not be a carbon tax in Alberta. It will be gone, one way or another. It is important for us to take a stand against any attempts by the federal government to impose policies that it has signed off on without provincial consultation or, in fact, without consultation with Canadians. In the last federal election, except for the people who voted Green, no Canadian voted for a carbon tax. Only about 5 per cent of Canadians voted for a federal carbon tax, yet it's being imposed at a national level.

So what is behind it? The Paris climate accord is an agreement between wealthy and connected elites and governments and big business for wealth redistribution. It is a plan that does not have the best interests of economic growth at heart, and it doesn't have the best interests of Canada and especially Alberta at heart. We should take a stand in this House and vote very clearly to reject the Paris climate accord in its entirety. We should send a message to the federal government that we will not be a part of their plan to impose the Paris climate accord here in any part whatsoever. We have an opportunity to speak loudly and with a unified voice as Albertans in this Legislature to send a message to the federal government that they can keep their carbon tax and they can keep their accord. We want nothing to do with it.

Albertans were not consulted on a carbon tax. Albertans were not consulted on the Paris climate accord. The Paris climate accord is one of these kinds of international agreements that violates our sovereignty as a country. It puts the UN above Canada. It puts the UN above Alberta. It puts international bureaucrats and international celebrities above the interests of real, everyday working people. This is an opportunity for this House to send a message loud and clear to Ottawa, to Prime Minister Trudeau, and to the international community that are behind the Paris climate accord that we want none of it. They can keep their carbon tax, and they can keep their climate accord. Alberta is going to stand on its own, strong and free.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Before I recognize the next speaker, I just want to verify that although we haven't hit Orders of the Day, as per our previous precedent you will be allowed to bring your drinks into the Chamber.

I'll recognize the hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise on this matter of the pressing issue of climate change. Of course, it is probably the most important and pressing issue of our time. Certainly, humanity has never seen a challenge such as climate change before. That is why, for example, the international panel on climate change released its first post-Paris scientific assessment very recently, showing that higher global warming temperatures will affect Canada's biodiversity in a number of ways. Impacts associated with risks such as forest fires, the spread of invasive species are lower at 1.5 degrees than they are at two degrees of warming. Climate change will intensify the risk of forest fires. The spread of invasive species will over time change the complexion of our forests. It also makes extreme weather events such as floods much more likely and much more severe. "Severe weather due to climate change is already costing Canadians billions of dollars annually." That is not from an environmental organization; that's from Don Forgeron, who's the president and CEO of Insurance Bureau of Canada.

Around the world the cost of disasters has increased fivefold. In Canada federal disaster relief spending rose from an average of $40 million a year to an average of $100 million now. Then in 2013 spending hit a record $1.4 billion, largely due to flooding disasters in Ontario and in Alberta. This is why, Madam Speaker, Canada's property insurance industry is calling on governments across the country to come together and implement expansive climate policies that will better prepare Canadians and their communities for when disasters strike.

Similarly, Lloyd's of London has indicated that the frequency and cost of natural disasters continues to rise, with their CEO noting that direct losses over the past decade estimated at $1.4 trillion annually. The Prairie Climate Centre, closer to home, for example, their models have shown that 2018's record-breaking summer heat will become the new normal by 2050. At the same time the prairies, from Manitoba to Alberta, are likely to be drying out. Co-director Dr. Danny Blair had no hesitation recently in linking the larger, hotter forest fires of the last few summers at least in part to climate change.

In the south drought stress is making it tough on boreal staples such as aspen trees. In an article in March of this year Dave Gambrill from Canadian Underwriter magazine wrote Alberta: Canada's Poster Child for Climate Risk, showing that 8 out of 11, the most expensive natural catastrophes to hit Canada since 1983, swept through some portion of Alberta. Those eight catastrophes accounted for $9 billion in damage claims.

Sean Russell, managing director of a reinsurance broker, told a panel discussion that "of the approximately $9 billion that the property and casualty insurance industry paid out . . . 63% of those losses have happened in Alberta," prompting questions as to whether Alberta is rapidly becoming uninsurable, Madam Speaker.

Another source of rising costs from climate change is public infrastructure and whether our bridges, our roads, our dams, our levees, our sewers, our drainage systems are ready for these kinds of frequent and severe weather events. The overwhelming consensus is no; we are not ready. The Conference Board of Canada showed the replacement value for existing assets deemed to be in poor or very poor condition at $141 billion. There are costs, Madam Speaker, because climate change is real.

This is despite the fact that we have members both of this House and of the party opposite who have said that climate change is a hoax. The candidate for Calgary-Beddington, for example, said that, and he still won the nomination. He was allowed to run. We have an MLA for Calgary-Foothills here who claims that "we need some carbon dioxide here to grow the trees and plants and forests and whatnot," Madam Speaker. The MLA for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo said: I'm pretty much in the middle of the road on this, whether climate change is a hoax. The MLA for Cypress-Medicine Hat has on numerous occasions aligned himself with this hoax conversation, which, of course, we see coming from President Trump stating global warming is a complete hoax in reaction to a tweet by NASA, because apparently the MLA for Cypress-Medicine Hat knows better than NASA. Even the Leader of the Official Opposition has asserted that there's, quote, a legitimate range of perspectives about exactly to what degree humans are responsible for climate change.

Now, in that I could take a scientific rebuttal to that, Madam Speaker. I could just lean on John Oliver, the comedian, who said that we don't need a politician's opinion on a fact. As John Oliver said, you might as well have a poll asking: "Which number is bigger, five or 15?" or "Do owls exist?" or "Are there hats?" You don't need an opinion from a politician who has spent his life denying the science of climate change on whether climate change is real. There is unanimity that climate change is real and it poses significant risk now and into the future. I know that for my little boys, when I have to look them in the eye at the end of the day, seven and nine years old, as they become adults they're going to ask me: why didn't you do more? I know they will.

Now, as Dr. Katharine Hayhoe, an acclaimed Canadian atmospheric physicist said: "The climate does not care about ideology. Instead, the true threat is the delusion that our opinion of science somehow alters its reality. This is deluded thinking." Steve Williams, CEO of Suncor, one of Canada's largest oil producers, says this: climate change is happening; we think a broad-based carbon price is the answer. The World Bank Carbon Pricing Leadership Coalition, a voluntary partnership of 160 businesses, says: "Climate change is one of the greatest global challenges of our time. It threatens to roll back decades of development progress and puts lives, livelihoods, and economic growth at risk." That is why, Madam Speaker, recent Nobel prize winning economists William Nordhaus and Paul Romer have said that carbon taxes are the solution to climate change.

We know we are moving into a carbon-constrained world. Nobody cares about random UC opinions. The climate doesn't care. We are moving into a carbon-constrained world. We are moving into a world where the voluntary targets laid out in the Paris agreement – the world is looking for the opportunities in meeting those targets. Within it there are a number of market-based mechanisms that are pointed to within the Paris agreement, including article 6, which a number of folks in our business community here in Alberta and in Canada are watching very closely because there's a tremendous amount of opportunity here.

Now, what do Nobel prize winning economists have to say about pricing carbon? Here's a quote:

The policy is very simple. If you just commit to a tax on the usage of fuels that directly or indirectly release greenhouse gases, and then you make that tax increase steadily . . . people will see that there's a big profit to be made from figuring out ways to supply energy where they can do it without incurring the tax.

These are market-based, free-market economists, Madam Speaker. They say that this crisis can easily be averted through economic policy. The way to do that is to ensure that we price carbon pollution, helping Canadian companies create jobs and compete successfully in the global shift. Now, the opportunity in competing in that global shift is estimated to be worth $23 trillion globally between now and 2030.

Madam Speaker, there are a number of conservatives who believe in climate change or they understand the science of climate change. They believe that we actually must take action. There's a difference there. Over here we have a misunderstanding of the science, but we also have a fundamental belief that we ought to do nothing. Here are some Conservatives who believe that we ought to do something. Here's one: Stephen Harper. In an interview with CBC in 2014 he told Peter Mansbridge that climate change remains "a significant threat" to humanity, up there with economic challenges. He said that Canada was phasing out the use of coal-fired electricity, which he described as the single biggest source of greenhouse gas emissions in the world, and also said, "If others would just follow our lead, we'd have this problem solved." He also made a speech in Berlin around that time, where he endorsed carbon pricing as well.

Here's another granddaddy of the Conservative movement in this province and in this country, Madam Speaker, Preston Manning:

For any economic activity, especially the production of energy, we should identify its negative environmental impacts, devise measures to avoid, mitigate or adapt to those impacts, which we are also doing through our climate leadership plan, as an aside, and include the costs of those measures in the price of the product.

Going back to Mr. Manning:

It's the idea behind using carbon pricing to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

Now, Madam Speaker, that is why we worked with our oil and gas producers, worked with clean tech companies, worked with renewables companies, worked with energy efficiency companies, worked with the forestry sector, with the fertilizer sector, with the agricultural sectors, with refining and upgrading sectors all across this province to design our approach to climate change, because all of those folks, who employ Albertans, want to see their business model resilient to a carbon-constrained future. They actually think ahead. They also listen to scientists, and they know that climate change poses a significant risk if we do nothing.

That's why we put in place the policies that we did, Madam Speaker. They are market-friendly policies. They are policies that ensure that we remain competitive. They are policies that have a number of trigger points where we can review them over time to ensure that they are working for our economy. That is why the same year that we brought in carbon pricing, we led the country in economic growth, and then the next year that we had carbon pricing in place on an economy-wide scale, we also led the country in economic growth. Next year we'll have carbon pricing in place, and we're projected also to lead the country in economic growth.

Last year alone we saw the reduction of 11 megatonnes of greenhouse gas emissions, which is roughly the annual emissions of Newfoundland, Madam Speaker. So when the opposition claims falsely that carbon pricing does not reduce greenhouse gas emissions, again, that is wrong. That is wrong. Taken together, our climate leadership plan is paving the way for emissions reductions of 43 megatonnes by 2020. That's double the annual emissions amount of the entire province of Manitoba.

Alberta's energy producers are strong partners in these efforts, benefiting from $1.4 billion worth of investments and innovation, which is seeing some huge payoffs in our energy sector. This year Emissions Reduction Alberta celebrated nine successful oil sands innovation challenge projects. Those include partial upgrading technology, water treatment processes and materials, and enhanced bitumen recovering technology. Those projects will reduce about 4 million tonnes of greenhouse gas emissions and create more than 250 well-paying jobs, Madam Speaker. There are so many success stories with respect to our reinvestment of the price on carbon into what industry asked us for, which is clean tech, which is innovation, which is phasing out coal, which is our lowest cost emissions reduction, Madam Speaker, and ensuring that we have a good market for our cheap and plentiful natural gas in this province as well as our amazing renewables opportunities.

We have some of the best renewables opportunities on the continent. The solar resource in Calgary is roughly the same as the solar resource in Rio de Janeiro. It is not true that we don't have relative advantage when it comes to solar and wind but also natural gas. That's kind of why we've seen such a growth in solar industries. We've seen a 500 per cent growth in our solar installations since 2015, Madam Speaker. We have seen so many companies grow as a result of our investments.

But let's talk a little bit back to oil and gas. At CNRL's Horizon mine, north of Fort McMurray, they built a multilevel mobile platform that separates bitumen from sand, leaving behind dry tailings. This technology also shaved $2 off the cost to produce a barrel of oil, Madam Speaker, and that's because carbon is also an input cost. We're seeing this across the oil and gas sector, that as we reduce our greenhouse gas emissions, we're also reducing our water use, our steam-to-oil ratio, and a whole bunch of other inputs, which reduces costs.

Similarly, the Aspen project by Imperial Oil just got final investment decision approval the week before last, again a solvent-assisted technology that reduces their costs as well as reduces their greenhouse gas emissions. Suncor just opened up Fort Hills. The Fort Hills mine will produce a barrel of oil at the North American average, Madam Speaker. So it is not true that we cannot compete in a carbon-constrained world because we are doing it now. It is not a theoretical future. It is the present that Alberta is living in now.

But there are also other forces at work. It's not just a national carbon pricing framework and our government's desire to keep the federal government out of our jurisdictional space, where they don't belong. There are also other changes afoot globally. For example, there are new marine fuel standards with respect to sulphur content in marine fuel coming in. But in Fort Saskatchewan Enlighten Innovations is pioneering their CleanSeas project, which uses new technology to remove the sulphur from feedstock and produce that cleaner fuel that the world is looking for. I had the opportunity to tour it with the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, Madam Speaker, and those investments were funded through our price on carbon. They're putting people to work east of Edmonton here to solve a global problem.

We are an energy province, and it has baffled me my entire adult life, before I sat on this side of the House, why Alberta couldn't be that source of export of clean tech technology, why we couldn't be the ones putting people to work solving the world's problems with respect to what we know is coming, which is a carbon-constrained future.

Those are the kinds of things happening right now here in Alberta. That's to say nothing, Madam Speaker, of converting biomass into electricity. We're doing it . . . [interjection]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, please take your seat.

Go ahead.

Ms Phillips: Oh. Thank you.

. . . where we're converting biomass into electricity. Dapp Power in Westlock is accomplishing this. Lethbridge Biogas in southern Alberta is accomplishing this. Those investments are also funded by our price on carbon.

Madam Speaker, closer to home, too, our cities, our towns are being assisted with making those changes to make them resilient to commodity prices in the future. If there's one thing we know, it's that we cannot control the price of commodities. We certainly know that very, very well on this side of the House. So ensuring that our communities have as much resilience as they can to grow and to invest in services for kids, for seniors, for families by displacing some of their electricity and natural gas costs is exactly what we're focusing on.

For example, we have lowered our utility costs in places like an aquatic centre in Barrhead, a fire hall in Northern Sunrise county, an affordable housing complex in Valleyview. Ty Assaf, a councillor for the town of Barrhead, said: "Investing in renewable energy diversifies our local economy and improves our community. Barrhead's 149-kilowatt system on the Aquatics Centre will save about $17,000 on electricity bills each year." Madam Speaker, that's a lot of money for a small town's recreation centre. That is a lot of money that can go towards low-income seniors' programs or low-income children's programs.

We're also making sure that we're involving indigenous communities in these developments as well, Madam Speaker. Germaine Anderson, who's the chief of the Beaver Lake Cree Nation, says: "We recognize the importance of becoming energy-efficient and how moving to the green economy will . . . position us economically down the road." That is why we have done things like invest in training, in business development, in energy plans as well as energy retrofits for both band infrastructure and for people's homes and renewables. We'll have more to say later on this week about that as well.

But the fact of the matter is that indigenous communities are often the most at risk in terms of the fact that they don't have the infrastructure to deal with more frequent and severe weather events. They are looking for diversification opportunities so that the new economy, which we know is happening out there with new clean tech and new opportunities, doesn't bypass them as for so long economic opportunities have bypassed them. We need to make sure that we continue those investments, Madam Speaker, and be open to all of those new opportunities, again, because we're an energy province.

We have a number of other opportunities that are happening here in Alberta. We have industrial energy efficiency, long ignored by the previous government, for near-term, low-cost energy solutions that also save companies money. We have commercial energy efficiency, deeper retrofits, those kinds of initiatives, being funded by the Energy Efficiency Alberta agency.

And, like I said, we have a number of new renewables investments, Madam Speaker. About 7,000 jobs will be created by our renewable energy program as we go through our phasing out of coal. To be clear, 12 of those 18 plants were slated for phase-out. As we know, Stephen Harper actually felt quite strongly about that under the Leader of the Official Opposition's watch, but what they didn't have was a plan to transition those communities, and that's also what we are investing carbon levy funds in, in addition to things like transit.

That's where I want to finish off here, around transit and around infrastructure. The green line in Calgary and the valley line LRT and the expansions in Edmonton will get people going quicker to their jobs, to their homes, to their schools, Madam Speaker, in a way that is more sustainable.

Similarly, too, we will protect Calgary through climate adaptation investments with investments in the Springbank dry dam facility, to which we are deeply committed. There seems to be a little bit of confusion on the other side on this matter.

Madam Speaker, there is more to be done. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Well, I must say that it's an interesting time in the Legislature when we are still debating climate change and the reality of climate change. I think we have had 20 years of debating and denying and deferring and committing and not fulfilling commitments to reducing our carbon footprint on the planet. For some in Alberta it's a surprise to know that we are among the highest per capita emitters of carbon emissions on the planet. We're a small population, but we have a tremendous carbon footprint as a result of our cold temperatures, our significant transportation challenges, and our heavy oil industry, among other industries that emit carbon, obviously.

I think it's important to reinforce the fact that this is the closest thing to an emergency that we as legislators face. If we care about the future, if we care about the evidence that's mounting on almost a monthly basis, the efforts to try to reduce our collective impact, industrial impact, our domestic impact, our transportation impact, our heating impacts, all of these combined, are critical. I would call it an emergency. Clearly, the clock is ticking. The damage is already being done.

The minister has already spoken about the unprecedented insurance claims that have resulted from extreme weather events. We know about new infectious diseases like the West Nile virus that have moved north as a result of the temperature changes. We know that food production is going to change. Obviously, it might improve in some parts of Alberta, and that's part of the dilemma Alberta faces. There could be some very significant benefits to warming in Alberta, so we drag our feet in Alberta because, of course, we have these financial interests in the oil industry and we don't mind warming in a climate that's often very cold. Of course, if we can improve productivity in some of the constituencies in northern Alberta – what surprises me is that this member comes from the Palliser Triangle in which there is a significant threat of drought, significant threat of loss of food production, and water shortages.

Whether the Paris accord is the ideal approach to this, it's clear that nothing else has emerged. We have basically four choices for reducing greenhouse gases. We can legislate by targets, force a province to meet a certain limit on their emissions and pay fines if they don't. We can legislate by taxes to incent the behaviour change in citizens, in consumers, and in producers of greenhouse gases. We can go, as Mr. Harper tried to do, sector by sector, calling for efficiency standards in certain industries: the transportation industry, the heating industry, the oil and gas industry, the manufacturing industry. We can set some sector-by-sector targets. We can do a cap and trade where one jurisdiction has a cap on the amount of the total emissions that they can produce. If they exceed that, they pay a fine or, I guess, a trade into the pot that goes to those who are actually reducing the carbon in that particular jurisdiction. At some point that is supposed to balance out and actually move us to lower emissions.

What I can say is that this is now at the eleventh hour in this challenge. Anybody who is thinking seriously about future generations and about the impacts this is having, especially in the poorer and lesser developed countries, the flooding that is already occurring in some of the South Asian countries and some of the island states that have in fact been relocated as a result of climate change impacts, has to recognize that we are beyond the point of debating climate change.

We should be beyond the point of debating what 196 countries two years ago decided was a very good step. Not the be-all and end-all, and scientists across the world have said that that will not get us where we really need to go, but it's a start. It's at least something that we can agree on voluntarily to try to achieve, to minimize the increased temperature below two degrees Celsius, which is considered to be a very critical level at which there will be significantly more damage to people, to property, to our planet, and to our ability to grow food, which is the most fundamental issue that many countries are already facing and are now fighting over.

As indicated, it's not a treaty; it's a voluntary agreement. Some of the criticism around this has been that it's a voluntary agreement, and Mr. Trump has said that he's pulling out. Within 12 months he will be pulling out of this agreement. That's 1 out of 196 countries that says that they want to pull out of this. This is absurd, and it's so harmful to think about the possibility that we once again start to undermine an international agreement that has made such efforts to try to pull us around the same table and reach some at least minimal targets as countries and the commitments around the world.

Yes, we can't legally bind countries to these targets, but in good faith these countries have recognized that they owe it to their children, they owe it to their future, and they owe it to their country to make every possible effort to, number one, reduce the emissions; number two, start adapting already to some of the fierce changes that are going on in their country; and number three, to think about what strategies can best begin to make these important changes.

While I welcome the chance to talk about climate change and reinforce the urgency that this Legislature come to grips with this and embrace the tremendous urgency around action and commitment and collective putting aside of ideology to honour the science, to honour the long-term commitment that we should have to this planet and to our children and grandchildren, I am somewhat disappointed that we are still wrestling with even these very most basic targets and discussions when, as I say, over 85 per cent of the world has said: "We recognize the problem. We want to work together. We know this is not perfect, but we are going to do everything possible to mitigate carbon, to adapt to it, and to put in place some kind of a carbon market that will help us send the right message to people and businesses to do the right thing."

There are other elements to this that include supports for the least developed countries, including financing and technological support. Clearly, if we in this part of the world can't share some of our technology and resources with the least developed countries, we can't expect them to take the kind of leadership that we must take.

To honour the current commitments of this provincial government around moving to clean, renewable energy, efforts at conservation in homes and businesses and transportation, I applaud what the government has done so far against some pretty significant challenges. I think we are making progress. It is obviously not enough but huge, huge initiatives, compared to the previous government on this whole file, that are welcomed by those in Alberta that really pay attention and care about the long-term well-being of this province, both economically and environmentally and socially, because as in every other country, when resources and fighting over resources and shortages of resources, including food and clean water and clean air – when those become an issue, you have social disruption. You have all kinds of I would call it violence. I don't think it's too extreme to say that we are going to see many more refugees coming to our gates as a result of climate change and the conflict that results from shortages and inadequate resources.

So let us be clear. This is not a perfect agreement, but it is the one we have. It is the one we're moving towards. Inadequate as it is, according to the scientists, it is progress. What I would like to see is a debate on how we can redouble our efforts around carbon reduction in this province, around transportation such as the new project out of the University of Calgary, where something like eight or 10 transport trucks are going to be moving to hydrogen fuel for the next two years and the measurement of how efficiently we're managing that. In this fossil fuel province we maybe can't compete with the electricity generation that, say, Quebec or B.C. can use out of clean water energy, hydro energy. However, using hydrogen and our fossil fuel industry, we can move towards a hydrogen economy that would both use our skills and technology in hydrocarbon development and provide clean energy through the hydrogen fuel cell, which produces only water and oxygen. So a tremendous opportunity to show more leadership than we have in the past.

There's no question in my mind that the Paris accord stands. We have to stand firm despite the U.S.'s, or one man's, decision to pull out. Who knows how long he's going to be in place, anyway? I expect and I hope that he won't be in power too much longer and that we will actually have a responsible and competent and informed President there who will bring the U.S. back to its senses around climate change and the leadership that's needed there.

Again, the U.S. is a big emitter. Along with China they're the biggest emitters totally, but, you know, Canada on a per capita basis is a huge emitter. We have a responsibility as individual citizens and as responsible legislators to see our key responsibility as educated, resourced, technologically savvy, recognizing the long-term well-being of this place and the planet, to listen to the United Nations, the climate convention, listen to the scientists, and look at our own backyard and see what the impacts of floods and fires have been here along with new infectious diseases.

There's no question in my mind that this is one of if not the most important issues that we deal with and that we set aside the politics of this and look at what's the best alternative given what we have in terms of the global agreement and move forward with it, exceed it. Let's exceed the targets that Paris has established with Canada, and let's pull together with other provinces and the federal government and make sure that we leave a legacy for our children that says: we took this seriously; we came to understand the science, and we're doing everything possible as legislators to create policies that provide the right incentives to conserve, to develop new technologies and clean energy, and to mitigate the worst impacts expected from this climate chaos, which is more what it should be called, rather than climate warming. It's climate chaos.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Before I recognize the next speaker, we've had a request to revert to Introduction of Guests. Is anyone opposed to the request?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Introduction of Guests

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just following on the comments from the Liberal member on his plan to make Alberta great again, I wanted to take this opportunity to introduce to the House Valerie Keefe. She is here to meet with me today, but much to my surprise I actually got a motion passed to do something in here, which is rather rare for an opposition member, so we're debating this. Valerie is an advocate for trans people. She is a former member of the NDP but has seen the light of conservatism and libertarianism and is here to discuss potentially getting involved with the Freedom Conservative Party of Alberta. She isn't moving from one side of the spectrum slowly along it. She just jumps the whole way along, apparently. I wanted to take this opportunity to introduce a former member of the NDP, as I understand it, who, I guess, has been surprised to be able to indulge in today's debate. I'd ask all members to give her the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Motions under Standing Order 42

Paris Agreement on Climate Change

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to see you today in the chair and to be able to rise to speak to this motion. I'd like to start off just briefly quoting the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition on June 11 of this year. In a scrum he said in regard to this issue that "the preponderance of carbon tax for them to come close to achieving the Paris climate GHG emission targets would require a price in the range of $300 a tonne, not the current $30 a tonne. This is not environmental policy. It's political theatre. It's the NDP government addicted to the idea of expanding its control over people's lives and bringing in more tax revenue. As Doug Ford said, it's just another tax. It's not about environmental policy. We, the UCP, in our platform will present a comprehensive plan that will include concrete measures to reduce greenhouse gas emissions."

Madam Speaker, that's important for a couple of reasons. The first is at the end of that statement where it makes clear that greenhouse gas emissions is something that needs to be addressed and that a future United Conservative government will address it. We'll bring forward ideas in the next election as is our responsibility when we're in an election.

The second part of that that's important is the staggering number that it would take, the staggering amount of carbon tax that would need to be charged to be able to meet the agreement of the Paris accord. The reality is that it's significantly more than is already being charged to Albertans right now by this NDP government and their close, personal friend Justin Trudeau, the Prime Minister of this country. Significantly more. To use a carbon tax to be able to meet those emissions would require us to go even further than this government already has, to go further with the consequences to the people of Alberta and to our country as a result of that decision.

The reality is two things here, Madam Speaker. One is that at the amount that the NDP government has brought forward, they cannot meet the targets, and they will not have a significant impact on the environment. Their own numbers say that. So they've brought forward a tax, a punishing tax for many Albertans, in order to, they say, try to meet targets, but the reality is that they know and their own documents have shown that in order for them to meet those targets, they would have to go significantly further. At the time of that quote, it was $30. I believe it's $50 right now. They would have to go to about $300 or more.

The problem with that is that in exchange for what the NDP said would be social licence, which we'll talk about briefly in a minute, the government has chosen to put a punishing tax that they did not campaign on, that they hid from Albertans and then brought forward when they received a mandate to govern in Alberta. They put that tax on, knowing that they could not meet emissions targets. They know that. Either they intend to raise it at some point to be able to meet those targets or it really had nothing to do with the accord and was just a tax, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed said in his comment, a tax on Albertans, a money grab by this NDP government. It has to be one or the other.

The problem is that people continue to hurt because of the decision of this government to bring forward this carbon tax. They made the decision. They said that they would get social licence, that they would be able to get the pipelines built to be able to tackle some of the most serious issues facing our energy industry if we as a province accepted this carbon tax, which the province never did. We took the pain that is associated with that.

Now, we know that they didn't get that social licence. In fact, social licence at this point, I think this House has to declare, is a failure. This government has stood in this Chamber repeatedly and put up their hands and said: two pipelines; we got two pipelines approved. They had celebrations and told Albertans it was a done deal.

Mr. Cooper: Mission accomplished.

Mr. Nixon: Mission accomplished. It turns out that it was not. We now know that. Social licence did not work for that.

Now, what happened to the people of Alberta during that time? We've seen widows losing their carbon tax rebates when their spouses passed away. I sat with school boards who are struggling now with the increased costs of transportation to get our children to school and the increased costs of operating their facilities.

A seniors' centre in my constituency is a great example, the West Country seniors' centre. We've talked about it in this Chamber many times. It is one of the most appalling things that I've ever seen this government do. You know what they did, Madam Speaker? When that was brought to their attention and there was a lot of political pressure associated with that issue, they told everybody: hey, we'll work with that seniors' centre, and we'll get it fixed. Now, do you know what working with that seniors' centre was? The Premier's office called those seniors' centre officials and said: have a fundraiser to pay for the carbon tax or raise the rates on your fixed-income seniors, the fixed-income seniors to whom this government continues to charge a tax that we now know can't even come close to meeting their objectives and has not given us the pipelines.

Now, we brought that up, and there was more political pressure. So the government then called up and said: "Sorry. We went too far. We'll work with you. We want to do an assessment of your building." They, the government, spent thousands of taxpayer dollars – I don't remember the exact amount; I believe it was north of $10,000 – doing an assessment on this facility, enough to pay, from what I recall, close to a decade of the facility's carbon tax. That was their assessment. How about they just give them their money and stop taking it? But they did that.

Now, you know what the report said? I have the report. It's bizarre. It comes back with only one real suggestion. Madam Speaker, get this. It suggests that they unplug their coffee makers when they're not having coffee to lower emissions.

I talked, of course, to the president of that centre, a long-time friend of mine, Mr. Ed Wicks, a great guy from the great town of Sundre, who's been advocating for seniors in that community for a long time. He said, "The problem, Jason, is that we've got our coffee makers on timers. We don't need to unplug them."

Mr. Fildebrandt: Names are not allowed.

Mr. Nixon: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks points out that I used my own name, and I do apologize for that. He is correct. Ed Wicks said to the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre: the problem is, Jason, we use timers. Oops, I did it again. That's twice in a row, Madam Speaker.

The point is this. This government continues to punish the people of Alberta with a carbon tax that can't even meet their own goals. [interjections] They laugh right now. They laugh about those fixed-income seniors. They laugh about our education system that is struggling because of the carbon tax. They laugh about our municipalities. They laugh about that. They laugh about our nonprofits, who are struggling to be able to pay the bills. They laugh. It's not funny, Madam Speaker. This is not a funny thing. It is not funny. What is happening to the people of this province because of your decisions is not funny, so you should not laugh at it. They've had to pay significant consequences as a result of that decision.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Now, I think that there was no way that we should have gone the carbon tax route. That's no secret. We spoke about it in this Chamber, the members on this side of the House, but the reality is also this. This government chose to go the carbon tax way even though they knew that they could not meet the emissions targets at the price that they brought forward. Clearly, it was not about emissions; it was about a tax grab. But then they said: don't worry; we'll get social licence, and we'll get pipelines built. That's what they said. So at the very least, if they forced that tax upon the people of Alberta, they should have come through on their ability to get those pipelines built.

We now know they did not. They did not come through. One of the biggest crises that this province has ever faced is happening right now despite the fact that many people have warned this government about this for years. They continue to prematurely celebrate getting pipelines built. So social licence didn't work.

What did they do, though, when it came to standing up to the federal government? In fact, often we hear members of the NDP say: "This is not our fault. I'm sorry we said that it was built. I guess we shouldn't have said that. But don't worry; we're working with Justin Trudeau. It's going to be okay." Working with Justin Trudeau? What has Justin Trudeau done on this issue? I've told members across the way from me over and over that paper approval from Justin Trudeau is worth nothing, and that has been proven.

This government stood in this House and supported repeatedly Justin Trudeau on so many issues with our energy industry, waited 229 days to even speak up against Bill C-69, the no-more-pipelines bill brought forward by Justin Trudeau, stood on their hands and, in fact, supported Justin Trudeau on his decision to cancel and block the Northern Gateway pipeline. It would sure be nice if that was on its way, a pipeline that got done by Stephen Harper, by the way.

They stood on their hands while Energy East was cancelled, said nothing, took no action against the Prime Minister and the federal government, did not stand up for Alberta and, instead, sided again and again and again with their ally in Ottawa. That's what they do over and over.

On Trans Mountain we could not even get this government to take a serious stand against B.C. or the feds for months, over a year, maybe longer, and then all of a sudden, once the political pressure finally ramped up, they said: okay; hon. Leader of the Opposition, we'll try this shutting-off-the-tap legislation. But, Madam Speaker, you and I both know they never intended to do it. They never intended to take action. Yet again they sat on their hands and did what Justin Trudeau did. They filibustered their own bill inside this Legislature, had the nerve to go back and tell Albertans: "Don't worry; we're going to do this. We're going to defend you. We're going to defend you. We are going to pass this legislation. We're going to shut off the taps." Then they sat in this House and filibustered the bill so they would not have to do that. It was shameful. Over and over this government chooses to side with Justin Trudeau, even now.

Actually, one other example. The Leader of the Opposition, long before it was talked about in the Senate – and when it was talked about in the Senate, it was important – said that we should be using the Constitution to declare this in the national interest. He brought forward motions in this Assembly which he tried to negotiate with the other side in good faith, but they were too worried about protecting Justin Trudeau to even talk to him, and they voted against calling on the House of Commons and the Prime Minister to make Trans Mountain in the national interest. They voted against it, voted with the Prime Minister again, over and over. The actions, or the lack of action, are very, very clear.

Now, Trans Mountain gets stopped yet again. They've not been able to force the Prime Minister to enforce the rule of law. Now they're in a situation in court where they can't get the Prime Minister to get this in the national interest. He won't move. There's a bill inside the Senate. They haven't spoken in favour of that at all. They didn't get their ministers down to Ottawa to say: this has to be passed; this project is in the national interest. Instead, they sat on their hands again and kept coming back to this place and telling Albertans that they were going to get this pipeline built.

I think it's fair for Albertans to start to ask: what the heck is our government doing? Our government continues to punish people, Albertans, that they are elected to protect, the most vulnerable, people on fixed incomes. The carbon tax, Madam Speaker, is a regressive tax, particularly now that they've pulled back all the rebates. It's a regressive tax. It hurts the poor more than the rich. That's what the carbon tax does. [interjections] I know it makes them mad, but that's what they did. They brought forward a carbon tax that hurts the most vulnerable people in our communities. The rebates have been clawed back. [interjections] The members are heckling away.

I'll give you another example.

An Hon. Member: The rebates are still there.

Mr. Nixon: But not for the increase to the carbon tax. That's not true, hon. member. You should maybe talk to your minister if you're concerned about that. But that's not true.

In fact, here's one other one, fixed-income seniors, who are disproportionately impacted by this, without a doubt, because they're on fixed incomes, somewhere we're all going to be one day. This government allowed their carbon tax rebates to be clawed back by 30 per cent without even a word from the minister, without even a word to defend the very people this government claims to help. Hockey moms and hockey dads at the pumps are not going to be how we fix this problem. We've been telling the government that for a very, very long time.

You know, sometimes you've just got to accept that you were wrong. You should just accept that you're wrong, because people are being hurt by it. This is not a game, that we get to come here and play and wear our fancy clothes and stand inside this Chamber and give speeches all day. This has real-world consequences. Decisions that are made in this place have real-world consequences. The government policy has been a failure, in particular in their inability to take action against the federal government and, before that, B.C. Their unwillingness to take action, not even having the ability to call on the Prime Minister to appeal the decision on Trans Mountain – they couldn't even be bothered to do that.

They should be hanging their heads in shame on this. They've stood in this Chamber, Madam Speaker – you saw them do it – and said: "We got two pipelines built. It's done." They stood outside the Legislature in the summer and had a big party, screaming and hollering about how great this moment was. I wish it was true. It's not true. It's not true. But instead of coming back to this place and saying, "Okay; you know what; we got it wrong," which is the stage that they should be at – we clearly can't buy social licence by punishing the people of Alberta; that has not worked. – we should pull back the carbon tax, something that this side of the House has moved many motions on to ask this place to do that have always been voted against by the NDP.

At the same time, all across this country in jurisdictions – you know, Ontario had a big election. There goes the carbon tax. In Manitoba, I believe, in New Brunswick – the state of Washington, the most green state of all the states, could not even get a referendum passed on the carbon tax in the state of Washington in the last midterm election.

An Hon. Member: What about California?

Mr. Nixon: They want to use California. I'm not even going there today.

They want to continue to hang onto this idea, and it's okay. If it was just them who were going to pay the consequences for it, in the polls or wherever Albertans choose to give them those consequences, that would be one thing, but as they make those decisions, they are continuing to hurt people. Now we don't have the pipelines that we need, and it's going to have consequences for many years to come.

Drever: Well, there was a climate change denier.

Mr. Nixon: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow just heckled at me that I'm a climate change denier. I am not a climate change denier. She should not heckle that at me. In fact, I opened this speech with a comment about how emissions are an issue that need to be dealt with and that we will bring forward policies to do that.

What I reject, Madam Speaker, is that the Member for Calgary-Bow believes that she can solve that problem on the backs of Albertans that are just trying to make a living, that she can solve those problems on the backs of fixed-income seniors, that I represent inside this place with pleasure. She thinks that she can solve this problem by making it harder for schools to transport kids to school. That is shameful. That's where we are at. It's more shameful, as I said at the beginning of this speech, because they knew the entire time that they could not meet the goals. Either they meant that they're going to increase it on the people of Alberta at some point to be able to meet the goal, or they never had the intention of ever meeting the goal and just wanted to bring in a tax.

I will close with this. We are in a situation as a province – we are actually past that situation as a province – where we need to take action, concrete, strong action to defend our constitutional rights for our resources, to be able to get our resources to tidewater, and to stand up for Alberta. It has been three and a half years or longer of an NDP government sitting on their hands, voting over and over with their close ally Justin Trudeau against the people of Alberta, against the people that they represent. Over and over they voted with Justin Trudeau, and then we didn't get pipelines. They didn't succeed in it.

We brought forward significant ways that we could do that: shutting off the taps for B.C., a referendum on equalization, making the project in the national interest. Do something, but stop punishing the people of Alberta. Stop punishing the people of Alberta. It is time to start saying to Ottawa that there will be consequences if you will not work with our province on this issue. There will be consequences. It is time to say to the other provinces that we want fairness. It is not wrong to want fairness.

With this, I will close for real. To the NDP across from me: stop punishing the people of Alberta with your ideological agenda. Madam Speaker, through you to them, stop punishing the people of Alberta, start standing up for the people that you represent, stop this ridiculous path, and let's get to work on how we can get our product to tidewater.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Let me think about it: should we go with comments the Official Opposition leader made in a scrum about a nonexistent platform or with a Nobel prize winner who, after decades of studying solutions to address climate change, came up with something that won a Nobel prize? An economist dealing with science, dealing with fact: imagine that.

It was actually only a few weeks ago that the United Nations released a really unique report, and it's not something that you hear about very often. Ninety-one of the best minds from 40 countries have concluded that the world is on a fast track to irreversible damage. But the opposition wants us to stop. They'd like to play games and put bumper stickers on their trucks that say, “Axe the Tax” instead of stopping and dealing with the most progressive idea, that won a Nobel prize, by the way, a free-market idea that deals with reducing emissions. A child born today will suffer the effects, the impacts of climate change when she turns 23. This is our future.

The Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, that issued this report, told us again and again and again – and we’ve been warned by scientists – that the seas will rise faster, that droughts will last longer, that extreme weather changes will be our reality. Diminishing Arctic ice: I think we’re already seeing that. The impact on humans and species and plant life will be incredible, yet you have the opposition that is taking a position only to play political games like to slap on a little bumper sticker that says, “Axe the Tax.” You don’t have the political courage to stand up and do something extraordinary, to start bending this curve. We don’t have a lot of time left. The risks of ignoring climate change are very, very real.

I want to go back to the Nobel prize winner, Yale professor William Nordhaus. For this path-breaking idea, putting a price on carbon, he won this award after four decades of research. His research shows that raising prices through a carbon tax is a far more effective and efficient way to lower carbon emissions than direct government controls on the quantity of emissions through regulations on cars, power plants, et cetera. He won a Nobel prize. I haven’t heard that coming from over there. I haven’t heard that at all.

You know, I was talking with my son yesterday. My son is a scientist, and actually his girlfriend teaches introductory climate change at the University of Alberta. It’s too bad they don’t open it up for auditing so that some members can sit in on her class. One of the things they said to me, you know, is that it’s a little baffling that there’s so much opposition to addressing climate change. People certainly had a fit when things around recycling were introduced like deposits on bottles, an extra cost for dealing with your trash or your compostables, things like that. But people got over it, and people saw the value.

The opposition is stuck on hanging their hats on getting rid of something that is working. Fact: it’s working. It can work; it will work. If we do nothing, the reality is that for us and our families, for our children and their children, the price they will pay is unbelievable. Then you’ll hear them talk about: well, you know, Canada is not the biggest problem. We might not be the biggest problem, but as the hon. member said, per capita we’re a huge problem. We need to step up. We need to do something about this.

Think about the alarms that were raised around ozone depletion and the use of CFCs. Eighty-five per cent of ozone depletion was man-made. The rest occurred naturally. As you know, this layer protects life on Earth from the sun’s damaging UV rays. We were warned by scientists, and we listened, and we took some bold steps. Many countries agreed to reduce or prohibit the production of materials made of or by the use of CFCs. We raised awareness, and we took steps. We’re seeing the benefit, and we will see the benefit going forward. At a certain point it would have been too late, but we listened to the scientists, we looked at the science, and we took steps. We took bold steps to reverse this trend.

You know, it’s interesting. I thank the member for allowing us this opportunity to debate this emergency motion about the Paris accord, but it’s sort of interesting to hear members opposite talk about the need for Canada to withdraw. I don’t know if you know this, but Syria has actually become a signatory on the Paris climate agreement, leaving the U.S. as the only country in the world not to support the framework deal to combat greenhouse gas emissions. Now, I think back to some of the news coverage over the weekend, where you had the President of the United States standing in California, where a fire has wiped out an entire city – Paradise, not Pleasure – and people are missing. Hundreds of people are missing. They’re finding the remains of residents every single day. I’m not saying that climate change started that fire, but we know that the results were far worse because of the implications of climate change, man-made climate change speeding up the effects of climate change.

There is a huge difference. Some of the really interesting arguments that I hear from opposition members and some of their supporters, you know, that climate change is a hoax: look at the temperature; it’s gotten so much colder here. Well, again, I just want to remind people that there’s a huge difference between climate and weather. You know, I think it’s really important to look – I’m talking about some global issues, but if you look at Alberta in the last few years, if you think about some of the horrible natural disasters that we’ve lived through, some of them were events that are said to occur approximately on average every hundred years, and they just keep coming. We just keep having these floods that are devastating, that wipe out communities and families and businesses. We have fires. We’ve always had fires, but certainly they’re worse. All of these events continue to happen, so implementing a tax on pollution – and that’s what it is – is a strategy to start to move us in another direction.

When I think about the future, I’m always hopeful when I look at the young people in my family, within my circles of friends, and in my community. I’m always extremely hopeful because it’s a generation of people that are really well informed, and our children are well informed. They understand that the effects of climate change are the biggest – the biggest – problems that are in front of us. They will impact every facet of our lives from mass migration to negative impacts on our ability to produce food, water, so many things. They know that we need to do something, and I believe they see that this government, after a very long time of ignoring hard science, has the political courage to stand up and do something.

The opposition likes to play their games and – I don’t know – talk about the Prime Minister. Whatever. What we’ve done is focus on Alberta and focus on an Alberta-made solution that will focus on what’s happening right here. We need to do our part. We absolutely need to do our part, and I don’t think any of the opposition members get a free pass on this. You don’t get to stand up and walk out of this Chamber, like you’ve done when we asked you to protect women. You have to address this. This is a reality for every single one of us. You need to have the courage to, say, maybe disagree with your leader. Maybe your dear leader is wrong. Maybe he’s wrong. This is a bold step forward in addressing a problem that is huge, that scientists agree – and let me tell you that scientists don’t often agree – that this is real. They’ve been telling us this for decades, and we’ve been ignoring them. It’s time to wake up.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

4:20

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to take a couple of minutes to speak to this motion urging “the government to reject co-operation with the federal government in the imposition of the Paris agreement on climate change.” I find the wording very interesting. I don’t think that this is a situation of imposition so much as an agreement. The Paris accord was actually ratified by Canada on October 5, 2016, so I'm a little confused as to why this would be an emergency right now. We've had a couple of years to talk about it.

But in doing some research on this this afternoon, trying to understand more about the Paris accord so I could speak rather cogently this afternoon, when you take a look at the canada.ca website, there's actually really great information. They talk about long-term goals and what we need to do to mitigate climate change. It is a foregone conclusion that we are seeing the effects of climate change and they will continue to accelerate.

Long-term goals, including adaptation: what can we do to adapt to our changing climate and the weather that it produces? We've seen the forest fires in California, and I'm sure that was really reminiscent of what we experienced in Fort McMurray here in Alberta. I'm sure that it was really difficult for a lot of people to see that. If we can do anything to prevent that from happening somewhere else, that doesn't include rakes or vacuum cleaners in the forests, I think that it's incumbent upon us to do that.

Some of the other things that are highlighted on the website are a co-operative approach, and I think collaboration and integrated approaches to problem solving are always the most effective way to address an issue. If we try and solve something in a silo on our own or by denying that it exists, we're not going to solve any problems. We're just going to kick the can down the road for somebody else to deal with, and that'll be our kids, and I don't think that that's a very fair burden to put on them.

Some other highlights from the website talk about the finances. It costs money to address this problem. The model that we have right now is certainly good at generating wealth in many areas, but we need to change that so that the way we run our economy allows people to build wealth but also mitigates the effects of climate change. That's incredibly important.

Transparency and stock-taking. We can't solve a problem if we're not really clear and honest about where we are now and where we want to be in the future. None of those things happen if we don't have good communication, if we don't have good relationships between different levels of government and between governments across the world.

So for all of these reasons and the fact that this isn't really an emergency for us to debate right now, I will not support this motion.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to rise and speak to the emergency motion that has been brought forward toward the House this afternoon. I won't take a whole lot of time, but I will advise the House that I really believe that the Official Opposition's position with respect to this motion and climate change in general really is an abdication of responsibility. We in this House as elected politicians, as government and as opposition, need to recognize our primary responsibility to lead, and by that I mean leading in terms of recognizing threats and planning a strategy to protect Albertans from those risks that we might identify.

This abdication is one that I think is fundamental to the strategy of the Official Opposition, to hide behind what they try to tell us is not happening, and that is their view, that climate change is not real. The economic geniuses on the other side of the House will lose out on all the potential opportunity that actually tackling climate change and recognizing the threats that we face as a result of it and ensuring that we make the right investments on behalf of Albertans to transition to a low-carbon economy and financing that transition with strategic investments into green energy development and energy efficiency using the very same energy levy, climate change levy, that they deride all the time. I really can't fathom why they think that Albertans will believe that their way is the way to go, because Albertans are clear thinkers. They do recognize what's going on around the world.

We see our northern ocean, our Arctic Ocean, no longer freezing over. We have had drastic fires and weather situations. The bottom line is that the global mean average temperature is rising, and we have enough scientific evidence that is so clearly telling us that we have a problem. It's a man-made problem caused by man-made addition of carbon into the atmosphere, whether you like to call it pollution or not. I would invite the hon. members who claim that CO₂ is not pollution to try switching CO₂ for oxygen and seeing which one is easier to breathe. CO₂ is definitely pollution. It's causing our climate change to accelerate and the global mean average temperature to accelerate to a point where it's causing devastating effects on our planetary ocean levels as well as our weather.

That responsibility to mitigate those risks lies with us as legislators who are bound to recognize and take action against those risks to protect our Albertan citizens that we represent and to also, really, take advantage of the opportunity. This new low-carbon economy that we are entering into, to lose the opportunity to transfer those dollars that we can obtain while there still is a demand for our responsibly produced energy products, not to take advantage of those dollars and invest them into a new transitioning low-carbon economy is a foolhardy, missed opportunity.

I really think that Albertans are very knowledgeable and will definitely vote with their minds and with their wallets when it comes to determining who should lead Alberta into this new energy economy, a government led by individuals who see and respect the science that is before us and who also take advantage of the opportunities that mitigating those risks present to us and our economy while a short window of us being able to sell our responsibly produced energy into global markets exists and allows us to use that economic rent to finance this transition into the low-carbon economy which is upon us. Those who deny climate change will, I think, be fundamentally left behind to wonder why they ever denied it in the first place.

I won't go further. I'm really very passionate about this. I think we have nothing but bright blue skies ahead of us as an Alberta economy. We do have some hurdles to get over, but the long-term situation where we have a very large supply of fossil fuel which will be fed into a global demand that is still quite vibrant for the next two to three decades at the very least is something we should use as an economic advantage and a lever to finance the transition into a low-carbon economy and take advantage of the artificial intelligence operations that are starting to come into our oil patch. We're looking at automated vehicles. We're looking at all kinds of technological advances that we can use to advance the transition to a lower carbon economy and make our workforce more amenable to the economics of the future.

If indeed we don't take advantage of the opportunities as the opposition would have us do, we would deserve to lose the election, but I don't think we will because I think Albertans are listening to what's happening around the world and realize that we're taking steps to protect them against the risks of climate change that's real, and we'll be recognized for that.

Thank you.

4:30

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise today and take part in this debate. As the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill noted, perhaps it's not an emergency in the sense that's often considered in this House, but we've taken the opportunity for this debate, so I appreciate the opportunity to participate in it.

I'd like to begin by addressing some of the initial comments from the Member for Strathmore-Brooks in regard to how we should be describing CO₂ emissions. Certainly, this is a point of some pedantry amongst many on the conservative right in talking about the issue of climate change and choosing to nitpick on particular words or definitions as opposed to actually addressing the real issue at hand, but, fair enough, we'll address that.

If one looks at the definition of pollution in the Oxford dictionary: "The presence in or introduction into the environment of a substance which has harmful or poisonous effects." Certainly, Madam Speaker, an excess of CO₂ qualifies as something that, when introduced into the environment, indeed has harmful or poisonous effects.

Encyclopedia Britannica:

Pollution, also called environmental pollution, the addition of any substance (solid, liquid, or gas) or any form of energy (such as heat, sound, or radioactivity) to the environment at a rate faster than it can be dispersed, diluted, decomposed, recycled, or stored in some harmless form.

That being the case, I think we can set aside minor quibbling about definitions and recognize that what we are talking about today is in fact a very real and genuine problem.

When we have an excess of CO₂ emissions – and to be clear, Madam Speaker, when we speak about climate change and we talk about emissions and we talk about pollution, we are not talking solely about CO₂. CO₂ is the predominant greenhouse gas, but we're also talking about methane, sulphur dioxide, other gases which are also released and which also contribute to the issue. CO₂, of course, is the primary pollutant in excess which is causing the issue due to man-made choices, man-made decisions, our approach to industry, the actions and choices that we each individually and on an industrial level make every day which are contributing to the very real issue of climate change.

As others have addressed today, we're seeing the impacts of that in the world today. Just a few weeks ago I had the opportunity to join the community from St. Vincent and the Grenadines here for their cultural celebration and their independence day celebration, and I talked with them about the very real experience of some of their country's brethren and sisters who have endured the effects of some severe hurricanes. Indeed, officials in that country noted that that was directly related to issues that are spinning off from the ongoing issue of climate change.

We recognize that this is a real and genuine issue that impacts people around the world and, indeed, Madam Speaker, that the decisions that we make and have made, that have contributed to our prosperity and have placed us in an incredibly advantageous position with an impressive quality of life that is the envy of many around the world, are predicated and built upon the fact that we have been contributing to this issue over the years, significantly. We set a standard that other countries wanted to adopt, and they have therefore increased their impact. So we can try to dismiss the fact and say that we don't produce as much as China or India or some of these other countries, but the fact is that those countries are following our example.

We have set that standard, and it's time for us to set another standard, too. Madam Speaker, dealing with climate change is something called a collective action problem. Now, a collective action problem is defined as a situation in which all individuals will be better off co-operating but fail to do so because of conflicting interests between individuals that discourage joint action. This is a very real problem that we face because the reality is that we are not going to deal with this situation in any way unless we find a way to enact some collective action.

As has been often observed by members opposite and indeed others on the conservative right – you know what? – no one jurisdiction can do this alone. I agree with them there, Madam Speaker, but where I begin to disagree is when they say: therefore, there is no need to take action, or therefore we cannot take any action until somebody else goes first, or we can only go as far as someone else is willing to go. That is not leadership. That is not what Canada is known for, that is not what Alberta is known for, and that is not going to move us forward in addressing a very real problem.

Now, as I said, Madam Speaker, part of the issue here is that some on this issue are choosing to get caught up in pedantry, are choosing to get caught up in small politicking, very short-term thinking, because they believe that's going to be to their own political gain. We see that south of the border. We see that amongst our own opposition here in Alberta. We see that amongst Conservative opposition in Canada.

Now, I appreciate that members opposite have come around to agreeing that this is a problem. That's a good step forward. Indeed, recently data was released that shows that the majority of Canadians – and that includes a majority of Conservative voters – recognize that this is a real and genuine problem. So when we come back around to the question of this debate, as put forward by the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, that we as Alberta should step back and say, "We will not support the federal government in their decision, having signed on to the Paris accord," that being the global agreement to set those targets, I cannot agree with that motion.

Now, let's be clear, Madam Speaker. Members opposite have talked about, you know, the astronomical figures that would be required to address this issue. To be clear, there is no addressing this issue without cost. That is simply an impossibility. So what our discussion comes down to, then, is: how are those costs to be best addressed? How do we implement them into our system?

They have to be implemented somewhere, whether that's going to be through regulation, which seemed to have been the favourite option of our former Prime Minister, Mr. Harper, and his Conservative government at the time, who said many great things about all the steps they were going to take and how they were going to rein in industry and how they were going to bring in regulation and all the steps they were going to take to begin to achieve Canada's carbon emission reduction goals but ultimately did nothing, ultimately did very little, again, because of that lack of political will, that unwillingness to be leaders on this issue, the unwillingness to address the fact that this is a challenge that we're going to have to face and there will be costs involved.

Now, members opposite have chosen so far not to put forward any actual policy on this issue or any indication of how they would actually choose to address it, again choosing to play that short-term political game. Frankly, Madam Speaker, I'm proud to stand with a government that is taking real action on this issue.

What we are seeing around the world, Madam Speaker, that I think is relevant to this conversation and particularly in the way the question has been framed by the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, is also concerns with the rise of nationalism, that being a very clear degradation of the principles of co-operation and collaboration on the global scale. Now, again, this is a word on which we often see folks on the right exercising some pedantry and trying to parse it in different ways to say things that it doesn't actually say, so I will be clear in my definition. When I talk about nationalism, I'm talking about, as the Oxford dictionary says, “Identification with one’s own nation and support for its interests, especially to the exclusion or detriment of the interests of other nations,” or another definition, “Loyalty and devotion to a nation especially: a sense of national consciousness exalting one nation above all others and placing primary emphasis on promotion of its culture and interests as opposed to those of other nations.”

Now, I recognize that the Member for Strathmore-Brooks leans a little bit in this direction. I mean that in terms of favouring a much higher, I guess, elevation of Alberta values, Alberta culture, Alberta’s interests over its place currently in the national scene. I’m not quite sure that you could call that provincialism. That would perhaps be a misunderstanding and a misrepresentation. But I recognize that, and I appreciate that the member stands by those values. Personally, I’m concerned by the growth of this sort of point of view and this sort of populism around the world.

There is indeed, Madam Speaker, a time to be patriotic, and indeed I consider myself a patriot. I am proud of my country. I am proud of my province. I am proud of my city. I don’t consider any of those necessarily to be superior to other parts of the world. There are many things to admire in many nations and many places, but that’s to one side of the point.

Ultimately what it comes down to, Madam Speaker, is that I find it very problematic that we are moving to a world where, increasingly, people are choosing to elect governments in nations that say me first, everyone else after. There are times to stand up for our national interests: indeed, when we are negotiating a free trade agreement; indeed, when we are working to negotiate pipelines for Alberta; indeed, when the city of Edmonton is advocating for its fair share of the resources that come from the province for its municipal infrastructure. Indeed, those are appropriate things to do.

But there are times and there are things where we need to come together to address action. This increasing move towards nationalistic approaches, policies, this increasing move towards populist thinking, as being demonstrated right now in the United Kingdom with the Brexit issue, is ultimately destructive. It ultimately harms those whom it tries to draw in. The people that they bring in under a populist philosophy and tell that it’s going to benefit them are ultimately harmed, because we do more and are able to accomplish more when we work together than when we choose to be entirely selfish in our interests.

So to bring this around, obviously I cannot support this motion from the member. I believe that these goals that have been set in the Paris accord: indeed, they are lofty. Indeed, they are challenging to meet, but they are also in one sense, Madam Speaker, I think, aspirational. We recognize, of course, that these are the realities of what we have to do if we want to truly circumvent the catastrophic effects of long-term climate change. But that does not mean that anybody is suggesting that these will be accomplished overnight or in the next year. We need to take these initial first steps. We need to begin that journey. If we just simply sit back and say, “This is too big an issue to possibly handle,” then we will never make any progress. Indeed, when we talk about the legacies that we are going to leave to our children and grandchildren, this is far, far worse than any of the doom-and-gloom scenarios that members opposite like to sometimes put forward in regard to the economy.

Now, the reality is, Madam Speaker, that we have taken real action as a province to begin to address this issue. Indeed, the introduction of a price on carbon is the first step, and it is one of many steps. Now, when members opposite choose to speak about the $300 price on carbon being what has to be in place to achieve the Paris climate goals, indeed that is if that is the only step that is put in place. Nobody has suggested that that is the only tool in the tool box, and certainly it is not the only tool in the climate leadership plan that our government brought forward. There is the ending of coal-fired electricity by 2030. There are steps to create technological innovation, which is reducing emissions in the barrel. Increasing renewable energy and the use of renewable energy, providing supports to people to help them reduce their energy usage, moving up energy efficiency in the province of Alberta: all of these things cumulatively begin to move us towards that goal.

So we can choose, Madam Speaker, again, to fearmonger, like members opposite like to do, misrepresenting particular parts of the climate leadership plan while offering no solutions in return. Indeed, if we are not going to put a price on carbon which applies to all sectors of the economy, then that means that burden will be left solely to industry. I would love to hear from members opposite what the burden would be on industry to meet the Paris accord goals if it’s left to them alone and no other steps are taken.

We are, of course, working with industry, Madam Speaker. We’re helping them, and all the funds that come in from the price on carbon go right back into other things to help reduce that. There are the rebates that go to individuals to help them offset the cost to them personally. Then there are the amounts that go into renewable energy, the amounts that are going into helping communities that have been dependent on the coal power industry to transition, amounts that are going into developing better technology, amounts that are going into energy efficiency, amounts that are going into green transportation and sustainable transportation across the province.

All of these things together, Madam Speaker, are us showing initiative, showing leadership because Alberta took these steps first. We didn’t follow Ottawa on this one; we led. Frankly, I’m happy to see that Ottawa has come along behind us and that they’re working to make sure that these types of positive steps are being brought forward across Canada with the national price on carbon, which then allows the choice for each individual jurisdiction to determine how they will reinvest that income, allows each individual the choice to determine how they can best address their own carbon usage, allows industry the choice to determine which technologies, which approaches they would prefer to implement, as opposed to the only other option that’s left to members opposite: imposing some form of regulation on industry telling them what they have to do.

I’m proud of the work of our government. I will proudly stand behind it. I will proudly campaign on it, as I do every week when I go out and I talk to my constituents at the doors. This is policy we can be proud of and that has put Alberta on the map internationally as a responsible energy-producing jurisdiction.

For all those reasons, Madam Speaker, I’ll be voting against this motion. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I’ll now recognize the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. First of all, I just wanted to say that there were a couple of comments that were made by some members from the opposite side there, St. Albert and Edmonton-McClung specifically. I don’t have the Blues in front of me, so I can’t quote them specifically, but the comments that were made identified us on this side of the House as being the problem with their carbon tax and that we are continually going against their carbon tax. But let me be absolutely clear. The reality is that two-thirds in almost every poll that we have seen of Albertans say that they are against carbon tax, so when they get up in this House and they start pontificating and waxing poetic about how right they are, the reality is that Albertans are not buying it.

In fact, Albertans are saying: "We are going to reject this. Give us an opportunity in an election, and we will show you how upset we are about the fact that you have crammed this carbon tax down our throats." This is the sort of thing that in this House they can stand up and sound fantastic, that they're so high and mighty and that they're so right, but the truth is that every election Albertans get the choice, and they get to choose who is right.

I'm not exactly sure why the members opposite are not actually taking a look at the polls and actually saying: "You know what? Albertans aren't buying it. We need to be able to maybe back off from this thing." But they aren't looking at it. They aren't actually addressing Albertans' concerns. I thought that we were a House that represents Albertans here, but in reality what they're talking about is a party that represents a small minority in Alberta. The truth is that the large majority of Albertans are saying: we reject this premise that the carbon tax is the way to go, that it can build us pipelines, that it can actually build us social licence. Because of that, on this side of the House we have maintained over and over again that the carbon tax is not the right approach to being able to address this issue.

Now, I think that it's important to let people know about a situation down in my riding. We have a lot of heat units down there. We grow lots of stuff down there. In the Taber area we have Rogers Sugar, or Lantic Sugar as it's called, that is a fantastic employer in my riding, and the cost of the carbon tax – because sugar, the sugar beets that they grow down there, is an international market, the sugar producers are price takers. They're not price makers. They have to sell this sugar into the market. The problem is that they have this carbon tax that the people right across the border in the States do not have to pay. This huge employer in my riding is in this situation where they are just hoping that the NDP don't get in a second term, Madam Speaker, because if they do, they might just leave. If they were to leave, the number of jobs that my riding in the Taber area would lose would be devastating to that community.

This is the sort of thing, Madam Speaker, that I think that this NDP government, which has been coined the government of unintended consequences, needs to really start thinking about. They ideologically push forward with their agenda, and in reality, rather than actually taking a look and saying, "Well, what is the economic impact? What are the consequences of what we're doing?", rather than doing that, they ideologically move forward in and push their agenda down Albertans' throats. As poll after poll shows, Albertans are not buying it. They're not excited about it. In fact, they're going to show them how unexcited they are in the next election.

Madam Speaker, this concept, the concept of carbon tax being this silver bullet that is going to buy this social licence, that is going to provide all of these jobs because we're going to build pipelines to the coast: we've not been able to see any fruition of that. We haven't been able to see any kind of growth in that. Now, they spike the ball on a regular basis saying: "You know what? See, we did it." In reality it's always premature because then something else happens. The court says: "No. You didn't have proper duty to consult, so you can't move forward."

The problem is that rather than actually stepping back and saying, "Until we actually get this social licence, we're going to get rid of this carbon tax we have. We're going to give Albertans the opportunity to be able to vote on this in the next election" – if Albertans say in the next election, "You know what? You've now been honest with us and you've told us that we're going to have a carbon tax and this is the cost of that carbon tax. Yes, we accept it.

We're going to vote you in," then that's democracy, Madam Speaker. That's the system we live in of democracy. If that was the case, then we have to accept it. But the truth of the matter is that rather than actually saying that they are willing to let the voters decide, let the Albertans, the people who struggle with this, the people who struggle . . .

The Acting Speaker: Sorry. I hesitate to interrupt, Member.

Members, can we all please sit down in our seats. We're not in Committee of the Whole. Thank you.

Please go ahead.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. If they had the ability to take a look at what Albertans want and give them that opportunity, I'm sure – not just sure; poll after poll indicates that Albertans would reject this agenda of the Alberta NDP. Yet we have heard time and again – again I go back to what the members for St. Albert and Edmonton-McClung said, that it's us that are causing the problems, that we're the ones who are against the carbon tax. Albertans are against the carbon tax. They're the ones who are giving us the clear indication that, no, that is not the correct approach, this is punitive, and there's no benefit to it.

If the benefit was that we were going to get a pipeline to tidewater, maybe the polls would change. I don't know. But I can tell you right now that the single mom with three young children, the person who's struggling, the fixed-income homeowner or the fixed-income person that's just trying to be able to make a go, they are not happy about this. I hear from them on a regular basis. These are the people who say they need a cease and desist. They need a stop with this destruction of the Alberta economy. Stop with destroying individuals' lives with this carbon tax that is punitive in nature.

Now, there was another comment that was made by the Member for Edmonton-Centre, and one of the things that he said in there – the argument is constant from the opposite side – is that if Albertans want to have a good environment, they'll want to have the carbon tax and that they want to be able to do their part. Well, you know what? If they were so sure of that, they could do a plebiscite or they could do an election. They could call an early election. You know what? I think Albertans would be very happy to have an early election. They would love to be able to have an opportunity to be able to make this the ballot decision. I can tell you that if they go to the ballots with this decision, if this is the ballot decision, I can tell you what Albertans are going to say. I talk to Albertans all the time. Albertans are not happy with this. This is not going to be able to provide that silver bullet that they seem to think that it is.

So, Madam Speaker, the issue at hand here is this government's complete lack of listening to Albertans, complete lack of this government's desire to know what Albertans want and then moving forward with something that's going to help Albertans. This is the reason why they're sitting so low in the polls. This is the reason why Albertans are rejecting their message and what they're doing.

Madam Speaker, I hope that all members of this House think about the consequences of the work that they're doing here, that this is not a laughing matter, as we've seen when my colleague was speaking earlier about how members of the opposite side were laughing as he was talking about senior citizens and fixed-income earners. For them to laugh at the plight of Albertans is deplorable, something that is not acceptable, is definitely not parliamentary.

Madam Speaker, I hope that the government will rethink this approach that they've had to the carbon tax, to how it's punitive in nature, that they would recognize that this is not helping Albertans – it's just punishing them – and that the members opposite who say that it's us that are causing the problems would take a look at this and realize that it's not just us. This is the majority of Albertans that are saying: no; we never voted you in for this, and we're not going to accept it.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thanks, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this afternoon to speak to Standing Order 42. I'm in agreement with the environment minister as well as the Member for Calgary-Mountain View and many of our colleagues here that climate change is real and that these might be the most substantial debates of a generation and perhaps for the future of humanity. The opposition has proven time and time again that they refuse to accept the science of climate change, and again we're hearing that here in this House today. The Conservatives plan to go backwards on climate change, which would remove billions of dollars of investment in renewables, eliminate energy efficiency programs that save money for families, businesses, and industry.

You know, Madam Speaker, each year April 22 is Earth Day. This is now a global event each year, and there are an estimated more than 1 billion people in 192 countries that now take part in the largest civic-focused day of action in the world. In this place, this Legislature, we hear day after day questions coming from the United Conservative Party opposition, questioning the value of Alberta's climate leadership plan, raising doubts that the value of the carbon levy and whether or not one province could have any effect on the overall global emissions at all.

You know, we've heard here today some quotes from former Prime Minister Stephen Harper and Preston Manning, but it reminds me of another notable Conservative politician that received some credit years ago. It was at an Earth Week gala dinner that was held back on April 18, 2006, and it was at this gala dinner where former Prime Minister Brian Mulroney was the distinguished greenest Prime Minister in Canadian history. It all happened at the Château Laurier in Ottawa before a sold-out crowd of environmentalists and corporate leaders.

Let's reflect for a moment on the significant accomplishments that would have led to this distinguished award. Myself, along with many others in this Chamber, was born and raised in Ontario, and many of us have memories of the acid rain debates and were aware of the damage that concentrations of sulphur dioxide emissions did to our natural ecosystems such as lakes and rivers, much of which was caused by coal-fired plants in the American Midwest and nickel smelting in Sudbury. I think the member moving this motion might recall some of those debates, too. Recognizing that something needed to be done about this environmental issue, government took action, and in 1991 Prime Minister Brian Mulroney and American President George Bush signed the acid rain accord. This would lead to a cut of more than 50 per cent in sulphur dioxide emissions in eastern Canada. During that time there were also significant measures introduced that reduced ozone depletion and helped clean up the St. Lawrence Seaway.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I'd like to offer that these changes have paid massive returns decades later. It shows that government programs and initiatives can have a positive effect on the environment. I wonder, Madam Speaker: what happened to those Progressive Conservatives that used to look decades ahead, attend climate change conferences, and represent Canada proudly? Every once in a while you hear an anxious point of order from the UCP, trying to perhaps distance themselves from their climate change doubting colleagues, but that gives us hope that a few of them might actually believe that human activities might have an impact on a changing global climate. I hope that all my Legislature colleagues on the other side of the House can learn the historical lessons from the former federal PC governments and understand that we actually do have an impact on our environment and that our government policy can have an impact on emissions and reduce the effects of climate change.

In the words of Brian Mulroney: climate change is the most serious environmental challenge, and time is running out; let's acknowledge the urgency of global warming. Then let's work together, bringing the world to a consensus on this topic. Madam Speaker, this is not the time to pull out of the Paris agreement on climate change.

We know that it's possible to take leading action on climate change and grow the economy at the same time because we've done it year over year. Alberta stands at a crossroads. We can ignore the signs of climate change and be dragged along, or we can take and make our own choices.

For those of us that lived in Calgary last summer, we know the air quality was poor due to forest fires elsewhere in B.C. The poor air quality lasted weeks and weeks on end, at least six weeks as I recall, and it was the same story the summer before. This year was different, though. I noticed that events were being cancelled, outdoor community recreation events specifically. It had a clear effect on people's lives.

Madam Speaker, our government has a solution. It's about investing in Calgary's green line LRT, that will create more than 12,000 jobs. Our energy efficiency programs mean that Albertans are saving $70 for every tonne of carbon emissions reduced, Albertans are saving $10 for every $1 they invest in the residential energy-efficiency products, and our energy efficiency programs have saved $414 million in energy costs. That's enough energy for 850,000 homes for one year. Businesses in Alberta have saved $36 million in energy costs, and that's the same as taking 78,000 cars off the road. We're helping lower and middle-income families offset their costs through carbon levy rebates, with approximately two-thirds of households receiving a full rebate.

Madam Speaker, these are real solutions designed to tackle climate change. We can make a difference, we need to start now, and this is why I cannot support this motion.

Thank you.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mine is really quick. I just have, actually, a question for the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. He had indicated that the Lantic Sugar factory was in his riding and that they were very worried. Now, I wonder how worried they are when they've put in $20 million worth of renovations to continue with the business after we provided some support.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members to speak to the motion? Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you. I want to thank everyone for their discussion on this certainly important topic. I'd also like to thank the Member for Calgary-Northern Hills for speaking. Certainly, he's been very passionate about this. I certainly believe that with his passion he might even reconsider running again in 2019. I certainly would encourage that, to run in Calgary supporting, you know, the carbon tax in that particular riding that he represents.

Now, I have to talk about a couple of things that I think are important, Madam Speaker. I know it's been said here before that two-thirds of Albertans consistently support getting rid of the carbon tax, but you have to recognize, whether you like it or not, that there is what is called a pattern. It doesn't matter if it's a biased poll. It doesn't matter if it's an independent poll. It doesn't matter if it's one that's commissioned by whomever. There is one constant theme, and that theme is that two-thirds of Albertans do not want this regressive carbon tax. That has been very, very clear, and that's been made very clear to me in Calgary-West.

I think it's important that we talk about listening, listening to our constituents, listening to the people of Alberta. You know, I sat in this Chamber – I was kind of thinking about this the other day – with some folks that may be perceived to be arrogant. We sat in a caucus of 76 people, Madam Speaker. I thought: my goodness, if 2019 comes around and I am so fortunate to be humbled by the people of Calgary-West, to be re-elected. I look at all the people that are running for the United Conservative Party and, of course, my friend here from Calgary-Hays – as I look at the picture of the Chamber from the previous Legislature, in the end it is just the Member for Calgary-Hays and myself who are the only two left standing from a previous government. My point is that you need to listen to the people you represent.

Now, I know that it's been said that, you know, we have other caucus members who were part of the previous PC Party, but they're not running again. The only two people that are running that are part of the Conservative caucus are the Member for Calgary-Hays and myself, so fair warning. When you don't listen to the people of Alberta – you can take away their jobs. You can take away their homes, but – I'll tell you what – you're never going to take away their right to vote, and they will send a clear message to the people in this Chamber in 2019.

Madam Speaker, I need to talk to you a little bit as well regarding what has been brought forward in the House in regard to people on fixed incomes. You know, I know that it's been said here that somehow all my friends are wealthy, but let me tell you something. I'm a simple, simple man. I came from a very simple home. My mother and my grandmother both currently live on fixed incomes, and they struggle. They struggle because of a carbon tax. You don't realize what sort of effect you are having on the daily lives of these people. They need to make choices on whether they can have bread or milk or heat their homes. Every time I go to Safeway – every time my grandmother goes to Safeway, less and less groceries can she afford. You guys can deny it all you want, but you are having a negative impact on people on fixed incomes. That will stop, and it's going to stop in 2019.

One of the members brought up Brian Mulroney. I was pretty young back then, but I'll tell you my recollection of Brian Mulroney. He led his party to one of the worst defeats in Canadian history, so I certainly wouldn't be taking any advice from him. Now, you can try and link him to the Conservatives all you want, but he's not a party that I ever belonged to.

Madam Speaker, there are people in this province who are hurting. You know, I spent the weekend as a hockey dad, getting up at 6 o'clock in the morning, taking my son to the rink, and listening to the people at that rink talk to me about how they don't want a carbon tax, talk to me about how the policies from this government are hurting them. This is not about Suncor. This is not about any major, large corporation. Quite frankly, I don't care about them. But I care about my family, I care about my friends, I care about my neighbours, and those people are hurting right now. There are people that are hanging on by a thread with their jobs, making mortgage payments, all because of this regressive carbon tax.

So I am proud to stand here and say: I do not support a carbon tax, and I do not support what this government is doing when it comes to the energy industry right now.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Other members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak on this motion that's before us. You know what? I've been listening to the debate, and there are a few things that have caught my attention. I heard, for example, the members from the government side talking about: let's do this together. All right. That sounds nice. Let me say this: I agree with that.

But the point, Madam Speaker, is that the government is not doing it together. If they were doing it together and they were grouping themselves together with larger, world-wide economies that could actually make a significant difference to the environment, then of course that might make a difference. If they were doing it together and they were doing it with larger numbers of people that could make a difference to the environment, then they might have something. The problem is that if you shut down completely Canada's economy, you would lower the world emissions by, from what I understand, about 1.6 per cent according to the scientists that the folks on the other side are fond of quoting. Nothing wrong with quoting scientists; we depend on them for a lot of our knowledge about the world.

But the fact is that sacrificing yourself to not help the environment doesn't make sense. The fact is that if we could actually work together with the rest of our country and bring along large economies like the United States, like India, like China in meaningful changes together, then we could actually make a difference on the emissions that go out into the world whereas doing this without them is self-sacrifice without actually doing anything for the environment, and that is actually silly. That is actually silly.

Here's the other thing. Because of that, the problem, without bringing together a large enough block of the world when you're making changes like this, is the fact that this particular carbon tax of this particular government is actually having a net negative effect on the environment. The carbon tax is actually not only not doing good for the environment; it's negative.

Again, someone that people on both sides of this House often quote is Andrew Leach. The government is aware of this: he's talked about carbon leakage. The fact is that every time you make our Canadian industry less competitive so that somebody buys a barrel of oil from Venezuela, from Saudi Arabia, from Russia instead of from Canada and, more specifically, Alberta, that barrel of oil is arriving at a higher burden on the environment, with higher emissions, lower human rights standards. That's what this government has wrought. That's what they're bringing forward. They're bragging about that. The fact is that I know they intend to do the right thing, but the evidence doesn't indicate that they are successful. In fact, the evidence indicates that what they're doing now has a net negative effect because they are not bringing along the larger economies with them while they do this.

All Albertans and, I believe, all Albertans in this Legislature want to ensure that we protect the environment. I think that's a core value. I don't think that that really has a political bent to it. I think everybody wants the world to be a clean and healthy place, not only for ourselves but for those we love, for our children, for our grandchildren, and for future generations. That's not a Conservative value. It's not an NDP value. It's a human value. That's not a party value. I would not accuse members of this House of wanting to leave the planet a mess. That's not what anybody intends here.

The question is about how to do it in a way that makes sense. If we could convince, again, our neighbours in the United States, China, and India to come together and make – I don't know – a different half of what this government thinks they're making but have everybody else doing it at the same time we did, it would be a way bigger positive effect than what's even being contemplated here, a way bigger positive effect than if we shut everything in Canada down, if we had countries like China, India, the United States making a smaller contribution to the environment.

Madam Speaker, the fact is that doing it by ourselves is much, much less effective, and when we provide prohibitive costs to our industry, to our people, we take away jobs, hurt the lowest income people, the most vulnerable people in Alberta. So for bragging rights? If you're actually not making the environment better, all you're getting is bragging rights. Why don't we actually think about doing it and bringing other people along so we can actually make a positive difference to the environment instead of just for the bragging rights? It doesn't make sense without bringing the rest of the world along.

So, in that spirit, I have an amendment to move, Madam Speaker, and I would like to move it if that's okay with you. I could keep speaking, but my guess is that you're going to want me to wait until you've seen it before I continue. Yes? I will wait for your signal.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. For those watching at home, I move that the motion brought forward by the Member for Strathmore-Brooks be amended by adding the following after "climate change":

"; but recognize the need to reduce greenhouse gas emissions without imposing disproportionate costs on the Alberta economy not being imposed by our economic competitors."

This, Madam Speaker, is what I have been talking about. I believe everybody in this Legislature wants to make the environment better. I would hate to think anybody in this Legislature wants to virtue signal or create the illusion of making the environment better while not actually making it better and, in so doing, take away the jobs of tens of thousands of Albertans or hundreds of thousands of Albertans, making life more expensive and less enjoyable for the most vulnerable and the lowest income Albertans and the people that need the support of this government and this Legislature the most. I would hope that members of this House want to improve the environment without disproportionately damaging Alberta's economy, without disproportionately damaging those people in Alberta that are the weakest amongst us, those that most need our support, those that might have the lowest income, those that actually are the ones that we most need to protect.

We have a responsibility to all Albertans, of course, but we have, I believe, a greater responsibility to those that need us the most. That's what this says. Why would we disproportionately hurt the Alberta economy, taking away jobs, opportunity, making consumer goods more expensive, making housing more expensive, making food more expensive? When we do that, we actually hurt the people that are of the lowest income, the poorest Albertans, the most. Those are the people that we all should be thinking about. Those are the people that, I would say, around here we all claim to say that we're thinking about. These are the people that we all ought to be thinking about every single day that we're in here, every time we stand up to speak, every time we vote, every time we act on behalf of our constituents. We ought to be making sure that we do not hurt them disproportionately or hurt Alberta disproportionately. It only makes sense.

Now, we've already seen the evidence of not doing that. This carbon tax has disproportionately hurt Alberta while actually probably doing net damage to the environment. What have we seen as a result? Economic activities have been leaving Alberta in droves, well over $40 billion in investment gone along with the jobs, the opportunity, the future opportunities for our children and grandchildren, chased out of Alberta by, amongst other ways, the carbon tax introduced by this government.

Mr. Piquette: Not at all. You know that.

Mr. McIver: Yes, I know you did better than the carbon tax. I see the member from Athabasca there arguing. I'll give him credit. He also chased out the investment with the corporate taxes, with the personal taxes, with the excess regulations, but the carbon tax was part of it. You're right. I should have given you credit for all the other bad policies, but we are talking about this one right now.

The fact is that this is what happens when you have bad policies. You chase out jobs, opportunity, things that can make life better for Albertans. Again, Professor Andrew Leach calls it carbon leakage, and he's right. Every time a barrel of oil comes from somewhere else, we've actually supported a country with lower human rights standards than Canada, lower environmental standards than Canada. If you're actually giving the business to somebody with lower environmental standards, you're actually not doing anything for the environment, and it's probably a net negative out of the carbon tax in its current form. Again, if we could come together along the way with the United States, with China, with India and say, "Together let's reduce the world's emissions," we could actually make a dent. Someone might actually notice. For those that, you know, claim they care about the environment, then that is the way, I believe, we all ought to be looking at it.

In fact, there's lots of other evidence. I mean, you look and see oil and gas booming in places like Texas and North Dakota but slumping in Alberta. They don't have the NDP policies tripping them up, making their product more expensive, causing everything for their citizens, whether they're in the industry or not, to be more expensive than it needs to be, including basics like food, basics like heat for people that – frankly, again, it's not wealthy people who have to choose between groceries and heat. It's poor people. It's people of low income. Those are the ones that we need to actually be turning our thoughts and our minds to, not thinking about our fancy friends from France and how happy they're going to be with us.

I know that we sent the minister over there to meet up with her fancy friends, and what we have is a carbon tax as a result. What we have is damaging Alberta's economy. What we have is hurting the people that we're supposed to help. Yes, we should work to lower our emissions, primarily with technology, and we should not impose the costs upon ourselves that our closest competitors are not paying.

You know what? The fact is that people didn't really switch from horses to cars because they ran out of horses. They switched from horses to cars because they went faster, eventually, not right away. Eventually, they were more reliable, could go farther without stopping. It's certainly more comfortable in the winter when you're heated when you're driving. The technology evolved to have people naturally shift, which is the attitude that we should have here.

If we want to lower emissions, we need to work together with other countries, have technology where we can heat our homes more efficiently, technology where we can move goods and services around more efficiently, technology where we can do everything that we do with energy: cool things, heat things, make sure that the refrigeration in the grocery store is more efficient through better technology. These are the ways in which we can actually make a difference to the environment without hurting our citizens, in particular without hurting our citizens with the lowest income, the most vulnerable of our citizens, the ones that we should care the very most about.

Madam Speaker, I hope that members of the House will support this amendment. Economic activity and jobs are at stake. Yes, the environment will be affected. I think that we need to do both of those things. I think we need to have a positive effect on the environment and the economy and not choose one or the other.

Mr. Coolahan: Well, what's your plan?

Mr. McIver: I just heard chirping from the other side. Well, I'll tell you what. We will have a plan, as our House leader has said, before the next election comes, but I'll tell you that what makes the environment better is killing the carbon tax. The government's carbon tax is bad for the environment because it's driving out oil and gas production into countries with lower environmental standards than Canada's. Sorry, but the government's policy is making it worse.

To talk about what the plan is, our plan is, first, to stop the damage that's being done by the government's current policy – and there is damage being done – and, secondly, to put a common-sense solution in place that protects both the environment and the economy. The government's current plan does neither.

On that, I will stop speaking. I hope that members of the House can see their way clear to supporting what I believe is an important amendment, and I will listen to the debate.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: On the amendment, Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm sorry to preempt the Government House Leader, who seems very eager to join in this evening's festivities. I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Hays for his participation in this debate, putting forward the amendment to the motion before us now, essentially adding I think we'll call it a disclaimer clause, adding that we're against Paris but not too against Paris.

I think it is a reasonable amendment. No one on this side, that I'm aware of at least, is arguing that we shouldn't do anything about greenhouse gas emissions, that there should be nothing whatsoever. Now, what it is that we're going to do in the place of a carbon tax or in the place of complying with the Paris accord: that's to be seen. I mean, cap and trade is simply a backdoor carbon tax that is perhaps even more harmful to the economy than a direct carbon tax. And then the traditional command and control regulatory approach is also highly disruptive to the economy, picking winners and losers, and has a lot of costs, but people don't see these costs.

I'm going to have to give a rare bit of perhaps backhanded praise to the NDP here. A carbon tax is braver than the other forms of backdoor carbon taxes: command and control regulation or cap and trade. It's braver in the sense that people can see it. You can actually see it. That tends to make it less politically popular. And we have to know that we shouldn't only do what is popular; we have to do what is right. In this case I think the NDP are not doing both what's right or popular. But in their own minds they think this is the right thing to do, and they're entitled to think that until they no longer have the ability to pass that legislation.

The amendment put forward by the Member for Calgary-Hays here is perhaps making the motion now rather wordy in its completeness, but I find it to be reasonable. You know, far be it from me – the Siberian corner here now is more the gulag archipelago; it's getting so busy over here. But in this corner of the Legislature we learn some lessons on co-operation and working across party lines and the ability to get things done. If someone else, regardless of party, brings forward an amendment to anything I'm putting forward, if I think it's reasonable – and I don't necessarily think it improves it, but I think it's reasonable – and if that helps members to feel more comfortable in supporting a motion from this Legislature to reject the Paris climate accord, then I think it's well worth including.

I would encourage members to accept the amendment and from there move forward to the final vote in this House rejecting all co-operation with the federal government in its attempts to impose the objectives of the Paris climate accord.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to the amendment to the motion put forward by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks. It's an interesting amendment.

The original motion made by Strathmore-Brooks asks that we "urge the government to reject co-operation with the federal government in the imposition of the Paris agreement on climate change." That at least, Madam Speaker, is clear. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks doesn't support the international agreement that was arrived at in Paris, and he doesn't like the consequences of that because he's also very much opposed to the climate leadership plan that this government has brought forward. That is at least clear. We do not agree with that approach. Nevertheless, we thought it was very much worthy of debate this afternoon because I think it's really important that we clear the air with respect to the policies of not only our government and our party but of the other parties as well.

The problem comes now with the amendment that's been put forward by the UCP. I have to admit to a certain curiosity as to how they were going to respond to the motion from Strathmore-Brooks, and now we can see what the manoeuvre actually is, Madam Speaker. The manoeuvre is to say: well, what would it mean if it was adopted? They're amending the motion. They're not changing what's in the motion. The motion asks that we "reject co-operation with the federal government in the imposition of the Paris agreement on climate change." They're not changing that in their amendment. They're clearly still prepared to support that position, but they want to hedge their bets. I'm a little disappointed that Strathmore-Brooks didn't see through their strategy here.

They want to recognize the need to reduce greenhouse gases, so they want to be able to tell Albertans that they actually agree with reducing greenhouse gas emissions. They want to tell Albertans that. But it can't impose "disproportionate costs on the Alberta economy not being imposed by our economic competitors." That sounds reasonable in a way. But there are all kinds of other buts, Madam Speaker. You know, they don't want any kind of price on carbon notwithstanding the fact that that is the most market-friendly approach to dealing with reducing greenhouse gases. They don't want a cap and trade. They don't want really anything that would actually do something. This is the problem with their position.

Some of them claim to believe in human-caused climate change. You know, I think that there are a couple of them that actually think that. But we also know – and we heard this in the speech from the Minister of Environment and Parks today – the list of statements from members opposite that oppose the idea, in one degree or another, that climate change is actually caused by human activity. Sunspots or – I don't know what else – some cosmic kind of activity are what they tend to credit for that.

The fact of the matter is that there is a clear consensus among scientists and world leaders, with the exception of one just to the south of us now, who believe that climate change is an urgent priority, that it is already well advanced. Indeed, Madam Speaker, we can see the impacts of climate change around us. I'm old enough. I'm older than probably most of the members over there, not all. There are a couple of seniors in their back row, shaking their fingers at me, you know, waving their canes in the air, that remember what winters used to be like in this province. You normally wouldn't be able to walk outside with just a light jacket in November in the province of Alberta. It was cold, and it was cold right across the prairies. It was cold right across most of Canada with the exception of the little area along our west coast. The winters were long, and they were hard, and Canadians took some considerable pride in being able to live through the kind of winters that we had. That's not the case anymore.

You know, Madam Speaker, when I was a kid – I was probably eight or nine – our family drove up the Icefields Parkway between Lake Louise and Jasper. We stopped at the Columbia Glacier, about halfway up the road, and there was a huge glacier there that came right down almost to the road. There was a little bit of a lake there, and it was very, very impressive.

Well, we went back, you know, a few years ago, and they had developed markers from where that glacier had been at certain years. Back at the end of the 19th century the glacier had actually been on the other side of the highway. I saw where it was when I went and saw it – that would have been in the mid-60s, I guess – and then I looked to where the glacier was now. This is just within my lifespan. There was a huge, huge distance – I would say the better part of a kilometre – that that glacier had retreated since I was a boy. Members opposite wonder about climate change, whether or not it's real or whether it's really a problem, and I think that there's a clear measurement right here in Alberta, that anyone can go and see, for what has actually changed.

But what else has changed? Well, the Minister of Environment and Parks talked about it earlier in her speech. What about the forest fires that we've had to deal with in this province? They are extraordinary events. What's happening today in California is not the normal cycle of fires. You know, fires occur everywhere. Forest fires are a natural thing. And, yes, they have been made worse because of poor long-term forest management practices around the world. But they are occurring more severely: much larger events, more damage. Whole cities are burning. We saw Paradise. Well, it's not a city but a town. There are over 1,000 people missing right now just in California. A couple of years ago in Australia: the same sort of situation. We had, of course, our huge fire, a couple of them, one at Slave Lake and then, again, in 2015 the devastating Fort McMurray fire. So that's one thing.

Then flooding is the other consequence. We've seen an increase in disastrous flooding. Again, flooding is a natural event. You can't just sort of say that there were no floods before climate change, but you can say that floods are more serious, more severe, and may happen more frequently.

That's why the insurance industry in this country and around the world is strongly supportive of action to fight climate change, to mitigate it, to reduce it, to slow it down, eventually to reverse it, because it's very bad for their business. They are paying out billions of dollars in claims that they didn't have to pay before. It changes everything in terms of how they calculate their actuarial tables and the rates that they're going to have to charge to pay for all of this. We're all going to pay for it, billions of dollars of costs, even right here in Alberta, and that's borne by everyone in this province.

To say that climate change isn't an urgent and serious problem that requires a response is irresponsible. But you can't have it both ways like the UCP wants. They want to say: "Oh, yes. Climate change could be human caused or partly human caused. Yes, it's a problem, but let's not do anything." That's their position, essentially: let's not do anything. Every time you put forward an idea to deal with it, of course, it's not free, and they're not willing to pay any price, that I can see, to deal with this problem. But Albertans are paying a price. They're paying higher insurance premiums. They're having to deal with all kinds of things. Taxes are affected by the need to deal with climate change and to protect our cities and our farms from the ravages of ongoing climate change.

The opposition, the UCP opposition in particular, I think, is extremely irresponsible in their approach. They think that they can get away with it: "Yes, we don't like climate change. But, no, we don't want to do anything about it." It's high time that the leader of the UCP stood up here or some other place in front of Albertans and said exactly what the UCP is prepared to do about climate change because he has not done that. He's really hoping to finesse his way into power in the next election by talking about all the problems and offering no solutions. Well, I don't think it's going to work, Madam Speaker. I don't think it's going to work at all.

The Member for Calgary-Hays stood up, and he said that other countries aren't doing anything. Well, you know, I have to remind the hon. member that almost every country in the world originally signed on to the Paris accord. Yes, some countries are treated somewhat differently than others because they have economies that are developing at different stages than the rest of the world or than other countries. So, yes, there are some differences in the approach to the solutions. But everybody signed on.

We have one problem, which is giving them hope, I suggest, and that is that the United States has elected a President who's decided to pull out of the Paris accord. I really hope, Madam Speaker, for our sake, the sake of the world, that that is a temporary situation and that it will be resolved in a couple of years. I very much hope that that is the case because the United States has become an outlier in terms of the international consensus. It's unfortunate to see our friends in the UCP falling into the same trap. They want us to be an outlier, too. I think that that's something that I don't think will sit very well with people.

Now, the hon. Member for Calgary-West gave a very angry speech about all of the terrible economic hardship that this government is inflicting on poor and elderly Albertans, and I just want to deal with that because those people, first of all, have a struggle far beyond the climate leadership plan and the carbon levy that is part of that. They have a struggle dealing with taxes. They have a struggle dealing with the cost of living, in some cases rent, food, all of those things. I just want to remind the hon. member that the difficult financial situation that we find ourselves in now and the rough patch in the economy, the downturn in the economy that we have seen as a result of dramatically falling oil prices is really what has hurt people more than anything else.

Why are we in that position? Well, quite frankly, we're in that position because the previous Conservative government, of which he was a member, failed to diversify our economy and failed to diversify the sources of revenue that this government depends on. When we took office – and this was not new – 30 per cent roughly of program expenditures were paid for by volatile nonrenewable royalty revenue, and that is a situation that they had years, nay, decades, to fix and did not fix. They handed that to the new government. That was something we inherited at a time of plunging oil prices and depressed natural gas prices.

So what do you do? Well, you know, there are lots of things you can do. One thing that we don't do – I can tell you that this government doesn't – is cut services to those same people, and that's what this opposition would have us do. Again, they don't want to connect the consequences of their actions. "We're going to reduce spending by 20 per cent," says their leader, "but there won't be any consequences to the people of Alberta; we have severely depressed royalty revenues coming in; we're going to cut the expenditures of the government by 20 per cent with no negative consequences for the people of Alberta," instead of saying, "Well, here's what we're going to do." I can respect a position that says that we have to reduce our expenditures by that much. You know, that's not a position I agree with, but it's at least a legitimate conservative position to take. But the question is: what do you do to get there, and who pays and who benefits? Questions they refuse to answer.

Now, it seems to me that if you want to reduce spending by that amount, you have an obligation to tell people how you're going to do it. Again, it's the same strategy that's being followed. They're going to try and finesse their way through the election by promising to make reductions and pretending that there are no consequences and offering no clues as to how they're actually going to do what they want to do. It's an intellectually dishonest approach, and I sincerely hope the people of Alberta are going to recognize it.

It's clear – just to get back to this point because I don't want to let Calgary-West off the hook just yet. In his anger about the impact of the carbon tax, is he also angry at a government that failed to diversify the economy that left the people of Alberta once again to face dramatic cuts to government programs and other expenditures when the price of oil goes down? When we were in opposition back in the day when I was leading our caucus, we said over and over again that we should not be laying off teachers and nurses just because the price of oil goes down, and we have to find a way to not do that. We know – and everyone in Alberta knows – that the price of oil, the price of natural gas goes up and it comes down all the time. That is a regular thing. You can count on it.

Why would we have a budgeting system that makes investments and funds new programs when the price of oil is high, only to turn around and cut them when the price of oil goes down? That makes no sense, but that is the past to which they want to return. I have to say that we need to do everything possible to stop them from doing that because that is the past that has hurt Albertans over and over again, and it's time we learned the lesson.

You know, Isaac Newton – no. He was replaced by Einstein. It was Einstein that said that the definition of madness is to continue to repeat the same actions and expecting a different result. That, I'm afraid, defines the operating philosophy of that government.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, Madam Speaker, there's limited time obviously before the supper break, but it's interesting. I think actually I'll pick up right where the Government House Leader left off, and that is that the definition of madness is to continue to do something over and over even though it's not working, which is exactly what this government has done during their entire time in this mandate.

They brought forward a carbon tax, punished the people of Alberta, said that they would have social licence, caused significant social damage across this province. It hurt people, something that they want to forget that they did, but Alberta hasn't forgotten, and then they continue to do it because – well, first of all, they said that it was because they would get social licence to build pipelines, but even though we know that's now not true, they continue to do it over and over and over, punishing the people of Alberta.

You know, the Government House Leader brought up a lot of interesting points. Time is short. I want to focus on one particular area. He attacked or called out, I guess, the Member for Calgary-West for speaking passionately defending fixed-income seniors and showing his frustration with what this government has done to his constituents. I am just as frustrated, and so are those fixed-income seniors across the province. This Government House Leader and his caucus, his fellow caucus mates, his Premier, the cabinet that he belongs to have gone out of their way to punish the people of Alberta. They have hurt the people of Alberta.

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Mason: Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), including imputing motives. The hon. member, the House leader for the UCP has just stood here and suggested that we've gone out of our way to hurt people. Now, that may be his opinion, but that is unacceptable in this House, and I believe that it violates the standing orders.

It's one thing to say that what you have done may have hurt people. I don't believe that's true, not at all. I can see that it could be a legitimate and parliamentary argument that could be made, but to suggest that I, personally, as a member of this House and other members of this House, have gone out of their way to deliberately hurt people is completely unacceptable, Madam Speaker, and we shouldn't be having that kind of tone in the debate here. Talk about policies. Say that the policies are good. Say that the policies are bad. Say that the policies help people. Say that the policies hurt people, but quite frankly to say that you've deliberately set out to hurt people is in fact, in my opinion, unparliamentary, and it's in violation of those standing orders.

I would ask that the hon. member withdraw that remark and apologize to me and other members of this House.

Mr. Nixon: Madam Speaker, in your words earlier today, it sounds like lighthearted banter maybe, but what I will say is this: I never said him specifically. I spoke about the policy of the government that he belongs to. Now, he might be ashamed of what his government has done. He, quite frankly, should be, but I will not apologize for standing up and defending fixed-income seniors from this government's behaviour. This government's policy has been devastating and has hurt people, and this member should stand up and apologize to Albertans. It's a matter of debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, it's getting late in the day, and I have to say that I don't think there is a point of order on this, but again it's a good reminder for all of us to really be careful that we are not making personal implications with our remarks against another member or group of members.

Please continue, hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I do know that the Government House Leader appears to not want to hear what I have to say today. I wouldn't want to hear it either if I was him based on his government's policy and actions and the significant impact that they have had on the people of Alberta. I would be ashamed of that, too.

But here is the point. The Government House Leader in his tirade that he just gave to this House did not answer any of the important questions, and the most important question is this. The government's own reports show that for them to meet the Paris accord with the carbon tax, they would have to charge $300 a tonne instead of the $50 or so that they're charging at this moment. That means one of two things. Either this government knowingly is bringing forward a tax to hurt people in this province, that hurts people in this province, or they intend to raise it. It's one or the other. They don't answer that question. That's part of their secret agenda, I guess, Madam Speaker. I know that the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont, is laughing about that, but the people in his constituency are not laughing about it.

That's what's important about this. The decisions by this government have real consequences, and the Government House Leader standing up here and calling out the Member for Calgary-West for defending seniors is totally inappropriate, and he should actually, I think, be ashamed of that. A member of his standing who's been in this Chamber for so long should stand up in this Chamber and fight for the seniors in his constituency. It's disappointing to see him and all of his fellow colleagues continue to stand by idly as their constituents have to go through the pain that comes with their bad policies. Very disappointing. It is extremely disappointing to see what has taken place.

Now, why won't the government stand up and answer that? Instead they want to attack the opposition who brings forward a pretty reasonable amendment saying that we need to tackle greenhouse emissions without making Albertans pay undue consequences for it. They don't believe that. That's the difference between these two parties. They think that their ideological agenda can be dealt with on the backs of everyday Albertans. We think not. We will stand in this House and defend fixed-income seniors. We will defend the most vulnerable. We will defend our municipalities. We will defend our hospitals. We will defend our families over and over and over, and if this government wants to continue to stand up and defend their actions against the people of Alberta, their actions that have cost them significant amounts of money all the while without getting pipelines built, I know that they're disappointed.

They get upset when we point it out because I know without a doubt that when they go home to their constituencies, they're getting flack for it, and they should get flack for it. They should get flack for the way that they've treated Albertans. They should get flack for it. They should stand up and they should answer the question: do they intend to bring it to $300? Is that their plan? Or did they just realize – the Government House Leader is shaking his head no. Their own documents show they can't meet their emission targets. They just agreed that this is just a tax on the people of Alberta, and it has nothing to do with the environment. The Government House Leader just admitted that, nodding his head, saying: we don't intend to do it.

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Mason: Again, 23(h), (i), and (j). He's imputing motives again. I never admitted any such thing, and I really do wish the opposition – because this is a general problem. Specifically this House leader, who's just done it again, is standing up and attempting to suggest that I or others in this House have said things that we simply did not. I think we should be very careful in this House, quite frankly, to prevent that sort of debate because it's really important that we get our ideas out and talk about what we're going to do about the problems and how we see those problems. I think those are really valuable things to be talking about. It's unfortunate that the Opposition House Leader just wants to twist people's words to suit his own political purposes, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: Madam Speaker, if I misrecognized the hon. member's head nod or head shake to not bring it to $300, I apologize. I guess that means he intends to bring it to $300. I'm confused which one he was trying to contribute.

Mr. Mason: Same thing again, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: You can't call a point of order on a point of order.

Mr. Nixon: With that said, I'd be happy to withdraw pointing out the member shaking his head.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. In light of the fact that the RMA is holding a number of events and social activities this afternoon and that members, at least on this side, would like to be there to interact with the municipal councillors from rural Alberta, I would request unanimous consent of the House to shorten the bells to one minute.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights

[Adjourned debate November 7: Ms Ganley]

The Deputy Speaker: Any member wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights. Bill 24 amends both the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act and the Regional Health Authorities Act. The main purpose of this bill is to formalize the relationship between the government and the AMA. This bill ultimately creates a large negotiating body to oversee negotiations between Alberta's doctors and the government of Alberta.

Now, the government and the Alberta Medical Association have had a long relationship together. As a matter of fact, I believe it was 1906 when it was created in its first incarnation, and for over 100 years the Alberta Medical Association has represented and advocated for Alberta's physicians and for their patients. The AMA offers resident physicians and medical students a wide variety of services and benefits and help with both personal and professional financial needs. It's a very important and a good organization for both patients and for doctors.

Based on the comments of the physicians that I talked to in my constituency, two things were stressed in my conversations with them. The first was that doctors were for the most part happy with their relationship with the Alberta Medical Association. Secondly, they believed that the relationship that the AMA has had with the government both historically and presently has been a very positive one, and it would be my hope that we would be able to keep that a positive relationship moving into the future.

Now, Madam Speaker, Alberta physicians have been principally paid through a fee-for-service model in which doctors bill the government a predetermined fee for each service that they perform for patients. The Alberta Medical Association has been the organization that has represented most but not all doctors in Alberta when negotiating the fee-for-service model. Just this past spring a new, two-year funding agreement was signed between the AMA and the government, and the AMA agreed that the doctors would receive no fee increases until 2021. This is estimated to save the government somewhere around $98 million in health care costs. Part of the deal was an agreement, was a commitment made to introduce legislation that would recognize the AMA as the sole representative of the physicians when negotiating compensation.

Hence, today we find ourselves talking about Bill 24, the bill that is before us today.

Bill 24 is going to change to some degree the relationships that doctors have with the AMA and that the AMA has with the government. Now, prior to Bill 24 the AMA signed agreements with the government and had a significant role in managing the flow of funds to physicians from the physicians' services budget. Under Bill 24 the minister will recognize the AMA as the exclusive representative regarding physicians' compensation matters. It not only formalizes the relationship between the government and the AMA, it establishes the AMA as a negotiating body under which all other professional health organizations must negotiate.

Bill 24 amends current legislation to make the AMA the exclusive representative of physicians on any compensation matter and on any benefit. This will include rates of benefits payable for the provision of insured services by a physician and any funding for physician assistance programs. This legislation will cover both doctors who are employees of Alberta Health Services and physicians who are regulated members of the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta under the Health Professions Act.

Madam Speaker, changes under the Regional Health Authorities Act will include that if a majority of a group expresses to the AMA a wish to be represented by the AMA in the negotiation, renewal, or extension of a particular contract governing the group's service with AHS and both AHS and the AMA agree that they are suitable, it will be recognized that the AMA will be their exclusive representative in all negotiations, renewals, and extensions of that contract. In essence, physicians will lose the ability to negotiate independently or in groups.

Alberta physicians supported the new, two-year agreement this past spring with a vote of 89 per cent. But, Madam Speaker, it's important to note that only 30 per cent of Alberta's member physicians actually voted on this new agreement. Now, I'm not suggesting that the new, two-year agreement that was ratified by this vote is not valid. I am stating a simple fact, that the majority of physicians in Alberta did not participate in the vote to ratify the new agreement, yet Bill 24, a piece of legislation that is the result of that ratified agreement, is going to affect one hundred per cent of the physicians in Alberta. This is a concern.

As a conservative I've always believed that every individual has a right to their own labour. As part of that right to their own labour, they should have the capacity to decide if they want their interests represented by themselves or the collective bargaining unit of their choice. There are some physicians that do not want the AMA to represent them and would like to negotiate on their own.

Today with Bill 24 we find ourselves in the situation that while the AMA has historically represented a large majority of physicians in Alberta, it has not represented every physician, yet because of Bill 24 those few that have not been represented by the AMA will eventually have no choice. In the past physicians not covered by previous AMA agreements could negotiate their own agreements. Now as these agreements end, the physicians cannot be represented by another body or by themselves. Under Bill 24 physicians that had opted out of the AMA will now be compensated based on the agreement between the AMA and the government at the expiry of their previous contract. Physicians will lose, therefore, the ability to negotiate independently or in groups outside of the AMA, and that denies those few physicians the right to control their own labour.

To this point in Alberta history membership in the AMA has always been voluntary. Bill 24 now makes it so that physicians will be represented by them regardless of whether they are a member or not. If a doctor can choose to opt out of representation by the AMA but they are still bound by the collective negotiated agreement, wouldn't that mean there is no reason to opt out if you're still tied to the agreement?

Historically physicians have had a more flexible model that recognized the interests of a small but nonetheless important group of physicians who wished for something other than a top-down model where it seems to be one size fits all. The UCP would like to offer physicians more, not less, flexibility. It's important that a strong working relationship is established between the AMA, the physicians, and the government.

The government needs to have a flexible relationship in order to ensure that this bill and future agreements with the AMA work for all Albertans, and their primary focus should be on improving patient care and outcomes. Unfortunately, the government has jeopardized that flexibility by using Bill 24 to limit the bargaining power of the government when negotiating future agreements with the AMA. Bill 24 potentially moves everything from policy into legislation and in the process makes agreement and policy impossible to renegotiate without amending legislation.

Does the government plan on compensating physicians for everything, including vacation, maternity leave, sick leave, et cetera? This would become very expensive for the province and the taxpayer. Bill 24 may even negatively affect doctors' compensation and benefits. If the AMA is the exclusive representative on compensation and benefits, do the physicians lose their ability to act as independent contractors? There are many physicians who operate as contractors to AHS and are small businesses, usually created as professional corporations. Would they lose the tax advantage that these provide? Will physicians be considered an essential service? Bill 24 could prove to be a costly agreement in the future, mitigating any of the temporary savings that have been placed before us today.

It's for these reasons that I will not be supporting Bill 24, not because I do not want to see well-compensated physicians but because I want physicians to have the flexibility to represent themselves if they desire to. I want to see a positive, flexible relationship between the government and the AMA and physicians. This is what we have traditionally had, and I can see where Bill 24 could threaten that relationship.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise on Bill 24. Now, Bill 24, of course, deals with the relationship between the government of Alberta and the Alberta Medical Association and their representation rights. I think it's not too hard to acknowledge that this is a long-standing relationship and an important one. Certainly, the relationship between the government and doctors and people in the medical profession is an important relationship that's been in place for many years with this government and with previous governments and one that I believe is for the most part a positive one and one that I would like to see maintained in a positive and long-standing relationship as we go forward.

The current legislation in front of us – we'll talk more about that when we get into Committee of the Whole – leaves a few questions that I think need to be answered. Madam Speaker, I'll try to address some of these questions as I make my remarks in the next few minutes here.

We are concerned at the UCP. We need to make sure that physicians have flexibility, and we need to know that the current legislation will not limit the flexibility that physicians have. I appreciate that we've heard that there was an 89 per cent vote. But, also, I would be interested in clarification from somebody on the government side because what we think we understand at this point – and I'm happy to be corrected – is that the vote was on a different issue and only 30 per cent of the AMA members voted. If we round 89 per cent up to 90 to be generous to the government, even if you do that, 90 per cent of 30 per cent is still only 27 per cent, not the overwhelming majority that the government has represented to us. So we'll look for clarification on that if the government chooses to offer it along the way.

Certainly, we've heard from some physicians that don't agree with the position that the government is taking with this bill, so I think it's important that we get it right. It's important because the relationship, of course, between the government, physicians, and medical professionals is important. But more than that, Madam Speaker, the relationship between Albertans and their doctors is important. When you have an overarching change in the bargaining relationship, well, to be clear, that could lead to a better or a worse relationship. That's why it's worth talking about, and that's why it's worth asking questions about it here this morning.

Madam Speaker, some questions occur to me. The AMA is the exclusive representative on compensation benefits. Do those physicians that currently, now, act as independent contractors lose their ability to do so? I know it sounds like a detail, but it's probably not a detail to those doctors that are in that position right now. It makes me wonder how professional corporations would fit in. Would doctors lose the tax advantage that a professional corporation provides? I would hope not, but it would be nice to hear a little more detail from the government on that. On compensation for things like vacation, maternity leave, sick leave, you know, it would be interesting to hear from the government if there are any changes, additions, subtractions to those pieces of the relationship. These things would be important to know.

If a doctor chose, for example, to opt out of representation, would they still be bound by the collective negotiated agreement? I guess one could ask the question: why opt out if they're still tied to the agreement? Nonetheless, the starting place is actually knowing how that detail would affect the doctors on the ground in their everyday lives, and then, I suppose, the doctors could make an informed decision themselves as they consider their relationship with the government should this piece of legislation pass.

One has to wonder what the motivation for the government was, whether it was to get a better deal for the taxpayers, whether it was a deal, hopefully, intended to get better patient care outcomes, or whether there was some other motivation behind this. Essentially, doctors have been negotiating successfully for a long time with this government and with previous governments, I think it could be said. Of course, in any negotiation I'm sure there's never a hundred per cent agreement, but the negotiations over time have been successful. So one needs to wonder what the government hopes will be better after this relationship happens when the relationships and the negotiations have been successfully carried out up till now.

It would be nice to have clarification from the government, for example, on how this change would affect rural municipalities and what other unexpected consequences might come up.

Having had a chance to look at the legislation, at this point I have more questions than answers. In that spirit, I think I will sit and listen, and maybe I will get some of the answers to the questions I've posed and some of the other things that have not been made clear yet through the draft of the legislation.

Madam Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to share some of my thoughts on Bill 24. I think there's a reasonably good chance I'll be on my feet again before this is over, but hopefully we'll have heard a few answers to some questions from the government between now and then. For me, at least, that will help me to make a decision on whether this is a good bill or not and which way we should go on this. So I appreciate this opportunity.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Well, good morning, and thank you for the opportunity to speak to this bill. I wanted to start off with one of the things that is most concerning. The AMA has always been voluntary. It's always been a voluntary situation, and this happens with pharmacists as well. There is an association that you join in order to be able to have people be able to represent you, and it is a voluntary situation. When you create an association that no longer makes it voluntary, it's sending a signal to industry that their voices no longer matter. The question – and this was brought up by the Member for Calgary-Hays, too – is that the government is saying, if I have this correct, that 89 per cent of the members mentioned approval of the current AMA-government agreement, which was not mentioned in the proposed law.

The reality is, to repeat, that only 30 per cent of the AMA members voted. How is it that, with a 30 per cent vote, suddenly the government feels that that is enough of a percentage across a group of doctors? As we all know, doctors run their businesses like corporations. They're responsible for their rent. They're responsible for their equipment. They're responsible for running their offices, the staff they hire. They are little businesses. So how is it that that 30 per cent number in any way is representative of the number of doctors that we have in our province, to be able to say that under that auspices suddenly it's okay, that we have an association that is stating that they represent all doctors when actually the opposite is true, that it doesn't represent all the doctors? How does that work?

The thing is that, especially anybody who knows doctors and offices and all that – they require flexibility to be able to run their businesses. They require flexibility into the future so that they understand how it is that they can run their businesses. And if they're under the auspices of one group that is dictating to them the way that they should run their business, I just can't imagine that doctors, given the opportunity to understand what was going on, would agree to have the AMA being the only thing that makes those decisions for them, especially with only 30 per cent buy-in at this point in time.

When you look at a doctor as an independent contractor, we're looking at very complex situations within each of those. Those offices are all thumbprints. They're unique. Those doctors know their patients. They know what's going on in their lives. These are very, very important relationships between the doctors and their patients. And for an association to come in and be able to dictate to them how they should be running their business, I think we have to consider what that would look like and what that would mean for the doctors.

So when you talk about a piece of legislation formalizing a relationship between the government and the Alberta Medical Association that establishes the AMA as the exclusive negotiating body for professional health unions, what does that mean exactly, and how did you get the permission to do that? Madam Speaker, the question that the government needs to answer to the doctors and physicians in this province is: how did they come to the conclusion that this was the right decision, to basically formalize that relationship?

Madam Speaker, we've had many, many issues with consultation over the last few years that we've had the privilege of being here. We can talk about Bill 6. We can talk about a lot of the energy bills that we've talked about a lot in this House. But we're talking about a group of people here in Alberta that are health providers, sometimes the very, very first step that people have to their health care. And then all of a sudden they're being thrown into an association that only 30 per cent of them agreed to.

I don't understand how this government is turning the numbers around to say 89 per cent, that they heard that 89 per cent mentioned approval of the current AMA-government agreement, which did not mention the new proposed law. So if only 30 per cent actually understand what's going on, how is it that we justify a change of this magnitude? Has the government actually consulted, Madam Speaker, enough with the doctors to find out whether or not they want this relationship?

Truth be told, when we were given this legislation and then we reached out to our constituents and our doctors, quite frankly, many of the doctors were looking at this legislation and they didn't know that some of these changes were coming down. How is that possible? In Chestermere-Rocky View I sent out the legislation to all of the doctors in our area, and I have yet to receive back a document from any of our doctors saying that they were consulted on this. Not one. I mean, maybe Chestermere-Rocky View is not important right now to the government, what's going on with that area, but our doctors sure were not consulted on this piece of legislation.

When we talk about rural doctors, this is even a bigger issue, about making sure that we are pulling doctors into rural areas, how important that is and how important that relationship is. There is a huge amount of risk for a doctor coming into a rural area and setting up an office. A huge amount of risk.

So when you put a relationship like this between the government of Alberta, the Alberta Medical Association, and the doctors as a negotiating body without having full buy-in from the very people that you've created this association for, this relationship for – and let's be clear. The government is creating this relationship. This isn't a relationship that was brought forward by the doctors. How is it that you justify creating that relationship when you don't have buy-in from the doctors? Again, I'm looking forward to hearing from my constituents and I'm looking forward to hearing from our doctors to find out how this legislation impacts them. The ones that we have heard from, Madam Speaker, weren't consulted.

Chestermere-Rocky View is an interesting place because the riding hugs the entire outside of Calgary, so a lot of people go to Calgary for services. We do have quite a few medical clinics in Chestermere and wellness centres in Langdon as well. These are really, really, super dedicated people, Madam Speaker, very, very dedicated to their community. As I've mentioned in this House before, my doctor is a personal friend after many, many years of going to him. I'm quite certain that when I have these discussions with him, he will not have been consulted on this. So what does the government say to that, when they claim consultation, when they claim that discussions have happened, yet in their own numbers only 30 per cent of the people that understood this legislation responded.

With the current state of our province it is, of course, important to find cost savings given that with the NDP government we've seen our debt grow like never before. The government keeps talking about cost savings. Is this a centralization? Is this what we're talking about for cost savings? I would actually like to have that answered by the government. What exactly is it that they're trying to accomplish here?

The government is claiming that the legislation will save $98 million in health care costs since the AMA has agreed. What exactly does that mean, Madam Speaker, $98 million? Where and how? Is that impacting our doctors? You're talking about cost savings. I would like some clarification on exactly how that's working when an entire new body is being set up, an entire chunk of bureaucracy is being set up to create a relationship between a group of people that are individual little corporations that take all of the risk on. The government is saying that they've bought into this, yet the numbers don't say that. So $98 million in savings. Okay. Where? How does that work exactly?

Then the other question is: when doctors are compensated, how is that impacting their compensation? We understand that that compensation needs to happen. In a doctor's office, Madam Speaker, like I was saying before, doctors pay for their equipment, they pay for their staff, and they pay for their overhead. I mean, they are running an actual business there and, on top of that, all of the patients that they have coming in, the paperwork, everything that needs to be dealt with. How is this going to impact that compensation to the doctors?

I'm curious, actually, about: if there are concerns, how will they now be negotiating? The government is saying that they're going to be negotiating through the AMA, but if they haven't actually agreed to be part of the AMA, then how do they negotiate? They're being forced to be part of the AMA. Is that correct? They're being forced into this relationship to force negotiation. Am I understanding that correctly? Because if that's the case, I can pretty much guarantee you that most of the doctors will not agree to this. I'd like some clarification on that as well.

Interestingly, the bill entrenches the agreement framework between the AMA and the Ministry of Health. So the government's hands will be tied in future negotiations, and they must follow the framework laid out unless they change those conditions through legislative changes. Am I to understand, Madam Speaker, that those changes can be made in regulation, and if those are changed in regulation, does that mean that the doctors then are able to help with that negotiation? If the government's hands are tied and it's done just through the AMA, then if a negotiation is done, how does the government change the regulations? Do they just change that in the regulations, or do they change that in a legislative space like this where it can be debated on behalf of the doctors of Alberta?

I actually believe that the way that this is set up, if that body is the only negotiating body and the doctors don't have the ability to have a discussion outside of an association and a relationship that's being forced upon them, then this could be very, very difficult for them to negotiate their needs. Already it sounds to me like the government doesn't quite understand the needs of the doctors. How is it that we make sure that that relationship is actually negotiating on behalf of the doctors in a way that's conducive to how they run their businesses, especially if they're running them like corporations? It seems counterintuitive to their ability to be flexible within their jobs and what it is that they're doing.

I would highly recommend that more consultation be done on this. I really, really think that a decision of this magnitude – when you're creating an overarching body that is going to be responsible for a group of people that take care of our health in this province, you're going to want as much buy-in as possible. Otherwise 30 per cent of the people are making the decisions for the rest of that population.

The legislation makes the AMA the exclusive representative of physicians on any compensation matters – any compensation matters – but also gives the AMA the power to represent any group under the regional health authorities if the majority of that group formally expresses that wish. Now I guess the question needs to be: what does a majority mean? How does the government create a situation where the AMA has to find that majority if at this point in time in the legislation they're not willing to make sure that they've consulted enough to have a majority to buy into the legislation in the first place? How does that happen? How is a majority created? How do they make sure that that majority is there to make sure that they're representing the doctors that they're supposed to?

It says here, and I don't know how you clarify: if the majority of that group formally expresses that wish. How is that negotiated? How do you figure that out? What is that process, Madam Speaker? I think we need some clarification on that as well. What are the doctors saying about that? If you're consulting with people, if anybody on the government side has spoken to any of their doctors, I'd sure like their anecdotal information of what their doctors said about that. How is that majority expressed, and how are they going about doing that if the AMA has the power to represent any group? Then are we pitting groups against each other in terms of negotiations through an association and a relationship that's being forced on them by the government?

Physicians with a pre-existing individual contract may opt out of the AMA. However, they cannot be represented by another body or themselves. Once their contract expires, they must accept the agreement negotiated by the AMA. Madam Speaker, that is the most telling piece of this legislation. Let me read that again. Physicians with a pre-existing individual contract may opt out of the AMA.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to thank the member for her comments on this piece of legislation. When she was speaking she was talking about a lack of consultation that seems to have occurred with this bill. As we know, the physicians that were members of the AMA did indeed have a vote, an 89 per cent vote, almost 90 per cent, but of that only about 30 per cent of the physicians in the province that are part of the AMA actually took part in that vote.

It was a little bit surprising to me that when I did consult with some of the physicians in my constituency, they had to think about what we were talking about when I brought up Bill 24. It was not something that came readily to their mind. In fact, in one case one of the physicians actually had to go and look it up and read through it and try to figure out what the bill was all about. It wasn't top of mind. I guess that does bring the question: why didn't the government consult with physicians? While there are several things I'd maybe like to ask the hon. member to talk a little bit about, one of them is going to be this whole issue of consultation, if she could expand on that from her constituency's point of view.

Secondly, the cost savings. You brought up the cost savings of $98 million, supposedly, yet when you're changing a relationship, one that has worked historically very well in the province, the question I've got is: what are going to be some of the circumstances that change, and what does that mean for the long term when it comes to negotiating? I'd love to hear a little more about what she has heard from her constituents and from her physicians about some of the ramifications for whether this is actually going to place the government in a tighter position and at a time when we know we're going to be having and have had large deficits, have created a large debt, and where governments are going to have to be very, very careful with how they spend their money in the future.

Thirdly, both the hon. member and myself come from rural constituencies, and I'm wondering if she's heard anything from her physicians about whether this bill will disproportionately affect rural communities. We know that all doctors will now fall under this new negotiating model, with the AMA being the sole representative of physicians, so I'm wondering if the hon. member has any capacity to shed some light on whether this will negatively impact the capacity for rural physicians to be attracted to rural areas or for us to be able to attract physicians to rural areas. I'm not sure that there isn't a single rural area in this province that doesn't have problems finding physicians. We've got some amazing doctors in our rural areas, and we've got some amazing groups of citizens that work hard to try to attract doctors to a rural setting. I would definitely be interested in hearing if there are any issues in her constituency that are related to whether they think this will be an issue to attract. It's already a difficult situation, and we don't need to make and have any unintended consequences.

Lastly, you know, there's a series of questions that have gone through my mind, and I'm wondering if they've gone through the hon. member's mind, as to whether or not the government plans on compensating physicians for everything, including vacations, the whole package.

These are some of the things. You know, as we're debating in the House, as we're talking through this bill, we need to be listening to what each side of the House is saying and what our constituents are saying at a local level. That brings to everyone, to all 87 of us, that capacity to be able to listen and to consider and to really make sure that this law that we're going to be passing actually is beneficial to the citizens of this province. You know, we're talking about health care here.

I would be interested if the hon. member – I'll try to leave her at least a couple of minutes here – could speak to one of those issues. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, you have five seconds if you wish to respond.

Mrs. Aheer: Five seconds? I'll say hi. Good morning.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak on Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights. Bill 24 amends the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act as well as the Regional Health Authorities Act. The Alberta Medical Association, or AMA, will be established as a negotiating body not only for physicians but for all professional health occupations. The AMA will be the only representative on compensation matter for physicians, as was mentioned earlier. Bill 24 will also give authority to the AMA to negotiate on behalf of any group under the Regional Health Authorities as long as the majority of the members of the group wish to be represented.

Madam Speaker, Bill 24 is a significant piece of legislation. If this bill passes, all health professional unions could potentially be represented by the AMA. This will create an overarching union that will leverage all unions representing smaller professionals that will have to work under the AMA and will be bound by the AMA's agreements. Individual professional medical associations can of course opt out of being represented by the AMA; however, they are still bound by the decisions of the AMA. This appears to be because the government will only negotiate with the AMA in collective bargaining. This is a problem because one union may not be able to work for the benefit of all professionals under its jurisdiction.

I have concerns that agreements could end up affecting certain medical professions negatively and that these professionals are then stuck with an agreement negotiated by the AMA. An example, Madam Speaker. Jerry Dias, the president of Unifor, who represents 13,000 media employees, last week declared: we will stop Conservatives in the next election. That's just a great example of union abuse. Here you have a large union going into partisan attacks rather than representing their membership, which is what a union is supposed to actually do.

Madam Speaker, another point I can bring up regarding this legislation is that Alberta Health Services is not required to recognize the AMA as the exclusive representative for certain groups. These groups include managerial services, services provided by resident or fellows acting in that capacity, and other services or classes of services prescribed by the regulations. The question arises: did the government properly consult with these stakeholders? Speaking of stakeholders, how do we know that this government went through the proper consultations with stakeholders? We can see and it was discussed here earlier today that 89 per cent of doctors that voted did favour this agreement that ultimately led to this legislation. However, only 30 per cent of physicians actually voted. What happened to the other 70 per cent, the majority of doctors?

I understand that some may not have been interested in voting. Since all of us in this House are here because of elections, we understand that it is difficult to get a large voter turnout. However, when only 30 per cent of those eligible to vote actually cast their ballot, we have to ask the question of whether proper consultation actually occurred for this legislation. Again, Madam Speaker, as was mentioned earlier, this is the same government that created Bill 6, which will, I think, go down in history as this horrible legislation that happened in the last three and a half years from this government not actually consulting with farmers and farm groups.

On the same note, Madam Speaker, some of my colleagues here on the opposition side of this Assembly did reach out to many physicians in this province. Some of these physicians were part of that 30 per cent who did actually vote. However, some of the 30 per cent that actually voted were AMA members and have said that they only voted on an amended agreement and were not actually aware that this bill was even coming. I believe that this fact is cause for concern, and members of this Assembly should be seeking further clarity around this issue.

Other physicians have told us that they don't want to be represented by the Alberta Medical Association. This may be a minority of doctors, but it is still important to take into account their views. These physicians would rather negotiate with AMA or on their own. Bill 24, however, does not give them the freedom to do so anymore.

