that the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti has offered to be our chief customs inspector, at least up there in the Peace Country.

Mr. Speaker, I then went on to suggest that if British Columbia's NDP were to violate the Constitution by seeking to impede the construction of a federally approved infrastructure project, this pipeline – I asked: why would we allow British Columbia producers to ship their natural gas through pipelines in Alberta to U.S. markets toll-free? I suggested that perhaps a toll ought to be applied to those British Columbia natural gas exports that come through Alberta.

Finally, I suggested as early as last August that as an ultimate consequence we should consider replicating what Peter Lougheed did in 1980 in adopting legislation and regulations that allowed his government to constrain the shipment of Alberta crude to central Canada to protest the outrageous national energy program of Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau.

Madam Speaker, in fact, I can quote myself. On September 20, 2017, at a United Conservative Party leadership forum I said the following:

If the B.C. government, through dilatory measures, stands in the way of the construction of the approved expansion of Kinder Morgan Trans Mountain, then there will be consequences. We need a premier who will make that clear to B.C. and Ottawa, like Peter Lougheed did in the early 1980s. The Mayor of Vancouver says he wants a carbon free economy by 2040. Maybe we should help give him a carbon free Vancouver by 2020.

I said further, for example, on October 27 on CBC national television:

If the B.C. government makes good on its threats to use dilatory means to block the construction of that approved pipeline, and in doing so violate the rule of law in Canada's economic union, I would make it clear that there would be consequences that we would consider [what Peter Lougheed did in the early 1980s by withholding permits for] the shipment of gas to Sarnia to bring the federal government to the table on the National Energy Program. We might have to consider a similar approach if the

B.C. government stands in the way of this wealth and job creating national infrastructure project.

Those are things I said last year, Madam Speaker.

Unfortunately, at the time our Premier mocked and ridiculed these ideas. She characterized these proposals, particularly the one for turning off the taps, as myself having a, quote, temper tantrum. She said that no pipeline will get built as a result of such a temper tantrum. She said that I was trying to build walls around Alberta, and at one point she said that I was imitating Donald Trump in seeking to build a wall around Alberta and make British Columbia pay for it for suggesting these ideas. So imagine my surprise, imagine my delight, the joyful serendipity of discovering the Premier standing up in late January of this year saying almost word for word what I have been saying since last July that she had mocked.

That's fine. There's no patent on a good idea, Madam Speaker. Anybody is welcome to borrow a good idea. That's what I always think. You know, the great former president Ronald Reagan, the man who won the Cold War, reignited the American economy, restored hope and pride to his nation, had on his desk in the Oval Office a plaque that said: anything can get done if you don't care who gets the credit. So in the spirit of the great Ronald Reagan let me say that I give full credit to the hon. the Premier for these brilliant ideas about a fight-back strategy. I claim none of the credit myself. In fact, I will even engage in the wilful ignorance of my New Democrat friends opposite in pretending that the opposition never suggested these ideas in the first place. Let's pretend none of those things were said, and we'll even pretend henceforth that the Premier did not mock and ridicule these ideas.

Madam Speaker, it is in that spirit of comity, of generosity of spirit that we enthusiastically support the Premier's trademark legislation of this session, Bill 12, because it is in the province's interest, and that's what matters, not who takes political credit for it, not who borrows which ideas, but whether or not we get the job done for this province.

Let me then speak to the principle at heart here, why this is so essential, why it so directly relates to our province's vital strategic economic interests. Madam Speaker, I've addressed this in the Chamber before, but we Albertans are so blessed to possess 10 per cent of the world's recoverable crude oil reserves. We have the third-largest recoverable reserves on the face of the Earth, and we are the fourth-largest producer in the world.

Now, I know there are members opposite and ideological fellow-travellers who in past years spent a lot of time on the steps of this Legislature at antienergy, anti-oil, antipipeline protests with signs that would say things like: no oil, no tar sands, no pipelines. I understand that there is a diversity of views on this and that that diversity is reflected. I mean, there are people in this province who believe that our having the third-largest oil reserves is not a blessing but a curse. Shockingly – shockingly – 25 per cent of Albertans consistently in the public opinion polls indicate that they are opposed to the Trans Mountain pipeline project, a quarter of the population. Madam Speaker, I'm delighted to report to you that none of them intend to vote for the United Conservative Party. I can't imagine which parties they support.

But what we do know is that there is substantial opposition to the energy industry in this province that comes, broadly speaking, from what I call the green left. Metaphorically, I call it the green left. It's like a watermelon. It's green on the outside but red on the inside. Those folks call it dirty oil. They call it the tar sands, right? They say: keep it in the ground. You know, some of them showed up at a political convention here in Edmonton – it was March of 2016, I believe – the NDP's convention. They adopted a resolution proposed by a couple of – I'm trying to be charitable – very ideological figures from Toronto, Avi Lewis and his wife Naomi Klein. It's called the Leap Manifesto. The NDP at the convention here – and when I say the NDP, Madam Speaker, it's worth pointing out that the NDP is the NDP.

I have such a deep interest in the NDP that I actually have their constitution here on my desk. I won't bore members of the House, but it's interesting to find that the Alberta NDP is a constituent legal part of the Canadian NDP. It's one and the same. They're the same organization: same national leader, same national policies, same membership, same finances, same everything. The NDP came here in March, to Edmonton of all places. This is known as the City of Champions, but it's also known as the oil city, isn't it? The home of the Oilers. The NDP came to oil town, and they passed the Leap Manifesto resolution. They said: "Keep it in the ground. Keep it in the ground."

You know, one of the people who I suspect voted for that resolution is the NDP Premier of British Columbia, John Horgan, and I wouldn't be surprised if the NDP mayor of Vancouver, Gregor Robertson, voted here in oil town to keep it in the ground. I'm pretty sure that Derek Corrigan, the NDP mayor of Burnaby, was also there voting for the Leap Manifesto. Jagmeet Singh, the leader of the NDP, was there supporting the keep-it-in-the-ground Leap Manifesto, as did a majority of the delegates. I don't know. I think I'm starting to see a bit of a trend here. I think there's a pattern, Madam Speaker. It is true that, unfortunately, the majority of New Democrats in this country oppose the industry that is, in many ways, the beating heart of Alberta's economy.

You see, Madam Speaker, when I look at those oil reserves, like most Albertans, what I see is an invaluable asset that has a current notional market value at the current Brent prices of over $11 trillion. That's $11 trillion. When I look at the fact that this NDP government is on track for a hundred billion dollar debt and they're borrowing nearly a billion dollars a month, when I look at the estimate of approximately $1.2 trillion in cumulative public debt and unfunded liabilities, unfunded health care and pension liabilities, when I look at those numbers, I realize how fortunate we are to have an asset which can help us to finance those debts, to hopefully pay off those debts and invest in the kind of quality of life and social programs, infrastructure, education, and health care that we hope for.

For me, Madam Speaker, I must confess that I have a hard time grasping the mentality of those on the political left in Canada. I really do. There's this term in psychology called cognitive dissonance. Cognitive dissonance means having the capacity to hold two contradictory propositions simultaneously, and it requires a bit of a mental trick. You've got to be able to sort of ignore one side of your mind while you're postulating another position. Well, I cannot think of a better example – they should probably teach this in psychology 101 – of the phenomenon of cognitive dissonance than the notion proposed by the left in Canada that we should always spend more on everything, more and more and more, because more spending, the left maintains, equals a higher standard of living in every instance. They hold that and maintain that.

You know what? I don't agree with the premise, but it's a defensible position. But at the same time, the same voices of the Canadian left say that we should shut down the industries which create the wealth to allow us to pay for those programs. This is a deep and irreconcilable contradiction in the political left in Canada. They want to stop producing the wealth, but they somehow want to pay for endless increases in government spending. Maybe it's because I studied Aristotelian formal logic or something. The syllogisms just don't add up.

Madam Speaker, the point is this, that David Suzuki and NDP leader Jagmeet Singh and NDP Premier John Horgan and NDP Mayor Gregor Robertson and NDP Mayor Derek Corrigan and all of their fellow-travellers regard this $11 trillion asset, most of which is located in the province of Alberta, as a problem and not a solution.

That is why starting about 10 years ago; it was actually 2008, the Rockefeller Brothers foundation – I mean, if you were to write a movie plot, this would be rejected for implausibility, Madam Speaker. The Rockefeller Brothers – by the way, they're a robber baron family that made their massive wealth in coal, oil, and gas – gathered a bunch of the green left organizations from Canada and the United States and around the world to what was called the Tar Sands Campaign conference in Manhattan, on the 80th floor of a luxury office tower, in 2008. Of course, all of these environmentalists flew in, presumably many of them first class and business class, and they undoubtedly stayed at five-star hotels in Manhattan and were wined and dined by Rockefeller Brothers. They spent three days together scheming on how to stop the development of Alberta's oil sands. The Rockefeller Brothers had brought to that meeting a number of prospective major donors.

By the way, how much time do I have?

Mr. Nixon: You've got up to 90 minutes.

Mr. Kenney: Okay. Well, that's where we're going, I think.

Madam Speaker, Rockefeller Brothers brought together major donors, including the Pew Charitable Trust, the MacArthur Foundation, Leadnow, the Tides Foundation U.S., Greenpeace Foundation, and other major foundations. They connected them to these activist groups. Basically, what they decided was this – and all of these documents, or many of these documents, are now in the public domain thanks, in part, to the diligent research of Vivian Krause, a brilliant woman who's been willing to tell truth to power in Vancouver, doing her independent research.

Essentially what they determined was this. They determined that they had zero chance of getting the other top energy producers in the world to turn off the taps and leave it in the ground. They determined that the socialist Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, with the largest reserves in the world, would not stop producing. It didn't matter. They realized they could send Elizabeth May down there to chain herself to a fence, and it wouldn't stop Venezuela from producing oil.

Then they realized, Madam Speaker, that they could go to the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, with the second-largest reserves on Earth, and they could send David Suzuki to tell them that oil is slavery and that immigration is evil and that Stephen Harper should be thrown in jail. By the way, he never said that about the King of Saudi Arabia. He wants to throw Stephen Harper in jail but not the King of Saudi Arabia or the President of Venezuela. They realized that the campaign wouldn't have any effect in Saudi, and that's the second-largest producer.

They realized that if they went to the fourth-largest producer, Vladimir Putin's Russian Federation, it wouldn't turn out so well. In fact, they did. Madam Speaker, I don't do this often, but I've got to give credit to Greenpeace because Greenpeace actually sent some of their western European activists to an offshore Russian drilling platform in the Arctic sea, and they got a couple of their boats going around there. Vladimir Putin gets on the phone, dispatches the Russian navy, and the next thing you know, these people are in jail for the better part of a year. You know, I give them credit, actually, for the courage of their convictions, but funnily enough, after they spent a year in a Putin jail, they didn't go back. They never went back to Russia. Not once. You know where they went? Here. They went to Canada.

That's the point. The green left organizations that gathered at the Rockefeller Brothers foundation in New York City in 2008 mapped out a strategy focusing on Canada and Alberta as the soft target, as the Boy Scout, as the pushover. They developed a multifaceted organic strategy of advocacy and activism, deeply well resourced, begun by the stigmatization of particularly Alberta's oil sands, which, of course, they called tar sands. Madam Speaker, they succeeded brilliantly. I must confess that they succeeded partly because of the passivity of Alberta's oil and energy companies, who took for granted public understanding and acceptance of the industry and didn't fight back. Frankly, previous Alberta governments need to take part of the responsibility for this, too. Alberta's government did not invest enough in public education about energy literacy. So through the ensuing decade they managed to convince many people in Canada and particularly those outside, in Europe and elsewhere, that the oil sands were the moral equivalent of big tobacco.

Madam Speaker, I recall that I was at a very interesting conference in Europe with heads of government, heads of state, major corporate leadership from around the world about four years ago in Copenhagen. I was speaking to – I'm not at liberty to identify the person, but this person would be one of the largest shareholders of Royal Dutch Shell. This individual was berating me about the environmental devastation of the Canadian tar sands, not even knowing that this person owned a good chunk of a $4 billion investment in the oil sands. That's how effective the Rockefeller Brothers Tar Sands Campaign was in the defamation of this province and its most important wealth creator. That started with the campaign of delegitimization, of defamation, of stigmatization of the oil sands, but the strategy ultimately was to land lock this resource. Again, knowing they couldn't land lock Qatari or Iranian, Venezuelan, Saudi, or Russian oil, the strategy was to land lock Canadian oil.

I must confess that the strategy of the green left was brilliant. They understood better than I did, better than perhaps many of us did, how much support they had in Canadian politics. Much of that support is personified by the principal secretary to the Rt. Hon. the Prime Minister, a man named Gerry Butts. Mr. Butts, who many describe as the most powerful person in Ottawa, is, when his boss is out doing photo ops about his socks and selfies and so forth, making the policy decisions.

Mr. Butts was president of the World Wildlife Federation of Canada, an organization which he took from being a mainstream conservationist organization, you know, which had seniors sending them $10 cheques from their pensions to save hapless seals and endangered species, and he turned that group into a completely hostile, ideological, antienergy, anti oil sands lobby group, in which position he came to Alberta five years ago, giving the presentation in Calgary as president of WWF Canada. That's the World Wildlife Federation, not the wrestling federation. He gave this presentation, and he was asked: "You don't seem to support any of these pipeline proposals. You don't seem to support Northern Gateway or Energy East or Keystone XL. Do you have a proposed alternative pipeline route?" Mr. Butts responded, saying: no, I don't support an alternative pipeline; I support an alternative economy with no oil and gas.

So when his boss, our brilliant Prime Minister, Justin Trudeau, said that he wanted to, quote, phase out the oil sands, it wasn't a verbal lapse, Madam Speaker. It was policy. It was policy. These are the folks, by the way, that the NDP have lashed themselves to as inseparable political allies, the Trudeau-Butts Liberals, who are committed to phasing out the oil sands and who say that they do not support an alternative pipeline route. They want an alternative economy with no oil and gas.

Now, let me address the premise of, perhaps, Andrew Weaver, the leader of the B.C. Green Party, whose opposition is one of the reasons we have this bill before us. Let me address the fanaticism of Gerry Butts and Jagmeet Singh and the NDP and its Leap Manifesto. Their premise is that oil and gas emit carbon emissions and are therefore playing a major role in deleterious climate change effects, but what they don't tell us, Madam Speaker, is that according to the International Energy Agency there is projected to be a growing global demand for oil and gas through at least 2045, so for at least the next 25 years, the next generation or longer. They're only projecting that far. So far the actual consumption patterns support that projection, as my friend from Calgary-Foothills, an energy engineer, can confirm.

Madam Speaker, a few years ago there was this nonsense about peak oil. Well, it didn't happen. There's more oil and gas being produced, shipped, and consumed than ever before in human history. So the question then becomes: who will supply that growing demand? That's the question for Canada. The question is not whether there will be growing demand. The question is not whether that demand will be met. The question is: will that demand only be met by OPEC plus Russia, or will it be met increasingly by Canada? That's the question. It's a question that Gerry Butts and David Suzuki and Elizabeth May and John Horgan and the members opposite who used to go to antipipeline rallies refuse to ask themselves.

I don't know why that is. Maybe there's a tendency toward masochism. Maybe there's this notion that if we just punish ourselves, if we just assume a massive opportunity cost by forgiving hundreds of billions of dollars of future wealth, or, worse yet, if we impose one of these ridiculous carbon taxes and we punish people for heating their homes and driving to work and living normal lives in a cold, northern climate in an advanced modern economy, if we just engage in that economic masochism, somehow the gods will listen to us and will somehow ameliorate the global environment.

At the very least they seem to believe, Madam Speaker, that at least we can feel more virtuous about ourselves. We can feel better about ourselves while we allow Saudi Arabia, Iran, the emirate of Qatar, Venezuela, and Russia to profit from our stupidity. That's what it is. There is no virtue, I submit, in allowing the world's worst regimes to monopolize the growing global demand for hydrocarbons. There is vice in allowing that to happen, not virtue. Many of these regimes spread terror and conflict both at home and abroad, in their countries and around the world, fuelled by their energy wealth. Now, we can't stop them, but I'll tell you this. If we could go from essentially being a landlocked oil producer to actually selling a million or 2 million or 3 million barrels per day on global markets, yes, that would reduce global prices according to the law of supply and demand.

That means that the Iranian mullahs, who hang gay men and stone women accused of adultery, would have a lower price and less revenue for their terror machine. It means that the budget that they give to the al-Quds Force of the Iranian revolutionary guard to spread terrorism and blow up Jewish community centres around the world, for example – their nuclear program would have relatively less funds. It means that Vladimir Putin would have less revenue available to support his invasion of Ukraine and his policy of destabilization in Syria and elsewhere, propping up the dictator Assad. It means that the Saudi kingdom would have relatively less revenue to support the spread of Wahhabist ideology around the world, which is a root cause of so much terror. It means that the corrupt socialist dictatorship in Venezuela would have less of an ability to oppress its people.

So, Madam Speaker, this is not just existential for our economy; it is a moral question for the world. That is why the time has come for Canadians of good faith to bind together finally with force to fight back against the tar sands campaign of the Rockefeller Brothers and their allies in the green left. It is time for us to say that enough is enough and that we will no longer tolerate the stigmatization and the defamation of a proud industry that has fuelled our prosperity, that has moved countless Canadians from poverty to prosperity, that has been the biggest engine of social mobility in Canada's modern economic history, our oil and gas industry, the production of which is done at the highest environmental, human rights, and labour standards on Earth.

It is time not, as our Premier did three years ago, to go to Toronto and say that we don't want to be, quote, the embarrassing cousins of Confederation but to say that we are proud of the work done by our women and men to build our prosperity in Alberta's energy industry. It is time to do that, and that is why I've advocated this fight-back strategy.

Now, Madam Speaker, I agree – so the context here, of course, is that the B.C. government has created massive uncertainty. You know, what we see here in B.C. right now is the local application of the tar sands campaign strategy, the leave it in the ground strategy. What is the strategy in B.C.? Well, it is highly co-ordinated and multifaceted. On the one hand, you have the NDP-Green government, that has required hundreds of provincial permits to be issued for the Trans Mountain expansion to proceed. You have a provincial government that's gone to court on three separate instances, most recently a reference about their putative jurisdictional authority to effectively veto the pipeline through dilatory environmental regulations. You have a string of NDP municipal governments refusing to grant permits and the case of the NDP in Burnaby refusing to pay for the legal costs of the RCMP enforcing the law.

Then you have the green left organizations engaged in civil disobedience trying to slow down the project. Even though you have virtually every First Nation on the pipeline route, in fact, every one from Sherwood Park to Burnaby supporting the project – I think there are two or three that have been approached by these various foundations, and they've lawyered up to litigate that to death. The strategy, as I've said, Madam Speaker, is death by delay.

Now, I've taken the strategy seriously from the get-go, and I've been concerned that it would work, that ultimately the prospect of the construction of the pipeline might still exist but the delays would become so serious that the project proponent, Kinder Morgan, would finally just walk away and say: "Basta. Enough. We've had enough. We're washing our hands of it." It seemed to be a great shock to our Premier, but it was not the least bit surprising to me or many observers that Kinder Morgan announced three weeks ago the suspension of any further major expenditures on the project pending a review, with a deadline of and possible cancellation on May 31, 30 days from today. Thirty days from today.

Unbelievably, the Premier's response was one of optimism. Now, by the way, I love – optimism is a great instinct, Madam Speaker.

We always want to be hopeful and wish for the best. But when you're a head of government, you've got to deal with reality, not things as you wish they would be but as they are. I was questioning the Premier at Public Accounts . . .

Mr. Nixon: Budget estimates.

Mr. Kenney: The budget estimates committee.

. . . 10 days ago, and I asked her about her views on the prospects of the construction of this project. She said that she was extremely optimistic, that she had never been more certain that Trans Mountain would be built. And while she said those words, the president of Kinder Morgan was on a call with investors saying that he continued to believe that the project may be untenable and that nothing that had happened in the previous 10 days had changed his view about that. He was referring implicitly to the emergency meeting with the Prime Minister, the Premier, and the NDP Premier John Horgan in Ottawa. He was referring to this NDP Premier's musings about buying out the project. The head of the company said that it remains apparently untenable.

Now, Madam Speaker, this then brings us back to Bill 12. The point of this bill, the point of the fight-back strategy is to make it clear in the minds of the NDP in Victoria that if they violate our Constitution, if they upend the economic union of Canada, which is the basic premise of Confederation, if they violate the rule of law and they attack Canada's vital economic interests, there will be serious consequences. That's essentially what this bill does. It grants extraordinary powers to the Minister of Energy to effectively withhold permits for the shipment of oil and gas out of Alberta.

Now, let me be clear. The United Conservative caucus does not endorse these extraordinary powers lightly. We had a very vigorous debate about this, discussion about this in our caucus, and I must tell you, Madam Speaker, that there are a lot of our members who are uneasy about the powers in this bill, as am I. To grant any government, let alone a government that believes in state ownership of the means of production as a fundamental premise, such extraordinary power over the free shipment of goods and services is contrary to our instincts in this party as a party that believes in markets and private property and respects the sanctity of contract. But we recognize that we are living through extraordinary times. We recognize that if this pipeline does not get built, there will be a massive long-term economic cost to this province, a cost of – I gather that the current estimate is that we're losing about $12 billion a year.

Mr. Panda: Fifteen point six billion dollars; $43 million dollars a day.

Mr. Kenney: We're losing $43 million dollars a day underselling our oil because of our captivity to the U.S. market. If you rack that up over 10 or 20 years, we're talking hundreds of billions of dollars. That doesn't include the billions of revenue that are lost to the Alberta Crown.

But there's a bigger principle here, I say, Madam Speaker, about the rule of law, about the Constitution, and that is why we believe that this is a power that may have to be used. In B.C. now consumers are paying a buck 70 to fill up their gas tanks, the highest prices ever in North America, higher than during the Suez crisis or the OPEC crisis. This is shocking.

One of my favourite things, Madam Speaker, is when politicians on the left feign outrage at high gas prices. "This is a terrible thing. We've got to stop these high gas prices." That's the point of the carbon tax. That is their goal, to make gas prices higher.

I don't know, Madam Speaker, if you've ever seen that great movie Casablanca, with Humphrey Bogart and Ingrid Bergman. There's a great English actor, Claude Rains, who plays Captain Renault. Captain Renault comes in to Rick's American café and they're gambling away and he's been paid off by the Nazis. He blows his whistle. He says that he's shutting down the casino, and Humphrey Bogart walks up to Claude Rains and says, "Why? Why are you shutting down the casino?" and Claude Rains says, "Because it has come to my attention that there is gambling going on in this establishment," as the croupier arrives and says to Claude Rains, "Your winnings, sir." That's the NDP on the carbon tax. They're shocked that people have to pay more for gas prices, but that's exactly what they want.

But, Madam Speaker, here's the point. Perhaps if we turned off the taps, it wouldn't be a buck 70 a litre. It would be $2.50 or $3 or $3.50 a litre, and perhaps ordinary, hard-working British Columbians would pick up the phone and call their NDP MLAs and say: "What have you done to our economy? What have you done to our standard of living?" Maybe even the green left that drives to the illegal protests in Burnaby would figure out that their Priuses are not fuelled by pixie dust but by Alberta crude oil.

So, Madam Speaker, that is essentially why we believe this threat is one worth making, but it has to be credible. What concerns me most is that this bill could just be – I hope this is not true – empty political theatre. Heaven forbid, but I've got to admit that since the Premier mocked and ridiculed this idea last year – she said that the idea was about building walls and having a temper tantrum and it was ridiculous – well, maybe that's why I'm not quite sure her heart is in this.

I hope I'm wrong, but if I'm wrong, then why is it that John Horgan came out of his meeting with our Premier in Ottawa 17 days ago saying that our Premier told John Horgan that she does not intend to use this power, that the bill is just being dropped because there's limited time in the Alberta Legislature? Why is it that the NDP in British Columbia – their environment minister, their energy minister, Andrew Weaver, the Green Party leader who's driving this oil-filled bus – why is it that they all say that this is an empty threat? What is the point of a threat if the people being threatened, the B.C. government, believe it is empty? The point is: nothing.

I asked the Premier today – I asked her three times because she wouldn't answer – under what circumstances she would use the powers included in Bill 12. She couldn't answer. I can only infer it's because she doesn't intend to. And what's the point if we seek to use these powers after May 31, after the possible cancellation of this project?

In conclusion, as my time is running out, Madam Speaker, we support this bill, but more importantly we support it on one condition. We'll propose a motion for a grandfather clause so that it's not a permanent power. We support it on the condition that the government makes it absolutely clear that it intends to use this power if the government of British Columbia continues its policy of obstructing our Constitution and attacking our vital economic interests.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I have to say that it was interesting to hear the member opposite's speech. I have to say that it was thrilling. I'm kind of disappointed he didn't take the full 90 minutes, but I appreciate the length at which he did speak. I just have a couple of comments on what he mentioned. A big part of his story was cognitive dissonance. I just wanted to touch on that for a moment because I'm not going to say the member opposite is the personification of cognitive dissonance, but it's close, quite frankly.

Now, I got into politics not just because the member opposite was my MP for just under 20 years, but I have to say that it was a big reason that I decided to get into politics. So I kind of want to thank him for that. But what I don't understand and what maybe the member opposite can help me with is how one can believe in so-called small government but at the same time think that the government needs to intervene whenever a woman wants to access basic health care such as an abortion. To me that seems like cognitive dissonance. The members opposite don't want to talk about access to women's health care such as abortions like you were elected to do in here, in Edmonton, but you're perfectly fine and happy to talk about it in Red Deer over the weekend, something that could be called a safe space.

Now, beyond that, which I believe qualifies as cognitive dissonance, is believing in small government, but if a small group of mature young adults wants to form a club which has been proven to save lives and to stop children and youth from committing suicide, that's something the government needs to stop according to the members opposite. That's something that the parents need to understand and know, that this child is part of a club because they need a safe space like the members opposite do in Red Deer when they talk about abortions because they can't do it in here.

Now, cognitive dissonance is also believing in small government, but if I want to marry the man that I love . . .

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

The Acting Speaker: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: We're on 29(2)(a), Madam Speaker, and this member is right to ask a question. It should be relevant to the bill that we're discussing as everybody in this House knows, and I'd encourage the member to ask the question.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you. Just in response to the point of order, Madam Speaker, the Member for Calgary-Lougheed referred to cognitive dissonance in his speech. I believe the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood is discussing how he sees that as a contradiction, what the Member for Calgary-Lougheed talked about. It's relevant under 29(2)(a), making a comment about what he mentioned in his speech. I think the member was trying to make his point, and I'd appreciate if he has the opportunity to do so.

The Acting Speaker: At this point there is no point of order. However, I'd like to remind all members of the House if we could try to focus on the bill in front of us and the content of the bill and also a reminder that comments and questions are to be directed around the content of the bill and the comments that have been made. I've allowed a lot of leeway already today, but I would like us to refocus if we could and stick to the mandate of second reading, which is the content of the bill.

Hon. member, were you planning on continuing?

Debate Continued

Connolly: Yeah. I do have a question at the end, and I will get to it, I promise.

Just to continue where I was, cognitive dissonance is believing in small government, but if I want to marry the man that I love, the government should stop us because we can't possibly be part of a family like one of the policies that the UCP will be arguing about this weekend.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: Point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Nixon: The hon. member just disregarded every comment that you just made, Madam Speaker. We are not here to debate the policy of the United Conservative Party, which will be debated this weekend by our party, not inside this place by the members of our party. The member, as you said, should start to refer to the bill, stop playing these childish games, and I would ask that you would encourage him to do that.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, I will reiterate what I said. I think if we could please refrain from commenting on outside policy that has nothing to do with the bill. I would encourage you to please go back to the content of the bill and refrain from commenting further on anything outside of the content of the bill. If you have a question that you would like to direct to the hon. Official Opposition leader, please go ahead. If not, I will continue on to 29(2)(a) with another member.

Debate Continued

Connolly: Yeah. I do have a question, like I said. One would say that this bill could be considered large government because you're interfering with business. You're stopping them from going outside jurisdictions. You're interfering with putting their product into other markets, and that's partly what this bill does, which is large government. But you seem to love small government, so that would also seem to be cognitive dissonance. Why is small government good for certain things, but when it comes to gays or women or trans people or things like this bill . . .

Mr. Nixon: Point of order, Madam Speaker. [interjections]

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Nixon: I can hear the government members heckling me while I speak during my point of order, Madam Speaker, but that's to the point. You've told this member, the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, two times, I guess, now – this will be the third time – to stick to the relevance of the bill. The issues that he just raised, while they are important issues in this province, are not relevant to this bill. Again, can you please instruct the member to yield the floor if he can't follow the rules of this place?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Madam Speaker, out of definite respect for this debate but also to the member opposite, he has not cited any standing order.

Also, you have said to bring into context the context of the debate, which is what he did. It is general practice within this debate in this House for people to make comparison on the relativity of some issues to another. It is something that he did throughout his debate. It is something that he's doing now. Just because the topic that is being used as the contrast is something that the member opposite is uncomfortable with doesn't make it out of the scope of debate and putting it into contrast. He did ask a question in regard to the bill in front of us, and he did ask a question, but he framed it in such a way that the member opposite does not want to hear it. That's not something that he can choose. He cannot choose what the members on this side of the House choose to debate and how they need to frame their questions. That starts getting into a whole other conversation, and I don't think that's the point.

He did start referring to the bill. He did make that question, and that is exactly what you directed, Madam Speaker. You did mention in the beginning that you didn't have a point of order. You still stood up the second time to interrupt him. This is where we're going. He still has to be able to make a contrasting statement similar to what the members opposite have been doing all afternoon. I think we don't have a point of order here, but we do need to get back to debate, and they can't keep defining what we're allowed to say in this House.

The Acting Speaker: No. I'm not going to have any more comment. We've had a comment from the opposition side and a comment from government side.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, I will allow you to ask your question, and then we will move on with the debate, so if you can keep it short and ask your question to the hon. member so that someone else can continue under 29(2)(a), please.

Debate Continued

Connolly: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm excited to try a third time to get through my question because I'm really excited to hear the hon. member answer it. Why does he constantly believe in small government, but when it comes to certain things like this bill and like those other aspects that I mentioned, large government is completely fine and he's happy to have it roll on through?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, do you wish to respond? Okay. Please.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Madam Speaker. First of all I'd like to apologize to the Chamber. I thought I had only 45 minutes. It turns out I had 90 minutes. I apologize for giving up the other 45 minutes.

I must confess that I'm not clear on the question. I would simply say that this is not a high school or university debate club. This is a Chamber dealing with important business, and Bill 12 has been characterized as the most important bill of the government's program. I would have expected a member of the government to appreciate the fact that the Official Opposition is supporting the government's bill in this respect, and perhaps it would be too much to ask that they actually also acknowledge our role in framing the bill by proposing the idea in the first place.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I would like to now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, followed by the Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak on Bill 12, which is an important piece of legislation, without question. The Alberta Party and certainly myself very much support any effort to ensure that the Kinder Morgan pipeline is built. Whatever it takes is what we need to do to make sure that Alberta's products can get to global markets and that we get a pipeline built to tidewater, so we are broadly and generally supportive of this bill.

I will say that it's a real shame that it has gotten to this point. It's unfortunate that the government has not pushed harder sooner to get the pipeline built and get the approvals, to ensure that their NDP colleagues in British Columbia were not more amenable to following the rule of law for a project that has been vetted and reviewed, probably the most thorough review of any project that I can certainly remember, a very comprehensive and professional review done by the National Energy Board. The project was deemed to be in the national interest, it was deemed to be safe, 157 conditions were placed on Kinder Morgan in the construction of the pipeline, and Canada's world-leading regulatory system was again on display. We have the best regulatory system in the entire world.

It is a shame that the province of British Columbia insists on throwing up legal roadblocks. If that means that we need to adjust, shall I say, how and where and when we ship our natural resources to perhaps send British Columbia a message that they should stop messing around with an approved project, then so be it. That is what, I guess, we'll have to do.

You know, the part that's always puzzled me about the way that this government has approached the pipeline file is that the province of Alberta and this government's goals should be aligned with the goals of British Columbia even before the NDP came into power in B.C. The Trans Mountain pipeline will have an environmental benefit. This is something that has not been, I think, really even discussed much at all by this government. They had just simply hoped that by having a carbon tax – they would cross their fingers and hope that everyone would give them the social licence to build a pipeline. Well, very clearly that's not happening.

But by building the Trans Mountain pipeline, Alberta crude will displace heavy crudes from Venezuela and Nigeria, countries that have, frankly, atrocious environmental track records. They have just terrible human rights records, certainly don't have anything near the regulatory rigour and oversight that we do. As a result, their crudes are on the market, and ours is not. As a result of their production methods, they're not investing hundreds of millions or billions of dollars of private capital in energy efficiency, in reducing the impact of carbon emissions coming from the production of oil sands oil, of bitumen from Alberta's oil sands.

We in this province are the most environmentally responsible, the most socially responsible, the most innovative oil and gas developing region in the entire world. That is something we ought to be absolutely proud of. Unfortunately, we had a government for years that was sleepwalking through the process, just kind of hoping that somehow everything was going to be okay. What they should have been doing was, early on, pushing very, very, very hard to ensure that this project was built and doing that by making the case not just government to government but to the people of British Columbia, making the case to the rest of the country for the benefit, not just the economic benefit – and make no mistake; there is a substantial economic benefit – to, yes, the province of Alberta but to the entire country, of building pipelines. Huge, huge benefits economically.

But there are, equally, environmental benefits to doing so that go far beyond the government's carbon tax. It is an absolute fact that by continuing to develop the oil sands, we will displace higher carbon sources of crude with Alberta crude. Companies that are developing technologies to reduce carbon emissions and reduce the impact of the development of the oil sands, including the impact on fresh water, the impact on land use, on greatly reducing tailings – those technologies are applicable elsewhere in the world. As other countries try to reduce their carbon emissions, they will be using made-in-Alberta technologies to do so. Those technologies are going to be created in the pursuit of developing the oil sands.

That is, I think, aligned with what the people of British Columbia want, with what the people of Canada want. That is the case that should have been made by this government. They had a unique opportunity to do that because they as the NDP, I would think, should at least have some credibility on the environmental side, but unfortunately they're a little late to the game. None more fervent than the converted, I suppose, Madam Speaker. They're certainly hitting above their weight on this file now, and I suppose I'm relieved to see that they're doing that. That's good news. They are, I think, quite vigorously defending Alberta's interests now on the pipeline file, but I wish we could have said the same thing going back three years. Had we been able to say the same thing going back three years, I think that we would be in a much better position as it relates to the Kinder Morgan pipeline specifically but also other pipeline projects, Energy East in particular. So it is a shame that it has come to this.

This bill does grant the government extraordinary powers to arbitrarily and without any stated compensation simply dictate to a shipper where and to whom and how they can move their product. That is not something, I think, that would be an ordinary power that government has. As a result, when the time comes, we intend to move an amendment to add a sunset clause to this bill. This is not the sort of power that a government should have in perpetuity. It should expire at some point in the not-too-distant future. I'd certainly be happy to work with the government in determining what an appropriate time for that sunset clause is. I think that's something that would certainly make industry a lot happier as well, to know that this sort of power will not exist in perpetuity, you know, beyond the hopefully relatively short period of time it will take to actually get the Kinder Morgan pipeline built and operational. I think that's important.

Now, of course, a sunset clause doesn't mean that the bill necessarily goes away. What it means is that it will expire unless renewed by the Legislative Assembly. We as legislators would have the opportunity to renew the bill should we find at the time of the sunset clause or leading up to it that, in fact, it was necessary.

The other piece I would think there should be more clarity on is: what is the compensation plan should the government decide that they need to use this? This could potentially cost companies that have been operating in good faith, within the bounds of law, doing nothing more than plying their trade and moving Alberta's natural resources. There may be substantial financial impacts on those companies, and the government ought to look at compensation. I understand that the minister has indicated that she has had some discussions with industry on that. That's obviously a good thing. But I would have liked to have seen some sort of model shared with the Assembly, and I would make that ask now officially and formally and on the record, that the government do in fact give us some more insight, some more details in terms of what the compensation plan would be. That's something that is also a question that I would hope, as the debate rolls on, the government is able to provide for us.

The other question I have is: what impact would this have, should the government choose to exercise these powers, on agreements that shippers have with their suppliers, contractors, customers? They have a legal obligation to fulfill those contractual commitments to ship product, and if the government frustrates that, what happens? I actually don't know what the impact of that would be on those agreements. Does that put the company itself, the shippers themselves offside with their contractual agreements that they have in place with their customers? Does that potentially expose them to, I guess, what we'd consider double jeopardy, where they're not allowed to ship the product, but they're contractually obligated to ship the product? Are they potentially opening themselves up to legal action or a compensation claim by their customers? I don't know the answer to that question. I would like the government to please weigh in on answers to those questions.

As I say, I think the sunset clause is an important aspect of this, and I do look forward very much to bringing that forward when we get a chance. I'm, again, profoundly disappointed that the government has allowed us to get to this point and allowed this file to languish for as long as they have. They have stepped up to the plate now. We're debating a bill that, hopefully, will help us get a pipeline built. We have the government now forcefully defending Alberta's interests, and I'm glad to see that, but I would have liked to have seen that a lot earlier so we wouldn't find ourselves in this position.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

4:10

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll now call on the Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It certainly has been a riveting debate. I listened intently to all of the issues and ideas that were raised by all of the members who spoke, some who were certainly more worthy of listening to than others, but it's always interesting to hear what's being said.

Of course, there's plenty more time to debate this topic in the very near future, and I look forward to the members opposite explaining, perhaps, why they failed on getting a pipeline to tidewater built. Since they're so keen to claim credit for this, maybe tell us why we're in this position in the first place, that we have to come to this. The Kinder Morgan expansion should have been built a long time ago, but the federal Conservatives, of course, failed in their duties to protect the interests of working Albertans and working Canadians, to get that pipeline built when they had the chance.

But now is not the time to continue that debate, Madam Speaker. We have other issues that are urgent and pressing in this House, and I believe that it's time that we get on to those. In that spirit, I move that we adjourn debate on this bill.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Bill 13

An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today on behalf of the Minister of Energy to move second reading of Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future.

Our Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future would make the necessary legislative changes to transition Alberta's electricity system to a more stable and reliable system that benefits both consumers and industry. In November 2016 we committed to modernizing Alberta's electricity system to ensure that we continue to deliver reliable energy, attract investment, and prepare for a low-carbon future while protecting Albertans from price volatility.

Through this bill we take several major steps towards fulfilling our promise to Albertans, including enabling the transition to a capacity market, providing for specified penalties for energy service providers that violate rules intended to protect consumers, enabling small-scale and community generation, and repairing policy around the disposition of regulated utility assets.

The legislation also allows our electric system actors to maintain existing and useful transmission policy elements by properly addressing them in regulation-making authority and cleans up after the spent provisions that were left over from the last market transition, when deregulation brought us price spikes and uncertainty.

When we first announced we would be modernizing Alberta's electricity system, we highlighted our plan to transition our energy-only market to a capacity market framework. This move was recommended by current and potential energy investors, external experts, consumer groups, and the Alberta Electric System Operator. A capacity market will ensure Albertans have safe, reliable, sustainable, and affordable electricity. It benefits both consumers and investors. It provides electricity consumers with greater price stability. It makes room for competition, innovation, and private investment while providing revenue certainty for investors.

We have been working with stakeholders to develop a best-in-class capacity market for Alberta. This legislation will enable our made-in-Alberta approach to a proven market system. Further, it will guarantee strong governance of the electricity system by ensuring the right checks and balances are in place to drive certainty and confidence in this new market. That, as you know, is incredibly important. Predictability and stability mean increased investment certainty.

The legislative amendments for a capacity market cover four broad themes. The first is to set the foundation for the capacity market and create the long-term policy certainty that investors need. For example, the Purposes section of the Electric Utilities Act has been updated to enshrine three core principles of the capacity market: to ensure that a reliable supply of electricity is available at a reasonable cost to consumers; to operate in a way that is fair, efficient, and openly competitive; and to distribute the costs of procuring capacity among customers fairly and in a manner that incents economic efficiency.

The second theme creates the clear mandate and authorities for Alberta's electricity agencies and market participants. Amendments extend agency duties and responsibilities to include the capacity market. They update the duties of the Alberta Electric System Operator to include operating and managing the capacity market. They add review and approval for all capacity and energy market rules to the Alberta Utilities Commission's duties, and they extend the duties of the Market Surveillance Administrator to include surveillance of the capacity market.

A third area of focus is rules oversight. The proposed amendments in this legislation will enhance public interest oversight of the market rules development and approval process. This, too, will help promote stakeholder confidence in the new market system. Bill 13 requires all new or modified market rules to be reviewed and approved by the Alberta Utilities Commission. Under the new rules approval process the Alberta Electric System Operator will need to satisfy the commission. The market rules are in the public interest and, in the case of the capacity market, support reliability at reasonable costs to consumers.

These changes will align Alberta's market governance arrangements with best practices in capacity markets in other jurisdictions. Additionally, the amendments will enable a provisional process that will ensure all necessary rules are in place before the start of the first auction process.

The fourth and final theme is stakeholder participation. When we announced our move to a capacity market 18 months ago, we promised that the transition would be made in an open and transparent way, working with stakeholders throughout the process. Quite simply, open and transparent processes where industry, consumer, and stakeholder views are well represented is just good governance.

In recognition of this, two key changes enhance stakeholder involvement in Alberta's electricity rule development. First, consultations with market participants, other interested parties, and the Market Surveillance Administrator will be required when rules are developed. Second, the Alberta Electric System Operator will be required to establish a process for market participants and other interested parties to propose changes to all rules. To be clear, these are substantial enhancements to the existing processes in our electricity system and apply beyond just the new capacity market. They will bring more accountability and opportunity for input to Alberta's electricity system as a whole.

Madam Speaker, the capacity market is certainly not the only way that this legislation would improve the electricity system for Albertans. With this legislation, we are also addressing concerns about incorrect power bills and issues in customer service from electricity and natural gas service providers. An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future will protect Albertans from poor customer service. Bill 13 will hold electricity and natural gas service providers accountable for inappropriate business practices or breaches of customer service such as late or inaccurate bills. The Utilities Consumer Advocate receives thousands of complaints each year. Electricity and natural gas consumers are frustrated, and they have asked us to address their concerns.

Bill 13 does just that. It would provide the Alberta Utilities Commission with the ability to directly issue specified penalties to electric and natural gas service providers for particular breaches. The specified penalty is a financial penalty that is imposed directly for infractions that are minor to the system as a whole but can be significant and distressing for consumers. These penalties can be compared to a speeding or traffic ticket, for example, for these companies. Currently the only enforcement tool that the commission has is its formal hearing process, which can be lengthy, onerous, and costly. That process does not work as well as it could for consumers. The commission will have the authority to develop the specified penalties rules in consultation with stakeholders to ensure that they are clear and that the penalties are fair.

This legislation would give the Alberta Utilities Commission the ability to issue fines of up to $10,000 per infraction per day if necessary. This maximum penalty is severe, to be clear, and would only be imposed for very significant infractions, but it's important to know that the commission would have the legal ability to impose the level of penalty if appropriate. Should a penalty be issued, the commission would also have the authority to allocate the proceeds of the specified penalty back into the pockets of the affected consumers. By enabling these penalties, we would create better incentive for compliance with rules to protect electricity and natural gas consumers from experiencing poor customer service such as billing errors.

The amendments proposed in Bill 13 also support government's work around community generation. Amendments to the Electric Utilities Act would authorize the Minister of Energy to make regulations to enable small-scale and community generation, including their definition, development, connection, and operation. Albertans have told us that they want more options to generate their own electricity, and we're helping. We're taking action to make that happen. Small-scale and community generation will provide flexibility for communities or organizations that want to generate their own electricity from renewable or alternative sources such as solar and wind. This is very exciting stuff, Madam Speaker. This will allow Albertans to take a more active role in our province's electricity supply – they've been asking for this for decades – while creating more options for their own electricity choices, while at the same time attracting investment, creating jobs, and further strengthening our province's leadership position as a responsible energy producer.

Bill 13 also seeks to address a long-standing issue that has created uncertainty for investors and consumers for over a decade. This relates to how costs and benefits are allocated upon disposition of assets in the regulated utilities space. Bill 13 seeks to fill the gap left when a 2006 Supreme Court decision found that provincial legislation didn't provide the Alberta Utilities Commission with clear legal authority to allocate gains and losses.

Finally, Bill 13 also includes administrative amendments to continue the policies of the transmission deficiency regulation. This regulation will enable more efficient connections of industrial and commercial consumers to the transmission system. It was developed several years ago through a consensus-building process between utilities and consumers. Because the existing legislation failed to enable these policies for the long term, the policies would expire in 2019 without the amendments in Bill 13.

Madam Speaker, Bill 13 lays the groundwork for Alberta's electricity future and the province's long-term prosperity. It allows us to take the steps we need to fix the broken system that we inherited and to ensure that our electricity system works for Albertans well into the future. It will provide stability over volatility for electricity prices, simplicity over complexity in a changing market, and assurance over risk for investors.

I hope that all members will support me in moving forward and support our government in moving forward with Bill 13. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Minister. I just want to clarify that you are moving second reading on behalf of the Minister of Energy.

Ms McLean: I said that at the beginning. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Is there anybody else wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future. The actions of the NDP government have made electricity more expensive for Albertans, and Bill 13 will make the electricity even more expensive. After a series of Whac-A-Mole policies pulling on a thread and unraveling the whole tapestry, the NDP government have brought forward a bill in an attempt to try and put Humpty Dumpty back together again. The children's fable makes it out that Humpty Dumpty was an egg. All of Her Majesty's men and women in the cabinet, no matter how much superglue is used, will not put Humpty Dumpty back together again. Humpty Dumpty will never be the same, and the same is true for Alberta's electrical system. After Bill 13 the electricity market will never be the same.

How did we get to this place? The environment minister likes to talk about the government of Stephen Harper in Ottawa planning to shut down Alberta's coal-fired generating stations. That's true. Stephen Harper's government had a thoughtful plan to phase out coal-fired generation for 12 plants in Alberta by 2029. Some of those plants were at payout anyway and were older and going to be shut down or converted to natural gas anyway. It was a common-sense approach. Our associates in industry indicate that in the energy-only market it would still be possible to replace that baseload capacity that Ottawa mandated to phase out.

Along comes the NDP government with the idea of shutting down all of the coal-fired power plants. That is six more plants, Madam Speaker. Industry demanded compensation, and the NDP cost Albertans $1.36 billion to shut these six coal plants early and likely convert them to natural gas. Some of these coal plants are practically brand new. Keephills 3 was supposed to run to 2061 and Genesee 3 to 2055. Coal conversion to natural gas is not as efficient as brand new combined-cycle natural gas power plants, so the NDP threw the electricity market into chaos.

There was also the nasty business of raising the carbon tax on large emitters, triggering the power purchase agreement dump to the Balancing Pool and the $2 billion this cost the taxpayers and the resignation of the officials at the Balancing Pool. Madam Speaker, the NDP is trying to bring these major, major changes to the electricity market. At the time, of the key people heading these four institutions under this electricity department, two of them don't have the heads running those organizations, and then the third one is about to leave. Three out of the four institutions won't have the heads of those institutions at such a critical time.

But that's a story for another day, Madam Speaker. Yesterday the House leader thought that there was a conspiracy theory, and then he brought in aliens. He thought that aliens would walk around and take over. That's why we'll have that discussion some other day.

For today, though, we need to know: how is this baseload generation from coal going to get replaced in the energy-only market? The Alberta Electric System Operator, AESO, the body mandated by the legislation to connect generators with transmission to run the electricity market and keep adequate electricity flowing, ran an analysis. The AESO found that the $1,000 per megawatt hour cap on wholesale electricity prices would have to rise to $5,000 per megawatt hour, which is equal to $5 per kilowatt hour, to attract the investments needed to make the system reliable. In AESO's words: this might have been revenue sufficient, but it was not a revenue-certain option, and it would create too much volatility for consumers.

Who would want their power bills to be five times higher, Madam Speaker? I don't think you want that. I don't think I want it. Who wants their power bills to be $40 one month and $200 the next month, followed by maybe $90 another month and then up to $180 another month? People on a fixed income, the Marthas and the Henrys, cannot handle these wild market volatilities.

In addition, the NDP policy to push for more renewable electricity generation was identified as the one that would compromise the reliability of the electrical system. This was the AESO's finding in October 2016. So what does the NDP do in November 2016, Madam Speaker? They bring in Bill 27 and mandate 20 per cent renewables to provide electricity to Albertans. The NDP compromised the reliability of the electrical system. Then they had advice warning them that this would happen, and they did it anyway. That's truly scandalous. Not only is it scandalous; it is downright evil.

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

The NDP compromised the reliability of Alberta's electrical system with their drive for renewables. Now Alberta needs to attract the baseload to replace the coal-fired generating stations, and Alberta needs to attract the backup generation to supply electricity when the wind does not blow and when the sun does not shine.

Now, the NDP had several choices between what they could do. They could have done like many provinces and dropped the free market entirely and gone on a long-term contract basis. That was one option. This appears to be what the NDP has done for the renewable electricity program 1: wind generators that will be operating outside of the capacity market.

The NDP could have adopted cost-of-service regulations in a nonmarket structure, but the NDP chose a capacity market. Albertans pay for capacity now; it is just bundled in with their energy costs now. Under the new system generators will get two payments, a constant steady payment for capacity to produce electricity and a separate payment for the electricity they produce. But the devil will be in the details because the regulations and the market rules are not finalized.

Bill 13 is just a legislative framework to make this market happen. No one wants power plants that ratepayers are paying for to remain idle and not run, like they have in Ontario. No one wants the disaster that is Ontario's electrical system. While Bill 13 appears to be necessary, Bill 13 remains deeply flawed. I'm aware that the industry has been speaking with the minister and the Premier, demanding amendments. As Bill 13 now stands, companies could be under contract for capacity, receiving payments for that capacity, but the companies can then deny the provision of electricity. This has the effect of spiking the electricity prices, same as in Ontario, Mr. Speaker. This cannot be allowed. Paying for capacity and then denying electricity is simply wrong. We cannot wait for regulations or market rules to come in to fix this oversight.

Mr. Speaker, there are other parts of Bill 13 that do not deal with the capacity market, and the feedback from stakeholders is not positive, particularly with respect to implementing the 2006 Supreme of Court of Canada's Stores Block decision.

Due to those reasons, there will be opposition to Bill 13 from myself and my caucus colleagues. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to Bill 13? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future. The NDP have not learned any lessons about tinkering with Alberta's energy market. Each time it plays around with the system, it gets a jolt, and instead of leaving it alone, it insists on going in and trying to fix its most recent mess. Its intentions, it tells Albertans, are for their own good. Albertans just want them to let it be, but here we go again with Bill 13.

Let's go back to the beginning of this cascade of problems. It began with the carbon tax on heavy industrial emitters. The targets, of course, were the coal-fired generating plants. The carbon tax, which was a surprise to everyone, by the way, resulted in companies opting out of their power purchase agreements because the government had made them uncompetitive. The NDP feigned outrage that the companies were doing what they were legally allowed to do. Albertans were flabbergasted. They, too, had to pay this tax, and they understood that it could push a company out of the province.

Once the PPAs had been handed back to the Balancing Pool, the system was in precarious shape. It was costing the Balancing Pool up to $70 million a month as electricity prices plummeted. In 2016 the pool lost an amazing $2 billion. The government, now desperate, lent it hundreds of millions of dollars, and I'm sure you're not surprised to learn that consumers are on the hook for that money.

Mr. Speaker, I'll get to Bill 13, but before I can, we have more of a mess on the way before it rises into the picture. The NDP already knew that Alberta was going to phase out coal-fired generating plants, as required by the federal government, by 2029. That's a little more than a decade away. It was a well-reasoned plan that Albertans were onboard with, as were the companies, but that wasn't good enough for an ideological NDP government. As usual, it needed to push the goalposts. It decided that the six remaining coal-fired power plants had to go, too, even though some were state-of-the-art, new facilities.

We have that continuing controversy as the NDP tries to push its way to renewables in record time and chooses not to care one whit about the energy efficient technologies that are turning progressive countries like Germany back to coal. But as far as the NDP is concerned, none of that matters, nor do the communities that expected their coal plants to be operational for many decades yet.

In the meantime, the UCP became so concerned about all the tampering with our system that it sought the assistance of the Auditor General to determine the full costs and implications of the PPA losses, the province's decision to phase out coal-fired electricity, and its cap on electricity rates. It's quite clear, Mr. Speaker, that it's quite a mess.

Into all this mix comes the NDP's renewable electricity model. Modelling indicated that it would be problematic for all generators. AESO warned that the system would be compromised. But what did this mean to the NDP, which was continually pushing a plan that it was going to make work no matter what? Clearly, it meant little. It pressed through Bill 27 in the fall of '16 and set a firm target for renewables. Alberta's electrical system was compromised, and now the NDP are jumping into the deep end to create a capacity market and to do it in a hurry. The reforms continue and continue and continue.

Now the NDP is designing a new market, a capacity market, and at a time when no one knows the fallout from its last round of changes. The Energy minister actually said in the Legislature, “We have spent a lot of time in fixing a system that was broken for a number of years.” Who said that it was broken besides the NDP? Has anyone asked them to fix a system that wasn’t broken, a system that was evolving as planned? Does anyone have any faith that they can set this ship right again? They just keep pitching it from side to side. Albertans are confused and very likely have simply opted out of trying to follow this story, a new bill to fix the electrical system. They are thinking that they just want to go back to the way it was. Instead, we have a government that is trying to fast-track this capacity market.

Not only that, this bill allows the government to create much of it through regulation. Once again, Mr. Speaker, Albertans are at a loss. They don’t know what the NDP is doing. They don’t want them to do any more fixing. They do not know what’s going on, but they sure in heck don’t trust the NDP in taking care of their best interests.

It’s clear that I do not support Bill 13, and I do so for the sake of Alberta. You know, we finally had the electricity prices down to $2.90 or less than $3, and the generation market was working. It takes years to build that capacity, and we finally got there. We had the capacity, and that’s what drove the price down. Now with all these changes companies aren’t building that capacity anymore, and capacity is going away with the coal. We’ve got rising prices. I don’t see where the capacity is going to come back. I support green energy, and I support doing things better, but we’re not going to get that capacity back. The prices of electricity are just going to continue to go higher and higher for Albertans. That’s the reason I cannot support this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. Standing Order 29(2)(a) if I’m correct.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m rising under 29(2)(a) to make some comments and ask questions of the previous speaker. I was somewhat surprised, given the previous speaker’s experience in government, that he is so much in favour of this very unique system that we had here in Alberta, that the previous government had done. In fact, it goes back to the government of Premier Klein, who, in a very, I think, unfortunate spasm of what we were hearing earlier in another debate about small government, decided that there should be total deregulation of the energy market in this province.

You know, the previous speaker did mention AESO, and it’s interesting. I have a quote here from the president and CEO of the Alberta Electric System Operator, David Erickson.

After thorough analysis, the AESO concluded that the current energy-only market will not ensure that Alberta has a reliable electricity system in the future. There has been a growing reluctance for developers to invest in energy-only markets and this global trend was a critical factor in our recommendation to move to a capacity market.

That’s the president and the CEO of AESO.

I’d like to hear from the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti – I guess it’s the other Grande Prairie – I’d like to hear his reaction to that quote from the man who is actually leading the Alberta Electric System Operator.

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, whether it’s in agriculture or forestry or any industry in Alberta, prices are dictated by supply and demand. It’s pretty simple. The more supply you’ve got, the prices go down, and the less demand you’ve got, the prices go down. If you have a lack of supply and a high demand, the prices are going to be high. Pretty simple. That’s why, with the deregulation of generation of power, companies were making money generating electricity, and they built additional generation because the business was there and the plan was there. But when you add generation, the price goes down, and it takes years to shift that supply. We finally got to the point where we had a good supply of power in Alberta, and of course you know what the price was. It was less than $3. As soon as you now shut down the cheapest form of power we had, which was coal, the supply goes down and the price is going up, and I don’t see that turning around lots. Our price is just going to keep going higher and higher.

One of my closest friends, an accountant, by the way, was on the AESO board. Maybe you were friends with the chair, but I was good friends with a guy on the board who explained to me how this was working. The board was very upset about how all of this went down, and I think you’ll see that most of those board members have left. I don’t even know if any of them are there, and I’m not even sure if the president is still there, the guy you quoted. Most of them were either fired or left on their own because they saw the mess coming and they didn’t want to be left holding the bag. My friend told me that. He got out of there because he saw the disaster coming from these changes.

I just can’t understand all these changes, when you’re taking away capacity and the generation. I mean, green energy is great. It’s been said that the wind doesn’t blow all the time and that the sun doesn’t shine all the time, and when the demand is needed, it’s needed, and it can’t wait. If you take that baseload out of there and take capacity out of there, the price is going to go up, and I’m really afraid for the citizens of Alberta, what their power bills are going to be over the next few years. Once you lose that, once you shut those plants down, you can’t turn it around very fast.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: All right. With 10 seconds left I don’t assume there’s anyone under 29(2)(a).

Any other members wishing to speak to Bill 13? The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s really my pleasure today to rise and speak in second reading to Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta’s Electricity Future. I’m cosponsoring this bill, and it’s something that I’m very proud that our government is doing to look out for everyday Albertans and make sure that Alberta has a reliable and stable energy system.

Now, in November 2016 the government committed to modernizing Alberta’s electricity system to ensure we continue to deliver reliable energy, attract investment, and prepare for a low-carbon future while protecting from that price volatility. I believe that this legislation does that. This legislation encompasses five key things. It encompasses the transition to the capacity market, the disposition of utility assets by regulated utilities, changes that enable existing and useful transmission policy elements to be captured in the appropriate regulation and legislation, small-scale and community generation, and the specified penalties for energy service providers. I think all five of those elements are really important pieces that we are bringing forward in this legislation, Mr. Speaker.

When I look and hear members opposite talk about how they had this great energy-only market that served all the needs of every single Albertan, I’m sorry to say, Mr. Speaker, that I think they are really wrong. That system was broken. For years Albertans were living with uncertainty and the worry that month to month their bills could spike. Their bills could fluctuate wildly, and that anxiety was forged from examples and history. In the five years before this government formed government, we had seen spikes over 15 cents per kilowatt hour. Months that shot over 8 cents, over 10 cents, and even 12 cents were not uncommon. How could we expect families to afford those sorts of spikes, families that lived month to month afraid that their power bills would spike suddenly and without warning? How could any responsible government stand by and let this happen? How could any government not have sense or compassion to address this problem? That's why this government capped electricity at 6.8 cents, less than half the rate customers endured under the market system we inherited from the previous government.

Mr. Speaker, we know that that rate cap is only a temporary measure. We know that when you inherit a broken system, a Band-Aid solution isn't going to fix it. That's why this legislation is coming forward. Let's be clear: there was a real problem, and the problem was dire. The government engaged a number of experts who obtained analysis and feedback from many jurisdictions, developers, investors, and lenders around the world, and the conclusion was crystal clear. Alberta's energy-only market was no longer attractive to investors.

In fact, I've got a couple of quotes here, Mr. Speaker, for you. Why don't we look at Dawn Farrell, who is the president and CEO of TransAlta.

We welcome a shift to a capacity market in Alberta. It will enhance our ability to make investments in existing and new generation to the benefit of customers and other stakeholders in the services we provide.

When we have some of our largest electricity companies in the province welcoming the shift to a capacity market, I think we're on the right track. I think that we can say that the government is doing the right thing. We're working with the industry to make sure we have a market that works for Albertans, that works for families, and that works for our corporations that we work with.

Mr. Speaker, when the price spikes were going on and on and on, it was a system that wasn't only risky for families, but it was something that was unattractive to investors. It was unattractive to investors, who wanted a reliable energy grid. Price spikes weren't the only risk. Our system operators couldn't even be given assurance that we would have the supply necessary to keep the lights on. We were handed this really broken system, where we didn't know on any given day of the week what the price may be or whether we would actually have that power when we needed it.

By enabling development of a capacity market, I think Bill 13 takes a very crucial step in implementing the fix. Now, Mr. Speaker, again, that move was not made lightly. Unlike what members opposite would want you to believe, the move to a capacity market was recommended by current and potential energy investors, external experts, the Alberta Electric System Operator, who actually asked for this change. The reason they recommended it is because a capacity market is seen as a safe, reliable, sustainable, and affordable electricity model. It provides consumers with that greater price stability. It makes room for competition and innovation and private investment while providing revenue certainty for investors. It's a made-in-Alberta solution that benefits our consumers and our investors.