Madam Speaker, let me raise an additional issue with Bill 24. In other pieces of legislation governing health care such as the medicare act or the Canada Health Act, physicians have been seen as independent contractors. This does not appear to be the case for Bill 24. Previously membership in the AMA has always been voluntary. Doctors could choose whether or not they wanted to be represented by AMA. If this bill passes, physicians who may not be members would be represented in negotiations by AMA regardless. Bill 24, again, through the NDP's socialist dogma, believes that doctors should not have the freedom to choose the representation of their choice, that they're actually forced by a government, against their will, to choose AMA.

Now, Madam Speaker, another question is: does Bill 24 offer enough flexibility for doctors and other health professionals? The bill as currently written seems to offer more of a top-down approach to union negotiations. Does having a top-down model like this serve the best interests of Alberta doctors? Some physicians may prefer a bottom-up approach or a grassroots membership approach versus top-down union bosses, and I have concern that this bill does not allow for this. Unfortunately, Madam Speaker, Bill 24 creates, in essence, a one-size-fits-all union. Other health professionals outside of physicians may have more difficulty negotiating for issues that are important to their members if they are represented by the AMA. Furthermore, as I previously mentioned, Bill 24 seems to give less power to doctors that don't want to be represented by AMA.

Madam Speaker, something else I would like to bring up is that Bill 24 seems to have little to nothing about patient care. I'm concerned that this legislation will tie the hands of government on how health care money is spent. We need as much money as possible going forward towards front-line services.

This government, since being elected three and a half years ago, has shown again and again that they are terrible managers of the hard-earned tax dollars of taxpayers here in Alberta. We can see that this government will have an estimated deficit of over $9 billion this year. If this trend continues, our debt will balloon to $96 billion by 2024. We can also add to this fact that the government is depending on pipelines to balance its budget, pipelines that for years they were actually protesting. However, the government has failed to get Albertans here any critical energy infrastructure projects built, and unfortunately this means that any form of balancing the budget by the NDP just remains a fantasy.

Madam Speaker, I am concerned that Bill 24 also allows for too much money to be tied up, which will affect patient care. In a perfect world the government would be able to allocate money directly to ensure that patient care is at the forefront of how our tax dollars actually are spent. The reality is that most Albertans want to see the money they spend on our health care system directed to the front lines. They want to see their doctors allocated efficiently to allow limited waste in our health care system, because the unfortunate reality is that we have plenty of bureaucratic waste in Alberta's health care system. Does Bill 24 do anything to address that major issue, major budget issue, here in Alberta? I don't believe it does. It may be beyond the scope of this particular bill, however, but it is something that this government should address. On Bill 24, however, I do have a concern with how this ties the hands of government and potential future governments.

Now, the focus of this government should be on patient care and ensuring that Albertans have a health care system that is accessible and available to them. This is a time when wait times for knee, hip, and cataract surgeries are at an all-time high. This should be the focus of this government. When I talk to my constituents – and I'm sure most other members in this Assembly would agree with this – one of the most frequent topics raised in our constituency offices is health care. This can range from access to a family doctor to wait times for major surgeries to seniors' care. The reality is, though, that not many Albertans, when asked about their concerns around the health care system in Alberta, mention the AMA negotiations. Don't get me wrong, Madam Speaker. This issue that Bill 24 seeks to address is very important – these issues are very important – but we need to take the time to give it the proper consideration and acknowledgement. The fact is that doctors are a very important part of the health care system, and their concerns need to actually be taken into account.

However, there are many big issues in the health care system that Albertans are looking for us as legislators to address. For example, Madam Speaker, I look at the emergency wait times on the Alberta

Health Services website. I looked at it last night. At the Red Deer regional hospital, my regional hospital in central Alberta, which is used by many of my constituents in Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, the wait time for the emergency department was over three hours. Again, the Red Deer regional hospital has a terrible track record that's been ignored by this Minister of Health and this NDP government. The problem of wait times gets even worse when you go to Edmonton. The wait time at the University of Alberta emergency department was shy of just six hours here in the capital. [interjection] Now, Madam Speaker, Albertans find this unacceptable, as does the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, but as the MLA representing my constituents, I find this also unacceptable. Does this government see this as unacceptable service to Albertans? This is where the priority should be for government, finding ways to serve Albertans better in the health care system.

Now, regarding the bill before this Assembly, Bill 24, I believe that there are too many questions left unanswered, questions such as: was proper consultation done with the doctors? Does Bill 24 allow for enough flexibility for all health professionals? What are the budgetary implications of passing this bill down the road?

Madam Speaker, a referral amendment was introduced by my colleague from Airdrie where we could look at this bill in depth in the Standing Committee on Families and Communities. Here we could have ensured that proper consultation was conducted, and we would have had the opportunity to hear directly from those affected by this legislation. Albertans would have then also had the opportunity to see publicly the information used to develop this legislation. Unfortunately, the NDP government voted against this amendment, and we are forced to again just trust them, that they got this right. Well, unfortunately, we have not previously seen that we can trust this government to actually get legislation done right. They have lost their trust with Albertans after the Bill 6 fiasco, increasing red tape, and bringing the job-killing carbon tax, that they didn't even campaign on. Why should Albertans trust this government with this piece of legislation when we have seen how badly it has turned out for them in the past?

Now, Madam Speaker, there are too many questions in this legislation for me to support this bill at this time. Maybe if we had the opportunity to study this bill at committee, it would have made me less adversarial to it. Maybe if I could see the consultation that this government actually did, I would think better of this bill. Maybe if I could see all the implications of this bill, I would be more in favour, but at this time I cannot support this bill. My colleagues on this side of the House may decide to propose some amendments to this bill, and I hope that this government does take those improvements into account, as they did in the second week that we came back to this House, when they actually accepted an opposition amendment. However, as this bill is currently written, I will be joining my colleagues in opposition to this bill.

Thank you again, Madam Speaker. With that, I would like to adjourn debate. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta

[Debate adjourned November 6]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-MacLeod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and good morning, everyone. It is my understanding that I still have approximately seven minutes left in this portion. I would like to start with what I concluded with last week. Basically, I said that with the complexity of this bill and the importance of the changes to all municipalities, candidates, and Albertans, we expect to deal with this bill very thoroughly as we proceed through the process and especially in Committee of the Whole. We have got a fair number of concerns with this bill.

You know, it's interesting that it appears to us from what we read here and what we've heard that they seem to be limiting the amount an individual can use to campaign with. As we know, municipal elections are nonpartisan, and often the candidate's name recognition is the only key to their success. Nonincumbents often start campaigning well before an election date, sometimes years in advance. By hindering how much an individual can campaign, these changes are likely, in my belief, to further entrench incumbents, who are already having a significant advantage in any election. Further, a spending limit of $2,000 outside of a campaign period might be possible in small municipalities, but in mid-sized and large municipalities $2,000 does not go very far.

All of the additional disclosure requirements being placed on candidates as well could either dissuade people from participating in the democratic process or result in accidental violations, we feel. Many municipal candidates are doing everything by themselves. Do we really want to discourage rookies from running for office, Madam Speaker? Why does the government insist in this bill on requiring expense reporting by category? I'm concerned that this is needlessly burdensome. As we all know, municipal politics is often where people first get involved because of the nonpartisan nature. I'm concerned that these changes are onerous and will intimidate potential candidates. This seems like the reverse of where we need to go. This is not the direction that we anticipated to see in this bill. It seems to assume that one size fits all when maybe different rules should be applied to various sizes or categories that better reflect the nature of the municipal campaigns in different size municipalities.

We do support banning union and corporate donations, as we said earlier. Getting big money out of all levels of politics, we feel, is probably a good thing. Under the old rules, unions and corporations had the same donation limits – and this was fair – but we're very concerned that this bill removes donation limits and pushes it over to PACs. We're worried about the amount of influence that may go from the local municipal elections into PACS and therefore become somewhat uncontrollable.

The bill requires also that candidates disclose the names and addresses of everyone who donates more than $50. We wonder: why the difference between that and the provincial election rules, which set a limit of $250? We already use that in our provincial schemes. Everybody is used to that. Why set up another confusing rule that doesn't make sense?

Many details, of course, once again are being left to regulation, and none of that is ever debated in this Chamber. The minister again, with that, without having it in this bill, seems to want us to trust him. How can he expect that when the things he said on this bill are not actually in it? In this case I'm referring to the vouching of voters. It does say in there that a person can vouch for someone, but it doesn't seem to say anything about limiting that. We don't understand why that would be missing and why that would be left to regulation. Why not just put it in the bill?

I'm not sure of my time left, Madam Speaker, but at this time, if I could, I would just like to conclude that, again as I said earlier, this is a complex bill. It has a lot of important new rules, donation limits, all kinds of different things that are new for municipalities. In the old days I know that, as a guy in a small municipal world, there weren't a lot of rules, and certainly perhaps something needed to be done there. On the other hand, it seems to us that for some of the small municipalities, having to do as much paperwork on this, having limits throughout their campaign period that they never had before in accepting donations, and being limited in how long they can campaign seem to be quite a stretch for the ordinary municipal world.

With that, I would like to conclude that we look forward to Committee of the Whole, where we'll be bringing forward several amounts of amendments and trying to make this bill the right thing for Alberta. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's actually great to hear from my hon. colleague from Livingstone-Macleod, particularly on this issue, given that he has extensive experience with municipal elections in his area. I know that, you know, my colleagues and myself certainly look up to him and the experience that he brings to the table. My hon. colleague from Calgary-Hays also has extensive experience in the municipal realm.

I was wondering if my colleague from Livingstone-Macleod might be able to describe to us in this Assembly what particularly the retroactive piece of this legislation might mean to candidates that are currently fundraising for their 2021 campaigns. We know that, particularly in the big cities, let's say Calgary and Edmonton, you know, these aren't campaigns that come out of the blue and out of nowhere and can't just happen on fundraising activities that start to happen just the year of the election. Madam Speaker, we know that these are probably activities that are happening now. Given the experience of my colleague in municipal elections and that retroactive piece of legislation, for those that might already be fundraising for their 2021 campaigns, perhaps he could explain to me some of the challenges, particularly around that clause in this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and thanks for raising that question, hon. Member for Airdrie. You know, it's interesting. At the conclusion of a lot of these bills, they bring in when the bill will be coming into effect, and in that regard I can read to you in some detail here. Where we're talking about these contribution limits and these new contribution rules, donations, et cetera, et cetera, they actually come into force at the first reading of this bill if this bill passes. We've already had first reading several weeks ago. Many of these municipalities and these councillors that may be considering to run or are running already have already incurred some costs. They've been working on a four-year campaign period. That started the day after they were elected a year and a half ago. In any regard this bill is going to have some dramatic impact on some of those people. Suddenly this will change their situations drastically, and they'll have to make some adjustments to their legal work and all of their registration work, et cetera, et cetera, and the reporting is going to be an interesting requirement with that kind of a change.

Thanks for the question. I hope that answer kind of addressed it somewhat, but it is a very complex situation. It's hard to go about that in the next few minutes here without changing and looking at the bill in a little more detail.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm really grateful for the previous opportunity to ask my colleague about that particular retroactivity clause in this Bill 23. Actually, I think there's a case to be made that that sparked maybe a few more questions. Are there penalties, in particular, to a candidate that's already started fundraising? Does he or she just simply give that money back? That's actually a big piece, and I know that many hopeful candidates out there would certainly appreciate the answer to that as these candidates and their campaigns don't want to be incurring fines.

You know, we also know that under this legislation the Election Commissioner has the authority to conduct investigations, Madam Speaker. My understanding is that currently the Election Commissioner office operates under a complaints-based process, and he's currently got a number of complaints under investigation in his office right now. I look forward, actually, to the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, where we're able to get a better picture of the workload that's happening in that office right now. I mean, I still firmly believe it's a duplication of services from the chief electoral office to the Election Commissioner office, so he's maybe got lots of time. Who knows? But there are lots of questions that need to be answered around that particular piece.

As you know, Bill 23 – I have it right here – is probably the largest piece of legislation in this particular fall sitting. It encompasses so many things. There are sweeping changes here. I find it interesting, Madam Speaker, that the NDP are generally so concerned about dark money that's floating around here when, in fact, because of their legislation, we are in a situation where there is lots of dark money floating around, and they continually put forward pieces of legislation that create more dark spaces, which is exactly what is happening here. This will create and involve PACs, political action committees, in the municipal realm, which is interesting, and unions as well although I don't think that they were ever not involved in municipal elections. It's interesting – and I think it should be particularly pointed out – that the NDP are continually creating spaces where dark money exists. So I would ask the question: who is actually concerned about election financing and transparency? The record shows that that's not the case with this NDP government.

There are a lot of questions that I have around this bill, Madam Speaker. There are some transparency pieces in here. Corporate and union donations, of course, are taken out of direct contributions to a candidate, and there are similar rules to the provincial side, which we've been operating under for the last number of years, in terms of personal donations up to $4,000. I think it's going to be challenging for some candidates, but I think it's good. I think that that change is a good move.

Madam Speaker, there is nothing that I can see – and, of course, I'm okay to be proven wrong in this. In particular, women and minorities, we know, are underrepresented in municipal politics, and this would have been a great opportunity to maybe address some of those issues and create opportunities, even a conversation around this. I don't think I've heard anybody actually talk about that. We have a number of groups out there: Equal Voice, those types of groups. Of course, the United Conservative Party is very excited to have Rona Ambrose, the former interim leader of the Conservative Party of Canada, and Laureen Harper, our former Prime Minister's wife, leading the She Leads campaign, which is assisting and promoting and championing women in leadership roles in politics in particular. We're real excited to see that. But it would have been interesting, in An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta, to have a piece of that represented in this bill, particularly because this government did create a ministry for the status of women, and we haven't heard anything in particular on that. I'm sure that's coming in this debate.

As you can see, I just have a number of, you know, sort of top-level questions right now and really need to delve into this piece of legislation.

With that, I would like to move an amendment. I will wait, Madam Speaker, until you give me the go-ahead.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 23, An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta, be amended by deleting all of the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 23, An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

Madam Speaker, for some of the reasons that I've already highlighted prior to moving this amendment, I think that it's imperative that this be a piece of legislation that we get right, that we get right for our democratic institutions at the municipal level. There are a number of challenges with the provincial elections financing act, of course, with the unintended consequences of creating PACs in this province, and we know now, because of that, that that is what is going to happen in our municipal realms as well. That would be something that we should discuss, and maybe there are some loopholes that could be closed up or maybe a different way to do this right.

Bring in some experts. You know, I'm very fortunate to have two colleagues on my team with extensive municipal political backgrounds. Sorry; three. My colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills was also an elected . . . [interjections] There are more than three. Sorry. I shouldn't give a definitive number. There's a ton of expertise in my own caucus and – you know what? – in my own community, Madam Speaker.

There are two levels of municipal government in the constituency of Airdrie. The city of Airdrie has a mayor and six councillors. The county of Rocky View works in a different way, of course, but will be subject to these election financing rules. Anyway, a current elections expert who just recently went through an election campaign and probably has some money left over from that realm would be very curious as to what we're going to be doing with this particular piece of legislation. Really, more so, I know they're all going to follow the rules, but they need to know what those rules are. I think that they would appreciate the opportunity to give feedback. There are a number of bank accounts out there with money in them, and I know these guys and gals don't want to be incurring any fines or have an unnecessary headline in a negative way in any way, shape, or form. They're doing important work in our counties and municipalities, and we need to ensure that we're doing what we can to support them. This needs to be a collaborative effort of consultation.

I do know that the city of Airdrie, which I represent at the provincial level, hasn't been asked about this piece of legislation by this government, so that right there tells me why it's so important for this to be discussed in the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, Madam Speaker, which is the appropriate committee to have these conversations.

I think it's important that Albertans have a say in this legislation because it's not just the elected officials; it's Albertans, right? The legislation which we pass in this House is for Albertans. We always need to remember that. A committee process is an important piece, and this will show the public just how transparent and open and accountable this government is. Certainly, the Official Opposition will play a part, as will other members of this Assembly, and we appreciate the opportunity because as legislators that's what we're here to do, to make sure that we are approving and putting forward important legislation in the Alberta Assembly.

Madam Speaker, with that, I urge all members of this Assembly to vote yes on my amendment. I look forward to the fulsome debate and, hopefully, exploration in the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Talking about democracy in elections is very, very serious. It is probably one of the most important things that we can debate in this Legislative Assembly. We're all here because we really believe in elections. We believe in the right of people to have a fair way of exercising their vote and their interest.

Madam Speaker, Albertans have been very clear that they want to get money out of local elections. This was a consultation that happened over the last couple of years. As we all know, the Assembly passed a law around the provincial election, and the minister made it clear that we were also looking at changing the laws for municipal and school board elections. We want to make sure on this side of the House that Albertans have a fairer and more transparent election process.

Last month we all watched the U.S. election and its result. We listened to media reports of how challenging it was for some prospective voters to be registered and the amount of alleged voter suppression that happens and how corporations influence the elections in the U.S. and the way that elected officials have the power to gerrymander polling stations and so on. As someone who's been an international election observer and worked in other countries on the democratic governance – actually, I just came back from Haiti, where I spent a week looking at their democratic processes or the lack of it. I worked for elections at all three levels of government, and I ran for municipal, school board, and of course as an MLA.

I have been appalled at what I've seen of the U.S.-style election. It actually really pains me to think of anyone in Alberta not seeing how U.S. elections are not a good example for the rest of the world. It pains me to see how challenging it is for elected officials and how hard it is in the U.S. to reform the election system. It also pains me to think that Albertans have gone over to the U.S. and supported the election process of the current President.

Anyway, for example, it appears to me that in the U.S. campaign signs are allowed near polling stations. The best thing that I found about the night of the U.S. election was to find out that in the U.S. people started to understand the importance of voting and to have fair and transparent processes, so I'm really hoping that the new elected representatives, governors, and Senators have the guts to reform the system and implement the kinds of changes our government has made. The reason I wanted to talk about the U.S. election is because, fortunately, here in Canada our election systems have been a lot more transparent than there, but also it's because we the people have had the ability to change our systems.

This is why with this bill, An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta, the government is taking important steps to ensure that municipal elections for councillors and school trustees as well as irrigation districts and Métis settlements are seen as important, fair, and transparent elections the same way that we have made the changes at the provincial level. I'm actually quite proud of how proactive the government has been in changing provincial election laws and now how we are looking at making municipal elections as transparent and to take the influence of corporations and unions out of the elections. I mean, I'm appalled every day when I hear of the influence of the NRA in the U.S. elections.

When I was professionally active in public policy at the municipal level, I used to do this after every election. I used to print out – and it was available on all the municipal sites – the financial declaration of each elected municipal councillor and school trustee. In the jurisdiction that I was a school trustee, like councillors, I was obliged to file a return. These filed financial returns are a really good indication of who hoped to influence or who supported prospective candidates.

An example from the municipality that I'm currently an MLA for might really, I think, bring the issue of why it's important not to have corporation and union donations to municipal and school trustees. An example from the last election: one of the candidates for mayor collected $88,000, mostly from real estate corporations and individuals affiliated with these real estate corporations. When I calculated it, it was more than $1 per eligible voter in the municipality. Another candidate for mayor got $65,000 from similar sources. The actual winner of the election spent $33,000.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs moved towards introducing this bill after lengthy consultations with municipalities and school boards. I want to emphasize that because it seems to be something which the members of the opposition have not noticed. If you'll remember, after the provincial bill was introduced, there were a lot of discussions on the need to have a similar bill for municipalities. At that time it was so close to the municipal election that it was decided to continue consulting with municipalities and school boards and then to introduce the bill after the election. I would add at this point that it's very different from their best friend, Doug Ford in Ontario, who did not consult with municipalities and introduced a bill without consultation that definitely changed things in Toronto and not very nicely either.

We chose to really consult with municipalities and school boards, and we also chose to consult with individuals. If you had bothered to look at the numbers in surveys or if you had bothered to find out the feedback that individual Albertans gave to the minister, you would know that there was a lot of interest in seeing this bill brought forward. What is really heartening to me is that Albertans really did care that we needed to change the system for municipal and school board elections to make them fairer, more transparent, and to ensure that big money such as real estate corporations did not influence elections.

There's about 340 municipalities and more than 60 school authorities in Alberta. I could not find a participation rate for the last municipal election, so as an example I'm going to give you the one for Strathcona county. In the last election, in 2017, in Strathcona county only 39.10 per cent of the voters bothered to turn out for the municipal election. In 2013 it was 37.3, in 2010 it was 36.6, in 2007 it was 33.3, in 2004 it was 34 per cent, and in 2001 it was 39 per cent. In 1998 the only time that 50 per cent of the eligible voters in my community bothered to vote was because there was a referendum for a new recreation centre, and it was about the VLTs. Unfortunately, it's impossible to find out what is the percentage of voters who bothered or who elected their democratic right to vote in school board elections because of the way that we really hold separate elections for Catholic, public, and francophone school boards.

As an MLA and as an Albertan I'm very concerned about the lack of voter involvement in municipal and school board elections. As a former school trustee I think that this is one of the most important things that we should be doing as Albertans, to support our school boards and to vote for great education systems at the local level. Our school trustees are really important, and we should be voting for school trustees. When I realize that only 40 per cent of the constituents in my constituency really understood the importance of voting for the municipal councillors and the mayor, I really think that as a province we really need to do something to make sure that there is a greater involvement of residents in municipal elections.

So how does this bill really help with voting accessibility, accountability, and transparency? I want to reinforce it for the opposition, who may not really have read what this bill does. First of all, we've talked a lot about campaign finance contribution and disclosure. This bill would strengthen the rules around donations. It would ban corporation and union donations. It would limit contributions to $1,000, which is the same as in the provincial election. It would give regulations around setting campaign spending limits. It would also make sure that fundraising events are subject to contribution limits and disclosure requirements. It would make sure that candidates are nominated before incurring campaign expenses or accepting contributions. And then especially – I think it's really important – it would make sure that campaign finance and contribution disclosure requirements also apply to school board elections. It would also reduce the campaign period from four years to one year, which I think is a really good way of making sure there's a playing field for every single person who seeks to become a municipal councillor, mayor, or school trustee.

It also would really – and I think this is really an important thing that maybe the opposition may not have paid attention to. It would really increase voter accessibility. I just pointed out the fact that in most municipalities less than 50 per cent of voters bothered to turn out for the election. This bill would make sure that there would be mandatory advance votes for municipalities and school divisions with greater than 5,000 population, so if you can't vote on election day, then there are going to be alternate ways for you to vote. It would also, like we did with provincial, remove the six months' Alberta resident requirement, and it would extend vouching provisions.

The Member for Airdrie talked about access for women and minorities. You see, I'm really concerned about these issues of accessibility and ability of voters to exercise their democratic right, so I think this bill is going to encourage and remove barriers for people who may be living in poverty, who may not have access to transportation on election day, because they can do advance polling. It's going to encourage municipalities to have more mobile polls. So maybe not only will we see a greater percentage of Albertans exercise their voting right, but we might see more people who have disabilities, who live in poverty, who come from minority groups have the ability to exercise their vote.

The part that I think is really important – that's why I started this speech with a discussion of what happens in the U.S. This bill is going to create greater accountability and transparency by aligning and restricting third-party advertisers and restricting campaign activities at polling stations to unduly influence voters. I want to talk about that, because as the municipal clerk in one election here I have seen, with the lack of clear guidelines, scrutineers for a particular mayoral candidate influence voters at the polling station. When I reported that to the clerk in charge at the polling station, she said: well, there's no mechanism to deal with this issue. I'm really glad that this act will empower the Alberta Election Commissioner to enforce rules, and this will ensure that violations in municipal elections are properly investigated.

If there's one thing that this act does that is going to really make a difference around the ability of voters to know that their vote counts and is democratic and properly transparent, it's the fact that they know that if there is an infraction in the rules, if there are campaign signs near the polling station, if people talk to voters that shouldn't be talking to voters in the polling station, there's going to be a way for those issues to be investigated and dealt with.

I want to reassure the member of the opposition that if he read the bill correctly, he would find out that the minister very much understands that you have big municipalities like Edmonton and you have small municipalities like Tilley, which may have 300 people, so he's already building within the bill some discussion of municipal size.

I also want to . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Yeah. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. The member has a really strong background in this field, and it sounds like she has a little bit more to share with us, so I just wondered if she might like to elaborate on some of the things that she was speaking about in her speech there.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you. Yes, I really do. I've talked about enforcement. What I wanted to make a comment about is the Member for Airdrie, who felt that the bill should do something about the number of women involved in municipal elections. Now, we all share a concern around the lack of women, and actually I share a concern over the lack of women in the opposition ranks. But – you know what? – the best thing we can do about engaging people in municipal elections is to make sure we have a fair and transparent system and that we limit corporate donations because that is what's going to make women participate in the system.

I wanted to talk a little bit about, really, the importance of voting for school trustee. I want to do that not only because I'm the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Education, but I want to really think of why it's important that we engage in the democratic governance in school trustees. It is not just because if you have children in the school system, you should be involved. It's because what happens at the schools, at the school board is important for all Albertans. It is important that we support what our children learn. It's really important that we understand that the education system is one of the tools that we use around economic wealth and economic outcomes of our province. So I would like to take this moment by encouraging everyone to always vote for their school trustee.

I want to address the issue, Madam Speaker, of the referral. I'm really sorry, members of the opposition, but I think you need to realize that this bill has been actively consulted with school boards, with municipalities, with Albertans, that it comes out of a deep desire of Albertans to take corporation money out of the school system, and that the bill is the result of careful consideration of everything, that the government has been listening to Albertans. So I'm really sorry, Member for Airdrie, but there is no way that I could vote for an amendment to refer this bill.

I think it's important that we pass this bill in a timely manner to prepare everyone for holding the elections in three years. I really appreciated how the Minister of Municipal Affairs did not present this bill last year because we were in a municipal election, unlike the friend of the opposition Mr. Doug Ford. So I think the consultation has happened. Everybody wants to see this bill passed. Candidates want to know how to prepare for the next election, and this bill is going to allow municipal elections, school trustee elections, Métis settlement and irrigation elections to be done in the most open, transparent way that we have ever seen in this province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Excellent comments from the member. If you're concerned about corporate and other major donations, why does this bill not exclude corporate and union donations to the PACs, from even out of the province? I mean, people from around the world could be contributing to these PACs.

The Deputy Speaker: Sherwood Park, do you wish to respond?

Under 29(2)(a) any further questions or comments? Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Dreesen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The member opposite mentioned my international election experience. I believe it was a reference towards me. Actually, I'm very proud of my two international election observer missions that I did in Ukraine, with the presidential election that eventually saw President Poroshenko get elected and the parliamentary election. There were two different years I went over to Ukraine, into central and eastern Ukraine, and the member talked about her experience in Haiti. I was just wondering what influences from her experience in Haiti are actually found in Bill 23.

The Deputy Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Speaker. One of the nice things about being in the front row is that it's a little easier to catch your eye. This is ideal. You could continue to move along the front row and perhaps over to the other side.

I will talk about this bill and the proposed amendment. I have some sympathy for where the Member for Airdrie is coming from in proposing this amendment because I'm left with a lot of questions about Bill 23. I will acknowledge that the government certainly has done some extensive consultation. I've talked with a number of municipal councillors from Calgary but also from smaller communities, and I don't want to suggest that there's any sort of consensus either in opposition to the bill or, frankly, in support of the bill. There are a lot of questions that I think could benefit from a review by the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, as the member has proposed.

You know, I have to say that the question of electoral finance reform and elections generally is the second-most commonly legislated topic by this government since they came into power three and a half years ago. This is the seventh bill that they have presented before this House that has to do with elections or election financing. Just the sheer volume of changes that they have brought forward, I think, gives us pause and questions as to why that is and what exactly they are trying to achieve through these changes. I've got to say that it seems that every time that one of these election finance bills comes up, there are unintended consequences.

The Member for Calgary-Mountain View raised the question of PACs. One of the challenges in regulating PACs, if I can be so bold as to try to answer your question, Member – it's not a challenge. It's a tremendous benefit of the society in which we live. It is a free and democratic society. We have freedom of association. We have freedom of speech. Given that, it's very, very difficult and, frankly, dangerous for government to constrain that ability for any individual or group of people or corporation from participating in the democratic process, from putting together a group of people who share a certain view and want to propose a certain opinion. The courts have been very clear and very narrowly interpreted what governments are able to do in restricting the ability of individuals, of corporations, of unions from getting together, putting together an organization, and speaking publicly about whatever that organization's views are. I think we have to be very careful if we want to go down a path of restricting freedom of speech.

How then do we ensure that there is not undue influence on the political process, on the municipal election process and the provincial process, from these organizations? I think the answer is to make sure that we don't accidentally, if I'm being generous, or perhaps deliberately stack the deck in favour of a certain way of operating that might benefit a certain viewpoint or might benefit a certain government provincially. I think that's what the NDP was trying to do when they originally eliminated corporate and union donations and dramatically reduced the individual contribution levels and also put all sorts of constraints on the provincial political process, and these constraints, which look like they're now under Bill 23, are going to be applied to municipal campaign processes.

All of this is creating the shadow organizations, because people will always have an opinion. They will always have a view and want to express that opinion. They can either do it through an open process, through the democratic electoral process, through, in the provincial case, political parties or through, in the municipal case, individual candidates that represent those views, and do so transparently so we know where it's coming from, or they're going to create shadow organizations because they have been forbidden from participating in the open process. That's why we see the rise of PACs.

Now I think we need, clearly, some controls and some constraints. I think that as time moves on, it's going to be increasingly difficult actually even to implement the constraints that exist now. I think that, based on my reading of some of the court rulings, it's very difficult to actually hold these organizations from spending whatever they want, even right up to election day. That's a problem. When you're constraining it too much, you create these shadow organizations. That's certainly one big, big, big concern that I have with the particular changes that we see in Bill 23.

Some of the other concerns that have been mentioned, which I share, are that the changes that have been made to municipal campaign processes create barriers for nonincumbent people to try to challenge a sitting councillor or trustee. I actually struggle with this one, again a reason why I think that perhaps we should send this to committee so we can actually do some deeper analysis on how this will play out in real life.

On one hand, you would think, you know, that if no one can raise money until January 1 before an election, that's an advantage to those who are incumbents because if you're an incumbent, from the day after the election for the next four years, if you're fund raising every month, every day, then very likely you're going to generate a big war chest, and it's going to be very difficult for anyone who's not the incumbent to overcome that. The flip side is: what are the chances on January 1 of election year, based on all the groundwork that's been laid by that incumbent, that an avalanche of money comes in in the first 10 days of January in support of the re-election of that particular councillor or trustee? Now, these are issues that are probably more acute in the large urban areas, probably not entirely an issue outside. Probably this is an issue of a little more acuity in the big cities, but I think it applies broadly.

Again, another question that I haven't had an adequate answer to from the government side is: how does that break down between smaller rural centres, between counties, and between the large municipalities? I haven't seen that. Again, another reason, I think, for us to have this run through a committee. How do municipalities monitor who has donated and to whom and when? I understand that there is some kind of provincial system.

But when talking about barriers, in addition to just the simple fundraising barrier, one of the things I found most offensive, frankly, in the changes that were made on the provincial front was that when any Albertan simply utters the words, "I think I'd like to seek a nomination; I think I'd like to participate in democracy," you have to put your name on a government list. The government needs to make sure that you've identified yourself as someone who dare take advantage or action, who dare participate in democracy. That in itself I have real trouble with.

It also creates barriers for people who may not know the complexities of Elections Alberta rules, the complexities of whatever process will be put in place on the municipal side. While on the provincial side we have political parties that have some weight and some administrative ability to help nomination candidates and to help nominated candidates ensure that they're complying with the rules, very often, in fact, in the vast majority of cases that doesn't exist on the municipal side. So now we're creating these barriers for people who I think would want to participate in democracy but may not have the sophistication. The very people, I think, that I would suspect the NDP would like to see more actively participating in democracy are now less likely to because there are additional administrative barriers being put in their way, and if they fail to meet those administrative burdens, now they're subject to personal fines, which we didn't have before. I think we should be making it easier for Albertans to participate in democracy, not more difficult.

I've yet to hear an explanation from this government about what problem exactly it is that we are trying to solve. Can you quantify the problem? Can you tell us? In all of the rural districts and counties, how often this is a problem? Is this a problem only in Edmonton and Calgary? Is this a problem in mid-sized cities? If it is, I'd like to know how you quantify what that problem is. Again, I think that's a good reason for us to be sending this off to committees.

The other piece of concern that I have is just the overall administrative burden on municipalities themselves, the opportunity or risk, then, that we're going to have a variety of interpretations, different municipalities interpreting the same set of rules slightly differently, where you cross a county boundary and all of a sudden there's a slightly different interpretation of these rules. It's a large, multipage – I don't even know how many pages this bill is; 89 pages – nearly 100-page bill that creates an opportunity or risk that interpretations will be different across different municipalities.

The other strong recommendation that I've heard coming from municipal councillors that I've talked with: why is it that municipal campaign donations – if we're going to take corporate and union money out, will we still need to run campaigns? Why is it that municipal campaigns are not eligible for tax receipts? Why is it that we in the provincial sphere get to take advantage of a very, very generous – very, very, very generous – tax deduction for any donation that comes to a registered political party but municipal councillors cannot? We're constraining their ability perhaps too much to raise money that they need to run campaigns. So, again, I would like to see an analysis of what the impact of that may be.

With that, I would really encourage all members to vote in favour of this amendment. I think it's a reasonable one that we see this bill reviewed at committee.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. Well, I'd like to hear more from the member about what he considers to be the barriers to local participation as a result of registering as a candidate.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you, Member, for that question. You know, one thing I've observed as we go through the process of nominating candidates here for the upcoming spring election – I believe we're going to have an election in the spring. I'd love to hear the government get on the record and actually confirm that we're going to stick to the fixed election date. The Elections Alberta forms themselves are not overwhelmingly complex, but the consequences of getting it wrong, especially with the new Election Commissioner, are actually fairly dramatic. If all of a sudden you have not created a bank account properly or you haven't filed on time, then there is some risk of personal fines, especially when we're talking about simply being part of the process from a candidate nomination perspective.

I've seen candidates that I would want to participate in the process reconsider their participation in democracy because the administrative burden is too high. They're confused by the forms they have to fill in, and that's especially true of indigenous people, of people who perhaps live in poverty, and these are voices that I think we don't hear nearly enough in the democratic process, certainly at the provincial level. This is where we as provincial parties have some ability to help these candidates bridge that gap and fill in the forms, but on a municipal basis, if you're someone living in poverty, then your ability to manage the paperwork that's almost certain to be generated by this process I think creates a pretty significant barrier to participating in democracy, which I would think would run counter to what this government in particular would want and certainly what I would like to see. I think it should be made easier to run, not more complicated.

The Deputy Speaker: Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll speak to the amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: You didn't want another question under 29(2)(a)?

Any further questions under 29(2)(a)?

On the amendment, yes, I have to say that this member was first in my memory of the speaking list. Go ahead, Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Why, thank you, Madam Speaker, and with apologies to one of the greats, I might add, around here.

Dr. Swann: Obviously not a threat anymore.

Mr. Cooper: Yes. That's exactly right.

It's a pleasure, I suppose, to rise and speak to Bill 23, An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta. What a noble name it is, a noble name in a title: An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta. Perhaps the bill should more appropriately be named the Local Authorities Election Amendment Act, 2018, but since this government is in a very unique path and track record of renaming pieces of legislation to fit their political agenda, we see that again here in Bill 23.

Now, I might just add, Madam Speaker, that there are significant portions of this legislation that I think are well intentioned, but like so many things that this government has done since the last election, they have been meaning well, but the results of what they delivered have been anything but what their intention was. I think that is why we've seen similar pieces of legislation come before the Assembly not one, not two, not three, not four, not five, not six but now the seventh time in just a couple of years. In fact, I think you'll recall . . .

Mr. McIver: It's a charm.

Mr. Cooper: Seven times. That's exactly right. Seven times are a charm. Yeah. I think it's actually three times is a charm, but in this case it takes the government twice plus one extra to actually get to where they're headed.

The very sad thing, Madam Speaker, and the exact reason why we should be referring this to committee – my hon. colleague from Airdrie and soon to be Airdrie-East recommended that we send this to committee – is that we are actually here to help and prevent us from having to come back an eighth time to correct all of the challenges that are going to be in place because of Bill 23.

Now, we've heard from the hon. Member for Sherwood Park, talking about the extensive amounts of consultation that have taken place on this particular piece of legislation. Well, Madam Speaker, what the truth is is that the minister and others have talked to a lot of municipal politicians and perhaps even Albertans about some of what their ideas might be that they might like to see in a piece of legislation. Now what we need to do is make sure that the government got it right. I can tell you that they haven't, and that's because I've heard from a lot of folks, from all across the province, actually, who have brought a number of concerns to my attention.

A lot of those things surround the fact that the intention of the legislation, which is to get corporate and union donations out of the process, is a good one, one that we've supported, one that we campaigned on, one that we have always voted in favour of, but the net result of what they're doing is that, yes, it will get corporate and union money out of municipal politics in the form that they can donate directly to the candidates, but it is going to create a whole other series of problems as a result of the way that they have legislated in Bill 23.

One of the things that's particularly interesting to me and another reason why I think we should send it to committee is the fact that not only have they said that there's going to be a donation limit to municipal politicians – and they have set that the same as at the provincial level – but they've said that municipal politicians are slightly less important than provincial politicians. They're only allowed to do that one time in a four-year election process whereas provincial politicians, slightly bigger fish, if you will – and maybe I'm paraphrasing – can fund raise year over year over year during the election process.

The government says that they're trying to make the rules the same provincially as they are municipally, yet we see in a number of cases in Bill 23 that they're actually creating two sets of similar rules that are, in fact, different. When you limit municipal politicians from being able to fund raise year over year over year, not only are you giving the incumbent a significant advantage, which is, again, the opposite of what they say will happen, but in fact you will be giving the incumbent an advantage. You also limit free speech of candidates outside of that four-year period.

One of two things is going to happen. We're going to create PACs at the municipal level or provincial politics are going to creep more and more into the municipal level, and if you ask me, Madam Speaker, I believe that that's one of the intentions of the NDP in this legislation, to get more municipal politicians actively campaigning alongside the NDP government. There are going to be unintended consequences from this piece of legislation, and preventing people's right to free speech and their ability to spend money to promote their ideas outside of that period of time I actually believe will be found to be unconstitutional. But if the goal is to create the same set of rules, they're not even doing that.

So I would guess that we should talk about this at committee, and when the government chooses not to do that, I would suggest – my intention in this is actually to make sure that we have a good piece of legislation that doesn't end up being worse off for Albertans than better for Albertans. I intend to send the Minister of Municipal Affairs a couple of amendments so that he has plenty of time to think about why he's not going to support them, but the goal is to create a better piece of legislation.

Another perfect example. My hon. colleague from Livingstone-Macleod said that for municipal politicians the cap after which a donation needs to be declared is $50. For PACs, it's $250; for provincial politicians, it's $250. Is it that this government doesn't trust municipal politicians like they trust themselves, or is it just an oversight? I don't know, but it's a continued example of the government saying one thing and doing another. We've seen it time and time and time again.

Another perfect reason to send this bill to committee – and I look forward to debating this bill at some length over the next number of days – is that now we're going to require additional paperwork and recording of finances, which I don't have a problem with. But what I'd like to know is what the costs associated with that are. There are quite likely going to be over 5,000 people across the province that run in the next municipal election. This government just hired an Election Commissioner and now have piled on a significant piece of work to that role.

I'd like to know this from the minister. My guess is – if we've seen this once, we've seen it a thousand times – that they're going to be coming back to the House to ask for more money for this. This government legislates first and then figures out the consequences after. It is a classic example of them saying one thing and doing another.

Mr. McIver: No.

Mr. Cooper: I know. It's hard to believe. I think that this couldn't have been more clear.

Another reason why we need to send this to committee is that last week the Minister of Municipal Affairs was on a radio program in the city of Calgary talking about how he was going to save democracy in Alberta with this piece of legislation, and he also made some statements that were devoid of facts. One was around this issue of vouching for people that don't have ID on the list. This particular government wants to open it wide so that one person can vouch for many people many times in any polling location. Let me be clear. The vast majority of people want to do the right thing when it comes to elections, but not every person wants to do the right thing when it comes to elections. That's exactly why we need to put some reasonable frameworks around what that looks like. Perhaps you can vouch for four or five or six people, but an unlimited number doesn't seem reasonable. It's exactly why we should be talking about this at committee.

Now, I know the government says that they've consulted, but the other question that I have is: have they consulted with politicians who have lost? This particular piece of legislation is going to empower incumbents to an even greater extent, which is outrageous, Madam Speaker.

The other thing in this particular piece of legislation that we should be sending to committee so that we can talk about it is around some of the issues of transparency. The minister just the other day on the radio said that every municipality will have a voters list at the polling stations for people to be held accountable, but there's nowhere – there's nowhere – in Bill 23 that gives any indication that it is his intention that a voters list is required at all municipal elections. It may be that he doesn't want that.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2.1) the House stands adjourned until 1:30 this afternoon.

[The Assembly adjourned at 12 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 20, 2018

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you a group of home-schoolers from in and around the Fort Saskatchewan area. We have students accompanied by their parents and teachers, including Mrs. Venessa Kalist, Mrs. Tammy Burgardt, Mrs. Caryn Troost, Mrs. Tonya Collins, Mrs. Karen Hipson, and Mr. Vern Cripps along with a couple more, Mrs. Tammy Froese and Mrs. Shelley Brewer. If they could all stand with their lovely young guests and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you 66 students from the Edmonton Christian northeast school. The students are accompanied by their teachers, Elaine Junk and Greg Gurnett, along with their chaperones: Susana Maki, Jexy David, Julia Adams, Chan Lu, Sindy Weber, and Chris Maluta. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other school groups? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to introduce on your behalf Margaret Carroll from the town of High Level in your constituency of Peace River. Margaret is an owner of M&M Real Estate in High Level and is a strong business leader and community advocate. She is the director of the Grande Prairie real estate board, a past copresident of the High Level chamber of commerce, and was recently nominated for the Alberta women entrepreneurs award. Margaret is seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I'd ask her to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce four absolutely outstanding Albertans all in their own right. They are all school board trustees. There is literally no one in our province more undervalued than school board trustees, and I know that from the bottom of my heart they all deserve even more praise and support from all of us and all Albertans because what they do is the truest form of public service. So it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you Holly Bilton, the chair of the rural caucus of ASBA; Colleen Butler, the chair of Chinook's Edge school division; Sherry Cooper, a trustee from Chinook's Edge school division – no relation; I say that for her benefit, not mine, because I could be so honoured to be related to her – and Melissa Copley, a school board trustee for Chinook's Edge school division, also my long-suffering, immediate next-door neighbour. If you'd please welcome them in the traditional fashion to the Assembly, I know that they and I would greatly appreciate it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly my legislative co-ordinator and his family. Now, my legislative co-ordinator, Mr. Jesse Robertson, has only been with me for a short time, but in that time he has shown that he is not only a true conservative but somebody that can actually ride herd over me and make sure that I'm where I'm supposed to be and know what I'll need to be saying.

Mr. Cooper: Now that's a special skill.

Mr. Smith: Yes, it is.

With him is his wife, Colleen Robertson. She's a hard-working, home-schooling mom, a former registered nurse. She volunteers with youth, loves to mentor young people, and does so when they're at a very formative time in their lives. With him is Madison Robertson, age seven, who is in grade 2 and loves to read, loves creating art, and her favourite colour is gold. Now, Malcolm Robertson is age six, in grade 1, and he loves to wrestle and he loves to ride his bike and he loves to build Lego, so at some point in time we're going to have to get together and have some fun. Lastly, Isobel Robertson, age five. She's in kindergarten, and she loves music, she loves to dance, which I do very poorly, and she is very kind and considerate. If I could have the Robertson family stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Speaker. It's my privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Reeve Leanne Beaupre, Harold Bulford, Daryl Beeston, Ross Sutherland, Bob Marshall, Peter Harris, Linda Waddy, Karen Rosvold, Lesley Nielsen-Bjerke, and Corey Beck from the county of Grande Prairie. They are joining us here in Edmonton for the Rural Municipalities of Alberta conference. I had the pleasure of meeting with them earlier today, and I now ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you my friend Michelle Eldjarnson. She may not quite have arrived yet. They're en route here. She works tirelessly to support our community and surrounding area. Her concentration is in the chamber membership and supporting those members. She's been instrumental in getting the Chestermere, Langdon, and Strathmore chambers to collaborate on events, and on top of that, she is a full-time realtor. Her focus has also been involved in the business series in Chestermere and Langdon and Strathmore, so this is a person who really, really works hard to bring her community together. She's also a director on the political action standing committee with the Calgary east real estate board and recently travelled to Ottawa to present on behalf of the Bow River district, which includes Chestermere, and lobby on behalf of homeowners. It's such a privilege to speak about her. If you're here, Michelle, if you could rise, and if we could please give her the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Today is national child day, so I rise to introduce to you and through you some very special guests. They are winners of Alberta's Great Kids awards here with their families, and they joined me in the cabinet room earlier, where we held our very own cabinet meeting together and discussed some of the issues that mattered to them. If they could please stand as I call their names. Quinlan Grandbois is here with his family: Corine, Oree, and Shirley; Marigold Mioc is here with her mom, Lily, and with Moses; Maddie Bosgra is here with her mom, Leah; Izabelle Gaskarth is here with her dad, Dean, and Liam; Jadah Sparklingeyes and her family: Chantel, Pierre, Jenay, and Jory; and Brady Mishio and his dad, Terry. Hi, guys. These great kids are already leaders in their parts of Alberta. They've overcome great challenges early in their lives, and they've inspired and helped many others around them and demonstrated to me once again today just how bright the future of our province is. I want to thank them for coming from all over Alberta to be here today for our cabinet meeting, and I want to invite them and their families to please receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is indeed my honour today to be able to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House some very special guests of mine in the House. First of all, my daughter, Jodie Johnson. Without her, I probably wouldn't have been elected three times to this House. She helped me very much through all my campaigns and took time off work to work in my campaign office even. If she could stand. Also my son-in-law, Don Johnson. He's been there all along and helping, too, but the best thing those two have done for me has been giving me my two precious things in life, my granddaughters, Tory and Sydney Johnson. I'm really glad to have them in the House today. Most special is my wife, Sherry. As of today it's been 42 years we've been married. It's our anniversary. Thank you. She's been through a lot with me over 42 years and is still here. Please give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce a group of advocates with Diabetes Canada. As my colleagues are probably well aware, November is Diabetes Awareness Month, which is a time to focus attention on advocacy for people living with diabetes, of course, prevention, research, and a cure. The support of dedicated volunteers like the guests who are in our gallery today help make life better for people who are living with diabetes. I ask that as I say their names, they rise. They are Kate, Bridget, Murray, Melanie, Doug, Deanna, Christine, Randeep, Maureen, Cali, Dawn, Cory, Nicole, and Louise. Colleagues, please join me in extending the warm welcome to these guests.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly members of the Strathcona County Fire Fighters Union. It is especially an honour today after knowing that Strathcona county has been dealing with the aftereffects of the explosion. There is no one, I believe, that could protect our community better than the folks up there. I don't think I see all of them, but I'll introduce the ones here because I consider them friends and I consider them folks that have worked with us on things that are important to them. It's a pleasure to introduce President Andrew Spence and Brian Sturm. Those are the well-dressed gentlemen up there that protect the great community of Strathcona county. I just want them to get the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two guests from Westerner Park in Red Deer. Bradley Williams has served on the board at Westerner Park for the past seven years and was most recently board vice-chair. In September he was asked to step in as CEO until a permanent replacement is found. Kim Mechefske has worked at Westerner Park since 1996, and she is the current concessions and beverage and suite operations manager, a position she's held for the past 10 years. I ask Bradley and Kim to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you three Medicine Hatters. Now, these three people are incredible problem solvers, very hard workers, and great customer service people, and I know this because they were friends and colleagues of mine during my real estate career. When I call their names, if I could ask them to stand. I would first like to introduce the Medicine Hat Real Estate Board president, Tim Seitz. Secondly, I'd like to introduce a past president and our current PAC representative, Jeff Lanigan, and thirdly, another past president and our current Alberta Real Estate director, Devon Felesky. Of course, these three are here to talk to government and talk to opposition about pressing issues in the real estate industry. I ask the three to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce Valerie Keefe. Some of you who were here yesterday afternoon recall that I introduced her then, but I want her to be introduced to the entire House. If she would stand. Valerie is an active advocate for trans people in Alberta. She's here today as part of the day of remembrance for trans people. I would like to point out that she was the president of the NDP at Grant MacEwan University and is no longer with the NDP and is working with the Freedom Conservative Party, advocating libertarian principles in support of all people and trans people. I ask that the members give Valerie the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Mr. Drysdale: Madam Speaker, I'd just recognize two more special guests in the gallery from the city of Grande Prairie, councillor Jackie Clayton and councillor Wade Pilat. I assume that they're here to take in the RMA convention. I see them sitting there. I just wish that you'd give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Statement by the Speaker

Rotation of Questions and Members' Statements

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, prior to the start of Members' Statements I would like to inform hon. members about further revisions to both the Oral Question Period and Members'

Statements rotations. Yesterday, November 19, the Speaker's office received a signed House leaders' agreement. The agreement has been reviewed, and it raises no concerns.

The changes to the Oral Question Period rotation indicated in the agreement are as follows. The Member for Calgary-East may ask question 7 on days 3 and 7 of the eight-day rotation. These questions were previously allotted to the Official Opposition. The Official Opposition now receives question 10 on days 3 and 7. These questions were previously allotted to private members from the government caucus.

Concerning the Members' Statements rotation, the House leaders' agreement provides that the Member for Calgary-East receives one member's statement every three weeks on a Thursday, starting on November 29, 2018.

The Speaker's office sent out a memorandum concerning the changes to both rotations earlier today. Members can find on their desks copies of the Oral Question Period rotation and the projected sitting days calendar, which contains the Members' Statements rotation, among other things. These new rotations will take effect today. I will table the House leaders' agreement under the appropriate item of business later in the Routine. I would also note that the Assembly is on day 1 of the Oral Question Period rotation and week 1 of the Members' Statements rotation.

Members' Statements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Canadian Finals Rodeo

Ms Miller: Thank you, Madam Speaker. On January 16 of this year it was announced that for the first time in its 44-year history the Canadian Finals Rodeo would no longer be held in Edmonton. It was travelling to a new city and venue. It would be calling Westerner Park in Red Deer its new home.

It was an exciting announcement for our city, but there was little time to celebrate. There were just nine short months to plan and prepare for the 45th year of the CFR. In nine months what our city accomplished is nothing short of incredible. Our community pulled together: 247 volunteers donated over 3,000 hours of their time and their blood, sweat, and tears and showed the entire country what makes Red Deer such an amazing city.

Over 43,000 people attended CFR 45 during its six-day run. It is estimated that over $20 million was injected into our economy. Over $45,000 was raised for local charities. The first-ever junior finals rodeo Rising Stars event awarded $24,000 in scholarships to our up-and-coming young athletes. The achievement of CFR 45 is just confirmation of the incredible spirit of our community.

I would like to thank Westerner Park and all of their staff and volunteers, whose passion and planning brought the CFR to Red Deer and whose dedication and hard work has made CFR 45 such a huge success. I would like to thank our government, especially Culture and Tourism, for their $250,000 grant, that we invested into the CFR through the major fairs program. I would also to thank all of the businesses and organizations that stepped up and sponsored CFR 45 and its events.

It is a testament to our community that CFR 45 was such a huge success. I'm looking forward to CFR 46. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Humans Helping Humans Foundation in Drayton Valley

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. One of the joys of living in Alberta is realizing that as a result of its pioneer history and its entrepreneurial spirit we are province of can-do people. A perfect example of this is the work of Humans Helping Humans in Drayton Valley. Local businessman Hack Hamdon believed that there was a need for affordable housing in Drayton Valley. Too many low- and middle-income families struggled to find appropriate and affordable housing within the community, so Hack and other residents started up Humans Helping Humans.

In 2008, after much planning, fundraising, and organizing, Humans Helping Humans had raised more than $215,000 and saw their first duplex project go to two deserving families. Since then, projects have been completed in 2010, 2012, and 2015, and on October 4, 2018, I had the privilege of watching two more families take ownership of the latest two housing units. Amidst the joy of seeing two families receive a hand up was the satisfaction of knowing that the funding and building of every one of these houses of hope was done through the generosity and hard work of the local community.

A portion of the funds to build these houses of hope has come through the fundraising efforts of local celebrities, who practise for many months to compete in a dance competition called Shakin' n Drayton. Now, on November 24 the community of Drayton Valley will once again gather to watch some amazing dancing that is in reality an exercise of community love and generosity. This year the tickets to this event sold out in less than 38 hours. Now, if you missed out on tickets but still want to help this worthy cause, I would encourage you all to go visit Hack Hamdon and the other board members, and I am sure they would willingly accept any and all donations.

Oral Question Period

The Deputy Speaker: First main question. The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Oil Price Differentials

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Albertans understand that our province is being devastated by a massive underselling of our greatest asset, our oil, at a $45-a-barrel discount. Yesterday I called on Alberta's oil producers to step up to the plate voluntarily to reduce the inventories and reduce the price differential by cutting production of Alberta oil by some 250,000 barrels per day. Will the Premier join with me in calling on those companies to lead voluntarily with action?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. In fact, it turns out we've already been on this issue. As I believe the member opposite is aware, we have appointed envoys to go and meet with leaders in our energy industry to address this issue because we understand it's fundamentally important. The idea of bringing them into a room and then having them agree to voluntarily do it: well, that's illegal. That's collusion. One of the things that's really important for us to do, therefore, is to work with them in the way that our government is, and we are hopeful that we will find a solution on behalf of all Albertans.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Madam Speaker, when I asked that very serious question, the Premier snickered. She laughed. I don't understand why this is a laughing matter, that our economy is losing tens of billions of dollars of value a year, the Alberta treasury $5 billion a year. The question was a very straightforward one that was put to me by a number of leaders in the energy sector over the past few days. Why won't the government call on companies voluntarily, without collusion, to reduce production by just about 5 per cent, that would help to reduce the price differential massively, by about 50 per cent?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Point of order noted.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I think the member opposite should be reminded that, in fact, our government takes this matter very, very seriously, and I can't accept his characterization that somehow we are not. In fact, we have been focused on very little but this issue. I have met with energy industry leaders myself, and I have been gathering advice from all quarters. We are working on this front both in terms of the short term, the medium term, and the long term to increase takeaway capacity and also to address matters in a very urgent basis, and we will continue that work.

The Deputy Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Madam Speaker. One of the envoys appointed by the Premier yesterday, her former chief of staff Mr. Topp, has compared Alberta oil to, quote, ethical land mines. He's called for us to produce a great deal less hydrocarbon energy, pledged to get fossil fuel cars out of Canada's cities, and has a long track record of attacking Alberta's oil industry. Doesn't this ring like the appointment of Tzaporah Berman to co-chair the NDP's advisory group on the oil sands? Why should we be taking advice from somebody who wants to damage the industry?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Let me begin by saying that what I won't do is take advice from someone who spent 10 years in Ottawa and actually managed to make the problem worse and, certainly, to not fix the problem. What I will say is that Mr. Topp worked closely with energy leaders to put together the climate leadership plan and to put together the consensus from energy leaders with respect to that plan. He also worked closely with them with respect to our royalty review, a review that produced a system that the energy leaders across the sector were in favour of. So I think he has a very good record.

The Deputy Speaker: Second main question. The hon. leader.

Mr. Kenney: Madam Speaker, the NDP is repeating the same mistake they did in the appointment of Tzaporah Berman.

Pipeline Development

Mr. Kenney: Madam Speaker, we would not be in this situation if the federal government had not vetoed the construction of the Northern Gateway pipeline, that had been approved by the last government. Yesterday former Liberal MP Martha Hall Findlay, now an Albertan, said: I think one of the biggest mistakes the federal government has made in Canadian history was to say no to Northern Gateway; that will prove to have been disastrous. Does the Premier agree that the decision to veto Northern Gateway was a disastrous mistake?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. What I know as the Premier of this province is that successive federal governments in Ottawa, a federal government of which the member opposite was a part and the current federal government, have failed to get this right and have failed to get a pipeline built to tidewater in almost 70 years. It is shocking. As Albertans we are all frustrated, and we need to move forward. We need to get progress. We need to get a pipeline to tidewater. We are working on all fronts. With respect to the differential we are working with respect to medium-term takeaway capacity. We are working for the long-term solutions, getting a pipeline, and upgrading our . . .

Mr. Kenney: Well, Madam Speaker, that takes a lot of chutzpah, for this Premier to criticize her close friend and ally Justin Trudeau for vetoing Northern Gateway at her request. In April of 2015 the Premier said, quote, Northern Gateway is not the right decision. She admitted in this place last May that she asked the federal government for only one pipeline to the west coast. Why did the Premier make this historic and disastrous mistake of advising the federal government to cancel the approved Northern Gateway pipeline?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you again, Madam Speaker. First of all, the historic and disastrous mistake was the way Northern Gateway was managed by the former Conservative government, of which the member opposite was a part. Take some responsibility. Also, he should stop making things up because I certainly did not ever make any such request to the Prime Minister, and the member opposite needs to stop saying things that are not true.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Mr. Kenney: Madam Speaker, it's not just a quote attributed by the Calgary Herald; it's on video, where the Premier said, at an editorial board meeting of the Calgary Herald in front of a dozen journalists and a live video camera, that Gateway is "not the right decision." It was in this Chamber on May 1 that she said: what we did was talk to the federal government about getting a pipeline to tidewater; we said that we needed one of those pipelines to go west. This Premier, that party opposed Northern Gateway. Why don't they stand up and take responsibility for that historic error?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. At no time did this Premier or anybody in this government ask the federal government to cancel Northern Gateway. Let me be absolutely clear with respect to that issue. Moreover, we have done nothing but fight to get Trans Mountain built from the very beginning up till now, and until it is actually built, unlike the members opposite, who want to dine out on cheering for failure, we are focused on building support from coast to coast to coast. For the Trans Mountain pipeline we've gone from 4 in 10 to 7 in 10 Canadians supporting it, and we will get it done.

The Deputy Speaker: Third main question, hon. leader.

Mr. Kenney: Madam Speaker, not only did this government cheer for the failure of Northern Gateway, not only did they not raise a peep of protest following its cancellation by their ally Justin Trudeau, but they were actively opposed to the construction of the Keystone XL pipeline. When asked on live radio if the Premier supported the construction of Keystone, she said no. Will the Premier admit that it was a terrible mistake for her and her party to oppose the Keystone XL pipeline?

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. In fact, I and my party and our Minister of Energy committed 50,000 barrels to the Keystone pipeline to get it over the finish line. We have in fact worked very closely with the proponents of the Keystone pipeline to get that pipeline built. We have also supported line 3. Just yesterday we heard that line 3 has passed significant bureaucratic hurdles in the U.S., in part because of the incredible representations made by our minister of environment to those decision-makers on behalf of line 3. We are fighting for pipelines each and every day, unlike the members opposite.

Mr. Kenney: Madam Speaker, the government's budget was predicated on the construction of at least two pipelines. We've now had the suspension of Trans Mountain after multiple victory laps by the NDP government. We've had the suspension of Keystone XL, the killing of Energy East, the vetoing of Northern Gateway. What are the consequences of these decisions on the fiscal plan of the government?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. We know that in the short term the delays of these two pipelines, TMX and Keystone, will have consequences. So far we are on track with respect to our current budget projections, and we will provide more information as we receive it. But here's the thing: what we do know is that we will not give a $700 million tax cut to the top 1 per cent. We will not lay off 4,000 teachers. We will not lay off 4,000 nurses. We will not, quote, make it hurt, end quote, for Albertans.

Mr. Kenney: Madam Speaker, the NDP . . .

Mr. Hanson: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Point of order noted.
Go ahead, hon. leader.

Mr. Kenney: Madam Speaker, the NDP is making it hurt for Albertans. [interjections] They're laughing about 148,000 unemployed Albertans, about six straight months of higher unemployment, about the highest unemployment in Canada outside of Atlantic Canada. Now they're planning for a 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax to make it even worse. How do they propose to balance the budget five years from now without the 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax that they banked on?

Ms Notley: Again, Madam Speaker, I've answered that question a number of times. We have indicated that our path to balance does not currently require or depend upon an increase in carbon pricing as per the federal plan because we are waiting for the Trans Mountain pipeline to get shovels in the ground. But let me be very clear. The member opposite and one of his MLAs said: it's going to hurt. That is their plan. Rather than taking shots over here at difficult situations that we're all trying to manage, why won't they come clean with what their plan is?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Assisted Dying

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Medical assistance in dying is a serious issue and unimaginably stressful for patients and their families. The issue, albeit new and evolving in Alberta, should have garnered the utmost attention of the minister to make sure that patients and Albertans were not falling through the cracks. To the Minister of Health: what steps did you take during the implementation of medical assistance in dying to ensure timely access to services?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and certainly thank you to the member for the question. This is an incredibly important and personal topic for, arguably, every Albertan in some way. We have been following the federal legislation and making sure that we roll out the right to choose medical assistance in death throughout our province. I'm proud of the kinds of national recognition we've received, but certainly there is more work to be done because we know that there are some people who have found it difficult to access that choice, and that is certainly not acceptable.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Minister, you are aware that at least two Albertans over two years ago were faced with difficulties in accessing medical assistance in dying. To the same minister: why didn't you act when you were first made aware of the problem, and why didn't you address these issues until they became public?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Again, the federal legislation just came into effect slightly over two years ago, and in the months following that, there certainly were some situations that were very difficult for families. I want to thank Doreen Nowicki's family for sitting down and meeting with me to discuss what they experienced, particularly the assessment that happened outside of hospital and how difficult that was for them. I can imagine that any other family could imagine how difficult that would be for their loved ones. What we have done is that we've addressed those concerns, and we've made sure that the new model continues to work in a way that honours and respects patients and their choices.

The Deputy Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Medical assistance in dying presents an ethical dilemma for some health service providers, and we should respect and accommodate those beliefs. However, the first concern must always be for the wishes and well-being of the patient. Respectfully, Minister, your actions have demonstrated that in these particular cases patients, Albertans, seem to be an afterthought. To the same minister: what is your plan, going forward, to ensure that Albertans aren't forced onto the street to access a legal medical service, and can you ensure that your ministry is patient focused and not politically focused?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Again, I want to say that the way that Mrs. Nowicki was treated, in my opinion and I think in the opinion of all, is unacceptable. That is not something that we would want for anyone that we love or for ourselves. Every patient in Alberta deserves to access a high level of dignified, compassionate care no matter where they are and what health facility they might be in.

I've asked Covenant Health to update their policies to reflect the amended practice. Certainly, this fiscal year nobody has had to be removed for an assessment to be done. I've asked them to make sure that they update their policy to reflect that that will be the expectation moving forward. If it doesn't do so, I will act myself, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, just a reminder that there will be no preambles on supplementaries.

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Grande Prairie Regional Hospital Construction

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Like many Albertans, the people of Grande Prairie have been working hard, raising families, and paying their fair share of taxes. I was pleased to hear that recently a new construction manager was selected for the Grande Prairie regional hospital. Can the minister update us on when the work will resume on-site and provide us with a revised completion date?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We do now have a construction manager. We are pleased to announce that Clark Builders is taking over construction management on the Grande Prairie hospital. Very happy to see that. They're going to begin mobilizing the site right away. Full construction activity is going to ramp up in the new year. Clark's first order of business is to put a construction schedule together, and once that is in place, they will begin looking at the subcontractors that they will take to the site.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Hard-working men and women are the backbone of our economy. How are we ensuring that the subtrades who are working on the site have an opportunity to continue working on this project?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, as I said before, construction activity is going to ramp up in the new year, and we hope to have nearly 400 construction workers on the site. I had a chance to touch base with the president of Clark Builders. They have just a terrific reputation. We had a conversation about making sure that we stayed in the loop as per what was happening down at the site. Our intention is to work closely with Clark Builders to make sure that there are lots of opportunities for the existing trades to determine if they would like to bid on a new contract on this project, and we welcome the local subcontractors in that effort.

The Deputy Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This project has been plagued with issues in the past. Can the minister tell us what the budget is for the project and what she is doing to ensure that there is cost certainty on this project?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The existing capital plan for this hospital has a budget of $763 million. The project scope was previously fixed in December 2016. So $763 million: it's going to remain at that number. The new construction management fee falls well within that budget amount. We are very confident in our construction manager and in our ability to get this hospital done for the good people of Grande Prairie, some of whom I see up in the gallery. I had the pleasure of chatting with them today about it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Health Care Budget

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. The Canadian Institute for Health Information today released a report stating that Alberta is the highest spending jurisdiction per capita on health care in Canada. In fact, if we were to spend just the Canadian average on health care, we would save over $3 billion annually. That totals nearly half of the government's deficit. To the Minister of Health: why does Alberta have the most expensive health care system in Canada?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to the member for the thoughtful and important question. Certainly, this is a complex matter and one that can't be addressed overnight. There were many years where the now Official Opposition had budget increases in excess of 6 per cent, and then in later years they'd fire a bunch of staff, and then they'd do another 6 per cent increase the year after that. Instead, what we've done on this side of the House is that we've worked to provide stability and reasonable growth. The same report talked about Alberta's increase being only 2.2 per cent this last year. We're getting to a rate of growth that's far more sustainable than we saw under the former government, and we're focused on the front lines and making sure patient care is the driver.

Dr. Swann: Madam Speaker, again to the minister: what areas of efficiency does she see in reducing this, I would say, unprecedented budget, which continues to be over?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. There are three areas in the budget where we see that the pie charts under former governments grew dramatically, and we tried to make sure we addressed that and had more stable growth. Those were physician compensation, pharmaceutical costs, and acute-care operations. We've done a lot of work to make sure that we focus our acute care around patients instead of blowing up hospitals, like we saw under the Official Opposition when they were in government in the '90s. We've made sure that we're bulk buying and using the lowest cost but highest efficacy of pharmaceuticals, and we sat down with physicians and renegotiated their compensation.

Dr. Swann: Will the minister commit to an audit of the Alberta health system and look for other areas of efficiency? Yes or no?

Ms Hoffman: Madam Speaker, I'm very proud of the fact that we have an extensive audit team within the GOA as well as with the Auditor General. We do regular system audits in specific areas within the system. I believe that the Auditor General and Public Accounts met just this morning to discuss Health. I think that that is one of the ways that we have really good opportunities to focus on policy outcomes and costs.

One of the other areas where we spend more than in neighbouring provinces is on seniors' drug coverage. The Official Opposition talks about: well, we could spend the same as B.C. and get better outcomes. Well, B.C. seniors pay far more for their drugs, Madam Speaker. I don't want that to be the outcome for Albertans, to raise their drug costs.

Energy Policies and Social Licence

Mr. Dreeshen: Madam Speaker, during question period on November 7, in response to my good friend from Calgary-Foothills' question on the NDP's social licence, the environment minister's response was: let's talk about something real. She continued this government's position that increasing taxes and regulatory burden will somehow get pipelines built. Was the minister of environment, from her time as a Greenpeace activist, fully aware of this fictitious social licence value that the NDP has been peddling to Albertans for the last three and a half years?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Well, I'm not sure that I'm going to take direction from someone who spent 10 months of his life campaigning for a guy who thinks that climate change is a hoax perpetrated by the Chinese, in terms of direction on how to make climate policy. What we have done is that we're reducing greenhouse gas emissions. We have done so by 11 megatonnes. Already we have reinvested $1.4 billion in innovation projects. There's much more to talk about as we've also made sure that we have the fastest growing economy in Canada.

Mr. Dreeshen: Madam Speaker, let's bring this a little bit closer to home. Given that the Premier and the minister of environment have stood outside this very building protesting pipelines and now given that the Premier appoints Brian Topp, a failed federal NDP leadership candidate who also campaigned against pipelines, to be the NDP's relief pitcher on the oil price differential crisis caused by their desire for a pipeline shortage, why is the NDP trying to redefine their record as proponents of pipelines when for so long they were protesters of pipelines?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. That statement is false. It is directly false.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Ms Phillips: I would appreciate it if the member would cease in misleading the House on anything that I have or have not done, Madam Speaker. It is false. That's the first thing.

The second thing here, Madam Speaker, is that we have brought in a climate leadership plan, yes. We have done so at the same time as the economy has grown the fastest in Canada. We have done so in a way that makes sure that a climate plan is not imposed on us by Ottawa. If we want to talk about private citizens, I have two words: John Carpay. Is that guy still on your team?

Mr. Dreeshen: Madam Speaker, the Premier, the minister of the environment, and Brian Topp have all opposed Alberta oil. Given that the NDP's social licence has done nothing to get pipelines built, given that the Deputy Minister of Energy at the Resource Stewardship Committee said that the social licence has no value, and given that pipeline protestors other than those sitting in this Assembly continue to oppose pipelines, can the government explain why they continue to push their failed social licence ideas on Albertans rather than admitting it hasn't worked in getting pipelines built?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. If we want to take a trip down memory lane, perhaps 10 months of this member's life spent campaigning to grab us all by the steel tariff could be something that we talk about. But you know what? We've cut small business taxes by a third; we have exempted small and medium-sized oil and gas companies until 2023, something that Justin Trudeau has not committed to doing; and we've provided $2 billion in carbon offsets to companies investing in methane. All of those investments would be cancelled if the folks across the way had their way.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin.

Energy Advisory Group Appointments

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The price differential for Alberta oil has now reached crisis proportions. We're losing almost $100 million a day because we're forced to sell at such a high discount. That's almost $25 per Albertan per day. This is a result of failed NDP policy. This isn't just a Fort McMurray problem or an Alberta problem; it's a Canadian crisis. I truly question why there are no industry representatives on this advisory panel. At this critical time why did the Premier appoint Brian Topp, someone who spent years fighting against Alberta oil and gas jobs, to this important panel?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'd be happy to talk about the fact that our Premier and our government have done more to secure market access and a pipeline to tidewater than the previous federal Conservative government and the previous PC governments in the last 20 years. In fact, the Leader of the Official Opposition was a cabinet minister for Canada and failed to get a pipeline to tidewater. Our government has done more advocating on behalf of our energy sector, and we are closer and closer to getting that pipeline built. We will not quit until it's built.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that Tzeporah Berman previously advocated for shutting down the oil sands and given that she referred to my home as Mordor and given that she pocketed tens of thousands of our tax dollars advising the NDP government on oil sands and given that directly after ending this gig she went on to fight against the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion project and given that it's the lack of pipelines to tidewater that's the major cause of the extreme price differential, to the Premier: will you admit that her appointment was wrong?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd love to ask the hon. member if she'd admit that her leader failed to get any pipeline to tidewater when he spent 10 years in Ottawa. Our government will continue to work toward market access, pipelines, quite frankly, in all directions. We committed 50,000 barrels per day for the Keystone XL pipeline. We were very disappointed to hear that that has been delayed, but we will continue to advocate for market access. Our Premier has taken concrete steps to address the immediate differential crisis but also the medium term and the long term. We will see it built.

The Deputy Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that Brian Topp compared Canadian ethical oil to land mines and given that he called to ban fossil-fuelled cars in cities and given that he said that Canada should, and I quote, produce a great deal less hydrocarbon energy and given that he was the one that developed the failed carbon tax as social licence to get . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Do you have a question, hon. member?

Ms Goodridge: . . . pipelines built, does the NDP government honestly believe that Topp will be any different than Berman?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Again, you know, I'll talk a little bit about the work that our Premier and our government has done not only on the Trans Mountain pipeline but also working with the energy sector to diversify within our industry. In fact, earlier today the Premier talked about how we are going to be upgrading more of our petrochemicals here in Alberta. We're following on the legacy of Peter Lougheed and showing true leadership on this file as opposed to the Official Opposition that doesn't believe in diversifying our economy nor supporting the very energy leaders that are the backbone of this country.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Earlier today the University of Calgary released a research paper that found the NDP's current fiscal path forward is unsustainable. The Finance minister's talk of balancing his budget is just inaccurate. Compounding Alberta's fiscal crisis are the worst oil prices for Alberta's oil, Canada's highest per capita health care costs for 2018, and his ever-skyrocketing debt costs. To the Finance minister: what is your government doing to avert this current fiscal crisis?

Mr. Ceci: Madam Speaker, of course, we appreciate the work of Professor Tombe. These projections, though, do not take into account the fact that we have found savings and will continue to find savings that clean up government, that we have economic indicators that are changing over time like the GDP, oil prices, and manufacturing levels, and the fact that we have cut the deficit already by $3 billion. Those things also have to go into projections. We're on to balance the budget by 2023.

Mr. Barnes: Madam Speaker, given that if this government stays the course, Alberta's debt will reach 50 per cent of GDP, higher than any time in our history, higher still than in the 1930s, when the province partially defaulted on its debt obligations, again to the Finance minister: will you commit to helping Alberta families and commit to practical solutions like cutting red tape, supporting free enterprise, and supporting Alberta communities?

Mr. Ceci: You know, Madam Speaker, we have already done all sorts of things. We have cancelled golf club memberships that the previous government left in place for agencies, boards, and commissions. We got rid of the private jet that they used to go around the province in. In fact, Professor Tombe himself admits that this report is projections. They're not predictions. They're not definitive predictions of where we will go. We will balance by 2023.

Mr. Barnes: Madam Speaker, given that according to economists at the University of Calgary this government's fiscal plan will result in debt service costs of $22 billion a year by 2040, making this government's department of debt interest the second-largest department by spending, is the Finance minister aware that this is simply unsustainable and will jeopardize every single important priority of Alberta families, even education and health care?

Mr. Ceci: Madam Speaker, I stand corrected. It wasn't a jet; it was an air force they had.

Professor Tombe also acknowledges, and that side doesn't, that we have the best balance sheet of any province, Madam Speaker. In fact, when we balance in 2023, we will still have the lowest net debt to GDP in the country. Professor Tombe acknowledges that. Why can't they?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Labour Legislation

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Before I was elected, I was very active in the fight for workers' rights here in Alberta. I've stood shoulder to shoulder with my sisters and brothers in the labour movement, who for years asked for improvements to our province's labour laws only to be met with silence from the former Conservative governments. To the Minister of Labour: what are you doing to ensure that workers' voices are heard and respected?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Our government has the backs of workers, and we are fighting for the things that matter to them. When we came into office, we inherited labour laws that were decades out of date. Workers in Alberta were denied the same rights and protections that workers across Canada were benefiting from, and it wasn't right. That's why we took action. Our changes now mean safer jobs. They mean a WCB system that will be easier to navigate and a labour relations system that works for everyone. Most importantly, it means increased rights for all working people, not just benefits for those at the top.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that before the changes to Alberta's out-of-date labour laws it often meant that workers fell further and further behind while those at the top in Alberta got further and further ahead, again to the Labour minister: what are you doing to ensure that workers have labour laws that work for them, not against them?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm very proud of the work that we've done to ensure that working people in our province finally have a voice at the table. I'd like to thank the member asking the question for the work he has done to advocate for workers' rights.

We know the Conservative plan for workers, Madam Speaker. We've seen it in action for decades. Working folks saw their contracts ripped up, their pensions attacked, their rights trampled so that someone could take a better vacation or buy a second home.

Now the Conservatives are planning to double down on these failed policies and make things even harder and hurt families. I will not allow that to happen, and I also think we should be reviewing laws earlier than every 40 years.

The Deputy Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that the past Conservative governments have tried to strip workers of their rights, again to the same minister: what are you doing to ensure workers' rights are not only respected but strengthened?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Unlike the Conservatives, on this side of the House we do not think that workers, collective bargaining, and unions are bad words or words that need to be whispered in the tone of Voldemort. No. On this side of the House we're on the side of everyday working people. I'm going to keep fighting for the things that matter to them. The Conservatives have been very clear. They want to roll back workers' rights, they want to leave families in the lurch, and they want to fire 4,000 teachers and nurses just so they can give the top 1 per cent a $700 million tax giveaway. Albertans have already seen that movie, and it's not pretty.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Postsecondary Sexual Abuse and Assault Policies

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Alberta Party caucus believes in school of choice and reasonable accommodations for the individual beliefs of teachers and students. However, we also see the need for standards that ensure that all students have the access and the support they need such as this government's approach to GSAs. The Minister of Education may want to share that approach with the Minister of Advanced Education, however, because postsecondary students are asking for something similar. To the Minister of Advanced Education. Students have been asking that postsecondary institutions be required to have a stand-alone sexual assault policy. Why haven't you made this change?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Of course, we've been working with our institutions to make sure that every institution has a sexual harassment and sexual violence policy in place. I'm pleased to report that most of them do. We still have two policies outstanding, and we are working with those institutions to make sure that they get those done as quickly as possible. It was my pleasure to meet with the students of ASEC earlier this week to discuss their concerns around sexual violence prevention policies on campus. I assured them that I'm working with our partners in the postsecondary institutions to make sure that their policies meet best practices.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that sexual assault and sexual misconduct can completely derail the opportunity for a survivor to get an education and given that recovering from the trauma of sexual abuse or sexual assault is a lifelong process, to the same minister: what protections and supports are in place across all postsecondary institutions to ensure that survivors of sexual assault or abuse have the support and flexibility to complete their programs?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Of course, our government has committed a significant number of dollars to mental health supports. In discussions with a number of the institutions some of those institutions have used those mental health support dollars to support sexual violence survivors in dealing with the issues that have been created by their experiences. Of course, we've continued to encourage all universities and colleges to have the resources available to their students to deal with these issues when they arise. What won't help is millions of . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Mental health issues arising from an assault can be quite isolating, and given that a student's peers may be able to help in a way others can't and given that we should be supporting student-led mental health initiatives, to the same minister: will you require that Alberta postsecondary institutions provide a portion of their mental health funding for programs that are designed and supported in partnership with students' associations?

Mr. Schmidt: Madam Speaker, I had the chance to meet with the student representatives of ASEC earlier this week to discuss that exact matter, and what I assured them is that as we review the mental health programs that have been instituted with the money that we provided in our budget a couple of years ago, we would ensure that the students' voices are heard in the development and implementation of those programs. That work is ongoing with our universities and colleges all across the province. It's important to know that our government has students' backs in this matter. We want their voices to be heard, and we want the mental health supports to meet the needs of students. We're working very hard to make sure that . . .

School Bus Driver Training

Mr. Cooper: Alberta school bus drivers transport our most precious resource. School boards are currently required to provide extensive driver training, and as a result there are very few traffic incidents caused by school buses. Despite this strong safety record the Transportation minister has ruled that school boards may no longer be able to provide such training and that this training must be provided by a third party at the cost of over $1,500. Why are school boards being subject to this massive change that will not make school buses, their drivers, and, more importantly, our children any safer?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Well, our government has introduced a number of measures to improve safety on our highways, including mandatory entry-level training for people who seek a class 1 or class 2 driver's licence, and we worked closely with stakeholders, including school boards. More recently they've raised some concerns with respect to that, and we're in discussions with the school boards. I'm hopeful that we can get a resolution satisfactory to them. But the important thing that I want to emphasize is that our government has taken very clear and positive steps to improve the safety of everyone travelling on our highways, including school children.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, given that our children's safety is paramount yet the province of Ontario currently exempts school bus drivers from its mandatory entry-level training requirements for commercial drivers and given that the Alberta School Boards Association is seeking a similar exemption, will the minister commit to hearing out our school transportation professionals before imposing this untested and expensive training program on our schools that, in fact, is highly unlikely to actually increase safety?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Of course, we're willing to talk to our partners, to school districts, and to other stakeholders as well. But I hardly understand how exempting school boards from the new, more rigorous standards for training actually improves safety for children. Perhaps the member could enlighten us.

Mr. Cooper: Well, Madam Speaker, there are plenty of ways to improve safety for our children and given that when riding the school bus the most dangerous occurrence for students is when impatient drivers choose to ignore flashing lights or stop arms and impatient drivers pass buses illegally – this happens so commonly that bus drivers call it a flyby . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, do you have a question?

Mr. Cooper: . . . and given that in one jurisdiction in northern Alberta they recorded a hundred incidents of flybys, to the Minister of Transportation: will you consider increasing . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, you're out of time.
The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. I think I got the gist of it here, Madam Speaker. The hon. member uses a lot of statistics and examples from Ontario. But I can tell him that we thoroughly agree with him, as do school jurisdictions and all safety organizations, that these flybys, as he calls them, are a very, very serious problem, and we enforce that most rigorously. I can tell him that that's something that we're going to continue to make sure that we monitor to make sure that our children are as safe as possible.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Unfortunately, the Member for West Yellowhead stole my question about the Grande Prairie hospital, but I thank the minister for the information anyway. I will be able to share that with my residents. But I didn't hear the minister say exactly a time frame of when the new hospital will be complete. Could she actually give us that time frame?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms. Jansen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to thank the member across the aisle for his advocacy on this. One of the great things about having him as a former colleague and a friend is that we can consider this issue postpartisan and work together to make sure we get that Grande Prairie hospital built, so I thank him for his efforts on this.

Clark Builders is going to have a construction schedule in place, as I said. They hope to begin getting those subs and the sub subs after Christmas, Madam Speaker, and then move ahead as quickly as possible. So we're pretty excited that we're going to get this project done on time and on budget.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. On time and on budget sounds good, but I still don't know the time.

Madam Speaker, given that local contractors are out millions of dollars, you know, after the last general contractor was relieved from the project and that there's no assurance that they will get to go back to work and that the answer given to them was, "We've paid Graham all the money; take Graham to court in order to get your money," well, these small local contractors are on the verge of going under, and I just hope the minister can . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms. Jansen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. That is absolutely a concern to all of us. I know that the member and I have had this conversation. I had this conversation with the president of Clark Builders and told them about my concerns. We had the conversation with the folks from Grande Prairie council, of course, who are up in the gallery. These are critical issues that we consider very important. We want to make sure that going forward everybody understands. We've got a lot of folks who have worked on this project in Grande Prairie. We want to make sure that their concerns are addressed.

And I just want to say again that in a fine example of postpartisanship, our ability to work together as a group to make sure that this gets done . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you again, Madam Speaker. The minister quoted a number, and I was a little bit annoyed because I didn't hear it. I thought I heard $765 million. That's good, but the question is: does that money just include the construction, or does that include all the money to equip the new hospital once the construction is finished?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms. Jansen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. So $763 million is the complete budget for the project. If there are any other concerns that Clark has, of course, we will address them as we go through, but we agreed to this budget in 2016 as the budget for the project. Clark has agreed that that is the budget going forward, so we are confident with someone with Clark's reputation. We know that they have an excellent track record of completing complex health care facilities and completing them on time. Of course, the Stanton Territorial hospital renewal project in Yellowknife is a prime example of that, so we're confident that . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Adoption Regulations

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Last year this House voted unanimously in support of my private member's Bill 206, the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement (Adoption Advertising) Amendment Act, 2017. This bill would allow prospective parents to be able to post profiles online and help them with the enormous backlog of families looking to complete their loving family. The bill has still not been proclaimed. To the minister. I asked you for an update on these issues on April 10. Have you finished drafting regulations, and if not, why not?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. All children deserve a safe, welcoming, and loving home, and adoptive families play a very critical role in helping to ensure that children in our province get exactly that. We share the member's commitment to ensuring that the adoption process gives both children and parents the best possible outcomes. We're currently consulting with Albertans on next steps, but we need to take the time to get this right.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, I recently received a message from a constituent, and the quote is:

I am wondering when the regulations [for adoption law] will take place as we are quite hopeful that this may give us a chance to finally find a way to adopt a child. [We've] been waiting for over 4 years to be matched.

Four years. To the minister: what do you have to say to these adoptive parents across Alberta who are desperately waiting for the proclamation of this legislation to help them finally complete their families?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Like I said, we want to take the time that we need in order to get these changes right. In order to do that, we're talking to young people, to families, to parents, to organizations and working together to look for improvements. I know the Conservatives have no problems rushing through changes to make life harder for families, but we are not planning to do that.

Mrs. Aheer: Madam Speaker, it's too bad that a partisan attack has to come on a piece of legislation that was actually, you know, passed unanimously in this House. I do believe that the questions that I'm asking are relevant to the fact that this minister has not reported back to me since April of last year when I asked what is happening with the regulations on this legislation so that families can actually go out and adopt and to increase the process to get rid of the backlog. My question is: can the minister please provide the House, then, with the date that you have instructed your department to have . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I've been talking very closely also to potential adoptive families about it. These are very complex issues, and it's incredibly important for both the children and for those families that we get it right. I know it's strange to hear we're actually taking the time to consult with Albertans rather than just talking to used car salesmen. But, you know, on this side of the House we're really committed to having the backs of those Albertans and fighting for those families and fighting for those children and taking the time to ensure that we invest best in the future for those children.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Acadia.

Educational Curriculum Redesign

Ms Payne: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Our world has changed since many parts of the current K to 12 curricula were written, with the widespread use of the Internet and smart phones as just one example. We all want our children to succeed both in school and in the modern world. How will the curriculum review ensure that Alberta children graduate with a world-class education and the ability to lead our province and economy into the future?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Certainly, we are very proud of the work that we are doing to modernize our curriculum here in the province of Alberta. Some of the subject areas were more than 30 years old, and certainly we wanted to integrate those curricula for different subjects together as well. We've had industry leaders. We've had banks. We've had energy. We've had universities, computer programmers, and the list goes on. Literally, thousands of Albertans have helped to build the curriculum to where it is today.

Ms Payne: Madam Speaker, today's students face an increasingly complex world. In my constituency I regularly hear calls for increased financial literacy, greater understanding of indigenous peoples, and a stronger health component, particularly for physical and mental well-being. How has the curriculum review addressed these critical issues?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Certainly, our curriculum for K to 4 right now, which you can see online at Alberta Education, is focusing on basic skills, those foundational skills where kids can be feeling confident about their basic mathematic skills, learning how to read, learning how to do computational thinking as a precursor to coding, all of these things working together based on a platform, a foundation, of confidence. I know as a teacher myself that when a student is confident and they're loved and they have the security from the school, that is a precondition to being successful in school.

The Deputy Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Some have been critical of the curriculum review, including saying that they would throw out all of this work. What does the minister say to that?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Certainly, we have now had consultation and interaction with more than a hundred thousand Albertans, and the conversation that we're having around curriculum is helping to strengthen, quite frankly, our entire school system. Any suggestion that the opposition would take this curriculum and all of this work and put it through the shredder I think is an indication of a basic lack of understanding of all of the work that has gone on and a basic lack of understanding of what Albertans want for a 21st-century education in this province.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, before we continue with Members' Statements, I've had a request to briefly return to Introduction of Guests.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the House for allowing me to rise to introduce my guests. It is my personal pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly an outstanding group of small-business people from an industry association I belonged to for 30 years who are dedicated to maintaining high professional standards and providing valuable diligent service to their clients. Here today are constituents of the MLA for Calgary-Bow, Brad Mitchell, the CEO of AREA, and Matthew McMillan, their advocacy adviser, as well as 30 members of the Alberta Real Estate Association. AREA represents over 10,500 realtors from across this province. They're meeting in Edmonton this week for their annual Government Liaison Days conference. AREA is a vital part of Alberta's real estate sector and an advocate for a healthy, transparently regulated market for buyers, sellers, industry members, and all Albertans as well. I'd ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce a number of guests who are here for the tabling of Bill 27, the Joint Governance of Public Sector Pension Plans Act, which I'll do shortly. They are the United Nurses association's president, Heather Smith; the Alberta Federation of Labour's president, Gil McGowan, and secretary-treasurer, Siobhan Vipond; and the Alberta Fire Fighters Association's president, Craig Macdonald. If they can all stand up.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I just would like to recognize a number of other people that have worked very hard towards joint governance on pensions for a long time on behalf of their membership. In the interest of time I'll just say their names. If they could rise as I speak their names, please. To cover off the ends here, we have Nancy Furlong, James Niven,* Karen Kuprys, Dave Climenhaga, Dave Cournoyer, Richard West, Elisabeth Ballermann, Janice Kube, Donna Price, Lola Barrett, Mike Parker, Trudy Thompson, Jerry Toews, Donna Farquharson, Chris Gallaway, Elizabeth Johansson, Marle Roberts, Doug Short, D'Arcy Lanovaz, Elliott Davis, and Tom Fuller. Thank you for your work. Please extend the traditional warm welcome.

Members' Statements

Transgender Day of Remembrance

Connolly: Madam Speaker, today is the international Transgender Day of Remembrance, a day to honour and remember those who have lost their lives to hatred and transphobia and have been victims of violence, abuse, and discrimination because of their gender identity and expression. As allies we will not waiver in our commitment to support safe and inclusive spaces. My heart goes out to every individual who has to hide who they are for fear of discrimination. To the LGBTQ2S-plus community here in Alberta: we will always be here for you, and we will always support you. No one should live in fear of violence or harassment. No one should be discriminated against, denied basic services, or lose their life because of who they are.

Being an ally takes more than empty platitudes. An ally calls out friends when they spread hatred and fear. Last week John Carpay, a man the Conservative leader compared to Rosa Parks, stood on stage at the Rebel media conference and told the crowd that the pride flag is the exact same as the Nazi flag. When asked to denounce the hate-filled comments of yet another UCP insider, the Leader of the Opposition couldn't seem to run away from his responsibility fast enough. Madam Speaker, the Conservative leader says that he's an ally, but actions speak louder than words.

Today, on Transgender Day of Remembrance, I really hope the Conservative leader takes a moment to reflect on the impact his actions are having and the damage this rhetoric is causing. We will continue to fight for LGBTQ2S-plus rights in our province, our country, and around the world. I'm so proud to be part of a government that has taken historic steps to create a more inclusive and welcoming province, including adding gender identity and gender expression to the Alberta Human Rights Act. We can honour the over 369 lives lost to transphobia this year by taking a stand against violence, harassment, and bullying and keep working towards a safe, inclusive, and welcoming place for all Albertans.

The facts are clear, Madam Speaker. GSAs save lives, LGBTQ rights are human rights, and it's time that the Conservatives got on board.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Humility in Politics

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As many of my fellow members know, after representing the good people of Livingstone-Macleod for two terms, I've chosen not to seek re-election. I want all of my constituents to know that it has been the honour of my lifetime to serve as an MLA. I worked hard to advance the cause of efficient and responsible government.

If my time here has taught me one thing, it's that this institution works best when those entrusted with the awesome responsibility of governing actively seek to remain humble. Humility in government means respecting the voters' wishes and putting the public good ahead of ideological dispositions. A humble government, for example, would not institute the largest tax increase in our province's history without an electoral mandate, without meaningful consultation, and against the wishes of the majority of Albertans. When governments fail to remain humble, they fall, to be replaced by leaders who are willing to listen.

In this regard I'm heartened by the rebirth and rise of the United Conservative movement within our United Conservative Party. Throughout the unity process there were many doubters among the chattering classes, who told us that there were too many hurdles to overcome, yet our movement was able to overcome every challenge for one simple reason: humility. This, more than any other quality, is what has been missing from Alberta politics. With his commitment to servant leadership our leader has demonstrated a deeper understanding of what is necessary to rebuild our province as a beacon of hope and opportunity. He will serve Albertans well.

Next spring I will leave this place as an MLA for the last time. Thanks to the restoration of honest humility and conservative statesmanship within the Conservative movement I will be able to do so with my head held high. I've never been so confident that Alberta's best days are yet to come.

Thank you.

Rural Crime Strategy

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Last spring I rose in this House to speak on Alberta's rural crime reduction plan. Rural property crime was spiking, and action needed to be taken, so our government listened to the needs of Albertans and in concert with the RCMP came up with a plan. That plan has already reduced rural property crime by 11 per cent. By expanding rural crime reduction units across Alberta, adding Crown prosecutors, adding crime-mapping experts, and providing more civilian support, the new tactics are already starting to make a difference. Our investments are working.

I have seen this first-hand in my own constituency of Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater. For example, not long ago break-ins were spiralling out of control in Calling Lake. Residents told me heartbreaking stories of having possessions stolen and having their privacy violated. However, a crime reduction unit was able to come to Calling Lake, and in close co-operation with Athabasca RCMP and the local community break-ins have been dramatically reduced.

It's not just my constituency where the strategy is working. The RCMP has attributed the reduction of crime across the province to the strategy. But we know that not every community has seen these reductions yet, and that's why we will keep fighting to make sure that they do.

When the Alberta crime reduction plan was voted on in the spring, I was amazed to see the UCP oppose it. This issue was more important than what side of the House we sit on. It is about making life safer for Albertans. I am grateful for the Minister of Justice's work and to be part of a government committed to reducing rural crime. But there is still much work that needs to be done. We will continue to listen to Albertans, work with law enforcement and with our local community partners, and continue with the strategy that has been proven to work to ensure that Albertans are safer.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Energy Policies

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Recently Alberta's Premier has asked the federal government to buy more railcars to ship oil to market. After years of participating in activities that hindered this very thing, it's odd that only now this government understands how important our energy industry is to this province's financial well-being. For years private energy companies have been attempting to build pipelines but have been prevented by a narrow, ideological mentality that now sees Alberta's oil sands stranded and completely land locked. Now we are in a situation where railcars are the only short-term solution to accomplish what private industry has been trying to do for years to get their product to market.

In recent years we have seen the result of displacing products that cannot be moved by pipeline in favour of petroleum products that can. When you realize that private industry was fully prepared to invest in and build the Trans Mountain pipeline, it becomes crystal clear that the need for government intervention was unnecessary had they simply gotten out of the way of private enterprise.

Another important example of this is the approach being taken with Alberta's coal plants. The early decommissioning of coal plants will cost Albertans billions of dollars and only contribute to an already out-of-control provincial debt, billions that we can only ill afford.

As a Conservative I believe strongly in smaller government, which also includes less government involvement in private industry. As a rule if something is financially viable and worth while, private investors will usually make it happen on their own.

We are now experiencing a situation that this government's ideological beliefs helped create. Well, Madam Speaker, it's only money, taxpayers' money, Albertans' money.

Notices of Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'll try again. I would like to at the appropriate time move the following motion pursuant to Standing Order 42.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to immediately release an updated fiscal projection given that Budget 2018 did not account for the delay in the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion and the Keystone XL pipeline or the significant differential in oil prices that is impacting Alberta jobs and the economy.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Bill 27

Joint Governance of Public Sector Pension Plans Act

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 27, Joint Governance of Public Sector Pension Plans Act.

Today, Madam Speaker, we are joined by a number of labour leaders who have been pushing for this change for decades. For almost 30 years these practical changes have been promised by a series of Tory Finance ministers, never to move forward. I'm proud that we are finally introducing these changes. The proposed legislation would transition the local authorities pension plan, the public services pension plan, and the special forces pension plan to a joint governance structure. This structure will give employees and employers an equal say in how their pension plans are managed. By giving equal voice to employees and employers, pension decisions will no longer happen to the owners of the plan; they will be made by the owners of the plan.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Madam Speaker, I rise to table five copies of a report prepared by Alex Markowski, energy market analyst, EDC Associates Ltd., at the request of the Independent Power Producers Society of Alberta, that demonstrates that the Balancing Pool was not consistent with the managing of terminating the PPAs in a commercial manner, thus resulting in the loss of almost $750 million to the Balancing Pool and approximately $2.9 billion to the electricity generators of this province, further confirming that the NDP government has been manipulating electricity prices.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other tablings?

Hon. members, I have a tabling, five copies of the November 19, 2018, House leaders agreement on Oral Question Period and members' statement rotations.

Point of Order

Offending the Practices of the Assembly

Questions outside Government Responsibility

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we have a number of points of order. I believe the first one is for the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have got a matter of two points of order today relating to the same incident but relating under the same section, referring to the Standing Orders of the Alberta Legislative Assembly, section 23(1), that "A member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that Member . . . introduces any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly."

Now, there are two flowing from this, one of which I have the benefit of very clear precedent from Erskine May Parliamentary Practice, 24th edition. The other I would request that your office investigate. I have not had the benefit of finding the specific section that would be considered in violation of "any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly."

During the first set of questions the Leader of the Official Opposition asked the Premier – I do not have the benefit of the Blues, if you'll forgive me – to get oil producers in Alberta to come together to cut production. In my first section of this I do believe that there are established precedents that it is out of order or, in the words of our standing orders, "introduces any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly," that it is, in fact, a violation of the precedents and practices of this Assembly to call for breaking the law.

Now, the law I refer to is the Competition Act of Canada, sections 45, 46, and 48. I will just briefly read these sections into the record.

45(1) Every person commits an offence who, with a competitor of that person with respect to a product, conspires, agrees or arranges

- (a) to fix, maintain, increase or control the price for the supply of the product;
- (b) to allocate sales, territories, customers or markets for the production or supply of the product; or
- (c) to fix, maintain, control, prevent, lessen or eliminate the production or supply of the product . . .

46(1) Any corporation, wherever incorporated, that carries on business in Canada and that implements, in whole or in part in Canada, a directive, instruction, intimation of policy or other communication to the corporation or any person from a person in a country other than Canada who is in a position to direct or influence the policies of the corporation, which communication is for the purpose of giving effect to a conspiracy, combination, agreement or arrangement entered into outside Canada that, if entered into in Canada, would have been in contravention of section 45.

Then section 48 elaborates on this.

In short, sections 45, 46, and 48 of the Competition Act are quite clear that other than under supply management organized industries it is illegal for any business in Canada to actively collude on price-fixing and production-fixing. It is illegal. I would seek your wisdom, Madam Speaker, in determining if it is in violation of the practices and precedents of this Assembly for a member to actively advocate breaking a major federal statute.

The second part of what I'm referencing here is also under section 23(1) of the standing orders of this Assembly: "introduces any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly." For this I will turn to – forgive my pronunciation.

Mr. Mason: Erskine May.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Erskine May. I'll have to take it from Obi-Wan here.

Chapter 20(3) under Outline of the Business of the House of Commons, Order of Business:

It is not in order in a question to ask for action to deal with matters under the control of local or other statutory authorities, or of bodies or persons not responsible to the Government such as banks or companies (except where there is a government shareholding), the Stock Exchange, employers' organizations and trades unions; or to ask for action regarding or information about the activities of such persons or bodies which Ministers have no power to perform or obtain. Questions, however, have been asked about information which the Government collects on such bodies.

Now, our government may own a pipeline, but that is federal. Our government does not own these oil companies. Therefore, it is out of order and against the practices and precedents of this House to be asking the government to intervene in private businesses or to be asking questions about interference in such businesses, as outlined in chapter 20(3) of Erskine May.

There are very good reasons for these precedents and rulings here. Competition is fundamental to the functioning of any free-enterprise economy. In the absence of socialism or free enterprise we get crony capitalism. Crony capitalism arises when we have private interest at public expense. To have the government actively engaging in price-fixing, which we already see in supply management areas, to see the government actually engage in limiting competition among businesses in Canada is beyond my understanding of how it could be in any alignment with free-enterprise principles.

These are important laws that we have in the Competition Act to prevent exactly this kind of crony capitalism that emerged in the early 20th century. I would ask . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I think you've explained your point of order. We're starting to move into a debate, and that's not the point of a point of order.

Mr. Fildebrandt: These are important laws. I would seek your advisement if it is in contravention of the practices and precedents of this Assembly to advocate breaking the law and, further, to deem if the questions are in order, period, from chapter 20(3) of Erskine May relating to questions beyond the scope of the government.

The Deputy Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. There's a lot to possibly be said for that rant, but I don't really know if it's worth this House's time, quite frankly. It's the first time I've ever seen, though, a member rise in this House on a point of order and then outright admit that they can't find anything inside any standing orders along the way that show that they have a point of order and then ask the Speaker to conduct – at one point there it sounded like he wanted you to conduct a criminal investigation, civil investigation; I don't know – some sort of investigation, which, of course, is not your role, which I'm certain you will explain shortly to the member.

With that said, let's be very clear. The Leader of the Opposition did not call for anything illegal in his question. He was very clear that any sort of voluntary things that are undertaken by corporations in this province to deal with the crisis that we now face would have to be within the laws of the land. He was clear inside the Chamber and outside the Chamber on that fact. I think it's really ridiculous and unbecoming of the member to accuse – I would point of order this, but of course I can't point of order in a point of order, Madam Speaker – a member of this House, the Leader of the Official Opposition, of attempting to do something illegal or criminal. It's extremely rich, I would say, coming from that member in particular.

I will close with this. It is a matter of debate, clearly, and this member should stop wasting this Assembly's time.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. I have sort of a mixed view on this point of order. I'd like to start by responding to the Official Opposition House Leader's critique of the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks' point, that he didn't have any legitimate citations. I don't think that's true. He argued that under Standing Order 23(l) a member may not introduce "any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly."

Then he went on to allege that the questions violated certain sections of the Competition Act. Now, that's a worthwhile point of discussion, but I'm not a lawyer, and I'm not versed in competition law. I don't know if the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks is, but I think it would be very hard for anyone, including yourself in the chair, Madam Speaker, to make a ruling with respect to the legality or illegality of any statement that the Leader of the Official Opposition may have made. In that sense, I'm not confident that we can dispose of this matter through a point of order here in the House. I do think it's an interesting point. I think, quite frankly, that the Leader of the Opposition is guilty of a number of transgressions. Whether or not he has violated the Competition Act is something I will leave for others to decide.

With respect to that matter, I don't believe that this is actually a point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the point of order?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Can I just add something?

The Deputy Speaker: No. You have already spoken, hon. member.

I will rule that this is not a point of order and just make the comment that simply because a member in the House states that something is illegal does not necessarily make it so, and it is not the role of this Assembly to determine how the law should be applied. Notwithstanding, it was an interesting argument. I appreciate the time and effort you put into it, but it is not a point of order.

Moving on to the next, the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j) in regard to a response from the Premier to the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition today in question period. There was an exchange taking place in regard to pipelines and the history of pipelines in this province. The Premier got quite upset with the Leader of the Opposition and then implied that he was not telling the truth and was essentially lying to the Chamber, which I think is disappointing. I think it's further even more disappointing when, in fact, the Leader of the Opposition gave direct quotes that make it very, very clear that the Premier did speak against Northern Gateway, did speak against Keystone and at no time supported it, which, quite frankly, is shameful. I understand why she would be ashamed of that now, but her telling the Leader of the Opposition that he was lying or not telling the truth is extraordinarily disappointing, particularly given that all of her comments are on tape.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. In respect of this matter, this gets to the approach that's been adopted by some members opposite, including the House leader and the leader, of twisting statements that have been made by people in the past or in the House in the present tense. The allegation that the Leader of the Official Opposition made was something to the effect that the Premier had urged – and I don't have the Blues – had communicated on behalf of the province of Alberta to the federal government with respect to the disposition of matters relating to the Northern Gateway pipeline, and that is absolutely untrue and is not proven by any of the suggestions and quotes that the opposition has made.

This is a question, I think, that we need to be a little bit careful about. It's a fine point to provide some quotes. All of us in this place have evolved in our views, and I want to say that this government has done nothing but act responsibly with respect to the question of pipelines. And to take statements from the past and twist them into something that they are not is, in fact, something that is at variance with the truth. If you twist something enough, it becomes an untruth, and I think that the Premier was making that point. I believe that the Leader of the Official Opposition does say many untrue things in this House, and I think the record can show that.

It's up to you, Madam Speaker, to decide whether or not the form that she used to communicate that concept, that view, was parliamentary or not. I believe that it was entirely parliamentary. She did not suggest that the Leader of the Official Opposition was lying.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the point of order?

Hon. members, I have reviewed the Blues. The hon. Premier did not accuse the Leader of the Official Opposition of intentional falsehood or lying. As noted in Beauchesne's paragraph 494, "it is not unparliamentary . . . to criticize statements made by Members as being contrary to the facts." Again, this is a difference in how things are interpreted and not a point of order.

I'll just mention that the third point of order was withdrawn.

Do you have another point of order, hon. member?

Mr. Nixon: We're on mine, then? I'm just making sure that we're on the same page.

The Deputy Speaker: It's yours, yes.

Point of Order

Addressing Questions through the Chair

Mr. Nixon: I will give you some reference points. Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, sixth edition, page 142:

It is the custom in the House that no Member should refer to another by name. Members should be referred to in the third person as "the Honourable Member for" A Minister is normally designated by the portfolio held: "The Honourable Minister of"

So Health or something along those lines.

Also, Madam Speaker, in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, third edition, 2017, on page 510, under the section dealing with Principles and Guidelines for Oral Questions, it also says very clearly: “Finally, all questions and answers must be directed through the Chair.”

I rise on a point of order in regard to a response by the hon. minister of the environment to the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. The hon. minister of the environment was frustrated, as emotions sometimes get high in this place, which is fair, but certainly was not speaking through you and, in fact, was hanging over her desk pointing at the hon. member extremely aggressively. You’ll see from the Blues that, again, Madam Speaker, this is what this government does.

Ms Phillips: That’s not true.

Mr. Nixon: It’s very true, and the tape will show that. In addition to that, she was definitely, the Blues will show, talking directly to the member and then, later on in the answer to the question, turned and started to speak directly to the Leader of the Opposition, who was not even in the exchange of the question. It’s not within the practice of this House. This has come up several times. The right thing to do is to apologize and withdraw – again, emotions get high – and move on.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I would suggest that – and I don’t have the Blues, but it wouldn’t surprise me in any question or answer in this place that some members occasionally lapse into referring directly to the person they’re engaged with. That happens on both sides. I don’t know if that happened in this case. But in terms of the minister of the environment looming over members way over on the other side, there are not very many people that she actually looms over, if I may say, certainly not the Opposition House Leader, so I reject that characterization. Obviously, emotions were running high, but to suggest that there was some threatening or intimidating body language: I was watching the minister when she made her answer, and I reject that characterization completely.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the point of order? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to add my two cents to this conversation, for whatever it’s worth. In fact, conversations were a little bit heated earlier today in question period in the exchange between the minister of the environment and my hon. colleague from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. She did lean, not loom, over her desk in a very aggressive manner, not speaking through the chair in any way, shape, or form. We’ve had this discussion yesterday and previous days during this session already, and the government continues to refuse to speak to and through the chair instead of directly and aggressively towards members opposite in this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I have the benefit of the Blues, so I do know what was said. As to any kind of motions or allegations I will have to say that the hon. minister of environment is one individual who in particular engages very, very much through the Speaker at all times, so I don’t believe that there would have been any kind of threatening or any direction against another member in this House. It’s again a good reminder that we don’t do that, but there’s no point of order.

On the last point of order?

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you . . .

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Madam Speaker.

Point of Order Exhibits

Mr. Mason: The hon. member opposite just showed his phone with a picture that he claimed showed the minister of the environment in the incident we’re talking about. If that member is taking photographs of other members in the House, it’s a gross violation of the rules.

Mr. Nixon: Madam Speaker, the hon. member – I just checked with his phone – is not taking photographs. Again, talk about accusing members of something they didn’t do. The member was pointing and showing his colleagues pictures of the environment minister at a protest. That’s what he was referring to his colleagues.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I will also remind you that it isn’t appropriate to be waving around props, whether it’s your phone or whatever it might be. It simply incites disorder. Again, that’s not a point of order.

Can we get to the final point of order? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Point of Order Preambles to Supplementary Questions

Mrs. Pitt: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to make a point of some of the actions on behalf of yourself that happened during today’s question period. There was not one, not two, but three speakers of the Official Opposition that were interrupted by yourself during their questions when there were very, very clearly appropriate connector words in all of these sentences. Furthermore, when members of the government, not one, not two, but three, did extremely similar questions, although not really hard-hitting like the Official Opposition’s, you didn’t interrupt one single member. In fact, you did give a warning – I’ll give you that – but it was at the end of the question, whereas when it was members of the Official Opposition, you cut them off and in some cases didn’t let them actually resume the question. I would just ask that you call it fair and square for all members of this House. I think that speaks to the order that this Assembly should have, and I think that is something that Albertans expect to be happening in this Assembly. I ask that you call it fair and square from now on.

Mr. Mason: Well, Madam Speaker, that would normally be considered completely unacceptable by the Speaker. In this place you can do one of two things if you’re not happy with the Speaker’s ruling. One, you can rise under the standing orders and ask the Speaker to explain the reasons for a ruling. Otherwise, you can make a motion of nonconfidence, which then immediately triggers a vote, and if the vote carries, the Speaker is removed from their position. I think what we just heard from the deputy whip in the opposition was completely contrary to the rules and practices of this House and a real cheap shot, quite frankly. I’m surprised that it’s allowed.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I know that the hon. Government House Leader is trying to characterize this as something else, but my understanding is that the hon. deputy opposition House leader rose under 13(2), which allows us to ask the Speaker to explain a decision that the Speaker made. That was the context in which I heard the question, and I think that since it's within our standing orders, it's not nearly as offensive as what the Government House Leader would try to paint.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members – and I do appreciate Calgary-Hays for that clarification – I did indeed take the comment under that. That was my perspective, that it was questioning my ruling. However, the member is just cautioned for another time to make sure that you do clarify that and quote your source, that that's what you are trying to do because it's far too easy to come across as something that you just don't do in this Assembly, questioning the Speaker's ruling.

I will just say that I reminded everyone at the beginning of question period, at the beginning of question 4 that there were to be no preambles on supplementaries. You're all aware of the time limits, and that's the way it is. How you want to interpret that, what the content of that question is is a different matter, but we have time limits, and we have rules, and the rules say: no preambles on supplementaries. That's the end of that matter.

Motions under Standing Order 42

The Deputy Speaker: Moving on, I believe we're at Standing Order 42. Yes. Go ahead, hon. member.

Budget 2018 Update

Mr. Ellis:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to immediately release an updated fiscal projection given that Budget 2018 did not account for the delay in the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion and the Keystone XL pipeline or the significant differential in oil prices that is impacting Alberta jobs and the economy.

Mr. Ellis: Wonderful. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It certainly is with great urgency that I'd like to propose the motion. I'd like to certainly explain my reasons for this urgency; I may call it a crisis. You know, MLAs are being asked to vote for programs and make fiscal decisions without a clear understanding of the province's finances. Budget 2018 did not account for the current oil price differential. The government repeatedly insisted that their budget is based on two out of the three pipelines being built. In fact, I'd like to note Hansard, Energy's estimates on April 9, 2018, where the Energy minister said: "We need, as I mentioned earlier, two out of the three pipelines. If Kinder doesn't go, we still have [Keystone] XL and line 3. Like, we need two of the three."

I'd also like to mention the Q1 update, August 31, 2018, by the Finance minister, who said, quote: two out of the three of them are necessary to happen; Keystone XL – I think if you look at the budget book, page 104, it shows that it can take a lot of capacity far into the future, so it's an important pipeline for sure. Unquote.

The Finance minister also indicated, in a media availability on April 10, 2018, quote: we built pipeline revenues into our path to balance projections; we're confident all the pipelines will be built, so we're just going to keep going down this road. Unquote.

I'd also like to mention that this expectation was built into the budget for this government. The fiscal plan, page 48, says, "The Enbridge Line 3 replacement pipeline is anticipated to start operations by 2019, while the TransCanada Keystone XL and Kinder Morgan Trans Mountain Expansion pipelines are expected by 2021."

Also, Madam Speaker, fiscal plan, page 84:

Beginning in 2021, additional revenue resulting from the federally-imposed carbon price tied to the construction of the Trans Mountain Pipeline will be used to support vital public services as the province stays on track to balance the budget by 2023-24.

Now, this month's court ruling, Madam Speaker, delaying Keystone XL and the ongoing delay of the Trans Mountain expansion put this budget expectation into serious doubt. The fiscal plan assumed that these pipelines would be built and still put the province on track for $100 billion of debt.

Debt under the PCs that I was a part of during that last six months of their 44-year reign: the 2014-2015 actual was, I believe, $12.865 billion. I certainly will note that there was no borrowing for operations in that particular plan, and it certainly was the start of the oil crisis that we have currently been facing over the last number of years.

Now, the 2018-2019 budget estimate is looking at $54.220 billion in debt, and that's a 321 per cent increase. The 2021 budget target of . . .

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we have a point of order.

Point of Order Speaking to Urgency

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, section 42 of the Standing Orders specifically says that the member who's introducing such a motion can explain the urgency of it, but the hon. member is not doing that. He's giving a recitation of various financial documents that the government has tabled, but I don't see or hear an argument for urgency. He's essentially arguing his case, which should only happen after unanimous consent is given.

Mr. Nixon: Madam Speaker, the Government House Leader may not have noticed, but the Speaker last time, in a discussion about a similar type of motion, allowed a government member close to 18 minutes or so, roughly, if you check Hansard, and our member at the same time about 14 minutes. I do think that it is fair that the member should shortly get to the point of urgency on that, but I think the Government House Leader should just let him finish saying what he has to say, please.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, it's not just strictly the amount of time that's taken; it's the content and the direction that it's going. I'd encourage you to get to the point and explain the urgency of the debate, please.

Mr. Ellis: Yeah. You know, Madam Speaker, I certainly mentioned in the first part of my submission the urgency of the debate.

Debate Continued

Mr. Ellis: I will conclude by saying this. The people of Alberta, I believe, have a right to know, and the differential in the oil prices is at a national crisis level, affecting and impacting people, not just businesses but real people throughout this province. I think that it's important that we urge the government in a nonpartisan factor so that they can explain to the people of Alberta what this differential in oil price is having on the impact of the budget of this particular government, including, of course, the delays in the Keystone XL pipeline as well as the delays in the Trans Mountain pipeline, where we are not seeing a single inch of that pipeline being built. It is at a crisis level that we are asking and urging the government in a nonpartisan factor to ensure that we as the people of Alberta know what is going on in regard to this financial crisis.

Thank you.

3:30

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, there's been a request for unanimous consent under Standing Order 42.

Bill 19

An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education

[Debate adjourned November 7: Mr. Hanson speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's always a pleasure to rise in the House and speak to legislation. Today is no exception as we go forward speaking about Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education. Earlier this session the Minister of Advanced Education tabled Bill 19 in the Legislature. Among other things, starting in the 2020-21 academic year, this bill proposes to legislate an inflation-based cap on increases to domestic student and apprenticeship tuitions. The bill proposes that the cap be based on the annual change in Alberta's consumer price index. If passed, the act would amend the Post-secondary Learning Act to implement the province's revised tuition framework.

Also of note, Bill 19 originally gave the minister power to regulate noninstructional fees and international student tuitions. The Advanced Education minister, through this bill, would also have the power to dictate a tuition freeze but in the event of a required increase in tuition, as said a minute ago, would be unable to raise said tuition higher than Alberta's consumer price index. Also, exceptional tuition increases on individual programs will be determined by regulations set by the minister.

Another alteration that the legislation proposes: changes in student representation on boards of governors, by having two student representatives at all institutions. If the school in question has a graduate program, the number of student representatives on a board of governors would be three.

It is clear that the students' groups will likely be quite taken with the fact that tuition fees would have a cap on them. This is something that advanced education students in Alberta have been asking for for quite a while. I'm sure that the students' groups would also be onside with the increase in the representation on the board of governors. Madam Speaker, this is great. Students need a voice, and they're receiving a little more of that voice in this bill. I guess it could really be stated that the major stakeholder of postsecondary institutions is the students that use those facilities, so when we talk about governance of those that actually are attending the college or university, being more fairly represented at the table where decisions that may actually affect them are made, I think, should be well received by the students.

Bill 19 also allows colleges to transition to university status without legislative amendments, which of course will streamline the process should this action be required. Madam Speaker, in my elected cycle I've had situations similar to this being brought forward by folks from the town of Drumheller who wanted to be involved with Red Deer College.

The bill also makes a few changes to the names of the different types of postsecondary institutions. Also, there will be some level of predictability to institutions if Bill 19 receives royal assent. All in all, the legislation does indeed constitute a lot of changes, but I think that for the most part the changes follow what students and the institutions have been seeking for some time.

Now, I guess one of the perhaps negative parts of the bill is that the Minister of Advanced Education, upon passing of this bill, originally would have too much discretion over noninstructional fees and international student tuitions. But with the amendment that was passed in the Committee of the Whole, I'm glad to see that student councils will have to sign off on this now and that if a board chooses to raise it, it will be to just cover the costs. It won't be profit driven. We will have to watch to see what the final result actually ends up looking like with regard to international students.

I myself did not seek a university education, Madam Speaker, although I did attend Red Deer College for one year. There were some courses there – I think in slang we called it beer drinking 101. I lined up my life's work after that entirely on my decision, on my own direction. But my son went to college, went to NAIT, and has worked diligently on his oil field instrumentation certificate although with the downturn in the oil patch, he's come back to our family farm and now manages that. He manages that to a great degree, and I'm very proud of his leadership in that position.

Madam Speaker, as parents we certainly weren't rich parents, far from it. What we had we earned by hard work and saving and appreciated the opportunity that the government of the day allowed us. I'm sorry I digress in that regard, but I can say that my wife and I worked very hard and did without in many cases – I think my wife would probably attribute that in greater volume than I do – so that our son could have the ability to explore another career if he so desired. My family is extremely proud of that option that our son has. That is always a good start for a child, and I think most would agree. We also did the similar situation with our daughter who now works in the city here for Enbridge and has escaped many of the corporate layoffs to date.

As much as I had paid for our children's education and had a child or children enter the postsecondary system, I guess I did not realize what instructional fees, at the time, actually were. I had a brief interlude of that myself, but I did not know what they now cost. My wife or I just wrote the cheque.

As a result of that, I looked up what noninstructional fees were at the University of Alberta. This is what I discovered. Those fees at that institution include student health and wellness fees, a student academic support fee, students' union membership, students' union dedicated fees, student union health plan, student union dental plan, a physical activity and wellness centre fee, and a U-Pass fee, which provides eligible students unlimited access to regular Edmonton, St. Albert, and Strathcona county transit fees for fall, winter, spring, and summer academic terms. This fee is assessed to all students registered in on-campus courses in the fall and winter terms. There is also an athletic centre recreation fee. The list is quite onerous. For an on-campus, full-time student those fees add up to just under $1,000. That alone is a substantial fee, especially for a student.

I understand that with the passing of Bill 19, should there come a time when a new fee in this area is proposed, students will have the opportunity to approve those fees, and if approved, they won't be costed for profit. As an aside, I don't necessarily blame the institution that levied those fees. They have to recover their costs. At the time they were finding that their streams of revenue were sort of drying up, so any way to recoup those expenses, in my opinion, was a requirement, some might say a form of a business requirement, in order to keep their heads above the financial water. I think you'll find out that students should be pleased to see that the regulations will now include certain caveats to those noninstructional fees, because, Madam Speaker, student fees, as I just pointed out, can certainly be a significant cost to students.

Something else that is good to see is the fact that the minister has said that the Alberta institutions will be required to tell international students exactly what those tuitions may be or would cost for the entire length of their degree-earning process. Those numbers have been kind of up in the air in the past for both the institution and the student.

A provincial tuition freeze has been on for some time in Alberta, and the institutions were not able to increase general tuition, which would of course have increased the costs to international students. It was kind of a tight spot for an institution to be in, once again because sources of revenue for institutions were getting to be a smaller list. Without getting into the politics of the institution, as a person looking at this with no skin in the game, how else would the university proceed? The university was not able to use either domestic tuition or the government grant to subsidize international tuition fees, so the international students were somewhat being used as a revenue source themselves. I'm not saying that was good or bad; I'm only hoping to infer reality, merely a business decision again to stay above the waterline.

Once again, the minister has made it clear that international students will now know exactly what their education will cost them. It stops tuition for those international students from rising unexpectedly during their educational programs, which makes a lot of sense, very frankly. I believe that that will also be a part of regulations, so we will of course be watching to see what those regulations actually look like when the time comes.

Now, Madam Speaker, here we are in the fall session of the Fourth Session of the 29th Legislature, six to eight months out from a provincial election, and we still have one issue, one that constituents bring up on a regular basis to me and my caucus members. That issue is the carbon tax, and the carbon tax, as far as further learning institutions in Alberta are concerned, is becoming a large financial issue. It appears that it may become an even larger issue if and when the carbon tax increases. You talk about revenue streams drying up and institutions needing to cut some of their expenses in order to keep their tuitions in line. This falls into that discussion. Sixty-six per cent of Albertans have a terrible taste in their mouth because of that tax. They feel betrayed because the government forgot to mention the fact that if they were elected, they would submit Albertans to a tax which would change their way of life in a negative way in this province.

I know, Madam Speaker, that we're talking about Bill 19, and to stay on that track, trying to address affordability without postsecondary education – but I wonder if the minister has considered just how much the carbon tax costs these postsecondary institutions. I've heard some pretty large numbers bandied about. For one of the larger institutions in Alberta, in fact, it was well into the seven-digit numbers. Just like a farmer or a small-business man in Alberta or the average homeowner that has been forced to pay this tax, that was not part of the government's campaign, institutions were levied a carbon tax as well, I'm sure, in some cases severely injuring their cost-profit line. If the institution in question did not have that seven-digit carbon tax to pay annually, would the bottom line of that institution or of every institution that is forced to pay the carbon tax, for that matter, not be in a better position than they find themselves in now? It would of course be better for the students than those facilities, better for the students' bottom line as well.

Universities and colleges don't heat themselves in the winter or cool themselves in the summer without the added expense of the carbon tax. Bus passes for students to get to or from their chosen institution of learning don't continue to go up for no reason at all. The city is forced to increase fees like that because it costs more for the city to run those buses as a result of this unadvertised tax. While finding legislative ideas that make education more accessible and affordable for our students is a gallant effort, let's not forget that one tax that really does weigh on the bottom line of our educational institutions.

In rural areas it also weighs on our school divisions, especially in the rural areas that have long distances to transport their children to education. Let's not forget who actually gets to pay that tax that makes life more difficult: the Alberta taxpayer, Madam Speaker. There's only one taxpayer in Alberta, the guy or gal that is always in the sights of the government finance guru that is always looking for more money. You can only go to the well so often. Perhaps government, considering that these publicly funded institutions in Alberta should get a break from that money-grabbing tax, could ease a lot of financial problems for those places that we send our children to for their further education.

Let's also not forget that when the carbon tax bill was before the House a couple of years ago, the Official Opposition stood in this Legislature and made that very recommendation to the government, that recommendation being that the government should not be adding cost to a student's further education by levelling the carbon tax on our postsecondary institutions. We pressed amendments to that bill. We talked about it in just about all of our speeches, and I think everyone in this House and all Albertans remember that this government went ahead, levied that tax, which has been making life more difficult rather than necessarily better for those that choose, in this case, Madam Speaker, further education.

And look, we in the Official Opposition certainly understand how hard students work to get a postsecondary education. It takes a lot to get a student through to graduation. Madam Speaker, I know that times two.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and speak to Bill 19, An Act to Improve Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education. Being a very proud graduate from the Campus Saint-Jean at the University of Alberta, I truly understand the importance of an excellent postsecondary education. I truly believe that I received the best education, and I know that I would not be here today without the lessons that I learned during my time at the Campus Saint-Jean. I had the opportunity to study political science, which helped to prepare me for my current position. The education I received shaped my future.

The Campus Saint-Jean is a very unique campus at the University of Alberta, that offers courses taught in French and offers a francophone learning environment. It is within Edmonton's francophone quarter. If any of you guys in the House haven't taken an opportunity to go and see the University of Alberta's Campus Saint-Jean, I would really welcome that you go and take a tour. I consider the Campus Saint-Jean as the crown jewel of the University of Alberta's crown, offering a fantastic opportunity for all those that study there and live nearby.

Part of the reason that I chose to study at the Campus Saint-Jean was an affordability factor. It was partially due to the fact that I was able to qualify for a substantially larger number of scholarships and complete my bachelor's degree without any debt. Being from Fort McMurray, I didn't qualify for student loans, and this was my opportunity to be able to complete an education. I was able to graduate without any debt, also due to the fact that I was able to get a very well-paid summer job through my time in university working at oil sands operations, which gave me both real-life job skills and much-needed funds to help pay for my high-quality education in French here in Alberta.

Now, there are many benefits of postsecondary education, and there are many postsecondary education institutions throughout Alberta, including seven in Calgary. In total those schools have about 88,000 students and more than 10,000 full-time employees. There are some major economic benefits for the Calgary region. Calgary Economic Development puts a dollar figure on the economic impact of Calgary's seven postsecondary institutions at about $8.6 billion in additional income for the region in 2014-2015. That is a substantial amount of additional income. Over a lifetime the economic impact of higher education for the students, the taxpayer, and society in Alberta is in excess of $180 billion. The study concluded that taxpayers benefit from a 17.6 per cent rate of return on investments in Calgary postsecondary institutions. It also determined that for every dollar invested, $3.50 was generated in economic benefits. That's a pretty good return on investment. The total impact of research activities at the seven institutions in Calgary totalled $663.3 million, including $278.6 million in productivity gains.

Postsecondary education also provides a lot of societal gains; it's not just about economic impact. There's ample research that suggests that individuals that have been to a college, a university, or a postsecondary institution are more likely to engage in many civic activities, including volunteering at a higher rate, higher levels of donations, voting at a higher rate. They generally have a lower unemployment rate and are less likely to require social assistance in general. Furthermore, university graduates tend to rate their physical and mental health higher than those with fewer years of postsecondary education and are actually less likely to smoke. Happiness and life satisfaction also tend to increase with the number of years of education.

We are very fortunate in Alberta to have many postsecondary institutions throughout this great province offering a variety of programs and areas of study. For example, in Fort McMurray we have Keyano College. It was opened in 1965 as the Alberta Vocational Centre and reopened in 1975 as Keyano, which is a Cree word that roughly means sharing. Keyano has grown significantly over the years and has a series of campuses throughout the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, with their principal site at the Clearwater campus in downtown Fort McMurray and regional campuses in Fort MacKay, Conklin, Janvier, and Fort Chipewyan. They offer specialized courses and training to more than 2,800 full-time students and over 13,000 part-time students in a variety of learning opportunity methods, including classroom, online, and blended delivery models.

Back to the bill. One of the positive aspects that this bill includes is increased student representation on the board of governors. This has been something that I've been hearing about since I was a university student, and I'm happy to see that the government included this within Bill 19. I know that this was one of the number one asks at the U of A Students' Union back then, and I don't think that's changed.

Furthermore, the revised tuition framework truly increases stability and predictability when it comes to how much students will pay for university. This is something student groups have been pushing for for many, many years. It really helps with planning year over year, and I hope it will help to increase the number of students who are able to complete their education. I had a few friends that had to delay their plans for university due to the fact that tuition had increased substantially. I know first-hand just how hard students work in order to obtain their education, many working one, two, or three part-time jobs just in order to make ends meet. In fact, I've got friends that worked full-time jobs just to be able to make ends meet. I can't imagine how difficult it was for them. I was very grateful to only have to work one part-time job through university.

I'm very pleased to see that the minister has said that postsecondary institutions will be required to advise international students what their tuition costs will be for the length of their programs. This stability will help to attract international students, who add so much to our learning environment. Campus Saint-Jean has a vibrant international community, with many students originating from a variety of countries such as Morocco, Lebanon, Côte-d'Ivoire. Their experiences and traditions truly added to my overall education that I received at Campus Saint-Jean.

Furthermore, I'm happy to see that the regulations will now include the noninstructional fees and not just tuition fees. The fees can be ever-increasing, and sometimes it's just a few dollars that make a big difference.

Our priority in government overall should be to ensure that our postsecondary education system has longevity. We need to ensure that students can continue to advance their education and contribute to our society. However, this government has been bombarding students with policies that make it more difficult to go to school.

Let's look at some of the struggles added on to students through the carbon tax. The cost in a typical Alberta household of a $30 a tonne carbon tax is about $667 a year. That's more than the cost of a single standard course at a postsecondary institution in Alberta. One course. That's the carbon tax price. At $50 a tonne it's about $1,100. That's almost two standard courses at a postsecondary institution here in Alberta. There's also the increased cost of utility payments, fuel prices. It truly raises the cost of everything. Furthermore, it takes millions of dollars out of the pockets of our schools and postsecondary institutions, making postsecondary institutions look for other ways to be able to raise funds. The cost of the carbon tax to postsecondary institutions is quite large. This government still needs to address just how it plans to help postsecondary institutions pay for these large, increased costs.

Then, Madam Speaker, there's also the issue of a $15 minimum wage, which negatively affects many students. Minimum wage hikes negatively affect employment amongst low-skilled and young workers at a much higher rate. Furthermore, evidence has shown that on average a 10 per cent increase in the minimum wage decreases youth employment by between 3 and 6 per cent. That's truly a lot of students. Furthermore, one academic study, for instance, found that minimum wage hikes actually increase the share of families that fall below the relative poverty line, which suggests that low-income families are hurt even more by the reduced employment opportunities emanating from minimum wage hikes. Most students need to find jobs to work at when they're in school, and many students that I have spoken to work, like I said, full-time hours just to support themselves. The reduced economic opportunities for our youth are creating large barriers for those trying to receive an education.

These two concerns also affect the potential for new graduates to find work here in Alberta. Alberta's unemployment rate is at 7.3 per cent, the highest of all provinces outside of Atlantic Canada.

Furthermore, Calgary has an outstandingly scary unemployment rate of 8.2 per cent, making it the second highest in the country.

The increased costs on our job creators limit the number of growth positions. We've heard many cases of small, medium, and large employers that have slowed their growth and aren't hiring as many employees due to the increased cost to their operation. Employers are more likely to cut hours and freeze hiring if their costs are continually rising.

Furthermore, with the seven credit downgrades since this government took office three and a half years ago, it means that we are paying more for interest and we're paying more to service our debt at an ever-increasing rate. Truly, the list goes on.

Under the NDP's current plan debt will climb to nearly $71 billion by 2021, and someone's going to need to pay that back. If we want our future generations to succeed, we can't keep passing our mismanagement on to future generations. If we want our postsecondary institutions to remain viable, we must rein in our spending so that we can continue to support a good, high-quality education here for all Albertans. The government needs to make sure that they're creating an environment so that current postsecondary students have meaningful employment upon their graduation.

Now, amongst all of these poor decisions made by this government over the last three and a half years, I'm grateful that this government has brought forward this piece of legislation. It's a step in the right direction when it comes to ensuring the longevity of postsecondary institutions. It also ensures that we continue to have world-class postsecondary education offered right here in Alberta. Education has numerous benefits for our economy, for our society, our communities, and it is one of the reasons that our province is the best place in the world to live.

I would like to thank all of the students that have contributed to this very important bill. We will continue to consult with you in order to create the most efficient and highest quality education possible.

I hope all members have heard my arguments, and I look forward to rising in the House in support of this bill.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to rise today and speak to this bill. You know, this bill was one of the primary reasons why I got into politics in the first place. Actually, the hon. minister was one of the first – well, at that point he was still a candidate – people that I met who was invested in politics as well.

Now, we all know that postsecondary education is so vitally important to the health of our communities. Indeed, it's often associated with seeking better income for you later in life. It's also associated with strengthening our citizenship here in our community. So I am so happy to see that this bill finally comes forward.

One of the reasons why I am so happy to see this come forward is that prior to running as a candidate myself, I was involved with the MacEwan NDP at a time when the then government, now the opposition, was cutting the funding to postsecondary education. And, worse, they were cutting funding to education immediately after they told postsecondary education that they were in fact going to raise funding by 2 per cent. This put everybody in a very nervous position because nobody knew what was going to happen.

I knew so many students who had already had their programs phased out halfway through a degree. One of them started studying Middle East and African studies. He was barely able to find the credits through the rest of the institution to pass with that degree. This was at a time and we still are in a time where studying the Middle East is so vitally important to our foreign policy and to our trade around the world. You know, it seems every time I check a newspaper or watch the 6 o'clock news you hear something about Saudi Arabia or Turkey or Syria, and this is so important for us as a community to understand.

I'm very proud to serve with a government that is not just protecting and investing in postsecondary but is indeed ensuring that more and more people have access to affordable postsecondary education. You know, I myself, right out of high school, first went to NAIT for graphic communications, and I finished that course. I actually recently ran into one of my former instructors, and she was very happy, although a little bit confused about how I ended up as a politician, to hear how one of her students was progressing in their career.

But many of my classmates could barely afford to attend class. You know, I was very fortunate. My family lived in the area, so I had the opportunity to stay at home while I was in school, and that meant that I didn't have all of the expenses of rent. My parents always made the agreement that as long as I was in school, I wouldn't have to pay rent. I was responsible for my own books and such, of course, but I wouldn't have to worry about rent. But many of my classmates were living three or four people in a two-bedroom suite, in a basement suite in fact, just so that they were able to afford to get an education. When I was at NAIT – this was a one-year course – I was always amazed at the dedication to pursuing education that a lot of my classmates had.

Later on, of course, I went to MacEwan and studied political science, and while some people will claim that I dropped out, I didn't drop out. I am currently in a class about leadership and governance, you know, deep into the research on that paper, which has been fascinating.

It's so important for the province to ensure that we have accessible postsecondary education and that we have predictable postsecondary education because the more people that are able to pursue a postsecondary education, the stronger our economy is, indeed the stronger our democracy is. I am so proud to finally see that we will have predictable tuition rates in this province. This is something that is long overdue.

You know, so many of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle have talked about the advocacy of CAUS and all of the other student organizations, but this is something that we were calling for long before that. Predictable education was something that we were talking about when we were on the steps of the Legislature protesting an, effective, 9 per cent cut to the budget of our institutions.

An Hon. Member: It's going to hurt.

Mr. Horne: And then we have members opposite talking about how their proposed cuts are going to hurt. We'll see how that ends up if they ever form government again.

I am very happy to support this, and I hope all of my members do as well. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Advanced Education to close debate.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise and close debate on Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education. I want to thank all of my colleagues for their interventions in the debate on this matter. I think there have been a number of issues around the affordability piece that have been well canvassed, that I won't repeat.

There are some things about the bill, though, that I do want to highlight that haven't been mentioned so much; namely, around enhancing the accessibility of education, particularly around creating a pathway to university status for Red Deer College and Grande Prairie Regional College. Those were requests that were made by those institutions to this government as well as previous governments for years, and I'm glad that our government has taken upon itself to finally grant that request. That will go a long way to providing educational opportunities, university degrees to the students in northwestern Alberta and in central Alberta who for whatever reason cannot make the trip to Edmonton or Calgary to pursue a university degree there. I'm quite proud that our government has finally taken action to allow Red Deer College and Grande Prairie Regional College to grant their own university degrees.

In addition to that, Madam Speaker, this bill recognizes the university status of the Alberta College of Art and Design. It only makes sense that an institution that grants university degrees be called a university by name, and this legislation, of course, grants that title to that institution. I think the students of that institution will be better off having graduated from a university than from an institution that was formerly known as a college. It creates less confusion. Getting a university degree from a university causes far fewer questions than getting a university degree from a college, and I'm quite pleased that we've been able to rectify that situation.

In addition, we are changing the governance structures significantly of MacEwan University and Mount Royal University. This was work left undone by the previous Conservative government. In order to be recognized among their peers as universities, universities need to have governance structures that their peers recognize. This bill changes the governance structures of MacEwan University and Mount Royal University. It allows them to create for the first time general faculties councils, which are the standard way of governing academic affairs at universities all across this country. It will also grant MacEwan University and Mount Royal University the ability to appoint chancellors and grant honorary degrees, which are the most prestigious awards that universities can confer on somebody, Madam Speaker.

This will enhance the reputation of those institutions in the eyes of their peers across the country. We hope that by doing that, we will allow graduates of MacEwan University and Mount Royal University to pursue graduate opportunities at universities across the country that weren't quite sure what to make of MacEwan University and Mount Royal University with the structures that were in place before this legislation was brought forward to this House.

In addition, of course, we are increasing the student representation on the boards of governors of colleges and technical institutes across the province. It's the case that universities have two undergraduate representatives on their boards of governors, so in our minds it's only fair that technical institutes like NAIT and SAIT and community colleges like Medicine Hat College, Keyano College, Olds College, Lakeland College, among others, have two representatives on their boards of governors. Madam Speaker, this government has the backs of students. We believe that students are the most important stakeholder in the postsecondary world. By enhancing their voice in the governance structures of their institutions, we give them a lot more say and power over their education, and we think that that is going to be a benefit to the students.

You know, with respect to strengthening student voice, of course, we have done a lot to enhance students' control over the cost of their education. Not only are we providing them with a guarantee that the cost of their tuition won't increase more than the consumer price index here in Alberta, we are also giving them a say over whether or not they are charged new mandatory noninstructional fees, Madam Speaker. The past practice of university administrations springing mandatory noninstructional fees upon students by surprise has come to an end, and we are pleased that we are finally giving students the power to say yes or no to those fees.

We believe that students won't be unreasonable in rejecting these fees. Students accept that a university or college education has a cost attached to it and that the cost should be shared between the taxpayers of Alberta and the students themselves. They just want those fees to be fair and reasonable, and they want to know what the money is being used for, Madam Speaker. That's why this legislation will bring in unprecedented transparency around the use of mandatory noninstructional fees and give students the power to say yes or no. If those mandatory noninstructional fees, of course, pass the reasonability test that I think students will impose upon them, I am sure that students will be happy to accept those and reasonably have a significant amount of control over the cost of their education.

In the remaining time, though, I want to address a larger issue that I think was highlighted in this debate. Even though both sides of this House are voting in favour of this legislation, Madam Speaker, it's not true to say that we both share the same vision for postsecondary education in this province. On our side of the House ever since we were elected in 2015, this government has provided significant financial support to universities both in increases in operating grants as well as increases in capital grants. When we took office, the former Prentice government, of course, was set to make significant cuts to higher education institutions. We reversed those cuts. In addition, we provided them with a 2 per cent increase in their operating grant that year, and we've provided them with 2 per cent increases in their operating grants every year since.

One of the issues, of course, that has been raised by some of the stakeholders when we've consulted with them about this legislation is their concern over constriction of revenues. In fact, some of the members opposite have raised that concern. It's true, Madam Speaker, that this legislation will constrain the revenues of institutions. In order for us to have a strong public higher education system in this province that remains affordable for the students of this province, it means that the government has to commit the additional revenues on the operating side of the balance sheet that are constrained on the tuition side.

Certainly, it's our belief that the taxpayers have a significant responsibility to provide high-quality higher education opportunities to every Albertan regardless of their financial or geographic circumstances. That's, in fact, the bargain that we're making in constraining institutional revenues in the way that we have and guaranteeing affordability for students in the way that we have. In order for us to continue to have a high-quality higher education system in this province that meets the needs of all Alberta students, it's now incumbent upon the government to make up the difference in operating revenues. We've done that in the past, and you can rest assured, Madam Speaker, that under this government in the future we will continue to meet our commitments to providing high-quality higher education by ensuring that every university and college has the operational revenues that they need to provide that education.

In fact, Madam Speaker, if we were to implement the policy suggestions that we've received from our colleagues across the floor, we would limit the quality of higher education in this province. Some of the members opposite, of course, when they were in the former PC caucus, presented a shadow budget that presented a $400 million cut to the higher education budget of the government of Alberta. Of course, now they're voting in favour of constraining the tuition revenue that would be available to the institutions through the tuition side of the balance sheet, which means that that will reduce the number of opportunities for Alberta students to get a high-quality education. That means fewer classroom spaces for university and college students. That will mean fewer programs. That will mean reduced opportunities, like I said, for Alberta students.

In fact, Madam Speaker, we believe that that's the wrong way to take the province. We've got one of the youngest and fastest growing populations of any province in the entire country, and we need to invest more dollars in our higher education system, not make $400 million cuts to the budget of the higher education portfolio, in order to have a well-educated population that is competitive in the global marketplace but also has citizens who are well prepared to engage in the public life of our province.

I don't want anybody out there who's just casually observing this debate to think that because both sides have voted in favour of this legislation, we have similar views on how to enhance higher education in this province, because nothing could be further from the truth, Madam Speaker. We have very different views on how higher education should be operated in this province. Our government, through our past actions and through this legislation, is committed to continuing to provide opportunities for every single Albertan, regardless of their financial or geographic circumstances, through increasing the operating grants of each university and college and guaranteeing the affordability by preventing significant tuition hikes.

In addition to that, Madam Speaker, a tangential theme that's arisen over the course of the debate is on how best to support students outside of the framework of the higher education budget and tuition legislation. Certainly, we've heard a number of concerns around youth unemployment, and we believe that youth unemployment is a significant problem. We certainly recognize, like many have, that students have to work hard to pay for their education. That's indeed true. In fact, our government has made significant progress in providing increased opportunities for students to pay their bills while they're going to school.

We reinstituted the STEP program, that was cut by the previous Conservative government, that gave thousands of students summer jobs at decent wages that would allow them to pay their tuition, Madam Speaker. I was a beneficiary of STEP student programs while I was in university. I certainly wouldn't have been able to afford the tuition had I not been privy to those opportunities, and many students in Alberta would also be in the same boat if we had continued on with the decision of the previous Prentice government to cut that program.

In addition, it's remarkable to me to hear members of the Official Opposition wonder in amazement at how hard students have to work, that they have to work two or three or four part-time jobs to make ends meet, and then in the same breath say that we need to cut the minimum wage. Madam Speaker, the only thing that that would result in is the need for a student to go out and find a fifth or sixth or seventh part-time job to make ends meet. It's our government's belief that we're supporting students by giving them a decent minimum wage that provides them the ability to pay their bills and make their way through school. It's astounding to me that in one breath we have members opposite marvelling at how hard they have to work and then in the next breath saying: "You know what? We think you should have to work a lot harder to be able to pay for school." That's not acceptable, and that's why our government will continue to make sure that we have a decent minimum wage to support students so that they can make ends meet and pay their way through school.

The other thing that they've brought up to support students is a reduction of the carbon tax. Madam Speaker, of course, eliminating the carbon tax is a magic bullet that the UCP offers for every problem. I don't know. If we've got wildfires, reducing the carbon tax would somehow help with that, or if the sun is shining too brightly, maybe reducing the carbon tax would help with that as well. But it's ludicrous for them to insist that by cutting the carbon tax, we're going to make . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 22 An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered in regard to this bill? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 22, An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities. I'm extremely honoured to stand here as the United Conservative Children's Services critic and to participate in this important event.

Madam Chair, I honestly don't think that there is a single person that I've talked to in my role, in my privilege that I have as an MLA, who hasn't been deeply, deeply affected by what happened to Serenity. It's such a tragic story, and it broke the hearts of so many Albertans. It was a clarion call to action for all of us here in this Assembly to fix this extremely broken system that failed this little girl. So many of us here are parents, and while you don't need to be a parent to be heartbroken and angry about Serenity's death, I know that the parents in this room have put themselves in her mother's shoes many, many times. I know that I have. I can't even begin to tell you how that makes me feel. I think I can say on behalf of many people that heartbroken and angry doesn't even come close to describing how we feel.

There was a great deal of advocacy from this side that pushed towards striking the child intervention panel. When the panel was struck, I think all of us were hopeful that things would happen that would help to make sure that this would never happen again. I was so deeply honoured to have been asked to serve as our caucus's critic for Children's Services, especially coming on late to the panel, and being able to participate for even a short while was a tremendous privilege. I would deeply, deeply, from the bottom of my heart like to thank the hon. members for Calgary-Hays, Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, and Airdrie for the incredible work they did preceding my ability to be able to join that panel. I'm forever grateful for the time and energy and advocacy that came from them on this panel.

Coming in at that point in time, it was so disappointing to find out that during the panel discussions the panel wasn't permitted to investigate the circumstances around Serenity's death, which, in my understanding, was why we were there in the first place. It was the whole reason there was a new ministry created. The panel members were barely even allowed to speak her name, Madam Chair.

Then the question is: how are you supposed to figure out how a system has failed Serenity – or anybody else, for that matter – and her siblings, I might add? How were we supposed to see where and how she fell through the cracks if we weren't actually able to ask the questions? How, then, are you supposed to make changes in legislation to ensure that this incredible tragedy doesn't happen again?

Like I said, I came into the panel quite late in the game, and the assumption when I went into the panel was that these discussions would be very, very intense and deep and strong and digging into the weeds as to what had happened here. But that's not what happened. I think the concern is that I certainly don't have answers to those questions. The panel doesn't know the answers to those questions because we were not allowed, Madam Chair, to ask those questions.

I have to say that, based on the legislation that we have here before us, I don't think the NDP has the answers to those questions either. There is nothing in this legislation that would prevent a similar tragedy from befalling another child in care. That's a tragedy. It's concerning because in the legislation there's no reassurance to Albertans that the government has identified – and this is the bigger issue here, Madam Chair. How do we identify how this happened so that we're actually taking steps to prevent that from happening again to somebody else's daughter, somebody else's baby?

There is nothing here in this legislation that truly gives me faith that the NDP was ever serious about fixing this broken system for good. Serenity was subjected to sexual abuse, starvation. She was hypothermic. She had a fractured skull. Her caregiver said that she had fallen from a swing. Now, the heartbreaking information that came from this, I think, changed everybody in this House. It's disappointing that we are not able to figure out a way to make sure that this doesn't happen.

However, I would like to outline what I also believe are positive changes in this legislation. One of them is that there has been a loophole that has been closed that previously permitted private guardianship applications to be considered without a home assessment completed by a qualified social worker. That is a very good step in the right direction.

I'm also pleased to see the bill replace the word "survival" with the word "safety" throughout the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. At the end of the day, Madam Chair, don't we want to do so much more for these children than merely ensuring their survival? I would hope so. Albertans and families are looking to us to not only put a roof over their heads but to protect them from harm and to also nurture them, to help them to grow and lead happy and productive lives. These are very complex situations. There's nothing simple about this legislation. There's still so much to be done on that front, but at least a change in the language that clearly communicates that goal is a step in the right direction.

Another positive change that Bill 22 proposes is to implement the child intervention panel's recommendations that the legislation governing the child welfare system be more culturally sensitive when dealing with indigenous families and children and the communities.

The bill is not without its merits, Madam Chair, far from it, but the problem is that we have the bad far outweighing the good. The call to action that was brought forward by the opposition: the action is not there.

One of the more important things that we need to bring up – and the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre brought this up on several occasions – was with respect to the publication ban. Why is it that this legislation does nothing to address the publication ban that is currently in place when a child dies in government care? This was brought up over and over and over again on this side of the House. In fact, the publication ban was another thing that the panel wasn't even allowed to consider. We weren't even allowed to ask questions about that. Why?

The ban shrouds the entire system, Madam Chair, in secrecy, and it just absolutely takes away from any ability to have public accountability. Isn't that why we were here in the first place? It's why we were here in the first place: public accountability, making sure these tragedies never happen again, making sure that the government was accountable not only to the people but to the children that they have in their care. Yet we're not even allowed to ask questions about that. Isn't the lack of transparency with respect to system failures the whole reason why we're here debating this legislation? The implementation of the legislation has to be strong, and it has to have calls to action. So something has to be done to ensure that any publication ban prescribed by the legislation serves in the best interests of the child and not in the best interests of the department. The child, not the department.

There are a number of other recommendations coming out of the panel's work that don't feature at all in the legislation, which leaves me with one glaring question: why? Why isn't the government falling all over itself, Madam Chair, to implement these recommendations in an effort to provide the very best child intervention system that it possibly can? That's what we're talking about. Instead, we get a few improvements, but largely we are left with the same broken system that failed Serenity. The answer that we're getting from the government is that this is just phase 1 of three, but if there are not strong pieces in this legislation that show us that we're heading in a direction that will actually protect a child, then why are we here?

This is unacceptable to me. Quite often in this situation all you can do is imagine what that little girl went through, a little girl padding across a trailer in the middle of the night in her bare feet, trying to find food to eat and was not able to get food to eat and then was beaten for taking food and was sexually assaulted and weighed the size of a very small baby by the time she was taken into care. That's the picture that needs to remain with all of us when we're actually carving out this kind of legislation.

Despite a few improvements, it's very difficult to support this legislation.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I hesitate to interrupt. I just want to remind all the members in the House of section 23(g) of the standing orders of sub judice. This matter is currently before the courts. If we could just refrain from getting into any detail specifics that may create issues.

Mrs. Aheer: Absolutely, Madam Chair. I don't think I'm really aware of any other details other than the ones that have been released, but thank you for the reminder. I appreciate it.

I need to mention, though, while we're talking about this, that the assumption is that after Serenity passed away, you move on to doing a panel discussion. Yet we have more children in care.

I'd like to describe a particular case. All of us received this from the office of the Child and Youth Advocate, Madam Chair. This is a young adult, actually, now. His name was Dakota. It's happening right now. So Dakota at the age of three was found with cigarette burns on his body. Cigarette burns. Then he was placed four more times before his fifth birthday. Then from five to seven years he was moved three more times, multiple times. Then after that he was returned to his parents, who were unable to take care of him, and then taken back from his parents and put into foster care. At that time he was assaulted by an older peer, sexually assaulted, and that was one of several times that he was sexually assaulted. This is in 2018. By the time he was 14 he had moved 14 times.

This is happening now, after a year and a half of a panel discussion that has happened and no implementation of legislation that is helping out Dakota. This has happened. This boy has died.

We're talking about complex needs with all of these children, too. They're coming from extreme trauma, Madam Chair, and they need access to experts. So many people even have a difficult time in knowing how to deal with these children and the trauma that they have faced.

This legislation does not honour Serenity, and it does not honour Dakota and all of the other children that are listed in the office of the Child and Youth Advocate, so I would urge my honourable colleagues on the government benches to go back to the drawing board and come back with comprehensive legislation that will work to keep kids safe and reassure Albertans that what happened to Serenity and Dakota and all of the others – I could list all of the names for you – doesn't happen again. What we have to do before us today is simply make sure that we do that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I would like to move an amendment. I have the requisite number of copies here with the original, of course. I shall wait for you to receive them.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, please go ahead. Your amendment will be referred to as amendment A1.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, ma'am. I would like to move that Bill 22, An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities, be amended in section 4 by renumbering the proposed section 2 as section 2(1) and by adding the following after section 2(1):

(2) Nothing in subsection (1) shall be interpreted as derogating from the obligation to report a child in need under section 4.

Madam Chair, the amendment before you addresses one of the aspects of Bill 22 that concerns many of us in our UCP caucus and, may I say, almost everyone in this Chamber, and that is the lack of accountability in this act for adults involved with children in need of intervention. The wording of this motion may look somewhat familiar to some members of this Assembly. If so, it's because you have seen the concept before in a private member's bill that I have brought forward at least two times now. While its official name last time it appeared on the Order Paper was Bill 216, I've always referred to it and many have referred to it as Serenity's law. I'm hoping that the members here today will take a new look at the changes proposed under Serenity's law and agree with me that this should become part of Bill 22 here today.

Madam Chair, if I could explain as to why. This bill has been called An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities, and this amendment will, in my opinion, do that. It does so in a clear and a very simple way. This amendment would at least attempt to make all adults responsible to contact authorities if they know a child is in need of intervention. It seems so simple. In the spring of 2017 I promised a young lady who was Serenity's mother that I would do my best as a legislator, as an Albertan, to convince my colleagues in the Legislative Assembly to implement this simple change that would save the lives of children here in Alberta. We know it's too late for this little girl, Serenity, but we all know that she's here with us today in spirit.

Her mother, who we have remained in contact with, you know, told us only a few weeks ago that when this bill was introduced and she actually read this bill, it's reinforcing many of the things that are already in place, but it's really the component of my previous bill, which was Serenity's law, that would actually make a difference in the intervention of saving children right here and right now and something that we all can do today and certainly be proud of when we go home later on this week. That's why I've drafted this amendment, you know, given the parameters and restrictions that I had to deal with.

Madam Chair, let me just say that the intention of Serenity's law was to offer an avenue to call the police. Everyone knows how to contact an officer if they certainly believe that they may be or somebody may be in danger. But we cannot do that in Bill 22. Instead, I'm bringing forward this amendment to underline the responsibility of adults to contact the authorities. I want all of us here today to take pride in actually doing something, what I believe would be of really, truly concrete value, that will save the lives of children, again, here today and right now.

On December 12, 2016, when I first proposed this concept to the Premier, the Premier of this government told me that Serenity's law in the Chamber here is exactly the kind of practical idea her government was looking for to improve the child intervention system. I took that as a sign of good faith, that in a nonpartisan fashion we would do something in the common interest that would benefit the children of Alberta, which, I would say, everyone here wants to do. Bill 22 was supposed to make improvements, but in my humble opinion this falls a little bit short.

If you won't listen to me, I hope you're able to listen to the mother of this little girl, who, as my colleague has just previously pointed out, was horribly abused in the system. You know, she knows this amendment is being presented. We've contacted her. Just a short time ago she sent an e-mail saying that this would have saved her daughter. This is the type of amendment that if an adult, everyone in Alberta, was aware of the responsibility to make sure that the authorities are notified, that they cannot turn a blind eye – they cannot turn a blind eye – when a child is at risk and they know that they have to contact the authorities, there would be consequences. There would be a responsibility. She said that this would have saved her daughter. This is the type of legislation that would have saved this little girl. We know, as my colleague just pointed out, that there are so many other children in the system that are vulnerable and currently at risk. We can make it better, Madam Chair, and not just for Serenity but for others.

You know, this amendment will help children who perhaps should've been in the system but never got there because adults knew these children's lives were in danger and never notified anyone of authority. Examples that we've used in the past in this Chamber – little Alex, little Ryan, little Ezekiel – all died tragically in their homes. There are many other children out there at risk right now who can be saved by adults today. In all those cases there were other adults who were aware that these children required immediate intervention, yet a blind eye was turned. Those adults were never ever held responsible. I don't think there's anyone here that would not—I certainly challenge anyone to stand up and say: no, adults do not need to be held responsible when a child is at risk. I believe that an adult has to be held responsible. These are little children that we're talking about here.

If I could just take a moment here and explain what this amendment, at least we hope, will accomplish. At this time there's a section in the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act that requires adults to contact a director of child intervention if they know of a child being at risk. But as we've demonstrated in this House in previous questions in question period, it's not that easy to know how to even contact a director when a child is at risk; hence the importance of this amendment that we're trying to put forward here. In the case of Serenity and Alex and Ezekiel and Ryan other adults were aware of the dangerous plights that they were facing and should have been held legally responsible for not contacting the authorities. Far too many times in Alberta children have died in horrible circumstances that could have been prevented if an adult had only spoken up.

Madam Chair, I know there was a concern during the previous bill in regard to the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police. I had spoken to the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police. What they had had, if that makes any sense, was an old bill, an original draft, and the bill that I had presented was something that they were supportive of. It talks about a "person who has reasonable and probable grounds to believe that a child is in need of intervention shall forthwith report the matter to a director" or in this case a police officer. Although this is not exactly the same, it certainly is a variation that we can present that will still resemble what we are trying to achieve, which is to let Albertans know and adults know that it is not acceptable to turn a blind eye to a child who is at risk. It is not acceptable when a child is in need of intervention to look the other way.

Now, I promised Serenity's mother that I would never give up on seeking justice and protection for children. For the sake of this little girl, who would have been around eight years old if she had not been killed, for the sake of her surviving two children, who suffered similar horrors and are now, you know, certainly, still facing the trauma having to live through what they had gone through, and for all children, Madam Chair, who are at risk today, I and my colleagues here would like to say again that we wish that everyone in this Assembly would pass this amendment that would help children today, something that we can actually do today to ensure that adults in Alberta are made aware that they are going to be held responsible, that they cannot turn a blind eye to a child who is at risk, a child who requires intervention. It is not acceptable anywhere, and it is certainly not acceptable in the province of Alberta.

I hope we can work in a nonpartisan fashion, and I certainly encourage all members of this House to pass this amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? I will see the government side and then follow with the opposition side. The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Chair. Having just gotten this amendment, I am right now digesting it and looking into it further and really reading into it. But I want to reference and look at some of the comments that were made by the mover of the amendment when he talked about comments that came from the Premier in relation to practical ideas. I think that that's sort of the journey that we charted for a long time.

I want to address something, Madam Chair. This was not a New Democrat issue. It was not a PC issue. This wasn't a Social Credit or United Farmers issue. This wasn't a Liberal Party issue. This has all been created over time by successive governments in the entire history of our province, even to the day when this province was part of the Northwest Territories. The situation that we found ourselves in is as old as Confederation in some respects. This journey became something that took a very long time for us to digest, and it was really around the moment of us trying to find those practical ideas.

I want to reflect, as I look at this amendment and many of the items that have come forth to us, about the journey that we've gone on and how we've gotten here and how we've gotten to this bill and how we've talked about the context of it as well as the context of amendments that we are moving forward here, including the Member for Calgary-West's.

We all remember the day when we were talking about this in the House. We all remember the day when we struck this panel. The journey that this was was something that I couldn't fathom in 2015 when I entered politics that I would be going down. It was something that I could not fathom that I would be going down when I was announced as one of the five members of the ND caucus to serve on the panel. To try to avoid some ways to personify this, it's something that grew legs, and that was something in a very important fashion. There's something very complex, as we've talked about, in the different phases in which the recommendations of the panel has brought forth. We know that this is something that's going to take time, that we are charting courses for, that we are charting timelines in regard to it.

When it was struck, it was unique in that we had a lot of experts that were coming onto it. We did everything that we could to make sure that the elected officials could do their job to represent constituents but that we ensured that we were consulted with the expertise we needed at the table, so I want to thank Senator Laboucane-Benson, Dr. Choate, Mr. MacLaurin, and Tyler White, who joined us during this process.

First we looked at the complex needs of the reporting of the child deaths and how we reviewed them and the review process, and then as we started, we went into this process that we thought was going to be a six-month process. We had timelines approached, and at first all parties kind of went together. We looked at it, and many of us thought that it was going to be what it was going to take. But as we started to pull back the layers, we started to look at what legislation was going to be needed and what we were going to have to bring forward and whether the member's amendment was going to be needed for this.

We started to hear more and more stories. We started to hear about the complexity of what this was. We started to learn that this whole thing delved deep into reconciliation. We all talked about the number, but it was something that really hit us to heart when we first went into consultation with some of the technical briefings, when we were hearing that over 66 per cent of children who were in government care were indigenous children.

So while we wanted to make sure that we served all children of all backgrounds, we recognized that there was a disproportionate number of kids that were in government care. From there we had to look at how we addressed this. Going into the spring and into the summer, we started meeting locally with some urban indigenous groups who were doing a tremendous amount of work, who were seeing tremendous amounts of success, some with government support, some despite government support. They were having successes, and they were having amazing stories. We were hearing first-hand from families. We were hearing first-hand from kids who were in care.

It was also a journey for us to learn, and, to be frank, I don't think we will truly completely know. We'll always be learning. This is a process that has gotten us here over the last 150 years. We started to learn about reconciliation, what that meant to our child intervention system and how initial government intervention with children through residential schools and through things like the '60s scoop got us to generational trauma and how kids who were in government care were children of other kids that were in government care and that this was a systemic problem that went generations after generations.

In that process I remember one of the most moving things that I did was when we did the blanket exercise as a panel, and I want to thank the members from the Alberta Party and the Alberta Liberal Party who did this journey with me. It was one of the most moving things I have ever done. I broke down in tears when it was over because I could not stop thinking about my own kids during this whole experience. I remember the elder came up to me and he gave me a hug and he said: we're all healing. That was very moving because I think sometimes the advice is that in our own lives and our own experiences we're always going down a journey where we're healing, whether it's trauma that we've experienced as children, stresses in our jobs, in our lives, stresses of being parents or breakdowns in certain families. Many of us go down a position in which we're healing. To be frank, as we sit here on the government bench and as members sit on the opposition bench, we all sit collectively in this Legislative Assembly. We are healing. We're healing from a problem that we have caused over time as a collective province that we need to work together as a collective province to solve.

It was very informing to go through this, and even though it was something that carried on for over a year, which was something unprecedented that we didn't expect, it was deserving for it to do so. It was something that we needed to take into serious consideration and to move forward on, and it was something that we needed to do to make sure that we addressed the systemic challenges that we saw for all kids. We had many focuses in mind, but at the end of the day the focus was about protecting the children, about protecting individual children.

One of the things that I think is addressed through some of the concerns I heard from the previous speaker is the fact that we've enhanced safety in the wording of the legislation. We made sure that we're moving some of the interpretation to make sure that the safety of the kids is paramount in the practices that our child intervention system and our workers within the system do and that as the children move through the process, they're put in the centre.

I remember when we were talking about traditional indigenous teachings, about what many different nations believed, whether some were Dene Tha' or Cree or Blackfoot, which are traditional to the province of Alberta, but many other nations that come from other areas, the Métis community as well, but also a lot of our indigenous communities that come from abroad who have chosen to settle and to live in . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member.

Mr. Sucha: . . . Calgary, whether it's in our urban settings or our rural settings.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you, but could you – I think maybe we could speak to the amendment.

Mr. Sucha: Yeah. Absolutely.

The Deputy Chair: Okay.

Mr. Sucha: Going into it, we've talked about, within the amendment, looking at obligations in relation to reporting. Within the reporting, as I was tying into this, we talk about the children being in the centre. It's the community as a whole that needs to discuss and communicate with each other the safety of those children, and we need to provide the resources and supports to make sure, as we're noticing challenges that exist within a community, that the community is empowered to have those processes to communicate with families and with parents, to be able to have the resources and services that they provide.

When I look into this, I'm questioning whether the reporting situations are addressed within some of the things that we've heard from the previous panel because some of the things that we heard in relation to the children being in the circle and having a child in the circle is that the community is able to collectively take care of a child. When you allow and you address cultural sensitivities and you make sure that we recognize these things that are important, does reporting become necessary when we provide the resources to put that child in the centre?

Now, I'm still digesting a lot of what we've been hearing over time. I'm always open to any conversations in relation to this.

It's also empowering. Are we addressing this within some of the extra steps that we've taken within the social work? Are we addressing this amendment and the concerns around obligations of reporting by ensuring that the social workers are properly resourced? Those are some of the things that we've heard and some of the things that we've looked into.

I know I've gone really kind of deep into the nuts and bolts of this process. I think it's something that, for every amendment that goes through this House, including the hon. Member for Calgary-West's, we have to look at and we have to give some serious consideration to, as was discussed. I look forward to hearing some more of the debate.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment A1? The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to thank the member for bringing this amendment forward and your colleagues for participating on the panel. Certainly, you know, there were some very strong recommendations that came out of that panel that, after many recommendations having sat unfulfilled on a shelf for decades, we were able to turn into an action plan, an action plan that we know is going to make a real difference for families and for children.

Certainly, in terms of the legislation and the action plan, you know, we have been able to work, thankfully, with our Child and Youth Advocate, who is a strong voice on behalf of Alberta's children, as well as Dr. Cindy Blackstock, who is clearly very well known as a strong advocate for children. Both said that they were quite impressed with the work that we're doing.

Having said that, safety is incredibly, incredibly important. Certainly, within the act we've stressed safety quite strongly. Making sure that all relevant authorities are notified is definitely something that I continue to stand behind. The act currently allows for that to happen, but, you know, again, safety for children is so important that any additional clarifying language would not be out of order. I'm happy to support the amendment that reinforces the work that's already happening on the ground.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I rise on the amendment put forward by my colleague from Calgary-West. Let me say that it sounds like the government may support this, and I appreciate that. I don't mean to sound ungrateful, because it's a good thing that they're doing that, but we need to remember that this is short of what is Serenity's law, but it's what we thought we could fit into the legislation as it's written today.

Anything positive that will have a chance to make children more safe is a good thing. Certainly, in the committee that came to these recommendations for the legislation today, it was a battle to get there. But we did get to a place where there was a ministerial panel that we were on, and it was an all-party one, and I'm grateful for members of all sides of the House for the time that we spent together. I would agree with some of the previous speakers that the panel, in my view, operated in a nonpartisan way and worked together for the benefit of children.

I would also say that one of the biggest disappointments for me then and still today is that while there are many children in Alberta that need to be protected and looked after in the system – and the reason that we need to look at the legislation is to make sure those children can be looked after in the system, but the inspiration for the change really was Serenity's situation.

Madam Chair, I know we were asked to be careful what we say because it's before the courts, but I can assure you that I don't know anything that hasn't been in the newspaper yet. There's nothing I can talk about that hasn't been in the newspaper yet because I don't know anything that hasn't been in the newspaper yet. There is the problem: we weren't able to talk in the committee. In the committee we actually weren't even able to talk about what was in the newspaper, let alone what wasn't in the newspaper. Consequently, we haven't gotten to the place where we can say that no child will ever suffer the fate that Serenity did again.

Speaking of the media, let me just say that I've got to just take a minute here to thank now Senator Paula Simons, that actually, really did very good work to bring Serenity's case to the consciousness of Albertans, and I'm not sure how – I'm just going to give credit where it's due. Now Senator Paula Simons, then journalist Paula Simons, really deserves a lot of credit for bringing this to our attention, and it was a long journey getting to even talking about this.

I'm certainly going to support this amendment, but the fact is that no one watching or hearing this should think that this deals with everything that was material to Serenity's situation, because it does not. The ministerial panel wasn't allowed to discuss this stuff. Every time that anybody tried to raise it, it was called out of order, and we had to stop talking about it, which was a constant frustration for me and still is a frustration now and will be until whatever point in time we can actually talk about what happened there and talk about what we need to change to make sure it doesn't happen again.

The little bit I think I know from the good work of, again, primarily Senator Simons now is that Serenity was in danger, people knew about it, and no one phoned the police. So at some point I would like to get to the point even past this. Where my colleague from Calgary-West wants us to go is to get to the point where we would have in place what he calls Serenity's law, and this isn't it. It's a partial step towards it, and I thank my colleague from Calgary-West for that because I know it is the best that he could do within the framework of the legislation that the government has presented. But I will be happier when we can come back to this place either now or under a new government or even at some point in the future and pass Serenity's law because I think we actually need to get there, where it's not just an encouragement to phone the police when a child is in danger but it's actually a requirement.

Here's the problem: when somebody gets referred to the director or the minister – and certainly I believe that the minister's intentions are good. I believe that a director's intentions are good. But the fact is, Madam Chair, that in the real world when something goes wrong to the point where a child is in danger, a child has died, a child is injured, it's human nature for people to think: wow, am I going to be in trouble? Then, of course, the human mind naturally goes to: "Well, what if nobody knew? Then maybe I won't be in trouble." While we'd hope that that will never happen, it would appear that in Serenity's case that did happen. Somebody – I don't know who or how many – knew something and didn't go to the police. Consequently, the tragic abuse that this little girl suffered continued until she was no longer alive.

I'm with my colleague from Calgary-West that I will be more satisfied when we get to the place where it's not a choice to call the police but it's an obligation. Again, while this is a positive step towards that, this doesn't get us there. This doesn't get us there.

Madam Chair, there's a lot more to talk about in this bill, and I intend to have more to say. In fact, I've got quite a bit more to say about this. But because I'm enthusiastic about this issue, I'm doing my best to restrict my remarks to the amendment, which is why I will finish speaking now and then why I will feel it necessary to get on my feet again on the main motion, because this is way too important to not talk more about. Well, I'll just say that the amendment is good, I'm going to support it, and I'll say the much more that I have to say thereafter.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1?

Seeing none, I will call the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill. Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to introduce an amendment on behalf of my hon. colleague the Member for Calgary-Elbow to Bill 22, An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities. This amendment strengthens and reviews the provisions of this bill in section 30 by tasking a committee of stakeholders, MLAs, and all parties with the review instead of only an unspecified list of MLAs. It has been shared and revised with the minister's office.

While this amendment circulates and for the benefit of the viewers at home, I'll read the section of the bill this amendment seeks to replace.

131.2(1) A special committee of the Legislative Assembly shall periodically conduct a comprehensive review of this Act.

(2) The special committee shall submit to the Legislative Assembly a report that includes any amendments recommended by the special committee within one year after the special committee starts its review.

(3) The first review must be started within 5 years after the day this section comes into force.

(4) Each subsequent review must be started within 5 years after the day the report on the previous review was required to be submitted.

Would you like me to continue as the amendment is being circulated, Madam Chair?

The Deputy Chair: Yeah. Please go ahead, hon. member. One point of clarity, sorry. You're moving it on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Elbow?

Mr. Fraser: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Your amendment is referred to as A2. Please go ahead.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you. The Member for Calgary-Elbow to move that Bill 22, An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities, be amended in section 30 by striking out the proposed section 131.2 and substituting the following:

131.2(1): In this section, "review committee" means the committee appointed under subsection (2).

(2): At least once every 5 years, a comprehensive review must be undertaken of this Act by a committee appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

(3) The review committee must be composed of

- (a) one or more persons representative of
 - (i) Indigenous communities,
 - (ii) guardians and caregivers of children, and
 - (iii) providers of services to children and families, and

- (b) one or more members of each caucus represented in the Legislative Assembly.

(4) The review committee must submit to the Minister a report that includes any amendments recommended by the committee within one year after commencing its review.

(5) On receiving a report under subsection (4), the Minister shall lay the report before the Legislative Assembly if it is then sitting or, if it is not then sitting, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting of the Legislative Assembly.

(6) The first review must commence within 5 years after the day this section comes into force.

(7) Each subsequent review must commence within 5 years after the day the report on the previous review was required to be submitted.

As you can see, the amendment keeps the five-year period and adds indigenous communities, guardians and caregivers, service providers, and a member of each caucus to the review committee. The amendment also requires the review to be made public. The proposed structure of the review committee itself echoes the structure of the Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention and will hopefully be informed by the panel's learnings.

I've heard from my colleagues in all caucuses about the impact that the panel has on their way of thinking and how we protect children in Alberta and how we work together in this House. In my own work as a paramedic in rural Alberta I've seen the devastating impact that our previous colonial practices have had on indigenous communities and families through continuing intergenerational trauma and violence. We have a responsibility to address those and many other challenges as a part of the truth and reconciliation journey. I hope this amendment can contribute to that in a sustainable way.

My colleague from Calgary-Elbow has made it clear that this province's further work to protect vulnerable children must be done in a nonpartisan way, that we cannot exploit children for political gain. He also made it clear that the work of future Legislatures on this topic must include more representative stakeholders at the table. That's why it's important that we ensure future work to protect children proceeds in an inclusive and nonpartisan way. This amendment moves us towards that goal, and I hope all members of this House support it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment A2? The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to, you know, rise in support of this amendment and say thank you to the Member for Calgary-Elbow for his dedication to his work on the panel and his strong commitment to putting politics aside on behalf of the children of this province who are a part of the child intervention system and of all of their families. This amendment is certainly a reflection of the work that he did and his commitment in that way.

As we saw through the work in the panel, the contributions of those who came as experts to the panel – those with lived experiences, those from our indigenous communities, those of the providers – proved to be truly invaluable in addressing systemic changes. Every single one of the advocates did bring to the table their own distinct voice and expertise, and they were absolutely integral in shaping our recommendations to be as positive as they were and to, in turn, turn that into an action plan that is going to make an incredible difference in the lives of children and families within this province.

I am very supportive of ensuring that these voices are heard in future reviews. I am supporting it and once again thank the member for his contribution.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow and on his behalf the hon. Member for Calgary-South East on moving this amendment. I do have a question on it. In general I think this amendment is going in the right direction and likely something that we're going to be able to support.

I don't know if the hon. Member for Calgary-South East will be able to answer this question. One of the things that the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow and other members that were on the committee, including yourself, Madam Chair, will know is that – I'm sorry; not the committee but the minister's panel on this issue – there was lots of discussion about the need for an ability to hold people accountable, to hold the system accountable, to be able to measure where we were at with things. I think that's the intent of this amendment and that many parts of it will be able to help with that. My concern, though, is that the committee that is being proposed I think would be better if it had representatives from all parties in the Assembly and it would be a bipartisan process. I just wonder if the Member for Calgary-South East agrees with that.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Chair. I absolutely do agree with that. I think that in my experience in almost close to seven years in this House, we've seen it in particular instances. Unfortunately, it all too often happens around tragedy when members of this House collaborate in earnest and do put aside the politics. I think that it is important, not just when it's around tragedy, whether it's the wildfires or whether it's the 2013 floods or the issues that we've seen with children in care and in other important matters. I do believe that as MLAs, as private members of this House, I just honestly believe that our best work happens when we collaborate, when we get down to work and listen to one another and really try to put Albertans first instead of our own political ambitions. So, yeah, I do agree.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate that honest assessment from the Member for Calgary-South East. I certainly think so as well.

One of the things that I've learned from this experience is that it's important to have that bipartisan support and bipartisan eyes on a situation of this magnitude. I think several members have spent a lot of time talking about trying to remember the path that took us to this place that we're at today, that in fact something very, very tragic happened. I think we all agree on that. I don't think that any member of this Assembly would deny the extraordinary tragedy that took place in regard to the Serenity story, which has been talked about in this Chamber many times. But there are many, many other similar stories, unfortunately, within our system that cause us to have to, you know, end up in these positions.

What I found when we went through that was that the government, while they certainly agreed that there was a tragic situation, a situation that they certainly were not responsible for – I think it's always important that as we disagree on how to handle this very tough issue, we make it clear that no member of this Assembly is responsible for what happened to Serenity. The people that did that to her are the ones that are ultimately responsible. But there is a constructive effort to block transparency on what happens with that issue. That's the experience that I had. I don't know if that was the experience that you had, Madam Chair, when you were on the minister's panel. But there was, in my mind, a blatant, constructive effort to make sure that the facts of the situation that brought us to this situation were blocked from all parties being able to see them, from everybody that was involved being able to actually have a look at the facts to be able to make determinations about what to do.

When we first started the Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention, we went to Government House. There was a lot of media involved at the time because of the articles from Paula Simons and Emma Graney. There was a lot of friction between the media and the ministry, which ultimately was of course split into two as a result of that. So there was a lot of media there. We had our first meeting and set our goals, set some of the parameters on how we would work through the process. We then got bogged down in days of argument with the minister – I don't think it's actually fair to say the minister because she was not there at the time – the government members of that committee actively working to make sure that the meeting could not be recorded, that there would be no records of the meeting. That went on for a very, very long time. It actually, Madam Chair, got fairly heated between the government side of the committee and the opposition side of the committee.

Now, what was interesting is that some of the external experts we had participating in that process with us ultimately helped try to bridge that gap, and we were able to finally get the meetings recorded so that people would be able to hear what was spoken about. They also could hear what we were going through, but also there would be some sort of record of the proceedings. We could not get a Hansard type of thing happening no matter how much we tried. I continue to be disappointed that that happened.

Then we moved over to the Federal Building and had what would be similar to our standing committee meetings, similar to a process where we could sit and we could talk although it wouldn't have been on the record, and the people who were experts and content experts and who knew things about the situation that we were trying to address could come and sit and answer the questions. And it would be very similar, Madam Chair, to our experience, for members of the House that were not part of the ministerial panel, when you're in a standing committee of the Legislature.

Opposition members who made up that panel from the Alberta Party, the Liberal Party, at the time the PC Party, and the Wildrose Party started to ask similar questions that you would see. You would take a turn. You had a few minutes. You would ask a question of some of the experts about what was going on. I think, certainly, for us on the panel we felt that we were sent there to find out what happened to Serenity, which was a serious issue that was happening here politically. We asked the government to have an all-party panel or committee look at that situation so we'd be able to come back with solid recommendations so that what happened to Serenity could not happen to another little girl or little boy that is in our care.

So when we went there, we started to ask questions about that case. I remember – maybe the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays will recall – that we had some representatives from K Division and the Edmonton police that were there talking one day in the same room as the standing committee, and we began to ask some questions about how files were transferred. You may recall, Madam Chair, that at the time there was quite a controversy about the ministry not getting information to the proper authorities. In fact, the police at the time, according to, I believe, Paula Simons' reporting – it was possible it was Emma Graney's – were not able to get that file of information. They didn't have it. They didn't even know it was going on. In fact, they found out about the Serenity case from the news.

When I started to ask them questions about how that worked – and actually fairly technical, not very partisan questions because I think this issue is not partisan. There were a lot of moms and dads in this room. There were a lot of aunts and uncles and grandparents and people that just want to make sure that kids are safe. I don't think that wanting to make sure that this doesn't happen to another child is a partisan issue. And so we asked them questions about how it works, how the police departments interact with the government, how a file like that could not get there, how it could be that the police didn't know about these type of documents until they read it in the newspaper, which I think was shocking to everybody, including the government members on the panel. I would imagine that they were quite taken aback by that.

What happened was immediately the chair, who, of course, belonged to the government caucus, with the support of the majority, which, of course, was the government on the committee, shut that down, and said that we could not speak about that issue and we could not ask questions about that issue. And that became a pattern of what happened during the entire panel process. The majority blocked the other parties that were trying to participate in the process from being able to get information about the very case that sent us to that place that we had committed as a group in this place to be able to try to look at to try to come up with recommendations to make sure it did not happen again.

In fact, the opposition at the time – the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, I believe, was the leader of the third party at the time. I was happy that we got to merge and are all one party now, but he was leader of the third party at the time. I was dispatched to be the negotiator for the Wildrose Party with the government. He was negotiating on behalf of the PC Party, and we had our friend, the leader at the time, the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, of the Alberta Party. I think he was not the leader anymore, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, but he was definitely the only elected member for the Liberal Party that was in the Chamber. We all got together, and that's a wide spectrum of political thought.

I mean, that is the extreme – I don't want to say extreme, but that's the left side of the spectrum, not quite as left as the current government of the day possibly, but that's the left side of the spectrum with the Alberta Party and the Liberal Party. Then, you know, you have the conservative side of the spectrum. We all went in there and said: "Okay. How can we make this work? This is a serious issue."

At first the government continued to reject a bipartisan process to address this issue. That went on for a long time, but we finally were able to compromise and say that instead of an actual committee of the Legislature that would be on Hansard and would require votes on the record and would require, in our view, accountability, we were willing to compromise because of the significance of this issue, and we were going to agree to a ministerial panel as long as the opposition got to participate. And that's where we ended up. We got sent to go take on that task, and we're there. We agree to it. We're told that we'll be able to address this issue that, certainly, Madam Chair, the province of Alberta was very upset about. They're still upset about it now, but as things go on, you know, news cycles change, and that's the reality of life. Life goes on. But at the time they were very, very upset about it.

We were willing to take it out of this place into a bipartisan process, compromise, and go with the ministerial panel instead of a standing committee because we still wanted to be able to do something, but then it was repeatedly blocked. What was staggering to me, Madam Chair – and I know you'll recall this as well – is that when we had this first meeting, there was some discussion about a new process, something that I had not experienced. I don't know if the Member for Calgary-Hays had ever experienced it before. We were presented with something called a consent agenda. No, not a consent agenda. Everybody would have to consent. There would not be votes. There would not be votes where we would vote to decide if we would move something. It would be that we were going to attempt to get everybody to consent.

Mr. McIver: A consensus agenda.

Mr. Nixon: A consensus agenda. Thank you. That's the right word.

It was a consensus process. That was something new certainly for a bunch of partisan politicians on all sides to have to figure out how to navigate. We had lots of talk about how that would work and what that would look like. Some of us had some concerns that it would then bog down the process. Eventually some decisions had to be made. Some of us also had some concerns that that really just meant that, you know, certain people were not going to want to be on the record to make some of those tough decisions. Let me just stress this, Madam Chair. That was actually not part of the negotiations. That happened after we were at our first meeting, and the opposition had to agree to that. But we still wanted to move forward on an important issue, so we said that we would try to work within that process.

Then when some of the examples that I already talked about came up and we'd start to ask questions and tried to get there and we said, "Whoa. Whoa. Whoa. That's not consensus. We want to talk about this issue. We've been sent to talk about this issue," all of a sudden for those issues and those issues only there was a vote, and of course we were outvoted because we are the opposition. That's something we're used to. That's part of being the opposition. You go to a standing committee. I know you haven't been in opposition before, Madam Chair, but you will find that you get pretty used to losing votes in the opposition. You know, it doesn't make you that frustrated. It's kind of the process. The government has the majority.

It was interesting because then it was only when we tried to deal with the actual situation that brought us there that we all of a sudden went back to the process that was not the consensus agenda. It was the majority agenda. This went on to lots of conflict in the discussion, particularly actually as we got to a conversation around the publication ban. The opposition and the media that had been pushing this issue and doing a lot of good investigative work, quite frankly, on this important issue, had continued to bring up the publication ban. It's complicated. There are a lot of legal aspects to the publication ban. You're trying to balance issues of the public's right to know, the government's right to know to be able to make changes as a result of the situation, the media's right to be able to present something that often could put a face on a tragedy and actually make change but at the same time try to balance families' rights to privacy, individuals' rights to privacy in what is often the most tragic day of their lives.

I struggled a lot with that issue. At first I believed that transparency is probably the best way to go. I still believe that, but then when we sat and we listened to some of the families who had experienced that with their kids who had been lost and having to make a determination of whether their child's name would be public and would be part of the news process, for me, Madam Chair – I don't know about you – that was one of the most emotional things to watch, when parents or the people from those families came and talked about that. I mean, it became an extremely complicated thing. You recognized that it wasn't as simple as it looked just reading it in the newspaper. So we said: "Hey, we want to explore this. We feel that it's part of our mandate, and we want to go through it."

I don't know who instructed the government members on that. I don't want to say that it came from the minister's office. I can only say what the government members did on that. They again started to try to block us from being able to talk about that issue. Essentially the ministry, the very ministry that had made some mistakes along the way and that we were trying to make sure that we could give them the tools or the resources or the policy so that they would not make those mistakes again, said that that ministry would deal with it and essentially it was too complicated for us. We disagreed, and we fought back.

There was a panel meeting on the top floor of the Federal Building, another one of those nonconsensus meetings, all of a sudden. It got a little bit confusing for us, Madam Chair, because one moment it was consensus; the next thing you know it was votes. The panel, under the instruction of the chair, voted to say that we couldn't do that.

The opposition then started to raise several concerns about that. I think the media of the day was sympathetic to us on that because they had been raising it, so there were some sympathetic articles, columns on the idea that that had to be looked at. The outside experts that had participated with the partisan politicians that were part of the process ended up siding with us, and we were able to actually outvote the government majority on the panel and able to then bring that forward, but it had to go through a lot of steps.

My point with all of this, Madam Chair, is that the government, particularly this government – it's the only government I had experience with on a panel of this nature – spent most of their time truly blocking the members who got sent there to, you know, invest time in trying to solve this. Maybe there's a reason for this that we don't understand. They spent most of their time blocking them from even being able to ask a simple question about the very little girl that caused us to have that panel. Instead they wanted us to trust the department and to trust the ministry on their own to get this right.

I think that we would have been in a much better spot right now if that had not been how the NDP chose to strong-arm that process. I think that if they had truly taken the opposition up on an open, fair conversation, publicly minuted or put into Hansard, allowed it to be broadcast without any argument and allowed members to ask questions about certain situations, particularly the ones that they were sent there for, we would have ended up with a lot more information. Then we actually could have come as a united group in the 29th Legislature, as a united group of MLAs and human beings from the province of Alberta that truly do not want to see something like this happen again, come forward with a clear list of recommendations. Then we could actually go back and look at the people of Alberta and say: that was a horrible situation that happened to Serenity, but here is what we learned as a result of that, and here are the things that we are going to recommend back to our colleagues inside the broader Chamber of the Legislature, and here is what we're going to pass to be able to do that.

Instead, that didn't happen. We had to come back to this Chamber and then start to ask questions about the very issue that we had been dispatched to work on as a group. It was confusing for people that were outside of the group. I remember talking to some of my colleagues, who said: "They're not telling you about this? Didn't we agree to make this panel so you could have a conversation?" In my mind what was most frustrating about that is that the minister and the Premier and the Deputy Premier would get up and answer those questions and then act as if they were telling us that information, act as if they were not blocking us from getting that information. Some of the Hansard, if you look back at it at that time, I found shocking.

And then you would leave after question period, and you would go back to the next panel meeting. The panel met a lot. It did lots of good work and heard from lots of people. You would go back to the panel meeting and then try to get the panel back onto the conversation and the topic that we were dispatched to deal with, and even after standing up in question period and saying, "Yeah, we're giving them all that information," basically they would leave here and not give us any of that information.

Now, I recognize that there would have been some information that was associated with the Serenity case that the minister, quite frankly, could not have talked about in a public manner. There were other mechanisms to communicate with the panel about those types of privacy issues. That could have been something that could have been negotiated between all the parties that were involved. There could have been a confidential briefing. There could have been an agreement that there were certain things that can't come out because there's some confidentiality issues with it but that here are the areas that don't have that, that you could ask questions about. Instead it was just a complete blanket of not allowed to talk about it. I don't think that most people who watched us inside this Assembly a couple of years ago, when this story first started to break, thought that when we announced that ministerial panel, an all-party agreement to that panel, we were all going to go into a room and not even talk about the case that sent us there. I don't think most people thought that. Now you would think that we would be allowed to talk about other cases, other issues, other examples of problems in the system.

Now, remember, Madam Chair, we were sent there to try to come up with solid recommendations to make sure that in the future kids that are in the care of our government or that have an interaction with child intervention are not killed. That is what we were sent there to figure out. We were sent there to figure out how some of these terrible tragedies happened.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I was listening, of course intently, to the comments of the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. I think it was very important to have somebody that had the experience of being on that panel right from the start. It was interesting hearing what he said on how things were working there. I did enjoy, of course, listening to the Member for Calgary-Hays also talk about the panel and how things went there.

I guess I find it amazing that the panel basically was set up to deal with the case of Serenity but that through the whole process they couldn't talk about Serenity. They couldn't actually talk about the case that brought about the panel's purpose. It's been said multiple times here from both sides of the House that this is a nonpartisan issue, and I agree. It's definitely nonpartisan. It's about children. It's about safety. It's about taking care of the vulnerable in our society. That's got to be our number one purpose in this. As I look at this bill and I see that it's the first of maybe multiple pieces of legislation that the government wants to bring forward, I would just hope that the first piece would be the most important piece, the one that would actually make a difference and would have made a difference for this child who is the reason that it was brought forward.

I guess I'll maybe just leave it at that for now. I do have more things to say on this issue, but I'll leave it for now and maybe ask the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre to expand a little bit more.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wishing to speak on amendment A2? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's great to be back so quickly. As I was saying when I closed off, beyond just the Serenity case that we had been sent there to deal with, we were blocked from asking about any specific details about processes that could happen within the government about specific cases. The problem with that is: how do you identify the problems and then identify the situations that are creating those problems within the system that are ultimately causing these tragedies if you're not allowed to ask questions about how it happened?

One of the things that Paula Simons reported was that the RCMP said they needed [Serenity's mother] to sign a release to allow Alberta Health Services to release Serenity's full file. Eager to co-operate, she signed the necessary papers. Then RCMP called her with what she calls "terrible news."

Alberta Health Services said they couldn't release the records.

"They wouldn't turn it over, not even with my signature" . . .

The province and the child welfare agency responsible for Serenity's case failed to turn over . . .

Actually, I want to back up. I want to go to that part of the sentence. That is a great question. For that family it would've been a simple question: what is the reason for that? A very simple thing. We could've looked at: was that reasonable, or is that something that we'd be able to fix for a mother whose child was killed in our care?

The province and the child welfare agency responsible for Serenity's case failed to turn over a key internal review of Serenity's care to the RCMP. The Mounties only got those essential records after a public report from the child and youth advocate and a subsequent investigation by the Edmonton Journal put Serenity's case in the public eye.

That's actually the thing that lit the fuse to make this issue blow up into a massive political issue, and rightly so, across this province. It's the thing that put the minister at the time under significant media pressure, and ultimately the Premier had to split his ministry into two. There are a lot of other facts that are appalling there, but that key fact is actually what started the ball rolling.

Think about that, Madam Chair.

The province and the child welfare agency responsible for Serenity's case failed to turn over a key internal review of Serenity's care to the RCMP.

They failed to do it. Now, why? I actually tried to ask questions about this of both the Edmonton police and the RCMP. The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, I suspect, actually asked some as well. I don't recall his offhand, but I do recall mine. I got a couple of answers about how the computer system was working. We're starting to explore that. I would be interested to know if part of it was an IT problem. I mean, that would be a reasonable thing to be able to determine. Immediately I was shut down by the NDP chair and not allowed to ask another question about that very simple fact.

Normally, the RCMP would turn a homicide investigation . . .

These are Paula Simons' words.

. . . over to its senior and expert major crimes unit. Instead, they kept the investigation with the local detachment. And there it remains.

Turns out, the RCMP did have many of Serenity's medical records. But in some cases, they got photocopies of those documents from Serenity's mom, and not from [Alberta Health Services].

A little girl was beaten, sexually abused, and starved to death. Her mother had to get some documents. She couldn't even get them all. Alberta Health Services could not get them there. It hindered the investigation. They didn't even know what was going on. That's a reasonable question for that panel, that we sent to review this, to be able to ask. I still, to this day, don't understand why we weren't allowed to.

Paula Simons again:

More than two years later, Alberta's medical examiner has not released Serenity's cause of death. The Child and Youth Advocate, an independent officer of the legislature, whom we all know, was denied a copy of an autopsy report. The case has never been ruled a homicide. Cpl. Laurel Scott . . .

I hope I got the name right.

. . . who speaks for the RCMP in central Alberta, says an investigation is still open. Because of that, she offered no further comment.

Why did the child advocate's report omit any reference to the genital and anal bruising, and the absent hymen, which might suggest sexual assault? Or to the hypothermia?

It's not a fun thing to talk about, but it is a legitimate question.

We fought, and we managed to get the medical examiner to come and talk to the panel, and we started to ask some questions. What happened, Madam Chair? The NDP blocked the other political parties that were a part of the process from being able to ask the questions or at least receive the answers. I ask my colleagues that are with me in the House today: do you think that you sent us to participate in this all-party panel on behalf of Serenity's case to not be able to ask those questions?

Again Paula Simons:

A year before her death, Serenity was at the 50th percentile for size – absolutely average. Twelve months later, her weight was so low, it's simply not on the chart for a four-year-old girl.

How was this allowed to happen? How was it that children's services simply gave guardianship of three children to this couple despite the allegations of abuse, then never checked up on them? How did a child starve in a province of plenty? Why, despite the horrifying medical evidence, has no one been charged with anything?

Why?

That's what we got sent to ask. That's what we got sent to try to find an answer to, to be able to come back here and come up with some decent recommendations to be able to change that. Not one of us in this Chamber, Madam Chair, can look each other in the eye and say that that panel accomplished that. None of us can say that that panel accomplished that. I challenge anybody in this Chamber to be able to say that they could go back to their constituents and say that we were able to solve this horrible case, this horrible situation that happened to this little girl, that this panel that we came up with solved it when you hear that we weren't even allowed to ask questions about that.

Now, maybe it has been solved. Maybe the NDP did it behind closed doors and didn't share it with anybody else. But that's my point on this amendment. That's why all parties should have an opportunity to be able to participate. I think it makes it more transparent. I don't think that most of Alberta would know that that is what was happening behind the closed doors of the ministerial panel if it wasn't for the fact that opposition members were there and able to come back out and say: this is what's happening, and it's wrong.

Paula Simons writes:

She didn't die on [the Premier's] watch.

I agree.

But the NDP government has done nothing to lift the secrecy that surrounds the death of children in care.

That's the point. The panel was not allowed to talk about what went wrong with this case. But it is also about the culture of secrecy around it, about who is accountable. It was not allowed to put in mechanisms to make people accountable. It was just not allowed to do it.

Again Paula Simons:

But we're talking about a four-year-old girl, who'd been an active toddler who loved to climb and play, a child without any documented health problems to explain why her weight had plummeted to that of a famine victim.

Why did no one notice that a child that was in our care, who had interacted with our system, went from a normal little girl, from all reports a healthy little girl with an adequate weight, all the way to a famine victim? We should be allowed to ask that question. Albertans want to know that answer. They want to know what happened. They want us to be able to come back and say: yes, this will be found out. The criminal justice system can hold people responsible from the criminal side – that's not our responsibility – but this is what happened within our system, this is where we failed in our system, and this is how we can make sure it never happens again.

I don't know about the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, but that's what I thought we got sent there to do. I continue to feel terrible that our panel was not allowed to be able to do that. Every time that we talk to Serenity's family, it feels terrible that we were not able to do that. I remember at the time talking to family members of Serenity and how excited they were that we were going to undertake this in a bipartisan way. And then to have to watch them watch this just turn into the story of their family member, somebody they care about, just being constantly blocked from being able to see the light of day.

Again Paula Simons:

Two years after [Serenity] was taken to hospital with a traumatic brain injury, her emaciated body covered in bruises, old and new, the Office of the Medical Examiner has yet to release an official cause of death.

Two years. Two years went by after a little girl, who our government shared some responsibility for, had such horrible things go wrong. Two years went by, and nobody still even knew the cause of death, certainly not the RCMP, we now know. Two years.

Within two months of Serenity being sent to her new home – this is again Paula Simons – child intervention services received reports the children were bruised, scratched and malnourished. A doctor found the youngest had lost three pounds. The children's birth mother claimed the children were being denied food and were physically abused.

She asked that they be removed from the care of her family members and returned to foster care. Her request was denied.

Her request was denied even with reports, medical reports, of things that were happening to Serenity and her siblings. Her mother was saying: something is happening to my kids. Her request was denied. The next you hear, she's no longer here. She's died. She's been killed. And we're not allowed to ask how that happened.

What happened when that was reported to the doctor? Who did her mother report that to? Why did nobody act on that?

Look, I'm a simple country guy from Sundre, and that's fine, Madam Chair, but I can tell you that I can walk anywhere on main street down in Sundre right now, a great town, my hometown – I love it – and if I tell this story to anybody else, they would say: "Why didn't somebody get in a truck after receiving that report and drive down there and find out what was happening to that little girl? Why? Why did nobody do that?" That is a fair question to have asked, again, blocked by the NDP on this committee.

Paula Simons again:

The investigation into the allegations of abuse was closed. Shortly after that – just five months after they were placed in the home – the kinship care providers were granted full guardianship of the children, and . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) we shall now rise and report progress.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 22. Legislative Assembly of Alberta

9 a.m.

Wednesday, November 21, 2018

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Prayers

The Acting Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect or pray each in our own way. Today marks the 86th anniversary of the creation of Alberta's first provincial parks, which have preserved some of the natural beauty of Alberta for us and our children and will continue to do so for future generations of Albertans. During our deliberations today let us keep in mind that the work that we do today should be forward looking. We should strive to make the lives of Albertans better and easier and to preserve this province for generations to come.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 25

Canyon Creek Hydro Development Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's always a pleasure to rise in the House. I rise today on behalf of the Minister of Energy to move second reading of Bill 25, the Canyon Creek Hydro Development Act.

On August 2, 2018, the Alberta Utilities Commission approved Turning Point Generation's Canyon Creek application, and that application is for a 75-megawatt, closed-loop, pumped hydro energy storage project. The AUC determined that the project is in the public interest and should proceed. This triggers a legislative requirement on our part under the Hydro and Electric Energy Act. Once a report like this one from the AUC is submitted to the Lieutenant Governor in Council, section 9 of the act requires that Executive Council direct a bill to be prepared. This allows the AUC to authorize construction of this project. Section 10 requires an order in council to authorize operation of the hydro project.

In its review and approval the AUC considered both the construction and operation of the project. This enables the passage of this bill to authorize the AUC to make an order for both the construction and operation of the Canyon Creek project. This bill is one step in the project approval process. The company has expressed strong interest in advancing this project but can only do so after receiving authority to proceed from the Alberta Utilities Commission. The AUC can only approve construction and subsequent operations of the project upon royal assent of the bill. With this bill, if passed, the Canyon Creek project still will be subject to further approvals from the Alberta Utilities Commission and Alberta Environment and Parks.

Madam Speaker, I'd like to share a few details about the proposed Canyon Creek project. The proposed Canyon Creek project is located about 13 kilometres northeast of Hinton. It is not a large-scale hydroelectric dam. Rather, it's a small, 75-megawatt, closed-loop, pumped hydro energy storage project. A closed-loop project like this one isn't connected to naturally flowing sources of water. The location is easily accessible to existing infrastructure while isolated enough on Crown land for minimal disruption to neighbouring communities and landowners.

The project has received letters of support from local communities and officials and will bring long-term economic benefits. As the project is adjacent to a previously disturbed area, the old Obed coal mine, and is not connected to existing natural water bodies, we expect environmental impacts to be reduced. That said, the company will be required to adhere to and meet all of the province's strong environmental standards. The company has consulted with stakeholders to discuss any concerns.

At this point I think it's important to note that the bill would not remove any of the regulatory authority of the Alberta Utilities Commission or Alberta Environment and Parks. Through this proposed legislation we would be granting the Alberta Utilities Commission the authority to approve the construction and operation of the Canyon Creek project, and Alberta Environment and Parks would still be required to issue the approvals.

It's also important to note that this bill would only apply to this one project. A similar bill, the Dunvegan Hydro Development Act, was passed in 2009 under the same process. Any future hydroelectric project would require a separate bill and go through the same approval process.

Madam Speaker, this is a good-news story for Alberta, showing that companies are confident to invest in our province. Projects like this show a long-term vision and demonstrate a long-term commitment to investment in Alberta. Alberta has always been a leader in oil and gas, and increasing the production of greener electricity will further enhance our leadership position as a responsible energy producer.

I hope that all members support me in moving forward with Bill 25. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Good morning. I rise to speak to Bill 25, the Canyon Creek Hydro Development Act. Normally when a project requires the approval of cabinet to proceed, it simply receives it. In this case, however, the law is different, as I understand. The Alberta Utilities Commission approved Turning Point Generation's Canyon Creek pumped hydroelectricity storage project on a portion of the site of the former Obed coal mine near Hinton. The Hydro and Electric Energy Act is written in such a way that hydro projects have to be brought before the Legislative Assembly to receive approval.

Now, I'm sure there is an explanation for this requirement to bring hydro projects to the Legislature for approval. But in this case the requirement to bring this project to the Legislative Assembly looks a lot like a piece of red tape for project approval. The UCP is committed to eliminating red tape. Madam Speaker, my colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner is assigned by our caucus to consult multiple stakeholders on how we reduce red tape and speed track projects like this.

The Canyon Creek project is designed by incorporating two small off-stream water reservoirs. One is up the hill by the Obed mine, and the other one is at the bottom, not far from the Athabasca River. These two man-made lakes will be connected by the pipeline with pumps, turbines, and generating equipment near the bottom reservoir and powerhouse. The design utilizes a closed-loop system, the first of its kind in Alberta, and it will use the same water repeatedly for pumping and generating. There are other companies interested in similar projects, Madam Speaker, and since there are going to be more renewable energy projects in the province, we're going to need more projects like the Canyon Creek hydro development to act as storage for electricity.

This project acts like a battery or a green peaker plant. When electricity prices are high, the water falls from a high pond over the generators to a low pond, producing 75 megawatts over 37 hours. When electricity prices are low, the water is pumped up the hill for storage. Now, for the physics people out there, I know there is a concern about the energy equation around the conservation of energy with this project. But, as you know, Madam Speaker, one theory in physics is that energy cannot be created or destroyed, only changed in form. I'm assured this project is more about conserving low-price electricity for use at high prices with 80 per cent efficiency.

We need new generating plants to replace the coal-fired plants that are retiring, are forced by the NDP government just to meet their ideological policy goals. They have accelerated the phase-out of coal mines more than the prescribed federal requirement. With that, you know, Madam Speaker, Alberta taxpayers are on the hook to compensate generating companies and the coal mines. That's a different story for a different day. But we need new generating plants to replace those coal-fired plants, and this project is a good opportunity to create that required generation. We also need the generating peaker plants to backstop wind and solar projects.

The Canyon Creek hydro development is estimated at $200 million in private investment and 300 construction jobs near Hinton. Once the Legislature approves this project, that is not the end of the approvals, Madam Speaker. Alberta Environment and Parks is going to need to issue some permits. One of those permits will be a Water Act permit to withdraw water from the Athabasca one time to fill the ponds, and water will also be needed every so often to compensate for evaporation. So although they are going to recycle the same water, they have to top up to compensate their operation.

But it is those water permits that are of greatest concern. This project was approved by the AUC on August 2, 2018. It took 14 weeks to get the bill before the Legislature. That is three months, one-quarter of a year. Bill 25 will likely have Legislature approval this week. Then the Lieutenant Governor has to give royal assent. But it is the licences from Alberta Environment and Parks that will be the holdup.

We know from experience, talking to municipalities at the Rural Municipalities of Alberta this week, that people are waiting years for permits out of Alberta Environment and Parks. Simple things like gravel extraction are tied up, and construction projects for public projects like roads, including provincial highways, are stopping because of Alberta Environment and Parks. They need to look for critters in the ditches or travelling through the culvert that is about to be replaced. These studies can only be done between the months of May and October because – well, who wants to be out in the snow and cold, Madam Speaker? – the studies apparently need to see free-flowing water.

Alberta Environment and Parks is known to have held up permits for changing the fuel used by the cement plants in the order of two to three years. On a simple fuel change, Madam Speaker. Yesterday I was talking to the Cement Association, and that's what they told me. It took two to three years to get a yes or no to stop burning coal and switch to garbage instead. Two years. They're trying to replace coal because they burn coal to create heat in their clinker and cement plant. They're trying to be innovative. They want to use commercial and industrial garbage instead to generate that heat, but Alberta Environment and Parks took two to three years to give those simple permits.

Meanwhile the same cement producers in, of all places, British Columbia get those permits in 21 days. If anyone on the other side, on the government benches, can take note of this and can do something about this, that would be great. Madam Speaker, it's unacceptable. If other provinces are taking 21 days and we are taking two to three years, we are sending the wrong message to investors. It doesn't take two to three years to check the science and to do a risk assessment. Use some common sense and take a customer service approach to government before issuing permits.

With that, Madam Speaker, I believe this is a good project for the Hinton area and for Alberta, and I believe enough time has been wasted on the approval process and debate and that we should get on with this pump hydro project. This is a green project that is needed with the level of renewables being introduced to the Alberta electricity market.

I urge all my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 25?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for West Yellowhead to close debate.

Mr. Rosendahl: Madam Speaker, yes, I close debate on this. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a second time]

Bill 23

An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta

Mrs. Pitt moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 23, An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 23, An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Debate adjourned on the amendment November 20: Mr. Cooper speaking]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to Bill 23? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's always a pleasure to rise in this room to speak to legislation that affects all Albertans. Today we speak to Bill 23, An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta. Now, this bill proposes a variety of amendments and changes to the Local Authorities Election Act. As many others have mentioned . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, sorry to interrupt. My mistake. We're still on the referral, so I just wanted to clarify for the House that we're speaking to the amendment still.

Mr. Schneider: I'm speaking to the referral, Madam Speaker. Thank you.

As many others have mentioned in this room, this is a complex piece of legislation that needs time to be gone through with a fine-tooth comb, so to speak. It is a bill that, quite frankly, needs to have some consultation done, I believe. You know, we on this side certainly need to have enough time to consult with the towns in rural Alberta, the villages, rural municipalities, Métis settlements, and any other entity that this piece of legislation proposes to affect. I guess I should continue: I think it also talks about school boards and irrigation districts.

After giving the document a read through, the only conclusion I can come to, given the short time we have, is that legislation such as this requires a little more time than the government has allocated. Now, that's fine. Time is the currency of the Legislature; that's understood. But something this encompassing, something that affects people right down to the neighbourhoods, hamlets, and settlements that they live in, needs more than cursory attention to detail, Madam Speaker. We need to do our due diligence. That's why my colleagues and I are so insistent that this bill be referred to the proper legislative committee. As my colleague from Livingstone-Macleod mentioned, I too have some questions that need to be answered. Now, whether we get the answers is entirely a horse of a different colour.

Madam Speaker, I'm a pretty big fan of movie westerns. If you were to take a walk through my office here at the Federal Building, it would take you several minutes to take in the western memorabilia that I've brought to Edmonton in order to have a place that I feel comfortable in when I write speeches like this one. Now, if this bill were a western, it might be characterized as The Good, the Bad and the Ugly because, in my opinion, there are elements of each here.

Let's start with the bad. I feel like a glass-half-empty kind of guy today. That being said, some of the bad includes, for starters, in my opinion, the fact that this legislation appears to me likely to increase third-party advertisers, or political action committees. Third-party advertisers' presence in municipal elections is likely to increase. Now, this has been a huge bone of contention with the government as far as provincial politics are concerned. I certainly have no problem with the fact that big money was taken out of provincial elections. Let's be clear here. This side of the House certainly supported that change right out of the gate, and we're proud to do so.

Now, the political action committees have primarily been seen in the provincial realm in Alberta politics due to changes made by this government's reform to election laws, but it has not dissuaded the government from attempting it here for other realms, I guess I would say. The new proposed rules appear to favour political action committees over candidates, especially outside of the election period. Political action committees appear to be able to spend with limited impunity possibly directed at a specific candidate or incumbent. I mean, I don't know how else you could read the intent here. PACs certainly need to disclose any contributions they receive, but they need to disclose those contributions that will be used to promote or oppose a candidate.

Madam Speaker, what is being suggested here is that we bring provincial partisan politics and the ways of provincial partisan politics into the realm of municipalities and Métis settlements and school boards and irrigation districts, where, in my experience, this kind of politics has not been seen. Based on that statement alone, I believe that the amendment that has been put forward here from my good friend and colleague from Airdrie to refer this bill to committee is absolutely the right thing to do.

I have served as a councillor in a municipality, a small municipality, not a city by any means. The geographic area of that municipality is 2,150 square miles, so it covered a big area. I think it would comfortably fit the city of Calgary, the area that that city sits on, six times within that municipality. Of course, there's a slight discrepancy with population. I think our municipality was populated with 6,800 people. The municipality that I was part of the council for actually only had 3,800. One town and five villages made up the rest of that population.

In my tenure I certainly was never aware of any councillor that took a contribution in order to get themselves re-elected. Actually, I never heard of a councillor taking a donation to his campaign in rural municipal politics, period. It doesn't mean it didn't happen, but in my experience I certainly never saw it. But, like I said, I was a councillor in a small municipality, where everyone knows who the councillors are, and it really would be somewhat rare for a contentious election at all. Door-knocking in rural Alberta is usually still the preferred way to remind ratepayers that there's an election coming up and that you may be running in it.

But I understand that this isn't necessarily the case when it comes to municipal politics in cities, certainly the big cities. I understand that councillors can and do raise money for their potential re-election bid at any time throughout the year. I kind of get the reason for this proposed piece of legislation when it comes to city elections, elections where councillors represent areas of the city or wards where big money may indeed be spent in one of those wards. For example, perhaps a developer whose project is coming before council the following week could offer a donation to a councillor of a ward where that may be happening in order to try and sway things more in his favour, and no one would ever know.

Back to what we were speaking about here a moment ago, political action committees and councillors and what the difference is when it comes to raising money for a campaign, again, I believe that this would be more likely in a big city, in my opinion, than in the vast majority of municipalities across this province.

While the individual is limited to only $2,000 to spend over the first three years following an election, which is supposed to be countering a potential political action committee's narrative, guess what? The PAC appears to be able to spend unlimited amounts of money attacking various opponents or supporting various opponents. It just seems somewhat unfair to me, Madam Speaker, especially as I have always tended to side with the underdog in situations like that, for the most part.

Speaking of the little guy, why are we limiting the amount that an individual can actually campaign? After all, municipal elections are nonpartisan, and often the candidate's name recognition is key to their success. That certainly enhances concerns that these changes will further solidify the chances incumbents will have to retain their position. After all, local politics is often where people first get involved because of the nonpartisan nature. I can't be the only one that has deep concerns that these changes are kind of burdensome and may cause potential candidates to feel somewhat of a sense of intimidation.

In this day and age where groups across the political spectrum are trying to attract more people to get involved – as I think we all know in this room, all levels of politics seem to have the same problem – I'm not sure how any of these changes would give newcomers the kind of incentive required to get involved. Why are we throwing up additional barriers, Madam Speaker?

Has the government done any outreach on this subject? That would be a question I would have. If they have, we certainly haven't had it shared on this side of the House. This is, I think, a solid argument for sending this bill to committee. Why not hear from representative groups of all sorts to see what they have to say? I mean, what could be the harm? Why are we making things more onerous?

Speaking of which, I'll segue right here into another onerous little tidbit. Why is it that in provincial politics the threshold for donation disclosure is set at $250, but the legislation that we're talking about today wants to make the threshold $50? I just wonder: why not $250, which would mimic the provincial rates? It's just another question. I would certainly like to hear the reason for that number.

Speaking of cents, a little tongue-in-cheek, of course, wordplay, we do have a dollars-and-cents issue, and that is that there seem to be significant changes to the campaign limits. It seems that if you're a candidate running for re-election or simply a candidate who's looking to get a head start on campaigning early, you won't be totally prohibited, but there are certain restrictions. During the first three years the proposed rules would allow you to spend up to $2,000 on things like door-knocking and literature promoting you as the candidate. If you're a self-funded candidate, however, your eligible contribution has been lowered from $10,000 to $4,000, matching the new donation limits. Now, I'm not sure of the rationale here, to be honest. I mean, if you're self-funded, it's your money. Another reason to toss this to committee to find out if this is something that potentially is a huge problem here in municipal campaigns. In my experience I certainly haven't heard of this being an issue, certainly from the small municipality side of Alberta politics. Of course, big-city and small-town politics certainly have different situations. I'd like some clarification on that for sure.

Going back to local politics, these new campaign financing rules, in my opinion, this certainly seems to me that it makes raising money for a local campaign much more difficult when you're raising it $50 at a time. Unfortunately, the main complaint we've heard from stakeholders and constituents in the little amount of time we've had to speak with them regarding municipal elections appears to have been totally missed. None of the proposed amendments in Bill 23 allow for a municipal candidate to issue tax receipts for municipal donations. It seems the legislation fails on this one point. Potentially there's a very good reason for it; I just haven't heard it. I would love to hear what the minister would have to say about that.

To recap, this legislation makes it harder to raise money for local nonpartisan campaigns, it lowers the disclosure limit to $50, it throws up hurdles that could limit people from jumping into or participating in local politics, it enacts legislation that may give rise to even more political action committees and in local politics no less, and it doesn't allow municipal campaigns to issue tax receipts. So, Madam Speaker, this seems to counter what I think the government is trying to accomplish here. Maybe I'm being a little too harsh or a little too negative. Maybe these fears are unfounded. Maybe that could easily be solved by consulting in an open forum in front of an all-party committee.

Now all that said, that's not to say that there aren't positives in Bill 23. To continue with the good, the bad, and the ugly, there is some good in there. There are elements that increase local autonomy. It puts elections back in the hands of local government by leaving the administration of elections with the local municipality. Elements of this legislation go to improving transparency and accountability of municipal elections, and I think everyone in the room and every municipality would agree that this is a good thing, Madam Speaker.

The thing that I feel is a vast improvement in the local election scene is that it goes a long way to extending the prohibition on campaigning, extending it to include the voting station property, and that includes the parking lot. I think that includes hallways, et cetera, no longer walking through an election-filled obstacle course. That, I think, once again, is more likely in a city, but I think that would be a pleasant change that a lot of people would agree with.

Another important aspect I find myself liking is the accessibility aspect. For instance, any municipality with over 5,000 people will now be required to have at least one advance poll ahead of the regular voting day. While several of us have some concerns about the cost being borne locally, ultimately this is about improving turnout and making voting more accessible to people. Additionally, any legislation to increase locations for voting for people who can't get to traditional voting places is a big win in my books, Madam Speaker.

Now, I have decidedly mixed feelings about a couple of additional aspects of the legislation, notably the amendment that eliminates the need for a voter to have resided in Alberta . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I really appreciate this opportunity to speak to you on this wonderful Wednesday morning. You know, I was so enthralled with my colleague's speech. I was hoping to hear a little bit more, so if he wouldn't mind continuing, I'd appreciate that.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I really didn't know I had an enthralling effect on those in the House today, but I'd be glad to continue.

As I said, I have decidedly mixed feelings about a couple of additional aspects of the legislation, notably the amendment that eliminates the need for a voter to have resided in Alberta for six months prior to being eligible to vote in an election, leaving only one requirement, the only requirement being that they're 18 years old and a Canadian citizen. Also, the part about expanding vouching provisions, which was explained to me earlier this week in the government's tech briefing. Staff verbally informed opposition parties that the rule was that one elector can vouch for one other elector. However, I can't see anything in Bill 23, in the proposed legislation, that appears to limit the number of times someone can vouch for an elector. Perhaps, if the government sees fit to grant our motion this morning, we can find ways to address this concern, bring more clarity, bring transparency, which is what the government is trying to do with this whole piece of legislation.

Now, the ugly part of this whole movie scenario can be subjective. To my way of thinking the ugly has to be the transitional aspect of this legislation. Despite not being passed, the bill is retroactive to introduction at first reading; in other words, November 5, 2018. What that means to me is that any councillor who has already started collecting contributions with the desire to participate in our democratic process, in our democratic system, if said candidate has already accepted contributions with the thought of running in a 2021 municipal election, they will be prohibited. They simply won't be able to accept any more contributions from now until January 1, 2021, upon passage of this piece of legislation. With all the limits this legislation has already heaped upon an individual who just wants to make a difference in some small way, a contribution to help make their community a better place – that's where a lot of great politicians get their start. To further restrict their ability to challenge the status quo, well, quite simply, I would call that another ugly addition to politics, Madam Speaker.

That's another compelling reason that I believe everyone should get behind this motion. Let's fix this legislation and make the political process a better one, better than the way we found it when we got here. Because unlike the time-honoured western movie that I have alluded to throughout this speech, this bill is anything but a classic in its current form. It should be sent back to the editing room or, in this case, a suitable legislative committee.

That being said, thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you very much. I have to say that the Member for Little Bow has done a wonderful job explaining to this House exactly what it is that we need to do. We need to refer this to committee. He's made some pretty compelling arguments. The fact is that whenever you've got government moving something this fast through the House, we need to maybe rein back and say: let's use some caution. I can tell you that when it comes to consulting with municipalities on this issue, I think that we all can agree that our elected leaders in rural Alberta and even urban Alberta all share a common voice that we need to get this right the first time.

Now, I really do think that the Member for Little Bow hit this concern right on the head when it comes to the name of one of his favourite westerns, The Good, the Bad and the Ugly. Now I understand that this government really is trying to do good, but will there be bad coming out of this, and will it get ugly for the government? That is the real question here.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the referral? The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure this morning to rise in the House to speak on the referral amendment for Bill 23, An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta. The main purpose of this bill is to better align local elections, including municipalities, school boards, Métis settlements, and irrigation districts, to provincial election laws, some of which have already been changed in this bill. This Bill 23 will amend the Local Authorities Election Act to reflect the changes that are being proposed. This would better align local elections with provincial elections regarding the rules around fundraising, donations, and political action committees.

Now, let's first look at the mechanics of this bill, starting with campaign contributions. First off, Bill 23 will seek to ban corporate, union, and employer organizations from donating to candidates in municipal elections. I believe this is a change that I can support. Members of this Assembly previously passed legislation that would institute these changes at the provincial level. It makes good sense to synchronize legislation between provincial elections and local elections. Furthermore, it's important to keep special interests at bay when influencing local campaigning.

The reality is that an individual cannot compete with a large union or corporation when they want the candidate's ear. Under this legislation local election candidates will only be able to accept donations from individuals, thus giving individual citizens more of a level playing field. However, corporations, unions, and employer organizations can donate to third-party advertisers, often known as political action committees, or PACs. These PACs have no limit on the amount of money they can collect from unions, corporations, and employer organizations. This means that these groups will have the ability to participate in local elections through third parties. Now, it's important to note that groups that are not unions or employer organizations cannot donate money to PACs or pay for advertising unless it was collected from its members expressly for that purpose.

Madam Speaker, another change that Bill 23 will make is a reduction in the campaign period to one year. Currently the campaign period is four years, from January 1 of the year following the election to December 31 in the year of that election. This change may have some adversarial consequences, which is why I believe we need to refer this bill to committee. What is the impact of this on both current and prospective candidates? Has the government given proper consultation?

With a change like this, I think it's important that we hear directly from the stakeholders in a public forum because a question we can ask is: why are we limiting the amount of time that a candidate can campaign? Especially with the nonpartisan nature of local elections, incumbents will have a clear advantage in most circumstances. For a nonincumbent to be able to have a fighting chance at beating an incumbent, they often have to start campaigning more than a year in advance, and if they are unable to raise or spend money, how much of an effort can they really conduct? The reality is that these changes can further entrench incumbents and make it even more difficult to beat them in a local election.

The next legislative change that we can look at is the reduction of an individual's donation limit. Now, currently the limit is $5,000 per candidate. With the changes that are being proposed, this limit will now be $4,000 in total for all municipal candidates and $4,000 for all school board candidates. This, of course, is bringing the donation limits more in line with provincial legislation, a common theme in Bill 23. However, an issue we can bring up with this is: what if a person wants to support more than one candidate? Many municipalities have large districts where voters can choose multiple candidates. What if they would like to financially support more than one candidate? I don't think this bill addresses that. That's another reason why we should send it back to committee. This could be very much a shortcoming of this legislation, in my opinion.

There's also no longer an exception for candidates who are self-funding their campaigns. Under the current rules candidates can spend up to $10,000 of their own money on a campaign. This exception will be removed completely if Bill 23 passes. I think that individuals who want to individually donate to their own campaign should have the opportunity to do so.

Now, Madam Speaker, much like the provincial legislation, there are no limits on contributions for political action committees. I believe this may be a cause for concern. I don't know if we're getting this right or not, and I don't know the full implication of this change. I'd like to consult with some people to get some answers. Given the tight timeline we're in during this spring session – spring session? This is a fall session. Who wrote this speech? MLAs don't have much time to consult with local stakeholders; however, that is why we have committees. [interjections] I'm still thinking of my Arizona trip coming up this fall, I guess.

Committees are able to take the time to study legislation and give all factors due consideration. That is why we need to support the referral amendment and allow for this legislation to get the proper study it really needs.

Bill 23 will also seek to change the amount of money candidates can spend precampaign. Under the current rules the campaign period more or less lasts the entire time the candidate was or is in office, so there would be no need to have any rules around precampaign expenses. However, since this government decided to limit the campaign period so significantly, they had to create rules about how money is spent outside the campaign period. Bill 23 caps both the amount a candidate can spend and raise at $2,000.

Now, we can ask the question about what impact that will have on municipal and school board politics. What if a candidate is being targeted by a third-party group? Can the candidate significantly defend themselves? Is a $2,000 cap enough? I don't think so. These are all questions I have, and I don't know that I can say that I have the answers to them. I'm hoping that if this gets back to committee, we can ask those questions of those people who are going to be impacted by it. Once again, that is why we refer bills to committee, to get these questions answered by experts, giving us legislators a better understanding of how to both vote on and improve legislation because that's really what our job is.

Another point of this I can bring up: does one-size-fits-all really work for noncampaign spending limits? Why does a municipality like Edmonton or Calgary have the same spending limit and fundraising limit as small towns, small towns where my hon. friends and I grew up in and live in? Two thousand dollars doesn't go very far in a big city. As such, I believe that this could be a shortcoming in this legislation and another reason to refer this bill to committee.

Madam Speaker, let's look at campaign period spending. Bill 23 will leave this up to regulations with caps likely to be based on the size of the municipality and school board. We, of course, won't be able to see the regulations until the bill is passed, so Albertans are going to have to trust the minister and the government to get the regulations right the first time. Of course, as the opposition we want to hold the government to account to ensure that these regulations are proper. However, this government has given us very little reason to trust them, so it is important not to leave too much up to the discretion of the minister. Too much power in the hands of the minister might not be a good thing.

Let's look at the enforcement of these new rules. Bill 23 will grant additional power to the Election Commissioner to investigate, prosecute, and enforce rules related to campaign finance and third-party advertising of municipal and local school board elections. Is this the proper way that local election violations should be investigated? It might be, but we would be able to have more of a complete picture if we referred this bill back to committee.

Madam Speaker, Bill 23 will also change some of the rules around third-party advertising and political action committees. This legislation will require PACs to disclose contributions they will receive to promote or to oppose a candidate. PACs will also have to register with the local jurisdictions and indicate whether they are for or against a specific candidate or a particular issue, special-interest groups. I believe that some of these steps are favourable. It is very important that additional transparency is legislated around PACs. Now, Albertans deserve to know what money is being influenced and where in local elections. Furthermore, registering with the local jurisdiction will give them some accountability and will assure residents that the rules are being properly followed.

However, I would encourage all members of this Assembly to vote in favour of this referral amendment because even if aspects of the bill before us appear to be positive – the good, the bad – we should still take the time to publicly consult with stakeholders and give proper consideration to this bill. Now, while some of these changes around increased transparency appear to be good, there are other problems – oh, the bad – that can emerge from this increased scrutiny.

Madam Speaker, most municipal candidates are campaigning on their own without large campaign teams behind them. Candidates may have difficulty following the new, stricter rules around campaign spending and reporting. Could this discourage potential candidates from running for office? Of course, it could if they feel that they lack the experience to fulfill the requirement of this legislation. That is not what we should be doing with this legislation, and I have concerns that Bill 23 could have the potential to do so.

Bill 23 will also require candidates to disclose donations over $50. Fifty bucks. Why did the government come up with that number, and why is it lower than the $250 disclosure limit for PACs? Why the discrepancy? It doesn't make sense to hold candidates to a stricter standard so that it may appear that the new rules in Bill 23 favour PACs and third-party spenders as opposed to individual candidates.

Madam Speaker, as I've outlined, Bill 23 has too many questions and concerns for me to support at this point. That is why I'm supporting my colleague's referral amendment to have this bill studied at committee in depth. I think this government has failed to listen to Albertans over the past three and a half years in their legislative agenda. It's remarkable how many of these missteps could have been avoided if they had actually listened to Albertans and consulted with those who would have been most greatly affected by this legislation. Governments need to listen to Albertans. I think that if more legislation actually went to committee, they'd be more confident and comfortable with some of the legislation that has recently been passed in the last year. Look at Bill 6. Maybe they could have saved their public embarrassment if they would have consulted with more constituents. Furthermore, what if the government had listened to Albertans when they introduced their carbon tax? I may add that it was never campaigned on, and Albertans wish they would have actually listened to them.

So far on Bill 23 I've outlined my many concerns with this legislation, so let's put it in front of committee, bring in stakeholders, have in-depth knowledge and discussion on this topic, and debate the bill in a public forum, where Albertans can see how we're listening to them. So few pieces of legislation that this government has introduced have actually gone before committees. Maybe if they would have accepted our referral amendments more often, they would be in a more favourable position. Yet here we are, and I hope this government will listen to us at this time.

Madam Speaker, in closing, let's listen to Albertans and receive the feedback from stakeholders that will help us address our concerns with Bill 23. I encourage all members of this Assembly to vote for the referral amendment.

Thank you.

9:50

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Again I welcome this opportunity to speak in the House regarding Bill 23. I have to say that my colleague has really done a good job summing up exactly all the concerns or a lot of the concerns that he's hearing from his constituents. He's mentioned some important facts. This government has in fact failed when it comes to consultation, when it comes to many of their pieces of legislation. Now, when we're dealing with democracy and how it is implemented across Alberta, this is something that we just need to make sure we get right the first time. I always have concern when we rush through a piece of legislation and there could be or most likely are unintended results.

If you look at this bill, it's double-sided pages, almost 90 pages. This is quite a bill to get through. The opposition usually gets this for a couple weeks, and then we've already gone through the bill and really haven't had the time to be able to get out to our constituents to see if there are concerns. A lot of times I think that politicians across Alberta forget that there is something called dome disease. It might be something that we're here engaging in with each other, very much trying to work out some of the problems with this bill. As opposition it is our job to help strengthen the bill, and in some cases some people say that we're only critical, but I would argue that if we're doing our jobs, we're out there putting amendments forward like the referral that you see before you. The referral is important. It is telling all Albertans that they are important when it comes to consulting, making sure we get this right.

I would question how many Albertans actually know right now how much consultation or whether this bill is even going through. A lot of them haven't had a chance to be able to actually get through this document. Look at it. It's – what? – I would say, three-quarters of an inch thick. We're looking at a lot of information here. If we look at what happened when it comes to this current government, they had moved a lot of the same legislation when it came to provincial elections, and we've seen repeatedly where they've actually had to go back and correct the stuff that they've already done because there was lack of consultation.

Now, I was on the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, and I took a lot of pride in debating a lot of this, the direction we were going. It's unfortunate to see that it appears the government more or less disregarded everything that that committee had done, in the end – and I don't have the quote from the House leader – more or less said that it was a waste of time. I take issue with that because I, like those members of that committee, gave up a lot of my summer to dedicate my time to make sure we got it right, and that was for the provincial side.

When it comes to consultation, when it comes to the fact that this government shows and has a track record of a lack of it, the fact is that we're running through this too fast. We need to move this to a committee. We need to make sure that we bring forward our stakeholders like Edmonton and Calgary. Even the city of Cold Lake, for instance, might have some thoughts on how to improve this, yet we haven't given them that opportunity. What we've done is put this piece of legislation on the table, more or less put a press release out saying that it's good for all of Alberta, and then hope that this turns out well for them. Well, we're not going to know until the next municipal election if there are flaws in this, and then we're going to be scrambling to correct these gaps that could have been fixed.

Madam Speaker, consultation is the key. We need to move forward with this referral, and I thank my colleague for his wise words.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the referral?
The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just briefly on the referral. I thank the Member for Airdrie for bringing it forward, but it's not the time to do this now. We need to move forward with this piece of legislation. As I said when speaking to this bill, during the municipal election in 2017, the last municipal election in Calgary, I heard from so many people: why aren't you doing for the cities and municipalities what you did for the province? It was a big deal. As I said, I went through all of the campaign records, financial records for those running in Calgary, and every single person who made the most money, spent the most money was victorious except the run for mayor. I noticed that one of the candidates actually spent nearly $350,000. That's substantial. I'm very surprised by the Member for Calgary-Elbow actually supporting this piece of legislation, because that is 10 times the amount the Alberta Party actually raised last quarter. I mean, it's almost embarrassing, right?

Anyhow, in terms of consultation, Madam Speaker, this goes back to 2016, when we started to look at this. Really, we wanted to implement it before the last election, but there wasn't enough time to do the consultation that needed to be done. So here we are, we're trying to get it in place before the next election, and I think the consultation was robust: AUMA, RMA, city of Calgary, city of Edmonton, Rural Municipal Administrators Association. The list goes on and on, and they received over 1,500 responses from a survey that was put out by the ministry. I think the consultation was robust.

With the regulations, we can make changes. If the opposition has amendments that they would like to bring forward, then I think they should do that. I don't think we need to stall this at this point. This is too important. These levels of government are so close to our everyday lives, and they need to be conducted fairly. I think it's pretty well known that conservative think tanks in this province have propped up local governments for many years. I think we need to put an end to that, and we will do that with the financing, levelling the playing field on the finances.

With that said, I didn't want to say too much, Madam Speaker, but I just wanted to say that I won't be supporting this amendment. I don't think we should be supporting this amendment. Let's just move forward. Let's get it through second reading and bring your amendments forward in committee.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

On 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you again for giving me the opportunity. I do recognize that every time we bring a referral about some important pieces of legislation, the government gets up and says that they've done the appropriate consultation, and then they get up again and they say that really it's not needed. But I will tell you that the last piece of legislation that had been put through here for the provincial elections has been repeatedly corrected by this government.

Again, a lot of the stuff that we're correcting the opposition actually brought up as potential concerns. The PACs, for instance, the super PACs: we were very clear that if the government didn't deal with super PACs during that initial piece of legislation, this would grow out of control. Then suddenly what happens is that super PACs grow out of control, and the government is shocked, and then they're saying that there's shadow money and all these other things coming forward.

I can tell you that it's distressing to see that this government continues to drop the ball when it comes to consultation. To hear that the reasoning that we shouldn't consult is because some members in past municipal elections spent $50,000 seems to be very strange reasoning to be saying that the government shouldn't do its due diligence when it comes to this.

And to hear that the government had started this process in 2016 but didn't have it ready for the 2017 election – my question is that right now it appears that what we're trying to do, then, is be prepared for the 2021 election. I don't think that's unreasonable to say that we would want to have this in place. So why is it that we're not moving this to a committee? We have the time. Let's do this right. Yet the government is saying: well, we couldn't get it right just before the last election, so we're going to rush through it after the 2017 election. There's time available. Why not involve the municipalities? Why not involve Albertans in the consultation process? Why not make sure that we iron out these flaws that the government may have in this legislation?

But because we're moving through this so quickly and because this government seems so focused on moving through with legislation that I would argue we all want to see happen – I do believe that we all want to see in this House. I can't speak for all parties, but I can speak for the Official Opposition. The Official Opposition and the government stand on the same side about banning corporate and union donations to elections. I think that if we can come out with this as one of the main goals, then that's great.

But I will tell you that what I don't hear from these guys is: let's make sure that we reach out and do some actual consultation. God forbid somebody else comes up with a good idea and they actually have to change the direction they're going in. That seems to be the hardest part for this government and one of the lessons that it continues to learn, unfortunately, the fact that our government right now seems to care more about its ideology instead of putting Albertans first.

Now, I again, when it comes to this, say that there may have been a good amount of support when it comes to saying that maybe we do need to limit contributions. But why $4,000? Where did that number come from? Is that something that we all need to be wary of, that they're just pulling numbers out of a hat as a number that fits just because it's the provincial one? I understand that this government really hasn't got any real justification when it comes to this magic $4,000 number. Some of the other numbers as well: where did they come from? Did they actually reach out to anybody? I will tell you that this government has failed in consultation. So will the government explain where the $4,000 comes from?

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the referral? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak before this House. I know that my colleague from Little Bow and other colleagues across the aisle have spoken on this, and they are saying that a referral motion or amendment is not what Albertans or they are looking to move towards.

Now, if we truly look at the past, let's look at Bill 6. I actually am quoted in a debate during Bill 6 as saying that the name of that bill should have been the no-consultation bill because the government failed terribly when it came to consultation on Bill 6. We had farmers on the steps peacefully, I might add, demonstrating against the moves that this government was making. They had not been adequately consulted with, and in the end the government had to backtrack and restart the whole process of consultation. Now what has happened is that we're seeing that there's some confusion on exactly what the consultation after Bill 6 is actually leading to.

Now, I do believe that the government wanted with that legislation to ensure that farm workers were safe, and that's admirable. I want farm workers to be safe. I know that my colleagues want farm workers to be safe. We also want to make sure that there are protections in place for those workers. But when it comes to government using ideology to make decisions, there's no balance, and that is where this government has been lacking. It has been lacking in the fact that there is no balance to the decisions that they're making.

This is why referring this stuff to committee, ensuring that we actually get industry involvement in this process – now, in this case, this bill, this referral, we're looking for involvement from our municipalities, we're looking for involvement from our municipal leaders, and we're looking for involvement from our constituents. I can tell you that when it comes to involvement from all groups of Albertans, all levels of government, we win. We win when we have the strongest piece of legislation moving forward.

In one of my comments earlier – I had the fortune to sit on the Special Ethics and Accountability Committee. I would say that we agreed on a lot of things, but we may have disagreed on some. That actually is healthy. If we all agree on the same thing, what happens is that we usually get something called groupthink. That means that we're moving in the direction that we want to end up in. Sometimes we need that devil's advocate there to say: "Is this is the appropriate thing? Are we moving in the right direction?" Yet what we don't see here is any voice when it comes to ensuring that municipal leaders have been heard across this province.

Now, what I will say is that this is a rather thick bill. When we're looking at this bill, we're looking at, again, almost 90 pages. There is a lot of stuff in this bill. A lot of times a misplaced comma can be reinterpreted in the exact opposite way of what you intended. We've seen this in court cases. The fact is that when we've given everybody the appropriate amount of time, especially when it comes to stuff that's affecting them, we will find and we will iron out these concerns. But when we have this bill in our Legislature probably for a two- or three-week period, we are not giving the appropriate amount of scrutiny we need, especially when it comes to something as important as elections. We need to make sure that we get this right.

When it comes to the government, what they have done is that they're saying: we've done all the consultation more or less, and we think this is ready. Now, my question, though, is: why is it that we're rushing this? Why can't we involve everybody in the process through a committee? I can tell you that when it comes to the fact that the government wants to pass legislation, that's fine. That's the government's prerogative. You know what? It is important that the government does move forward with policy. But I will tell you that what I don't see is a government that is actually going out and making sure that they get the consultation part right.

I am concerned that when it comes to something this important, if we get this wrong, these problems aren't going to be today, these problems aren't going to be tomorrow, but these problems are going to be in 2021 when we have our municipal elections. We're going to be reeling with some of the problems that have been created, that we won't know until it's too late. I guess what we'll end up seeing is that this stuff will be probably – if I had to hazard a guess, we're going to find problems with this over the next two or three years, and then we're going to be putting forward bills to correct this, that could have been caught in the committee process.

Now, one of the things that was brought forward is that the more restrictions we put on people, we're more likely to see fewer people going out and putting their name forward. I am concerned that what happens here is that by levelling the field, we're actually excluding people, and that we need to make sure that we're levelling the playing field and not excluding people. That, I think, is our goal here. I am hopefully saying that what we're looking to do is that we're making sure that we have a fair voice from all groups, sexes, demographics in Alberta to ensure that we get the best municipal governments across this wonderful province. If in the end we end up excluding somebody because it is too onerous to get in here because of the fact that we've made it too hard, that isn't good as well. While we may be doing something that we are hoping is with the best intentions, in the end what we're looking at doing is making sure that everybody has access to this.

Now, I hear the concern. We end up seeing a councillor putting a million dollars into a campaign. Nobody else can compete with that. Is that fair? I would argue no. I argue that in the end what we need to make sure is that there is the ability for people to be able to compete and be able to get their name and their voices through, and that what doesn't happen is the fact that when we have such a lopsided amount of money, we don't actually see that.

That's where my concern here is, that now by limiting this, are we allowing super PACs, these societies or foundations or nonprofits – I'm not sure how they're structured – to dominate municipal elections? Now, super PACs need lawyers, they need accountants, they would need support staff, all these wonderful things. I can tell you that the average Albertan does not have the ability to compete with that, so we're actually making it harder for those that are playing by the rules. This was identified during the Special Ethics and Accountability Committee multiple times, that if there are groups out there that have more power or more influence than the actual candidates themselves, that's problematic.

I have to say that when it comes to the government, I do believe that they are trying to actually help people with this bill. I am concerned, though, that they're not going about it in the right way, and the fact that they're unwilling to test this bill with the public says a lot. A committee will test how strong a bill is based on the feedback and the stakeholders you get in there. So by bringing it to a committee, by referring this to a committee, and actually having a committee doing their job, we are all the winners. If it doesn't stand up in committee, then the committee can recommend to not move forward with this bill, but if the committee finds that the bill is fine or, God forbid, the committee actually fixes the problems within the bill, that is the best way to make sure we get this right.

What we're not seeing is a government that is willing to put this to the test. Why are you scared to put this bill to the test? I can tell you that in the end a lot of the concerns that I have got are: where did some of the numbers come from that you've picked up? Where did these thresholds come from? You know what? The fact is that is that it looks like you're just pulling stuff out of the dark.

Now, in my constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake there is a completely different campaign run between an urban municipal candidate versus a rural municipal candidate. When it comes to putting up lawn signs in, let's say, Bonnyville, it's a lot smaller. So what we're trying to do is that you're going to need fewer lawn signs, you're going to need less literature, but there's a larger compact population.

When it comes to rural Alberta, though, you need a lot more signs, and through my last election I can tell you that these signs are not cheap. They are very costly. It is important for people to know that there's a municipal election happening. It is important for people to know who is running. It is important for people to be able to hear what your platform is as a municipal leader. If we restrict this too much, are we preventing people finding out what these potential elected officials are trying to do for their communities? It could be that the person with the most literature is the one that wins this. Because we've added the super PAC component to this, that means that people with money are going to potentially have an advantage. I will argue that the whole point of putting this bill forward is to prevent money from being the absolute reason why people get elected.

Why won't this government, why won't you move this to committee? Why won't you test your legislation against the public? I can tell you that right now it appears to me, anyway, that you're scared to. You're not willing to put this to the test because you know that there are potential problems with this legislation, and you're scared that it'll come out in the committee process. You're scared that in the end we will have Albertans upset with you for putting forward this and not actually correcting the problems with this. I will tell you that when it comes to this, there is no rush to get this done by the end of 2018 because we have at least, well, another two years before the next municipal election.

Let's make sure we get it right because if we don't get it right, then we're going to find out that we could end up with a municipal election that really ends up as an unfortunate incident when it comes to the fact that we're not able to ensure that it was a fair process. I really feel that this government needs to consider a referral. This is one of the most important ones. It did create the Ethics and Accountability Committee before, even though it disregarded our recommendations during the committee. A committee would work. I truly believe that we're all on one page. We want to make sure that we get this right.

I truly believe that if we work together, we can strengthen this legislation to do something that works for everybody in this House. That is true government, a process that is working together, strengthening legislation. Whether you are government or opposition, we all just want to see the best legislation passed through this House. What we don't want is flawed legislation, and this legislation could potentially have some significant effects when it comes to 2021. My concern is that while this might be a bill that the government is putting forward and has full confidence in, without the committee process we're not going to see the government's ability to be able to project to Albertans as a whole that this is a perfect piece of legislation, and I think that we all can learn from that.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yeah, under 29(2)(a). I am confused about the concern of the member around consultation. I wanted to ask him what he thinks his leader meant when he said that should, God forbid, he win the election, he would hire people to draft orders in council for cabinet to adopt the week it's sworn in. He said: one of the key elements of structural reform is to move quickly; speed creates its own momentum; it makes it harder for the opponents of reform to obstruct it. He said that he doesn't want to get bogged down with public consultation, so his party is doing as much as it can now on the big issues. What did he mean by that? I'm just wondering if he has any comments on that.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? [interjections] Hon. members.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm really fascinated by the discussion of the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake because he seems to be waxing eloquent about the role of democracy and the importance of consultation. I'm always very intrigued about it because sometimes I feel that he might think that bills and changes to important acts just come out of thin air. It's kind of like we get together – you know, I always felt as an MLA that I relied on the public service, that had for years and years worked on issues of appropriate bills and were trained, professional civil servants, and that a lot of what a government does comes from the experience of professional public servants and lawyers and others who, in this case, have done the work of ensuring that Alberta keeps all elections democratic, transparent and allows the engagement of as many people, Albertans, as possible in the democratic process.

I would like to ask the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, two places that I find are fantastic – and I'm sure that those people there would want to make sure that as they vote for municipal councillors and school trustees, the process is fair and transparent and they actually have access to it. I'm really wondering: what is the member's view of the impact on the formation of bills of professional civil servants, and why does he think that the bill has not been carefully thought through before it's even been brought to the House?

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?
The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you. You know, the member across the aisle – and I welcome her to my constituency every time she comes up. Actually, all members, please come up to Bonnyville-Cold Lake. Wonderful people up in my constituency. I will say that the member – and I don't have the Blues in front of me – says that we don't pull these bills out of thin air. Well, I can tell you that the veterinarians, when they were viciously attacked by this government – viciously attacked by this government – were sat down with the bill in front of them and told: this is our consultation. I will tell you that when it comes to contract negotiations, there are others that are just as fed up with this government. I also will say that farmers across this province also saw the lack of respect by this government, and our pharmacists also are seeing a lack of respect.

You know, when it comes to this government saying that they've consulted, consultation doesn't mean putting a bill on the table and saying: "You can read it for the next half hour. By the way, we're tabling it, and this is what we're debating, and you've got three weeks to more or less accept what we've put forward." That is what we're seeing right now.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the referral?
The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thanks to my colleagues for the opportunity to rise and speak to the referral. I want to start, though, with the name of the bill, Bill 23, An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta. Renew democracy. You know, if there's anything that we're challenged with, if there's anything that is our stewardship, our legal obligation, our personal obligation, our complete obligation to our constituents, it's to enhance democracy, to get democracy right. When you think of world history and how far we've come, where we get to disagree and argue with words instead of swords or bullets or whatever, it's because of democracy. It's because of thousands and thousands of people, hundreds and hundreds of risks they've taken over the years to give everyone an opportunity to have their voice heard.

Madam Speaker, that's why I so support this amendment, the amendment to send the bill to committee, the amendment to take a sober, longer, complete second look, the opportunity to bring in all Albertans who have insight, who have ideas, who have knowledge, who have experience, just the time for government members, whether they're cabinet members or otherwise, the time for us here in the opposition to talk a little bit more to our constituents, to talk a little bit more to the elected officials, to hear what the insight they have is. My goodness, how important is it?

I believe that in Medicine Hat, in the municipal election which was just about a year ago, which is why there is time to get this right, our turnout was 34 per cent. Madam Speaker, we had a 34 per cent turnout; 66 per cent of eligible Medicine Hatters didn't go to the polls. Maybe that's where we need to start with An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta. Maybe we need to have some committee time that looks at why so many Albertans feel that their vote or their voice doesn't matter, doesn't count, isn't important, because my six and a half years of politics have taught me how important it is. I can't count the number of good ideas that I've heard in six and a half years that Albertans have shared. Advocacy groups that routinely come here and express their ideas and concerns: it's amazing how often they get listened to. My goodness, being MLAs, one of the joys but one of the curses at the same time is that daily log of e-mails we get. There's so much good information that gets forwarded to us.

Madam Speaker, 34 per cent last election: why would we not do anything – why would we not do anything – to try to enhance that? What was the turnout in the last provincial election? I think it was somewhere around 55 per cent, wasn't it? Federally maybe it gets up to 75 per cent. You know, to me, that's one of my questions right there: why do people – when the vote is the closest, when the vote makes the most difference, why is the turnout the lowest?

Mrs. Pitt: Fifty-eight per cent.

Mr. Barnes: Fifty-eight per cent in the last provincial election. Thank you.

Potentially, Madam Speaker, these are questions that I believe this bill has completely missed. I've been sitting listening to my colleagues on both sides of the House, and I haven't heard anyone mention this, so perhaps this is something that the government missed in their haste to get this, or with adequate due diligence it was missed. Maybe that's the real good we can do with this referral amendment for Bill 23, An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta. Just to summarize, democracy is the essence of why we're here, it's what built Alberta, it's what built Canada, it's what built so much opportunity for all of us. Let's do what we can to get it right. I think that in this case it's especially important.

Our hard-working staff, who when we're in session, my goodness, work night and day and do a great job, have provided this summary. The Local Authorities Election Act provides a framework for local authority elections, including municipalities, school boards, Métis settlements, and irrigation districts. The proposed amendments in Bill 23 would better align municipal election rules with recent changes made to provincial election rules. Well, my goodness, look at how diverse and how many people it encompasses, how many people with different vested interests, different needs, different good ideas, different ways to make things better, from municipalities to school boards. Look at the varying sizes of municipalities, the varying risks and opportunities they have: Métis settlements and irrigation districts. The irrigation district in Cypress-Medicine Hat: my goodness, excellent, excellent stewards of the land, always balancing that great opportunity to feed the world, that great opportunity to innovate and do things better but sharing and balancing the use of water. At this point does Bill 23 adequately take into account all the changes and unintended consequences that could happen there?

Métis settlements: my goodness, we have a great heritage of Métis people in Cypress-Medicine Hat. They have been there for hundreds and hundreds of years. I absolutely believe that when they've reached out to me and helped me learn and understand, helped me understand their good ideas and what's important to them, in a heartbeat they would come to committee and would make sure that this government got it right. If there were any improvements, if there were any ideas, they would make sure that they were presented. Again, in Committee of the Whole in this House, yeah, we get to walk around, we get to be a little bit more informal, but it's just us. It's not access for 4.1 million Albertans that could absolutely make this better.

Again, it's a bill to renew democracy, but we're going to minimize democracy while we renew it. We're just going to do it our way. We're looking at four broad groups who are crucially important to Alberta's future for culture, for collaboration, for the education of our kids, for the enhancement and protection of cultures, and for economics. My goodness, we all know how Alberta's economics are under threat right now with our differential price, with our layers of burden of taxation and rules and regulation. My goodness, let's not take the unintended-consequence chance. Let's not take the risk of getting it wrong for people that are already challenged to provide jobs, to pay taxes, to build wealth.

I want to talk about unintended consequences. Every single law, every single bill, probably everything we do in life always has unintended consequences. You can think things through, you can plan, but until your law becomes a reality, one doesn't really know what's going to happen, what the unintended consequences are, like a carbon tax. When municipalities, Métis settlements, school boards, and even irrigation districts touch almost every single Albertan, why would we dare take the chance of having unintended consequences? Why would we dare take the chance of not hearing from them?

Of course, back to the good summary, the good hard work that our staff provides: to align municipal election rules with recent changes made to provincial election rules. Of course, we've all spoken time and time again in favour of taking union and corporation money out of politics, making it so that everyday, hard-working Albertans and everyday, hard-working Alberta families have the loudest voice, as it should be. But we've seen how big money has drifted into PACs. We've seen how unions and other groups that have an interest in Albertans have also taken bigger positions, different positions, attracting money, spending money, having political influence. Madam Speaker, as we know, that bill is fairly new. That bill has considerable potential problems, considerable unintended consequences, so before we even analyze that bill, we're just going to do it again. What's that saying in life? If somebody fools you the first time . . .

Mr. Hunter: Fool me once, shame on you.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you. Fool me once, shame on you; fool me twice, shame on me. Thank you, my hon. colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner, who knows those things.

Here we are. We're not even sure how it's working, but we're going to double down. We're going to try it again. From what I can see when I read this, it does not address or improve the transparency and accountability of third-party advertisers and their corporate or union supporters. And what is the worst kind of unintended consequence? When you get exactly the opposite of the result you intended. Probably all 87 of us have stood up here and said: "Yeah, yeah, this is great. Take corporate and union money out of politics. Put Alberta families and Albertans in charge." And the number one unintended consequence is that we've got the opposite happening.

Madam Speaker, if this is allowed to go to committee, potentially we can summon some of these union and PAC people. Potentially we can hear where we're at. Potentially the 87 of us can have a look at what is actually happening, and we can determine if the government has completely failed in their effort to renew local democracy in Alberta, or we can look and see what's working. Again, when An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta minimizes debate, minimizes Albertans' ideas, minimizes discussions, I really wonder: why? I really wonder what the rush is. Of course, an election is coming up, March 1 to May 31. Potentially it's that. You know, when democracy and caring for Albertans is our number one obligation, our number one priority, why would we allow this government to have free rein on potentially getting it wrong?

Madam Speaker, I've always been a big fan of what I hear in Ottawa and how they have permanent standing committees instead of Committee of the Whole in here. My goodness, we know how the government of Alberta can make a law in just 48 hours, with a one-day break on either side of Committee of the Whole. That may be necessary the odd time, but to renew local democracy in Alberta, where people are voting now in the mid-30s and that's not even being addressed? If we had a chance, if we had an understanding from Alberta voters, all Albertans, even those that aren't old enough to vote, so that they know they can come and have their voice heard, if they know that almost every time this Legislature did something, they would have an opportunity to analyze it, to make it better – you know, I can't think of . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, I was very interested to hear my colleague speak quite well about the need to be able to bring this bill to committee. What's interesting is that there has been a model where we've seen this concept work, and the model was presented when Bill 201 came forward from our hon. colleague from Highwood. There was a good intention with the bill, and then there was a realization that more needed to be done. It was brought before a committee, the Resource Stewardship Committee, and Resource Stewardship was able to debate it and figure out the end result, where that bill should go.