I understand that Bill 13's amendments relate to the capacity market over four broader themes. The first is to create that long-term policy certainty that investors need. The second theme is about clarity and authority. Alberta's electricity agencies will have extended duties and responsibilities that include that capacity market.

So when we talk about these issues, we can see in that second theme that the updated duties of the Alberta Electric System Operator include operating and managing the capacity market. I think that's a really important thing for consumers to look at because it adds review and approval of capacity in the energy market to the AESO and the Alberta Utilities Commission, and it extends the duties of the Market Surveillance Administrator to include surveillance of the capacity market.

It brings in these new tools for the AESO and the MSA and the AUC. We want to be able to go out and say that we have a system that is working for companies and working for consumers and that it's fair, that it's fair in a way that allows us to make sure that specified penalties are fair, for example, when energy service providers step out of line but also fair in a way that makes sure that those penalties are dynamic and work with the corporation. Every single step of the way, when we work with these companies, we make sure that it's a system that everybody can get onboard with.

The third theme that I think these amendments address is the enhancement of public oversight in the development of the market. Bill 13 will require that all new or modified market rules be reviewed and approved by the AUC. Now, when new rules are recommended, the Alberta Electric System Operator, AESO, will need to bring them before the Alberta Utilities Commission and satisfy the commission that they are in the public interest and support reliability and a reasonable cost to consumers.

I think that's a really important thing, Madam Speaker. I think it's really important because when we talk about bringing new rules forward for our regulators, we need to make sure that we have as many eyes on that as possible, public eyes that can look at it and say: "Are these rules reasonable? Are these rules in the interest of safety and reliability of our system?" This is really important. I think that these amendments that we're bringing forward are going to bring the necessary rules into place before the start of the first auction process.

The final theme that I think is really important is stakeholder participation. I think stakeholder participation and consultation is one of the most important things any government can do, and it was one of the things where, when this government moved forward to transitioning to a capacity market, we ensured that the transition would be open and transparent, that it would be open and work with our stakeholders every step of the way through the process. I'm very proud that the government consulted with industry, consumers, and stakeholders in the market. I think that's just, frankly, good governance, Madam Speaker.

I'll give you another quote here, from Terry Boston, who's the former executive vice-president of power for the Tennessee Valley Authority and the past president and CEO of PJM Interconnection. He said:

I spent the last eight years of my career as the CEO of PJM Interconnection, which has a mature capacity market structure. Private investors from around the world have built over 30,000 megawatts of new generation in PJM under this market structure, which kept the lights on at stable prices. Investors have shown a growing reluctance to invest in the riskier energy-only market designs around the world, preferring the price stability and revenue certainty provided by a capacity market structure. I am confident this model will work well in Alberta too, ensuring future stability in your admirable and smooth transition to a lower carbon electricity system.

When we consult with people who have been involved in the industry around the world and when we consult with people who have seen capacity markets compared to energy markets, when we consult with companies in Alberta, when we consult with companies around the world, we see that they agree that a capacity market is the way to move forward. A capacity market is the type of system that is reliable and sustainable for consumers and for the companies. It's the one that we can agree is the best way to move forward. That's something that I think the government did a very good job of doing, consulting with these stakeholders who have experience in this matter, who know the history of this matter and are able to move forward in this. I'm very happy to see that this legislation would continue to require consultations with market participants, other interested parties, and the Market Surveillance Administrator when rules are developed.

I think Bill 13 is abundantly clear. It does a good job of transparency. It does a good job of accountability. It does a good job of stakeholder participation. And when we compare that and we compare the checks and balances that are coming in, like the minister spoke about, things like the specified penalties, when we talk about things like this, we can see that it was a significantly more engaging consultation than even the deregulation that was done two decades ago by the Conservative government, and we can see that our government has done a much better job with these issues.

I think we talk about these issues over and over and over again, and many Albertans ask: "Well, what does that mean for me at home? What does that mean for me and my family?" I think it's really clear that Bill 13 brought forward something that really does speak to families, which is those specified penalties. When we talk about how specified penalties speak to families, how that works, it's by addressing concerns over incorrect power bills. It's an issue in customer service from electricity and natural gas providers that the Utilities Consumer Advocate, or the UCA, actually receives thousands of complaints about every single year, Madam Speaker.

Now, I know the opposition doesn't really care when consumers complain about companies, trying to make concerns like this known, but this government does, Madam Speaker. I know that they would rather see complaints just be filed away in a drawer forever, but I think this government really wants to address those issues.

We talk about these, and I want to say that currently what the AUC, the Alberta Utilities Commission, has is the ability to issue a penalty to electricity and natural gas service providers for particular breaches. The penalty is only available through a formal hearing process, and it's really burdensome for individual breaches. When we're talking about individual cases of one or two consumers, that can get kind of flaky in terms of: it's a very large process. When we're talking about thousands of consumers, Madam Speaker, I think that adds up really fast, which is why, when we talk about how fast these add up and how distressing this can be for consumers, it's important that we have a system that can move quickly and can address those issues on a broader scale.

I'm very confident the commission will develop the specified penalties rules in consultation with stakeholders to ensure that they are clear and that the penalties are very fair. It's also important for consumers to know that the utility companies are accountable and can be penalized for their violations of rules relating to service.

Madam Speaker, I know that there are so many great things on the principle of this bill that I want to speak to. There are so many things that I want to speak on on how important this bill is going to be. I know that all of these things we talk about are going to provide a stable and reliable energy system for Albertans, and it's going to provide a stable and reliable energy system for our consumers.

I'm running a little bit short on time here, though, Madam Speaker, so I'm going to table that for another time. I'll come back to it when we get into committee and into our third reading, but I'll at this time move to adjourn debate on the matter.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion to adjourn debate lost]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak?

Mr. Cooper: On 29(2)(a)?

The Acting Speaker: Oh, 29(2)(a). My apologies. The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Why, thank you. It's a pleasure to rise. I just have one very quick question for the member. Earlier this evening we heard the minister speak at some length about how this particular piece of legislation makes changes to the rules around the MSA, which is the market surveillance agency that provides oversight to these sort of industries. As you'll know, Madam Speaker, that position has been vacant for well over seven months. I'm just curious to know if the member thinks that it's important that if we're changing the rules, we might want to have the head of that organization in place to be able to provide some feedback and input on such an important piece of legislation, that's making widespread, sweeping changes to a very important industry here in the province of Alberta.

As you know, Madam Speaker, the government has been very quick to rush some processes but not others, so I'm curious to hear what the member might have to say about this particular issue and whether it's important that we have someone that oversees this very important organization at a very important time such as this, when the government is essentially making a complete mess of the electricity system.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. member, do you wish to respond? The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think that when we talk about things like complaints to independent agencies like the MSA, it's something that I'm really happy to speak about because it's something that – when we look at the system and we look at what's happened and we look at what's happened since electricity was deregulated under the Conservative government, Albertans have been experiencing a price roller coaster. They've been exposed. I think that what the government is bringing in is fixing that. It's fixing that with common-sense reforms that are going to reduce that uncertainty. It's going to reduce that price spike now and in the future. When they want to get up and talk about how much they care about consumers and how much they want to look at these issues, I want to say that our government capped energy bills to protect Albertans from price spikes. Our government implemented common-sense reforms to reduce uncertainty.

Now, the people over there, Madam Speaker, would go back to insider deals that cost Albertans more. Their deregulation policies caused a price roller coaster for Albertans. I think that when we look at the history of what's gone on here and we look at who's the one that's really looking out for Albertans, I think that picture becomes very clear.

Now, as we move on with updating the energy market, I think that we can again show that the energy-only market is very broken, Madam Speaker. We can look at even everyday Albertans who expressed their frustration with the broken market to their MLAs. I've got some quotes from Hansard here, where you can see: "How can anyone budget for such fluctuations in the price per kWh? Why are there such dramatic changes reflected in each bill?” That’s one quote.

Another quote is:

The fact is deregulation benefits only the utility companies – not the consumers . . . Those of us who are on pensions, on disability allowances, single parent families, & the working poor – among others – are adversely affected by what can only be called unbridled greed!

When I look at even what was said in this House just a few years ago, in 2012, I think it’s very clear that the system the members opposite would like to go back to, the system that they think was the Holy Grail of the electricity industry, Madam Speaker, was completely failing consumers. It was something that brought Albertans to have to complain to their MLAs about having dramatic swings in their bills.

When we look at those issues, I think it’s very clear that this government is moving forward in bringing in a system that works for consumers. The updates to the MSA and the updates to the system as a whole reflect that. When we talk about all these different types of issues, we need to know that the government has your back, that when we update the energy system and we bring in these new market changes, the government has your back. I think history shows us very clearly that the Conservative government did not have Albertans’ backs and will not have Albertans’ backs in the future, Madam Speaker. I think it’s something that Bill 13, as we move forward with updating our electricity system, shows really clearly, that we care about everyday Albertans.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to start off my conversation here just with a little bit of interesting information. Under the deregulated market we had this very interesting factor happen. It’s called zero utility debt. That is something that this province is or was extremely proud of. No process is perfect, I’ll give you that. There are certainly things that could have been done and changed.

But if we’re actually going to talk about where this legislation is coming from or why it was brought forward – the member opposite had mentioned that it was a broken system. Well, this bill is a result of other bills that have completely changed this entire market and without the foresight of understanding what those changes would bring forward. I mean, I can appreciate the government’s attempt to try and address the litany of problems that is resulting from these destructive policies on the electricity file, but I’m shaking my head because the only reason why we have to have this bill come forward is because the government mishandled this file from the get-go. We just have to go back to bills 27 and 34. For those of you who were here, those were some very, very, very late night discussions along the lines of why those bills weren’t going to work and the fundamental changes that were going to happen that are actually going to bring us into debt, that will actually fundamentally change the way that electricity moves forward here.

The other thing that’s interesting – and, you know, I’d like to bring this up as well – is that the member had mentioned the MSA and about having an overseer of the market surveillance. This is a very major issue. Seven months is a very, very long time.

But on top of that, let’s just talk about market transition for a moment. If you’re looking at what that transition is going to look like, the impact that it might have on competition, we’re also talking about efficiency. That’s actually been a core piece of the electricity file in this province, efficiency, which is something, actually, that the government hasn’t talked about at all. They’ve talked about stable and reliable, which is interesting given that we’re talking about bringing renewables online. When the wind doesn’t blow and the sun doesn’t shine, we have to double-build for all of those kinds of things in order to have a baseline power in order to make sure that Albertans have stable and reliable electricity at all times.

But what about efficiency? The efficiency piece has been left out of this discussion quite significantly, and if we’re talking about the market transition, if we look at – it’s an interesting conundrum here because in 2015 the question was asked by this government: can the electricity market structure accommodate significant levels of renewable generation and an evaluation of carbon policy options for the Alberta electricity sector? Now, that was done, actually, before the climate leadership action plan came forward. It was done previous to the carbon tax. These questions were asked previous to the climate leadership action plan. With the climate leadership action plan, then, the decision was made to go towards a capacity market, all to make sure that there was an availability to bring renewables online.

Now, interestingly enough, the past bills that I was talking about gave extraordinary – extraordinary – powers to the Minister of Energy to be able to bring renewables online without debating it in this Legislature, without allowing Albertans to know what was going on, to be able to hide it under a capped amount of 6.8 cents.

Actually, speaking about that, the 6.8 cents, interestingly enough, if we’re talking about the cap on the regulation piece, it’s interesting that if it goes above 6.8 cents for any particular reason, those places, Medicine Hat – this is the deferral account statements. If for some reason we go beyond the cap of 6.8 cents, the REAs and Medicine Hat and anybody else who is impacted by that will be compensated by the government. I’d like to understand what that is, how much that’s going to cost, and what would allow that cap to even be surpassed considering it’s considered a cap but actually is written here with the retail rate cap regulation. Should that be surpassed, those places will be compensated by the government. What does that mean? What does that mean to the ratepayer? The ratepayer and the taxpayer are all the same person, Madam Speaker.

When we talk about bills 27 and 34 from the last session and how they fundamentally changed our electricity market – we have the closing of six coal-fired power plants to convert them to natural gas at a cost to the Alberta taxpayers at that point in time of $1.36 billion. The more concerning piece of this is how this project, this mismanagement of this file has decimated some of those communities. You just have to talk to some of those families and be able to sit with them for a little bit to understand what that actually looks like and what that feels like. They relied on those jobs in those local power plants to pay their mortgages and to feed their kids and to save for retirement. For months and months and months at that point in time, I mean, they heard crickets from the government about what would happen to them when those plants would close, and then the residents faced unemployment.

Even more so, actually, the government has taken away the equity from these people. They can’t sell their homes. Their properties are valueless without having those job propositions, those job opportunities there. Congratulations. Those communities are no longer economically viable without those plants. Now, we were already set for those plants to end. There was already a plan to do that. What could possibly have possessed this government to think that that was okay? That is not having the backs of Albertans, Madam Speaker, not even close. Maybe you should go and sit down and have dinner with some of those folks and find out what is actually going on in their lives, how they feel, how that’s impacted their families, their children's education, their ability to raise their families in the places that they planned on being in for some time. That's the ripple effect of this kind of policy.

Remember, folks, zero utility debt. That was the outcome of the deregulated market. The government has forced unpredictable renewable electricity on Albertans with little forethought of the costs and implications to the taxpayers and ratepayers down the road. Lookit, I love renewables. I mean, I've said this probably at least a hundred times in this Legislature. I have solar panels all over my house. I think they're fantastic. But it needs to resonate with people, and I believe they need to have the choice and the understanding of what they're paying for. We owe that much. I mean, when we talk about bills 27 and 34, the words "transparency" and "accountability" were removed – they were removed – from the actions of the minister under those pieces of legislation. She need not tell Albertans what she's doing at any time. Wow. That's really having Albertans' backs.

5:30

The Minister of Economic Development and Trade then – and this is during when these coal plants were being shut down – showed up with Mr. McGowan and the AFL on a full speaking tour in these areas. That was interesting. It was interesting to hear the comments from that. But I think that reasonable policy is not far fetched in this particular situation. I mean, if you look at a lot of these large emitters, a lot of these large companies, many of them, given the incentive that coal would be phased out later on, had the incentives to look to renewables and the time frame to actually bring those things online in a way that is conducive and reasonable for the people of this province.

I mean, you talk to any Albertan. They care about their earth, air, and water. They don't need government to make that decision for them. That's obvious. So why not trust in the people that put you here that they're going to make the right decisions given the right opportunities? There are a thousand other ways that this could have happened, but this bill is a result of the mismanagement of this file, the combination of a system that phased out coal-fired power and introduced wind power in way too tight of a time frame.

I can appreciate the mentality of what you're trying to accomplish – I really can – but it's caused absolute chaos in the system. It destabilized it to a point that the government needs to now step in frantically to put this back together again. You're saying that it was a broken system? Well, it's been broken even further. If there were issues with the system as it was, fix those issues. Nobody was saying that there weren't problems. Absolutely, Madam Speaker. But to break a system by breaking it again in about a thousand other ways gives so much pain and hardship to the people of this province. This file is the downfall of this government.

People who didn't understand anything about electricity now can tell you what a PPA is. People who didn't understand before how it worked and all that have now become savvy. This is a regular discussion at the doors. People who understood – they might have not been happy with the fluctuations before, but it was transparent. You could look at your electricity bill and know exactly what you were paying for. You might not have been particularly thrilled about it at any given moment, but you knew.

Now under the auspices and the smoke and mirrors of stability, the government is going to charge its own rate to bring these things on. You may not see it in your electricity bill, but you're going to see it in your property taxes, your business taxes, and everything else. There are about a thousand other different places that the government can make up and compensate for what they're supposedly giving to Albertans.

Truly, with all my heart, I actually believe Albertans would really, really have loved the opportunity to look at how to bring renewables online, but those large emitters, the ones that the government talks about, that supposedly wanted this change, were already prepped and ready to be able to bring renewables online. They had the dollar figures. They had the transition plans. If the government had taken the advice of the experts in this industry and slowed it down for a more measured transition to renewable energy, this market wouldn't have had to have been compromised so severely, Madam Speaker. But they were so eager to prove themselves to their friends and to Trudeau that they rushed into renewables and destabilized this market, that had run largely without incident for decades under the previous government.

I think the most concerning thing right now is that the watchdog of this electricity portfolio is not functioning. There is nobody watching over what's going on right now. For example, I mean, if we're talking about compliance – the member was talking about compliance and rules and reliability standards – I mean, since 2008 the MSA has collected $1.7 million in financial penalties, and those are just the small ones. These aren't the large ones, okay? This was what their job was.

So I'm curious. The minister had mentioned that the government now is going to be – I'm sorry; I don't have the benefit of the Blues in front of me – working with the compliance piece of it to make sure that there's accountability so that if there are penalties, the government will now be in charge of that. So is the MSA actually going to be reignited, or is the government now providing that oversight as well?

My question, I suppose, is: is the MSA actually going to still continue on as an independent body to be able to hold all of these new things that are coming on accountable, that nobody knows about because it's under a piece of legislation that nobody knows about and nobody gets to find out about? Is the MSA now going to be watching that market on our behalf for things that nobody understands are within the auspices of that legislation, or is it going to be replaced by government oversight? If I understood the minister correctly, government oversight seems to be the direction that we're going. If somebody can answer that for me, I would be extremely grateful. I'd love to find out that that's not the case.

I think, too, that we have some really great crossjurisdictional information about other provinces that haven't done well with this. I mean, we only have to look to Ontario, right? We see families that are just suffering like crazy, and we want to make sure that that doesn't happen to our families here. Let's at least learn that much from other jurisdictions that have failed. You have the time to turn this around.

With that, I'd like to adjourn debate.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order

Bill 15 Appropriation Act, 2018

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered in respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today in the House to speak on Bill 15, the Appropriation Act, 2018. When the government introduced their budget earlier this session, Albertans for the first time could actually see the recklessness and carelessness of the government's finances. This year alone almost $9 billion is expected to be added to the provincial debt. I constantly hear from my constituents, who express great concern over the direction of the provincial finances. They wonder how we got into this predicament. For many years we were a province that was the envy of Canada in terms of our finances. We had no debt and a balanced budget. How were we able to do this? We lived within our means and ensured that our fiscal decisions allowed for economic prosperity for all Albertans. We had a flat tax, the lowest corporate tax, and no sales tax. Under this government income taxes have gone up, corporate taxes have gone up, and the government has rolled out a massive job-killing carbon tax, which has driven away massive amounts of investment.

Now Albertans are asking questions, and they have every right to be concerned. Does the government really know what they're doing? Alberta is no longer unique in the Confederation. Its finances are just as bad if not worse than any other province. Alberta was once a bright light for opportunity and investment in this country, in Canada, but now those investors are looking for opportunities, and they're looking for opportunities elsewhere. Billions of dollars of investment have left this province, but, really, who can blame them? Nothing about the current budget gives investors any confidence that Alberta is open for business. In fact, Alberta's stellar credit rating has been downgraded. I think it's been downgraded at least five times. What happened to the Alberta advantage? This is what made Alberta special, and I'm disappointed that this is no longer the reality for our province.

Madam Chair, what is the government's plan? Well, they've increased taxes on Alberta families, yet they still can't balance the books. At this current rate the provincial debt will be $96 billion by the middle of the next decade, almost a ninefold increase from when they took office. What will it cost us to service this debt? Just shy of $4 billion. It's hard to imagine how many teachers and nurses could be hired with that amount of money. Instead of being able to use this money to provide services that are important to Albertans, this money is going toward paying off creditors, going to the banks, going to financial institutions, billions and billions of dollars in interest payments. Oh well. What can I say?

Further to this, how are we expected to pay back this money? It's not something that we can recover from quickly; rather, it will take generations and generations to pay back this debt. Our children, our grandchildren, my grandchildren will be the ones stuck paying back this government's fiscal mismanagement.

This government is taking Alberta off the fiscal cliff. If we continue on this path, by 2024 the debt per capita will be over $20,000 per person. So what's the plan? Is there a strategy? Is there a debt paydown strategy? No. How are we going to get back to a balanced budget? This government has failed to provide us with adequate questions and answers.

This government needs to realize that raising taxes and spending more is not the answer. Ever since the government raised taxes across the board when they took office, tax revenues have actually gone down. Maybe there might be a correlation between tax rates and the amount of investment in our province. As I said earlier, Madam Chair, our records show that billions of investment dollars have left this province, and they've moved elsewhere. They're not coming back for a while.

With this economic downturn, coupled with this government's tax increase, Albertan families have had to tighten their belts and restrain spending. That's the rationale. Is that the rational thing to do? Can our government do the same thing? Can they do the sensible thing? Now, the government said that they would rein in their spending; however, expenditures keep going up year after year. Ninety-six billion dollars in debt. Four billion dollars to service the debt.

Now let's talk about the carbon tax. The government promised us that if we instituted this massive tax grab on families, we would get a magical thing called social licence. This apparently would silence all opposition to our oil sands and would give us the ability to get our products to market. As of today has this happened? No. With the Trans Mountain expansion hanging on by a thread, being stopped in its tracks by protestors, professional protesters, I might add, has the carbon tax really done anything to achieve the so-called social licence? I wonder if I can go to the registries office and buy a social licence. Not sure. I didn't get my renewal.

Believe it or not, raising taxes and increasing the cost of living for Albertan families doesn't actually get rid of the opposition to our energy products. Protesters who are setting up camp by the Trans Mountain expansion site didn't all of a sudden wake up and say: "Oh, Alberta has a carbon tax. Now I guess we'll change our minds on this project and pack up and leave." That is ridiculous thinking, and it goes to show that there's no such thing as social licence. The protesters exist to push back on Alberta's energy market and our energy products. Trans Mountain is on a thread. Now, I hope that at the end of the month we have good news, but I suspect that it might not be so.

We were first told that the revenues from the carbon tax would go into special green projects or be given back to Albertans in the form of rebates. However, we now know that beginning in 2021, the government plans to direct revenue from the carbon tax into general revenue, which is general spending, which is, I guess, padding the books. A tax on everyone. A tax on everything. This shows that the carbon tax is just nothing but a tax grab on Albertans and Alberta families.

People are hurting. People in my constituency are hurting. People have lost their jobs. Our economy is not doing well, and adding more taxes is not helping them. It's hurting them. Adding more money to the deficit and to the debt is not helping this province, and it's not helping our future generations. The carbon tax is just disguised as a tool to support the reduction of greenhouse gases, but in reality it's a tool used to help pay for this government's out-of-control spending.

Now, the current government likes to state that they're a government that supports families, but with this budget is that really the case? When I talk to my constituents, rest assured that not many of them talk about the benefits of the carbon tax. They talk about the negative aspects of the carbon tax, a tax on everything, a tax on all transportation, goods, products, and services. Every day people see that the cost of everything is increasing. It's going to continue to do so: $9 billion in debt, $4 billion to service the debt. That's $4 billion which could be used for a lot of good things in this province, not just paying back the banks.

This budget does nothing to encourage investment and get Albertans back to work. Ask yourself how many families are struggling to make ends meet because of the lack of work. How many former oil workers are struggling financially because of this government's inability to get pipeline projects approved? Don't kid yourself. Kinder Morgan is not a guaranteed deal. Energy East is gone. Northern Gateway is gone. You're counting on one pipeline which is on life support right now. How many families are having difficulty paying this detrimental carbon tax, a tax on everything? Madam Chair, with the budget that was presented earlier this session, it's hard to see how government is truly supporting families.

With that, I believe that I've demonstrated that there are far more questions than answers in this budget. This government seems unprepared to deal with the debt load and the debt that they're giving us, that they're presenting to us, our future children, our grandchildren.

Madam Chair, I'll be voting against this budget. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to stand and speak to Bill 15, the Appropriation Act, 2018. My colleagues and I are profoundly worried about the direction that this government has taken. We have talked specifically about this over the years, about the concern for the deficit and not being able to take measures necessary to be able to get the spending under control. A province that was once the envy of the Confederation has now been stifled both politically and economically and is projecting deficits every year up until 2023 to 2024. This is unacceptable, not just to me but to most every Albertan that I speak to.

Disastrous ideological decisions have been made by this NDP government over the last three years, and they have taken a struggling economy and made things harder for Albertans. Taxpayers are now on the hook for a massive debt that will hit nearly $100 billion by 2023-24 if the NDP are given a second term. This, by the way, is a 78 per cent increase from the 2018-19 budget. It's deplorable, Madam Chair.'

The economic situation in Alberta is in such a bad state that once-thriving and -prosperous companies have decided to pack their bags and head south, leaving countless people without employment. As I speak to different businesses throughout this province, I am shocked to see how many people, how many of these businesses are saying that they are going to leave. I ask them not to leave and to believe in Alberta once again and to hope that in 2019 this will be a government one and done.

It's a sad state when we face many Albertans who tell us daily that they have given up looking for work altogether. While some have been fortunate enough to find employment, they are now working for a fraction of what they once earned.

According to Statistics Canada in a labour force survey in March of this year, zero full-time jobs were created and only part-time jobs increased. These are the real-time statistics, Madam Chair, that this government uses when it announces that jobs have increased. They seem to leave out critical details. In that same survey it states that there were 156,500 unemployed Albertans, 17,300 more than when this government took office. Also, there are nearly 44,000 unemployed youth in Alberta. The youth unemployment rate is 13.3 per cent, the highest outside of Atlantic Canada. Again in the same survey: youth lost 2,400 full-time jobs, that were replaced by only part-time employment.

I've had an opportunity to speak to a couple of businesses, and one of the concerns that they have with these policies that have been cascaded from this government is that they feel like there's death by a thousand cuts in that the labour laws have been changed, the minimum wage has gone up, and that exacerbates the economic challenges that these businesses are facing. A lot of these businesses have indicated to me that they can't hire young people between the ages of 15 and 24 because they do not feel that they have those margins in their business to be able to provide that training wage that these young people would need, and because of that, we're now seeing 13.3 per cent unemployment amongst young people.

Again, as the Labour critic I've asked the Labour minister many times, you know, whether she had done an economic impact study. Unfortunately, the response that I received was that the economic impact study would not be done but that she would assess as she goes. Well, we've had three years now of these types of policies coming forward, and I think that at 13.3 per cent youth unemployment, the evidence is clear that the policies are not working, that they are not really helping the young people like originally designed or intended. This is just one aspect of businesses that are struggling to be able to make ends meet.

Now, when this government talks about increasing jobs, we know that they are talking about jobs that were once full-time and are now newly created part-time positions. That is all businesses can afford. In March of this year, while population numbers increased, the size of the labour force actually decreased by 500 Albertans. These statistics tell the real story about the economic picture here in Alberta.

In reality it's no wonder that the NDP will have to use the proceeds from the carbon tax and apply that to general revenue since they won't be able to get the revenue they need from other traditional avenues. The traditional avenues I'm talking about are where this government seems to not get it. I've talked about this before in the House, but I'll say it again. The difference between, I guess, Conservatives and Liberals or NDPs, as is the case in Alberta, is this. For some strange reason the NDP and Liberals believe that the pie, or the size of the economy, is static and that it's their God-given right to be able to take more of that pie and redistribute it. The difference with us on the Conservative side is that we actually believe that that pie is not static, that the pie actually can grow or shrink based upon good or bad policy. History is replete with examples of when good policy and bad policy have been instituted and how that pie has grown or shrunk.

We've seen over the last three years, according to the Conference Board of Canada, $36 billion, in the first two years of this government, leave this province. That's the Conference Board of Canada. That investment that has left: the trickle-down effect is the loss of jobs.

The only way to be able to fix the problem is to try to throw more money at it – that's called Keynesian economics – try to buy yourself out of the recessions. You know, the truth is, Madam Chair, that I cannot see one example in history where Keynesian economics has actually worked, and here's the reason why. The reason is this. The full formula of Keynesian economics – I'm glad that I've got the attention of the members opposite now; it's good to see that they're paying attention – is that you buy yourself out of the recession but save during the good times. There have been very, very few – actually, the only one who has actually done it is Ralph Klein. He's the one who actually saved . . . [interjections] Again, it's good to know that we've got the attention of the members opposite on this. That is the only time that we've actually seen that happen.

Then we had what we called the $15 billion rainy-day fund, which this government seems to have spent very quickly in their first three years of operations.

Now, you know what? The truth is – and I go back to my original point, which is that if the government truly did believe in Keynesian economic policy, they would have a strategy of not only balancing the budget but a strategy of being able to, once the economy actually starts firing on all cylinders, start saving. Instead, what we're seeing is the government waiting until 2023-24 to be able to just balance the budget. Yet every indicator – in fact, even the members opposite have said that we are actually out of the recession. If they are truly going to follow Keynesian economic models, then at that point, once the economy starts to fire on all cylinders, they're supposed to be saving for a rainy day. Instead, what we see is this government continuing to spend exorbitant amounts in deficit spending.

So we find ourselves in a position now where we're sitting at – what? – $56 billion in debt. I think when they took over, they took over an $11 billion debt. The majority of that was actually for capital projects, not actually spending for operation. Now we're in a situation where these aren't even just capital deficits, but these are actually debts that are from operational.

Madam Chair, the concern that I have for the government and the strategy and the path that the government is following is that they are not even following the Keynesian economic model, which says that they have got to be able to get back into balance when the times are good and save for those rainy days. Because of this situation, unfortunately, we are now seeing these credit downgrades. We're now seeing a situation where they have no path to being able to get us back to a situation that is going to be good for Albertans.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Pursuant to Standing Order 4(4), at 6 p.m. when there is an evening sitting and the Assembly is in Committee of the Whole, the chair leaves the chair until 7:30 p.m.. We are now recessed.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 15 Appropriation Act, 2018

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

Mr. Cooper: Well, a very fine May evening to you. It's a pleasure to be here this evening to debate what I can tell you, Madam Chair, is a very important piece of legislation to the good people of the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

An Hon. Member: Where?

Mr. Cooper: The outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

I might just add, Madam Chair, that while it's important, one thing that I can assure you is that I have not run into one – not one, not even one – constituent in that outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills who has encouraged me to support this particular budget. In fact, they have encouraged me to do the exact opposite of supporting a budget like this.

You know, I spend a lot of time connecting with the outstanding constituents of the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, and one of the things I found very interesting over the past number of years is that initially, when the government took office, they had some reservations about the ability of the Finance minister to deliver budgets that put Albertans first, and certainly they had some concerns about his ability to balance the budget. But I'll be totally upfront with you, Madam Chair. It's not the very first issue that they spoke to me about.

The good people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills over the past couple of years spent a lot of time talking to me about how they were concerned with the direction that the government was taking us in. They spent a lot of time warning me about the impacts of the carbon tax. They spent a lot of time being concerned about the negative impacts that the government's policy is having on small businesses, the way that the government is making an absolute disaster of our economy, driving investment away. That was their primary concern. I had the opportunity to speak to hundreds if not thousands of constituents in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, in fact to people all across the province but in this case predominantly people in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, and they were concerned about the actions of the government, but the budget wasn't the number one thing that they spoke to me about.

But, Madam Chair, all that changed. All that changed in late March, I think the 26th of March, whatever the budget day was. All that changed, and what very quickly became the number one concern of the good folks of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills were the absolutely damaging impacts that this Finance minister's budget is having and will continue to have on our province over a very long period of time. [interjection] It sounds to me like the Finance minister is trying to distance himself from his own budget it's so bad.

The outstanding constituents of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills have really highlighted this as their primary concern. Now, that's not to say that they have abandoned their distaste for the carbon tax, because I know that that continues to be a big concern. That's not to say that they haven't highlighted the major issues of the fact that this government has failed Albertans on pipelines, that they failed Albertans in so many capacities. [interjections] But what I've been hearing . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I know we've just started the evening, but you're awfully noisy. If you can maybe just bring it down so that I can listen to the hon. member, I'd appreciate it.

Mr. Cooper: The hon. member does have some very interesting things to say, so I appreciate your attention, Chair.

An Hon. Member: That's up for debate.

Mr. Cooper: Yes, and you'll have your opportunity. The amazing thing about the Legislative Assembly is that we all get a chance to represent the folks that sent us here.

As I was saying, Madam Chair, those folks that sent the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills to this fine place have been expressing their major, major concern about the impacts that this budget is going to have over a very long period of time. You might say that they are setting off warning sirens, and I hope that the Finance minister hears their warnings.

I know that the Finance minister hasn't paid much attention to Albertans, and he certainly hasn't paid much attention to the credit-rating agencies since he's taken office. We know that since this minister has had his hand on the public purse, we have seen six credit downgrades since the NDP took office, and now we are quite likely to continue to see that because Alberta's debt is projected to reach $96 billion.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Cooper: Ninety-six billion dollars by '23-24. That, of course, has been confirmed by his officials.

You know, Madam Chair, as I was saying, debt and deficit were not the number one concern of the constituents of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, but this Finance minister has taken every opportunity to change their main concern, and that has now become the future of Alberta's finances.

The other thing that I can assure you of is that the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills know that there is a better solution to Alberta's finances, and that is to have the Leader of the Official Opposition with his hand on the public purse guiding our future, not the Minister of Finance.

The other thing that I might add, Madam Chair, is the significant amount of interest payments that Albertans are going to have to pay because of the reckless spending of the NDP. Now, I anticipate that, like in other times in this place, the government members will stand on their feet and say: "Well, if you wanted this, then you shouldn't have voted against the budget. If you wanted that, then you shouldn't have voted against the budget." Let me be clear. There are things that the government spends money on that are good and important expenditures that we as Albertans need to see the government spending money on. But – but – just because one doesn't support this reckless spending plan, this reckless spending plan that this Finance minister has put before us, it doesn't mean that one believes that every single dollar the government spends is a dollar wasted. Now, let me be very clear. This government, this current NDP government, is wasting money. There is a significant amount of opportunity for savings to be found within this very bloated budget that this government is proposing.

One of the big challenges that I hear from the good people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills is their concern around the long-term stability of Alberta's finances. If we look, Alberta is spending more than a billion dollars annually on interest payments on debt, and we are only going to see those debt-servicing costs increase in a dramatic, dramatic fashion: '18-19, $1.9 billion; '23-24, $3.7 billion. Madam Chair, I know that you know, because you are keenly aware of the spending of the government, that the total debt-servicing between 2018-19 and '23-24, if this NDP Finance minister is left holding the public purse, will be an estimated $17.6 billion.

You know what's interesting other than the devastating impacts that that will have on our ability to do other good? It's interesting to hear what economists and others have to say about this particular issue, because they have major concerns. It's not just the opposition that's concerned with the reckless spending of the Finance minister and the cabinet of this government, this NDP government. It is folks at Moody's. It is their good friend Trevor Tombe, the U of C economist. He talked about – and I can quote him from March 24 – how there was a complete divergence between the public statements made by the Premier and the Minister of Finance and what Budget 2018 ultimately revealed, that if the government wanted to provide a plan, they could have, but they chose not to. A complete divergence, Madam Chair.

This government is very, very, very quickly becoming a say one thing, do another government, and they have a long track record now of communicating that to Albertans, and this is another example of just that. When we talk about getting back to balance, with this complete divergence between the public statements that the Premier and this minister made and what they ultimately delivered, when we talk about that plan, Trevor Tombe also said that the government needs $66.3 billion in '23-24 to balance. Of that, $10.4 billion they'll need from resource royalty revenues. But how much from income tax, carbon tax, gas tax, federal tax, and user fees? We don't know. We have no idea because of a lack of detail that this minister provides.

We all know, Madam Chair, that we can't trust this government. We can't trust this government because they implemented the single largest tax increase in Alberta's history without mentioning it at all prior to their election. We can't trust this government because we can't get a straight answer on whether or not they will increase the carbon tax, just as their close ally and friend Justin Trudeau has asked them to do. Not even their closest allies believe the things that this minister says, including the comment about a complete divergence from what they have said to what they are doing.

You know, if we look at what some of the other finance agencies have said, DBRS has talked about: "The [credit] downgrade reflects large operating deficits and rapid debt accumulation." Rapid debt accumulation. That is exactly what we see from this government, a significant commitment to debt. That is exactly what the Finance minister is committed to. He's committed to debt. He's committed. In fact, in his own documents it says that he's committed to $96 billion in debt, debt that will disproportionately have a negative impact on the future of our province, and it is one of the many, many, many reasons why I won't be supporting this spending plan that the government has produced.

If there's one thing that I am confident of, Madam Chair, it is that today I will be voting against this budget. It is because the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills have sent me with a very clear message to deliver to this government, and that is that $96 billion in debt is not a path that they believe is the best path for Alberta's future. They understand that long after this Finance minister is gone, someone is going to have to pay this $96 billion back. It is not going to be easy, but it is going to be critical to the success of our province that we get our spending under control.

Madam Chair, we have also seen inside this budget that this government takes significant risks on the revenues that will come from the Trans Mountain pipeline. And I want to be very, very, very, very, clear that I, like virtually every single constituent in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills that I've spoken with, want to see this pipeline built. It is not only important to our province, but it is important to our nation, it is important to the strength of our economy, and there are a litany of reasons why Trans Mountain should be built.

Now, like many constituents in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, I have some concerns about whether or not that is going to take place. I have some concerns, particularly given that we are less than 30 days away from that announcement, that we have yet to hear from the Prime Minister on this, the close personal ally of the Premier. We have yet to see concrete action. I appreciate the fact that we're debating Bill 12 in the House and that we debated it earlier today. Certainly, some of the recommendations that have been made by the Leader of the Official Opposition, the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, are included in that particular piece of legislation, but I also have concerns given the fact that the Premier has in fact said in her meeting with Premier Horgan that she doesn't expect to have to use this piece of legislation.

But the big challenge here as it applies specifically to the budget is that there is significant uncertainty surrounding the pipeline, but the NDP is counting its revenue into their projections. I mean, a perfect example of the lack of action and the uncertainty is that the Premier won't even call upon Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, her close personal friend and ally, to limit nondiscretionary transfers to the province of British Columbia until we have all of the approvals in place.

So there is major uncertainty. In fact, less than 10 days ago, during the estimates process, the Leader of the Opposition was questioning the Premier at the same time that the president of Kinder Morgan was saying that in light of the developments, the project still may be untenable. Even given those strong comments by the president of Kinder Morgan, we see inaction on behalf of the Premier even calling upon the Prime Minister to act in the best interests of our nation and apply pressure to the province of British Columbia in the form of withholding nondiscretionary transfers. We see delay after delay, and all sorts of people, including the proponent of the project, expressing major concerns, yet we see the Finance minister essentially putting in his budget, that hangs in the balance of that pipeline getting built.

I think I was clear in my remarks that I believe that it is absolutely imperative for it to get built, and I want the project to get built. But putting our province's fiscal future on the Prime Minister, the close personal ally and friend to the Premier; and on the Premier of British Columbia, John Horgan; and on eco radical Andrew Weaver, the leader of the Greens, and hanging it on the balance of those outside influences to potentially get us back to balance in 2023 is reckless and inadvisable. I think it's important that the Finance minister take this opportunity to reconsider some of his decisions. It is absolutely unbelievable to think that the Finance minister would be putting our province at such financial risk based upon the actions . . .

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Before we continue, just a reminder to both sides of the House. If you could keep the tone down, please.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Budgets are the ultimate document that tells us what the choices that a government is willing to make are. And a budget is about choices. It is about choosing which programs to fund. It's about choosing how to fund those programs. It's about either being realistic about the fiscal situation a province faces, or it is about burying your head in the sand or perhaps crossing your fingers and simply hoping that things turn around. I think we have seen how that has gone for previous governments who've tried that.

Unfortunately, we have a government who is in exactly the same position, who has based a budget this time yet again on hope, on the hope that the price of oil goes up, on the hope that we can get not one but two pipelines built. I sincerely and genuinely do hope that this is going to happen, but it is risky for the province to bank our fiscal future and our fiscal sustainability on that hope, not only hoping that the pipelines get built at all but hoping that they get built in some reasonable time frame.

I think that as we've seen from the incredible opposition to the Kinder Morgan pipeline in B.C., that is far from a sure thing. As we've seen recently, the Enbridge line 3 pipeline has faced some setbacks in terms of its likelihood of moving forward in an expeditious manner. I sincerely do hope that those projects do move ahead and they move ahead quickly, but I have some grave concerns. I wouldn't say that it is responsible for a government to budget on the assumption that those projects are going to go ahead. Their purported plan to balance the budget is really nothing more than fantasy, pure fantasy. When I saw the budget, that was the first word that came to my mind was that this budget is pure fantasy. It is a hope; it is not a plan.

I wish that the government had found even a tiny modicum of savings. One of the most remarkable things to me in talking with stakeholders in the rotunda after the budget speech, on March 22, when the budget was brought down, was the number of stakeholders from either funded agencies or even internal departments within government – and I won't name names or talk about which departments, but I can tell you that it was more than one – that said: "You know, we don't mind receiving an increase this year. I guess we'll take the money. Of course we will." But they were genuinely concerned, Madam Chair – genuinely concerned – about the sustainability of that funding. Was it actually going to be there a year or two down the road? Because the more money that was put in and the higher the debt loads, as those stakeholders realized, the more likely it was that there would be a change of government as a result of the terrible fiscal mismanagement on the part of this government. They were worried that perhaps a far-right-wing government would come in and bring in '90s-style cutbacks. It was a genuine concern, and I share that concern.

The good news is that we in the Alberta Party stand here with a real plan. We brought forward our shadow budget. Our plan would not slash front-line services but would bring in reasonable cost savings, that compassionate belt-tightening that the government signalled so strongly leading into the budget. That was the great surprise that I heard from stakeholders, that: "We were ready. We were prepared to do some minor economizing and belt-tightening, but the government didn't even ask us. They signalled that they were going to do it, and we were ready to do it. We were able to find a way, but we didn't have to, so I guess we didn't."

That really told me that there are many, many areas – and I think we know of many areas – where we could find savings without having a tremendous negative impact on front-line services. In fact, there may be areas – I suspect there are – where we can ask the tremendous public servants in our province to innovate in how they deliver those services and to have an incentive to do so because they realize they have to do more with those scarce resources.

So what's the impact of this whole plan? The impact, of course, in the absolute best-case scenario is $96 billion in debt by the time this government's purported plan to balance would actually happen. The fascinating thing, of course, is that – and I hope this comment isn't out of order – that number is nowhere in the budget. That $96 billion number is nowhere in the budget. We all had to do a little bit of arithmetic and ask the department and cajole, and eventually it came out that, well, it's going to be $96 billion by the time we actually think we might possibly balance. Remembering that that, quote, unquote, plan to balance is really based on an awful lot of things going right, an awful lot of things going well.

One of those things is the personal income taxes and corporate income taxes going up substantially over the next five years whereas under this government the tax take, notwithstanding the fact that the taxes have been raised by this government, the actual take to the treasury, has gone down every year. It's lower than it was when this government took office because of the cumulative impact of all of the negative policies impacting the investment climate in this province. So to think that those corporate and personal income tax rates are going to go up by 40 per cent or more is fantasy.

So here we are $96 billion in debt, at the very best. The government has tried to dress that up by looking at not debt to GDP like they've done in past budgets, but they've gone to net debt to GDP, again trying to pull the wool over the eyes of Albertans. I remember cracking open the budget in the embargo, and the first thing I went to look for was the debt to GDP numbers, and I couldn't find them. This budget was different. This budget is net debt to GDP. The table on page 11 is net debt to GDP this year, and last year it was debt to GDP. If I had the budget documents here, I would gladly show the Finance minister exactly what I'm talking about. That was yet another attempt to really hide the true scale of the problem.

It looks like my hon. colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills is sharing a copy of the budget with me, so as I talk, I can flip the pages, and we can go through it and actually have a look for it. Unfortunately, the one volume I need isn't in this pile. The fiscal plan, Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, if you could bring that. He tried to be helpful. Not that helpful. I appreciate the effort, though.

Then was it just a week or so ago that the Auditor General released his leaving report? It is a fascinating read. I would hope that every member has had an opportunity to not just read the summary but to read the entire document. One of the things the Auditor General talks about is the scale of the debt problem we're going to have by the year 2021, not even by 2023, when this government purports to possibly, maybe, sort of, hopefully, possibly, maybe balance the budget.

The Auditor General talked about that to pay off the amount of debt that this government will have accumulated by 2021, we would need to have a surplus of $3 billion a year for 25 straight years, and we would need an additional $1 billion or $2 billion over and above that to simply maintain the level of infrastructure that we currently have, not to add more, just to maintain it. So that would be surpluses of $4 billion to $5 billion for 25 straight years. That is the scale of the problem that we have in this province, so we have a day of reckoning coming, unfortunately, sooner rather than later.

The only plan I can think of that may be worse than the government's plan would be the UCP's plan, except that we don't really know their plan because they haven't shared a plan with us. They have done a lot of arm waving and made a lot of noise about it, but we don't know what their plan is. They're unwilling to share that with Albertans. I've said it many times in this House, and I'll say it yet again. The job of those of us in opposition is not just to oppose government, not just to stand up against every single thing the government does. That is half the job. The other half of the job is to propose ideas. The Alberta Party has always been very, very clear about what we would do. We bring our shadow budgets out. We share with Albertans what our ideas are and allow those Albertans to then tell us what they think. That's what I think good governance and good opposition is.

This government has firmly kept us on the resource revenue roller coaster. Now, they talk about getting us off that. The problem we have in this province is not so much an economic diversification problem. Alberta's economy, if you look at the actual underlying numbers, is one of the more diversified economies in the country. We actually have a relatively well-diversified economy. We certainly do very well on the oil and gas side. We have a lot of tremendous economic activity, a lot of jobs created in the oil and gas sector, and that's a wonderful, wonderful thing. Long may it continue, and long may that growth continue. But our economy in Alberta is relatively diversified. What isn't well diversified are government revenue sources, and this government has done nothing to grow the pie.

Mr. Ceci: PITs and CITs.

Mr. Clark: The minister is asking me about corporate and personal income tax. Although you've raised the rates, Minister, the actual amount of money that's being brought in by PIT and CIT is lower than it was when you came in. It has had a negative effect. [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I know we started in committee, but if we could please respect the speaker and at least keep the tone of the conversations down.

Thank you.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'll conclude by saying that notwithstanding the fact that I will be voting against the appropriation bill, I'm voting against the budget as a whole because I don't think the budget in the aggregate took the right tack.

I will say proudly that in the Alberta Party caucus we did vote in favour of four ministries. The budget for Children's Services: I was very pleased to see that that was increased quite substantially as a result of the work we did on the Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention. The Education budget: interestingly, Madam Chair, the Alberta Party in our shadow budget would actually spend more on K to 12 education than this government has proposed. Having said that, I did vote in favour of the Education budget because I think that if there is anything we ought to be doing, it's investing in education. The same applies, then, to postsecondary, which is why we supported that.

Perhaps the most curious line item of the budget that the Alberta Party supported and that the UCP did not was Justice. The UCP has talked a lot about the rural crime crisis, and it is a crisis in many communities. There has been more money put into the budget. Whether it's enough, that remains to be seen. I can tell you that that is a huge challenge all around the province. But we in the Alberta Party voted in favour of the Justice budget because of the fact that additional investments had been made to try to address rural crime in particular.

Those four ministries we can support and did support, but overall the opportunities to find even a modicum of savings, particularly in health care, which is by far the largest budget – and if we want to tackle the fiscal challenges facing our province, we must find savings in health care. We must find meaningful efficiencies, and we must move towards wellness, with less focus on acute care. At the same time, we need to address waiting lists. We need to address the challenges posed by ensuring that seniors are healthy into later life, also recognizing that as we age, we will use more health care services, and how we can keep people healthier longer in community as best we can. I didn't feel that in this budget there was nearly enough emphasis or focus on that.

I didn't feel that there was nearly enough emphasis or focus on housing. Very interestingly, in estimates we discovered that the vaunted five-year plan to spend $1.2 billion on affordable housing has turned, magically, into a seven-year plan because the government just simply hasn't been able to organize itself well enough to get those dollars out the door on the housing side. Same thing on the long-term care side. The government has taken a government-first approach as opposed to partnering with the not-for-profit community. That not only costs us more tax dollars in the short term, tax dollars that we don't have – so we have to borrow – but it also takes longer to build. I can tell you that it greatly frustrates the not-for-profit community, which you would think would be a natural ally of this government. Unfortunately, they have really left those groups in the lurch.

In the end, Madam Chair, as much as we did support four areas of this budget, we're unable to support it in the aggregate. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Bill 10

An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements

[Adjourned debate May 1: Mr. Panda]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to Bill 10? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements. This bill creates the property assessed clean energy program, which I will call by its acronym, PACE. Bill 10 will let municipalities approve a bylaw to put a PACE program in place for their communities. Basically, it's a home improvement program. If a homeowner were to take advantage of it, the repayment would be collected through their municipal tax bill.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Madam Speaker, that sounds simple, but it's not. In fact, it can come with all kinds of problems, and I would argue that it is inadvisable and completely unnecessary as well. Thankfully, PACE is not mandatory. Municipalities can choose not to create the enabling bylaw, and there's little compelling reason for them to do so. Bill 10 is vague, and that means municipalities may never know exactly what they are signing up for with PACE. Bill 10 claims that Energy Efficiency Alberta, the agency that brought us the free light bulbs and people who will come to your home and screw them in for you, will administer PACE. But nowhere in Bill 10 is Energy Efficiency Alberta mentioned. Like with almost every other detail, administration will be filled in later in regulations, which occur in the department and are eventually approved by cabinet.

One thing that is clear in Bill 10 is that PACE involves an energy improvement agreement between the municipalities and the property owner, and the municipality collects it through the homeowner's property taxes. What happens if the homeowner can't pay the taxes due to the PACE assessment? Will the municipality be on the hook to cover the tax deficit? And if the municipality isn't ultimately responsible, if, say, a financial lender is, does the municipality have to come up with the funds if the homeowner can't?

There's always the possibility that the municipality will have to put the home up for a tax sale to recover the money, and there are a whole lot of other costs involved for the municipality in doing that. These questions just aren't answered in the bill. Any time there is a potential cost to a municipality, there's a risk to taxpayers. Thankfully, most municipalities are cautious guardians, and for that reason they're unlikely to subscribe to this newest NDP program.

Let me also point out that there must be a risk to municipalities because Bill 10 exempts municipal borrowing from its debt limit. So somehow the loans must count as municipal debt. Once again, that means a risk to local residents.

Because we know nothing about how this program will work, let's also look at the possibility that it is totally administered through the province, with no risk to the municipality. Should homeowners default, the losses would have to be picked up by the province, which means all Alberta taxpayers. So does it really make any difference where the risk falls? It ultimately falls to taxpayers.

Furthermore, PACE is unnecessary because homeowners have many options for borrowing to make their home energy efficient. Just like any home improvement program, they can do it through their mortgage or get a line of credit or a loan through their banking institution. In other words, we do not need PACE.

Its only purpose might be to assist homeowners who cannot get a line of credit, a loan, or extend their mortgage through their bank. In that case, the homeowner may not be in a financial position to be requesting it. If the financial institutions won't lend them money because they haven't got the means to pay it, it doesn't give them the means to pay it on the taxes. Then they'll default, and the municipality will be, again, on the hook for all the extra costs that go with that. If they can afford to pay it on their taxes, they can afford to pay it on their mortgage, in fact even more so because PACE is only over 10 years whereas with a mortgage you could spread it over 20 years, so it would actually be a smaller payment. So if they can't afford it on their mortgage, they can't afford it on their taxes, for sure. Once again, that points to the likelihood of not being able to pay it back and leaving the taxpayer on the hook.

Mr. Speaker, this NDP government does not seem to respect the intelligence of Albertans to know what's best for them. Albertans know that energy efficiency in their home is beneficial both financially because it lowers their costs and because it's the right thing to do for our environment. They have lots of options for making it happen. Let's just respect them and let them make their own choices.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any members under 29(2)(a)? The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Holy moly. I respect the individual across the way immensely. Where do I start? There is a lot to unpack in that. I'll try to be fairly straightforward.

First off, I respect the opinions and the intelligence of the ratepayers and the people of Alberta, especially since they asked me for this. Municipalities across the province have asked me for this. Builders, developers, contractors – you name it, Mr. Speaker – have asked me for this consistently.

You can look to see different jurisdictions across North America where this has happened. Ontario has it – we're going in a little bit different way than they have – and the same with Nova Scotia. Down in the United States 33 states have it; that's Democratic and Republican states. They have brought in I believe the figure is over $6 billion in economic development down there.

When we're talking about PACE, we're talking about the opportunity for everybody to be involved in energy efficiency. The member talked about not having the ability. Great point. Great point. You know, some people talk about solar and how it's expensive. Well, guess what? It's gone down a lot because China has put hundreds of billions of dollars into it and brought it down, which is beneficial to us. That being said, it's still pretty expensive, and the upfront costs are usually the problem with these types of programs. It's really hard to get involved. With PACE, not only are you able to get involved with solar but energy-efficient windows, insulation, water conservation. There's a multitude of things that you can do with this. It's spread out over a long period of time, and it stays with the property, which actually ups the resale value.

Speaking of resale value, recently I've been talking to a lot of realtors who are quite excited about this. Honestly, Mr. Speaker, they know that building in the future, in 2030, I think – I might have the year wrong – is going to be net zero. Realtors are excited about it, builders are excited about it and contractors because it gives them an opportunity to get a leg up on other provinces.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, you're going to direct your question to . . .

Mr. S. Anderson: Through you, Mr. Speaker, to the member. I'm trying to enlighten him on some of the things. Like I said, I respect the member immensely. He's a fantastic individual, but I think he's been given some information that's not quite correct, to be honest with you.

The other thing about this is that he talked about choice. There was a comment about choice. What this is about is individual choice of the property owner. Pretty simple. It's not the government mandating; it's the government enabling municipalities to bring forward a bylaw that will let them do this. I mean, it is pretty simple, to be honest.

That being said, there are some things that we have to work out. This legislation is the framework. Do we have a decent amount of the information worked out? Sure, because there are a lot of people around the world that have been working on this type of legislation, so we have great examples. But as Municipal Affairs always does – and we've been told that we have the gold standard of consultation, which I'll take every day of the week and I continue to push my staff to do – we are going to consult with builders, homeowners, realtors, everybody who this touches, contractors. You name it, and we're probably going to be talking to them. All those finer details on what I've said initially are going to be worked out through the coming months so this legislation can be brought back in the fall to do it right the first time, as my dad always said.

If there are some other questions or some other things that the opposition members would like to know, great. Ask the questions. But I would appreciate it if they didn't disparage what the program is – it's a great program – on lack of information. This is a nonpartisan conversation, Mr. Speaker. It really is. This is something that's going to benefit all Albertans. It doesn't matter if you're in an urban area or a rural area. Farmers, builders, property owners of all sorts are going to benefit from this.

I would gladly like to hear their questions, and I would really appreciate standing up and giving them some answers when I can. If I don't have the answer, as I've always said to people, I will find it for you. I have no issues with that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, any additional comments?

Mr. Drysdale: I think there was a question there. I'll try and respond. I have respect for this minister, too, but we're still in . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really appreciate the look of delight that comes across your face when I stand up to speak in this House.

The Speaker: You should see it in daylight.

Mr. Schmidt: Yeah. The sense of calm and peace and relief that comes over your face just brings me joy.

It's my pleasure to rise to speak in favour of Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements. First of all, I want to thank the Minister of Municipal Affairs for bringing forward this piece of legislation and for passionately defending it. I know that he got a little excited in his response to the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti's speech, which is unusual for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. He's not normally a very excitable person, Mr. Speaker.

But on this issue he has been passionate. In fact, I remember the first time that I ever sat down and had a one-to-one conversation with the Member for Leduc-Beaumont, the current Minister of Municipal Affairs. He and I talked about what was important to him. What did he want to achieve in his time in office? The first thing that came to him and that we talked about was energy efficiency and clean energy development. This is something that the Minister of Municipal Affairs has worked on from day one. I am so proud of him that this bill is before this Legislature and that he's going to make a significant impact on the development of clean energy and energy efficiency measures in this province. He will leave behind a strong legacy of renewable energy and energy efficiency in this province. He should be proud of the work that he's done. His children should be proud of the work that he's done. It will have a significant positive impact on the people of this province, so I'm grateful that he's done such good work on this issue.

I'm also grateful because I represent the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar, which is the most humble constituency in the entire province of Alberta, Mr. Speaker. One of the things about the neighbourhoods that I am privileged to represent is that these are urban neighbourhoods that were constructed between the end of World War II and the middle of the 1960s. Certainly, the baby boom generation and their parents were the ones who built and lived in these neighbourhoods originally. What that means is that we have thousands of single residential dwellings that were built between 1945 and 1965 that aren't exactly up to the standards of energy efficiency that we would expect from a new house these days. There are thousands of individual bungalows that have poor insulation, maybe some leaky, drafty basements, leaky, drafty windows, not much insulation in the roof.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, the first house that I bought in the neighbourhood and currently, to be honest, the house that I still live in is not particularly energy efficient. My family and I undertook to improve the energy efficiency of the house that we lived in. It was built in 1952, a small bungalow, a humble bungalow that didn't have much insulation in the walls, didn't have much insulation in the roof, and certainly had no insulation in the basement. It was uncomfortable to live there in the wintertime. It was draftier than the wind from the opposition side of this room and often got very cold. We undertook to improve the energy efficiency and the capacity to heat the house in the wintertime, so we upgraded the insulation in the walls, we upgraded the insulation in the roof, and we installed insulation in the basement. What a difference that made to not only my energy bills – my cost for heating and electricity went way down as a result – but the house was much more comfortable to live in as a result, especially in the wintertime.

But, Mr. Speaker, that undertaking came at considerable financial expense to my family and me. It was thousands of dollars to hire an energy efficiency expert to come in and do the assessment.

You know, just for the edification of the members of the House, we actually applied for grants from the federal government to upgrade energy efficiency measures in our house before the Member for Calgary-Lougheed and his wrecking crew had the opportunity to actually remove those grants. It's no surprise to me that the members opposite are opposed to this legislation. They have a storied history of defeating energy efficiency measures at the federal level and certainly not taking any action on it at the provincial level, so it's no surprise to me that they're doing so in this case.

But back to my story. We applied for some federal grants and city grants that allowed us to lower the cost of the energy efficiency upgrades that we undertook in our house, but it was still quite expensive. In fact, before we left that house, I'm not certain, Mr. Speaker, that we even earned back the investment that we made through savings on heat and electricity bills.

That's why it's so critical to have this kind of program, this PACE program, Mr. Speaker, because people can undertake the energy efficiency improvements that they want to take, but they don't have to pay the bill if they leave the house. That is one of the critical barriers that a lot of people in my neighbourhood face when they're considering making this kind of investment, because the payoff period for these energy efficiency investments is quite long, 20, 25 years, and in our modern, mobile age people don't tend to live in houses for that long. This way, people can choose to invest in these energy efficiency measures, and the bill is paid for as long as the people live in the house regardless of who the owner is. The benefits of those energy efficiency measures will stay with the owner of the house and will be paid for by the owner of the house.

Mr. Speaker, like I said, there are thousands and thousands of houses in my constituency, families who live in those houses in my constituency, who will stand to benefit from the implementation of this legislation because they're sitting on the fence right now. They're not sure if they can afford to make energy efficiency investments. You know, we all know that our government has made significant advances in making energy efficiency and clean energy more affordable for people of Alberta, but still it's tough for a lot of families in my neighbourhood to make all of that upfront investment to reduce their energy bills and to increase the energy efficiency of their homes.

This piece was the final missing piece – right? – to bring it all together. We can have a municipal loan program that will make it finally affordable and reduce the upfront cost, spread that out over the 20 or 25 years or however long the PACE loans are going to last so that families can go ahead and make these energy efficiency, renewable energy investments today, benefit from lower energy bills, lower heating bills, lower electricity bills today, and contribute to the development of renewable energy in our province today. The citizens of my riding have been talking to me, demanding this kind of legislation ever since the day I was elected, Mr. Speaker, and I'm proud that we're finally delivering on that promise because this is going to make life for the citizens of Edmonton-Gold Bar significantly better. I'm looking forward to seeing the number of energy efficiency upgrades and clean energy projects that will go up on residential properties as a result of this legislation.

You know, it will be interesting to just remind people of Edmonton-Gold Bar that all of this is at stake if the members opposite have the chance to form government at some point in the future. They've gotten up; they've spoken against this, right? I have no doubt that they are dedicated to repealing this as well as every other energy efficiency measure and every other clean energy measure that this government has undertaken for no reason other than they just don't think that it's the right thing to do. Like I said, they have a history of tearing down those programs when they made the federal government, when they comprised the federal government. They took no action on this issue when they were the provincial government, Mr. Speaker, and I'm sure that they would be more than happy to take the wrecking ball to all of these programs if given the chance.