At that point it was able to come back in here, and we've seen how even the member who brought this private member's bill forward is recognizing: "You know what? The best intentions of this bill were to help volunteer firefighters so that they don't lose their jobs, but in the end the unintended consequences outweighed those positives to the bill." So what happened was that, you know, it's still being debated, but it shows a good model, Madam Speaker. It shows the model that sober second thought is always valuable to the process here.

In the Westminster parliamentary system we have, we've seen a few things happen. We've seen a member from the opposite side leave that caucus because she established: the party whip was saying how we should vote on certain things. This is maybe one of the negative parts to the Westminster parliamentary system, but the positive part to the Westminster parliamentary system, Madam Speaker, is that we have the ability to have that sober second thought, the ability to have a debate, a robust debate where we can say: "What are the pros and what are the cons to this bill? How is it going to be beneficial to Albertans as a whole?" Then, at the end of the day, we have the ability to hopefully come up with legislation that will be of benefit not just to the current generation but to generations to come.

This is the value of our Westminster parliamentary system, but when we shortchange it, Madam Speaker, when we take away the rights as legislators to be able to have that robust discussion and robust debate, then we do not only ourselves a disservice, but we do a disservice to Albertans and to future generations. I have said this before in this House, but I'll say it again. I believe that the characterization of many people I've talked to, who say that the way they describe this government is as the government of unintended consequences, is not far off the truth, and the reason why is because they continue to ram through this legislation in order to be able to get things done that they believe are the right things for Albertans.

I actually like the federal system a lot better, Madam Speaker, because at least there they have committees that really do go deep into the legislation. They cannot ram it through quickly. It has to go to these committees. It has to be able to be vetted properly. I think that that's actually a system that works better because it is the vetting process that helps us to figure out all those little nuances to bills and to legislation that could be problematic. Not that I'm saying that the NDP are looking to hurt Albertans, but I'm saying that there could be unintended consequences, and those unintended consequences, whether they have the best interests of Albertans in mind or not, would come out in that vetting process, during the committee process.

I think that we've seen a good model. They were willing to do that with a private member's bill. Why aren't they willing to do that with this type of a bill?

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Bill 24

An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights

[Adjourned debate November 20: Mr. Dreeschen]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is an honour to rise in the House today to speak to Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights. This bill, while being only four pages, has a lot we need to address.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, just for clarity, have you not already spoken to second reading of this bill? I believe you have.

Is there anybody else that would like to speak to second reading? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We look alike.

Mr. Yao: Sure.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker and colleagues for the opportunity to rise and talk about Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights. It's an honour to rise today to talk about this act. This bill, as previously mentioned, while only being four pages, has a lot we need to address. At first glance this bill seemed relatively harmless and well intended. However, after reaching out to numerous physicians across Alberta, we have learned that there are many issues with this piece of legislation that need to be addressed.

Madam Speaker, of course, to address things properly, we need more time. We need more time to reach out to all affected stakeholders to make sure that this bill is actually in the best interests of all Albertans and especially the best interests of Alberta patients. The bottom line is that we need to study this bill more going forward. We need some time to make amendments, to talk about it because, once again, as we just talked about with Bill 23, this government has not only forgotten to consult with all relevant stakeholders but is blocking Albertans' democratic right to come in and discuss how to make this better.

I'm very proud of our UCP team, MLAs and members and staff, and I'm very pleased to say that they've been actively reaching out to physicians over the last few weeks, and we've received some great feedback. First of all, do you know what we're hearing from physicians in regard to this bill? Most of them had absolutely no idea that this was even coming forward. Most of them had absolutely no idea that this bill was being presented and was going to become the law of Alberta and become the rules and regulations that govern their livelihoods, their careers, their futures. Madam Speaker, I ask: does that seem like good consultation to you?

Madam Speaker, we've seen it consistently, continually. This government always shows that they'll push through their agenda regardless of the consequences, regardless of advice from deputy ministers and bureaucracy, regardless of 2,000 people on the steps out front. This government has an agenda, and unfortunately too much of our economy, too many Alberta families and communities are paying the price for that agenda. As important as health care is, let's make sure that doctors and patients and families don't pay that price.

You know, Madam Speaker, what I was referring to with the 2,000 people on the steps here was, of course, Bill 6, with 1,500 people down in Cypress-Medicine Hat, hundreds of people everywhere. As a matter of fact, I was just in Mossleigh, Alberta, last week. There had to be 50 people talking about how the government rammed that down their throats, talking about ideas to go forward.

It also recently happened on Bill 21. When opposition parties brought forward excellent amendments, the government didn't listen. They shot them down. They know best, better than Albertans.

Now, I'm not saying that this bill will have widespread consequences, Madam Speaker, but what I am saying is that we do not know enough about the bill to support it. Again, some consultations will be necessary, especially when it's our belief that a very, very small percentage of physicians knew about it, were consulted about it. Of course, they're very, very important to Alberta families.

We do not know about the possible implications of this bill or even how the majority of physicians feel about it. But we've seen this time and time again. The government refuses to do adequate consultations, and then they ask us: trust us; trust us. Again, we saw what happened with so many of the other bills. Potentially the unemployment figures in Alberta show what happens when that trust is misplaced.

Government has given us, of course, no reason to trust them. They've had to backtrack on numerous bills because of public outcry. You know, in the opposition we try hard to read the bills, to discuss them, to reach out and consult with Albertans. Madam Speaker, we intend to continue to give Albertans our very best. That starts with listening and goes, second, to working collaboratively, with the goal to make the legislation as good as possible so all Albertans can achieve the opportunity and the outcome that they are looking for.

Of course, with physicians I feel it is very, very important that they have the right to share their recommendations and concerns with government, and we aim to do that. Ten thousand – 10,000 – physicians in Alberta and growing numbers of nurse practitioners, physician assistants, many other allied health professionals have a vested interest in this, Madam Speaker. So many of these good people want to give Albertans and Alberta families the best quality of care and service they can. Let's make sure that when we're talking legislation and rules and regulations, they have the opportunity to do that.

I wonder why so many members of the AMA did not have a chance to vote on this, why a backroom, backdoor deal between the AMA and the government maybe seems to be happening. You know, it never hurts – it never hurts – to shed sunlight and transparency on anything, and when we desire to have all Albertans engage in our future, in the political process, why would we do anything that would slow that down? Again, Madam Speaker, it's simple. We just need more opportunity to do our due diligence, to talk to some physicians to ensure that it's something that they actually want.

I'm so impressed. You know, I was at a Diwali celebration Saturday night in Medicine Hat. There were 300, 350 people there and several physicians. I was so impressed with how they came up to me and told me how the number of people in their clinics with broken bones from slips and falls had dramatically increased, and they asked me to spread the word to be cautious, especially to older, potentially more vulnerable Albertans. I asked a few of them if they knew about this, and I was met with a blank stare. Madam Speaker, that just so easily proves my point of how our physicians, our health professionals absolutely want to do their best. To ensure that people can do their best, they need to be involved, and they need to have a say. They proved that. They proved that at the social setting when we were all there with our spouses and our families and they took the time to express that.

Some of these physicians, others that we've reached out to, are actually a little bit upset because they're believing that it wasn't put out to them. If we don't take some time to debate this and potentially look at it and make amendments – and I hope the government will listen to amendments – then their opinions don't matter. Can you imagine being tasked with the life, the care, and the future health of Alberta children and families and not being allowed to have your input?

Madam Speaker, thank you very, very much for this chance to discuss this bill. I hope my colleagues in the government across the floor will endeavour to listen to what our good health professionals feel is in Alberta's best interests.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to rise and speak to Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights. When the bill was first introduced, I thought: well, this is going to be easy; it's a small bill, six pages, and we can take a look at it and be able to figure out fairly quickly if it is something that's good for Albertans or not good for Albertans. Unfortunately, it did take us a little while because we had to go back to our physicians and start talking to the physicians and ask them what their opinion was. So we were able to do quite a bit of that consultation in this last week. When I say quite a bit of that consultation, it was by no measure something that I would say is fulsome and robust enough to be able to in good conscience say that this is a good or a bad bill, but what we did hear from Alberta's physicians, the ones that we talked to, is that they had no idea about this bill.

So with that, Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure to be able to introduce an amendment.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, can you just wait till you've tabled a copy and the original, please?

Mr. Hunter: Can I keep it?

The Acting Speaker: No. The original goes to the table, please.

Hon. member, your amendment will be referred to as HA1. Please go ahead.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day three months hence."

Now the reasoning for this, Madam Speaker. It was evident that when my colleague a little over a week and a half ago stood in this House and read a letter from a very successful, well-credentialed physician in Alberta, it was an indictment on the argument that this government has made numerous times that the consultation was fulsome and robust and was enough. Once again, prior to my introducing this amendment, I referenced that we thought that after a six-page bill came before us, it was going to be quick and we would be able to figure this out. But once we started to make calls to a few of the physicians that we had talked to, we recognized that something was amiss. I'd like to give in evidence to the members of this Chamber the reason why we believe a hoist amendment is the proper approach for this bill.

We've had an opportunity to speak this morning on a few other bills, talking about the necessity of consultation, talking about how important it is to not just our generation but future generations as well, Madam Speaker, that we allow them the courtesy to be able to have a fulsome debate about this legislation so that we make sure that we mitigate the unintended consequences that could cause problems not just for our generation but for generations to come. This is the problem that we've seen with this bill. Because of the track record of this government, the track record in that they say that they've done a fulsome consultation and they tell us, "Scouts honour, that's the truth," and then we find out afterwards that in reality that has not happened, so many of the people who should know, actually, don't know about a bill that is going to have a material effect on their livelihood and on their ability to provide for their families.

Madam Speaker, when we heard that this doctor from Calgary had no idea about this bill, we started to dig a little deeper, and here are some of the things we found. We found that when the doctors voted – when we got the government brief on this bill, they had said that 89 per cent of physicians were in favour of this. We thought: well, that seems to be a fairly fulsome debate and fulsome endorsement by the physicians of Alberta. But when we dug down deeper into, I guess, the spin that the government put on this, what we found out was that only 30 per cent of physicians actually took part in this negotiation. This idea that 89 per cent is sufficient, we've already seen cracks in it.

Then we took a look at what they were actually voting on, and what we found out is that the members of the AMA were not presented with the contents of the bill; they were presented with no fee increases. The 89 per cent yes vote was not a vote on this bill, which is what was actually presented by the government as what they were voting for, but in reality it was a vote for no fee increases.

Once again we see this government trying to pull the wool over Albertans' eyes.

It gets discouraging, Madam Speaker, when we are in this House to take a look at the pros and cons of bills to be able to figure out whether or not these things are going to be good for the members of the AMA, good for physicians, and good for the people of Alberta, and then we find out that, in reality, the numbers that have been presented to us are not even correct. This is why I think, just for that reason alone, that it's a prudent approach to take this to committee and actually get a fulsome discussion by our physicians, our health care professionals and ask them what the pros and cons to this are, get them in front of a committee to help us figure out whether or not this thing is actually what they want and then whether or not Albertans want it.

In a committee we'd have the opportunity to be able to say: okay; if physicians have this and they get this and they want this, what do Albertans want? There are two parts to this situation. There is the physicians' responsibility and rights, and there's also Albertans' responsibilities and rights. Being able to get direction from both of those parties would be important. Now, if the government had actually done their job and actually got even just good information from a large set of physicians, then maybe they'd have an argument that we should be able to move forward here. We're talking about 30 per cent that voted, but they voted on fees. They didn't even vote for the content of this bill.

I've sent this bill now to four or five of the doctors that I know in my riding, and not one of them had heard about it. Not one. In coming days I will be presenting more evidence to talk about how they're concerned about the fact that there's a bill that's going to have a material effect upon their livelihood and upon their profession that they know nothing about. That is an indictment on this government. This is something that this government needs to take seriously and recognize. How can they in good conscience create a bill and not ask physicians, whom it's going to affect, what they think about it? It just doesn't make sense.

When you go into this bill, it starts talking about what the bill does. One of the things that the government has touted is their ability to negotiate no fee increases for two years and that that was ratified by AMA members. That had 89 per cent ratification by AMA members. That is a true statement. That is a true statement, that 89 per cent of AMA members that voted – they forgot to finish the sentence – voted in favour of no fee increases. What did they give up? What was the concession that they gave up for that? The concession was that they were going to create program stability.

This is in an article, Alberta Doctors Agree to Fee Freezes in Two-year Deal with Province, by Keith Gerein in the Edmonton Journal, May 30, 2018. In this he says that the AMA, as they were doing the negotiations with the government, recognized that because of the environment in Alberta – you know, we were in a recession, we were in real struggles here, and lots of people were losing their jobs – a no-fee increase was the right thing to do. But the concession that the government made in there was that they were going to create this program stability. Now, a good question to ask would be: what is the program stability? Like, what does that actually mean? Program stability: what's the definition of that?

You know, they were touting the ability to get that two-year no increase in fees. They did that with the United Nurses of Alberta and the Health Sciences Association of Alberta as well, a two-year freeze on pay. However, dentists and pharmacists: in this article it says that they actually took a decrease. We'd actually love to be able to get the pharmacists and dentists in front of a committee as well to find out what they thought about this. They have seen zero increases in a few of the unions that we've seen in negotiations. However, the pharmacists and the dentists didn't see that, the no increase. They saw a decrease in their fees. It would be interesting to have them in front of a committee to be able to figure out: well, what happened? What happened in the negotiations? What did the government do?

Now, we do know that with the pharmacists, they didn't give them consultation. They told them: "This is exactly what you're going to get. Take it or leave it." They didn't give them, really, time. No negotiations at all. We heard about this in the last little while, in the last session, again another indictment on this government. If they're supposedly for Albertans, I guess it means that they're actually for only certain Albertans. Why didn't they give the pharmacists and dentists no fee increases? Why did they decrease it? Again, that information would all come out in committee if we hoisted this bill and gave it the proper due diligence and the vetting process that these bills deserve.

One of the other problems that I see with this bill and why I think it would be good to have this is to get RPAP in front of the committee, because according to this bill the retention benefit program is going to end. In rural Alberta, where I'm from, it is tough to be able to get doctors to come there. We had a couple of doctors from South Africa, and they came into Milk River. One stayed, and one hasn't stayed. They do have struggles with that. The consequences or the struggles in having rural Alberta retain those doctors is going to be a big problem.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to ask the member: in your dealings with the physicians that you've been speaking with, did you encounter that perhaps – when you talk about a backroom deal, we want to be careful in this House; I don't want to accuse anybody of anything. But to come up with the agreement that the physicians did come up with and based on the small numbers of physicians that were actually consulted, based on your comments, have you heard that there has been perhaps the idea that physicians want more control over our health care system and less collaborative practice in exchange for taking that freeze?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I'd like to thank the hon. member for the good question. Now, here's what's interesting.

That question could come up in committee, and then we would be able to get the doctors and, actually, then a third party, like myself, interpreting what the doctors are saying. This is the classic value of being able to bring this to a committee, so that we could have those kinds of deep-thinking questions asked.

Now, I'm not about to say that there was any collusion, that there was any arm-twisting that happened. What I'm hearing from doctors, hon. member, is that they just don't know about the bill. There's not even an answer to "what is happening in the negotiations?" because they just don't know about it. They knew about the freeze. There were 30 per cent that took part in that vote. But the real problem is that they just don't know, so that's a concern.

I want to get back to the point that I was making earlier about the rural physicians – and I'll just end with that, Madam Speaker – and that is that it's really tough to be able to find physicians that are willing to stay in rural Alberta. This bill actually gets rid of that retention benefit program. Depending upon the years of service, they're paid anywhere between $5,000 and $12,000 each year as an incentive to stay in the province and in that area. This is something that I think is going to make it very difficult for us in rural Alberta to be able to retain good doctors, good family physicians, general practitioners. So this is a big concern. Again, if we brought this to committee, I think we'd be in a good situation, where we could at least figure out whether or not there are some unintended consequences for our rural physicians.

With that, Madam Speaker, I appreciate being able to present today, and I hope all of the people will vote for this.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment HA1 lost]

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just noticing the time and the great progress we made this morning, I suggest that we call it noon and reconvene at 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:38 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, November 21, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to present to you and through you all of the students and teachers of l'école Parc from Fort Saskatchewan. We have apparently 22 – but it felt like the 30 that I have on my sheet – students that were very nice to visit with and were full of questions and energy. I even got an invitation to a dance recital and a hockey game. I look forward to more visits with them in the future, but if their teacher and chaperone, M. Spencer Dunn and Mme Ashley Charlton, could please stand, and if all of the rest of the students could rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members in this Legislature students from St. Catherine elementary school. They're accompanied by their teachers, Ms Savage and Mrs. Jagusinski, and their chaperone, Alpha. I had the chance to meet the students and take a photo with them earlier. They told me that they really enjoyed their tour of the Legislature, and one of them indicated to me that she would love for this to become her home, not in the sense of being elected; she'd just like to live here. Of course, this House belongs to all Albertans, so I'd ask them to rise and receive its warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of incredibly intelligent, sharp students from the school of Beacon Heights in my riding of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. Now, I know they are an incredibly bright group because I had an opportunity to read to them during Read In Week and they asked some amazing questions about our Legislature and the provincial government, so I'm thrilled that they're able to join us here today. They're here with their teachers, Meryl Roberts along with Emily Robertson, and I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome to all three school groups.

Are there any other school groups? The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 40 students from Parkview school. They are here with Ms Amber Reid, Jillian Price, and a student teacher. Oh, I guess that is the student teacher. Parkview is an awesome school, and I would like them to rise now, please, and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: They may not yet be present, hon. minister.

Are there any other school groups?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning. There you are.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Colonel (Retired) Paul de Boucherville Taillon, of Quebec. Colonel Taillon served as a reserve officer in the Canadian Army for over 38 years across Canada, in Kosovo, Bosnia, the U.K., U.S., Oman, Ukraine, and Afghanistan. In civil life he has an interesting and varied career in counterespionage and counterterrorism in over three decades in the Canadian Security Intelligence Service prior to taking post as director, office of the Communications Security Establishment Commissioner, where he led and conducted oversight reviews. He holds a doctorate from the London School of Economics and three master's degrees.

Colonel Taillon was the counterinsurgent and strategic adviser to the commander of the Canadian Army during the later stages of the Afghanistan campaign. He remains an acknowledged international expert on geopolitical and strategic security matters. Mr. Speaker, beyond all that, he is the direct descendant of two premiers of Quebec. A long-time friend of our Sergeant-at-Arms, he spoke last night to the community and military leaders at the cavalry dinner of the South Alberta Light Horse Regiment. He is seated in your gallery, and I would now ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome, and merci for your service to our nation.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly constituents from Edmonton-Ellerslie. I'm so pleased that they could join us today. Later I'll be speaking about Mawlid al-Nabi, the celebration of the birth of the Prophet Muhammad – peace be upon him. I thank my guests for giving me the opportunity to celebrate and learn alongside them. I ask my guests to rise as I call their names: Sheikh Saffiullah of JRJ mosque; Sabah Saffiullah, his wife; Ihaa-Noor, his daughter, who I will say is also an amazing public speaker, and one day we hope to see her as an MLA in this House; also, Dr. Mohammad Hasan, who is a member of Al Fatima mosque; Arqum Riaz, who is a special gentleman who has memorized the Quran from cover to cover; and, of course, my wonderful constituency assistant, who I could not do my job without, Haiqa Cheema. Please give them the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three sets of introductions, and as always I will keep them brief. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you an incredible group of advocates. These individuals have long called for strong action against poverty, better supports for Albertans with disabilities, and indexing of social programs. Suzane Huppie receives AISH and is a strong voice in her community. Grant Clark also receives AISH and has been an important advocate for change, and it was a pleasure to have him at one of our round-tables as well. Sandra De Bruin is a community advocate who has worked with many Albertans to help them access AISH and get the supports they need. It's an honour to have them as guests here for the second reading of Bill 26. I ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

My second set of guests, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through Ms Reshma Pandit. Reshma is a world-renowned, award-winning tabla maestro from Delhi-Punjab gharana of India. At the age of five she learned to play the tabla, and she had her first performance at age 12. She continues to perform around India and throughout the world, and I encourage all in this House who haven't seen her yet to please do so. I want to thank Reshma for visiting us here in Alberta and wish her all the best as she continues to break down gender barriers in Indian classical music and inspire audiences around the world. I ask Reshma Pandit to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to also introduce the Sarb Akal Music Society of Calgary. I'm pleased to introduce Harjeet Singh, Jasbir Chahal, Payal Patel, Asjad Bukhari. They are the executive of the Sarb Akal Music Society. They are joined by Rajbir Singh – also a classical singer – and Hardeep Singh, Harpal Singh, Sarbjeet Singh, Manjeet Singh, Ahmad Shakeel Chughtai, Jagdeep Singh from Edmonton, Ravi Parkash, Vipul Jasani, Paranjit Kaur, Sukhman Kaur, and Amandeep Kaur, who is also joined by her three kids. I have the honour of attending many Sarb Akal events in Calgary, and I'm a proud supporter of their work to promote the culture, traditions, and classical music of India. I look forward to continuing to work with them to promote diversity and cultural sharing across Alberta. I ask all of my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you the next MLA for Edmonton-Castle Downs, Moe Rahall. Moe is a local entrepreneur. He runs a string of barbershops, which I have been told by other people are very, very good at what they do. No personal experience here at all, unfortunately. Moe is joined by his father-in-law, Anwar. I would ask Moe and Anwar to please rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you two amazing advocates: Vasant Chotai, vice-president of Public Interest Alberta, who has been a long-time antipoverty advocate and champion for social change; and Cheryl Whiskeyjack, co-chair of EndPoverty Edmonton and the executive director of Bent Arrow Traditional Healing Society. Cheryl is an outstanding community leader who has advocated for and provided strong programs and services for indigenous families and communities. Both Vasant and Cheryl have worked for decades to create a more inclusive, fair, and accessible province for all Albertans. We are pleased to have them here for the second reading of Bill 26. I ask Cheryl and Vasant to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you and to all members of the Assembly a friend of mine from the great riding of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, Ralph Sliger, who has the privilege of calling home the crown jewel of the David Thompson highway, the area between Rocky Mountain House and Nordegg, one of the most beautiful places in the world, where he runs a helicopter tourism company. It's great to have a friend with a helicopter except for when you get elected and you can't go on private aircraft no more, but he does a great job out there. Further to that, he spends a lot of time promoting our province, particularly tourism in the great area that we get to call home. I'd ask that he rises and receives the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

Rimbey Area Fatal Highway Crash

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, let me tell you what my constituents do know about the death of their son. He was killed when a driver ran a stop sign at a T-intersection, travelling at almost 100 kilometres per hour, near the town of Rimbey. His friend died in the crash, and the driver of the vehicle was seriously injured. They also know that the driver was charged with a traffic offence: careless driving. That's it. That's all they know.

This is what they do not know. They do not know why a driver who killed two vibrant young people and seriously injured another was not charged with a criminal offence. They do not know why a judge dealing with this traffic offence was not told right away from the beginning that two people were killed. They do now know that the driver only had her licence suspended for three months and was fined $2,000 for causing two fatalities.

Perhaps that was the best the judge could do with the traffic offence. But they do not know why a plea deal was offered. They do not know if the Justice minister's triage policy, which sees lesser offences plea bargained to clear courts for more serious crimes, contributed to this situation. They do not know how many lives had to be lost that day to count as serious. They do know that their son and friend are gone. Hearts are broken in the family and friends of the victims lost, and they have lost faith in the justice system. And this is what I know, Mr. Speaker: that I will continue to fight for my constituents. It is the least that they deserve on behalf of this tragedy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mawlid al-Nabi

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mawlid al-Nabi, or the birth of the Prophet Muhammad – peace be upon him – is observed in the third month of the Islamic calendar, Rabi al-Awwal. People around the world gather to celebrate and reflect on the Prophet Muhammad's – peace be upon him – life and legacy. I have had the opportunity to celebrate and learn with my constituents in Ellerslie. Prophet Muhammad's – peace be upon him – compassion and willingness to serve humanity in worship of God continues to inspire Muslims to this day.

We are blessed that Muslims have been calling Canada home for approximately 200 years, before Alberta was even recognized as a province. It was for this reason that our government decided to proclaim last October and every October in the future Islamic Heritage Month in Alberta. Muslims have been at the forefront helping fellow Albertans when they have needed it most. Whether it was the floods in 2013 or the tragic Fort McMurray wildfire in 2016, Muslims were there to provide aid and welcome Albertans into their homes and their mosques. The values of the Muslim faith are reflected in your everyday actions and generosity, and Alberta is so much better for it.

I also know, however, that the Muslim community faces Islamophobia and bigotry. I want you to know that our government stands with you, and we will continue to work with you to make sure that every Albertan is respected and safe in this province, regardless of their religion, race, or gender.

Brothers and sisters joining us in the gallery today and all those watching this statement at a later time and date, I wish you and your families an abundance of blessings for generations to come. May Allah [Remarks in Arabic] strengthen your iman and continue to inform your actions as Muslim Albertans. I thank you for your contributions. Let us continue this journey together and work towards unity and peace for all. To all Muslim Albertans and those around the world, Mawlid al-Nabi Mubarak.

Bighorn Area Land Use

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the matter of the Bighorn area is one of great concern to a number of Albertans. This issue is clouded in a void of accurate information because the government is anything but forthcoming. It came to a point when the NDP had an internal e-mail distributed calling for the creation of a new wildland park for the Bighorn area. That upset a lot of Albertans from all walks of life. The NDP then tried to walk back from it. Fast forward a few weeks. One of the resolutions proposed at last month's NDP provincial AGM was, quote, that the Alberta NDP urge the provincial government to establish a wildland provincial park for the Bighorn. It's certainly not hard to see why people are confused about the government's intentions.

But there's more, Mr. Speaker. It recently came to my attention that the government's signs are popping up in the Bighorn stating that OH vehicle trails are closed due to noncompliance. Now, I'm not sure how to take this. Is this that the government is unable to enforce existing laws, so they are simply closing down trails and denying entry to compliant riders, seniors, and mobility-challenged users? I think that's a bit of an overreach. With that logic, one should close highway 2 between Calgary and Edmonton because of speeders. There must be hundreds of noncompliant users on it every day.

Now, just last week the minister stated, "We're looking at proposing a mix of land designations that will conserve and protect natural landscapes while accommodating a wide range of economic, recreation, and tourism opportunities in the Bighorn." I guess that recreation does not include OH vehicles, by the looks of it. The question, though, Mr. Speaker, is: who else will the NDP leave out, our forestry industry, our agriculture industry, our tourism industry, our film industry? Once again this government is picking winners and losers, and it is not about equal access.

This government continues to refuse to consult with the people who are actually using this area, with the local community, and instead sits behind closed doors, focused on their ideological agenda and appeasing foreign interest groups. This government needs to immediately start consulting and working with Albertans. They should have started a long time ago.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Cancer Treatment and Public Health Care

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Imagine for a moment that we live south of the border. The weather would be warmer, the population would be larger, and people around us would be declaring bankruptcy or dying because of lack of funds for health care. It happens every day to our neighbours in the south. In the U.S. the average cost for cancer treatment is approximately $150,000, even more if it's a complicated case. Not only are cancer patients two and a half times as likely to declare bankruptcy as healthy people, but those patients who go bankrupt are 80 per cent more likely to die from the disease. This is the reality that our counterparts on the other side of this House threaten Albertans with.

Privatizing health care hurts everyone. No one knows when they will need to access health care. I spent a decade not accessing health care in any significant way. During a routine exam my doctor found my cancer. I went for many expensive tests, I had incredibly expensive treatment, including a hospital stay, blood transfusions, and I didn't pay a cent out of pocket.

Cancer is a disease that doesn't discriminate. It hits rich and poor alike. The last thing people need when trying to deal with the emotional backlash of a daunting prognosis, navigating an unfamiliar health system, learning about many new medications, trying to figure out how to deal with work, and explaining everything to family, friends and colleagues is to decide if they can afford treatment. Privatizing health care hurts everyone, but it exponentially hurts people in lower socioeconomic situations, people who are already vulnerable, who are already more likely to have complicated health issues and fewer safety nets in place.

I don't know about you, Mr. Speaker, but I don't want to live in a place where the very system that should care for everyone in need hurts them. Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Northern Gateway Pipeline Project Cancellation

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the hon. the minister of the environment. When she was a staff member of the Alberta Federation of Labour, did she attend a hearing of the National Energy Board . . .

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Mr. Kenney: . . . as part of an AFL submission opposing approval of the Northern Gateway pipeline?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to know what the question is in relation to government policy. Perhaps the opposition wants to know more about how I fought for refining and upgrading in Alberta for years against a Conservative government that made promises but in fact delivered nothing. For 10 years in Ottawa this hon. member did in fact nothing. In fact, he did more to create this situation of Alberta's land lock than he did to fix it. I'd also like to know how the Leader of the Opposition wants to bring billions of dollars and tens of thousands of jobs by refining and upgrading to this province.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I would remind the member to stick with the government policy question.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the failure to construct the Northern Gateway pipeline is in part a result of the NDP's opposition to the construction of Northern Gateway. The reason we are in a crisis today with this massive giveaway of Alberta oil is in part because that pipeline was vetoed by the Trudeau government. We have an environment minister here who won't admit it, but she sat in front of the National Energy Board to argue against Northern Gateway. Yesterday she implied that was not the case. Will she be forthcoming today and admit that she went before the NEB to argue for the vetoing of Northern Gateway?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Again, hon. member, I was searching for the question, and I suggest that you address government policy in the next supplemental. It referenced the historic matter about an individual member, and I would respectfully request that you act accordingly.

The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have to admit that I am stunned that the member opposite continues to bring up his greatest failure or at least one of his greatest failures while he was in Ottawa in government for a decade. In fact, the member opposite, as our minister said, did more to cause the land lock than he ever did to fix it. He knows full well that the reason Northern Gateway was on its deathbed was due to his own government's persistent bungling of its approval. Despite that, this side of the House, our government, our NDP government will never stop fighting for Alberta jobs, and we will get the job done.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I was a member of a cabinet that approved the NEB's recommendation in favour of Northern Gateway. The Deputy Premier is a member of a party that actively campaigned against Northern Gateway, which would have been operational within a few months from now had it gone forward.

I would like to ask the government: does it have any regrets for having consistently opposed the construction of the Northern Gateway pipeline? Does it not think that was the wrong approach to take? Have they learned anything from that huge policy mistake?

Ms Hoffman: Why on earth you choose to highlight 10 years of failure is beyond me, Mr. Speaker. His 10 years in government in Ottawa left Alberta land locked, and now he wants us to trust him to fix what he couldn't fix in 10 years. We're going to keep working to fix the mess that he made, fix the differential, increase our takeaway capacity, get pipelines built, and continue to grow upgrading right here in Alberta. I'm very proud of that.

The Speaker: I believe we're at the second main question.

Oil Price Differentials

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. the Premier tried to deny that she had opposed Northern Gateway, but in April of 2015 she said to the Calgary Herald editorial board that Gateway is "not the right decision." The environment minister went before the NEB to argue against the construction of Northern Gateway. Does the government not understand that that decision, together with its support for the Trudeau government's killing of Energy East, is what landed us in this land lock disaster, which has us giving away our most important assets today?

Ms Hoffman: It's truth time, Mr. Speaker. The truth is that when faced with one project on its deathbed and another project full of potential, our Premier advocated for the pipeline that would actually get built. It's true that she threw herself behind the Trans Mountain pipeline, even while the member opposite said that no pipeline is a national priority. It's true that he failed to defend pipelines in Ottawa for 10 years in cabinet, and finally it's true that the last thing we need is for him to bring that record of failure here to Alberta. That's the truth.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, this is sad, to see a government that belongs to a party which spent its entire history militating against our energy industry, which militancy put us in this position, not having the humility to admit that they were wrong to lobby against the Northern Gateway pipeline, to accept their friend Justin Trudeau's killing of Energy East.

Now, yesterday I called on the government to join with us in calling for a voluntary reduction in production by Alberta energy companies. A number of companies have done so. Will the government join with us in calling on other companies to follow their lead?

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, the falsities that were mentioned in the preamble are so insulting, so insulting to the hard work and labour of people who've been the backbone of our party for decades. The differential, we know, affects every Canadian. The member opposite had 10 years in Ottawa in cabinet to fix the problem, and he failed. The differential is hitting Albertans hard, so we're going to fight to create jobs here in Alberta, and we won't let up. He had 10 years in federal government in Ottawa, and we aren't going to give him another 10 years. Now he's going to attest that he's going to fix the problem now that he's here in Alberta. How can we trust that? How can we trust that he'll fix it when he had 10 years in federal cabinet and failed?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, I would urge that you avoid using words like "falsities." It is not in respect for this House.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the government hasn't even tried to answer any of these questions, so let me try this again. A number of voices in Alberta's energy industry have called for a voluntary reduction in output by about 5 per cent to clear out the current glut in inventories and to stabilize the price. They believe that this would reduce the price differential by about 50 per cent. A number of responsible actors in our energy industry have led voluntarily, but some have refused to do so. Will the government join with us in calling on those companies to join in a voluntary reduction of output so that we can get the price . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I think that what the Premier said yesterday is important for the member opposite to heed the wisdom of. Calling for a voluntary initiative that would lead to collusion would indeed be that. Rather than asking a bunch of corporations to collude, we're fighting as hard as we can to get full value. That includes taking on the differential and doing so through legal and upfront matters, fighting for new pipelines that the member opposite failed to get built while he had 10 years in federal cabinet to break our land lock, and ensuring that our energy upgrading is being done here in Alberta. Decades of failure in successive federal governments have left Canada holding its economy hostage.

Federal Policies on Oil Transportation

Mr. Kenney: Well, that answer demonstrates a complete misunderstanding of the law and the urgency of this matter. For a company to make its own individual voluntary decision to reduce production has nothing to do with collusion, Mr. Speaker. Is she accusing the majority of Alberta oil producers that have already voluntarily reduced production of collusion? Is she saying that by taking those actions, they're breaking the law?

The Speaker: Hon. member, please direct the comments through the chair, if you would.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, our energy resource belong to us, to every single Albertan, and we're not going to sell them to folks south of the border for nothing. We're going to take action on all fronts – that's our plan – creating jobs right here in Alberta, fighting for pipelines, making sure that we have supercharged energy upgrading, making sure that Albertans are working for Albertans. His plan for the economy is to fire 4,000 nurses, 4,000 teachers, and hope for a different outcome than what he failed to achieve when he spent 10 years sitting at the federal cabinet table. We're going to work through legal channels to make sure we get the best outcomes for all Albertans.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, none of that is true.

Now, not only is the NDP's close friend and ally Justin Trudeau bringing forward the no-more-pipelines law, Bill C-69, but his federal government is accelerating the phasing out of the jacketed CPC-1232 oil tanker railcars and in so doing will aggravate the problem of the bottlenecking of our resources. Will the government join with us in asking the federal government not to accelerate this phase-out because we do need, with the lack of pipelines, to move more oil by rail?

The Speaker: If I might, just again, hon. member, I heard "falsities," "not true." Please, hon. members, it's an honourable place. Try and stay away from those phrases which leave an implication not intended.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Ms Hoffman: I am very proud to stand in this House and tell the truth, Mr. Speaker, and the truth is . . .

The Speaker: Hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: I'm telling the truth. That's what I'm saying. The member opposite accused me of not doing so. I'm honoured to tell the truth, Mr. Speaker, and the truth is . . .

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

The Speaker: Two points of order.

Ms Hoffman: . . . that we have had many opportunities to break the land lock. We had a federal government that failed to make any progress on that, Mr. Speaker. The truth is that we have an opportunity now, an opportunity with a Premier who won't back down on any front. That's why she's fighting for the upgrading that's happening in the province. That's why she's fighting to make sure we break the land lock. That's why she's travelled from coast to coast to coast and brought us to a place where the nation supports this project, and it's about time the Leader of the Official Opposition did.

Speaker's Ruling Accepting a Member's Word

The Speaker: Hon. members, I just remembered why there was an upside of not being here yesterday.

Hon. members, please, let's not let the dialogue float to the bottom about accusations of what's true and what's not true. We are hon. members, and we ought to treat that accordingly. I see the Government House Leader puzzled at my comment. But when a member makes a statement, you believe, as I understand it. In this place it's taken as the truth. It does not need to be implied to any other person as to what it might be. That's my understanding, and that's the way I've tried to rule in the past.

I think the hon. Government House Leader has a question. Is that right?

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: What are we at now, five?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister did not even attempt to answer a very serious question raised by the energy industry. The Trudeau government is seeking to accelerate the phase-out of the jacketed tanker cars, which are the backbone of moving oil by rail. This will cause even further bottlenecking and even greater price differential. Will the government undertake to join with us in calling on the federal government not to accelerate the phase-out of those cars, which will make the price differential problem even more severe?

Ms Phillips: Well, certainly, Mr. Speaker, the differential is of pressing importance to this government, to this province, to all working people here in Alberta, and that is why we have appointed three envoys to work with industry on short- to medium-term solutions, including solutions around rail. We've already called on the federal government to take some action on rail. Those envoys will work with industry to work out solutions that will work more in that short to medium term.

In the long term, Mr. Speaker, 15,000 Albertans are being put to work on upgrading and refining. That is also a solution to add value to our resources right here at home and create value for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Animal Protection Act

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Lots of accusations, no pipelines, finger pointing while other important legislation falls by the wayside.

This government is always happy to point out how long it's been since legislation was updated. As a service to the government I'd like to point out that the minister of agriculture hasn't updated the Animal Protection Act while he's been in office. The act hasn't been updated since 2006. To the minister of agriculture: why haven't you updated the Animal Protection Act, and do you have any plans to do so before the next election?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. You know, this government is committed to the protection of animals. I think all Albertans are committed to that. We had an incident recently on wildlife that was tortured to death. We don't want to see any of that. We value our animals, our companion animals, our livestock animals right across the province. I will continue doing so, making sure that our peace officers and others have the tools they need to be able to do just that, and that's to protect our animals.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, a lack of consultation with veterinarians, and we still rank at the bottom of the list in Canada when it comes to animal protection. There's room for improvement in the regulation, and the substantive changes that animal protection groups are asking for require the Animal Protection Act to be opened and amended. That's what other jurisdictions have been doing, and the lack of action has landed Alberta, like I said, at the bottom of animal protection in Canada. To the same minister: how do you explain your government's failure to address this important issue during your time in office?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a government we'll continue to work with industry and stakeholders to do what we can to be able to protect our animals right across the province. Our government is committed to making sure that we meet the goals of the Animal Protection Act and making sure that the front-line officers, the peace officers out there as well have the tools they need to protect animals. What will not help is if there are going to be large cuts right across the public service. That would not help.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, opening the act costs no money at all.

With all due respect, Minister, we've been working with your office for over a year to get some of these very reasonable changes made. Animal protection organizations and stakeholders have been doing a lot of work and research to bring this minister up to speed surrounding animal protection. In light of another disturbing video showing animal abuse, we need to take this very seriously. To the same minister: will you commit and act now on these important changes, or will Albertans and our beloved animals have to wait?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, our government is committed to protecting animals, whether they're companion animals, livestock animals, or wild animals. That's important. The video that the member is speaking of was heart-wrenching. I personally couldn't watch it all myself. It was that bad. We're absolutely committed to be able to do what we can to protect animals and are working with our industry stakeholders to see what can be improved. I agree with the member. We can always do better and are looking forward to working with industry to do just that.

The Speaker: Hon. members, as we move to question 4, I want to emphasize the preamble question that was discussed a number of times before. There are statements that allow ministers to make statements, but we are in Oral Question Period.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Red Deer Justice Centre Construction

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General. Red Deer provides services to approximately 400,000 Albertans, including those who access from surrounding communities. In March 2017 this government announced that $97 million was to be allocated to support a justice centre. Currently our traffic court is being held in a nearby hotel. To the minister: can you comment on when the constituents of Red Deer and surrounding communities can anticipate seeing shovels hit the ground?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the incredibly important question. We know that the Red Deer justice centre is very important to folks in Red Deer and throughout central Alberta. The centre is currently in its design phase. After the design work is completed, we will be issuing a construction tender. Budget 2018 invested $181 million over five years, which would provide 12 courtrooms upon completion with additional shelled courtrooms available to accommodate growth performance up to 2040.

Mrs. Schreiner: To the same minister. This proposed justice centre is slated to offer a resolution wing to provide dispute resolution, civil and family mediation . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member. Preamble.

Mrs. Schreiner: These services are imperative to our Alberta families to seek peace of mind and provide all central Albertans with important resources. Can you speak to how many jobs these important services will create?

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the important question. We continue to work on determining the demand for services and the specific number of staff needed to provide those services. Once the construction tender is issued, we'll have a better understanding of how many construction jobs will be involved. However, I'd like to point out that this government is proud to invest in court services. Budget 2018 provided funding for 20 new Crown positions, four new Provincial Court judges, and up to 55 court clerks.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Cut the preamble, hon. member.

Mrs. Schreiner: To the same minister: given the justice centre's plans to support an increase of courtrooms from seven to 12 and given that this almost doubles the number of cases that can be heard, expedites processes, and gives resolution to pending circumstances that deeply impact our neighbours, family members, and friends, can you speak to how this increase will translate to time efficiency?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's clear that the Red Deer justice centre is an important project for central Albertans. It will increase access to justice for residents of central Alberta because it will address a long-standing shortage of space in the current courthouse. This investment is another important step in our government's actions to help address pressures on Alberta's justice system. I'm proud that our government supported this, where the opposition would vote against it.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Alberta oil producers face a glut crisis due to the government's inability to get any pipelines built despite massive carbon taxes and crushing regulations they impose in order to buy so-called social licence. The industry is divided on how to address this problem, with some calling for controls to limit production. Collusion to set production levels or prices constitutes a cartel, however. Is it the government's intention to establish some kind of prairie OPEC cartel?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I suppose the short answer is no. The actual approach is to ensure that the Trans Mountain pipeline, the new process with the NEB, stays on its timelines. We're working with the federal government, putting pressure on them, holding their feet to the fire on more rail capacity and other short- to medium-term solutions that are being worked on by our special envoys on the matter. Of course, the Premier also announced a new approach to upgrading and refining, $2 billion of new investment, 15,000 new jobs, and partial upgrading . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, under sections 45 and 46 of the Competition Act of Canada it is illegal for business interests to collude with their competitors in setting prices or levels of production. The Competition Act is an important protection of free enterprise against crony capitalism with public risks and private rewards.

The Speaker: Where's the question?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Is it the government's view that colluding to fix oil prices and production levels is illegal under the Competition Act?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member is quite right that the law says a certain thing, and that is the thing that it says.

In addition to investing in upgrading and refining and putting working people to work in this province in the oil and gas sector and getting a better value for Albertans, a long-held vision certainly on this side of the House and in this party, we also need to make sure that the federal government fixes that broken regulatory system that we have inherited from the previous Conservative government and this, in fact, Conservative leader.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Given, Mr. Speaker, that a free-enterprise economy requires competition to survive and given that anti dog-eat-dog legislation may smooth markets from competition in the short term but rots capitalism in the long term and given that voluntary price production fixing is illegal collusion but that government price and production fixing is supply management, will the government reject any attempts to impose supply management on our oil industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There was a lot there, but I think at the end of the day what we need to make sure is that we're safeguarding competitiveness for our oil and gas sector. We're doing that through, of course, continuing to work on the AER regulatory process to make sure that the feds get it right with respect to Bill C-69. We can't fix an already broken system with a broken system. We certainly don't want to do what the current Conservative leader has done, which is to do more to cause the problem than to fix it. We will continue to work on those things that we know will deliver value to Albertans and to working people in this province in the long term.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Coal Phase-out Costs

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, it seems the NDP government's coal phase-out is having an impact not only on Alberta but across Canada and into the U.S.A. Westmoreland Coal, the American miner contracted to supply thermal coal for Alberta's power plants, has filed a NAFTA claim for $500 million against Canada because Alberta violated NAFTA. The NDP government is paying out $1.3 billion to coal-fired power generators as a settlement. Did the NDP forget the real cost would be close to $2 billion just for this coal phase-out?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure if I heard a question in there or not, but what I will say is that there is a dispute settlement procedure that's now in place, so I won't comment on that further. What I can tell you is that our government has stood up for Alberta's interest on this issue. We've had the backs of community coal workers and communities through a number of programs to help them transition, and we will continue to have their backs, unlike the opposition. The Leader of the Official Opposition, when he was in Ottawa, brought forward regulations to phase out 12 of 18 coal communities and did nothing for them.

The Speaker: I did hear a question in the first one, hon. minister.

Mr. Panda: Given, Mr. Speaker, you heard my question and if the government of Canada loses the case, the taxpayers across Canada will have to pay $500 million for the NDP government's anti-trade actions and given the NDP government's coal phase-out alone will cost taxpayers close to $2 billion on top of the $2 billion for the PPAs, to the minister: why is it fair to stiff taxpayers in the rest of Canada with the bill to compensate an American miner, and will your best friend and ally Justin Trudeau come after Alberta for that money?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I had mentioned, there are a number of programs that we've rolled out in support of coal workers to help them in coal-affected communities. We rolled out the coal community transition fund, which is supporting communities across the province to look into opportunities to diversify their local economies, to attract investment. We'll continue to work with them. There have been a number of successes, quite frankly, in this area. We know that in Parkland county Champion Petfoods, an incredible $250 million facility, is well under way. That will bring many jobs to the area. We continue to work . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Panda: Given, Mr. Speaker, that Parkland county did its due diligence and did not accept any coal phase-out money for studies and given that Parkland county wants infrastructure investment, not studies, and given that NDP tosses away $2 billion instead on the coal phase-out, minister, now you're costing Canadians from coast to coast to coast for your disastrous coal phase-out. How are you ever going to compensate Parkland county for destroying their livelihoods while your Trudeau Liberal allies keep sending money south of the border to the U.S.A.?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I refute the premise of that question. In fact, in Parkland county there are an incredible number of new opportunities that are presenting themselves. We work closely with them. What I'll clarify for the member opposite is that his leader, the Leader of the Official Opposition, was in Ottawa as a cabinet minister when his government brought in regulations to phase out 12 of the 18 coal-fired plants in Alberta. Twelve of them. I know you're dying to know what was their plan to help these communities and workers. They had no plan. In fact, the Leader of the Official Opposition turned his back and turned the lights out on those communities. Our government is committed to working with them.

Pipeline Development

Mr. Loewen: I am often amazed by some of the statements made in this House. On a regular basis we hear the NDP say things that are entirely false. We hear assertions as ridiculous as suggesting Conservatives are somehow cheering for pipeline failure. Since this seems to be the government's excuse when it comes to masking their own failures on pipelines, I have a simple question: can the government point to a single major pipeline proposal that Conservatives, federal and provincial, didn't approve and support when they had the opportunity?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, no pipelines were built to tidewater while the Leader of the Opposition was in government. That is demonstrable. It is true that there was a pipeline approved by the federal government, but then it was thrown out by the Federal Court of Appeal because the Crown did not adequately consult indigenous people. Not the proponent. The proponent did their work, but the Crown refused to have those conversations with indigenous people. That is a shameful record, and it's not just shameful for indigenous people . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. Thank you.

Mr. Loewen: Given that there isn't such an example and given that the minister just described something that happened under their watch with the pipeline today and the government might have to throw out their absurd suggestions that Conservatives can't get pipelines built now and given that this Premier has opposed Northern Gateway and Keystone XL and given that she didn't object when Justin Trudeau killed Energy East, could the government tell Albertans why they should now be comforted by the move to put the responsibility of solving the price differential crisis in the hands of an NDP insider with a history of opposing the interests of our industry and our province and therefore sending a pipeline obstructionist to do a pipeline advocate's job?

Ms Hoffman: Sorry. I can't resist the opportunity to highlight some of the excellent work that Mr. Topp did to support our government while he was here and beyond, Mr. Speaker. We inherited agreements with physicians that were so out of whack with the national standard on compensation, and the physicians acknowledged that we were in a difficult economic time when they agreed to come back to the table. What was the result of that? Hundreds of millions of dollars returned to the people of Alberta, improvements in health care, and Mr. Topp supported me with those negotiations. I will not apologize for bringing in people with a track record of proven success in negotiations because we need everyone at the table to fight for the people of Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Loewen: Given that despite their past record I'm willing to accept that the government has at least publicly started to support our industry and given that I would like to give the government a chance to be extremely clear with Albertans and given that despite changing their minds, the past actions of members of this government bolstered the anti-oil, antipipeline, and anti-Alberta movement, will someone, the environment minister perhaps, stand up and make clear that, on reflection, protesting pipelines and Alberta hydrocarbons was a mistake? Perhaps she could even consider writing a book to clarify the matter.

The Speaker: Folks, try and stay away from the personal comments about members.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd love to compare the track record of our Premier versus the Leader of the Official Opposition any day. Our Premier has done more for market access than the Leader of the Official Opposition did in the 10 years when he was in Ottawa. How many pipelines to tidewater? None. They couldn't get it done when they had a PC government here in Alberta and a Conservative government in Ottawa. What our Premier has done is move the ball further down the field. We will get Trans Mountain built. We've committed 50,000 barrels per day to the Keystone XL pipeline to ensure that that pipeline gets built. We know that line 3 is well under way in construction. We will get all three pipelines built.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Carbon Levy and Agricultural Costs

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's greenhouse operators are very concerned that their carbon tax exemption, better known as the greenhouse rebate program, will be coming to an end on January 1, 2019. The agriculture minister recognized that plants growing in the greenhouse absorb carbon dioxide from the atmosphere and, in order to protect the competitiveness of Alberta's greenhouse operators, gave them an 80 per cent exemption on the carbon tax. Minister, will the greenhouse rebate program be extended beyond 2018?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is the case that a number of different industries have a review period for their carbon levy and the carbon competitiveness regulation as well. The greenhouse industry is no different. We will work with them and assess where they are at with respect to some of their efficiency investments and so on and where the industry is at right now and what will be required going into the future.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that intensive agriculture in greenhouses received a carbon tax exemption, recognizing that greenhouse plants absorb carbon dioxide from the atmosphere, but given that farmers who need to run grain dryers powered by natural gas and propane are not eligible for any rebate program although their plants also absorb carbon dioxide from the atmosphere, Minister, how is it fair that one sector of agriculture gets a carbon tax exemption for absorbing carbon dioxide while another sector of agriculture does not?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's important to note that when I talk to farmers and ranchers and processors across the province, what they ask me is: what can they do to reduce their own greenhouse gas emissions, and what can they do to increase their profits in doing just that? I want to correct the member. There is actually a 50 per cent rebate program through the climate leadership plan on retrofitting and upgrading those grain dryers, so there is an opportunity for farmers to become more efficient, reduce their costs, and become more profitable.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, grain farmers were not involved in the program with the carbon tax exemption.

Given that Alberta agricultural production absorbs carbon dioxide from the atmosphere and given that Canada is a neutral carbon sink, helping to clean the atmosphere for the rest of the world, and given that this NDP government is setting Albertans up to fail by refusing to claim our fair share of global CO₂ absorption while their policy is all tax with no environmental benefit, Mr. Speaker, why won't the NDP scrap their job-killing carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that the premise of the question is premised on a number of different scientific statements that actually are at variance with reality, the rest of the answer to the question is necessarily difficult to give. Climate change is real and anthropogenic. CO₂ emissions cause the change in climate. There are a number of different ways that we are both reducing our greenhouse gas emissions and adapting to a change in climate. All of those things are facts.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Community Economic Development Corporation Tax Credit

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta organizations that work in rural communities or with social outcomes have long advocated for a tax credit for community economic development corporations as exists in other jurisdictions. Momentum, a Calgary-based organization, has been spearheading consultations on encouraging local economic development. A few weeks ago the Minister of Economic Development and Trade announced a new tax credit that promotes investment in local economies. Could the minister give us the background to this announcement?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. You know, Alberta businesses told us that they need enhanced access to capital, and we listened. We know that this is especially true for businesses who operate in the social and community economic development sphere. That's why we introduced the community economic development corporation tax credit program. This is going to support diversification initiatives that contribute to improved economic and social outcomes for Alberta communities. We're very proud because communities have been asking previous governments for many years, and our government delivered.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the announcement. This tax credit is similar to that offered in some Maritime provinces but is new to Alberta. In what way is this tax credit . . .

An Hon. Member: Preamble.

Ms McKittrick: . . . different from the two previous programs introduced in Bill 1?

The Speaker: Is the hon. minister ready to answer that question?

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for that amusing comment. During our stakeholder consultation, when we went out and talked with industry and community leaders on the investor tax credit, they recommended that we find a way to be able to provide a similar tax credit for community economic development corporations. We're allocating $9 million over three years for that very purpose. What do these tax credits do? If a group of people, whether it's a co-operative or a social enterprise, want to come together to create a corporation, they can do so. They can then go out and raise equity, offering 30 per cent tax credits for Albertans who invest in this entity, which in turn invests in . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Be cautious of the preamble.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister give the Assembly ideas of the kinds of economic development projects this tax credit would help spur or develop?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the member for her advocacy and her work in this space. Quite frankly, the member participated in a number of consultations that we had with groups like Momentum and other community initiatives. Some of the examples. A business owner offering mentorship and training to employees to help them overcome employment barriers could qualify. A business offering affordable food products to low-income families. A value-added ag business or tourism operator developing a new product or resource in a rural community would also qualify. There are a number of projects, and we're proud to support them.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Diabetes Support in Schools

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Approximately 4,000 Alberta children with type 1 diabetes need daily injections, regular blood sugar checks, and awareness of food consumption and physical activity. A supportive school environment is critical, but most Alberta schools do not adequately accommodate them. As a result, they are excluded from field trips and school events and may not even have access to the snacks they need while in the classroom. To the Minister of Health: why is Alberta one of only two provinces that does not have a policy or guidelines to support children with diabetes?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for the question. Certainly, this has come to my attention over the last number of months, and we know that we need to have a coherent type 1 diabetes strategy in our schools to ensure that students are both healthy and ready to learn. I'm very happy to say that we've been working diligently on such a plan and strategy, and there'll be more to come very, very soon.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Given that students in Alberta should be able to expect the full support of their educators and given that teachers and education professionals can be instructed to and given permission to administer life-saving treatments such as epinephrine injections, Minister, will you commit to allowing educators to receive training to recognize low blood sugar symptoms and administer life-saving insulin to diabetic students?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Dr. Starke: You don't give insulin for low blood sugar.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An interesting medical diagnosis going on here on the floor of the Legislature.

This is very true, and we know that there are a lot of advances in the administration of medications and therapies for type 1 diabetes. It takes more effort and extra attention, but certainly we are on the road to building a coherent strategy to help to solve this problem. You know, having education aides on the ground certainly helps, and we've hired thousands of them to actually help with the job.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. member. [interjections]

Mr. Ellis: Yeah. Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I'm just trying to help kids. I'm not a vet or a doctor.

Given that children with type 1 diabetes can need more than 10 test strips per day to monitor their blood sugar and given that families who rely on these test strips face sometimes out-of-pocket costs of more than $2 per strip, or $600 a month, and given that there have been innovative medical advancements that provide new and better tools to address this issue, will the minister commit to finding a solution that helps families better manage this disease?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, as I said before, we are working on finalizing the guidelines around this. You know what you need to do, though? You need to make sure you have people on the ground. You don't fire 4,000 teachers. You don't fire 4,000 nurses. You don't come out saying: it's going to hurt. We have a plan that's going to help.

The Speaker: Calgary-Hays.

Energy Resource Revenue

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I asked the Finance minister to tell Albertans how much the oil differential is costing us, the minister assured us that, quote: good news is on the way in the second-quarter fiscal result. Meanwhile his department forecast a $22-per-barrel differential, and that figure hit $50 yesterday. To the minister: why do you refuse to admit your government has a revenue crisis when your own numbers from your own department tell a very different story?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the member. Our path to balance is intact. It's based on three principles: a strong and diversified economy, stable spending and cost containment, and reducing our reliance on resource revenue. We laid out a plan that would not bring in reckless cuts, cuts that the member from Lac La Biche said would hurt. On that side of the House they have no plan. They don't believe in diversification. They are cheering for Alberta to fail. They are cheering for our energy industry to fail. We are standing up for our energy industry and our business owners and operators in this province.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Given that the minister won't answer the question and given that the government's real-time national lost-revenue counter goes up a million dollars every 18 minutes but that the minister refuses to tell Albertans how much of that is Albertans' lost revenue and given that Alberta accounts for 80 per cent of Canada's crude oil production and that the counter will easily hit $7 billion today, to the minister: doesn't this mean, by your own figures, not mine, that Alberta losses have already reached $5.6 billion since August 30? Can you at least confirm that?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What we've demonstrated through the lost-revenue clock is to ensure that every single Member of Parliament, when they go in and out of the buildings, sees that this is an absolute crisis, the price or the differential, and that action needs to be taken and taken immediately. That's why I'm very proud to work with a Premier who has taken action on a number of different fronts, including adding even more value to our resources here in Alberta. Previous governments talked about it. You know what? I'll give credit to one Premier. Peter Lougheed did really lay the groundwork for investment in our pet-chem sector . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Given that the government won't admit the shortfalls in their own information and given that according to revenue loss numbers provided in the committee last month by Energy department officials that Alberta loses $210 million a year for every dollar of differential and given that the differential hit $50 yesterday and continues to climb and that we do not have one new pipeline to lower that figure, to the minister. According to your figures, not mine, Alberta losses will run $9 billion to 10 and a half billion dollars in the coming year. Do you at least agree with that number out of your own department, unlike agreeing with the others?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll tell you what won't help Alberta and Alberta families: a $700 million tax cut for the richest 1 per cent, firing 4,000 teachers and 4,000 nurses. This is all part of their grand formula that the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills said would hurt. We are investing in our energy sector. We are investing in our province. We will continue to fight for pipelines in all directions. Albertans know that we committed 50,000 barrels per day for Keystone XL. We will continue to fight for Trans Mountain. Canadians want it. We will continue to hold the federal government's feet to the fire and not take advice from that side of the House.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Charitable Gaming in Rural Alberta

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have heard from several charities in my constituency – the Cold Lake Ag Society, the Dove Centre, and the Bonnyville seniors' society, to name a few – and these organizations have two key findings. First, they work hard for the seniors, farmers and ranchers, and disabled within my constituency. Second, they are all concerned that they are not treated fairly by the AGLC's management of charitable gaming in Alberta. Will the minister acknowledge that rural charities have a legitimate concern about their access to this revenue stream?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I agree with the member from Lac La Biche – pardon me. Not the member from Lac La Biche; I don't agree with him at all.

That was a good question, the first one that I've heard today. What I will say to the member is that – you know what? – we are aware of the concerns that are being raised about several aspects of the Alberta charitable gaming model. We are working with AGLC to ensure that our charitable gaming model serves the best interests of all Albertans, including rural Albertans, and they are evaluating possible improvements to the charitable gaming model that will benefit the charities, the operators, the players, and, of course, communities.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, again, to the minister for the first answer I've heard today.

Given that rural MLAs like myself hear about this problem of increasing prices for these charities and given that one of the key grievances is the wait time for charities' gaming opportunities and given that this gaming region for my constituency is having to wait up to or in excess of 40 months, will the minister admit that we need to change this so that Alberta rural charities can access this resource, just like everybody else?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member. Again, that is a very, very legitimate concern that he's bringing forward. I'm going to invite the member to bring that issue specifically to the Minister of Finance. As I had mentioned, we are working with AGLC. We've raised those concerns. We recognize that, especially for rural charities, waiting up to two years is a significant period of time and that a lot of charities rely on the casinos for a significant portion of their operating budgets. I thank the member for raising that question, and we are working with AGLC to identify solutions.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you again to that minister for answering my question. I very much appreciate it.

Given that the current model for distribution of revenue means that rural charities are at a severe disadvantage and given that under the current model a charity in urban centres can expect to receive in some cases up to 600 per cent more in funding, will the minister admit that the current revenue distribution model is unfair for rural charities, who are helping some of the most vulnerable Albertans, and take the steps to review it?

Thank you, sir. [An electronic device sounded]

2:40

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm sure it can't be true, but I thought I heard a phone vibrate in here. I hope that's not the case.

The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again I'll thank the member for that question on this important topic. As I had mentioned, we are aware of this concern. The Minister of Finance is working very closely with the AGLC and also engaging with different entities around the province. What I will say is that, you know, a lot of these charities are doing very good work, but I can tell you that what wouldn't help them is blowing a huge hole in the budget in order to give a $700 million tax cut to the richest 1 per cent while at the same time firing thousands of teachers and nurses and cutting off programs that help these very communities. I am proud of . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. [interjection] Thank you.
Hon. members, in 30 seconds we will continue with Members' Statements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Oil Sands Development

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently a good Canadian patriot released information pertaining to a campaign against our oil sands. She provides information that the groups that are funding these campaigns use environmental groups for these attacks in order to secure America's energy future, not for environmental reasons but economical. This Canadian industry, the oil sands, that enriches our nation, that funds the construction of our schools and hospitals, that employs thousands of Canadians, is being attacked under the guise of environmental stewardship.

Syncrude contributed to the Birch River wildland provincial park, enabling the creation of a conservation area of 3,300 square kilometres connecting Wood Buffalo national park to several other parks to form a protective boreal forest twice the size of Vancouver Island. Syncrude's east mine will be completely reclaimed within the next decade, which fully includes reclaimed sections like the Sandhill fen research watershed. The west mine was reclaimed using the water capping process. Water capping, composite tailings, and centrifuge tailings are remediation solutions where Syncrude invested $3 billion to develop these made-in-Canada solutions.

The oil sands initially did have serious emission concerns, in 2009, but thanks to Canadian industry that invested in research and continues to develop more efficient mining practices, in 2017 CNRL's pathway project brought emissions down to below the U.S. refined average, freshwater usage dropped by 30 per cent, 25 per cent less natural gas was used, Mr. Speaker, and carbon dioxide is captured and sequestered. That is less emissions than they create in Alaska's northern slope, Brazil's Frade project, the Marun fields of Iran, Indonesia's Duri region, and Venezuela's Hamaca fields. I guarantee that none of these nations are investing in environmental initiatives on par with what our oil sands industry has done. I won't delve into things like labour rights, community investment, or human rights, that aren't exactly priorities in these areas.

It's time Canadians stood together in pride for our oil sands industry, fight fraudulent activists, and ensure a Canadian energy independence.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Members of the Legislative Assembly's Role

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What is the role of an MLA? I'm often asked this question by school groups, at the door, or when meeting constituents. There is no job description and no formal obligation beyond sitting in this House. Some of our work is public: opening businesses, making announcements with ministers, and also, of course, through the Assembly webcasts. Some of the work happens in our constituency offices, like notarizing documents, discussing provincial issues with residents, or helping them resolve government service matters.

However, another equally important role that MLAs have is as community builders. We have the responsibility to work with our communities to support emerging initiatives and to be a booster for our constituents both within our constituencies and in the Assembly. It is an honour to be an MLA. It means representing my community and speaking about their achievements, and it means working within my community to help make things happen for the better.

This summer, after an incident on the Sherwood Park freeway, a group of cycling clubs, shops, and organizations came together to advocate for safer cycling.

Because the opioid crisis affects all our communities, a group of Sherwood Park agencies and individuals collaborated to create an interactive exhibit and outreach campaign in our community.

Early in my mandate as an MLA I brought together a group of constituents to form the Strathcona County Diversity Committee to develop antiracism initiatives in our community. Thanks to their work, council and community organizations now recognize our First Nations and Métis communities before every meeting. This group continues to work to make our community inclusive and safe for everyone.

Another group of constituents formed the Strathcona Sustainability Association and have organized forums on solar energy, recycling, and waste-reducing alternatives.

Mr. Speaker, c'est un privilège pour moi de parler de ma communauté. It is a privilege to highlight the achievements of individuals and organizations building communities in my constituency.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there is a request for unanimous consent to introduce a guest.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this House Elizabeth Johansson, president of the Non-Academic Staff Association. She's accompanied by Nancy Furlong, the director of operations of the same union. Of course, many of you know that I had the privilege of being the president of this union, which represents the workers at the University of Alberta. They are here for a specific announcement that will be made by our Minister of Labour that will impact the lives of approximately 5,000 of their members. I'm so happy that we're able to do this for them. Please give them the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to provide notice that at the appropriate time I will move the following motion pursuant to Standing Order 30:

Be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, to discuss the impact of the significant recent increase in the oil price differential, its negative impact on Alberta jobs and the economy, and measures that can be taken to ensure that pipelines are built following the delay or cancellation of several recent major projects.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Family Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce Bill 28, the Family Statutes Amendment Act, 2018.

The proposed legislation will modernize family law in our province to better support all families. Bill 28 would do three things. First, it would provide clear rules about property division for unmarried couples, which would help promote settlement and decrease stress on families and children. Second, it would allow applications to be brought for sick or disabled adult children of parents who are not married or are not divorcing. Third, we are proposing to repeal the Married Women's Act. This legislation is out of date and no longer needed.

This is another step to ensuring a fair and accessible justice system for all. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and democratic renewal.

Public Service Employee Relations Amendment Act, 2018

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise and introduce Bill 29, the Public Service Employee Relations Amendment Act, 2018.

The act governs the relationship between some public-sector employees, employers, and unions. With this bill we are ensuring the act aligns with what is in place for workers in other jurisdictions across the country. These changes build upon earlier changes that were needed following Supreme Court decisions on the right to strike. With this bill we are also creating consistency for labour relations in the postsecondary sector. These changes will help bring the Public Service Employee Relations Act in line with existing constitutional protections for employees and create more consistency in the way labour relations are governed in our province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three letters here to table for my constituents. They are concerned about charity funding across my constituency, but this is a problem across Alberta. One of them is from the Bonnyville Senior Citizens Society, and it was written to my office on November 14, 2018.

The next one is from the Cold Lake Ag Society, and they're very, very concerned.

The last one is from the Dove Centre, which is a centre that helps people with disabilities.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any other members? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a column in today's Calgary Herald by Licia Corbella called A Lesson in Insults by the NDP in Alberta's Legislature, which talks about the ongoing inappropriate behaviour of the government in the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Yes. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of an article in the Calgary Herald by Corbella that says at the top: "To say that Topp, Notley's former chief of staff, is hostile towards Alberta's main industry would be a gross understatement." I think we're pretty clear on where the NDP stand on these issues. Of course, their ranks are full of unapologetic anti-oil activists, and this article talks about that very same thing.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I have one tabling today also. I would like to table five copies of the annual report of the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner for the period April 1, 2017, to March 31, 2018, as per the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Acting Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Carlier, Minister of Agriculture and Forestry, pursuant to the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act the Alberta Agricultural Products Marketing Council annual report 2017-2018.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a historic list of points of order today, and it's my hope that some of my clarification might minimize those numbers. I need to clarify that my intent was directed at the tone of the comments, and I think I may have left an impression that it was specific comments that were made. I think that at least a couple of these points of order may, I hope, become not points of order after we hear. Nonetheless, it would be the members.

I have the first point of order, which I believe was by the Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Questions about a Previous Responsibility

Mr. Mason: Yeah, I believe it was as well. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. During the questions from the Leader of the Official Opposition he attempted to ask the Minister of Environment and Parks a number of questions on activities that she may or may not have been involved in prior to becoming an elected official or a member of the government, including appearing on behalf of her employer at the time, that I believe was the Alberta Federation of Labour, at a hearing.

It's very clear under House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 498, that it says that question period "constitutes the most visible part of the parliamentary day where the government is held accountable for 'the administrative policy and conduct of the ministers, both individually and collectively.'"

Now, quoting that, Speaker Bosley of the House of Commons said:

It has always been a fundamental rule of questioning Ministers that the subject matter of the question must fall within the collective responsibility of the Government or the individual responsibility of one of its Ministers. This is the only basis upon which Ministers can be expected to answer questions.

Then under the guidelines in House of Commons on pages 508, 509:

When recognized in Question Period, a Member should . . .

And there's a list of them, but the relevant one is to

- ask a question that is within the administrative responsibility of the government or of the individual Minister [themselves].

Furthermore, there are precedents indicating that a question should not . . .

- address a Minister's former portfolio or any other presumed functions, such as party or regional political responsibilities; [or] . . .
- seek information from a Minister of a purely personal nature.

And it goes on. There are a number of others that I could go through.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that you did deal with it, but I find it interesting that the opposition should question people about things that they did long before they were involved in elected office. I think that they should look in the mirror in this respect because their leader, of course, claims that his previous positions, using the notwithstanding clause to prevent same-sex marriage or his opposition to a women's right to choose, are no longer material to his role as the Leader of the Official Opposition. He can't have it both ways.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, if you look back at this question period and every question period since the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed has become the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, I'd say 80 per cent of the content of the answers back to him are talking about his past role in the federal government, certainly before he was in this Chamber. So I think, first of all, it's a little bit rich of the Government House Leader to do that.

But with that aside, the question was to the environment minister. The environment minister still currently has that portfolio. She has not moved from the environment portfolio. I think it would be tough for the Government House Leader to argue that the hon. environment minister does not have a significant role within her department to play on pipelines, in regard to Northern Gateway in particular.

Mr. Speaker, it would also be hard to argue that Northern Gateway is not important to the province. If it had gone through, it would provide 525,000 barrels per day of capacity. In fact, according to CAPP, for example, producers would have had no way of knowing ahead of time that 525,000 barrels per day of the Northern Gateway pipeline project approved in 2014 by the Conservative government would then be rejected by a Liberal government in 2016. This is what's important: if Northern Gateway had come on as planned, we wouldn't be in the situation we are in today. It's very important. We have the environment minister, who takes positions on these issues. The fact is that this pipeline is not being built, and it is a serious, serious issue to be discussed with the government.

The leader brought up the fact that somebody from the environment minister's last organization she worked for – I don't know if it was the last organization but an organization she worked at before – said, and I quote:

It's good to be back at a hearing . . .

a hearing where the AFL spoke against Northern Gateway.

3:00

The Speaker: Keep going. Get to the point.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am getting to the point.

. . . to present at this stage. I have with me Shannon Phillips . . .

Sorry; the hon. minister of the environment, though not at that time.

. . . and she is one of the Alberta Federation of Labour's executive staff, which then confirms that she was at the NEB hearing.

Now, the Leader of the Official Opposition asked that question because the minister of environment's position on Northern Gateway is important to her government's philosophy or intent when it comes to pipelines. The fact that they protested against and actively tried to stop Northern Gateway and then ultimately stood by as Justin Trudeau stopped that pipeline is an important and reasonable thing for the constituents that we represent, to understand where the environment minister's position is.

I would also point out, Mr. Speaker, that in the supplementals to that question, once he, the Leader of the Opposition, tried to establish in his opening question some content and some history to it so he could ask the question, he then went on to ask very clear questions about the environment minister and her cabinet colleagues and the Premier's position on Northern Gateway and ask for an explanation on why they protested against a pipeline that, if it had gone through, would probably be built right now or very close to it, and we would not be in the terrible situation that we're in. It certainly has to do with government policy.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is a copy of the Blues that I have. The statement by the Leader of the Official Opposition says:

When she was a staff member of the Alberta Federation of Labour, did she attend a hearing of the National Energy Board . . .

The Government House Leader made a point of order. I then noted that. The hon. leader then continued:

. . . as part of an AFL submission opposing approval of the Northern Gateway pipeline?

The minister responded by saying:

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to know what the question is in relation to government policy.

Oral questions. Based upon the information, the guidelines that we're all familiar with, the government must have the administrative competence that is related to the point. Issues outside the influence of the government ought not to be considered. Read paragraph 409 of Beauchesne's and page 509 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice. I do want to give as much latitude in asking questions and providing answers, but I would again ask that you ensure the focus is clearly on government policy.

You've heard me say today a couple of times that indeed you ought to be staying away, all of the members in this place, from questions that are purely of a personal nature. I recognize that that is not entirely a science, but I think the expectation of myself and this House generally is that personal comments ought to not become a part of the question. They need to be focused on policy. In this particular instance I would think and I know that the opposition leader will no doubt be conscious of that going into the future. In this particular instance there probably was a point of order, but I think the resolution is more on a go-forward basis.

The Opposition House Leader makes a good point. The Government House Leader can take it under consideration. There have been in the past references to members of a personal nature that I think need to be in tow.

The Opposition House Leader.

Point of Clarification

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a second issue. I believe that in the first supplemental of the last question that we were talking about you rose in the middle of that question and then interrupted the Leader of the Opposition to give him some instructions. I don't have the Blues in front of me, so I don't want to attempt to quote those instructions, but I believe it was in the first supplemental. I'm just trying to make sure we're roughly on the same page. I know there were a lot of points of order. You interrupted him and then asked him to move on, that his question was not about government policy. That question clearly was about Northern Gateway, a pipeline that – if the government across from us had not protested against it and let Justin Trudeau cancel it, we would not be in the serious energy crisis that we're in at this exact moment. That is a fact. He was asking about that. So I rise on 13(2) and ask if you could please explain to us how Northern Gateway and the government's position on Northern Gateway are not part of government policy.

The Speaker: You're asking for an explanation from me?

Mr. Nixon: On 13(2), if you could explain your ruling.

The Speaker: I'm going to read the Blues.

Does the Government House Leader or anyone else have any comments to make with respect to the request?

Mr. Mason: Is that allowed under 13(2), Mr. Speaker? You know, if you want me to make a comment, I will. The question that you ruled out of order was not just about pipelines but was actually directed towards the minister's personal opinions in the past.

The Speaker: I'm going to read the Blues, if I might.

Hon. members, I was qualifying the – I just read the Blues, and the reason I made the decision that I did: again, context, hon. member. The reference was: "Yesterday she implied that was not the case. Will she be forthcoming today and admit that she went before the NEB to argue for the vetoing of Northern Gateway?" That was that reason as to why I made the comments that I did.

Is that your clarification, or is that your case in terms of the point of order? Do I address your question?

Mr. Nixon: Well, you've explained that that's your ruling, and I don't think I get an opportunity to explain why you're wrong, so I would like to move on.

The Speaker: I'm not wrong. The chair is never wrong.

Mr. Nixon: Exactly.

The Speaker: I know all of you experienced members recognize that principle.

I hope that points of order 3 and 4 – I hope I made my comments more clear about my interpretation of the comments about truths and falsehoods, et cetera. I was speaking to the general principle of avoiding these issues that cause so much consternation on both sides of the House.

I think point 3 is yourself, hon. member.

Point of Clarification

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your comments. I am not convinced that it makes it clear. I do think that it is worth a moment to attempt to provide some clarity to members so that we don't end up in this spot for the remainder of the time that we're here.

I'll explain to you why real quick, Mr. Speaker. I will refer to Hansard, November 20, 2018. I actually think that may be yesterday. I may be mistaken. The Deputy Speaker, speaking from the chair, said:

Hon. members, I have reviewed the Blues. The hon. Premier did not accuse the Leader of the Official Opposition of intentional falsehood or lying. As noted in Beauchesne's paragraph 494, "it is not unparliamentary... to criticize statements made by Members as being contrary to the facts." Again, this is a difference in how things are interpreted and not a point of order.

Now, certainly, the context that was discussed at that time was nowhere near as tame as what took place in the House today. I find myself in a different position than I'm used to, one defending the Deputy Premier as well as the Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition. There were times today when you rose, Mr. Speaker, and made comments about falsehood, basically implying that it was similar to putting false motives on another member or flirting, I guess, with calling another member a liar, which is certainly unparliamentary. In the case of the Deputy Premier, while I do think that what the Leader of the Official Opposition said in the question was accurate, the Deputy Premier clearly disagrees. Her right as a member in this Chamber is to be able to stand up and say: what you were saying about me I don't believe is false or true. The Leader of the Official Opposition also did that a couple of times today, and both times, Mr. Speaker, you cautioned him to not use the word "false."

I believe that it is clear that a member should be able to rise if they feel that what is being said about them is wrong and say: that is false. I do not think that rose to the level that either the Deputy Premier or, quite frankly, the Leader of the Official Opposition was calling either of their colleagues a liar. So I rise again, Mr. Speaker, on 13(2) to ask if you could explain that because I sense that it's confusing for all sides of the aisle at this point after this question period.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, on 13(2) I also think that there is some greater clarity required on this question because I think some members on this side were rather confused. In my time here it's always been the case that it's not the words themselves particularly but the context in which they're used that determines it. So there's nothing unparliamentary, in my experience or my opinion, about saying that a statement is false. If you say that a statement is a lie, then you're implying that the person deliberately used a falsehood to mislead the House. So you can't say "lie" in any context, and I understand that. But to say that a statement is false, in my opinion, is not the same as saying that the member deliberately made a false statement, which is clearly unparliamentary.

I think it's an important distinction. It's not the words themselves that offend the rules; it's how they are used. If they imply that another member of the House particularly, deliberately misled or lied, that is out of order, but to suggest that a statement is false, in my experience, Mr. Speaker, is not unparliamentary.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe that I need to give greater clarity. I may well have left an impression of confusion on both sides of the House, and I will go back and review my comments more explicitly. I'm inclined to say that my comments earlier, notwithstanding what the Government House Leader has said about context – that is always the place. But I need to be more clear to the House in the future. I think the arguments being made by both sides of the House are correct. I was however responding to the tone where there seemed to be a sense of deterioration with those kinds of comments. I will review the matter and make sure that I clarify the matter so people are not confused in the future. I'm hoping that might apply to number 4 as well. I think it's the same issue.

Mr. Nixon: Just in trying to make sure that everybody is on the same page, maybe I could help you, Mr. Speaker. I believe number 4 was by the Government House Leader. He seems to be indicating that it was the same issue that I just raised, so I'm assuming he's withdrawing it. I don't want to withdraw on his behalf.

I do have two more, and they are different issues. I will attempt to be brief on the next one if that's okay, Mr. Speaker.

Point of Clarification

Mr. Nixon: On this one, again, we need an explanation, not in a way to try to slow down the House, but the opposition is confused on this issue and possibly the government members are. Yesterday there was a point of order and there have been a couple of points of order where we were talking about members not talking through the chair. But today, Mr. Speaker, again you called out the Leader of the Official Opposition. It appears to us that you're now indicating that not only should we be speaking through the chair, which I do agree is the process of this place, but that we need to continue to maintain eye contact or look at the chair the entire way through the question. I'm not aware of anywhere in standing orders or in parliamentary tradition where that is the case, and it is causing confusion for us on this side of the House. I guess what I'm asking is: what exactly is "through the chair" to you, and how would you like us to handle that? If it is to look at you the entire time, if you could explain where that is in parliamentary process so that we understand what we are supposed to do.

The Speaker: Government House Leader, do you have any comment?

Mr. Mason: I'd rather look at you, Mr. Speaker, than at some members of the opposition.

The Speaker: I'm sure other speakers may have experienced the same phenomenon. When I hear the two parties disagreeing with each other, I feel that I must be doing something right, but when they agree with each other, it begins to make me a little uneasy.

On the question, the context of 13(2), you will note and, I think, you would find ample demonstration of that also given by myself earlier as well as by other Speakers of the House that have addressed it. I can only speak to when I was here. I've made that same comment to several ministers over the period.

Again, back to the point that was made earlier, it is always about context. For me, the ruling was tendered – probably what prompted me was to avoid what I sensed at the time would be the issue of an escalation of personal comments. If you'll note, I seldom say, if at all, to keep your eyes on the Speaker all of the time. I think there is ample flexibility, and I hope that clarifies for the future. At the time that I make that, I will try to be more explicit when I ask that. But it's not a correction. It's just a preventive intervention on my behalf.

What are we on now?

Point of Clarification

Mr. Nixon: The last one, I believe. Mr. Speaker, I rise on this one in regard to a question with the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky Lake.

An Hon. Member: Smoky.

Mr. Nixon: Smoky. Sorry. Smoky Lake is on the other side of the province, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker. Fair enough.

Mr. Speaker, you stopped the member in the middle of his question and called him out and corrected him for making a comment which I believe was something to the effect that perhaps she should write a book. This is causing, again, some confusion. We have seen rulings from the chair in this place. Your comment at the time was that that was a personal I don't know if the word was "attack" – I'm not trying to put words in your mouth, Mr. Speaker; please know that I'm not; I don't have the Blues – but that it was of a personal nature.

We've seen rulings from the chair, Mr. Speaker, when some of our members have been called xenophobic in this place, where that was not found out of order. We've seen rulings when some of our members have been called snowflakes. That was not found out of order. We've seen several rulings from the chair when we've been called climate change deniers, which was not ruled out of order. It has always offended many people over here because of its relation to Holocaust denier and the similarities in the two terms. That was repeated. I'm not questioning those rulings. Those are the rulings that you are making, but it seems to become pretty confusing to us.

It's further confusing to us because the last comments and rulings from the chair – you were not sitting in the chair at the time – were in regard to some comments that told this side of the House that we and the people that support us were not capable of critically thinking. At the time the chair said that she felt it was "lighthearted banter" and that she would like to see more of that in this place.

The hon. member did not refer to anything personal, suggested perhaps that somebody would like to write a book about other ideas, and that is now too far and enough to interrupt them during question period as they were attempting to ask questions on behalf of their constituents.

I think you can see, Mr. Speaker, how it's pretty confusing. From our perspective, it looks like the government of the day is allowed to call us some pretty horrific names in our perspective, and our member is called out for just suggesting that somebody write a book. I'd like you to explain that under 13(2).

The Speaker: Does the Government House Leader have any comments? I take it that he's not looking at the chair when he's speaking, so one must assume that he needs to be told as well to speak to the chair. Do you have any comments, Government House Leader?

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's pretty clear that in this place there's a great range of latitude that's afforded to members in terms of characterizing the other side, the other side's ideas, and so on. I don't know about writing a book. I personally wouldn't be, you know, offended if someone told me to write a book.

An Hon. Member: I think I'd like to read it.

Mr. Mason: You won't like it.

The Speaker: It's seldom that I see the Government House Leader searching for words.

Context, context, context: that always applies. It seems to me that, with the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, I was again in the context of today and particularly the situation. This is what I said. It was one of preventive intent. I said "folks." I didn't identify the member. I was speaking to both sides of the House. "Folks, try and stay away from the personal comments about members." The book reference did get mentioned in earlier parts of this Legislature. I'm not sure if that was the intent of the member at all, but I was intending it as a method, a word of: let's not go down those personal comments any further. That's where I think point of order 1 started, with the need for me to be more clear.

Do you have another comment, hon. member?

Mr. Loewen: Yes. Thank you very much. I just want to be clear here that the members of the governing party can call us names over here, personally attack us, and a suggestion to write a book is something that is ruled out of order? I just need to have that clarified.

Point of Clarification

Mr. Loewen: And I guess that under 13(2) I do want a little clarification, too. Is it standard under 13(2) that the Government House Leader gets to comment? I understand that 13(2) is your opportunity to explain yourself to us, so I'm not sure if it's quite appropriate. Maybe you can clarify that.

The Speaker: Point well taken, hon. member. Because we are in the points of order list today, I procedurally may have departed from the norm. Your point is well taken about the book. Again, I can only tell you, hon. member, that the intention was around avoiding, staying away from the personal comments on both sides of the House. I hear what the Opposition House Leader has said, and they apply in both places. In the instance of the book, we all have history of these events in this place, and that was the intention as to why I was doing it. I will be more clear, more concise, inasmuch as I can be, as each individual context comes forward in the future.

That was a very interesting day.

Request for Emergency Debate

The Speaker: A Standing Order 30 resolution by the Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Oil Price Differentials

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I moved this motion for emergency debate because of the existing situation. As you know, Alberta oil is produced with great difficulties because of the climatic challenges and logistic challenges. In spite of all these challenges Albertans have put in a lot of hard work to produce that oil, which we are selling at a discount of unprecedented levels. Usually the discount is at $5 to $15 per barrel between WCS and WTI, but in the last few months we have noted that it has reached approximately $45 to $50, in U.S. dollars, just the discount. So we are only getting a fraction of the price of WTI.

That warranted some emergency debate, because the industry has come forward – the industry used to be together before, and thanks to the NDP government now the industry is divided. After their climate change plan and after these issues with the differential, now the industry is not on the same page. Some of them want production cuts; some of them don't want that. Now all the employees that are unemployed are losing hope, and the ones that are still working think that some of those companies may lay them off soon, so they are also worried. Recently the Keystone pipeline was also delayed because of the Montana federal court's judgment. Also, Trans Mountain: this Premier and the front-benchers here and the backbenchers have taken a victory lap so many times in so many months, and it is still halted. There is no timeline from the federal . . .

The Speaker: Urgency, hon. member, urgency.

Mr. Panda: Also, Northern Gateway was killed. Tim McMillan of the upstream producers' association, CAPP, said that if Northern Gateway had come as planned, we wouldn't have been in this situation.

Because of all those reasons, Mr. Speaker, this is a real crisis. It's a national economic crisis, and we owe it to Albertans to discuss and talk about the actual issues and offer them constructive solutions. Our Leader of the Official Opposition proposed voluntary cuts to production. That's one solution. And there are many other solutions. I'll talk about what we've proposed and how the government has time and again mocked us, ridiculed us, and brought Albertans to this stage.

The Speaker: Hon. member, we've got to talk to the principle of necessity.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, as you may have noted in the last few weeks, just in the last 10 months Albertans have lost about $13 billion, not millions but $13 billion. That's why I'm asking for this emergency debate, because people are losing hope. This government is appointing envoys who have actually in the past opposed the development of the oil sands and opposed pipelines. Because of this government's actions, Albertans are on the edge. That's why we need to debate this, so please allow us to debate this.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, those arguments were far from compelling about the urgency of this situation. Make no mistake about it; this is an urgent situation, and the Premier has made it very clear that the price differential and the surplus of oil in our province that we can't move to market has indeed created a serious crisis. Alberta is losing money, the economy is losing money, and Canada's economy is affected as well.

3:30

It's something that the government takes very seriously and is very focused on, Mr. Speaker. To that end, we've taken action on a number of fronts in recent days and weeks, including doubling our support for petrochemical upgrading, building our support for the Trans Mountain expansion project in addition to other actions we've taken such as supplying significant amounts of oil to support the Keystone XL project as well.

I'd like to thank the member for bringing this forward and to indicate on behalf of the government that we do believe that this is an urgent matter and that we support the application to set aside this afternoon's business in order to discuss this critical topic, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll just briefly add my voice to the call that this an urgent matter that I think deserves the attention of the House this afternoon, at least for part of this afternoon. A Standing Order 30 should not be taken lightly. Some recently published research that was sent to me by a constituent says that pipeline bottlenecks in this province are depriving our upstream industry of between $15 billion and $39 billion in royalty applicable earnings in 2019 alone – that's a single year – which could translate into roughly $1.5 billion to $4.1 billion of lost revenue to this government. That is, I think, a crisis, and I would urge you, please, to support an urgent debate for this afternoon.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak to the matter?

The oil differential being experienced by the Canadian oil industry is having a major impact on the economy. I think we all recognize that. It is my sense that the House recognizes the urgency of the matter and wishes to dedicate its time and energy to address that urgency. Therefore, as it seems to be the desire to discuss that, I would rule that it is urgent.

I will now ask whether debate on the urgent matter shall proceed. If there are any objections to the question, in accordance with what is outlined in Standing Order 30(4), I'll be asking members who support the motion to rise in their places. If there are no objections, the debate will proceed.

Emergency Debate

The Speaker: Hon. member, please proceed with the discussion.

Oil Price Differentials

Mr. Panda moved:

Be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely, to discuss the impact of the significant recent increase in the oil price differential, its negative impact on Alberta jobs and the economy, and measures that can be taken to ensure that pipelines are built following the delay or cancellation of several recent major projects.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like I said before, Albertans are losing, even in our Premier's own words, $80 million to $100 million per day. I want to talk briefly about how we got here and what we can do to remove some of these bottlenecks that currently we are experiencing. The reason we are here is because of the actions and inactions of this government, so I would like to talk about some of those actions.

When this government came in, the oil price was low, so I don't blame them for the world oil price. But they made a bad situation worse with a series of actions when they came in. When they came in, they started the royalty review. That created some uncertainty with investors. Then they brought in bills like, you know, the climate change action plan and then the cap on production, the 100-megatonne emissions bill. Then they increased corporate taxes.

They increased the personal income tax. Most importantly, they brought in labour laws. So they changed them, and also they brought in lots of layers of regulatory overburden. With that, Mr. Speaker, the confidence of investors was shaken because they were worried about the competitiveness of this industry. As you know, we have our own challenges. Because of the climate in Alberta and because we are landlocked, our cost of production in northern Alberta is really high compared to the light oil in the U.S. and everywhere else.

There is also another thing, Mr. Speaker. Of all these infrastructure projects that were on the drawing board when this government came into office in 2015, three of them are gone now. When they came to power, Northern Gateway was there, and then their federal ally Justin Trudeau killed that project, and our Premier actually supported that. Instead of opposing that, she actually supported it and celebrated. The same thing with Energy East. When the Prime Minister changed the rules midway through the project, this government didn't protest. They were very quick in protesting Northern Gateway when they were in opposition, but when the Prime Minister was killing these projects, they didn't lift a finger for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, that actually caused a lot of concerns with the industry, and all the multinationals started leaving Alberta because of the views of this Premier and because of some of those appointments this Premier made, like Tzeponah Berman to the oil sands advisory group. Even the minister of environment, I mean, now she can conveniently say that her views have changed, but we found the proof that she actually protested against the Northern Gateway pipeline. Now we have Brian Topp leading this group of envoys to go and meet with industry leaders. Those actions have unsettled the industry. That's why they are all coming out and telling us that they don't have any confidence in this Premier's team of ministers and advisers and envoys.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Also, Madam Speaker, when the Trudeau government brought in Bill C-48 and Bill C-69, this side of the House actually wrote to the standing committees and wrote to the federal government. We asked the Minister of Energy and the minister of environment to join us or include us in efforts to stop those bills, but for months and months this government sat on their hands and did nothing to stop the federal government.

Also, Madam Speaker, we talked about turning off the taps to B.C. because if we don't take any action, the opponents of the pipelines, who are emboldened by the front lines of this government – you know, they're tasting the victories of court battles and blockades and physical protests and all. This government hasn't done anything, so that's why we asked them to follow our lead on the fight-back strategy.

The Leader of the Official Opposition talked about how to fight the opponents, who are actually the enemies of Alberta and the enemies of Canada because they're doing a disservice to Canada. We said, "Join us in our fight to stop those antipipeline activists and antinationals," and this government just mocked us and did nothing. Now Prime Minister Trudeau said that he wants to phase out the Alberta oil sands, and he's doing one action after another. Our Premier thought that she had the support, and she thought that by implementing the carbon tax, we'd get social licence, but we didn't get that.

Now she's asked for crude by railcar, and she's asked for additional locomotives and tanker cars. The Prime Minister's team is looking at how to withdraw those railcars, so that means that we won't have the capacity to move the oil by rail. All these actions one after the other, Madam Speaker, are causing a lot of anxiety to the industry, and they're fleeing Alberta and Canada one after the other and taking their capital to other jurisdictions where they can get a better rate of return.

Madam Speaker, that's why we said: okay; industry cannot come together on their own for two reasons. One, a legal reason, is that they can't appear to be colluding; the second, thanks to this government's efforts they're divided. Now they're not on the same page. This government actually divided the industry, which was working together for decades and decades. They've done some good things together. They shared the innovation, they shared their research, and all that is under threat because they can't talk to each other thanks to this government's efforts.

Now, we don't know what Brian Topp is actually going to talk to them about. We know that there is an election coming in six months. Now the Premier brings Brian Topp and others. Particularly, Brian Topp being a former political operative, I don't know what his mandate is. For the reasons I explained, I can't trust even if he has good intentions because we have seen what Tzeponah Berman did before. She got the opportunity to know all the secrets of the government, sitting on the oil sands organizing committee, and now she is using all that information to work against us. Brian Topp: what is he doing? Is he going to do fundraising for the NDP? What's his mandate? I don't know.

The possible solutions we talked about came from the industry itself. Voluntarily some of them have agreed to cut production. About 145,000 barrels they agreed to cut, but if others also come forward and cut the production to the extent of 250,000 barrels, that will stabilize the market. Currently we have about 300,000 to 400,000 barrels of oil that is creating the off balance in the market. As our leader proposed, if the industry comes forward and does that as a temporary measure – it's only a temporary measure.

There is a lot to be done by this government, which they haven't done for three and a half years. Now just before the election, six months before the election, they're trying to tell Albertans that they're trying to do something, but credibility is the issue here, Madam Speaker. Industry has lost confidence in this government. So they have to act swiftly. They have to consult them; they can't divide them.

Our proposal is to help them get together because they can't do it themselves. Let the government work with them and advise them because it's in the public interest. It's Albertans who own that resource; it's not those oil companies: Suncor or CNRL or Shell. They only have the licence to operate as long as it is in the public interest. They had to get that. They're there at the pleasure of Albertans, so if they're not working in the interest of Albertans, then they lose that social licence to operate in Alberta. It's as simple as that. Albertans are the ones who have to grant permission.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my honour and pleasure to rise today to speak to this emergency debate on the differential. You know, I'll start off by clarifying a few points from the hon. member across the way. Essentially the reason that we're in this situation is because of a lack of market access, but I want to clarify the significant number of proactive steps and measures that our government has taken, our Premier, our Minister of Energy, in order to support Alberta's energy sector.

Madam Speaker, first and foremost, Alberta energy producers are the most responsible energy producers in the world. We have the highest standards here in Alberta when it comes to our environmental standards and oversights to our safety standards to our approval processes.

Now, our government did a number of things. When we first came into office, the price of oil was collapsing, Madam Speaker. That's part of the reason the former Premier called the election a year early. We are starting to recover. Let me tell you that one of the first things we did was announce and carry out a royalty review. Now, what the member opposite fails to acknowledge or understand is the number of companies around this province who applauded our government's work on the royalty review. We assigned a panel that went around the province engaging with industry. They listened, they made recommendations, and our government adopted them.

Because of that, Madam Speaker, the activity, the number of wells being drilled, the activity in our energy sector increased. We made changes so that our royalty framework would reward innovation and would encourage wells to continue to be drilled even when their output starts to decline. We made it even more competitive for industry here in Alberta, and I challenge any member of this House to find companies who will go out and criticize our modernized royalty framework that our government undertook. That's something I'm very, very proud of, the work that our Minister of Energy did.

As well, Madam Speaker, there are a number of initiatives that we've done: calling on the federal government, working with them, to try to reclaim orphan wells to get companies back to work and to deal with that issue. As well, I know that the Minister of Energy has been working with the AER on the issue of regulatory approvals, trying to find ways that the AER can expeditiously approve projects, which is very, very important.

As well, you know, Madam Speaker, we did introduce a climate leadership plan and one I would argue is not only the most robust climate leadership plan in North America, but we've demonstrated real leadership that the environment and the economy go hand in hand. Quite frankly, that day that it was announced was a historic day, to have a number of energy CEOs on stage beside indigenous leaders, beside environmental NGOs, our Premier, and our Minister of Environment and Parks announcing Alberta's climate leadership plan. We were the first to develop a made-in-Alberta plan that has seen significant new investments in our province that would disappear the day that that plan – if it ever did disappear, the money would disappear. The opposition would rather have Ottawa impose a climate plan on Alberta. I don't think Albertans want that. I think they want an Alberta-made solution, and that's what our government has delivered.

But I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that the energy sector is not just onboard with a climate leadership plan; in fact, you've got companies like Exxon Mobil who are spending a million dollars to campaign in favour of a carbon tax or a price on carbon because they are investing hundreds of millions of dollars into energy efficiency, into reducing their greenhouse gas emissions, into reducing their footprint, their water usage. A great example: Imperial in their Aspen project that they just announced, several billion dollars of new investment here in Alberta announced a couple of weeks ago. The technology that they're using reduces their water consumption by 25 per cent. You know where that solution came from? Alberta Innovates. Alberta Innovates helped to pioneer the technology. They worked with energy and our energy sector and our business sector to develop this technology that now Imperial is using. I'm very proud of the fact that that's a made-in-Alberta solution that Imperial is using here in Alberta, that we will see used internationally. A number of innovative technologies and processes are developed here in Alberta because we are the best.

Now, Madam Speaker, what I will agree with is that we need to do more for market access, but what Albertans know and need to recognize is that it is a little rich coming from the Leader of the Official Opposition and the opposition to talk about the fact that we are lacking market access and pipelines to tidewater when the very member served for 20 years in Ottawa. Twenty years, 10 of those in cabinet. If we recall, the Northern Gateway pipeline, on that pipeline, the Federal Court of Appeal ruled that the Crown, a.k.a. the Leader of the Official Opposition and former Prime Minister Stephen Harper, failed to adequately consult with indigenous communities. That pipeline would not have moved forward, and that's on the shoulders of the Leader of the Official Opposition and the former federal government.

Our government and our Premier have been proactive since day one. We have been working with the federal government and with all Canadians to demonstrate the urgency and the need for market access. Madam Speaker, two weeks ago or a week and a half ago I announced the Keep Canada Working phase 2, demonstrating a lost revenue clock that will be displayed in Ottawa. I said it today in question period. Federal Members of Parliament will not be able to walk through that building without passing by at least one screen that shows the ongoing lost revenue. Over $80 million a day Canadians are losing. This is a crisis. Since August 30 over $6 billion has been lost because we lack market access. We on this side of the House have been trying to ensure the federal government understands this is a crisis and action is needed.

No one has been a louder champion and spokesperson for market access and pipelines than our Premier, Madam Speaker. She has travelled across this country several times demonstrating that Alberta's energy sector is the most responsible and that we are the best because of the actions that our government and our industry have taken – we've worked very collaboratively with them – and that this pipeline is critical. There is not a road, a school, a bridge, a hospital, or a bike lane in this country that does not owe something to Alberta's energy sector. The Premier has said it, our Minister of Energy has said it, and I've said it on numerous occasions.

What we need to do is move forward in ensuring that Trans Mountain doesn't get held up any longer. Now, our Premier has taken a number of steps, including appointing three special envoys to be able to engage with industry. The Member for Calgary-Foothills tried to say that industry used to be all united in their voice and somehow now they're not. I don't know where that member was in the past 20 years, but all of industry and CAPP especially do not all have one unified voice. There are different players. There are small companies, large companies, international companies, and those that are using different processes that aren't all on the same page. In fact, there are a number of companies that are calling for us to curtail. That is not a uniform calling. Not all of industry is calling for that curtailment, Madam Speaker.

Now, our Premier and our government have been very clear that all options are on the table, but what we are going to do with these three individuals is engage with industry to ensure that we hear their concerns, their feedback, their ideas before we act. We have done that from day one. The Premier has invited me to sit on a number of committees. One is a market access committee. I sit on the U.S. working group. I work with our industry in forestry to try to resolve the softwood lumber dispute that's currently going on. I engage with our manufacturers. Madam Speaker, we have and will continue to work closely with industry, acting on their advice and looking at ways to help move this forward.

We are looking at an immediate, a short-term, a medium-term, and a long-term strategy, including calling on the federal government for increased rail capacity. I can tell you that we also have been calling on the federal government to appeal the Federal Court of Appeal's decision. They haven't done that yet. We are turning up the heat on the federal government because they must act, and they must act now. This is a Canadian crisis. This is not just about Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to thank my colleague the Official Opposition Energy critic for having brought forward this motion as I called for this Legislature to debate the urgency of the price differential crisis this past Monday. As members have indicated, this has gone from a serious economic problem to a bona fide crisis for Alberta. Let us be clear. What we are facing now in terms of its gravity and its potential impact on Alberta's economy and this government's finances is of the same order of magnitude as the global financial crisis posed to many national governments in 2007 and '08. If the severity of this price differential continues in what is by far our largest industry and export product, it will permanently impoverish Albertans and massively damage the fiscal health of the Alberta government. So this is truly an emergency.

Madam Speaker, it's true that historically Alberta has received less than the global price for its oil and gas sales, but it is far more true now than ever before in our history. Over most of the past month the global price for heavy crude has been trading north of $60 a barrel while we've been skipping just above $10 to $15 a barrel for Alberta heavy crude. West Canada select price yesterday, $14 a barrel, but west Texas intermediate, around $60 a barrel; a $45 price differential. That is devastating. The Premier has suggested that the implication of this is an opportunity cost of $80 million a day. Most of those in the industry indicate that it's costing Canada's economy at least a hundred million dollars a day.

Jim Gray, one of the éminence grise of Alberta's energy industry, former CEO of Canadian Hunter Exploration, calculated for me his view that the total de minimis cost to the Canadian economy of the oil price differential plus the gas price differential plus the $12 billion that eastern Canadians spend on importing foreign oil is at least $46 billion per year and $14 billion in forgone government revenue, at least $5 billion in annualized forgone royalty revenues for the government of Alberta that is already dealing with an $8 billion NDP deficit, parenthetically, the highest deficit of any provincial government as a share of gross domestic product.

This is a crisis, Madam Speaker. We've seen this train wreck happening in slow motion over the past several years as it has developed, and many Albertans, including this party, have been blowing the whistle, calling for urgent leadership and action. Instead – instead – as Gwyn Morgan, the former president of EnCana, in a Financial Post editorial today said: every time it looked like we saw a light at the end of the tunnel, it turned out to be a train bearing down on Alberta's economy driven by Justin Trudeau.

Let us unpack this, Madam Speaker. First of all, there are two issues here. There is what I would call the structural reasons for the price differential related to the failure of governments to get coastal pipelines built, and then there is more of a temporal challenge in terms of current inventories, that I will address first.

My colleague the member for Calgary already spoke to this, but the consensus in the energy industry is that about $20 of the $45 price differential, about 50 per cent of the current differential, is a structural challenge attributable to a lack of global market access, meaning that we are price takers, as we all know, and end up having to sell our oil to the Americans at whatever price they want to give us for it. But another 50 per cent of the current catastrophic price differential, about $20 to $25 per barrel, is attributable to a current glut of oil inventories in Alberta, which has put the market off balance. Now, we're producing about – what? – 4.4 million barrels per day in Alberta, which is significantly higher than a couple of years ago because of increases in incremental production as a result of major capital investments, particularly in the oil sands.

The problem is that that has bottlenecked, and some are arguing that the vertically integrated companies are playing into that bottlenecking problem by maintaining high levels of production because ultimately they profit from the low price for the feedstock by selling cheap Alberta oil downstream to refineries in the United States, paying royalties on only $14 a barrel here, then upgrading in the U.S., selling in global markets at $55, $60 a barrel, paying a lower U.S. corporate income tax rate. But this resource, Madam Speaker, belongs to Alberta. It belongs to Albertans, not to those companies to whom we give a permit to develop it responsibly. That is why I called on upstream producers to take voluntary individual action, not through any form of horizontal collusion but voluntary action, to reduce by approximately 5 per cent of oil production in Alberta, which would be in the range of a quarter million barrels per day. If we can get to that point through voluntary action, we believe that that would bring the current inventories back to balance and would eliminate about half of the current price differential. We'd be going from roughly $15 a barrel to roughly $35 a barrel, and at least the industry could make a go of it at that price point, and the impact for the Alberta treasury would be less severe.

I'd like now to reiterate that call. Madam Speaker, this has nothing to do with collusion. Most of the upstream producers have already done the responsible thing in reducing voluntarily and unilaterally their production, but a few major producers are refusing to do so because they're making huge profits off it. I understand the market, but I also understand that in the long run – in the long run – the temptation to engage in predatory pricing to drive mid-sized and small producers out of the market is not in the long-term interests of the Alberta economy. If this situation continues for six or nine or 12 months, the impact on employment and investment in this province could be catastrophic. That is why I've called for this action. I invite the government to join us in that call.

There are other measures that could be taken, too many to detail here, but one would obviously be increased rail shipment. It's deeply concerning that the federal government is now proposing an accelerated timeline to remove jacketed railcars for oil shipments, that will accentuate the bottlenecking. Let's plead with the federal government, which is hammering us on so many fronts, to at least maintain those railcars in place. They are the backbone of our capacity to move about 300,000 barrels per day on rail right now.

I need now to switch in my two minutes remaining to the structural challenge, a federal government, cheered on by the Alberta NDP government, that vetoed the Northern Gateway pipeline. The hon. the environment minister went before the NEB to lobby for a veto of Northern Gateway. The Premier publicly said that she was opposed to Northern Gateway. This government did nothing to defend our constitutional jurisdiction when the feds forced TransCanada to drop the Energy East pipeline because of this ridiculous proposal to link that project to upstream carbon emissions. The NDP's opposition to Keystone XL, the Trudeau government's surrender to President Obama's veto of that project, and the failure to overcome the obstructionism of the B.C. New Democrats on Trans Mountain all have created this crisis.

We need a fight-back strategy. We need to create alliances across the country. I commend the new government of New Brunswick, which is joining with Alberta, at least with this party, in opposing Bill C-69, the no more pipelines law. I applaud the new government of Ontario in doing the same thing in their financial statement. But, Madam Speaker, in my last 30 seconds, we need to have a fight-back strategy to respond in real time aggressively to the lies and myths told about our energy industry, to put the anti Alberta energy special interests on the defensive, to challenge the charitable status of political pressure groups masquerading as charities, like the David Suzuki Foundation. We need to empower the majority of First Nations, who are pro development.

I can carry on at a later date. But we need to move from the defence to the offence to protect our resources.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Littlewood: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's a privilege to be able to rise and speak about this very important issue. In my constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, that is where many of the workers in this industry make their lives. I often talk about the fact that the towers that the management and the owners are in are in places like Calgary, but it's actually the workers that drive to the plants every day in Fort Saskatchewan and surrounding areas that make our home their home. So this issue is of great value and importance to our community.

I think about the homes that they buy, the hockey teams that they help invest in and help coach and donate money to and collect bottles to support, and I think about the hospitals that are invested in also because of our very important oil and gas and energy industry in the area. That is the cost of the inability to get market access. The cost of not being able to utilize and get our full value into our economy is hurting those things. It's hurting families that want to be able to come out and make Fort Saskatchewan their home, make Lamont their home, make Bruderheim their home. It's hurting, the fact that we see a lot of nonprofits that have had a much more difficult time fund raising in the last four years, five years because of being hit with a suffering global oil and gas market economy.

The more than $80 million a day that is lost to the United States from Canada is absolutely unacceptable. It's part of the reason why we have been working on the Keep Canada Working campaign. I know that everyone around here has been standing behind it, and we've had so much support from Alberta and across the country. That's why we have been able to get from it being 4 out of 10 Canadians to 7 out of 10 Canadians understanding what we lose every day that we don't work together and work in the best interests of our entire economy.

Thirty billion dollars, Madam Speaker, is being lost to the United States. I said before – and I'll say it again – that it's not good that we do have members of this Chamber that have been actively campaigning for the President of the United States, that would rather keep $30 billion in the United States as opposed to it building our bridges, building our pedestrian walkways, that are very important to our constituents. You know, I'm fine with America wanting to make themselves great, but I would rather them not do it with our money. That's unacceptable. It's our resource.

I'm very thankful that our Premier has been working on this issue for so long. Those that think this has been newly taken on by the Alberta government have not been paying attention. This is something that I have been talking about since the election. It was something that I proudly talked about in both forums in our constituency, talking about the Trans Mountain expansion and Energy East, because they were and are projects that can and should go to Canadian coasts, where we have the most control over our own political climate. I'm glad to see that we are supporting the Keystone XL pipeline. We have committed 50,000 barrels a day to that because any option does become necessary when we are trying to get more of our resources to market so that we can create the jobs that actually fuel our economy.

The idea that this has not been a priority since our Premier was sworn in: they just were not paying attention to how hard she was working. She had agreements with governments across Canada, and we had people that were coming on board because of the incredible work that was being done around leadership on climate change. The inability to break the land lock, that the Leader of the Official Opposition was unable to do: 10 years of failure of being in a federal Conservative government, working with a provincial Conservative government in Alberta and not able to get the job done.

After we were elected, we chose not to kick sand in the faces of people that we were trying to work with because we are all trying to come to the table to be team Alberta and team Canada. That doesn't mean that you scream and pound your fists and flail on the floor to try and score political points when it's to the detriment of our economy here.

We continue to work on this issue. It's an issue where what we are doing now is we are grabbing the bull by the horns. The Premier announced an incredible announcement yesterday, a transformative policy, that she chose the RMA, the rural municipality association, as incredible partners, as municipal leaders because that is where petrochemical facilities are built, because they need space. She chose those reeves and those councillors and those mayors to share transformative policy about adding value in Alberta to Albertans' resources to create jobs.

We have an example of where it's already working. This isn't a pie in the sky idea. We actually see a project that is now up and out of the ground just outside of Fort Saskatchewan in Strathcona county. Inter Pipeline was putting piles in the ground this year. They were able to reach a final investment decision a year ago on a policy that our government put forward to actually incent that investment. So we have 150 businesses that are involved with that project right now – 150 Albertan businesses – and more than 500 workers on-site putting that site together. They are procuring the pieces of that amazing puzzle, that is going to become a polypropylene facility. They are procuring those pieces from Alberta businesses. That's why they were successful, because we said that you need to invest in Alberta if you are going to use Albertans' money.

The people that have the jobs there are the people that keep our local economies working. They are the people that send their kids to university. They are the people that spend money at local small businesses. Without that investment we would not have the sort of positive feelings of the people that really have faith in their economy. It wouldn't be there if it wasn't for the work that we're doing. That was really important news to be sharing on behalf of the government. So yesterday the government decided to double the investment of a piece of legislation that we put forward in the spring that will invest in upgrading. It will invest in infrastructure for petrochemical projects. It will invest in those things that add five times the value or more to raw resources that we are awash in.

We have the skill of our workers, and we have an incredible society that is built on public health care and public education and roads, that are paid for by the taxes that we pay, and they know that they're going to be able to get their resources to market.

Investing in twinning a bridge that goes into Fort Saskatchewan grows the economy. I don't know why the Conservative government before never did it. I don't know why it was not a priority to invest in not only safety but in economic growth. They apparently thought that it would just take care of itself, but it doesn't. These sorts of things take thoughtful policy, that an NDP government would do, that the Conservatives refuse to do. I don't know why that is, Madam Speaker. I don't know why that is that the UCP call that feeding at the trough.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. The pipeline bottleneck and the impact that that is having on everyday Albertans, on jobs, on the take to this provincial government, the impact on the deficit on this province, the impact on debt are nothing short of a crisis.

What's so tragic is that it is a crisis that was absolutely avoidable. There is plenty of blame to go around. It goes back to previous federal governments. It goes back to this government, when they first came to power, not really being serious about making sure that pipelines got built. They didn't look over the shoulder of the federal government to make sure that the Trans Mountain regulatory process was done properly.

The recent Trans Mountain court ruling that stalled that project is not new law. The federal court did not make up new law. All they did was apply law that was found originally in the Northern Gateway case. So it was absolutely knowable by experts in Alberta Energy, by the minister, and by the Premier. They should have known that this pipeline was at risk if the regulatory process run by the Trudeau government was not executed properly.

As we now find out, to the great detriment of Albertans, to the great detriment of our finances and the countless, tens of thousands of Albertans who are out of work now as a result, we're in a real crisis situation in this province. There are no easy answers to this. The long-term solution is to build pipelines, but the long-term solution to build pipelines has been known for a decade or more.

Some of the things that the hon. member had just talked about in terms of petrochemical diversification: while those may sound like great ideas, we're a decade away from those bearing fruit, best case maybe five years. What does that do for the family right now who is having a hard time making ends meet because they can't get work? What does that do for the companies that are choosing to invest not in Canada, not in Alberta, but in the United States? It is booming in Texas and in North Dakota, and what are we doing here in Alberta? We're sending our rigs down south, we're sending our workers down south while Albertans are having a hard time making ends meet. That is the result of poor government policy choices by the NDP and by the federal government, and that is why this is a national crisis.

Total Energy Services recently announced that they were going to close five western Canadian branches. They are in the best case moving the people who were going to have those jobs here in Alberta down to the U.S. More likely, they're hiring Americans. They're not hiring Albertans. Those are people who will not be able to suit their kids up for hockey this winter. Those are people who are going to have to go deeper and deeper and deeper in debt at a time of rising interest rates. Those are people who are entrepreneurs, who've got a welding unit on the back of their truck, who are going to see that sitting idle, who are having a hard time finding work, can't find work at all.

The rig count in this province has gone down from a high of 850 rigs in 2013 to 590 rigs today, and a forecast recently by Peter Tertzakian is that it may drop again to 500. Peter Tertzakian very recently said that there's a risk we could lose this winter's drilling season.

The dilemma, the challenge, the crisis that we face is not related only to heavy oil. It's having a contagion on light oil as well. While we know that the differential for heavy oil, for western Canadian select, is in the $40 range and we're getting between $13 and $18 for a barrel of oil – the cheapest oil on the face of the earth is coming from Alberta as a result of pipeline bottlenecks – light sweet crude is trading at a 50 per cent discount to WTI. That is a massive impact on the take to Albertans from the resource that all of us own.

There are a lot of reasons why this has happened. I think the federal government deserves a lot of blame for the changes they made in the 2017 budget, which I believe today's announcement may or may not address, to the capital cost allowance treatment for oil and gas investment. It used to be that you were able to write that off in a year, like you can in the United States. If you're an investor with capital to invest in the energy industry, where are you going to invest it? In the place that gives you the best return. So that capital has been flowing out of this country into the United States ever since that change was made.

It's part of a layering problem. It's not just low commodity prices. In fact, until very recently the price of oil was upwards of $70 a barrel. That's more than enough margin to make a very healthy profit. But it's the layering impact of labour law changes, of federal tax changes, of provincial tax changes, of hostile regulators. That makes it very, very difficult to do business in this province as it relates to oil and gas.

So what's the answer? Scotiabank just today released a note that talks about the impact of the differential. They say that Alberta producers are potentially losing between $15 billion and $39 billion a year in royalty applicable earnings – not top-line revenue; royalty applicable earnings – in 2019 alone through this differential. That results in a cost to the Alberta treasury of between $1.5 billion and $4.1 billion for one year. While this government says their path to balance is intact, under no circumstances can we get anywhere near a balanced budget with a $1.5 billion to $4.1 billion hole in the budget.

While the Official Opposition may say that we can ask producers to voluntarily withhold production, that creates a real problem, several problems. One is the free rider problem. If company A reduces production and company B does not, company B disproportionately benefits. This is not the kind of problem that can be solved simply by crossing our fingers and asking nicely. The other problem, of course, is collusion. If the government convenes a group of private industry to sit down together and decide collectively to reduce production, that creates a problem with collusion.

My strong view – and this is a view that Scotiabank has actually done the arithmetic on. They have found that if we take collective action, Scotiabank suggests that under section 85(1) of the Alberta Mines and Minerals Act the provincial government has the power to “make regulations fixing the maximum amount of petroleum that may be produced under Crown agreements” if such a regulation is found to be in the public interest. Scotiabank believes that if we temporarily reduce output by 140,000 barrels a day, roughly 4 per cent of conventional oil sands output, we will save in the neighbourhood of $300 million to $2.9 billion to the Alberta treasury in the form of royalties. That would avoid between $3 billion and $27 billion of the $15 billion to $39 billion in forgone upstream royalty earnings to the province. That's a lot of numbers, Madam Speaker, but what it means is that in desperate times, desperate measures are required.

This government: instead of acting definitively and decisively in the best interests of all Albertans in protecting the value of the resource that all of us collectively together own, what do they do? They do what every government does who is frozen and paralyzed like a deer in the headlights, not sure what to do. They strike another committee. In Calgary just yesterday for a couple of events in my constituency, I can tell you that the people in my constituency have told me that they are furious that someone like Brian Topp is being flown back in from Ontario to tell them their business. That is the last thing this province needs. What this province needs is a government with the guts to take action. Is it a dramatic step to forcibly constrain and curtail production for a short period of time? It absolutely is. Is it a simple thing to do? No. But when we're facing the kind of dilemma and we're facing the kind of crisis that we are in this province right now, it demands leadership and it demands action. It does not demand another committee.

If we can save the schools and the roads and the hospitals and the debt repayment costs, if we can save the jobs of those tens of thousands of Albertans – I can tell you that I'm hearing stories about potential layoffs coming in head offices, potential layoffs coming in the field. Those are potential layoffs coming very, very soon as a result of this high differential, at a time when we should be recovering with higher oil prices, we should be thriving, we should be prospering, our budget should be on the way to balance. There's absolutely no excuse for that. There are people who are going to work every morning wondering: "Is today the day? Having survived the worst economic downturn in a generation, is today the day that I lose my job? Is today the day that I have to go home to my family and say: 'I'm sorry; we can't afford Christmas this year. I'm sorry; we're going to have to give up hockey'." That's what it means to the people of Alberta.

That is why this government needs to show leadership, take strong, definitive action, and have a reasonable plan to curtail production, get the price back up, and keep Albertans working. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise on this pressing matter of the widening differential and its persistence. It is not at all out of the realm of possibility that this short-term commodity bump, now that it has moved into a longer term issue for Alberta's balance sheet, very soon will become an issue for the national conversation. I have not yet had a chance to review the federal Finance minister's quarterly update this afternoon, but I will say this. If we do not see an appropriate response from the federal government with the kind of urgency with which our government has addressed this matter, then I will be left dismissing this quarterly update as something of a tone-deaf piece of political communication. I think the time for action is now on this matter.

That is why we ask the federal government for their co-operation with respect to rail capacity. I was in the hon. member for Strathcona county's constituency a couple of weeks ago, and you could just see the bitumen cars lined up at the rail station, Madam Speaker. I remember saying to my kids: "You know, that's millions of dollars for schools, for hospitals, for roads, for bridges sitting in those railcars right now that can't go anywhere. If you wonder why you hear the word 'pipeline, pipeline, pipeline' on the news all the time, kids, that's why." Within those cars are jobs. It's the future of this province, but it's also the economic driver for the country. So we definitely need some of those short-term solutions around rail.

We definitely need to explore some of the short-term solutions with industry around supply. There's no question about that. That's why we appointed three very respected negotiating envoys to discuss that matter with industry because it is by no means a consensus, a suite of solutions out there. If it was, it would be done already, Madam Speaker, but it's not.

Then, of course, other short-term solutions include making sure that the 22-week timeline, as laid out by the federal government, with respect to the marine scoping of the NEB redo proceeds according to an appropriate timeline, Madam Speaker, and then, of course, that the redo on the indigenous consultation, for which there isn't a specific timeline for reasons of ensuring that the duty to consult is appropriately discharged by the Crown, also proceeds. But the regulatory piece is something that our government is watching very, very closely. Once again, if we see that that 22-week timeline is slipping, we will have much more to say about it, and it'll be much more than a clock meeting the Members of Parliament as they go into the House of Commons to go to work in the morning.

In the medium term, Madam Speaker, this government must grapple with the broken regulatory system that led us to this place in the first place. Of course, we have a new piece of legislation that the feds have brought in, in part to address some of these issues, the fact that the Federal Court of Appeal dismissed the Northern Gateway approval as well as the TMX approval. We have to make sure that we're not fixing a broken system with a broken system.

And there is no question that when the Northern Gateway pipeline approval was rejected by the Federal Court of Appeal, its approval by federal cabinet was rejected on the grounds of inadequate indigenous consultation, and not just a little bit, Madam Speaker. The court was scathing in its appraisal of the Crown, which was the previous Conservative federal government, and how they discharged the honour of the Crown in engaging indigenous people.

Here are just some quotes.

The inadequacies [were] more than just a handful and more than mere imperfections. [They] left entire subjects of central interest to the affected First Nations, sometimes subjects affecting their subsistence and well-being, entirely ignored.

They went on to say that it was not a case where the proponent of the project,

Enbridge itself, had failed to reach out to aboriginal peoples.

Far from it,

said the court.

Once the pipeline corridor for the Project was defined in 2005, Northern Gateway engaged with all Aboriginal groups, [et cetera], with communities located within 80 kilometres of the Project corridor.

This failure lies squarely at the feet of Stephen Harper's federal government, that failed to take indigenous consultation seriously, just as they failed to take indigenous issues seriously with respect to poverty, with respect to the missing and murdered indigenous women and girls inquiry, Madam Speaker, just as they did with respect to economic inequality, social inequality, child poverty, all of the other important issues that the federal government utterly – utterly – abandoned their duty on, their fiduciary responsibilities under the Constitution Act of this country and their basic level of human decency when it comes to reconciliation with indigenous peoples.

That's where the failure of Northern Gateway lies. So own it, and then fix it. Do not do more to undermine the system. But Stephen Harper's government did more to undermine the system when they refused to scope in the marine safety components that were within the NEB process of the Northern Gateway, within the TMX approval. They just didn't do it. They just didn't bother, Madam Speaker. Now we are at a place where, again, the courts are saying: well, no; actually, you have responsibilities to discharge here. So there's plenty of blame to go around because, in my view, the federal government ought to have caught that, too. They didn't, and that's why they need to fix it. They need to fix it expeditiously. They should have fixed it with a legislative solution, but if they can stay to that 22 weeks, then we'll see. But at the end of the day, there must be a pipeline to tidewater.

So that's that piece, Madam Speaker. Then there's the longer term solution, and that is, of course, Alberta getting full value for its resources here at home – upgrading, refining, partial upgrading – so we get better capacity within pipelines. All of those things put Albertans to work. I know that for a generation oil and gas workers have been sort of on-site or in their union halls or elsewhere around their kitchen tables wondering: “Why don't we get better value for our resources? Why aren't we upgrading our natural gas and other light ends into plastics, into polypropylenes, all these things? And why aren't we shipping more refined product?”

Sure. It does mean that we would have to account for the greenhouse gas emissions associated with those activities here in Alberta. That's why we have a climate leadership plan to deal with those emissions, because climate change is real, and you have to. So many working-class people have said for so long in my experience both in the labour movement and the New Democratic Party and elsewhere: why aren't we getting better value? The Minister of Transportation, when he led our party, certainly took that position, and I was so proud to run on that in the 2012 election, in fact, Madam Speaker, because I come from a family with lots of oil and gas workers on the one side.

My dad was an electrician who worked on the oil rigs. People like to talk about my past, apparently, in this House. They want to, you know, bring my personality or my past into this Chamber. Okay. Let's totally have that conversation. Let's talk about how my dad lost his job during the national energy program. That's why, when people say, “Oh; we should bring a Trudeau in to make climate policy for us,” I say: “Oh, no. I don't think so.” Because in my house that was a big, fat I-don't-think-so in the 1980s, when my dad lost his job.

You know, on my dad's side of the family there were lots of oil and gas folks, lots of kind of socially conservative folks. We didn't always agree on a lot of things growing up, around the Christmas table and so on. Certainly, my parents were a little more progressive, but some of the extended family, not so much. But one of the things that we always agreed on was adding value to Alberta's resources so that we as Albertans, as owners of those resources, would get the full economic and social benefits of those things.

So when my Premier stood up yesterday to announce a new program that would bring in $20 billion worth of new investment in upgrading, adding value to our resources, with 15,000 jobs for ordinary working people – construction jobs, oil and gas jobs – I've never been so proud. You know, my dad is not here anymore. He spent his life not doing fancy jobs in the oil and gas industry. He wasn't in one of those towers. The phone would ring at 2 o'clock in the morning, and he would have to go and drive to the oil rig. He would be so proud of this, too.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to be able to talk here today about this issue and this crisis. Of course, it is a crisis when we look at this price differential and how it affects the budget. We know that Budget 2018 didn't account for the current oil price differential. That's something we do know.