The citizens of Edmonton-Gold Bar won't stand for it. They stand to benefit significantly from these kinds of programs that our government is undertaking. That's why they sent me here to do this job. That's one of the reasons that they sent me here to do this job, and I'm proud to say that we've done a really good job in representing their interests.

Mr. Speaker, I'm giving the whip the cold sweats, so I will take my seat, but I'm just proud to say that on behalf of the citizens of Edmonton-Gold Bar I will be voting in favour of this legislation.

The Speaker: Are there any questions for the hon. member under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to give the Minister of Advanced Education a chance to just maybe clarify a few points. One thing: the minister said that in his own situation or in his own personal anecdote his solar panels or whatever it is that you've installed don't pay back for 25 years. As I understand it, this program is a 10-year-long program. Then you were saying as well – well, you can clarify it when it's your turn. Just to be clear, you won't see anything back or it doesn't pay back, if I'm quoting correctly – sorry; you can correct me – for 25 years because it won't reduce the bills in that amount of time. I'm not sure. There were a couple of contradictions.

Then at the same time, you're saying that the program that you're putting in, Mr. Speaker, is actually going to reduce people's bills but not in your particular situation for at least 25 years. It's a slight contradiction. I mean, if the Minister of Advanced Education was selling this to me, I would be very concerned because when he's speaking about it – again, they'll get their chance to correct me. If it's over a longer period of time, I apologize, but I just wanted to make sure.

On one hand, the minister is saying that the folks of his constituency will benefit from lower energy bills but not for 25 years. That's exactly what I heard. Then you said that the money won't come back to you. At one time you're saying that it's sufficient, that you're going to save money on that but that you won't see the payback for that for 25 years. As I said, if it was a sales pitch, I'd be really, really concerned.

So I'm going to give you an opportunity here. Please, Minister, if you could clarify exactly what you meant by that. There are several contradictions in what you just said.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the opportunity to clarify. In my own personal situation, we invested thousands of dollars to upgrade the insulation in my home, and then we moved away two or three years later. We absolutely saw a reduction in our heating and electricity bills the day after those insulation upgrades were completed. Every Albertan who makes those energy efficiency upgrades will see reductions in their heating and electricity bills immediately. The problem is, though, that in some cases you don't recoup those upfront costs for a number of years, and it will vary, depending on the cost of the energy efficiency upgrade that you've undertaken and the amount of reduction that you see in your bills.

For the member opposite to say that I didn't see any reduction in my heating bills and that you won't see anything paid off until after 20 or 25 years is completely wrong, Mr. Speaker, so I'm very glad that she gave me the opportunity to clarify this. I'm grateful that she's asking questions and genuinely seeking to understand my statements and what this bill is concerning. You know, I think that through asking these kinds of questions and offering people the opportunity to respond and clarify, we can have a better understanding of what we're discussing.

My hope, my dream, my true aspiration is that now that she understands exactly what it is that we're talking about with the legislation, she'll actually vote for it, Mr. Speaker. You know, we live in hope, I suppose, that the opposition is listening to the things that we're saying and reconsidering their positions based on the facts. I haven't seen it yet in the three years that we've been here, but anything can happen, I suppose.

So I hope that my statements were helpful to the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View. The Minister of Municipal Affairs and I are here to help. We're glad to clarify any questions that she or any other members across the way might have on this issue.

When you look at it closely, when you look at the energy efficiency investments and the financing options that we're providing through this legislation, it is quite clear that it provides an immediate benefit in reducing energy bills in households and that it provides an immediate benefit in lowering the financial barriers that Albertans face.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any other members? The Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm hopeful that I can clarify some of the points that were made earlier in the day and also just now. I'm excited about this piece of legislation because this is a bill that is going to help diversify our economy. It'll increase energy efficiency, decrease greenhouse gas emissions, create jobs, and it's a very low-cost program. It costs the government very little and costs the taxpayer very little.

As has been mentioned previously, this is not a new idea. This is a program that's available in 20 states currently. Thirty-three states have enabling legislation, and 20 states have actual programs that are functioning. It's available in two other Canadian jurisdictions. I am somewhat disheartened to hear that the opposition is opposing this at this time because this is a bill that does a lot of things that they purport to be in favour of. It attracts private capital to the province, it creates jobs, and it upholds municipal autonomy. In the 20 states that currently have this program – and this was mentioned previously – it's generated over $5 billion in investment and created over 50,000 jobs in the previous eight years that it's been in place.

I've heard some concerns that maybe this is something that Albertans aren't interested in, that it's not something that they've asked for, but in the conversations that I've had over the last, you know, couple of weeks since we've introduced this legislation, this is absolutely something that Albertans want. Everybody that I've talked to has said: of course, this is fabulous; this is a complete no-brainer. We're not forcing anybody to get new windows or solar panels. We're just proposing enabling legislation. It's legislation that gives municipalities the ability to pass a bylaw that will allow people and businesses to obtain a low-interest loan so that they can upgrade their homes and buildings in a way that increases energy efficiency and lowers carbon emissions, and then people can pay off that loan over a number of years on their property taxes, as has been mentioned previously.

The cost to install new windows or insulation or solar panels can be prohibitive for many homeowners, and this has been something, again, that was mentioned previously. A program like this encourages investment because of the number of people who can participate. When you have a large number of people who can participate and a large number of people who are willing to take up this kind of a program, what you can do is that you can increase investment because you have a lot of security for the loan. Private companies are interested in investing in this sort of thing because you're pooling your money across a large pool of investors. Because of this large pool of people who are interested, that can lead to a lower interest rate. Loans that have lower interest rates – these are loans that people will be able to obtain for lower interest rates, that should be lower than what any individual could secure on their own through their financial institution.

It's also important to note that these are loans that are available for a wide variety of upgrades. It was noted yesterday by the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner that a program already exists through Enmax that helps people install solar panels. Now, this is something that's true. It's something that I have actually looked into for my personal house, and when I looked at the program through Enmax, it didn't really make a lot of sense. He asked about what the difference was between PACE and this already existing program and whether or not a new program was required. The main difference, as far as I can see it, is that PACE is available for many upgrades, not just solar panels. It's available, like has been spoken about, to upgrade your insulation, upgrade your windows, upgrade your water heater, anything that's going to help make your house greener and more energy efficient, whereas the Enmax program is only available for solar panels.

The other difference, according to my understanding from when I did my research into the Enmax program, is that the options are that you can purchase the panels up front, or you can lease them and then purchase them at the end of the lease, and the lease may be over a number of years. So that's not really quite the same type of program as PACE.

In answer to his question yesterday, I would submit that PACE has a larger scope, so it's available for more types of upgrades. Also, it's more flexible for customers. It's not the same type of loan program and, as such, is not a replication.

Then in terms of this program being needed, I think it's important to note that right now the number one growth career in the United States, according to the Department of Labor, the job that's going to grow the most over the next 10 years, that's most in demand right now, is the job of a solar panel technician. That's the number one job in the United States right now, followed very closely by wind technicians and then a whole bunch of health care professions. We're in a time when people are looking for good jobs. I've heard folks in the opposition bemoan the fact that the number one group of folks right now that is having a difficult time accessing jobs is young men, particularly young men who don't have a ton of education. This is the kind of thing where you can do a program at SAIT. You can get a good-paying job that will last you for any number of years.

This is something that many organizations recognize and something that they're excited about. The Building Industry and Land Development Association said, "BILD Alberta is pleased to support the PACE program and the opportunity for Albertans to access energy efficiency upgrades with less financial burden." The Alberta Construction Association "feels strongly that PACE... [offers] a financially viable way to retrofit older buildings... [and] offers a method for investment which does not create costs to the taxpayer." SAIT said that they look forward to supporting PACE by creating "career-ready graduates immediately able to meet industry [needs] in the green and clean-tech sector." And both of the province's major cities support this legislation.

Another concern that comes up when discussing PACE programs is the resale value of houses that choose a PACE loan. This is something that I've heard previously in debate on this bill. One of the features of PACE is that it enables the attraction of low-interest investment, and the reason that it attracts that low-interest investment is because PACE is attached to the home and not the individual owner. As such, when it's attached to a building, it has less risk. That's one of the things that enables this program to attract low-interest investment. So it's quite fair to ask the question of whether choosing this type of loan will increase or decrease the value of your home and whether it will make your home easier or harder to sell. That's an absolutely fair question to ask.

PACE programs have existed in the U.S. for about 10 years now, and there has been some research done on this issue. Overall, the general consensus is that PACE loans increase the value of your home. According to one study it said that PACE homes have a higher sale price than would be expected using regular home price projections. For comparable houses in the same market a PACE home would actually fetch a higher resale value than a home that didn't have a PACE loan attached to it because people recognize that there's a value in having these energy efficiency upgrades made to your home.

The same study also cited that "homes with PACE loans fully kept up with... price appreciation in the area, after taking account of... financing cost and improvements, regardless of the price index used." This study took into account what the cost of the loan was and then looked at the cost of appreciation of homes in the area, and once they factored in the cost of what someone spent on a loan, the house after a certain number of years actually fetched a higher purchase price than it would have if it didn't have a PACE loan attached. So that's an attempt to address that question.

A third question that I've heard asked is whether the savings generated by the upgrades will be worth the costs, and this speaks a little bit to what the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View was addressing moments ago. It's true that large chunks of our power bills are somewhat fixed. There's not much that you can do about distribution costs. The distribution costs on your power bill: a portion of those are variable costs, but a portion of those are fixed, and as long as you're attached to the grid, you're probably going to pay a pretty similar distribution cost. However, many of the other costs that are part of your power bill are actually directly related to your consumption.

I was speaking with a gentleman just over the dinner break, actually, who had recently put solar panels on his house, and one of the things that he noticed when he put the solar panels on was that not only did the energy consumption portion of his bill decrease, but other portions of his bill decreased as well. That's because transmission costs, although a lot of people associate it with being fixed costs, are actually one hundred per cent based on your consumption. So if you halve your amount of consumption, you also halve your transmission costs.

Currently in Alberta your transmission costs are, I think, around $27 a megawatt hour. The average house in Alberta uses about 600 kilowatt hours of energy. So if you halve your energy costs, you halve your transmission costs. Right now just on transmission costs alone – I'm not talking about energy consumption, not talking about carbon levy, not talking about distribution costs, just your transmission costs – that would save you about $15 dollars a month, and that's just one of three components in your energy bill that are based on usage.

I mean, I think it's absolutely reasonable for anybody looking into this type of loan to consider how much the upgrades will save them. For transmission costs, if that's about $15 a month, that's $180 a year. And that's just one portion. You know, your consumption costs might go down, other costs might go down, your house is more comfortable, a variety of things.

You know, I've heard people speak about: are we allowing Albertans the choice? We're absolutely allowing Albertans the choice. I trust Albertans to do their research before they take out this type of a loan and look at: "Is this loan going to save me money? Is this loan going to make my house more efficient? Is it going to make my house more comfortable? Am I doing this because I'm interested in saving carbon emissions? Am I doing this because I'm interested in saving money?" Like, these are all things that I trust Albertans to look at when they're looking at this type of loan and to make educated choices moving forward. It's relatively easy to judge what the upgrades are going to reduce in your consumption and therefore what your bill is going to be reduced by.

I mean, to summarize, I think that this bill is exciting. It's forward looking, it's innovative, it's low cost, and it fills a gap that currently exists by removing the largest barrier to the uptake of energy efficiency upgrades. Home solar: the large upfront costs are why people don't do it, because it costs a lot of money. We're not forcing anyone to make this choice. We're just enabling them to choose to take out a low-interest loan that'll be attached to their home, not to themselves personally, and will allow them to make energy efficiency upgrades.

In the process it will create jobs, it will lower carbon emissions, it will bring diversification to the province, and it doesn't really cost anything. I don't understand why anyone would oppose this. It's very confusing to me why anyone would oppose this.

I look forward to speaking to this in more detail going forward in third reading, and I encourage everyone to support this in second reading. Thank you.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was interested in the comments by the Member for Calgary-East. I just have a few questions, if she can give us some clarity on this. First of all, she said that it is very little cost to taxpayers. I guess the question I have is: has there been a study done on what the cost is going to be? Obviously, she mentioned that there were other states down in the United States, and Ontario is doing this right now. If she could provide this side of the House with that information so we can know the cost of implementation, I think that would be very helpful.

I was trying to follow the math. I apologize. I got the $15 part, the third part of it, but I didn't get the first two parts. When I was looking at this, I was thinking. You know, I actually have been very interested in green energy for my own house, and I have looked at especially the solar panels as an option, Mr. Speaker. The first thing I looked at was: what is the return on investment? The cost that it will be for the capital outlay: how long will it take to actually have that paid back? When I looked at it, I thought: okay; well, there is a portion of my electricity bill that's the retail part, and then you've got distribution, and transmission is the other part. The distribution and transmission I found were about 50 per cent of the cost of my electricity bill. But on the retail side there was also a fixed cost to that because I'm on a floating rate. But that floating rate part was what I could actually use as savings. I would use that floating rate, and then that would be applied to the cost of whatever that capital cost outlay would be.

I worked it out – I was very, very liberal with this – and it was about $100 a month. So if we work it out at $100 a month, it would work out to, obviously, $1,200 a year, and it would take me 25 years to be able to see the realization of the capital cost that I'd be outlaying. I was thinking, you know, that Enmax does do that. I don't know if they actually amortize it over the 25 years. It might be 10 years. I talked to a couple of people who've done it, but I can't remember if it was 10 years or 25 years.

When the Member for Calgary-East talks about immediate savings, you might see less in terms of your electricity bill, but you also have to take into consideration the capital cost that you're paying back, whether it's through the banks, through a HELOC, through Enmax, or, in this case, through property taxes. The question that's always been in my mind is: is there actually a cost saving when you take into consideration that capital outlay that you still have to pay back? That's the second question, Mr. Speaker.

You know what? I have a couple of other questions. I can see you're getting antsy and making sure that I get those questions asked. So I will ask those two questions and hope that the member can give me some clarity on those.

The Speaker: Great. Thank you.

The hon. member.

Ms Luff: Yeah. For sure. I'm so happy to attempt to answer some of those questions. I mean, in regard to the first I did say that the cost to the province would be low. My understanding at this time is that Energy Efficiency Alberta, which would be the administrator of the program, feels that they don't need any additional staff to administer this program, so at the current juncture it would be no cost. But, I mean, that remains to be seen going forward.

It's a good question. Again, our model isn't the same as Ontario's model. These are things that we'd have to look at going forward. But, overall, it's going to cost maybe, tops, a couple of full-time equivalent folks who can administer the program.

Then in terms of energy savings, like I said, I trust Albertans to look at, like you did, what those savings are going to be. The uptake of the program depends not only on cost savings. Most Albertans are, you know, financially minded and want to make sure that their investments count, so I would trust that most of them would look at it. The gentleman, again, who I spoke with tonight cited that his transmission cost went down. His electricity cost went down. He said that he generated about a kilowatt hour a day. That's with his solar panels, right? But it's not just solar panels. It's other things.

8:50

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, I have "Madam Speaker" written here because I was going to speak this morning, but you look like a Mr. Speaker to me.

It is always a pleasure to rise in this Chamber and speak to legislation that affects all Albertans. It is the reason that we were elected, to bring the voices of those that we represent into this Chamber to be heard. Today we speak to Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements. Now, Bill 10 was introduced to let municipalities establish a program that would help private property owners make energy efficiency upgrades. This bill allows or enables municipalities to pass a bylaw, a bylaw which creates the property assessed clean energy program, or the acronym is PACE. Now, the intent of the bill is to provide a mechanism for property owners to finance affordable energy efficiency, renewable energy, and water conservation projects or upgrades to their property. The idea is that the municipality would front the cost of the upgrade, and the property owner would pay for said upgrade over time through their municipal tax bill, annually.

This property assessed clean energy program at the end of the day is a financing tool, a financing tool which building owners and developers can use to upgrade their buildings' energy performance, a financing tool which will allow those same entities to also install renewable energy systems, and a tool to be used to reduce consumption, all with no money down to the entities involved. The financing of those items that I just mentioned, being upgrades to their buildings, energy performance, and installing renewable energy systems as a tool to reduce consumption, is borne by the municipality.

You know, I think that there are likely a lot of people that reside in this province that would love to have major upgrades to their homes and not have to front any of the initial money to do it. Those of us that own homes are always looking at our properties and looking at projects that we believe need to be done around the property, and people are, I believe, generally interested in trying to have their home more energy efficient, to the point where they may actually save money on their energy bill by pursuing green energy initiatives. But it usually comes down to being able to afford renovations like this.

I guess the question, then, becomes: is it really government's responsibility to encourage homeowners to invest in certain capital projects or to regulate the market to allow these renovations to take place? Is it really the government's job to do its best to direct a citizen to buy such green energy projects? I just wonder. I wonder if it's more the government's job to try to make circumstances in Alberta such that individual citizens can have an opportunity to prosper in their own right.

What the government information that I could find actually refers to is that it is somewhat widely believed that there may be barriers preventing a property owner from doing upgrades such as those I've just mentioned. It seems that the government believes – and it's probably true – that the biggest barrier to any of this that may stand in the way of a property owner actually going ahead with these projects is money, the initial investment, of course, cash on the barrelhead.

I guess, Mr. Speaker, that assumption may very well be true. I'm sure that it could be said that there is a portion of the population of the province that could indeed find it tough to come up with the wherewithal to pay tens of thousands of dollars to mount solar panels from one edge of their roof to the other, to have a company come into their yard and begin digging to install the mechanisms required to convert to a geothermal system of heating, to begin the process of replacing all the windows in one's home with windows that are more energy efficient, and, of course, potentially beginning the process of adding more insulation or adding insulation to certain areas of a building so as to keep the weather out and the climate in, so to speak.

I'm just going to stop there for a moment. Last night, as I was preparing this speech, I reached out to a chief administrative officer of a municipality. Now, I asked this person if there had been any opportunity for that person to hear of Bill 10 and how it is supposed to work and what it is meant to do. This person told me that this initiative had indeed been seen in a newspaper. The concern from the person was the fact that the government is saying that they will pass the bill and then consult with municipalities about putting forward a regulation with respect to the act.

I guess, you know, here we go again, Mr. Speaker. The government will pass the bill and then consult with municipalities about putting forward a regulation with regard to the act. And the chuckling starts. I don't know how many times I or my colleagues on this side of the House have actually stood in this Chamber and had to reiterate those same words. The government is going to pass a bill, then seek to consult with those that it affects. Folks, I don't know how many times, how many more times, we will have to say to this government before they catch on: but you get this backwards every time.

The generally accepted way of consulting with a municipality or anyone who is going to be affected by a proposed piece of legislation is to do the consulting first so that you actually can get a feel for what in this case is the municipalities and what they're thinking. You actually get a better feel for what could be considered your partners in this piece of legislation. But, instead, as has happened many times before, it appears that the government has done their due diligence backwards.

Anyway, this chief administrative officer that I was speaking with last night, that I took the time to consult with: this person talked about the time and energy needed to pass a bylaw in a municipality so that Bill 10 could actually even be used in a said municipality. Now, I've had the privilege to be involved with the passing of bylaws in a municipality. It is very technical work for staff, and it can be somewhat time intense to draft a meaningful bylaw.

It's one thing to send staff into a room and gather data and spend a bunch of time preparing a potential bylaw, which is costly by itself, but then to have legal counsel review the infinite minute details, which must be as close to flawless as is achievable in order to have an infallible bylaw, all of those actions add infinitely more cost to the project. This all must be completed before a bylaw is ready to be presented to the public, which starts another, different set of actions to begin to complete the bylaw process.

Consider a municipal tax roll and the traditional assessment that has been in place for such a long time, which, in turn, creates that tax roll. Consider the major changes proposed here to that existing system. Simply writing a bylaw is not the extent of what is to be considered for a municipality when it comes to Bill 10.

The last comment that the chief administrative officer made was how disappointing it was that the government actually thought that municipalities have the staff in place that it takes to be the bankers and administrators of this kind of thing, another download of expense to the municipalities, that are actually, if things were running right in this province, supposed to be partners of government.

But, Madam Speaker – Mr. Speaker – I do tend to digress. I apologize, sir. I just wanted it to be perfectly clear to all in this Chamber this evening that I did my best to consult with an entity which will actually be affected by Bill 10 should it indeed pass through this House. [interjections]

I will get back to the workings of this Bill, which I'm sure the gentleman that's making all the comments on the other side of the House knows all about. This thing that tends to concern many of us on this side of the House is that a lot of details of how this whole thing is supposed to work are being left out of the bill, left out of the bill that is presented to us in this House so that we can debate it, which, of course, means that the details will be left to regulation. Now, we all know – probably most Albertans don't – that regulation isn't debated here in this House. It's debated around the Executive Council table, which, at the end of the day, asks all opposition MLAs here to trust government: just trust us, and we'll get this right.

Something else that gives some apprehension to those of us in the Official Opposition is the question about the property that this PACE program is involved with and the owner that decides to sell that property. What responsibilities will be placed on the owners of property that have a PACE program if they decide to sell? Will it be the obligation of the owner of the property with the PACE program attached to clearly indicate that there is this extra tax that's committed to the property? Will this be the responsibility of the seller? I mean, none of that's clear.

An Hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Schneider: Yes, it will be. I'm just told that it will.

And what about the potential of selling a property with the PACE program attached, being that the program hasn't been around in the past? I understand that it's in 30-some states in the United States and in Ontario.

An Hon. Member: Nova Scotia.

Mr. Schneider: Nova Scotia. Okay.

An Hon. Member: Both of them.

Mr. Schneider: And what about the potential buyer of a property that's involved with the PACE program? Of course, I assume that it will be a buyer's obligation to completely understand exactly what he's buying, as is traditional, and the potential additional tax for how long the additional tax will be added, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera.

But, folks, all of this stuff is left to regulation. Nothing in this Bill 10 document spends any time explaining to those of us that are charged with debating the bill that there is some kind of insurance of transparency when selling a property with a PACE property tax attached.

You know, if we consider that this PACE program is very new, not common in this province, for sure – and now it sounds like we may have two other provinces, so it's not terribly common in Canada, for that matter. It seems to me that it is highly unlikely that Albertans will know that such a beast even exists for some time to come. I wonder how many complications and lawsuits and issues that will cause folks that are buying and selling properties with a PACE program attached to them.

You know, there is another point here that needs to be mentioned. The government has stated that they intend for Energy Efficiency Alberta to be the administrator of this property assessed clean energy program, not the municipality. However, Energy Efficiency Alberta is not once mentioned in the legislation before us. As I mentioned, all administrative provisions for the program are being left to regulations, so once again we don't get a chance to debate or have input on provisions such as this. Also, there's nothing in Bill 10 that prevents a municipality from deciding to administer the program themselves. So I guess a question is: will this be a possibility? I wonder: will a municipality be able to hire someone to administer the program and potentially make a buck doing it? We don't know if that's a possibility or not because it isn't in the legislation. Some municipalities might like an idea like that.

I guess I've spent a lot of time here in the last 10 or 15 minutes talking about what I would consider the cons of Bill 10, and it's the job of the Official Opposition to hold the government to account and, certainly, to debate legislation. The NDP have been opposition members for most of their tenure in Alberta, so I believe they understand what the job of our Official Opposition entails.

But I would be remiss if I didn't take a few minutes to mention what I would call some of the pros of Bill 10. Now, I do like the idea that this program is completely voluntary for municipalities. They're not required to create a program, and Bill 10 does not force any municipality that doesn't wish to participate. It's beginning to look like the bill is supported by stakeholders, including BILD Alberta and the Alberta Construction Association. I think that the PACE program looks very similar in structure to a local improvement tax, which is already being utilized by many municipalities to improve roads in front of residences, et cetera. They're used for things like that in a lot of places in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I've spent 15 minutes or so talking about this Bill 10.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod. Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Stier: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A pleasure to be here tonight. Good evening, all. Just a couple of comments and a question or two for the previous speaker, my colleague from Little Bow. It's interesting, some of the information we're getting here tonight regarding this bill. There seems to be a little bit of mixed information, especially on the part of the minister earlier as well, I noted, that might need some clarification. Perhaps you can shed a little light on it because you alluded to this in your talking points, hon. colleague, and that is that there were earlier comments from the minister regarding how municipalities wanted this new program, that they were asking for this new program and they thought it was great. Yet it's kind of strange to me because the technical briefing I attended included a slide, which I believe you have on your desk right now, that indicates that that was not the case. We were at that technical briefing and took the notes. The Rural Municipalities association, as a matter of fact, said that they were not interested in administering this program and that they were not interested in being involved in the lending. I wonder if you could expand on that a little bit.

Secondly, I just was interested if you had heard at the last meeting of the Rural Municipalities association that there was a resolution regarding this and that a resolution to go forward with this idea failed. Perhaps you can expand on some of that, Colleague.

Thank you.

Mr. Schneider: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do have the slide in front of me. This is part of the presentation that was put forward by the Alberta government. All opposition members that wanted to be in attendance could be there. Indeed, the Member for Livingstone-Macleod talked about the Rural Municipalities association and the resolution that they had passed. It might have been today. It didn't pass, yeah. The resolution, of course, was whether or not they would support this PACE program for rural municipalities, and it did not pass. The membership determined that they didn't believe it was something their municipalities would be happy about.

What we did find out from the Rural Municipalities association just today was that municipalities are not interested in a lending role, you know, basically financing these upgrades. That's just something that they didn't want anything to do with. Even the mid-city municipalities, Mr. Speaker, are not interested in administering the program and incurring the administrative costs.

We talk about the municipalities. I'd kind of alluded to the fact that municipalities, in my opinion – because now I've spent time in both a municipal leadership role and as a provincial MLA. It always seemed to me that the municipalities should be almost considered partners with the province of Alberta. I know that municipalities feel sometimes that this is not the case. Yeah, as far as rural municipalities are concerned, it doesn't appear that they're too interested in the program.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that there are just a lot of unanswered questions and worries in this bill that make it very hard, certainly for me, to support in the way it's been presented. We are still only in second reading here, and as we move through the various stages of the bill, I'd like to think that we will get some sort of feel from the government side about answers to some of the questions that we've posed here and to questions that my colleagues have raised while we've been talking about Bill 10. Some of that's going on, and that's good. It's nice to be able to get some input from the minister as we ask questions throughout second reading.

Financing energy improvement to a property and paying back that financing through increased property taxes is indeed an interesting idea. I think there may be a few pitfalls that haven't been explored or experienced for obvious reasons, but it certainly is interesting. As I've stated, for reasons that I've already brought forward, Mr. Speaker, I cannot support Bill 10 as presented.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: I listened with fascination to what, to me, was a 15-minute diatribe on consultation, and I thought it was kind of fascinating because it flashed me back to another Bill 10. I remember that on that particular Bill 10, which made GSAs mandatory, when the NDP came into power, the Education minister had an opportunity to sit down with me. I sat across on the other side of the aisle, Mr. Speaker, and he still took the time to sit down with me to talk about putting a framework together for GSAs, which was consultation and wonderful.

At the same time, from the Member for Little Bow's constituency I began receiving a flood of correspondence from his constituents, who were literally begging for consultation on GSAs because they were so stressed out about it, literally begging me. So I took the opportunity to call some of this member's people in his constituency because I was, again, an opposition MLA, as was he, and I wondered why all of his constituents were coming to me as an opposition MLA. They told me, Mr. Speaker, that he wouldn't answer any of their calls. He wasn't interested in doing any consultation with them on gay-straight alliances, yet he stands here in this House and he chastises this government for a lack of consultation.

I just feel, Mr. Speaker, this cognitive dissonance.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, you're going to get to the topic of Bill 10, I hope, soon?

Ms Jansen: Certainly, on this bill, when we talk about this sort of behaviour, we have a leader who rages about his members having to face hostility in the House but runs away when the government seeks a bill that offers women in this province the same respect. This member stands up and rages about a lack of consultation when he refused to meet his constituents for that very thing over and over and over again. I have a thick file in my office, Mr. Speaker.

So I would suggest that perhaps this member might look in his own constituency and embrace the idea of consultation because it's his job, and he wasn't doing it.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments to the Minister of Infrastructure under 29(2)(a)?

Are there other members who wish to speak to Bill 10? The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As always, it's such a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements. This legislation is going to enable municipalities to create property assessed clean energy, a.k.a. PACE programs, which provide property owners with a mechanism to finance energy efficiency, renewable energy, water conservation projects, which do not require any upfront investments but are paid off over a period of time by being tacked onto an individual's municipal tax bill.

A couple of things I just wanted to mention. The idea of solar, of course, to me is fantastic, and I think it's wonderful to provide opportunities for people to be able to do this kind of thing, but I wanted to clarify a couple of things, Mr. Speaker. Did you know that solar has enjoyed exponential growth without any government intervention? Since 2011, in fact, it's come down half in the cost. Part of that is due to the way that they build the solar panels. The silicon pieces that they use on there have significantly decreased in price. There are a lot more being imported. People are actually asking for them. They've significantly decreased.

They also produce a lot more energy. There are a whole bunch of factors that go into it. It's the angle that they're put at. It depends on a couple of things like location, location, location – that's a big deal – whether there's shade. There is the angle at which the solar panels sit, the size of them. Fortunately, in this province we have more sunny days than most places, so there is quite an opportunity. One of the best things about solar is that – this is with no government incentive, Mr. Speaker – the payback is between 12 and 20 years, depending on location, depending on the angle of the solar panels, depending on shade, depending on many, many other factors. And even better than that, if you decide to participate in the feed-in tariff program, you are guaranteed a premium price on your solar. If you don't do that, it gets put back onto the grid, and you're paid back at the basic rate that you paid out in order to receive back. So there are a couple of different options.

As the Member for Calgary-East was saying, this is all about options, about choices for people. In fact – I know it's hard to believe – there already are a ton of them, a ton of options. In fact, I would think that by going through your own bank, you'd probably even have more options. Then, on top of that, you could have it put into your own mortgage. You can have it included in your bills. There are many, many different aspects on how you can do that.

But more than that, I'm curious. The government keeps wanting to become a bank, and I'm not quite sure why the government wants to become the bank. It's a very interesting process. We've seen this in a couple of different situations. [interjection] Well, exactly. You do own a bank. You could do it through ATB. That's a great idea, actually.

Here's the thing. The Member for Calgary-East brought up a few really good points about the costs of energy, and I just wanted to go over that a little bit. When you're talking about variable costs of energy, that equals your incremental costs, and those incremental costs are based on cost of delivery, cost of your energy, and also your local access. It all depends on location, orientation, all those kinds of things, and the impact of shading. There are a lot of different things that are included. She was actually mentioning, in terms of options that you have, also doing your research into this. As you can see, even just based on a very small discussion, it's kind of complicated.

I have a couple of questions, and maybe the minister will be able to answer these after. One of the things I wanted to find out is: is the government going to be providing – it's interesting. In the responses to municipal concerns the hon. Member for Little Bow had mentioned before that municipalities are not interested in administering programs and incurring administrative costs, and they're not interested in a lending role. So my question, then, is: was it absolutely imperative for this legislation to pass in order for a municipality to be able to participate in something like this? It seems to me that if they're not interested in administering the program or incurring administrative costs, then for you to create the legislation, Mr. Speaker, seems to be in contravention of the very things that they're looking at doing. I'm sure, being local – I mean, municipalities are the closest to the people. They actually have the pulse on their people. They know what's going on. They have, like, direct impact in the legislation that we bring forward. If they were able to do this and able to provide those loans and everything, I'm sure that if they thought that it was cost-effective, they would have done that.

The other thing that I wanted to ask, too. It says here, "It is envisioned that Energy Efficiency Alberta will administer the program." What does "envisioned" mean? Is it for sure going to go through Energy Efficiency Alberta or not? Maybe it's going to be somebody else or not. It also says here on the lending role: "It is envisioned that private capital" – okay – "will finance clean energy upgrades through agreements." So now if a person wants to go through this program, they're going to go through a private bank and then go through the government for the government to go back and make sure that these solar panels are paid for through the mortgage, the loan that the person took out from the bank and then to the government? Or maybe it's through Energy Efficiency Alberta. I can't quite figure it out. It sounds very complex. Maybe there's a diagram. I'm a very visual person. I would love to see what this looks like in a diagram, because I would have a very, very difficult time explaining how this works.

Like I said, I have solar panels, so I understand how they work. I understand how it works on my mortgage. I understand the efficiencies. I understand what I gain from having those solar panels. I'm very grateful for them. But here's the thing. Solar panels are a depreciating asset. They're depreciating. The minute you put them up, it's like driving a car off the lot. And there's maintenance involved. If you live in Alberta, which we all do, we have dust and dust storms and gravel and hail and massive amounts of snow and many, many other things that impact the value. Actually, solar panels decrease by .5 per cent every year over 25 years, so your actual ability to recoup your costs does decrease over the years.

Is that included in the education package going along with getting this? I mean, I'm hoping, as the Member for Calgary-East had said, it's not a mandatory thing, right? A person can go and do their research and do all these things. Is the government, then, providing the companies that are going to be doing this, or do you just pick a company, any company you want? Let's say that the solar panels get put up and there's mould or there's leaking in your roof. These are heavy, large pieces of infrastructure that get put into your house. You cut holes out of your roof sometimes. You put them on your decks. You have all sorts of issues with elevations and weights with those solar panels there.

I'm curious about the loan. If something goes amiss and something goes wrong with those solar panels, then is the government on the hook for those, or is the person who bought into this program responsible not only for the maintenance of that but the depreciating asset? You can sell your house, saying that you have this wonderful asset, but if you're 20 years into your contract, five years away from having to replace those and still having to pay an extra $6,000 a year in taxes in order to pay it off, I have a feeling that you are not going to get fully recouped on the house that you're trying to sell. I mean, those numbers just add up to me.

Like I said, I have them on my house. For some people, if they saw the way they were lined up across my deck, they'd think they were an eyesore. It might actually not be something that people like. I think they're nice, but other people may not. But that was the decision I made when I built those on there.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that it's going to be primarily urban municipalities that may be seeking this out. Maybe those are the municipalities that the minister talked to. I don't know. Like, I'm looking forward to seeing how this actually all works out. I mean, the bill has potential to do positive things, but the concerns are really, really big. When you take large chunks of legislation like this – I mean, it's very frustrating that it just seems so flippant, that it's just going to be easy. This is a really, really complex situation, you know.

The point is that this is, like, skeleton legislation. The interesting thing is that now the government is going to have this bill – and the minister is actually agreeing with me – skeleton legislation. All of the regulations are going to pass without any consultation with us or Albertans or the stakeholders.

Again, I need to understand how this works with the banks.

I'm interested, too. I mean, the government seems to think that they can add equity to people's houses through their property taxes, but there are so many things that can go wrong with this, and I think the government needs to have some understanding and some explanations as to how that's going to be handled. I think that if you look at the – you know, the devil is in the details, right? It always is. If you're looking at the financial logistics of this legislation and protecting consumers – because on paper it sounds great. The homeowner is going to get all excited about wanting to install solar panels. If they didn't have the money up front, they could just roll the costs onto their property taxes and use it to pay it down. But how are we ensuring that the consumer is actually being protected?

Now that the government is involved, again I ask the question: is that any company, then, that can come in? Under normal circumstances I have a choice. I can pick my company. I will do the research. Also, because it's based on the market and my choice, it will also determine whether or not I give a green light to my friends and families and anybody else around me who may want to use these companies to do their own. And I can tell you that the people who did ours I've recommended a thousand times. A wonderful group of people. A wonderful group of people. And guess what? The companies are excellent at helping people find financing and understanding how to do it because they want their products out there. They want to see these things.

Oh. That was another interesting piece that I wanted to talk about. This was fun. The Minister of Municipal Affairs said that they had talked to builders and construction companies. Well, of course you're going to talk to builders. Who is going to benefit from this? Look at the cost benefit. A building company or a construction company can come in and charge whatever they want, and the government is just going to fund that? Like, do you have any regulations around how that's going to work? [interjections] It's really, really interesting. You know, everybody gets an A plus from me first; it's up to you whether you keep it.

But I'm interested. You know, the municipalities talk to the builders and the construction companies. I mean, these guys, like anybody else, have a right to and should be making a profit at what they're doing. It's a very complex thing to put solar panels onto a house. There are so many issues with sealing and making sure that they don't leak and making sure that they function appropriately. There's maintenance involved. I mean, the cost of installing them is just one teeny-weeny, little aspect. Is the government going to come up with another bill that's going to be a maintenance bill? We're on Bill 10. Bill 17 – I don't know – is going to be a maintenance bill to cover the cost of that, and you can go to another bank with that government and get your maintenance fees and costs for those problems. I'm just not sure, Mr. Speaker, because there's such a broad spectrum on this particular piece of legislation, and none of us are going to know about anything until the regulations come through.

On top of that, the municipalities, then, can or cannot decide to participate, but then they're not going to be responsible for the loan, so that goes back to the government. How does the government separate that from the mortgage? It's supposed to be on your property taxes. It's really super confusing.

Lookit, I really, really appreciate the intent.

An Hon. Member: You're sold, aren't you?

Mrs. Aheer: No.

I really appreciate the intent. I appreciate the idea of putting it in the property taxes. I really do. You know, there are so many things that we do with that with regard to recreation centres and roads and infrastructure and all these kinds of things. I do; I appreciate it. But this is a personal investment. I'm not investing in owning my piece of road out in front of my house. I don't pay only for my paving. I pay a portion of property taxes that pay for the entire paving of that entire area.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs under 29(2)(a).

Mr. S. Anderson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to try to answer some of the stuff here, unpack a little bit of this. I'll try to be clear as much as I can. There was a lot going on there that I've answered before. They seem to be asking the same questions. We've briefed them and their staff. I'm confused why they haven't gotten that proper research. But that's fine. I will try my best to help them.

Different things. One, I don't assume. I run on facts, data, and truth. That's what I do. I have 342 municipalities. Guess who I've talked to? All of the municipalities. I didn't talk to one CAO. Also, if they don't want it, it's their choice. They don't have to enable it. That's a nice part about this. It's the choice of the municipality, and it's the choice of the consumer. They don't have to do it. That's a really good thing. It's business friendly. I thought they liked business. This is business friendly. It's consumer friendly. I'm not sure what they don't understand about that part. But that's fine. I understand about the details. I get it. That's where we're going to go with this.

Some municipalities didn't want to administer it. That's great. That's why we've talked about Energy Efficiency Alberta doing it. Some didn't want to front the costs. Perfect. That's why we are going to engage and have been already engaging with private lenders who are excited about this. So it's not the government or some random taxpayers that are fronting this; it's private lenders who are excited about this because they understand that when it goes on the property, that's a good investment. It's there and it stays, and they get their bills paid. It's pretty straightforward in that sense.

I agree that solar has come down. I said that in my statements earlier: a hundred per cent it has. But it's still not quite affordable for everybody, and that's fine. The upfront costs are always something that's tough. But, again, this isn't just about solar. It's about energy efficiency in a lot of different respects. We have insulation, water heaters, windows. I mean, there are a multitude of things. That being said, through the consultation this is a framework, typical of a lot of bills that come into the House in this type of respect, where you bring it in and it sits here. As I said before, we will consult through the summer with consumers, municipalities, builders, realtors. A lot of these we've already talked to, but to be open and transparent, we're going to do even more, which is typical of Municipal Affairs. We've done this consistently. We will continue to do this with the intent of bringing it back in the fall to have it done right. As I've said before, my dad always said: do it right the first time. That's the intent of this.

An Hon. Member: Is your dad Mike Holmes?

Mr. S. Anderson: He's not Mike Holmes. He's got a big moustache. He does a bit of building.

The RMA. They're talking about this resolution that came forward. That resolution actually was something that came forward that didn't really have any information, and it was not what we are proposing here in any respect. It had similarities, but really there was no information to it, so of course people were worried because they didn't understand what it meant. A hundred per cent; change is hard. They understand that.

When we're talking about the consumers and if something happens, right now through Service Alberta we've got a lot of consumer protection. When you have contractors come in, you understand that there's protection. You have warranties on your house. There are a multitude of things out there, Mr. Speaker. I'm not going to go through them all. I'll let the Minister of Service Alberta. She knows a lot more of that than I do.

One of the other things that I'm excited about is that not only does it benefit residential folks, but it benefits people out in rural areas, farmers that I've talked to. It also benefits nonprofits, which I'm excited about in particular, and it's a community benefit in general.

I understand where some of these folks might have a little bit of misinformation or misunderstanding. I get that. I'm glad they're asking the questions because I will always stand up and try my best to answer them. That being said, when they try to say, you know, and assume and use opinions and try to speculate about the worst-case scenarios, I don't appreciate that because that's not what's happening here. This is straightforward and up front. I've said right from the get-go that we will be consulting, and that's what we're going to do. They're more than welcome to be involved in that. I actually would prefer that they were involved in that. That's the whole point of this place. This is nonpartisan. It has nothing to do with that. This is about what's good for people in this province.

There was another thing that the member said about: would municipalities have done this already? They can't. Under legislation it has to be something that we have to do. That's why we have to enable the bylaw for them, to let them be able to do this. Again, they don't have to do it. They don't have to do it, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 10 tonight. I would just like to start with thanking the minister for some of his comments. I also appreciate his haircut. I have some additional questions, and I hope that at committee, whether or not we get to committee this session – by the sounds of things I'm not entirely sure. When we do get there, I'm certain that I will have a number of questions that hopefully he'll be able to elaborate on at some length. But for this evening I'll pose some, and he can follow up with me later or whatever.

I appreciate that he just mentioned that Municipal Affairs has had a bit of a track record of putting bills on the Order Paper and then consulting over the summer. If that in fact happens with Bill 10, I think that will also be a positive. You know, he referenced his dad saying: do things right the first time. I think that that's good advice that his father has given to him. I think that the rest of the government should perhaps heed his dad's advice because what we have seen with this government is if at first you don't succeed, try, try, try, try, try again. We've seen a number of times when the government has failed dramatically and needed to try, try, try, try, try, and try again. I can think of Bill 1, jobs diversification, the one-job creation, whatever that was, from the Minister of Economic Development and Trade. I can think of the election financing acts. I believe I saw on the Order Paper today, Mr. Speaker, that this will now be the fourth or fifth time that this government has brought back the election financing act. Again, if at first you don't succeed, try, try, try, try, try, try, try, try again instead of doing things right the first time, which would've been helpful for all Albertans. But perhaps I digress. The long and the short of that is that I am pleased to hear that there will be some consultation over the summer.

I also did hear the minister reference the 374 municipalities.

Mr. S. Anderson: Three hundred and forty-two.

Mr. Cooper: I was way off there, way, way, off, by like 32 on the 342 or whatever he referenced. I heard him say that he's consulted with all of them, which is a pretty impressive feat. I do know that there are some municipalities in the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills that don't feel consulted with. It's possible that maybe he left their name off the e-mail list or whatever the case may be.

Mr. S. Anderson: I said that I talked to all of them, and I have been consulting with all of them.

Mr. Cooper: My apologies. It sounds like he's saying that he will be talking to them, and I misunderstood that he had talked to them. All I know is that he's going to have a very busy summer if he gets to all 342 of them. Particularly given that it's, you know, quite likely his last year as the minister, he should make the most of this opportunity that he has to tour the municipalities. I do think it's important, though, this consultation, that sounds like it may or may not be taking place. I'll hope that that in fact is what happens because I know that making sure that the municipalities have a full and robust understanding of exactly what they need to do or don't need to do will be important on a go-forward basis.

The other thing that I do have some reservations around – listen, I understand that they're going to consult over the summer and that takes time, and I appreciate, you know, that perhaps the government would like to take some advice when it comes to consulting in other areas of legislation. They're going to consult. Mr. Speaker, I would just draw your attention to page 8 of the legislation. I know that you're so intently following along that you probably have a copy of the legislation there. If you turn to page 8 of the legislation, the coming into force is: "This Act comes into force on Proclamation." I'm a little curious to know as to when that might actually happen.

We're going to see consultations over the summer. I'm a little unclear as to whether or not the regulations will be developed prior to proclamation or if they'll be done in conjunction or be done after proclamation. One way or the other, it sounds like this legislation isn't going to be passed until the fall session, which could be as late as October or November, December. Then, in turn, if the regulations still need to be developed, we're looking at January, February prior to a municipality even being able to pass the bylaw that then would enact the ability for the PACE program to be executed, which will be in, say, maybe February, March.

I don't know if you know or not, Mr. Speaker, but March 2019 is the start of the election window, when the NDP, if the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills are a reflection of the rest of the province – I certainly know that the folks that I speak to in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills hope to see the end of the NDP government. As such, I have some reservations about when the program will be actually implemented given that we're going to consult over the summer, come back in the fall, pass the legislation, regulations, and then we'll be into an election period anyway. So I do have some concerns both for municipalities in terms of the uncertainty as we move towards the next election as well as for potential homeowners that may in fact engage in the program should their municipality allow that to happen.

The other thing that the minister said that I would just like to highlight. In particular inside the Ministry of Municipal Affairs he said that he gets offended or takes offence – I don't have the benefit of the Blues, so perhaps I should be a little more cautious when I'm paraphrasing the minister. Essentially, he said he was displeased with the opposition talking about worst-case scenarios or, you know, trying to make up things that may or may not actually happen. "Speculate" I think is some language that he used.

At the end of the day one of the roles of the opposition is to in fact try to discuss and game out, if you will, what some of the eventualities may or may not be. The best-case scenarios are fantastic, but – you know what, Mr. Speaker? – very, very, very rarely does a constituent call my office and say: you're never going to believe it; this program worked exactly as it was supposed to. In fact, it's the exceptions that constituents call and express some concerns around.

You know what? Just in the last four weeks I've had three or four constituents reach out to my office about a program that was under Municipal Affairs in the form of the new-home warranty. That took place a number of years ago, prior to this minister, but at that time I remember the Official Opposition asking lots of questions about potential scenarios. In fact, one of the scenarios that I was communicating with my constituents about was an exact scenario that had been brought up during that time of debate.

At the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, the role of the opposition is to do some of the exact things that unfortunately have caused pain and consternation to the Minister of Municipal Affairs this evening. My sense is that if the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills are any reflection of the rest of the province, it may in fact be that the minister may have the opportunity to experience what it is to represent people when you sit on this side of the House and know that it is important to the process that we do just what we have done this evening, and that is highlight some of the potential concerns and reservations of the people that we represent or we may represent in the future. While I share some sympathy that we have offended the sensibilities of the minister, I think that he will agree that this is a very, very important part of the process.

We will continue to do our part in the process, and that is endeavouring to make legislation better. There are a number of ways that we do that. That is what we have seen here this evening. I will be the first to admit that I don't know everything about Bill 10 like the minister does. I'll be the first to admit that members on this side of the House don't know all of the same things that the government knows or intends to know.

In fact, you will know that sometimes even the government passes legislation where they intended one thing and another turns out to be true. That's exactly one of the reasons why we saw not one, not two, not three, but four election financing bills, for examples just like this. I know it's hard to believe, but sometimes even the government doesn't think of everything, even though they want you to believe that they will and that they do. That's what they tell Albertans: don't worry. In fact, I heard the Finance minister say this evening: trust us. But we, Mr. Speaker, take a trust but verify approach to legislation, and I think that the government should do so as well. We would all be well served if the government would do that as well. In fact, we could heed the advice of the hon. minister's father and do things right the first time. A good man, I might add.

One of those questions and one of the things in the legislation, the thing that creates some uncertainty, is that I heard the minister speak this evening about: if municipalities don't want to administer the program, don't worry; we have Energy Efficiency Alberta. The question I have for you, Mr. Speaker, would be: what happens if Energy Efficiency Alberta doesn't exist in perpetuity or in the ongoing...

An Hon. Member: Sounds like your problem.

Mr. Cooper: It very well may be our problem, if we are the government, if this organization doesn't exist any longer. What happens if they were administering long-term debt?

The other thing that we heard the minister say – and I'm the first to admit that I could have misheard him, or he could have misspoken, depending on which is correct – is that it sounded like some municipalities could administer the program and, as such, be the lender, which I didn't believe to be the case. I see him shaking his head, so clearly he did misspeak then. As such, it will be Energy Efficiency Alberta or other lender, as we've heard this evening.

But there is certainly some uncertainty. On page 6 of the legislation, that you've been perusing for yourself this evening, section 390.7 reads:

If, after a clean energy improvement agreement has been made, the council refinances the debt created to pay for the clean energy improvement that is the subject of [an] agreement at an interest rate other than the rate estimated when the clean energy improvement agreement was made, the council, with respect to future years, may revise the amount required to recover the costs of the clean energy improvement included in that agreement to reflect the [rate] change in the interest.

You know, I'm the first to admit that I don't know all of the ramifications of the legislation, but I'm curious to understand exactly how this particular clause works. If, in fact, the council has nothing to do with the interest rate yet they are the financee in that they are essentially the collection agency for the financier...

Mr. Nixon: We've got to adjourn.

Mr. Cooper: There are a lot of questions that need to be answered. With that, I'd like to move that we adjourn.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there's been a motion for adjournment.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 11 Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2018

[Debate adjourned May 1: Ms Kazim speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to continue my speech where I left last time on Bill 11, Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2018. Under the proposed changes in this act the reporting threshold for organization lobbyists will be reduced to 50 hours from 100 hours. Also, any time an organization lobbyist spends preparing to communicate with a public office holder would be included in the 50-hour threshold.

Mr. Speaker, the changes in Bill 11 to the Lobbyists Act are long overdue and deserve our full support. They are based on the all-party committee review and input from Albertans, who are concerned about honesty, openness, and transparency in government. These changes deserve our full support. I look very much forward to the debate on Bill 11.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank you for giving me the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 11, the Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2018. Accountability is essential to a healthy democracy, so the decision to bring the Lobbyists Act forward to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship so that many of the recommendations from the office of the Ethics Commissioner could be heard and understood – we support these decisions. It is healthy to have checks and balances put in place, especially when it comes to the interests of the public. Any measures that improve transparency and accountability are, in my opinion, worthy of support.

This is one bill that my colleagues and I will be supporting but have some questions that still have not been fully answered. Many of the recommendations are very important ones to establish, while there are some recommendations from the OEC that are not found in this bill. One of the many questions I have is that while there are some excellent portions of this legislation that will bring increased transparency and improve administrative functions, my primary concern would be the increased paperwork and red tape burden on smaller organizations that typically fall under the Lobbyists Act.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, I brought in my private member's bill, Bill 207, Regulatory Burden Reduction Act, last year, that was modelled after a bill that was passed in the federal government. The bill would have allowed that for each regulation created, one or more regulations would have been eliminated. Now, as you know, this was a very successful bill federally. It was able to decrease up to $32 million of administrative burden on the federal side as well as 750,000 hours in time spent dealing with red tape. Now, unfortunately, as you know, the NDP government did not support my bill and have brought in far too many pieces of legislation that have hurt smaller businesses to their detriment, actually.

My point here is not to reopen debate on my bill but, rather, discuss how when we overregulate and increase red tape burdens on small organizations, that may end up costing them too much. My hope is that this will not be the case and that we've struck the right balance with this bill. Has the government considered this? Do they know what the implications and costs will be?

The new legislation will bring the reporting threshold for lobbyists from 100 hours of meeting time annually down to 50 hours annually but now also includes any prep time. This is not a lot of time and will certainly increase the number of individuals and organizations that will now have to register as a lobbyist. This will for sure increase paperwork for the registrar at the OEC, so I guess another one of my questions would be: will the OEC require additional staff to deal with the added pressure, and will this require that Legislative Offices meet to increase the OEC's annual budgetary needs?

The semiannual returns is another piece I would like to talk about, Mr. Speaker. The OEC recommended in committee that the current semiannual registration filing should be changed to an annual filing on the anniversary date of their initial filing. This piece was included in the legislation, so my question to the minister is: why was the semiannual registration filing not changed to annual filings? With the additional paperwork the OEC will have to deal with, that we discussed previously, you would think it would only make sense to have lobbyists register filings once a year. Is there a reason this one piece was not added, and could the government side explain why, when something as simple as getting rid of unnecessary paperwork could have been dealt with in this bill, it wasn't? I'd like to hear the explanation on why this decision was made.

With the grassroots communication changes, I have questions when it comes to how you would define someone who is a parent of a child who has a disability versus a group that deals with the same issue, that may have some additional funds or grants, who builds mass mailing lists to communicate with their members. I understand that nonprofits are still exempt, but I have concerns about how groups such as these may be impacted by the grassroots communication portion of this bill. Since grassroots communication will now be defined as lobbying, if members of these organizations spend 50 hours a year communicating with their members on specific policy or areas of concern, would they have to register with that registrar?

My concern would be that these passionate advocates could be potentially burdened with red tape. I believe we can all agree that it should never be the intention of this legislation to regulate parents, who are effective advocates for their families. Fifty hours, including preparation time, seems a little stringent for small groups or organizations such as local chambers or groups that meet perhaps twice a year. Tracking this time for everyone involved could potentially become onerous and take a lot of additional time and cost and unintentionally discourage those who are advocates for good and right causes.

How does the government plan on rolling out this new legislation? Professional lobbyists have the time and capacity to figure out the new system, but those who are unfamiliar with it or who only do this a few times a year but fall under the 50-hour rule may have difficulties achieving their noble goals. How does the registrar plan on addressing these types of issues?

We are concerned about the impact that the clause in this legislation that narrows the exemptions for lobbyists reporting on time spent responding to government requests for advice or comment will have. Advocates and stakeholders are often the most valuable resources to us as statesmen and stateswomen. Yes, it's critical to be accountable, but I would hate for us to miss out on invaluable feedback, ideas, and input from advocates and stakeholders because they are scared off by the reporting requirements.

We support the changes that will bring the rules governing the giving of gifts by lobbyists in line with the rules that govern us as elected representatives receiving gifts. This will simplify these social interactions and prevent awkward rejections and situations of conflict of interest. Gifts, while thoughtful, have no place, outside of cultural custom, in politics. They appear to give those with financial means an unfair advantage in acquiring our time, and it's been long established as inappropriate. I'm glad to see that this recommendation has been added to the lobbyist legislation.

As well, we were pleased to see the addition of indigenous elders that are recognized by their communities to the list of individuals exempted from the Lobbyists Act. When acting in their official capacity, elders in these communities serve such an essential leadership role for their communities and should be recognized as the advocates that they are. In my riding, Mr. Speaker, as you know, I have the largest First Nations reserve in Canada, the Blood reserve, and I can tell you that the work that the elders do there is so appreciated by the members of the communities. I think it's extremely important to make sure that they aren't penalized for the work that they do. They're a great voice and a great advocate for not only the First Nations but for the whole area in my riding.

One disappointment I have is with the OEC's recommendation for the registrar to be given the ability to issue interpretive bulletins and advisory opinions and that it was not included in this legislation. The Ethics Commissioner already has the authority to do this but feels that given the fact that the registrar regularly provides advice and opinions on interpretations of the act to lobbyists as part of their duties, they should also be given the authority to issue bulletins and advisory opinions. Many other jurisdictions lean heavily on these advisory bulletins as important tools for providing clarity to lobbyists rather than creating new legislation.

We are disappointed to see that the OEC recommendation to change the filing return requirements for lobbyists from semiannual to annual was not implemented in this legislation. The OEC recommended annual filings as opposed to semiannual filings given that they have found that lobbyists' first six months of the year were often virtually identical to the later half of the year. This would have reduced the burden of paperwork and provided clarity, especially for the large number of lobbyists that will have to register and file for the first time ever if the reporting threshold is brought down from 100 hours to 50 hours.

In closing, I would like to recognize that the OEC and the registrar obviously spent many hours poring over this legislation, and I want to thank all of those who were involved in this process. It's good to see healthy checks and balances put into place.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Feehan: Mr. Speaker, given the great work that was accomplished this evening on a variety of bills and given the late hour, I suggest that we adjourn until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:01 p.m.]

Bill 9

Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act

[Debate adjourned April 10]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I rise to speak to this issue, I do it with some trepidation. The issue of abortion is very sensitive, and I want to respect the sensitivity of the issue. I would also like to take the opportunity to thank members of this Assembly who have been courageous in their advocacy on this. I also want to acknowledge that this is an issue that is very divisive. It has divided us as a country. It has tragic consequences for doctors and others involved in the provision of abortion services and has resulted in jail sentences for those who have had strong beliefs that abortion is wrong.

Mr. Speaker, I understand the strong beliefs against abortion services. I've had friends of mine choose to go to jail as they defied existing bubble laws in B.C. I respect beliefs based on faith convictions. I personally would call myself someone whose faith influences my beliefs and world view. I acknowledge that it is my Christian faith that gives me such strong convictions for things such as minimum wage, safe working conditions, social supports, public education accessible to all, and the strong commitment to creation care.

I also have experienced how faith influences health care decisions such as for those not wishing to have blood products, how one dies, or the shunning of lepers in the Buddhist society I lived in. I may not have the same beliefs as Sikhs, Hindus, Buddhists, Jains, Wiccans, or agnostics, but I respect and understand how belief in religion and spiritual teachings will influence how one will be convicted of social and community issues.

Mr. Speaker, I have lived in places where access to abortion was difficult, where women died because they were unable to prevent pregnancies, where women self-medicated to cause abortions. I also saw the difference when women did have access to contraception, to legal abortions, and when developing countries, with supports from the U.S. and Canada and other developed countries, supported programs to limit pregnancies. This has convinced me that those measures were life affirming.

Mr. Speaker, I am deeply saddened that the government had to put forth this bill in order to protect women accessing a legal medical service in Alberta. I am saddened that the women who have made a choice, which is their right, are hassled on their way to having a legal medical procedure. I am saddened that these women, who may have had difficult conversations with a partner, with family, and with themselves, are subjected to intimidation and harassment.

I am saddened that employees of the clinics are in fear for their safety and that of their families. The health practitioners are supporting women in a legal medical procedure, and they should be treated as such. I believe that everyone should have the right to have faith-nurtured beliefs, but I do not agree that intimidation, harassment, the taking of pictures, and threats to safety are a right.

Mr. Speaker, I have been known to engage in demonstrations in showing my disagreement with government policies. For example, I was horrified at the federal government that the Leader of the Opposition was part of. He was actually the minister responsible who stopped the funding of health benefits for refugee claimants in Canada. I was glad to be part of faith groups who demonstrated and worked hard to have this mean-spirited measure reversed. But I know that if I had threatened anyone within the Conservative caucus, I would have been arrested.

The same thing would have happened if I had harassed the present Leader of the Opposition as a cabinet minister for his government's treatment of prisoners, for removing training programs, closing prison farms and prison workshops, and increasing minimum sentences. The same government instituted more challenging citizenship requirements, wanted to ban burkas and niqabs. I could go on and on about these life-threatening policies previously passed by the government of the Leader of the Opposition. I personally cannot reconcile how someone who states he is antiabortion has supported policies that threaten the well-being and lives of so many.

But, Mr. Speaker, this brings me to a discussion of what it means to be pro life. I understand that many in the UCP would claim to be pro life. The opposition leader, the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, definitely claims to be pro life. Pro life is a code word that has different meanings. I am not Catholic, so while I'm familiar with the understanding of life within that context, that results in prohibition against birth control, I could not be able to theologically defend such a position. I wanted to speak about a faith tradition that I'm more familiar with and why it pains me so much to think of the members opposite voting against this bill or abstaining. I also want to address those with deep antiabortion convictions and urge them to explore a more completely pro-life outlook.

What does it mean to be pro life? Many people say that the only faithful expression of evangelical faith is to be pro life, but when pro life is used to refer only to life prior to birth, meaning a stance on the subject of abortion, then it is really just a small slice of a much broader faithful, evangelical expression. Being pro life ties into the Biblical concept that all are created in the image of God. There are times and places, and even the number of hairs on our head are known because God the Creator created such persons in their own image. However, being pro life and having that include only the value of life prebirth is the political, read UCP, expression of an evangelical value. It is the politicization of a theological issue.

Having a consistent life ethic means caring about fighting for the protection of human life in all of its forms. For those who call themselves pro life and have come to that conclusion from a Christian conviction, it most often means valuing life prebirth. However, being pro life should naturally extend to life after birth as well, so a faithful interpretation of what it means to be pro life as a Christian would be to care about the wages of the working poor, to fight the death penalty, and to be concerned about gun violence. A consistent life ethic would be pro immigrant and would likely lead people to oppose war and violence and especially the dehumanization of foreigners. A completely pro-life stance would care about both the opiate crisis and the life-saving needle exchange and opiate treatment centre and the effect climate change has on both God's planet and God's people.

If members opposite are using faith to vote no or to abstain against this bill, then I'm saddened that our common faith roots do not allow them to see that affirming life should have caused them to support environmental stewardship, increased support for affordable housing, support for safe injection sites, support for increased funding in social services, access to contraception, more funding for end-of-life services and, especially, antiracism and refugee programs. The federal Conservative Party and the UCP have used pro life to slice off a single issue. They have taken a portion of theological teaching and turned it into a tool for politics.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge all members of the Assembly to vote for this bill, to vote to ensure a hassle- and intimidation-free medical procedure that is legal. I would urge the members opposite to consider what a consistent pro-life ethic would mean. It definitely does not mean harassing women seeking a legal medical service, denying climate change, not supporting refugees, and they definitely would not deny increased funding for long-term care. It means creating a society where all lives can thrive, where care for the vulnerable, including the addicted, is there, where we invest in our community and share our wealth with each other through taxation.

Mr. Speaker, I think part of the challenge is that sometimes we only look at things from a very, very small perspective. For me, anybody who would oppose this bill, that is meant to support women going through some very difficult times and taking the step that they feel is right for them – hassling them just does not really support any consistent pro-life ethic. I would really urge members opposite and anyone who does not believe that this bill is necessary to consider what it means to be consistently pro life. I would urge you to especially look at climate change and creation care and how you're going to be supporting this in this House.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 15 Appropriation Act, 2018

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Good morning, everyone. It's my privilege to rise today and move third reading of Bill 15, the Appropriation Act, 2018.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

I along with members of this government am proud to implement Budget 2018, which is built on three pillars. The first is diversifying the economy by fighting for market access, adding value to our energy products here at home, and supporting new and developing industries. The second is protecting vital public services by making sure loved ones get the care they need, young people get the best education possible, and no one is left behind. The third pillar, Madam Speaker, is returning to balance by investing public dollars where they're needed most, eliminating Conservative waste, and controlling spending to return to balanced budgets by 2023-24.

During the course of this debate we heard concerns about Alberta's debt levels and deficit. That's why, along with the path to balance, we remain focused on finding efficiencies and savings as well. Madam Speaker, through Budget 2018 our government is ensuring public dollars are spent where they are needed most and eliminating waste. Even with the debt that will be accumulated as we reach balanced budgets, Alberta is still expected to maintain the lowest net debt to GDP ratio in Canada by a considerable margin. I'll just say that one more time. Even with the debt that will be accumulated as we reach balanced budgets, Alberta is still expected to maintain the lowest net debt to GDP ratio in Canada by a considerable margin.

Our pledge is to return to balanced budgets but doing so in a manner that continues to support Albertans by continuing to invest in health care, education, and social supports because if our recovery were based on hollowing out public services, neglecting our infrastructure like hospitals, schools, roads, and other government buildings, and leaving vulnerable Albertans behind through deep cuts to important income supports, as was done by the Conservatives in the recent past, it would in fact not be a recovery at all.

I ask all members of this House to support this bill so that we can get on with the important task of implementing Budget 2018: A Recovery Built to Last.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today and am pleased to speak to Bill 15, the Appropriation Act, 2018, for the budget. A recovery built to last indeed. In rising today, I rise to voice my concern for this budget and for the current and future state of our great province under the leadership of the NDP and in their decided collaboration with their close ally and fellow fiscal hawk Justin Trudeau. As we heard last night, the minister renewed his connection to the winning ways of Ontario, as was apparently quoted in his greetings from that province.

There are a few highlights to ponder in this budget which are concerning not only in this budget but actually in the effects, maybe not the intent but the effects, the unintended consequences of some of the actions of this government, Madam Speaker: zero full-time jobs created in March; 156,500 unemployed Albertans; 44,000 unemployed youth; the loss of 2,400 full-time youth jobs also for the month of March; a shrinking labour force; 92,000 fewer payroll jobs at the end of 2017. Ninety-two thousand fewer payroll jobs: each of those is attached to a struggling Alberta family who is trying to make ends meet, struggling to keep a roof over their heads, struggling to put food on the table.

We're hearing of increased incidents and need at the food banks. I just spent several hours this past Sunday making 174 birthday bags for needy Albertans so that children don't have to go without having a birthday party and can receive one simple gift that might be the bright spot in an otherwise challenged life where one or both of their parents may have lost their jobs.

Out of work for a year or more. That doubled from 7.8 to 15.6 per cent. That doubled last year, Madam Speaker, a doubling of people out of work for a year or more. What I'm hearing in my constituency is that people have been hanging on. They've been hanging on to that hope, but as they say, hope is not a strategy. In keeping that roof over their heads, they've been accessing assistance from family and friends. They've been dipping into their retirement incomes, many of them, trying to keep themselves afloat. As I heard from the ATB's chief economist, he has an expectation during this year of more bankruptcies and foreclosures amongst Albertans. That frightens me.

Our largest city has the third-highest unemployment among major Canadian cities, and our second-largest city, the city of Edmonton, has the sixth highest. That's not the Alberta that I know and love. We led this country in wealth creation, led this country in entrepreneurial spirit. We led this country in wealth creation, that we shared generously with the rest of this country. More lower-paying jobs: also from many of our noted economists. As much of a struggle as ever, as we heard from the Edmonton Chamber.

Madam Speaker, 73 per cent of businesses are worried about rising costs due to an all economic pain, no environmental gain carbon tax. There are 60,000 fewer jobs across Canada due to misguided minimum wage increases, with the worst-hit demographic among those already experiencing some of the highest unemployment rates: the youth of this province, the future of this province, the young people with the entrepreneurial spirit, with the drive, with the ambition to build a great life for themselves.

But that's just the beginning, Madam Speaker. What do the headlines say? Alberta's taxes drive away investors. By my last count – this is an account from over a year ago – $34.8 billion of foreign direct investment has left this province. I suspect that if we looked at pension funds and other factors of investment, it would be more than double that amount.

We're hearing death by a thousand cuts from small businesses, we're seeing homeless shelters at or above capacity, and a lot of people have run out of their EI. Again, back to my point earlier, when you have people that have been unemployed for long periods of time, a year or two years, they've run out of benefits, they've eaten into their retirement savings, they've taken equity out of their homes, they've run up their credit cards. This is what frightens me, Madam Speaker, about the state of this province under this government.

Charitable giving in Alberta has declined. I just talked with a close colleague of mine yesterday, and he said that the charity that he works with is down in their fundraising 11 per cent but that their costs due to the carbon tax and minimum wage and other things have gone up more than 10 per cent. So they now have a 20 per cent gap in delivering those services to the families and needy and struggling that they serve.

Where is that gap going to be made up when we have an economy that is not firing on all cylinders? People are trying to be generous, they're trying to move ahead, they're trying to ensure that they can make ends meet and that they can support the communities in which they live, but it's becoming a struggle. As I noted yesterday, we have recreation centres and arenas and swimming pools and churches and nonprofit groups that are having a sincere challenge with that.

What are families saying? The carbon tax will cost us $667 this year and up to $1,111 when this government, in co-operation with their close ally Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, increases it a further 67 per cent. Again, I mentioned that recreation centres, arenas, pools, churches, nonprofits are really getting hit hard. That's from them, from those entities themselves.

The NDP have come up with better policies to crush not only small farms but all small businesses. That's what we're hearing, Madam Speaker. Seventy per cent of Albertans feel their economic situation is stagnant or getting worse. This budget is going to contribute further to that by following this misguided ideology.

Madam Speaker, 92 per cent of business owners are not confident the Alberta government is committed to improving the business climate. So in spite of up, up, up and all the new job creation, I think the bucket has too many holes in it. The Finance minister has a big drill. He's drilled too many holes in this bucket, and some of his other ministers trying to fill it to the top just cannot keep up with the holes that this government is drilling into the Alberta economy and into our finances. That bucket is draining faster than we can fill it.

Forty-two per cent of Albertans find it difficult to cover monthly expenses, and we're hearing comments that this government is coming off as tone deaf and spinning a story that is not true. And Albertans know it.

Our own recently retired Auditor General said of the climate leadership plan: "It is difficult to get a full picture of the . . . costs and benefits." I think that relates to our comment, which is: all economic pain and no environmental gain. It lacks an overall implementation plan. We've heard of certain things from unicorns that may relate to this. There is no implementation plan. Hope is not a strategy. We also heard that it does not clearly state the expected and actual costs.

Free light bulbs. I got a call two days ago from an old business colleague. He pulled up in front of a building, and there were 22 Energy Efficiency Alberta vans sitting there in the middle of the day, large vans, beautifully painted, beautifully branded, sitting there idle. Who's paying for that, Madam Speaker?

On the carbon tax what are we hearing? Schools feel crunch of carbon tax. The schools that are educating our children, the next generation, the postsecondaries, the places of worship.

Seniors' centres could close their doors. I'm hearing from the seniors' centres in my constituency that they're getting complaints from their residents because they're trying to cover the costs of the increase of the carbon tax and minimum wage, and they're getting complaints. Madam Speaker, maybe what we need to do is to give them our Premier's address and tell them to talk to this government about why those rates are going up, why that has to be passed on by those operators so that they don't have to take that nutritious meal off the table, that extra salad, that podiatric care that they may receive, those extra services that are delivered. Where are they cutting back? Where are they cutting back to meet the deficit, the hole that is created by irresponsible actions?

Carbon tax driving agriculture out. All pain no gain. Fifty-five per cent of Albertans received no rebate cheque, or it was less than what they paid in carbon taxes. Then, back to the seniors, there are the clawbacks from the seniors so that when they get the cheque, they're passing it on again, sometimes to their detriment.

More stats and facts on the irresponsible, multigenerational debt that has been created and is continuing to be created in this budget by this government: $1.9 billion in debt servicing this year; $3.7 billion in debt servicing by 2023. Madam Speaker, did you know that cumulative debt servicing through 2024 will be $17.6 billion? That's a lot of schools. That's a lot of hospitals. That's a lot of roadways. That's a lot of infrastructure. That's $17.6 billion just in debt servicing. That, to me, is irresponsible, and it's spending that absolutely does not benefit one Albertan one little bit, as I think has been said by many of our members here, as we're enriching bankers across the country and around the world whom we are borrowing from to achieve this, to fill the gap between our irresponsible spending and a lack of creation and growing the pie for our economy.

This budget does not constitute a plan. It lacks any credible detail. It's an aspiration, barely, from one of Alberta's leading economists. We hear negative trends, debt burden, rapid debt accumulation placing a bigger burden on taxpayers from many fronts. These are what we're hearing from Albertans, Madam Speaker. Layer upon layer upon layer of irresponsible spending, irresponsible budgeting, irresponsible sacrificing of future generations' earning power and wealth creation, that they'll be saddled with for generations. I worry not only for my children, who are young adults, but I worry for their children, that we're going to pass this down two generations. Shame on us.

Then there is the coal shutdown, capacity markets, pipelines, social licence or the lack thereof, flight of capital, lack of business confidence, political risk. When did anybody in this House, anybody in Alberta think that Alberta was going to be a place of political risk, below some banana republics in the world? That's where the capital is going, Madam Speaker, because the perceived political risk there is less than it is today here in Alberta.

Regulatory burdens, unintended consequences, crime, social and mental health impacts, and a list of ideologically driven, job-killing, investment-repelling issues: Madam Speaker, this is what Budget 2018 looks like.

When I talk to Albertans, when I talk to those seniors and they are complaining to the manager of the seniors' home, again, I say: "Maybe you're talking to the wrong person. Maybe you're complaining to your seniors' centre manager. Maybe we should give you the e-mail address for this Premier so that you can send your comments about how that's impacting your life by e-mail to this cabinet, to this government, that irresponsibly is mispending Albertans' money."

Madam Speaker, this is what Budget 2018 looks like. If this is a recovery built to last, it is really more of a debt built to last longer. I'll say that again: not a recovery built to last, but debt built to last longer, two or more generations. They tell us this is a recovery built to last for working people, but what if you can't find a job after two, three, or even four years? Is this a recovery built to last for people that aren't working? Those people are coming to me. I see grown men and women coming into my office saying that they haven't worked for two years or are having struggles paying their mortgages. They're not sure that they're ever going to work again. They're dipping into their retirement savings. Some of them are now having to sell their homes to reduce their monthly expenses so that they can continue to live.

Again, I say to those people: thank you for coming in; thank you for sharing that with me as your representative in this House so that

I can speak strongly to that. But we want to make sure that they know that the source of that is the ideologically driven policies, the regulatory environment, and, yes, Madam Speaker, the budgets of this government over the past three years. Again, I say to them: you can come to me and I will share your message, and I will take your correspondence and I will pass that on to the appropriate people, to the cabinet of this government. Again, I'm quite happy to say: there's a Premier's office here, and you can have that e-mail address, and you can send those complaints and those concerns directly to them and copy me.

Madam Speaker, when I mentioned earlier about the Premier's address, I meant the Premier's e-mail address. Of course, we ensure and respect everybody's privacy and respect their security. But that e-mail address is a powerful, powerful tool for Albertans to voice their opinion. Now, a year from now we'll have an opportunity to do that in the polls, but in the meantime Albertans need and want to be heard.

This government tells us that they are controlling spending to return to balance, but it is purely on a wish and a prayer. As I said before, Madam Speaker, hope is not a strategy. We hear of efficiencies to balance the budget by 2023-2024, but nowhere do we see meaningful efficiencies from a government that believes austerity is a four-letter word. Last time I checked, it was not.

We hear of plans to tightly manage discretionary spending, but the only tight management we see is from the growing PR and anger machines. If I hear "lowest net debt to GDP ratio" one more time as we climb to a $96 billion debt, I just might have to return to university for a refresher on that statistics 101 course I took, where it is clear the Minister of Finance excelled and where the first textbook they gave us was How to Lie with Statistics by Darrell Huff. Anybody who's taken statistics in this province has probably had that book as one of their textbooks that they carried around, How to Lie with Statistics. We hear that, Madam Speaker, each and every day.

We read that our risks include prolonged market access issues even though this government led us, with their friends and chosen advisers Tzaporah Berman and Karen Mahon at the helm, on a rather enlightening journey of pipeline-approving social licence.

We hear that highly indebted households remain vulnerable to a faster than expected increase in interest rates, but then we have a government that doesn't think that the same principles apply to our provincial treasury, particularly with a downgraded credit rating, which we seem to face. I think many of us on this side of the House are worried we're going to see the next announcement from Moody's or DBRS or one of the bond-rating agencies on how this government is going to have to pay more to service that expanding and rapidly growing and irresponsibly growing debt.

We're reminded of the potential for strong growth in oil production even though the attraction of capital remains suspect and is predicated on market access growth while having been complicit in the death of Northern Gateway and Energy East, Madam Speaker. We can't grow it if we can't get it to market.

Madam Speaker, I consider myself an eternal optimist, a born-and-raised Albertan, entrepreneurially spirited. I've had an opportunity to thrive in this province, and I want to make sure that my children and my grandchildren have that same opportunity. I will continue to fight for a return to the Alberta advantage irrespective of who is at the Alberta helm. That is our responsibility as Albertans. But it is clear that this government's recovery built to last is but a weak PR exercise. It has turned me into not just a skeptic but a fierce detractor of the policies of this government, that can only be driven by misguided, irresponsible, myopic ideology, which defies, to me, the characteristics that have made Alberta the best place to make a living and to have a great life, where everyone can reach their fullest potential.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was somewhat hesitant because I thought you were going to say: questions under 29(2)(a). But it's not available at this time if I'm reading your expression correctly.

Madam Speaker, it's a fine day in Alberta. As an agriculturalist, as a farmer it's sometimes frustrating to be in this Chamber when I could be out at my farm, which is where I love and would be happy to be, but I also have a full and absolute responsibility to represent the constituents of the proud and diverse constituency of Drumheller-Stettler. It's my responsibility, and through my life I've done and tried to effect those responsibilities to the best of my ability.

It's a pleasure to be in this place as well to share my thoughts today on Bill 15, Appropriation Act, 2018. This bill is all about the budget, all about money, all about the government's inability to control spending, to control debt, and to control or not any sort of fiscal restraint instead of going towards critical, compassionate services that Albertans rely on.

I'm going to relate a historical quote made in 1935 – I believe it was 1935 – by the then Premier, William Aberhart, who said: if Albertans haven't suffered enough, it's their God-given right to suffer some more. Madam Speaker, I'm hopeful that Albertans, as we go forward with this commentary, will understand the direction that this government has taken on them, and given an opportunity to express their opinion, they will do so with full and forthright vigour.

Madam Speaker, this government would rather pay ballooning interest payments to big banks, and it's frustrating because there are lots of many different ways that this money could be spent. It's an absolute disgrace that the interest we are paying is more than most of the government departments' total budgets. It's seriously hard to comprehend how much damage to our kids and grandkids this government is doing. Imagine – simply imagine – how many schools and hospitals that would buy. Some members on the government bench know and have lived in the rural areas, and they know what it's like to be in rural, remote areas, where facilities like that can mean the difference between life and death.

How many seniors in my riding and others in rural areas have helped to build this province, not singularly in rural ridings but across Alberta? These people have helped to build this province, and they are the fabric and backbone of what and who this province is. Could this money provide service to them in their twilight years? Absolutely.

Madam Speaker, as a person who's lived within six miles of the social experiment known as Saskatchewan my whole life, I question: where is this province headed? Numbers don't lie. The debt-servicing cost in 2018-19 is $2 billion; 2019-20, $2.4 billion; 2020-2021, $3 billion; 2023-2024, $3.7 billion. That's with a capital B. It hurts this old head to think about some of those large numbers. I can't comprehend that. As I said, my son is in the process of taking our farm implements, and we're putting the crop in the ground. Many producers are understanding the extreme budgets that go into their farming operations, but they don't do it with a capital B. Some might be into six numbers but not seven or eight.

It's obvious, Madam Speaker, that these folks have no plans to pay down the debt, debt that may reach approximately $100 billion by the 2023 term. One hundred billion, with a capital B. That's a lot of burden to saddle future generations with. By 2020 debt-servicing costs will simply exceed $500 per Albertan, more than double what they were in '16-17. That comes courtesy of the Fraser Institute, which I know some of the members opposite take great umbrage to and make fun of.

Funnily enough, though, the government says that they have a plan. It's a plan, though, that they did not share with Albertans, much like how they failed to disclose their carbon tax to voters. I'm looking forward to this government in the next election disclosing their carbon tax plan as we go forward to an election. It'll be interesting to see Albertans' reaction to that.

When the federal government's carbon tax is set to increase, beginning in 2021, it will be diverted to general revenue. Madam Speaker, that's right, general revenue. It was right there on page 54 of this year's fiscal plan. It never mentioned that anything above Trudeau's $50-a-tonne carbon tax would not be recycled back to Albertans through carbon rebates or green initiatives and that none of it would be sent to general revenues. The NDP promised that every cent of the carbon tax would be returned to Albertans. Remember that they mentioned that their carbon levy would be revenue neutral, but not so much now. Sorry, Martha and Henry; we forgot to mention that little nugget of information. Hopefully, that'll be on the front of the NDP election literature going forward in the next election.

That reminds me of something else that has been lost in the shuffle, Madam Speaker. Remember when the government opposite railed against the flat tax or how they vilified it, commenting on how it shortchanged Alberta? Well, the government increased those taxes across the board. In 2015 overall revenue from taxes brought in less than the flat tax did. Every year tax revenue fell short of this government's budget – every single year – not the greatest of records to hang your hat on. After all, it was the UCP and this opposition that told the government that this would be the result. Once more, the NDP failed to listen to common-sense advice. Their 20 per cent tax hike has resulted in, actually, less revenue and dragged down investor confidence.

Investors are fleeing the province. They can see through distractions and posturing. Remember that this government has had staff and members actively protest pipelines, the oil sands, and other energy projects. Not the PCs, not the Wildrose but the government, your government. Over $30 billion in investment has left Alberta since the government, the NDP government, took power. Here are some examples, Madam Speaker. Murphy Oil sold its 5 per cent interest in Syncrude in April 2016. Statoil sold its Canadian thermal oil in December '16. Koch oil issued a letter to the AER requesting cancellation of their SAGD project in October 2016. Shell sold Montney and Deep Basin assets in December 2016. And it goes on.

Shell also divested oil sands assets to CNRL in March 2017. I know of CNRL because they actually have surface assets on property that I farm around, that actually became a disgrace because of low maintenance and poor weed control on their site. Should they be so kind, through their public resources people, to contact me, I'd be happy to disclose the LSD of that development – LSD means legal subdivision – and the marking of where the actual wellhead is. Marathon divested oil sands assets to CNRL in March 2017. ConocoPhillips divested the majority of their Alberta assets in March 2017. Madam Speaker, these numbers are alarming. They represent jobs, pipelines, and investment.

I have a good friend who drives a truck, and he hauls freight. One of his major occupations right now is hauling, as we call it, mobile iron, oil field assets, from a giant auction firm south of the city here to Texas, Louisiana, Georgia, Florida. This gentleman is on the road full-time. That's his job, hauling these development assets out of this province and to other economical locations.

Madam Speaker, I'd now like to touch on the Trans Mountain project for a moment. Despite the growing uncertainty surrounding that pipeline, the government is counting on its revenue in their projections. This pipeline is nowhere near a guarantee. In fact, the other day I saw a news article saying that there's a possibility that Keystone XL may actually become a development prior to Trans Mountain. That's an interesting change of outlook. The pipeline is nowhere near a guarantee of getting built, and if the pipeline is just delayed, it will negatively impact this government's surplus financial projection. In fact, Kinder Morgan is already restructuring their labour force on the project, with 18 people being laid off from it to be reassigned.

Job losses are nothing to scoff at. After all, according to Stats Canada's March 2018 job numbers in Alberta zero full-time jobs were created in March. That's not very many, Madam Speaker. The square root of zero is still zero. Any growth in part-time employment? Eighty-three hundred jobs. Sixty-one hundred private-sector jobs were lost while the public sector gained 3,200. At 6.7 per cent Alberta still has the highest unemployment rate outside of Atlantic Canada. Calgary has the third-highest unemployment rate of major cities, at 8.2 per cent.

Madam Speaker, I said at the outset that I've lived beside the NDP social experiment known as Saskatchewan my whole life. I happened to be doing some research, and a friend sent me some research regarding economies of the world. It would turn out that Canada is the 10th-largest economy on a global scale, by the information that I have. But it's interesting to understand that there is another jurisdiction that has an equal rate of economic growth and development. That's in one state, and it's called Texas. It's quite interesting that through policy it would make that kind of a difference. Not unlike Saskatchewan and Alberta, that were formed at the same time, Saskatchewan at one time had a greater number of people, greater amount of economic development than Alberta, but they chose at the time to take the CCF's supposedly visionary direction, and now we have 1.1 million people in Saskatchewan and 4.3 million or somewhere north of 4 and a quarter million people in Alberta.

Madam Speaker, for those of us that lived along the border there, as I have, we used to comment somewhat vociferously that the best thing ever for Alberta was Saskatchewan because some of the hardest working people and many of the people that we know who are committed to economic development are from Saskatchewan, but Alberta has received that benefit.

To try and be more realistic, Madam Speaker, the simple truth of the matter is that the NDP wants to tell Albertans how things are just great again, but Albertans are not buying it. The economics don't show that. This is a government that is deeply out of touch with everyday Albertans. In fact, Janet Riopel, the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce CEO, stated recently, "Are the difficult times truly behind us? That's not what I hear. Things on the ground appear to be still as much of a struggle as ever." That's from the Edmonton Journal, March 7, 2018.

While other similar energy-based economies recovered years ago, Alberta is still being held back by harmful policies from the NDP and the Trudeau Liberals. My friend from Calgary-Fish Creek so eloquently described Justin Trudeau as a fiscal hawk.

The investment in infrastructure is heading to business-friendly environments. Now, Madam Speaker, that's actually reversed in this case. Saskatchewan is becoming a developmental leader, and I see that across the border. North Dakota, Texas, and Louisiana, where my friend hauls the oil field development iron coming out of this province, also are experiencing marvellous and excellent fiscal growth.

Madam Speaker, I'd be remiss if I didn't talk a bit about the effects all this debt is having on Alberta. Please let's revisit some previous points. We are paying almost $1 billion annually in interest payments on the debt, and that's from Alberta Finance's 2017-18 second-quarter fiscal update and economic statement, page 9, for those of you who may be curious and for those of you who may be watching and following this closely at home. From the same document our debt is projected to reach $70 billion by '19-20.

Most importantly, Alberta has now seen six – six – credit downgrades since the NDP took office. Moody's, Standard & Poor's Global, and DBRS are a few. Those are the three main credit-rating bureaus here. It's simply unacceptable that the government dismissed these actions as irrelevant. It's an accurate business thermometer of what's going on in the province. I don't think Albertans believe the government for a minute.

Madam Speaker, this budget is simply a mess. The government has now been trying to imply that because we vote against the budget, we are voting against funding police, firefighters, schools, and hospitals, and that's simply . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We are now on 29(2)(a). Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will now recognize the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure this morning to stand and speak to third reading on the appropriation bill, Bill 15. You know, I have now been around this place for just over six years, and I've seen a number of budgets come and go. I have found it interesting to compare and contrast how those budgets are presented and how they are framed. You know, I rather chuckled at this particular budget's very optimistic-sounding title, A Recovery Built to Last. No. The only thing that's going to last out of this budget is the debt that you folks have built. The recovery is still very, very fragile, but I will tell you that the debt you're building: that's solid. That's solid.

You know, we stand here during the debate, Madam Speaker, and we hear – it's really interesting. They talk about looking at a glass that is either half full or half empty. Of course, the folks on the other side, especially the Finance minister, would have you believe that though the glass is really only half full, it's really overflowing because things are going so well. On the other side the glass is half empty, but you have folks saying, "No. The glass is broken, and it's leaking," and the glass is still half full.

You know, one of the things we were taught when I was in veterinary school, the very fine veterinary school in Saskatoon, that this government has seen fit to cut the funding to – they taught us that sometimes you can look at exactly the same situation and come up with different conclusions. I think that's sort of what we're seeing right here.

You know, I'm reminded of what Lincoln had to say about this. Abraham Lincoln once said: we can curse the rose because it has thorns, or we can praise the rose because it has flowers. The thing of it is that this government has chosen to only look at the flowers, the Official Opposition is certainly highlighting the thorns, and then the reality of it is that we have over 4 million Albertans out there who are wanting to see a balanced approach. They are wanting to see an approach that is going to be sustainable in the long run, an approach that is in fact going to take care of all Albertans, that is not going to leave Albertans behind. Certainly, this government's approach is not going to get us there.

Now, over the course of the last three weeks, when we were in estimates, by my count I attended all or part of 16 of the 21 ministerial main estimates sessions. I did that because I wanted to have the opportunity wherever possible to ask specific questions of the ministers. You know, it would be impossible in the 15 minutes that I have here to really summarize all of the things we learned from that, but there were a few highlights during the course of that that I do want to point out.

The Minister of Treasury Board and Finance once again touted the lowest debt-to-GDP ratio, and I asked him some questions about that. You know, he mentioned in his session of estimates that that is the measure that economists use to measure whether your debt is sustainable or not. I don't want to call down the economist profession. Economists are important people; they understand how the economy runs. But I also have heard that God created economists to make astrologers and weathermen look good. Economists make a lot of predictions, make a lot of forecasts, and the reality of it is that at some point those have to be mobilized. Those have to be actually put into some form of policy.

So when I see low debt-to-GDP ratio, well, you know, one of the problems is that Alberta has got a remarkably high GDP when you compare it to the other provinces in Canada. You know, the entire 2016 GDP by expenditure in Canada was something a little over $2 trillion. The province with the highest GDP was the province of Ontario, with some $794 billion of GDP and a population of 13 million. The second was the province of Quebec, with $395 billion and their population of 8.1 million, roughly double Alberta's.

Despite that, Alberta's GDP comes in third amongst the provinces, not fourth as we would be by population, but in fact third. Alberta's GDP in 2016 was $315 billion, just a little bit behind Quebec's, even though we have half the population of that province. We have less than a third of the population of Ontario, yet our GDP is approaching 40 per cent of Ontario's GDP.

Alberta's GDP, because Alberta is a productive place, is very high. If you're using debt to GDP as your measure, well, you've got a lot to work with there. Your denominator on that equation is really high, so you've got a lot to play with. Not only do we know that you've got a lot to play with on the denominator side, but you've also got a lot to play with on the numerator side of that equation, as was stated last night in debate by the Member for Calgary-Elbow. Now the terminology has changed from total debt to GDP to net debt to GDP, a subtle change but a really critical one to pretty up the numbers and make things look better.

You know, this is the kind of obfuscation that happens at budget time. I mean, I will say that it happened when we were in government, but these folks, Madam Speaker, have taken that to an art form. These folks have taken the obfuscation and the muddying of the waters in order to make things look good – they've taken that to a new level.

You know, the minister in his remarks also talked about, you know, that we wouldn't make deep cuts to income supports. Well, I hear fairly regularly from AISH recipients, who would really like to see this government actually do something about AISH payments, which haven't increased since our government increased them in 2012. They haven't indexed them to inflation, and those recipients on AISH are in fact falling farther behind under this supposedly compassionate government.

Let's look at some specific things, Madam Speaker, that this government has done that are clearly poor decisions. I have spoken many times in this Chamber about the practice of siphoning away the tourism levy into general revenue. I asked those questions of the Minister of Culture and Tourism again this year. About a third of the total tourism levy, the money that is collected from folks that are staying in our hotels and motels and fixed-roof tourism properties across the province, is supposed to go towards the promotion of tourism in the province. It used to; 100 per cent of it used to go to fund Travel Alberta, the tourism department. Not a single penny of tax revenue, general tax revenue, went to fund tourism.

But now it seems that tourism is going to fund general revenue. Some 30 per cent of the tourism levy that is collected each year in fact is siphoned off into general revenue. We used to know what that return was. Back in the day we knew that every dollar spent on tourism in the province by the province returned some $19.50 in taxation revenue to the province, never mind the economic activity. So for the last two years I've asked the Minister of Culture and Tourism: what is that number today? We were told, startlingly, last year that they've stopped measuring it. They don't know. They have no clue. They've stopped measuring it, and this is a quote: because that measurement was deemed to be not useful. Well, Madam Speaker, if you don't know what you're aiming at, you're always going to hit your target. These folks have no clue, zero clue of what they're aiming at.

You know, the other thing that bothers me about the way the tourism industry is being helped or, more correctly, hindered by this government: they always tout how it's an important part of their economic diversification, yet tourism spending was cut this year again, for the third year in a row. Tourism spending as a percentage of the overall Ministry of Culture and Tourism has dropped to 15 per cent of the overall ministry budget, the lowest level ever. People in the tourism industry are wondering why this government, that prides itself, supposedly, on economic diversification, has abandoned tourism, because that's what you've done. You have abandoned the tourism industry, so . . .

An Hon. Member: The numbers are up.

Dr. Starke: The numbers are down. The numbers are down. You know, once again, you folks love to say: oh, the numbers are up. No, they're down. A point of fact is that in every region of the province, with the exception of the mountain national parks, the numbers are down. They're down significantly, and the numbers for the province as a whole are down. The tourism levy is down, and it's because of the activities of this government.

Now, we talked a little bit and, certainly, the minister talked about the minimum wage. In the Labour estimates there was talk about how the government is very proud of this rush to the $15 minimum wage. You know, virtually everybody has said: look, by all means, the minimum wage should go up. I support the minimum wage going up, but let's do it in a way that doesn't damage and cause hardship to already struggling businesses. Other jurisdictions that are going to the $15 minimum wage in the United States aren't going to get there until 2022-2023, places like New York, places like California. But, no, Alberta under this government has to get there by 2018.

Then we find out that they don't even really understand the minimum wage. The Minister of Culture and Tourism during estimates said: well, most of the people on minimum wage in Alberta are single mothers. [interjection] Well, no, your Minister of Culture and Tourism said that most people in Alberta on minimum wage are single mothers – it's what he said – that 6.7 per cent of those earning less than $15 an hour identify as single parents. But to say that and to toss that out there and not have it challenged for its accuracy – members of Executive Council, members of the cabinet, that should know those numbers, are throwing out numbers just because they're thinking that nobody is going to actually challenge them on the accuracy of them.

You know, there are so many other things that this government tosses out there and thinks that it's not going to get challenged on. The Minister of Economic Development and Trade always likes to talk about how coal is a thing of the past. Well, explain that to the countries that are either building or planning to build 2,400 new coal-fired generation plants world-wide. I wish something I was doing was so going out of style that 2,400 plants were being built around the Earth.

You know, Madam Speaker, there are so many things about this budget that are wrong, but whenever you bring up some of the things – and the Minister of Health is very fond of this – there's always the blame on the past. I learned something a long, long time ago that I take rather great comfort in, and every time she does it, I smile, because the people who like to bring up your past and blame you for the past do that because your future and your present look a lot brighter than theirs.

I can tell you that the future of our province, I think, looks much brighter going forward, but it'll be brighter after this one-term NDP government is turfed out of office, this four-year sadness of interregnum that we will see from this government once it is gone and it is assigned, as it properly will be, to a footnote in Alberta's history. This government will be gone in about a year's time if they have the courage to call the election during the actual period or if they will hang on desperately till the fifth year, hoping, praying . . .

Ms Hoffman: That's pretty rich.

Dr. Starke: Yeah, I know.

. . . that the polls will get better, hoping and praying that those numbers will improve.

Well, Madam Speaker, a year from now, when Albertans, hopefully, are asked, this government will be reduced once again to this small corner of the Legislature, where they belong, and they will be punished, and they will be remembered as being the worst government in the history of Alberta. It is not a happy thing, necessarily, but a lot of that has been because of the fiscal mismanagement of this Minister of Finance. It's because of the decisions that have been made that perhaps are well intentioned, but they have turned out disastrously.

There's no question in my mind that when I look at the numbers in this budget, they are a mistake. The numbers here show that we're sinking into an ever-expanding pool of red ink, of debt, and because of that, I will be voting in opposition to Bill 15, in opposition to this budget. I certainly hope that it is this government's last budget.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak on Bill 15. Now, I was entertained to hear the Finance minister introduce this bill when this debate started this morning, and I was entertained by him talking about eliminating Conservative waste. Well, that's a great start for the minister because it's probably one of the few things where he might be partly right. There's always waste in governments, but I can assure you that it's not been the Conservatives that have been making waste the last three years. Listen, every government that ever has been has created waste, every government that ever will be will create waste, but the current team in charge of the good ship Alberta are really setting a standard like has not been set ever.

This is the same crew that started off with a billion-dollar surplus budget, a $7 billion rainy-day fund, zero net debt, and has taken all those good numbers and flushed them down the toilet to have massive $8 billion, $9 billion, $10 billion a year debt. They actually brag about lowering their annual deficit from something in the nature of $9.1 billion to $8.8 billion. They actually went out and bragged that this was progress, that this is really making things better for Albertans.

Well, Madam Speaker, we're having a political convention this weekend. I'll admit that probably some of our party members will wake up on one or more of those mornings with a hangover, but that hangover will go away within a day or two for those people. Albertans, after this government, after this term even, will have a hangover – hopefully, that's the end of the government; we don't know yet – a financial hangover. Children who have never had a drink in their life and may never choose to have a drink in their life will have a hangover, a financial hangover, that will last decades courtesy of the people across the aisle in this government today.

Those children, not old enough to pay taxes yet, 20 or 30 years from now will be paying taxes on 2018 paper clips because this government is buying billions for operating expenses. They will be paying 20 or 30 years from now for 2018 light bulbs. They will be paying for photocopying from 2018-2019. They'll be paying that 20 or 30 years from now.

That is a financial hangover that is inexcusable, that those children do not deserve, and that is being visited upon those children by this Alberta NDP government in this budget and all the previous budgets. They're saddling our children and our grandchildren with obligations that will take decades to pay back for paper clips from 2018. Paper clips. Paper clips, Madam Speaker. [interjections] You know what? I can tell that I'm getting under the government's skin because the anger machine is cranking up, and I'm hearing lots of noise from across the aisle. [interjections] You know what? They're not entirely wrong because part of what the money is being borrowed for is schools. Great. I agree. Those are good expenditures. The problem is that the debt will last longer in some cases than the schools will. Borrowing to build schools can be a good idea, but you need to have a plan to pay it back before the school gets knocked down.

This government has no plan to pay it back, not even dollar one. In fact, the last report of the outgoing Auditor General said that for this government to balance the budget after 2021, the government would have to be prepared to bring in, 25 in a row, $3 billion a year budgets. I actually gave the Finance minister, two days ago in question period, a chance to look like he knew what he was doing. I said: can you commit to that? He refused to answer the question.

I said: well, let's go to the end of your budget, then, where you promise – this is a great promise – to have Alberta $96 billion in debt by 2023. That's a wonderful promise. I don't think most Albertans think that's a wonderful promise, but this government actually has the courage, in fairness to them, to lay out in black and white just how abysmal their financial record and lack of planning are. I asked the minister, "Are you prepared for 24 or 25 years in a row to have $4 billion surpluses," again giving him a chance to say that he's got a plan, and he wouldn't do it. Even when given the opportunity to commit to a plan, they will not commit because they don't have one.

Again, back to where I started, the financial hangover they are visiting upon Alberta's children and grandchildren is inexcusable, it's abysmal, and it's beyond the pale. They just keep bragging about making the numbers worse for Alberta, and while the numbers in an academic sense, I suppose you could say, don't matter, in a real sense they do because that is going to mean, in years to come, fewer social services for Alberta's poorest. It's going to mean fewer schools for Alberta's children. It's going to be fewer doctors and nurses due to the debt obligations.

The debt-servicing costs alone, Madam Speaker, not including paying down any of the debt but just managing the interest rates as they are predicted: this year, $22 billion; by 2021, $3 billion; by '23-24, $3.7 billion. Not one time but every single year from then on. And who's going to pay for that? Boys and girls in grade 8 today, boys and girls in grade 3 today, boys and girls that haven't hit kindergarten yet today will be paying for 2018 paper clips purchased by this government, with no plan to pay for their own paper clips, at least not till 2023-24.

It's not like I'm making this up. The Finance minister stood here in this House repeatedly and admitted that and was proud of it. He says that that's making Alberta better, paying for 2018 paper clips in 2024 if indeed he can do that. I'm going to take his word for it: some small surplus in 2024. Even with that, his shiniest, biggest, best, least believable promise is to be paying for 2018 paper clips in 2024.

How – how – can these people look at themselves in the mirror when they're putting a budget like that on the table? How can they tell Albertans that that is a good budget? How can they actually look at Alberta's children and say, "We care about you" when they're saddling them with such an unbelievable debt, $23,000 per man, woman, and child in Alberta, no matter how young they are, by 2023-24? And a big part of that debt will be paying for 2018 paper clips. Wow. Good job. Good job. Madam Speaker, this government is really rocking it for Albertans, I have to tell you.

But it doesn't get any better. They talk about diversifying the economy. Well, again, nonrenewable resource revenue in 2018-19 versus 2021 is expected to go up from 8 per cent to 9.3 per cent. That's a good thing. But I will remind the government that if the percentage of nonrenewable resource revenue goes up as a percentage of the gross domestic product, that means diversification is going backwards. [interjection] Yes. Again, this is so bad. A person doesn't – you can't actually make this stuff up. In fact, you don't have to, because the government's own numbers actually say how bad it is, just how abysmal it is. This is disgraceful.

Albertans are not happy. According to Janet Brown's poll for the CBC, Albertans trust Conservatives more than the NDP on education, on health care, on the economy, on virtually every measure. I think there were a couple where they edge us out, but on the vast majority they trust us more already than the folks across the aisle. And with all due respect, we haven't been in government, so we haven't really been able to effect a type of change. It's not so much that we've been doing great; it's how bad this government is. It's how bad this government is. [interjections] I love that the anger machine is cranking up here. It's great. It makes me happy because it actually makes it clear just how the truth bothers this government, just how badly the truth bothers this government. [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I said that we haven't been in government for the last three years. During those three years this government has made it so clear that they are so bad at their job that though we haven't had effective control over things because they've been in government, Albertans trust us on almost every major issue. This government has messed up almost every major issue, not the least of which is this budget. My goodness.

Okay. If there's any Conservative waste left, then you should have had it cleaned up by now, but if you don't, clean it up. The NDP waste is astounding, $8 billion, $9 billion a year in deficit. The services are not better than they were three years ago. They promised a $25 million surplus this year. They're delivering us a $9 billion deficit. That's about 350-fold. That's the difference between a day and a year. That's how much this Finance minister is off in his estimates, the difference between a day and a year, approximately, the difference between one and about 350-fold, almost a day and a year. A day and a quarter versus a year: that's how much this Finance minister and this government have missed the mark.

That is incredible. That's incompetent. That's not paying attention to business. That is not caring about the future. That's thinking that if they spend their brains out, they might be able to get re-elected based on all the things they've bought if they could only distract Albertans from the massive financial hangover that they are inflicting upon them. It is massive, and there is no plan to pay it back; 2018 paper clips will be paid for we hope – and that's not even a sure thing if these people stick around – in 2023-2024. What a tremendously terrible track record, what a tremendously terrible legacy for Alberta's children and grandchildren to have to deal with.

While they're spending this money, they're not looking after rural crime. It's going through the roof, Madam Speaker. Though one of the most important things, the government can't get police officers out to rural Alberta. The crime rate is going through the roof, and this government, for all the money they're spending, can't make it better. When they're trying to provide officers, the best they can do is rob Peter to pay Paul, take officers from one detachment, leave it more short, and move them to another to leave it less short. Well, I'm glad they're trying something, but the fact is that when rural crime is that bad and their response is that toothless, for the $8 billion, $9 billion a year that they're putting Alberta into debt, you would think they could handle this thing and get the manpower there to deal with it. Even though they are spending far beyond what's coming in the door, they still can't provide the basic services.

There are a lot of important services the government provides, but it's been often said that one of the most important services the government provides is protection of the people, and they're not getting that right. No wonder Albertans trust us more than this government on rural crime and on urban crime and on health care and on education and on social services.

This crew wants us to vote for their budget, and when we don't, they will say that we don't support their education plan or their health care plan. They have no plan. They have a plan to spend more money and hope it's okay. To be fair, the government will educate Alberta's children – thank you for that – and there will be health care for Albertans, and thank you for that. But for the dramatic increase in debt and deficit that they're putting on Alberta's children and grandchildren, any improvement that they might claim to have pales in comparison to how bad they're leaving the financial situation.

Sooner or later Albertans know – this government may not, but Albertans know – the bill has to be paid. The bill has to come due. On behalf of the government I'll say to every kid in kindergarten in this province: sorry; you're going to get stuck paying in 2023-2024, or maybe when you have your first full-time job, paying for paper clips from 2018. That is symbolic of the incompetence of this budget, the incompetence of this government, the financial mess they've put Alberta in in three short years – in three short years – and there's another year before Alberta gets to go to the polls and try to put a stop to it. I believe they will. I don't know. Again, I've often said that if I could predict the future, I'd be a lot wealthier than I am today.

Here's a note for the government: budgets don't balance themselves. Folks, you're going to have to do something different. Madam Speaker, the government is going to have to do something different. That's the lesson, and the lesson that we're going to try to teach today is by voting no. I've got a hunch that Albertans are thinking about whether they're going to teach a bigger lesson to this government a year from now because this government has not had their backs. This government isn't making life better. They're making it worse.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Just listening to the previous speaker talk about the budget and all the damage it's going to do to Albertans and to future Albertans, too, I think one thing that really strikes me is the $96 billion of debt that we'll be in before this government is proposing that the budget will be balanced. Of course, this government hasn't been too accurate in any of its forecasts on anything financial, so I don't know if we've got a whole lot we can believe in with that. At that time we'll have $3.7 billion worth of interest we're paying each year. Presently we're at $1.9 billion worth of interest per year, and of course those are alarming numbers. Those are numbers of dollars that are spent to make bankers rich, not for bettering life for Albertans. This isn't making life better for Albertans.

This government, you know, with its budgets has created all these credit downgrades, which, of course, affect our interest rate. This government has brought in the carbon tax, that's made life more expensive for schools, for busing students, made it more expensive to run universities, made things more expensive for seniors, and made everything more expensive for families in Alberta. I can't believe that this government can stand here and say that they're making life better for Albertans when they're increasing this huge amount of debt and creating uncertainty in the marketplace.

For instance, in March, the month before last, no new jobs. All this economic pain that they've been inflicting, suggesting that there was going to be some sort benefit in the end, of course, is all just smoke and mirrors. They talked about how the carbon tax was going to get us a pipeline. Well, we've got two pipeline cancellations, and we still don't have a pipeline. This government is going to cause pain to B.C. residents, increasing the price of their fuel. They're offering to pay for this pipeline. They're doing all these things that the carbon tax was supposed to do, and it obviously didn't. They're driving investment away with increased taxes, with the regulations, with permit processes that take years and years and hundreds of millions of dollars for these companies. Of course, what do we have? We've got pipelines cancelled.

I wouldn't mind hearing the previous speaker just elaborate a little more again on some of these things, how this government says that they've got the backs of Albertans and, really, they don't.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate that. The member reminded me of some remarks I didn't get to here this morning. The government's plan is poor and untenable and unbelievable as it is. It's going to require, in my view, more than one pipeline, and at this point they're not sure of getting one. If they get one, we'll cheer for them, and to be clear, if they get one, it'll be largely because they've finally taken the advice of our leader to put some pressure on the good folks from British Columbia and on their close personal friend Justin Trudeau. Nonetheless, we will congratulate and high-five the government if they get this pipeline built.

Ms Hoffman: I'll hold you to account.

Mr. McIver: Deputy Premier, you can count on me for that.

Ms Hoffman: Okay.

Mr. McIver: I will high-five you – you can take a picture – but I will also remind people that it's largely because you and your government took advice from our leader. But you will get your share of the credit, too. You will get your share of the credit as well. [interjections] No, no. We're cheering for you. We're cheering for you because we're cheering for Alberta. We're cheering for Alberta. Madam Speaker, when this government does actually do something for Alberta, we're with them a hundred per cent. That's why you'll find us in support of Bill 12.

But the point is that even if they get the pipeline, it won't be enough to balance their budget unless they do other things differently. To answer the hon. member's question, we will be there to give them advice on this, and for the sake of Alberta's children and grandchildren I sincerely hope we get this pipeline built. All of the negative consequences this government has wrought on Albertans' children and grandchildren will only be worse if they don't get the pipeline, because that pipeline is in the budget. Without the pipeline that $96 billion debt will be bigger because the Finance minister has admitted they're depending upon the pipeline to keep the deficit down to $96 billion. Now, that's an odd phrase: keep it down to $96 billion. Who would have imagined that that would be a phrase used in Alberta at any point? But those are the depths that this government has taken this province to.

They haven't got a plan, which is why we're concerned. We sincerely hope they get a pipeline. We're going to help. We have been helping. We'll continue to help the best we can. But the government has taken us down such a wrong path that even if they get a pipeline, they'll be paying for 2018 paper clips in 2023-24.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? I will recognize the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to request the unanimous consent of the Assembly to move the division bells to one minute for the next vote.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 9

Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act

[Adjourned debate May 3: Ms McKitrick]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to stand in this Chamber and speak to Bill 9. I want to be very clear. My hope, for this country and other countries, is that there is never ever another abortion. It pains my heart that women have to go through that, but again, being a male, what do I know?

I am going to support this bill, but I want to paint a picture and the reason why I support this bill and the 50-metre setback, because I think it's important. I think back on my career as a paramedic. There have been three calls. We know that posttraumatic stress syndrome for some people just one day clicks in. It could be anything that triggers it. I'll tell you what: with those three calls that I attended, if I ever have posttraumatic stress syndrome, it's probably because of those three calls. Those three calls were where women self-aborted their child.

Now, you can't imagine walking into a bathroom where the floor is filled with blood and water and the patient is on the ground bleeding to death, and what you see is a fetus torn in two. This wasn't 50 years ago. This wasn't 100 years ago. This was in this past decade. No woman should ever have to feel alone. No woman should ever have to go through that. No paramedic, no firefighter, no police officer that comes across that call should ever have to see that. I will never ever forget that. I will never erase those memories.

When we speak in this House about these issues, they matter. We disagree on them. Like I said, I do not want to see a woman get another abortion ever. The way that I believe we achieve that, based on my faith, is that we work in the community with people. We educate people. We care for people with compassion and understanding, with love. That is how we are going to get to the heart of this issue, trying to curb abortions through education.

I'm going to suggest to this House – to the government, to the Official Opposition, to everybody – that this is not a political football. This is not something where we are trying to pin somebody back and forth trying to earn votes. We're talking about women's lives. We're talking about the lives of children inside the womb. Let's show some compassion. Let's speak honestly about this. Again, no woman should ever have to go through the things that I've seen them go through and having people deter them at the doorway. Again, I think the people in these clinics are well intended to try and educate women, give them the best care, the best support. A 50-metre setback I think is reasonable. That's why I'll be supporting this bill. But, again, let's not make this a political football. Let's move on and vote on this bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and thanks to the Member for Calgary-South East. That's the reality, I think, of too many not only in this part of the world, but it's certainly even worse in other parts of the world where there is no access to abortion, where, whether it's through rape or unintended pregnancy or failed contraception, it is going to continue.

We're going to need to have abortion services, and as regrettable as it is for both the woman and the aborted infant, it is a reality of our current life. I think it's important, to focus on this bill, that we recognize that there are some very strong feelings – ideological, religious, moral, and personal convictions – on both sides of this issue and that there's no easy answer. What I have come to is a similar conclusion. If we want to reduce the complications of pregnancy, if we want to reduce the harm done by self- or amateur-induced abortions, we have to make those available, and we have to reduce the stigma associated with seeking these legal, legitimate health services.

I have a major clinic in my constituency called the Kensington clinic, and that's clearly what has brought this very much to the fore for me, the increased activity on the street around this clinic and the failure of injunctions to actually limit the rather painful and, I would say, at times vicious attacks on women who choose this difficult, difficult option, a choice, indeed, between her doctor, her God, and herself. For other people to impose other kinds of admonitions, judgments, shame is not appropriate. It borders on hate speech. It borders on significant harassment and bullying, psychological bullying that adds to the trauma.

One has to believe that in the services we are now providing there is adequate counselling, that there is adequate education, that there is adequate prevention programming coming through our sex education in the schools. To that point, I would applaud the government for its announcement recently on consent education, starting in elementary school. Wow. It's taken a long time to talk about consent and nonconsent in a healthy way with children and young adults. That's much needed, and I hope that that will reduce some of the unwanted pregnancies that we see currently in our society.

Just to summarize a few relevant items, B.C., Ontario, Quebec, and Newfoundland and Labrador have passed similar anti-harassment legislation. More than 75 per cent of abortions in Alberta are provided at either the Kensington clinic in my riding or at Woman's Health Options in Edmonton. The rest are done, a limited number, in hospitals. Perhaps that's appropriate. We're not taking up beds, we're not taking up expensive hospital resources when this can be done fairly well and safely in clinics. People can be appropriately managed as outpatients in that context.

I also mentioned, as I will repeat, that court injunctions do not work. The opposition leader says: if people don't like what's happening on the street, they can take them to court. Well, if he doesn't like what's happening, he can take it to court. Let's see how often he wants to do that and how easy that is.

The number of surgical abortions, fortunately, has not increased over the last eight years. It's still around 14,000, and that speaks to a lot of work that we still have to do to try to educate, to provide access for low-income people particularly, who may not be able to get access or who don't understand enough about the complexities of contraception to seek these appropriately.

Certainly, it's unacceptable to have women harassed, whether verbally or visually with objectionable pictures and physical antics on the streets, or preached at or anything that adds to the burden that they're already dealing with. If there's anything that needs to change, it's greater access to abortion services in those areas that have very limited access. That's primarily the rural areas in this province, that really deserve to have better access in this critical time, when we want to have it done as early as possible in a pregnancy, when complications are the fewest.

I won't belabour the issue. This is a legal health service. The pressure must not be on the individual who is having to make this very painful and difficult decision. I guess the political nature of this has been reflected in some of what's happened in this Legislature, with the opposition walking out in a debate. But that's not helpful to the debate.

What needs to happen is that we reduce the stigma, that we acknowledge the importance of this service from the point of view of health and safety and acknowledge that nobody goes into pregnancy wanting to have an abortion. These are unexpected, unintended, and in some cases really impossible situations that women have been placed in.

It also speaks, I guess, to the need for our communities to be more supportive of adoption and assistance throughout pregnancy, especially for those low-income single moms that can't cope with more. Maybe that says that we need to do more in terms of our community supports for young gals, whether married or unmarried, who don't want to have an abortion but don't feel that the supports are there for them to carry on either as mothers or, in fact, to adopt out in a reasonable way.

To the bill, I don't think there's any question that most Albertans repudiate the harassment and the call for them to simply take it to court if they feel violated or intimidated by street protests. That's unacceptable. It's not the Alberta way. It's not the Canadian way. I certainly will be supporting this bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will now recognize the hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: Thank you. I want to thank the hon. leader of the Liberal Party and Member for Calgary-Mountain View for his wise words. I appreciate everything he said. I thought it was very well crafted.

You know, it was a little over a year ago when I got a call from the executive director of the Kensington clinic, and she said to me that she hoped we would be examining the issue of buffer zones because they had seen a ramping-up of incidents at the clinic, harassment of staff, harassment of clients. Her concern was that every time they called the police, the protesters disbursed, and then as soon as the police left, they came back. I'm not a hundred per cent sure of the timing, but certainly it's interesting to note how much more activity there was around abortion clinics in the last year, year and a half.

I came in to have a conversation about it, and to my absolute pleasure our Health minister was 10 steps ahead of me on this. Really, it felt great. You know, in the area of social issues I wasn't used to that in the past. Certainly, joining an NDP caucus gave me an opportunity to really sit back and admire the diligent work of fine members like our Health minister and the way she cared about this particular issue.

You know, I think the enforcement piece is an important one to emphasize because if you don't have repercussions for behaviour, that behaviour will perpetuate itself endlessly. I think the folks who go out to these places understand there are no repercussions, so they feel emboldened, and the numbers grow bigger. It is hate speech, and it is bullying. The women who go to that clinic to exercise their legal right in this country have every right to do that without someone standing on the sidewalk and shaming them, because those people who are standing out there have no idea what their circumstance is.

You know, it was a little over a year and a half ago that I attended a rather infamous policy conference as a leadership candidate in another party. As I walked up and down the hallway – this is well documented; I've certainly given interviews detailing this – I was chased by antiabortion zealots who called me a baby killer because I supported women's reproductive rights. Without exception these folks were all supporters of a particular leadership candidate. I remember saying to some of these folks in that hallway at the Sheraton in Red Deer: please stop this. But they wouldn't. They were relentless, and when one stopped, another would start. This went on and on. I know there are folks who knew this was going on in the room. The fact was that in this leadership I wasn't even talking about this issue. These folks showed up because they were a galvanized community that were given a lot of feedback and appreciation from a particular leadership campaign that made them feel that they had a candidate who was going to help them get to a point where abortions could potentially become illegal in this province.

I don't think it's any secret that when we came into the House and we were charged with doing what we were elected to do, to have a conversation and a debate about issues of importance to Albertans, folks on the other side fled as fast as they could rather than have that discussion. Let's be very clear. This is not about free speech. This is about a woman exercising her legal, hard-fought right to her reproductive choices without being bullied by a far-right conservative group who feels emboldened in this province because they have leadership that has told them that they are making headway on this.

You know, that PC policy conference was no mistake. The message was loud and clear at that conference. The social conservatives who gathered there gathered there because they had a candidate who was willing to echo their far-right, dangerous, damaging, antifemale sentiments. Going forward, we know that there's going to be another policy conference this weekend, and guess what's on the agenda? I will tell you that our friends on the other side of the aisle, helped along by their federal counterparts, who have made themselves crystal clear on this issue, all feel the same way. They are actively interested in eliminating women's reproductive rights in this province, and I cannot be happier to be part of a caucus and cabinet and to work for a Premier who will fight tooth and nail to make sure that they do not have the opportunity to do that.

We've seen in federal circles the election of MPs in Alberta in the last couple of years in by-elections who had antiabortion groups come forward and claim credit for getting them into their jobs because they went out and actively sold memberships, and they're bragging about it. Antiabortion groups in this country are bragging about leadership on the other side of the aisle and about how happy they are that they have advocates for this.

I can tell you right now that Albertans understand the value of women's hard-fought reproductive rights, and we are not going to stand for this. Every woman who accesses that clinic and, I hope, more clinics in this province, more opportunities for women to access what they have every legal right to access – I hope not a single one of them in the future has to ever walk that gauntlet and face a line of shame from a group of people who not only do not want them to have that right; they will not discuss any options that would create a situation where they didn't have to do that, like comprehensive sexual health education with conversations about consent.

You know, the whole pro-life moniker to me is absolutely astounding because as we talk about social issues in this House, we are talking about pro-life issues. This isn't a matter of not being pro life. This is a matter of women's choice in this province. We've seen south of the border what happens when far-right activists get involved, and we have seen incredibly concerning stories about states who now feel emboldened to create incredibly damaging policy and legislation that absolutely erode a woman's right to an abortion. We have states where you can't actually access one anymore, and you have to travel somewhere else to get it. I know that folks that I have listened to in conversations when I was part of another party were hoping that we would get to that point here in Alberta.

I can say that not only am I wholeheartedly supporting this bill, but I just want to say that for the men and women in this caucus, who are standing up for women's reproductive rights, I could not be more grateful for all the speeches, for the diligence, for the thoughtfulness in crafting their messaging. That, to me, is the importance of an excellent political process. For folks across on the other side of the aisle I really hope that you understand that your constituents make up more than just the far-right folks that you likely spend most of your time with. There are a lot of women in this province, and they vote, and I sincerely hope that in the coming year they think very hard about who has their back and who doesn't.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and I want to thank the member for her statement. It was very passionate, and I want to thank her for her activism and her support for women in this province and for women who are just trying to access their basic health care. She brought up a good point, that there are people who want to make it so people cannot access abortion and their rights within Alberta.

This is already a reality for some Canadians. For the longest time in P.E.I. women could not access an abortion. They had to go to another province. In New Brunswick I believe – I could be wrong – the only clinic has shut down, so women in New Brunswick have to go to another province. It's horrible, Madam Speaker. When women don't have access to abortions, when they don't have access to safe health care, a lot of women will do it themselves, and when that happens, women die.

I would ask the member if she wants to expound on this situation and how in many countries, even in Canada, this often happens.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Ms Jansen: I want to thank the member. You know, it's interesting. That triggered something. I remember having a conversation when we were discussing Bill 10, the original Bill 10, which ultimately made gay-straight alliances mandatory in the province where people asked for them. One of the comments from the people that didn't want to see this happen was: well, if kids want a GSA, they can go to court and ask for one. That was actually part of the conversation. My former colleague on the other side of the aisle is nodding. He remembers that conversation. So why don't we just let someone go to court and ask for it if they want something? We are legislators in this province. It is our job to create the law and the policy that protects people. We don't make a 15-year-old kid go to court to get a GSA any more than we need to make a woman go to court to have access to her legal right in this country.

You know, I've been thinking a lot lately about the turn towards the right in this province and how there seems to be a narrative out there about really espousing a lot more social conservative policy and ideas. It comes from a faction of people who now have a leader that represents those ideals to them. The concerning thing for me is that as we discuss what important policy looks like that protects citizens in this province, we are having conversations about how to create punitive policy for people and not supportive policy for people.

In addition to Bill 9, the buffer zone bill, and the other pieces of legislation and policy that we're working on, I think it's important for us to understand that in addition to this conversation we have to talk about how we support women better so that they don't need to do this. Nobody is pro-abortion. We are pro choice, and that is a choice for a woman to have autonomy over her own body. The fact that we are even having to have this argument in this House is a bit surreal to me. This is not a fight we should be having anymore. We should have moved beyond it. The conversation we should be having now is: how do we support Albertans with comprehensive sexual health education so that they have every tool at their disposal so that they can make healthy choices about their own lives? That's the conversation we should be having.

I hope that when we get to the point where we talk about curriculum changes, which are not the bogeyman, that encourage us to create healthier programs in that area, the folks across the aisle will be a little more present. If they are so against this, they should support the other.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 9, and I rise to speak very much in favour of this legislation. I believe in a woman's right to choose. I am pro choice because I believe in a woman's fundamental right to access basic health care at a time and place and manner of her choosing. I've always believed in that because it's not up to me or any other man or any other person to tell a woman what she should do with her own body. Women have a right to access basic health care and to do so without fear of intimidation or harassment.

I understand and respect that there are those who have an opposing view, and they are entitled in a free and democratic society to have those views just as a woman is entitled to have access to basic health care without harassment. Free speech and free access to health care are not in any way mutually exclusive, and I was pleased to see when this bill was tabled that the government struck an appropriate balance, that the buffer zone was 50 metres, not a kilometre. It's consistent broadly with other legislation in other parts of this country. It is defensible in court. In some areas it goes slightly farther than other provinces. In some areas it does not quite as far as other provinces, but in my estimation it has struck a very proper and appropriate balance, so my kudos to the government for doing that.