When we hear the government say, “Oh; we're still on track,” I am skeptical. I'm sure a lot of Albertans are skeptical, too. I think what probably is most alarming is that the government plan already is to take us to over a hundred billion dollars in debt and billions of dollars in interest each year. When we see these things happening, we see this price differential, we know it's costing the Alberta government millions of dollars. What is the effect going to be down the road? So that way we know it's a crisis.

Nobody believes that things are still on track. This government doesn't have a very good track record when it comes to planning anything fiscal, that's for sure. Of course, we in the Legislature here are being asked to vote on programs and make fiscal decisions without a clear understanding of the province's finances. There's no way we should be asked to do this without the government being very clear and open and transparent about how this is going to affect the finances of this province.

Now, we know this is an issue, too. We have the Energy minister on April 9, 2018:

We need, as I mentioned earlier, two out of the three pipelines. If Kinder doesn't go, we still have KXL and line 3. Like, we need two of the three.

Madam Speaker, we don't have two out of the three. We've got zero of the three; that's what we have. We have exactly zero.

The Finance minister says, quote: we built pipeline revenues into our path to balance projections; we're confident all the pipelines will be built, so we're just going to keep going down this road. End quote. Madam Speaker, that doesn't sound like a very good plan right now, does it? We have zero pipelines. He's confident that all pipelines will be built. Now, this month's court ruling delaying Keystone XL and the ongoing delay of the Trans Mountain expansion put this budget's expectations into doubt. There's no doubt about that. This fiscal plan assumed that pipelines would be built, and still the government had projected upwards of a hundred billion dollars in debt. So, Madam Speaker, this is a crisis. The government needs to come clean. The Finance minister needs to come into this House and tell the people of Alberta what the finances are in Alberta.

Now, when the Premier was asked if she'd told Trudeau there'd be no objection if Northern Gateway was vetoed, this is what she said:

What we did was that we talked to the federal government, right after they were elected, about the need to get a pipeline to tidewater. We said that we needed one of those pipelines to go west and that we would work with them to get one of those pipelines to go west.

Well, Madam Speaker, we've got zero pipelines right now. This government sat on their hands and watched as Northern Gateway was vetoed and shot down and said absolutely nothing.

Also on Northern Gateway the Premier said:

Interestingly, what happened with respect to Northern Gateway is that the courts ultimately said that Gateway was not the right decision because the members opposite failed to consult appropriately or respectfully with the people that it was impacting.

Well, that's interesting. When the Northern Gateway was shut down for lack of consultation, what did this government do? We saw the minister do it just now. Blame the Conservatives, of course.

Now, Trans Mountain has the same issue. It's shut down right now, too, because of consultation. What does the NDP do now? Well, they cry foul: this is horrible; this is absolutely unacceptable. What happened with Northern Gateway? Nothing. Crickets. If two are shut down for the same reason, why wouldn't the reaction be the same? Madam Speaker, I would say that it's because this government really doesn't have their heart in pipelines. Their heart is not there. Their mouths are there. Their heart is a long ways away.

When we talked about Bill C-69, the Deputy Premier said:

How is it standing up for Alberta to hop on an airplane and jaunt off to Ottawa every time you get a chance.

That was on May 16, 2018. Well, of course, on February 8, 2018, Bill C-69 was introduced. On June 4, 2018, the NDP government defeats Motion 505 to fight C-69 in this House here. On June 20, 2018, Bill C-69 passes in the House of Commons. Then on September 25 the Premier finally says that ministers will go to Ottawa about C-69. That's three months later, after it's already passed. We asked for action long before that.

Now, Madam Speaker, let's talk about Keystone. The Premier on May 2, 2015, in a CBC interview, when they were talking about the NDP federal leader, was against Keystone. What did the Premier say? Quote: we're against it. End quote. Does that sound like support for the oil and gas industry? Does that sound like support for a pipeline, a pipeline that they say that they need for their budget, which will still leave us a hundred billion dollars in debt?

When asked about lobbying the U.S. for Keystone, what did the Premier say? Quote: no realistic objective. End quote. Does that sound like support for pipelines? Does that sound like a reason why we might be here today in a crisis? Sounds like it to me. We had an Alberta envoy to Washington who was told to stop lobbying for a pipeline, and then, of course, they replaced him.

Now, there was an article, an op-ed, done. The title was A Pipeline that Should Not Be Built. Who would have written such an article? Well, one of the three people that the government calls respected envoys to go and support pipelines. Does that make sense? Brian Topp: that's the person that the government has appointed as an envoy over this issue, the guy that wrote an article entitled A Pipeline that Should Not Be Built.

We know that we've seen pictures appear like the environment minister at an anti Northern Gateway rally. We know she spoke against Northern Gateway at an NEB hearing. We have a minister of this government that's travelled to B.C. to campaign for an anti-oil activist. We have an Education minister that chants "no new approvals" for oil sands on the steps of the Legislature. We have NDP that have hired anti-oil activists: Tzeporah Berman, Brian Topp, and others. We could create a huge list.

Today I asked for an apology, a retraction. Can you at least say: we were wrong; we shouldn't have hired these people; we shouldn't have been protesting pipelines for the last five to 10 years? Could we at least have an apology and a retraction for Albertans, an admission that they did something wrong? You know what happened? Nothing. No apology. Unapologetic anti-oil activists.

So why are we here today? Well, that's a really good question, isn't it? We have people like this that are saying that they're representing the oil and gas industry in Alberta when their past has said otherwise. What I would suggest is that we get credible people working on this. Credible people. I don't know that when the environment minister goes off to Ottawa supporting pipelines they can actually take her seriously, with her past. I don't know that when Brian Topp goes to Ottawa and talks to people anybody will look at him seriously either. How could they?

Madam Speaker, we've heard a lot today about how the Conservatives couldn't get pipelines built. Well, earlier today I asked in this very House one simple question: can anybody in the government point to a single major pipeline proposal that the Conservatives didn't approve and support when they had the opportunity? You know what I got for an answer? Nothing, of course, because there isn't one. When the Conservatives were in power, they built four pipelines. That's actually built. They approved all pipelines while they had the opportunity.

What do we have here? We've got two pipeline cancellations, we have a crisis on our hands of epic proportions, and we have a government that nobody believes has their heart in this. We hear the words. We see the lips moving, but we don't see the heart in it, and I don't think Albertans see it either, and that needs to change.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the motion?

Seeing none, we will move on.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

Bill 25

Canyon Creek Hydro Development Act

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights. We've had the opportunity this morning to talk about this bill a little bit, and some information was brought forward that we felt made it incumbent to send it to committee. Now we are in Committee of the Whole, and we are talking about the substance of the bill. Unfortunately, because we're not going to be able to have more time and more opportunities to be able to present to Albertans a fulsome discussion on this bill, at this time I would like to be able to bring forward an amendment.

I will provide that for you, Madam Chair, at this time.

The Chair: This is amendment A1. Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Hunter: Okay, Madam Speaker. I am to move that Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights, be amended in section 1(2) by adding the following after the proposed section 40.1(4):

- (5) The Minister shall make available to the public any proposed amendments to the AMA Agreement respecting compensation matters at least 3 months prior to amending the AMA agreement to allow the public to . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, I believe you're speaking to the wrong bill. This is to Bill 24. We're on the Canyon Creek Hydro Development Act.

Mr. Hunter: I'm sorry. I had two people talking at once.

The Chair: The amendment is for a different bill. We are on Bill 25, Canyon Creek Hydro Development Act.

Mr. Hunter: I thought they said 24.

The Chair: All right. We are on Bill 25, Canyon Creek Hydro Development Act. Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[The clauses of Bill 25 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 24

An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Hunter: You know, I have lots of grey hairs, but my hearing is probably because of my construction background, Madam Chair.

It's now my pleasure to be able to stand and speak to you about this amendment. If you would indulge me, I would like to read the amendment at this point. Is that okay?

The Chair: Actually, the document is back here at the desk.
Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you. I move that Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights, be amended in section 1(2) by adding the following after the proposed section 40.1(4):

- (5) The Minister shall make available to the public any proposed amendments to the AMA Agreement respecting compensation matters at least 3 months prior to amending the AMA Agreement to allow the public to provide feedback on the impact of the proposed amendments on patient outcomes and the effective use of public resources.
- (6) The Minister shall make public any feedback received pursuant to subsection (5) with the consent of the submitter.
- (7) If the consent of the submitter cannot be obtained under subsection (6), the Minister shall make public that feedback in an anonymized format.

The purpose of this amendment, Madam Chair, is to be able to help provide physicians with certain rights. We felt it was also incumbent as there are two parts to any equation. In this situation the other part to the equation with physicians is the patients, the people who are actually involved in receiving that treatment and the care. What we're trying to accomplish with this amendment is providing some transparency for the system that this bill would be introducing, the value of that transparency, which this government has talked about many times, being able to provide that transparency in a system where we hear on a constant basis from patients that they need to know, you know, what kind of care they're receiving, what the outcomes are, and if there are any good ideas, that they could be able to give that feedback to the physicians. This bill I believe should be, really, about doing best for what the patients want and need.

"The primary objective of Canadian health care policy is to protect, promote and restore the physical and mental well-being of residents . . . and to facilitate reasonable access to health services." Physicians have told us that they know nothing about this agreement, which we talked about earlier. Some have even said that they do not want the AMA to negotiate with the government on their behalf. As the information is trickling in, we're starting to get this information from physicians. Even the way that it was presented to us in this House – maybe we can talk about it a little bit more in Committee of the Whole. It was very disingenuous in the way that they presented it to us.

Physicians now, from what we're getting in terms of feedback, Madam Chair, are completely blindsided by this. This bill is something that should have been presented to physicians and provided for them to give their feedback – these are the pros and cons to it; these are the things we like or we don't like – yet they haven't done that. When they gave their brief on this, they said that this has been accepted by 89 per cent. In reality only 30 per cent of the physicians took part in it, and of those 30 per cent that actually took part, they were voting on zeros for the contract, not an actual bill such as this bill.

That's been flawed, and hopefully we'll be able to talk a little bit more about that and get some answers from the government on that, but when it comes to being able to make, in my opinion, a faulty bill better, I think that it's important and incumbent of the government to take a look at the other part of the equation. That other part is the patients.

This is what this amendment does. It provides the ministry with a mechanism so that we can get the feedback and we get that transparency with how that interaction with the patients is going. By doing that, if this bill does pass, which as the government has a majority in this House, there's no doubt that it will pass, but at least this would provide that patient that kind of care and transparency to what is happening here in the House.

Now, is the public aware of how their resources are being spent? This has been a question that has been asked in this House many times. I believe that they do have the right to know about future proposed amendments the government is making on any agreement regardless of the association. This bill would facilitate the mechanism where they can do that, where they can have that knowledge about any future amendments to this so that they would have at least three months to be able to consult and get that fulsome discussion that they so need. The money being used to fund these agreements are, after all, the public resources. They should know about any future proposed agreements and should be allowed to provide feedback on the impact those agreements will make on patient care and outcomes and also public resources.

This bill does nothing to address patient care and outcomes, which does bewilder me why that's the case. In our province patient wait times have become unmanageable. The province has been throwing more money at the system with nothing to show for it. The very people that this bill will affect have not been consulted, so, again, there are two parts to this equation. You've got the physicians and you've got the patients, yet the patient component has not been consulted. Both physicians and Albertans should be involved in any decision that will affect them. That's just good governance. This government has done little to prove to Albertans since the beginning of their term that they have their backs and are looking out for what's in their best interest. In speaking with Albertans, this bill just proves that there has to be more transparency and accountability when it comes to matters that will affect physicians and the general public and their resources.

Now, the province is spending almost $22 billion on health care every year, and I believe that accountability is paramount for a file this large. This is actually the largest, as you know, and has been talked about many times in here. We spend more on health care than any other province, than any other jurisdiction in Canada, so having that transparency is, I think, just a prudent approach. This cost of health care needs to be addressed if Alberta is going to deal with its fiscal challenges, and if there is any hope to be able to gain a path to balance, this file certainly has to be addressed.

This amended agreement with the province says that doctors in the province of Alberta will not receive an increase until 2019. What about after 2019? What's the case at that point? Now, do we really think that any deal made with any associations should not be made public to Albertans so that they are given the opportunity to address their concerns or to give their praise? Again, providing the pros and cons to it. Are Albertans not footing the bill when amendments are made in the future regarding compensation matters? This is something that we believe is prudent, to be able to approach this at this point and provide that option for us to know: what are the future amendments that are going to take place, especially on a $22 billion file?

Since we know that most physicians were not involved with this current amending agreement and that their feedback is not being taken into consideration, it is safe for me to say that this is just another decision this government has made that has the potential to increase spending on health in the province without having to prove that it will also improve patient care and outcomes.

This NDP government has proven to Albertans that they do not consult the public on how to spend their money, and this amendment would give them that recourse. This amendment would make sure that the public, which would include all Albertans and physicians, would be fully aware of any proposed agreement between the minister and the AMA at least three months prior to its amendment. It would allow the public at that time to provide feedback on the impact of those proposed amendments on patient outcomes and the effective use of our public resources. It would also make the public's feedback public, which, obviously, makes sense, seeing as it's public feedback. This is exactly what the government says that they are trying to do with this bill, so I can't see why this amendment would make them nervous in any way. If the AMA is made the sole representative of all physicians, the minister should make physicians' pros or cons public in the future.

I have also asked to have included in the amendment that if the submitter's identity is either not included or is illegible, then the feedback will still be made public in a proper format.

Madam Chair, all we're trying to accomplish here today is what the people of Alberta want, increased transparency and accountability. The reason I feel it is necessary to bring forward these amendments is because the bill does not deal with patient outcomes and the effective use of public resources, which is a concern that I hear on a regular basis. We want Albertans to be aware of any future agreements after 2020 so that they have a place where they can respond.

Unfortunately, this government's narrow focus on the next election dominates their thinking. A short-term focus is not what Albertans want or need and not what this legislative body should be ramming through. With high-running deficits that have ruined the economy, the short-term focus neglects very real fiscal challenges. In Alberta those challenges are massive, and the NDP government is not ready for them.

In a CBC article from March of this year entitled We Need to Have a Difficult Conversation about Alberta's Health-care Costs, it discusses how spending has been soaring, particularly for our oldest patients. The article goes on to say that "if you talk with enough health-care thinkers about why Alberta has historically spent so much on health, you'll hear the same answer: We could afford it!" Madam Chair, the problem is that Alberta is not doing as well as we used to. The policies the NDP have implemented negatively impacted energy investment in Alberta, and if you read the article, the plummeting oil prices have been the cause of Alberta's future demise.

This is why making the public's feedback about the impacts of proposed amendments on patient outcomes and the effective use of public resources public is so very important. Albertans deserve to know how their money is being spent and be able to express their experiences on whether they feel they're getting their money's worth. You'd think that this would be accepted by the NDP because it's very voter facing.

Now, I ask all members of the House to vote in favour of our amendment to Bill 24 in an effort to show an act of solidarity and transparency and accountability, which this side of the House is very much in favour of.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair and to the member for an amendment which gives us an opportunity to both reply to the amendment and, I think in response to the amendment, to some of the questions that were also raised during second reading that I know hon. members want an answer to that directly relates.

I just want to back up. The member talks about how this came as a surprise and out of nowhere, and I actually just want to go through some of the facts and the timeline, back to the 2011 negotiation. In 2011 – as you'll recall, it was before this government was in place – there had been a Conservative government at that time for many decades. In the 2011 AMA agreement the government of Alberta committed to work towards giving the AMA general recognition with an opportunity through an appropriate legal framework if the AMA provided a written request. This was section 2(b) of the 2011 agreement. The 2011 agreement has been in place for a long time. It was negotiated under a Conservative government, implemented under a Conservative government. They actually renegotiated multiple times even after that, but 2011 was the first time they said that they would recognize it within an appropriate legal framework if the AMA provided a written request. Again, section 2(b):

Upon the written request of AMA, [Alberta Health] will work towards entrenching a general recognition of AMA within an appropriate legislative framework.

That was what was agreed to in 2011.

We have records from at least as far back as 2013, from December 2013 I have for sure, where there was a written request from the AMA. Again, that was an agreement negotiated by a Conservative government, and the request came to a Conservative government in 2013, and then it was in 2015, when we formed government, that we had an amending agreement and now a final, ratified agreement yet again. This isn't something that came out of nowhere. I want to start with that.

Secondly, there are many, many, many AMA letters to members and to all physicians across Alberta talking about the negotiation processes and some of the things that were unfolding in that discussion. These were sent to physicians in Alberta. Certainly, I understand that not everyone has time to read every piece of correspondence that comes to them, but this is from the AMA to all of the physicians of Alberta, and there are many records of discussions around negotiations and what some of the items were that had been agreed to or were being considered. The AMA, like all staff group organizations, wants to ensure that their members are informed of what they have an opportunity to vote on. There are many of those documents. We get the President's Letter sent to our constituency offices as well, and there's regular correspondence between staff associations and MLAs.

Physicians definitely had an opportunity to review the agreement and vote against it if they did have concerns. The AMA provided those regular updates and detailed themes of the negotiations and president's messages. I just want to reinforce that this is something that was in the works since 2011. What is new is that we said that we would do it when we sat down in the last round of negotiations, not just that if they sent a written request, we would do it, but we agreed that we would table it this session.

I understand, you know, once burned, twice shy. They asked for it in 2011. They said that it was going to happen. They wrote a letter saying: we'd like it to happen. It didn't happen. But we said that we were going to do it, and this NDP government had a consultation in good faith and said that we would follow through on the commitment, that was made under a previous Conservative government, that wasn't implemented. I just want to make sure that everyone is aware of that piece of the timeline.

The other piece in regard to the amendment that I want to mention is that no other staff group negotiation – I know we have at least one former Conservative Minister of Labour. Certainly, no negotiations with staff groups would have been publicly posted three months ahead of time for any of those staff groups for members of the public to engage through the negotiation process. There is a role for the employer, and there is a role for the payee, or the employees, and physicians definitely are in receipt of payments from the government of Alberta, and the government of Alberta has to act in the role of an employer when they're entering those discussions.

I just want to clarify that this is about representation rights. This isn't officially a negotiation. This is about sitting down in good faith and working through challenges and coming up with solutions. I think we have a very good track record of doing that. Both the amending agreement and the new, ratified agreement of this last year I think show that when we sit down at the table and we work through the challenges, we can come up with good outcomes that lead to better outcomes for Alberta patients, more funds being returned back to the pot to be able to provide additional front-line services, and I think we've done that in a way respecting the employment arrangement that is in place with physicians here in Alberta.

It's my opinion that we should be voting down the amendment. I think it would compromise potential negotiations in the future. It would definitely impact the relationship, and it doesn't reflect what was actually reached through discussions with the AMA. Tentative agreements are shared with all members for a significant amount of time before being ratified, and I think that that is something that was available for members to choose to read or not read, but this is something where I stand by the process that we put in place.

I think what is evident is that, yes, not everyone voted, but even in our democratic elections not everyone votes, yet we respect the opinion that is rendered on decision day. That is indeed what happened here. An overwhelming majority of those who voted yes, that they wanted to move forward with ratifying this agreement, and this is one piece of ratifying that agreement. That's why I'm recommending to all colleagues that we vote against the amendment as proposed.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Chair. It is an honour to rise in the House today to speak to the amendment presented by my good friend and colleague the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. This amendment will bring patient care and patient outcomes to the forefront of Bill 24. It will ensure that the bill is focused on the patient, holding the AMA and government accountable for how money is being spent.

Physician compensation is expected to take up $5.1 billion of the $22 billion health care budget. Nearly a quarter of our health care budget is spent on physicians, and this bill does not have any transparency or accountability for this money and how it is being spent. In order to make this bill stronger, we must ensure that transparency and accountability are adopted. This amendment can do this by making sure that the public is aware of compensation arrangements between the government and the Alberta Medical Association and by ensuring that all changes to an agreement are made public three months prior to any amendments.

The amendment will also provide an avenue for the public to weigh in on the changes made to the AMA agreement. Physicians and all Albertans will have the opportunity to raise their concerns about how the changes could affect the outcomes for patients.

Madam Chair, Bill 24 is not as strong as it needs to be, and that is why I stand in support of this amendment. This bill does not include any form of transparency or accountability, which seems like a potential oversight by the government but one we're used to from this government. It also fails to address the quality of care that patients are receiving as well as their health outcomes, and that is one key part that we are missing in our health care system, accountability to the patient. By creating a method for the public to actually engage in the amending process, we create greater transparency in our health care system. All agreements made must put the patient first.

Alberta's patients should be in the centre of any legislation that looks to make changes to health care. This bill does not anywhere address the patient. It does not talk about holding physicians accountable for the treatment that they give their patients. We all want to see a health care system that is efficient in delivering high-quality care. We all want a system that does not leave people waiting for surgery for over a year. We all want a health care system that is solely focused on achieving the best possible outcomes. In saying this, I feel it is important that physicians have the right to share their recommendations and concerns with the government. The proposed amendment will allow physicians to voice their concerns with any changes made.

You know, we have been reaching out to physicians across this province, and I certainly have done that. A lot of physicians, due to our single system, are already under the AMA and are accepting of everything that they have provided thus far, but there are other physicians, particularly specialists, who don't feel that the AMA represents them well. You know what? You can use that comparison in any group setting, for any group that has a membership to something. There are always going to be factions, groups within that that may not agree entirely, that may not be entirely feeling represented. Those are some of the key points that we're seeing in this, that there are groups within the AMA that aren't in agreement with some of their decision-making.

This amendment will make sure that physicians can continue to make their voices heard without any repercussions. The lack of consultation has resulted in a lack of understanding about the possible implications of this bill or about how the majority of physicians feel about this particular piece of legislation. We have seen time and time again that this government does not do adequate consultations. For three and a half years we have tried to teach you how to consult.

Certainly, you embraced it with the time zone changes that you wanted to do, the daylight saving time, and we thought then and there: they finally understand consultation; they finally understand that they have to speak to people other than their own membership to get some answers. It's unfortunate that again I have to stand here and remind the government side about what consultation is. In this situation you truly didn't consult a lot of the physicians. You were relying on the very association that you're empowering to relay the message to the physicians that are their members, and the members are saying that they weren't even aware of this. This government did not provide any oversight to ensure that the membership that they're going to legislate to their association – that's disappointing. Anyways, this amendment will stop this from happening in the future. The government already knows what the concerns are and could act on them accordingly.

Nevertheless, we need to bring this back to the patients. The government could have used this bill to create accountability within the Alberta Medical Association to improve patient outcomes. The goal of this bill could have tied compensation to those outcomes, which has been discussed many times, but instead you're just using this to formalize a process. In Bill 24 not once are patients mentioned at a time when this government should be advocating for patients. This government is supposed to be the protector of our health care system and needs to do everything it can to get the best deal for Albertans, yet we've seen wait times for hip, knee, and cataract surgeries rapidly rise under this government's mismanagement.

You chose to spend money on building laundry services for some of your health regions when they could have simply contracted that out. You chose to try and build a structure for your lab, and your people can't even do the basic accounting and project management on it, to the point where it's costing you double, $600 million. It doesn't even faze you over there. It's a shame.

I mean, have you told the doctors what you did with the pharmacists, that when you were negotiating with them, you only allowed two in the room and made them sign a nondisclosure agreement? Are the physicians aware of what you did with the pharmacists, that you sent them on their way unable to even tell their own pharmacists what they had signed? That certainly is the interpretation from the pharmacists. I'd love to get clarity on that. Have you told the physicians what you've done? Are you going to lock them in a room, too? Probably.

Anyways, the trend is very concerning, and we need to address this growing crisis at hand: again, mismanagement in our health care system; spending has increased while outcomes decrease.

This bill completely ignores the patients' best interests in order to appease the negotiating body. Don't get me wrong; I respect what the AMA tries to do in some regards. We know that the collective voice tends to be stronger than an individual's, and that's why this amendment is so important. This amendment states:

The Minister shall make available to the public any proposed amendments to the AMA Agreement respecting compensation matters at least 3 months prior to amending the AMA Agreement to allow the public to provide feedback on the impact of the proposed amendments on patient outcomes and the effective use of public resources.

If you do not believe that the money we relay to physicians affects the treatment and care, I challenge you on the pharmacists. The pharmacists have been attacked provincially and federally on their fees, to the point where it is actually economically unfeasible for them to even provide the influenza vaccinations. Does that worry you at all, that people are going to get reduced access to flu vaccination simply because pharmacists aren't being compensated enough?

Can you imagine the efficiencies we'd find with help from professionals who are on the front line? Can you imagine the innovative, cost-saving, efficient way of driving ideas that would come this way when we incorporate everyone in the process? This government didn't go out into Alberta's many communities and consult with physicians on this bill. You did not give our many health professionals the opportunity to weigh in on this.

I cannot see a reason why this amendment would not be supportable. The government goes on about how they've expanded transparency. I would challenge that you even know the definition of transparency and accountability. I know that those are big words.

Now, the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner hit the nail on the head with this amendment. If the government will not give us more time to study this bill, then we will propose an amendment that will allow for continuous consultation going forward. Will the government have to listen to the recommendations brought forward from the public? No, but they will all be on record. If 200 physicians write to the government to raise a concern and the government chooses to ignore them, that failure is on them.

I cannot express how important this amendment is. It is a way to fight for better quality services with the most cost-effective investments available. I'd like to thank all the members for listening to me speak about this very important amendment, and I hope they rise in support of this crucial change to Bill 24.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Dreesen: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again, I would like to compliment my colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner for introducing this amendment. I believe it's a very important amendment that's brought forward today. I think that the most important aspect of the amendment is that any compensation agreements should be disclosed publicly for the benefit of the taxpayer. I think that's a fundamental, paramount, important thing for all Albertans to hear, that we're actually having these discussions, that there are voices fighting for them and defending that critical, important issue. I hope that the members opposite actually support this amendment going forward when we vote on it.

The biggest issue, I think, to be coming from this is a matter of confidence. When you look at this government, whether it was the carbon tax that they brought in after a campaign went by in its entirety and they never even mentioned it or Bill 6, that, again, saw massive protests outside this building by farmers coming up and saying that they had never been consulted, the need for transparency on consultation is important. I think that for any government it's important but also for this NDP government, with two glaring issues that have happened in the past where better consultation would have made a way better outcome for Albertans. I urge the members opposite to consider this, that we need to strengthen consultation and to make public at least three months prior to amending an AMA agreement – the public feedback is a very simplistic but important amendment to Bill 24.

Broader issues from Bill 24. As mentioned earlier, I think that freedom is a very important aspect. Whether it's freedom of association of doctors and physicians being able to have a choice of whether to have the AMA representing them or not, I think it should remain a voluntary decision for these doctors and physicians. I wish that that was in Bill 24, but unfortunately it is not.

With a parallel to Bill 6, you had mandatory WCB coverage, that this NDP government thought was important. Again, rather than the voluntary nature of lots of farmers being able to have the private insurance that they chose, they're actually being forced to have WCB coverage, to which lots of farmers would say: okay; well, I'll just have two sets of insurance because I would prefer my private insurance, which has better rates for the workers. Again, it's this mandating nature of the NDP to have mandatory WCB coverage or mandatory AMA representation that I think does a disservice to Albertans.

I encourage again the members opposite to consider this amendment. There was a tremendous amount of work put into it by my good colleague down the way, and I hope that they can actually approve this amendment.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Are there any other speakers to the amendment? Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to the amendment that's being presented today by the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. This amendment, I believe, speaks to some of the sensibilities that we need to bring to the negotiating process that's been presented in Bill 24. We know that the main purpose of this bill is to formalize the relationship between the government and the AMA and that this bill ultimately creates a large negotiating body that is going to oversee negotiations between the Alberta government and the doctors, the physicians, of Alberta.

When we take a look at the historic role of the AMA, we can see that it offers and has offered residents, physicians, and medical students a wide variety of services and benefits that can help them with personal, professional, and financial needs. Alberta's physicians have principally been paid in Alberta through a fee-for-service model, in which doctors bill the government a predetermined fee for each service that they perform. The AMA has been the organization that has represented most but not all of the doctors in Alberta when negotiating that fee-for-service model. This amendment speaks to this process. This amendment, I believe, is worthy of support because it's trying to bring some balance to ensure that in something that's as critical as the health care of our province and the services that we provide for our citizens, they will have some capacity to understand and be consulted when these kinds of negotiations are going on.

Madam Chair, we know that this amendment speaks to the concept or the idea that they would like to see a three-month window where consultations could take place that would allow for public feedback on the impact of any proposed amendments or compensation matters within the agreement. This amendment speaks to this concern that the public needs to have some sort of say. It would be at least a three-month window prior to amending the AMA agreement, which would allow for public feedback and would allow for public consultation on the impact of the proposed compensation amendments on patient outcomes. They could have some feedback on how that's going to affect patient outcomes and the effectiveness of the use of the public resources that we have through this agreement.

Madam Chair, we know that every government, including this one, can sometimes struggle with consultation. It can create serious issues for Albertans when we don't consult in an appropriate fashion. I know that we've had this conversation in this House many times over the last three and a half years. I can remember having this same kind of discussion when it came to Bill 6. I was just speaking to a farmer in the last couple of weeks, and we were talking about Bill 6 and the imposition of OH and S and workers' compensation on the farmers of Alberta. He was still not happy with the consultative process that went through and believed that these were just imposed on him as a farmer. His words were that he'll never be able to hire another worker again simply because there wasn't a proper consultative process that actually listened to the farmers in the process.

I would encourage this government to consider this amendment, which would bring in a three-month period of consultation. I know that I've had many conversations. We in this House have all gone through the Electoral Boundaries Commission, and we realize that in the next set of elections there will be new boundaries. Should I be successful in my campaign to once again represent Drayton Valley-Devon, my boundaries will be changed to include portions of the county of Parkland.

I have sat down already with elements of the county of Parkland, with the mayor, Rod Shaigec, and I have had the opportunity to hear their concerns with regard to the coal phase-out. They were very concerned with the fact that decisions with regard to the coal phase-out were made without any consultation with the county of Parkland, one of those counties that is going to be primarily hit by those decisions, when they have Sundance, Keephills, and Genesee, all of these power plants in my constituency. I was able in my conversations with them to find out that it's the county of Parkland that will have a 25 to 30 per cent reduction in their tax base, hundreds of workers that will be without jobs.

They were talking about the problems that have been created because of a lack of volunteer firefighters now because they no longer have, well, the good-paying jobs that have been there through the coal. Now they're going to have to start hiring a professional firefighting force, all because there was a lack of appropriate consultation.

I would encourage this government to support this amendment because it will allow for some consultation and for the patients to be able to get involved in this process and be able to look at whether or not this is going to be a positive impact for the citizens of Alberta. Madam Speaker, "the Minister shall make available to the public any [changes] respecting compensation matters at least 3 months prior to amending." This will allow the public to consider any new compensation arrangements and to provide feedback on the impact these compensation arrangements will have on patient outcomes. Now, this amendment will allow Albertans to reflect on how addressing physician compensation will not only impact the proposed amendments but also whether it's an effective and efficient use of public resources.

Madam Speaker, we know that – I keep saying Speaker; I'm sorry, Madam Chair – we're going to be going into an election where there's going to be a $50 billion debt. This government, in my opinion, has made some very poor choices and decisions that have placed us in this position. We're going to have a debt-servicing cost of around $3 billion a year. The resources that we have as a province are going to have to be managed in a very, very careful and efficient way. This amendment speaks to this capacity to allow Albertans to be able to ensure that the resources that are going to be used in the Alberta government, in health care – if it's going to allow this to be done more efficiently and to be able to have the feedback to ensure that we have efficient use of these resources, then this is a good thing. This is a positive thing that we need to be able to consider doing.

The decisions made by government do affect the citizens of this province. None are more important than the decisions that can and will affect the health of our citizens. It's a reasonable position, I believe, Madam Chair, to have the minister "make available to the public any proposed amendments to the AMA Agreement respecting compensation matters" so that Albertans can have the opportunity, can provide the feedback that they need in an era when the fiscal realities of this province are going to be stretched to the limit.

I would ask that this House carefully consider this amendment, that they realize on both sides of the House that we are going to have an opportunity here with this amendment to make this piece of legislation better.

With those comments, Madam Chair, I would thank you for your time.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. As always, it's an honour to rise, and it's really a huge honour to rise on this particular amendment. We're always talking about transparency. It's probably one of the most used words in this Legislature on both sides of the House.

One of the things that I wanted to share was that this summer my uncle, who was a very, very dear man to us – he actually passed away this summer – had a fast-growing glioblastoma, and it was some of the best care I've ever seen in my life. He had actually gotten hurt and as a result went into the hospital, and as a result of the injury was diagnosed with the glioblastoma. We had just some of the best people with us at that time: the neurosurgeons, the neurologists, all of the people that were there, the nurses, the doctors, the whole thing. It was just such a privilege to see the level of care when he came in, especially in emergency. He was a lovely, lovely human being. I mean, they loved him on the floor. The cancer was growing very, very rapidly, so he had bits and pieces that he was able to retain, and then other days he was fully aware.

You see that level of quality care, especially in emergency, and if any of you have ever had an experience in emergency, especially when you're coming in on an ambulance or anything like that, it's pretty incredible in this province. It's pretty incredible once you're triaged and put through, the level of care that we receive here.

These discussions around this particular thing and why it's so important to me in particular is that when my uncle was going through this, that quality of care and the commitment to the people that were in there, that was like an actual phenomenon. These people don't even have to think about this; this is their job. These are incredible people. These are people that we should be uplifting and honouring for who they are. When you look at the membership of doctors – I mean, this is just for doctors in particular, but I'm sure that there will be other situations where other groups will be getting involved. But if you look at how we honour the people that take care of our loved ones, especially when they have limited days left on Earth and you know that, we want to make sure that when we're passing legislation of this magnitude, that 30 per cent isn't our number.

I guess the question, Madam Chair, that I have is: when we're thinking about this group of people, what was the process that they went through in order to make sure that they had access to be able to answer the questions on the survey? I'm not quite sure how the government got to the point of having, well, I guess it's 29.4 per cent, whatever the number is, of the membership to vote on becoming a part of this association. The reason I ask is, again, because all of us have been impacted. All of us have been there. All of us have had those doctors standing across from us giving worst-case scenarios in the kindest voices.

Four and a half years ago a very good friend of mine passed away from pancreatic cancer at the Tom Baker centre. Again, those doctors that were with us in the ICU were some of the strongest, most incredible people I've ever met, and they stood with him. We didn't realize we'd only have him for another hour or two. Like, we didn't know if he had days or what. Because of his brain power, he was totally lucid right up until he passed away. He was still giving out codes to his wife and the passwords for the computer and the bank statements and all that kind of stuff. Again, the incredible doctors that were there, that were taking us through this process, they were incredible people.

I don't think that we can take lightly the level of intervention of an association like this and feel safe to be able to pass legislation with only a small percentage of them buying into that legislation. That's why we've tried to refer it. That's why the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner is asking for time to be able to share information, which is, by rights for all Albertans, exactly what I'm assuming health care is all about, to be able to transparently share that information. But when you look at the numbers, I think the government would have a difficult time explaining this to the average Albertan as well.

Like I said, once we got the bill, I actually sent it out to all of the various mediclinics and doctors in our area. We have amazing doctors out in Chestermere, Rocky View, Langdon, and Strathmore. And, like I said, I only received a few responses back, but the responses that I got back were that they didn't know about it. That's concerning, don't you think? That's concerning from the perspective of the fact that we have this honourable and incredible group of people that we hold at this high level to be transparent, yet they're not equally represented.

Thank you.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, November 22, 2018

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Hon. members, as our friends and neighbours south of our border take a pause for Thanksgiving, let us reflect on the close relationship that our two nations sustain with each other. Let us not forget that reaching out to work in partnership with others only serves to make all of us better.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you 17 students from Oliver school. They're accompanied today by their teacher, Mrs. Jennifer Severson. I offer them my sincere apologies for missing the opportunity to take a photo with them earlier, but I'm very happy to have them here at the Legislature. I ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the members of the Assembly the Wildwood K to 9 school from Wildwood, Alberta. Wildwood is located 115 kilometres west of Edmonton, and the community is a 110-year-old Albertan farming community, originally established by black Canadian farmers. The school now has a total of 105 students and advertises itself as a small school with big ideas. They are accompanied by teacher Mrs. Gayle Kowalchuk and chaperone Mr. Curtis Schendel. I'd like everyone here today to extend to these students and staff the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly students from Harvest Baptist academy. The students are accompanied by their principal, Mr. Michael Reilly, as well as Ms Gail Schedlosky, one of their TAs. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups here today?

Seeing and hearing none, the hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce on your behalf some very special guests this afternoon, Jessica Dion and Deacon and Robert Barclay. Jessica will be a familiar face to many as she has worked in the LAO since the spring of 2014, first as a paralegal and administrative specialist with Parliamentary Counsel and since May of 2016 as executive assistant to the Clerk. Jessica's tireless work ethic and unwavering positivity have made her an esteemed teammate in the organization. I especially appreciated her help to me personally when I recently hosted the Canadian Women Parliamentarians. For many years Jessica has also been a key and dedicated volunteer at the Edmonton Folk Music Festival and looks forward to it every year.

With Jessica is her nephew Deacon Barclay, who is 12 years old and in grade 7 at William E. Hay secondary campus in Stettler. Deacon is also looking forward to joining his aunt and kookum in volunteering at the Edmonton Folk Fest. The family is very proud of his eagerness to contribute to the community. Deacon's father, Jessica's brother Robert Barclay, is also with us. He has been with Finning for 18 years, currently as a heavy equipment technician. Jessica continues to be inspired and motivated by her brother's courage in fighting adversity. Jessica, Deacon, and Robert are in the Speaker's gallery. They are standing, so please give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: May I also echo the welcome.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am so pleased today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly several fantastic councillors from the beautiful Rocky View county. I would ask that they rise as I say their names: Councillor Kim McKylor, division 2; Deputy Reeve Al Schule, division 4; Reeve Greg Boehlke, division 6, and his beautiful wife, Lynne Boehlke; and Councillor Daniel Henn, division 7. I'm so proud to work with these fantastic, hard-working folks who make life better for Albertans. Please give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you four guests from Calgary and one all the way from Chile. Olga Barceló and Henry Wearmouth are students at Mount Royal University. They're involved in the MRU New Democrats Club and the New Democratic Youth of Alberta, and they are both also student interns for Advanced Education and Education. Olga's cousin Gonzalo Barceló is visiting from Chile to learn English. He's a lawyer and has been involved in different student movements in Chile in recent years. I'd also like to recognize Olga's mother, also named Olga, and father, Claudio Barceló, who arrived in Canada over 40 years ago. Olga was a United Nations sponsored refugee, and now they own and operate a business at the Calgary airport. And they are all very much NDP supporters. I would like to thank my guests for joining us here today, and I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm excited to rise – Happy Grey Cup, everyone – to introduce several guests who are here to witness the Calgary Stampeders win the big game on Sunday. I'd ask that they please rise as I say their name. Jaclyn O'Shaughnessy is from Ottawa, Ontario. Joshua Smith is a podcast host from Hamilton, Ontario. I have Ryan Rollier from Calgary, and Jessica Strickland, Jen Hill, Dave Hill, Deb Strickland, and Vince Rulé, who are all from Calgary. To note as well, last Grey Cup Deb and Vince got engaged. Vince is a Redblacks fan, and Deb is a Stamps fan, so hopefully that engagement lasts after Sunday. I'd ask that the House give them a warm welcome. Go, Stamps, go.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hope you noticed that there was actually a green sweater up there as well.

The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 10 communications and public engagement interns seated in the members' gallery. They are Shawna King, Afton Doe, Luis Flores, Deanna Miyauchi, Samson Swan, Kristina Stocks, Kandice Kew, Rebecca Isbister, Meagan Houle, and Marina Bryan. These are talented individuals who have come from a variety of backgrounds. They started with the Alberta public service in July and are gaining practical hands-on experience in their chosen field of communications. I ask that they please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is National Housing Day, a day that shines a light on the importance of safe, affordable housing and the great people and organizations that work tirelessly to provide the right housing at the right time with the right supports. On behalf of my colleague the Minister of Seniors and Housing I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Legislature leaders in the housing community. Please stand as I read your name: Mark Hoosein, chief operating officer, Capital Region Housing; Raymond Swonek, chief executive officer, Greater Edmonton Foundation Seniors Housing; Irene Martin-Lindsay, executive director, Alberta Seniors Communities and Housing Association; Nancy Laing, executive director, Leduc Regional Housing Foundation; Anne Stevenson, president, Right at Home Housing Society; and Kevin Capowski, executive director, CMHC, Heartland Housing Foundation. They have already risen, so I ask my colleagues to give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other introductions, hon. members? The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

1:40

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If you would indulge me, I have two introductions. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the members of the Assembly the Whitecourt Classical Conversations group from Whitecourt, Alberta. They are a home-school group with a classical education focus that meet once a week. Their group of eight- to 16-year-olds have been learning about the Alberta political system and how it functions. I would like everyone here today to extend these students and their families the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, for my second introduction I'd like to introduce an incredible young man. Evan Jamieson has recently been selected as the youth representative for 4-H in Alberta. This summer Evan was a recipient of the 4-H Alberta Premier's award. This means that he will now spend the next year attending events across the country attesting to how amazing 4-H is. He has a passion for livestock judging and volunteers at many of the summer camps offered by 4-H. He now attends the University of Calgary, where he is studying marketing. Evan is here with his parents, Neil and Laurie, and his siblings Logan and Jordynn. I would now ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

National Housing Day

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize National Housing Day, a time to reflect on the challenges too many Canadians face in finding a safe and affordable place to live. Today is an opportunity to recognize how essential housing is. Having a place to call home is the foundation for a brighter future. All Albertans should have a safe, permanent, and affordable place to call home regardless of their income.

I am proud to be part of a government that recognizes this and which is working to provide people across the province with quality, affordable housing. This government has taken action by investing $1.2 billion in housing. While the members across the aisle are proposing massive tax cuts for the wealthy, this government is building and renewing over 4,100 new affordable housing units.

This government also created Alberta's first provincial affordable housing strategy. The strategy goes beyond the bricks and mortar of housing. It prioritizes people. It ensures that affordable housing focuses on their well-being, providing them with the tools that they need to succeed. I am proud to be part of a government that is committed to putting people first and helping families.

Mr. Speaker, today is an occasion to raise awareness of the importance of housing, to recognize all the work that is under way in Alberta and all the work that still needs to be done. I am proud to say that this government is declaring today National Housing Day in Alberta. This declaration reflects our government's commitment to Albertans' housing needs. I know this government will keep working with housing providers and Albertans to make sure everybody has a safe and affordable place to call home.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Holodomor Memorial Day

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This Saturday Canadians will remember one of the greatest crimes of the 20th century, the deliberate starvation of millions of Ukrainian men, women, and children in the famine and genocide of 1932-33. Those deaths resulted from the murderous policies of Joseph Stalin's Communist regime, which sought to crush Ukrainian resistance to collectivization by confiscating food and sealing off targeted regions. It remains one of the worst crimes against humanity ever perpetrated.

A decade ago our leader played a role in Canada becoming one of the first nations in the world to recognize the Ukrainian famine of 1932-33 as an act of genocide. Parliament unanimously passed a bill establishing the fourth Saturday in November as Ukrainian Famine and Genocide Memorial Day, or Holodomor, and he announced the government of Canada's official recognition of the genocidal nature of the Holodomor in the presence of then Ukrainian President Viktor Yushchenko during the 75th anniversary commemorations of the Holodomor on Parliament Hill.

Memory of the Holodomor was officially repressed by the Soviet Union, as it is to this day in the Russian Federation. Many in the western media knowingly co-operated in the shameful – shameful – cover-up of this crime. We should never forget how truth was sacrificed for political reasons in this campaign of lies. That is in part why Holodomor commemoration and education is so important. We must recover the memory of this unspeakable crime and prayerfully remember the millions of victims. For them, let us recall the words of the Byzantine liturgy for the dead. [Remarks in Ukrainian] Memory eternal.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

School Playgrounds

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Play is key to the physical, mental, intellectual, and social well-being of children, but right now in Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill there are almost 2,000 students that are attending schools without playgrounds. The parent associations at Kenneth D. Taylor, Our Lady of Grace, St. Hubert, and St. Bede schools have been doing a phenomenal job of raising money and planning new playgrounds for the schools their children attend. Kenneth D. Taylor and Our Lady of Grace are new schools, and the students there have never had a playground. While we've all heard that this is because the previous government denied playground funding to schools, that doesn't make any difference to kids missing out on the chance to improve their gross motor skills and their mental health at recess.

St. Hubert had their playground torn down two years ago because the structures were deemed unsafe, and St. Bede lost theirs for the same reason last summer. The St. Hubert Parent Council has been working tirelessly to raise money and are now about $8,000 away from their very modest $90,000 goal while St. Bede's parent council has already raised $30,000. I can only imagine how much fitter the Grit Fit kids at Our Lady of Grace will be when they can incorporate playground equipment into their program.

A good playground costs about $250,000, and this is an excellent investment in our future. Young people who are physically active can learn better and can manage their emotions better. They form stronger bonds with their peers and benefit from stronger social ties. B.C. recently took over funding of playgrounds from parents, recognizing that some communities have an advantage over others when it comes to fundraising. The money there is divided between new, accessible playgrounds and old structures that pose a risk. Kenneth D. Taylor school is holding a Christmas craft fair on Saturday. It's in Evanston, and it's to raise money for the playground, and I encourage everybody in Calgary to support their efforts. All students in Alberta should have access to playground equipment while they're at school.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Opioid Use

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thirty-four overdoses, three dead, and all in the first three weeks of November, all on the Blood reserve. Children are losing their parents, friends are losing friends, and the community is overwhelmed. The opioid epidemic is pushing the Blood tribe, EMS, police, and the administration to the breaking point. But, sadly, they're not alone. There are no typical opioid addicts. On average, more than one Albertan dies every day from an overdose. It is a crisis, and it is about time that we started treating it like the emergency that it is.

Declaring a province-wide public health emergency seems to be an obvious step, and I call again on the Minister of Health to do so immediately, to help the people on the Blood reserve and all over Alberta. A public health emergency is far more than just symbolic. It would give the government and front-line personnel in health care and elsewhere new tools, and it also likely results in federal funding, like B.C. found when they declared their public health emergency.

I'm glad to see that the supervised consumption sites have started operating around the province, and I encourage the provincial government to continue to roll these out. But I have to note that the UCP, and in particular their leader, has strongly opposed these even in the face of overwhelming evidence that they work. Earlier this year the Leader of the Opposition said, quote: helping addicts to inject poison into their bodies is not a solution to the problem of addiction. That is shocking, regressive, outdated, and damaging. As one person said on social media: if we applied this twisted logic to driving, we'd take seat belts and airbags out of cars because people would be driving too fast.

Finally, we need to recognize that not all addicts are street involved. Addiction treatment must be available through our family doctors and emergency rooms, and we need to expand treatment facilities throughout the province. We also need to expand opioid replacement therapy. This crisis is not going away fast enough. Albertans are dying, and we need action today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Guru Nanak

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the privilege today to speak about Guru Nanak, the first Sikh guru, or teacher. His teachings laid the foundation upon which the Sikh religion was formed. Guru Nanak travelled across South Asia and the Middle East to spread his teachings, advocating the existence of one God and teaching his followers that every human being can reach out to God through meditation and other pious practices. The Sikh faith emphasizes the importance of leading a spiritual life by serving others and leading an honest life. Some of the key practices of Sikhism are meditation and the recitation of Gurbani, the hymns composed by the gurus. The religion advocates overall justice and equality, and it urges its followers to serve mankind.

1:50

Guru Nanak's preachings came at a time when there were religious conflicts, but his teachings contributed to peace among the religious groups. He condemned slavery and racial discrimination and advocated justice and gender and social equality. Guru Nanak emphasized the importance of equality of people and contributed greatly to the empowerment of women in India, appealing to his followers to respect women and treat them as their equals. He taught that the Creator is deeply involved in what man is trying to achieve on Earth. He taught his ideals by serving as a living example to others on attaining salvation while focusing on the importance of family and community.

Finally, we have a wonderful memorial to Guru Nanak Dev Ji here in Edmonton at the University of Alberta hospital. On the fourth floor of the Mazankowski Heart Institute is the Guru Nanak Healing Garden, a 4,000-square-foot indoor garden space, a place of sunlight, quiet, and contemplation.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Statement by the Speaker

Accepting a Member's Word

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we start the clock, I'd like to offer a brief clarification. Yesterday several requests for clarifications were made under Standing Order 13(2) with respect to how disagreements as to facts are to be handled, particularly following my interventions. I want to be clear that it is not unparliamentary to say that a statement made by another member is incorrect, untrue, or false. What is not permitted is a suggestion that a member has intentionally misrepresented the truth or lied. You'll find the reference to this rule in paragraph 494 of Beauchesne's, sixth edition. Yesterday, in my desire to encourage members to be mindful of their tone in this place, I may have unintentionally caused confusion to members as to how this rule will be applied. I hope this further clarification resolves any remaining confusion. Like all of you, experience gives wisdom.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Carbon Levy

Mr. Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, this morning the Premier announced that drillers are now exempt from the carbon tax. I guess that's good news. At least the government is finally acknowledging that their carbon tax is damaging and that it is not getting pipelines built. The question then becomes: now that the government has acknowledged that, why are everyday Albertans still paying that carbon tax, why are small-business owners still paying that carbon tax, why are other job creators still paying that carbon tax, why are farmers still paying that carbon tax, why are charities still paying that carbon tax, and why are municipalities still paying that carbon tax? The list goes on and on. Why is that still being put on the people of Alberta when we now know without a doubt that it is a failure?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the members opposite earlier this week voted to encourage Canada to withdraw from the Paris climate accord, apparently because they don't think that climate change is an issue that we need to take action on. Experts around the world know that pricing carbon is, in fact, the most effective way to bring about a reduction in greenhouse gas emissions. In Alberta we have a made-in-Alberta plan. Part of that plan right from day one – the members opposite, I'm sure, are aware of it – focused on protecting trade-exposed industries, and this was part of that.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, that is a ridiculous comment from the Premier. In fact, during that debate this side of the House was clear that we thought that emissions had to be dealt with, but we were clear that her tax that she had brought on the people of Alberta, one, would not be high enough to be able to do that – that's why we don't think you should use a carbon tax – and, two, was just basically a tax grab.

But the point is – and I'll go back to my original question, that the Premier does not seem to want to answer. Now that she has removed the carbon tax from drillers, acknowledging that her tax is not getting social licence and pipelines built, acknowledging that it's damaging, why is she punishing everyday Albertans with her carbon tax? Why does she continue to go down this policy direction and hurt the very people that she represents?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member opposite knows, when we brought in a plan to price carbon, we did that with a progressive plan that included rebates to ensure that low- and middle-income families were protected as we move forward on this. I appreciate that members opposite disagree with the Nobel prize winning economists who say that, in fact, pricing carbon is the best way to address emissions. Of course, the members opposite have offered up absolutely no plans to address emissions. In fact, this is a matter that Albertans deserve leadership on.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, again the Premier is putting words into our mouths. Nobody said that we disagree with that. Also, let me clear about my earlier comments. I'm not saying that we want a higher carbon tax. My point is that they know their carbon tax can't even reduce emissions.

My question, though, to the Premier, who continues to dodge the question, is: why is she hurting the people she's representing, why is she hurting charities, why is she hurting the most vulnerable, why is she hurting fixed-income seniors, why is she causing trouble for our municipalities, and why does this Premier continue to go down this road when again today she's acknowledged, by removing the carbon tax from drillers, that her policy is a failure, is not getting pipelines built, and is hurting our economy?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Notwithstanding many of the challenges that we know our oil and gas industry is facing right now, the fact of the matter is that since we brought in the climate leadership plan, Alberta has led economic growth in this country, a year ago and this year, so in fact it hasn't had quite the impact that the members opposite suggest. We have put in a rebate system. We have put in grants to assist many of the organizations the member opposite refers to to bring down these emissions. But there is a cost in doing nothing, and the members opposite . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Support for Business

Mr. Barnes: Yesterday the federal Finance minister issued his fall economic update. It left a lot to be desired. While it did include capital cost writedowns, it failed to mention any plan for Alberta: nothing on the differential, nothing to speed up pipeline construction, nothing to make equalization payments fair, nothing to reduce the regulatory burden, and nothing to liberate free enterprise in our province, deep in recession. To the Premier: are you worried that your advocacy has been undermined by the mixed message your environment minister is sending on pipelines?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the question. Mr. Speaker, our advocacy has resulted in the accelerated capital cost allowance being put in place for Alberta's oil and gas industry. Now, they didn't go as far as we wanted, but we have not been shy about speaking up for the needs of this province, including the oil and gas sector, and we'll continue to do that.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, the NDP's managed decline of the Alberta economy has seen business after business flee for Texas. Sadly, this has resulted in well over 180,000 jobs lost, including more today. Sixty billion dollars of investment have already bolted, and more will follow. This has also resulted in Alberta families losing billions of their retirement savings as Alberta companies plummet in value. To the Premier: what are you doing to reduce regulation, attract investment, and make Alberta the free-enterprise capital that it was for decades?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, our economy is leading the country. It led the country last year in growth and will lead the country this year in growth. A number of programs our government has brought in: three different tax credit programs, that the business community asked for, in order to level the playing field. We've seen significant investments by a number of companies, including Imperial, that just announced a few weeks ago a $3.6 billion investment, using technology that Alberta Innovates helped to develop, to reduce their water usage by 25 per cent. There are a host of other companies like Amazon and Google that are investing here in Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, the NDP's friend and ally Justin Trudeau's fall economic update was bad news for Alberta families and communities, offering only empty words, a ballooning deficit, and doubling down on their commitment to do nothing to get the pipeline built. To the Premier: will you admit that your big-spending ways, failed social licence, our province quickly heading to a hundred billion in debt and billions more in annual interest expense have done nothing but destroy wealth, destroy jobs, and left Alberta families and communities much worse off?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding that much of the introduction there is not things that I can agree with, I do think that I can agree with the member opposite today about the level of frustration that all Albertans feel with respect to the fiscal update that we just witnessed. This morning I was in Calgary speaking with oil well drillers, and I understand that there are thousands of people in the streets of Calgary right now expressing their frustration. I have to say that I am with them. I feel their pain, and we agree with them. The differential is hurting Albertans, and it's hurting Canadians. We're working furiously to find solutions.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Northern Gateway Pipeline Project Cancellation

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers we would not be in today's oil differential situation if the Northern Gateway pipeline had not been cancelled. On June 17, 2013, the environment minister personally appeared at the National Energy Board hearing to argue against the approval of Northern Gateway. I just have a simple question.

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

Mrs. Aheer: To the Premier: after you were sworn in, did your government allow the Trudeau Liberals to cancel Northern Gateway because your environment minister recommended it?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When we first took government, Northern Gateway was already dead because the previous federal government and the previous Conservative government did not do their job. They did not follow the process, and they did not engage. The Leader of the Official Opposition was at the cabinet table when that process was done, so the question has to be asked to that leader, not to this side of the government. On this side we're standing up for energy, for pipeline access, and all the important jobs that come with it.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP environment minister was photographed attending a June 16, 2013, protest against Northern Gateway. In fact, proud Leapers Naomi Klein and Avi Lewis, cofounders and coauthors of the anti-Alberta, anti oil and gas Leap Manifesto, endorsed this minister, saying, she "is exactly the kind of person anyone [would] want in elected politics." To the minister of environment: do you still think that it was right to cancel a 525,000-barrels-per-day pipeline for Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister of environment has been defending working people in this province for years, and I stand behind her one hundred per cent. Let me say this. If you want to take a trip down memory lane, as recently as this summer the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake bragged about his work to elect the President of the United States. That is the very same President of the United States who is today celebrating Saudi Arabia for driving down the price of oil and encouraging them to do it even more. So my question is: is this the new UCP . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The environment minister has actively worked against the Northern Gateway pipeline. She appeared at the national board to oppose it with the Alberta Federation of Labour.

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

Mrs. Aheer: This is a group that to this day, Mr. Speaker, continues to oppose Trans Mountain, Energy East, Keystone XL, and several other pipelines. To the minister of environment: will she now acknowledge that it was wrong to attend these protests and to work against Northern Gateway, and moreover will she apologize to Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Leader of the Official Opposition was part of a government that oversaw the failure of Northern Gateway. Here's what the Federal Court of Appeal had to say about the quality of the work by the former Conservative government. This government's mistakes were "immense, massive in size and affecting so many diverse groups and geographic habitats in so many different ways." That is a level of incompetence that is really quite jaw-dropping. In the world of apologies my question is: do they have one to offer?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Rural High-speed Internet

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We learned at RMA this week that rural municipalities are still being consulted about rural Internet and broadband service in Alberta and that government has not provided a budget or a desperately needed implementation plan.

This is just a discussion without timelines or commitments and with plans based on old assumptions and outdated technology. Why is the government working against the success of its own rural Internet strategy by not investing in high-speed connectivity now?

The Speaker: The Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Malkinson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the Ministry of Service Alberta is currently in the process of developing a rural broadband strategy, which will of course be ready early in the new year. I've had several great conversations with many counties during RMA, and they are excited about what we are going to have to offer. I'd just ask members of the Legislature to stay tuned on a rural broadband strategy.

Ms McPherson: The fact is that they promised for this fall.

Yesterday's federal fiscal update didn't include anything for Alberta's energy industry, one of the traditional economic drivers for rural Alberta, so rural municipalities have to innovate and focus on other economic development opportunities, and that takes having all the pieces in place to attract new business. One of the critical elements for attracting new business is high-speed Internet. The provincial government has consulted with rural Alberta about this issue for at least a decade. Why aren't you committed to investing in this critical piece of infrastructure for rural Alberta economic development?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do agree with the member that connectivity and broadband are critically important. We know that. We've been working with municipalities. The Minister of Service Alberta is leading our government of Alberta response. I will tell the hon. member that a number of municipalities have received funding through our CARES programs to be engaging with different opportunities in broadband. There are examples of communities like Olds that have O-Net that have taken matters into their own hands. The municipalities know that they've got an incredible partner in our government and in our Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McPherson: Clearwater county's resolution at RMA states that "connecting to the [government] of Alberta's fibre optic infrastructure backbone (the SuperNet) is cost-prohibitive to ISPs and municipalities." The CRTC has mandated broadband Internet as an essential service at speeds of up to 50 megabits per second for downloads and 10 megabits per second for uploads with an unlimited data allowance by 2021. Rural Alberta needs Internet speed and accessibility. When can they expect both from the publicly owned SuperNet?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Malkinson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned, we're developing our rural broadband strategy. Also, I met with Clearwater county, you know, and I'm definitely excited about looking at the proposals that they're bringing forward. Our rural broadband strategy will be ready at the beginning of the new year, and of course as part of that we're working to make sure that Alberta's municipalities will have access to improved high-speed Internet access as well as federal funds. Also, a big part of that is making sure that our rural broadband strategy makes sure that our indigenous communities are not phased in last, that they're going to be a part of this new rural broadband strategy as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Reynolds-Alberta Museum Expansion Project

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Reynolds-Alberta Museum is an award-winning museum celebrating Alberta heritage, based in Wetaskiwin in my constituency. For years we have known that the Reynolds-Alberta Museum needed to expand its facilities for storage, restoration, and display of Alberta agriculture, transportation, and aviation artifacts. Can the Minister of Infrastructure tell us what will be included in the new facility?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. In Budget 2017 we allocated $35 million over three years for the expansion of the Reynolds-Alberta Museum. We're very excited about this project. There are right now approximately 400 artifacts that are being stored outside. We obviously have to take care of that issue. The new facility is going to be pretty special. It's over 9,000 square metres and will include a museum-quality indoor stage, protection and preservation of historic objects, and safe access to objects for their relocation. It's going to be a great project.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Hinkley: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year in August the Minister of Infrastructure provided an update on the construction schedule of this important facility. Can the minister update the House on what phase of building the facility is in? Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd be happy to provide an update on our work on the Reynolds so far. Two design firms have been selected at this point. One of them is Alberta-based HFKS Architects. The design process is under way right now. Construction is expected to begin in the spring of 2019. The targeted completion date is 2021. It's going to take a little bit of time to do this. We're preparing right now to issue a construction management request for proposals, an RFP, and we'll be posting that RFP in the near future on the Alberta purchasing connection website for anyone who's interested.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

2:10

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you. That's very encouraging. It is great that this expansion project will move ahead through a community benefits agreement as it will consult local, hire local, and have the community as partners every step of the way. Can the minister tell us the status of this community benefits agreement pilot?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, on September 19 our Premier announced a community benefits agreement pilot at the Building Trades convention, and we're pretty excited about this. We have spent some time out in the Wetaskiwin area, met with area leaders and indigenous leaders to talk about what that whole piece looks like. Now, one of the things that we're going to look at out there in that area is the local employment and skills development opportunities. We want to keep as much of that $35 million in the area as possible. We'll be hosting a job fair. We'll be engaging youth to build leadership capacity. We've got lots of opportunities out there for that, and we're going to be posting an RFP in the near future.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Energy Policies

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Lately we have learned that some in this Legislature are pushing for the government to impose price and production controls on the energy sector. Price-fixing and production control are anti free enterprise and, quite frankly, anti-Alberta. We need to ensure that free-enterprise principles are upheld and that competition is allowed. Will the Premier side with free enterprise against those who want to establish supply management price-fixing on our energy industry?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, from day one we have fought for what matters in this province, which is our energy industry, the good jobs that it brings, and pipeline access. Right now the price differential that we see is an example of why we need market access, something that previous governments failed to get for us when times were good and they should have been working on it. We're working very hard right now to get that access because we're on the side of Albertans.

Mr. Gill: Given, Mr. Speaker, that as a conservative it is obvious to me that there should be no arbitrary government imposed or requested price- and production-fixing – that would be illegal collusion if voluntary or supply management socialism if required – and given that the Tories have supported both of these positions on different days this week alone, will the government clearly state that there should be no production limits on oil in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we're exploring our options. We've been in constant contact with the industry, who do not have one definitive position themselves. There are many who say, "Let's curtail production," some who say, "Let the market go as it is." We have an opposition who says one thing. We have another party who says another. That's why we've struck an energy advisory group, an envoy committee. They're going to be talking to all those folks and seeing what kind of options we may have.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I wasn't surprised when the Premier called for the nationalization of the Keystone pipeline but I nearly spit out my coffee when I learned that my own party at that time was in bed with the NDP on this multibillion-dollar boondoggle and given that I recall that much of the Tory caucus didn't support this decision, Premier, will you finally admit that it was a bad decision to buy this pipeline?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, what I would admit is that we had previous governments, including a Prime Minister from Calgary, we had an opposition leader who was from Calgary as well, who did not stand up for Alberta when they had a chance federally. Now we're paying the price. We don't have pipeline access to tidewater in Canada, and we need that because we have a differential that's killing us. We need to work very hard on some options now to fix this mess that was given to us by previous governments. To be clear, on this side of the House we're on the side of the energy industry, on the side of Albertans, and the side of good jobs.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mobile Home Site Regulations

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is a crisis happening in mobile-home parks across Alberta. Owning a mobile home used to be a great option for affordable housing, but due to outdated legislation this is no longer the case. Skyrocketing pad rents at a park in my riding has led to extreme stress for residents, many of them seniors on fixed incomes, and the practice of economic eviction is common, where individuals are singled out for rent increases and citations in order to force them to move, often leaving behind their home at a loss. I know the ministry has been aware of this issue for years now but has chosen to do nothing. To the Minister of Service Alberta: why are you dragging your feet when people are losing their homes?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Malkinson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, our government is always available to Albertans who need assistance. That is why I have actually heard directly from mobile-home tenants in Calgary-East, and of course my ministry has been monitoring the situation closely. I will point out, of course, that in cases where the provincial government is unable to intervene, these matters can be pursued through the municipality as well. I would encourage any member in a mobile-home park to come out and reach out to either Service Alberta or to their local municipality.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish the province would stop downloading the responsibility for this onto municipalities.

Given that mobile-home owners face issues such as increased pad rent, disrepair of pads and parks, and being blocked by owners when attempting to sell their homes and given that currently the only option available to settle disputes is in the courts and given that the AUMA recommended allowing mobile-home owners to be able to access the residential tenancy dispute resolution service in 2016, will the minister commit to amending the Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act to allow residents to access the RTDRS?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Malkinson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, as you said, we're always looking at ways to support Albertans, including those who are in mobile-home parks. You know, when we took office, we had 44 years of Tory mismanagement to clean up, and that applied to every single ministry here. We have done a lot in three and a half years, and, yes, we are continuing to work for a second term, so we continue to fight hard because there is still more to do on this.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can tell you that the residents in my park do not feel supported by this government. Given that the Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act has not been reviewed in many years and given that it is clearly not serving the needs of mobile-home owners, to the point where they are losing their homes, will the minister commit to a full review of this act as soon as possible?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Malkinson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we are always looking to help Albertans in any way we can. I would encourage any member to write to my ministry, because we are looking for ways to help Albertans. I am always open to looking at changes, and, with that, I would of course encourage all those members to reach out to us, because we are a government that's here to make life better for Albertans.

Pipeline Development

Mr. Dreeshen: Mr. Speaker, as the environment minister spent years as a Greenpeace activist and even helped write a book called An Action a Day: Keeps Global Capitalism Away, I even wonder if she won a Pulitzer for that because we've seen billions of global investment capital leave Alberta over the last few years. Now, what direction did the environment minister give her department and cabinet regarding Northern Gateway and Kinder Morgan? Did she offer them lessons from the book she helped write against global investment in Alberta?

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake seems a little curious about the past and wants to talk about the past but doesn't seem too keen to talk about his own past, just two years ago. But let's just take a little trip down memory lane, where he spent 10 months in the United States campaigning for the current President. Now let's go through some of his chronology. On February 7, 2016, he campaigned in Manchester, New Hampshire; on February 8 he was in New Hampshire again. On the 18th he was in South Carolina. Now, on the 23rd of February the member campaigned in Houston, Texas, and that's when his candidate said that he wanted to punch a protester in the face and said that Black Lives Matter activists should be roughed up.

The Speaker: Folks, I must have repeated it many times more than you wished to hear. Please avoid these personal comments.

First supplemental.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While I was door-knocking in Edmonton-West Henday last night with my good friend and colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, people would question at the door why the environment minister on Tuesday in question period would drift into tangents regarding oil pipeline questions. I'd like to just ask a very simple question again. Why is the NDP trying to redefine their record as proponents of pipelines when for so long they were protesters of pipelines? Can the government explain why they continue to push their failed social licence scheme on Albertans rather than just admit it hasn't worked to get pipelines built?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, it is pretty rich, coming from that member, to be talking about this government's record, which is all he's allowed to ask questions about, because of what this government, since it's been the government, has done to build the pipelines that this province needs, to deal with the differential, to make sure that our oil sector prospers, and that people are working, unlike the other side. We could talk about their past before they were in the Official Opposition, but that is irrelevant. What's relevant is . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Dreeshen: Well, Mr. Speaker, maybe to a third minister. Given that for over three and a half years the NDP claimed that their social licence scheme would get us new pipelines and it obviously didn't – all their social licence scheme resulted in was an oil price differential crisis in Alberta – now to the minister of environment: does the NDP have any ideas to get pipelines built, like create a business environment where our oil industry could flourish, or is it just carbon taxes, more regulation, and nationalization of the means of production, something like their good friend and ally Justin Trudeau has already done with Kinder Morgan?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Oh, Mr. Speaker, I think I need to take the hon. member out for coffee and just review history a little bit here. What I will say is that our government has done more to get a pipeline to tidewater than previous governments in the past 20 years. Now, the hon. member's leader was in Ottawa as a federal cabinet minister for 10 years and couldn't get a single pipeline to tidewater. We have done more: standing up for our energy industry, modernizing our royalty review, and making it more profitable for companies to continue drilling when wells start to tail off. We've also brought in supports for our drillers and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Sharp Hills Wind Project

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Sharp Hills project, approved by the Alberta Utilities Commission for the Oyen area, will bring some of the largest turbines ever built into Canada. There will be 83 turbines. Each of them will stand 200 metres tall, which is taller than the Calgary Tower. Minister, these types of structures have never been tried in North America. In fact, it is my understanding that they're designed for ocean installation. Why was there not a requirement to test this type of technology here first?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is true that the province of Alberta has opened up the most lucrative renewables market in Canada and one of the best opportunities on the continent, creating over the life of our program 7,000 jobs and several billion dollars' worth of new investment. The fact of the matter is that these particular turbines were approved through both AUC processes and our updated Environment and Parks wildlife directives.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that local residents tell me that no impact studies on human effects are known on these types of structures and given that all studies will be postconstruction and given known issues with harmonic resonance on migratory and predatory bird kills in other wind farms, Minister, are you comfortable making these 83 towers a world-wide experiment on Albertans' health?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To start off with, there have been comprehensive peer review studies of effects of adjacent wind turbines on human health, and none of those – none of those – have been found to have any evidence. So let's ground our questions in fact. Second of all, all of our renewable projects are backed by AUC approvals and Environment and Parks wildlife directives.

Mr. Strankman: Given, Mr. Speaker, that the AUC deemed this project to be a moderate risk to raptors and waterfowl in the area and given that the AUC's report indicates there may be some migratory disturbance, Minister, is the risk to migratory birds, raptors, waterfowl, bats, and the unknown effect on wetland amphibians in addition to the unknown effects these untested towers have on Albertans' health a sufficient trade-off for the project?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated, there is no science to back the claim that the member has introduced into this House, that there are any effects on human health. That is simply not true. There is no scientific evidence to back that.

As concerns the wildlife directives, we updated all of those directives in anticipation of the fact that we would have new renewables investments, which we did. We know that no project is benign, but there are mitigation measures. We have ensured that our directives are the best on the continent.

Veterans' Licence Plate Eligibility

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, in April 2017 I asked the Minister of Service Alberta why my local constituent Neil Lowes and thousands of retired police officers from all across Alberta are being denied access to veterans' licence plates when the same plates are offered in many other provinces. To the minister: in the last 20 months since I first asked the question, have you reconsidered your position, or is the new minister just like the old minister?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Malkinson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member can see, I do not look like the old minister.

What I will say is that, of course, we are always open to consulting with Albertans on a variety of issues. As the member may be aware, we just introduced two new licence plates into Alberta supporting charitable causes, for both the Edmonton Oilers and the Calgary Flames. As a part of my ministry I would like to see more options for licence plates for Albertans and will definitely continue to work with the member on this.

Mr. Cooper: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that we do know that this minister has no problems making changes to the licence plate program – we've offered the same opportunity to Flames and Oilers fans, which is a good idea – I happen to know that my constituent, Mr. Lowes, came to my office yesterday and said: why is it that Flames fans can have access to plates but veterans of the RCMP can't have that same access?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Malkinson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, with our veterans' licence plates, any veteran who's served as a part of the Canadian Forces can get one of those plates. Some of the members that are veterans of our Canadian Forces also have had other careers with various police services, and those members can do that. Who is a veteran, for licence plate purposes, is worked out with the Legions in the province and throughout Canada. I will say that if he is a veteran who served in the military, he can get a plate.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Cooper: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is great news.

Given the fact that the Legion has already endorsed the use of veterans' plates for retired RCMP officers and given that the RCMP is already supportive of this plan, it seems to me that the only barrier is the minister. Can the minister please explain to us why retired police officers and retired RCMP officers that have served overseas can have access to these plates but those that have served at home don't have the same access?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Malkinson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I said in an earlier answer, we, of course, are aware of the issue, and I'm willing to continue to work with the member on this particular issue.

As the Minister of Service Alberta we have had many licence plate options, including the Flames, which have had great success. When it comes to licence plates, the Support Our Troops plates as well have been a very popular option, where Albertans who are not veterans can show their support for veterans by buying one of those Support Our Troops plates.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Flood Damage Mitigation

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been more than five years since the devastating floods struck southern Alberta. The constituency of Calgary-Elbow was hit especially hard. But in the past five years no significant flood mitigation has been built to protect my constituents or the core business district of downtown Calgary. To the Minister of Transportation. My constituents are extremely frustrated by the lack of progress on the Springbank off-stream reservoir. They haven't heard an update since the federal regulator asked your department for more information this summer. Is that project still on track to protect downtown Calgary by the spring of 2022?

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, we do keep in regular contact with the groups in Calgary that are fighting for flood protection, that were badly affected. We don't want to see that ever happen again. Calgary, of course, downtown Calgary in particular, is the nerve centre of the Alberta economy. There are hundreds, in fact thousands of homes that are at risk for flooding, and our project is dedicated to make sure that that doesn't happen. We are working through the regulatory process very systematically and rigorously because we do not want to be sent back to the starting post as we've seen in the case of the federal government . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. Thank you. Hon. member, you exceeded the time. I passed the motion. Please, when I acknowledge you, you'll stand but not before. Okay? Thank you.

First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the next answer I would hope the minister could please give us an update on the timeline for this project. Given that this past summer the federal environment regulator asked your department to provide more information and given that part of their request was a call for further consultation with indigenous groups, again to the Minister of Transportation: when will your government provide a response to the regulator, and can you assure me that you are conducting extensive two-way consultations with all indigenous peoples impacted by this very important project?

The Speaker: Now, hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Now, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Mason: I can assure the hon. member that we are working diligently through the hundreds of questions that we've been asked to answer as part of the regulatory process, and we intend to meet our self-imposed deadline of the end of this year to answer all of those questions. We are systematically meeting with indigenous groups that are affected or have a historical claim to this territory. We have reviewed the court decisions with respect to TMX to make sure we are in full compliance with respect to indigenous consultation requirements that the court has set, and we are confident that we are going to get this done, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, another important aspect of managing flood risk is flood mapping. Given that the Minister of Municipal Affairs has been working with Environment to create new flood maps and given that the floodway development regulation is still a work-in-progress and given that developing this regulation without a full understanding of mitigated flows could devastate property values, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: when can Albertans expect to see updated flood hazard maps, and will you commit to doing this in the right order, mitigate, then map, then regulate?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I appreciate his advocacy on this issue. It has been a complicated and comprehensive review and mapping process, and we do feel that having in hand the most information possible to make this decision is the best way forward. To do this regulation, as the member stated, to have that there in the right way and the right process and the right order I think is what we want to do, and we intend to do that. We have put a lot of money into Calgary for mitigation in other aspects. AUMA and my department do a lot of work down there with the emergency management professionals. As I did state, we will get this done in the right order.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Airdrie.

Urban Crime Rates

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Crime rates are increasing right across this province. In fact, 7 out of 10 of the cities in Alberta have seen the largest increase, with Edmonton ranking close to 13. We've seen an increase of over 71 per cent in break and enters in Edmonton. I would like to know if the minister has had any conversations with city officials at the city of Edmonton and what they've had to say.

The Speaker: The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Protecting Albertans' safety and providing a fair and efficient system is one of the top priorities of this government. That's why we provide half a billion dollars to our forces across this province. That is why we have taken steps to hire additional officers. That is why we have taken steps to hire additional prosecutors. I want to assure all Albertans that we remain committed to providing all resources to our forces to make sure that . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Pitt: Okay, Mr. Speaker. Crime rates are going up in the city of Calgary as well. Break and enters are up 30 per cent, robberies are up 20 per cent, and vehicle thefts are up 16 per cent just in the last year. Albertans are concerned about their safety and security. Has the minister met with officials in the city of Calgary about this issue, and what have they had to say?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've said, keeping our communities, keeping our cities safe is a top priority for our government. That is why we've worked with our police and all relevant partners to combat crime, and every year, as I said, we invest half a billion dollars. We have made improvements that will allow our officers to spend more time on the streets fighting crime instead of sitting at the desk and doing paperwork. That's why additional people were hired, so they can do that work and more officers will be on the ground to tackle crime.

Thank you.

Mrs. Pitt: Okay, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure if the minister has been talking to anybody in our major cities about the rising crime rates. Minister, 12 to 15 cars are stolen in Edmonton each and every day, and many of them are never recovered. Thefts from vehicles are up 69 per cent under this NDP's watch. Minister, what is this government doing to help the victims of property crime?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will just list a few things that we have done. We have hired 59 additional RCMP officers, we have hired 20 new Crown prosecutors, 40 new RCMP civilian personnel, four new provincial court judges, 55 new court clerks, 30 new bail clerks, and the UCP has voted against all these improvements. It's rich coming from them that we have not done anything. We are working with our partners to address crime issues.

Provincial Fiscal Sustainability

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary budget office recently said that either permanent tax increases or spending reductions of 2.3 per cent of GDP, upward of $7.5 billion, are needed for fiscal sustainability and responsibility in Alberta. Since then, the floor fell out of oil revenues. Keystone XL is delayed yet again, and the minister has assured that his up, up, up path to balance is just around the next corner. To the Minister of Finance:

when will the government acknowledge that its so-called path to balance is leading Albertans straight off the fiscal cliff?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The path to balance is something we talk about in the year 2023-2024, and we've already reduced the deficit by $3 billion. We have already put effort into diversification so that we can see more revenue streams other than the oil and gas revenue stream, which since the end of 2014 has had a disastrous drop. We have been coming through the recession. We grew the most last year. We're going to continue moving forward and balance in 2023.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, given that a strong, diversified economy is impossible if businesses lack the confidence to invest and create jobs and given that this government's approach to cost containment amounts to ordering a larger container of red ink and given that its incompetence on the pipeline – or should I say pipelines? – file is sadly and swiftly turning much-needed resource revenues into but a distant memory, again to the minister: does the government not recognize that the longer they ignore business fundamentals, the more damage they do to investor and business confidence in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What we have seen is billions of dollars of new investment come into the province because our Premier and our government are building on the legacy of former Premier Peter Lougheed, investing in energy upgrading and value-added to a very critical sector. Earlier this week the Premier announced that we are doubling our second round of petrochemical upgrading, which can attract up to $20 billion worth of activity. We know that we have the right fundamentals. Alberta continues to remain the best province in the country to invest, to do business, to raise a family. We have the lowest taxes, and we . . .

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, this minister is obviously not talking to the same people I am in downtown Calgary. Given that ignoring this problem will not make it go away and given that Albertans have no faith that this tax-and-spend government could bear to let up on either of those things, again to the minister. Please be honest with Albertans, Alberta businesses, and investors and tell them which taxes this government will be hiking to close the fiscal gap.

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, you know, we have no sales tax in Alberta. We have no payroll tax in Alberta, no health care premiums in Alberta. Alberta is a great place to do business, and that was the message that the Leader of the Opposition took to India when he was there. In fact, the leader in India said that Alberta is competitive, has low taxes, and low power prices. Why doesn't that member listen to his leader?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister of environment in 2013 when she was opposing Northern Gateway stated that, quote, we submit that there is no reliable evidence of the significant economic benefits from Northern Gateway, unquote, has this antipipeline opinion informed NDP policy on pipelines?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the opposition wants to make a great deal about actions that people took when they were not part of this government, when they were working for another employer. That has no relevance. This government is committed to finishing the pipeline to make sure we have access to tidewater. The hon. member's leader had 10 years in Ottawa to do exactly that, and he botched it. They made no progress in getting pipelines to tidewater, and the Supreme Court kicked out the Northern Gateway file because of the incompetence of that leader and his government.

The Speaker: Hon. member, again, on government policy.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It might have been because this minister was actively opposing pipelines.

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order.

Mrs. Aheer: Why did the environment minister state in 2013 that there is no reliable evidence of a functioning free market to ensure the health of the business in the producers of western Canadian energy? Unquote. I was just curious, Mr. Speaker: in her capacity as the environment minister does she still agree with this antimarket activism? Yes or no?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I want to speak on behalf of all members of this government that we have worked very hard to make sure that we have access for Alberta's petroleum resources to tidewater, and any suggestion to the contrary is completely false. It's clear, however, that the leader of that party, when he was a cabinet minister in Ottawa, absolutely failed to do that when he was in a position to do it. If he can't do it when he's a federal minister, he sure can't do it here.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, does the environment minister still believe that 525,000 barrels per day does not equate to economic benefit?

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member persists in asking ministers on this side what their beliefs are, were, whatever, instead of accepting the fact that this government's actions prove that its intent has always been to get access to tidewater for Alberta's resources and that we worked resolutely, consistently throughout our mandate to do that, and that is what we're going to do in the second mandate as well.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've had a request for unanimous consent to introduce some guests.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly an English language learner class from Dickinsfield Amity House, a drop-in centre located in the heart of Edmonton-Decore. Today with us we have over 20 ELL students who come from all over the world and have decided to settle in the wonderful ridings of not only Edmonton-Decore but even Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. Along with the students we also have Frieda Maaskant, Bertha Groot, Pat

Barnum, and they are joined by their outstanding teacher, Louisa Bruinsma, who has been an integral part of the success of this program. The Minister of Economic Development and Trade and I were also privileged enough to visit their classes last week to talk about the Legislature and our lives as MLAs. They were eager to learn how our government works and participated with great interest and enthusiasm during both our visits. Unfortunately, they weren't able to stay, but I would still ask if the House would provide the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm not sure we need the 30. We will have 15 seconds.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Solar Energy Programs

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year I spoke on the value of LED light bulbs and energy efficiency. The installation of energy-efficient products resulted in $330 million in energy savings for Alberta families. Thousands of jobs were created, and Alberta's economy grew by almost half a billion dollars.

Today I want to talk about solar energy. Albertans save more than $3 on every dollar invested in energy efficiency. Albertans have reduced emissions equivalent to taking three-quarters of a million cars off the road for a year. Millions of tonnes of greenhouse gas emissions have been avoided.

Who is at the forefront of the solar economy? It's farmers, indigenous people, businesses, municipalities, and homeowners. Today twice as many farmers applied for solar panel energy programs than could be offered. Many farmers in my constituency wish they would have been doing so many years ago. Indigenous communities continue to expand their installations. Each of the four nations in my constituency is saving money and investing it in social programs, housing, and infrastructure. Municipalities are saving millions on rinks, recreation centres, administration buildings, and schools. Some 1,500 Alberta businesses, nonprofits, and institutions are investing in energy efficiency, saving money that can be invested in other areas. Alberta businesses are saving millions in energy costs, reducing greenhouse gas emissions, and being competitive in foreign markets.

Solar panels are becoming more efficient, and storage capabilities are improving, which is why I am so pleased that with the help of Energy Efficiency Alberta I was able to install solar panels on my home.

Exaggerations about the carbon levy costing $5,000 per family have proven false. We can all do our part to increase energy efficiency, and the work of the climate leadership plan and today's announcement on community recreation generation programs make it that much easier.

Thank you.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table five copies of the report of the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship that summarizes the presentations received by the committee at its public meeting on October 23, 2018. Additional copies of the report are available through the committee office and online.

Thank you very much.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give notice pursuant to Standing Order 34(3) that I'm advising the House that on the next available Monday Written Question 5 will be accepted and the written question will be dealt with. Additionally, motions for returns 13, 14, 15 and 16 will be accepted, and Motion for Return 17 will be dealt with.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the five requisite copies of an article by Ricardo Acuña entitled Albertans Hardly Noticed the Province Untangled an Administrative Mess that Plagued Those with Disabilities for Decades, which was published in the Vue on November 14, 2018. The article outlines some of the government's fantastic work in improving and reforming AISH.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's north is a resourceful region and plays a significant role in building a strong and resilient economy. Since 1963 the Northern Alberta Development Council has been championing the cause of Alberta's northern economies and communities, providing valuable advice. Pursuant to section 8 of the Northern Alberta Development Council Act I'd like to table five copies of the NADC 2017-18 annual report. I encourage all members to learn more about the activities and initiatives undertaken by the council over the past fiscal year.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got four tablings. The first one is a news release from CN Rail, back from June 12, saying that they're investing $320 million to expand and strengthen Alberta's rail infrastructure.

The next three are for my colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View. The first one is two endorsements from the founders of the Leap Manifesto, Avi Lewis and Naomi Klein, for the environment minister.

The second one is a copy of a brochure promoting an antipipeline rally as well as a tweet by the minister of the environment saying that she was heading to the rally.

The third one is a partial transcript of the Alberta Federation of Labour's oral argument against the Northern Gateway pipeline in which the minister of environment is introduced as well as an image of that event.

Thank you.

2:50

The Speaker: Any others, hon. members?

I think I had a tabling here, did I not? I have. I'm tabling today five copies of the 2017-2018 annual report of the Child and Youth Advocate for the period April 1 to March 31, 2018, as per the Child and Youth Advocate Act.

Hon. members, we didn't hit the record of seven from yesterday, but we certainly got to four as I understand it. I believe the first point of order is from the Government House Leader. Is that correct?

Point of Order

Questions about a Previous Responsibility

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Several times today members opposite – in my first point of order I will reference the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View – asked questions about the opinion of the environment minister and actions that she had taken before she was a member of the government, before she was an MLA, when she was an employee, in this case, of the Alberta Federation of Labour and speaking on their behalf. It's been clear – and we made this point of order yesterday, and we'll keep making this point of order as long as the opposition persists in attempting to ask questions about things that are not related to government policy.

Mr. Speaker, it's absolutely clear, as I said in answer to some of the questions, that this government has been very consistent with respect to its approach to the energy industry and its support of that industry and its advocacy for access to tidewater for the industry. Actions have been ongoing and consistent throughout the term of this government, yet the opposition persists in trying to find things in the past where other members had expressed opinions that have nothing to do with government policy. Of course, they don't have to look very far. They can look in the mirror, and they can see examples of where their own leader has adopted positions now that he is Leader of the Official Opposition that are at variance with his positions before he was elected or even at variance with his positions when he was a member of the Conservative caucus in Ottawa.

It's clear, and I just want to read a ruling by yourself, Mr. Speaker. Just as recently as, why, yesterday you stated the following:

Based upon the information, the guidelines that we're all familiar with, the government must have the administrative competence that is related to the point. Issues outside the influence of the government ought not to be considered. Read paragraph 409 of Beauchesne's and page 509 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice. I do want to give as much latitude in asking questions and providing answers, but I would again ask that you ensure [that] the focus is clearly on government policy.

You've heard me say today a couple of times that indeed you ought to be staying away, all of the members in this place, from questions that are purely of a personal nature. I recognize that that is not entirely a science, but I think the expectation of myself and this House generally is that personal comments ought to not become a part of the question. They need [to] be focused on policy. In this particular instance I would think and I know that the opposition . . . will no doubt be conscious of that going into the future. In this particular instance there probably was a point of order, but I think the resolution is more on a go-forward basis.

Well, Mr. Speaker, here we are on a go-forward basis, and the opposition is still persisting in ignoring the track record of the government and trying to throw dust in the eyes of voters about what this government's actual record is. I consider that to be, you know, not the highest standard of probity and ethics, but certainly it is as well, in the way they're going about it, contrary to the rules of question period. They're abusing question period in order to create a misconception upon the part of Albertans about what this government is doing. It's very clear, very transparent what their intent is, and I think it is beneath them and it is beneath this House.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me first start off with: this side of the House is happy to talk about this government's record any time. It's a dismal record, and we're quite happy to highlight it.

A couple of things. First, the hon. Government House Leader points out that questions should be about government policy or something within the capacity of the administrative role or the competency of the government. He then references the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View's question, which I believe is the point of order that we are on. Mr. Speaker, I have her notes. You have the benefit of the Blues, so you will know if she spoke outside of those notes in the question. I would not know. There's no way I can remember every word, obviously. But her first question was: "A simple question to the Premier. After you were sworn in, did your government allow the Trudeau Liberals to cancel Northern Gateway because your environment minister recommended it?" The cancellation of Northern Gateway is certainly something to do with this government. The environment minister is certainly something to do with this government. Certainly, it even references when they were sworn in. I'm certain the Government House Leader wouldn't try to say that when they were sworn in, they weren't the government.

The second question, when the next point of order was called, to the minister of environment: does she still think it was right to cancel a 525,000 barrel-per-day pipeline for Alberta? Mr. Speaker, as you know, because you granted just recently an emergency debate in this Assembly, I believe, actually, yesterday because of the great crisis that we're facing due to the differential crisis, the Northern Gateway has a significant impact on that crisis, both the fact that it was cancelled without a protest from this government – in fact, they supported it; there's lots of evidence on the record on that while they were in government and before they were in government and then went forward – and then, going forward, on how we're going to be able to solve the differential crisis. Of course, we're still going to be able to need pipelines, and Northern Gateway is a very relevant part of the conversation that we are currently facing.

I don't know if it is the intention of the Government House Leader to deal with the other separate questions and separate points of order, which I'm happy to deal with. I don't know if that's the intention. If not, I'll speak to the other questions. I'm not sure if . . .

The Speaker: I'm dealing with one.

Mr. Nixon: One at a time. Perfect. Well, then, in regard to those two, those are two clear questions to deal with government policy.

I will point out one other irony. In each of those questions the government then got up and spent their entire answer referring to the Leader of the Opposition in those questions, his past record inside the House of Commons, past policies, most of it, I would say, inaccurate. But that's fine. That's what they brought forward. So it is a little bit ironic that on one hand they say: we don't want to answer for our record and the things that we say, but we want everybody else in this Chamber to answer for them.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is what I read from the Blues:

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers we would not be in today's oil differential situation if the Northern Gateway pipeline had not been cancelled. On June 17, 2013, the environment minister personally appeared at the National Energy Board hearing to argue against the approval of Northern Gateway. I just have a simple question.

There was a point of order by the Government House Leader.

To the Premier: after you were sworn in, did your government allow the Trudeau Liberals to cancel Northern Gateway because your environment minister recommended it?

I believe that both sides of the House – I talked about it yesterday, and I'll talk about it again today – still reference their arguments around individual past action. In this particular instance I determined that there was a question that was in order, and it was a question that was specifically asked to the Premier.

Number 2. The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: I'll withdraw, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Give me a minute to read the Blues if I could.

Mr. Mason: Sure.

The Speaker: Number 2 is withdrawn.

Number 3. No?

Mr. Mason: I've lost track, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Yesterday I lost track.

How about number 4?

Mr. Mason: I didn't make a fourth.

The Speaker: My notes indicate it was the Government House Leader who raised the point of order. Withdrawn?

Mr. Mason: I'm done, Mr. Speaker. I have no more points of order to argue.

The Speaker: Okay.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 26

An Act to Combat Poverty and Fight for Albertans with Disabilities

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 26, An Act to Combat Poverty and Fight for Albertans with Disabilities.

This is a truly historic bill that, if passed, will index benefit rates to help a quarter of a million Albertans. This legislation fights poverty, protects people with disabilities' right to dignity, and brings greater stability to people's lives. It also corrects a fundamental and historic lack of fairness for persons with disabilities, low-income Albertans, and low-income seniors, whose supports seldom kept pace with inflation. This bill will forever change how social programs are delivered in this province, and we are very proud to bring it forward.

But I want to be clear that we have not done this alone. I want to recognize the two cosponsors of this legislation, the MLA for St. Albert and the MLA for Lethbridge-East. Both MLAs along with many of my colleagues have been strong advocates on these issues for a long time. Madam Speaker, I also want to thank the thousands of self-advocates, antipoverty advocates, seniors, persons with disabilities, families, and community leaders who have also advocated for these changes. Self-advocates and community leaders like Ian Young, Mark Chrichton, Mary Salvani, Sandra DeBruin, Leah McRorie, Amy Park, Les Landry, just to name a few; and groups like Disability Action Hall in Calgary, Vibrant Communities Calgary, EndPoverty Edmonton, Edmonton Social Planning Council, Inclusion Alberta, Public Interest Alberta, the Self Advocacy Federation, Momentum, the YWCA, the Calgary Housing Company, United Way, women's centres, just to name a few.

For many years these and many other individuals and groups have created petitions, organized town halls and meetings, made phone calls, and written letters calling for this change. To these advocates and leaders I want to say: your work has not been in vain. Unlike the previous government, our government heard you and is taking action. It is because of your commitment and dedication that our bill is here today. So thank you for continuing to push, for telling your stories, and for advocating for all Albertans. Please know that our government is with you and fighting for you.

Madam Speaker, AISH, services for low-income Albertans, and supports for seniors have been a priority for our government since day one. When times got tough, instead of making reckless cuts like the members opposite propose, we ensured that our public services were protected and strengthened. We added $182 million in funding to AISH to ensure that Albertans who needed support could get it and weren't turned away. We have protected supports for seniors and invested in health care. We took action to fight poverty and help low-income families through our investment in the Alberta child benefit, a $25 million increase to FCSS, an increase to the minimum wage, and a $1.2 billion investment in affordable housing, and we are not done fighting. We have always committed to looking at the benefit levels, as the province's finances permit, and through this bill we are keeping that promise.

As our province is coming out of the worst recession in generations, we are taking action to make sure we are not leaving people behind. We are ensuring that this recovery reaches all Albertans. For too long Albertans with disabilities, Albertans living on low incomes, and seniors have had to beg governments for increases to their supports as the cost of living rises. They have been subjected to politics, they have been asked to prove their need again and again, they have been blamed for the situation they find themselves in, and they have been stigmatized for being on social supports. I'm proud to say that this bill puts an end to all that.

This bill will establish new, increased rates for AISH and income support as of January 1. Most importantly, this bill will take politics out of decision-making by establishing annual indexing of benefits for AISH, income support, and seniors' benefits. This bill will support a quarter of a million Albertans who need assistance covering their basic needs like groceries and rent.

Madam Speaker, I do want to highlight that indexing will be protected in the act, which means that no government will be able to cut rates behind closed doors. This will stabilize and protect supports so that they are tied to the cost of living and will ensure predictability so that individuals and families can plan for their future.

Madam Speaker, this change is based on the advocacy of many Albertans, Albertans like Amber Cannon, an AISH recipient, who said, and I quote: this will help me eat breakfast in the morning. End quote. Or Mark Chrichton, who said, and I quote: indexing might mean having better food, paying all your bills, living a bit more comfortably. End quote. Or Ian Young, who said, and I quote: indexing will take away a bit of the desperation of managing in the face of yearly inflation; I'm glad to see that the Premier recognized this voice and acknowledged the need of Albertans on AISH; being heard is one thing; having your concerns addressed is gratifying. End quote. Amber, Mark, and Ian believe that all people deserve dignity and fairness, and I couldn't agree more.

That is why we are indexing these supports and doing what we are doing instead of doing what the opposition would want us to do, cuts and more cuts. And we all know that that is what they would do because they have said as much, like the MLA for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, who said that the cuts are, quote, going to hurt; or the Member for Calgary-Hays, who criticized supports for people with disabilities when he said that government has, quote, a whole variety of giveaways from light bulbs to better health care for disabled persons; or the Leader of the Official Opposition, who said that the spending level should be in line with B.C., which means another $500 cut per month to AISH. We think this is the wrong thing to do. We believe these 250,000 Albertans deserve better.

We believe that we need to put politics aside and do what is right for Albertans. That is why, in addition to indexing, we are proposing other changes. For instance, supplemental and personal benefits associated with these programs will also be indexed. Families with children will see added supports. The asset limit will be changed to ensure that Albertans don't need to jump through multiple hoops to get the supports they need. The asset limit for the AISH child allowance will increase from $3,000 to $100,000. In other words, once you qualify for AISH, you qualify for the child benefit, too. This will allow people to get access to supports for their children like the child care benefit or an emergency benefit for an unforeseen or individual-specific situation. The asset test for the AISH personal benefit will also increase from $3,000 to $5,000, so they don't have to deplete everything to get those benefits.

Madam Speaker, all of the changes in this bill follow a commitment of our government since day one: Nothing about Us without Us. We have heard from Albertans that these changes are needed and long overdue. We have heard their stories. We believe their stories are real, their challenges are real, and their pain is real. I can tell you with absolute certainty that cuts are not what Albertans want. They want stability so they can live their lives and care for their families, they want action to fight poverty, they want investment in Albertans to support increased opportunity in our communities, and this is what this bill is about. This is why we are so proud to bring this forward.

But I also want to be very clear. We know that there is more work to do, and we are committed to undertaking that work. For instance, the AISH program, which was established in 1979, uses the term "severely handicapped." Quite frankly, Albertans no longer use this term. We will address their concern with the name of the program and work with them to replace this with a more suitable name. We will work with all concerned to look at the cohabitating partner policy and explore what type of income should be exempt and the exemption levels.

This bill is an important step forward, but there is more to do with the issues I outlined and other issues, and we will do that. We will continue listening to Albertans and work collaboratively with them to make life better for Albertans. Thank you once again to everyone who shared their feedback to make this bill possible.

I want to end my comments with a Nelson Mandela quote that was shared with me by Franco Savoia from Vibrant Communities Calgary. Quote: like slavery and apartheid, poverty is not natural; it is man-made, and it can be overcome and eradicated by the actions of human beings. End quote. Madam Speaker, we all have Albertans living in poverty in our communities and in our constituencies. As their representatives we can and must take action to end poverty, and we know Bill 26 is an important step in making this a reality.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. I hope all my colleagues will speak in support of this bill and in support of all those thousands of Albertans whose lives will be positively impacted by this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Minister.

I'll now recognize the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm very happy to rise today to speak to Bill 26, An Act to Combat Poverty and Fight for Albertans with Disabilities. Hopefully, the minister will be able to answer a couple of questions that I still have on it.

There are thousands of Albertans living on AISH, income supports, receiving seniors' benefits and other supports that have been long awaiting the indexing of their programs to CPI. You know, when I first read the bill and was looking at this speech, it reminded me of, I believe it was a year and a half ago or two years ago, when I tabled a letter in the Chamber that was brought to me by two seniors from Willingdon that drove all the way to my office in St. Paul to deliver a letter along with a quarter, which summed up the total increase to their seniors' benefit. Actually, it was a penny over, because they'd each received a 1 cent per month increase to their seniors' benefit, so they rounded it up to a quarter just to make it easier for me to bring it to the House.

I'm also reminded of the question that I had to the minister, I believe, during the spring session on the clawback formula. When it comes to AISH payments, the only ones that are really affected are seniors, who get clawed back because of their seniors' benefits. It's not the same as if there were a cohabiter that had a job that was bringing in that much money. They wouldn't be clawed back, but because it was a seniors' benefit, it would be. So if you could clarify that that has been changed in this bill, that would be really appreciated.

Also, interestingly enough, on Tuesday morning the leader of our party along with myself and a lot of our colleagues went down to tour Hope Mission in downtown Edmonton, and we stayed around there and helped serve lunch to a bunch of homeless people there. During the tour we talked about one of the old buildings that they use for housing the homeless there, the Jamieson building.

They have been given permission to tear down that building and build a new facility in two phases. The first phase is about $15 million, and they're having a hard time raising the funds to get that done. The city of Edmonton isn't being very helpful. But at the same time we look at the recent announcement by the government of over $1 billion to build the west line LRT. I just find it interesting that we seem to really have our priorities a little bit skewed when it comes to that. I'll go on with the rest. I just thought it was interesting that, you know, a small project of $15 million can't be supported but building a west line LRT, where there's already access by bus service, taxi service, Uber, many forms of transportation to get you from the west end to downtown, benefits by over $1 billion from the province.

As the cost of living increases year to year, making it more difficult for low-income Albertans to afford the necessities, we also see that life is becoming ever more expensive for Albertans under this NDP government. The NDP's carbon tax, which affects low-income families disproportionately, has made it more difficult for families to heat their homes in our frigid winters or to drive to work. It is not only the case that the cost of everything has gone up under this NDP government, but the ability to afford the necessities has also become more challenging. The NDP has driven away jobs and those who create jobs. Investment is fleeing due to the uncertain bureaucratic and burdened economic climate led by the NDP's increased regulatory red tape. It has become more and more difficult for Albertans to find jobs, so it is vastly more important in light of this to strengthen and improve supports to those who need them.

In the case of Bill 26 I'm happy to see that there will be a one-time, catch-up increase to financial support for recipients of AISH, something that has been mentioned to me many times in my office as well, and also to the Alberta seniors' benefit and supportive living and lodge subsidies. The government stated the cost of this initial increase but has not yet specified what this will be costing the government annually in the years to come. There needs to be transparency in what government is doing. It is our duty as legislators to hold the government to account. Albertans deserve to know what their government is doing and why. It is their money that the government is using to do it.

On this same issue of transparency, I understand that the changes that are coming to the support programs are not equal across the board. I would like for the government to elaborate on why they have decided to make greater increases to some programs than to others and what their rationale was. Again, I'll bring up the clawback to seniors when it comes to AISH. Can the government also elaborate on which stakeholders were consulted for the changes that were brought forward in this bill? It is crucial to ensure that proper consultation is done beforehand as we have seen what happens when the NDP does not consult.

Madam Speaker, we know that the NDP's detrimental and burdensome policies have made it more difficult on the already strained finances of low-income and vulnerable Albertans. Adding up the costs of everyday life, it has become more difficult to afford along with the cost of medications or other necessary goods. It may even be the case that this increase to AISH supports will not be enough to cover the costs that they will be incurring.

Another question I have about these increases: what will be the impact on AISH recipients in regard to their CPP and medications? Will that be clawed back due to the increases in the amount that they are receiving? I'm happy to see that the amount being paid out is increasing and that we are supporting those that need it most. However, while it is vital that we adequately provide support to those who need it, it is equally as important that we ensure we are allowing them to also help themselves and not doing anything to inhibit them from doing so.

I'm happy to see that the government is increasing the asset limits, which gives the opportunity for individuals receiving these limits to save more. Under these higher limits there is less cost to saving; otherwise put, this decreases the clawback rate of saving. This will help those who are trying to save up and potentially be able to graduate off financial supports. If their supports are not being clawed back as fast as they are able to save money thanks to this increased limit, then there is more reason to save.

Madam Speaker, this indexing to CPI will greatly benefit all support recipients who have been waiting for years for an adjusted amount that reflects today's cost-of-living increases. We've heard, devastatingly, from AISH advocates that some cannot even afford basic necessities. This is absolutely unacceptable. The supports are in place in order to ensure that this is never the case for anyone. The fact that this is still happening is unacceptable and must be addressed. Every Albertan, as a base, should be confident in their ability to afford personal hygiene products and other necessities. There is absolutely no one who should worry if this will be impossible for them. This is fundamentally why we have these programs in place. It makes me happy to see that this bill will help address this.

The increase in the supports that this bill addresses will go directly to the Albertans it seeks to help and where it will be of the most use. I'm glad that it's going directly to those who need it rather than into administrative costs. Beyond this increase in payments, we must also talk about additional supports that are necessary in order to have a far-reaching beneficial impact. These supports include mental health supports as we cannot group everyone's situation as one and treat them all the same. Strong mental health supports will greatly help Albertans with developmental disabilities and are vitally needed.

On the case of mental health, I brought forward many questions regarding the St. Therese health centre in St. Paul, which is the psychiatric hub for northeastern Alberta. One of the questions that was brought to the minister by one of the local mayors was the fact that people are brought into the facility from outside of the town of St. Paul, brought in sometimes by RCMP from Lac La Biche or Cold Lake, dropped off at the hospital. They spend four or five days there and get corrected, back onto their meds. But a lot of times these folks then are discharged by the hospital with no money, sometimes without identification, unable to find their own way home. The answer that we got, shockingly, from the minister was that that's a municipality's problem. So while we're addressing these issues, there are many, many more issues to consider.

There must also be support to enter and participate in the labour market. Due to the current lack of jobs available to Albertans due to NDP mismanagement, there must be structure in place to help those individuals with securing a job and give a hand up to those who are in poverty.

I'm so happy that there is an increase in the supports for the recipients of AISH, income supports, Alberta seniors' benefit, and supportive living and lodge subsidy and that this will help them in the race to keep up with the ever-increasing rising cost of living thanks to such policies as the carbon tax. This is why I will be supporting Bill 26.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. I enjoyed his remarks today. I think they were right on the mark. I rise today to speak in support of Bill 26. I'm glad to see a piece of legislation of this kind here in the Assembly. I actually think it should have been here a long time ago, quite frankly. I would question what took 3.5 years for the minister to get this legislation to the Assembly, but I am glad to see it here today.

I, like other members in this Chamber, have heard from many people who are AISH recipients, heard about how tough it is to currently live under the current numbers. We've heard from AISH recipients who cannot afford basic necessities, as the hon. member just described, I mean, basic hygiene necessities and things along those lines. I think all of us can agree that we have to ensure that AISH recipients are able to at least have an appropriate standard of living. Not being able to buy hygiene products, quite frankly, is appalling, that they would be in a situation like that. Supporting employment for people with developmental disabilities also will have a far-reaching, positive impact. I'm glad to see that in this bill. As well, raising asset limits for individuals receiving financial supports is important because it will allow them to save and potentially graduate off financial supports in the future.

I think this piece of legislation is good. I'm glad to see it here. I will be happy to support it. We will have some questions that hopefully can be answered in Committee of the Whole by the minister, but we'll be happy to bring up some of them today. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills raised some of them already. One question we have, though. I understand that some programs, Madam Speaker, through you to the minister, have seen greater increases than others. Can the government please share how they determined the relative rate increase in each program and which stakeholders they consulted with on this?

The second question, Madam Speaker, that we'd be interested in hearing about: will recipients of AISH see their CPP medications clawed back because of these increases? I think that's a good question to make sure that we've got right while we're doing this legislation.

The third question that I would have. While increases to AISH are important, it's equally important that we provide AISH recipients with educational and employment opportunities in the hopes that one day they may obtain full-time employment and graduate out of AISH. Now, not everybody is going to be able to graduate out of AISH, but there are certain circumstances where that's possible, and I think it's important that we support people that are doing that. My question specifically, Madam Speaker, through you to the minister, is: what is the government doing to address the serious lack of employment opportunities for our disabled population?

Lastly, income support caseloads have continued to rise in recent years. For the category of people expected to work, caseloads rose from 29,111 in 2016 to 34,375 in 2017. That's a significant increase. This is due in large part to negligence on economic files by this government, which has led to massive unemployment and hardship in our province. Income supports are important, but what is really important, of course, Madam Speaker, is getting Albertans back to work. I think it's important that this government address how they will also deal with that issue.

With that support in mind and looking forward to some answers to questions and maybe some further conversation in Committee of the Whole when this piece of legislation gets there, I will also point out some of the irony that I see in this legislation coming from this government at this time. I'm glad it's here. I wish it had been here before. But as the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills pointed out in his speech, quite well I think, it is very ironic that this government continues to hurt the less fortunate in our province significantly through their regressive carbon tax, that they continue to make life more expensive for people that are in vulnerable situations, certainly for people on AISH, and life more expensive for fixed-income seniors, which, of course, are also part of this legislation and important to remember.

You know, I don't know how the government, with a straight face, could justify repeatedly over the last few years voting against removing the carbon tax from people in these types of circumstances at the very least. We're against the carbon tax. I want to make that clear. Before the members across the way ask what we would do, then, in this case, which they like to heckle about, I'll be very, very clear. We will remove the carbon tax, one hundred per cent, from everybody in Alberta. This government did choose to go with the carbon tax, but at the very least they probably should have supported the opposition's attempts to be able to provide people in these types of circumstances with exemptions.

It costs a lot of money, not only the direct cost, for people in a fixed-income situation like that to be able to pay for heat or electricity, gas when they drive, those types of situations. Actually, as you know, Madam Speaker, it ended up being a tax on everything. Everything in our society ended up with the tax on it, and it's increased for a couple of reasons. One is because most things in our society come by truck or train, and it costs gas to be able to get them there. Then, of course, places like the grocery store had to pay extra for heat and had to pay extra for getting their products to the store, so that, then, increased the costs for these people in these types of circumstances. But to not be able to even provide them some sort of exemption from that – which we tried.

Further to that, the nonprofit agencies. As the hon. minister knows – and I know he will agree – our nonprofit partners do significant work in working with people facing poverty in our province. I know the hon. minister actually worked for one of those nonprofit organizations, as did I, so he knows the importance of that role there. This side of the House tried to provide an exemption to those agencies to be able to help people in those situations, and that side of the House, the NDP, voted yet again to make life harder for those individuals.

I think it's important. The minister in his remarks talked about how he felt that we, being the United Conservative Party, may not be compassionate on this issue or something along those lines. I think he's mistaken. But I think what's really clear and is fair to point out is that this government has shown, with their voting record on this issue, that they are at least tone deaf to what people are experiencing. Now, I do know that one point they will often raise when we talk about this issue is the carbon tax rebates, which have been clawed back and definitely have not kept going with the increase in the carbon tax.

This bill also impacts seniors. I don't know if all the hon. members have gotten to that portion of this legislation. Under this government's watch, who have brought this bill forward, they allowed seniors' carbon tax rebates, which only cover the fixed side of the equation – as I was referring to earlier, Madam Speaker, of course, this is a tax on everything; it's raised the cost of everything in our society – to be clawed back 30 per cent, to 70 per cent, without a word of protest from the minister. I can tell you that I know that my colleagues and I and, I suspect, my colleagues in the government caucus hear about that often when we're visiting with seniors in our communities.

While I think this is a good first start and we will look at some of the other questions that we have to see if we can possibly even make this legislation better or catch some stuff that the government may have missed, we definitely will continue to support it.

But I do think it's worth pointing out that the government should go all the way. They shouldn't go halfway and continue to allow their carbon tax and their policies to hurt the very people that they're trying to help within this legislation. Certainly, as we know from the Premier's announcement this morning, with the decision to remove the carbon tax from drillers, a decision I would support, that is confirmation that, one, the carbon tax is having a negative impact and, two, that it's not getting us pipelines or the social licence that was promised with that carbon tax. Certainly, if drillers or corporations should not be receiving or having to pay that carbon tax in the future, I would think that, at the very least, people that are on AISH and fixed-income seniors should not have to pay that carbon tax anymore going forward. Now, if this side of the House is fortunate enough to form government in a few more months, fortunately for them they won't have to for much longer.

But it is disappointing that the government continues to allow these people to feel pain and to have to suffer consequences as a result of the decisions that this government has made. I hope that they consider that as we're debating this bill.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will recognize the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 26. I'd like to thank the hon. minister for bringing forward this piece of legislation. I think that it is always important that as legislators we look to do what needs to be done to take care of the most vulnerable in society. I'm pleased to note that the legislation extends beyond just the soon-to-be-renamed assured income for the severely handicapped. I'm glad to hear that that name is going to be altered. I think that it's important that the language we use is appropriate and that the language we use when we're working with and working co-operatively with those who require assistance from government be done in a compassionate way.

I'd also like to thank the minister for listing off many of the advocates that worked with him and his department in creating this legislation. I note, in fact, that he included the names of some people who have been very critical of him and his department, and I appreciate that, Minister. I think it's important that we listen to critical voices and that we acknowledge that they also add to the conversation. I think that's very healthy.

I want to give a little bit of background perspective, from my own perspective, on this file both as a representative MLA but also as a member of the previous government. I will tell you, Madam Speaker, that one of the initiatives and one of the measures that was taken by former Premier Alison Redford, that I, frankly, think is one of her shining moments, was when she increased the AISH benefit in the 2012 budget by $400, from $1,188 per month to $1,588 per month. You know, there's a lot said about previous Premiers, and there's a lot said about previous ministers and certain portfolios and that sort of thing. Hindsight, of course, is always 20/20.

But I will say that, having just joined the government around the time that the 2012 budget was put in place – and there was a lot of criticism of that budget from the Official Opposition of the day – this was a measure that, certainly, I heartily supported. To give you just some perspective, that increase to $1,588 was a $400 increase from the previous rate, which had last been adjusted in April 2009. There had been a three-year time period where there had been no adjustment.

There's one thing that this piece of legislation finally does address, and that is that there has not been an adjustment to the AISH benefit since 2012. It has been frozen at $1,588. I fully acknowledge that it was the party that I was part of, the government that I was part of that made no adjustment for the first three years, but it was the current government that made no adjustment for the next three years. So I'm glad that this legislation makes an attempt to address that six-year time period. Really, it'll be seven years by the time the actual increase takes effect. But the increase in amount over that period of time is actually only about half of what it should be.

I will provide some evidence to that, and I will also be providing an amendment in committee stage that actually recommends that the basic AISH benefit be increased by more than what the current legislation calls for. I believe that if we're really trying to make sure that recipients are keeping up with inflation, which indexing it to CPI correctly does going forward, then we shouldn't lock in the fact that over the last six years there has been no adjustment. If we only increase it by $97, which is what the current legislation provides for, we are locking in the fact that we won't have the benefit correctly adjusted.

I think there are a few other things that we do need to look at when we're looking at this legislation. One of the concerns I have expressed to me on a regular basis by constituents is that disability pension benefits are clawed back. If there is someone who contributed to a disability pension or a disability plan and was receiving a benefit from that plan, that is used to then reduce the amount of their AISH benefit. I'm not sure that that's entirely fair. If at the time that they were working or at the time that they were involved in employment, they contributed to a disability plan, they clearly will receive that benefit. But why should that then be turned around and clawed back from their AISH benefit? Certainly, that's something I have a great deal of difficulty explaining to my constituents that raise that as a concern, and I would appreciate having that discussion, perhaps at committee level, or perhaps the minister can address it during his comments on the closing of debate on second reading.

Another area that I will address today as well with regard to Bill 26 perhaps doesn't have to show up in the legislation, but I think it is something that we should very much at least look at – I know that the minister is very aware of this issue – and that is that an increasing number of recipients of AISH benefits are benefited greatly by the ownership of service dogs. We saw that even as recently as – now, this is a different health situation, but on Tuesday evening we saw the incredible situation where I met a service dog that was trained to detect high and low blood sugars. I mean, if you want to talk about an amazing level of training, it's to be able to train a dog to be able to detect high and low blood sugars for diabetes patients. But having a dog like that, I will tell you, Madam Speaker, is not an inexpensive proposition. The initial training and acquisition of such a dog and then the care of a dog like that is, you know, not an inexpensive proposition.

For many of our handicapped or for many of our recipients of benefits – I'm going to avoid the use of the word "handicapped" – for many of those recipients the service dog is an absolutely vital and critical part of their lives. That's whether that service dog assists them with a specific physical handicap or whether it assists them with PTSD or whether it assists them in some other way. These dogs are as vital to them as medication. They are as vital to them for companionship and in a number of other ways.

I'm sure the minister knows where I'm heading with this, and again this is through some of my conversations with Mr. Les Landry, that he acknowledged in his opening remarks. These dogs are critical, and just as recipients of these benefits should not have to choose between purchasing personal hygiene items and food or paying their rent or paying their utilities, they certainly shouldn't have to make decisions with regard to how they care for these service dogs. They have to be fed. They have to have veterinary care. There are costs involved in pet ownership. These dogs are not just pets. These dogs are vitally important. So I'd like to see – and if it's not done in the course of the legislation, then certainly in the course of the regulations flowing out of the legislation – some provision for an allowance for those AISH recipients who have service dogs to assist them with whatever situation that they are in.

I think we have to look, as I said, at the disability insurance premium or the payouts and how those are clawed back, and I will raise some of these in the course of debate in the committee stage.

But I do want to say that this is a positive matter, and I do think that the indexing of these benefits, not just benefits under the AISH program but other benefits, to inflation is the right thing to do. It means that for people who require the assistance, that are dependent on that assistance, they are not going to be in a situation where even when our finances are challenged, we say: look, we just simply can't afford it. That was the answer that AISH recipients received for three years from the government I was part of, that's the answer they've received for three years from this government, and I think we can both share in the acknowledgement that that answer quite simply isn't good enough.

So I will be happy to support Bill 26. I will be bringing forward some amendments that I think would improve Bill 26, and I'm certainly hopeful that the minister will consider them favourably. In the meantime I think it is important that we as a Legislature and that we as a society indeed recognize that it is our obligation to make sure that the most vulnerable in our society are taken care of, that the most vulnerable in our society do not get left behind.

You know, I speak in terms of my own personal approach to the things that I deal with. Whether it was in my business practice or whether it was just as a community member or whether it was chairing our health foundation or my involvement in the Rotary Club, it was always a chance to look for those folks that otherwise might get left behind. We live in a prosperous and caring society, Madam Speaker, and there is absolutely no reason why people should get left behind or people should not be cared for. I know that there are instances where that happens, and I think, quite frankly, that those are the instances that we should try to root out and eliminate in as many ways as we can. I think Bill 26 is part of that, and I will be happy to support it.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. First of all, I would like to start by thanking the minister for the opportunity to sit down with him and understand the bill more clearly and have a conversation about this important bill. I really appreciate the time that he took.

The bill modifies AISH, income support, and the seniors' benefit, and what I really appreciate is that in the bill it standardizes the child benefit rates for AISH and income support. The way the legislation stands now, there's a variance between the different programs. Now for the first child a $200 a month benefit in both of those programs, and subsequent children are $100 a month. I think this is a really good idea. It makes things predictable for families, especially families who are facing difficult situations.

Some other good things that I like about the bill. The asset limit changes I think are reasonable. They take reasonable circumstances into consideration. I'm really, really grateful for indexing increases to CPI. I think that something that we've heard from nonprofits and schools and municipalities is how predictability is key to success, and I think that for people who rely on these programs, they need the same sort of predictability. They need to know that from year to year they'll be able to accommodate the increases that they'll see in their cost of living. So I'm really appreciative of that feature.

I really like that the seniors, people who have worked their whole lives, are getting their provincial benefits indexed as well, just like they are federally. People who rely on all of these programs are the least able to change their circumstances, so any kind of accommodation that we can make for changes that are outside of their control I think makes a lot of sense. It's the same for any person who finds themselves needing support from the government in some kind of an income support program.

Things that I think could make the bill a bit better. We'll be bringing up amendments in Committee of the Whole. Something that I've heard in my office is how people are treated when they're going to seek benefits, both with AISH and income support. I will be bringing forward an amendment to deal with a client bill of rights so that when people go to different programs for support, they have a good understanding of what to expect, what sort of treatment to expect, what kind of treatment is outside of acceptable standards, and what kind of recourse they might have if they experience something that discourages them from being able to seek help.

One other thing that I'd like to see in the bill is indexing the amount of income that AISH recipients can earn without a clawback. What we've seen over the last three years is that the minimum wage has increased, and what that has meant for AISH recipients is a net decrease in the number of hours that they could work to be able to supplement the income that they're getting from AISH. I would really like to see that income indexed as well so that it keeps pace and so that AISH recipients know they won't be penalized for having a part-time job.

I am really grateful for this bill. I think it's really important. One of my biggest concerns, though, is that it's taken a few years for it to come to the floor. I really wish that we had seen this two or three years ago for some of the reasons that we've already heard this afternoon. There hasn't been an increase to AISH since 2012. That's six years ago. For people that are relying on a very low amount of money to be able to get by every month, six years is a long, long time, and these are people that aren't necessarily in a circumstance where they can do much about their situation. To echo some of the sentiments that my colleague from Vermilion-Lloydminster shared earlier, these are people who we need to take care of. People who are unable to change their circumstances are people that are most deserving of our support.

So for these reasons, I'm looking forward to Committee of the Whole. For the most part, by and large, I really do support this bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will now recognize the Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Before I actually get to my comments, I just have a couple of comments to previous speakers.

The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills mentioned the Jamieson centre. Now, the Jamieson centre strikes a chord with me because it needed to be replaced back in the 1990s when I was working in parole here in Edmonton. In fact, the former Premier not only wouldn't provide any supports; he actually attended the centre and threw money at the residents and told them to get a job. I felt it was important to make that note.

The second was actually kind of a question for the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. I appreciate most of what you said. One of the things you mentioned was your response when people asked you about fixing it in the years from 2012 to '15. You said that your party's response was: we can't afford it. You said that answer wasn't good enough, and I agree. But why didn't you speak up? That's just something for you to think about.

Dr. Starke: I did. Just so you know, I did.

Ms Fitzpatrick: You did. Okay. Thank you.

I'm standing here today in support of this bill, and I do so on behalf of my constituents. I must support it because my constituents have been negatively affected by the former government's decisions in relation to this bill. I must support it because, upon the passing of this bill, it will be making Alberta a better place for my constituents and all Albertans to live. At its essence, this bill is rooted in our belief that as Alberta is coming out of the worst recession in generations, we will not – we will not – leave people behind. Our recovery needs to be a recovery for all Albertans. I believe that all Albertans deserve to live with dignity and have a chance to succeed, as the minister said.

My constituents with disabilities, seniors, and those needing income supports have told me and showed me how they have struggled to pay rent and to put food on the table. This legislation not only provides better supports today to help them to do just that; it ensures AISH clients and low-income Albertans won't need to fight to afford the basics tomorrow. It provides stability and certainty that as the cost of living increases, so will their benefit rates. The opposition leader in our Legislature has said we should match the B.C. level and, in fact, the minister referenced that. As well, he said that would cut AISH by $500 a month. I say absolutely not, and our government agrees that we cannot and must not do that.

Do you remember in the spring of 2015 when the Premier before the last election presented a budget which showed cuts across the board? A current member of the Official Opposition has said in the last couple of months that his party will cut and it will hurt. Sounds like the replaying of a bad record, a bad scenario for Albertans and, in particular, for vulnerable Albertans who are finally seeing some relief in their lives with this bill.

Since being elected, many constituents have come to my office and spoken to me about each of these areas. Both those persons with disabilities and seniors and their advocates have told me over and over again that it should not just be increased but indexed with inflation so that they don't take two steps forward only to take one, two, or even three steps back. One of my constituents, Ben Rowley, an AISH recipient, said, and I quote: with cost-of-living increases I don't have to worry about getting poorer and poorer every day. Ben, I'm happy you gave me that, and now it's in Hansard forever.

Throughout the economic downturn our government has committed to maintaining benefits, and in fact we increased overall program funding for AISH, income support, and seniors' benefits to support increased demand for services. Our province has grown and so has the need for services, all services. Our government has also committed to revisiting rate increase indexation as the province's finances would allow. Every little bit counts and increases the quality of one's life. Having stability through indexation does add peace of mind, and that's what my constituents have told me.

Do we have more to do? Absolutely. But this is a huge beginning by setting in stone indexing with inflation. I have spoken to senior after senior both at the Lethbridge Senior Citizens Organization in Lethbridge-West and Nord-Bridge Seniors Centre in Lethbridge-East, where, incidentally, I've been a member for a number of years. In speaking about this bill, I still have to speak a little bit about history. I will speak mostly about Nord-Bridge, where I have spent a considerable amount of time, and I will also speak from my perspective as a senior.

When I speak to anyone at Nord-Bridge, they tell me about the struggles of living on a fixed income and how it becomes more and more difficult to make ends meet. They talk to me about their hearing aids because I can relate. They talk to me about their income tax. I initially referred them to their MP but realized that to get something done, they needed to go see Harry or Laurie at Nord-Bridge, who are member volunteers who worked with over 1,300 people last year to address tax and tax-related issues, including seniors' supports, which require that one's income tax be filed each year to have access.

They also tell me how important it is to be able to come to Nord-Bridge and talk to me and my staff about their concerns, whether it's an issue of their power being turned off because they just can't make ends meet or just to tell me that they have a date for their knee surgery. They talk to me about their adult children who have special needs or disabilities of different sorts. They speak to me about being members of Nord-Bridge, where they have a place to come every day and be active, enjoy the jam session on Monday or play floor bowling on another day or just visit with friends.

When I ask any of the members what the focus is at Nord-Bridge, they may not be able to pinpoint exactly what that may be. However, if one were to ask Mike or Bob or Pat or Harry, they will tell you that it is prevention and support. It really speaks about the prevention of social isolation, the prevention of injury, the prevention of dementia by providing activities to stimulate one's mind. It speaks to inclusion and community, and they are very proud of that focus. It provides support.

I think this bill has taken huge first steps with indexation, and when Rodney spoke to me last week, he said that that is fantastic. Then he said that he had some ideas for future improvements. Rodney is never without an idea. Rodney, they have been shared. I know we have more work to do, and I will continue to support what this bill is doing and to advocate for future improvements as finances allow.

Now a quick highlight reel for this bill. There will be a one-time increase to AISH and income support to account for cost-of-living increases and then annual indexing with inflation going forward. As of January 1, 250,000 vulnerable Albertans receive increases in financial supports, annual indexing of Alberta seniors' benefits and related special needs assistance program, supplementary accommodation benefit, and seniors' lodge program, protection against negative inflation. Investment: $46 million in 2018-19 and $194 million in 2019-20.

All of those are reasons to support this bill, and I ask every one of my colleagues, everybody in this room, to support this bill. It makes a difference for every single Albertan.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Nixon: Yes, Madam Speaker. Thank you very much. Thanks to the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East – I always get both sides of that town confused or the members, which side they represent – for her speech. I do want to clarify. In her speech she made some accusations against members of this side of the House, specifically implying that there would be a cut or that we have said that we would cut and that there would be a certain amount that people would lose on AISH or those similar things because of that. That, in fact, is not factual. The member is mistaken on that fact. That's okay. I understand that it was probably hard to adjust the talking points when it was found out that we were voting yes. Nevertheless, that is not factual.

But I am interested in the hon. member's remarks, particularly her remarks to the independent member from Vermilion-Lloydminster: you know, why didn't you stand up? Madam Speaker, I would ask the same question, then, under 29(2)(a) on comments and questions: why did this member not stand up as the government that she belongs to brought in a punishing carbon tax to hurt these very people? Why did she not stand up when it took three and a half years of people on AISH and seniors saying that this is a problem that has to be fixed? Why did she stand by idly waiting for that to happen and not make it clear that action needed to happen?

The fact is, Madam Speaker, that what that member and her colleagues want to forget and at the same time then point and accuse other members of this place of planning to do, you know, huge cuts, which is not true – that's not what this side of the House is intending. We've been clear on that, and we won't be campaigning on that. But while she and her colleagues are doing that, they want to just disregard and forget about the fact that constituents that they even represent are being hurt by the policy decisions of this government.

You know, I've been in Lethbridge a few times this year. I have met with homeless shelters in Lethbridge. I've met with social agencies in Lethbridge and nonprofit agencies in Lethbridge. The number one thing they bring up with us when we meet with them is how much the carbon tax is punishing the very people that they're trying to serve. Every time that I talk to former colleagues that work in the nonprofit sector with people facing poverty, they bring up the carbon tax. This side of the House stood inside this place and moved amendments several times in an attempt to try to help those populations, and that member and her colleagues voted against those amendments.

Food banks, which we have been bringing up here several times over the last several years through this process, have repeatedly and very publicly talked about the struggles they're having already because of the economic downturn, that this government has overseen and created in some cases and made worse, certainly, and said that what's happening with the carbon tax is making it harder for them to be able to serve people in vulnerable positions. That member: where was she and her colleagues when it came time to stand up for them at that time?

My point, Madam Speaker, is that it's a little rich to sit in here with a speech and make up random accusations of us intending to cut things which we're not going to. That's another reason why we're supporting this bill, because we think that, quite frankly, it's been too long, as some other members have brought up. I'm shocked that it's taken this government this long to get a piece of legislation here to be able to start to address this issue. But it's a little rich to do that, to stand up and say, "We support this; those guys and gals over there are evil; they're going to cut everything" – not accurate – and then ignore the fact that that member and her colleagues have sat in this place repeatedly, over and over, voting for something that is actually hurting those populations. Completely attempting to ignore that fact is frustrating. It doesn't matter whether it's frustrating for me, but it's certainly frustrating for the people that it impacts.

I'm disappointed in that. I was very disappointed each and every time that the members of the government caucus stood on record . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. An opportunity to rise in support of Bill 26 today, and I just wanted to add my comments and some context to this. I've had a great opportunity during my life and career to work with many organizations in the nonprofit sector, from CUPS to Momentum food bank, UNICEF, Red Cross, Meals on Wheels, Chinese Service Association, Fresh Start, horizon drop-in centre, Calgary Homeless Foundation, Mustard Seed, Inn from the Cold, and the list goes on. I've had an opportunity to work with them either as a volunteer or in fundraising opportunities as well to help them to meet the needs of the vulnerable and, in some cases, Albertans that are in need of assistance over and above what we can provide as government. I certainly salute those organizations.

I've also been lucky enough to be brought up giving back to the community, volunteering in the community, and ensuring that we as Albertans, not just as the government but as individuals and as communities, support the individuals in our community. I've been lucky enough in my corporate career to also work for some companies that believe that when you do well, you must also do good, and that often when you do good, it actually helps you to do well. Those are some things that I think that I've learned in my career. Those two things can go hand in hand as we support the communities around us. We have the opportunity as working Albertans to support the vulnerable in our community by being responsible but also having a very close eye on the fact that we need to generate wealth to achieve that.

Madam Speaker, we've seen, through the actions of this government, a lot of negative impacts on organizations in my constituency: recreation facilities, places of worship, community centres, nonprofits, other individuals that are struggling, fixed-income households. I see that all the time. I see the recreation facilities coming up with their own programs to ensure that families that are going through difficult times can still attend hockey camps and be involved with sports in their community and have access to services.

I see that in the places of worship. In my own community the Deer Park United church, for example, is right beside a Calgary Housing Company facility. They do incredible work in supporting many of those families, the new immigrants there, who are working on very fixed incomes. That work is being impacted by the fact that they have carbon taxes on their facilities as well that are deeply impacting their ability to deliver those services to members of the community who are going through difficult times or coming here and settling into a new situation, who may be on fixed income through AISH and other programs that have been in place.

Madam Speaker, I think that we have to understand here that there's recognition that although as Albertans we have a commitment to sustain and provide adequate funding and the supports necessary for vulnerable people and those that, through no fault of their own, need that kind of support, we also have the ability to fund that through fiscal responsibility, by taking care of those vulnerable people in our communities – and I applaud the increases here. I believe we need to ensure that those people that are on these incomes, AISH and other programs, do have the funding that they need to live a safe and comfortable life.

We went through it with one of my wife's cousins, where she was worried. I could tell – she is physically handicapped and blind and deaf and has various other disabilities – that she had concerns, worries about her budget and whether she was going to be able to afford things and maybe to be able to save a little bit of that every month in case there was an emergency. Those things, I think, are good, and the indexing, I think, is important for us as well. But we need to also make sure that we're not overburdening the middle class to achieve that. We have to make sure that we have an economy that is robust, that we do well in this province so that we can do good. That, to me, is an issue that we need to address here: the sustainability.

We've seen it in many other government programs, where they damage the affordability and the balance of costs on one side. They damage those, and then they try and put a Band-Aid on things by increasing things. I think they need to look inside themselves. Again, three and a half years to get this bill out, but in the meantime we've seen the carbon tax impact those fixed-income individuals. We have a 67 per cent increase in that carbon tax coming, and that is not going to be offset in any way, shape, or form by this. Obviously, we've heard that that money is going to go into general revenue, not into rebates.

Quite frankly, the minimum wage, which was brought in to supposedly, again, help lower income individuals, at the same time is going to damage those on fixed incomes, that are on programs like AISH in this province, and the seniors on fixed incomes and others. The unintended consequences of some of these programs are things that we can't always throw Band-Aids on, Madam Speaker. We need to ensure that we're looking at those as we're bringing them in so that we don't have to keep going back.

Indexing, I think, is something that is a natural thing to do because we don't want those people on those fixed incomes to be falling behind day by day by day and year after year to the point where they can't put food on their tables, it's hard for them to make rent, it's hard for them to live a respectable and respectful life and to ensure that they have that opportunity.

Madam Speaker, I think that it is incumbent on all of us in this House to ensure that we take care of our vulnerable people, that those people in our economy here are given the opportunity to generate that wealth so that we can do this, and I think I mentioned it in the question period today, not with red ink, not with a larger, family-size container of red ink, and that we actually learn how to sustain this economy in a way that allows us to do well and to do good and to deliver those types of services on an ongoing basis and that we can look forward five and 10 and 15 and 20 years and know that we can afford to do that and maybe we can even afford to do it better and to take care of those people in a higher and more respectful and compassionate way.

So, Madam Speaker, we'll be supporting this bill. I'll be supporting this bill. There are a lot more questions we would like to address I think in Committee of the Whole as well, but I do thank the minister for bringing this forward, for addressing this. It's taken a little while, but here we are, an opportunity for us to do the right thing, and I'll look forward to supporting it.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, I'll call on the hon. Minister of Community and Social Services to close debate.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you to all the members who participated in the debate, and I look forward to more detailed discussion in the next stage. With that, I close debate.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Minister.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a second time]

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker, in light of the hour I am going to move that we call it 4:30 and adjourn until 1:30 on Monday.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:18 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Hon. members, let us pray or reflect, each in our own way. Yesterday marked the International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women. May we take a moment to reflect on how we as family members, as community leaders, and as legislators can take a stand against violence against women. May we collectively set the best possible example for our children, our grandchildren, and young Canadians in educating them that this behaviour is always inexcusable and never acceptable, and may we find ways to be allies and supporters to survivors.

Hon. members, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Ms Jinting Zhao, and I would invite all to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to rise today and introduce to you and through you students from one of our amazing new schools, Sister Alphonse academy, that came equipped with a wonderful playground. The students are accompanied today by their teacher, Mr. Sean Brass, along with their chaperone, Karla Bergstrom. I would ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly the students and staff of Calmar school. Calmar is a small community in my constituency, just outside of Edmonton, that I've had the privilege of visiting several times over the past three years to talk about the role of an MLA and this Legislature. It would be my dream that one or two of the students today, as a result of their visit to this Legislature, would grow up to become provincial leaders and to one day sit in this very Chamber themselves. Would the staff and the students of Calmar school please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's truly my pleasure and honour to introduce the hard-working and dedicated sheriffs and commissioners that work around the clock to ensure the safety of all members in this Assembly as well as the public. I'll ask them to rise as I call their names. I'll begin with the sheriffs: Sheriff Munib Malik, Sheriff Keith Taylor, Sheriff Jared Carbert, Sheriff Lisa Goertzen, Sheriff Mark Howell, Sheriff Chris Bijelic, Sheriff Sheldon Denis, Sheriff James Filgate, and Sergeant Warren Posch. I'd also like the commissioners to rise as I call their names: Jean Paul Grimard, Jin Kim, and Bhuwan Ponta. Please join me in extending the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome, and thank you for your service.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to introduce to you and to the House Strathcona county councillor Paul Smith. He represents ward 5 of Strathcona county, which is the part of the county that includes both Alberta's Industrial Heartland and a lot of farm area. Paul is also the TransCanada Yellowhead Highway Association president and is also a leader on an intermunicipal team that recently resolved a negotiated annexation agreement that had been long awaited between Strathcona county and the city of Fort Saskatchewan. The Smith family are local pioneers and have been farming in Strathcona county for generations. I'm sad to hear that Paul and his wife, Merla, retired from farming last year, but that is likely to spend more time with their two children and four grandchildren. I'm proud to see Paul everywhere in his community being an excellent representative, including at the Christmas in the Heartland event, that was just over the weekend. I would ask everyone to extend the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to introduce five special guests in the gallery. First, Brendan Fisher was born in Calgary, and he enjoys attending Bowness high school. His passions include refereeing hockey and snowboarding. Asher Betts was born in Banff and is in grade 6 at Lawrence Grassi middle school in Canmore and plays soccer, hockey, and skiing. Drew Betts is a proud Albertan, born in Calgary, raised in St. Albert, and enjoys supporting the local women's shelter, coaching hockey, and helping to organize an annual food bank drive for the past 20-some years. Dawson Rodney is 10 years old, attends grade 5 at Lawrence Grassi middle school, a hot hand, as he is known by his sports peers, and is a dedicated and focused athlete. I'm told he's also a politically astute young man. Last but not least is our former colleague Dave Rodney, the former dean of this place, the CEO of Tourism Canmore Kananaskis. He says that his most important job is being a dad to Dawson and Evan and husband to Jennifer. I would like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Continuing with the introductions of the Minister of Justice, it's my honour to recognize some of the fine folks who work in this building and in the Federal Building and take such excellent care. The folks that I'll be introducing are caretakers. We know that this building beams with pride for all Albertans, and it's because of the hard work of these folks who I'm going to introduce. I ask that they rise as I say their names: Rhonda Sorochan, Nelcy Mendes, Nimfa Zoleta, Emma Yakhina, Terrance LeBlanc, Claudia Delgado, Steven Bourns, Ahmed Asfour, Sandi Aamot, and Sandra McCuaig. There will be more by my colleagues, but please, hon. members, join me in thanking these hard-working public servants.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions here today, please. The first would be personal friends of mine, Jay Summach and his good wife, Anne, who are in the gallery. I'd like to introduce them to you and through you to all members of the Assembly. Jay is the account manager at Yellow Pencil, a digital agency that works with the public sector to deliver digital services, and his fine wife, Anne, is a nurse practitioner directing a nurse practitioner clinic for seniors at the SAGE Seniors Association here in Edmonton. These fine people in the gallery here today are actually constituents of the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, but they have been long-time hunting guests at our family farm. I'd ask that Jay and Anne please rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to continue on introducing our good-looking Infrastructure team up in the galleries. It is absolutely my pleasure to help introduce some of the amazing men and women who keep this building in tip-top shape. On behalf of all members of the Assembly, all government staff, and visitors I want to offer my sincere thanks for the incredible hard work they do all the time and always with a smile. Will you please stand: Loretta Bieneck, facilities manager; Mario Galka, gardener; Richard Redden and Geoff Visscher, grounds supervisors; Claude Smith, gardener; Christin Siminiuk, carpenter; Jim Walsh, electrician; Bill Stecyk, facilities co-ordinator; and Donald Sieffert, facilities manager. Thank you so much.

The Speaker: Thank you and welcome. I have learned very much from these people.

I believe you had another introduction. My apologies, Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce also to you and through you again to all the members in the House other friends of mine. Some may think that I may not have that many friends. They are Bill and Kim Rock, who operate the C Store in Amisk, Alberta, near Hardisty. Bill is the plumber of the constituency, and Bill has also been a friend of mine since the beginning of what I call the Wildrose cycle of conservatism in Alberta. Bill and Kim, if you'd please rise and receive the typical warm welcome of the Assembly, I'd be appreciative of that.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To continue on with the introductions that the ministers of Justice, Health, and Infrastructure have started with regard to the people who work in and around this building – on this side of the House we're extremely grateful for the hard-working Albertans who keep our public buildings running safely and smoothly – it's with great pleasure that I introduce some of our caretakers, and I would ask that they rise as I call their names: Abe Jara, Fadumo Mohamed, Michael Ramjug, Mohammed Yagoub, Rustamali Hudda, Jesu Junio, Nathaniel Jorquia, Maura Del Rosario, Yulier Sotolongo, and Berhane Ghebrekirstos. Please join me in extending the traditional warm welcome and appreciation of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome and thank you.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to continue to introduce some of the hard-working staff who keep the Legislature grounds and building going. I'm not sure what's happening out there. They're in here, so hopefully they've got people in their stead right now to keep us going because I know that without them, we'd be in disarray. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I hope I get all their names right. If they could rise when I call their names: Ben Pike, Joe Plante, Benoit Morin, Angela Neuman, Barry Malayko, Laurie Fedorchuk, Lou Webb, and Randall Sorochan. I would wish that everybody could give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome to you.

To the Minister: the real work happens out there.

The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House a couple of my family friends, Mrs. Rehana Rafiq and Mr. Zafar Nabi. Mrs. Rehana Rafiq is a family violence counsellor by profession, and she also works at YWCA Sheriff King, while Mr. Nabi is a secretary to the government of Azad Jammu and Kashmir. It's equivalent to a deputy minister here. I also want to add that Mrs. Rehana Rafiq has a degree, an MSW, from the U of C. When I was applying for the same program, I benefited from her advice and guidance, for which I am grateful. They are also accompanied by their daughters Shifa and Maha and their niece Aliza Zia. I ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Second introduction.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to introduce to you and through you Nim and Nita Herian. Mr. and Mrs. Herian are the parents of my staff member Reena Herian and a staff member of the Minister of Environment and Parks, Ayesha Herian. They have dedicated their lives to working for Alberta Health Services. Mrs. Herian is a clerk at the U of A hospital, and Mr. Herian is a dialysis technician, providing life-saving services to remote communities across Alberta. Mr. Herian is also the cofounder and director of the Punjab United Sports & Heritage Association, a nonprofit organization that brings together folks from all ages and backgrounds to promote diversity, heritage, and community health. They are celebrating their 40th anniversary this year, so congratulations. Mrs. Herian is an advocate of Brahma Kumaris, a UN-designated nonprofit that works to deliver global supports through meditation. I ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Goehring: Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce to you and through you Dylan Maguire and Katy DeCoste. Katy is working towards a bachelor of arts, combined honours in English and history, at the University of Alberta. She's also involved with the Concert Choir and student journalism society. Dylan is studying acting in the bachelor of fine arts program at the University of Alberta and has been following politics since grade 4. I met Dylan and Katy during their first visit to the Alberta Legislature. I sent them a note wishing them well, and the note inspired them to reach out to my office to return the well wishes and do something that they had wanted to do for a long time, volunteer for the provincial NDP. Dylan and Katy, thank you for joining us here today and for your help on my team. I'd ask you now to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you two friends of mine. They're both fathers, they're both family people, and their greatest concern right now is Alberta's economy. Mr. Speaker, you may know them because they're both formerly from Medicine Hat. Could I please ask my friends Dean Weber and Cameron Chenier to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House a young conservative who has been helping me in my constituency office. Mr. Hadyn Place is one of the many conservative activists who is looking to help bring common sense back to Alberta and back to Calgary. Hayden used to be the debating rival to the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood. Hayden really, really doesn't like Justin Trudeau, and I'm sure that Mayor Nenshi has some choice words for Hayden's choice in civic causes. Hayden is visiting Edmonton after cheering on the Calgary Stampeders to victory in the Grey Cup on Sunday, so please join me in giving Hayden the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, any other guests today? Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly an amazing group of parents and students and community members who are here representing the larger community of the residents that are advocating for a Langdon area senior high school. The community is one of the fastest growing in Alberta, with 30 per cent of its population under the age of 15. It is also one of only two communities of its size without a high school. Our current designated school is at capacity and will just continue to be stretched past its limits with student growth. They are here today to put faces to the hundreds of letters that you've been receiving highlighting the need for this high school. I will be tabling those letters later. I would ask that they rise when I say their names and please remain standing with us: Chrissy Craig, Sarah Craig, Frances Trevors, Leah Henderson, Tony Baker, Louise Howatt, Samantha Graham Chamberlain, David Chamberlain, Michael Chamberlain, Brandi-Lee Mouck, Corrie Carrobourg, Susan Pilling, Janice Jesenovec, Teresa Wasylenchuk, Linda Isbister, Alain Carrobourg, Evelyn Carrobourg, Jacqueline Weiss, Denise Twizell, Stephanie Brundige, Theresa Layzelle, Marilyn Collins, Rody Visotski, Joshua Neiszner, Isabelle Thuy, and then the Tweit family: Travis, Lorraine, Chase, Cole, Brody, and Bryce. Please give them the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed and Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, go Stamps. Congratulations to the Calgary Stampeders on a huge Grey Cup win last night. I'm sure all members will agree with that, especially the Edmontonians here.

Oil Price Differentials

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, it has been estimated by Professor Fellows from the University of Calgary that the price differential for Alberta oil at $39 a barrel would cost this province's treasury $7.2 billion. But the price differential in the last month has been averaging nearly $45 a barrel. Can the Finance minister tell us: how much is this costing the Alberta treasury, the current price differential?

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. I know that the Premier has said that when it comes to getting fair value for our resources, nothing is off the table. But for all members let me be clear. We are going to make sure that we use every tool that's available to us to ensure we get full value. We're not going to accept the differential as being a sure thing. That's why we've been fighting to get our access to tidewater, and that's why we're considering increasing options with things like rail and working with our partners in the oil and gas industry as well, because Albertans deserve fair and full value. We wish we would have gotten it years ago, but thank goodness we're here at the table and we're able to do something.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. However, my question was not for the government to recite its cliché talking points. It was a very simple, statistical question, so I'll ask it again: does the government have an estimate of the forgone revenues that would accrue to the Alberta treasury as a result of the current $45 price differential? It's not a partisan question; it's not a negative question; it's simply a factual question. Do they have an estimate of how much this is costing the Alberta government?

Ms Hoffman: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've been very clear that $80 million a day is the estimate for the impact to the country of Canada. Certainly, we think it's important that folks in Ottawa and all Canadians and all Albertans know about that impact on the national economy. Of course, Alberta is a big share of that, and that's why we won't rest. But this isn't just in Alberta's interest; this is in all Canadians' interests, and that's why we're not backing down. We're going to make sure that every option that's at our disposal is used, and that's why we're fighting so hard to get this pipeline built that the member opposite had 20 years while he was in Ottawa, 10 at the cabinet table, to get done. But we're going to make sure it happens.

Mr. Kenney: Just for the record there, Mr. Speaker, a simple, factual, nonpartisan question and a partisan attack in response: par for the course for that minister and this government.

Mr. Speaker, we understand that the hon. the Premier will be visiting Ottawa this week. Will she be meeting with Prime Minister Trudeau?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I will never stop fighting for the people of Alberta and reminding them of the record of all hon. members when it comes to fighting for these projects. That's why I'm so proud that our Premier won't back down. She is fighting every single day to make sure that we get our access to tidewater, that we're leaders on the environment, and that we protect the jobs that are so important to the people of Alberta and grow our economy, not just in Alberta but across our nation. From coast to coast to coast, the Premier keeps working on this. Certainly, the Prime Minister will be hearing from the Premier; I can assure you of that. I believe he's heard from her already, and he will continue to hear so because she sure is fighting for this province.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Kenney: Well, the minister couldn't answer the first question about the estimated forgone revenues, and she can't even answer the second question about whether the Premier will be meeting with the Prime Minister. That seems peculiar, Mr. Speaker.

Federal and Provincial Energy Policies

Mr. Kenney: This NDP government gave the Liberals everything they wanted: they supported the veto of Northern Gateway, didn't protest the killing of Energy East, supported the emissions cap on the oil sands, supported the imposition of a carbon tax. Yet Justin Trudeau came here last week and gave us nothing but a condescending pat on the head. What has the NDP managed to get for energy workers out of their alliance with the Trudeau Liberals?

Ms Hoffman: Just to reiterate, the Premier has made her message loud and clear to the people of Ontario, including the Prime Minister, and she's going to continue meeting with people who are directly impacted by the decisions of the federal government and consecutive federal governments, I might add, Mr. Speaker, that failed to get our product to tidewater. The Premier is going to be meeting directly with a number of people in Ontario, and she's definitely made her position clear to the Prime Minister and will continue to do so. Never count our Premier out. She is tenacious, she is hard-working, and she is fighting for Albertans.

Mr. Kenney: So, in other words, the government cannot identify a single thing that they've gotten from their alliance with the Trudeau Liberals.

Last week over 2,000 Calgarians came out to welcome Justin Trudeau on short notice to condemn his government's failure to defend this country's biggest engine of job growth in the past, our energy sector. Now, again, the federal Liberals got out of this government a carbon tax, an emissions cap. This government folded on Energy East and on Northern Gateway. What did we get in exchange? Did we get a single railcar? What have we gotten from the federal Trudeau Liberals in response?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I can understand the frustration felt by the folks who were outside the meeting. I have to say that, as the Premier said before and I'll say it again, I'm with them. Our government is with them. The differential is hurting Alberta, and it's hurting Canada. It's important that Ottawa and the Prime Minister are well aware of that. That's why we won't back down. That's why we launched the Keep Canada Working 2.0 campaign, that's why we're working furiously to find solutions, and that's why we'll continue to fight to make sure that Alberta gets a fair share from Ottawa, which we didn't get when the Leader of the Official Opposition was there for his 10 years. While we continue to push forward again right now, we won't back down. That's for sure.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the NDP told Albertans that the punishing carbon tax on heating homes and filling up gas tanks would get us a coastal pipeline. We don't have a coastal pipeline. Why do we still have a punishing carbon tax?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, the fact that the member opposite keeps drawing attention to the failure of the government that he was a part of for over a decade in Ottawa and now decides to blame us for it astounds me. It's true that the member opposite did fail to get products to tidewater. That's why our Premier is in the middle of this fight right now. That's why we continue to push forward and why we won't back down. This is in the national interest. We haven't gotten a Canadian pipeline to Canadian tidewater in 65 years, but you know who's going to make it happen? Our Premier. That's for sure. Not only did the members of the previous federal government get no pipelines to tidewater; they actually created greater opposition to pipelines than ever before. But that's turning because . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.
Third main question.

Oil Production Volume

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, Alberta oil producers have voluntarily reduced their production of oil by approximately 150,000 barrels per day in the last three weeks. They've done so because of the severity of the current price differential, much of which is caused by a glut of inventory in Alberta right now. There are a handful of companies that have not followed suit with their own voluntary reductions in production. Will the government join with us in calling on those companies to also participate in these voluntary reductions so that we start getting a decent price?

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the concern that the member is raising with regard to the differential. We, too, share that concern, and that's why we created the envoy that's working diligently to make sure that we get full value for our resource. That is certainly one part of the solution. The other part of the solution is to continue forging forward on making sure that we get fair value by opening international markets, something that we've been fighting for since day one. The member opposite actually said that no pipeline is a national priority when he was in Ottawa. I'm shocked by this. I think in Hansard he said the word "pipeline" one time. Enough is enough. We have faith in our Premier. She's getting this job done.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I said that coastal access was a national priority. I must confess that as minister of immigration I wasn't responsible for pipelines.

Mr. Speaker, will the minister please tell us: why will she not call on all players in the Alberta industry to follow the lead of most companies in reducing production so that we can get an increase in the price? Right now we're underselling Alberta oil by $45 a barrel. This is a crisis. It's been described to me as a five-alarm fire by people in the industry. Will the government join with us in calling for voluntary action?

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Hoffman: I am shocked that the Leader of the Official Opposition is owning the fact that he did nothing to get our pipelines built when he was sitting around the federal cabinet table for 10 years. That is sad. That is sad. What is his answer? That he wants us to make him Premier and trust that he'll do it because, magically, he's going to focus on something that he failed to act on when he had the opportunity around the federal cabinet table for 10 years. Enough, hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Ms Hoffman: It's time you stand with Alberta, stand with our Premier, and make sure you put your partisan attacks aside and get our pipeline built.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the question was not a partisan attack. It was about voluntary reductions in production. I would remind the minister that while she and her colleagues were protesting Northern Gateway, Trans Mountain, and Keystone, the Harper government saw the construction of four pipelines that increased movement of oil by 1.72 million barrels per day, doubling oil movement in Canada. Why will the government not stand up and call on all producers to participate in the voluntary reduction of production to increase the price of Alberta oil?

Ms Hoffman: You know what, Mr. Speaker? Our resources belong to all of us. I believe it was Peter Lougheed who called on us to act like owners of that resource, and I wish that when the member opposite was in Ottawa for 20 years, 10 around the federal cabinet table, he would have acted like an owner because we'd be in a different position than we're in today. But I have to say that one of the solutions is fixing the differential. That's why we've created our special envoy. One of the solutions is increasing our takeaway capacity, getting a pipeline built to tidewater, and growing upgrading right here in Alberta, and that's what our government is fighting for.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister visited Calgary last week, and as far as the energy industry is concerned, he rode in on a lame horse with empty hands. There was no support for a struggling industry that is so important to our province and this country. It's time for Alberta to take steps as a province to address the price differential directly, not wait for federal help that may never come. To the Deputy Premier: will your government take steps to curtail production and address this huge discount our oil is currently selling for?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Our Premier said and I will reiterate: nothing is off the table. That's why we've created our special envoy. That's why we are making sure that we are working to address the differential, addressing access to various markets, including considerations around that. Of course, we continue to push forward for a Canadian pipeline to Canadian tidewater to get a fair value for all Canadians, something that would solve an $80-million-a-day gap in federal revenues. This is something that is of national importance. The differential is certainly one piece of it, and we are absolutely working to make sure we get full value for all Canadians for this resource, that we are all owners of.

Mr. Fraser: The federal Minister of Finance said in an interview on Sunday that they would not be supporting Alberta's request for more rail cars to transport oil. Morneau said that it wasn't a consideration because it would take nine months to get going even. Premier, we can't afford nine months of cheap oil. We need to take action now. If not curtailment, what action does your government actually intend to do today?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said in a previous answer, we are committed to fixing the differential. There are certainly a number of different tools in our ability to do that. We have a special envoy that we need to entrust – they were named about a week ago – that we have doing that work, reporting directly back to our Premier and making sure that they're continuing to move forward on making sure that we close that gap. That should have been addressed decades ago, but we certainly are at the table working to make that happen because of this Premier and this government. We're also working to increase our takeaway capacity, getting pipelines built to Canadian tidewater, growing upgrading right here in Alberta, all things that owners should do when they own a resource, and owners are . . .

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Our hearts go out to the workers in Oshawa who just lost their jobs, but let's be very clear. Alberta has been dealing with substantially more job losses in oil and gas and may lose more now because of low oil prices. It's imperative that our energy industry and the workers who have lost their jobs remain a top national priority. To the Premier: what are you doing to ensure that the crisis in our energy industry remains a top priority for all levels of government?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One of the things our Premier did was create a very talented special envoy because she knows it's important to have the best negotiator, the best talent at the table fighting for Albertans every single day, and that's what we've done. That's another reason why our Premier will be in Ottawa later this week, because she is speaking to people who are impacted. Everyone is impacted by this impact of the differential and by the lack of access to international markets. The best way to fix that, of course, is ensuring that we have our pipeline to tidewater, but she won't back down on any of the other options that are available at her disposal, and I am so proud to be a part of her team.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Diversity and Inclusivity Initiatives

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Within my own constituency of Calgary-Glenmore and the city of Calgary as a whole there is a breadth and depth of diversity that is reflective of the population of Alberta. I have the pleasure of regularly interacting with Calgarians that are bilingual, multilingual, or of different ethnic backgrounds and who practise different faiths. To the Minister of Education: how is the government supporting these communities so they feel a sense of belonging within the province of Alberta and are able to continue contributing to their communities?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am, too, very proud of the diversity that we find not only in the city of Calgary but right across the province of Alberta as well. Two things. We have started to build the Anti-Racism Advisory Council. We have interviews that are being conducted right now to help to get advice and to reach into communities across the province. We also have a grant program by which groups can make application to projects that they want to do in their communities to fight racism, foster acceptance, and to promote inclusivity.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that among my constituents are individuals and organizations doing all they can on behalf of racialized communities and that we need to do more to ensure they're heard and acknowledged, again to the same minister: how is the government ensuring racialized communities have a voice and can impact government decision-making?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we've been hosting these round-tables right across the province. I thank all of my colleagues for your work to bring people together in your communities to look for ways by which we can fight racism and foster acceptance as well. We also are building a new curriculum. I think it's very important for young people to be able to see themselves reflected in the curriculum, to see their histories reflected in the curriculum, to recognize that they are supported and thus will be more successful in school.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there are many people actively working to create more welcoming and caring environments, I cannot help but wonder how far that impact could go if these organizations were better supported. To the same minister: how can the government help these individuals in the great work they're already doing within their communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we believe by using established programming and ways by which community groups have already been doing very good work to fight racism in their communities. We would like to support that and supplement that with the grant program that came out of the antiracism initiative. We're working very hard, and we need all Albertans to pull together to foster inclusivity and to build a more accepting society for all.

Federal-provincial Relations

Mr. Fildebrandt: Last night the Calgary Stampeders on behalf of all Alberta defeated Ottawa to win the 106th Grey Cup. Unfortunately, Alberta hasn't beaten Ottawa at anything else in a very long time. While Ottawa has been playing with unnecessary roughness, Alberta's NDP has been playing with two-hand touch. Last week the Minister of Finance said, quote: if we were, say, Bombardier or if we were the auto industry, there would be all hands on deck trying to address this oil crisis as quickly as possible. Are you just figuring this out now?

Mr. Ceci: You know, we saw just last week how Calgarians poured into the streets to address the issues of the federal government. They weren't happy with the federal government. I wasn't happy with the federal government's federal fiscal update as well, Mr. Speaker. I let them know that. We are going to continue to speak loudly and longly, as long as we can, until action is taken by the federal government on this differential.

Mr. Fildebrandt: When the Stampeders want to put points on the board against Ottawa, they put up Cornish and Cahoon. When the NDP want to put points on the board, they put up Charlie Brown and let Ottawa hold the ball. The fact is that Stephen Harper was right in 2001, when he said that Alberta needed to build firewalls to protect our prosperity and decision-making. Does this government agree that it is time for Alberta to repatriate all of our powers under the Constitution to bring decision-making and prosperity back to Alberta?

Mr. Ceci: What this side of the House believes, Mr. Speaker, is that the Premier is going down to Ottawa to continue to press the need for pipelines to tidewater for addressing the differential as quickly as possible. Crude by rail is that interim solution that will take us to a better future once pipelines are in place, and we're not going to give up on that.

Mr. Fildebrandt: The sad reality is that when Liberals are in Ottawa, Alberta is actively undermined. When the Tories are in Ottawa, we are mostly ignored and taken for granted. When the referee is working for your opponent, you need to change the game. Confederation is broken. If Alberta is ever to be treated as more than a glorified colony, then we must reject the status quo, that treats us as such. Will the government agree to hold a referendum in conjunction with the next provincial election for Alberta to renegotiate its constitutional relationship with the federal government?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, you know, we started off talking about the differential, so I'll just continue on that. The differential is something that we need to address right away. We are pushing Ottawa to address that in an interim solution. We have envoys who are talking to oil companies in this province to try to get them voluntarily to address this issue. What seems to be the best thing for Albertans is to make sure our economy is functioning on all cylinders. We are doing that on behalf of Canada, too, because so much of Canada depends on a sound, functioning economy in this province.

Oil Price Differentials and Provincial Debt

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, Alberta is in the middle of a crisis of this government's making. The differential is costing Alberta $210 million for every differential dollar. Kent Fellows, a research associate at the University of Calgary, estimated the differential would translate into a $7.2 billion loss to the Alberta government if it persisted for a year. That was in March. To the minister: how much more is the deficit going to grow because of your pie-in-the-sky differential projections, that you missed by $25 a barrel?

Ms Hoffman: I can't help but chime in on this for the first one, Mr. Speaker. I have to say again that the members opposite were in government here in Alberta for 40 years, and the member opposite's leader, the Leader of the Official Opposition, was in Ottawa around the cabinet table for 10 years. They failed to fix this, and now they're saying that it's our fault, that magically overnight we are to blame for the differential. You know what? That couldn't be further from reality. But you know what is reality? We're creating an envoy, we're fighting hard to get our product to tidewater, we're closer than we've ever been before, we're going to make sure we address the differential, and we are going to move forward because we are the owners of this resource, and it's about time Alberta had a Premier who acted like it . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Barnes: Given that Alberta is in the middle of this government's fiscal crisis and managed decline and that over 180,000 Albertans are unemployed and that over 90,000 Albertans have exhausted their employment insurance and given that hard-working Albertans have seen their RSPs lose value as Alberta companies like Canadian Western Bank and Boardwalk have dropped in value, to the minister: why didn't you stand up to your ally Justin Trudeau, who won't finalize our pipeline approval but just provided Canada's richest families half a billion dollars for their newspapers while Alberta families see our savings evaporate?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the deficit I can tell you that this province and this government were dealt a really tough hand when the collapse of oil prices happened in late 2014, but we focused on what matters to Albertans, and that is jobs and diversification and health care. We cleaned up government and all the expenditures like the sky palace and insider deals that were taking place from the former Progressive Conservatives. Our plan is working, and things are looking up. Ninety thousand Albertans got full-time jobs, mostly in the private sector, in 2017, and we cut the deficit – cut the deficit – by $3 billion since our original budget.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, this NDP government has increased Alberta's debt by 650 per cent since 2015, a burden of $50,000 per family of four. This puts every important Albertan priority at risk. Again to the minister: when will you stop burdening Albertans with unsustainable interest, unsustainable deficits, chasing investment out of our province, something that even the Globe and Mail reports is rapidly turning Alberta into a have-not province, and instead get focused, get focused on re-establishing Alberta as the beacon of free enterprise for families and all Canadians?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. You know, Mr. Speaker, if we want to talk about debt, let's focus on what the Leader of the Opposition and the governments he was part of did when they were in Ottawa: six straight deficit budgets, a $56 billion deficit in just one year alone. He added, their government added $145 billion, with a "b," to the national debt and $309 billion in interest payments. What about that as a record over there? We will continue to stand up for hard-working Albertans and make sure this economy comes back . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. [interjection] Thank you.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, there are several names for Canadian oil blends like light sour blend, peace sour, central Alberta, Syncrude sweet premium, sweet crude, Hardisty light, et cetera, but they all have one thing in common: they sell for less than the lowest price oil blend from Texas, where many pipelines are being built to tidewater. To the minister: investors built production on good faith that pipelines would be built for export. Where are Alberta's pipelines to tidewater?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, from day one we have fought as a government for what's important to Albertans, and that's responsibly producing our resources and access to tidewater, and we continue to do that. We wouldn't have had to do that had previous governments had the vision 10 years ago, 20 years ago that this was going to be a problem. They failed to get access to tidewater. They failed to upgrade our resources here in Alberta. But we're not failing that on this side of the House. We're working hard for that.

Mr. Panda: Given, Mr. Speaker, that Hardisty light is now selling for $6.42 a barrel, which is 4 cents a litre, and given that we are selling our oil for less than the price of bottled water and that the second-quarter update is due later this week, to the Minister of Finance: how deep is the budget deficit going to be because of the differential, and how many people are going to lose their jobs? We need answers, not an attack. The Leader of the Official Opposition actually helped build pipelines so . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you an answer. The answer is that we cut the deficit by $3 billion already since 2015's budget, $1 billion this year already. The member is right. We'll have the Q2 update this week, and I will tell Albertans where we are with regard to the first six months of this budget year and how we're staying on budget. We're doing a better job than the drunken sailors on that side.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order.

Mr. Ceci: When they had money, they spent, Mr. Speaker. When they didn't have money, they didn't.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, you may want to be thinking about that.

Mr. Panda: Given, Mr. Speaker, that Ottawa has abandoned Alberta on differential prices and given that sources around the province report that businesses like Trican, Repsol, and Torch are suspending, cancelling, and ending projects and pulling out of the communities and that at the same time no one is applying for permits to build new homes, to the minister: given that your best friend and ally Justin Trudeau came to Calgary to shed some crocodile tears and offer lip service, where are the jobs for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can tell you that anyone who doesn't understand our energy sector or work to promote it and support it is no friend of this government. We are extremely disappointed with the federal government. They have demonstrated that they are tone deaf and out of touch with Alberta's energy sector. And, really, it should be Canada's energy sector. When Alberta does well, Canada does well. That's why our Premier is in Ottawa fighting, as she always has from day one, for market access and for pipelines to tidewater. She's accomplished more in three years than that leader did in 10.

The Speaker: The Member for Airdrie.

Sheriffs' Mandate

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have been talking to sheriffs here in Alberta, and they're very concerned that they don't have the necessary tools to be able to do their jobs. They have reportedly lost their ability to act in certain situations even where there are reasonable, probable grounds to do so. Minister, are you confident that our Alberta sheriffs are being utilized to their full potential?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, of course, we work with our law enforcement at all times to ensure that they have the necessary tools to perform the functions that they are given. It's very important to this government to ensure that all workers throughout the province have the necessary tools. We certainly will continue working with the sheriffs to ensure that they have the ability to enforce a whole range of different things out there in our communities and to keep Albertans safe.

2:20

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that when the public sees a sheriff, they see a fully armed law enforcement member yet the public doesn't know that their hands are tied in many situations and yet the sheriffs play an important role in the safety in our communities, Minister, have you had a meeting with the sheriffs about this issue, and are you aware of the public's perception of our sheriffs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, somewhere in that slightly oddly worded question is probably what I understand to be a reference to the fact that sheriffs are, in fact, peace officers as opposed to being police officers, so they have slightly different powers. That is, of course, a legacy of when they were created. When this government took office, as we do with many things, we've been reviewing that. We've been working with the individuals who work on the front lines, and we will continue to have those conversations.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, crime is on the rise here in Alberta, and given that the United Conservative Party released a report that called for a review of the sheriffs' mandate to be expanded and given that our law enforcement officers want to do everything that they can for Albertans, but they need to operate within the set of rules of the government, will the minister please tell this House what she's doing to address their concerns?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'll start with two things that we're doing to ensure that we keep Albertans safe and to ensure that we keep our law enforcement safe. First of all, we're funding for additional positions, matters which that party voted against. Further, we're continuing to work with our law enforcement officers to ensure that they have the necessary tools, unlike the opposition, who takes the time to attack both the police in Lethbridge and the RCMP. We will continue to work with the front lines to ensure that they can keep Alberta safe.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Kindergarten to Grade 4 Draft Curriculum

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ordinary Albertans have yet to see any of the instructional materials that will be used in the draft K through 4 curriculum field testing and eventual rollout. Since the curriculum itself is so light on the details of what it will be teaching, Albertans need to be able to evaluate the instructional materials before they can make informed judgments about the curriculum itself. When will the Minister of Education release the instructional materials for the K through 4 draft curriculum?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you so much for the question. As the hon. member knows, we have the draft of the K to 4 curriculum up on the Alberta website now, so Albertans are very welcome to take a look at it. Of course, when the rubber really hits the road is when you are field testing. So this is the part of the process that allows to build content and allows to flesh out the curriculum. We're very proud of what we've done so far, and we can't wait for more input to get the job done.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the identities and the affiliations of the curriculum's designers remain a mystery to Albertans and given that the perspectives of the creators will inevitably make their way into the instructional materials and given that in a province as diverse as Alberta it is vital that a broad range of perspectives be included, to the same minister: where are the instructional materials coming from?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to say that our consultation with the curriculum thus far has been unprecedented, with more than 110,000 interactions with Albertans. You know, it's not only created excellent curricular material; it's created excellent engagement, where people are talking about education and actually working through these things with their kids, with their families and so forth. You know, I find it a bit rich for the member opposite talking about this curriculum. I know that his leader said that he would put it through the shredder, so I don't know exactly what constructive mechanism that happens...

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta is indeed a broad and a diverse society and given that Alberta's schools teach from a myriad of cultural, religious, and educational perspectives and given that it would be impossible for a central committee to identify much less produce a wide enough range of appropriate materials, to the minister: how much flexibility will the minister allow for Alberta's diverse educators to choose materials appropriate to their students?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's an excellent question. You know, we defer back to the professionalism of our teachers to make choices around content material to teach the curriculum here in the province of Alberta, and the degree to which you allow that professionalism increases, I believe, the quality of teaching and the engagement of students, teachers, parents and so forth. So this is the way we're going to roll. We respect teachers here on this side. We certainly wouldn't fire 4,000 of them, as the members opposite would suggest. In fact, we do quite the opposite. We're building schools. They say that it's going to hurt. We say that we're here to help.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Early Learning and Child Care Centres

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For parents in my riding of Edmonton-McClung and all over Alberta finding affordable child care is a struggle. Recently I visited the Jamie Platz YMCA, located in my constituency, which is a designated $25-per-day early learning and child care centre. One father I spoke to told me that he and his wife would save over $36,000 in child care costs over the next five years while their two children are enrolled there. What is the Ministry of Children's Services doing to ensure that all parents in Alberta who wish to work outside the home have access to the safe and affordable child care options they deserve?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. When parents drop their kids off at daycare, they should feel confident that their kids will get the same level of love and attention that they would at home. I've heard from parents how important these $25-a-day centres are for their families, and that's why I'm so proud of the work that we've done to expand our pilot now at over a hundred new centres, with thousands of new spaces this year alone. These investments are making life more affordable, and I'm going to keep fighting for every parent in Alberta to have the affordable child care that they deserve.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that these pilot projects are clearly working but too many parents still don't have access to affordable child care, will the Ministry of Children's Services consider making this program universal so that every parent and child is able to benefit?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely, that's my goal. Unlike the Conservatives, our government doesn't think that investing in affordable child care is a waste of money. On this side of the House we're committed to growing our $25-a-day child care program until every single family in every single corner of this province is able to access safe, affordable care for their children. We know the positive impacts that these centres are having on families, on communities, and on our economy, and we believe that everyday families are worth investing in.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that programs for children and families were often first on the chopping block during each round of Conservative austerity, again to the Minister of Children's Services: how are these ELCCs benefiting Alberta's families?

Ms Larivee: Mr. Speaker, every time I talk to a parent who's accessing these $25-a-day centres, the first thing they tell me is that these investments are life changing for them. That's why it's so heartbreaking to hear Conservatives talk about how they'd roll these programs back. Jacking up the price of daycare and cutting programs that families rely on just so they can pay for a $700 million tax giveaway to the richest Albertans is only going to make things harder for Alberta families. Only a party that wants to hurt everyday Albertans would think that that's a good idea.

Mobile Home Site Regulations

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, in my riding of Highwood I've heard concerns from occupants of manufactured homes who are facing the problem of substantial increases to the price they pay to rent the pad their home sits on. Some owners of manufactured homes are facing unbearable rent increases. In 2016 the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association supported a motion from the town of Okotoks asking the government of Alberta to amend the Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act offering residential tenancy dispute resolution services. Given that this motion was passed two years ago, can the Minister of Service Alberta explain why no action has taken place by this government?

Mr. Malkinson: Well, thanks very much to the hon. member for the question. Of course, our government is always available to any Albertans who need assistance. We are always open to also hearing from Albertans. I'd encourage anyone who, you know, has particular concerns with the Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act to contact my office, and we will look into them.

Mr. W. Anderson: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the town of Okotoks sent a letter to the Minister of Service Alberta asking for a timeline on when they might hear of any possible solutions to this issue and given that the minister responded in a letter – and I'll table it later – that he has no additional information for them, can the Minister of Service Alberta tell this Assembly and my constituents of Highwood what he plans to do to address this problem that manufactured homeowners are facing?

Mr. Malkinson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I will point out that in cases where the provincial government under the current Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act, or MHSTA, is unable to intervene, these matters can be pursued through the courts or through local municipalities. Under the MHSTA municipalities do have tools to help mobile-home owners and tenants. Of course, municipalities have the authority to receive and investigate complaints as well as requirements of the owner of the mobile-home park to remedy any dangerous or unsightly conditions.

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, given that this topic was brought to the minister's attention last week in question period and that the Minister of Service Alberta's response was for these Albertans to write letters, can the minister explain why he needs a letter-writing campaign for him to take action when his department has been well aware of this problem for over two years and has done absolutely nothing about it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Malkinson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, you know, our government is always out there to support affordable housing options for Albertans, and some of those include mobile homes, so our government is considering changes to various acts that would provide additional low-cost remedial measures for cases like what we often see in mobile-home parks. Of course, before we make any changes, it is important that we do proper consultation with all those involved because we are always open to ways to make life better for Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Infrastructure Project Prioritization

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There seems to be a great deal of confusion for those outside of the government on the criteria used to determine which capital projects are built in this province. Constituents in my riding were certainly confused when Rocky View-Langdon junior-senior high school remained on the unfunded list for capital projects despite the fact that the community has 30 per cent of its population under the age of 15. It is also only one of two communities of its size without a high school. To the minister: what criteria are used to determine which schools are built in Alberta, and has Langdon fulfilled those criteria?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member, and I thank her, of course, for advocating for her constituents very enthusiastically. I certainly got her extensive list of capital submissions, I think over 15 now, which is wonderful and enthusiastic. We will consider all of those capital submissions as we go through with our ministerial capital committee and make the difficult choices of how to spend the capital money we spend in this province.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that when a Rocky View councillor inquired about this school project during the RMA convention, the Infrastructure minister informed the councillor that they take their marching orders from the Minister of Education but given that if an inquiry is asked of the Minister of Education, they defer to the Ministry of Infrastructure, who has control over half a billion in the schools capital budget, my question is to one of the ministers of the government. Who is the one and only point of contact for school boards and municipalities with respect to the capital construction of new schools: Education or Infrastructure?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. You know, I had the great pleasure of meeting with representatives from Langdon here this afternoon and had a very constructive conversation about the school that they are interested in building. We use geography, we use enrolment, and we use imminent needs as factors for building schools. Each of the lists that we've built over the last number of years has been very fair and balanced. We have a growing enrolment population. It's a good problem to have. We have lots of young families, and we're building lots of schools.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and I'd like to thank the minister for meeting with the Langdon families today.

Mr. Speaker, given that the Auditor General had a choice of words for the government when it comes to setting capital priorities and given that the government seemed content to approve a bunch of backcountry chalets for construction, which never appeared on the unfunded capital list over the last three years, while other important capital projects like schools never proceeded, I have a question, actually, for the Minister of Environment and Parks. Did you use the mysterious in-year, outside-of-the-budget capital planning process to get Treasury Board to sign off on your chalets instead of schools?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will make no apologies for the fact that we have built more than 240 school projects in the province of Alberta in the last three years. That side failed to build schools for more than 20 years. Then when communities like Langdon come, they're so relieved to come to my office because they know that I actually build schools. This government actually builds schools. We're very proud of that fact. You wouldn't be able to do so by making big cuts. It's going to help. They're going to hurt. End of story.

Public and Private Health Service Delivery

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, our province has a deficit of over $8 billion, our debt will exceed $50 billion this year, and our energy industry is crumbling under this NDP government. Despite all this, this Health minister continues to invest in laundry services, but numbers haven't been updated or released. Your last estimate was between $54 million and $200 million. How much will it cost to build and invest in your laundry services? Or is accounting difficult?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question, Mr. Speaker. When I travel, in rural communities especially, throughout Alberta, they say to me: "You know, we're worried because we've heard that the former government was planning on laying us off, consolidating these jobs, and creating a super laundry facility. This would impact our rural communities and our rural health outcomes as well, potentially, because we know that if grandma loses her dentures and the laundry is done down the hall in this hospital, we'll be able to get them back, and if it's not, they'll be somewhere else." So I'm proud to defend those front-line workers. I'm proud to defend rural health care. Feel free to keep asking me to cut and fire because on this side we believe in building and hiring.

Mr. Yao: Three years later and she still hasn't figured out how much laundry services cost.

Mr. Speaker, this minister commissioned a report by the Health Quality Council of Alberta, which concluded that there is no difference in the quality of lab services provided whether it's private or public. The current provider, DynaLife, is one of Alberta's best workplaces and one of Canada's best-managed companies. Why is this minister investing in lab infrastructure, that has already doubled in cost from $300 million to $600 million? You can't even build a building on budget and on time. Why are you doing this?

Ms Hoffman: You know, Mr. Speaker, again, nothing is further from the truth. I've explained to the hon. member that what he saw originally was a three-year fiscal plan, and then we rolled out a six-year fiscal plan. I am not apologizing for the fact that we're defending quality lab services in this province. We know that the members opposite wanted to outsource to multinational corporations on labs and on laundry, but on this side of the House we know that it's very important for Albertans just like Anne, the nurse practitioner in the gallery, to have quality information that she can rely on no matter where her patients are anywhere in the province. Under this government that's what we've done. We've invested in the things that matter to Albertans.

Mr. Yao: No one can not answer questions like this minister.

Given that this minister has now had the opportunity to learn about the pharmaceutical industry and has learned how efficient and effective our pharmacies are at distributing medications, why is this minister spending time and money on pharmacy infrastructure, to the tune of $36 million, instead of utilizing our free-enterprise pharmacists?

Ms Hoffman: Again, Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to explain that the way that pharmacy works in Alberta is that we work together. We bulk buy. We bring in medications, and we make sure that they're available to all of our facilities. Those drugs need to be manufactured in other facilities and stored in our facilities, so it's important that we have these available. Instead of continuing to fire and outsource, we're investing in the people of Alberta. Obviously, if you can buy or rent, it's more long-term sustainable if you buy and make sure that you've got that asset and you've got those good, long-term jobs. I'm not going to apologize for that. I appreciate that you're coming clean with your ideology, hon. member, but on this side of the House we're standing up for ordinary Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dental Fee Guide

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. More than two decades ago the Conservative government of the day cancelled the Alberta dental fee guide, leaving us as the only province without one. Since then my constituents have been subject to the highest and fastest-rising dental fees across Canada. Canadians in every other province, whether they live in a small town or a big city, have gotten a better deal on dentistry than Albertans. It's been one year since this government brought back the Alberta dental fee guide. Can the Minister of Health please update the House on its impact?

Ms Hoffman: The member is absolutely right that we were the only province that failed to have a fee guide. As a result, our fees were by far the highest of any jurisdiction in Canada, Mr. Speaker, so of course you look at what broke the situation, and you bring in a tool to help fix it. I'm very proud that the college and association of dentists sat down and worked with us on this. They brought forward a recommendation of an 8.5 per cent reduction in fees, which we felt was a very good start. As of today about a third of Alberta dentists are charging in line with that. Before we brought in that guide, only about 6 per cent of Alberta dentists were, so it's definitely a good start.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that dentists are still free to set their own fees, how does the voluntary fee guide actually affect the prices families pay at the dentist?

Ms Hoffman: Again, Mr. Speaker, we worked in partnership with the college of dentists and with their association, and what we came up with was a fee guide for common procedures across Alberta. We want them to come in line rather than being dramatic outliers in the nation. We want to be getting full value for Alberta residents who choose to access dental services in the province, and we want everyone to feel that they can do so. What it is is a tool now for consumers to use. Even myself, when I went to the dentist, I said to the billing agent there: do you charge in line with the fee guide? Of course, I was very pleased when she said yes, but if she didn't, she'd have an opportunity to explain why, and as a consumer I could make a choice if I wanted to stay or go.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the time of the fee guide announcement some critics claimed that it would be too great a burden on dentists' businesses. What has the reaction been from Alberta's dentists?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We knew that it wouldn't be able to snap to a national average overnight, but our plan here is to help Albertans get better informed and get better outcomes for the value that they do pay. Hundreds of dentists have played a role in making sure that they were in line very quickly with the fee guide. As consumers we can continue to use the fee guide as a tool to make sure that we are asking our dentists and using that tool to get full value for ourselves. We're getting greater value outside of the public health care system, and we're also getting greater value within the public health care system and investing in front-line workers. Instead of proposing that we cut 4,000 nurses, on this side we're hiring and protecting those services that Alberta families count on.

Inspiration Award Recipients in Edmonton-Decore

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday, November 23, recipients of the seventh annual inspiration awards were announced at a ceremony in Calgary. Every November during Family Violence Prevention Month the government presents the inspirational awards to honour individuals, organizations, and business leaders who have shown exceptional dedication to violence prevention and to promoting healthy relationships and community safety. I'm proud to say that two individuals from the wonderful riding of Edmonton-Decore were chosen to receive an award: Emma Potter in the area of bullying prevention and Mana Ali in the area of family violence prevention.

Emma Potter is the helplines manager at the Canadian Mental Health Association in Edmonton. She oversees the contact centre, which responds to calls for the Edmonton distress line, 211, the family violence information line, and the bullying helpline. She ensures that staff and volunteers are prepared to respond to clients in great need. She has built links between community organizations and the helplines to ensure that clients get the support they need. Emma has responded to countless calls from those experiencing abuse and has helped them feel heard and supported as they look for a path forward.

Mana Ali was born and raised in Mogadishu, Somalia. In 1991 Mana moved to Canada as a government-sponsored refugee to escape the war. Mana arrived with fluency in English and a degree in English but struggled to find employment. She persevered, and after several years began working at the Edmonton Mennonite Centre for Newcomers, where she has been supporting immigrants with stories much like hers for a long time. Fast-forward to 2018, and you can see that she continues to work tirelessly to help those around her.

The award recipients and nominees demonstrate incredible commitment and leadership in violence prevention. They inspire others to take action and make a difference in their communities. I would like to personally thank both of them for their efforts in building awareness, contributing to violence prevention, and advancing healthy relationships for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Grey Cup 2018

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend Edmonton hosted the 106th Grey Cup. This great city hosted the Ottawa Redblacks from the east and, for the third straight year representing the west, the Calgary Stampeders. Thousands of CFL fans converged from across Canada, celebrating a great season with parties and events throughout the city. Jasper Avenue was hopping.

But it was the big game yesterday that so many Canadians came to see, and, Mr. Speaker, it would appear that for Calgary the third time was the charm. The Calgary Stampeders took an early lead and never let go, defeating the Redblacks 27-16. We saw history made as Calgary's Terry Williams ran 97 yards to the house to close out the second quarter, setting the record for the longest ever touchdown return in Grey Cup history. Bo Levi Mitchell was the game's most valuable player, a crowning achievement in a season that saw him the CFL's most outstanding player. From the party headquarters at the Shaw Conference Centre to a horse riding through the lobby of the Hotel Macdonald, CFL Commissioner Randy Ambrosie told us that it's clear Edmontonians know how to throw a party.

Mr. Speaker, as Calgarians celebrate with their team, there are others who are planning the path to next year's Grey Cup, which is to be hosted in Calgary. As we look to the future, we can see bright days for the CFL and Canada's game, with talks of a 10th team, the Atlantic Schooners, that would see the league become a truly Canadian affair, with teams from coast to coast.

This weekend saw a Spanish-language broadcast of TSN's production of this CFL Grey Cup game, aired on ESPN3 in Mexico. This may lead to future CFL games being played in Mexico.

So as bright days lie ahead for the CFL, we stand today to offer heartfelt congratulations to the Calgary Stampeders on becoming the 2018 Grey Cup champions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

International Day for the Elimination of Violence Against Women

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday, November 25, was the International Day for the Elimination of Violence Against Women. Women's rights activists have observed the 25th of November as a day against gender-based violence since 1981. This date was selected to honour the Mirabal sisters, three political activists from the Dominican Republic who were brutally murdered in 1960. It took another 20 years for the UN to officially designate this important day and invite governments, international organizations, as well as NGOs to join together and organize activities designed to raise public awareness of the issue every year on this date.

Violence against women and girls is the most widespread, persistent, and devastating human rights violation around the globe. The shame, stigma, impunity, and silence that surround the issue means that this violence remains largely unreported. This has adverse effects on women's psychological, sexual, and reproductive health and can affect women at all stages of their life. Some of our sisters are particularly vulnerable to violence: young girls, older women, women that identify as lesbian, bisexual, transgender, or intersex, migrants, refugees, indigenous women, ethnic minorities, women living with HIV, women with disabilities, just to name a few. Here in Alberta we still have some of the highest rates of gender-based violence in the country. We need to do better as a province and a society. Our government is committed to doing that work.

Mr. Speaker, this government is committed to supporting our most vulnerable. We have boosted funding for women's shelters by $15 million to ensure that no woman fleeing violence is turned away. We have invested in more supports for survivors of sexual violence. We have invested in police and court support and crisis assistance in communities. This government has made it easier for survivors of domestic violence to get out of dangerous situations by allowing them to break residential leases without financial penalties. There are many ways in which we as a society can and must support and encourage the strength of women.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Government Policies

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, this past weekend Edmonton hosted the 106th Grey Cup. Football fans from across the country were out in full force to take in the festivities, the parade, the legendary Spirit of Edmonton hospitality suite, and, of course, the game at Commonwealth Stadium, seeing the Calgary Stampeders beat the Ottawa Redblacks 27-16.

But, Mr. Speaker, in this House another game is under way, played by a team that I'll call the NDP Government Rams and Team Liberal Elite. For the NDP Rams, their slippery fingers have been continuously dropping the ball, racking up the debt, growing that points deficit, and getting scorned by the Alberta fans. The Liberals' quarterback, an elite named Trudeau, keeps intercepting pipeline plans time and time again. The Rams' defence has only been to play footsie with Trudeau, without mounting any credible defence to the quarterback's game plan to give lip service to pipelines but obstruct all efforts for any touchdowns and field goals.

The Rams' total offence has amounted to a 10-day wine ban on their affiliated NDP team in B.C. As a result, the Rams keep racking up penalties. The flags on the play fly as they keep getting caught offside with everyday Albertans. Once in a while the Rams land a first down, which results in their Premier quarterback doing a touchdown dance. The NDP Government Rams have been caught holding: holding down the economy with their carbon tax. They even got an illegal procedure call over their power purchase agreement boondoggle. If only they could land a safety, but they keep coming up short with more credit downgrades. Team NDP keeps getting called for unsportsmanlike conduct because of name-calling, even going as far as labelling opponents as sewer rats, nearly earning some members a game ejection.

Albertans love a football bandwagon, but the NDP Government Rams are a disaster. Albertans will chalk this up to experience and never jump on this NDP bandwagon ever again.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Support for Seniors

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today to speak of the great work seniors do in my constituency of Calgary-Bow and around this province. Whether it is through their hard work, volunteerism, or community involvement, seniors contribute to this province every day. In my own constituency we have formed an advocacy group made up of seniors, social workers, police, firefighters, Alberta Health Services, and my constituency office called the seniors constellations. We meet on a monthly basis to discuss issues affecting seniors in the community. On Friday over 100 people attended a workshop about safety in the home. We also discussed fraud and consumer protection. It is my privilege to know and partner with so many seniors in Calgary.

Our government invests close to $3 billion into senior supports every year. We protected the seniors' benefit program through tough economic times. We launched a home repair program to help seniors age in place in their home and communities close to friends and family. In June we invested $20 million in the Temple community to help provide 70 supportive units for people over 55. And in 2017 we passed important legislation through the Alberta Human Rights Act that prohibited discrimination based on age.

Mr. Speaker, I am concerned for the calls for cuts from the other side of the House. Cuts will have a direct and negative impact on our seniors. We even heard a member opposite say that it is going to hurt. Seniors have contributed so much to the success of this province, which is why I will proudly fight for them every day. I want seniors in my constituency and across this province to know that I and this government have your back.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I recognize the Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 7(8) I'm rising to provide notice to the Assembly that the daily Routine shall extend beyond 3 p.m.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Out-of-country Health Service Reimbursement

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to address the situation that one of my constituents is facing when dealing with Alberta Health and the out-of-country health services application process. After exhausting all options for treatment in Alberta, Mr. Manchulenko, a resident of Highwood, travelled to Germany to have a 3-level M6 ADR lumbar surgery performed. As a result of this surgery Mr. Manchulenko is pain free, off medication, and has returned to work. Mike is back at work serving his community as a firefighter and putting his life on the line for all Albertans.

The surgery came at a cost of $60,000, so, as he's entitled to, he made a claim through the out-of-country health services application process for reimbursement. Unfortunately, what should have been a clear-cut case was anything but that. Mr. Manchulenko submitted his application in September 2015, and after dealing through all bureaucratic mess, his application was ultimately denied. I've been advocating on behalf of my constituents since he submitted his application. Unfortunately, the Health minister has not stepped in to address this issue. In 2018, two and a half years after the initial application, OCHS sent a cheque for $8,000, far less than the cost of surgery. It turns out that he will have to continue to fight to get his rightful reimbursement.

Mr. Speaker, there is no reason that this constituent of mine should have to fight for this. He is no longer a burden on the health care system, he is off medication, and he is contributing to the Alberta economy again. In fact, the cost of $60,000 that the Alberta government is responsible for covering is far less than the cost it would have been bearing if Mr. Manchulenko did not receive the surgery in Germany. I call on the Minister of Health to do the right thing and help him and direct her department to reimburse Mr. Manchulenko for the cost of the treatment out of country.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Notices of Motions

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to give oral notice of a bill for the next Order Paper, that bill being Bill 30, the Mental Health Services Protection Act, which will be sponsored by the hon. Minister of Health.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. This is on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Foothills. Mr. Panda is to ask the government the following question, due date 53: how many megawatt hours of coal-fired electricity has the Alberta Electric System Operator imported, broken down by month, from generators located in the state of Montana from April 1, 2016, to May 31, 2018?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I would seek the guidance of the table officers, but I don't believe that that is a notice of motion. That will be a little while later.

Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I just want to table the appropriate number of copies of two letters I am in possession of, one from the mayor of Okotoks to the Minister of Service Alberta and his subsequent response to the mayor of Okotoks.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members? The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a letter that was written to our caucus by Dr. John T. Huang, MD. He's a select delegate for ophthalmologists and with the Alberta Medical Association.

The Speaker: Same subject matter? Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite five copies of a package of letters written by kids who attend the Langdon and area senior high school in my riding. I'm proud to represent these kids, who are showing such an interest in civic engagement so early in life. I know that many of the students from this school have already taken the time to write the Minister of Education about their concerns.

Langdon and area is a thriving community that is focused on small-town living and a simpler way of life, where everyone knows their neighbours and kids stay out until the street light come on. Many nights you can hear people gathering around the fire pit. This community is one of the fastest growing in Alberta, with 30 per cent of its population under the age of 15. It is also only one of two communities of its size without a high school and will continue to be stretched past its limits with student growth.

I introduced this group of concerned residents earlier, who are here today to put faces to the hundreds of letters the minister has been receiving highlighting the need for this high school. I want to sincerely thank the Minister of Education today for taking the time to speak with this group earlier. I have the five requisite copies.

Thank you.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we're at points of order. The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Nixon: Well thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's great to be back this week. Another day, another point of order. I will try to be brief.

I rise on 23(h), (i), and (j), particularly language to create disorder, in regard to comments made by the Finance minister at the time that I called the point of order to the member who was asking the question, which escapes me at the moment, Mr. Speaker, but you probably have the Blues. My focus will be on the Finance minister.

The Finance minister very directly referred to us as drunken sailors, not that we "spend like drunken sailors" or anything like that, very directly as drunken sailors. Now a couple of things to that, Mr. Speaker. First of all, none of us are intoxicated on this side of the House; I can assure you of that. I know the hon. Finance minister probably has talked the most about his love for beer in this Assembly. I won't speak for him, but I will make it clear that we are not.

And in addition to that, most of us are not sailors either. You may have noticed that we come from a landlocked province, so sailing is not the most common hobby. In fact, I think that if we were not land locked, we would have a lot fewer problems inside this Chamber.

With that said, I can see the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville is heckling during a point of order. That is the point. That is where this government has ended up. We continue to be in this spot. So I think the government should do the right thing, Mr. Speaker, to rise and apologize and withdraw.

The Speaker: Thank you. I think I've got it.
The Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't think the minister was out of order in his comments. You know, the Free Dictionary online has defined the expression to spend like a drunken sailor as meaning "to spend money freely and frivolously." The minister was clearly engaging in debate about the matter of spending responsibly or not, as the case may be.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I would be quite curious and surprised to believe that the members opposite didn't have concerns with the previous government in terms of their choices, you know, of flying around Alberta as if it was a private jet. Certainly, if the sky palace wasn't spending like drunken sailors, I'm not really sure what is. The expression has been used several times in the Assembly, often by the Minister of Finance, including on October 29 and November 19, when no point was made. Curiously, Heather Forsyth used the same expression when discussing the previous government's fiscal track record during question period on March 26, 2015, when she told the Premier at that time: "I think we should make something very clear. We're in the fiscal situation because of your government spending like drunken sailors."

The Speaker: I think I got your message as well, hon. minister.

Member for Calgary-Hays, is there a really new – I'm prepared to make a ruling on this.

Mr. McIver: Yes. Two things. One, the minister referred directly to us and not through the chair, which I believe you will find to be a point of order, and, two, I differ from the House leader from the government. The expression wasn't "spend like drunken sailors." He said: "like those drunken sailors over there" or something close to it if you have the Blues. In other words, that was directly calling a name, completely unparliamentary. The only right thing to do is to stand up, apologize, and withdraw those comments. I believe this is probably a simple one for you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Let me just read for those of you who were captured by this moment. I'm not going to read it all.

The member is right. We have Q2 update this week, and I will tell Albertans where we are with regard to the first six months of this budget year and how we're staying on budget. We're doing a better job than the drunken sailors on that side.

The Minister of Finance is normally a very gentle, respectful member of this House. I think that in an earlier comment, though, I did also hear that he made a statement about insider details. On this particular matter, again, we've talked many times: context, context, context. Yes, I have heard the phrase "drunken sailors" used in this Chamber before, but I think in this particular context it was unnecessary. I believe there was a point of order and would ask that the minister withdraw the comment.

Ms Larivee: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, on behalf of the minister I will withdraw that comment.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Orders of the Day

Written Questions

[The Acting Clerk read the following written question, which had been accepted]

Power Purchase Agreements

Q5. Mr. Panda asked that the following question be accepted.
As of May 31, 2018, how many power purchase agreements remain in place, and what is the expiry date of each remaining power purchase agreement?

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Montana Coal-fired Electricity

Q4. Mr. Panda asked that the following question be accepted.
How many megawatt hours of coal-fired electricity has the Alberta Electric System Operator imported, broken down by month, from generators located in the state of Montana from April 1, 2016, to May 31, 2018?

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm disappointed the hon. Government House Leader wants to reject my question on how much coal-fired electricity is being imported from the state of Montana in the United States of America into Alberta. Now, the question of coal-fired electricity imports in light of our own coal-fired electricity phase-out was brought to my attention earlier this year by a number of Albertans. It was further made clear to me that there was something to this when during the budget estimates debate for the Department of Energy on April 9 – you can refer to Hansard page RS-739 – the now Minister of Service Alberta and the Member for Calgary-Currie asked the Minister of Energy:

I get questions saying that the government is buying coal power from Montana because we're phasing out our coal power. Is that true, Minister?

to which the Minister of Energy responded:

No. That's the famous Facebook false facts. Yeah, I've seen that on Facebook as well. It's talking about 196 megawatts of coal-fired electricity from Montana, and it's absolutely false. The Alberta government does not purchase coal-fired electricity from Montana under any arrangement.

That's what the minister said, Madam Speaker. The Minister of Energy went on to elaborate about the Montana Alberta Tie line.

Enbridge has said that the project was for connecting wind energy in Montana to Alberta's demand for power.

Madam Speaker, one needs to watch the words the minister has used here. The minister has used the terms "the Alberta government does not purchase coal-fired electricity," and to that, I would concur that the government does not purchase the electricity for Albertans.

But, Madam Speaker, the minister never refuted the Alberta Electric System Operator, the AESO, or Enbridge, the operators of the Montana Alberta Tie line, from purchasing coal-fired electricity from Montana. When Albertans say that Alberta is buying coal-fired power from Montana, Albertans are talking about Alberta as a whole, beyond just the government. They're talking about everything and everyone who makes up the province. The average Albertan does not know the complex terms to refer to corporate bodies like the AESO or use the legal speak the Minister of Energy used at the budget estimates. They talk about Alberta in the broadest general sense.

Hearing the minister make this assertion at the budget estimates, I investigated. I had my people call Enbridge, and Enbridge said: yes; coal-fired electricity moves across the line. The Montana Alberta Tie line has a rated capacity of 400 megawatts. Given that there's only 189 megawatts of wind power connected to this transmission line between the Canada-USA border and the substation near Great Falls, Montana, and given that on multiple occasions this year the AESO was drawing more than 189 megawatts from Montana – therefore, some of those extra megawatts had to be coming from coal-fired electricity.

On May 29, 2018, I asked the Minister of Energy in question period about the electricity coming in from Montana – it can be found on page 1275 in the Hansard – and the minister again demurred, saying:

It is a private contract. I can't remember the number of kilowatts. It's a very small contract between a private operator and Montana.

The minister went on:

I could delve into it and see what I could find out, but I'm guessing that when it's a private contract, it's not any business of the government.

When asked if Montana's coal-fired electricity will enjoy a prominent, low-cost place of privilege in the forthcoming Alberta capacity market, the minister said,

I appreciate the question, but it is misinformed and not totally full of facts.

I was not satisfied with the minister's answer, Madam Speaker, so I submitted this written question. If the NDP is truly serious about their climate leadership plan, the importation of coal-fired electricity to Alberta represents a serious piece of carbon leakage to Montana to backstop an electricity system that is going for 30 per cent renewables. We know the wind doesn't always blow and the sun doesn't always shine. That's why baseload from generators of coal and natural gas is needed. So how about it? How much coal-fired electricity are we importing from Montana?

When AESO appeared before the Public Accounts Committee on the 6th of November, 2018, page PA-760 of Hansard, the question was put to Mr. Michael Law, the senior vice-president and chief operating officer, who responded:

Electricity flows that occur on interties are managed by the Alberta Electric System Operator, but we do not have ownership of or have any insight into the origin of those original flows. So we do not track the source of those power flows, whether they are from renewables or from coal.

I would submit to you, Madam Speaker, that as much as the government of Alberta does not know and as much as the AESO does not know, at least the AESO has those commercial relationships with Montana's equivalent independent system operator and Enbridge and could at least make the ask for the information. This is important. We are shutting down our own coal-fired power plants. Westmoreland Coal, the U.S. company, was not compensated by the NDP government, and they have now filed a NAFTA, which is USMCA now, challenge for $500 million, affecting taxpayers across all of Canada because of this NDP government's action. Not only Albertans but Canadians from coast to coast to coast are going to pay, or at least they're on the hook, for this $500 million.

Meanwhile, in December 2017 a 60 million tonne expansion of Westmoreland Coal's Rosebud mine was approved in Montana in order to serve the 2,100-megawatt Colstrip power plant in eastern Montana. Madam Speaker, that is a 2,100-megawatt coal-fired power plant, which is a size of significance, and they're adding 19 more years of coal mining to fuel a power plant that is bigger than any power plant in Alberta. You know what? Actually, the governor of that state of Montana is a Democrat. He's not even Republican, and they're building such a massive coal-fired power plant. It's not fair to close our mines and plants and then create carbon leakage to Montana and create a fly ash shortage in Alberta's construction sector.

That's why this written question is so important. I hope I made my case and ask the hon. Government House Leader or the minister to reconsider the advice they have received.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I don't mean to be argumentative, but I think this question portrays a fundamental lack of understanding of how Alberta's electrical system works. All of the data clearly shows that the overwhelming majority of power consumed in Alberta was and is generated here compared to overall Alberta demand. In 2016 Alberta's grid was a net importer of only three megawatts on average over all the hours of the year. At peak times private operators, not government, to be clear, but private operators in Alberta, import power. They do so to ensure that Albertans have a reliable source of electricity. But let me repeat: all of the data clearly shows that the overwhelming majority of power consumed in Alberta was generated here.

The source of the power consumed in Alberta is almost wholly determined by the mix of sources in Alberta's electricity system. Madam Speaker, the Alberta Electric System Operator, or AESO, tracks the amount of electricity imported into Alberta from other jurisdictions month to month. It also tracks the amount of electricity exported by Alberta to other jurisdictions. That includes imports and exports between Montana and Alberta. AESO can tell us, for example, that in September of 2016 private operators exported 9,969 megawatts to Montana but that they imported 7,094 megawatts from Montana in the same month, almost 3,000 megawatts less. What AESO does not do, however, is track every individual electron of electricity generated in Montana that might subsequently be exported to Alberta because, of course, to do so is impossible and to attempt to do so would be absurd. There is simply no way of distinguishing one electron from another in terms of whether it was generated by coal versus wind versus hydro versus gas.

Before the opposition goes further into undermining trade with our neighbours to the south, let's be clear. Montana has all of these sources in their electricity supply. But the important point here is that it isn't how the system works. To differentiate the source of electrons coming into Alberta in that way would require a separate line from each facility in Montana to come to Alberta separately. That would, of course, be extremely expensive for Alberta's consumers. I certainly hope that this is not the vision of a future that the opposition has for our utility consumers, but at this point it's not surprising.

In 2013 our first international intertie was built when Enbridge invested in a line between Montana and Alberta. They said explicitly that they were building the intertie in order to bring low-cost excess wind energy from Montana into Alberta. In fact, I'll read from their corporate social responsibility report. "Our first power transmission project – the 300-[megawatt] Montana-Alberta Tie-Line – went into service in 2013, supporting the electric transmission needs of new wind power facilities in north-central Montana and strong power demand in Alberta."

In fact, because coal power in the United States is no longer competitive against lower cost, cleaner gas power, Montana's coal power has fallen in recent years. Indeed, the proportion of its power from coal has been lower than that in Alberta. There is no other line from Montana into Alberta.

We have seen rounds and rounds of rhetoric from the opposition claiming that Alberta is importing coal power from Montana, and now, apparently distrusting Enbridge, they want an accounting of exactly how much coal power we have imported. I'm not sure why they are so keen to argue with Enbridge's previous statements on that matter, but regardless the simple answer is that this is just not how the system works. Even if we had all that info at our fingertips, I'm not sure that it's a precedent we want to set. Imagine if other jurisdictions started demanding a specific accounting of exactly which facility supplied the fuel for a local gas station or exactly which farmer's wheat was used to bake a particular loaf of bread.

In closing, Madam Speaker, I'm sorry, but the information the opposition is seeking is impossible to provide. Therefore, we have no choice but to deny their request.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Yes, I'd like to speak in favour of this question here from my hon. colleague. I think it's actually very important to know how many megawatt hours of electricity are coming from coal-fired generators in the state of Montana. We know that there is power crossing the border – and that's fine – but I think it's important that we have that knowledge of what is coming from coal-fired generators down in Montana.

Obviously, this government brought in the carbon tax and has heavily taxed the coal that's being burned in coal-fired generators in Alberta. They've also of course accelerated the shutdown of coal-fired generating plants, and it's cost Albertans over a billion dollars to phase out the coal. If we have a situation here where we're shutting down coal-fired generating in Alberta but buying coal-fired generated electricity from Montana, I think Albertans deserve to know how much that is.

I note that the minister just finished speaking about it, saying that we can't tell how much is coming in or out or where it's coming from or anything. I don't know. I would think that these generating plants actually have some sort of meter to measure what's going out. If you have a meter to see what's going out and you have a bill going to somebody that has to buy that power, I would think that it should be relatively easy to calculate.

It has nothing to do with, as she mentioned, undermining trade. I mean, it's absurd to suggest that this is undermining trade. This is simply a matter of getting the facts for Albertans, and I think Albertans deserve to know what is coming out of Montana coal-fired generators.

You know, we've seen here where Westmoreland Coal was not compensated by the NDP government and has now filed a NAFTA challenge for $500 million. That's affecting taxpayers from all across Canada, Madam Speaker. I mean, the whole situation that this government has created around coal-fired generating in Alberta by the early shutdown of these coal-fired generating plants is costing taxpayers billions of dollars. I think that why it's so important to have this information is because of the cost that Alberta has burdened taxpayers with with this early shutdown of the coal-fired generating plants.

We know that some of the plants were about to be – you know, their lifespan was to run out anyways, and the plan with the federal government was to wait for their timeline to run out anyways. That wouldn't have cost taxpayers any money. But, of course, this government decided to take some of our newest coal-fired generating plants and shut them down early so that the companies would lose money, the companies that had in good faith built these coal-fired generating plants. Obviously, not being able to recover their input costs, their investment costs, they needed to be compensated, and of course, because of this government's actions, taxpayer money has had to go to these coal-fired generators.

Now, Madam Speaker, it seems like maybe the government thinks this is some sort of burden or something, but I think that maybe there's a problem with transparency here. I think they probably do not want to admit how much is being bought from coal-fired generators in the U.S. I know the minister talked about how the net exchange isn't that much, but if the net isn't that much, that's somewhat irregardless if we're buying massive amounts of coal-fired generated electricity, bringing that into Alberta at certain times of the day or at certain times of the month or whatever. Even though there's electricity going back, that's irregardless. The fact remains that we need to know how much coal-fired generated electricity is coming into Alberta, and I don't think that's too much to ask. Obviously, we need a way to have a steady supply of power. If we have to get that from Montana, then I guess that's the situation, but we need to know where that power is being generated in Montana. We don't want to see the people of Alberta and the companies of Alberta out of power at any point. We want reliability, and reliability is important, obviously, in the electricity market.

Madam Speaker, this is a simple question. Like I say, I have to believe that anybody that's selling electricity has some way to gauge it, some way, some metering system to figure out exactly what's going back and forth and where it's coming from. It isn't like, you know, there's wind power generation in Montana and coal-fired generating power in Montana and they just push it all together in one big lump sum and then send it across the border without metering it until it comes together. I'm sure it's metered as it comes off each plant. That's the only thing that makes sense.

This government has caused an enormous amount of hardship in Alberta because of their power boondoggles. What's happened, Madam Speaker, is that the first time the government brought anything to do with electricity before this Legislature, they messed it up from the start, and then ever since then they've been trying to play catch-up and trying to patch up the mistakes that they've made all the way along. Each one of these mistakes has cost Albertans lots of money in electricity, like I say, over a billion dollars in the coal phase-out alone. Now, of course, we've got a NAFTA challenge for $500 million because of this government's actions, and we're closing out near-new coal plants and paying billions of dollars out to those companies to shut down these plants. In return, these companies either have to retrofit or they have to build natural gas generators so that we can backstop the wind and solar.

Madam Speaker, none of this makes any sense. Again, this government has over and over again been making huge mistakes when it comes to electricity in Alberta, and each of these mistakes – I mean, they put a price cap on electricity, 6.8 cents a kilowatt hour, when electricity was 3 cents a kilowatt hour. Obviously, they knew there were some problems coming, and after three and a half years we know who's responsible for these problems. This government seems to want to blame previous governments for everything, but after three and a half years sooner or later they're going to have to take responsibility for their own actions. I think it's time that this government accepts responsibility for what they've done and admits that they've made huge mistakes when it comes to electricity in Alberta, and these mistakes, of course, cost Albertans billions of dollars.

Again, I don't think there's any problem with the government being able to get this broken down so that we can find out about this electricity from Montana, where it's being generated. Again, it only makes sense that these generators have meters, and somebody has to be keeping track of how much electricity is going back and forth. The minister used some numbers, even, on how much electricity is going back and forth. Now it's just a matter of breaking down where it's coming from.

Again, I think this question should be answered by the government. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very, very grateful to the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills for bringing this forward. I think it's probably worth a little bit of a trip down memory lane, and the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky had already started us on that, but let's just start with a couple of things. This government changed us to a capacity market. That was their decision, and as we went through the entire process, all of us on this side, in fact all Albertans could see this intense puzzle being put together that started initially with the destruction of the system that we already had. One of those was getting rid of the electricity police that actually monitors this in the first place, the MSA.

Even more importantly, when we skip ahead a couple of months, a couple of many, many late nights of discussion and debate around this issue, we found out that the taxpayer, the ratepayer in Alberta was on the hook for a grand total, at least at this point, of $4 billion because of the boondoggle of this government. Putting all of the other things aside, that in itself – you know, I just had a school group in here today from Langdon looking to build a school, that they have been working on for the last four years, to find out why they're not at the top of the list, why they're on the unfunded list, and why they keep getting moved around. Well, I can easily tell you that when you have a boondoggle of that level, there are going to be people that suffer. Langdon is one of them.

The rate riders that were on the electricity grid as it was before for the people helped to mitigate any issues that were going on in the electricity market, and then the government brought in a 6.8-cent cap that hides absolutely everything that's going on, and I can guarantee you that that's why the minister cannot give us any numbers. We have electricity right now going back and forth on a tie-in that has existed for some time. It's not like this is new information.

You know, what I find absolutely mind-boggling is that we shut down our own coal-fired, but now we're buying even more from the United States. How is that possible? We shut down our own excellent, high-functioning, extremely efficient coal operations here, creating a $4 billion boondoggle to the ratepayer, and now we can't get a straight answer on how much we're paying for coal-fired electricity that's coming from Montana into the province of Alberta, Madam Speaker. How is that even remotely okay? All we're asking for is to have some clarity on how it's broken down month to month so that the ratepayer understands what's going on.

We've had money that had been paid to the Balancing Pool right off the bat, $750 million to the Balancing Pool, because of the mess-up from the government on the PPAs, because they didn't read their binders when the information came to them, or at least that's what was told to us in here. Then all of a sudden the Alberta ratepayer is on the hook for that mistake, and now, when we're asking for a clarification, really, in all honesty, a little bit of transparency, we're being told – and I'll try and quote the minister here – that the power is to be determined and that there is a distrust with Enbridge, if I understood correctly. Maybe she can correct me if I misunderstood that, but that was what I understood.

Hopefully, she'll take a chance to correct me on that, but I'm curious how it is that Enbridge could have a relationship with the government, then, and not be able to produce numbers on the amount of electricity that is coming into our province so that we have an understanding of what it is that we're paying for. There's a mandated 30 per cent of renewable energy, they've phased out coal-fired electricity, they're paying out practically brand new coal-fired facilities for $1.1 billion, and the minister had said how we have to buy from the United States at certain times because of the way the electricity boosts up during the day. Okay. That's probably true. However, is there a possibility that we could have provided that for ourselves had we not phased out our coal-fired in the first place? It's just a question.

I just find the whole thing ironic, that we're buying coal-fired from somebody. Does anybody else in here find that ironic, Madam Speaker? Even to say the words out loud seems absolutely disastrous, and I think anybody who's listening to this is just really questioning the ability of this government to make decisions about the energy sector at all.

While we're on the subject of Enbridge, I have another question, not related to this, necessarily, about the pipeline. I'm curious about that pipeline. Maybe the minister could fill us in on that, too. That pipeline is weeks away from being done. I'm just curious how that tie-in is going and when that capacity is going to be online. We haven't heard about that either on line 3, the Enbridge line 3. Just curious. Just thought I'd bring it up since we're talking about Enbridge. It'd be nice to know that that capacity is actually going to be available when the government says it is. But then again, maybe we're just not supposed to ask those questions. Evidently, it doesn't really matter how much electricity is going from one end to the other because it's all hidden under this 6.8-cent cap on electricity, and the rest of us are supposed to just sit here and trust the government that they've got our backs when it comes to electricity. Good luck.

When you take away signals from a market, a market will become distorted as a result of not getting those signals. What happens when you put a cap on a capacity market like this is that you remove the signals from the industry as to how they're supposed to react. It doesn't matter whether it's renewables. It doesn't matter whether it's coal-fired, cogeneration, or any of those things. When you remove the signals, the market is not able to respond.

When a minister in this Legislature is unable to provide numbers on a piece of infrastructure that provides electricity to this province and is not able to update the House, which is basically all that the hon. member is asking for, it leads us to great concern that the government doesn't know what they're doing. It's a simple request for an update. I could understand it if the minister said, "Give me a week" or "Give me a couple of days; I'll get back to you with that." That would have been a reasonable response, very reasonable. But, unfortunately, even with having given the question, with giving time, with trying to be understanding about what is going on – I'll tell you that Albertans don't get it. They are getting their bills right now. They don't get it. They don't understand. Especially – let me tell you – when people start finding out that electricity, coal-fired electricity, is coming from Montana and that we're paying for that to boost our energy, that supposedly has a mandate to bring on renewables that were supposed to cover the amount that was going to be lost by coal-fired in the first place, all of us are sitting here going: what? Honestly, Madam Speaker. I could go on.

You know, the government is planning to tender in June 2018 to procure over half of its energy from solar power. I've said this a hundred times in here: I love solar power. I have 40 panels on my house. I think it's fantastic. I love it. However, the way that it works is that when my solar power panels aren't working because the sun is not shining, I am dependent upon the grid. The sun doesn't always shine, and the wind does not always blow. And according to the Canada Solar Industries Association solar comes in at 6.0 cents per kilowatt hour. Isn't that interesting? That's below the cap.

Interestingly, the Independent Power Producers Society of Alberta indicates that the 2016 wholesale price of electricity averaged at 1.7 cents per kilowatt hour. If I'm not mistaken, there is a payment that has to happen when we're below that 6.8 cents. We are dinged for that. The Alberta ratepayer pays the difference when it does not go to that 6.8-cent cap. The minister had mentioned that before when it was coming in at 3.7 cents per kilowatt hour. I think it was – what? – about eight months ago. It was some sort of great buy-in into the grid. That meant that the rest of the grid was being subsidized for that 6.8 cents, but you wouldn't know that, Madam Speaker, because it's hidden under the cap. So I would really, really love an explanation. How is it that this government, first of all – I mean, there's an election coming up fairly soon here. I'd like to know how the government is going to be able to explain the PPA debacle, $4 billion of unnecessary spending because they messed up the file. How are they going to explain it?

Then, on top of that, I mean, I'd love to know how the folks from Hanna feel, the ones who lost their jobs because of the coal mine phase-outs.

Mr. Nixon: Out in the cold.

Mrs. Aheer: Out in the cold, right? How would they feel knowing that a percentage of our energy in this province is being boosted through coal-fired coming from our friends to the south? Just curious.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak?

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to WQ 4. The whole issue here is that we would like to know: how many megawatt hours of coal-fired electricity has the Alberta Electric System Operator imported from outside of Alberta, specifically from the state of Montana?

Madam Speaker, this government sometimes makes some very poor decisions. I know that if there is one constituency in the province of Alberta that has been hit by those poor decisions when it comes to electricity, it's my constituency. Presently in my constituency I have both Westmoreland Coal as well as the Genesee power plant. Should I be successful in running in the next election, my new constituency of Drayton Valley-Devon will also include the Sundance and the Keephills power plants along with the coal mining that goes along with those power plants. This question is us asking the government if they can provide us with the numbers to try to explain how much of the electricity that is coming into Alberta is from the Montana-Alberta tie-line. Enbridge are the owners of the Alberta-Montana tie-line. We need to be able to understand and we want to be able to confirm how much coal-fired electricity moves across this intertie.

Now, we know that about 189 megawatts of wind power are installed along the Montana-Alberta tie-line. We also know that with the 30 per cent renewable energy target, there is also going to be solar. Madam Speaker, the fact that we have renewables and solar and wind provides some real problems for the province of Alberta because neither of those are baseload energy. When the wind doesn't blow, wind does not create electricity. When the sun doesn't shine, the solar panels do not create electricity. We find ourselves in a situation in Alberta where this government has actually refused to look at alternatives that would actually be renewable and baseload and, instead, by looking at solar and wind and phasing out the coal-burning power plants in my constituency, have forced us into going towards a capacity market where we have peaker power plants. We pay companies not to generate electricity but for the capacity to generate electricity when the solar and the wind are not producing electricity.

Madam Speaker, in my constituency they struggled when this government said that we need to phase out the best coal-burning electrical generating plants almost anywhere in the world because of health concerns. Yet when I went to the West Central Airshed Society and I looked up the facts and figures, they have had a continuous monitoring of air in my constituency for over 30 years. In that 30-year period of time we have quintupled the amount of oil and gas and coal activity in my constituency, yet we have today better air quality than we had 30 years ago. The reasoning that they gave us for phasing out the coal-burning power plants was specious.

Madam Speaker, I have talked to many constituents in my constituency that happened to bump into a couple of German engineers. Why was Germany sending engineers into my constituency? Because Germany is moving away from wind and solar. They're going back to coal. Where do they go to find the cleanest burning coal plants in the world? To Alberta, to my constituency.

We find ourselves in this Keystone Kop operation where we now have a Montana-Alberta tie-line that is rated at 300 megawatts of capacity, where 189 megawatts of wind power could potentially be going into that line, but because it is renewable and because it is not baseload, when it is not producing, we now have to go and get electricity from someplace else. And where do we go? Not to my constituency, not to Alberta-created electricity, not to the cleanest coal-burning facilities in North America. No. We couldn't do that. We couldn't create the jobs here in Alberta. We couldn't maintain the tax load and the tax base for my constituency. No. We go to Montana.

I just don't understand it. When I go to my constituency and I tour the Westmoreland Coal facility and I talk to the people that have got good, high-paying, quality jobs at Westmoreland Coal – and they're now looking at those jobs being phased out – and then they ask me why it is that this government would prefer to pay Montanans rather than Albertans, it makes no sense.

Importing coal-fired electricity to Alberta represents a serious piece of what we call carbon leakage to Montana. In other words, Madam Speaker, we have a situation where, under the guise of environmental arguments, trying to deal with the climate issue – everyone in this House, I believe, supports the whole concept, the idea of climate change. We don't understand how this government believes that climate change ends at the Alberta border, that there's this big wall, that it doesn't make any difference whether it's produced in Montana or Ontario or China or India or Japan. We have the capacity to create electricity and to do it in the most environmentally friendly way of anywhere in the world when it comes to coal, but we choose to go down to Montana.

They didn't even consult with the county of Parkland. I talked with the mayor of the county of Parkland, and he explained to me that the changeover from coal to natural gas is going to attack the tax base of the county of Parkland by between 25 and 30 per cent and that they never had one conversation with this government.

Madam Speaker, what is as perplexing to me is when I realize that there are actually renewable sources of electricity that we could be pursuing that are actually baseload energy. I know that I have talked with one company that is working in Germany, that's in Japan, that's in Holland, that wanted to start deep-well, geothermal electricity, wanted to start it in my constituency yet could not get the ear of this government. They have identified 25,000 abandoned and orphaned wells that they believe will provide the heat and will provide the electricity for this province, which alone would meet our 30 per cent renewable rates, yet this government would not talk to them.

Madam Speaker, it is not an unreasonable question to ask. How much of the electricity going through this Montana-Alberta tie-line is based on coal? The minister says that it's impossible to be able to provide.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I've had a request to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests. We need unanimous consent. Is anyone opposed to that request?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you guests from the Alberta Federation of Rural Electrification Associations, who are here today in support of my motion to promote long-term viability and sustainability of REAs and other co-operatively organized utility associations. The AFREA represents member-owned co-operatives that distribute electricity throughout rural Alberta. These co-ops have distributed electricity for over 75 years. Here today are President Dan Astner, Vice-president Charles Newell, and Vice-president Robert Peyton. The board has been instrumental in bringing the important topic of REA sustainability to my attention.

Also joining us today is CEO Al Nagel, who has worked in the electricity industry for over 50 years. Al has been with the AFREA for the past 10 years. I ask my guests to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Debate Continued

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the question? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this afternoon to address this issue that I think is a pertinent question raised by the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills. Now, as I listen to the banter back and forth, obviously when you have that opportunity, you have the opportunity of being able to think about what the questions are that haven't been answered. One of the comments that was made by the hon. Minister of Energy was that she just had no way of knowing. The first thing that comes to my mind is that – and I think that my hon. colleague has stated it correctly – well, this is not a Mickey Mouse organization. These are multimillion, hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of investments. You don't think that they know exactly where those electrons are being sold to or being created from? It's absolutely ridiculous and ludicrous to think that that would be an answer from a minister of the Crown.

Now, I guess the next question that I think would probably be asked is: if the minister is going to at least establish that she can't figure out whether or not it's coming from renewables or from coal-fired, Madam Speaker, when are we receiving those electrons? When are we receiving that top-up that we need? I can guarantee you that if we're receiving it in the evening or after the sun goes down, we can certainly rule out that it's coming from solar. On this side of the House we're getting lots of yeas; on the other side, silence. That I think is maybe the start. Now, remember, these questions were provided to the minister days in advance so that we could have an answer. Her answer was: I just don't know. You know, it could have been: stay tuned; we'll get back to you. I mean, that seems to be the answer that we usually receive. But this was: no, we don't know.

Now, the other question that I was thinking about is: whatever that timeline is that we're receiving it, we're getting that top-up, is it feasible to think that if we can't actually receive those electrons, that electricity, at that time from our renewables, is it conceivable to think that we would be able to receive electricity from Montana's renewables? I think that it makes sense that if we can't get it done with our renewables here, it is pretty sure that they can't get it done with their renewables down there as well. Again, the sun doesn't always shine. The wind doesn't always blow.

We get back to the central question. The reason why we're asking this question – and we've dug deep into this before – is that this government has made a policy choice. Now, hindsight is always 20/20 vision. We're starting to see the outcome of those policy decisions. The outcome is that they have decided that coal-fired is not something that they want to do here. That's their decision. They're in government. But they don't get to choose the outcomes, and the outcome is that that baseload has been retired way too soon, and because of that we're having to buy from Montana.

Because they don't get to choose the policies for Montana, they don't get to choose whether or not those electrons created down there are from coal or from renewables. This is a decision that they've made, and they need to own it. This is what we're getting to, Madam Speaker. In the event that the NDP government could dictate to Montana and say to them, that no, Montana has to follow their decree about how wrong coal-fired generation is, then we could guarantee and say: “You know what? Carbon leakage: we’re going to fix it. In fact, we do it all over the place; in China, in Germany, in Europe, wherever they’re creating electricity through coal-fired.” But they cannot do that. We always get back to this issue, which is that we create in Canada 1.9 per cent of the GHG emissions throughout this world, and that’s supposed to be leadership that we’re going to be able to pull back some of our, well, get rid of our coal-fired, to tell you the truth.

But what they cannot control is what other jurisdictions are doing, and now we’re seeing that this not very well-thought-out policy and direction is now coming back to haunt them, and that’s why we’re asking the question. That’s why my hon. colleague has asked the question. He recognizes that there is a flaw in the way that they think, a flaw in their strategy. That is that they cannot control whether or not it’s going to be coal-fired generation down in the States, and therefore if we have to buy that – we’ve punished our people from Hanna. We’ve punished our Albertans from Alberta, and we’re in a situation now where we’re rewarding the people from Montana that made a different policy decision. That is something that this government has to take responsibility for, and that’s what we’re trying to establish here, Madam Speaker.

Because of the policy decision they made, they have hurt Albertans. They’ve hurt communities that have these coal-fired plants and they’ve shut them down, and because they shut them down, they’re trying to hide that under the 6.8 cents, which my hon. colleague talked about so eloquently. Yet their answer, Madam Speaker, is that they have no way of telling? Again, the transparency. This government said that they were going to be more transparent, that they were going to be the transparent ones. That is something that this government – and I’m not from that industry, Madam Speaker, but intuitively I can’t understand how they could say that we wouldn’t know where those electrons are coming from. It doesn’t make sense.

Again, I ask the question. It only makes sense intuitively that if we can’t produce it up here with our renewables, wind and solar, when that power is coming in here, I guarantee you that it cannot be coming from renewables down in the States, down in Montana. So if we’ve established that, then the government needs to own up to it and say: “You know what? We probably didn’t think this thing through. We probably didn’t realize that this was going to be the outcome and that we’re going to have to start buying coal-fired from other producers. In reality our program is not working.” Just own up to it. If they’ve made a mistake, own up to it. I actually haven’t heard them ever do that in three and a half years, Madam Speaker, not once where they own up to it.

What we’re talking about now in terms of the macro aspects of this is our electricity prices skyrocketing. You’re not buying that coal-fired electricity at 1.7 cents a kilowatt hour. You’re buying it at premium price because we can’t do it here; therefore, they’re going to charge us premium price. It is a premium dollar that we have to pay for that electron to come up here even though we have the intertie here. It’s still a premium dollar we have to pay because we could not supply it ourselves. When supply and demand don’t meet, the equilibrium price goes up. So we’re in a situation now where not only are they saying, “Well, we’re going to have to buy coal-fired,” which we disagree with here, but they’re going to also pay premium dollar for that coal-fired because they shut down the baseload of Alberta, which is coal-fired.

Once again, if this government has made a policy decision, own up to it, take responsibility for it, and tell Albertans that you’re sorry. That would be the responsible thing to do. I have not heard that from this government, not even once. Now, the sad thing about that is that we see the same kind of issue plaguing every decision this government makes. It chases away businesses, private-sector investment; $36 billion, according to the Conference Board of Canada, left this province in the first two years.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak? Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Dreesen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Again, as was mentioned before, it’s a very simplistic, straightforward question from my colleague from Calgary-Foothills of just having an understanding of the megawatt hours of coal-fired electricity that’s being imported from the United States. It’s a very simplistic, easy answer. It’s just on the NEB website that 47 per cent of our electricity comes from coal here in Alberta, 40 per cent natural gas, 7 per cent wind, 3 per cent hydro, 3 per cent biomass, so there are measurements. It’s simplistic. There are great people that work in the Department of Energy. It has great employees. They do a great job of measuring this type of information.

The fact that the NDP – I’m assuming that they are hiding away from giving out this information due to embarrassment. I think it was talked about earlier that, again, the billion-dollar boondoggle that they’ve had to pay out for phasing out coal plants was a mistake, and we’re seeing that now, where we’re importing a lot of electricity from the United States. They should just take ownership, Madam Speaker, for that bad decision. Ultimately, when you look at the United States, it’s a boon for them. They’re quite happy that they get to export electricity coming up into Alberta.

I would rather and I would assume that everyone in this Assembly would rather that our electricity comes from Alberta resources and from Alberta plants with Alberta workers and our jobs here in Alberta. It makes no sense that we would have to import coal-fired electricity from somewhere else when in Alberta we’re blessed. We sit on a massive, huge coal bed. We’re one of the richest coal areas in the world, and it’s just mind boggling, Madam Speaker, why we’re actually having to do this. Even in my riding, one of the major roads is called the Coal Trail. Alberta has had a great history of using coal. Again, today we use a lot of coal, and we’ll use a lot of coal tomorrow as well. But it’s unfortunate that the NDP decided to make this decision.

Again, the $1.1 billion that they spent to phase out our perfectly good coal-powered plants: it was for an ideology, Madam Speaker. It ultimately made no sense. I would hope that the NDP could see the errors of their ways on this, at least give the information that, again, my good friend from Calgary-Foothills asked for, which is: how much coal-fired electricity is actually coming from the United States? I would hope that through this discussion her colleagues might be able to even encourage her to actually provide this information because I think it makes all of them look like they’re hiding from something, and that’s unfortunate. I don’t think that that is something the members opposite actually want to have done. So I hope that they can come to their senses, Madam Speaker.

I appreciate this opportunity. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak? Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. [interjection]

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I see the hon. member from – I don’t know what riding, to be honest, but she seems very excited to hear me talk, which is great. Hopefully, I won’t disappoint.

Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to rise and speak to the hon. member’s question. I think it was a very reasonable question. I think my caucus members have articulated some pretty good arguments about why the question should be answered. I thank the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, who I think in a matter of moments just here in the Chamber was able to find out some of the answer to the question just by using Google. Google is a wonderful thing.

But I don't think it is unreasonable for the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, who, by the way, is the Energy critic, the shadow minister for Energy, inside this Legislative Assembly, to ask a question. The government's key piece of policy and decision-making process in their time in government in Edmonton is to make decisions that certainly impacted the electricity industry, particularly around coal-fired electricity providers. The fact that we now find out that despite the fact that we see communities like Hanna decimated and other communities in our province go through significant hardship as a result of that decision, we in Alberta are still getting electricity from coal-fired sources despite the fact that basically the whole government's position is that we could not do that any more and it would not work for their environmental agenda, which was the point of carbon leakage that we have expressed in this Assembly.

Now, again, the question is reasonable, and it is a pattern with this government of not answering reasonable questions. As you know, repeatedly I as well as several other colleagues in this place have asked some simple questions about the fact that the government's budget was based on three pipelines being built. Later on they said that it would be okay as long as two of the three pipelines were built. We now know that Keystone XL is gone. We should know that because the Premier was against Keystone from the very beginning. Trans Mountain, the pipeline that they promised would be built, in fact even had celebrations saying that it was a done deal, we now know is on the ropes and very unlikely to be built.

An Hon. Member: Spiked the football.

Mr. Nixon: Yeah. Spiked the football on first down or – sorry – had a touchdown celebration because they got a first down, as the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock said today in his statement, which was a great statement and a great point.

When you ask the government, who has lost two pipelines – their entire budget is based on those pipelines being built and based on Alberta oil, quite frankly, being sold for a considerable amount more than it is now. I'm not sure. The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills would probably know the difference between the Finance minister's projections and where we are at right now, but it's significant. It's – what? – about $30?

Mr. Panda: Easily.

Mr. Nixon: Easily $30. Maybe a $40 difference.

So you ask the Finance minister, who's in charge of our finances: can you stand up and explain to us how that will change your projections, how that will change our deficit, how it will change how much debt Albertans will be on the hook for? He has still not been able to answer that question the entire fall sitting. That's the Finance minister. Now you have the Energy minister, who can't answer a simple question. I actually suspect she can answer the question. I think she's capable of it. That's not my point. My point is that she will not answer the question in the Assembly.

I think Albertans have to be starting to ask themselves: why? Why does this government continue to hide facts from the people of Alberta? The government made a decision to shut down, as the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon pointed out, some of the cleanest coal-fired generators in the world, if not the cleanest, made that decision, left those communities and the people that are employed in that industry hanging, and then has electricity coming into the market from other coal-fired sources. It's reasonable for Albertans to know that and how much that is. It's a reasonable conversation for this Chamber to have.

But when it comes to the NDP government of the day, they clearly keep showing over and over that being reasonable is just not how they're going to operate. They're not interested in being reasonable, Madam Speaker. They're not interested, certainly, in reasonable questions. Anybody who's ever watched question period of late in this place will be able to testify to that. Today was another example: one reasonable question after another, very simple questions about budget and statistical questions along those lines from the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Each time the Deputy Premier got up and did not answer the question, in fact, would not allow the Finance minister to answer the questions about his own budget and his own projections and instead had to answer for him and then gave partisan attacks instead of being able to answer the question.

It's because, as I've said – and I know you know, Madam Speaker – this government can't rely on or defend their record. They can't defend their record. Instead, they will hide things from Albertans. This is another example. Now, I don't blame them for not wanting to talk about this, quite frankly. I think that if we were in government and we had chosen, which we would not have, to go through the process that they did, to just suddenly and rapidly shut down an entire industry and wipe out entire towns in our province and decimate families, we certainly would not want to rise and then point out to them: "Oops. Sorry. We did that, but actually we haven't combatted emissions on the coal side because we still have coal burning."

It's exactly what we said would happen. The jobs left our province because of the carbon tax. We're still creating on the global scale, on this macro issue the same amount of emissions because other jurisdictions are burning coal still. I know that it frustrates the hon. members, but the big neighbour to our south, the United States of America, doesn't have a carbon tax or those types of things. They're not playing by the same rules. That's our biggest competitor and our biggest trading partner. Their most greenest state – most greenest state – Washington, twice now in a referendum has had a carbon tax defeated. If Washington state can't even get a carbon tax in the United States, no state is going to get a carbon tax in the United States.

This government continues to send our industry to have to compete on a global scale with one hand tied behind their back. Emissions continue to still go up or stay the same as they are, maybe lower here. Maybe. We don't know that because there's no reporting mechanism for this government because that's another thing they hide, as the Auditor General pointed out.

Now you've got a government who will do anything to avoid being accountable for their record. So the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills comes and asks a simple, well-researched question – a well-researched question – and the Energy minister can't even be bothered to stand up and answer it in any reasonable way, says that she can't track it, and then launches into a partisan rant. The first clue of politics, for anybody who's followed it for a long time, is that once a government can't even stand up in the Assembly that they hold a majority in and brag about their record or show off their record, that probably means that they have been a complete and utter failure on that issue.

If this is not happening and if this is not a big deal – the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills has not said that he knows for sure; it's why he's asking the question – then the government would be excited to answer it inside this Assembly. Instead, I suspect his point has been proven. They ran away and would not answer the question, would not be accountable to the people of Alberta. That's who they're avoiding. Madam Speaker, they often forget that when we rise in this place, we rise on behalf of 50,000 or 60,000 people that want a question answered, each and every one of us, just like them. That is our responsibility. When they refuse to answer that question, they're refusing to answer the people of Alberta, because our job as representatives is to ask questions.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler has a community inside his constituency that has been absolutely decimated by the policies of this government. Then they find out now that the same product that they produced is probably still being used to produce electricity that we're burning in this province, but the Energy minister cannot be bothered to answer. It's disappointing. It's ridiculous.

As I said before, Madam Speaker, I don't care about the reputation of this government. This government has blown their reputation, and shortly they will face the boss at the ballot box, and I suspect that the boss will fire them. But while they have done that, while they have destroyed their reputation, they have hurt the very people that we were sent here to protect. It's shameful. It's ridiculous, quite frankly. Again, the ministers should take the time and do their job and answer a simple question, because either they can't answer it or they're avoiding answering it. Either way, that's wrong, that's not their role, and it's disappointing.

4:10

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills to close debate.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to thank all of my colleagues on this side of the House who tried again because – if you look at this, I brought this up at the budget estimate stage, asked those questions. No answers. I asked the same question again in QP, and the minister didn't answer those questions, and that's why I gave it by writing and asking a written question and asked this. Probably today – how many of us spoke here? – eight members of the opposition spoke in this House again asking the same question. Is it really that difficult?

Madam Speaker, we are in 2018. It's not that difficult to identify the electrons that flow through that tie-in line. If there is a will, there is a way – I always say that; my dad used to say it – but they don't want to. Why? Because they want to hide that information, because they implemented job-killing policies in Alberta because of their ideological reasons. Now they realize their mistake. The reason they banned coal-fired electricity in Alberta is to reduce emissions whereas just south of the border the electricity is flying through this tie-in line generated through the same source, which is coal-fired. The government has no answers, so they're trying to hide this information, but at some point the truth will come out.

Albertans are realizing that this government has devastated Albertans and Alberta economically because of their ideological policies. It's Whac-A-Mole policy, we call it: to fix one policy, then they have to bring in another policy. To support their climate change leadership plan, they phased out coal first. They accelerated. They say: okay; the Conservative government federally, the Harper government, has brought in that. Yes, but that was in 2030. The Alberta NDP government accelerated the coal phase-out, including the new plants, which have very low emissions, which have a very high benchmark for clean energy. Those plants are also closed.

As a result, this government is on the hook. They made Albertans pay $2 billion to settle those coal phase-outs and then another $2 billion on the power purchase agreements because they haven't turned back those – when they brought in this climate change plan so that they became unprofitable to some of those coal-fired electric generators, that triggered the returning of power purchase agreements. This government, if they were wise, could have cut the losses for Albertans. They would have accepted that. But because they want to prove someone else wrong, they found this silly Enron clause, and the Deputy Premier stopped the returning of those PPAs. As a result, now we are on the hook for $2 billion more to settle those PPA losses. Two plus two: how much is it? Four billion dollars.

Now, we recently found that U.S. miner Westmoreland, who is producing coal-fired electricity for Alberta, took us to court under NAFTA, so they have a claim filed. That is another $500 million. It's adding up: 4 and a half billion dollars and counting just on this electricity file, and this government still has the nerve to stand up in this House and blame us, that we will fire 4,000 teachers and 4,000 nurses. What would this 4 and a half billion dollars do for Albertans? Madam Speaker, I leave it to you. Even a kindergarten student will know that this government is misleading Albertans. They have blown up 4 and a half billion dollars just on electricity.

On the pipelines – that's the next subject we'll talk about – my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre talked a little bit on that pipeline, too. So this government put all their eggs in one basket and said: okay; we are not going to support Keystone or Northern Gateway, but we'll get the Trans Mountain expansion built. They celebrated many times . . . [Mr. Panda's speaking time expired]

Electricity Price Cap Documents

M17. Mr. Panda moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents, including tables and graphs, prepared between May 5, 2015, and May 31, 2018, in connection with the projections and forecasts used by the government to determine the 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour price cap on electricity.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Albertans are not getting the true picture of the cost of their electricity. It's being hidden behind the 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour price cap. We know from the budget estimates that $74,310,000 has been set aside for 2018 and 2019 to help cover the costs of the regulated rate option price on electricity for consumers. I want to know how the government of Alberta came to decide that just over $74 million was enough money to subsidize power bills for 2018-2019, and I want to know how the government came to decide that 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour was the magic price to implement the cap. Meanwhile the higher taxes the consumers are paying in the form of the carbon tax are being used to help pay these power bills. It's a shell game. You take from one pocket of the consumer and make it look like you're helping to pay from the other pocket.

From page 95 of the 2017-18 annual report of the Department of Energy:

On November 22, 2016, the government announced a four-year price cap to protect families, farms, and small businesses from volatility in electricity prices as the province makes necessary reforms to the electricity system. The program runs from June 2017 to May 2021. During this period, consumers on the Regulated Rate Option (RRO) will pay the lower of the market rate or the government's ceiling rate of 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour.

Madam Speaker, I have even looked at this year's business plan, and there is no mention of this in that business plan. It was buried in the climate leadership plan. I want the government to show me the mathematics and the economics they used to come up with this $74.3 million expenditure at the rate of 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour. There are some very smart people working for the government, and it would not be like them to make up some numbers out of thin air. I would like to see the evidence used to come up with this rate for the cap and if they looked at a higher price, especially for the REAs, the rural electrification associations, who needed a different set of rules to implement the cap, or if they looked at a lower price, which would have cost the taxpayers even more. Showing the homework to me allows me to understand the drivers: carbon tax revenue to spend, renewables coming online and coal being phased out, electricity price volatility, and the classic NDP shell game of robbing Peter to pay Paul and driving up the deficit, the debt, and the taxes in the process.

Madam Speaker, I don't know why they rejected my motion for a return. There is a pattern on this side of the House. I've been using all the avenues like the budget estimates and question periods to ask for information. This particular Department of Energy is supposed to be transparent in providing information to Albertans, but I don't see a reason why they are hiding this, because they know that this 6.8 cents is an artificial cap. Their actual cost is much more, but they don't want the ratepayers to pay because they think that they will lose votes if the power prices are higher. That's why they're making taxpayers pay. But it's the same. Ratepayers and taxpayers: they're all the same. I don't know how long this government can hide the information from Albertans. They're trying, but people are smart enough to understand.

We asked the Finance minister today about his budget deficit, how much it is going to rise and how much the debt is going to go up. The budget is based on about a $15 to $20 per barrel differential, but today the differential is about $45 U.S. per barrel. That makes a big hole in the budget estimates of this government. But the Finance minister wouldn't answer. He just goes on attacking and calling us – what's that?

Mrs. Aheer: Drunken sailors.

Mr. Panda: Drunken sailors. Nice of him. He's probably still high from yesterday's game; I don't know.

But that's not fair, Madam Speaker. Albertans are asking their questions through us. As Official Opposition it's our job and as a critic for Energy it's my job to hold this government to account and get the answers for Albertans. But this government is not giving us the correct information here and is misleading Albertans. That's why I asked for this information one more time using this legislative tool to get answers for Albertans.

With that, Madam Speaker, I trust that the hon. Government House Leader or the Minister of Energy will allow me to inspect the department's homework so that I can understand the thought process of the government to bring in this additional expenditure on top of the billions of dollars of other expenditures in electricity. When I say other expenses, I already talked about $2 billion that Albertans are on the hook for for PPAs and $2 billion for the coal phase-out and then another $500 million, that NAFTA claim that a U.S. miner has placed on Albertans. With this, Albertans are paying on so many accounts, and this government is hiding that. When we ask for clarification on behalf of Albertans, we are called drunken sailors. That's not fair.

With that, I leave it there. I'm hoping to hear some answers from the minister through me to inform Albertans and through this House. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Our government is protecting Alberta families, farms, and small businesses from high electricity costs through a four-year price cap of 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour. This protection gives Alberta families . . . [interjections] Did you want to listen to this or not?

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: This protection gives Alberta families and entrepreneurs the certainty that they need to live . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. minister, we have a point of order.
Go ahead, hon. member.

Point of Order

Addressing Questions through the Chair

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Again, we've spoken about this many times. Standing orders are clear, as you well know. I'd encourage the minister to speak through the chair, please.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone wish to speak to the point of order? Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Yeah. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I think it's just a little rich for these members on the other side to be calling this out. You know, they talk across the aisle on multiple occasions. So I think that there's no point of order here. It was a slip-up on the part of the minister, and I would encourage us just to get on with the debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to the point of order. I think my hon. colleague referenced language that was likely to create unrest, in 23(h), (i), and (j), as you know, Madam Speaker. I also know that he had some concerns about not speaking through the chair. In this particular case I think the minister very specifically and directly efforted to reprimand members on this side of the House, which is very clearly your role in adjudicating the duties of the chair, and very specifically referred to members on this side of the Chamber with: do you guys "want to listen to this?" She was not referring to members of the opposition by their appropriate titles or by the fact that we, too, are as equally elected as she is. I think that it would be very reasonable and prudent for her to withdraw and apologize for the comments and get back to the business at hand.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Madam Speaker, I'm happy to withdraw my comments. Should I be allowed to continue, I would hope that there'd be people on the other side listening.

This protection gives Alberta families . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. minister, before you continue, I just wanted to add that it's helpful for all of us to keep in mind speaking through the chair, and I encourage everybody to continue to do that.
Go ahead, hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: I'll continue. This protection gives Alberta families and entrepreneurs the certainty they need to live their lives and build their businesses without worrying that their electricity bills will spike without warning. In past years we've seen the RRO spikes as high as 15.3 cents per kilowatt hour, and they have regularly risen over 8 cents, 10 cents, and even breaking 12 cents more than once in the past years. I've said before and I'll say it again: these kinds of price spikes are not acceptable. It's not reasonable to expect families to afford those sorts of energy prices. It's not reasonable to ask families to live from month to month afraid that their energy prices will spike suddenly and without warning. It's not reasonable to ask families to plan and budget with this sort of uncertainty. I would note that we have not seen electricity prices come anywhere close to the levels Albertans suffered under the previous government in 2011, 2012, 2013, and 2014.

Yes, there is a cost to the program, and we've been transparent about reporting the costs in months where the costs to providers exceeded the RRO cap, but our government is not going to apologize for providing protections to Alberta families and businesses, who continue to fear the return of the price spikes and volatility that they experienced under the Conservatives' energy-only market. We are not going to let this happen. While we're taking the necessary time to build an electricity system that works better for Albertans, we will continue to protect Albertans from price spikes.

What we cannot provide, however, is sensitive information that was used to inform a decision by cabinet, particularly when we have an electricity market made up of commercial operators. Therefore, I'm afraid we have no choice but to deny this request.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to this particular motion for a return and to specifically address the minister's comment with respect to what she is or isn't going to do. You know, the minister, through you, Madam Speaker, to her, took some significant period of time in her remarks talking about what she's not going to do. She's not going to stand for price fluctuations – be very careful with that particular word in the House – and price variances, with them being all around the map.

But this motion for a return has absolutely nothing to do with those factors that are inside the marketplace and has everything to do with how and why a government would come to a decision, which may or may not be arbitrary, of 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour. All that my good colleague from Calgary-Foothills . . .

Mr. Panda: An outstanding riding.

Mr. Cooper: Yes. All that my colleague from the fantastic riding of Calgary-Foothills is trying to ascertain and to get to is: how and why did they make this decision around 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour, not 7, not 6.5, not 3, not 12 but 6.8? He was asking for some clarification around this. We know that this government does all sorts of things that aren't based in reality or fact, so all that he was asking for was some clarity or proof that that was the case here with the 6.8 cents.

It kind of reminds me, Madam Speaker, of the carbon tax: why did they arrive at $50 a tonne and not, say, $300 a tonne, as some of their friends and allies suggest it will take to change behaviour, $300 a tonne? Now, I'm certainly not advocating for that. In fact, I think they should do away with the $50-a-tonne carbon tax. But just like they didn't do any research on or certainly at the time were unwilling to provide evidence of the economic impacts that that arbitrary number would have, here too we see them picking a number, 6.8 cents. As far as I could tell from the comments of my hon. colleague from the fantastic constituency of Calgary-Foothills, he wasn't asking about the politics around creating a cap. He was merely asking about why and how they arrived at 6.8 cents.

The minister came to the House to provide some very, very, very soft, weak explanation based on shields, if you will, for what we can only assume is their lack of research. We're not asking for proprietary information. We're not asking for information that's going to negatively impact any of the businesses that are in the power market. We're only asking: what data did they have to show that 6.8 cents was the appropriate measure and not 7.5 or 3.8 or whatever number would have made sense?

So it's more than a little disappointing to see the government continue a lack of transparency, continue a lack of respect for the marketplace, particularly when it comes to proving their economic data and legislating at the same time. What we've seen time and time again is this government that legislates and then asks questions later. All we're asking for is the information that led to that path for this decision, and again the government has elected not to. I am more than a little disappointed that the government wouldn't allow this information to be released. I'm not altogether surprised because of the track record that this government has with respect to hiding the facts, particularly on the economic side of the equation.

They like to roll out facts in all sorts of different areas, but when it comes to the economic side or the impact of their decisions, how they will be applied, they time and time again refuse to provide that information. Madam Speaker, I think it's important to remember that it's not that they're refusing to provide that information to the opposition, because, frankly, not a whole ton of folks are overly passionate about politicians, broadly speaking, but it's that they are refusing to provide the information to Albertans.

It is Albertans that deserve the right to have a better understanding about this particular piece of information. It's Albertans that have a right to know about the ways that this particular decision may have an impact on the nuances of the capacity market. I'll be the first to say that there is very little about the electricity market that isn't complicated, but more information is always better than less information, and Albertans deserve that information. If this government wants to try to re-establish any sort of trust on this particular file, they would be well served to answer the question. It's not a hard question. They must have the information, so they should stop hiding behind the minister and provide the information to not just this side of the House but to all Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak?
Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to just throw out these numbers again. The hon. member from the amazing constituency of Calgary-Foothills . . .

Mr. Cooper: Fantastic.

Mrs. Aheer: Fantastic. Sorry. Thank you.

. . . spoke about $4 billion in the boondoggle plus $500 million as a result of coal miners in Montana who, through the NAFTA agreement, will be seeking remuneration from Alberta for that. So we're at $4.5 billion. I keep thinking that if we go back to the pipeline discussion where we were just talking today, one of the ministers was saying that we're losing $80 million a day in product not getting to the coast, not getting into the global market. I mean, the cumulative burden of dollars that are being misspent and being lost through policies that this government has helped create is mindboggling and, actually, a little bit nauseating.

When I think about it, actually, I don't really actually know how to put my head around the amount of lost money that is leaving this province. Then on top of all that, the government is leaving the ratepayer and the taxpayer with the burden of their mistake. I mean, if you just added that up for a minute on a weekly, daily basis, what have we been looking at? This year country-wide we're looking at a $5 billion loss, right? I'm absolutely flabbergasted.

You know, the minister had said that this is about creating certainty. How, then, do you explain that every company that we're speaking to, anybody who's looking at Alberta potentially – and I hope so much that people are looking at Alberta – to invest here is running away because the market signals are not there? The government has actually taken away the signal that allows companies to know: oh, this is a good time to buy in because the signal tells you to do so. There isn't one anymore.

To be clear, the other question I have, too, is that the Member for Calgary-Foothills brought up the fact that we're just wanting to understand that 6.8 cents was not plucked from the air. How can that be a sensitive discussion? The minister said in here that due to the sensitive nature of the discussions she cannot discuss how she came to 6.8 cents. Why? Madam Speaker, do you not believe for one moment that Albertans deserve to know? This is impacting them.

You know, to be fair, there have been spikes in the electricity, and I am the first one to admit that. However, the rate riders went extremely low, too. There was a balance there. To be clear, the energy-only electricity market was debt free. The minute that the government came in and blew up the PPAs, we were immediately – immediately – $750 million in debt to the Balancing Pool, when we came from a debt-free situation, where we had no electricity debt. We had no debt.

Mr. Hunter: Positive.

Mrs. Aheer: Yes, we were positive, in fact, because the rate riders reflected what was going on in the province at that time.

The whole reason that the MSA was there was to watch those spikes. When those things happened, those companies were held accountable by those people. All that accountability is gone now. On top of that, they will not answer to Albertans on how they got to the 6.8 cents. How can that be a secret? I mean, for months and months we heard about how there was this secret Enron clause and how it was a disaster and that the government was coming in to save us on a white horse of 6.8 cents, saying that that was all secretive, saying that that happened behind closed doors, that nobody knew about it.

They were informed right when they got into government about the PPAs and about that section and about what was going to happen should they prove to be more unprofitable. This is even worse because this has happened on their time under the auspices of wanting to help Albertans. Yes, there may be less volatility, but you're just going to let those prices rise slowly? And you believe that Albertans are just going to buy into that?