You know, to those who would say that bill isn't necessary because all you need to do is go to court to get an injunction, I've done some research and had some conversations on this bill, and I understand that those injunctions, in addition to being costly, inconvenient, and time consuming, are also not consistent from one jurisdiction to another. I understand that in Edmonton the injunction does not cover the public sidewalk where women and their families and supporters would come and park their vehicle on the public road, so protesters can be right there, barring them from even exiting their vehicle, and the injunction in Edmonton doesn't cover that. Interestingly, apparently in Calgary it does, but even still, there are some inconsistencies. That is a problem that needs resolving, and this Assembly absolutely has the power to do that.

You know, there are those, like I said before, who would consider themselves to be, I guess, "pro life" would be the term that they would choose to use to self-describe. That is a view that is allowed to them, of course, in a free and democratic society. But if there are those in the Official Opposition who hold those views, I will not suggest you should – well, I would suggest you should change those views, because they certainly don't match mine and I don't think they're helpful for women who would choose to exercise their rights over their own bodies, but you're entitled to that view. I would, though, expect that if you hold those views, say so on the record. Let's use the Legislative Assembly of Alberta for what its purpose is. If you feel that this bill isn't necessary, if you feel that the laws that exist in this province are appropriate, then say so. Be on the record and have the guts to do that.

Unfortunately, it looks like we have an Official Opposition who, if news reports and public statements are to be believed, will choose not to vote at all on this bill. I think that's an absolute abdication of your responsibility as a legislator. You're letting down your own constituents. You're trying somehow to play some middle ground, and I don't really quite know what the game is that you're playing.

The claim that this is simply a political trap for the Official Opposition to fall into: well, you know, based on what I've said previously and my understanding in doing some research and in talking with women and with stakeholders and just friends of mine is that this bill is absolutely needed. It is only a political trap because the UCP has made it a political trap. They've decided that through their response to this. Frankly, the walkout when the bill was originally presented at second reading was one of the most remarkable and shameful things I've ever seen in this Assembly. So I would encourage the UCP, when the bill comes up for the vote later today, to reconsider, to be on the record with your views. There is no abstaining in life, and this issue is no different.

Access to abortion services is something that we need to look at in terms of access not just in the big cities, in which there is reasonable access. In rural areas it's less so, and I was pleased to see reports that the minister is working actively to expand access to those services closer to where women need them.

I'm also pleased to see the Member for Calgary-Mountain View talk about prevention, talk about consent and the importance of teaching consent in school, the sex ed curriculum. A good, robust sex ed curriculum allows women and men to understand contraception, to understand their choices, to hopefully make good choices with their lives such that abortion would not be necessary. It will be in certain cases, either through mistakes that happen or through some very, very tragic and trying circumstances, and women will have to make that difficult choice. So prevention and sexual education and contraception, while important, are not the total answer.

I guess as I wrap up my comments in terms of the need for this legislation, I just want to read a direct quote from someone I had asked about this. I'm just going to read exactly the words that she said to me.

As a woman the most concerning thing about anti abortion protesters is their sense of entitlement over my time, my body and my agency. It is no one's business what a woman and her doctor decide is the best health care choice for her. I believe whole heartedly in free speech but it cannot include harassment.

Again, remember that these are the words of the woman who sent me this e-mail.

I do not condone characterizing seeking an abortion as a "vulnerable time in a woman's life." It can also be a relief and or liberating or sorrowful. It's not up to anyone to characterize abortion for a woman. Each woman's experience of abortion is unique and the "vulnerable" trope feeds into a characterization of women being weak and needing help.

The "debate" about abortion belies an inherent desire to control women and their behaviour. The misogyny behind [it] runs very deep.

Mr. Speaker, I think that's probably the best place to end. There's no question that the bill is needed to protect a woman's fundamental right to exercise choice over her own body.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, any other members wishing to speak to Bill 9? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased with a lot of the things that have been said so far on this topic about Bill 9. I'm of the age that I remember very clearly a time when abortions were not legally allowed. I remember the dilemma that young people I knew went through in making the decision whether to terminate a pregnancy or not, what the choices were, what the dangers were. These were well-educated people who knew what their decision could mean in the long term. It was very important, and it was very thought provoking and worrying.

Now that it is seen as winning that particular battle, not meaning that everybody would rush out and change the way they did things but that it would take one – having the option to have a legal abortion meant that people could make their decision with less worry about their future such as: would they have one? It is a matter of choice, as has been said many times. It gives women – it confirms their ability and their right to have a decision over their own actions, over their own body. This is something that the other half of the population has never really seemed to think should be an issue, but for women it's been something that they've had to fight long and hard for.

Then to have the situation now, where the right is there to access a legal abortion but the means of acquiring it are impeded by a lot of negative voices and people who want to stand in the way? They're not invited. There is no consent there. These are people who are unwanted obstructors of a legal procedure. This is simply unacceptable any way you look at it. This is a violation of human rights.

I'm trying to think of situations in which people might think this would be acceptable, which it would be clearly, legally not. I'm thinking about when women first started acquiring postsecondary educations and some people objected to that, and it was clearly wrong, clearly a biased way of looking at things, gender biased, and that was overcome. To think right now, in 2018, of people standing in the road of a woman going to university is just unimaginable. But in some countries, of course, it could happen, and we think of those places as being places that need to have a lot of work done on their human rights legislation and their way of thinking about things.

To think that right now in this country where we live people are, as I said, feeling entitled to harass and castigate, insult, shame, embarrass people that are already going through one of the most difficult decisions, one of the most difficult stages of their lives, something that no one wants to be in a position to feel like they have to do – this is a choice that was made. They're doing it. It's difficult. And then they have this added heap of humiliation on top of that. It's just unimaginable. When I think about anyone I know – my daughter, a granddaughter, a friend – having to go through that, I think, you know, how horrific.

This should not be allowed anywhere, nor would anyone in this Chamber think that it was acceptable for people, like I said, members of our family, our friends, to treat them in that manner if they made a decision that someone else didn't like. Really? If you don't like someone else's choice or behaviour, legally allowed behaviour, or decision, that you're going to have the right to do that I find so absolutely, horrendously objectionable.

Yeah, that's really about it. I think this bill goes a huge way toward stopping that practice. Hopefully, some people who, like I said, have thought that they had the right to get in the way of other people's decisions maybe will sit back and do a little thinking about their own behaviour now. It would be nice.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 9? The Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't think I really have too much to add to this conversation that hasn't already been said by many folks in this Assembly. It's heartening to hear support and understanding from men and women, whether or not this is something they've experienced.

I just, first, want to take the opportunity to say thank you to all of the women in this caucus and outside of this caucus who fought this fight when it needed to be fought. I'm lucky that I have grown up in a time in Alberta and in Canada where I always knew that abortion was something that I could access if I needed to. That wasn't always the case, as has been illustrated by some of the other women here. I know that it was a hard fight and that it was fought at a time when women did not have the equality and did not have the equal respect in society that we are fortunate to have today. We're still not as far as we need to be, but we're getting there. So I just want to take the opportunity to thank all of those women and doctors and health professionals and the men who supported them for fighting the fight to make sure that abortion was something that we could have legal access to here in Canada.

I'm also fortunate – and this is something that has been brought up here before, that no one wants to have an abortion. What are some of the things that we can do in order to prevent the need for that to happen? One of the things, that has been mentioned previously, is good-quality, comprehensive sexual health education in school. I was lucky when I was a teacher that I had the opportunity to bring in the Calgary Sexual Health Centre to do the sexual health education in grade 8 at my school. They did an amazing job, and it was something that a lot of the girls – I taught at an all-girls school – didn't have access to at home. It wasn't something that their parents talked about, so it was an opportunity for them to really be aware of what their options are and to learn and to ask questions in a safe environment.

I was lucky that I was the recipient of incredible sexual health education, which I know was not universally the case in the '90s, when I was going to school. I'd like to give a shout-out to Ms Gamble and Ms Perry, who were my grade 8 physical education teachers and who did an incredible job of really just good, comprehensive sexual health education. They made it possible for me and armed me with the knowledge and the tools necessary so that this wasn't something that I've ever had to go through. I thank them for that, for giving me that opportunity and that knowledge, that I didn't have to worry about this being something that had to be an option for me.

I really appreciated the quote that the Member for Calgary-Elbow read from the woman who wanted to express that we need to stop framing women who choose abortion as victims. I'm not one to say why women are choosing abortion. The reasons that women might choose this option are as varied as women themselves. For some women, this might be an incredibly hard decision; for others, it might be a relief. But I'm not one to be able to characterize their choice. All I know is that this is a choice that's available to them, and they should be able to exercise it free from harassment, as has been mentioned.

The argument for this bill is simple. It's that any woman who chooses to access this legal health procedure should be able to do so in a manner that is free from harassment. They don't deserve to be filmed. They don't deserve to have things thrown at them. They don't deserve to be shamed. They don't deserve to be yelled at. These are all things that happen regularly, so this is a bill that will help women access a legal procedure free from harassment, plain and simple. There's not really too much more to it than that.

If you could imagine for a second a comparison that has been drawn in a somewhat ironic sense by women in the United States and sometimes here. If this was a protest that was happening regularly outside a vasectomy clinic, you would be hearing about this. This would not be allowed. It wouldn't be something that was considered. But that's a health procedure that men are entitled to choose and is legal, and they're entitled to do that, and we don't see people outside protesting that. What this gets to the heart of is the fact that people who oppose this are fundamentally opposing women and women's rights. It's just as simple as that. It's the kind of thing that really shows. It's like, you know, your misogyny is showing if this is something that you oppose, because you wouldn't oppose it if it was a man, plain and simple.

I also, you know, in my remarks, like to try to address questions that the opposition has – and I think that other folks in this House have done it fairly well – because it appears that the main problem that the UCP has with this bill is that they're claiming that we're using it as a political ploy. I can say, like many of the rest of us, that I was fortunate to go on a tour of the Kensington clinic that the Member for Calgary-Bow organized – I think it was well over a year ago, possibly two years ago at this point – and this was a concern that they had. It was a valid concern. The health professionals who worked there and the women who were accessing the service were seeing increased harassment. This was something that they came to the government and asked for.

The other side likes to talk about consultation. Well, here we go. We consulted with people. They asked us for something that was reasonable, and we're doing something about it. So it is not a political ploy. It is something that was asked for by the men and women who are providing the service, so we're doing something about it. You know, I think it's fair to say that it is absolutely not a political ploy. It's something that is reasonable. We're not impeding anybody's free speech.

Also, I would say to the members that, like, I believe in this democratic institution, and I believe in this House. I believe that if your constituents really oppose this bill, then you have an obligation to stand up and tell us about it. I've got some letters from people who have opposed this bill, and I've responded to them. It's not a large number of people, but I do have people. If you really feel like you're adequately representing your constituents by saying that the majority of them oppose this, then, you know, I don't begrudge your right to get up and do it. I like to think that freedom of speech is important, and that extends to our job as MLAs to stand up and represent our constituents here in this House.

I believe I will conclude my remarks there. I'm supportive of this piece of legislation, and I would encourage everyone else to do so as well.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, are there any other speakers to the bill? The Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to this bill because it has many things that have resonated with me as this bill moves through, and the discussions that we had both in caucus and in cabinet were very revealing as to the nature and the spirit with which we approach this piece of legislation.

When I was 17 years old, I had many good friends but one very close friend who told me one day – actually, we were having a conversation, and it just so happened that the conversation took it to the place where I was feeling comfortable enough to tell her that I was gay. Her reaction was, first, shock and then laughter, and she said, basically, “Yeah, I kind of knew.” And I was like: “Really? That's great.” And we laughed a little bit, and then she started crying. I asked her what was wrong, and she said to me, “I'm pregnant.”

Now, at 17 – she was the same age as me – I don't know that it was something that she had really thought about or something that she had considered, but definitely when she talked to me, she just didn't know what to do, and she didn't know where to go and find information. You have to remember now – I'm dating myself – that these were the days before the Internet was available and before information was readily at the hand tips of somebody's cellphone. You know, you had to go through a phone book, if anybody remembers what those look like anymore.

The conversation that she and I had was very impactful to me, and I just listened to what she was telling me. At the end of the conversation I simply said to her: “Listen, I love you. If you need me to help you in any way that I can with this child that you may have, I'm there. We'll get an apartment somewhere, move in.” It was always something that I wanted to have, a family. I'm blessed to have them. At that time I knew that I wanted to have a family, and I said, “I'm ready for that.”

But I also said to her, “If you need me to accompany you to an abortion clinic, I'll do that, too.” She said: “Tell me what to do. Give me your perspective. What would you do if you were in my place?” I tried for a second to put myself in her place, and I just simply couldn't because it was really not anything that I had any say whatsoever on. It was her decision, and one decision that over a period of a few weeks she agonized over, over and over again. We would talk, and she said, “You know, I think I'm going to keep this baby.” Then an hour later she was changing her mind, and she was very, very heartbroken about this. The agony that she went through is not something I wish on anybody. The agony that she felt was in everything. Her personality changed. Of course, it's a very impactful to thing to think about.

Now my daughter is 21 years old. I mean, I've raised this child, and I've seen her, and I'm so very proud of the young woman she's become. As you know, we have three young babies in our caucus. Being a parent is a very, very difficult thing, right? But not everybody is ready to be a parent at any given time, and it really does take a lot of soul-searching.

That process that a woman goes through, imagining what she must evaluate, what she must think about, what she must consider when she's making that decision, should not be influenced by outside forces that are constantly bombarding her with these awful messages. As recently as a little over a year ago there were pamphlets delivered to my home of very graphic pictures with respect to abortions, and I was very deeply disturbed. I remember having this conversation with my daughter. I said, you know: “What does this mean to you? How are you affected by this?” She was the one who brought the mail in. She said, “I don't know why this is even allowed.” I said: “Well, it's freedom of speech. That's what it is.” She said: “I understand that, but it's not something I would want to see. Imagine if I was going through that process myself. Like, how would this help me to make a decision? It wouldn't.”

In fact, getting back to the original story, my friend – well, actually, you know, it doesn't really matter what her choice was. The point is that she made a choice. She had that right. She had absolutely that right, and the only thing that I should be allowed to do is to provide her unconditional support in any choice that she makes. The only thing that anyone needs when they're going through something like that is to have information that is scientific, that would allow information to get to that point where she has all the facts. Then you step back, and you allow that process to take place.

I don't for a second believe that a single women who has had that procedure done has done it just because she woke up that day and decided she was going to have an abortion. The thought of that doesn't even cross my mind. It has to be something that is a complete turmoil spiritually, physically, all kinds of things.

From my perspective, when we're talking about this, every time I've marched in a pride parade, there have been people holding signs saying: God hates fags. I've seen it. Every single parade, somebody is usually standing there and doing that. Frankly, I could do without that. Seriously, I really could. But there is that freedom of speech, and I respect that, and I understand that they have the right to their position and to their opinions however wrong it may be in my opinion. However, they do have that right.

The other thing, though, is that in this situation I am not making a life-altering decision. I am choosing to express myself in a pride parade. A woman walking into an abortion clinic is making a life-altering decision, and that decision needs to be made in safety and in the absolute most dignified manner possible. I cannot, in my mind, ever be supportive of anybody who does not understand that a woman's most basic human right is the right that she has over her own body. It is simply not acceptable to dictate what she may or may not do with her body.

Some people out there have a lot of interest in what happens with people's, I guess, ultimate autonomy over their body. I mean, it's both curious and peculiar at the same time. You know, I really don't think I'm that interesting, to be honest with you, but apparently some people really care about who I sleep with. Frankly – you know what? – that is nobody's business. It is something that when we come down to it, again, every time we have these kinds of discussions, all of a sudden it becomes a political issue. It becomes politicized, and this is the most unbelievable thing for me because a person's human rights should never be something that becomes political. Unfortunately, we have folks in this province, some of them sitting across, who would deny people like me access to a GSA. When I was younger, I wish I had had them. Quite honestly, my life would have turned out very differently.

Mr. Eggen: I got it going as soon as I could.

Miranda: Thank you, brother. I appreciate that.

The thing is that a woman has no fewer rights than I do to exercise the choices that I make. A woman should always have access to information, medical support, the ability to exercise that autonomy over her body at every step of her life.

It doesn't stop here. We need to continue working because there are many, many issues that we need to resolve, but on this particular issue I have absolutely no problem whatsoever to say that I am incredibly proud of the work that my colleague the Minister of Health has been doing. She has sat down, and she's done what every human being ought to do. She sat down, and she listened to women, and she heard what they had to say. She sat down and heard what their concerns were. She sat down and heard why this was important. Then she brought it to our cabinet and to our caucus, and we had a discussion. I was so proud of the conversations that were taking place, because not one person said: this is wrong. Everybody, in fact, said: we need to move this, and we need to ensure that we're creating a safe space for women. That is why we're here today, because of all the conversations that we've had and all the information that we've gathered and all the folks that we've talked to.

Of course, I've also received, as did the Member for Calgary-East, e-mails, and I've explained that this is the reason why we're doing this. Some of these e-mails were very misinformed because they were, again, being generated out of sheer misunderstanding or perhaps misrepresentation of the facts, intentionally done, to the point where, you know, they were asking me, "Why are you banning people from protesting?" I said: "No. This is going to be a 50-metre buffer zone. People can still protest. They still have their right, but their right to protest should not impede a woman's right over her body."

This is not the oppression Olympics here. What we're talking about is every Albertan having access to medical services. Every Albertan has that right universally, so if these services are legal in this country and there is a way for a woman to receive them without putting her body at risk – you know what? There are places, like the country I'm originally from, Nicaragua, where abortion to this day is still illegal. I can tell you, from conversations with my mother, that there are still young women who die because these abortions are performed not in the most hygienic way. It's not done in a clinical setting, and unfortunately many end up suffering from sepsis and subsequently dying from the infection. Is that really what we want for the women in our province? I don't think so. If that's where the folks across the way are going, I'm sorry, but that's just absolutely wrong, reprehensible, and I cannot even – there are a million other words that I could use, but it's just something that I would never stand for.

I am very blessed to have been raised by strong women who, without even realizing, were raising a feminist in my family, and I'm very proud of the strong women in my family. I have no reason whatsoever to doubt that they have every capacity and ability to make those choices for themselves. That commitment that I made to my friend many, many years ago is the same commitment that I made to my daughter. I have had this conversation with her because I think that as a parent you need to have these kinds of conversations. I've always said that this is something that could happen. "If you're ever yourself in that situation, know that you can come and talk to me because what you'll hear from me will be, in fact, three things: I love you, I will help you if you decide to have a child, and I will be the one to drive you to an abortion clinic and walk through whatever it is I need to walk through with you and hold your hand if that's what you need." Those are the things that I can do as a parent.

Today we're talking about legislation that will actually do that for every single woman in this province, allowing her to walk with dignity, allowing her to access medical services which are legal in this country without anybody obstructing their access, without anybody challenging their decision, and without anybody making them feel worse than they already do, because they have made a very tough decision at that point. I am very proud to see our government stand up for women in our province. I personally have, like I told you, dealt with this issue at a very early age. I've learned so much since then, and I'm sure that there's a lot more that I could learn. I will be one of the many, many Albertans who will stand with women in this province and say to them: your body, your choice.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to be in the House today speaking to Bill 9, unfortunately as the only conservative who will actually be speaking to this bill at all. It's disheartening that there is not a single conservative voice in the House that'll be speaking to this bill other than myself. That's unfortunate. I think we have a duty as MLAs and elected officials to speak to legislation regardless of whether we like the bill or not.

On this side of the House we vote against a lot of government bills, but at least most of the time we show up to debate it. [some applause] Well, don't give yourself too much applause. You skipped the debate on the motion I had on Monday. But we'll have to give you a pass on that.

This is an important piece of legislation. You know, some have argued it's just political, meant to raise the issue of abortion, which is a divisive issue that a lot of folks don't want to talk about. But, on the other side, there is a genuine good intention to the bill as well.

You know, being a man, I am never going to be faced with the decision of whether or not to have an abortion. That's, I suppose, a blessing because it's got to be one of the toughest decisions a woman could ever be faced with in her life, and I can only imagine that for most people that's not going to be an easy issue. What we think about it morally can be very different than what we think about it legally and politically. You might believe that it should be entirely open and accessible legally, but you also might have moral questions about it personally, and that is a moral question for someone to address between themselves, their doctor, and God. When a woman makes that decision, I think we need to support her, love her, be there for her, and help her make the best of the decision whether we agree with that decision or not.

Now, my wife used to live in Kensington in Calgary, very close to where the main Calgary abortion clinic is, and she can't recall ever seeing protesters there. There certainly have been protesters, but it's not a very common occurrence.

Dr. Swann: It's actually very common.

Mr. Fildebrandt: My colleague from Calgary-Mountain View says that it's very common. I've never seen it myself, but I take him at his word. There have been protesters there, but I don't believe it's a daily occurrence.

But I do believe that those protesters are not doing themselves or the cause they stand for any favours. The vast majority of pro-life Albertans that I know detest the idea of standing outside of an abortion clinic and protesting not abortion but protesting the women themselves. That is very different. That's personalizing it, and it's not compassionate, and frankly it's not very Christian. Those folks who choose to stand outside of a clinic and protest are not just protesting something they disagree with; they're protesting the women themselves. They're not saving a fetus, as they might hope, and they're not advancing their cause. I think it's an absolutely detestable way to make your point.

There is merit in legislation that will protect women from undue harassment or intimidation or even stalking, but I believe that legislation needs to strike an appropriate balance. All legislation is a balance. No legislation is purely black and white, as much as we frame most things as black and white, and I'm guilty of that on many things. I see economics a bit more black and white than these kinds of issues. These kinds of issues require a very delicate balance, especially between the need to balance protecting women and their access to health care on one side and protecting freedom of expression and assembly on the other.

I believe it was John Stuart Mill – I'm sure the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster will correct me if I'm wrong – who said: I may disagree with you, but I will fight to the death for your right to say it. I know I'm quoting and getting the person wrong as to who said that.

You know, it is so important. If you support freedom of speech, you support freedom of speech that you disagree with. It's always easy to support freedom of expression and assembly for speech that you agree with. The real test is if you'll support it when you disagree with it. I disagree with the people who protest outside of abortion clinics, but I will defend their right to speak. At the same time, they don't have a right to harass anybody. They don't have a right to film anybody. They don't have a right to scream at people or to block entrances. Those are not reasonable things.

Much of this is already covered under the Criminal Code and court injunctions. The Criminal Code already prohibits harassment and intimidation, threats, and assaults. Now, some have argued that the police can't always be there. That's a fair point, but passing a law saying that they can't stand there in the first place isn't going to particularly change the frequency of the police being there. There is no other law that I can find that forbids persuading or informing other people regarding a moral or political issue. The bill prohibits expression not based on form or place but based on content.

Now, you have to forgive me. Those of you who have had to hear me drone on in private know that I've made a lot of Roman references lately. I'm listening to a very long, extensive podcast on the history of Rome. In it they describe the founding of the 13 laws. This is when the Romans finally codified their laws during the early republic or the midpoint of the republic. These were 13 permanent laws that would be cast in bronze and mounted in public places. They were cast in bronze because these could not be changed. These were, effectively, a sort of constitution in a way. One of the most important laws was that no law could be passed that targets an individual. Laws had to be general and broad. Now, they didn't always live up to that, certainly, but it was a principle that they had.

This is a law being proposed that is overly specific. It targets one group that I think broadly most of us don't agree with. I'm sure there is probably a wider range of views in the House and in the public in general on the topic of abortion, but I think almost all of us agree that protesting outside of an abortion clinic is an outright cruel and nasty thing to do. But a law should not target a specific group because we disagree with their political views. If we believe that a bubble-zone legislation is necessary to protect people from harassment and intimidation or being blocked from entering a place, then we should have a law that applies more broadly, that applies to protecting the rights of anyone to enter and exit a place, that they can't be blocked by abortion protesters or, say, union picketers, that if they're trying to enter a restaurant, they can't be screamed at by activists.

Now, these things vary in how important they are. I think that an abortion clinic is a particularly more sensitive issue, but laws need to apply in general and not target one specific group whose social or political views we might disagree with.

I've tried to come up with wording for an amendment that would adequately amend this bill to keep in place the protections that the Minister of Health is proposing for women trying to access an abortion clinic but that would apply more broadly to pretty much everything. We have some basic laws around protesting: that you can be there but can't harass people, that you can't block people, that you can't film them, et cetera. But Parliamentary Counsel informed me that that amendment would be too extensive and beyond the scope of this bill, so I would not be able to adequately make it.

Instead, I'm going to propose a reasoned amendment. I have five copies here for distribution. I'll hand these to a page here.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, if you can just wait until they start distributing.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yeah.

The Acting Speaker: This will be amendment RA1.

Please proceed, Member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have tried to propose an amendment that would work within this bill that the Minister of Health has proposed so that I would be able to support it. It actually wouldn't have changed too much of the actual content of the bill as it applies to the intent she is trying to achieve, but I wanted to vastly broaden its scope so that this would not target any one social or political group whose beliefs or views we may have issues with.

As I said, Parliamentary Counsel said that that amendment would be outside the legal scope of the bill, so I am not allowed to do that. So, unfortunately, I have to propose a reasoned amendment calling on the government to shelve the bill temporarily and come back to the House with a new bill that better balances protecting women's access to health care with freedom of expression and assembly.

Mr. Fildebrandt to move that the motion for second reading of Bill 9, Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act, be amended by deleting all the words after "That" and substituting the following:

Bill 9, Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the bill does not appropriately balance the need to protect individuals from harassment with the right to freedom of expression and freedom of assembly, and further input from the public is therefore necessary.

I understand that the members opposite and the Minister of Health are eager to get this bill passed. Frankly, I would be as well, but the changes to the bill – we’ve already worked out the wording. It’s quite manageable and easy to do. We could bring back the bill during this very session, before we break for Stampede in the summer. We can get it done before we break for session, and we can get it done in a timely manner. It’s actually a relatively simple change to the bill. It’s just broadening the scope. It leaves in place all of the protections that the Minister of Health is proposing that we have in place, most of which I don’t think are entirely unreasonable.

We can quibble with how big the bubble zones should be. I think it might be a bit broad to have them half a kilometre away. We can quibble with those details, but if we are hoping to achieve this, we could shelve this bill at this immediate point and come back Monday with a new bill, very simple changes to it, that broadens its scope and protects all Albertans from harassment, intimidation, or being filmed unnecessarily when there’s a protest going on.

It’s been my honour to speak to Bill 9. Again, I’m saddened that there is only one conservative voice in the entire Legislature speaking to this bill. I know that there are members of the Official Opposition . . .

Dr. Swann: What about your colleagues here?

Mr. Fildebrandt: There is a Progressive Conservative. That’s fair enough.

You know, I do know that there are members of the Official Opposition who will take issue with this bill in their hearts. I know that there are pro-life members of the caucus, there are pro-choice members of the caucus, and like the public more broadly, there are a lot of shades of grey in the moderate middle on the issue.

Regardless of where you stand on this issue, this is not an issue about abortion to me. This is not a pro-life or pro-choice issue. This is about protecting the dignity of people to go about their lives, in this case a woman accessing an abortion, if you agree with it or not, and it’s about freedom of expression and assembly. The issue of abortion in this is a bit of a red herring. We need to focus more broadly and achieve a better balance in this legislation, and I wish that all members of this Chamber will stand up and debate the bill.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a) for the reasoned amendment?

Seeing and hearing none, any members wishing to speak on the amendment? The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First, I just need to clarify that half a kilometre is 500 metres, so this is actually a tenth of half a kilometre. It’s very reasonable. I actually had the opportunity at the Kensington clinic, where the staff complained to me about this about a year ago, actually, to walk the 50 metres, and it’s less than a city block. I think this is very reasonable. I also think it’s really important that women be able to enter their doctors’ appointments without harassment or intimidation. I’m sure that I’ll have an opportunity to talk about that more once we deal with this amendment.

With regard to this amendment I have to say that I feel that this totally disrespects the intent of this bill. This bill was brought forward by women who’ve been impacted by this as either patients or staff members working in these clinics. They expect us to act on this quickly. They expected the former government to act on it 30 years ago, when they brought this forward. The government failed to do so then. They expect our government to do so now. I’m very proud to be standing with the women of this province to bring forward legislation that will make their lives a little bit easier during such a time of important decision-making and accessing the health care services they’re legally entitled to.

That being said, I think it’s important that we deal with this amendment swiftly. I recommend to my caucus that we vote no on this, and to any others who are here as well, because I think it’s totally counter to the intent of this bill, and I don’t think it would help the legislation in any way. So I will be voting against this amendment.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just very briefly, I will also be voting against this amendment. I feel that it is a delay tactic and would solve a problem, frankly, that doesn’t exist in the bill. I think this bill strikes exactly the right balance of freedom of expression. The government has actually been quite reasonable in the bubble-zone parameters that they have chosen here. As you’ve heard from my earlier comments, I think it’s, absolutely, badly needed legislation to protect a woman’s right to exercise choice over her own body and access to legally permissible health services.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, any members wishing to speak on the amendment?

Seeing and hearing none, I’ll call the question.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, May 3, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly the consul general of Ukraine to Canada, Mr. Andrii Veselovskyi. Alberta's ties to Ukraine go back 126 years, to when the first Ukrainian settlers chose our province as their new home. Since then Ukrainian Albertans have made Alberta a better place, and we continue to build and expand our relations with Ukraine across culture and trade, especially under the Canada-Ukraine free trade agreement. We are also very happy to hear that Ukraine intends to open a consulate in Edmonton later this year. We look forward to working with the consul general and his new colleagues when it does. I would like to now ask our guest to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you the grade 6 students from High Prairie elementary along with staff and parents here for the visit. It's wonderful to have you visit from High Prairie and Big Lakes county, in the riding of Lesser Slave Lake. It's especially impressive as I understand that you had to get up at 5:30 in the morning to get here. The students are accompanied by teachers Mitch Hammond, Joanne Murphy, Andrea Pollock, and Melissa Isaac, and, of course, the parent chaperones: Tracy Pratt, Shannon Calahasen, Karen Janzen, Samantha McNutt, Belinda Dieppenaar, Robyn Pattyson, and Dan Cooper. I'd ask everyone to please rise and receive the warm reception of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the organizing team and guest speaker for the pride event in Northmount park. I'll be speaking more about this event later in my member's statement. My guests are seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask that they rise as I call their names: first, our guest speaker, Chevi Rabbit; my constituency manager, Maria Vicente; from Northmount Community League, Meagan Plamondon, president; from Dickinsfield Amity House Executive Director Tracy Patience and Jenn Lee, preschool teacher; and from the Alberta Sex Positive and Community Education Centre, Angel Sumka. I would ask that we please extend my guests the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

I believe there are a couple of school groups. Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my absolute pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through on behalf of the Member for Stony Plain 26 amazing students from the school of SML Christian Academy. They are joined today by their teacher, Gary Skoye, and their chaperones, Annette Visser and Shelley Kulak. I would now ask the guests to please rise and received the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 30 students from Muriel Martin school, just a short distance from my own home. The students are accompanied by their teacher, Rhonda Surmon, today along with their chaperones, Jacqueline Kelly and Heather McDonald. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an absolute pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my good friend Labiq Nazari. She's a small-business owner in Edmonton-Ellerslie and also happens to be a constituent. I met her a few months ago. She's a tireless advocate for diversity and inclusion, and she's a great volunteer, who's now part of my electoral district association. I'm happy to welcome her. Hopefully, one day we'll see her on this side of the House with all of us in this caucus. Please provide her the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through guests from the Canadian Celiac Association. May is Celiac Awareness Month, an opportunity to educate Albertans about the disease. The Celiac Association is asking Canadians to go beyond the guide and to be alert to the atypical features of the disease and the impact that it has on the whole body. Celiac disease is an autoimmune disorder where people experience negative health impacts from eating gluten and must follow a gluten-free diet. Thank you to the members of the association for their tireless efforts to raise awareness. I invite Brian Readman, president of the Edmonton chapter; Jim Calverley, president of the Calgary chapter; along with other members and volunteers to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other guests today? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House Mr. Jason Smith. He's a member of the SCI Red Deer chapter and is here with a couple of his friends to listen to question period today. If we could give them the warm welcome of this House, that would be great.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

2016 Fort McMurray and Area Wildfire

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to salute the residents of the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo and the more than 100,000 Albertans who were affected two years ago by the Horse River wildfire. The massive evacuation from one of the most damaging wildfires in Canadian history was two years ago today. Over that two years much has been done to help Fort McMurray and area recover. Rebuilding of the homes and buildings lost during the fire continues, lessons learned from the fire have informed the area's wildfire mitigation strategy, and there's been a renewed focus on FireSmart initiatives and measures to reduce the threat of wildfire in every community in the region.

Much has also been done to help the residents of the area recover. The province, in partnership with other levels of government, has supported mental health crisis teams, community wellness programs, indigenous and vulnerable population outreach teams, supports for school wellness, and increased AHS staff, including mental health therapists. We know, Mr. Speaker, that recovery from such a natural disaster is a slow and uneven process. Everybody affected was affected differently, and some may take longer to mend than others. We also know that fires are a constant threat in Alberta, and the smell of smoke in the area may be enough to trigger memories and reactions.

For those people who live in the area, please know that the Wood Buffalo region has some of the most experienced and dedicated professional firefighters in Canada, and they will be ready to respond. Please know that the province and its emergency services are there to help now and in the future. Please know that our health and mental health services are there for anyone who asks. Please know that we understand that recovery is not an easy road. The people of Alberta and your provincial government are here for you.

Health Services Procurement Process

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, in 2014 Alberta Health Services' hand-picked appeals committee determined that a $3 billion lab RFP process was flawed. They found there was reasonable apprehension of bias in the award to an Australian company with no presence in Alberta or Canada. AHS had not taken reasonable steps to mitigate such bias. Improper considerations or influence could not be ruled out. There was a lack of transparency, and AHS had breached its duty of fairness. Eventually, this government decided to cancel the RFP for policy reasons.

Fast-forward to today. It seems AHS is a slow learner. The air ambulance RFP issued in 2013 and subsequently withdrawn was reissued in 2016. Despite having three years to get it right, AHS is currently embroiled in controversy because it ran a procurement process that was unfair, nontransparent, and breached numerous best practices. Over the past few weeks we've tabled documents relating to the $800 million air ambulance RFP and asked numerous questions of the government. The nonresponse indicates the government either didn't care or doesn't understand. It is ultimately accountable for what AHS does.

What did it do? Specifically, it manipulated the procurement process by ignoring its own policies regarding a fair, open, and transparent process; accepted a bid based on conditional pricing; amended the RFP criteria throughout the process, after the RFP was issued, to favour certain proponents; failed to conduct appropriate due diligence; refused to release the fairness report of its adviser, despite arguing the fairness proviso was what the adviser said was accepted; and accepted a bid notwithstanding the selected proponent having no hangar in the base location or any prospect of getting one.

Mr. Speaker, there are other breaches. There is the obvious issue of wasting time and money continuing to defend the indefensible, money that should be dedicated to front-line services. There is also the real consequence of a loss of trust in AHS. The public questions whether patient care and services are what truly matters. Vendors simply stop participating in processes they feel are rigged.

It is now time for the Minister of Health to act. However, as we've seen, the minister seems to be preoccupied with partisan attacks and pushing divisive issues instead of actually doing her job and holding AHS accountable for unfair procurement practices.

Ms Hoffman: I can chew gum and walk at the same time.

1:40 Calgary Area Flood Damage Mitigation

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today marks the start of Emergency Preparedness Week. Unfortunately, our province is particularly susceptible to floods, fires, tornadoes, and other natural disasters. Albertans should be justifiably proud of AEMA. We should also all be prepared, but being prepared isn't limited to the actions of individual Albertans. The government also has an obligation to prevent damage from disasters wherever possible.

As we approach the five-year anniversary of the southern Alberta floods, it's time for a reality check. We have choices when evaluating options for addressing preventable damage from things like floods. We can choose to follow the advice of unbiased world experts to build the most effective and least expensive infrastructure to protect from flooding, or we can give in to those who either oppose for the sake of opposition or have a direct interest in pushing an inferior option.

Since 2013 a lot of work has been done, but it only accounts for about 30 per cent of what's needed to prevent the loss of billions of taxpayer dollars, damage to the downtown core and retail businesses, and, most importantly, to reduce the risk to human life. Let us never forget the five lives who were lost in the 2013 floods. It was only through the action of first responders and simple good luck that it was not a lot worse.

Also in the past five years both the PCs and NDs looked at more than a dozen independent studies and decided that the Springbank reservoir is the cheapest, the most effective way to prevent future flood damage on the Elbow and that a water retention reservoir on the Bow is the best way to mitigate floods and address long-term water needs and drought mitigation. No project is without impacts, but the public interest of the million or more Albertans who rely on downtown Calgary for their livelihoods means that 20 Springbank landowners will unfortunately need to sell their land for fair market value. I wish there was an equally effective option that didn't require buyouts, but there simply isn't.

The debate over flood mitigation feels, at times, like the battle to build a pipeline. There's clear public interest, a positive return on investment to Albertans, and the objective facts for Springbank to be the best option, but much like the pipeline debate, opponents will use every tool at their disposal to stop it. If we can't build basic infrastructure that will save millions of taxpayer dollars and protect human life, it's fair to ask if we'll ever be able to build anything anywhere ever again.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Gas Station and Convenience Store Worker Safety

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In December 2015 Edmontonians were shocked to hear of the deaths of two convenience store workers in Mill Woods. Arrests for this crime occurred on Terwillegar Drive, in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. Many of my constituents work in convenience stores or gas stations or they have family members who are potentially exposed to violent criminal activity. This makes protecting these workers a major priority for me and for our government.

Six months ago it was a pleasure to join with all MLAs to pass Bill 19, An Act to Protect Gas and Convenience Store Workers. Bill 19 updated the occupational health and safety code to make enhanced safety regulations mandatory, including prepayment of fuel and violence prevention plans. By the time of passage Husky Energy and 7-Eleven Canada had already implemented the prepay and violence prevention procedures, and subsequently many other retailers have followed suit. All Albertan convenience store workers and gas station operators will be protected by June 1, 2018. I've spoken with many such workers in my constituency, and they appreciate the enhanced safety. My constituents who have had to make small adjustments when paying for gasoline in prepaying or using a credit/debit card at the pump are also very supportive.

Another important benefit of this legislation is reducing the workload of our police. The reduction in criminal fuel-theft incidents will allow them to focus on other policing activities. Chief Knecht of the EPS reported that 60 such events happened monthly in Edmonton in 2017.

This problem is not just an urban issue. It's a real issue for rural Alberta, too. The fatality in Thorsby in October 2017 was a dire reminder of this. Indeed, over the past three years five convenience workers have died and three others have been seriously hurt in Alberta.

It's notable that this common-sense legislation was supported by all MLAs in this House. May we continue to work together to make life better for all Albertans, including our most vulnerable workers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Pride Event in Edmonton-Decore

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like all of Alberta, my riding of Edmonton-Decore and north Edmonton as a whole is home to numerous members of the LGBTQ2S-plus community. I've had the privilege of visiting the GSA at Queen Elizabeth high school and was inspired by the courage and compassion of the students and teachers who participated. I'm also proud to be part of a government that has done so much to recognize the fundamental human rights of all Albertans.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, there is still prejudice and abuse directed at the LGBTQ2S-plus community, and my office continues to hear complaints about that, which is why I'm especially happy that this year Edmonton-Decore and north Edmonton will have a pride event of their own. My office together with Dickinsfield Amity House, Northmount Community League, and the Alberta Sex Positive Education and Community Centre, are planning a fun-filled evening of activities that will include: free consent seminars taught by ASPECC; free clothing, shoes, and accessories for all genders inside Northmount hall; LGBTQ2S-plus resource fair; and activities for children that will include face painting and a story time.

Our guest speaker for the evening is none other than Chevi Rabbit, who was the first transgender person to be named to Avenue magazine's top 40 under 40 list and has organized the annual Hate to Hope rally in Edmonton to combat all forms of hate.

I'm very proud of the work that our government has done to protect the rights of the LGBTQ2S-plus community, and I'm extremely proud to be a part of Edmonton-Decore's first pride event. I would now like to extend an invitation to all members of the Assembly to attend and participate in a truly inclusive and caring evening. In particular, though, I would like to invite the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, and the entire opposition caucus. June 14 at Northmount from 6 to 9 p.m. Hope to see you there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Association for the Rehabilitation of the Brain Injured

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three years ago Mary Ellen Neilson invited me to tour the Association for the Rehabilitation of the Brain Injured, also known as ARBI, in the community of Spruce Cliff in my riding of Calgary-Currie. Since then I've returned on multiple occasions and have attended their annual Stampede breakfast and Christmas open houses because, as I learned on my first visit, their important work is making lives better.

You see, ARBI provides intensive community-based, long-term rehabilitation and support for survivors of traumatic brain injuries related to falls, car crashes, sporting injuries as well as to nontraumatic brain injuries caused by strokes, infections, or lack of oxygen. All these services are unique to ARBI, unique because this rehabilitation program brings together professionals and volunteers on-site and throughout the community. Studies have shown that this leads to significant improvements for ARBI's clients. ARBI's novel approach has been accredited by the Alberta Council of Disability Services and is funded annually in part by the government of Alberta, but last year secondary supports coming from various charities were cut, leaving the more than 150 clients at risk. After working with Mary Ellen Neilson, the executive director of ARBI, and the Minister of Community and Social Services, I was pleased to announce last week with the minister that our government had ARBI's back and would provide $400,000 of support over two years.

You know, I saw the joy, Mr. Speaker, on the faces of the clients and the volunteers at ARBI, and it was one of my proudest moments as an MLA to see how a relatively small amount of money, at least by government standards, could bring so much help to 150 Albertans who are in need of this support. ARBI is going to be having their 40th anniversary this September, and with this extra funding it is definitely going to be one worth celebrating. To all the folks at ARBI who are dedicated to enriching the lives of survivors and their families by providing both hope and support, I thank you.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition signed by more than 900 constituents of Calgary-West. They're petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to continue to fund educational programs of choice – including, but not limited to, independent . . . charter, and home education options in Alberta – under the current inclusive provincial education funding model, without reducing current funding rates, as indicated within the Education Funding in Alberta Handbook 2016-2017.

I present this to you.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Market Access Task Force

Mr. Nixon: It is 29 days until the Kinder Morgan deadline. It's been 70 days since the Premier declared victory and called off the wine ban. Meanwhile we see headlines like these: at least 18 workers fired this week as a result of suspension in nonessential spending on Kinder Morgan. Yesterday we now see that the government has announced another work group on this file, but all the while the clock is ticking. My question is to the Energy minister. Is this task force an admission that the previous Market Access Task Force has been a failure?

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to see this Conservative opposition willing to stand in this House and share their opinions on this topic. Our government is fighting for pipelines so that everyday Albertans benefit from our natural resources and more good jobs. Albertans are behind us. We've seen recent studies that show that over 80 per cent of Albertans support the Trans Mountain expansion. It's about time we got support from the members opposite to make it happen.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this NDP government has a history of taking verbal action and then not taking any real action. It's been several months since the access task force was created. The Minister of Energy is on that task force. My question to her is: are those meetings still ongoing, and when was the last time that this task force met?

Ms Hoffman: It's nice for the member from the opposition to talk about verbal action. It would great if we saw verbal action on all issues that matter to Albertans from the Official Opposition, Mr. Speaker.

I can't actually tell if the opposition members are among the pipeline supporters or if they're trying to see them slowed down. It certainly doesn't seem like they are being supportive. The Conservative leader has advocated for this project to be tied up in court, Mr. Speaker. It would lead to further delays. Who else thinks that sending it to court is a good idea? Oh, yeah, that's right. John Horgan. You keep using Mr. Horgan's playbook; we'll keep standing by our Premier, who's getting results on pipelines, and we will get it to tidewater.

Mr. Nixon: It's interesting that the Energy minister will not answer that simple question. Instead, the Deputy Premier will get up with partisan rhetoric that had nothing to do with the issue that we're talking about.

Albertans are concerned about this pipeline. This is the number one issue facing our province right now. I've asked a simple question. Are the meetings for the access task force still ongoing, and when is the last time that that task force met?

Ms Hoffman: You know what, Mr. Speaker? Thank you for the question, and as the Deputy Premier I have the honour of responding to it. I have to say that we will certainly see the results of the good work that's happening. We've already seen them, for example, in British Columbia. A hundred senior British Columbia businesses, indigenous leaders, community and labour leaders are flying out in two weeks to build a bridge between our province and British Columbia. They will be meeting with our government, and collectively we will get shovels in the ground. Let me be clear. We will not stop until our pipeline gets built to tidewater.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Nixon: Well, it's disappointing, again, that the Deputy Premier will not answer a very simple question. In fact, it appears that she won't allow the Minister of Energy to stand to answer that question. Instead, you just get partisan rhetoric and absolute panic from the NDP government. It must be their poll numbers or something, Mr. Speaker.

Again to the Energy minister: has the task force met? Yes or no? When was the last time it met, and what did you discuss?

Ms Hoffman: You know what, Mr. Speaker? We're really proud to be discussing what is happening, and what's happening is that we're moving people all across this province towards a yes. We're moving people all across this country towards a yes. We will be very happy to tell you exactly how that strategy worked out, but you're not going to stand behind the Energy minister, peek over her shoulder, and tell opponents to pipelines what cards she's got in her hand. We're not going to let that happen. I'm proud of the results our Energy minister is getting. I'm proud of the fact that we've got our approvals. We've got the majority of Canadians standing with us. It's about time the Official Opposition did the same.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this government has a history of standing in this House and declaring victory when there is no victory, stopping wine bans when really nothing has happened or changed in B.C. – we still have a pipeline being blocked – and now continues their history of just standing up with partisan rhetoric about what we are not discussing. I have not asked what the minister's cards look like; I simply asked: when is the last time that the task force met, and what is going on with the task force? You can't get any more simple than that question. So what is this government hiding that is going on with the task force?

Ms Hoffman: You know what, Mr. Speaker? We're really proud of the work that is happening and the fact that we're making huge inroads right across this country instead of bringing up divisive policies that we see the members opposite are going to be discussing. Let's talk about the Conservative opposition and the things they'll be discussing this weekend. Let's take a look, shall we? Transphobia, homophobia, climate change denial, antichoice, health care privatization. We care about pipelines. We also care about the other issues that Albertans care about, and we're not afraid to discuss them in this House.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, again, what is this government hiding? This is a simple question. We don't need to hear the NDP's campaign talking points. There's time. I know that they're campaigning to be in opposition. They show that over and over. But I'm asking a simple question on behalf of Albertans. When is the last time that the task force met, and what did they discuss? What has the task force accomplished so far? Why won't the Energy minister stand up? Why are we seeing this partisan rhetoric? What is going on?

Ms Hoffman: We're really proud of the fact that our Energy minister is meeting with stakeholders from across this country to continue to build allies and get our pipeline to tidewater, Mr. Speaker. This has been her track record, and she is making huge progress. That's why we have significant support. And she won't stop. She'll keep meeting with that task force. She'll keep meeting with energy leaders. She'll keep meeting with indigenous leaders.

We are certainly looking forward to finding out what's behind the curtain of the members on the opposite side because they won't stand in this House, but they're willing to discuss these issues of division at their convention. Mr. Speaker, it's time that they come clear with Albertans about what their real plans are.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Bighorn Area Land Use

Mr. Nixon: Well, let's try another, Minister. The environment minister has clearly been saying that the government has no predetermined plans for the Bighorn area and that the NDP is focused on consulting with the public on this issue. The UCP has obtained a leaked government memo showing that these statements from the minister are not factual. The memo from January 16 contains an actual timeline and plan with the end result being the establishment of the Bighorn wildland provincial park. This shows that a provincial park has been predetermined by the NDP, and any so-called consultation by this government is a sham. Minister, will you come clean with Albertans and tell them the truth?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: You know, when we talk about the Bighorn, we're working in the backcountry on responsible land use. That's been incredible. We've worked with many local groups managing off-highway vehicle trails and monitoring campgrounds. There's also been enormous engagement with all stakeholders and efforts to repair the damage done by those who don't respect this region. You know, Mr. Speaker, this is going to be a good park for everyone because it's got stakeholder input from all sides.

Mr. Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, interestingly enough now, the Energy minister will answer questions for the environment minister, but the Deputy Premier has to answer questions for the Energy minister.

I'm not sure what's going on, but we just heard the Energy minister confirm that, basically, that memo is in fact true, that my constituents and the people of Alberta have been told that there will be proper consultation when it comes to the Bighorn, and this minister just confirmed 100 per cent that it has already been predetermined and Albertans have been misled by this government. What is going on? Is there a consultation, or have you already decided that there's going to be a park, as this memo says?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we have been asking Albertans, and there has indeed been consultation to provide feedback on the North Saskatchewan Regional Advisory Council's report. This project, Bighorn, or known as the west country, is a good project. It's got support from and input from a number of areas, and we're developing a plan that grows the economy, protects that environment, and enhances important opportunities for hiking, camping, hunting, fishing, horseback riding, and off-road vehicle trails, something we all as Albertans enjoy very much.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, let's be very clear. This NDP government is not consulting with Albertans. They're consulting with select groups of individuals at invite-only meetings. They're not talking to local politicians, local stakeholders, some of who are in the gallery today. They certainly haven't talked to me, and I've lived in the west country most of my life and know it very, very well. But what this minister has confirmed yet again is that this memo is correct. This has already been predetermined by this government. This government has been misleading the people of my constituency and this province, saying that these consultations that are ongoing right now are real. It turns out, I guess, that they're fake, and the park has already been determined.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I will confirm – and I will speak slowly on this. It is not predetermined. We are still seeking public input. The plan is in development, but as we look at things we are seeking input. I invite the hon. member, who claims to be the west country expert, to give his input because we will accept it along with everyone else's.

Coal Phase-out in Parkland County

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government doesn't appear to understand the economic and social impact of shutting down coal-fired electricity generation. Parkland county derives around a quarter of its revenue from taxes paid by the coal industry and will be forced to reduce service levels for the county and their participation in regional partnerships. What is the government doing to better understand the impacts of the policies on the county and people in the county feeling the effects?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, we are of course working with coal communities. We want to continue to make sure that the workers in those places earn good livings. We're talking to people in the coal counties and their elected representatives. That's why we're ensuring that those workers have the supports they need as we go forward. The transition fund is in place. The community transition fund is in place. There have been a number of consultations. There'll continue to be some.

Ms McPherson: Parkland county is in a doom loop. They can't attract a larger tax base because they can't invest in infrastructure without the province, and that infrastructure is needed to bring in replacement revenue. The coal phase-out is occurring faster than the government expected, and this catch-22 will only accelerate. The government hasn't responded to the innovative solutions suggested by the county in their December 2017 MOU. How can Parkland county be expected to diversify and sustain its regional economy without an effective partnership with the province?

Mr. Ceci: Of course, partnerships, Mr. Speaker, are important for all orders of government working together. This is critical for Parkland county, as it is for the government of Alberta. It's unfortunate that Parkland county chose not to apply for the coal community transition fund, but we're going to continue to meet with the county. We'll continue to reach out and encourage them to apply for these funds so that they can do the work that the hon. member is identifying that needs to be done. But even if the county decides not to act, we'll continue to have the backs of the workers in those communities.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Ms McPherson: Parkland county already had a transition plan in place, so they refused the money and gave it to other communities that needed it. The coal community transition fund is 4 and a half million dollars to help develop plans to deal with phase-out. This is smart, but the amount is one-tenth of the $40 million to support worker retraining and 350 times less than the amount paid to coal-fired plant owners. What substantive strategies are coming to demonstrate the government's commitment to transitioning these communities to a sustainable future?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, I just need to perhaps step back for a second and say that the Coal Association of Canada believes that the work of this government is in the right direction. It said, "The release of the panel's recommendations and the announcement of the Coal Workforce Transition Fund is a step in the right direction." That was echoed by the mayor of Hanna when he said that these supports will go a long way to help workers and the community. We'll continue to have the backs of those communities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

LGBTQ2S-plus Rights

Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am proud of this government's record on LGBTQ2S-plus rights. That's why I was so dismayed to hear about some of the policies that will be debated at the founding UCP convention, including resolutions that take away the rights of LGBTQ2S-plus Albertans. To the Minister of Culture and Tourism: what has this government done to ensure that all Albertans are respected no matter who they are?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to be part of a government that has three openly gay MLAs. It has taken historic steps to create a more inclusive and welcoming province such as amending the Alberta Human Rights Act to include gender identity and expression as well as creating safe and caring schools and shelters for LGBTQ-plus youth. This extreme right-wing rhetoric vilifies people who have fought and won the rights for people to be who they are. It is divisive and promotes hate and discrimination and, quite frankly, is very shameful.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that a couple of the resolutions that will be debated this weekend suggest that the government should, quote, allow parents the ability to have current information on their child's activities if the parents request such information, to the same minister: what is the government's policy on outing LGBTQ2S-plus kids in the school system?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, and thank you to the member for the question. The Premier has made it very clear that she will not let the Leader of the Official Opposition or anyone else out gay children, and our government has made that promise come true. I am proud to be part of a government that brought in legislation to make it clear that schools cannot disclose without cause or without consent the identity of a student who joins a GSA. We will not allow the Leader of the Official Opposition, his party, or anyone else to turn back the clock with a dangerous plan to allow schools to out kids to their parents without consent.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What impact do government policies of inclusion have on our reputation as a province and on business and on tourism?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Businesses and visitors want to work and, of course, vacation in a province that is safe, inclusive, and welcoming, not one that promotes hate, fear, and intolerance. It is disturbing that the electoral success of some political leaders is based on supporting those who spread hate, discrimination, inequality. It is divisive, and it weakens us as a society and as a province. I want to thank the Premier, the MLAs for Calgary-Hawkwood and Strathcona-Sherwood Park, and all of my government colleagues, really, for standing up for the LGBTQ-plus community. I look forward to celebrating pride with them this year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, it just seems to me that it's odd that the minister is talking about this report and what's going on with this, but this report that we have says that the government says that in September 2018 they're going to establish the Bighorn wildland provincial park. Now, that sounds like that issue is settled as far as the government is concerned. Also, the minister suggested in estimates that the consultation on the Bighorn was done as part of the North Saskatchewan regional plan, yet it appears that the minister is personally consulting with foreign-funded special-interest groups like Y2Y. Why is the minister consulting with these groups while telling us in estimates that the consultation is "now complete in terms of hearing from the public"?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, Albertans deserve strong regional planning that supports economic diversification, protects the environment, and ensures recreational opportunities for future generations. You know, we as Albertans love all those opportunities to enjoy our beautiful province. The North Saskatchewan region is home to Alberta's Industrial Heartland, the capital region, and some of the best farmland in the world along with foothills and mountains. It's also home to prized headwaters that supply drinking water to the cities of Edmonton and surrounding communities such as Red Deer. We are asking all Albertans to provide their feedback. We're still accepting it.

Mr. Loewen: Given that that answer has nothing to do with the government's predetermined decision to establish the Bighorn wildland provincial park and given that the minister also told us in estimates that the consultation process for ordinary Albertans was solely by online survey and given that the minister suggested that the government was not conducting any town halls or public meetings in relation to the Bighorn and given that the minister refused to tell us whether she believed that consultation should focus on affected residents of our province, can the minister clarify now whether she prioritizes input from everyday Albertans or foreign-funded special-interest groups?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will say it again: we have not determined what this plan will look like. We are accepting input from everyone. We value all Albertans' opinions. We seek input as I speak, but you're not going to wait for everything. You will start to develop a plan as you get it, and you will tweak things. Again, there is no predetermined plan.

Mr. Loewen: Given that that flies in the face of the facts of this document, produced by the government, to in September 2018 "establish the Bighorn Wildland Provincial Park" – that's very clear – and given that the minister has clearly gone above and beyond to cater to special interests while putting in the minimum amount of effort to consult with ordinary Albertans and given the shocking revelation from the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre revealing the predetermined outcome of the new wildland park, will the minister commit to going back to the drawing board and conducting an open, transparent process that is focused on Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would point out that it was the previous government who created the RAC, and we released it for input. That is what we're doing right now. It feels like the opposition wants to do nothing that's going to help the health and livelihood of Albertans. We're taking action to protect vital headwaters supplying drinking water to Edmonton and Red Deer. You guys across the way are drumming up a problem that actually, quite frankly, doesn't exist. We're making sure that Albertans have dedicated areas for hiking, camping, fishing, canoeing, and exploring OHV trails.

Market Access Task Force (continued)

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, what it feels like is that this government continues to audition to be in opposition. Don't worry. They'll be there shortly, I suspect, if they will not answer a simple question. The NDP government has a history of taking verbal action and not actually taking any real action. I have asked this question a few times today, and I want to know this. Are the Market Access Task Force meetings still going on, and when was the last time that task force met? Will the Minister of Energy stand up and answer a question?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The task force is continually in contact with each other, but the last official meeting that's on record, where we met fully, was on April 12. But we continue the work, phone calls and that kind of thing. It's an ongoing process, as it is with our companies, our industry, and many people involved.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you. That wasn't that hard.

Given, Mr. Speaker, that the NDP government has a history of saying that they'll take action and then not actually taking concrete action and given that they have a history of declaring victory when there is no victory and given that they announce task forces that are not gaining anything as a result usually, my question to the Energy minister is this. How many times has the task force actually met, what has been accomplished in that time when they met, and when will we see a report of the results?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, in this matter of getting pipelines built, especially the TMX, we consult with a number of people. The task force is one, but I was in Calgary yesterday consulting with industry again. This is an effort – as I've said many times, it takes a village to get this pipeline built. It's unfortunate that the opposition spends most of their time trying to sabotage, to be honest, those efforts, and it seems like they don't want to be part of this process. I said yesterday publicly that it's a nonpartisan issue. This is about Alberta, and this is about Canada.

Mr. Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that this is the NDP's task force that I'm referring to and given that the minister is on that task force and given that we're now on six questions, simple little task force questions, that the minister either refuses to stand up and answer or can't answer, I'll try again. It's very simple. How many times has the task force actually met, and what was accomplished and discussed during those meetings?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the opposition seems to be trying to create a conspiracy theory here that doesn't exist. There's no story here. The task force is one piece. We have industry, we have experts, we have anybody who can help us get this pipeline to tidewater, and we're going to continue to do that work. I don't know that it's germane to know who we talk to, when, and how. What I did yesterday was that I asked people of all political stripes if they would join us in this as a government to get this pipeline because it's important to Albertans and it's important to all of Canada.

FOIP Requests on Carbon Levy Reports

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, this government's carbon tax makes life harder for Albertans and especially those in rural Alberta, making it more expensive to drive for groceries, take their kids to soccer, or even get to work. We asked the government through freedom of information to come clean about, quote, all financial reports related to the carbon tax, and they withheld all of that information. I have a simple question to the government. What are they hiding?

Ms Hoffman: Nothing, Mr. Speaker. If the member from the Official Opposition would like help writing FOIP requests, I'm sure there are a number of folks that used to be employed with his caucus that would be very happy to help him because they have the expertise. I have to tell you that wild fishing expeditions don't get documents. Asking specific questions gets you specific results.

Mr. Cooper: Well, Mr. Speaker, we asked a specific question, to have all of the information that they had released to us. On eight or 10 occasions – and I'm happy to table the document here in the House – they refused to provide the information because, quote, it was advice to officials. Why is advice to officials okay but not information for Albertans?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The reason why there is that clause is because the former government, who you used to campaign against – but now you're sitting side by side with those folks, Member from the Official Opposition. That legislation was written by the former government, and there is a very specific clause about advice to officials. For example, cabinet briefing documents, that are given to us to make informed decisions, aren't actually released to the public if they have confidential advice that could impact markets or could impact the important decision-making that goes into making this. This is to ensure that government can have the best information without it being feared that it could negatively impact Canadians and Albertans.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given that they didn't release this information because they are afraid of Albertans finding it out and given that this government is already under at least four investigations as a result of their secrecy – they hid the carbon tax from voters during the election – and given that now they are continuing to hide financial reports relating to their own tax from Albertans, to the Minister: will you stop hiding this information, release it today, or is it going to take another investigation for you to do the right thing?

Ms Hoffman: Oh, it is very rich to have members of the Official Opposition talk about hiding when I have a feeling that in about an hour we're going to see just that, Mr. Speaker. I hope that I'm not right. I hope that they show up and do their jobs. It seems that they're more comfortable talking about their divisive policies at a closed-door convention in Red Deer than they are in this very Chamber. We follow the legislation. We're happy to comply with freedom of information requests, and if you have a question, you can certainly raise it with the commissioner. But it's pretty rich for you to talk about people hiding when I have a good idea of what's going to be happening in about, oh, 58 minutes now.