If this week of seeing Albertans fight back about pipelines has not taught us anything about how Albertans fight back, none of us has learned anything in here. The government should take responsibility and look at how Albertans fight back for their energy resources and for what they need in this province. They will not stand for this. It will not happen. I can guarantee you that the minute that people understand all of the things that the NDP government is trying to put through under a cap of 6.8 cents and slowly, slowly, slowly raising that, pretending that there's no volatility, pretending to have the backs of Albertans, when we know that the prices are already going up – that is absolutely ludicrous.

Like I said, take a look at what happened in downtown Calgary this week when the Prime Minister came and how Albertans reacted to people who do not understand the energy industry and are actively working against our prosperity. Take a note because, let me tell you, Albertans are not going to stand for this. They will not sit by and let a government pretend that they have Albertans' backs when we see those energy costs going up. It's a cumulative burden: $2 billion to pay out, $2 billion to buy back the PPAs, $500 million because the government didn't understand the NAFTA agreement with the coal-fired people. And to even suggest that we're buying coal-fired from the United States when our own families in this province, who the government had to compensate for shutting down coal-fired in the first place, now no longer have jobs. But you're willing to buy it from across the border? In what world is this okay, Madam Speaker?

Albertans will not understand. They will be standing up. They're going to be mad. They're going to be so angry when they find out that that's what this government has done and that somehow they believe that they are doing a favour for Albertans. I guess, Madam Speaker, the government knows better than everybody else, don't they?

If anything, I hope this government has learned that this province is savvy. The folks that work in this province: they're savvy, they're smart, and they're resilient. They know what's going on. And I'll tell you that the folks on this side have spent the last three and a half years being educated by those people. We sit with them because those are the experts in the field, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but the time allotted for that portion of business has now elapsed.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Utility Organizations

507. Mrs. Schreiner moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to strengthen partnerships with rural electrification associations, REAs, and other co-operatively organized utility associations by developing policies that promote the long-term viability and sustainability of REAs and other co-operatively organized utility associations.

Mrs. Schreiner: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It is an honour to bring forward Motion 507 on behalf of the tremendous Albertans who persevered to build and support our great province, the agricultural sector. This motion speaks to the future sustainability of our co-operatively owned associations, which contributed significantly to this province's success. Fellow members, I am speaking to the rural electrification associations and gas co-ops and the rural Albertans who depend on them to meet the needs of their families and businesses outside of our urban centres.

The dawn of REAs occurred in the 1940s and gas co-ops in 1973. These necessities contributed to the great success of our agricultural sector and are paramount to the competitive advantage that we experience today. We know that Alberta's oil and gas have driven the economic prosperity in this province and in this country. Alberta's agriculture industry has also played a significant role in driving that same economic prosperity. There is little doubt that the establishment of REAs was an important factor in that success.

In the late 1940s REAs came about as those in our agricultural sector looked for more efficient ways to run their businesses. With electricity available in urban centres but not in rural communities, people took initiative to meet their own needs. Within a decade of the introduction of the rural electrification program almost 90 per cent of Albertan farmers took advantage of this. Like all business owners, farmers look to maximize efficiency, and bringing electricity to rural Alberta helped them do just that. REAs were established as not-for-profit co-operatives of at least five members who jointly owned the assets, equipment, and other technology. Governed by the Rural Utilities Act, they distributed electricity from the Alberta interconnected electric system to each member.

Within Canada, REAs are unique to Alberta and were originally commissioned as a way to provide rural Albertans with electricity to meet the personal and business needs of the agricultural sector. The early models of REAs were differentiated as self-operated REAs, which manage the co-op and conduct their own maintenance, and operating REAs, which manage the co-op but hire contractors to maintain and service their lines and equipment. Examples of both are still around today but in a reduced form as compared to the initial REAs of 70 years ago. The two distinct models illustrate the unique character of REAs and the unique needs they meet, but both were built on a foundation of collaboration. Working together, rural Albertans recognized the value of investor-owned utilities in some cases which were able to operate according to the needs of rural Albertans.

We cannot dismiss the needs of those who supported this innovation. Their vision was the foundation of an advantage in the competitive farming industry, and our rural partners stepped up to the challenge. Without efficient electricity farm families faced more hazards and found it more difficult to maintain a livelihood. With REAs, farmers could eliminate the dawn-to-dusk limitations that previously dictated when they could work, which also helped them to harness help from their families, which are the very fabric of Albertan society.

Madam Speaker and fellow members, I am bringing forth this motion for many different reasons. Our REAs are vulnerable as a result of historic regulations and agreements that remain static and impede their growth. Alberta has changed significantly since the late 1940s, when REAs were established. Rural Alberta has shifted, and as a result many areas that were once farmland have evolved into urbanized areas. This has diminished the ability of REAs to serve their mandate due to regulatory barriers.

The Rural Utilities Act, which governs REAs, was enacted to support a growing province and the need to help agricultural producers develop and enhance their operations. Community-based REAs evolved in response to community-based needs, but there are many changing dynamics that have affected our rural regions and our REAs' ability to maintain their market share in rural Alberta: Alberta's population growth since the inception of REAs, increased urbanization of Alberta's population, changing trends in the farming industry such as many farms getting larger and others dissolving, the reduced number of REAs as a result of amalgamation or sale to investor-owned utilities, and changes in technology.

While change is inevitable over the course of 70-plus years, it's important to remember where we have come from. REAs have served to promote the growth, viability, and sustainability of our agricultural sectors. Like investor-owned utilities, REAs have evolved to serve the growing needs of our province. Right now over 40,000 Albertans belong to the 32 REAs that still exist, down from the peak of 381 active REAs. It is crucial to consult with stakeholders about how we can best support the future sustainability of these important institutions.

It was my pleasure to meet with the Alberta Federation of Rural Electrification Associations, Equis, and Fortis. Our conversations helped form the basis of this motion. This motion seeks to open the dialogue about the changes taking place in rural Alberta and their impact on REAs. We cannot influence Albertans' choices on where to live, but we can seek to preserve REAs and the services they provide to the 40,000 rural Albertans who rely on them. The result of shifting populations is that there are areas where both REAs and investor-owned utilities operate, and REAs are losing market share.

Madam Speaker and fellow members, I would also be remiss if I did not mention the many community organizations that REAs support. Many choose to reinvest in the communities they co-operatively serve. This is true of many investor-owned utilities as well, and we can conclude that both types of operations can bring value to their communities.

In the case of REAs, I have heard from many groups about the positive impacts that REAs have had. For example, Wettstein Safety Strategies and co-op concurs.

REAs are an integral part of rural Alberta and contribute meaningfully as both community builders and electricity [and other resource] distributors. These member-owned cooperatives have a long and proud history of distributing electricity to our communities and investing in organizations such as ours.

Another example is the Multiple Sclerosis Society of Canada, who said:

We have been fortunate to find a strong partner in . . . AFREA. Their generous support of over $300,000 for the past 12 years has allowed us to support individuals affected by MS in more than 30 rural communities across Alberta.

The different needs of REAs vary depending on a number of factors. Agreements made at the outset of the REAs served to meet the rudimentary needs of early REAs but may or may not serve present or future needs. Nominal changes in government may or may not balance the changes that have taken place over the last 70-plus years. That's why it's so important that we begin this dialogue.

I welcome the opportunity to further debate our support for policy development that will encourage stability, viability, and sustainability of these important co-operatively owned associations. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for bringing in this motion and for also inviting the representatives of the industry. I support the spirit of this motion, but when we talk about the viability and sustainability of REAs, I want to go a little bit into those details.

As you all know, Albertans, particularly rural Albertans, know that the UCP has got their back. [interjections] Yeah, yeah. You can laugh. We will see. I wouldn't be surprised, Madam Speaker, through you – we'll see next time. You won't believe how many rural seats the UCP will be honoured to represent. This is coming from a Calgary guy who travelled in all those rural ridings, including the one of the member on the other side who is laughing. I was in her riding, too. And I was in your riding, too, Madam Speaker, if you remember. It was an honour.

But I want to bring in how we got here. This NDP government and caucus just doesn't know when to stop when it comes to meddling with Alberta's electrical system. The whole afternoon today we talked about electricity. First, we had the coal-fired generation phase-outs, both the federally mandated one and the end-of-life mandated one, and then the NDP imposed a provincial one on assets that were not clear end-of-life. So a real waste of capital, Madam Speaker. Then we had the power purchase agreement debacle, the hundreds of millions of dollars it will cost the taxpayers to bail out the billions of dollars the Balancing Pool lost, and then the capacity market debate because the generators needed money to replace the old coal plants with natural gas based and keep prices stable.

Thankfully, the new wind generators under the renewable electricity program are not getting the capacity payments because that would make the capacity market a simple political sop to the NDP's world travellers. And now we find out that the Balancing Pool was behaving in a nonconsultative, noncommercial manner and has cost the privately owned generators an estimated $2.9 billion. Is the Crown about to be sued for that amount? I know that I would. All of these scandals were around the generation component of the electricity system.

The NDP never touched transmission, and the NDP never touched distribution until now. The motion before us reads:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to strengthen partnerships with rural electrification associations . . . and other co-operatively organized utility associations by developing policies that promote the long-term viability and sustainability of REAs and other co-operatively organized utility associations.

At one point there were nearly 400 REAs in Alberta. As of November 2016 there were 31 REAs grouped across 11 REA districts, comprised of 40,838 customers. On average, each REA has 1,317 customers. The largest REA is Equis, spanning 26 municipal districts and counties, with over 11,550 members and 28 per cent of REA customers from Barrhead to the U.S. border.

REAs are surrounded by ATCO Electric and FortisAlberta Inc. as competitive investor-owned utility distributors and electrical equipment owners. REAs are locked in the market share turf war with private companies, and it seems that the market is not set out with level playing fields for the REAs. By not having a level playing field, the REAs are out there calling for a monopoly on distribution to customers who consume less than 500 kilowatts per annum and want to compete for customers that consume more than 500 kVa. They also want a monopoly on their service area.

I'm a capitalist, Madam Speaker, and that makes me believe in competition. Can an update be made to enable the REAs better competition powers? I think the case can be made. After all, if someone can leave Equis for Fortis, then someone should be able to leave Fortis for Equis. But this is the NDP that we are talking about here, and knowing the NDP, they will try and damage anyone that makes money. If the NDP can harm power generators like they have, then the NDP can harm power distributors like REAs, too.

We all know that the NDP have no leg to stand on when it comes to the electricity file. Witness the evidence of holding on to the power purchase agreements longer than needed. When the companies moved to cancel the PPAs because they had been made more unprofitable by the NDP, the Balancing Pool held on so that the NDP could try and sue itself. Witness the Balancing Pool treating those PPA assets in a noncommercial manner, losing $750 million and taking out loans from the government of Alberta, and witness the Balancing Pool losing $745 million from January 2017 to September 2018 and costing other generators $2.9 billion over the same period of time.

We know that the NDP have been manipulating electricity prices through the 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour rate cap, the PPA cancellation delay, the Balancing Pool's noncommercial behaviour, the numerous subsidies and programs to backstop wind and solar, their indifference to geothermal, and the early closure and phase-out of practically brand new, high-efficiency coal-fired generation plants at Genesee and Keephills, which, I will add, will create a fly ash shortage for the construction sector for anything built with concrete. With the NDP's record on electricity, how can we trust the NDP to resolve the issues with the REAs?

I want to back the truck up here and talk about the 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour. The REAs cannot find the efficiencies to make that 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour price for their members. They have to charge a higher rate. Why? Membership. They do not have enough members to enable large electricity bulk buys to pass those savings on to their members. REAs can charge a billing rate that is in excess of the rate cap of 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour. This is distinct from the large regulated rate option, RRO, suppliers, who are capped at 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour.

When asked about this at the budget estimates in April 2018, Assistant Deputy Minister David James explained that the reference rate was created using the RRO prices of EPCOR, Enmax, and Direct Energy and adding 10 per cent. In that way, the REAs can be reimbursed for prices above the 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour. This creates a situation in that the REA members may switch to another distributor in order to get a lower rate and affect the long-term viability of the REAs.

Madam Speaker, while the NDP put forward nice motions and promises to REAs, the NDP government has no credibility on the electricity file. I thank you for the opportunity to address Motion 507.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I always find it entertaining when the Member for Calgary-Foothills talks about REAs. I'm hoping that maybe after I finish speaking, he'll understand some of the background of REAs. I also have to ask the question: why was it that under the previous government nothing was done to support the REAs and enable them to be more viable and to resolve some of the issues that came about because of some of the changes in the urban and rural divide? That's my first question.

Madam Speaker, my question today is really: how many MLAs in this Assembly have ever pondered the uniqueness of the rural electrification associations? Do you all know that Alberta is the only province that has them? This is a very unique thing that was created by the farmers of Alberta. Our rural electrification co-ops, that I'm going to just call the REAs, and our gas co-ops are only present in Alberta, and I think it really speaks to the uniqueness of our agriculture and the tendency of our agriculture sector to realize that they needed to meet their electricity demands, and because the government wasn't interested in helping them access electricity, they all got together to form these REAs.

Another question that I think we need to ponder is how close our farmers in the 1940s came to not having electricity. It was only because these farmers got together and invested their own funds that our farmers got access to electricity. I think we often talk about the investor-owned utilities, the IO utilities, and the fact that we think they're the greatest thing, but I want to reinforce the fact that when the farmers needed electricity, those big companies did not want to support the farmers because it was going to be too expensive. This is why the farmers followed what had happened in other provinces and formed the co-operatives, which we now call REAs.

It's also interesting to note that the farmers in Alberta didn't only form REAs and water co-ops and later on gas co-ops. By forming REAs, they joined the growing diversity of co-operatives formed by rural Canadians, like mutual insurance. Most farmers in the past were insured through a mutual. A mutual is a co-operative; it's just a different name. Most of the mutuals have now been demutualized.

There are the agricultural stores like the UFA, which is one of our biggest co-operatives, which has had such importance in the history of Alberta. There are the water co-operatives, the gas co-ops, and the credit unions. Without these co-operatives, which the REAs are a part of, our rural economy, our farmers and so on would have been really challenged to provide as much to the economy of Alberta as they have. They're really the backbone of our economy, and they maintain to be the backbone of our economy.

I just read an interesting report around REAs, that I'll be happy to table tomorrow. It's called the Toma and Bouma report. This report is kind of interesting because it demonstrates that under the former PC government, that many of the members are very closely linked to, there were opportunities then to do something about the REAs, to help them and support them, and nothing was done. I'll be happy to table it in the future.

I also think it's quite interesting to find out the history of co-operatives. Again, I'm wondering how many knew that the co-operatives sector in Alberta was started by two Catholic priests. Did you know that Moses Coady and Jim Tompkins out of Antigonish, Nova Scotia, were the two Catholic priests who, following a Catholic social teaching, started the co-operatives? If you know anything about rural Alberta, you would also realize that a lot of the farmers who were very involved in the co-operatives sector were from the Dutch Reform church. So our co-operatives movement has strong Christian roots, initially from the Catholic movement and, especially in Alberta, from the Christian Reformed church. These priests were interested in forming co-operatives because they realized that there were a lot of inequalities among the farmers and the fishers, and they needed to find a way to make sure that people had access to a good price.

I just wanted to quote a little bit from that time. The movement advocated reforms that included forming co-operatives because on the social issues it really was a need to make sure that people had access to good wages and all the tools that they needed to be able to, in this case, farm or be able to sell their product. Those two priests, Moses Coady and Jim Tompkins – and maybe some of you have seen the Coady institute, which is still very important in Antigonish and throughout the world – believed implicitly in the power of people to accomplish anything if they could but awaken to the opportunities of the moment and use their collective energies in a determined effort to improve their status.

One of the things that I appreciate so much about the REAs, not only their histories but up to the present day, is that this is what the REAs are all about. People have collectively put their efforts, they collectively put their money to make sure that they had access to electricity, that they could build the poles and connect them to the main grid and work together to do this. This is why I think it's very important for all of us to support the REAs to ensure their viability.

The other part that really interests me about the REAs is: did you all know that the REAs have been really interested in renewable energy? They have been involved in various committees and various efforts to explore the way that as REAs, because they have the infrastructure, they have the administration, and they have the members, they could work with our government to form a community renewable energy project or to support farmers installing solar energy or wind energy. They really understand that the face of energy is changing in Alberta, that they can participate in that and use their power of membership and locally made decisions to work with the government to be involved in renewable energy.

One of the things I really appreciate about the REAs and the gas co-ops and the UFA and other institutions that the farmers have started in Alberta is that by forming a co-operative, as members they can make decisions over the goods they produce or, in this case, over the way that electricity is going to be distributed and how their organization is going to be covered. I think it's very, very powerful.

Myself, I can't belong to an REA because I live in an urban centre, but I actually belong to an electricity and gas co-operative that is modelled after the REAs, and my electricity and my gas are distributed by this co-operative. It's called ACE co-operative, and it's based on the same principles, where I as a member share all the risk and I share all the benefits and I have the ability to make decisions.

I think that while we look at the REAs as being rural – and in my own municipality of Strathcona county we have an REA in our rural areas – it's important to understand their viability and the importance they have in ensuring that our farmers have electricity but also the importance they have when looking towards the future. What can be for them in the future in terms of rural energy or other aspects of the electricity system is very important. It's applicable to everyone in this House.

I wanted also to thank the members of the FREAs.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Once again, it's always a pleasure to rise in this Legislature to discuss legislation that's important to all Albertans, and today is certainly no exception as we discuss private member's Motion 507, which reads:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to strengthen partnerships with rural electrification associations... and other co-operatively organized utility associations by developing policies that promote the long-term viability and sustainability of REAs and other co-operatively organized utility associations.

Now, that is a mouthful.

Well, Madam Speaker, I have to confess that I'm not quite sure where the motion would come from. I'm not of any understanding in the last 30 minutes that I have sat and listened, any understanding where the REAs in Alberta are necessarily concerned about their partnerships with the government of Alberta. I certainly didn't hear any outstanding reasons from the member that introduced the motion nor the last speaker.

It could be, to me anyways, that the concern stems from the fact that Alberta has had no substantive updates or changes to legislation impacting REA operation in over 40 years. That's 40 years. Now, that's 40, for those at home. That's pretty significant if you ask me, Madam Speaker. So it would appear that as a result of this, this stale state of legislation, Alberta's REAs have been unable to expand market share or attract new membership in any substantial way. Because of this, almost a third of REAs that were around in 2012 have since been sold to investor-owned utilities.

I've certainly been wrong before, and I suspect I'll be wrong many times yet before my time here is done, but that certainly would make me think that REAs could be in a bit of trouble for their sustainability; in fact, that the trends seem to be that REAs could end up being absorbed by these investor-owned utilities in a decade or so. That should give us, especially those in rural Alberta, a slight cause for concern.

What I know for sure is that historically rural electrification in Alberta started in the 1940s. At that time in Alberta's history utilities first began providing electric service to farms that happened to be close to the transmission lines, transmission lines that were carrying power to larger urban centres. That was working out just fine for the farm sites that happened to be located in the right spot, but obviously there were farms located far from existing lines that energy travelled through. A quick determination was that the costs associated with the possibility of connecting a delivery system for those farms made serving them uneconomic.

In the late '40s the Alberta government created legislation that allowed in part the creation of farmer-owned, not-for-profit rural electrification associations. The legislation also provided for loans to the REAs that were guaranteed by the government so that the associations could finance the capital costs of constructing a distribution network. After construction the associations could take ownership of and also operate the lines, transformers, and substations. Over the years since these basically made-in-Alberta, unique creations were formed and up and running, certainly, government was involved with varying subsidies.

Now, my grandfather left Scotland by ship and landed on the east coast of Canada in 1904. He worked his way across Canada on the Canadian Pacific Railway. He ended up in the western town of Stavely in 1908 and paid $10 for a quarter section of land some 50 or 60 miles to the east of where he was standing, land he'd never seen, but he was so happy to be in a country where land was available that it didn't matter. He made his way to the Armada area, which is east of Vulcan. I'm not sure how he got out there. He was Scottish. He worked for four years to get his way out west, so I suppose it's possible that he had enough wherewithal to purchase a horse to ride, possibly a workhorse. At any rate, no pun intended, he got to his land, he proved up, and he was given the adjoining quarter section. He was well on his way to becoming a successful homesteader in early Alberta. He met my grandmother sometime before 1920, and they married. Now, she was English. So they together were, shall we say, frugal but not so frugal that they lacked of the conveniences in life that were becoming available.

For power on their farm, that was certainly a long way from the future distribution lines, they had a windmill that charged batteries, and I remember the generator that they had purchased sometime after they were part of rural electrification to provide power when the lines were down. When power went out in those early days, it was sometimes out for days or weeks at a time. A heavy snowstorm could take down lines in a huge area. Wind could take lines down. It was the infancy of electricity in rural areas in Alberta.

At any rate, my grandfather and his two sons were part of rural electrification at the time of the area. They helped to install power poles, string wire to areas within their specific geographic boundaries. So while I've never been part of an REA on my own operation, I have always felt that I have a small connection to the history of rural electrification.

But to the present, Madam Speaker, what we have here is a group of REAs basically at a sort of crossroads in their existence. As of November 2016 there were 31 REAs grouped across 11 REA districts, comprising some 40,838 customers. Now, that gives us on average 1,317 customers per REA. The largest REA is Equis, spanning 26 municipal districts and counties, with over 11,550 members. That number represents 28 per cent of REA customers in Alberta, from Barrhead to the U.S. border.

Now, to me, where the trouble lies is that these REAs are pretty much surrounded by ATCO Electric and FortisAlberta Inc. as competitor distributors and electrical equipment owners. In the fall of 2012 FortisAlberta interpreted some rulings to mean that customers could choose to not be members of an REA and therefore would become customers of FortisAlberta by default, regardless of the usage of the electric service. REAs are of the opinion that this cuts two ways: if a customer can choose to not be a member of the REA, they can also choose not to be a customer of FortisAlberta and be a member of an REA. What's good for the goose is good for the gander.

As a result, the Alberta Federation of Rural Electrification Associations has been advocating for legislative change to support the sustainability and, hence, the membership base of REAs. Compounding the issue was a critical development that occurred this last summer. What happened was that the Alberta Utilities Commission decided that Fortis should have exclusive rights to distribute electricity in the lands annexed by four municipalities, municipalities with which they already had a pre-existing franchise agreement. What this meant was that the four REAs affected by these annexations could not coexist with Fortis within these lands and compete for distribution. This only further weakened the province's REAs.

I guess the purpose of this motion is to make sure that REAs continue to exist and remain a viable option to rural customers. Now, I can certainly get behind that, Madam Speaker. As you are well aware, the people in this party that's represented by this caucus are big believers in open and fair competition. Options are always good. I just find it odd that the government is championing this, when it wasn't too long ago, under another bill – I believe it was during Bill 13 debate for a capacity electricity market – that the NDP put some amendments forward into the Gas Utilities Act giving the Alberta Utilities Commission the power to order a specified penalty against a retailer like the Northern Lights Gas Co-op in Mackenzie county for failing to deliver natural gas. As we've brought up several times in this House, for two winters now that gas co-op has had trouble maintaining line pressure, and it will take them probably close to a decade to raise the capital needed to effect repairs and address their rapid growth, while the NDP solution was to set the AUC on them and penalize them for it. Not exactly standing up for Albertans.

The bottom line is that these REAs could play a much larger role as a trusted partner with the provincial government in economic development activities if government would simply allow them to. But until that day we will have to treat this motion as an important step in the right direction. So I will be supporting this motion.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Littlewood: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to be able to rise in the House and speak to the motion from the Member for Red Deer-North asking the government to strengthen partnerships with rural electrification associations, otherwise known as REAs, and how we can look at promoting the long-term viability and sustainability of REAs and, of course, other co-operatively organized utility associations because, as the discussion today focuses on REAs, we have other co-operatives in rural Alberta that are quite important. In my community especially we have a water co-op, we have gas co-ops, we have UFA: companies that are able to do an incredible job of keeping money local, keeping jobs local, keeping investment local, and keeping decision-making local, which is, of course, the most important thing.

In my own constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville I have the pleasure of supporting and representing a few different REAs. We have the Lakeland REA, we have the Battle River co-op, and we also have the Zawale REA. When I have been in conversations with people from my neighbourhood as well as the executive of the AFREA, I've been learning a lot about what those services are that are delivered and how it is that they came to exist in the first place. As was elaborated on a bit earlier by our MLA for Sherwood Park, it was neighbours and farmers coming together in the absence of government and business.

I was on my way to a Lakeland AGM the other day, and I was thinking about how to draw some sort of parallel with my own life because I do live in an investor-owned utility-served area. One night I was on my way home from Tofield, from visiting with the high school awards recipients, and I was headed north on highway 34. I came upon a deer, and the deer did not survive. I took it on with my truck. By the time I turned around, it was certainly in the middle of the road, no longer with the life that I had come upon it with, the point being that I came upon it and I didn't know what I was going to do. I knew that I was going to call Fish and Game and call AMA and try and figure out how to take care of my truck and the carcass.

I was thankful because I threw on my four-ways and a neighbour came upon me and the accident. They pulled up beside me, and they had actually recognized me from the high school awards because one of their children was a recipient. The husband was able to offer his assistance. Thankfully, the deer was in one piece, so he was able to help and take the deer off the road by its legs. That was something that I was thankful to have happened because that was a need that I had, to make sure that the area was safe and that my truck was okay. It took neighbours. You know, with probably a three-hour wait for fish and wildlife and a three-hour wait for AMA, in the absence of government and business it was neighbours and farmers coming together. It was actually a farm owner from just a couple of miles over that helped me out in that moment.

That is how the entire province was electrified. It's incredible that people were able to come together for a very important cause. They knew that there was a need with developing agriculture to be able to serve that industry as it grew, and really that's a major reason why we have a strong farming industry today.

There have been quite a lot of changes that have taken course over the last number of years, including urban drift that has come out of rural areas, amalgamated farms, subdividing into acreages. All of these things start to pose a challenge when it comes to having enough customers to be able to pay for the things that keep the REA sustainable and viable and thriving. That, along with some changes in technology and those issues, is why we're talking about this today.

It's why the AFREA and the REAs that I represent came and met with me basically as soon as I was elected. They knew that we shared values of co-operatives and having local, democratic decision-making of member-owned businesses. They have been asking the government to undertake looking for ways to help them help themselves. They're not asking for a handout; they're just asking for someone to be a good partner.

It has been great to see some of the announcements that have come lately, including the intermingled electricity study that Alberta Forestry and Alberta Energy have been undertaking in order to analyze pricing, financial information, how we can promote economic growth. We hope to see the results of the study soon. As I do understand, it should be coming in short order. That will give us some of those answers.

In the meantime the ability of our REAs to be great partners in community generation with renewables is absolutely incredible. The announcement at the rural municipalities association convention last week that announced $200 million in community generation would help groups that can take this on as a project and a means of economic means, including ag societies, schools, community groups, neighbours, and co-operatives. We know that REAs want to be a partner in doing this. That $200 million is backed by the price that we are applying to carbon as part of the climate leadership plan, so we need to have those funds available to do good work, to reduce greenhouse gases but also diversify local economies in rural Alberta, because the more that we can do that, the more that rural Alberta becomes more sustainable and viable into the future. I know that that's what everyone agrees with.

Going forward, I know that there are more opportunities that REAs are discussing, and I certainly hope to hear more in the conversations of possibly Internet and broadband development in rural areas that could be delivered by REAs because that is the way of the future. That is how we are going to hang onto students that need to be able to do their studies, businesses that need to be connected with a global market, and emergency services. So I'm definitely hoping to hear some more of that work that might be going on right now so that we can potentially collaborate on those solutions because we are working towards the same ends on that. Alberta has been trying to get better Internet service in all of our communities in rural Alberta, especially northern Alberta and indigenous communities, for years. If these groups were able to electrify the entire province, I don't see why they can't help connect it as well.

I'll end my remarks there, Madam Speaker. I just want to thank all of the work that the MLA for Red Deer-North has done and my fellow MLAs, both urban and rural, that are supporting REAs and our co-operative values moving forward.

Thank you so much.

The Deputy Speaker: Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. There is little time and much to talk about today, so I will try to be as efficient as possible. I do want to start off by just quickly responding to some comments from the member for Vegreville-Viking.

Ms Littlewood: Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mr. Nixon: Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville: that neck of the woods out there in northeastern Alberta.

Just to be really clear, this REA member is looking forward to the carbon tax being gone, for sure. This REA member also has some questions about why we are only seeing a motion in this Assembly. First of all, I want to start off by thanking the member from Red Deer. I think she has good intentions with this motion. She's brought it here in good faith, and I believe – in fact, I know, Madam Speaker, that she's spent considerable time interacting with REAs, including REAs that I represent. I think she is doing the best she can as a private member of this Assembly to bring this important issue to the floor of this Assembly.

But, Madam Speaker, you and I both know that this motion is toothless. I will certainly support it, and this side of the House will certainly support it, but this motion does nothing to help REAs with the problems that they're facing. This motion assumes that the government will act on it. I can't remember the last time that this government acted on a private member's motion in this place, which begs the question: why is there no bill before this House? Now, the hon. member, who obviously thinks this issue is important – and good for her – probably only drew a private member's motion, and she probably was only able to use that as her mechanism to bring that to the Chamber, to bring this issue to the forefront. Good for her.

This government has been in power for almost four years. How come that agriculture minister right there has not stood up in this Chamber and brought forward a piece of legislation to deal with it? As the hon. member from Vulcan – Little Bow: that's where he's from; Vulcan is there, though – brought up, this is decades-old legislation, and this government has refused to address it, so it's a little bit rich for government members to stand in this Chamber and then say that they're being able to champion this issue on behalf of REAs when they know as well as I know that this motion will do little to move forward REA issues.

In addition, talking about co-operative issues, this side of the House has some concerns. This government, back under the Bill 13 debate on the electricity capacity market – at that time we found out, as you know, Madam Speaker, that the NDP put forward some amendments to the Gas Utilities Act where the AUC can order a specified penalty against a retailer like Northern Lights Gas Co-op in Mackenzie county for failing to deliver natural gas. Now, for two winters that gas co-op has had trouble maintaining line pressure, and it will take them 10 years to raise the money needed to effect repairs and address the rapid growth in the communities, and the NDP dared to just send the AUC on them and penalize them for it.

This government is not concerned. There are some private members within this government that are concerned about dealing with issues like REAs, but this government as a whole is not concerned about it at all because, again, like so many things that they do in this Chamber, their lack of action shows more than their words.

It's okay to stand in this Chamber and give the history of REAs, which is very important. I don't have enough time to deal with that before we hit the clock to have to vote on this. It's important. Without REAs we wouldn't have this province, particularly the areas that most of us on this side of the House represent. The history of REAs is fascinating. I think it's one of the great stories of our province, and I think REAs have a role, certainly, to play in the future of our province. I actually represent the largest constituency as far as REA members considered numerically in the province. REAs have a role to play.

When members want to stand in this Chamber and act like they're going to champion this issue but then sit with a government that refuses to address it at all – I know for sure that REAs have come and met with the government for several years, trying to get the agriculture minister to move on this, and again no action from this government. We see it on so many other issues. The examples are long, Madam Speaker, as you well know, everything from pipelines, carbon tax, all those types of issues, but on this specifically, again no action. The question has to become for the private members on this side why the government won't truly take action.

Again I want to stress in the little time that I have left – I'm watching the clock because I know you'll call it – that the hon. member from Red Deer has come here in good faith, which is why I will support this. I think that she has taken a considerable amount of time on this motion, and I completely support it – but I do want to outline that it has no ability to make the government act, and the government has refused to act so far. So the members on that side who are attempting to champion issues of REAs: the most important thing they could do is talk to their cabinet, talk to the members of the government. The private member from Red Deer is not a member of the government. I recognize that, but she is a member of the party that is the governing party at this moment. She could talk to cabinet to find out why they won't address this issue once and for all, bring forward some legislation to be able to deal with it.

You know, when I first heard about this from my REAs, from the Rocky REA, they thought this was a bill. They thought this was going to be something that was significant to move this forward. When I explained to them what a private member's motion was, I think they were probably disappointed. They were still excited that their issue was being discussed – that’s important – but they really thought something would happen about it.

I think it’s important to be clear that the NDP government went out of their way over and over not to address the REA issue and instead has buried it to make some of their private members be quiet or to appease them in the backbench instead of taking action on it, and those private members should start to hold their government accountable for that action.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North to close debate.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you again, Madam Speaker. We can all agree that our REAs have invaluable contributed to the success and prosperity of our agricultural sector and were key in the progress that our farming industry was in great need of. It is important to note as well that this innovation also reinforced the ability of rural families to enjoy time that may not have been available without innovation and efficiency. I am proud to know that we are willing to acknowledge the historical contributions that REAs have brought to our agricultural industry and continue to provide today. I appreciate the thoughtful debate and discussion from colleagues here in the Legislature.

Our discussion today brings realization of our pledge to support those who put food on our tables. We are all committed to supporting rural Albertans and our agriculture producers. We are committed to finding solutions to support our rural electrification associations and all co-operatively owned associations as they aim to serve Albertans, even if we don’t always agree on the exact way to provide that support.

The dynamics within rural electrification models suggest that thoughtfulness is required when looking to support the future of their sustainability. There is much capacity within the REAs themselves, and I am glad to know that governance training has been offered and provided to those boards that wish to maximize and make efficient use of the resources within their means. It is this kind of dialogue that will lead to the effective policy direction that will provide the best outcomes for REAs and the rural Albertans who rely on them.

I just want to emphasize once again the kinds of changes taking place in rural Alberta that are challenging our REAs: Alberta’s population growth since the inception of REAs, the increased urbanization of Alberta’s population, the changing trends in the farming industry such as many farms getting larger and others dissolving, the reduced number of REAs as a result of amalgamation or sale to investor-owned utilities, and changes in technology.

While there have been in the past hundreds of REAs all across the province, that number has since dwindled to 32, but those 32 REAs provide an invaluable service to over 40,000 rural Albertans who depend on them. As I mentioned earlier, there are many not-for-profit organizations that benefit from this province’s REAs as well. These co-operatively organized utility providers reflect some of the very best about what it means to be Albertan. As Albertans we work together to overcome the challenges our environment has presented to us, and we give back, supporting those among us who need it.

Before we vote on this motion, I want to once again encourage all of my colleagues to support it. We need to develop policy that will encourage stability, viability, and sustainability for these important co-operatively owned associations. They are part of our history, and it would be a shame to lose them. We must make them part of our future.

Thank you.

Cortes-Vargas: Madam Speaker, just seeing the time, I ask that we make the bells for this motion to be one minute.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North has proposed Motion 507.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 507 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Seeing the time and the progress that we’ve made, I would move that we adjourn the House for the time being and reconvene at 7:30 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:59 p.m.]

35. Ms Larivee moved:
Be it resolved that the membership of the Assembly's committees be replaced as follows:
- A. on the Standing Committee on Public Accounts that Ms Payne replace Mr. Malkinson and Ms Kazim replace Ms Luff;
 - B. on the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship that Ms Payne replace Mr. Malkinson;
 - C. on the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices that Ms Payne replace Mr. Malkinson, Ms Payne replace Mr. Malkinson as deputy chair, and Mr. Cooper replace Mr. Gill;
 - D. on the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund that MLA Drever replace Ms Luff;
 - E. on the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future that Mr. Dreeshen replace Mr. Taylor;
 - F. on the Standing Committee on Families and Communities that Ms Goodridge replace Mr. Ellis;
 - G. on the Standing Committee on Private Bills that Mr. Gill replace Mr. Orr.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to request one-minute bells for votes related to Government Motion 35.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. On behalf of the Government House Leader I move Government Motion 35.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 49(2) I move that the question be now put.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, for clarity of the House before we move on, the motion for the previous question under 49(2) serves to curtail the debate. After it is moved and carried, no further amendments may be made to the main motion as has been moved. The motion may be debated by every member who has spoken to the main question. If this motion is carried, then the vote is immediately called on the original question without any further debate, as in Standing Order 49(3).

Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would ask that the House vote this down right now, please. According to this motion that is now before the House, I have been removed from the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. I was hoping to be able to move an amendment to allow myself to not be removed from the Standing Committee on Public Accounts because it is against best practice in parliamentary procedure. According to the Canadian Audit and Accountability Foundation: the Public Accounts Committee should be free from government interference; it should be committed to working in a crosspartisan fashion; member turnover and substitution are discouraged whenever possible; and the Public Accounts Committee finds consensus and unity on its decisions.

The fact that the Official Opposition and the government are working together right now to not allow me to move an amendment to speak to the fact that they're choosing to take me off this committee against my wishes – I asked specifically not to be removed from this committee – and the fact that the government and the Official Opposition are working together right now to prevent me the opportunity to speak and to provide an amendment is absolutely abominable, Madam Speaker. This is a tragedy. I stand on this side as an independent because I feel that the democratic processes of this House do not work as they are intended to work, and this is absolutely an example of that. So I would ask very much that you allow amendments and debate on this motion to continue, please.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: I sure do, Madam Speaker. It is truly a remarkable day when two parties – the government party, that is, if anybody was to tune in for Oral Question Period, to be in pitched opposition to the Official Opposition – somehow find it in their hearts to come together when it is time for committee reassignment when it serves their own political interests. Like the Member for Calgary-East, I have a couple of amendments I'd like to put to this. I suspect the Member for Strathmore-Brooks may have as well.

It is entirely remarkable that the government and the Official Opposition, the NDP and the UCP: here they are hand in hand working together finally. Maybe that's the purpose of being a centrist. Maybe that's what it is. Maybe, finally, we've actually united these two parties. We've found something that they can actually agree on.

What they did: very clearly, when the hon. Deputy Government House Leader moved the motion, the Official Opposition House Leader sprang to his feet, just like that, lickety-split. In fact, he got up even before she moved the motion because very clearly they had colluded, and they had a plan, this nefarious little plan in the backrooms of this building, the kind of thing that Albertans absolutely hate and reject.

Now, democracy isn't always convenient, it isn't always simple, it isn't always straightforward, but, you know, democracy means that officially recognized parties of this Assembly, of which the Alberta Party caucus is one, would be on all of the major committees. I remind the government side that when their members the now Premier and the now Government House Leader were but two members of the Assembly sitting in this very spot, perhaps at one of these very desks, those two members were on every single committee, including Legislative Offices and including Members' Services, the two committees that govern how we run the Legislative Assembly.

But they've decided to exclude the Alberta Party caucus, an officially recognized third party, from those two committees. They've decided to exclude the Member for Calgary-East from any committees at all, which is completely unheard of, when the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster as single-member caucuses are part of a committee, when independent members in the past have always been assigned at least to one committee. That is unconscionable, that they would seek to exclude those members from those committees especially. Back when the NDP was a small party – Madam Speaker, I think that if they continue behaving this way, they may find themselves once again being a very small party represented by only a couple of members of the Assembly – they found themselves in a completely different position, where they were put on every single committee.

I wonder, if we actually were able to ask each one of the backbench members of the government party how they felt about this, if they actually, really felt that this is the right thing to do, not just excluding us from the committees that we are legitimately entitled to be a part of but this procedural trickery that's being used in collusion between the NDP and the UCP late at night, when no one seems to be watching, to just get their way, to steamroll and use the power of the Legislative Assembly and get together and roll over us smaller parties.

Well, it's not why I went into elected office. In fact, maybe in some ways it is, because I went into elected office to fight against this sort of thing, to fight against this sort of entitlement, using your muscle, this kind of bully tactics to get your way.

Mr. Yao: Shame.

Mr. Clark: It is shameful. It's ironic to hear that from a member of the UCP backbench because you're part of it. You're part of this. My arguments are so compelling that we've got UCP backbenchers heckling their own motion.

It's bizarre. I mean, we're through the looking glass on this, and while it may be a technical and procedural motion and while this may not be the topic of choice at the Red Deer Tim Hortons on the drive back to Calgary at the end of the week, this does matter. This really does matter. What happens in this House matters. How we conduct ourselves, how the business of the Legislative Assembly is conducted actually matters. It matters to the real lives of everyday Albertans. We're sitting here debating a procedural motion to exclude even the possibility of us presenting amendments, which I'm not so naive as to think would perhaps be accepted by the government although we've presented this request to the government, would like very much, I think, to be on these committees, because that's what was done when the two government members, back in 2008, were the lone voice of the NDP in the wilderness, by the way, as a two-member caucus, were an official party at the time. The Alberta Party now as a three-member caucus is an official party. They were on these committees that we seek to amend ourselves onto, but they're not going to even allow us the chance to debate that, as to why we should be on those committees.

I'm very angry with this, and I think if Albertans tuning in today were to see what's going on, they would be angry with this as well. This is not, I think, what they thought they were going to get when they elected a new government to sweep out a 44-year dynasty, but surprisingly, three and a half years in, they're starting to behave exactly the same way.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

7:40

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This is perhaps the most petty and vindictive motion I have ever seen come before this Legislature, and in the three and a half years I have been here, I have seen a lot of petty and vindictive. This is the most heavy-handed and extreme antidemocratic attempt by any member of this Legislature that I have ever seen in the entire time I've watched Alberta's Legislature in action, including before I was elected.

Now, the government motion before us here was originally vindictive enough to take the Member for Calgary-Greenway and the Member for Calgary-East off of committees. Now, I remember in my time on the Public Accounts Committee the Member for Calgary-East. However restricted by party discipline she was, she was, within the confines of that, perhaps one of the more thoughtful and well-studied people on that committee. Government members were not allowed to ask their own questions. They were written and scripted, but I could tell that she at least did her homework, which is more than I could say for many. Regardless of whatever political differences are there, she has experience on that committee and, I think, brings value.

But that's not what this is about. This motion to take the members for Calgary-Greenway and Calgary-East off these committees and move them around as the big parties see fit isn't about what's going to make the most functional and collaborative and intelligent committees of this Legislature possible. It's about power and vindictiveness.

Now, I expected to come in here this evening and debate Government Motion 35 to take them off these committees. The Member for Calgary-East would move a motion that would get defeated by the government, the Member for Calgary-Elbow would move a motion, likely, that would get defeated by the government, and I myself would make a motion that would get defeated by the government. That's what opposition is, and when you're smaller opposition parties, it's particularly futile sometimes, but it is our duty as the opposition to hold the government to account. Even if we expect we're going to lose votes, we have to make our point.

For the first time I've ever seen, the government and the Official Opposition are colluding to not even allow an amendment to a government motion. Now, can you imagine for one second if the NDP had brought forward a similar motion to not allow any amendments to Bill 6? When the NDP brought forward legislation that myself and many on the opposition and, I think, quietly, some members of the government, although they couldn't say so, felt was an attack on rural Alberta and farmers, the Official Opposition Wildrose at the time and the Progressive Conservative third party at the time put forward amendments. We knew that every single one would be shot down, but it was our duty as the opposition to oppose the government but to propose ways to make what they were proposing better. That is our job, and the government would have never dared to say that the opposition can't bring forward an amendment to what they're doing.

But – lo and behold – what happens when democracy becomes two foxes and a hen voting on what to have for dinner? This is collusion. This is making bipartisanship a negative, pejorative word. Bipartisanship is really when the two big parties gang up to screw the people together, when they work together to monopolize the political system, when they work together to make sure that there are no other voices. In fact, no one is even allowed to speak. What they are attempting to do is to make sure that – from my estimation and research, it's by far the busiest this distant corner of the Legislature has ever been, with one three-member caucus, three recognized single-member caucuses, and two independents – no one over here is allowed to make an amendment to a motion from the government.

Shame on the day when the Tories are bedfellows with the NDP in shutting down debate in this Legislature. I know that all of my colleagues on both sides of this House will remember the outrage from the NDP, when they were a small caucus sitting in the nosebleeds on this side of the Legislature before the last election, when the old Tories invoked closure on debate. They were outraged. Now, that type of outrage tends to dissipate when one goes into government. Sometimes it becomes inconvenient. But there hasn't even been an election since members on this side of the House were outraged when the government imposed closure on several bills: on the carbon tax, if I'm not mistaken, and on the Bill 6 attack on our farmers. The NDP government imposed closure on debate.

But at least even closure on debate wasn't saying: no debate. It wasn't saying: no amendments. We remember the rightful indignation of the Wildrose and Progressive Conservative caucuses a mere two years ago – two years ago – when we were debating Bill 6. We were outraged that the NDP invoked closure on debate because it was the wrong thing to do. But even the NDP wouldn't have had the gall to say: there can't be amendments proposed to our own legislation. They at least had the guts at the time to argue against those amendments and vote them down. That was a little more brave than saying that there can't even be amendments. But the most shameful thing here is that the Official Opposition is colluding to shut down debate in this Legislature. Can you imagine the small, little, brave two- and four-member NDP caucus doing this? Can you imagine the grassroots democratic legacy of the Wildrose doing this? Working hand in hand with the NDP to shut down debate or even propositions of changes to the government's plan in this place: that is shameful.

Now, I have great respect for the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. He's going to be very angry at me for mentioning this at all, but he's a good guy. He came in just as we were going on here and was unaware that this motion was actually moved by the Official Opposition House Leader, and as the Member for Calgary-Elbow was making a very, I think, good argument against this motion, he said, "Shame." It was a shameful motion, and I agree. And I don't mean to embarrass him, I don't mean to get him in trouble, but it was a moment of honesty, and he couldn't have known. He just assumed that this came from the NDP because this is something that's beyond what the NDP have ever done. This is beyond closure. I genuinely do not want to get him in trouble. He's a good guy. [interjections] I don't care what you guys say about him; he's a good guy. But he said, "Shame" before knowing that – I had to whisper in his ear, "Psst, this is a motion from your party." And that should say something here.

To every private member on the government side of the House, these are your cabinet ministers and your whip telling you what happens to you if you step out of line. This is telling you that if you step out of line and do something brave and speak up like the Member for Calgary-East has, this is what's going to happen to you. Members of the Official Opposition, you know in your hearts you are against this. You know this is what you stood for. Especially those of you who stood in the Wildrose with me, you know that this is the old, antidemocratic, Tory establishment way of doing things. You know in your heart that it's wrong. But I know that you're in a very tough spot, that there is extreme party discipline and whips here and that there are consequences if you break from it. But I know what's in your hearts. I know what's in your hearts, and you know this is wrong.

Vote for the government's motion to change these committees if you want. If you want to stack them with your members, okay. Fine. That's for your party. But at least vote against this particular motion, which will bar anyone in this Legislature from bringing forward an amendment to the government motion or even debating the motion itself. You know in your hearts that this is wrong. So I beseech you, private members of the government – I know who I'm talking to. I know this is not going to happen. But I'm telling you, private members of the government, that this is strengthening the party whip's crack on you.

Members of the Official Opposition, look in your hearts. You know this is against everything you stood for when you got elected. You know this is against democracy and free votes from MLAs. If you voted to oppose the government's closure of the Bill 6 debates, then surely you will vote against an even more draconian measure which will end debate, which is closure on this motion, and not even allow for an amendment to the government's motion.

If you're going to vote for the motion overall, fine – that's for your party; do it – but search your hearts and vote against this motion to invoke closure and not even allow for debate and amendments on a bill. I ask you. I know that in your hearts you know it's the wrong thing. Please have the courage of your convictions to throw the party whip aside for an evening and just see what happens.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Look, I just have a couple of questions for you. First of all, maybe just in terms of clarity, the Member for Strathmore-Brooks said that Calgary-East and Calgary-Greenway will not be on any committees, so I, not knowing if that was true or not, went out and checked. I don't know if the member realizes, but Calgary-East is on Families and Communities, and Calgary-Greenway would be on the Private Bills Committee. That's just a point of clarity which is important to know. I think that it's important for members to be able to be on committees here so that they have the ability to express themselves, whether they're on the government side, the Official Opposition, or as a private member or a third party. I think it is important to have that. It's important to have that clarity, Member, so that you know that there's just not a complete shutout.

Now, one of the other things that I wanted to just clarify as well here is that there was a hue and cry made by the Member for Calgary-Elbow that somehow working with the members opposite, the NDP, was absolutely unconscionable. I heard the same thing from the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. What is interesting about that, Madam Speaker, is that I know that on multiple occasions both of these members have worked many times with the government on amendments. I guess I'm just trying to figure out whether or not they have just stood up to pontificate or whether or not this is an actual concern that is legitimate. If you're going to cast stones, just make sure that you're not living in a glass house.

I ask the member if he would be willing to answer these questions because they are genuine questions that I have. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I want to thank the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner for his questions. They're actually well-taken, fair questions. I think I'm somewhat clarifying on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Elbow. I think he may have slightly misspoken in saying that the Member for Calgary-East wouldn't be on any committees. That's not the case. She is to be on one of the policy committees, which, we all know, get so much done in this place. Both the members for Calgary-Greenway and Calgary-East have been assigned to those committees but are, against their wishes, being taken off Members' Services and Public Accounts. When I say that the Member for Calgary-East is being taken off Public Accounts, I'm not saying that she's being removed from all committees. She is being left on a committee.

Now, to the member's questions and points about working with the NDP, I'm willing to work with any member of this Legislature on policy issues. Amendments I have put forward: the vast majority of them were unsuccessful. Some of them have been successful. I think one was successful. My least favourite of them was successful, but it was successful. The Minister of Health looks very indignant at this. But I'm willing to work with any member of this Legislature – I don't care if they're from the Rhinoceros Party – on improving legislation. What I am not willing to do is work with any member of this Legislature in shutting down debate. I'm not willing to work with any member of this Legislature on invoking closure on debate. I'm not willing to work with any member of this Legislature in saying that no member will be allowed to bring forward an amendment to a motion or an amendment to legislation. That is beyond the pale.

I have sincere policy disagreements on a lot of issues with the members across and significant disagreements with maybe some members of the opposition, but we probably see more eye to eye on the bulk of things. I will work with people where there's any common ground. But one thing that is unconscionable, regardless of our ideologies or party affiliation or even personalities, is any attempt to invoke closure on debate.

As the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner will know – and I remember – he was very right when he denounced the NDP passionately for closure on Bill 6. Now, this motion is even more extreme. This is invoking closure on this motion, to say that we may not even debate the main part of the motion. This is a motion to shut down debate on the motion, to say that we're not allowed to have a single word of debate on the motion itself and that no member – government or opposition, the third party, single-member caucuses, or independents – can bring forward amendments. That is even more extreme than the motions for closure brought forward by the government on Bill 6, on the carbon tax, and on a number of other issues where they wanted to stop debate.

I know that in his heart he knows this is right. I have great respect for him, and I ask that he stand up to do the right thing here.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak?

[Motion on previous question on Government Motion 35 carried]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, I will now put the next question forward.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The fundamental role of the Speaker is to ensure and protect the right of every member of this Legislature to speak. That is the ancient duty and privilege of the Speaker of any Legislative Assembly or parliament in our Westminster tradition. It is your duty to ensure that every member here gets to speak and gets to be heard and speak for their constituents. I cannot recall any precedents in the history of Alberta where on a government bill or motion it has been illegal to debate or propose amendments. There has never been a government motion or piece of legislation where it was illegal for members of the Legislature to debate or move amendments. It is a violation of privilege of the members of this Legislature that they are not allowed to speak to a government motion. It is a violation of privilege of every member of this Legislature that they are barred from presenting amendments. So I would ask that you rule in favour . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, do you have a standing order that you would like to reference in regard to your point of order to me?

Mr. Fildebrandt: You've got to give me a minute. I wasn't expecting you to side with me.

The Acting Speaker: You still have to provide a reference to a standing order.

We will move on.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 23

An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered in respect of this bill? The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I do have an amendment to . . .

Mr. Cooper: What? It's your bill.

Mr. S. Anderson: I know. A House amendment. I have the copies here, so I'll wait.

The Deputy Chair: Minister, if you could please send the copies to the table. As soon as I have the original, you can go ahead.

Hon. minister, your amendment is referred to as A1.

Mr. S. Anderson: Perfect. Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Municipal bylaw and technical amendments here. The municipal bylaw for pre-election disclosure: this first proposed amendment will give local authorities the discretion, should they choose to use it, to require candidates to disclose their campaign finances prior to election day. Municipalities and school boards can choose to use this authority, but they are not required to. If they choose to do this, they'll need to do it by way of bylaw, and in the bylaw the local authority will need to set out when, how, and what candidates will need to disclose beyond the legislative requirements to disclose postelection. This amendment empowers local authorities to further enhance transparency in the local election process if they believe it is appropriate for their community.

We also have a technical amendment. This amendment simply corrects a drafting oversight. The current bill references section 165 when, in fact, we need to reference section 147.34.

We're also cleaning up language to reference "campaign expense limits" rather than "election advertising expense limits."

This final proposed amendment is, once again, a simple technical amendment to address a drafting oversight. What we're doing here is aligning the offence amounts in sections of the Local Authorities Election Act with the amounts for administrative penalties in the new section 193, which authorizes the Election Commissioner to impose administrative penalties in the event of contraventions of certain parts of the act.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to amendment A1, moved by the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Madam Chair, you'll know that inside this House over an extended period of time this member spent a lot of time talking about how much consultation he does and how impressive he is. Essentially, he certainly implied that when we had been speaking about this piece of legislation, it was near perfect. In fact, if you listened to him, you would be surprised that there could be any error in a piece of legislation that he was responsible for. Let me just say this: the irony is not lost on me that the minister would have to come to the House and make an amendment that actually includes a fairly substantial piece here in this particular amendment.

I appreciate the minister actually providing a little bit of a heads-up that this particular amendment may or may not have been coming, but the piece around this law that allows the municipality to make a bylaw that then may require a pre-election report is actually a fairly significant change to the bill. I don't know if you'll remember, but I know that members on this side of the House asked for this particular bill to be sent to committee so that we could study these sorts of things and actually hear from municipalities as to whether or not the bill that he reportedly consulted on actually is going to have the intended consequences that he says it is.

Now, I would submit to you that this evening we have seen the minister make the admission that his legislation has challenges and problems and errors and omissions and, in fact, that it is not complete. I would be surprised now if he didn't think it was a good idea to actually ask some folks about the legislation. Clearly, a municipality raised some concerns, and he heeded those concerns and is now making an amendment. You know, by and large, I support the amendment in its intent, but again, if he had . . . [interjections] It's committee. He can speak as many times as he wants.

Mr. S. Anderson: I'm not talking to you.

Mr. Cooper: I know, but I'm listening to you.

Mr. S. Anderson: First time for everything.

Mr. Cooper: Hey, well, you know. The same could be said here this evening for you, Mr. Minister. There is a first time for everything.

I encourage you to heed the advice because I actually have also been doing some consulting, and while I'm disappointed at your lack of action to send this to committee, where we could do meaningful consultation, I do have a number of amendments to help improve your piece of legislation.

With that said – and I know that we had lots of opportunity to discuss a number of very important things this evening – I would like to make sure that we're moving forward. Given the fact that you are amending section 147 in this amendment – and of course you'll know, being the procedural guru that you are, that when a piece of legislation is opened up to an amendment, that then cannot be amended in another portion of committee.

With that said, I intend to move a subamendment to your amendment and encourage you to support it. I will pass that to the chair now and then proceed in an expedient manner.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

Your subamendment will be referred to as SA1, subamendment 1. Go ahead.

8:40

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. Subamendment SA1. I move that amendment A1 – that's the minister's – to Bill 23, an Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta, be amended in part A by renumbering clause (a) as clause (a.1) and adding the following before clause (a.1):

- (a) in the proposed section 147.4(1) by striking out "$50" wherever it occurs and substituting "$250."

Now, for those of you who are following along at home, in section 147 of this particular piece of legislation it speaks specifically about the amount of money that would need to be declared when it comes to donations. In this case someone wants to make a donation to a local candidate. Any amount over $50 would have to be disclosed in the disclosure act.

Now, for the record I support the disclosure of contributions to campaigns. Having said that, at the provincial level you'll know, Madam Chair, because I understand that in the constituency of Edmonton-Manning there is a significant amount of fundraising that takes place, that if someone is going to donate to your campaign or a PAC at the provincial level, the requirement to disclose is $250. We've heard the minister speak at some length about trying to make the sets of rules similar in terms of getting big money out of politics, banning corporate and union donations, and all of those sorts of things at both the municipal level and at the provincial level, but what he's doing is that he's creating two totally different sets of rules, one at the municipal level, one at the provincial level.

What this amendment does is that it creates uniformity. I know that those guys over there like Unifor, but this is uniformity. That is in the context of creating the same requirement to disclose at the provincial level and the municipal level. This minister is trying to muddy the waters by creating a $50 limit municipally and keeping the $250 limit provincially. I think that this makes good sense, to have one amount at both levels. Whether you're donating to a third party or whether you're donating to a candidate, there is no good reason to have one set of rules at the municipal level, one set of rules at the provincial level.

I strongly encourage the minister to support this common-sense solution that creates certainty and parity. If he trusts that provincial politicians can't be bought at $250, why does he not trust municipal politicians at a $50 ability to disclose when it comes to campaign financing? I encourage all members of the Assembly to support a good, common-sense amendment that creates certainty, uniformity, and is an all-round good idea.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would love to speak to this subamendment. Yes, I'm a policy wonk. I know everything that's going on in this House, hon. member, so thank you.

Here we go again. I want to say that I can't for the life of me understand why the folks over there continue to believe that municipal elections shouldn't be beholden to the same transparency rules that they and we have to abide by. If anyone in this House accepts a donation over $50, we have to disclose the name and address of that donor. It's that simple. We're making the process more transparent in lining it up with the provincial requirements. I have to wonder who you're consulting with, fine sir, who's recommending less transparency in municipal elections. Certainly not me.

I'll remind the members of this House that the current disclosure requirement for municipal campaigns is $100. Instead of proposing more transparency, you're proposing less transparency by increasing that dollar amount by 150 per cent. The point of this bill is to reduce the influence of big money, increase transparency, and streamline the process for candidates. So far this amendment has been counter to those goals.

When we went out and consulted with Albertans over the summer – yes, consulted – and received over 1,500 responses, they were overwhelmingly supportive of increasing transparency and reducing the influence of money on municipal campaigns. My advice to the opposition would be to start talking with Albertans.

I will not be in favour of this subamendment, Madam Chair. Surprise, surprise.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I want to thank the minister for his comments. I think it's overall a positive bill, but I think the amendment before us is rather common sense. I just have a simple question for the minister. Does he believe that a $250 donation can significantly influence a politician seeking office?

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the subamendment?

Seeing none, I will put the question on the subamendment.

[Motion on subamendment SA1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original amendment, amendment A1. Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I will call the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills to speak to this bill as amended.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you. I'm sorry that the minister didn't support our subamendment, which was not that exceptional of him, and I continue to not agree that that is what the amendment did do. Clearly, he knows that the amount at the provincial level that has to be disclosed is $250, not $50. We are creating two sets of rules, and that is problematic.

One thing that's very interesting, though, Madam Chair – and I know that you, too, will find this interesting – is that we just heard the minister speak about wanting to be open and transparent. If he, in fact, does want to be open and transparent, then he should have absolutely no problem – absolutely no problem – supporting this next amendment that I intend to move. One thing that has come as a bit of a surprise to many – well, in fact, it's not a surprise at all – is that this government is trying to again create special rules for their friends, and it's tucked away in the back. [interjection] Let me just say that you don't have a friend in me.

It's tucked away in the very back of this particular piece of legislation, Bill 23, in section 170, for those that would like to get their bills out, and this particular section is around additional rules for groups. You'll know, Madam Chair, that those groups typically are third-party advertisers, unions, those who want to engage in the process.

Section 162(1)(h) on page 55 defines a group as an unincorporated group of individuals or corporations acting in consort for a common purpose and includes a trade union and an employee organization or any combination of individuals, corporations, trade unions or employee organizations.

So that is what a group is.

Now, in section 170 it defines how those groups can utilize the resources that they have and also puts some parameters around what resources can be applied to the members and what will be considered a contribution of the group. But here's the big problem, Madam Chair. The big, big problem is that this government in this piece of legislation has created one set of rules for non-union groups or employee organizations and another set of rules for unions.

In section 170 it clearly makes it against the rules for a group to collect fees from its members and apply them or spend them on political contributions and then spread it out amongst their members. It prevents people from doing that except in clause (c), where it essentially creates an exemption for unions. So the union still could make a contribution to the third-party group or they could still spend the resources, but they don't have to have explicit permission from their members. So I don't know. Let's, say, just use for an example mandatory union fees that they may take from their members and then spend on a political contribution. It creates an exemption so that they don't have to have that from their members but every other non-union member organization has to.

Now, I think this is crazy. It is absolutely wild that this government goes around talking about how they want to get big money out of politics, that they want to create similar rules for unions and corporations, yet they have put in an exemption.

I'll pass the amendment to you, as I see you're just waiting with bated breath for it. I'll wait for you to provide me with the indication to proceed.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, your amendment will be referred to as amendment A2. Please go ahead.

Mr. Cooper: Amendment A2. It's shocking to me that the government – and now I can predict, I'm pretty certain, that the minister is going to stand up and be, like: "No, no, no. My lawyers are better than your lawyers, and this isn't really what the path forward is." However, I have consulted extensively with those in the legal profession, and they very clearly state that this, in fact, is what the government is doing. They are creating themselves an exemption for their friends and union allies that makes one set of rules for them, allows unions to continue to take mandatory fees and utilize them for political gain or political contributions against the will of their members, but wouldn't allow, say, a chamber of commerce, without explicit permission from its members, to utilize their resources for a third-party contribution. I say: shame on you. I don't understand why you are saying one thing and doing another.

So the solution is very simple, Madam Chair. It is to strike out clauses (b) and (c) – essentially, both get removed – and, as such, all of section 170(a) would be applied equally to both of those types of organizations. This would mean that "an advertising contribution from funds collected from a group's members may be attributed to its members only if," and then sections (i), (ii), and (iii) would also, then, be followed.

You know, I said it was surprising – but it's not really – that the true face of this government is now showing in what, we can all hope, may be the dying days of this government, that they are endeavouring to create one set of rules for unions and employee organizations and another set for non-unions and other groups.

The other significant concern here is that this particular piece of legislation is only going to apply to municipal PACs or municipal political advertising, and there's another complete set of rules at the provincial level. So if we're going to do as the minister says and – you know, I'm surprised that this isn't a democratic reform bill and is actually a Municipal Affairs bill because so much of this has to do with elections. But it's clear that the left hand doesn't know what the left hand is doing over there. We all know that there's very little right hand over there. It's by the left, by the left, by the left. The left hand doesn't know what the left hand is doing because the minister responsible for democratic reform and renewal, that passed six pieces of legislation in this House on election reform, passed them under one set of rules, and now the Minister of Municipal Affairs, who, you know, has done consultation, is passing virtually another set, totally different than the last set. The previous failed amendment was an example of that.

So if the minister actually wants to do the right thing, to not create one set of rules for unions, to not prop up his union friends, then he will support this amendment, repeal these two clauses, and allow all organizations to be treated equally.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Mr. S. Anderson: First off, I don't think you understand how unions work. They're democratically elected people that are in there, and they have to be accountable for every cent that their union members bring forward. But that's cool; you can look that up.

As well, we are going to reject this. This is verbatim what's in the provincial legislation. So on that count we will reject this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Mr. Cooper: Well, Madam Chair, it's no surprise that the government wants to protect their union friends and allies and not support an amendment like this. I seem to recall some significant discussion about this particular amendment in the provincial legislation as well. It was equally bad there.

The minister isn't afraid to have two sets of rules although I think that it is outrageous, and if he truly wants to send the right signal to nonprofits, business groups, municipal organizations, all of these types of organizations who are being treated differently by their leadership than the leadership of non-union organizations, he would in fact repeal these two sections. I know that many of my colleagues have a lot of things to say on this. I also think that it's a bit ironic when he says that unions are democratically elected. Sure, they are, but that doesn't mean that they don't continue to spend mandatory fees on things that their members don't support.

I just have a sneaking suspicion that my colleague from Drayton Valley-Devon has some concerns around this very issue. So I encourage my colleagues to make the case as to why the government shouldn't just reject this out of hand and should take some serious thought about this. I don't believe that Albertans look lightly upon the fact that this government creates one set of rules for unions and one set of rules for the job creators.

9:00

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I wish to rise and speak in favour of the amendment. One of the things that I think we try to strive for in this House is that we want to create an Alberta, a society, in which its citizens have the freedom to be able to control their finances and their spending and have some control over the organizations that they belong to. We've heard clearly from the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills that this piece of legislation would allow unions to have a different set of rules than would other organizations. That creates a serious situation that we really need to address.

I know that as a teacher in the public school system I did not have a choice as to whether I was going to be part of the ATA. I was automatically a member of the ATA, and I had no problems with that. I saw many valuable things in the ATA in my 30 years as a teacher. I appreciated it. It was a professional association. I appreciated the fact that at the ATA we were able to get together and work on professional issues, on professional conduct, that it allowed teachers to work together on setting standards for professional development, that my professional association could help to set best practices.

These are legitimate uses and were very positive things that the ATA could work together on, and as a teacher and as a part of that professional organization we could work together to advance the cause of education. I even appreciated the ATA as a collective bargaining unit that would work towards helping teachers to bargain collectively, to work on working conditions, to promote collegial relationships. So when I stand up here today, I am not trying to present a situation that is bashing a union. However, I will bring to the attention of this Legislature that there was one thing that always bothered me when I was part of the ATA, and that was that you should not make mandatory dues pay for what should be voluntary, what should be a voluntary choice of the individual who is a part of that organization.

Voluntary decision-making is an important piece of being a part of a profession. I would argue that when you pay your dues and you're part of a union or professional association, it's a fine thing for those dues to be used – for instance, I can remember as an ATA member that we had a special levy attached to our dues for a number of years in order to help build Barnett House in Edmonton. That was a perfectly good use of my dues. But now to have those dues, in turn, used to support Public Interest Alberta: well, there are many teachers in the ATA who would not necessarily support the work of Public Interest Alberta. Why should our mandatory dues be used to support that?

I would argue that this amendment allows for an even playing field. It means that professional associations and unions should only be able to use those dues for professional issues and that anything else should be a voluntary decision of the individual member of that organization. For instance, there is a criteria that we use for all other organizations in this bill that says that you would use the same criteria for a non-union organization when deciding how to use those dues, that they would be (a) voluntary, (b) for the purpose of the donation, and (c) attributed to the member from which the funds came. First point: it's voluntary.

I would suggest that this amendment speaks to a level playing field, to a fairness. It doesn't limit the ability of any group to donate money as long as it is collected in a voluntary and transparent fashion. That seems eminently reasonable and should have the support of all the members of this Assembly. All of us should have the capacity to make voluntary choices about how our monies are spent.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The Deputy Government House Leader.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect. This evening the Legislature will be hosting those of the Islamic faith for an Eid ceremony. The Jewish community will begin the start of Hanukkah on Sunday, and next week the Legislature will officially light the Christmas tree to begin the celebration of Christmas. As we begin to celebrate the holiday season, let us be reminded of the one thing that we all have in common, the desire to make our province a better place for future generations. Let us reflect on how we can achieve that goal both individually and by working together.

Please be seated.

Second Reading

Bill 27

Joint Governance of Public Sector Pension Plans Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville on behalf of the President of Treasury Board and Finance.

Ms Littlewood: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is my absolute privilege to join you here today in our Legislature to move second reading of Bill 27. We are just coming out of Public Accounts, so I will get my breath and I can get ready here.

Thank you so much. It's my privilege as the MLA for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, who has the pleasure and honour to represent many public service employees, including registered nurses, firefighters, corrections officers, fish and wildlife officers, and many more, too many to count, to talk about the importance of making sure that public-sector pensions are in the hands of those that contribute to them, those that they belong to, to ensure that they can take care of themselves and their families when they retire.

The purpose of the proposed Joint Governance of Public Sector Pension Plans Act is, of course, to implement a joint governance structure for three of Alberta's major public-sector pension plans – the local authorities pension plan, the public service pension plan, and the special forces pension plan – and register them as jointly sponsored plans under the Employment Pensions Plan Act.

Madam Speaker, for years employees and employers have advocated for a change in the governance of public-sector pension plans to a new structure that gives employers and employees equal say in how the pension plans they pay into are managed and administered. Our government has listened and we have worked with stakeholders to develop the structure and transition plan spelled out in draft legislation.

For almost three decades successive governments have been making promises to move on these practical reforms, and now we are proud to say that our government is making good on these promises. This proposed legislation lays the track to transition these plans to joint governance by March 1 and to embrace a new spirit of fairness and co-operation as we work to ensure our public-sector pension plans are well run and sustainable now and in the future. Our government believes that hard-working Albertans who have been saving up and paying into their pensions for decades should be able to retire in dignity.

Madam Speaker, each year members contribute thousands of dollars of their own money to these plans, and their employers do the same. These members include police officers, nurses, who I mentioned, other health care workers, municipal employees, education sector workers, and public servants who deliver and maintain a wide range of programs, services, and infrastructure that makes life better for Albertans.

Given the plans are funded by participating employees and employers and the assets held in the plan belong to the members, it follows that employees and employers should be able to make decisions that will impact these plans. Going forward, these plans will be governed fairly by employers and employees by giving equal voice to employees and employers, who are taking the politics out of pensions. There is no change to plan benefits or how the plans are funded and no cost to government as a result of the change. In recent decades joint governance of public-sector pension plans has been implemented in many Canadian provinces, including Ontario, British Columbia, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Newfoundland.

To understand the nature of the changes being proposed, it might be helpful to members of this Assembly if I took a few minutes to compare current and future governance structures. Upon implementation plan members will not see any change in their pension benefits or how their plans are funded, but behind the scenes there will be significant changes to plan governance. Currently these plans are subject to the Public Sector Pension Plans Act, with plan rules written into legislation and regulation. The minister currently fulfills the role of trustee and administrator for these plans. That role, coupled with the plan rules being contained in regulation, provides the government with considerable decision-making authority over these plans. Of course, something that I heard concern about ever since the election was on what would be our plans to make sure that those pensions are protected, because they had been used as political footballs in previous years.

The proposed legislation would remove the President of Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance as trustee and administrator of these plans in transferring these roles where they belong, to employees and employers in the form of joint governance. This is a common structure for public-sector pension plans in other Canadian jurisdictions, including British Columbia and Ontario, and the so-called pension deal becomes a joint undertaking of a plan's employee and employer sponsors.

Of course, as I mentioned earlier, these three plans will be registered under the Employment Pension Plans Act, under which the plans will be subject to the minimum standards, applicable generally to most pension plans in Alberta. They will be also overseen by the superintendent of pensions.

I would now like to draw your attention to some important aspects of the new governance structure as articulated in the proposed legislation. Madam Speaker, under the proposed legislation sponsor functions and trustee functions will be separated. Sponsor functions include determining pension plan design and benefits whereas trustee functions include the legal responsibility to safeguard pension plan assets and to act solely in the interests of the participants and beneficiaries of the plan.

Each plan will have its own sponsor board and will determine plan design and benefits. Seats on the sponsor board will be evenly distributed between employers and employee groups. The initial distribution is to be set out in legislation, but in the future sponsor boards will be able to make changes to board composition.

Sponsor boards will have a representative role, with each board member representing the views of the organization that nominated them, and will be responsible for setting the pension deal. Sponsor boards will have specific responsibilities and authorities, including setting contribution rates and benefits, making plan design rules, and establishing pertinent policy such as those related to funding, conduct, and conflicts of interest. Each plan will also have its own corporation and corporate board that will carry out trustee and administrator duties. The sponsor organizations that make appointments to their sponsor board will also make an equal number of appointments to the corporate board for their plan. As trustee the corporations will be responsible for managing the plan funding, including investments and making payments out of the fund to cover costs.

As administrator the corporations will be responsible for carrying out all of the administrative duties set out in the Employment Pension Plans Act and all other actions required for proper administration of the plan as prescribed by the legislation. The corporations' duties and responsibilities include investing plan assets, hiring external service providers, arranging for actuarial evaluations, and ensuring the plan complies with all applicable legislation and regulations.

On the transition date, March 1, several things will happen. All plan assets will be transferred from the minister as trustee to the corporation as trustee. The corporation will become the administrator of the plan. The Crown will cease to have responsibilities, functions, duties, obligations, or liabilities in relation to the administration of these plans other than as a participating employer in the public service pension plan and as per the agreement made by the previous government, a contributor to the special forces pension plan pre-1992 of liabilities. Also on the transition date – and this is a subtle but important point – the plan members will continue as members in the plan, and plan employers will continue as participating employers in the plan. The plans will continue to be overseen but through registration under the Employment Pension Plans Act and by the superintendent of pensions.

A few other important details that should be pointed out include the fact that these pension plans will continue to use the services of the Alberta Investment Management Corporation for investment management and the Alberta Pensions Services Corporation for pension administration services for a period of at least five years, after which corporations renew their agreements to consider alternatives. Agreements currently in place for part-time employee participation in these plans will remain in effect for three years before any changes, if any, can be made by plan sponsors. In the event of a merger or other employer succession event where the employees are absorbed by a new employer, the proposed legislation ensures employees can remain in their pension plan. No participating employer can withdraw from the plan for five years unless otherwise agreed to by the sponsor board.

All plan expenses will be paid out by the corporation from the respective plan fund, including expenses related to the transition. There will be no cost to government, and the pension plans will be able to absorb the cost. Plans will be required to disclose plan information specified in the act on a public website to better ensure accessibility and transparency.

Madam Speaker, going forward, sponsor boards will have the authority to make changes to the plain text, including contribution rates and benefits, provided the board with 50-50 representation from employees and employers can come to an agreement. As with most other pension plans in this province these plans will be regulated by the superintendent of pensions under the Employment Pension Plans Act.

As you might expect, some changes will have to be made to other statutes to ensure consistency such as schedule 4, which consists of various consequential amendments to other statutes, including the Conflicts of Interest Act, Employment Pension Plans Act, Financial Administration Act, Interpretation Act, Public Sector Pension Plans Act, and the Reform of Agencies, Boards and Commissions Compensation Act. Assuming the bill is passed, work to transition to joint governance will get under way as soon as the bill receives royal assent.

To sum up, Madam Speaker, this is an important piece of legislation that will provide balance to the governance of those pension plans. The benefits of joint governance are numerous, including clear roles and responsibilities, shared responsibility for plan design, shared responsibility for financial health of the plan, shared trusteeship of plan assets, equal representation of employer-employee groups, flexibility to choose service providers, and protections for plan members affected by a restructuring. We believe that employees and employers jointly should make these decisions about their plans and be equally responsible for the financial health of their pension plans. In our view, a worker's pension plan should not be subject to periodic shifts in the political winds, and it should be well run, well funded, and stable. Joint governance is a good idea, one that is used across the country and one that is long overdue.

I would ask all members of this Assembly to support this bill, and I look forward to the debate. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It, too, gives me great pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 27, Joint Governance of Public Sector Pension Plans Act. Every member of this Assembly works also for the taxpayers of Alberta, and more than 350,000 of those taxpayers are members of Alberta's public sector. I think it's fair to say that these public-sector workers hold a special place in the thoughts of those of us who are privileged to be elected in this province. One of the reasons they are so special is that each one of us is aware that when we discuss services and programs for Albertans, it is our public servants whom we envision carrying out that hard and capable work: nurses, Crown prosecutors, forestry technicians, and caretakers in this very building that take such great care of us. I could go on and on. Whenever I mention one public servant, I'm absolutely sure that my colleagues here will naturally think of another. That is how important they are to our daily lives and how important they are to this being a well-functioning province. I think that is something we can agree on, a rare occurrence in this House, so naturally we all take great interest in Bill 27.

When we look up advantages of working for the Alberta public service on the government website, it lists many advantages of working for the people of Alberta. One of the many benefits it mentions is that the government of Alberta offers a comprehensive benefit package. Madam Speaker, that comprehensive benefit package includes a pension plan.

Now, Madam Speaker, we know that Alberta is experiencing troubled fiscal times. Because of this NDP government our debt load is climbing at a rate that must alarm even members on that side of the floor, over $3 billion added to our debt just in October, over $15 billion total. We have known since this NDP's first budget that debt for Alberta taxpayers was going to reach shocking limits, but recently we've also seen the discount on our excellent oil production climb to alarming heights. Many Albertans can't help but feel that they're teetering on a cliff edge, and they need to know where that firm cushion is.

Madam Speaker, public-sector workers are fortunate because the vast majority of them are covered by a registered pension plan, and the fiscal surety their pensions offer them is crucial to their futures. These pensions, of course, are what we are here to discuss today. Bill 27 is proposing a shift in the way public-sector pensions have been governed in Alberta, an intriguing proposal, one that as Finance critic for the United Conservative Party I have reviewed closely, paid attention to my colleague's opening remarks, and will continue to do so.

However, Madam Speaker, I am curious why the government is bringing forward the concept of joint employee-employer trusteeship for three of Alberta's largest public-sector pensions at this stage, at this time. This NDP government had three and a half years to do so, and now it appears that they're rushing the framework. I invite the Finance minister to advise me otherwise, but I understand that a framework for moving to this new governance system was unveiled this summer, and now, just months later, it's coming forward into law on the floor of the Legislature. It makes me wonder how extensive consultations were with employee organizations, employers, and all members of the public.

Madam Speaker, the local authorities pension plan alone involves 420 employers as it includes municipal governments from villages to large cities as well as school boards and, of course, Alberta Health Services, our biggest public organization. Employees range from all kinds of municipal staff, firefighters, transit drivers, and health care workers throughout the province and many more capable, hard-working employees and school board support and administrative staff, a broad range indeed. Yet by the speed of this legislation we are led to believe they all quickly agreed – quickly agreed – to one common framework. Perhaps. Perhaps they did, but this government is planning on implementing the transition to joint governance quickly as well.

Madam Speaker, I note that the transition is anticipated for March 1. As joint governance of pension plans is a new concept for Alberta, I am surprised that this government didn't start this work long before. It's waited so long now that it has to make this shift swiftly because there is a certain deadline coming up. We sincerely hope, should this bill pass, that this transition is completed in as seamless a way as possible. We are talking about a lot of money coming under the governance of these boards and the future of so many Albertans. How much money? Sixty billion dollars. Sixty billion dollars.

That's why as United Conservative Party Finance critic I am raising these concerns. There is no room for error when we're talking about vast investments and the future of our hard-working employees and our taxpayers. Of course, we're also talking about people's futures and investments made by employers, including the taxpayers of Alberta. Madam Speaker, so far I have just mentioned the local authorities pension plan, the largest of three covered by the act, but I certainly do not mean to give short shrift to the thousands of government employees and nonacademic staff covered under the public service pension plan or, for that matter, police officers across the province who participate in the special forces pension plan.

Madam Speaker, since I have noted the $60 billion worth of employee-employer funds invested in these three plans, I do have a question for the Minister of Finance. It is clear that Bill 27 transfers all authority – all authority – for these plans to the new sponsorship and corporate boards, and currently that decision-making authority and responsibility for the pensions falls to the minister, the Minister of Treasury Board and Finance. Perhaps the Minister of Finance can clarify if the new corporation becomes responsible for the full pension liability under Bill 27.

The statement on the government website outlining the proposed governance board seems to indicate that it does transfer all liability today and in the future to the boards. Let me quote.

Employer and employee sponsors would also share responsibility for the risks associated with funding defined benefit plans, including the risk of investment losses that may require changes to contributions and/or benefits.

Madam Speaker, I would greatly appreciate it if the minister could clarify this important point. Thank you and thanks to him.

Returning to the many substantive changes proposed to Bill 27, I do note that joint governance, otherwise known as the trustee model, is deemed as the best practice in the industry. Some other provinces have already taken this route, and it is my hope that in crafting a framework that is unique to Alberta, the Minister of Finance has directed his ministry to work with other provinces to ensure that we learn from all of their experiences. Again, my concern is for the time, as mentioned earlier.

Any new framework results in evolution, and my hope is that we have learned as others have evolved and subsequently incorporated their lessons in Alberta's framework. As I have already mentioned, the NDP has waited to near the end of its mandate before making this legislative change and appears now to be doing it in a rapid hurry. Hopefully, it has not overlooked the changes other provinces have already made to the original models.

Madam Speaker, that brings me to another important point, and this is the expected expertise of representatives appointed to both the sponsorship and corporate boards that my colleague spoke of and the legislation outlines. Albertans will want to ensure that the 52 members appointed to these six boards meet a high threshold of knowledge, expertise, and care. Perhaps the minister can address the standards and oversight that will take place with regard to the appointees for each of these boards.

Madam Speaker, I note that Alberta's model separates each plan in to sponsorship and corporate boards, each of which perform different but equally important functions. As such, the representatives will have to have specific knowledge for the different boards. This will be especially challenging in the early years when there will not be an opportunity for succession or learning on the job, as occurs with many governance boards. It is important that all pieces of legislation, and I quote, get it right from the outset. It's especially important with Bill 27 because the stewardship will be transferred to the boards. We'll see them manage $60 billion worth of pension funds, hard-working Albertans' monies, hard-working employees' and taxpayers' money, and for that the boards must meet the highest standard right from the very beginning.

That is why the United Conservative Party wants assurance that all partners have had ample time to provide their input into this model of trustee governance. These boards are to become custodians of billions of dollars' worth of funds contributed by workers, employers, and taxpayers. Madam Speaker, the new governance boards will perform a sacred trust, and UCP plans to monitor the process every step of the way because that is the right thing to do for all Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 27, Joint Governance of Public Sector Pension Plans Act. The work that our public sector workers carry out is unparalleled in importance for everyone in our province. There isn't anybody that doesn't deal with a public servant at some point just about every day of their lives. From teachers to police officers to Crown prosecutors to paramedics, every single public servant does a duty to keep Albertans' lives running smoothly. We are grateful for the work that they do. As legislators it is our duty to serve the people of Alberta and of those the over 350,000 that work in the public sector. It is reasonable to say that everyone in this province, regardless of if they work in the public or private sector, has benefited from the good work done by Alberta's public servants.

It is unfortunate to know that the burden of the NDP's climbing, overwhelming debt is on the back of every working Albertan, present and future. Due to this government mismanagement of finances, every working Albertan is saddled with the debt load and the surrounding challenges that the NDP is granting on to them. We often talk about the $50 billion in debt and the $3 billion per year that will be going into just servicing debt in the form of interest payments to big banks.

With the level of debt that the NDP has sunk Albertans to, most are worried about what the future looks like for their children and for themselves. Many in the private sector are wondering whether next week's paycheck will be their last. As public servants look ahead, considering their future years, they picture their retirement and the pensions that await them, and they should be very concerned about any major changes that may affect the reliability or dependability of those investments.

Nowadays retirees are still moving as fast as they did in preretirement. They don't slow down. Therefore, pension administrators must take into consideration the long-term needs of our seniors. Pension portfolios must work for those that will be needing them down the road. That means that they need to be stable and reliable and held in trust. Albertans have faith in those that are administering their pensions on their behalf. Conversely, the administrators must have stable conditions to work with.

Therefore, we must ensure that the new governance boards that are charged with public pensions have the tools in place to act reliably and to act in the best interest of the Alberta workers and employers. With the importance of this move and what is at stake here for Albertans, I ask myself why the NDP is rushing this critical framework. This needs to be done correctly, and there is no room for error when dealing with the future of Albertans who are dedicating their lives to serving the province. There is no do-over and no backup plan when it comes to assuring public pensions to workers. Every aspect must be given proper consideration, and there cannot be any oversights.

This government has had the last three and a half years to take action and take steps towards putting together a framework to provide assurance to Alberta's public workers. However, they only released the discussion paper, as was mentioned by my colleague, this summer outlining the model that they were proposing, which affects hundreds of thousands of Albertans. How can we trust that something that seems so rushed will function without fault for something so crucial to Albertans? They waited until the end of their mandate to make such a significant and vital move, which makes me very nervous and should make public-sector pension workers nervous as well.

Bill 27 puts into action the most significant changes to the public-sector pension since 1992, and after all this time there is such a vast amount that must be considered. I have a hard time understanding how they could get all that needs to be done done so quickly while still being thorough and prudent. We've seen what happens when this NDP government rushes to make changes such as in the electricity sector.

As the opposition it is our duty to hold the government to account on behalf of all hard-working Albertans, so as the opposition we would like to review and ensure that the government is making changes accountably that will work to benefit all Albertans. We must ensure that those who are being affected by this change have been consulted and that their voices have been heard. We need assurance that this bill reflects the best interests of workers and employers and that there are no boondoggles that happen with this move as it is one that is so critical. With the scale of people that are affected by this piece of legislation, there is no room for error, and there must be enough time provided for pension members to have input into it and have their voices heard.

With other provinces having experienced this transition to a joint governance model, we must look at those jurisdictions to ensure that we are learning from those experiences and having as secure and stable a transition as possible. We must also look at the framework and compare it with jurisdictions that have carried it out successfully.

It is so important that the membership of the new sponsorship boards and corporate boards are experienced and principled. They have such an important mandate. The UCP would like assurance that those sitting on these boards will be experts, professionals, and that they will be stewards for the hard-earned pensions of the hundreds of thousands of hard-working public servants. As my colleague mentioned, $60 billion in value is a huge amount of money. But if you're not properly invested, it can take a downward turn at any time.

That raises questions. We're currently being overseen by AIMCo, and the ability to move that away from AIMCo after five years – I would hope that consideration is given to the success of AIMCo in the past before moving those pensions to another management firm for some reason other than, you know, thinking that they're going to get better results.

We have seen in the past here in Alberta where bad decisions have been made that have affected pensions. I recall – I believe it was back in the '80s – where one group decided to invest in golf courses and lost millions and millions of dollars for their union. So that would be my caution, just to make sure that the people that are sitting on these boards have the best interests of the employees and the employers in mind.

I would encourage all my colleagues to support the bill with the concession that we do a thorough check and make sure that the transition is being done properly. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any others wishing to speak to the bill? Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to speak to Bill 27, the Joint Governance of Public Sector Pension Plans Act. It's very clear that this is an important bill as it does impact, as we've heard, over 350,000 public-sector employees in this province, who are active, deferred, or may even be retired. Some of those may be recently retired, looking for long and fruitful retirements. We're blessed in this province that we have a long life, a long opportunity. Of course, the stability of those pensions, going forward, for many is extremely important and concerning, I think, to many as well.

Madam Speaker, $60 billion in assets managed currently through AIMCo is a big thing – that was at December 31, 2017 – $60 billion of hard-earned and hard-contributed money to ensure a comfortable and safe retirement. Of course, it covers the defined benefit pensions of three significant categories of workers across this province who, as mentioned by some of my esteemed colleagues before, are the people that we work with every day in this building, across the government, throughout the Legislature, and in those organizations and sectors that are covered by the plan throughout the province, our neighbours, our friends, our relatives, and so many others that are very dedicated and hard-working employees of various levels of government.

Madam Speaker, it's important, I think, that we recognize that these amendments to the governance of the pension plan are important and need to be well thought through and that the consultation with the various individuals and organizations and experts in this field are extremely important, and it does concern me that we seem to be in a little bit of a rush on this bill. Although we're supportive of the move in change of governance in this, we do want to ensure that there is transparency across the stakeholders in this as we would like to ensure that they are not only aware of what those changes are but what the impact of those changes might be going forward. Again, new employees in the government sector may not be accessing the benefits of this program in some cases for 25 or 30 years, and there are people that are still working who will look to those as a safe and stable retirement income for them in the future.

You know, Madam Speaker, this joint governance is important to us. We've talked about the fact that there is a longer life expectancy for many Albertans, gratefully so, those we used to talk about as seniors. I've been reminded very often by the seniors in my community that they are now active agers because they are extremely active. They're active still in business, many of them. Many of them become entrepreneurs later in life. Many of them are key volunteers in our community organizations, both at the grassroots level but also even at the board and governance levels. Many of them are great fundraisers. They are the people that knock on our doors sometimes raising funds for great causes, charities, and nonprofits throughout our city. We obviously see many of them being forced to seek employment later in life to ensure that they have that balance and stability in their incomes as they face ever-increasing costs across this province, and that concerns me as well.

We've talked in this House on numerous occasions about the carbon tax and about the minimum wage and about many other factors that are impacting, with primarily the greatest impact, those people on fixed incomes, the seniors in our province not only on public pensions but on their own life savings. We talk about people that are on different income programs and support programs from the province and our seniors at large who are also facing the challenges of those ever-increasing costs, whether they be living in their own homes, trying to access home care, or whether they be living in a different residential environment where those costs and services are increasing as well. The management of this pension fund is, again, something that we need to very much keep close tabs on, and the governance and the management of that governance model will determine much of that management going forward.

We hear and we've heard that AIMCo does a great job, that the returns of that organization for our public-sector employees have been a top performer, quite frankly. Sometimes I look at my own portfolios and look at AIMCo and think that there's a performance there which is really second to none in the investment community. The good news, I think, in this governance model and in having some latitude is to evaluate and to compare and to ensure that there's competition between AIMCo and other choices that these organizations have and will have in the future if they feel that their funds can be managed better elsewhere. I'd like to think that AIMCo will continue as a top performer in management of pension funds and other funds that are in various ways attached to the public sector in Alberta. I think that those are important things.

Joint governance, as we've seen, has been deemed a best practice in other jurisdictions, but best practices need to be measured, not just today and tomorrow but as to their impact in the future. I hope that the government has taken that diligence to talk to those administrators, those governance bodies, those board members in other provinces and ask the various parties that are being brought forward in this legislation what their experience is as well in terms of that best practice governance model. Is it working? Can it be improved? What is the track record, and what is the performance? Quite frankly, what is the feedback of those members and those pensioners that they serve going forward, Madam Speaker?

Again, we have seen that it's 350,000 employees, and, you know, we've had three and a half years, I guess, to ponder this possible change and to see if this is the right thing for Albertans. Again, I'm hoping that the diligence and consultation have been done at every level, not just with the leaders of these organizations but with those employees in the field, as it were, or those past employees who are now pensioners, on what their feelings are.

We've talked about the performance of some of the pension plans in the past and the current status of them as well, Madam Speaker, and we see that there are some that are fully funded. We've got the LAPP, with $43 billion, 104 per cent funded today; the PSPP, with $14 billion, 94 per cent funded; and the SFPP, with $3 billion, 89 per cent funded. But we have to remind ourselves that these are snapshots. These are snapshots of the performance today, and as we all know, there are business and economic cycles, and I guess we're lucky in many respects. The meltdown, the economic world financial crisis of 2008-2009: I'm sure that if we looked back at that time, we would see that these portfolios were probably significantly more challenged than these percentages indicate today. We have to remind ourselves that these cycles can come again, that the volatility of financial markets and world resource markets, as we are experiencing here in our great province, are not something that can be guaranteed.

I remember when I was in the housing industry looking at the United States. I think the term in the United States was that people were using their houses as credit cards because the value, of course, was going to go up and continue going up forever and ever and ever, so why not spend that forever equity increase that they had counted on? Until those fateful days in 2007-2008, when the entire real estate market and financial markets in the U.S. collapsed, leaving people with no savings, leaving people with little equity, leaving them with negative equity – that's an interesting term – basically, red ink in their principal residences that they had been using as a credit card. Of course, the entire market there came crashing down with subprime lending.

We can see the impact of these very quick and in many cases very unexpected structural changes to the economy although that one maybe should have been anticipated and how those can affect pensions as well. What looks great today, what looks like 94 per cent today, could end up being 64 per cent tomorrow. What's 104 per cent today could be an underfunded liability to those pensioners in the future. We need to keep that in mind in terms of being very prudent, being able and having, I think, a very broad and high-level view of the governance of these pensions, to ensure that they are not underfunded, Madam Speaker, going forward, not underfunded for the benefit of those employees who have given so generously out of their own savings, their own incomes to achieve that but also for their employers, who also do that.

The employers in this case are the government of Alberta and the people of Alberta, who contribute to ensure that that pension is something that can be counted on and funded in an appropriate manner and not put in jeopardy because of the performance of markets. I guess we all wish we had a crystal ball to look forward because then we would all have these incredible 120 per cent funded retirements. I always say that it's very sad when we look at these retirement opportunities, when the worst thing that could happen to you is that you live too long, when we are driving towards having this incredible medical system in our province and in this world, where people can have long and more fruitful, more active lives.

Madam Speaker, I look at the opportunity here for us to do things right, for us to consult, as we should. It seems that this was a bit of a hurry-up, three and a half years later. This was not in a government platform, but we're seeing it as a best practice. Now we're in a bit of a hurry-up, it seems. I hope that through debate here and through consultation with the stakeholders we can find that there's an opportunity here to ensure that this bill, Bill 27, meets the needs of the pensioners that are part of this, the 351,210 public-sector pension members who will count on this today, tomorrow, and into the future – our friends, our neighbours, our relatives, our constituents – and that we have addressed this in a way which really meets their needs.

Again, I believe it's something we should test going forward, that we make sure that this governance model is such that we are very, very clear that we have done the right thing, that the governance model is working. We should certainly keep a pulse on that through ongoing consultation, again, with all the stakeholders, not just the leaders, not just the investment managers, not just the corporate governance side or the sponsorship board side but also with the employees, to make sure that they're comfortable with the level of funding and possible liabilities that may accrue towards the government and towards taxpayers in the future.

Madam Speaker, I'm happy to support this bill, with some reservations, of course, as we should all have some reservations when we bring bills to this House to make sure that we bring the best possible legislation to the people of Alberta – and I'm quite pleased to be able to see the positive aspects of this – but make sure that we also take the opportunity to recognize that when we're doing things on a best practice basis, that changes often and that we need to consult widely and broadly. We need to ensure that we are meeting the needs not only today but in a changing world, a volatile world where what looks like something that might be certain and something that might actually look great on paper today can change in a heartbeat tomorrow, and we need to have the appropriate governance in place to achieve that.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak to this bill, Madam Speaker, and I thank the previous colleagues for their input as well. Hopefully, we continue with thoughtful discussion on this.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I would like to seek unanimous consent of the House to do an introduction.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'd like to take this moment just to acknowledge some members of the Alberta Law Reform Institute who are here in the gallery today. They're here for second reading of Bill 28. I'd ask them to rise as I call their names: Laura Buckingham, Katherine MacKenzie, and Sandra Petersson, who is the executive director of the Alberta Law Reform Institute. They have created a fantastic report that has led to these changes, that I think will be beneficial to all Albertans. I would ask that the House extend the traditional warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly members of the Alberta Caregivers Association. They are Sandy Sereda, who's the executive director; Debbie Cameron-Laninga, who's the program lead; Debra Paches, the caregiver adviser; Tristyn Wilm, the communications co-ordinator; and board member Anthony Abinader. Alberta Caregivers provides support in 140 communities in Alberta. They support the caregivers, and they are such a wonderful organization. Today they are here to make sure that all members of the Assembly know that they're an organization that's worth while to support because they care for every single member in that community. I would like to ask all members to please give them the customary welcome of the Assembly.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Joint Governance of Public Sector Pension Plans Act (continued)

The Deputy Speaker: Speaking to the bill, the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a privilege to stand today in the House and share my thoughts on legislation. It's interesting to see our friends in the gallery who talk about law reform, and we're here to talk about legislative reform. Today we're discussing Bill 27, which deals with the joint governance of public-sector pensions. As I understand, this new framework changes pretty much everything in how the public service pensions are administered here in Alberta. That's an important piece of legislation. I'm in the process of tepidly supporting it, but I wish to speak to some of the parts of the legislation that I think are important.

The way it's laid out now is that the Finance minister is the man in charge of these public service pensions. He is the sole administrator. This important change before us will affect hundreds of thousands of hard-working public servants and their pension plans. These plans include the police and the special forces pension plans, folks like those that work for the provincial government that contribute to the public service pension plan, and those in our local municipalities, school boards, and Alberta Health Services. So this is an important and huge change of direction in the administration or, as we're saying in the legislation, the governance of the pension plan. I'm sure everyone here wants to make sure these changes are done as smoothly as possible, with little interruption to these workers.

Madam Speaker, in my time in the Chamber I've seen that there are and can be intended and, many times, unintended consequences to legislation. Sometimes these consequences rear their heads long after the legislation is presented and the public becomes fully aware of the exact wording of the legislation.

These new changes now create a joint governance model for Alberta's three largest public-sector pension plans. All decisions about plan contributions, investment directions, and board appointments will be made by employer-employee or union governance boards instead of, as mentioned, being under the Minister of Finance. Bill 27 transfers that authority and all other responsibilities for new sponsorship and corporate boards.

In five years the boards will have the ability to choose an investment manager other than the Alberta Investment Management Corporation, now known as AIMCo. Under the current structure AIMCo is responsible for investing public-sector pensions. After five years the corporate boards will have the ability to choose another investment manager to invest and manage their pension funds. Public-sector pension funds account for more than 60 per cent of AIMCo's current portfolio. Pension funds have $60 billion in assets with AIMCo as of December 31, 2017, and affect a bit over 350,000 public-sector pension members.

This is a huge change of direction, Madam Speaker. Plans regulated by Bill 27 represent the most significant change to the way these pensions are governed and overseen since 1992. Significant, very significant.

As an aside, despite all the recent talk about this joint governance model it was never an acknowledged piece of the NDP's 2015 platform. A small oversight, but we've seen this before. Because, as we know, it was such a priority to this government, why would they wait until late in their mandate to push this forward? This government has had three and a half years to propose a governance framework for Alberta's public-sector pension plans, but they waited until this past summer to release a discussion paper outlining their proposed model. Perhaps I should not necessarily go down this particular rabbit hole, Madam Speaker, but it is interesting and, I believe, cognitive nonetheless to be advised of or present a perception of the government's presentation of the legislation.

As I talked about earlier, this new model creates a joint governance model. Now, Madam Speaker, this model is deemed to be a best practice, with B.C., Ontario, and Saskatchewan having a similar model although not as layered as Alberta's. The NDP has kind of rushed to put this together, but it looks as though Bill 27 proposes making wholesale changes to the governance structure, and we need some surety that both workers and employers have been fully heard and that their recommendations are reflected in this piece of legislation. After all, it's well and good for the NDP to say that it consulted with the employee and employer organizations. This new-found governance framework is undoubtedly of interest to the 350,000 pension members. We want to ensure that they are fully aware of Bill 27 and have had ample time to provide their input into it.

As we know, this government's record on fulsome consultation prior – and the key word, Madam Speaker, here is “prior” – to legislation is spotty. I remember standing in this House at the conclusion of the legislation known as Bill 6, with the high emotion that was presented outside the Chamber and inside the Chamber.

As with any piece of proposed legislation, especially one that makes such significant changes to an important decision-making and delivery framework for so many Albertans, it is critical to get it right from the beginning so we aren't scrambling to fix a piece of flawed legislation later on simply because it was rushed. That's not what we want to do on this side of the Chamber, Madam Speaker, and it's why I'm sure that that's not what the government wants to have happen either. I'm hoping and I believe that they've learned from experience.

Many other provinces have deemed that joint governance is the best practice in the industry, and it's worth while to explore this framework while making sure to get it right. When we are talking about the sums of money, the gigantic sums of money, involved and the sheer number of hard-working public-sector employees that are affected, it is important that the pensions are stable and that contributions are reasonable for workers and employers alike. We need to ensure that these new governance boards have the framework in place to give the surety and confidence that workers expect of someone tasked with such an important aspect of their later lives.

Retirees aren't old and inactive any longer, and changes to this system and to the way these pension plans are administered need to reflect this new reality. Our health care system, our health care are far better than they were. Medical advances are seeing retirees live longer, more active lives, and by necessity these new realities have to take a long-, in fact longer term view that includes all factors that could affect the pension portfolios held in trust for them.

I really hope that this government isn't rushing this legislation through. Too much is at stake here. Too much money and too many people could be adversely affected if this isn't done right. Since this joint governance is modelled after other provinces' models, I can only hope that they have a solid idea of how to proceed going forward. Did they ask for guidance from these other jurisdictions, Madam Speaker? Did they arrange for someone to go there and study these models first-hand? Perhaps they arranged with other provinces to liaison someone to help them navigate the highways and byways of this new governance style. I'm not sure. No one from that side has said. This is too important and too critical to learn on the job, as it were. With an anticipated transition date of March 1, 2019, boards will have a two-and-a-half-year window to establish themselves, with no time for picking it up on the go.

As I mentioned earlier, under the current system AIMCo is responsible for investing public-sector pensions, and after five years the corporate boards will have the ability to choose another investment manager. Of course, as one would expect, all pensions are to be registered under the Employment Pension Plans Act, which is good, I believe. What does bother me, to be honest, is that I'm not sure what the safeguards are that may be or are in place here. I sincerely hope that the minister shares that with us, because one item of note I saw was that under these Bill 27 changes the Auditor General is prevented from auditing these pension plans. As long as we have assurances that safeguards are in place, then perhaps that isn't an issue, but it does cause me pause.

Before I took that detour, I was discussing the new structure, the two governance boards responsible for each of these plans. To my understanding, the sponsorship board determines the pension deal, including setting up contribution rates, changes to eligibility, and benefit levels. It also has the mandate to determine director recruitment and remuneration of those directors as well as corporate board appointments.

The corporation, I guess, delivers the pension deal as the administrator and fund manager, including establishing investment policies and choosing the investment managers. They also take responsibility to communicate with members and to liaise with provincial regulators. Again, this is a new, fundamental shift in the way things will be done, and only time, Madam Speaker, will tell if it proves for the better.

We can only hope that due diligence has occurred, that safeguards are in place, and that the money these proud, hard-working Albertan public servants have contributed during their working careers is safe, secure, and remains fluid so that when the money is needed later in their lives, it's there for them to enjoy as they have responsibly believed that it will be. There is much at stake, Madam Speaker. Lives can be irreparably harmed if we don't get this right. With over 350,000 people and billions in assets on the line, the UCP will be monitoring these changes closely to keep this government accountable and ensure that employers', employees', and taxpayers' money is well taken care of now and in the future.

With that, I wish to say that I tepidly support the bill, Madam Speaker, and I relinquish my time. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville to close debate.

Ms Littlewood: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my privilege to move to close debate on Bill 27.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: Before I call on the hon. Minister of Justice, we've realized that the clock is travelling in double time for some reason this morning. We've already noted it, and we're taking steps to get that fixed.

The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm about to speak very quickly, apparently.

Bill 28

Family Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

Ms Ganley: It's my honour to rise today and move second reading of Bill 28.

Madam Speaker, our government wants to ensure that Alberta's laws respond to the needs of today's families. Bill 28, the Family Statutes Amendment Act, 2018, would modernize family law in our province and better support all Albertans. It will do three things if passed: ensure that unmarried couples have clear rules around property division if their relationship ends, clarify that parents of disabled adult children can seek support under the Family Law Act, and repeal the Married Women's Act.

The proposed legislation would make it easier for unmarried partners to divide their property if their relationship breaks down. We know that more and more Albertans are choosing to live together before getting married or are not getting married at all. Currently there's a lot of confusion in our province about what happens when an unmarried couple breaks up. Many unmarried couples believe that Alberta already has clear laws for fairly dividing property if a relationship breaks down. People believe everything from an equal division of property to parties having no rights at all to each other's property.

A relationship breakup can be one of the most difficult times in a person's life. The current lack of legislation makes the situation even more difficult. It can result in costly and time-consuming legal battles that add stress for partners and for their children. Currently the partner without the property needs to make a constructive trust claim and prove that they are entitled to some property at all. Madam Speaker, in many cases this places the onus on the party with less money and less power and can create a very challenging and inequitable situation. Generally these new rules would presume that property acquired during a relationship will be divided equally. They would also allow people who want to make different arrangements to be able to make their own agreements about property division.

The act would apply to adult interdependent partnerships as defined in the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act. That means that people who have been living together as an economic and emotional unit for three years, who entered into an agreement, or who have children and have been living in a relationship of economic and emotional interdependence of some permanence would be impacted by the act. In addition, it will create clear rules for those who were adult interdependent partners before they were married.

Madam Speaker, I think it's worth pointing out that this will not impact roommates. I know that there is some confusion out there, but it does require a relationship of emotional and economic interdependence. Simply living with someone will not be a trigger.

These changes reflect many of the recommendations of the Alberta Law Reform Institute. Madam Speaker, they have been carefully considered, and I think that they will have a positive impact on all Albertans. I should also mention that the Alberta branch of the Canadian Bar Association has been asking for these changes for years.

We recognize the changes we are proposing could have a significant impact on people's lives, and we want to give Albertans an opportunity to become informed about the changes and provide them with time to organize their financial affairs accordingly. That's why, if passed, these amendments would come into force on January 1, 2020.

This legislation will provide certainty in the law and promote settlement where possible. Madam Speaker, I think it's worth noting that the impact of family breakdown on the individuals in the family can be quite traumatic, particularly in cases where that breakup ends up being long and drawn out because the legal proceedings are not yet settled. People who are entering a breakup in their lives are often very emotional, and then at the same time they have to deal with the division of property and with a number of other things as their lives reorient themselves. Providing them with clear rules so that they can reach a settlement, so that that time of confusion and strife can end in their lives more quickly will have a huge impact on them.

Madam Speaker, I think it's worth noting as well that as the science of this advances, we are more and more aware of how much of an impact those relationship breakdowns and that high conflict can have on the children of a relationship. In many of these cases where there are children and the partners are not married, this high-conflict period can go on for years because it's difficult to resolve. There are no clear rules, so there isn't an impetus to reach a settlement. I think all members of this House are concerned with ensuring that we do our best to ensure that we are lessening those impacts on children. I believe that this act will create clear rules that will shorten that period of conflict and allow those children to move on with their lives as well.

The legislation is intended to help prevent complex and expensive legal battles between unmarried couples. It will also, Madam Speaker, free up court time that can be used for other matters.

Next, Bill 28 would also amend the eligibility criteria for adult support as set out in the Family Law Act. Currently the wording in the Family Law Act does not allow an application for child support for adult children unless they are in school and under the age of 22. Meanwhile the Divorce Act, which is federal legislation, an act that people have access to if they were legally married and are seeking a legal divorce, allows the court to consider support in any scenario where an adult child cannot provide for themselves independently. This means that in Alberta a parent or the child cannot apply for support for a disabled child who's over the age of 18 unless they are getting a legal divorce. That excludes some of the most vulnerable from access to child support, and these old rules are unfair to some families. Our proposed amendment is overdue in the province, and it would provide all Alberta families with the same rules and better support adult children with disability or illness.

Finally, Madam Speaker, we are also proposing to repeal the Married Women's Act, which was enacted in 1922. The act allowed married women to own their own property and sign their own contracts. Looking around this room, I think it's worth noting how far we have come in just under 100 years. Since then Alberta has enacted legislation that supplants the need for these rules, and women are permitted in all circumstances to own property and form contracts. Specifically, the Family Law Act recognizes that a woman is her own person regardless of whether or not she is married. The nearly century-old Married Women's Act is no longer necessary and will be repealed.

In conclusion, together all the proposed amendments to the legislation will bring Alberta forward. They will reduce expensive and drawn-out legal battles for unmarried couples who are separating, and they will protect vulnerable Albertans who would otherwise not have access to child support. This is another step our government is taking to make the justice system work more fairly and efficiently for everyone, Madam Speaker.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 28, the Family Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. A number of years ago it was brought to my attention that Airdrie had a number of old bylaws that were still on the books and were never repealed or changed although they became outdated in many ways. In particular, my favourite is the bylaw in the town of Airdrie that you cannot store your explosives underneath the stairs, still a bylaw on the books in Airdrie. There's another bylaw on the books in Airdrie that says that you can't tie your horse up in downtown Airdrie. So there are some interesting things that you find out and laws that are just simply never updated or looked back upon. It's great to see here today that there is no longer a need for the Married Women's Act, that was created in the 1920s to give rights to married women, who did not have them previously. It's a pleasure to see that here in this updated legislation today.

Madam Speaker, the Family Statutes Amendment Act, from what I see, brings common-law property division in line with that of a married person. It's going to make it more clear for lawyers and for judges in particular how property should be divided upon the breakdown of a relationship where spouses are not married, more particularly some clarity around those situations where couples are not married and there are children involved. This is a really great, common-sense amendment to the act, and it's really, really great to see.

Madam Speaker, I very briefly had a passing-by conversation with the minister in regard to the Dower Act, which is something that's been brought to my attention a number of times by constituents of mine over the years. Perhaps there is an attitude or a scenario in the coming days, weeks, months where we can take a look at that and maybe see that it is also outdated and that perhaps it is a good, common-sense step forward to repeal that in terms of red tape reduction. Really, I think it's become essentially a law that's potentially outdated. Now, I say this without due course in looking at the legislation or the consultation that's necessary in repealing such an act, but perhaps we'll be in a case where we see that in the near future in this Assembly, and I think that would be a good thing.

But I digress. We're talking about Bill 28, the Family Statutes Amendment Act, 2018, which, in my mind, is pretty common sense, a great update to the legislation. This will save our courts a lot of time and money to alleviate the stress around the situations where relationships break down between unmarried couples, Madam Speaker.

It's great to see that this legislation will give some time for the public to become aware of what's happened and the consequences, or lack thereof, that may happen as it will not come into force until January 1, 2020.

Madam Speaker, we know that according to Stats Canada 1 in 10 couples are in a common-law relationship here in Canada, and in fact common-law relationships are probably on the rise. They're the most common, pardon the pun. It's important that we have legislation that keeps up with the times and provides that clarity for our system here in Alberta.

The particular piece around the Court of Queen's Bench ruling on November 5, 2018, stating that it's unconstitutional for the Family Law Act to be more restrictive than the Divorce Act in terms of the age of a child for child support eligibility, Madam Speaker, particularly in terms of a child with disabilities: I think that not having that descriptive of a law around the age really is able to cater to and give discretion to the courts in determining what is best for each individual family and their situation. I think that's an important piece, and it's good to see that the courts had recognized that and that the government has recognized that in the legislation changes here today. My understanding was that this bill was something that came to this Assembly in the early 2000s, and it's interesting that we didn't repeal the 1920s Married Women's Act at that time, but there are some necessary pieces in this particular legislation that needed to happen as well. We're happy to see that here today.

Madam Speaker, it's also important to recognize in this legislation that people related by blood or adoption are not to be deemed interdependent partners, nor would a paid domestic employee and their client. In complex cases a decision whether two people were in an adult interdependent relationship would be made by a judge, and a person who falsely claims that they were in a common-law relationship is legally liable for damages to compensate the person that they wronged. So there's, of course, a piece of this legislation that speaks to those who may make a false claim in an effort to mine for money, I guess, from a person that they may know. There's always a portion of the population that doesn't always do the right thing, and it's important that we create legislation to close the loopholes or speak to that and, certainly, send a message to those who would effort to be fraudulent in that regard.

Madam Speaker, that's all I have to say at this stage of the bill, and I would encourage my colleagues and all members of this Assembly to support this piece of legislation in second reading. I look forward to the conversation and debate in Committee of the Whole. With that, I will sit down.

Thank you.

11:20

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Today I rise to speak to Bill 28, the Family Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. Sometimes the bills in this House don't make a lot of sense to me, but I clearly state that I agree with the premise of this bill. I'm in support of it. I think both the need is there, the intent, and the results here are valuable and important to our society. Tragically, too often relationships do end up in difficulty and in conflict. It's never a fun experience. It's never something that you would want to have to go through, but the reality is that they do, and therefore we need to help couples that find themselves in those kinds of situations and do what we can to make their lives a little bit better.

Maybe just a little bit of a story. I have a grandmother on my wife's side, actually, a lady who lived with a husband for many years. It kind of almost began to be a little bit of a family entertainment that she actually – her husband died, and then she married another, and he died, and she married another. After four husbands passing on, somewhere along the way they began to create relationships that were in writing. They kept the property of each for each side of the family, and it was very helpful that way.

The point is, though, that because she chose to marry them, the laws were very clear. It was much more simple to sort these kinds of things out, but today in our world for common-law couples it's not so simple. It is a lot more complex. It's a lot more murky in the sense that the guidance and the direction are not there about how the property would be divided, how the relationship ends, so I think it's important that we actually create these kinds of guidelines for common-law couples as well as for married couples.

Historically in western culture marriage has been the norm. Not even all marriages manage to survive or work out, but at least we have laws for married relationships. We don't have nearly as clear a guidance for those in common-law relationships, and therefore this current legislation will go a long way to improving that situation and providing some guidance and some help in that regard. It will essentially extend these same provisions to common-law couples as it does to married couples before the law, and hopefully it will make for better judgment on the part of the judicial system and a clearer understanding in society in general.

Judges render decisions based on the statutes of the law. They don't render them based on random thoughts or personal bias. They render them based on the statutes of the law, so providing clear statutes for the judges, I think, is an important step. Society, through elected legislators, defines what the societal norms are and what the boundaries of the law are, so as issues arise and culture changes, it's important for people to direct the judges, through a lawful enactment, on what would seem to be right and just and fair for all. That's, in a nutshell, I think, what this law is attempting to do.

Hopefully, as a side effect it will make the courts more efficient as well. We all know that the courts are overloaded. Family law courts are often overloaded. Hopefully, as one of the consequences it will make the courts more efficient and also render clarity and justice for plaintiffs as they find themselves in these difficult situations. I think it's important that we give the guidance of law so that the judges can make these kinds of clear and consistent and just decisions as they have to deal with these kinds of difficulties. It will empower judges. It will guide judges and make the decision-making process for them much easier although that doesn't mean to say that the dissolution of relationships ever gets easy. It's always challenging and difficult.

When two people are living together, they are essentially in a committed relationship. Regardless of whether they have a marriage certificate or not, the impacts are very real, and the relationship should be fair and just. No one should be sort of out of luck if the relationship breaks down. The reality is that this bill will affect and protect women possibly more than men, so the courts should be directed in this regard, and hopefully it will be truly beneficial in our society.

This law has been something that the Alberta Law Reform Institute has actually been asking for for several years. In June 2018, this year, they released an extensive report with regard to that. It's something that both public opinion and legal opinion have spoken out on, so I think that it's valuable in that regard as well and that we're responding both to society and legal opinion for the benefit of the courts and the benefit of a just system.

It is a factor to consider that common-law relationships – or, actually, that's really not the right language anymore, in Alberta at least; it is in other jurisdictions and it is federally, but in Alberta the proper legal term is "adult interdependent relationships" – are on the rise in Canada. Increasing numbers of couples – quite honestly, I was a little bit surprised to realize that the Stats Canada 2016 census data identified 1 in 10 adults. I would have thought it was more than that, but I don't know what their statistics-gathering questionnaires, whatever, were. But it's at least that many if not more.

The challenge will be here, though, I think, that this bill is completely dependent in many respects on another statute in Alberta, called the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act. This act is not being changed at this time, just to be clear. It stands, and it's appropriate. It's the act that will help define – and judges will refer to that act, the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act – and they will refer to it in trying to determine if a couple is in fact living common law or, more properly in Alberta legally, in an interdependent adult relationship. That's going to be part of the challenge moving forward, people who will argue, "I am" or "I am not," "We were," or "No, I wasn't," that were actually in this kind of a legal relationship. So the judges will have to try to untangle those thorny and difficult pieces of stories and lives. But that Adult Interdependent Relationships Act is the one that will give guidance and direction.

I think that it's extremely important that everyone in Alberta should make themselves aware of the changing nature of the legislation here in Alberta particularly and how that might impact them, what it might have as an effect on them, whether they are living in a codependent relationship or not. And I need to say that this impacts both young people and all the way to older people. It doesn't make any difference, and I think that there's a reality that many people may not realize that the nature of their relationship with someone else could be interpreted by the other person and by the law, in fact, that they are in fact in an adult interdependent relationship.

This is an important piece of understanding that I think needs to be brought to public awareness. I realize it isn't necessarily a direct part of the discussion of the bill, but I think that as a government in working toward building a better society, I would really like to see some sort of enactment or policy or whatever to bring awareness to the public of the changing nature of the relationships. I think the one part that may catch a lot of people completely unawares and maybe older people, in fact, older individuals who choose to live together in a home to save money or just for companionship, is that people may feel like they're in a platonic relationship. By definition, one does not have to be in a conjugal relationship in order to be in an adult interdependent relationship. People may find themselves in situations where their living arrangements commit them to a legal definition that they are not aware of.

This also has an impact on the Alberta Wills and Succession Act, particularly for people who are in some kind of a relationship, a nonmarried relationship but a relationship nevertheless, and the one person passes away. The other person may in fact have a legitimate claim to being an adult interdependent person, and if there are no genetic children of the person who passes away, then the entire estate would go to the other person in the adult interdependent relationship. If they can establish that in court, they would be entitled to the entire estate. If there are children of the person who passed away, then the person who can establish adult interdependency would in fact receive 50 per cent of the estate, and the other portion would be split with the surviving children of the person who passed away.

I have spent enough time in palliative care rooms and doing many, many, many funerals and have seen and experienced the tragedy of what I'm going to call family warfare over the estate. Too many times the estate is a trigger for deep, deep conflicts in extended families. This is a piece of this relationship and this law that I think needs clear education and that eventually might need a little bit of clarity in terms of how the estate is administered, how people become entitled to claim the estate. This moves much beyond the nature of just the relationship and the division of property of two living partners. But all of this with regard to the estate is clearly an element of what this law will help to define and help to deal with.

Quite frankly, I think it will also create some further murkiness that may need to be clarified in the future. That's just a comment that I would like to suggest. I'm not suggesting the bill is wrong in this, but I think it's something that will need to be watched, and maybe we will at one point have the Alberta Law Reform Institute making some further suggestions with regard to that.

I think that the repeal of the antiquated Married Women's Act is long overdue. I know of stories where back in the '30s and '40s some family members, women in particular, were left with absolutely nothing, put out on the streets with children. The repeal of that act, actually the fact that it probably complies with human rights these days, is long overdue. That was a law that basically gave the right of control over land and property of any woman who married to the husband. That was clearly an imbalance and an injustice that it's about time was fixed.

The age cap being lifted is in many cases beneficial, particularly, I think, as it also implies or refers to children with disabilities. There is an ongoing need there for them. I think this is a law that is useful and beneficial. Of course, any time a relationship dissolves, whatever kind of relationship it is, it's sad and tragic. We need to do whatever we can to support families. We need to do whatever we can to encourage families to find help if they can.

I'm not suggesting that every relationship will survive. In fact, I realize that many relationships don't. Sometimes the breakup of a relationship is caused by tragedy. Sometimes it's just an overly idealistic expectation and disillusionment. Sometimes it's just the emptiness of soul that another person can't possibly fill. Sometimes it's failure to invest and nurture. Sometimes it's our own dark demons that erupt in betrayals and addictions and abuses.

While tragedy in relationships is all too common and I grieve for those people that experience it, I do think it's helpful to have rules of engagement, if you want. I think it's helpful to be able to provide a way for people to disconnect that hopefully minimizes rather than increases the conflict and the pain and the suffering. This is really, in some ways, about property rights. I think we need to protect the property rights of both people in a relationship and do what we can to make relationships heal or for postrelationship folks to be able to heal to be able to move on as quickly as possible.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? Fort McMurray-Conklin.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise in the House today to speak in support of Bill 28, the Family Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. This piece of legislation seeks to address a very real and growing problem in our province. Every year the number of common-law partnerships continues to rise faster even than the rate of marriage. While married couples have resources available to them after a relationship has ended, many common-law partners do not. This bill will also help to simplify our court system for common-law relationships, leading to a wide range of effects on our province. The bill also will hold both parents accountable for their adult children with disabilities. Previously, when a common-law relationship would end, there would be no measures to address who would be responsible for adult children with disabilities or full-time students, and this bill closes that gap.

According to Stats Canada across Canada there were 6.3 per cent of couples involved in a common-law relationship in 1981. By 2016 this number had increased dramatically to 21.1 per cent across Canada. Currently we see that about 10 per cent of all couples in Canada are in a common-law partnership. Statistics Canada figures show that the number of common-law relationships grew at a rate more than four times that of married couples between 2006 and 2011. The Canadian Research Institute for Law and the Family says that many people in common-law relationships are unaware of their rights and entitlements or lack thereof. Laws governing common-law relationships differ across the country in both the length of time two partners must cohabit before they're considered to be common law and what the partners are entitled to in the event of a breakdown or a death.

There was an Angus Reid poll completed back in May of 2018 that found that 53 per cent of Canadian adults felt that marriage wasn't necessary, although it's worth noting that that same poll found that 47 per cent thought that it was important for couples in long-term relationships to have legal marriages. All in all, this shows a growing trend away from legal marriages and towards common-law partnerships. I think this is due to a change in societal norms. A generation ago a couple living together unmarried was often said to be living in sin. However, this social taboo has almost all been erased. Many millennials are choosing to start their career and purchase a home before getting married, if at all.

We really need to respond to this change in Alberta society, and I believe that this bill accomplishes that. It aims to clarify the process after a common-law relationship has ended. It provides a guideline for judges to follow when splitting the assets that the two shared, and having legislation to guide judges will save court time and money and alleviate some of the distress that comes with a relationship breakdown.

The legislation will help simplify the proceedings after a common-law relationship has broken down, and as I stated earlier, this kind of relationship is on the rise in Alberta. Furthermore, more couples are choosing to be in common-law relationships for longer periods of time if they do in fact choose to get married. This bill will help create stability if that relationship eventually dissolves so that it takes into account the time spent in the common-law relationship and not just the married portion for the division of assets. I'm happy to see that this government has decided to address this before it becomes a huge mess.

However, there are other benefits that this bill brings forward. For example, the Jordan decision has led to a drastic increase in the number of dismissed cases across Canada. This bill will help streamline the court system, which will hopefully result in appropriate charges for those who have committed crimes. The Supreme Court of Canada's 2016 Jordan decision establishes timelines that trials must be heard by: 18 months after charges are laid for a province's main entry point into the court system and 30 months after charges are laid for a province's superior court. Madam Speaker, 206 Jordan applications were filed in Alberta courts from October 25, 2016, to November 22, 2018; 10 are pending; 68 dismissed by the courts; 70 granted, three of which were appealed by the Crown; 42 abandoned by the defence; 22 proactively stayed by the Crown on the basis that they wouldn't have survived a Jordan application; and 47 resolved that were unrelated to Jordan.

More than 200 criminal cases from across the country have been tossed due to unreasonable delays since the Supreme Court's landmark Jordan decision two years ago. The court cases include murderers, sexual assault, drug trafficking, child lurers, all stayed by judges because the defendants' constitutional right to a timely trial was infringed upon. Why I bring this up is that this bill will help streamline the courts. This bill will help make sure that we are seeing these cases in a more timely fashion.

It also is going to give parents sharing the financial burden of disabled children a little bit more stability and similar rights to what a married couple in a similar situation would have. The law gave divorced parents the ability to continue getting financial support once the child turns 18 but didn't extend the same rights to common-law parents.

This government has created a really good bill because they did adequate consultations. This is a common-sense bill that has been introduced after extensive work by the members of the legal profession and the justice system. I wish more bills were the result of meaningful consultation such as this. So thank you.

The government has historically ignored or avoided consultations. For example, during Bill 6 the government chose to force legislative changes on farmers in Alberta, leading to public outcry, that ultimately pushed the government to make the right decision. Consultations are crucial in order to get the most well-rounded and comprehensive legislation possible, and I am grateful that this government has decided to consult on this bill. I also hope that they have learned that consultation and due diligence lead to good legislation.

Also, the fact that it comes into effect on January 1, 2020, allows for people to consider what this change in legislation will mean for them. It's important that all people have the opportunity to learn about this bill and how it will affect them before it comes into law.

As I previously stated, the Canadian Research Institute for Law and the Family says that many people in common-law relationships are unaware of their rights and entitlements or lack thereof. Furthermore, it found that some people chose to be in common-law relationships to avoid some of the legal property division requirements of marriage. This is an important point. People were choosing common-law relationships over marriage because of the perceived legal benefits. So we need to make sure that they're very much aware that there are some changes here. It is critical that we educate and raise awareness on this bill so that all individuals are knowledgeable about their rights and the rights of their partners.