The Speaker: Calgary-West.

Educational Delivery Choices

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the NDP government formed, many groups such as the ATA saw an opportunity to lobby the government to withdraw funding that provides Alberta's parents and children with choice in education. Independent and charter schools, alternative programs, home-schools remain concerned to this day that the NDP's friends will convince them to halt their funding. Minister, will you show support for choice in education today by vowing to reject any more of these lobby efforts?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, every couple of months or so I have to reaffirm what we have done for the last three years, which is to fully fund education in all of its combinations and permutations across this province, be it private schools, home-schooling, francophone schools, separate schools, public schools, and so forth. We will continue to do so. In fact, in this last budget we did it again, and – you know what? – the members opposite did not even vote for that budget. They voted against it. They voted against children, they voted against building capital, they voted against the home-school increase, and they voted against the private school increase, the whole kit and caboodle.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, given that a report indicates that Alberta's system of school choice has saved taxpayers $750 million over five years and given that although the Premier called the charter and independent schools "havens of elitism" even though in 83 per cent of the independent schools the average household income is slightly below the provincial average, Minister, will you confirm that Alberta's current system of educational choice does not take resources away from public schools?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a former teacher I never refuse the opportunity to do a teachable moment, so this is compare and contrast. Compare this government fully funding education in all of its combinations, including the ones that he described here today, to massive cuts and the members opposite not voting for the Education budget. Compare and contrast. That's also known as irony.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, given that constituents in Calgary-West fully support an educational system that provides parents with opportunities to enrol their children in schools and programs of their choice and given that these parents and students are looking for assurance that this NDP government will not erode the current inclusive educational funding model, Minister, will you commit today that you will not change the current funding model, that allows choice in education, either now or in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. Further to teaching literature, which I enjoyed doing, Chicken Little and the sky falling: those are metaphors, right? This idea that the sky is falling around funding of education is not only false and confusing, but they are spreading and casting aspersions to scare people every so often while I have now built four budgets in which we have fully funded all of our combinations and permutations of education here in the province. We're very proud of that. We're very proud of the investments that we made. We will not waver from our commitment to children, to parents, and to education in all of its forms here in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Support for Students with Special Needs

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Education. Parents in my constituency are quite concerned about the level of support available in schools for children with special needs, particularly those who have behaviour challenges. Can the minister please tell us how special-needs students are being supported in our schools?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and for the question. We have been funding classroom conditions for all students, including those with special and complex needs. That's why in Budget 2018 we did increase the funding towards inclusive education. Our current line item on this is $461 million, which is an increase of $8.4 million. You know, I do recognize that there's also room for improvement in regard to inclusive education. The best way by which you can move forward on this is to make sure that you have adequate staffing, which we've been moving forward on, because we have fully funded for enrolment here in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What provisions are available to our classroom teachers to help them support their students with special needs?

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you for the question. Further to the end of the last answer, of course, fully funding for enrolment has led to the hiring of more than 3,600 new teaching and support-work positions here over these last three years. Our government has also invested $66 million in the regional collaborative service delivery program, and this means more speech pathologists, social workers, nurses, and other front-line staff to meet complex challenges. We need to make sure we support our teachers every step of the way. They are often the first line of contact for families with special needs, and we're there to help them.

2:20

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Woollard: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Children with challenges in more than one area need greater than usual amounts of support. Is it possible to provide the necessary levels of support for these children in the neighbourhood schools, or is it provided in specialized school settings?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker and for the question. I think it's important to move forward on the idea of inclusive education, where students are able to be integrated into the classroom, but you also have to have that choice where students and parents and families can choose special programming in classrooms. We tried to strike a balance on both. I mean, not to say that we are perfect in this regard. I'm taking lots of input from groups and from parents to look for ways by which we can strengthen our inclusive education program and education for special-needs students. You know, in Budget 2018 . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-South East.

Seniors' Housing

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the most important things we can provide for seniors is the security and safety of a place to call home. Continuing care, home care, supportive living, and long-term care are all part of making sure that our seniors can live their lives with dignity. With an aging population, we need to make sure that there are as many spaces available as possible so that we can offer seniors a choice and not have to turn anyone away, and that means that we need to make sure we're spending efficiently. To the Minister of Seniors and Housing: are you confident that your government is getting the maximum value for money in constructing new seniors' housing?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. I'm going to start with this one because it was actually about health care facilities that often do serve seniors, but I'm sure that the minister of seniors would be happy to answer questions about lodges and other items that are actually within the minister of seniors' budget.

In terms of long-term care and supportive living, including dementia care spaces, Mr. Speaker, I'm incredibly proud of the fact that our government, when given a choice between deep cuts that were being proposed by the opposition, including the then government that that member was a part of, instead of moving forward with those deep cuts – a billion dollars to health care, bringing in a health care levy – we stood with seniors. We kept their rates affordable. We made sure that we increased the number of spaces. We've built 2,000.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fraser: Given that the partnership with nonprofits and faith-based organizations meant that in 2014-15, when we were the government, we were able to build spaces at an average of $65,000 a bed, all meeting or exceeding the provincial building standard, and given that the two most recent government projects, in Calgary and Fort McMurray, were built at rates of $655,000 and $764,000 a bed, over 10 times the cost per bed, to the same minister: why did the government not pursue partnerships with nonprofits when it's been shown that these partnerships could allow you to deliver 10 times as many spaces at the same cost?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we are making life better and more affordable for seniors in Alberta. Our government has invested more than $3 billion in seniors' programs this past year alone. We are building 4,100 affordable housing homes through our $1.2 billion investment. We have over 60 projects on the go. Seniors in our province are well cared for by this government.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the CEO of the Alberta Continuing Care Association has specifically pointed to partnerships between government, nonprofits, faith-based organizations, and private providers as being the most effective way to address the increasing need for assisted living spaces, it would seem that this government is more committed to making an ideological point than providing the best possible care for Albertans. To the same minister: in developing any long-term strategy to address seniors' housing, will you put aside the ideology and include nonprofits, faith groups, and private providers as equal partners?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our ministry partners with private developers when appropriate for construction and design services, creating good jobs right here in Alberta, and we'll make sure that these facilities are used for the purpose they were intended for. As for affordable housing for Albertans with low income, the previous Conservative government gave millions to private developers who operated under short-term agreements. We're making sure that affordable housing will support seniors for years and years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Economic Competitiveness

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday an article published in the Globe and Mail painted a grim picture for our energy sector. The Suncor CEO said, "We don't see major investment in the Canadian oil sands until we see an improvement in the competitive position of the industry." This doesn't just hurt our oil and gas industry. I was just informed that Lafarge Canada will be shutting down its ready-mix concrete operations in Bonnyville and Cold Lake due to the lack of economic viability under this NDP government. Can the minister responsible please tell Albertans how the government plans on solving the economic competitiveness problem they have created?

The Speaker: The hon. Finance minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we'll look into the situation that's been identified here just now. But I can tell you that our government is working across this province to support good jobs and create a more diverse economy. Certainly, cement and other things like that are part of a diverse economy. I know there is a cost to those manufacturers, and we as a government believe that more needs to be done. We'll be looking into that as a result of hearing this information.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Lafarge's operations have been shut down by the market conditions fostered by this NDP government and given that the company has said that they do not expect a change in the foreseeable future and given that this particular decision means that 15 families in Bonnyville-Cold Lake will be directly impacted by the closure, is the minister aware of the closure, what plan does the government have for these newly out-of-work Albertans, and will the minister commit to engaging with Lafarge to address the further barriers that they have implemented on this industry?

Mr. Ceci: I think I just mentioned, Mr. Speaker, that I just heard about the closure, so, yes, I am aware of it. We will be, through our officials, reaching out and finding out more.

But it's not the NDP government, Mr. Speaker; it's not the government at all that has done this. It is a result of, probably, market conditions that make it somewhat unaffordable for their product to meet the specs of other companies that are selling the same product. We're going to be looking into it, as I said.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that our job creators are having their viability eroded by high taxes, high regulation, and antigrowth policies of this NDP government and given that these policies have a real impact on Alberta families all across the province, will the government commit to repealing its harmful policies such as the job-killing carbon tax, the 20 per cent business tax increase, and the numerous policies contributing to the increased cost in electricity?

Mr. Ceci: No, Mr. Speaker. What we will do is that we will continue to work with Albertans and companies. For instance, in 2017 90,000 full-time jobs returned to this province. Eight thousand were created last month. We know that things like the GDP, which is 4.9 per cent, not 4.5 per cent, as we have been saying many, many times. StatsCan said that it's a 4.9 per cent growth. We're going to lead the nation in GDP growth again. Those are the kinds of things that will put people back to work, and companies will flourish.

The Speaker: Drayton Valley-Devon.

Educational Curriculum Review Working Groups

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've asked a number of times for the list of organizations, not individuals, who have presented to the curriculum rewrite working groups. Each and every time the minister has refused to provide that list. Now, through a freedom of information request, we have a list of which groups presented on January 12 and 13, 2016. Minister, will you provide a list of all external groups which have presented to the committee working groups, or is FOIP the only way you disseminate information?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we're very proud of the curriculum process that we are engaged in in all grade levels and in six subject areas. In fact, they're building the K to 4 component of that right now and working through a process to have approval for the end of the year. Certainly, you know, I've said many times that we've had financial institutions, that we had military history groups presenting. We had the agriculture sector, the forestry sector. It's a process like we've never seen before in regard to transparency and engagement of citizens and our economy and Albertans in general.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: FOIP it is.

Mr. Speaker, given that I have heard that for the first time ever members of at least some curriculum working groups have been required to sign nondisclosure agreements and given that I asked the Minister of Education about this during estimates and he noted that he would follow up, I would like to now give him the opportunity to do so. Minister, is this the first time ever that nondisclosure agreements have been required for working group members, and did all working group members across Alberta have to sign nondisclosure agreements?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, during our most amicable budget review that we had a couple of weeks ago, I did say that we would provide that information in its entirety to the member, and we certainly will honour our word and do so.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that parents need to have confidence that all parties involved in the curriculum rewrite are fully committed to transparency and given that the ATA executive council believes that information reported by the press regarding aggregate test scores needs to be controlled by the Minister of Education and given that the minister will not release the list of presenting groups and is requiring at least some working group members to sign nondisclosure agreements so that he can control the information released on the curriculum rewrite, again to the minister: is this the level of openness and transparency Alberta parents should continue to expect in the curriculum rewrite process?

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, you know, the hon. member is a little confused, which is okay, in regard to the individuals that are in the working groups. As I said before, I will give the information – I won't stand in the way of the law – in regard to individual people, right? But I certainly will stand to protect those individual people, too, because I know that there's been a systematic way by which people are trying to spread conspiracy theories around the curriculum. There is nothing further from the truth. All of the groups that are working and have presented to us: we are very happy to – the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry and myself were with a great group the other day.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Rural Infrastructure Project Approval

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, rural municipalities have expressed serious concerns related to months of unnecessarily delayed inspections and approvals from Alberta Environment that are involved in road construction, general repair, and maintenance projects. These outstanding inspections and approvals are directly caused by a failed process that was implemented by the ministry in July of '15, which results in enormously long delays for even the most routine, low-maintenance activities. To the minister: why were these new inspection and approval procedures implemented without a capable system of process and manpower?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for raising this matter. I appreciate the concern that has been identified and would be happy to follow up with the hon. member. We'll certainly work to get back to him with the appropriate information to support a thorough understanding of the issue.

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, given that for decades municipalities accomplished proper, routine, yearly maintenance of bridges, culverts, and roads without delay and given that the new system is now so clogged that the response to municipalities is a canned one stating that they're experiencing high volumes of applications and that the timeline for decisions is eight to 12 months and given that these inspections and approvals and maintenance can only be done in the warm season and therefore a complete construction season is lost again, Minister, what actions are you going to take to remedy this clogged system?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Well, Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Transportation I'll try and help the hon. member with the question. I will have to get back to him after consultation with the Minister of Environment and Parks on this matter, but I can say that our government believes very strongly that transportation in rural Alberta is very important, and we've been doing a number of things in the Transportation department to support rural municipalities in terms of replacing culverts, roads, bridges, all of the things that they need for the infrastructure that they need. In terms of Environment's process for approvals we'll have to get back to the hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, given that Alberta municipalities facilitate growth and economic development that require attention to public safety requiring timely construction activity involving minor bridge, culvert, and road maintenance plus other routine municipal projects and given that the rural municipalities association passed a resolution to urge the province to relax the unnecessary, overreaching requirements for formal approvals on routine maintenance projects, which the department claims to be attempting to address, to the minister again: will these improvements to the development of less burdensome wetland codes of practice for low-impact activities . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I certainly do appreciate the point the hon. member is making, that it is important that we be able to proceed with our infrastructure projects, whether in rural Alberta or urban Alberta – it doesn't matter – in a timely fashion. But we also have a responsibility to provide adequate protection for our environment, which is the task of the Department of Environment and Parks. I will undertake to take his questions up with the Minister of Environment and Parks, and I'm sure she will respond to him in good time.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Traffic Congestion in South Edmonton

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The population of southwest Edmonton is burgeoning and is very grateful to the government for opening a lot of schools and announcing a new hospital in Heritage Valley. Transportation facilities, though, are taxed, and this has resulted in severe congestion on our arterial roadways and leads to excessive greenhouse gas emissions, among other things. To the Minister of Transportation: can you provide the House an update on plans to increase the capacity of the Henday-Terwillegar-Whitemud corridor, particularly at the interchanges?

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks very much for the question. Mr. Speaker, portions of the Anthony Henday from Calgary Trail to Terwillegar Drive, I know, are a source of great frustration to commuters in south and southwest Edmonton. We are committed to doing what's necessary to deal with these problems and to help people get to their jobs, to their appointments, and to family and friends as expeditiously as possible. I can tell the hon. member that we are going to be moving on that, and he should stay tuned.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Minister. I'm sure it's in the fullness of time.

Given that the city of Edmonton is reviewing options to facilitate movement of traffic from as far south as the Edmonton International Airport to the University of Alberta campus and to downtown through the HTW corridor, what role can the province play in helping get this long-planned improvement moving forward?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for his question. We are aware of the future planning by the city. I mean, we always do our level best to stay aware of the transportation needs of all our municipalities, whether they're urban or rural. We know the city is doing preliminary consultations in order to develop options for upgrading the drive to full freeway status, beginning with the construction of an interchange at 40th Avenue, but we haven't received any specific requests yet from the city for provincial involvement, which we will of course consider carefully when we receive it.

Dr. Turner: Thank you again, Minister.

Given that LRT, bus rapid transit, and active transport alternatives are favoured modes of many residents in my riding and across Alberta, is there a role for GreenTRIP funding in providing this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. No. The GreenTRIP program is fully expended, but there is provincial transit funding available. Budget 2018 invests $1.5 billion over five years in grants to municipalities for transit projects, including $855 million for Edmonton and Calgary LRT projects. Our government is committed to expand that over the next 10 years to help both cities with their LRT networks. We are doing what's necessary to reduce congestion and to reduce emissions and to make traffic . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Rimbey Area Fatal Highway Crash

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, on December 13 two lives tragically ended as a result of an automobile accident 45 kilometres west of Rimbey, Alberta, a case where someone shot through a four-foot stop sign at a T-intersection going 96 kilometres per hour, resulting in the least offensive charge of careless driving being levied. The family has told me – and so many things have gone wrong with the case – that they just want to get answers. Minister, the family would like to know: why was there only a charge of careless driving rather than dangerous driving causing death or criminal negligence?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, I want to offer my condolences to the families of the two victims who died in this tragic accident, and I want to thank the member on behalf of the Justice minister for bringing this matter to our attention. The police and the Crown lay charges based on the evidence at hand, but I can share with the House that the head of the Crown prosecution service reached out to the family last night, and a local Crown handling the case will be following up with more details today.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you. I'm glad they're reaching out.

Given that the mother of one of the victims had called the RCMP to find out what was happening with the case only to find out that the case could have been heard this Friday and given that only then was she told, "Oh, by the way, you can fill out a victim impact statement," critical information they wouldn't have known if they didn't make the call in the first place, Minister, will you commit to a full review of victims' services so that no one else falls through the cracks when something serious like this happens again?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. I can further share that RCMP victims' services reached out to the family yesterday evening to answer questions and walk them through the court process. We will continue working with the family. I will also thank the member for bringing this concern to our government. We will make sure that somebody is going to be following up on this matter.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, before you begin, help me understand and the House understand: is this matter before the courts now?

Mr. Taylor: It will be going perhaps on Friday, so not yet.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I believe that question is not in order under the sub judice principle; therefore, I will not allow the supplemental.

Mr. Taylor: Okay.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Bill 17

Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill, being the Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2018.

As you know, Alberta's tax statutes are reviewed annually, and amendments are made to (a) protect the integrity of our tax system; secondly, to implement government policy decisions; and thirdly, to ensure our tax legislation remains aligned with the federal tax legislation.

The proposed amendments will change two acts, the Alberta Corporate Tax Act and the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. These amendments are largely administrative in nature and would first align provincial legislation with current administrative practices; secondly, repeal expired provincial provisions; and thirdly, maintain consistency between federal and provincial legislation. Again, these types of changes are important for maintaining the integrity of our tax system in Alberta and keeping our legislation up to date.

With that, I move first reading of Bill 17.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the memo that I referred to in my question, that clearly shows that the NDP have already predetermined that there will be a park in the Bighorn and, in fact, have even predetermined the date, that there has been no true consultation with the people of my constituency, and that the NDP, in fact, are misleading them as to that fact.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of an editorial out of the Edmonton Journal called Press Must Remain Free, in which it states, "Disagreeing with standardized testing is a right in a free society; seeking to dictate press coverage absolutely shouldn't be."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today, one from a constituent, Erin Dowell, who asks the question: "Can you please explain why the taxpayers of Alberta are subsidizing the daycare for some of the wealthiest families in Alberta?"

The second tabling is the appropriate copies of a petition from the pharmaceutical industry in Alberta asking the Legislature to reinvest at least 50% of any savings anticipated from generic drug cost reductions resulting from the 5-year agreement recently negotiated between the pan-Canadian Pharmaceutical Alliance and the Canadian [generics] . . . into frontline pharmacy services and programs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to table the appropriate number of copies of a FOIP request for a copy of the fairness advisers' report pertaining to RFP: AHS-2016-2199.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday and Wednesday afternoon during question period I asked questions with regard to overland flooding in my riding, in every constituency, and every municipality, including the MD of Taber, the counties of Vulcan and Lethbridge, and the Siksika nation. Now, I have copies of information that I received from these municipalities. They include written descriptions and pictures as well. I have the appropriate number of copies.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have one tabling this afternoon. I rise to table five copies of a May 2, 2018, memo and attachment to all members regarding committee meeting protocols.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 9

Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act

[Debate adjourned May 3]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm proud to rise today to close debate on the second reading of Bill 9, the Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act. I'd like to begin by acknowledging that we are joined by a number of women's choice advocates seated in the gallery, who've come to watch today's debate and see for themselves who is willing and who is not willing to stand up for Alberta women. On behalf of all members of the Legislature I want to thank these strong, passionate women for their tireless work advocating for women's right to make their own choices and for access to health care free from harassment, intimidation, and violence. Every day when I come to this Chamber, I walk down the fourth floor and look to the east, and I see written high in the sky: "Now that we are persons." This is really about women exercising their own bodily autonomy. Also, I think this is about this Chamber being here to serve all Albertans, including the Alberta women who fought for us to have a voice in this place.

This women's issue is an issue that matters. Of course, we are very willing to talk about other issues, including the work we're doing to ensure that we have our pipelines built to tidewater, the work we're doing to diversify our economy, the action we're taking to support local communities. But this issue is important, too.

By acting on this today, we say to the women who are here today and to other women that we hear you, we support you, and we know how important this bill is. We know how difficult it can be for Alberta women to access health care safely. They know how difficult it's been for far too many care providers to safely provide that care without being harassed, being forced to go to court, or being judged and treated terribly for the work that they do for our community. Madam Speaker, it's unacceptable to me that these women have to face this across our province. That's why our government is standing today with women, and more importantly that's why we are taking action.

Before I talk about how this bill would protect women accessing health care, I'd like to add some clarification to some points that were raised in second reading. I mentioned that the injunction doesn't apply to public property. Just to be clear, both the injunction and the access zone include pieces of public property as specified in the injunction. I gave an example of a woman who was not able to access the clinic via the sidewalk. With only the injunction in place, the woman was forced to walk on the road, through a puddle, to avoid protesters. This, Madam Speaker, is unacceptable. Women should be able to access health care free of harassment, and this is why we have brought forward this legislation.

I mentioned that legislation will provide a greater space of protection than the injunctions. The access zones extend further than the current injunctions in some directions, and the legislation will provide greater protection for patients and service providers at these clinics. The injunctions will remain in place, but the legislation will add crucial protections for patients to ensure that they aren't bullied, photographed, or recorded without their consent.

Additionally, the legislation prohibits any photographs or recordings from being distributed for the purpose of discouraging a person from accessing or providing abortions on social media. This is something that many women raised with me, that when they walk into their doctor's office and see somebody holding up a cellphone, recording a video, they felt very unsafe. I'm really proud that our government is working to make them feel safe and supporting them in accessing the care that they choose.

I want to be clear that the injunctions are an important tool, and they've been an important enforcement mechanism in the past. However, in practice they haven't always had the desired outcome of protecting women that I imagine the courts intended. That's why we're adding another tool through this bubble-zone legislation. Through legislation, information about penalties is laid out clearly, and they're more easily accessible to the public and to law enforcement. This information can be found online in the public domain rather than having to go into a clinic to get hard copies of the actual injunction. It allows for better communication with protestors on where they're allowed to protest and about what the consequences are and violations should they not follow them. It provides law enforcement with better clarity when enforcing the legislation.

I mentioned that the injunctions have had to be repeatedly amended at the expense and time of the clinics. Both clinics' injunctions were implemented in the early 1990s and amended again in the 2000s. When they brought this forward initially to the government of the day, they didn't want to have injunctions. They wanted to have laws similar to those that were put in place in British Columbia, and they were told at that time that, no, it just wasn't something that the government was willing to focus on, that instead they'd have to go to court. Then they went to court again. What were they told just a month ago? They should go to court again. Madam Speaker, that is not fair. That is not justice. These women deserve to be treated fairly under the law, and that's why we brought this bill forward, to make a law to protect these women. In turn, the clinics can focus on their expertise. They can provide their clients with the care that they are seeking. They don't have to spend their resources and their expert time going to court.

Madam Speaker, before I move to close debate on this bill, I'd like to talk about some of the stories that I've heard from women. When I was at the Kensington clinic, they have a journal in one of the rooms, and they walked me through the entire journey for women who are there exercising their right to choose. They walked me through the counselling area, where women are given their full range of options and are given the opportunity to exercise choices in that moment or at a later time around other components that they have questions and concerns about. Then one of the last spaces they have before you go into the operating room: they have a really quiet space with a journal.

A lot of women take the time to pick up that journal and write a few sentences about their experience. Without going into specifics about who these women are, I want you to know that one of the women talked about being married, having two children, finding out she was pregnant for the third time, and trying to be really happy, trying to be excited. She said that no matter how hard she tried, she just couldn't get there. She was feeling sick. She was exhausted. She and her husband hadn't planned on having a third child, and she just felt like she couldn't catch her breath. She said that sitting in this clinic after having an opportunity to talk to the counsellor was the first time she felt like she had some control back in her life.

Another woman talked about being a new Canadian and how, in the country that she used to live in, this wouldn't have even been an option, for her to have a legal abortion – she would have had to consider breaking the law to exercise her own bodily autonomy – and how instead she was treated with respect and compassion by the people inside the building, who were giving her the support she needed to make this choice in a way that was going to be safe, that was going to be supported, and that was going to honour who she was as a human being.

There were other stories, too, that talked about what the women experienced when they walked into the clinic. It is very real for the women who are walking into these clinics and for the people who love them, when they have brought themselves to this point of deciding to see a doctor and seek medical support for the choice they've made. They talked about hearing the protestors outside yelling at them when they were in the waiting room.

I want to say, Madam Speaker, that this bill is sorely needed by these women who've asked us to do this, who've asked governments repeatedly to do this. The women of Alberta deserve no less protection, respect, or dignity than the women of British Columbia or Newfoundland and Labrador or Ontario or Quebec. Alberta women deserve the same respect, dignity, and protection that women in other jurisdictions have.

Again, Madam Speaker, before I close, I want to thank the members of this Assembly who have chosen to participate in this important debate. I want to thank the members on this side of the Chamber and some members on the other side for standing with Alberta women.

To the members who chose not to speak for these women, for the health care providers, I'd like to remind you that the protections that you have in this place to do your job every day, including a Speaker and including a Sergeant-at-Arms – we're not even asking for there to be a Sergeant-at-Arms accompanying these staff members while they walk in to do their jobs. We're asking for them to have some safety, some protection, and some dignity. Here in the Legislature we're protected, so I find it pretty rich to see some members afraid to come into this Chamber to debate this bill and protect women and front-line health care workers. I find it pretty offensive to hear some members saying that these women and workers should go to court just to feel safe when they're doing their job or accessing health care.

If 90 per cent of success is about showing up, well, then I think Alberta women are going to have a grade to give to the Official Opposition because, Madam Speaker, Alberta women deserve a hundred per cent support in this Legislature. They don't deserve to be ignored by their MLAs who hide when it's time to protect them, they don't deserve an opposition that courts the support of groups who would defund their health care and their rights, and they don't deserve to be called a distraction. They deserve respect, and that's what they are getting from this government.

I've mentioned that I've heard from a lot of women about the difference that this will make in their lives. That's who this bill is about. This isn't about the Leader of the Official Opposition. This isn't about freedom of speech. This is about freedom from intimidation tactics that rely on shame, stigmatization, and that prevent Alberta women from exercising choices about their health care. While the members opposite sit with their Conservative leader or stand elsewhere with him perhaps, women across this province have said: enough is enough. Madam Speaker, enough is enough.

Thank you.

Bill 13

An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future

[Adjourned debate May 2: Mrs. Aheer]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

An Hon. Member: He's found his voice today.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members.

We will now continue with debate. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for sharing some decorum in this House.

Madam Speaker, I rise today to speak to the second reading of Bill 13. At the end of the day the reason we are here today, this legislation, Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, is in front of us because the government is rapidly and, some would argue, irresponsibly phasing out reliable, cost-effective coal-fired electricity generation, the baseload we just and we must need to allow for an orderly transition and a new energy balance, and pushing forward with renewable power generation with no regard for the reliability of our electricity system. I call this a disorderly transition doomed to failure on the shoulders and backs of hard-working Albertans.

Now, Madam Speaker, in order to attract the necessary investment to replace the baseload which has been lost from the ever-reliable coal-fired electricity generation facilities and those towns which provide it to us, this government will change Alberta's electricity market from an energy-only market to a capacity market. It seems like the fallout from the accelerated coal phase-out just keeps coming back again and again and again into this Legislature.

Madam Speaker, let's backtrack a little and look what brought us to this bemusing point in the first place. As much as this government likes to point fingers and say that it was actually the Harper government that phased out coal-fired electricity and are the ones to blame for this mess, that just is not true. Yes, the federal government, in their efforts to address emission reduction targets, implemented a plan which phased out 12 coal-fired electricity-generating plants. Twelve. These 12 plants were scheduled to be phased out by 2029 as per the federal agreement brought forward at the time. This was in line with the life cycle of these facilities as their end of life was estimated at 50 years.

However, Madam Speaker, the NDP took this a step further and included six newer plants in Alberta into a 2030 timeline, and I'll list them for the benefit of those in the House and those watching. Sheerness 1, Sheerness 2, Genesee 1, Genesee 2, Genesee 3, and Keephills 3 were all scheduled to operate well beyond 2029 under the federal government's agreement. Genesee 3 was supposed to operate all the way until 2055. That's a lot of baseload there. Keephills 3 was supposed to operate until 2061, providing inexpensive and reliable baseload power to Albertans even as we transition into a renewable world.

Before this government tries to once again shift the blame onto a previous Conservative federal government, as they are extremely fond of doing, just remember that with these two plants this government cut off 56 collective years of stable, reliable, inexpensive electricity generation just to prove a point, a point on the shoulders of hard-working Albertans, that their climate leadership plan would earn us social licence. How is that working for us, Madam Speaker? And for what? For social licence that has yet to matter to anyone opposing our energy industry and the environmental lobby, foreign-funded enviroactivists, no less, who settle for nothing less than the complete decimation of the industry, which has played such a pivotal role in building Alberta and, more recently, Canada into what it is today through the generation of wealth and jobs, transfer payments, funding of health, education, and creating prosperity not just for this province but for this country.

Not only is this phase-out an ideological decision, Madam Speaker; it is and will continue to be a very, very expensive one for Albertans. It's been estimated that it cost the NDP a paltry $1.36 billion in compensation just for the asset value loss on the phase-out of these six remaining coal-fired plants. But what is not included is the loss of many, many other sources of revenue: corporate taxes; personal income taxes for those who will look back as previous employees of this industry; royalties on the coal, which I think is about equal on an annual basis to some of the compensation and some of the funding that is going to those – I think two years of royalties is all they're getting to try and transition into a new economy – and, of course, all the other economic multipliers too numerous to quantify, as those funds and those dollars go into the economy and are spent and respend by the people in those towns.

Just think of the decimation of those communities when they lose those jobs, lose that economic activity. I worry for those towns that are the hosts of those coal-fired electricity-generating plants. Madam Speaker, $1.36 billion and all the other multipliers and other sources of income and taxes and economic multipliers that I mentioned: that sounds like a lot of schools and roads and hospitals and an incalculable number of teachers, engineers, nurses, and doctors who would work at those facilities were we able to build them with money that we actually have, not with the red ink that this government is so fond of writing their cheques with.

Additionally, the government likes to talk about converting some of the coal-fired plants to natural gas. Great idea. But this is only a stopgap measure for impacted communities as the government kills off their major source of employment and leaves them hanging. I think I mentioned to the Minister of Culture and Tourism that he'll have a great new asset, the ghost towns of Alberta as a new NDP tourist attraction. Ghost towns. Many of us have visited those from a previous generation across this province.

However, we all know that these converted facilities are not as efficient as brand new combined-cycle natural gas power plants. A pretty simple concept. Not really what an effective transition should look like, but as I said, they decided disorderly transition, with many unintended consequences, as only this NDP government can be so adept at.

Natural gas plants are much less labour intensive than coal-fired plants, which means, Madam Speaker – guess what? – fewer jobs in those facilities and in those communities. No need for coal mining operations, of course, unless this government just intends to export the problem around the globe. Now, isn't that the height of greenhouse gas hypocrisy?

Which brings me to one of my next major problems with this legislation, Madam Speaker, and this government's overall approach to the electricity system. The NDP through their bungled electricity strategy have made life more expensive for families and businesses in Alberta. Not only is that burden going to be on the shoulders of our families and struggling families, in many cases unemployed families – I think the number was 152,600 unemployed in Alberta and the families that they represent – but also the businesses that we try and attract by being competitive, by attracting businesses and investment to this province. That stable baseload of electricity power is highly important to that competitiveness, Madam Speaker.

To make things even worse for consumers, this legislation only adds to the problem by transferring more risk away from generators with the smoke and mirrors for consumers and cap rate schemes, but at the end of the day, Madam Speaker, there is only one taxpayer. They are the very same person as the consumer. Robbing Peter to pay Peter indeed. A curious and manipulative, ideologically driven arrangement that actually harms Albertans and their ability to put food on their table, to pay those mortgages, those mortgage-paying jobs we always hear about, and then to attract the businesses we need in this province to create the jobs, to take those unemployed Albertans off the unemployment rolls.

As we know, the NDP wants to force renewable electricity on the Alberta market whether anyone has concerns or not. We've heard earlier today about consultation, too little and too late. Unintended consequences be damned as long as it fits the ideological narrative, divorced from any concept of good old Alberta common sense. We see it time and time again with this government's burdensome policies, regulations, and costly irresponsible actions. More winning ways borrowed from Kathleen Wynne, perhaps. It is their way, their vision through the myopic lens of the NDP world view that is guiding this misguided strategy.

Madam Speaker, any alarms raised by experts, past senior bureaucrats, or this opposition around the stability of the electricity system and the risk to Alberta consumers, a great risk to Alberta consumers and to taxpayers, are ignored and summarily dismissed. And it's not like the opposition are the only ones saying these things, Madam Speaker. An October 2016 report from the Alberta Electric System Operator, also known as AESO, stated:

Without investment in new firm generation (or equivalent but alternative sources of firm supply such as demand response, etc.) to replace retiring coal-fired electricity, the market will be unable to support increasing volumes of intermittent renewables and provide a healthy reserve margin to manage through a wide range of system conditions. System reliability will be compromised.

That is very troubling to me, Madam Speaker, and I think it should be to everyone in this House and all Albertans, our electricity expert telling us that we will have a compromised electricity system and compromised reliability for consumers and businesses in this province as we hopefully move back into economic growth, not the up, up, up we hear from the other side but real, true economic growth through the attraction of business and investment.

Despite these warnings the government went ahead with Bill 27 in November of 2016 and set the target for 30 per cent renewable electricity generation. In doing so, the NDP purposely and perhaps purposefully compromised the electrical system's reliability and did so without a guarantee that the natural gas peaker plants would be built to produce electricity when, as we always say, the sun doesn't shine and the wind doesn't blow.

Which brings us back to the reason we need this legislation in the first place, the reason it's being brought in front of us. Once this government imploded the system in place, litigated themselves into a corner, and pushed ahead with their misguided agenda, they realized they would need to move to a capacity market to attract any investment at all, the same people that they've been facing lawsuits with and launching lawsuits against, the same people that they now want to have as partners. They've had to go to a capacity market to attract some investment to give the baseload that we all know we need.

Essentially, this government has now given Albertans a choice between high electricity prices with volatility and high risk or higher electricity prices with stability and lower risk. Higher electricity prices, Madam Speaker: does that sound like a story we've heard all too often from Ontario, the pleas from people there who can't afford to pay their electricity bills anymore, their electricity bills higher than their mortgage payments? All this because they tried to force renewables, a disorderly transition into the market, and shut down coal at an unnecessarily rapid pace, which went far above and beyond what the federal government had implemented. No one wants the disaster that is Ontario's electricity system. You win some, you lose some, as some might say. In just a few months maybe that government there and their ideological allies will face the music. Maybe we'll get there one day in this province as well.

3:30

No one wants ratepayers to be paying for power plants that sit idle and don't run, just in case for when the sun doesn't shine and the wind doesn't blow. We know that that's the way it works. We know that we have short days in the winter. We know that the wind is not always blowing at the time when we need the peak-demand power. But, as always, this government is leaving a number of the important details to sketchy regulations and is asking us, so far, to trust them and their judgment. Well, Madam Speaker, that ship sailed $96 billion ago.

I understand that at the appropriate stages in debate we will likely see some positive suggestions brought forward by some of my hon. colleagues, and I hope that this government is prepared to listen to these reasonable suggestions, Madam Speaker. This might at least recognize some of the many concerns I'm hearing from Albertans, your constituents and mine. Albertans should not be paying for the reckless decisions of this government, not today, not next year, not for a generation, as seems to be the chosen path and pattern of this government.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. I will not be supporting this bill.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very happy to stand and speak to second reading of Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future. This bill is about delivering safe, reliable, sustainable, and affordable electricity to Albertans. This bill is also about attracting investment and preparing for a low-carbon future. It's about protecting Albertans from electricity price spikes.

This legislation will modernize Alberta's electricity system, transitioning our energy-only market to a capacity market. The move to a capacity market is highly recommended by current and potential energy investors as well as external experts, consumer groups, and the Alberta Electric System Operator. Madam Speaker, David Erickson, president and CEO of the Alberta Electric System Operator, states:

After thorough analysis, the AESO concluded that the current energy-only market will not ensure that Alberta has a reliable electricity system in the future. There has been a growing reluctance for developers to invest in energy-only markets and this global trend was a critical factor in our recommendation to move to a capacity market.

A capacity market system will make life better for all Albertans. A capacity market will be a benefit for both consumers and investors. A capacity market will provide consumers with a greater price stability as opposed to the volatile price spikes Albertans have endured in the past. A capacity market is a welcome concept for competition, innovation as well as private investment.

This government, on this side of the House, has been working with stakeholders to come up with a state-of-the-art capacity market for Alberta, made in Alberta for Albertans, a system which will ensure certainty and confidence. With predictability and stability comes increased investment certainty. This is a made-in-Alberta approach to a proven system used around the world. Capacity markets are currently serving tens of millions of customers in more than 30 jurisdictions around the world, including the United States and the United Kingdom.

Back in November 2016 our government made an announcement that it would create a capacity market for electricity. The government committed that the new market would be in place in 2021. In order to meet this commitment, changes need to be made to a number of acts and regulations in 2018. If passed, the Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future will lay the groundwork for a more stable electricity system by creating a capacity market, which will increase investor confidence, protect consumers from breaches of service quality and compliance standards, and at the same time provide more options for Albertans to generate their own electricity from renewable or alternative sources. The act encompasses several initiatives, including a transition to a capacity market. This transition means greater price stability for everyday Alberta families as well as more revenue certainty for companies, a win-win for everyone.

Madam Speaker, in 2017 over 2,000 Albertans wrote to the Utilities Consumer Advocate regarding billing issues. Albertans were asking for change, and this act proposes to make those changes. The Alberta Utilities Commission would be able to issue penalties, much like tickets such as speeding tickets or traffic tickets, instead of slow and often expensive hearings. The Alberta Utilities Commission would have the authority to act quickly and resolve issues with service providers.

While most customers experience few problems with retail electricity and natural gas services and bills, those who do experience issues have not always felt properly supported. The Utilities Consumer Advocate continues to receive complaints on inaccurate bills, which shows a need for more efficient enforcement of utility customer service quality standards. If passed, this act would provide for the Alberta Utilities Commission to issue specified penalties to electricity and natural gas providers for particular breaches.

The Alberta Utilities Commission would be able to enforce minor breaches of its rules, orders, and decisions in a timely, efficient, and effective manner, and this measure will help ensure that electricity and natural gas providers are more accountable to Alberta customers, all of which will improve the level of service Albertans receive from their electricity and natural gas service providers. Jim Wachowich from Consumers' Coalition of Alberta stated:

As an independent and residential-focused consumer group, we're encouraged by legislation that's designed to protect Alberta utility consumers. We're pleased to see the government views efficient and effective consumer protection as an important part of the public interest.

The act will address the utility asset disposition. The utility asset disposition refers to who pays for any losses and who profits when a regulated utility asset is either sold, destroyed, or is no longer being used to provide customers with utility service. Madam Speaker, there has been a lack of government policy and legislation on how dispositions of utility assets are to be addressed. A 2006 Supreme Court of Canada decision found that Alberta's legislation did not provide the Alberta Utilities Commission with clear legal authority to allocate gains and losses of disposed assets. As a result, currently the Alberta Utilities Commission is prevented from allocating gains and losses between utility customers and shareholders.

All financial gains and losses associated with an asset disposition are presently allocated to the utility, which puts an increased risk on the utility, which results in investor uncertainty. The increased risk can result in higher borrowing costs for utilities, which potentially leads to higher utility rates for Alberta customers. Without An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, which clarifies the AUC's authority, legal challenges between utilities and the Alberta Utilities Commission will likely continue. Utility asset dispositions are complex issues which require the Alberta Utilities Commission to have flexibility in making decisions and the ability to take all public interest considerations into account.

Madam Speaker, in the past there have been many lengthy court battles over who pays for losses and who is the recipient of profits when utilities dispose of assets. Industry is asking for clarity. This policy will give the Alberta Utilities Commission the authority to decide, and of course more certainty equals more investor confidence.

Madam Speaker, key outcomes of the utility asset disposition policy include ensuring that customers are not subject to unfair risks and costs, providing a more stable investment climate for utilities, providing regulatory certainty for stakeholders, and avoiding further litigation on this issue where possible. This policy is consistent with the approaches currently used in other jurisdictions throughout North America that do not have Crown corporations providing utility services, including Ontario, Nova Scotia as well as jurisdictions in the United States.

To enact this policy, proposed amendments would give the Alberta Utilities Commission the authority to make utility asset disposition decisions in the public interest. These decisions can be made – but they would not be limited to this – through consideration of social, economic, and environmental effects and on a case-by-case basis, and the Alberta Utilities Commission is being given authority to develop rules for which considerations it may take into account when deciding the allocation of costs and benefits between utility customers and shareholders.

Madam Speaker, I support Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future. We are taking the important steps necessary to secure Alberta's electricity future. Our approach to modernize the system will provide stability for everyday Albertan families and provide certainty for investors. We are making our electricity system more reliable and are better protecting Albertans.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll now call on the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Why, thank you so much, Madam Speaker. It is an honour and a pleasure to speak here today about Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future. It used to not be every day that the NDP were trying to recover from legislation they bungled up in the past, but it seems to be becoming more and more frequent recently. This government's destructive policies have caused the need for this bill, and although I am glad to see the government take ownership of their mistakes, it saddens me that we have arrived at this place at all.

We recall from last session when, despite warning, the government brought in bills 27 and 34, which fundamentally changed the way our electricity market operates and introduced instability and unpredictability. Not only that, but electricity prices are simply more expensive for Albertans, and unfortunately we on this side of the House have lost trust in their ability to fix what we've wronged in Alberta's electricity market.

The closing of six coal-fired power plants cost Alberta's hard-working taxpayers $1.36 billion in order to convert them to natural gas. Not only is the burden being felt by those closest to those power plants who rely on their jobs at the plants in order to pay their bills and take care of their families and save for retirement, but that cost is also being shared by all of Alberta's taxpayers.

This tax season I'm sure we all wondered what our hard-earned dollars were being spent on, who they were benefiting, and if they were being spent in the most efficient way, seeing as the NDP's policies have driven costs up for all Albertans. And that's at the pump, on their bills, and just about everywhere. I'm wondering why all of their policies have simply been making life more expensive for Albertans. In fact, we have so little faith on this side of the aisle that the UCP has written to the Auditor General asking for the full cost accounting of the NDP's whole electricity fiasco. The taxpayers deserve accountability, and as legislators in charge of the welfare of Albertans it is our duty to stay liable to those we represent.

However, that is not what happened when for months and months the communities most closely affected by the government's policies heard nothing at all about what they were in store for or what would happen to them when the plants that they relied on for their employment and livelihood would close. Families cannot simply uproot their lives and leave their communities, but without a power plant and without employment that community is no longer a viable place for them to live. As part of the federal agreement Alberta was to phase out 12 coal-fired generating plants by 2029, which gave much more time for a reasonable transition, for families to make plans and not have to scramble to figure out what comes next. This was thoughtful and mindful of families, giving them time to transition. Albertans cannot change their entire direction each time the NDP wants to try their hand in another sector just to see what would happen.

Instead, this government would phase out the six remaining coal-fired power plants that would operate past 2029. Some of these coal plants are practically brand new. Keephills 3 was supposed to run until 2061, and Genesee 3 was supposed to run until 2055.

Coal conversion to natural gas is not as efficient as brand new combined-cycle natural gas power plants, but of course the NDP want to force renewable electricity on the Alberta market, and they want to do it fast and with disregard for families who depended on this for their livelihood. Again, the NDP's policies have cost us $1.36 billion to shut these plants early and convert them to natural gas. There was no consideration of taxpayers, the norm we have come to expect at this point from this government.

The point when the government started disregarding the best interests of Albertans and narrowed their sights on a climate leadership plan, Albertans were the ones left to deal with the aftermath. Now we're seeing them trying to clean up their mistakes on the electricity debacle, a system where they phased out coal-fired power and introduced wind power in much too tight a time frame, causing chaos in the electricity market. As per this government's decision an energy-only market was no longer an option since the $1,000 per megawatt hour cap on electricity prices would have to rise to $5,000 a megawatt hour in order to attract the investment it would need to keep the system reliable. Looking to their friends in Premier Wynne's Ontario system, this government knew they could not politically afford Alberta's high power bills being five times higher than they already were.

The Alberta Electric System Operator, the legislation-mandated operator connecting generators with transmission to run the electricity market and keep adequate electricity flowing, ran many models, which included the high use of intermittent renewables to generate electricity in Alberta. Their modelling showed that the renewable electricity program will decrease the revenue needed for all generators to recoup investment and earn a profit, thus deterring investment. In fact, they released a report in October 2016 which also stated that "system reliability will be compromised." The NDP had advice and more advice to tell them what would happen, and they still went ahead with their plans.

The AESO report said:

Without investment in new firm generation (or equivalent but alternative sources of firm supply such as demand response, etc.) to replace retiring coal-fired electricity, the market will be unable to support increasing volumes of intermittent renewables and provide a healthy reserve margin to manage through a wide range of system conditions. System reliability will be compromised.

They then introduced Bill 27 the next month. This bill set the target for 30 per cent renewables. The NDP was entirely aware that they were compromising the reliability of the electrical system, yet they proceeded anyway. Furthermore, this government did this without a guarantee that the peaker plants would be built to produce electricity when the sun doesn't shine and when the wind doesn't blow. The foresight is clearly lacking from this government.

This then drove the need for the capacity market, which we're now seeing, which results in medium risk and medium costs, except, of course, the $1.36 billion associated with shutting down these coal plants early and converting them to natural gas.

However, after this government messed up this file so badly, the electricity stakeholders – the capacity market generators, the AESO, the Market Surveillance Administrator, the investors, and consumer groups – all demanded that this government fix their wrongs and somewhat restabilize the market in the only way left. This government has given Albertans two choices. They can choose either high electricity prices with volatility or higher electricity prices with stability and lower risk, all of this because they tried to force renewables into the market and close coal in too short a time frame, with no forethought.

The capacity market will mean higher power bills for consumers. The government has put in place a 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour cap, and they'll subsidize your power bill should power prices rise above that 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour. They believe that they're protecting ratepayers because they will be using tax dollars to pay the rest of your power bill. Where do those tax dollars come from? Hmm. Ah, yes. From the same place that this government gets all of its money, from the taxpayer, the exact same person who is defined as the ratepayer.

This government will make it seem as though they will take the burden off, but that money still comes out of Albertans' pockets, and that seems deceitful. This is merely a roundabout way of taking more money from hard-working Albertans in order to protect themselves from suffering the same fate as their friends in Ontario. The ratepayer will not see that cost coming out of their pocket for their power with their bills about the same, but that same taxpayer most definitely will.

Madam Speaker, listing the cost directly on the bill allows for Albertans to transparently see what is going on and to watch for any wrongdoing by the government. However, this government doesn't want ratepayers peeking behind the curtain and will allow taxpayers to subsidize their mistakes.

We also need to recognize that while wind and solar energy are important, they're technologically a long way from being interchangeable in terms of cost, reliability, and capacity with coal or natural gas. Alberta needs a steady basic stream of electricity from baseload combined-cycle natural gas and simple-cycle natural gas in order to begin to replace coal and to provide the backup necessary for renewable forms of energy. Renewables like wind and solar on their own are not reliable enough to be considered as viable options to address the AESO's requirement for a 15 per cent reserve margin. This reserve margin is essential to the electricity market in case demand for electricity spikes. The AESO has determined that wind and solar cannot be used as part of this reserve margin due to how fickle they are. Again, there must be a backup in place if the wind is not blowing and the sun is not shining.

Now, I would have thought – and I'm sure many others have thought the same – that this government would learn from their mistakes. After rushing out timelines for the coal phase-out and implementing the renewables margin, which caused the chaos in the first place, they're attempting to simply implement the capacity market in two years as opposed to three to six years. I just continue to lose trust in this government when I see them continuing down this path.

Madam Speaker, this government has bungled this file immensely. They left no other choice but to move to a capacity market. It is unfair that Albertans will be left to pay for their mistakes, however many more shots they'll take at trying to fix those mistakes. I am deeply disappointed that this government would act so recklessly and with such little forethought, but I'll let all Albertans know that Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition will continue to hold this government to account on behalf of them.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The hon. member made mention of Ontario and some of the experience there. I'm just wondering if he would comment on that because I'm a little concerned with the amount of intensity that we see from the opposite side in copying Ontario. We are copying their financial experiences. We seem to be bound to go down the road of copying Ontario's electricity policy, which has made their electricity one of the most expensive in the country. I think they're so obsessed with it, in fact, that I was a little surprised last night to hear the Finance minister make a little slip of the tongue, maybe a telling one, where he welcomed about a thousand businesspeople to a dinner on behalf of the Premier and the province of Ontario. It was a slip of the tongue; I grant that. But why are we so obsessed with the province of Ontario? I just wonder if the member could comment on that.

Mr. Yao: Why, thank you, my good man. I really appreciate your question. I have to be honest with you that I find what Ontario did to be extremely complex. You know, the desire to have renewable energy is a great vision, quite honestly. We all want clean air, clean earth, clean water, but there are certain practicalities that don't necessarily correlate with these thoughts. Certainly, our technology still has to catch up for a lot of these things to be viable. But Ontario demonstrated wholeheartedly the rush to try to do that, and the end result was that they are billions of dollars in debt right now, and they're costing the people of Ontario in extremely high tax bills.

We have just discovered very recently that the Auditor General of Ontario has done an audit of Ontario's finances, and they found that they were hiding money, that they were using skulduggery in their accounting to hide a lot of the real costs of this. I hope this government doesn't pick up any of those thoughts and try do the same thing. I have more faith in our people here, I hope, but again I can't help but wonder if you're heading down that same path. It would be very dreadful if we did.

To answer the good Member for Lacombe-Ponoka's question, I'd have to say that Ontario just did it in the poorest possible way. They tried to really push their ideologies, full of rainbows and unicorns. It just isn't the case. The reality wasn't there. You know, it's disappointing that we're sacrificing our own economic future across this nation for, obviously, great ideals of clean air, clean earth, clean water, but they are currently not sustainable, currently not as achievable as we hoped. That's a shame.

You know how Canada really impacts the world? When our people are working and we're putting our kids to school and we have this highly educated population who doesn't have to worry about putting a roof over their head and putting food in their mouth and are getting a great education. Those are the ones that travel all around the world, those kids. They're the ones that preach our Canadian values to the rest of the world. They're the ones that sew those maple leaves onto their backpacks so that they can proudly say that they're Canadian, and they go volunteer all over the world.

We spread our values that way, and we demonstrate to the world about all the great things that we have to offer and what we can share with them. If anyone here has travelled, you'll find that the other nations of this world aren't quite at the level that we are of being socially conscious. I mean, we have a government right now full of social justice warriors, but if you go to any other nation, they are few and far between because they're still struggling with their economies. They're still struggling to ensure that their people are employed. They're still struggling to make sure that people are fed. The world out there is not as clean and as ideal as we hope.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This is Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future. That is the name of the bill. I would say that it's a very descriptive name, but it really doesn't tell you what the bill involves. Now, that's an important thing to bring up because a lot of times what happens is that when you put a bill forward, in the name of the bill usually you're trying to describe what you're doing. Now, it is my understanding that Bill 13 will change Alberta's electricity market from an energy-only market to a capacity market. That is the goal of the bill. It makes sense that the name of this bill probably should have been An Act to Change Alberta's Electricity Market to a Capacity Market. I think that's a reasonable thing that we should have had as a name for the bill.

Mr. Mason: Is that an amendment?

Mr. Cyr: Well, you know, the House leader has said that he'd be willing to put an amendment through should I do that, and I'm very thankful for his voluntary – now, for me, though, what I have to say is that, to be honest, I don't know what a capacity market is. I would argue that many Albertans don't know what a capacity market is. I also would argue that many Albertans wouldn't know what an energy-only market is. So for me I'd like to take some time today for the record to go through an article. It was written by Adam James. The paper that he did this for is the energy collective. The name of the article is How a Capacity Market Works. It was written on June 14, 2013, so this not a recent article, but having read through the article, I do believe that I have an understanding of what the author is trying to get through.

Now, I would like to start off with a quote from the article, right off the bat. "I have a confession to make. I am one of those folks who consistently write on wonky energy things without ever taking the time to write out simple explanations of the basic concepts or why they matter." This piece is a brief description of what electricity capacity markets are and how they work.

Now, you can tell that Mr. James has got to be very much an expert in the field because here I am trying to understand the basic concept, and he's showing that this is something that is simple. Having gone through this article, I can say that if there is an error in my interpretation, I would hope that the government would correct me on this because it's not my intent to misinform Albertans.

What we're talking about is:

Part One: What is a Capacity Market?

There is a difference between energy and capacity, and power plants are compensated for both because both are important to maintaining the electrical system in different ways.

Here is the distinction. A power plant generates electricity that you use in your home – and it needs to be paid for that electricity. This happens in the energy market. In these markets electricity is like any other commodity, bought wholesale and [then] resold to consumers at retail prices.

This is just saying that we have a group of companies or a company that makes electricity. Then what happens is that it sells that to a market, and then it gets resold to the consumer. That seems to be pretty simple, and I can get onboard with that one.

However, some grid operators are experimenting with capacity markets, or “forward markets,” which direct investment a few years ahead of when electricity needs to be delivered. This is important, since power plants are expensive and take a long time to build; adding [an] additional risk that they may not even be used can obviously discourage investment. Hopefully, these markets create long-term price signals for all resources.

The basic idea is that power plants receive compensation for capacity, or the power that they will provide at some point in the future. The way these markets are run in the PJM territory, there is an auction every year that has a delivery date three years away. This auction is called the Base Residual Auction. Then, there are smaller balancing auctions every year leading up to the delivery date where bidders can buy or sell their commitments. These are called “Incremental Auctions,” and occur just in case a power plant cannot meet its commitment, and needs to purchase replacement capacity from another power plant.

There’s a lot to be unpacked in that one paragraph. I have to say that clearly there’s a lot to just getting the origin of this going.

Now, he moves on.

One quick note here: in these auctions, there is no functional difference between a megawatt of power from a power plant and a megawatt of reduced power from efficiency or demand response. So although I’ve been saying “power plants” to help picture this process, demand-side resources can also bid into the auction.

What I am interpreting this to say is that we have different ways of creating power. We have wind. We have solar. We have coal. We have gas. There are a variety of ways of creating the power. That’s part 1.

Now, part 2 goes on to saying:

How Do Capacity Markets Work?

Every resource bids into the auction at its total cost of operation. Since power plants depreciate over time, this bid can sometimes be [lower] if a plant has been around for a long time. This makes sense, since the capital investments in the plant have been paid off and the total cost of operations is mostly employees and fuel. New plants total cost of operation is higher at first, since it would include the capital costs plus the operational costs.

What it’s saying in this statement is that new plants cost more money. This is not shocking for most people. They go out and buy a new car. Obviously, you’re going to have a payment on that car. Then you’re also going to have the maintenance on that car, the fuel for that car, washing the car. You’re going to have all of these little costs. But if you have an older car, it’s potentially going to cost you less because you no longer have those initial payments for the new car. So what they’re trying to say here is that new plants cost more money to operate. I think everybody can get around that.

This means that what price a power plant bids into the market can vary quite dramatically. A 30 year old nuclear plant could actually bid in very low and a wind turbine that has zero fuel costs could have a much higher bid.

Again, what we’ve got here is that if suddenly we bring on a wind turbine versus an old coal plant, like what we’ve got here in Alberta, the cost of producing that power could be a lot higher for that wind turbine if it is a new build. If that coal plant is an old build and has had time to depreciate, you’re going to find that it’s actually very low cost to operate. So what happens here is that when those two sources of power are bidding for supplying power, the coal plants will be able to bid at a lot lower cost than the wind turbines or the solar.

Moving on.

So what happens is that the grid operator holds an auction based on projections for what electricity demand will be in three years. When I say “electricity demand,” I actually mean peak demand for that entire year, plus a bit extra as a buffer (called a capacity margin).

What happens is that they actually provide a picture. Unfortunately, this is one thing that I can’t show, but what we’ve got here: if you would picture steps going up to a door and if you think of these steps as bids that need to be able to get into that doorway, which would be that peak demand, the lowest bid on those steps would be the bottom of the stairs. And as the bids increase, the value of what they get at the top will be the bid that all of the steps get for the cost of that power.

Now, I know this is confusing, but let’s go on to this wonderful diagram. What they’ve got here is – this is just an example, and I think this is a well-written example, actually – that they’re saying that 550 megawatts of power is the top threshold of the staircase. That’s what you’re trying to get to. Now, you’ve got a wind turbine that is at $30 per megawatt. You’ve got another wind turbine at $50, natural gas at $100, natural gas at $110. Then we’ve got something that’s called efficiency – I’m not sure what that is, unfortunately – and that’s sitting at about $130, and a coal plant at $150 and another coal plant at $160.

What happens here is that they all bid into the pool. We start with the low one. We start with the wind turbine, the wind turbine. We go to the gas plant, the gas plant, then the efficiency, and then the coal plant. And then what happens is that you meet that wonderful threshold of 550 megawatts. That last coal plant at $160 per megawatt would have to, unfortunately, not get its bid. What happens is that everybody below that threshold of 550 megawatts would all be paid at the $150 level. That’s the capacity market, as the way I understand it.

Now, again, if I am wrong, I would encourage the government to correct me. What I’m trying to do here is understand it for myself, and I’m trying to make sure that when we’re on the record here, I’m always putting forward very clear and concise information to the public.

Now, they go on to say in the same example – and I’ll read it word for word.

Pretend that the grid operator had to meet 550 megawatts of demand. This is absurdly low of course, it’s closer to 170,000 in PJM, but the process is much easier to [understand] with smaller numbers. The grid operator will then hold an auction to try to get the 550 megawatts of demand met at the lowest cost to consumers.

So then every resource bids into the auction in at its total cost of operation. In our hypothetical auction below, I’ve arranged the stack . . .

This is the stack I was talking about.

. . . from lowest to highest cost bids, and drawn a line at the point where . . . [the] capacity has been acquired to meet that demand.

Again, that’s that 550 megawatts.

As you can see here, the cheapest resource . . .

In this example that they gave, as I told you before, it’s $30.

. . . is one wind turbine bidding in 50 MW of capacity at $30 per MW. But wait!

They’ve got an exclamation mark because they’re making this sound very exciting.

Just because they bid $30 per MW, that does not mean that the turbine receives 30 per MW. All it means is that the wind turbine is now committed . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to thank the member opposite for his remarks. I just had a really quick question for him. I actually have the exact article that he's reading from in front of me right now. Basically, the next paragraph – I'll quote from it here – is:

The other story here is that in capacity markets, lower cost resources can have the effect of suppressing prices for all of the resources since they ensure that demand can be met at a lower cost . . . For a company who owns lower cost resources, it is good. Consumers always benefit from lower prices.

Capacity markets are important. They are the firing line for the electricity system of the future, because they direct and encourage investments in different kinds of assets.

I guess, just to finish his thought, if we're going through the entire article here, does he agree with the article that capacity markets are important and that they're the future of energy markets?

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, I actually have to say that at this point I am still reviewing the bill, and I am myself trying to get through exactly how this works. I have stated this from the very beginning, so this is not a shock to this House.

What I would like to do, though, is continue reading where I was at here. Now, what we have is:

As you can see here, the cheapest resource is one wind turbine bidding in 50 MW of capacity at $30 per MW. But wait! Just because they bid in $30 per MW, that does not mean that the turbine receives 30 per MW. All it means is that the wind turbine is now committed to have 50 MW of power available in 3 years from now. Looking further up the stack, another turbine bids in 50 MW at $50 per MW. Even higher up the stack, you can see efficiency bid into the auction at $130 per MW.

That is for a coal plant. The bid is at $130 per megawatt, and another coal plant bids in at $150 per megawatt.

So what compensation do they receive? In this example, all of the resources, including the wind turbine at the bottom, receive $150 per MW. This is called the "clearing price," and it is set by the most expensive unit needed to meet demand. In this case, that is the coal plant.

In this case the diagram shows the coal plant in orange.

This is important to understand the dynamics between . . . [the] resources in the market.

In this example, efficiency actually displaced a coal plant (shown in purple) whose total cost of operation was $160 per MW. Think about it this way; if efficiency had not bid into the market, then demand would have been 100 MW higher and [the] coal plant would have been called on to meet [the] demand. Then the clearing price would have been $160 per MW.

Now, I know this is really hard to be able to understand without seeing the diagram, and I'm sorry. As my colleague across the aisle said, it is easy to pull up the article should you decide that you would like to.

Now, I do understand that we do have a government side that says that this is the best way of selling electricity. Now what we are seeing, though, is a retirement of assets that have low depreciation costs. This is important because that means that they are very efficient right now and very cheap for us to be able to produce power from. When the government decides to retire these assets early, some of them, as we heard from my other colleague, 20, 30 years before the time that they were supposed to – what happens here is that we had capacity bidding at a lot lower rates than they would be if we shut them down early. This is where the capacity market is one that we need to acknowledge that if we had not retired those coal plants early, what we would be seeing right now would be lower electricity prices for both the energy-only . . . [The time limit for questions and comments expired]

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Because this article seems so riveting, can you please table it next week?

Mr. Cyr: I can.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you very much.

Are there any other members that would like to speak? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. As I always like to say when I rise to speak on a bill in this Chamber, it's my honour to be able to be here to speak today to Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future. As a result of the coal-fired generation phase-out and the push for renewable generation the NDP government have put in jeopardy the reliability of the electrical system in Alberta. In order to attract the necessary investment, in order to replace the baseload lost from coal, and, of course, for future growth, Bill 13 will change Alberta's electricity market from an energy-only market to a capacity market.

Now, in 2016 the government announced the creation of a capacity market. This bill, Bill 13, is not about renewables per se. It's about financing coal-to-gas conversions, new natural gas generation, and backup for renewables. Bill 13 is here to fix the mess-up from the coal phase-out, which made the grid unstable when 30 per cent of renewables under Bill 27 were included to be part of Alberta's daily energy use.

I think my colleague from Calgary-Foothills referred to the process as an attempt to put humpty dumpty back together again. The Alberta Electric System Operator contracts renewables capacity through the bid process. Now, as I understand the capacity market, it is a market that pays companies both for the capacity that they could offer the market even when their facilities are not operating plus the price they receive for the electricity they generate when operational. Interestingly, Albertans pay for capacity now, but that cost is bundled in with their monthly energy costs.

Under the new system, as I stated a moment ago, generators will receive two payments. The first one is a constant, steady payment for capacity to produce electricity, and the second is a separate payment for the electricity that the generator will produce. The minister has stated that changes were necessary to attract investment after the province shifts away from coal-fired power by 2030.

Now, coal-fired power makes up a little over 50 per cent of Alberta's electricity, so in order to offset that decline in the backbone of the electricity in Alberta, the province needs companies to build new generating stations. Those generating stations will also need to consistently produce about 8,000 megawatts of electricity by the same 2030. Of course, over the same period the province is also going to be looking for companies to invest in new renewable energy projects.

Madam Speaker, this whole situation started when this new government initiated a carbon tax and levied it to heavy industrial emitters. At the end of the day, it appears that the target for that tax, in a large part, was coal-fired power plants, that have created a large portion of Alberta's electrical use for some time.

Now, of course, the carbon tax was not something that the government included in their platform when they were running in 2015, so when the tax was levied to these companies that were energy generators using coal power, they opted out of their power purchase agreements because the contract that these energy-producing companies had with the province stated that they could do just that, opt out of their agreement with the province if any government made those agreements uncompetitive. So that is what they did. Of course, this government put on quite a show about how this was some kind of a backroom deal that was made and how they were going to correct this problem with their own agreements because all of the companies were exercising their right to turn back those contracts.

Now, of course, Alberta was on a timeline to phase out 12 of the coal-fired power plants by 2029 as it was. The federal government had set that goal previously. It was a thoughtful plan. Some of those plants were older and were going to be converted to natural gas or shut down anyway. You know, it seemed like a common-sense plan that the companies and the province agreed with. Then came the change of government and their determination to shut down all coal-fired plants in Alberta way ahead of schedule, all tied, of course, to what Trudeau number two called social licence.

Anyway, Madam Speaker, there were six of Alberta's plants that had actually been scheduled to be shut down much later, as late as 2061. Genesee 3 was to be shut down in 2055. These were considered to be state-of-the-art facilities, so of course there was some turmoil in the industry. As the power generation companies handed their contracts, legally so, back to the Balancing Pool, the whole power generation system was in a bit of a risky position. The cost to the Balancing Pool turned out to be $70 million a month, $70 million a month. At the end of the day, the pool lost an astounding $2 billion. The government poured a lot of money into the Balancing Pool while they tried to come up with a way to stop the bleeding, a lot of money that Albertans are paying for.

On top of the hundreds of millions of dollars that Albertans are forced to pay for their actions, we have several coal communities that were of the understanding, of course, that their coal plants would be operational for some time to come. Many, many Albertans will be forced out of work decades earlier than they had planned for. Anyway, we've all be sitting here for the last three years, and we have all seen this play out over that time.

I don't think there's any question that the government is going to make electricity more expensive for Albertans, and Albertans know it. The electricity price is already starting to move up, and people are noticing that. I've noticed it myself. How far the price of electricity will go is not known. That is kind of the scary part here. Coal conversion to natural gas for these plants is not as efficient as brand new combined-cycle natural gas power plants, of course. The conversion of these plants is costing Albertans in the neighbourhood of $1.36 billion to shut them down early and do a conversion to natural gas. Madam Speaker, this government was bent on forcing renewable energy on the good people of Alberta, and it appears that they were prepared to do that at any cost.

This has concerned the UCP enough that we've written the Auditor General in regard to the NDP's tampering with the electricity system. We asked for his outlook on the full costs and implications of the power purchase agreement losses as well as the province's decision to phase out coal-fired electricity and its cap on electricity rates. Clearly, Madam Speaker, this is something that will affect all Albertans to one degree or another. The position of this independent officer is important.

Now, the Alberta Electric System Operator ran many models in its quest to determine how the change to electricity provision in Alberta would shake out, including the use of intermittent renewable to be part of the electricity generation in this province. It appears that the Alberta Electric System Operator modelling shows something that may have been expected by folks on this side of the House . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2) the Assembly stands adjourned until 1:30 on Monday afternoon. Have a good weekend.

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:30 p.m.]

The Deputy Speaker: Good evening. Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 5 An Act to Strengthen Financial Security for Persons with Disabilities

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 5 today. I'm so enthralled with the debate. I'm just so curious if the minister might have a few comments.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you, Member, for that. I do not have extensive comments, but I want to say that I'm pleased to see Bill 5 come to Committee of the Whole. This bill is important to our government, to many Albertans with disabilities and their families. Bill 5 will help to ensure that Albertans with disabilities are treated fairly and will support families that are planning for their children's future.

Bill 5 proposes two amendments to make this a reality. First, Bill 5 amends the AISH Act to ensure trusts are exempt as an asset when determining eligibility for the AISH program. Secondly, there will now be a one-year grace period if someone receives a large payment such as an inheritance to invest the payment into an exempt asset. This grace period will allow people time to make thoughtful decisions and plan for their future. People will now have time to seek advice and make good choices about how to invest their assets. They won't have to worry about losing their AISH benefits.

For decades the previous government's regressive policies were designed to keep people off AISH. We are working to ensure Albertans have clear access to the supports they need. Instead of making cuts to the program, we invested $103 million to ensure more Albertans have access to AISH. We are working to make the AISH program more accessible, user friendly, and fair. We are taking strong action to combat poverty and make life more affordable for Albertans who depend on AISH.

I want to thank my colleague the MLA for Calgary-Currie, who met with advocates and families of people with disabilities and heard their concerns. In response he championed changes to the AISH Act with a private member's bill introduced last fall. His bill didn't make it to final reading, but he highlighted the importance of this issue and a lack of fairness in the system that needs to be corrected.

As Minister of Community and Social Services I'm honoured to bring this bill forward. I look forward to this evening's discussion, and I encourage everyone to fully support this bill.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I'm not entirely sure how grateful I am that I waited, but I appreciate the minister's brief remarks this evening on what, surely, will be a wonderful time together as we debate this important piece of legislation.

I think that it's fair to begin some of my comments with some sort of general comments around Bill 5 and the importance of the legislation. I live in the constituency – Madam Chair, you'll know, the outstanding constituency – of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. In the community of Olds we have just an incredible, vibrant, diverse community and, in particular, a number of folks who are clients of community services. We have a number of just spectacular agencies that provide an incredible quality of life and build into the lives of those with disabilities. I am honoured to represent that constituency and, in particular, those individuals. I have a few of my absolute favourites that pop by my office on a weekly basis. On a Friday afternoon I'm certain that they'll come in and say a big hello, and it brightens my day.

Of course, we have Horizon school, which is a school that is part of the Chinook's Edge school division. They provide very specialized programming in a learning environment that is really second to none, and they do an incredible amount of work. So these sorts of issues are very near and dear to my heart. I also just recently had a number of constituents, some outstanding constituents, contact me about Henson trusts and their desire to be able to set those up. I responded to them that it was my expectation – of course, I would never presuppose a decision of the Assembly, because you just never do know what would happen, but I provided them my best guess – that, in fact, this piece of legislation would quite likely pass through the Assembly prior to the rising of the House. So they were very excited about their ability to do some preplanning for their family and their loved ones.

Now, as you'll know, Madam Chair, those individuals who are on AISH have the ability to earn some form of income and to not have that income have a negative impact on their ability to receive AISH payments. If they have a part-time job or whatever, where they earn additional to the exemption, then that has an impact on their AISH payment. That exemption, you will know, is $800 per month.

This evening, at some point in time here, I'm happy to move an amendment on this particular piece of legislation because I think that we have a good opportunity to try to make this legislation a little bit more robust. Inside the legislation there are some exemptions about what the income that an individual would receive from the trust can and cannot be used for. I think we should look at all avenues in which we can potentially help an individual. Currently the single exemption, for a single person or for two people if they both receive AISH and have no dependent children, is the first $800 of the total monthly net income. Following this amount, above the $800 up to $1,500 is 50 per cent exempt, for a maximum employment income exemption of $1,150.

Under the legislation that's before the House, an individual will now qualify for AISH if they have either a discretionary or a nondiscretionary trust in their name, but they would not qualify if they were drawing a set amount of monthly income from that trust. So an individual could do a number of things like repairs to their home, purchase a specialized vehicle, that sort of thing, and that would not have a negative impact on their AISH amount. But if they were receiving an income from the trust, that would potentially have a negative impact on their eligibility.

This amendment would bring income from the trust in line with the current legislation on income from employment. So if a client has income from a job, that money is exempt, but if they receive a monthly amount from the trust, that wouldn't be exempt and then, as such, would be clawed back, if you will. Those individuals with a trust would potentially be negatively impacted. This legislation, in my opinion, isn't applied fairly because if they had a job or some other form of income, particularly in the form of employment, it would be exempt, but here, if they have a trust that they could potentially be drawing a monthly income from, it isn't exempt and could then negatively impact the AISH payment.

I'm happy to table the amendment now, actually, Madam Chair, the original for the chair and the appropriate copies, and wait until you are ready to proceed.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A1.

Mr. Cooper: I feel that this is a small measure that could make a very large difference in the lives of those Albertans receiving AISH who also have the benefit of a trust. I think that it closes a significant loophole in the current legislation.

The NDP, you know, time and time again have made it clear with their minimum wage hike that they believe in what they call a living wage, yet under their government the cost of living has really increased, and the carbon tax has had such a negative impact on folks, particularly those on AISH. We have heard from a number of AISH advocates that AISH recipients are struggling for some of the most basic necessities, and the current legislation doesn't provide for those individuals to receive any monthly income from a trust – they would be negatively impacted – to be able to do these very, very, very basic things that they might like to do with the benefit of the trust.

The other thing that I might add, Madam Chair, is that we've heard from a number of stakeholders that this would be a very positive step towards protecting the financial security of Albertans receiving AISH. It is a very, very reasonable solution. It does not provide the ability for those receiving AISH to receive $800 from the trust as well as $800 from a form of employment. It would be a maximum amount of $800, so it doesn't provide any additional benefit that someone who doesn't have a trust then would not have available. I think this can be a very positive step forward. I think that it's reasonable. It creates fairness and also doesn't negatively impact those who may be able to benefit from a trust, the way that those who may be able to also have additional sources of income in the form of employment.

I urge the government and the minister to view the amendment for what it is; that is, a desire to assist those who have this trust. I also understand that there may be some nuance in regulation that would need to take place as a result of the amendment, but I think that's very reasonable for the minister to be able to deliver for these very, very important Albertans.

The Chair: Do any other members wish to comment on the amendment? Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much. I want to thank the member for this amendment. As always, it's a pleasure to rise in the House to speak about important issues like this. As the member was mentioning earlier, Madam Chair, we've had the wonderful opportunity to talk to a lot of people about this. This is a great bill to start off with, but just to add on to what the member was saying, we're wanting to look at protecting the financial security of these folks. As we know, there's been a lot of information that has come out recently with regard to how some of these folks that are on AISH are living. I'll get to that a little bit later, but this particular amendment would go a really long way to establishing and protecting that financial security of Albertans receiving AISH, because we don't want to have them be penalized for their parents' and their family's hard work in this particular situation. The reason for this entire bill is to make sure that parents can feel that should they pass, their children will be taken care of. This just adds an extra piece of financial security to that.

Currently, as I understand it, the single exemption for a single person, or two people if they both receive AISH and have dependent children, is the first $800 of the total monthly net income. Following this, an amount above $800 and up to $1,500 is 50 per cent exempt from their maximum employment income exemption of $1,150 per month. Under the current legislation before this House the individuals will now qualify for AISH if they either have a discretionary or a nondiscretionary trust in their name, but they wouldn't qualify if they were drawing out a set amount of money from that trust.

What we're wanting to accomplish with this, Madam Chair, is to be able to just set a monthly amount aside from that trust. The amendment would bring income from a trust in line with the current legislation on income from employment. This is actually a loophole that's in the legislation that we would like to see closed. Like I said, it's a good bill. This just helps to close that loophole and helps to make sure that Albertans who are receiving AISH, again, aren't penalized because their parents happened to put money away for them. We want to make sure that they have the ability to have that standard of living and to be able to live their best lives with that. There is a gap there that needs to be closed. It would make a huge difference, I believe, in the lives of Albertans.

The government has been talking significantly over the last two years to make it clear that the minimum wage hike, that they believe in, is what they call a living wage, but under the legislation right now as it stands, the government has increased carbon taxes and other economically detrimental policies. This has put an immense strain on the tight finances of AISH recipients already, Madam Chair. We heard from the AISH advocates and recipients that a lot of them are still living in poverty and can't even afford basic necessities such as hygiene items. Again, just to reiterate, this would be a positive step towards protecting their financial security with a program that is already there, but it just takes into consideration that loophole.

The last time that AISH was indexed to adjust for the cost of living was in 2012, when it rose from $1,188 to $1,588, which is significantly lower than the low-income cut-off, which is $1,699. When we talk about the low-income cut-offs, these are the income thresholds. When we're talking about these, these are when folks are more likely to devote a larger part of their income to the necessities of life such as food, shelter, and clothing and more so than the average family. "The approach is essentially to estimate an income threshold at which families are expected to spend 20 percentage points more than the average family on food, shelter and clothing." That comes from StatsCan.

Again, we're trying to look at seeing if there's a way – and this is a really good amendment, and I want to thank the member for bringing this forward. It's a very thoughtful amendment that adds to a good bill and closes that loophole to create a larger ability for financial security for folks who are on AISH.

I can honestly tell you, having gone through the process myself with my son, that it is an extremely difficult process to navigate. I can't imagine if my son didn't have an advocate on his behalf to be able to go through this. My husband and I have gone through years and years of paperwork since he was a little, teeny-tiny guy, Madam Chair, years and years of advocating on his behalf to get services that he needed, especially when we were younger. I can tell you that it's extremely difficult. Now, as a parent of an adult child the largest concern, of course, for us is that if we're not here, the financial security is one piece of it but also being able to make sure not only that he's financially secure – as the member was saying, if there are cognitive disabilities or if a person is physically disabled, there are certain items that they're going to need outside of what AISH can provide in order for them to live their best lives.

This little piece, this little amendment really, really makes sure that for those people who are able to provide a trust for their children upon their passing, those adults will be able to have it and be able to live their best lives and provide themselves with some financial security. As a parent I can honestly tell you that you have a huge sigh of relief knowing that that's a possibility, that you can do that on behalf of your child.

Of course, there are significant differences between – when there's a cognitive disability, there's also the issue of making sure that you have a person that you can truly trust and to be able to leave these trusts in the hands of those people to disburse them. This is one of those ways that we can make sure that when we're not here, those dollars are getting to our adult children to make sure that they are protected financially as they go through the rest of their lives.

I can honestly tell you that my son is working. He will continue to work. I mean, if he's able to work enough that he has AISH clawed back, that would be just fine, but in the instance that something goes seriously wrong, Madam Chair, it would be good to know that in my absence there is that added ability for him to do that without having it clawed back, for him to be able to have that added financial security. The purpose of these kinds of programs is to give a hand up and to be able to take care of our vulnerable populations, and that extra bit could potentially raise them out of poverty.

Again, if for some reason my son was unable to – I mean, at this point in time we're teaching him about his finances. We're hoping that he'll be able to independently do some of that, but it would be very, very easy, should he not be able to understand that, that he could end up living in poverty without the help of making sure that he has those extra dollars and the person to watch over those funds. We want for him to be independent. We want for him to be able to live his best life.

This amendment helps to create that within this very good legislation. We would encourage our colleagues across the aisle to vote in favour of this amendment. This just makes really good legislation even better by making sure that all Albertans, especially our adult children, the ones that we're talking about with this, have the ability to live their best lives when we're not here to see them. As a parent, like I said, I can't begin to tell you how important that is, what that means to me, to be able to know that that's what will happen.

Madam Chair, my husband and I spent, I think, a couple of hours at our lawyer's office just before – actually, it was in the last session. Unfortunately, this bill didn't make it across before the Legislature rose, and then it came back as Bill 5. But I remember we spent a couple of hours with our lawyer trying to discuss what we were going to do with our trusts and how that was going to work out. It is convoluted, going through the process of choosing a person that will oversee that, but we did ask these questions. This amendment actually comes from a lot of stakeholders asking how it is that we can make this work, how we can make sure that folks that are on AISH are able to have, without taking the system too far – like, we want to just make sure, if they're able to receive that small amount, that $800, that that AISH will not be clawed back.

I'm sure the member has heard about this as well, and the minister of community services has heard from me many times. I've sent him many cases where people's AISH has been clawed back, and we don't understand why. It can be because of CPP. There have been a lot of different reasons. It's very convoluted. In this particular situation this will protect those people, hopefully, through legislation from having that clawback happen.

We've had several constituents – and I have more that I'm going to be sending to the minister – that have actually been rejected from AISH on the basis that they had a trust and they were drawing income from that trust. If this amendment should pass, will those individuals have to restart that lengthy process again, Madam Chair?

Like I said to you, the process for me has been nothing short of absolutely overwhelming. It's hundreds of pages. It's a ton of work. One of the facilitators that we work with is wonderful, but we have another one who I think doesn't quite understand the system. For the most part, I mean, the folks that we work with have been fairly helpful. Even the people who are working in the system don't always understand how this all works, and that's been our experience. It's a bit of a mixed bag. When you're a parent and you're in this situation, you feel very vulnerable because you're asking questions about what's going to happen to your child when you're not here anymore.

Maybe the minister can answer this question for me, Madam Chair. Will the individuals have to restart the lengthy process of applying for AISH, or will the government be contacting them directly? I will maybe just leave that to the minister to answer.

Also, if I could, I asked some other questions last time we were debating this. I don't know if the minister has answers to those questions, Madam Chair.

Thank you so much for the opportunity to speak to this.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in favour of the amendment proposed by my colleague the member for the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. My colleague is the United Conservative critic for Community and Social Services. I believe his amendment complements Bill 5 in a most common-sense way. It is also completely consistent with the current practice. I would like to take a few minutes to review the amendment because it is an important issue, and it will greatly enhance the lives of Albertans who receive financial support from the AISH program.

First of all, let me thank the government for resurrecting this private member's bill, which had died on the Order Paper. I strongly support it, and I am glad to see it here before us this session. The constituency work of a Member of the Legislative Assembly is important, often unseen work, that we perform to serve Albertans. I for one am always pleased when AISH recipients come to my Grande Prairie-Wapiti office when they're running into difficulties with the system. One of the reasons we have offices and staff in our community is to help our constituents navigate government services and programs.

The assured income for the severely handicapped program provides financial and health benefits to 60,000 Albertans with permanent medical conditions that prevent them from earning a full living. This program has been around in its current form for many years, and I believe that it is important for this Legislature to review it on a regular basis to ensure it is working fairly and efficiently. Bill 5 is allowing us to do this, and it is also allowing us to evolve the act that outlines the AISH program in a positive way. Alberta needs to introduce what is known as a Henson trust in the same way other provinces have done. It is natural for parents to want to leave their children an inheritance, and to know that they'll be able to do so without disqualifying them from AISH is a very positive move.

Now, let me specifically address the amendment before us now. I strongly support it because it will broaden Bill 5 in a way that is completely consistent with the current rules for AISH. I'm pointing specifically to the fact that someone who receives AISH is allowed to earn up to $800 a month before it affects their monthly income. We all applaud that income rule. It makes sense because earning a living should never be a disincentive. Albertans who can benefit from AISH should not have to decide between earning an income and not participating in a program that has been designed to assist them.

In the same vein, parents should not have to decide whether or not to leave an inheritance to their beloved children because it'll affect their ability to collect a secure monthly AISH income. This Chamber appears to be onside with that concept in Bill 5. Since that's the case, why would we not marry the idea of permitting trusts, which we all seem to support, with the ability of those trusts to provide a monthly income up to $800, which is the amount already permitted in employment earnings?

The name of Bill 5 is An Act to Strengthen Financial Security for Persons with Disabilities. Doesn't strengthening financial security include an amendment such as the one before us? I know that we tend to break down along partisan lines in this Chamber, but surely this is one of those times when we do not want to do that.

AISH income has not changed for a number of years, and in the interim Alberta has gone through an economic downturn that has been difficult for so many people. The proposed amendment to allow AISH recipients to accept a sensible income from the new trusts will assist them a great deal. It will undoubtedly ease their daily pressures to know that a little more income is available to them. Maybe that's why we're all supportive of the reasonable changes that Bill 5 is proposing to make to the Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Act. It is hard for many people to make ends meet on a daily or monthly basis, so when government can come up with a common-sense plan like this, one that can assist some Albertans, we all want to do our part and support it.

Madam Chair, I wholeheartedly support this amendment from my colleague for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. I believe it is the perfect companion to Bill 5. It will not cost the government anything, and it is a compassionate amendment that I urge everyone in this House to support. Also, we feel that this is a small measure that can make a large difference in the lives of Albertans receiving AISH, and it closes off a significant loophole in the current legislation.

We have heard from AISH advocates that AISH recipients are living in such poverty that some cannot even afford basic necessities such as hygiene items. This amendment has the potential to help raise those on AISH out of poverty by allowing them to draw income from a trust and still receive their full AISH funding.

We would encourage our colleagues across the aisle to put partisan politics aside and vote in favour of this amendment for the betterment of disabled Albertans. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm just looking at this amendment moved by my colleague for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, and I have the AISH income act in front of me. In the amendment, under Exemptions:

- (2) For the purposes of section 3(3)(d), the value of all assets of a person and the person's cohabiting partner must not include
 - (a) the value of any assets . . .

and then it goes on to list (b) and the rest of the amendment here. I'm wondering. Just sort of from my reading, in looking at the act, if an individual on AISH has a trust, is the aim of this to basically prevent a cohabiting partner from also having an exempt trust? Just as I'm looking through this, it touches on a bunch of regulations here. If I could get a quick clarification from the hon. member on that, just to make sure that I understand this as we go through debate, I'd very much appreciate it.

Mr. Cooper: I can come back around to you. My intention in the amendment is to have it so that if you had two individuals in a home and they were both receiving an income from employment, the exemptions would be the same in both cases. So if both individuals had a trust, they would both be able to then receive the $800 as income from that trust. Just as the exemption for employment is the same, the goal is to not have a differentiating factor between the income that they would receive from employment or income that they would receive from the trust.

I'm more than happy to confer with Parliamentary Counsel that that is, in fact, what has been delivered by the amendment and get back to you while the minister provides a response with some of his thoughts and on the importance of the amendment.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much for the clarification. I'm going to continue to listen to the debate. Just when I was going through and looking at it – I appreciate the clarification.

Thank you.

The Chair: Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak on this bill and amendment. I do want to say thank you to the minister and the Member for Calgary-Currie for bringing this much-needed piece of legislation so that people who are currently on AISH can take advantage of this bill. I also want to thank you, Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, for bringing this amendment to strengthen this bill.

Madam Chair, as the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View spoke of her personal experience with AISH, I would echo those comments. Like the previous speakers, I think we can all agree that we're happy to support this legislation, intended just to give much-needed, you know, peace of mind to the families of Albertans who are currently on the AISH program in knowing that with any inheritance they leave, their children will not be disqualified from the AISH benefit just because an inheritance has been left for these individuals.

Now, the amendment that the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills brought is something that we heard from the constituents and the stakeholders that we did a consultation with. They are the ones who are telling us that this would actually strengthen the bill and that it would be a positive step towards protecting the financial security of the very individuals who are receiving AISH, again, going back to the same thing, making sure that they're not penalized for their parents' hard work and their savings and making sure, actually, that when these kids are on their own, they're taken care of.

Currently the exemption for a single person, or for two people if they both receive AISH and have no dependent children, is the first $800 of total monthly income, and following this, an amount above $800 up to $1,500 is 50 per cent exempt, for a maximum employment income exemption of $1,150 per month. That will, again, like I was saying, strengthen the bill.

Under the current legislation before this House, Madam Chair, individuals will now qualify for AISH if they have a discretionary or a nondiscretionary trust in their name but would not qualify if they were drawing a set amount of money monthly from the trust. You know, we feel that this amendment would bring income from a trust in line with the current legislation on income from employment. I think the intent is that this small measure could make a rather large difference in the lives of Albertans receiving AISH and close a significant loophole in the current legislation.

Now, the NDP have made it clear with their minimum wage hike that they believe in what they call a living wage, yet under their government the cost of living has gone up, Madam Chair, as we can all agree, with the different taxes, the carbon tax, other economically detrimental policies. This has put a strain on the already tight finances of AISH recipients because, as we know, it's a fixed amount. We also heard from AISH advocates that AISH recipients are living in such poverty that they cannot even afford basic necessities such as hygiene items.

The last time that AISH was indexed to adjust for a cost-of-living increase was in 2012, like, six years ago, when it rose from $1,188 to the current, which is still the same, $1,588, which is actually still significantly lower than the low-income cut-off, which is $1,699. The low-income cut-off is an income threshold below which a family will likely devote a larger share of its income on the necessities of food, shelter, clothing than the average family, Madam Chair. The approach is essentially to estimate an income threshold at which families are expected to spend 20 per cent more than an average family on food, shelter, and clothing.

I think the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View already spoke on the same point I'm trying to bring up, that this amendment has the potential to help raise those on AISH benefits out of poverty by allowing them to draw income from a trust and still receive their full AISH funding. So I really hope that the government members will support this simple amendment.

I think the Member for Calgary-Currie had some questions for the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, and also the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View had some questions for the minister on how it's going to impact. I'm thinking that if we all work in good faith and, you know, pass this amendment, it can strengthen the bill and actually benefit the people on AISH, the recipients.

We would also like some clarity from the government on what measures will be put in place in the case that a cognitively impaired AISH recipient inherits funds that have not already been put into trust. The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View already touched on it. In this case we are under the impression that the beneficiary could potentially choose to place these funds into a nondiscretionary trust, where they would be able to appoint a trustee and set the terms of spending for that trust. Are there some checks and balances that will be laid out in the regulations to protect the financial assets of Albertans who are on AISH and show that they're getting some sound financial counsel? Hopefully, we'll get some clarification from the minister on that.

The point of this, Madam Chair, the intent of this amendment, is to allow those individuals who are applying for AISH to draw up to, again, $800 a month of income from a trust and still be approved for AISH. A one-year grace period, the wills-handled-badly clause, for inheritance is important to allow AISH recipients the time to navigate the system and place their inheritance into an asset with exempt status without having to worry about whether their monthly income from AISH will be revoked.

Madam Chair, in the end, I think we already spoke a little bit on this very simple amendment. Let's support this amendment, and let's strengthen this bill and try to help those individuals who are receiving AISH benefits. I truly hope that we will get government members' support on this simple amendment and strengthen this bill so we can all make sure, you know, that nobody is left behind.

The intent of the NDP government, the slogan, is to work hard for Albertans, so let's pass this amendment, and let's show them that we are working hard and that we're doing the right thing and putting partisan politics aside to help those who need us the most.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise. Just prior to the inspiring remarks from the Member for Calgary-Greenway, I had committed to the Member for Calgary-Currie that I would just confer with Parliamentary Counsel that the intention of the amendment is not to differentiate between income from employment and income from trust funds and that the exemptions that currently exist amongst cohabiting individuals would not be negatively impacted. That is, in fact, what Parliamentary Counsel has confirmed with me, that both individuals would be able to be eligible, that income from both trusts would not have a negative impact on AISH eligibility.

The longer that we go in this discussion, the more intrigued I am by the fact that the government members haven't provided any indication as to whether or not they intend to support or not support such a very important amendment, that provides certainty and fairness amongst those who both have a trust as well as are on AISH. It's surprising to me, in fact, that we haven't heard from the minister, so I invite him to do so now.

The Chair: Any other members on the amendment? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, I'm going to try, too. I've had some questions. [interjection] Okay. I'd like to give a chance to the minister to speak.

Okay. I'm going to try again if that's okay, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Go ahead.

Mrs. Aheer: Okay. Thank you. I actually have whole bunches of questions, and maybe the minister can take a few minutes and answer some of my questions. Of course, many of them come from anecdotal and lived experience in my particular situation, but this is a little bit more from stakeholder outreach.

Here's one thing that I think needs to be clear. Persons with disabilities should not be given fewer financial protections than those without. It's a pretty simple statement. That's what this amendment does. The bill is already excellent. The bill is already doing great work. This is an extra step to create financial stability for folks with disabilities.

I have to say that if we're talking about cognitive disabilities specifically, there is a humungous amount of navigating that goes on when you are in this process. Quite often there are special circumstances, especially if a parent is not there or a caregiver is not there to help a person with cognitive disabilities to be able to reach out and find out what's going on. Like I was saying earlier, we've had some great facilitators, great workers over the years, but we've had some that are really difficult to work with as well. I can't imagine if my son was on his own and responsible for working with some of these folks. Even for the ones who are excellent, this is convoluted. It's so complex.

We're simply asking here to make sure that folks that are on AISH have the ability to go into the trusts that are set up by the parents. There's nothing here that the government needs to do other than to allow people who are on AISH to access the amount of money without it being clawed back. I mean, there is a tremendous amount of frustration on behalf of those – even to get determined for eligibility for AISH, Madam Chair, is a huge process. Sometimes it takes up to 20 weeks just to find out if you're eligible, and then there's an entire process that comes after that. If we're already talking about that, with this particular situation these are people who have lost their caregivers; they've lost their parents. We're wanting to make sure, in advance of that, that there is an ability for these people to be financially secure.

I have a bunch of questions for you, Minister, so if you have a moment to answer these, I'd be very grateful. For example, if there is an AISH recipient that is cognitively disabled and they're able to receive sound financial counsel, the question I'm asking is: if they're not inheriting money specifically to put into a trust and are protected and are able to receive sound financial counsel, how is the government going to help them make sure that that happens, especially if they're only provided with the minimum and there's not an extra amount of money there for special services or to help out with those kinds of things? Has the government thought about that or the ability to look at that specifically?

This is one of the reasons why the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills came up with this, to provide financial stability. Like, what measures are going to be put in place to ensure that that specific scenario – this is something that as a parent you think about. These are nightmares actually – okay? – because if that person who is cognitively disabled is not able to make financial decisions, they're vulnerable to being taken advantage of. In advance of that, Madam Chair, we're trying to implement ideas and add to an already excellent bill the ability to make sure that our children are taken care of when we're not here. I would love for the government side to be able to answer yes or no on whether this is a possibility. As a parent this is important. I mean, if you say no, say no, and tell us why.

The other question I have. I mean, we don't want recipients of AISH to be penalized for inheriting assets. What happens, then, if AISH is clawed back? For example, if something in my son's life changed and he was financially secure at some point, for whatever reason that was, if it gets clawed back, if something has changed, what measures has the minister taken to make sure that the person who was part of AISH before is able to get back into that situation? As we all know, there are lots of ups and downs in life. We don't know what could happen to our children because we're not here to see that. We're leaving and entrusting our children to other people and situations and, in this particular situation, to government to some degree. What measures are put in there to make sure that an adult who is on AISH who may be cognitively disabled, especially, has the supports to be able to reapply if that is necessary? Or are there measures there to make sure that that person is still part of the system, that should they go through a difficult time or they're taken advantage of – there are a gazillion things that could happen – that that happens?

Again, right now we have people who are being denied. We have couples who are being denied. In fact, I can give you one example of that, where there is a couple, an elderly couple, that have had it clawed back because of their contributions to CPP. Now, the minister has this particular one. I've sent it to the minister. It is particularly invasive because now the wife is also unable to work. She was the one who was able to make things last up until this point in time. He was already being clawed back, and now there's an extra clawback. These are the kinds of things that are happening.

The other question that I'd ask the minister also is: what happens to those that have already been denied AISH because they had a trust fund? Now do they have to go through this process again, Madam Chair, from the beginning? These are very, very reasonable questions. It's a great bill, but is it retroactive? Like, the folks that already applied that were denied: do they reapply again? What if they're on their own now? What if that trust has already been put in? What measures are there for those people? Life changes real quick. I'm sure things have changed even since the member put his bill forward. There are a whole bunch of things.

Again, the bill is very good. We're asking these questions and we're asking for these amendments to help clarify and to make sure that they are financially stable. Being able to tap into their trust funds helps them to be more financially stable and helps them to be participatory in their lives, to have better lives, to participate in their lives, to feel great about what's going on in their lives, for their parents to know that they're contributing to their lives when they're no longer here to be able to see what's going on.

Like I said, I'm inquiring about a couple of different things. I'd like the minister to tell me about the individuals that have already been rejected from the AISH program for receiving a trust. I would really like to know and understand what's going to be happening with that. It's such a lengthy process, Madam Chair, such a lengthy process. To say that one is disappointed when one is rejected, I don't even think that that language begins to describe what that feels like.

Also, I wanted to ask one other question. As I understand it, Human Services spokesman Aaron Manton said something about the funding increases of $28.3 million addressing caseload and cost-per-case growth. The AISH program, he says, is one of the most comprehensive of its kind in Canada. But he also mentioned that the child benefit will help families. Could the minister please also explain what that means? Does the child benefit program claw back AISH? Does it stay the same if we were to draw from a trust? This is why this is important. We need to make sure, Minister, that there is financial stability for these folks. If we can exempt that $800 and if that child benefit is there also: if you could please answer that question, that would be very helpful. It's very confusing. Again, this is an extremely, extremely complex and very difficult situation for a family to navigate, for an advocate to navigate, for a recipient to navigate. We're hoping that that long-awaited advocate will be available to be able to help out with those things. I can't wait to hear about that.

Like I said – and I'll say it again – I am so pleased to support this legislation, extremely pleased. It provides so much deserved protection to some of Alberta's most vulnerable. I really simply have just a couple of concerns, and this comes from a very honest place of lived experience, of understanding what goes into this, of the difficulty. My son is going to be 20 this August. It took me almost a year, Madam Chair – a year – to navigate this whole system, and I am determined. It took my husband and I a year between the two of us, probably mostly our fault because we didn't understand it, but it wasn't like there was a whole lot of ability to find out exactly what to do in this particular situation. We're very lucky, very, very fortunate in our situation.

This comes down to independence and seeing these amazing, amazing people live their best lives. This money doesn't take anything away from the taxpayer or from the business of government or budgeting or anything like this. These are dollars that already belong to these people. We're just asking that the government acknowledge that and exempt those dollars so that that financial stability is there. It costs the government nothing. And to the member's credit who brought this bill forward, it wouldn't even be possible if Bill 5 wasn't on the table, so we're very grateful – very grateful – to even be able to bring this piece forward, Madam Chair. Like I said, we wouldn't even be able to had the member not brought the bill forward. But this addition, that costs the taxpayer nothing, allows parents to know that when they pass, they're able to contribute to the well-being of their living families, to make sure that the caregivers are able to contribute to the living family members.

As a parent that has gone through this process – I don't know how many people in here have done wills when you have kids. It's a pretty emotional experience going through that. I put it off for a really, really, really long time. I think I was, you know, in denial that that kind of thing ever happens. When you're young – and I had my kids when I was 24 and 26, so I was young at the time I had my children, and as much as I think I'm type A, that's one of those that I put way off down the line, Madam Chair.

Mr. Cooper: Not that you would recommend that.

Mrs. Aheer: No, no, no. Don't do what I did.

It's funny because our children are grown now. They're going to be 22 and 20 this year. I can't even believe I'm saying that. Anyway, we are working very hard to make sure that they are better at this than we were at the time. But I can honestly say that it's already hard just as a parent going through that process and acknowledging your own mortality as you go through that. It's even more invasive when you know you have a dependant, and that dependant is a person I love with all my heart, every hair on his head. I wouldn't change anything about him. He is spectacularly special in my life, and I think he's spectacularly special to the world, actually. But I want to make sure as a parent that I have the opportunity to do right by my child when I'm not here.

So I would ask: if the minister has a moment to answer some of my questions with respect to this, I'd be eternally grateful. Moreover, if we could have some idea about how the government feels with respect to this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1?

Mr. Hunter: Madam Chair, it is an absolute pleasure to stand and talk in support of this amendment from my colleague and to welcome the Government House Leader to our side. It's a pleasure to have him here today.

An Hon. Member: He's finally on the right side.

Mr. Hunter: I've always known him to be on the right side of history.

Madam Chair, from what I see with this amendment, I first of all want to preface my remarks with one of the Auditor General's comments on the state of AISH. This was on Global News back in 2016, so this was a little while ago. The report talked about the AISH program having severe problems with it, and it said: "Auditor General . . . in a new report, says the Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped . . . program is rife with duplication, roadblocks, subjective decision-making, and poor oversight." You know, what's interesting about the program is that this program is designed to help those people who are the most vulnerable in our society.

When I describe the way that our society works here in Alberta – I love to travel, so when I talk to people in different places, I talk to them often of the head and the heart of Alberta. The heart of Alberta is the wraparound services: the health care that we have, the education that we have, the policing and fire and ambulance and social services, the social network that is a cushion for those people who are the most vulnerable in our society. People with disabilities are those people who we need to help. The AISH program is specifically designed in order to be able to help them. The head part of our society, I often say, is that part that actually pays for this. This is the entrepreneurs, the people who are the wealth creators in our society. They create the jobs and provide that opportunity for us to be able to have those wraparound services for the people who need it most.

To tell you the truth, Madam Chair, when I describe this to people in areas that don't have these types of wraparound services, they think this is fantastic, almost utopian. You know what? I actually am very grateful for a lot of the work that the current NDP government has done for that part of our society, something that I think is very important to Albertans and to the people who need it. Obviously, I've been in this House many times saying, though, that I'm a little concerned about the head part of it, where they're not getting that right so that we can provide for those services. So that's the preface to my comments.

I just want to get to speaking to this amendment. One thing that I really like about it is that it's creating a situation where we're trying – look, there's never enough money to be able to provide everything for those in need in our society. However, whenever we can come up with a solution where the government can incentivize people to be able to stand on their own two feet or create a solution for those people who are disabled so that they can have dignity of life, then I'm very, very much in favour of that kind of a solution.

What I see with this is that it allows for those people who have been careful with their money, parents of disabled kids that have been careful with their money that have realized that, you know, it's not the responsibility of the government to take care of their kids if they're disabled, so they're trying to create some kind of a cushion for them. This is why I'm very interested in this concept. When the Member for Calgary-Currie first brought it forward – I think it was a year ago – I was very intrigued with it. I thought, "Now, there is a really good solution, thinking outside of the box, looking for best practices," and I was actually very impressed that it actually came from the member opposite, on the government side.

Taking a look at the bill, the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills recognized that there was some concern with the present iteration of this bill. Taking a look at it, I believe that he saw where those problems were, and this is a reasonable amendment to be able to make it better. Now, as has been stated already by many colleagues on this side, this is a bill that we can support. Once again, I go back to the original comments that I made, which are that it's important to have both the head and the heart of society. That heart part, which is these wraparound services, we want to make robust so that it actually helps those people who are in need.

I have a family member that's on AISH. He has osteogenesis imperfecta, brittle bone disease. When he was younger, we would be out playing, and all of a sudden he'd fall and break a leg or break an arm. We didn't really understand it at the time, but as he started to get testing from the medical system we have, we found out that he has this osteogenesis imperfecta. He's not even 50 yet, and he has the bones of an 85-year-old, he's told. Because of the number of bones that he's broken, whenever there's a barometric change in pressure, he obviously struggles. He's in great pain. His knuckles are all gnarled up. You know, this is a difficult thing for him. He struggles with that. He wants to be able to be a productive member of society. He wants to be able to do what he can do because he recognizes the necessity of being able to stand on his own two feet. This is something that he thinks is very important. But because of something that's a genetic issue with him, he's not able to fire on all cylinders, to be able to stand on his own two feet, so he's on AISH. So I do know a little bit about the AISH system because this is something that has affected our family. It is close to my heart.

This amendment provides him an opportunity and an option so that when my parents pass away and my brother is still alive, he will have an opportunity to be able to set up a Henson trust so that he can have the little extra that he needs to be able to live a life of dignity. This is something that my parents have been preparing for for years, knowing that in time they're going to pass away and that they're going to need to help my brother. This wasn't a government-initiated directive. My parents made this something that they wanted to do themselves, knowing that my brother would need this.

What this does, though, this Henson trust and this amendment, is that it actually allows my parents' forethought and good work to be able to be rewarded, and it provides them an opportunity to be able to help my brother without it costing the government anything. I think that when we look for those kinds of solutions and we find them, we should embrace them. Whether you're on this side or on that side, those are best practices that we should embrace.

I wholeheartedly am very much in favour of the Henson trust, and I will be voting for this. What I am also in favour of – and I hope that the government side will take a look at this and see the value of it, whether it comes from this side or that side – is that there are still best practices that we can see from both sides of the House. I think that this was a well-thought-out amendment that can be embraced by both sides.

Just really quickly here, from what I understand, the current single exemption, for a single person or two people if they both receive AISH and have no dependent children, is the first $800 of the total monthly net income. Following this, an amount above $800 and up to $1,500 is 50 per cent exempted, for a maximum employment income exemption of $1,150 per month. This amendment would address, I guess, the issue of having the 50 per cent exemption, and it would allow them to be able to have what they need, again, to be able to live with dignity.

I would ask the members opposite and all members of the House to seriously take a look at this amendment and to give it some good thought because I believe that some good thought was already established in creating and drafting this amendment.

With that, thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A1? The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair, plus thanks to the member from the outstanding constituency for bringing forward this motion. First of all, I appreciate the intent of this amendment. I do want to emphasize that what's in the legislation right now relates to the assets. As such, conservation of income wasn't in the scope of the consultation my colleague the MLA for Calgary-Currie did or within the correspondence and petitions we received. But still, as I said, the intention of this amendment is good, and I certainly support that intention. We should provide the needed resources and services to those who rely on these supports. That is the reason that so far in four budgets the government has increased AISH by $103 million, to make sure that those on AISH receive the benefits they need.

Under the AISH legislation, if the intent of this amendment is to make income from assets and income from trusts the same as income from employment, I would say that it's not clear. At this point, essentially, trusts, investments, interest, capital gains, rental income, all of those incomes which are passive incomes, are treated the same. What I see from this is that you just want to carve out one trust and leave everything the same, which is at this point exempt. The first $200 is exempt, and then it's 25 per cent exempt going forward.

The second category in income, with that same trust income, is that if it's an Albertan with a spouse or a partner or a single parent or a couple with children, their trust income, or passive income, is exempt up to $775. The way it's worded right now: "the income of a person and the person's cohabitating partner." The way I read it and I understand it, to me, it looks like this one doesn't apply to individuals; it's more designed to cover the income of a person and their cohabiting partner. Again, at best, it's not very clear to me.

When it comes to the treatment of these incomes, like, this passive income is treated differently from employment income. The rationale for that is that employment income is exempt to encourage and incentivize individuals to seek employment while this one, trust income, was treated with other passive incomes like interest income, capital gains income, investments income, so I'm not very clear. In general for employment income there is $800 per month that is exempt and then up to $1,500 at 50 per cent, making it a maximum of $1,150. If the idea was to make this income similar to other exemptions, then I think there is some more work on this amendment that needs to be done.

With that, I will move that we rise and report progress on this bill. Thank you.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 5. I would like to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 12 Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act

[Adjourned debate May 2: Mr. Schmidt]

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak to Bill 12? Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Energy to close debate.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 12, Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act. I want to thank my colleagues on all sides of the Assembly for the contributions they've made to this debate and, in particular, the Member for Calgary-Klein for opening debate at second reading in my absence.

I won't belabour the details of the bill since the Member for Calgary-Klein outlined those in his remarks on May 2; however, I do believe it's worth reminding members of certain elements. First, this bill responds to a particular situation that members in this Assembly understand all too well; namely, the roadblocks that have resulted in the delays to the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion. These roadblocks have been thrown up by the government of British Columbia, which claims that it has the right to delay a project which has received approval from the government of Canada.

As we all know, Madam Speaker, in Canada it is the federal government, not the government of B.C. or the government of Alberta, for that matter, that has jurisdiction over interprovincial pipelines. Simply put, B.C.'s actions to delay or frustrate the Trans Mountain pipeline are unconstitutional. They're outside of its authority as a provincial government.

By the way, it's worth noting, Madam Speaker, that the B.C. government seems more interested in intervening in matters over which they have no jurisdiction, but in energy development matters that fall under the B.C. government's purview, it's business as usual. One example: the Vancouver Airport Fuel Facilities Corporation is, as we speak, constructing a new 13-kilometre underground pipeline to Vancouver International Airport to supply aviation kerosene fuel from an upgraded marine terminal and adjacent fuel storage facility in the south arm of the Fraser River in Richmond, B.C., and the B.C. Oil and Gas Commission approved a permit for this pipeline. Similarly, the B.C. government recently announced exemption for LNG projects from that province's carbon levy. To be sure, they attached conditions to those exemptions, as they rightly should, including guaranteed jobs for British Columbians, respect for First Nations, and environmental protection. Their conditions sound, actually, a lot like the 157 conditions that the NEB put on the approval for the Kinder Morgan pipeline and the community benefits agreements provided to First Nations along the proposed pipeline route.

At the time of the announcement I suggested that the B.C. government's actions were hypocritical. Now, some people said that my choice of words was a little harsh. Very well, Madam Speaker. Let's try some other adjectives. I'm a former teacher. I'm up to the challenge. How about inconsistent, very, very inconsistent? How about profoundly, shockingly inconsistent? Or, to borrow a phrase from the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood that was used last week, there's a lot of cognitive dissonance going on over there.

But I digress. The point here, Madam Speaker, is that Alberta, in fact Canada needs to access the new markets that this pipeline will provide. Historically the biggest customer for Alberta oil and gas has been the United States, but in recent years that has shifted dramatically. Today the U.S. is our biggest competitor. Because there is one buyer, the oil and gas resources, that belong to all Albertans, are being sold at a discounted price. Albertans and Canadians deserve better. As Albertans we deserve to get the best possible price for the resources we own.

To be sure, getting better value for our resources means value-added activities like petrochemical diversification and partial upgrading, which is why we have introduced Bill 1, but we need action on multiple fronts. We also need to get Alberta's energy resources to tidewater, and the Trans Mountain pipeline can do that. Moreover, it comes with a $1.5 billion oceans protection plan to better protect Canada's west coast against spills, and it comes with community benefit agreements for First Nations communities along the pipeline route and a great deal of indigenous support.

But it has become clear that the government of Alberta needs more tools in our tool box to motivate B.C. to stop using unconstitutional tactics to delay the pipeline construction and to motivate the federal government to defend its jurisdiction on the decision it made. The Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act would give the government authority to, if necessary, require a licence for any company exporting energy products from Alberta. First, to be clear, companies would not be automatically required to apply for an export licence. They would only need to do so if the government deemed it necessary. The criteria that would be used would be whether adequate pipeline capacity exists to maximize the return on crude oil and diluted bitumen produced in Alberta and whether adequate supplies and reserves of natural gas, crude oil, or refined fuels will be available for Alberta's present and future needs.

Now, Madam Speaker, our government believes in being strategic. This legislation is broad, so it can be executed in such a way as to maximize its effectiveness while minimizing any potential adverse impacts on Albertans. I pledged from day one with industry that there would be no surprises, and I've been true to my word. I can tell you that industry has been briefed on this bill. While some are understandably nervous about its implications, they are very supportive in the need to get this pipeline built. They understand the need for firm and decisive action, and they are supportive of this bill.

Now, Madam Speaker, if circumstances force us to use this legislation, again, there will be no surprises. We will be fair, we will be thoughtful, and we will be strategic. Let's be clear here. This isn't a step that we want to take, but we will if it means long-term benefits for our industry, for our province, and for Canada. We know that we're on the right side of this issue, and it's not just here in Alberta. Look what people across the country think. National polling shows that two-thirds of Canadians support construction of this pipeline. That's an increase of 10 per cent since February, so it's clear that the work of this government and our Premier is winning over Canadians. We will win, and we will get this pipeline built.

Now, members opposite have tried to suggest during debate on this bill that because we have taken this even-handed approach, because we have preferred mature leadership to bombast and bluster, we lack the resolve to make use of the powers in this bill if necessary. Well, Madam Speaker, as so often is the case, the members opposite are wrong. As part of my commitment to there being no surprises for industry, I took a day away from my constituency to brief the industry on the contents of this bill. My staff and I have spent countless hours meeting with stakeholders. I'm a busy woman. The people I meet with are busy people. I don't believe in wasting people's time, and I don't believe in wasting my own time.

Madam Speaker, if we have to take drastic action to get this pipeline built, we will. Notwithstanding the opposition's penchant for misinformation, this government is serious in its call for unity among the members of this Legislature. So I extend my hand to them. If they have good ideas for the best way to use these powers in this legislation while minimizing adverse impacts on Alberta, I'm all ears. I invite them to share their suggestions. I can't promise, of course, that I will act on them. As I said, we will need to be thoughtful and strategic in our actions if it comes to that, but I am absolutely open to good ideas no matter where they come from.

Thank you for this opportunity to share my thoughts today, Madam Speaker. I look forward to the rest of the debate as it unfolds.

With this, I move second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a second time]

Bill 13

An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future

[Debate adjourned May 3: Mr. Schneider speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak to Bill 13? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future. It proposes to amend a total of four statutes: the Alberta Utilities Commission Act, the Electric Utilities Act, the Gas Utilities Act, and the Hydro and Electric Energy Act.

This legislation is one of a series of bills focused on improving consumer protection for energy consumers and seeks to reintroduce or reinforce the NDP's strategic message. The bill empowers the Alberta Utilities Commission to fine electricity and natural gas service providers up to $10,000 a day for breaches in customer service such as sending out late bills or overcharging and provides additional options to Albertans who want to generate their own electricity.

It also enables the creation of a capacity market, which is new for Alberta. It clarifies how infrastructure losses and profits are split between consumers and utilities. I take some exception to that. It appears that, at least under the current regime, the government is going to pick up any losses to individual consumers, retail consumers, over 6.8 cents a kilowatt hour. I think there's some mixed messaging here that needs to be resolved, but it does plan a transition to a capacity market from an electricity-only market. Clearly, that's necessary if we're going to incent the clean energy that the government has been wanting to incent, up to 30 per cent of the capacity in renewables. But they're going to have to do a lot of incenting to get that kind of achievement in the next 10 to 15 years.

I was interested to learn that most markets across the world, including the United Kingdom and the U.S., are capacity markets. This was a surprise to me. It's also been a surprise to me to see a government that while we were enjoying some of the lowest electricity prices in a decade, decided that it wasn't good enough to protect customers and have gone off on these tangents with respect to the power purchase agreements and the lawsuits that ensued in association with the carbon levy. They now are signing contracts with the same escape clause that was in there that they decided to overturn.

So there are a lot of interesting and unfortunate changes that have been made to our electricity system, and it's getting more and more complex for most of us to understand where it's going. Certainly, I think that if this government is trying to create certainty in the industry, there needs to be a lot more clarity about how far one is going to go in regulating what has been a relatively deregulated market in which a price signal is going to be felt by consumers. That's being taken away. So the very purpose of this – this government has said that they wanted to incent changes in fossil fuel use and carbon use and electricity use – they're undermining by having fixed prices above which all taxpayers will have to subsidize the sector.

It's created a really ambiguous electricity market, in my view, that is not sending the right signals to consumers. Yes, indeed, if companies fail to properly bill and if they overcharge – many of us will remember that back in 2015 TransAlta had to pay $56 million for manipulating the power market – yeah, it's really important for us to be able to identify that and to shut that kind of activity down. I think it sent an important message back then that they did this. But I guess the bigger picture here is one of a somewhat confusing direction. It hasn't really been clear to many of us how far this government is going, and it therefore isn't creating the kind of certainty that I think a lot of electricity businesses and operators would feel comfortable with. It may be clear to the government, but it's not clear to many of us just how much they're going to regulate and remove the price incentive in the electricity market.

Madam Speaker, I'm not sure how I feel about the general electricity market. I don't think there's much in this bill that's controversial. They're going to fine inappropriate behaviour, and that's all good. But the bigger picture in electricity is very perplexing and troubling for a government that says that they want to try to incent different behaviour in consumers and incent new clean energy development. I don't know if we can afford this in the long term, and it'll be interesting to see if we can learn more about how they think these disincentives for efficiency and subsidies for new energy are actually going to serve the longer term price signal. They seem to be following somewhat the Ontario problems that evolved and not learning what we could and should have learned from Ontario.

I'm not fully decided on this bill, but it looks pretty harmless, Madam Speaker, and we'll probably be supporting it. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Mr. Hunter: Madam Speaker, I would like to rise to speak to Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future. One of the things that I thought was interesting about this bill and the narrative that I've heard for the last while now is that the system was broken. In fact, I think it was the Government House Leader that actually said that if it was up to the opposition, they would have crashed the electricity system. He also said that if the NDP had not moved into a capacity market, these electricity providers would not have survived. Now, I don't have the benefit of Hansard, so I'm not quoting him exactly. I will admit that. But I will say that that was the intent of what he said. When I heard him say that, I thought to myself: this is supposed to be the government that is the champion of the little guy, the champion of the people, yet here was a statement made by the Government House Leader that they are, in fact, the champion of businesses, the big businesses that provide electricity in this province.

Now, think about this, Madam Speaker. This is an interesting point. Actually, many people in description of the NDP have often said that they are the government of unintended consequences. Yet I think that that's being, you know, very nice, to tell you the truth, because I actually think that they're more accidental.

But I would say this. Here's the situation. We have three parts to this electrical system. I admit that that has not been my past. Before I was a politician, that is not what I did. But in the three years that I have watched this, I've watched one mistake after another. It started out with this idea that they need to revamp the whole electrical system. Now, there are three parts to the electrical system, from what I understand. You've got the retail, the distribution, and the transmission. From what I understand, the retail side was the only part that the PC government in the past had deregulated. The other parts, which are the transmission and the distribution, were regulated parts of that electrical system. Interestingly enough, from what I can see, moving from the system that we had prior to a capacity market is moving to a regulated system.

So here's the problem I have with this from 30,000 feet up. Transmission and distribution costs are now almost 50 per cent of your electrical rates. We've seen a threefold increase in transmission prices alone whereas we've seen a decrease in the retail side. Obviously, the deregulating of this part of the electrical equation actually worked. We probably should have looked at transmission and distribution, but, you know, hindsight is 20/20 vision.

But here we have a situation where we already have that hindsight. We already have the 20/20 vision. We've seen what worked. We've seen that by deregulating that retail aspect or component of the equation, we drove the price of electricity down, beneficial to all, whereas in that regulated part we now see – I can't remember – an 8.7 per cent guaranteed return on investment to the likes of Berkshire Hathaway. You know, the members are correct. It was not under their watch that that was done. But we can certainly learn from the mistakes of the past, learn from what was done wrong and try to rectify it.

You know, as I look through kind of the press release on this, look through the pros and the cons, which are supposed to actually help a government decide whether or not they're going to be able to move forward with a project or legislation or not, we're in a situation where – some of the things that it says is: while revenue sufficient, this was not a revenue-certain option and would create too much volatility for consumers. Well, revenue certainty is what we saw with the transmission and the distribution parts of the equation. The only thing that was good about the revenue certainty was for people like Warren Buffett. It was not valuable or beneficial to the regular Albertan. It wasn't beneficial to me or to my family as we watched these transmission and distribution charges go from, you know, 20 per cent of your bill to 50 per cent of your bill.

Look, I have no problems with the government taking a look and saying: what is the problem, and how do we fix it? That's what the government is supposed to be doing. But in this situation all I saw was them taking the part of the equation that actually has been working, which is driving down the price of the retail side, and changing the part that actually worked to the part that hasn't worked. In the transmission and the distribution parts of it we've seen substantial increases in those costs. If that's the case, Madam Speaker, I have no idea why the government would not take a look at, again, the best practices and find out how to fix those transmission and distribution parts. Instead, what we see is a meddling in the area where we've seen success.

The other part that I thought was interesting in terms of, you know, the talking points about why this was valuable is that industry, investors, AESO, the Market Surveillance Administrator, and consumer groups asked for the capacity market. Well, of course they did, Madam Speaker. Why wouldn't they ask for it when you're getting a guaranteed 8.7 per cent return on investment? I'm sure they're looking at the distribution of the transmission side and saying: they've got it right; we want that guarantee. No matter what the capacity that they build, they're getting that 8.7 per cent return on investment guaranteed. Well, that is certainty. But why do we want to facilitate that? Why do we want to facilitate foreign profits of the world? I don't understand.

Look, I don't begrudge Warren Buffett for making money, but not on the backs of Albertans, not at the expense of Albertans. We don't have to do that. I'm surprised to see the NDP government, who is supposed to be the champion of the little guy, championing these things for Warren Buffett, the wealthiest man in the world. It doesn't make sense.

Now, I understand why Warren Buffett would invest in this, Madam Speaker. Who wouldn't invest in a guaranteed return on investment? Who wouldn't? I would. But for the NDP government to say that it was a broken system – they didn't finish the sentence. It was a broken system but not the part that they're trying to fix, the part that they're trying to wreck. The retail side was working. We drove the price down.

Now, this concept of certainty – look, if you're going to get into business, it's not certain. You try to be able to do best practices. You try to be able to create efficiencies in your business. You know what? You shouldn't ever allow a business to become too big to fail. This is what it almost seems like with the transmission and distribution sides of the equation for the electricity. You know, Bill 13, I think, is just going in the absolute wrong direction, Madam

Speaker. It is addressing the part of that equation that was already working. Why would you need to upset that part? I'm fully in favour of us addressing the issue of transmission charges going up. I'm fully in favour of us trying to figure out that part of the equation that's not working and that's hurting Albertans.

Are we going in the direction that Ontario did, like the member that just spoke talked about? I would have to say that it looks like we are. I hope that there will be sober second thought on this, Madam Speaker. We do not want to see the same thing that's happening in Ontario. They are driving businesses out for electricity prices, for utility prices. There are lots of other reasons why businesses could get driven out, but for goodness' sake why are they driving them out for utility prices?

This is, in my opinion, a knee-jerk reaction to be able to try to facilitate a broad carbon reduction strategy that they just don't seem to be getting right. Because of that, this is, again, a government of unintended consequences. They go from one mistake to another mistake to another mistake, and the problem is that the people who are actually being hurt by this are regular Albertans, people who are just trying to be able to make ends meet, and the things that I hear from them, Madam Speaker, are: we're being killed by a thousand different cuts; we're being killed by a thousand different cuts.

Now, with the issues that I've talked about here, the other point that I thought was very interesting was when it talks about the fines, fines of up to $10,000 per day. You know, one thing that I've seen quite evident with this government is them picking winners and losers. If there's a retail area, a company that is not playing the game the way they want them to, they can slap fines on them, and it can be punitive to the point where they can drive them out of business.

What's sad about this, like I said – I've said this a few times in this House – is that this government is responsible for the loss of $36 billion of investment leaving this province in the first two years and, you know, more in the last year, quoting the Conference Board of Canada, $36 billion driven out. You know why they're being driven out, Madam Speaker? They're being driven out because businesses need to see certainty in terms of the rules. They need to be able to say: "These are the rules of the game. If I apply those rules, I have the ability to be able to provide for my shareholders a good return on investment as something that could work." Yet what's happened with this government is that they change it. They changed the rules in the middle of the game. It scares away investors so that the investors don't want to come back.

Now, I don't know if this is an actual term, but this is what I would call policy shock, when you have policies that happen so quickly and policies that are so detrimental to industry or to businesses. Then those businesses are in such shock that they say: "No. We can't continue on. We can't continue to do what we're doing. We have no faith in this jurisdiction to be able to provide a return on investment. We need to leave. We need to take our capital elsewhere." Then you have capital fleeing this province.

Then I hear comments from the members opposite: well, why are they leaving? Well, they're leaving because you're changing the rules of the game in mid game. They don't want to see that. They want to be able to know that, hey, if they apply the rules of the game and you establish those things, then they can do all right. That's why we saw that for a 10-year period during Ralph Klein's day, and whether you like him or you don't like him, the truth is that in a 10-year period there was more foreign investment coming into Alberta than Quebec and Ontario combined.

Why is that? That was because of good policies, Madam Speaker. That was because the policies that the government at the time was establishing created something that we called the Alberta advantage. The trickle-down effect of that Alberta advantage was that foreign investment came in at such a speed that we had almost a hundred thousand people moving into this province each year, the size of Lethbridge. Obviously, that's going to affect problems in terms of being able to keep up with infrastructure. Often we hear from the members opposite that, no, there was an infrastructure deficit. Well, of course there was an infrastructure deficit. There was an infrastructure deficit because you had a hundred thousand people moving in.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Well, the hon. member opposite in his comments indicated that $36 billion of investment was lost by this government, he said, over the first two years, and he cited the Conference Board of Canada as the source. Now, I don't remember the Conference Board of Canada saying any such thing.

It's certainly true that investment has ebbed as a result of historically low oil prices and a view in the industry that with the advent of new technologies, namely hydraulic fracturing, and major new plays, for example the Midland play in Texas, there are far more profitable areas for them to invest their capital because the costs are so much lower and it's so much easier to extract the oil and it's not heavy oil so it doesn't need upgrading, all of which makes it considerably cheaper and easier to access. So there has been a change in investment patterns and flows as the capital moves towards new areas of investment, where they can get a quicker return, faster turnover on their capital. That, combined with the sustained relatively low prices over several years, has led to some industry decisions with respect to where the capital will be invested. That, Madam Speaker, has nothing to do with the policies of our government despite the best efforts of the opposition to pin these historic shifts in the investment pattern on some of the policies of this government.

I guess I would like to challenge the hon. member to provide the evidence for his citation that the Conference Board of Canada laid a $36 billion drop in investment at the feet of the policies of this government. If he can't produce that, Madam Speaker, then I'm going to ask him to withdraw those remarks and apologize.

The Deputy Speaker: Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The reality is that the Conference Board of Canada – and I will be willing to submit that and table that in the coming days so that the hon. member can read it himself.

Here are two points that I wanted to make on this. One is that the Conference Board of Canada said that $36 billion of foreign investment has left. I will table that information. The hon. member is correct. There are changes in technology that have also affected where capital flows; however, we have a situation where that is only one portion of the problem. When I've talked to members from the industry, they have said that policies that this government continues to heap upon them are driving them out of this province. Now, if the truth hurts, you've got to look in the mirror, and you've got to be able to say: "You know what? We're doing something we shouldn't be doing."

That is something that I hoped that the members – you know what? Look, you can point your finger and say that it's this or it's that or whatever, but at some point you've got to start asking yourself: "You know what? These other oil and gas producing jurisdictions are doing well." We have a situation where in this province just red tape alone causes these companies to leave. When it takes us 10 times as long to be able to sink a well in this province versus what it does in Texas, obviously they're going to go where they can actually get into the ground and start making money more quickly. What the member is saying is that these things don't matter.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to speak to Bill 13, what is called An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future. One might say that it may also be an attempt by this NDP government to fix the thing that they meddled in and messed up so poorly. But, alas, we are here today dealing with this bill, which will essentially make electricity more expensive for consumers. This bill in and of itself is extremely thick. We have had it for a few days here and had some time to go through it and consult with various stakeholders and industry, get some feedback on what they think. It's an extensive piece of legislation here that truly does contain quite a bit of information, you know, for example, to develop some policy framework to allow Albertans to generate their own electricity from renewables, alternative sources.

One might suggest that Albertans would want to have their say, particularly in regard to that. I think that the government would also particularly like to hear from those that might have some thoughts and opinions on what that might actually mean to them and for them. You know, perhaps it's an extremely positive thing for the people of Alberta. But I'm sure that they would like to provide some input so that they can, you know, feel like the government is listening to them and giving them what they want and what exactly they need.

Sometimes I think, in particular, that government can really, truly miss the mark for whatever reason that might be in actually providing what it is that the people are looking for, Madam Speaker. That can mean various sorts of things, and I wouldn't pretend to know what those are standing here today, but I would certainly like to hear what those are. I think that there is an opportunity to do so in a committee sense, where we can allow Albertans to participate in democracy and have something that they want in their communities come out of this bill; not only that, but for Albertans to provide input on a piece of legislation that changes our electricity market so significantly.

You know, we've been in a deregulated market for quite some time now, and it's worked quite successfully. In fact, I'd never heard there was a problem with it until the government started suing people and messing things up and telling us that electricity prices were going through the roof. Even their own cap rate was higher than we've seen prices at for such a long time. There are a lot of things that aren't making sense, and I think that there's an opportunity here to help Albertans maybe make some sense of what this NDP government is doing. Committee is certainly the way to do that, to really delve in.

You know, Madam Speaker, I think that the NDP need to have the opportunity to explain to Albertans, too, what was really wrong with the electricity market, not after they meddled with it and made a muck but before they meddled with it. Probably, actually, the answer is that there wasn't anything wrong until they started messing with it. I could be wrong. I think that that would be something that definitely could come out of committee.

I would like to move an amendment as such. I'll just wait until you have a copy, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future in accordance with Standing Order 74.2."

Madam Speaker, as I had mentioned prior to moving this amendment, this is a massive piece of legislation that in its physical form is quite large, but also it's a significant change to the way that electricity is delivered here in Alberta. There is a need for members in this House to thoroughly debate and provide advice and feedback to this Legislature and to this government on the various components that exist inside of this bill.

The Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future in particular has the resources and the abilities inside the committee to bring in our stakeholders, AESO in particular. Sure, yeah, we can give them a call, Madam Speaker. I don't have an ability to record that call, with all the questions that I have, and to post it on the Internet and hope that people tune in and hear that. But we would certainly appreciate an opportunity in a legislative committee to invite our stakeholders – generators, AESO, the Market Surveillance Administrator, investors, and consumer groups – to come and participate in the debate. I mean, there's just so much – right? – from changing from a deregulated market to a capacity market to having components that allow Albertans to generate their own electricity from renewables and alternative sources.

Madam Speaker, I don't know what that looks like. I don't know what the government has in mind. I'm sure that they've consulted with Albertans and that Albertans have given them advice, perhaps. I don't know. I would assume so. This government doesn't have a great history of consultation, so the Official Opposition is allowing the government an opportunity to ensure that they do right by Albertans by making sure that they've thoroughly done the consultation and done their homework and done their research.

I mean, Madam Speaker, there wasn't anything wrong with our electricity until the NDP increased the carbon tax on large emitters. Maybe they don't know that. I don't know. I think they probably do, and I think that's probably why we're in the situation that we're in.

I would like to hear from AESO in particular. I think that this could be done quickly and efficiently here, certainly over the summer. Before the end of summer this could very likely be wrapped up. I mean, this is a huge change.

Madam Speaker, I would probably argue that when and/or if there were to be a change back to a deregulated market from a capacity market at a future date, the NDP themselves would move an amendment to refer to a committee and do some homework and do some research and, you know, allow the government then to participate in proper consultation and that type of thing. I would probably be safe to assume that's what the NDP Official Opposition would do, this of course being after 2019. Maybe that's generous. I don't know.

Madam Speaker, I don't know everything. I'm not going to pretend to know everything. I'm not an expert on electricity generation or delivery – I'm really not – so I would certainly welcome the opportunity to participate in the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future to hear and to learn and to be able to involve my constituents. The people of Airdrie are extremely concerned about rising prices from this NDP government and quite frequently let me know that they're really concerned about the rising prices from this government. We do know that NDP governments right across the country haven't really done anything but make life more expensive for Canadians across the country. I mean, they're certainly concerned right now because this government in particular has such a close tie with the Kathleen Wynne government in Ontario and the boondoggle mess that her government has created there. They would absolutely be concerned about what their cousin party in Alberta would be doing with our electricity markets as well.

Madam Speaker, I need to allow my constituents the opportunity to hear why this government is doing what they're doing and how they can ensure my constituents that prices aren't going to go through the roof like they have in Ontario, where people are paying more in their monthly utility bills than on their mortgage and their grocery bills combined. We've seen desperate pleas from residents in Ontario because it's so unaffordable to just keep their lights on and in the hot, hot summers that Ontario has to just try to keep it cool a little bit.

I don't want my constituents to not be able to afford to keep the baby monitor on, Madam Speaker, or anything else in their home that they're used to and that they need. I need to be able to put my constituents' minds at ease, and this can certainly be done through the legislative committee. I'm hoping the government will agree that this is an important piece of this puzzle, of this large piece of legislation, that indicates significant changes to Alberta's electricity market in the way it has been and in the way that they're proposing it to be, you know, before they pass this. It's the right thing to do.

I know, Madam Speaker, that this government has learned a lot of lessons over the last three years about consultation and how it annoys Albertans if they don't really do it. But this time they're going to get it right. I know they're going to pass this amendment because it makes sense, it's the right thing to do, and Albertans want to have their say on this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to the amendment to refer Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, to the legislative Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future. I would like to thank my colleague from Airdrie for moving this referral amendment because there is a good reason to do that, and I'll explain why. In my estimation it is essential that Bill 13 be sent to a committee for examination.

Now, we need a public hearing on this bill, Madam Speaker. We need the experts to come in and testify on this bill. Electricity law is perhaps some of the most complex law to understand. As soon as you bring in some of those complex mathematical equations, a person starts getting lost. My good friend the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, I mean, who happens to be their green left best friend, even said that it's very complex. He also said that he doesn't understand why they brought it. He said that we can't afford at this time to subsidize renewables. He is the Liberal member. He said that the Alberta NDP is going down the same rabbit hole that the Ontario Liberals have gone down, which made life hard and made life expensive and, to say the least, miserable for Ontarians. I have lots of friends there who've told me the pain they have gone through and are still going through.

That's why, Madam Speaker, we need experts to come in and testify on this bill. We all need to understand what the implications of Bill 13 mean in regular, everyday, ordinary language because it's very complex. Firstly, we need the Alberta Electric System Operator, better known as AESO or, in the legislation, as the Independent System Operator, ISO. The Member for Airdrie spoke about different stakeholders, so I just want to give a little bit of detailed explanation on: who are all these stakeholders, what are their roles, and why do we need to consult them? The AESO recommended a capacity market, and Bill 13 gives complete power to AESO to design this capacity market, both the provisional rules to get the capacity market up and running and the final rules after it is. The Legislature is being asked to trust the NDP government and give up all the powers to design the market to AESO, and the minister will be following AESO's recommendation for the regulations. That's why we need to hear from AESO.

Now, once AESO brings in rules for the capacity market, the Alberta Utilities Commission, AUC, will be asked to approve those rules. We need to hear from AUC as to how they will go about approving those rules. This is the most fundamental shakeup in the electricity system since the 1990s, Madam Speaker. We need to hear from the AUC on Bill 13.

Next we need to hear from the Market Surveillance Administrator. The MSA is the watchdog ensuring that people are not trying to game the electricity market to spike the prices and gouge customers by being greedy. The Market Surveillance Administrator recommended the capacity market. I think we need to hear from the MSA in person.

Madam Speaker, we also need to understand the relationship between the MSA and the AESO and the AUC going forward. Will the MSA have powers over the AESO, and can the AUC rein in the MSA and the AESO? These are all important questions.

Regular people, like the Member for Calgary-Mountain View explained, like my wife, for example, don't understand. She keeps saying that when we talk about all these acronyms – ISO, AESO, MSA, AUC – she doesn't understand. So I had to go in a simple way, like, using some common mythological language, for her to understand the story, a bit like AESO is the Creator, for example; in her faith it is Brahma. And the MSA is the Preserver; she understands Vishnu as the Preserver. And the AUC is the Destroyer, like Shiva. That's how I had to explain that, because it's very complex.

Mrs. Aheer: It's a soap opera.

Mr. Panda: Yeah. I had to use different language to my constituents when they call my office or when I door-knock.

Smart people also don't understand because they're not paying attention. They only look at the bills, and when the electricity prices are so high, they start paying attention. Why we got there, how we can fix it: those are now the questions they're asking.

Anyway, Madam Speaker, who else do we need to hear from in a committee? Between the AESO, the AUC, and the MSA we need to call in the generators as well because they are another major stakeholder. For example, Enmax will be an excellent witness. Not only do they own generation assets, including green power; Enmax owns transmission and distribution, which gives Enmax a unique view on the entire electrical system. Enmax was also battling this government over the power purchase agreement debacle and reached a settlement.

We also need to hear from Capital Power, another major generator. As the owner or the co-owner of 4 out of the 6 coal-fired generating units the NDP have decided to shut down sooner, Capital Power will be in a unique position to answer whether or not the capacity market was needed before or after the NDP coal phase-out, that is costing over $1.3 billion. Capital Power also won the renewable electricity program auction, auction 1, for 201.6 megawatts to be installed near Medicine Hat. Most of the people don't even know that. There will be much insight to be had from Capital Power on renewables inside the capacity market.

Next we need to hear from TransAlta. As the co-owner of four of the coal-fired generating stations the NDP plan to scuttle and eight of the units federally mandated to shut down, TransAlta will know the score, whether or not we need a capacity market. TransAlta has much experience in renewables also, Madam Speaker.

The other one is ATCO, previously Canadian Utilities. ATCO has three coal-fired units being shut down by the federal coal phase-out and two partially owned units. The NDP has accelerated their phase-out, Madam Speaker. ATCO will certainly have an opinion on whether or not that capacity market is needed and whether Bill 13 is the correct means to make that happen.

We also need to hear from the winners of the renewable electricity program, auction 1. Now, the NDP indicate REP 1 contractors will not be in the capacity market. Maybe they should be, Madam Speaker. Let's talk to them and find out why they're excluded and whether or not they should be in the capacity market.

EDP Renewables Canada Limited is a subsidiary of EDPR. Let's bring them in and hear about the Sharp Hills wind farm near Oyen that will generate 248.4 megawatts, Madam Speaker. EDPR is a global green energy company traded on the stock market in Europe, and they have installed capacity in North America, Spain, and Portugal. It's a Portuguese company, actually. They also have a minor stake in Brazil as well. That's another stakeholder we need to bring in.

Enel Green Power Canada Inc. also won renewables for electricity program auction 1 for two projects, 115 megawatts near Pincher Creek and 30.6 megawatts also near Pincher Creek. Enel Green Power Canada will be able to provide insight into the transmission line build-out that AESO has ordered up in the Oldman River valley. Enel is a subsidiary of a multinational Italian company, Madam Speaker, and they have some operating plants in South America, Europe, India, and South Africa.

You see, Madam Speaker, we have all kinds of people we need to hear from to get advice on Bill 13. We need to hear from the experts who know if electricity on provincial interties can be subject to capacity payments. Does B.C. Hydro site C qualify if it has its own intertie? These are the big questions we need to understand.

Most importantly, after the experts we need to hear from Albertans as well. We need the feedback from regular Albertans in the field who may know something about the capacity markets. Maybe we'll hear that we need this. Maybe we'll hear that Bill 13 will not do what it is supposed to do. Maybe we'll hear that the NDP is right with Bill 13, but let's hear from them. Maybe they'll say that the NDP is wrong, very, very, very wrong. We don't know what they're going to say unless we hear them.

Because we believe the NDP has raised the electricity prices and will continue to raise the electricity prices, Madam Speaker, I trust I have made my case for referring Bill 13 to the legislative Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future. I look forward to the debate on this topic.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The definition of stakeholder: a person with an interest or concern in something. I was very interested to hear the Member for Calgary-Foothills talk about the different stakeholders. What I would like to know: in his opinion, the value to hearing the stakeholder, in this situation the consumer of electricity, the regular Albertan, the people on fixed incomes, the newlyweds, the young families going to university, the student trying to just make ends meet. I'd like to hear from him: what is the value to being able to have that stakeholder be able to give witness to the devastation that these types of policies will provide for them in their own personal lives?

Look, I think the equation here is important to get right. We need to make sure that those people who have put capital into this as a business are heard. But I am worried about making sure that individual Albertans also get heard, Madam Speaker, because in this equation you've got the supplier of electricity and the consumer of electricity. You know, they create the supply and demand, which is supposed to be able to determine what the equilibrium price is.

But in this situation, again back to this Bill 13, it seems like the government is only addressing what the businesses want, which is certainty. I can imagine businesses coming in and saying: "You know what? We're very happy to be able to get this kind of certainty. It's great to be able to lock in a price. It's great to be able to build something and not have to be able to provide electricity. We just get to be able to make money just because we've created capacity." But what about the cost increases for the regular Albertan – how is that going to affect them? – and being able to have credible witness from them saying: you know, this is really going to affect me materially. I'd like to know from the Member for Calgary-Foothills what he feels is the value of that kind of feedback from the consumer.

Mr. Panda: Madam Speaker, the reason I'm supporting this referral amendment is to strengthen this legislation. Like, the previous speaker spoke about the unintended consequences. I saw a pattern here. I picked up this file very recently, and then ever since I've consulted so many stakeholders. It's really complex. Even for someone like me with a technical background, it's spinning my head. The more I dig in, the more I realize it's very complex.

The regular Albertans that the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner mentioned, it's for them – you know, they may think that the government is protecting the price for them, but how do they protect? I mean, it's going to cost more to generate electricity, to transmit, to retail, and to supply. But if it is costing actually 10 cents a kilowatt hour and if we are saying that we're protecting them by capping it at 6.8, someone else is paying. The young couples he's talking about may not be paying, but their parents, their neighbours, other Albertans, who are the taxpayers, are paying to subsidize the consumer, who is the ratepayer.

Like I said, even the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, who is generally very supportive of this government, said that this is unnecessary because this government got into this mess by bringing in their ideological policy of early coal phase-out. The government says that the federal government, the Harper government, wanted to do it. They wanted to do it in 2030.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. First of all, I am standing up to speak against this amendment. I wanted to point out that there have indeed been consultations. I sat personally in on a day, on March 15, where we had 96 organizations pull together.

They all came to McDougall Centre, 140 representatives. They were mainly CEOs of the companies. We had the Alberta association of municipal districts, now the RMA. We had AUMA. We had the Aboriginal Financial Services Corporation. We had people like the Alberta Federation of Rural Electrification Associations. We had the Alberta-Pacific Forest Industries. We had the Alberta Utilities Commission. We had ATCO. We had ATCO Electric, Canada West Foundation. We had Camrose Energy. I think every company or stakeholder that was named by the opposite member was part of this list: Enbridge, EPCOR, Capital Power, Husky energy, Imperial Oil.

We had all kinds of investors, big generators, distributors, renewable folks. Again, 140 participants, 96 companies were represented, including municipalities. All of this is on the AESO website, so it's easily available, who we met with. In fact, it may have the names. I think this is all redundant, to do this kind of thing, because there has been very thorough stakeholder engagement in all parts of this in designing the capacity market, Madam Speaker, so I speak against this amendment. I think it's been done, and we need to move on.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The question that I just asked the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills I would also pose to the hon. minister. You know, all of the names that she mentioned: it's important to have that consultation with those people. I didn't hear her once say that they actually opened it up to the public, to regular Albertans, to know what they are going to feel about this. The truth is that right now we are sitting at around 3 cents a kilowatt hour, and moving up to even a cap of 6.8 cents a kilowatt hour is going to double that. This is a cost to Albertans that Albertans are going to have to bear: at what cost to regular Albertans? They are going to be the ones who bear this. It's the taxpayer, it's the ratepayer that is going to have to bear this.

So the question, again, to the minister that I asked the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills: what consultation have you done with regular Albertans in order to be able to get their feedback on whether they're accepting of these cost increases? Have you shared with them an economic impact study? Have you shared with them what the cost increases are going to be and what they are going to have to bear? You know, I think that that's a very reasonable question to ask.

If that hasn't been done, Madam Speaker, then if we were to send this to committee, it would allow us the opportunity to be able to hear from those credible witnesses and to find out what the material costs are going to be to them. If the minister could answer that question, that would be fantastic.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Well, as I mentioned, we had the AAMDC, which is now RMA, I believe, and AUMA. Those are elected groups that represent stakeholders in all of Alberta. I think there would be an opportunity for them to check back with their stakeholders. That's what they're elected to do, to represent everyday Albertans, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Hunter: Fantastic to hear. They're great organizations. Once again, were they able to represent and get feedback from regular Albertans that are not members of associations or organizations directly affiliated with something like a company that is going to be benefiting from this?

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Panda: I would like to thank the hon. minister for her comments. If she says that she consulted behind the closed door all those stakeholders that I named, what other deals did they make behind closed doors? Why don't they let them come to the legislative committee and through the legislative committee tell regular Albertans what they discussed, what concerns were raised by the stakeholders, and how they plan to mitigate their concerns? That's what the same stakeholders are telling me. They have huge concerns about this bill.

Madam Speaker, this government has a record. You know, they said that the settlement with Enmax wouldn't have any impact, and then they have backdoor negotiations and deals done with them, and then they settle the case. But in the process Albertans lost hundreds of millions of dollars. This is not small money, hundreds of millions of dollars, which they proudly say that they're spending on infrastructure projects to help Albertans. All that money they blew could have been used for those infrastructure projects. But they don't tell me. We asked so many times in this House how much it costs, whether these coal phase-out settlements accelerated the coal phase-out.

You can blame the Harper government, but the Harper government would have phased it out later, would have let that run through the life cycle. You accelerated it. Then you brought in your carbon tax, which was not campaigned on. Because of that, that triggered the dump of PPAs. That created the necessity for a capacity market. So all these things they won't explain to regular Albertans. They just bury it in small print somewhere, which regular Albertans don't have time or . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Wow. This whole discussion is very reminiscent of bills 27 and 34. Interestingly, I think that as we put these puzzle pieces together, we kind of are seeing the mandate or the puzzle come together of what it was that the government was intending at that time and what the fallout is. A lot of this legislation is happening as a result of those two bills. I'm going to be discussing the amendment, obviously, but in order to put it into context, I will also be bringing up aspects of bills 34 and 27 to explain where I'm coming from.

Just to bring up the language of the Minister of Energy, I believe she said "cognitive dissonance." That's interesting. The government has forced unpredictable renewable electricity on Albertans with little forethought of the cost and implications on the taxpayer and the ratepayer, the same person, down the road. Their actions are driven by ideology. I'm not sure. They keep saying that it's in the best interest of Albertans, but I don't quite understand it.

I would like to thank the minister for meeting with 96 organizations and 140 reps. As I understand it, you said that it was on the 15th, a particular day. That's a lot of people to meet in one day. I don't know if you'd call that a consultation or a group meeting. Anyway, I know that my colleague from Calgary-Foothills has spent months meeting with people. It's a significantly different level of consultation, I would suggest, but that's just me.

The Minister of Energy had spoken in the past about ensuring reliable electricity and then went on to blame the previous government and industries about sweetheart provisions and how they had failed to provide the necessary tools for the Balancing Pool and to manage the potential losses for this roller coaster. The minister kept repeating that the PPA costs were being loaded onto the consumers. Well, I would actually like to speak about the truth and the cost of electricity. Actually, the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner did a very good job of explaining, especially when it came to the retail piece of this.

Madam Speaker, you could pretend to protect the ratepayer by capping the cost and falsely leading Albertans to believe that we are paying for our usage, misleading Albertans under the smoke and mirrors of a cap that we are paying for our usage. You can't just pretend to try and cover up the costs and say: "Well, you have to pay for it one day. Oh, well." You're pretending to protect people, absolutely pretending to protect people. You say, like: "We're just going to cover it for you. That's what the government is going to do. We're going to cover the cost for you. You don't have to pay for anything." The taxpayer does, and the government triggered this whole shemuzzle, the entire thing.

Let's go back a little. I mean, this is incredibly irresponsible, and now the Minister of Finance can, with the recommendation of the Energy minister, loan money to the Balancing Pool. So let's take a look at this. The government can make loans to the Balancing Pool and then guarantee the obligations to the Balancing Pool with no accountability, no transparency, and no public way to explain where that funding went, a blank cheque. A blank cheque.

Now, let's go into this a little bit more. Let's talk about the Balancing Pool. The Balancing Pool did have a way of taking care of their losses. Those were on the consumer bills, and they were called rate riders, the charges and refunds. Now, let me reiterate, too, that the refunds over the years have added up to $3 billion, Madam Speaker, $3 billion. That's what the rate rider does. Those were already there, and interestingly enough the average Albertan, as convoluted and complex as the electricity bill looks, could see the line item of where that was. We have zero utility debt in this province at this point. Interesting.

So we have charges, yes, and there were some times where you had to pay more, but there were also many times where you had to pay less. Those rate riders covered that. They were approved to be used or collected or reimbursed by the regulated market, and that regulated market used the regulated rate of transmission and the distribution utility. Based on that, they can forecast it. It's very transparent.

There's another situation here. I mean, the combination of a system that phased out coal-fired power and introduced wind power – this time frame is too tight, and it has caused absolute chaos, Madam Speaker, for the electricity market and destabilized it to a point that the government now needs to frantically try and step in and put those pieces back together that they broke in the first place.

I agree with the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. There were pieces of this that were broken. You decided to break the part that was already working. Madam Speaker, how is that possible? There were definitely things and issues that needed to be looked at, no doubt. The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner already went into that. But why would the government take the piece of it that was already working and working efficiently, break that wide open, cause this immense chaos, humongous charges that are going to come and be downloaded onto the taxpayer, that they're supposedly protecting, and then blame it on supposed sweetheart deals that happened in the past?

Now, the minister is meeting with corporations and groups and everything like that but isn't willing to use our referral amendment to go in front of committee and transparently explain to Albertans why it is that this capacity market is supposedly so fantastic. What a wonderful opportunity for the minister to actually show Albertans why this would work. I could be wrong. Let's do it. Let's get together. Let's figure it out. But no, no, no. We're just supposed to acknowledge that all of these people were met on one day and that that's a consultation, and therefore everything is just wonderful.

Unfortunately, though, the costs associated with the changeover to the capacity market and the conversion to natural gas and renewables are significant, and while the government says that it intends to restabilize the market, in actuality, Madam Speaker, the government has spent billions of dollars, billions of hard-earned taxpayer dollars, to fix their mistake. There is nothing stable about that. Again, you can pretend to protect Albertans under the mystique of a cap. Nobody is buying it. Nobody is buying it. It doesn't work in Ontario. [interjection] Oh, yeah, somebody is making money off it, but it's certainly not Albertans.

You know, I'd like to continue on here. The rate riders, just to go back to rate riders, needed to actually be approved by the system. There are experts in the field, and they were the ones that would approve the rate. The Balancing Pool once upon a time was an independent body. Interestingly enough – I don't know if you remember this; this is a little blast from the past – many of those board members resigned en masse because of political interference, Madam Speaker. That's what happened as a result of Bill 34. That's what happened. Interestingly enough, Bill 27 took away the powers of the Market Surveillance Administrator but only on renewables. We'll get into that a little bit later.

Very interesting. You can see these puzzle pieces getting put together. Very disturbing. You don't have to be a specialist in electricity to start adding up the pieces to find out where this government is going. One mistake after another after another after another, and we end up with legislation like this to try and put together this broken mistake that has happened, this debacle, and then more ways to hide it, more ways to hide it from Albertans.

We had the Balancing Pool as an independent body, and we are going to, on this side of the House, stand up against the writing of that blank cheque. These are taxpayer dollars. These are not government dollars.

This is the interesting part, too. You know, the government, with the rate riders, actually, had immense transparency to our ratepayers because they would understand the full cost of electricity. What is the government afraid of? If you want to do this capacity market, Madam Speaker, show us the money. Show us where it's going. Show Albertans what you're doing. Do not hide it underneath a 6.8-cent cap, pretending to protect Albertans, when we know that those dollars and those taxes are going to get spread out across the board in a thousand different other ways and will impact Albertans and their pocketbooks. They're already starting to see the difference.

The government is misleading Albertans, Madam Speaker. The Balancing Pool can recover its costs, and Bill 34 – this is the most interesting part and the most interesting part that actually leads to this bill – removed the checks and balances. That is this government's legacy, removing the things that actually protect Albertans. That's what this is about. You can't hide it in a cap. It's not possible. Everything will come out. It might not come out while this government is in power, but the truth will come out.

Once we start seeing those bills and not understanding – I'm sorry, but Albertans are intelligent and savvy. They're going to understand what's going on. Initially it might look okay with rebates and all this other kind of stuff, and then it's going to start to hit them in their pocketbooks, and, whoa, we're in trouble. We're in trouble, Houston.

Bill 13 shows us where the government was going with this. You know, it's funny. When we were debating bills 34 and 27 – and those were some late, late night debates – we knew, we could feel that there was something on the horizon, and here we are. I mean, we were concerned about wide-sweeping and irresponsible changes and no limit on spending to backstop the Balancing Pool. Can somebody on the government side please explain this to me? Please. How is it that you can justify spending taxpayer dollars to backstop the Balancing Pool? Once upon a time it actually had excess money, $700 million to be exact, which went out the door real quickly, Madam Speaker, the minute that this capacity market came on the docket. What happened to those dollars, Minister?

And the debacle continues. I mean, Bill 34 was senseless, absolutely senseless. If you looked at the rate riders, there was only a difference of one or two dollars. There was absolutely no need to do this, but, no, the government decided to do this, and now we can see the fallout and the motive, and now this legislation has to happen. So the government created uncertainty. Then it blamed the market, like it was the market's fault that their renewables scheme wasn't working.

I hope we all understand in this House that low-priced power equals economic growth. Almost 80 per cent of our grid, Madam Speaker, is industrial, and those low prices are key to investment in this province, absolutely key in this province, especially for the job creators, which, my understanding was, this government actually cared about.

Now, the government also talked about how there wasn't any new investment. Well, actually, there was new investment, which also brought on a needed and large reserve margin. That large reserve margin is exactly what we need for spikes or anything that happens within the grid, especially for the industry, especially in this province, Madam Speaker. I mean, why attack the wholesalers, the retailers? Oh, I know. They responded to a few large corporations who did not like the low prices, right? Isn't that interesting? Something that they're always riding this side about, that government is involved. The government decided to choose to side with a few small corporations that didn't like the low prices, and instead they decided to tax these people, that they're sent here to represent, under the smoke and mirrors of a 6.8-cent cap.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the comments by the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View because she did a very good job of being able to show the timeline of how we got to this point. I actually think that that's extremely important in order for us, again, to be able to see kind of the broad view of what's happening in this market.

One of the things that I was thinking about as the member was speaking – and she got me really thinking about this – was because she was talking about, I guess, motive for why the government is doing this, you know, kind of giving the top 1 per cent of the rich people in this province help, which they always seem to keep on saying that we do. But, in reality, what they're doing is that they're helping a few corporations to be able to maximize profits because there's going to be a guaranteed return on investment.

I was going to ask this question. In terms of the renewables I watched one day when the wind was at about 4 per cent of capacity, so I think that they produced about 4 per cent of the capacity on this one given day. Yet under this bill creating this capacity market, it would actually pay the wind companies the full amount versus the 4 per cent that they actually only produced. So if they had a hundred per cent of their capacity and they're still only producing 4 per cent, the model didn't work.

I asked a person that actually had the largest wind farm in Alberta. I said, "How did you do it?" and they said: "You know what? The only way we could do it was if we sold carbon credits to California." Now, this was, again, not underneath this government, but it indicated to me that the technology is not where it needs to be yet.

So there's a big push for renewables. It'd be great. Again, I've said it many times: I love renewables. But always the problem is that it just doesn't make sense. I have to also be able to weigh the idea of how good renewables are versus the cost of them. The wind at only 4 per cent of capacity is now, under this bill, going to get paid the extra 96 per cent for just having capacity. My question to the member is: how is this not going to create an increased cost to Albertans?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think I was asked the question. Thank you. Actually, to answer, I have some interesting information. I was mentioning this in question period today. Today we were at 3.1 cents per unit, and the government subsidized anything before 3.7. The interesting thing, though, is that the wind today is at a whopping 2.5 per cent of generation, so that's 227 megawatts out of a possible 8,801. That's the rate today. This is really quite interesting, because if you look at that capacity, if the government is subsidizing 100 per cent of that on a day that produced 2.5 per cent, yikes.

You were asking me about how that would impact people. Well, the capacity market, Madam Speaker, will be reflected in higher power bills for the consumer. Since the government has put in the 6.8-cent kilowatt cap – this is the part – the government is going to subsidize your power bill should the power prices rise above. It's smoke and mirrors. It's going to look like you're not paying more. I mean, we were just talking today about what it will cost an average Albertan to pay back their debt, and now we're loading them with this, too, for our future.

I mean, I can't begin to explain how much I love renewables. I completely love them. But the secrecy and the speed by which they're being implemented – it's so costly, Madam Speaker. You know, I can't speak to wind, but the price of solar has been reduced by half since 2011. The market is deciding, and instead of the government looking at the market and allowing the market to decide, they decided to get their fingers into the part that was actually working.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would just like to move that we adjourn debate at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 17 Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 17, the Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2018.

As I mentioned during the introduction of this legislation, Alberta's tax laws are typically reviewed on an annual basis and amended as required. This process ensures that government policy decisions are implemented and the integrity of our tax system is maintained. The proposed amendments impact two pieces of legislation, the Alberta Corporate Tax Act and the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. As indicated at first reading, these amendments maintain consistency between provincial and federal tax legislation. They align provincial legislation with current administrative practices, they address technical deficiencies in the legislation, and they repeal expired provisions.

I'll begin by outlining the proposed changes to the Alberta Corporate Tax Act. With regard to electronic communications over the years Alberta's corporate tax system has moved to reflect the growing use of electronic communications by allowing Alberta's corporate tax administrators to send and receive certain pieces of information electronically. One proposed change through Bill 17 would continue to expand on this ability. Specifically, electronic communications could now be used to send companies notifications that they must file a tax return or provide information necessary to administer the legislation.

This change will only impact taxpayers who currently communicate electronically or those who indicate their preference for electronic communications. Currently the minister may only demand that a corporation file a tax return or provide information necessary to administer the act by serving this demand personally or by registered mail. This change will modernize the Alberta Corporate Tax Act and improve administrative efficiency.

With regard to insurance underwriting, Alberta's general practice is to parallel the federal definition of corporate taxable income. This practice helps keep tax compliance costs low for corporations and administrative costs low for government. The 2017 federal budget announced that starting in 2019, the government of Canada will eliminate the special corporate tax exemption that income insurance companies earn from underwriting farming or fishing properties. The exemption was introduced in 1954 to encourage the provision of insurance in rural districts. The federal government has indicated that this special exemption is no longer needed as Canada's financial sector is best positioned to effectively underwrite the risks associated with farming and fishing properties.

Amending Alberta's corporate tax legislation to parallel this federal change will maintain Alberta's practice of adopting the federal definition of taxable income and will help keep tax compliance and administrative costs low. The amendments also ensure that Alberta's tax treatment for insurance companies is aligned with all other provinces.

Now I'll move on to the proposed changes to the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. With regard to infirm dependants and caregiver credits through Bill 17 other personal income tax changes are being undertaken as a result of recent federal legislative changes. We are making sure that these federal changes do not impact Alberta's infirm dependant and caregiver credits by putting the underlying rules directly into provincial legislation rather than referencing the federal Income Tax Act. These amendments do not change credit entitlements or who qualifies. Rather, they simply ensure that the underlying legislation supports Alberta's existing policy and the way the credits are administered.

With regard to the climate leadership adjustment rebate the proposed amendment would also clarify that income earned by minors is not included when determining a family's Alberta climate leadership adjustment rebate. This is how the Canada Revenue Agency has always administered the rebate, so it will not impact the rebates these families receive. This change is simply a technical change that aligns our legislation with how the rebate is actually administered.

Lastly, with regard to electoral financing changes the last changes I'd like to explain are housekeeping amendments to both the Alberta Corporate Tax Act and the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act that reflect recent electoral financing changes. As trusts are no longer allowed to make political contributions, we are amending the Alberta Person Income Tax Act to clarify that trusts are not allowed to claim the political contributions tax credit. We are also repealing the political contribution tax credit section from the Alberta Corporate Tax Act since corporations are also no longer allowed to make political contributions.

Finally, the Senatorial Selection Act expired in 2018, so there is no need for the tax acts to allow for a tax credit for contributions to senatorial candidates.

In closing, Madam Speaker, to recap, this bill will maintain consistency between federal and Alberta legislation, it'll align provincial legislation with administrative practices, it'll address technical deficiencies, and it will repeal expired provincial provisions.

I would encourage all members of the House to support this bill, and I look forward to debate.

I would like to adjourn debate. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you. Looking at the time and the work that's been accomplished, I'd like to motion for adjournment until 1:30 tomorrow.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Hon. members, let each of us in our own way pray and reflect on the good fortune we have to meet the young people of our province and on our confidence in them being our future leaders.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. R.J. Chambers. I would invite all participants to sing in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a former MLA, Ken Allred. Mr. Allred is one of the most accomplished land surveyors in the province. Graduating from SAIT in 1961 with a gold executive award, Ken went on to hold a number of prominent positions with the Alberta Land Surveyors' Association, the Canadian Council of Land Surveyors, and the International Federation of Surveyors. Mr. Allred was also an adjunct professor of the University of Alberta from 1984 to 1992. In addition to his professional accomplishments, Mr. Allred was an accomplished politician as well. He served on city council in St. Albert from 1980 to '86 before deciding not to run again. He changed his mind, however, in 1989 and served an additional three terms before retiring in 1998. He returned to politics in 2008, when he was elected as the MLA for St. Albert.

It was during his term of office that Mr. Allred originally attempted to abolish adverse possession, which we will address later today, something he remains passionate about to this day, and he will be staying on for the debate later this afternoon. Mr. Allred was very, very instrumental in my bringing this private member's bill forward. I would now ask that Mr. Allred rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly 87 students, representing 65 constituencies, who are here today as participants in the Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day program. Offered annually since 2003, this program strives to further develop the interest in and understanding of our parliamentary system among Alberta youth.

These high school students arrived on Sunday and since then have been participating in a variety of activities. In the last day they've toured the Legislature, explored the grounds, attended inspiring sessions facilitated by community leaders, and they've made friendships and learned about dorm life at MacEwan University. After observing question period today, they will meet with a panel of former MLAs. Tomorrow they'll debate a resolution in this very Chamber, presided over by yourself, Mr. Speaker. During this debate the students will be given a unique perspective on the work done by the members of this Assembly, and following the debate, they will have the opportunity to visit the offices of their MLAs. I would ask that all of our MLA for a Day participants, who are seated in both the members' and public galleries, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Jabbour: I have a second.

The Speaker: Sure.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have a second introduction. I wanted to acknowledge a remarkable young man from my constituency, from the town of Fort Vermilion, Carson Flett. He's here with the MLA for a Day program, but Carson is really outstanding. He has wanted to be in this program since the first day that I met him, years ago, and he's very excited that he finally is old enough to come. Carson's current project is that he's got a petition going to reduce the voting age to 16, so he's very politically engaged, and I know that one day he's going to achieve his goal of being an elected representative. Please give Carson a special warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, lest there be any doubt, I look forward to the debate that the students will be having tomorrow, and lest there be any doubt, I expect that the quality of debate will exceed this Chamber.

The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to rise today on behalf of my colleague for Stony Plain to introduce to you and through you 37 students from Stony Plain Central school. The students are accompanied by their teachers, Morgan Wilson and Alesha Broadbent, and I would like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other schools groups, hon. members?

Seeing and hearing none, the Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you Ashwak Bawa-Morad and her guests, who are seated in the Speaker's gallery. Ashwak is an early childhood educator at the Community Options Edmonton Northwest Child Care Centre in my riding of Edmonton-Glenora. I am so proud to share with you and all guests that Ashwak received one of only five awards from the Prime Minister. She received the certificate of excellence in early childhood education. Ashwak has gone above and beyond and has a very special place in the hearts of the children she cares for as well as their families. She's joined by Mason, one of her young students, as well as his mom, Tamara. My heart is warmed when Mason tells me about his best friend, Ashwak, and how he gets to play and learn from her every day. I ask that Ashwak and her guests please rise and join me and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you Elaine Munce with Hospice Calgary and Jennifer Elliott with the Alberta Hospice Palliative Care Association. They join us during national Hospice Palliative Care Week. This year's theme is Towards a More Compassionate Canada, Eh? This week encourages Canadians to consider ways that community involvement can support the dying and bereavement process, asking: what makes a compassionate community, and how can compassionate communities support end-of-life care? We are truly fortunate to have organizations like these. Their advocacy and partnership are vital in providing quality end-of-life care for Albertans. I invite both Jennifer and Elaine to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Red Deer South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Joel Ward and Elaine Vandale. Joel has been president and CEO of Red Deer College for nine years and is an outstanding champion for RDC. Elaine is the executive director of board and corporate relations and is a member of the president's executive team. She has been working at RDC for over 21 years. I thank my guests for the great work they do at RDC, which I will speak more about later today. I ask my guests to now rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Education.

1:40

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm thrilled to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly 29 amazing participants in the 2017-18 Minister's Youth Council plus six staff members. These students have come from all across Alberta, and I'm very honoured to have worked with them during this past year. They have done important work that definitely has positively impacted our government. They've told me about important issues like rural education, mental health, and supports for LGBTQ youth. I'm very humbled to have had these conversations with these students, and it's certainly helped to influence my work and to make me a better minister and MLA. I would ask them now to all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

Gay-straight Alliances in Schools

Ms Goehring: Mr. Speaker, yesterday our government was proud to give 15-year-old Noah Nicholls a Great Kids award for his work in promoting LGBTQ2-plus rights. After joining a gay-straight alliance at his Calgary high school last year, Noah gained the confidence to start telling his friends, relatives, and finally his parents that he is gay.

At the same time we were celebrating Noah's courage and leadership, delegates at the UCP convention in Red Deer were shamefully voting to double down on outing gay kids who join a GSA, a policy their leader first proposed over a year ago. In fact, they went one step further. UCP delegates overwhelmingly adopted a resolution that would mean kids aren't even allowed to join a GSA unless they have parental consent.

Outing kids is not only extreme; it's downright cruel. As Noah said yesterday: "I can't think of something worse than ... not getting to tell people myself ... It's about when you're ready. It should be up to you." The facts are clear. Gay-straight alliances not only give some of the most vulnerable kids in our schools a place to feel welcome and safe; they also save lives.

That's why I am so proud that our government passed a law to protect every student's right to form a GSA at their school without fear of being outed. The vast majority of Albertans support our law. They understand that in today's Alberta it matters how we treat each other, especially the most vulnerable. But this weekend made it clear that the UCP doesn't stand with moderate Albertans. They stand with insular, extreme special-interest groups who want to take our province backwards on GSAs and so many other issues. On this side of the Legislature we'll keep fighting to ensure that that does not happen.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Women's Political Participation

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, this weekend in Red Deer 2,600 delegates met and listened to an extraordinary speech from former Conservative Party of Canada leader Rona Ambrose. She encouraged strong Conservative women to take the leap into politics and to win. Our caucus is stronger when it truly reflects its members and the people of this great province. Rona knows our party leader well and is confident, as am I, that he supports women and makes decisions based on merit and not on tokenism. Conservative women don't want special treatment. We want an equal opportunity to compete and to succeed. I am proud that our party members just elected hard-working individuals to serve on our executive board. Half of them are women but not because of any quotas. They were the right persons for the job.

It's not surprising, Mr. Speaker, because Conservatives have a strong record of empowering women. Who gave women the right to vote? Conservatives. What party appointed the first woman cabinet minister? The Conservatives. Who appointed the first woman Foreign Affairs minister? Conservatives. Who gave aboriginal women equal rights under the law in this country? Conservatives. Who was the first female Prime Minister? Kim Campbell, also Conservative. The first woman Leader of the Opposition, Deb Grey, a Reform MP, withstood unbelievable sexism and harassment from the so-called progressives in the House of Commons, yet she stood her ground, and she made us proud. We cannot forget about these women, who have paved the way for the rest of us. They were not filling token positions. These women competed for and earned them.

I would like to thank Rona Ambrose and Lauren Harper for their initiative, the She Leads campaign, which will support women running for the United Conservative Party. I look forward to a United Conservative government full of talented and experienced women who work hard and improve this province. We believe in our families, in our communities, and in our principles.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Publicly Funded Health Care

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This weekend, after months of trying to hide, the UCP answered the question about what kind of party they are. They could have decided to be an open tent party, but instead they decided to be a party focused on exclusion and collusion. As the Edmonton Journal wrote: “United Conservative Party delegates had one job at their founding convention this weekend – don’t look extreme. They didn’t succeed.”

The UCP are showing Albertans just how elitist, extremist, and reckless they really are. Their votes to attack LGBTQ youth, to give big tax giveaways to millionaires, and to privatize health care tell Albertans everything they need to know about what kind of party they are. Their plan would bring back the bad old days of queue-jumping for their wealthy insiders and donors and cutting health services for people like my dad, a house painter who could not have afforded to pay for health care after falling at work and breaking four ribs and puncturing a lung. Albertans deserve better than the two-tiered, American-style health care they rejected last election, and I can confidently say that they’re getting better from our government.

Mr. Speaker, while the UCP refuse to talk about women’s reproductive health, we’ll stand up for women’s rights in this province. While the UCP advocate for reckless cuts to health care, we’ll keep building the Calgary cancer centre so patients can get the care that they need. While the UCP threaten to fire nurses, doctors, and health care aides, we’ll stand up for Albertans and ensure those same nurses, doctors, and health care aides are there at the side of Albertans when they need them. While the UCP try to give political insiders and campaign donors preferential access to health care, we’re going to stand up for regular Albertan families. We believe in public health care based on need, not the size of your wallet.

Rural Infrastructure Project Approval

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, Alberta municipalities facilitate growth and economic development that always requires attention to public safety, which involves timely construction activity involving routine minor bridge, culvert, and road maintenance. For decades in rural areas municipalities have always accomplished those tasks by incorporating professional engineering standards in their construction processes. However, since July ’15 rural municipalities have noticed a considerable change in the environmental approval process and have expressed serious concerns related to months of unnecessarily delayed inspections and approvals, especially for routine maintenance work. According to several municipal superintendents these project approvals are not forthcoming from Alberta Environment and Parks due to a new Alberta wetland policy that contains overreaching changes to the wetland regulatory requirements. This is causing additional and, in their view, unnecessary assessments being required prior to work being done.

In fact, when initial responses are now received to municipal inquiries regarding delayed project applications, responses from Environment now state in almost all cases that at this time they’re experiencing a high volume of applications, and the expected timeline for review and a decision by the director is currently eight to 12 months from submission of the application, Mr. Speaker, and that includes inquiries for simple, routine projects such as replacing a local road culvert. This is simply not acceptable. Entire construction seasons are being lost because of this red tape policy.

To address this growing concern, the Rural Municipalities association passed a resolution to urge the province to relax these unnecessary, overreaching requirements for formal approvals on routine maintenance projects, requesting that consideration be given to safety concerns related to delayed environmental approval processing from Alberta Environment and Parks. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all Albertans this critical safety problem for the travelling public must be addressed by the minister as soon as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Red Deer College

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m honoured today to rise and speak about Red Deer College. RDC has been very busy the last few years, with three major construction projects under way. The Gary W. Harris Canada games centre, the new residence, and the alternative energy lab are on their way to completion. Of course, the announcement by Premier Notley and Minister Schmidt that RDC is on its way to becoming a degree-granting institution has helped make things even busier.

1:50

As if all of that wasn’t enough, RDC has also been busy with its alternative energy initiative, which promotes environmental stewardship through the application of sustainable and energy efficient technologies. The new alternative energy lab will create opportunities for education and research. This will not only assist industry; it will also provide RDC students with the skills necessary to install, operate, and maintain alternative energy systems. RDC will be installing 3,645 solar panels. This along with a combined heat and power unit and their ongoing conversion of their exterior lighting to LED bulbs will create or conserve over 9,000 megawatt hours per year. This will offset campus electricity usage by an estimated 67 per cent. That, Mr. Speaker, would be the equivalent of the energy required to power 1,300 average Alberta homes or the equivalent of removing 1,100 cars off the road annually.

RDC contributes over $500 million to our local economy every year as well as educating 7,500 full- and part-time students and employing 1,415 people last year alone. RDC has a proud history of providing a top-notch education to its students. I look forward to it leading the way into a better future for Red Deer and the rest of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, if I might remind the House about using personal names in statements: we avoid that practice.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Federal Carbon Pricing

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, today the Leader of the Official Opposition is in Ottawa talking to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance about the federal government’s Bill C-74, which would enact a federal carbon tax and devastate Alberta and the oil and gas industry. Our leader is standing up for Alberta and protecting provincial jurisdiction, unlike the NDP, who are just rubber-stamping carbon tax increases while Trudeau stands by and does nothing on Trans Mountain. Premier, when will you realize that your job is to protect Albertans and start standing up to Justin Trudeau rather than just rubber-stamping and doing whatever he tells you to do?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm so proud of our Premier and our government for the role we've taken in ensuring that we get pipeline approvals to tidewater, including the climate leadership plan that got us that very approval. The members opposite never came close. If they want to talk taxes, let's talk taxes. Their members this weekend voted for a $700 million tax giveaway to the richest among us. The rest of us will pay for ballooning class sizes, longer hospital waits. We stand with everyday Albertans. We know that they stand with their rich friends.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the members across the way want to talk about what was voted on at party conventions. The last time that this party across from me met at a national convention, they voted for the Leap Manifesto, which called for the shutting down of the complete energy industry in our province. But I digress.

This government has already rubber-stamped a carbon tax increase to $50 to start – there'll be another one 67 per cent beyond that – at the request of Justin Trudeau. My question, Mr. Speaker, to the Deputy Premier is: did the NDP receive an analysis from the federal government on the full cost of that $50 carbon tax before they agreed to it, or did they just rubber-stamp that increase at the request of their close personal ally Justin Trudeau?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: You know what, Mr. Speaker? We're proud to show up and do our jobs on behalf of Albertans, and our government is focused on making life better by supporting our energy industry to get great jobs that create good opportunities for Alberta families. The members opposite are focused on making life worse by denying women access to health care. In fact, they won't even debate the matters in this House. This weekend we saw a little bit about what's behind the curtain. They want to put down women who run for public office. They don't even show up for the job themselves. That's shameful. [interjections]

The Speaker: Let's be calm, folks.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, all we get from the NDP government is rhetoric while the deadline clock continues to tick and the NDP continue to punish Albertans with a ridiculous carbon tax that has absolutely no benefit for this province. They've already increased it to $50 per tonne and have also increased it yet again by 67 per cent in their latest budget. My question – and I'll ask it again – is: did the NDP receive an analysis from the federal government on the full costs of going to a $50 carbon tax before they agreed to it, or did they just rubber-stamp it because their close ally Justin Trudeau told them to?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we are incredibly proud of the fact that even though there were two governments that were Conservative, one in this Chamber and one in Ottawa – they kind of looked the same – that failed to get a pipeline to tidewater, this government is not accepting failure as an answer. We know the members opposite keep cheering for that. We made it very clear to the federal government that we will get onboard if and only if we get our product to tidewater. You know what? That's in Alberta's interest. It's in the national interest. We won't back down. It's about time you guys came to the party. We know that you're at other parties doing other things, but on this side of the House we stand up for ordinary Albertans.

Carbon Levy Rate

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, we've seen an Environment Canada commissioned report that anticipates the carbon tax rising to $75 per tonne. That means that gas would go up 18 cents per litre; propane would go up 12 cents per litre; natural gas would go up 15 cents per cubic metre; aviation fuel, 20 cents per litre; diesel fuel up 21 cents per litre; home heating fuel up 24 cents per litre. That begs a question. The NDP government continues to do whatever Justin Trudeau and the federal government tell them to. What is this government's position on a $75-per-tonne carbon tax? Do you support it? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that report was written when that member's leader was in Ottawa, actually, and when his government received that report. But all of that aside, on this side of the House we're standing up for ordinary Albertans. We take our direction from Albertans. We saw a little bit about what kind of party the members opposite are creating. They had an opportunity to set themselves apart, to be a big tent, to welcome women into that, and they did the opposite this weekend. They brought forward extreme, crazy, risky ideological policies that even some of their own members spoke against. But you know what? On this side of the House – don't worry – we've got the backs of LGBTQ youth, we've got the backs of women, and we've got . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
First supplemental.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't know if the Deputy Premier is even going to try to answer a question, but I'll try yet again. There's this report that's come from Environment Canada that calls for a $75-per-tonne carbon tax. This government continues to do whatever the federal government tells them to do over and over, whatever Justin Trudeau tells them to do. My question is this: what is your government's position on a $75-per-tonne carbon tax? Do you support it? Yes or no? What will you do if the federal government tries to bring it in? Will you do what you did before and just do what they tell you to, or do you have a plan?

Ms Hoffman: Well, our plan, Mr. Speaker, is to get a pipeline to tidewater, to address climate change, to make sure that we have good jobs for this generation and the next generation, sitting in our gallery. Our job is to make sure that we protect youth. We don't want to out gay youth. We don't want to privatize health care. We don't want to cut education funding and attack teachers. We don't want to bring in tax cuts for the richest 1 per cent, which would involve $700 million in giveaways to the richest among Albertans. On this side of the House we're on the side of everyday Albertans. We will fight for them, and we won't back down.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the NDP's carbon tax is one of the most crippling things for everyday Albertans. It's punishing them every day. We hear about it every day, how frustrated they are that this NDP government continues to punish them with their ideological agenda. My question to the Deputy Premier, which she continues to avoid – and that's going to make Albertans very concerned because they always do what Justin Trudeau says – is this: do you support a $75-per-tonne carbon tax, as is being called for by Environment Canada? Yes or no? If the federal government tries to do this, what will you do about it?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we've made our plan very clear. We've mapped it out for many, many years. That's why we're proud of the fact that because we had our plan, which was an Alberta plan, not the Ottawa plan that they keep trying to doom and gloom everybody here with – we had a made-in-Alberta plan – it resulted in pipeline approvals. You know why that's important? Statistics Canada reported 4.9 per cent growth last year, and most of that was due to the oil and gas sector here in Alberta.

But that's not what's got me down, Mr. Speaker. The members opposite think it's okay to out gay students. They think it's okay to attack teachers. They think it's okay to destroy public schools. This side of the House stands up for all those things and all the people of this province, and we welcome you to do the same once in a while.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Health Care Wait Times

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the NDP's budget in 2015 committed to "implement a Wait Time Measurement and Waitlist Management Policy to address long wait times in the health care system." However, as we've seen from a FOIP from Alberta Health Services, in the second quarter of 2017-18 wait times have actually dramatically increased under this NDP government's watch, not the last government's. Will this government explain their terrible performance on this file?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're very proud of the work that we've done over the last three years to improve access and improve quality of health care. It's tough to undo 44 years of cuts and attacks on the working people of this province in one, but let me tell you about some of the progress we have made. We brought forward the very important Calgary cancer centre. It's well under construction right now, a project that, we know, got jerked around by the members opposite in both parties. With it, we'll add the resources as well to ensure that we have EMS workers. The UCP plan and what they did in this House is to vote against all those investments. On this side of the House we're standing up for improving health care, not just cutting and privatizing to two-tiered like the members opposite.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, it's disappointing to see the Deputy Premier say that she's proud of wait times increasing. I find that troubling. Again, this is a question of outcomes, not a question of outcomes under the last government but under this government. Wait times for heart valve surgery have increased by 6.5 weeks under the NDP. Wait times for hernia repairs have increased by 7.3 weeks under the NDP. We are talking about this government's failures on this file, not the last government's. Why is this government allowing these services to decline under their watch?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our 17 stroke treatment centres are the best in Canada. That's helped us reduce wait times in that area. In terms of hip fracture repair, knee replacement, and radiation therapy we're among the best in the country. That's not good enough. We want to go further, and we want to improve in other areas as well. You know what won't improve it? Massive cuts and privatization so that only the rich – the $700 million that they get back in big tax giveaways by the leader opposite go toward them being able to queue-jump. We don't believe that's right. We believe every Albertan deserves access to quality public health care.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, in the founding document of our party, a document I was proud to help write, it says that "universal access to high quality, publicly-funded health care" is a main cornerstone of our party. While the minister continues to dodge the question, my question is: why are wait times going up under her watch? Wait times for interventions on stomachs have increased by 12 weeks, wait times for interventions on lymph nodes have increased by four weeks, and on and on and on under this government's watch, not the last government's. You have failed on this file. This is your responsibility, so why, Minister, have you failed on this file? Why do you continue to let these services decline?

Ms Hoffman: Well, let me be clear that services aren't declining. We're actually providing more services. What has changed is that the needs continue to grow in the community. Mr. Speaker, while we keep funding and supporting front-line health care, the members opposite are calling for deep cuts. You know what? We can't catch up on 44 years of mismanagement – we're doing our darndest – but the areas that we have been focusing very clear attention on we've made good progress on. We're going to keep doing that, and they're going to keep calling for 20 per cent cuts and voting against the very budget that provides these increased resources to hospitals in their own communities. Man, I'm sure glad for the communities in the rural parts of the province that they don't have these guys running the show because we know what would happen to their hospitals with 20 per cent cuts.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Calgary-South East.

Energy Industry Competitiveness

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In February this year we heard from the chief executive of the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers that the energy sector was looking at moving more of their investments away from Canada and into the United States. Recent fiscal updates from energy companies are showing that his concerns were very valid. One concern is that the ballooning regulatory review of timelines is making it almost impossible to properly set project timelines. To the Minister of Energy: will you commit to reviewing regulations for energy project approvals to stop the loss of investment into the United States?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, our government absolutely understands that timely and effective regulatory processes are important to our sector. That's why we're working with the Alberta Energy Regulator on ways to improve the process, and we're doing that with industry to help us pinpoint where we should be looking, making it shorter without sacrificing effectiveness. Specifically, we're working with the AER to ensure proponents have a simplified process that includes one application, one review, and one decision because they deserve a streamlined application system.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While we support the government in their bid to get the Trans Mountain pipeline built, there are concerns that we might sacrifice long-term regulatory certainty in order to gain approval for the project. Companies rely on stability and predictability when investing billions of dollars needed for their large energy projects. Given the promises of legislation from provinces and the federal government both for and against energy development, many companies now lack any long-term certainty. To the same minister: what is your government doing to make sure future energy projects don't need to rely on an extraordinary act of government to get the project built?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, as members know, the AER is an arm's-length regulator that certainly works with each project. Some of the projects are very, very complex and do take a lot of time, but they're working very quickly to get one-stop shopping for smaller projects that will be a matter of days, even as little as five business days. One of the biggest things that helps with competitiveness is pipelines, and we're working very hard on that as well, pipelines to tidewater.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The United States used to be our best energy customer, but now they are our biggest competitor. Their growth has been fueled by a competitive tax regime and a regulatory process that offers more certainty around timelines. While we don't need to copy exactly what the United States is doing, we do need to look at how we can make Alberta more attractive to investors. To the same minister: beyond a single pipeline or project what are your plans for growing our energy industry and allowing them to compete with the U.S. on a level playing field?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, first of all, we are working on the pipelines. We know that that's the number one advantage to our industry. Currently we're leaving $40 million a day on the table, not just in Alberta but across Canada. That's money that could be used for all the good things that we want to see in our province and indeed in Canada. As I mentioned, we're working with the Energy Regulator on things we can change within Alberta, and we're also representing Alberta's interests to the federal government when they talk about changes that they want to make to the NEB. On this side of the House I can assure you that we are absolutely supporting the energy sector.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

School Design and Construction in North Calgary

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In mid-March the second annual north-central high school rally was held on the site reserved for a future CBE high school in Calgary-Northern Hills. At the rally residents made it clear that it was our turn. Budget 2018 and subsequent school funding announcements contained good news. To the Minister of Education. Residents of Calgary-Northern Hills are excited that the north Calgary high school received design funding in Budget 2018 but want to know: what exactly is design funding?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. Design funding is money provided to ensure that a school board can start drawing blueprints and could make exact plans to make the school come to life. This process takes up to about a year. For example, last year we announced design funding for an elementary school in Lethbridge, and lo and behold it was a fully funded project in Budget 2018. It's a great indication of a school being built in that particular area. I thank you for your advocacy.

The Speaker: First supplemental.