But I will say that this bill isn't quite perfect, or if it is, I'm not quite sure of all the answers, so I've got a few questions on what this bill will entail. It's really easy to determine if someone is married or not and when that marriage starts. A few questions about how exactly we will go about stipulating as common law and when there are arguments therein, which would typically be found when a relationship dissolves. How will these provisions impact people on various types of income support? What happens when one partner was not aware of their rights? What happens with the splitting of pensions? It's my understanding that pensions can only be split between spouses and not common-law partners. So where does this fit? Also, would existing cohabitation agreements between common-law partners be valid when this bill comes into force? My assumption is probably, but I think we need to have some clarification on that.

Overall, Madam Speaker, this is a good bill. It focuses on real issues that need to be addressed, and it helps to solve more than one issue at a time with limited potential to add more problems down the road. It will hopefully help lower the burden on our court systems, allowing our judges to hold criminals accountable for their actions. It also provides much-needed support for parents who have children with disabilities, ensuring that both common-law partners are responsible for their adult children with disabilities. And to go a little bit further into the point that my colleague from Airdrie made, getting rid of the Married Women's Act is a very, very much appreciated piece. It's good to see antiquated pieces of legislation being removed from the books. It helps make things easier for Albertans, for legislators, and for the legal profession.

I would just encourage everyone to support this bill here, and I'm excited to hopefully get some answers to my questions come Committee of the Whole. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm really pleased to rise today and speak to Bill 28, Family Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. I've heard many of my colleagues talk about the mechanics of the bill and the technical aspects of it. I want to take this opportunity to tell a story.

My constituent Christina Ryan has a daughter named Emily. I've gotten to know Christina and her partner Ron and Christina's daughter Emily and Ron's daughter Sophie over the last year and a bit. I learned from Christina that she was facing a situation with her daughter Em. Em has multiple disabilities and requires extra care. She uses a wheelchair and has to see doctors quite a few times a month to manage her health.

What Christina discovered when Em turned 18 is that Alberta is the last province that has no requirement for common-law parents to continue to support their dependent child once they turn 18. The only alternatives for Christina and Em were AISH, which only provides a lower than poverty line income, and the burden of financial support fell solely on Christina. What this means is that Christina has to take 12 days off a month to take Em to her doctor's appointments, and Christina's income is vastly lower than it could be because of this. It means that when Em needs a new wheelchair, which is an expense of $3,000 to $4,000, Christina would have to raise this money on her own. Medical supplies and aids to daily living like wheelchairs aren't covered for adults with disabilities under AISH.

These are huge financial burdens for a single parent with an adult dependent child to have to bear on their own under the current rules. The other parent can simply walk away without any further financial responsibility for their child. Christina thought this wasn't fair. She hired a lawyer to legally challenge Alberta's Family Law Act, and she also called on Alberta Justice to amend legislation, which is why we're debating this bill here today. If anyone here or anyone watching ever thinks that a single person can't make a difference, I want you to remember Christina and Em and the bill that we are debating today. She's made a real difference for a lot of people.

What this bill means is hope for families to rise out of poverty. It means Emily will be able to receive the therapies that are required to manage her health but sometimes are out of reach because of financial constraints. This bill means hope for the future. It means that Christina and Em know that there's hope to have a more secure quality of life. People with disabilities deserve the same care as anyone else.

Finally, I'd like to share a little piece of information that I learned while researching this bill today. Over 50 per cent of our human rights in Canada are entrenched because of people with disabilities bringing them forward.

Because of all of this, I'm very happy to support Bill 28, and I encourage my colleagues to do the same as well.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very happy to stand in this House and speak my support for Bill 28, the Family Statutes Amendment Act, 2018.

I have had two long-term marital relationships in my life. One was a marriage, which I've already described in this Legislature and which ended eventually in charges being laid and an annulment. The second relationship was a 27-year common-law relationship. Now, I've spoken to many constituents as well as many other women and men from around this province about the issues being addressed through this bill. Many of their experiences mirror my own in either of my long-term relationships. So I am thrilled to see the Matrimonial Property Act amended to reflect property division rules for unmarried partners to the degree possible and the Married Women's Act repealed. I will say a little about both of these changes, and then I intend to say a lot about the Family Law Act.

In 1922, when the Married Women's Act first came into force, it would have been considered forward movement for women. I did a little research, and I wanted to know what the purpose of that act was. I came across a couple of sentences which virtually grabbed me by the throat, and I quote: although the husband and wife were one in the law, the husband was the one. As Blackstone expressed it, "the very being or legal existence of the woman is suspended during the marriage, or at least is incorporated and consolidated into that of the husband."

You can imagine how that affected me. But I believe that that bill was the precursor to the ruling in 1929 when some women in this country became persons. For other women it did take longer. As much as the name of the bill, the Married Women's Act, makes my teeth grate, it did have a purpose. In this day and age I believe it is truly redundant – thank goodness – as the advantages it had provided are now addressed in the Family Law Act. The repeal of the Married Women's Act takes effect on royal assent.

As I said, I am also pleased to see that within the common-law relationship the Matrimonial Property Act, insofar as possible, will see the law be equally reflective as compared to a married relationship. Currently in Alberta when a married couple separates or gets a divorce, the law clearly says how the property should be divided through the Matrimonial Property Act. However, this does not apply to nonmarried couples. When unmarried couples break up, they have to figure out how to split their belongings and assets. There is no legislation that says how to divide the property when a nonmarried couple breaks up. This can result in uncertainty and costly legal battles if the couple cannot agree on how to divide their property.

I know that this is a problem because I experienced it. My former common-law partner made a larger salary than I, only because I put my career on hold and moved three times to support the advancement of his career. When we separated, he not only assumed the property should be his, but he told his family it was. Fortunately for me, I had the foresight to make sure that that property was jointly owned; therefore, it had to be equally divided. He, in fact, could not give me property of which I was already the rightful owner but only because I'd insisted on joint ownership when we purchased assets.

An older constituent of mine had been in a relationship her entire adult life, and when this relationship deteriorated into a separation, she felt she didn't have a leg to stand on because he had insisted on putting everything in his own name even though she also made payments on everything that she thought was mutually owned. The amendments to this act will give her the right to her fair share of that mutual property.

The Matrimonial Property Act will be amended to provide legislated property division rules for unmarried partners. These rules will largely mirror the rules that apply to married couples to the degree possible. This part of the bill, if passed, will come into force on January 1, 2020. Updated educational materials will become available and work with stakeholders will be done to update the public information.

I think one of the most crucial pieces of this bill will be the amendments to the Family Law Act. I so clearly remember Jane Doe and two of her three children sitting in my office trying to share her story with me through tears of desperation. I saw her bruises. I heard her anguish. I heard her children echo her story. She and her children were hiding in a shelter. She felt that she and her children were the only ones experiencing this horror, and in that time and in her world they were. I remember sobbing as she shared her third child's medical history and how the father of those children was withholding her ability to access medical treatment and supports until she agreed to move back with him. The proposed amendments to the Family Law Act would have prevented him from being able to do that.

The Family Law Act will be amended to allow a claim for child support to be made for an adult child of unmarried parents who is unable to withdraw from parental charge because of an illness, disability, full-time student status, or other cause. The amendments to Family Law Act child support eligibility will come into force on royal assent.

I think that it is about time we have this legislation. I know it would have had an impact for me, and I know from the number of people that I've spoken to not just in my constituency but right across the province that this will have a huge impact to make their lives better.

I expect everybody in this House to support this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 27, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the consul general of Japan in Calgary, Mr. Shigenobu Kobayashi, and his spouse, Keiko Kobayashi, as well as the deputy consul general, Mr. Yasuhiko Tanaka, and the honorary consul general in Edmonton, Olenka Bilash, and staff from the consulate general. Alberta and Japan have enjoyed a very strong and productive relationship for decades, and there's tremendous potential to strengthen that relationship even further, especially under the TPP agreement. We look forward to continuing our work with the consul general to further our trade relations and our connections with such an important partner, friend, and ally. Alberta remains committed to our partnership with our sister province, which is Hokkaido, and looks forward to celebrating the 40th anniversary of the agreement in 2020. I now ask all of our guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. M. le Président, c'est avec fierté que je me lève à cette Chambre aujourd'hui pour introduire the students from Leo Nickerson elementary school. The students are accompanied by their teachers Mrs. Stephanie Desjarlais and Mme Roxanne Walter, their chaperones Ms Holly Cosgrove and – I apologize if I don't get your name right – Ms Awa Ndoye. I would ask all of the students, chaperones, and teachers to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 17 students from the school of Legal. They are accompanied by their teachers Mr. Jason Paik and Caroline Corbett along with parent chaperone Greg Bauwens. I would ask that they please rise at this time and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you teachers, chaperones, and students from Maskwacis Cultural College, in my constituency. They are social workers, and they're in a political policy class so, no doubt, here to advocate also for a new college facility. If they would rise when I call their names, please: Joyce Crandall, Wilda Listener, Ally Bull, Geraldine Rain, Darryl Montour, Kaylene Buffalo, Mekwun Moses, Sherelle Johnson, Anissa Omeasoo, Tannis Swampy, Shaunita Potts, Lyvia Bruno, Barb Docleen, and Paige Hamelin. If everybody would please give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups today? The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise and introduce a school group to you at this point in time. They won't be joining us until 2 p.m., but of course we'll be in the middle of Routine, so on their behalf, ahead of them arriving here, I rise to introduce to you and through you a school group from St. Jerome Catholic school. There are, I believe, around 30 students with two of their teachers, Alicia Centis and Diane Lacika. I can tell you that St. Jerome is a science-based academy school, and I've had the honour of being a guest judge every year at their science fair. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, when it was part of his riding, was a guest judge for many, many years. Incredibly bright students. The future of our province is in great hands. With that, I would ask all members to join me in welcoming the group from St. Jerome.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Other school groups, hon. members? The hon. Member for Calgary-Acadia.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Health I rise to introduce to you and through you some guests who are here today to support the introduction of Bill 30 later this afternoon. These folks have fought long and hard for some of our most vulnerable Albertans to be protected and for more of our mental health services to be regulated. I'm proud that our government is working with them. I want to thank them all for their dedication to making Alberta a better place for those who need help and for their families. If they could please stand and remain standing as I call their names. We have Kim and Mike Argent from Red Deer, and from around our province representatives of the Federation of Associations of Counselling Therapists in Alberta, or FACT-Alberta. We have the chair, Nicole Imgrund, and her husband, Colin Peterson; Laura Hahn, Sean Swaby, Amy Cote, Lorain Gellink, and Nicholas Renaud. These are some of the folks helping us to get mental health and substance use supports right for all Albertans, and I'd like to invite them to please receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Rob Siewert, who is a councillor for the municipal district of Foothills, near High River, where he represents division 1. It's my home riding. I'm very proud that he's here. Rob has been a devoted community member throughout his many years in Foothills as a volunteer in his local school, church, kids' camps, and just being there as needs arise. I've had the pleasure of working with Rob since he was first elected in 2017, and I look forward to continuing to partner with him in the future. Located in the public gallery today, Rob is joined by his wife, Sarah, and their children Leslie, Alysha, Megan, and Ross Siewert. I would ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House some guests: Imran Khan, Sobia Aziz, Ahmer Khan, Anamta Imran, Waseem Hamza, and Nadia Khurshid. All of these guests came all the way from my hometown of Calgary, and they also belong to my hometown of Rawalakot, Azad Kashmir. Imran Khan is a filmmaker, a recent graduate of the Toronto Film School, and he just moved back to Calgary; and Sobia Aziz is an office-bearer with Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaf, Azad Kashmir. I ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, today it is my honour to introduce two senior members from the Wilberforce Project. If they would rise as I call their names: Stephanie Fennelly, the executive director of Wilberforce; and Katie Campbell, the vice-president of communications, Wilberforce. They are a grassroots group of mostly young Albertans working on re-examining laws around abortion services in Alberta. I've been meeting with them today to define areas of common ground on potential parental notification for minors obtaining abortions, improving adoption services, and the importance of repealing the Bill 9 attack on free speech for pro-life Albertans. I ask that all members of the House join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the mayor of Drumheller and her fine husband, Kelly. Mayor Colberg is here today to meet with government members in regard to flood mitigation, which has been an ongoing problem in the city of Drumheller, and I'm pleased to have her rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, it's indeed an honour and a privilege to be able to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some of the best and finest representatives of construction companies in Canada. I'd like them to rise as I call their names: Rod Schenk, director of PCL; Mike Martens, director of public affairs, PCA; Paul De Jong, president, PCA; Dennis Perrin, Alberta director of CLAC; Wayne Prins, executive director of CLAC; and Jay Bueckert, regional director of CLAC. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a gentleman from Lacombe, Myles Chykerda. He actually left the sunny city of Los Angeles, where he's a PhD candidate in archaeology, to participate more directly in democracy here in Alberta. He's the Alberta Party candidate for Lacombe-Ponoka. I'd like Myles to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Official Opposition Leader and Pipeline Development

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The UCP leader sat in Ottawa around the cabinet table for 10 years. For two of those years he was the minister responsible for employment, but shockingly he told this Legislature yesterday that "I wasn't responsible for pipelines." Not responsible? Pipelines to new markets mean thousands of jobs for working people in Alberta and across Canada. They mean a better price for our energy resources and billions in revenue for the things that matter to families like schools, hospitals, and roads. As the minister for jobs and the right-hand man to the Prime Minister he was responsible, but he failed. He blew his chance to secure market access for our resources when he had the chance.

Now, it's true that as minister of immigration he was more focused on things like cutting health care for vulnerable refugees and making it harder for families to reunite with their loved ones in Canada and allowing corporations to abuse the temporary foreign worker program to drive down wages, but he should have been focused on fighting for Alberta jobs.

The facts are clear. The UCP leader's government in Ottawa did not get a single new pipeline built to the east or west coast. That is what's truly needed to get full value for our oil. They didn't get the job done despite having Conservatives in power in Ottawa and here in Edmonton for a decade. Not only that, but they caused more Canadians to oppose pipelines than ever before. Now he's asking folks in Alberta to trust him to fix a problem he created.

On this side of the House we take our responsibilities seriously. We will keep fighting for a pipeline to tidewater and a better price for our oil. That's what will ensure every working family feels our economic recovery, and we won't stop until that job is done.

North American Energy Industry Competitiveness

Mr. Barnes: I recently read an article by Seeking Alpha called Who Wins as Oil Price Differentials Widen in the Permian Basin? that focuses on the Texas commodity markets. The article talks about the widening price differential and how terrible it is that the average Texas basin differential was almost $8. Will the differential get worse? Yes. The differential for Texas Permian basin blends is expected to increase through most of 2019 until "two large oil pipelines operated by EPIC and Plains All American become operational in late 2019."

Yes, Mr. Speaker, you heard that right. Two large pipelines being built by private companies are set to come online in late 2019. What glorious mysteries it is to consider that private companies would be willing to invest in something like pipelines, and despite the growing differential for Permian basin oil, investment in Texas has been torrid, nearly $50 billion in capital investment last year. Fifty billion dollars. That accounts for a third of the total capital investment in the United States. Contrast that with Alberta. Northern Gateway: cancelled. Energy East: cancelled. Trans Mountain: halted and nationalized after being abandoned by the private sector. This has led to an outflow of investment that Jim Davidson, former CEO of GMP FirstEnergy, says is the worst he's ever seen. Enerplus, one of Canada's largest independent oil and gas producers, will spend 90 per cent of its capital in the United States this year and next. This investment flight has real-world consequences for Alberta families. It means that while Texas families and communities are seeing more jobs, higher wages, and better benefits, Alberta families are being asked to take 10, 20, 30, and even 40 per cent wage reductions.

This is a result of that NDP's managed decline of our economy. It needs to stop, and this spring it will.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Universal Health Care

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Reflecting on the importance of universal health care has brought back memories from my younger years which I think are worth thinking about. When I was six, polio ran rampant through Edmonton, caused consternation among parents especially. The polio vaccine had not yet been developed, and we did not have universal health care. Working-class families were vulnerable. My clearest memory of this time took place in a house on our block. Mothers and children had gathered there because a child of the house had taken sick. The mothers were trying to determine whether the child had polio or not. I was very young and didn't understand it all, but I knew that the adults were afraid and that the child was quite sick.

As an adult I realized several things. One is that it was very reasonable to be afraid of polio. Without a preventative vaccine or treatment polio is a horrendous disease. Every block had a family affected by it: someone who was in an iron lung, someone who was in the hospital receiving treatment, some who had to go to the Shriners hospital in Winnipeg.

The second thing I realized was that without universal health care people couldn't afford to seek medical help. We must consider carefully the vital importance of having health care available and affordable for our loved ones and the benefits of having good health care for everyone. We must remember the anguish that people suffered when they didn't know if their loved ones would live or die and the desperation they must have felt.

Many things make us who we are, but I think the most important is that we take care of each other. How we treat those most in need in society tells us what kind of people we are.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Government Policies

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been an interesting first month representing my incredible constituents of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake up here in Edmonton. There have been a lot of firsts. However, I don't think I was prepared for the full extent of the NDP's hypocrisy.

Last night we discussed why the NDP was refusing to provide the amount of coal-generated electricity imports from the United States. This NDP government went out of their way to shut down Alberta coal plants only to import coal-generated electricity from the United States. It's mind boggling why this Alberta NDP government would shut down businesses here in Alberta, destroy jobs here in Alberta, and destroy communities here in Alberta just to help their friends in the U.S. energy industry.

Then, Mr. Speaker, there was the NDP minister of the environment in question period last week, where again she tried to hide her work as an anti Alberta pipeline protester. I asked whether she now really supports pipelines, if she's actually changed her mind, whether the NDP regretted fighting against pipeline development in Alberta for so many years. Not only did she not have an answer; she denied it. She said that she had never opposed pipelines, that it was all fake. She went on Twitter and even called me a liar. She even told reporters that it was a lie. So we showed her a transcript where she appeared at the National Energy Board hearing arguing against the Northern Gateway pipeline. Then we showed her a tweet encouraging an NDP MP to attend an anti Alberta pipeline protest. And then we showed her a photo of her attending that same anti Alberta pipeline protest.

We've asked time and again what advice this tar sands campaign, Greenpeace activist minister advised her department and cabinet regarding Alberta pipelines, but all we get is obstruction. Albertans are able to see through this NDP rhetoric in which they pretend to be proponents of pipelines when for so long they were protesters of pipelines. Last week, Mr. Speaker, the Premier said that she had a hundred per cent confidence in her minister. In a few months we'll see if Albertans share that . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Thank you.

Hold the clock a minute. I just want to think.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Start the clock. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Bighorn Area Land Use

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently this government announced significant changes to the area known as the Bighorn. This area is important to our local community, our energy industry, our forestry industry, our film and tourism industries, outdoor enthusiasts, and tens of thousands of recreational users that use it a year. The NDP brought forward their ineffective consultation process to happen over the Christmas holidays in an attempt to get their predetermined outcome rubber-stamped. My question is to the minister. What I would like to know is this: the North Saskatchewan regional plan is not even completed, so on what basis did you base your design of this new park system?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, there have been years of consultation in this area. Clearwater county put out their tourism development strategy in 1992; the previous government did nothing. The regional advisory council made certain recommendations in 2014; the previous government did nothing. There's a tremendous economic development opportunity here, and I as environment minister have a responsibility to make sure that that happens, just like I have a responsibility to get pipelines built. As environment minister that is my responsibility, just like it's everyone in this caucus's and in this cabinet's responsibility.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, let's be very clear. This minister has not consulted with the community, certainly not with Clearwater county. She misinformed us about a meeting she said she had with the mayor of Rocky Mountain House about it, most famously. This is a minister who has done everything possible to avoid talking to the very people that are going to be affected by this. There is a regional access committee. This minister has completely avoided talking to them. The question is this: why does she keep avoiding talking to the people that will be impacted by this? Why does she continue to hide from them and not have a real conversation, just stand up and do partisan rhetoric? Talk to our community. Stop hiding, Minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I find it curious that the hon. member wants to reject $40 million of investment into his own constituency. He wants to reject economic development for his own constituents. He wants to reject the perspective of business owners in and around Nordegg. Economic development is all of our responsibility, just like getting pipelines built is all of our responsibility. That is something that we're focused on as a government.

Mr. Loewen: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, nobody is rejecting anything. In fact, in these questions I never even said that we would reject capital investment. There are lots of important areas, including along highway 11, that I actually think inside this plan are a good idea. The question I have is about the consultation process that this minister has followed. Let's be clear. She has completely avoided the community. She will only do invite-only meetings. She will not meet with people that disagree with the plan that she has. She is only focused on foreign interest groups that are pushing for things in our backyards. She is ignoring business owners, who I do talk to all the time in Rocky Mountain House. She is also ignoring the community as a whole and Albertans across the whole province who want input into the process and, further to that, is ignoring the process in law. Again, will this minister commit to . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: . . . consulting with . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, time is up, and I didn't hear a question in there.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.
Go ahead, hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, I've heard from almost 22,000 people who sent postcards. I've heard from countless area residents. I have heard from business owners. I'll read a couple of quotes. "Our residents enjoy outdoor recreation. Protected headwaters not only benefit the residents of Spruce Grove, the North Saskatchewan." That's from the mayors of Spruce Grove and Stony Plain. I've heard from the member's own constituents, quote: there is a need for public investments and trail infrastructure, parking areas, outhouses, enforcement, that has not occurred under PLUZ management. These are business owners in the member's own riding. I have questions as to who he's representing, just as to who he's working for. I know who I'm working for, and that's the people of Alberta.

The Speaker: Keep the discussion about the policy matters, not the individuals on each side of the House.
Second main question.

Mr. Nixon: In making this announcement, the minister has shown a complete disregard for the comprehensive planning process for the region in an attempt to ram through changes. Now, leaked documents from the process show that these changes are completely against the recommendations of the regional advisory council in the area. The NDP is clearly not satisfied and wants to focus on the demands of their special-interest groups. Again, Mr. Speaker, through you to the minister: why are you spending so much time and effort to avoid consulting with a full representation of the community, not a hand-picked representation of the community?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, in August of 2018 the Clearwater trails partnership wrote me a letter that asked for the establishment of a west country PLUZ – this recommendation comes with it – a public land use zone, that people asked for. Clearwater county called this a positive step forward. The regional advisory council was made up of local reeves, residents, First Nations. They conducted 21 town halls. I know we didn't do exactly what the RAC advice said, because, for example, this proposal comes with an indigenous coal management for the parks areas, and that wasn't in the original RAC advice. So we are deviating in places where we think it's right to do so because that's . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the Clearwater Trails Initiative – I spoke to them again today – have not been consulted. That's what they say. Clearwater county says that they have not been consulted. The town of Rocky Mountain House says that they have not been consulted. West Fraser and those types of people working within the Bighorn have not been consulted. The minister has only done consultation with select, invite-only groups inside our constituency. Will she commit to holding an open, public town hall, open to all, right away with me?

Ms Phillips: Well, in fact, we do have a telephone town hall so that all Albertans can participate, Mr. Speaker. We are waiting to finalize the details on that, and as soon as those details are available, whether it's this week or next, we will be sharing them with the House. I have heard from other constituents, the hon. member's own constituents, and I find it so curious that he's not listening to them. Here are some. Declaring the area west of Nordegg a wildland provincial park aligns with our community's vision for the spaces we call home: that's Hollen from Nordegg. Lorri from Nordegg: "Like the Wild West, it appears people are not adhering to common-sense rules, and incredible wild areas are being destroyed. That's why we want to have protection for the wildland provincial park."

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Nixon: Again, Mr. Speaker, nobody is saying that there shouldn't be protection of the west country; in fact, there should. The question is about the consultation process this minister followed to get to this spot. This NDP's record on consultation is terrible. They have abused Albertans over and over during their consultation process. Stakeholders in the public will now have until January 31 to provide feedback on this government's announcement. My question to the minister is this: will she commit today publicly in this House to release all of the stakeholder-public feedback received once the consultation period is complete, or will she continue to hide it as she has for other consultations?

Ms Phillips: Well, you know, one of the things we're consulting on, Mr. Speaker, is the concept of a trails pass. We want to hear from local off-highway vehicle organizations. It's something they've been asking for for years, whether it is feasible to have a trails pass to access some of these new areas such as the west country PLUZ after we make those requisite investments in them. I find it curious that the member stands in his place and rejects those kinds of investments in his own backyard for people that are his neighbours, that are his relatives. Why is he rejecting jobs and economic development in his own constituency?

The Speaker: Third main question.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the minister just said in her own answer: private meetings, invite-only meetings with select people that she chooses, that she wants to meet with in the community. I've had town halls with well over 1,000 people there, where highways had to be shut for people to be able to have their views made on the record about this situation. This minister has disregarded a petition in this place with 21,000 signatures calling on her to do something different. Again, will she commit to public consultation, come to Rocky Mountain House, have a town hall, and talk to the people of my constituency? You'll find out what they think.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, this idea that there hasn't been consultation on the North Saskatchewan regional plan is incredibly disrespectful to the many women and men from that area and from elsewhere that participated in good faith in the regional advisory council process. There were 21 town halls associated with that. Since then, there have been other consultations, including the overall consultation on the North Saskatchewan regional plan. Now, what the member wants to reject is economic development for his constituency, I guess, because it's not his department, just like his leader, who didn't take responsibility for a pipeline because he said he wasn't responsible for it. There's a theme here.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, nobody is rejecting economic development. We're talking about consultation and how the minister got to this place. This minister has not had public consultation. She's avoided it. She even did the announcement in Edmonton, not even in the communities that were involved, because she doesn't want to go and talk to them. Now, the stakeholders she lists as being consulted with have all confirmed with us that they were not consulted by this minister, so why does this minister keep standing up in this House and making things up and dodging the question? Will she have public consultation in Rocky Mountain House? Yes or no? Will she participate in it? Yes or no?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, there are plenty of opportunities over the 75-day consultation period for Albertans to engage, and certainly we have committed to a telephone town hall so that all Albertans who have a stake in this — folks who have written to me from Spruce Grove and Stony Plain; folks who have written to me from, yes, Nordegg and Rocky Mountain House; folks who have written to me from Red Deer, from Edmonton — can all participate because this is a fundamental Alberta priority to conserve landscapes and have economic development, just as a pipeline is a fundamental Alberta priority. We're working on that, and we're working on all of our shared values.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, let's be clear. There was a consultation process with the RAC, which this minister has rejected. The people from the RAC who she refers to as being consulted are not consulted. They're insulted by this minister because she disregarded what they said. They've made that clear to us. The surveys from that process this minister has continued to hide from the public, but FOIP shows that well over 80 per cent of the public do not like the direction that they're going right now. Again, will this minister commit to actual public consultation, stop avoiding the people that are being impacted, stop hiding in Edmonton, and come to Rocky Mountain House and talk to our community? Yes or no? If not, what is she hiding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To be honest, the member's comments are insulting to the women and men who served on the regional advisory council. That council was made up of local reeves, residents, First Nations and Métis, farmers, tourism operators, scientists, business owners, ranchers, hunters, and industry. That council gathered input from thousands of Albertans, conducted 21 town halls to come up with their advice on regional planning, which included unanimous support for increased protection for parts of the Bighorn backcountry. In addition, there have been a number of tourism development strategies in that area. The previous government did nothing with them. This plan moves that forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Health Care Costs

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We need to have a serious conversation about getting health spending under control. One way that organizations can try to curb spending is to offer early retirement packages. This lets employees near retirement age leave with financial security and lets the company trim personnel costs. When Shaw recently opened up 16 early retirement packages, nearly 3,000 people applied, showing it can be a popular option. To the Minister of Health: would you consider offering early retirement packages to people working in our health care sector in order to help curb health care spending?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks very much for the question. Certainly, Health has been working very hard to get spending under control. I'm very proud to say that we've moved from about 6 or 7 per cent down to just over 2 per cent in terms of annual growth. So considering the population growth and so forth, I think that the ministry and AHS are doing a good job to get spending under control, of which this suggestion could be an option.

Mr. Fraser: Another way to try to contain the growth in the health spending is through managed attrition. In an organization as big as Alberta Health Services there are thousands and thousands of positions, and we need to make sure that those positions are necessary and effective. If they aren't, then as people retire or leave those jobs, we need to consider not rehiring anyone else to fill them. This is a way that we contain costs without imposing job cuts. To the same minister: is there an attrition plan in place to help manage the growth of positions in Alberta's health care system and reduce its costs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks very much for the question. Certainly, it's important to make sure that you are keeping a close eye on costs every step of the way. I think the minister and the ministry and Alberta Health Services have been doing a very good job. I mean, I think options are open to be creative in this regard, but one option that's not open is to move to private health care when public health care serves the public efficiently and more equitably by far.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Minister, I've outlined two ways to save our health care system money without having to lay anyone off. While you like to refer to these measures as billion-dollar cuts, the fact of the matter is that without some action on health care costs, we're actually putting the whole system at risk. Recently released performance metrics are showing that not only is the health care spending increasing, but results are getting worse. To the same minister: with increasing costs and decreasing performance, don't you think it's time that your government tried a new approach?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we're keeping a very close eye on controlling costs every step of the way. I would dispute the assertion that performance is decreasing. I think that in targeted areas we see a marked increase in delivery of health care, especially in home care, acute care. In certain key areas it's definitely improving, and we can do that on a public health platform. The UCP is talking about privatization of health care. That's unconscionable, it's not a good use of money, and Albertans don't want it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Gender X Marker on Government Documents

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the Minister of Service Alberta visited my constituency and had a conversation with a particular constituent about the gender X marker. Would the minister expound on the number of people who are choosing to use the X marker?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am the Minister of Service Alberta. I'm also responsible for fighting for pipelines and creating good Alberta jobs, something I take seriously.

Our government took an important step by announcing human rights in Alberta by introducing the X marker. Albertans can now choose female, male, or X on their driver's licence, ID card, and other vital statistics records. Since June 177 Albertans have opted for the X as their gender identifier on their driver's licence or ID card, and 26 people have chosen the third marker on their vital statistics records.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. As my first follow-up, would you expand on the work that has been done across the government and the collaboration it has to do with other governments?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Adopting the X marker is another step forward in making sure that Alberta is a province that respects, protects, and advances human rights. When doing this, we wanted to make sure that a third marker on our provincial vital statistics documents aligned with other jurisdictions. By adopting the X as a third option, we followed the direction the federal government took on federally issued documents. This also puts us in line with other provinces and ensures that our provincial documents remain valid when we move, travel, or need access to interjurisdictional programs and services.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, is our government concerned about the Doug Ford government refusing to work alongside Alberta on respecting gender identity?

Mr. Malkinson: Just last week our government raised the transgender pride flag to commemorate all of those who have lost their lives due to transphobia and violence, and I was happy to be there, Mr. Speaker. It's very concerning to hear that the Conservative leader's best friends in the Ontario PC Party are currently debating whether or not trans people deserve the same basic human rights. Shame. I'm concerned that we are seeing similar ideologies on display here such as a UCP member comparing the pride flag to a swastika. These are views that are not welcome on this side of the House. I wish that the Leader of the Opposition would follow through on his pledge to reject these extreme views and kick this member out of the UCP.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Health Care Costs and Service Delivery

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Health care costs continue to rise. In 2013 a hospital stay cost 25 per cent more in Alberta than the national average while in 2017 it cost 35 per cent more. The average cost fell by $34 to $5,992 nationally but rose by $459 in Alberta to $8,112. The Yukon reduced the cost over the same period by $835. Why hasn't the government been able to get hospital costs under control?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I pointed out in my last set of questions, we have moved down the rate of growth in health care spending here from 9.2 per cent in 2010 to just 2.2 per cent this year. That's in keeping with the growth of the population. I think that's a great accomplishment that we need to carry on. Certainly, there are measures to continue to look at for controlling costs, but that is not at the expense of health care and the security that health care provides for all Albertans.

Ms McPherson: Given that in 2013 Alberta's large urban trauma hospitals had an average of eight patients waiting for a hospital bed per hour, which has risen to 11 this year, and given that this metric has remained stagnant at medium urban hospitals and given that the government has increased its Health budget from $18.6 billion to $20.7 billion, why have Albertans not seen improvements to their health care experience?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, as I said, I dispute this notion that we've not seen improvements in targeted areas. We certainly have. There's lots of room for improvement always because health care is dynamic and health care is most important not just for your own personal physical health but for peace of mind.

What you don't do is like the leader of the Alberta Party, who came in here unelected and proposed a billion dollars in cuts in health care.

Ms McPherson: Given that AHS released its provincial diverse populations strategy over six years ago and given that social determinants of health must be supported by sustainable programs in the social services sector and given that every week constituents complain to us about front-line social services workers who fail to understand or respect diverse needs, when will strategies to reach out to underserved populations start collecting input that supports service improvements?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A very good question. It's very important that we integrate health care outcomes with other ministries as well. For example, in Education we are building partnerships between mental health strategies, between Alberta Health Services, social services, and Education. And, you know, the degree to which we can find that synchronicity, I think that you can really see marked improvements. What you don't do, though, is blow up hospitals, blow up health systems, or talk about private health care, as the UCP has been. That's not the way Albertans operate. That's not the way we deliver health care in this province.

Oil Price Differentials

Mr. Loewen: The NDP try to tell us that debt is under control, and they downplay it like it's no big deal. Albertans, on the other hand, know that $50 billion of debt and $2 billion in interest per year and growing is a big deal, and they know it jeopardizes our children's future. We know that the government didn't budget for the price differential we have now and that they banked on pipelines being built. The U of C says that the government was losing $7.2 billion per year at $38 differential. CAPP tells us that every dollar means $210 million in lost provincial revenue. Can the minister give Albertans the facts, as of now, about how the differential will affect the government's bottom line?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the Minister of Finance I'm also responsible for fighting for pipelines and creating good jobs.

You know, the differential is punishing to Albertans, Alberta's companies, and the oil and gas sector, and it's costing Canada $80 million per day. That's why we're standing up for pipelines in this province. That's why we're taking the message to Ottawa. That's why the Premier of this province is in Ottawa today, and she will be having more to say tomorrow about the actions this government will be taking.

Mr. Loewen: Given that the differential has been caused by a lack of pipeline capacity and given that while Conservatives were building pipelines and approving pipelines, everyone that came before them, the NDP were opposing and protesting pipelines and given that when the NDP say that Conservatives couldn't get pipelines built, it's absolutely not true and given that the government has prematurely celebrated one pipeline three times that still isn't built, can the government point to one major pipeline that has been built in their three and a half years in power? Just one.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's easy. Line 3 is under construction right now, hon. member. But, you know, this hon.

member's leader spent 10 years in cabinet – 10 years – and they didn't get a single pipeline built to tidewater. And the leader says that it's not his responsibility. Well, on this side of the House, it's everyone's responsibility to fight for pipelines.

Mr. Loewen: Given that the minister just admitted that they haven't got one pipeline built – not one – and given that the NDP ministers often try to say that the NDP and the Premier supported pipelines from day one and given that that isn't exactly reflective of reality and given that the Premier spoke against Keystone XL pipeline and Northern Gateway and given that the environment minister protested Northern Gateway and given, Mr. Speaker, that isn't even close to support, can the government tell Albertans right here and now what they're doing to solve the price differential other than hiring anti-oil activists to represent the industry and giving lip service during this critical situation?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, what a pile of baloney that is. You know, when this member's leader was a cabinet minister in the federal government in Ottawa, the Supreme Court threw out the Northern Gateway thing. They laughed the federal government out of court because they'd failed so abysmally to properly consult. That's that government's record, and that leader says: well – you know what? – it's not my responsibility; I have no responsibility.

Mrs. Pitt: Point of order.

Mr. Mason: On this side, Mr. Speaker, as Minister of Transportation I can tell you that fighting for pipelines is my responsibility, and the same goes for everyone here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Carbon Levy and Education Costs

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The carbon tax continues to drag down Alberta's families, businesses, and public services. This year alone the High Prairie school division's carbon tax bill could have paid for another teacher, and the Calgary board of education expects to lose over $3 million. Across the province real educational priorities are taking a back seat, from staffing to maintenance to inclusion to class sizes. To the Minister of Education: how much could class sizes be reduced if schools were not subject to the carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you so much for the question. It's very important, of course, that our climate action plan is not just in terms of revenue but in terms of an opportunity for people to learn and understand and to know that we are taking action on climate for the next generation. This resides in schools and everywhere, and as a way by which we can make sure that we are more efficient, we're building more energy-efficient schools, we're putting solar panels on the roofs of new schools and others, as you'll see soon. We're doing a job for now and for the next generation. I will make no apologies for . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that rising transportation costs are eroding transportation services and given that students lucky enough to get a ride are stuck on the bus for longer and longer periods of time and given that there is no such thing as a solar-powered school bus and that the carbon tax hits school transportation budgets particularly hard, to the same minister: how many more students could get on the bus, and how much shorter could the bus rides be if schools were not subject to the carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we know that we can always make improvements to student transportation, especially in the rural areas, and we've been doing consultation to look for ways by which we can find those efficiencies. But just put it into context. The carbon levy we expect to be costing perhaps around $18 million a year for all the school boards, and we've invested more than $1.6 billion into our schools to hire teachers, to hire support staff, and to make sure that our education system is strong. Context is always important.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that dyed diesel and gasoline are exempt from the carbon tax and given that the Premier has finally made a concession to reality by exempting oil and gas drillers from the carbon tax and given that no one in Alberta would say that education is less important than agriculture or the oil patch, why hasn't the Minister of Education asked the Premier to exempt schools and school boards from the carbon tax as well?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, as I said in my first reply, it's important that we are building the educating element of the climate action plan. Certainly, it's important. For example, when we are putting the solar panels on the roofs of new schools and others now as well, we have a real-time readout for kids to be able to use that as part of their education. We are saving literally millions of dollars by building new schools that are much more energy efficient, to a LEED silver standard. We look for ways by which we can help schools every step of the way, but certainly one way that you do not help them is to make cuts, cutting 4,000 . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Brewing Industry Policies

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, yesterday this government announced yet another change to the beer taxation system in Alberta. While we support the challenge against unfair nontariff barriers imposed by the Ontario liquor board, I can't help but wonder. Minister, you took three and a half years to challenge this inequity. Was that because you meshed ideologically with Wynne's government but now that Premier Ford is in charge, you've decided to challenge it?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just want to say right at the outset that not only am I the Minister of Economic Development and Trade, but I am also responsible for fighting for pipelines and creating good jobs.

To answer the member's question, there was a Conservative government in Alberta for 44 years that did nothing to address the discriminatory practices that the Ontario government has against Alberta brewers. On this side of the House we stand up not only for economic diversification; we stand with Alberta brewers, and we will fight provinces that have unfair trading practices.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that when they lost their court case, Justice Marriott wrote that your grant program discriminated between craft brewers and craft beer based on provincial origin and given that the beer-is-good folly of yours cost Alberta taxpayers $2.1 million, again to the minister: since your new small-brewer system looks remarkably similar to the old one we had before you started messing, how much in total are taxpayers on the hook for your failed beer policies?

The Speaker: The hon. Finance minister.

Mr. Ceci: Well, thank you very much. In another role I'm the President of the Treasury Board, and in that role I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I'm also responsible for fighting for pipelines and creating good jobs in this province.

On the beer program we brought in yesterday, that was really supported by the small brewers in this province and the association that is part of that, I can tell you that the new markup rate, Mr. Speaker, will continue to support small brewers regardless of where they are from. The new program is better than the old programs. We're going to continue to see beer in this province, and great beer is what happens in this province when you support it.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that this government has fostered a climate that sees investment fleeing the province by the billions and given that the business community simply needs this government to get out of its way, Minister, given your carbon tax, failed pipeline policy, layers of paperwork and bureaucracy coupled with poor policy decisions that continue to cost the hospitality industry, will you do the right thing and cancel the business-killing carbon tax?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure how we got to the carbon tax from beer, but I can tell you that that member's questions are flat, just like the beer that he buys.

You know, we have seen the growth of the small brewers in this province nearly triple. There are over 105 small brewers here as a result of the programs that we have supported for Albertans and the liquor industry. The liquor industry is thriving under this government; it never did under that government. I'm proud every day for the diversity that is there on the shelves.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Health Care Costs and Service Delivery (continued)

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Health Services spent $360 million more this year than last, yet fewer surgical procedures are being performed. Our health care budget has increased by over $2 billion since this NDP government took office, so why is AHS, under this government's management, cutting front-line services, ultimately increasing wait times for patients?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, it's important to always keep a focus on wait times here in the province of Alberta. We have more than 280,000 surgeries performed across Alberta by 55 different sites. You know, we know that as our population grows, proportionally so, too, do the demands on the health system. That's why in the budget this year we put $40 million to focus on wait time reductions for surgeries, specifically cancer, cardiac, hip and knee, and so forth. You know what's interesting? The UCP voted against that very thing.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, let us start with the south zone. Given that the total number of procedures performed decreased by 4 per cent and given that in 2015 hip wait times were 42 weeks versus 49 weeks today and knee surgeries in 2015 were 48 weeks compared to 55 weeks today in the south zone, can you please explain the rationale for these cuts?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we have been making serious investments in targeted areas to reduce wait times in our health care system. It's very important to see as well, from the CIHI statistics that just came out, that globally we moved from about a 9 per cent increase in health care when there were $100 barrels of oil, you know, and not so much focus on efficiency to this year, where we're at a 2.2 per cent increase, which is in keeping with inflation and the population. So you know what? I think they've been doing a pretty good job. We can always do better, but let's hear it for Alberta Health Services.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, in the central zone, the Red Deer region, they've been asking for this government to enhance services, but given the fact that this government has cut back on total surgeries performed in this region by over 5 per cent while cutting knee surgeries by a whopping 8.4 per cent – and here you are spouting out that you're increasing these things – and given that in 2015 it took people 27 weeks to access those knee surgeries versus today, where they're waiting now 39 weeks – one more time for our viewers, very clearly – what is this government's rationale for cutting these vital operations despite your increased spending? What are you spending money on? Why are you cutting surgeries?

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, it's important to focus and target reductions in surgeries. For example, Alberta Health Services did focus on cardiac, hip and knee, and cancer surgeries as well. Putting in, as I said, that $40 million focus on wait time reductions, you know, is having a targeted positive effect. You can't not do those things if you don't make those investments. If you fire 4,000 nurses, as the UCP suggested, or give $700 million in tax cuts to the richest 1 per cent, that's money that doesn't go . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Dementia Care

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, since I first started asking about Alberta's poor track record on dementia care, I've heard from Albertans all over the province. They've shared their stories of poor conditions in long-term care facilities, real struggles accessing home care, and continued stigma around dementia and aging in general. Recently the Dementia Network Calgary released an advocacy survey. Eighty-eight per cent of respondents felt that Alberta's dementia strategy should shift from a task-based model to a relational model of care. To the Minister of Health: is that on your radar, and if so, what are you doing to make it happen?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, it's a very good question from the hon. member. As we know that we're seeing increasing rates of dementia across the province, we need to have not just a targeted strategy but a larger societal one as well, so building and educating along with having more home care, and to be able to make investments. Since 2015 we've invested about $6.8 million into measures to give families tools to help support their loved ones. I mean, I know that this is a very difficult thing, but certainly we're all in it together, and we need to support each other, especially when dementia strikes a family.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the respondents to the Dementia Network survey said: "The biggest problem is not enough staff. Some patients need more . . . care. It's appalling to see residents sitting in soiled clothing, unable to eat in front of a TV for hours. They deserve better." Albertans do deserve better. To the Minister of Health: what are you doing to fix this problem?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, this condition and others are very, very difficult. We certainly feel for individuals and families and staff that work with dementia and work in facilities such as this. We know that we need to look for better diagnosis, early diagnosis, better brain health, and stronger community supports for years to come. By investing in health care, by redoubling and making sure we're investing in home care and community supports, I think that together with all parties we can help to relieve some of the suffering that dementia does cause.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that system navigation was identified as a big problem and given that people are struggling as full-time caregivers and simply don't have the ability or expertise to also be a system navigator and given that this creates a huge gap between haves and have-nots, between those who are able to advocate and those who are left to fend for themselves, and given that one of the best navigation tools available today is the First Link line, to the Minister of Health. There's some concern that this important resource may be cancelled. I'll ask you for a simple yes or no. Will you continue funding First Link?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you so much for the question. We know that since 2015, in fact, the Health ministry did expand the First Link program with $1.95 million more of funding and also has been investing in specifically trained dementia nurses through the Health Link, 811. So, yes, absolutely. Having a knowledgeable navigation through the system is absolutely essential. You want to make sure you keep it simple, you want to make sure you keep it powerful, and you want to make sure that there are lots of different options available for people.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Calgary-West.

Rural Crime

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Two years ago the UCP tried to convince the NDP government that rural crime had reached epidemic proportions. We introduced a motion for an emergency debate, and 200 rural residents, most of them victims of crime, filled the galleries to help us press home this very point. But the Government House Leader, after noting that his family vehicle, too, had been broken into a couple of times, indicated that crime was certainly a worry but didn't really quite qualify as an emergency. Minister, why did you refuse to recognize that rural Alberta was in a crisis back then?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very important question. Well, of course, this government has recognized that there is a significant challenge in rural Alberta with respect to rural crime. That's why we took action eight months ago to ensure that we put money into the system, to ensure that we're investing in RCMP officers and civilian staff and prosecutors in courtrooms. That strategy is working. The members opposite were the ones who voted against that strategy and then took additional months to study the issue.

2:30

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, let's start with a fact here. This government could not even recognize that we were in a crisis back then, and given that new crime stats released in 2017 paint a picture that should have been alarming to the minister at that particular time because they showed that the firearm homicide rate during that time in rural Alberta was double that of urban Alberta, Minister, were you actually not aware of this shocking statistic or did you just choose to ignore this stat?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We were absolutely aware of the fact that rural crime was on the rise in certain areas. In fact, I spoke to that in the House and in the media when I announced our rural crime strategy. The fact that there was a challenge with rural crime in Alberta is the reason that we launched our strategy. Meanwhile the members opposite voted against that strategy – they wanted additional time to study the issue – and they voted against additional RCMP officers again in the budget. I think that the government has moved forward on addressing this. I wish the opposition would do the same.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister loves to point out that the UCP did not vote for her government's $10 billion deficit accompanied by the high debt and given that she fails to tell Albertans that her never-ending triage protocol, introduced in early 2017, has resulted in numerous cases being tossed, letting criminals walk free and victims being revictimized by the system, and given that in 2015-16 she reduced the budget for Crown prosecutors, Minister, how can you pretend to be a champion of justice in the face of this record?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, I think that we ought to deal with facts here in this place, and the fact is that we introduced a strategy to deal with rural crime, and that strategy is having an impact. I think that that's good for the people of the province. I understand that the members opposite are upset that we've had an impact and that we've brought down rural crime rates, but that doesn't change the facts. We're going to continue working with the RCMP. We're going to continue working with the Crown prosecutors and with all rural Albertans.

I'll just go ahead and add that I'm also responsible . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Municipal Cannabis Transition Program

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, the legalization of cannabis should not leave municipal governments scrambling to cover the costs of enforcement and education around where and when it is appropriate to light up. My constituents are concerned that the municipal cannabis transition program fails to recognize the true costs to their municipality and that property taxes will need to increase to cover off this shortfall. Does this government intend to line their pockets with taxes from cannabis while the municipalities are left hung out to dry?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, we expect to have a net loss in the first two years as a result of setting up a program to distribute, supply chain, watch, inspect cannabis in this province. There are start-up costs. We have dealt with the municipalities and provided them $11.2 million over two years so that they can address their enforcement costs. Municipalities under 5,000: their enforcement costs for policing are paid for by the province of Alberta, so we're going to pick up those costs, of course.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that municipalities have start-up costs also and given that the federal government agreed to give the province 75 per cent of the taxation from cannabis on the condition that significant portions of the funding are shared with municipalities and given that the tools required to keep our communities safe and drugs out of the hands of children will increase costs to municipalities and given that a number of my municipalities will receive no assistance to help with education and enforcement, is it the opinion of this government that these municipalities will have no increased costs associated with the legalization of cannabis?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a minister of municipalities I know that fighting for good jobs and pipelines will actually bring money to our municipalities to help us with cannabis. In that vein, there are three provinces that funded municipalities in this country, and we're one of them. We're ahead of the game on this. I've spoken extensively to my municipalities. We had a Cannabis Secretariat, consulted with them, and we know that we will adapt over time. We will see what is coming in. We knew that setting up a program like this in the province would cost millions and millions of dollars. You know, it was like Y2K. Everybody thought . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that in municipalities in my constituency with a population over 5,000 people have great concern that the meagre funding under the municipal cannabis transition program is a pittance compared to the costs they will incur to keep their communities safe, will the minister commit to meet with the urban municipalities to discuss adequate distribution of the excise funds to all municipalities in a manner that respects the role municipalities play to keep our communities safe?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: All right. Thank you very much to the hon. member for the question. I meet with the AUMA board routinely and other municipalities routinely on this, and we did say, going forward, that once we have more information on what effects this is having across our province, we will evaluate. That is something we promised to do. We have acknowledged there are costs across the province, some more than others in particular, with the province setting up this massive program of legalization that was put upon us by the feds. We've done an admirable job. I'm very happy with what the Minister of Treasury Board and Finance and our Minister of Justice have done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Calgary Board of Education Construction Project Management Costs

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, over the past two years the Calgary board of education was required to cover $43 million for unfunded project management services for new schools, including $20 million in actual construction costs. To a minister: why do you make the Calgary board of education dig into their reserves to build new schools?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, as the Minister of Infrastructure I, too, fight for pipelines.

One of the ways we get the revenue to build schools in this province – and we have done a remarkable job in the past number of years in an NDP government of building schools. It's because we decide that children are worth it. Children are worth the effort to build schools. I'll tell you something else, Mr. Speaker. When we decide, unlike the opposition, who cries wolf over consultation but doesn't do the effective consultation to keep children safe in schools . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. Thank you.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister doesn't care about kids enough to take away the $1.7 million in interest charges on that $20 million – that's actually $40 million altogether that the schools have had to pay – and given that making the board of education fund tens of millions of dollars out of their reserve places unnecessary pressure on their finances and given that the board traditionally designates its reserve for improving the classroom experience for students, to the minister: why do you expect school boards to fund construction costs out of reserves, which are meant to be spent on kids in the classroom?

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, I find it incredibly rich that when I shared a bench with the member opposite, he was not all that concerned that schools had to use reserve funds. It's pretty incredible that now he's changed his tune. I'll tell you who cares about schools. This government cares about schools, and we care about children.

Mr. McIver: Well, given that I am happy to talk about a floor crossing any time the minister wants to and given that the board of education recently submitted its $40 million-plus project management bill for schools to the government and given that the interest payments are now lost forever from the classroom, to the minister: will you ensure at least that this bill is now paid quickly so the board can redirect it back to the classroom where it belongs, and will you reimburse the interest costs to the board of education?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What we've seen since 2015 is that this government you see over here has financed 240 school projects across the province of Alberta. You know, for a good 20 years the members on the opposite side were failing to build those schools on time. We had overcrowded classrooms, schools that were crumbling, and we turned that around. In Calgary, certainly, they received a great number of those schools, and we're working always to make sure that they get what they need as opposed to cutting 4,000 teachers, making things hurt.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Logging in the Mustang Hills

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's forests provide many economic and environmental benefits. The Mustang hills, located along highway 66 and adjacent to the Elbow River, is scheduled for timber harvesting operations in the next few months. Located in sensitive wildlife habitat, the Mustang hills also draw hundreds of recreational visitors each year, thousands, in fact. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: what is being done by the department to address the concerns raised regarding logging in this area?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've heard from local residents that they want the best possible balance between supporting the economy and protecting the environment when it comes to timber harvesting in the Mustang hills. I want to thank the Member for Banff-Cochrane for his continued advocacy. Spray Lake Sawmills, based in Cochrane, saw public input on its harvest operation. Because of that, they've removed one of the cutblocks that they were going to harvest, they've increased retention within blocks, they changed block design for better aesthetics, and they better protected nondesignated trails.

The Speaker: Thank you.

First supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given the significant recreation opportunities in this area, will the department work collaboratively with recreation stakeholders to safeguard existing trails by putting a buffer around them?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, the company has been proactive with hiking trails in the area and sought to address concerns of those who enjoy them. Nondesignated trails near the area's natural boundary will be respected during harvest operations. Forests are naturally dynamic, and harvesting, when done right, can ensure biodiversity and ecological health. Over thousands of years Alberta forests have evolved from natural disturbances such as wildfire. Harvesting has evolved to resemble natural disturbance patterns that contribute to biodiversity and wildlife habitat. By law Alberta requires reforestation be initiated within two years of completing harvest operations.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: what steps are being taken through the operating ground rules to protect watercourses, wetlands and ensure that there are no negative outcomes for aquatic species and water quality?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, harvest areas are designed to maintain cover and different habitat types for a variety of species. Areas such as watercourses are protected with buffers, and species of special concern have additional management strategies addressed through timber harvest planning and operating ground rules. The rules to protect species like bull trout and pure strain westslope cutthroat trout. As further steps to assure sustainability, Alberta has a risk-based system in place to assess and review forest industry field operations. The forest operations monitoring program is designed to concentrate inspection activities on areas of high environmental and sustainable value.

The Speaker: Thirty seconds, hon. members.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Holiday Season

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The holiday season in Alberta has arrived. This festive time of year is remarkable and outstanding, particularly in Alberta. In our amazing province when we celebrate, we celebrate our people and our diversity, and we do this by hosting events of various kinds, religions, cultures that bring Albertans of all walks of life together. No matter what occasion is being celebrated, the declarations, feasts, songs, and music bring joy and happiness to all as we celebrate our differences.

In my amazing riding of Calgary-Glenmore the churches are lively with Christmas choirs to celebrate the birth of Jesus Christ, and restaurants are cozy with Christmas carols. Synagogues are brightened for Hanukkah celebrations, the Jewish festival of light celebrating the rededication of the holy temple of Jerusalem. Community events are hosted to celebrate Eid Milad un-Nabi, the birth of the Prophet Muhammad – peace be upon him – along with Eid-e-Zehra, the festival of Fatima's family. Homes are decorated to celebrate family and friends.

One of the greatest gifts we can give to ourselves and to the world is to reach out to those who need assistance or companionship at this time of year. Albertans embrace the tradition of sharing hope with others and extend it throughout the year to make our homes, our communities, and all of Alberta a better place to live.

The holidays are a chance to embrace these honoured customs, enjoy time together, and reflect on our blessings. They also remind us how fortunate we are to live in a province where all traditions and faiths can coexist peacefully. I extend my best wishes to Albertans. May this holiday season find all Albertans enjoying the warmth and fellowship of family and friends world-wide.

Oil Price Differentials

Mr. Loewen: The price differential is the difference in price between the market price for oil and what we receive for our oil. Currently sitting at $40 per barrel, this situation is an immediate crisis and is seriously jeopardizing thousands of jobs. This situation is the result of the NDP and the federal Liberals failing to get even one major pipeline built. When the federal and provincial Conservatives were in power, four major pipelines were built, increasing exports by over a million barrels of oil per day. Also, Northern Gateway was approved. What is the NDP record? Northern Gateway was cancelled, Energy East was purposely killed, Trans Mountain is in continued limbo, and Keystone XL is stalled again. The federal Liberals have brought forward bills C-48, the tanker ban, and C-69, also known as the no-more-pipelines bill.

The NDP stand up in this House and say over and over how the Premier has been the oil and gas sector's biggest supporter since day one. The facts, however, say otherwise. The Premier spoke against Northern Gateway publicly. The environment minister appears in pictures at rallies against it and also went to the NDP hearing against it. They did absolutely nothing to protest its cancellation. Energy East was killed, and the NDP responded with a letter. The Premier has publicly spoken against Keystone XL. The NDP did nothing to object to Bill C-48, the tanker ban, that all but nullifies any pipeline to the northern B.C. coast. The NDP has done too little, too late to object to Bill C-69.

The NDP have been giving lip service to the Trans Mountain pipeline, but they have sat on their hands while we've seen delay after delay because of their B.C. NDP allies and their radical anti-oil friends. Now we have the price differential growing and in response the NDP picking an anti-oil activist to be one of the envoys. You can't make this stuff up.

On this side of the House we have consistently supported all pipelines. We can only hope that the Premier and the NDP put aside partisanship and their anti-oil ideology and join us to come up with an immediate solution to the price differential and then work expeditiously to get pipelines built. Conservatives have experience in actually getting pipelines built. You do it by supporting all pipelines, not by campaigning against them, and you appoint pro oil and gas advocates, not anti-oil activists.

We need to get this done in order to get Albertans back to work and to realize the full value of our resources.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier and Minister of Health.

Bill 30

Mental Health Services Protection Act

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce the Mental Health Services Protection Act for first reading.

This bill will aim to ensure that Albertans are able to access professional mental health care in safe and regulated environments. It sets out licensing requirements and standards for residential substance use treatment facilities, and it will create a college of counselling therapy to ensure standards of practice. Our goal is peace of mind for patients, for their families, and for all Albertans.

I look forward to the discussion ahead and to making sure that we work together to ensure that mental health services are protected for Alberta patients. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 30 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the five requisite copies of the Alberta REA Strategic Review: Rural Economic Impacts, 2013, which I referenced in my speech last night when I mentioned that the REAs had been working towards sustainability since before the election of this government and had tried to engage the former government to work with them.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Acting Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe there were three points of order. I wish to advise that on the third point of order the Member for Airdrie has withdrawn the point of order.

I believe the first one was the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky. The Opposition House Leader.

Point of Clarification

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, and I'll rise on 13(2). He called a point of order during a question that I was asking, which was clearly in the leader's role. It seems to us that you're now providing different instructions for leaders' questions, and we'd like some clarification. You indicated that you were having trouble, one, hearing a question. Well, there was clearly a question at the end. That would be my first point to you. Second point. As you know and have already ruled, no doubt, leaders' questions have significantly more leeway in preambles, so we'd just like to get some clarification on what you're trying to tell us.

The Speaker: So it's under 13(2), and it is with respect to the point that I made with respect to the question. Did I understand correctly?

Hon. member, before I comment on that, my notes suggest that maybe the point of order that you raised was with respect to that, but it was to the interjection by myself and why I did that? Is that correct?

Mr. Nixon: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, I do hope I'm on the same issue as you are. Let me just read a little bit from the Blues that I have with respect to your comments. I'm not going to read the whole thing. It was quite long.

She is also ignoring the community as a whole and Albertans across the whole province . . . ignoring the process . . . Again, will this . . .

I interjected because in actual fact, for all of the members present, I rely on the table, who are very meticulous with respect to their control of time, and you had clearly gone over the time limit on the basis of what, at least, I heard, and I still hadn't heard a question. You asked for my explanation, and that was it.

Is there something . . .

Mr. Nixon: We're on a different point of order. I apologize. Nobody called a point of order at that time. So if the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky confused you — you did certainly point out that I was out of time, and I was out of time. You stopped the clock, as you should, Mr. Speaker, as is your role. You did a great job on that. I can be long winded sometimes. Ask my colleagues.

We are referring to another comment later on where you said a similar thing, but it was not to do with the clock. Mr. Speaker, I guess maybe there can be some confusion. Under 13(2) I just would like that we get some clarification, then, on the rules around leaders' questions, that they have not changed, and if that's the case, then we can just move on and call it a misunderstanding.

The Speaker: Well, I'm not sure if there's a misunderstanding or not. I think we agree on 13(2) with respect to the intervention on time.

With respect to the other matter did you question me with respect to preambles or the leeway given to the first core questions?

Mr. Nixon: That's correct, Mr. Speaker. You may not recall it, but at one time you did say, you know: I have not seen a question. The second time was for the time limit question. It prompted a question similar to how it would when we were dealing with questions outside of the leader's role, and that's the clarification I'm looking for you to give to us as a House. I'm just asking the question this way. Under 13(2) have the rules changed for leaders' questions? Yes or no?

The Speaker: I believe that, unless I've missed something, to my knowledge the standing orders are approved by this House, and, no, they haven't. I can give you the same speech as I gave the other day to the Government House Leader there, who is attentively listening, that the standing orders are approved by this House. Accordingly, I ruled on the context at the time.

I hope that brings closure to the matter.

Mr. Nixon: It does.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 29

Public Service Employee Relations Amendment Act, 2018

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker, and welcome to the chair. I'm honoured to rise today on behalf of the Minister of Labour to move second reading of Bill 29, the Public Service Employee Relations Amendment Act, 2018.

This act governs the relationship between employers, employees, and unions for government of Alberta staff; nonacademic staff at publicly funded postsecondary institutions; and some agencies, boards, and commissions. This government has made significant changes to labour relation laws over the last few years. We updated the Public Service Employee Relations Act and the Labour Relations Code in 2016 to include essential service provisions. These changes were needed following a Supreme Court decision on the right to strike. We also made changes that moved academic postsecondary staff from the Post-secondary Learning Act to the Labour Relations Code.

The changes proposed in Bill 29 build upon these earlier updates. They will provide more public-sector employees with their constitutionally protected freedom to collectively bargain, and they will create greater consistency for the postsecondary sector. If passed, these changes would further align the Public Service Employee Relations Act with Supreme Court of Canada decisions that employees have a right to collective bargaining. Currently under the act there are five groups or classifications of employees that are restricted from joining a bargaining unit. These are systems analysts, budget officers, hearing officers, auditors, and disbursement control officers. Proposed changes would remove the restrictions on these employee classifications so they would no longer be prevented from collective bargaining. If passed, these changes would take effect June 1, 2019.

Other proposed changes would remove restrictions on what can go to arbitration, like pensions and job classifications. This means that if the employer or the union is unable to reach an agreement, they have the option to resolve the matter through arbitration. These proposed changes align with our essential services legislation, which states that all issues can be considered under collective bargaining. They would also give public-sector employees arbitration rules similar to those under the Labour Relations Code, creating more consistency for Albertans.

Other changes will create greater consistency for the postsecondary sector. Changes to legislation in 2017 brought academic staff at postsecondary institutions under the Labour Relations Code. Bill 29's proposed changes will move nonacademic staff from the Public Service Employee Relations Act to the Labour Relations Code. If passed, these changes would mean that all unionized staff at postsecondary institutions would be governed by the Labour Relations Code. This will create consistency for our postsecondary institutions. It also means that nonacademic staff will benefit from recent updates to the Labour Relations Code that are not in the Public Service Employee Relations Act. I understand that the minister is proposing that these changes will not take effect until July 1, 2022, to give postsecondary institutions time to adjust.

Together these proposed changes would give more public-sector workers the right to unionize, bring the Public Service Employee Relations Act in line with existing constitutional protections for employees, and create more consistency in the way labour relations are governed in our province.

I hope that everyone in this Chamber shares the excitement and will vote with me to support this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hunter: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a privilege to be able to rise and speak in this House during second reading on Bill 29, the Public Service Employee Relations Amendment Act, 2018. Bill 29 amends the Public Service Employee Relations Act, the Post-secondary Learning Act, and the Labour Relations Code. It makes three primary changes that, in my opinion, could have major implications on Alberta's future and therefore deserve to have close scrutiny by this House.

The first change repeals section 30 from PSERA, that restricts matters which may proceed to a compulsory arbitration board. The second change repeals five position classifications from the list of exclusions from the bargaining unit. The final change transitions nonacademic staff at public postsecondary institutions from PSERA to the Labour Relations Code, giving them compulsory arbitration rights.

I think it is important, Madam Speaker, to finish the sentence that was made by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert. What he said was that it would allow them to have arbitration rights. But it's important to remember that these are compulsory arbitration rights, which is, again, something that is a little different than what he said.

Now, you would think that at a time of economic crisis, which the province of Alberta is currently in, the government's focus would be more about bringing forward more relevant legislation that would encourage economic growth and stability. The actions of late from our current government have increasingly put at risk future generations of this province, that will foot the bill for their legislation for years to come. Unfortunately, Albertans will suffer the consequences of this government's mismanagement.

Now, in getting into the details and minutiae of this bill, it appears that the government is repealing section 12(1)(f) as part of some kind of deal with AUPE to get them to move on other areas of collective bargaining. The government says that PSERA is unconstitutional, but they've lost their case at various levels, from arbitration to the Labour Relations Board to the Court of Queen's Bench and the Alberta Court of Appeal.

The coming-into-force date of June 1, 2019, doesn't give the universities enough time. Individuals in the five positions under section 12(1)(f) were previously excluded because these people were privy to sensitive information. That fact has not changed. The universities asked for between two to four years, Madam Speaker, in their submissions to the government and are only getting six months. This isn't enough. This isn't even half of what they had asked for. I don't understand how the June 1, 2019, date came about. It seems to be an arbitrary date that has just been picked out of the sky. I'm not sure exactly how they expect the HR departments and the legal teams to be able to get ready for that date. I'm wondering whether or not this government would be interested in future amendments, that we will be bringing forward, that will talk about the changes to these dates so that these governing bodies have the necessary time to be able to properly implement and to make this transition.

Now, from some of the communications where we tried to reach out to some of the employees that are part of the five categories that were excluded, we're finding that they don't want to be unionized and are waiting to see the results of these fights to determine what happens to their own personal jobs. They've not been asked what they want, and they've not been consulted. What I'd like to know is whether or not this government, under the Labour minister, would be willing to table in this House what consultation was done and how robust it was so that we can find out what percentage of these some 19,000 members that are affected will actually be in favour of this.

We've seen countless examples over the tenure of this government where consultation has been lacklustre at best, so I think that it's only natural for us to ask the question, Madam Speaker: really, have they done the proper consultation? Is there a reason why they're pushing this forward in six months and doing it so quickly?

Now, I guess the question that we have to ask ourselves, as we've seen with some of the other legislation, is: why has this happened? Why have they done it? I recognize that they state that they didn't get the job done correctly at the beginning and that they are just amending their past legislation so that they can say that they got it right. But, really, who have they gotten it right for, Madam Speaker? The question that I have and that many people I've talked to have is: is this actually just getting it right for their friends the unions, or is this actually getting it right for the public service sector at large? I have to say that I question whether or not they're actually getting it right for these 19,000 some-odd members of nonacademic staff.

Now, what's interesting about this is that this legislation means that employees don't have any way to vote to get out of the union or to make change to the unions that they're involved in. This is something that we've seen many cases of, where people have come to this government and said: "We did not want to have you unionize our organization. You went ahead and did it anyways."

They have created a situation where they say that it's fair representation, but they've taken away the rights of individuals to have the most common way of being able to vote about whether they're going to be a union or not, the secret ballot. This is the sort of thing that we've seen in the past, and we're concerned that as possibly the dying days of this government come, they'll be in a situation where they're trying to stack the deck in their favour and get much of Alberta's public sector unionized. This is the sort of thing that we see with this kind of bill, and it obviously makes us wonder: is this really in the best interest of Albertans, or is this in the best interest of their union buddies?

The Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert said that this was just bringing it in line with past legislation and Supreme Court rulings. Well, let's just talk about that for a second. In a number of decisions since AFL versus the Mounted Police was decided by the Supreme Court, the Alberta Labour Relations Board and the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench have all ruled that section 12(1)(f) is constitutional. Once again, let's remember that in 2017 the NDP denied they were removing the rights of secret-ballot votes even though they did for many Albertans. This is exactly what they went ahead and did and took it away. This is another example that the NDP is forcing people to unionize without their consent.

Now, there's another section in here, in this bill, Madam Speaker, that's concerning, and this is the removal of section 30. What's concerning about this is that section 30 basically states what individuals can bring forward to the compulsory arbitration board, which issues and who can bring them forward. The issues that they're allowed to bring forward to the compulsory arbitration board are things such as:

- (a) the organization of work, the assignment of duties and the determination of the number of employees of an employer;

That's just the first group.

- (b) the systems of job evaluation and the allocation of individual jobs and positions within the systems;
- (c) selection, appointment, promotion, training or transfer;
- (d) pensions.

Let's just go back, first of all, really quickly, to the first part there: "the organization of work, the assignment of duties and the determination of the number of employees of an employer." Let's just think about this for a second, Madam Speaker. This government has said many times that they are going to get to a path to balance by 2023. First of all, we know a couple of things. One, the differential that we're dealing with in oil and gas is certainly going to put a hole in their budget. But this also could cost this government the ability to be able to balance their budget as well and for any subsequent government thereafter. Here's the situation. Because it says that they're actually going to get rid of section 30, they will be able to determine the number of employees of an employer.

Let's give you an example, Madam Speaker. In the event that the public-sector cleaners decided that they were understaffed and that they needed to have double the number of cleaners to clean the buildings for the government, under this they could take that to the compulsory arbitration board, and the compulsory arbitration board might just say: "You know what? The government says that, no, you're not underrepresented and that you have enough people, but because the union says that we need at least double, we'll give you 50 per cent more."

Now, can you imagine, Madam Speaker, if every public-sector union said this and did this? How would that affect the budget? How would that affect Alberta taxpayers' taxes? I think that it would completely destroy their budget and their ability to stand up in this House and tell us that they have a path to balance on their budget. I don't believe that if they're going to implement something like this, they would be able to do that. When they allow unions to be able to go and add an extra 19,000 nonacademic staff to this as well, they're now in a situation where all of these groups can go before a compulsory arbitration board.

In my opinion, those are grounds, obviously, for this government and especially for the Finance minister to start to question and ask: "Is this sustainable? Is this something that can be sustained?" I can't see how it will be, Madam Speaker. I don't know how they can be good stewards with the taxpayers' dollars when this is the provision that they're now offering unions, their close friends and allies.

These are some very concerning questions that I have about this, and I hope that this government would be very interested in having a robust discussion as we get into Committee of the Whole. Like I said, Madam Speaker, we will be bringing forward some amendments to this.

Probably the two biggest concerns that we have, just in conclusion, Madam Speaker, are that we are concerned that this government will not be able to balance their budget based upon these kinds of rights that they're giving to the unions, adding an extra 19,000 people to unions and not allowing them to have the right to be able to change unions or get out of unions, and then the last thing, obviously, is this idea that the universities have asked for two to four years and were given a mere six months. By not giving them enough time to be able to make that transition, it would almost seem like this government for some strange reason needs to be able to get these things done as quickly as possible.

I cannot support this bill presently unless there are more amendments that could come forward that would be able to make this less bad. I hope that all members of this Assembly will take a look at this and vote no on this.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Under section 49 I move that the question be now put.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. Just a reminder for all members of the House that the motion for the previous question serves to curtail the debate. After it is moved and carried, no further amendments can be made. The motion may be debated by every member who wants to speak to the main question.

Hon. member, would you like to speak? No? You're just going to move it? Okay.

Anybody else wishing to speak to the motion for the previous question?

Mr. Nixon: I would encourage my members, certainly my colleagues, to actually vote no on this motion.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, you already spoke to it.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Speaker, this is considered a new motion, to which I was speaking. My standing earlier would be considered standing to speak to . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, you've already spoken. When you introduce a previous motion like the question, you have time to debate it when you introduce it. If you choose not to speak, you cannot speak again.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Speaker, if I can state that this is considered a completely separate, debatable, substantive motion, meaning that the clock is reset. Everyone who spoke to the previous motion is allowed to speak again to the current motion. If you like, I could cite the sections for you. I've done my homework on this one. Every member who has spoken previously to the motion on second reading of the bill has the privilege of speaking again to the motion that the question now be put, with the clock reset.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, a member may move that the question be now put. The previous question cannot be, then, proposed by the mover of the motion, which means that just like when you introduce any other amendments, you have an opportunity to speak to the amendment when you introduce it. That's my ruling. It's in the standing orders, and you can refer to Beauchesne's if you'd like, which is paragraph 522(1).

All right. Any other members wishing to speak? Seeing none, I will put the vote on the question.

[Motion carried]

The Acting Speaker: We will now put the question on the main motion.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:16 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 24

An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered in respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a privilege to be able to stand and to speak during Committee of the Whole on Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights. One of the interesting things about this bill has been that as we've had the opportunity of being able to go back to our respective ridings and talk with the stakeholders, those people who are actually physicians in our areas, we've found that a majority of the people we have talked to have said that they knew nothing about this bill.

Originally we had said that this bill needs to go to committee so that we could hear from physicians, we could hear of their concerns. We are not saying that this is a bad bill. We're saying that the consultation has not been done. For us over on this side of the House we actually have no physicians on this – well, actually, I should say that in terms of this caucus we have no physicians that we can have representation for physicians. It would be, I believe, incumbent upon this government to be able to send this back to committee in order to be able to hear from physicians and to find out what the process was and what happened. But in spite of that plea, this government has decided that they are not going to do that. So what we did is that we went back to physicians. We sent out requests to find out how the process had worked, what had happened.

I'd like to tell you about a letter I received from Dr. John Huang, and he is president of the Eye Physicians and Surgeons Association of Alberta and very qualified to speak on this bill, yet he will have no opportunity to do that. Therefore, he has provided me with a letter. I will read portions of this letter just to be able to show you that they have not been consulted and also to show you that they have a grievance with this whole process going forward.

He says that he has deep concerns about Bill 24 and would like to have "proper consultation occur before Bill 24 is put to a final vote." I don't think that that's unreasonable. I know that one of my other colleagues has also read into the record that another doctor that he talked to was very concerned about this as well.

This letter talks about an objective of this bill, which is to permanently recognize in legislation the Alberta Medical Association as the sole representative of ALL Alberta Physicians in negotiations with the Government of Alberta.

All legislation regarding the status of physicians (Medicare act, Canada health act etc.) has always considered physicians as independent contractors. This is a fundamental principle.

Madam Chair, what's interesting is that in one fell swoop a six-page bill is going to take and completely change the dynamics of the relationship between the government, the AMA, and its physicians. I think that even though it's just a six-page bill, the fact of what it's doing has got to have us have a second sober thought on this.

Again, Dr. Huang also says the same thing.

This is why medical associations are and have been allowed by physicians, with their consent, to from time to time negotiate with governments and then the agreements are then voted on. This is an arrangement that has worked for decades.

Is this process broken? That's maybe the first question that we should have asked ourselves. Is this process broken? If it is broken, bring forth the evidence that shows that it was broken and had to be fixed. We have not heard one shred of evidence from this government or from the crafters of this bill that have said that this process was broken. In fact, we have heard evidence, lots of evidence, to show that this process had been working for decades.

He goes on to say: “why the need for change and why the rush.” We’ve been saying that now for a few weeks, Madam Chair. Why the need, and why the rush? What impending doom needs to be addressed, and how is this government trying to fix that impending doom?

Now, he says:

Membership in the AMA and all medical associations is and has always been voluntary. While membership in the AMA remains voluntary [under this bill], making the AMA the sole legal representative in negotiations effectively removes this choice. The reason is that one must be a member in the AMA if it is legally recognized as the sole financial representative.

Otherwise, that physician has no say in financial matters.

3:40

The majority of the doctors are their own business, and that collective of businesses are members of the AMA. The problem is that the AMA, if they have the sole right to be the collective bargaining unit for all physicians – even if a physician is not a member of the AMA, they have to take what that AMA collective bargaining unit struck in terms of financial remuneration. The problem is that this, as we’ve said before, is a problem for rural Alberta doctors, for remote area doctors. Once again, why don’t we get those physicians to come forward to be able to present to us as a House their concerns and what we can do to mitigate those concerns?

He says that it’s important to remember that

AMA negotiates for many physicians but not all.

For example, laboratory physicians and physicians on salary (eg. those in Alternate relationship plans and Hospitalists) all negotiate salaries separately from the AMA.

It is also distressing that Bill 24 and the significant change it represents is NOT about patient care. No part of this bill is about or aims to improve patient care.

I brought that up in my first speech to this House about this bill, talking about the fact that this is about unionizing another sector in this province, and it was done in a shady fashion.

In fact, when you go and take a look at the numbers, they originally said that 89 per cent of AMA members were in favour of this. The truth is that 89 per cent of the 30 per cent that actually took part in this were in favour of it. Thirty per cent of the full gamut of doctors and physicians in this province is not a strong sample size. We’re in a situation now where they have to question: why was this not brought forward? Why was this bill not brought forward? To make things worse, Madam Chair, that 30 per cent that actually voted were not voting on this bill; they were voting on zeroes. They were voting on the ability for them to be able to get a raise or to increase their fees or not. That’s what they were voting on. This doctor, this physician, corroborates that assertion that we made earlier.

The debate at the AMA on this agreement was focused on the financials and some at the RF did object to the idea of legislative representation.

It must also be recognized that clause 1(h)b speaks of the need for “further input from others will be required”.

In this situation the recommendation was that further consultation was required. Yet once again, “What’s the rush?” he says. It’s a valid question, Madam Chair.

He goes on to say,

Such input on Bill 24 has not been requested of physicians by the AMA nor did they vote on Bill 24. It is also concerning that the representative forum was not asked about this legislation at its Spring 2018 meeting, held September 21-22, 2018.

It is unacceptable this was not discussed and voted on at a representative forum especially as the RF is the governing body of the Alberta Medical Association and thus the AMA cannot claim the physicians of Alberta support Bill 24.

How can you get any clearer than that, Madam Chair? I’m going to read that again because I think it’s important for this government that believes so much that they are consulting with Albertans and with the members of this society, that here is a classic example. This man was there. He saw it. He says that there was no consultation at all, and they did not discuss it. I’ll read it again just so that it’s in the record here.

It is unacceptable this was not discussed and voted on at a representative forum especially as the RF is the governing body of the Alberta Medical Association and thus the AMA cannot claim the physicians of Alberta support Bill 24.

Now, from what we’ve seen, Madam Chair, is that there seems to be an internal conflict within the AMA as to whether or not physicians are interested in having AMA become the collective bargaining unit for all AMA members and all physicians. Wouldn’t it be prudent for us as politicians to step away from this, to say: “You guys, work it out first, and then come to us with what your recommendations are. Then we can create legislation based upon what your recommendations are”? How arrogant of this government to think that they have the ability to decide what is good for doctors and physicians.

We have a doctor on that side. I have not heard the doctor from that side of the House speak once for or against this bill. It would be, I believe, incumbent on that member to stand up and be able to state at least his position, albeit as a backbencher, on this bill, to provide us with the ability to know, as a person that’s in the trenches, that has seen what happens with physicians, what he thinks should happen. If he says, “You know what; I actually see a lot of value to this,” fantastic. He is a physician. I think that his opinion should be weighted that way.

But it’s pure arrogance on our side, on the side of politicians, to believe that we know what’s going on in the trenches. It is evident, Madam Chair, that they have an internal conflict going on about this issue of whether or not the AMA should have the exclusive rights, because that’s what we’re talking about, to be able to negotiate in collective bargaining for remuneration for physicians. If they are in conflict now, how do you think they’re going to be after this is rammed down their throats? I don’t think they’re going to be happy at all.

I don’t understand why this government is continuing to reject our proposal to take this back to committee so that we can hear from physicians in committee on whether they are for or against this, but I have to say that I imagine the reason is as clear as can be. They have zero interest in receiving that consultation. They have zero interest in knowing what Alberta physicians feel about this bill, and because they have zero interest in knowing what they care about this bill, they refuse to even address it in this House. I’ve asked this question now – this is now in Committee of the Whole. We’ve gone through first and second readings, and I’ve had absolutely no feedback from this government as to whether or not this was a robust and proper consultation and if the doctors and physicians are onboard. Because of that, this is the most egregious approach that I can think of.

Madam Chair, I hope that this government and this whole Assembly will take sober second thought and be willing, even in this Committee of the Whole, to stand up, and I invite the hon. doctor on the government side to stand up and give us his opinion on this, to give us what he, in the trenches, would say is the best approach for this. I’d love to be able to hear from him, and I think that this is definitely the venue to be able to do that.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's an honour to rise to speak to Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights. As my colleague before me had spoken to, it is a rather short bill, six pages long, but those six pages have very large consequences, I believe, and need to have the due diligence necessary to ensure that we are able to move forward with a health system that is robust and sustainable and also that the health system is able to attract the physicians necessary to continue on with the health system and to serve Albertans properly.

What concerns me is how rapidly this is moving forward and, I believe, without the full consultation and the transparency necessary to ensure that we in this House can make a decision based on the input from all of the stakeholders involved, all of the people, the doctors especially, the ones that will be impacted by this going forward. But it does have impacts on all Albertans, going forward, in ensuring that we have quality health care.

Probably the concern that has come forward the most is the concern with regard to the consultation and the process by which the doctors within the AMA were able to actually have their say and have their discussion. We're hearing from doctors that were completely unaware of this process moving forward. Sure, we see that the minister is stating that 89 per cent of doctors voted in favour of this, but it was 89 per cent of the doctors that were present at the vote that voted for this. Only 30 per cent of the doctors participated. It does give me a certain amount of cause for concern when we start to hear from those that were not fully informed of the process and were not being made aware or that feel that they're not fully aware of the changes that are being proposed at this time.

Bill 24 essentially gives the AMA, the Alberta Medical Association, the powers to be the negotiating body, similar to a union but not actually a union, for all physicians in the province of Alberta. I believe that the AMA, the association, has done good work in the past and continues to do good work, but I also do have some concern with moving forward in a manner that does not allow others that would like to operate in a more independent manner the ability to do so. I have some concerns from doctors that have approached me with questions about whether or not this is going to impact their ability to operate as independent contractors and ensure that they can continue their small-business practice the way they have in the past and if that will continue on in a manner that they feel actually protects their small business and the rights to operate within the province of Alberta.

Another concern when I look at the process that we've had here: I look at the deal that came out of this. We hear that the minister is talking about saving $98 million in health costs by a fee freeze, that the AMA had agreed to a fee freeze. Giving consideration to a fee freeze at the same time as we look at the — one side gets what they want and the other side gets what they want in a negotiation. I am concerned that the AMA as an association, not being necessarily the voice for all physicians in this province — now we are moving in a direction that gives them full, exclusive rights to negotiate. We lose some of our ability to negotiate independently with the groups, which could be detrimental. Possibly some of the physicians would see that as detrimental to their future, and possibly we could look at that as that it might be detrimental to the ability for the government to negotiate with the physicians going forward. The government, of course, is representing all Albertans. We need to have the confidence that the government is able to do that in a way that is going to protect the future of all Albertans going forward.

One thing that we have with all legislation is that, of course, there's regulation that comes out of that. We don't have a lot of information here from the minister with regard to the regulations that are being developed out of this legislation. I think it's important, you know, whether we're in the committee process or whether we're in this process, that we ensure that all questions are being answered, that Albertans can feel confident that this is a very transparent approach to governance, that there's a certain level of accountability as the government moves forward with this legislation, and that Albertans can be confident that this is in their best interests.

With that, Madam Chair, I'd just like to highlight that I do have concerns that we're moving forward in a manner that does not actually hear from all physicians properly, I believe, that we are not able to hear the concerns from some of the physicians that have approached our caucus. I do believe that we have a responsibility to have that transparency so that Albertans can be confident that this is legislation that is in their best interests.

I believe that this agreement that has come upon us between the AMA and the government, where now we give the AMA exclusive rights to negotiations in this province, should be enough of a warning bell, a warning signal that would say to Albertans: what did the AMA get out of this? They have agreed to a fee freeze. In that negotiation I think Albertans are probably asking the question: is it in the best interests of Albertans going forward, of doctors going forward, of physicians going forward that the AMA is essentially given these exclusive rights, almost in the position of a superunion, within the province of Alberta?

With that, Madam Chair, I believe I will continue to ask questions and to seek guidance and to ask the government to take a pause and look towards proper consultation on this bill to allow Albertans to be fully informed before we take the step of moving this legislation forward into third reading.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 24?

Seeing none, I will put the question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 24 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 22 An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments or questions to be offered? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. If my information is correct, I believe we are on the amendment moved by my colleague from Calgary-South East on my behalf when this was adjourned. Perhaps I'll just confirm with you that that's, in fact, what we're on.

The Deputy Chair: That is correct.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much. I thought so.

First off, I just want to say a word of thanks to my colleague from Calgary-South East for moving that amendment on my behalf. I think what's been, I will say without much hesitation, the most rewarding process that I've been a part of as part of the 29th Legislative Assembly has been the work that we have done together as part of the child intervention panel. What was so compelling about that work was the challenging subject matter that we tackled together in a crosspartisan way. Being an all-party committee, we had the opportunity to really dig deep into what is a very complex and a very challenging issue that has been a topic that has been investigated in numerous committees, reports by the Child and Youth Advocate, previous panels and committees of the members of the Assembly. Many ministers have tried to tackle improving the lives of kids in care, in particular indigenous children in care.

I think it's important that we remember why we started this process in the first place, which is the case of Serenity, who died very, very tragically, having been in care. We should never forget what the circumstances were that led her to be in that very terrible situation. None of the changes in this bill will be able to undo that terrible, terrible tragedy, and we should never ever forget that. What we need to do is focus on what we can do to make sure that nothing like that ever happens again. I'm confident that the changes that this bill brings should give us more opportunity to say that we took this challenging issue forward. We should be in a position where, I think, this does improve the lives of kids in care and does improve the likelihood that fewer numbers of children will come into contact with the child intervention system and, in particular, creates a pathway for indigenous children to get better care, to stay connected with culture, with community, and with family.

Back to the process, and that's the substance of the amendment that I've moved. This bill, like many, will be reviewed every five years, but in so doing, I thought it was important that we put some parameters around what that review is. If it's simply a matter of sending it to a committee of the Assembly, while that can be effective, this subject matter has some very specific requirements in terms of overview. Five years from now I would hope that we'll have the opportunity to say that we have made substantive progress, that we've reduced the terrible overrepresentation that we see of indigenous kids in care: 69 per cent of kids in care are indigenous. Only roughly 5 to 10 per cent of kids in the province of Alberta are indigenous, so there's that vast overrepresentation.

That's why I've moved this amendment, which will create a review committee composed of

- (a) one or more persons [who are] representative of
 - (i) Indigenous communities,
 - (ii) guardians and caregivers of children, and
 - (iii) providers of services to children and families, and
- (b) one or more members of each caucus represented in the Legislative Assembly.

That, I hope, creates and carries on the same spirit of crosspartisan work focused on outcomes.

I want to say thank you to the minister. You'll recall that at the outset of this process, almost exactly two years ago, the government was not interested in creating an all-party panel. They also had very, very tight constraints on what the panel was to review. Working together with other opposition parties, we were able to convince the government that we needed to broaden that review. We needed to travel the province, visit indigenous communities where they live, and hear their stories first-hand. We did that, and there are a number of members in the Assembly, yourself included, Madam Chair, who participated in that process. I think we should be proud of the work that we have done there.

Now, that isn't to say that we mustn't remain vigilant, that we can wash our hands of it and just hope that this bill solves all the problems, because it doesn't. The challenges and the paths that lead children into care are ones that comes from many, many decades, centuries of a colonial legacy, that we will take a very long time, sadly, to overcome. We need to acknowledge where that comes from and understand how it is that we got to the place that we are. But I believe that this bill takes steps forward that will help address some of the current issues that are making it more challenging for kids in care, in particular indigenous kids in care, and then I hope that this amendment – and I will thank the government, in particular the Minister of Children's Services, for working together with us in crafting this amendment, something that I hope the government can accept. I would hope all members of this Legislature, opposition and government, would be willing to get on board with this and ensure that the good work that we have done carries on and that every five years we come back and go through another thoughtful and thorough process.

I will just end by encouraging the government and all members who are here in the Assembly, opposition and government, to really look at this process and ask yourselves if the outcomes that we see here, which I think are good outcomes, are the kind of thing we'd like to see on other issues as well. I would suggest it absolutely is. If I was to compare it to the first all-party panel I was a part of, the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, that process sure seemed pretty tilted from the very beginning. The government, on that one, had a pretty good idea what outcome they wanted. They needed to create a committee to make it look like they consulted when in fact from the very beginning they knew exactly what they wanted to do, and it was not a great process.

This process on the other hand was very open ended. The government asked very general questions. I think all members of the committee came together and focused on doing the right thing for kids in care, and we had some challenging conversations. We didn't always agree on everything, but we worked together as a team, and we worked through those things. We engaged with people with lived experience. We engaged with indigenous communities, with service providers, with foster parents, with birth parents, and I think the results were positive. That's the substance of my amendment, to ensure that that good work happens again every time this legislation is reviewed. I would encourage all members of the Assembly to support it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise on the amendment to Bill 22, An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities. I appreciate the intent of what the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow has brought forward here with his amendment. There are certainly things there that I agree with. A regular review of the legislation is good housekeeping for all bills, but I think this one in particular could use an assurance that the bill will be reviewed on a regular basis because the fact is that the issues with children in care have been a problem. As I understand it, every province and every state of the U.S. has had ongoing issues, which I suppose means that it's a complex problem.

In that spirit we need to make the legislation as good as we can. I wouldn't say that I agree with the mover of the amendment's assertion that what's in this bill will help prevent a reoccurrence of what happened to Serenity. In fact, I would say there's a place where it's fallen woefully short, and I would just call that an honest disagreement between myself and the hon. member on whether it's effective that way.

Madam Chair, I have a subamendment which I would like to bring forward with your permission.

The Deputy Chair: You can just have the original come to the table, please, Member. Once I have that you can go ahead. Hon. member, please go ahead.

4:10

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. For those that haven't received the hard copy yet, the subamendment says to move that amendment A2 to Bill 22, An Act for Strong Families building Stronger Communities, be amended in the proposed section 131.2(3)(a) by striking out "and" at the end of subclause (ii), by adding "and" at the end of subclause (iii), and by adding the following after subclause (iii):

(iv) the Office of the Child and Youth Advocate.

For those of us that were on the committee, I'm happy to hear what any hon. members have to say, because where I do agree with the mover of the amendment is that we all did our best to act in a nonpartisan way, because it's that important, because we need to look after children. We certainly heard a lot of testimony and received a lot of information from a lot of people across the province, some stakeholders, some adults that had been in the system as they grew up, certainly from a lot of indigenous people, who are severely overrepresented in the system. I'm sure all of it was honest, I'm sure all of it was true, I'm sure all of it was heartfelt, but not all of the information we received agreed with one another, and that's probably because different people in some cases had different experiences in the system or with the system or even their viewpoint from outside of the system.

But the fact is that one thing that I found consistent is that a trusted voice was the office of the Child and Youth Advocate, which is why this subamendment would include the office of the Child and Youth Advocate. Now, boy, there's an office, in my view, that has one of the toughest jobs in the government of Alberta, in the province of Alberta, dealing with the worst circumstances that occur to, you know, in many cases, the most vulnerable children amongst us. Reporting in an accurate, strong, and I would even say a compassionate and loving way on behalf of the children who are either injured and sometimes die in the system, that have bad experiences, those files end up in the office of the Child and Youth Advocate, who, I'm sure, does the severely unpleasant job of deep dives on the files, investigations, looking into evidence on behalf of the child, looking at what might have caused, or what did cause in many cases, the children in the system to suffer or die or any combination of bad circumstances that end up on the advocate's desk.

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

To really, in my view, bring focus to it, bring focus in a way that not just people in this committee but, I think, anybody who hasn't done it and those maybe watching at home on TV, if you go on the website of the office of the Child and Youth Advocate and read some of their reports, any of the reports, really, that that office has published, you will find that the work is professional. It's thorough. Again, it's compassionate and loving towards these kids. The more we can involve the office of the Child and Youth Advocate, in my opinion, when we are dealing with children in care, the better chance that we have of (a) getting better outcomes for kids that have contact with the system, and (b) I think the more we involve the office of the Child and Youth Advocate, the better chance we'll have to make ongoing, substantive, and important improvements to the system and the better chance we'll have of learning not only from mistakes made and problems that occur but, actually, perhaps even learning from the things that we do right and the interventions that help kids along the way.

Our chances of understanding the nuances in this obviously complicated file – you know, you might say: so what's so complicated about looking after kids? Well, I guess anybody that's a parent would probably think that it's fairly complicated.

This is nonpartisan, Madam Chair. When a Conservative government was in government here, we had problems in the system with children in care, and with the current government we've had problems with children in care. Again, this not a partisan issue, in my view. It's bigger and more important than partisan bickering because it looks after kids that are actually in the care of the 87 of us that are elected to sit in this Chamber. In my view, all bear a personal responsibility for the welfare and the safety and the nurturing of every single child that touches that system.

Madam Chair, I know you were on the committee with me and you did yeoman's work there and even tried to direct us cats, as you're doing now, because lots of times things were orderly, but there were times when people felt strongly about how to change the system and how to try to make things better, more safe for kids in care.

I hope that Members of the Legislative Assembly . . .

The Chair: Hon. member. Hon. member.

An Hon. Member: I'm sorry.

The Chair: I appreciate that, yeah. We are in committee, but it's still not appropriate to go around the front there. Thank you.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate that.

Members of the House, I hope that you will consider the value of this subamendment. I hope that even the mover of the amendment might see that this will be an improvement to what I think is a well-intentioned amendment that he put on the floor. I hope that you will join with me in supporting this because this really is just about making the legislation as good as it can be while we're in this House today and making it as good as it can be for the very good reason of protecting Alberta's children that we are responsible for because they are in the child care system.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I echo some of the sentiments that have come from the Member for Calgary-Hays. I'm very optimistic of this process, that we can continue to have this as a nonpartisan approach. I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Elbow as well for his words earlier about talking about the process and the intent of the government members during this process. Thank you very much. I sincerely believe the same from the members of the other side of the aisle here.

The way the current amendment proposed by the Member for Calgary-Elbow stands, I do support. However, I have some challenges supporting the subamendment, and I'll explain why. The first process is that we haven't consulted with the office of the Child and Youth Advocate. Before having that discussion with him, I'd be apprehensive of actually bringing forth this subamendment without discussing about opening up that scope in his office. In the previous legislation that we brought forth last spring, we've actually opened up the scope of what the Child and Youth Advocate's office can do. Now their office is responsible for reviewing every death that occurs, and they have a substantive amount of extra powers that will allow them to do that review process.

The other concern I have, too – and this is something that came up – is that when we were reviewing the existing legislation in the ministerial panel, we were also responsible for reviewing the review process itself. If you remember, Madam Chair, that was part of our phase 1 approach. One of the things that we determined in that approach – and legislation has changed – is that there was a need for changes within the advocate's office: the way reviews were done, which reviews should be completed, and what's within their scope.

With that being said, I would have some concern – and, you know, by no means am I alleging or making an assumption of any malice. One of the things that was a very positive approach was having those fresh eyes and outside approaches looking into the review process and determining what was working and what wasn't working and bringing in experts and people from across the country, including the advocate's office, to discuss with us. You could have the allegations coming forth that there could be a perceived conflict of interest if the advocate is reviewing his own processes and the way his office operates, so I can't support the subamendment.

I do want to thank the member for bringing this forward and taking an open-minded approach to this bill.

4:20

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the subamendment? Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you. Thank you, first of all, to the Member for Calgary-Hays for bringing forward this important subamendment. I think he did a great job of pointing out why adding the Child and Youth Advocate to the process makes sense.

I served on the ministerial panel with the Member for Calgary-Hays as well as several members of this Chamber, including yourself, of course, Madam Chair. One of the things that really struck me during the process and after the process was how much the lack of accountability for the government of the day as well as a lack of accountability for the ministry were the biggest part of the problem that we were attempting to fix. As the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays says, this is really a nonpartisan problem. It's happening in other jurisdictions, certainly, not just in Canada but around the world. It's happened to the government that he had the privilege of being a minister of, and it's certainly happened to this government.

When the case of Serenity came to light, the hope of this Chamber – I think I can speak on behalf of everybody here – was that if there was this ministerial panel, we would be able to address some of the issues in particular with the case of Serenity. I think we all went into it skeptical on the opposition side – skeptical – given our experience with the NDP government on other issues. But we went into it with good faith. In fact, we compromised and agreed to essentially slow down the discussion about Serenity in this Chamber and then go in a bipartisan way and have a path. We thought, as you know, Madam Chair, that it should have been a committee, an official committee that was responsible to this Legislature. It should have been a committee that could have called witnesses, that was on Hansard and was on the record. But we decided in the interests of Serenity's family and in the interests of trying to make sure a tragedy like that did not take place again in this province that we would compromise and we would go through the ministerial panel process.

At the time, though, lots of media spoke out as well as us about the concern that this would just be put back under the carpet again and nobody would really go into the actual details that were sent there. Unfortunately, time has now shown that that is what happened. The NDP used the panel to tone down where it was politically in the province, the frustration of Albertans about this tragic and horrible story, to kind of ride that out, to come into this place and say: we're working on this issue. In fact, ministers would rise and say: "We are reviewing parts of the Serenity case on the panel. We don't know what the hon. members are referring to."

Then we'd go to a panel meeting right after the question period or right before the question period where those questions were asked, and the NDP majority on that panel would block us from asking specific questions about the Serenity case over and over, which then prompted Paula Simons, now Senator Simons, to say in one of her articles near the end of this situation – this is not a quote from the opposition. This is not a quote from a columnist who – I don't think Paula would be upset if I said that she was not an overly conservative columnist. In fact, I think she would agree with me, I suspect. I've had the privilege of having meetings with Paula in the past when we've talked about this issue over coffee and sharing some of her knowledge on this file. She says: "They've never reviewed Serenity's case – which they only learned about [the following] fall. Now, in light of the all-party panel, they [will] put off [that] review indefinitely."

One of my great regrets of this last term was that in hindsight and, I think, with good intention the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, who was the leader of the third party at that time, and our leadership in the Official Opposition, the Wildrose Party at that time – I know that our heart was in the right spot. We wanted to try to work with the government to get something that could solve this issue once and for all. We were worried – and sadly it's now been shown – that the NDP was going to put that under the carpet and avoid dealing with the issue.

I think what the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays is trying to do with this amendment is to address that issue, to make sure that governments of the day, not just this government but future governments, including ourselves if we're given the privilege of forming government after the next election, can't do the same types of things that the NDP did with that ministerial panel. They cannot, you know, just sweep these issues underneath the carpet. The most logical person to participate in that process, I think, is the Child and Youth Advocate. I think that's the hon. member's intention with this amendment.

You know, one of the things that the panel wanted, particularly the opposition and the experts that were on the panel – I suspect that some of the NDP members who were on the panel also wanted it, but unfortunately because of political circumstances within their own party I would assume that they weren't able to support it – was actually to have a committee that the Child and Youth Advocate would answer to in a public way about this, that could be similar to our Public Accounts Committee, that all of us in this room are familiar with, where the Auditor General works with the Public Accounts Committee, which is also chaired by the opposition and is able to present reports, to call upon government departments to answer questions about stuff that's been, you know, brought to light, to help hold the government accountable, and to be a resource in some ways to the Auditor General and to work with the Auditor General.

We wanted to see that same process for the Child and Youth Advocate because what we recognized – I'm sure the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays will agree with this – is that ultimately, as we dug into this, nobody was responsible. Nobody wanted to take the responsibility. I don't blame them. I wouldn't want to be responsible for some of these horrific things. Nobody, when you followed the process, was ultimately responsible. You know, of course, we weren't allowed to get into too many of the details of how the steps along the process – that was continually blocked by the NDP as well. What was clear was that nobody was accountable for it and also that nobody was being a true watchdog of the system itself. Instead, we continued to rely on the system that had failed people like Serenity, on the very department that had failed people like Serenity instead of being able to put in place systems that will be able to make it fixed.

It seems to me that it's disappointing that the NDP worked so hard to block the Child and Youth Advocate from having that resource and the ability to do that. This is not a partisan individual. Nobody would claim, certainly, that the current Child and Youth Advocate has been operating in a partisan way. He's been very, very focused on children, which is his mandate. Having him have an ability where we could publicly talk about these things in a transparent way is definitely what the panel wanted, the majority when you include the experts. Certainly, the government members on there, in the end, did not agree with that, but I think it's what Albertans would have wanted. Unfortunately, as we know, the NDP did not do that.

Now we have a situation where the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays has brought forward a very reasonable amendment to at least attempt to try to do something similar, to make sure that the watchdog for children, you know, an officer of this Legislature, whose ultimate responsibility is this issue, could participate in the process. I would submit to you, Madam Chair, given the comments from the backbench member of the government on this amendment, that it appears the NDP is going to continue that practice of not wanting this process to be transparent and accountable.

Unfortunately, Madam Chair, what that means is that this is going to continue. That is without a doubt what members of the panel learned. People go through these processes with good intentions. They really do. I think all members did. I mean, that was a hard job, and you were the chair of that committee. It wasn't easy to be able to go through that. Some of the stuff was pretty tough, that we all heard. But we go through these processes, and then because nobody will put in the systems to make sure the system is held accountable for it, nobody will put in a process to make sure that the system meets those goals that were established by those panels.

As you know, Madam Chair, we weren't the first panel to try to address this. In fact, there are bookshelves and bookshelves of content on things that could be done to fix the situation that unfortunately have not been implemented. That's another thing the panel – that was clear. I don't think any member who participated in that panel would argue about that, that there are other people that have talked about that. There are lots of similarities. My late friend, the former minister Manmeet Bhullar, had a ministerial – it was a little different but the same thing – round-table. When you read through some of the stuff that they learned in that process or some of the recommendations they had, quite frankly, it was very similar to some of the stuff, I think, the conclusions that we all came to. There were a lot of similarities. You know, then the question for me became: well, why didn't we implement those when those people did that fine work?

I think that at the end of the day it came down to: there's no process to hold people accountable. Let's be clear. While I respect and thank the people that work in the ministry on what has to be one of the hardest topics and hardest situations that anybody would have to work in – and when you talk to some of those individuals that are working very, very hard, I couldn't imagine having to do that for a living. It's really, really hard. You're dealing with tragic circumstances all the time and not enough money ever, no matter what you do, and not enough time in a day. You know, that's not easy. We're not blaming them for that. But, at the end of the day, the very system that failed Serenity and others is still in charge of the process. We're still in the same spot that we were when Minister Bhullar and others did this and when others before them did this.

Now with this amendment at least we get a chance of having an outside, nonpartisan officer who answers to this place, ultimately is responsible to this place, to the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, as you know, Madam Chair, who could then be at least one of the people on there holding the system to account and being a watchdog and also then coming out to the news. When governments of the day, like this government, decide to sweep things under the rug and come into this place and pretend like they're dealing with things in a panel when they're not – I mean, that's easy to determine – that Child and Youth Advocate then is in a position to go: wait a minute; wait a minute; this is wrong.

With our panel, we at least had opposition members that were able to participate that did that. We had to come out and say: no; when the NDP say that they're doing this, that's not quite the way we see it; this is actually what's taking place. We were able to then get the word out to Albertans about the behaviour of the NDP on that panel. But now, when we go into this process, we need to make sure that there's somebody that will continue to do that.

With that said, I strongly encourage all members to support this. I don't know why you would not want the Child and Youth Advocate to participate in this process. Quite frankly, I think that by not doing that, you show that the intention of the NDP government is to continue to hide things and not bring them into the light to be able to make sure that we fix them so that people don't end up in the same situation as Serenity and others, who, I will remind you, Madam Chair, as I close, lost their lives in the care of our system. That is a pretty serious thing that we want to make sure is avoided, and having the Child and Youth Advocate here to hold the government accountable is completely appropriate.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. You know, I just want to respond to a few of the comments. I talked in my initial remarks about this process, how it was a crosspartisan process. I want to be careful because I don't want to get too deep and sort of push back too hard, but I do take issue with a number of the things that the member said about a lack of accountability or a lack of action or a lack of oversight, that the system is the same as it always was. It feels like – no. I'm going to try to keep this high level.

Look, this morning we had Public Accounts with the Ministry of Children's Services, and we talked about their action plan. Coming out of the child intervention panel, there was a detailed action plan, some 39 actions that were to be completed by 2022. That's on the website. You can look at them in the child intervention action plan. There are 16 immediate actions to be completed by April 2019. Now, there's a website that lays out what those 16 actions are. Part of one of those actions is to pass Bill 22. What I asked the ministry officials there was if they could perhaps provide us with some more details on that website about the progress on each one of those 16 areas. It's not correct to say that the system hasn't changed. It is not perfect and, frankly, never will be, but action has been taken.

Bill 18, which we passed last spring, gives the Child and Youth Advocate, specifically to your subamendment, hon. member, the mandate to review every single child death. One of the things, as I talked with the minister and her officials about this amendment that we see before us now – in fact, my original draft of my amendment A2 had the office of the Child and Youth Advocate included in there. One of the reasons why the minister suggested that that perhaps should be taken out – and I agreed – was that the office of the Child and Youth Advocate is always doing the work of ensuring that children in care are treated appropriately. If there is ever a death, as tragic as it is, the Child and Youth Advocate will do a report on that death, and his office issues reports on a regular basis.

The mandate is bigger than it was previous to Bill 18, and that review is for not just children up to age 18 but up to age 21, because one of the things that we heard in the panel was that once children age out of care, they sort of fall off the radar. You know, if a child ages out of care and dies from suicide or from some other reason a day after their 18th birthday, it's important for us to understand as a community how that happened. So the Child and Youth Advocate continues to do that work.

To the Member for Calgary-Shaw's point, I think there is some legitimacy. Part of the panel's work at the outset was to review the role of the Child and Youth Advocate, and I think that in five years' time, when this bill is reviewed again, I would hope that that panel does also look at the work of the Child and Youth Advocate with the benefit of five more years of time and looking at the reports that that office has done. Certainly, if I find myself in this Assembly five years from now, hopefully on the government side, I can assure you that I will personally make sure that the review panel would make sure that the Child and Youth Advocate is presented to that panel, likely more than once. I can imagine there would be an entire stream of work related to presentations by the office of the Child and Youth Advocate, as there was for the child intervention panel. The OCYA, Mr. Graff and his team, came to visit that panel on multiple occasions.

I'm comfortable in saying that the work of the Child and Youth Advocate and the input of that office as well as a review of the appropriate role for that office would be considered in this panel, going forward, based on the amendment that we have before us, so I see no reason to add the OCYA to the panel as the subamendment suggests.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the subamendment? Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate this opportunity. Now, I'm a little incredulous at what I've heard from the previous speaker and the Member for Calgary-Shaw. I think it was suggested – I don't have the Blues here, so I may not get the words exactly right – that you don't want him checking his own work. Well, this isn't about checking his own work. This is actually about: who's reviewing the legislation every five years?

I think the Member for Calgary-Elbow is correct in having somebody representing indigenous communities, somebody representing guardians and caregivers of children, and somebody representing providers of services to children and families. But, as we've heard the Member for Calgary-Shaw and the Member for Calgary-Elbow speaking, they're saying that the office of the Child and Youth Advocate has been given more authority. Because they're so trusted, they've been given more work. They're probably if not the foremost experts amongst the foremost experts on what needs to change in the legislation and what doesn't need to change in the legislation. So why would you not include the most knowledgeable, trusted party to give you advice about the legislation? I mean, why wouldn't you?

Let's face it: the office provides crucial oversights. They're mandated to work with vulnerable young people, and some are the most knowledgeable people in our province on how the legislation is being implemented on the front lines. They have their hands either on the legislation or on the results of the legislation every day for the five years, so who better to give whatever government of the day is in place advice on how to change it or upgrade it? Or indeed they might advise to leave the legislation alone if we get to a place where things are working a lot better. You know, since the change in the legislation could easily change the roles and responsibilities of the Child and Youth Advocate, they should be heard because they play such an important role.

You know what, Madam Chair? At some point in the future they might say that they should have an even bigger role, or it's possible that they could say: well, actually, we need a smaller role. Either way, their voice is so important. It's so important. The Child and Youth Advocate is, right in its name, by definition, an advocate. Well, they represent the voices of vulnerable children, and those voices are crucial. So they advocate for children.

Now, we all need to be advocates for children. We all ought to be. Surely, representatives of the indigenous communities, when they're looking at the legislation, will be advocates for children, and the guardians and caregivers ought to be and, I'm sure, will be advocates for children, and the providers of the services that work in the field should be advocates for children when the legislation is being reviewed. But why not have the advocate, the person most responsible, the party most qualified, the party that's seen and reported on and had to sign their name to reports, to the good, the bad, and the ugly?

Who would be better qualified to look at the legislation and say, for example, that the access to information needs to change, that they couldn't get to the bottom of these files because they didn't have access to information. They might also say that the privacy of children was compromised unreasonably because the access to information needs to change a little bit differently in another section. Who can see all this stuff in such a way that they could actually know and report on how the legislation should be made bigger, smaller, or remain the same than the party that looks after the aftermath of the worst cases?

This whole thing started with Serenity. And thank you to the minister . . .

Mr. Nixon: Senator.

Mr. McIver: Senator. Pardon me.

. . . to the Senator who wrote about this and brought this all to our attention, Paula Simons. And thank you to Minister LaBoucane-Benson, who was on the committee as an independent member.

Mr. Nixon: Senator.

Mr. McIver: Senator. Again, sorry. I'm grateful for my colleague correcting me because I'm wrong each time.

The Senators were there, but also thank you to the other members of the committee. Surely, you remember that the office of the Child and Youth Advocate was seen as a force for good, as an advocate for children, as someone that could recommend the actual individual changes, the on-the-ground changes on how children in care are handled: the on-the-ground changes, the legal changes, the privacy changes, the need for cultural recognition changes.

I'll tell you what. If we're going to make legislation – and maybe that's part of the problem with the legislation in front of us. Even though it's well intentioned, it's lacking in some ways. I guess that since the government itself said that it's part 1 of 3, they admit it's lacking, so I'll let them off the hook for that. They said themselves, when they said that it's part 1 of 3, that they've got a lot more legislation to go.

Now, I'm wondering whether the office of the Child and Youth Advocate advised on this piece of legislation. I hope so. Perhaps the minister or somebody from the government side will stand up and let us know. If they didn't, then the ball was dropped. If the Child and Youth Advocate isn't involved in the legislation five years from now, in the updating of it, then the ball will be dropped again.

That's why the amendment is here, to make the legislation better, to make the process better, to make the review five years from now better, and then five years after that to make it better again. We can't quit on making things better for kids who are in our care, who are under our responsibility. We have taken on the burden of their care and survival, allowing them to be the best, most independent adults that they can possibly be after they get through with the system.

Honestly, if we're not including the office of the Child and Youth Advocate both this time and the next time we look at the legislation, then we haven't done our job right, which is why I hope all members of the House will vote for this subamendment.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the subamendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the vote.

[Motion on subamendment A2-SA1 lost]

The Chair: We are now on amendment A2.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Chair. Pursuant to Government Motion 36 I am just notifying the House that there will be no evening sitting this evening and that when we do adjourn, we will recommence at 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The Chair: Are there any further comments on amendment A2? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. In the never-ending attempt to make the legislation that comes out of this place better, I have a subamendment to be considered.

The Chair: This will be known as subamendment A2-SA2. Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate this. Subamendment A2-SA2 says to move that Bill 22, An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities, be amended in the proposed section 131.2 by adding the following after (7), which I guess would be:

(8) The proceedings of the review committee must be conducted in public.

You know what? If there's anything that we learned along the way it is that if you want to deal with this subject of children in care, the discussion needs to stand up to public scrutiny so that that guarantees that it's in the interests of children in care. It needs to be on the record because, frankly, there are too many kids depending upon it to allow things to get swept under the carpet.

I know, again, when we had this last committee, what I learned is that the opposition lobbied very hard for a committee of the Legislature because it would be on the record with Hansard and conducted in public and have some rules and any particular minister would not be able to bury all or part of the proceedings. We didn't get that. Finally, after a great deal of the opposition standing together and, frankly, embarrassing the government into it, we did get a ministerial panel for which I am grateful despite the fact that we had to fight so hard for what should have been easy. I think it was the Premier that finally relented one day in question period and finally said: we'll do something. Thank you, Premier, for that. Thank you to the minister for that. It wasn't what we really wanted, but it was surely better than nothing, and again I was grateful for the way that members from all sides tried to and I think almost a hundred per cent did work in a nonpartisan way, which is a positive outcome.

Well, I think what we've learned is that in looking after children in care, if you want to make it better, sweeping the issues under the carpet doesn't make it better. I think we tried that. Surely, the previous government that I was part of tried that, and that didn't work. Since then there have been attempts to sweep some of the problems under the carpet, and that didn't work. I think that we actually need to have some of these painful conversations out loud if we're going to make the way that we look after children in care better. If you want to actually fix difficult problems, you need to face up to the difficult problems, and that requires that the proceedings happen in public. That's why this subamendment is forward. For the sake of future and present kids that are in care, I hope that all members of this Assembly will support this subamendment. I believe it's genuinely an improvement to the amendment, which is good. I think this makes it more good.

Let's face it. Following the Serenity case, Albertans justifiably have some concerns, ensuring that children in care are safe and protected. For the sake of public trust it's important that the proceedings of the committee be conducted in public and on the record. During the child intervention panel we advocated for the proceedings to be recorded in Hansard, and the government refused.

You know what? You could say that if there's nothing to hide – but here's the thing. If there's a problem and children die in care and they shouldn't have, there is something to hide, but unless you actually talk about it, you're not going to actually fix it. So I'm not even going to say: if there's nothing to hide. I think that when things go wrong, perhaps there is something to hide because no one wants to take responsibility for a child that dies in care. I appreciate that some kids die in care because they just happen to get sick. Well, then there's nothing to hide there, but if somebody made a bad mistake that caused that child to get injured or die, then there is something to hide. What's most important is that it doesn't get hidden if you actually want to put procedures and legislation and policies and plans in place to prevent a reoccurrence. You should have to not hide what you want to hide, and that's why this subamendment is here, so that what we're uncomfortable with doesn't get hidden, what we're uncomfortable with gets confronted.

You know what? Five years from now I don't know whether I'll be gone, whether I'll be on this side of the House or that side of the House or any of it. It doesn't matter. The fact is that it doesn't matter who's in government; this is a nonpartisan issue. Whoever is there needs to face up to the real, serious, tough responsibilities of when you take a child out of their family home, you are responsible for them, and when things go wrong, we need to have those difficult discussions. That's why this subamendment is here, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to subamendment A2-SA2? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just some clarifying questions for the hon. member. When we were on the Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention, we did run into some situations where individuals who had just been in the system who were in their early 20s were very nervous about appearing in front of the public and even just people who were afraid of reprisal if they came forward. I'm just trying to wrap my head around the interpretation of this. Is there an opportunity for in camera sessions, or is the intent for everything to be public?

Mr. McIver: Listen, when the discussions about the legislation are taking place, it should be in public. If there are discussions outside of that about specific cases to give context, that could surely be in camera, but the discussions about the legislation and its affects need to be in public so that people know what is changing and why.

Certainly, the hon. member is concerned about, you know, the privacy perhaps of even victims of mistakes. I share that with him, but that's not a discussion about the legislation. That's a discussion about individual cases and context. But the discussions about the legislation need be in public, and that's what I have laid before the House here. And I'd be grateful if the hon. member and all members of this Legislature would support it.

Mr. Sucha: Okay. Well, thank you to the hon. member for that clarification. I don't see why we can't support this subamendment if that's the opportunity. If it's talking about the legislation or reforms around it, I absolutely can support this subamendment.

The Chair: Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you. I guess I just want to ask a question, and I don't know, frankly, if the government can answer this. Of course, our friends from Parliamentary Counsel can't speak to this specifically. You know, just to what the Member for Calgary-Shaw had raised, the only question I would have about this and the concern would be: would we find ourselves five years down the road having a review committee which would be precluded from going in camera to hear very personal stories?

That was a big part of what this past child intervention panel was all about. It was not a common thing. It's not something that the panel did very often. The vast, vast majority of our proceedings were in public, but our deliberations were not. They were in camera, and I think that's appropriate. So I guess my question would be: would this create perhaps an unintended consequence of constraining the work of the committee, preventing that committee from having very open dialogue about very sensitive matters? Would it prevent people from coming and presenting to the committee in a way that would be comfortable for them?

There are many people who perhaps have lived experience being a child in care who are now adults. Perhaps even there may be a scenario, although we didn't have this last time and I don't know if it ever would be appropriate, to actually have a child who's currently in care or had lived experience with that under the age of 18 present. As I recall, we did not have that in the child intervention panel, but we did have some now adults in their early 20s who had been children in care. I, I guess, feel that this amendment may perhaps unintentionally preclude future reviews from hearing the lived experience of people who have been in care.

I understand the intent that the review committee must be conducted in public. I'm a big, big believer in open debate. That's a big part of the reason that I'm in this Assembly. But I also acknowledge that there will be times, especially in cases like this, where we're dealing with child intervention and children in care which have some very legitimate confidentiality and privacy considerations. We need to be mindful of those.

Yes, you know, if this past process is any indication – certainly, I would hope that, based on what I'm proposing in my amendment – the intent very much is to have a very public and very open review. The wording around the “committee must submit to the Minister a report” and that “the Minister shall lay the report before the Legislative Assembly” if it is sitting, and if not, “within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting of the Legislative Assembly”: so the amendment, as I've proposed it, already does have some significant transparency, I guess, requirements, and that's very much the intention.

The other, I guess, fail-safe, if you will, in my current amendment, which perhaps renders the subamendment from the Member for Calgary-Hays redundant, is that “one or more members of each caucus represented in the Legislative Assembly” would be a part of the process. I hate to predict the future – and perhaps I'm wrong about this – but if we have opposition parties that are not of the same ideological bent as the government of the day, I suspect that they're probably not going to allow for too much secrecy in the review process. If there was too much secrecy, I suspect that they would create a minority report and also kick up a fuss in the media, as well they should.

I have to say that having gone through the process we just went through, my intention with this amendment is to in the future re-create that process. Now that I've said that on Hansard, I hope that historians five years from now will go back and remind that committee of its terms of reference. That's very much the intention of this amendment as we put this into legislation, to replicate as close as possible the process that we've just gone through here in the child intervention panel. But that process did have some in camera sessions. My question and, I guess, a concern would be that if we do pass this subamendment, we would constrain that panel's ability to do that important work and respect confidentiality as necessary.

Thank you.

Mr. Sucha: You know, I can appreciate where the Member for Calgary-Elbow is coming from. To be honest, in kind of looking into it, my initial inkling was, you know, that we're trying to achieve a very transparent process, to review this intensely within five years' time. For the most part, this amendment, to be honest, kind of drew it out and let people know the process. But I also did understand where the member was coming from, where I thought it was redundant.

I can appreciate where the Member for Calgary-Elbow is coming from with his concerns in relation to protecting privacy and family. Granted, depending on how black and white it is, law is always up for interpretation. I can really understand and respect where the Member for Calgary-Elbow has some serious concerns in relation to this unintentionally opening the door and making it difficult for people to come forward. It doesn't really spell out the parameters for when the committee could go in camera or when it would allow privacy for families that require or need the privacy or have requested it. It could actually be a detriment to the committee. So I thank him for bringing that up in this as well.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the subamendment?

Mr. McIver: Madam Chair, I listened to the Member for Calgary-Elbow, and I've got to say that he probably should, when he gets a quiet minute, pour himself a glass of wine and listen to himself. He was talking in circles. He was talking in circles. He said in one breath that he wanted everything to be open and transparent. In the next breath he wants to vote against a motion to make it open and transparent. It can't be both.

He said in one breath that he wanted a process just like the last one, but the amendment that he put forward, that I liked, just for the record, says a "review committee." What we did was a ministerial panel, nothing at all like what he's proposing. What he's proposing is fine. What he just argued for is completely different. Based on his argument, he would vote against his own amendment. That's not what he was supporting when he was on his feet just now. He was supporting the exact same process. The exact same process wasn't good enough. It wasn't even close to being good enough.

What the hon. member put in his notice of amendment is "review committee," not at all like what we just did. I'm a little taken aback and a little gobsmacked, if you will, by what I just heard because I have no idea what the member intends now. What he wrote in black and white seems to be okay. At least, I think it would improve the legislation, and I could support it. But what he just said when he was on his feet was completely – completely – at odds with what he signed his name to on this piece of paper, the amendment.

I don't know where he stands. I hope he's going to support the subamendment that I put forward. But all I'll say for the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow is that what he committed his signature to in writing is much better than what he just said when he was on his feet five minutes ago.

The Chair: Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you to the Member for Calgary-Hays for this important subamendment. I share some concerns, that he has articulated, in regard to both the comments of the private member from the NDP side of the aisle on this and even more to the comments of the House leader for the third party.

You know, to defend and try to ignore the real problems with the process takes away from being able to fix this problem. Again, I'm going to use a quote from Paula Simons which I think really articulates the problem, where we ended up at the end of this ministerial panel. To defend that that process worked a hundred per cent is, quite frankly, ridiculous. She says:

Albertans didn't elect an NDP government to prop up . . . [the] status quo. Albertans elected them to clean up the messes of their Tory predecessors – and to protect the vulnerable. With this vague and wishy-washy report, they've failed to do either.

The results that came from the panel: well, there were certainly some good recommendations. I would not say that the intention of the Member for Calgary-Elbow was in any way negative. I think he had a good intention in participating in it, as I do think every member of the panel did.

But to ignore where it ended up does a disservice to the very people that we were sent there to try to help. To ignore where the process ended up and then to try to say that that's the process we should use going forward I think is disappointing. It's also confusing, quite frankly, given his amendment that he's moved in this Chamber, that we will debate when we're finished with the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays' subamendment.

Further to that, though, I think a point worth bringing up, after listening to the Member for Calgary-Elbow's comments, is that this is about a legislative review, your amendment, about reviewing legislation. This amendment is not giving a mandate to do criminal investigations or to do those types of things where certainly confidentiality would be important. Certainly, there could be some circumstances where there would have to be an in camera process to maybe have a discussion about some sensitive things that had taken place so that the people on the legislative committee could be able to come up with ideas and understand what needed to change. But the idea that legislation could not be made in a public way, that the conversation could not be in a public way is what we reject and, quite frankly, is the problem that we have that has taken us through all the last two years or longer. As we've started this process, this journey, all of us together, you know, that's the problem. That's where we've ended up.

Despite the fact that every party in this place, so the Official Opposition, the government party, the independent members, who participated in it tried to participate in this in good faith, the reality is that the government – I won't say that their individual members didn't participate in good faith. The government as a whole did not. They went out of their way – it was very obvious – to make sure that the issue that we were sent there to deal with could not be dealt with, and now we're back in this Chamber with the government. I think it's ridiculous to continue to try to stand up here and not acknowledge the fact that you, the government, through you, Madam Chair, to them, said to this place: "We're going to do this all-party ministerial panel because we're going to address the Serenity issue. We're going to find out why that little toddler was murdered in our care." Then they went out of their way to block any minutes.

In fact, I don't know how many members in this place know this. In the initial part of the committee the government members spent most of their time trying to make sure that there could not even be a recording of the proceedings, and I'm not just talking about a written, Hansard-type recording, a recording so that people outside of Edmonton could be able to listen to the proceedings. From the very beginning it was that simple a thing. For other people who could not, you know, travel to the capital or who had other commitments but wanted to be able to hear what was going on with the panel and look at it in a transparent way and then possibly do written submissions or those types of things to be able to help us with our work: the government spent most of the beginning trying to make sure that they couldn't even hear the proceedings.

The interesting thing about this panel, Madam Chair, was, of course, that there were outside experts on it. Most of the members in this Chamber would be used to a standing committee, which is where this should have gone, quite frankly – we now know that – where it's just MLAs that are participating. They have the majority in the case of a majority government, and they can push their agenda through. In this case there were actually some outside experts that were also part of the panel, and they were not partisan politicians, so they often had to be the tiebreaker on what we would be able to do in there despite the fact that the government wouldn't let votes happen unless they were trying to stop something.

Ultimately, frankly, I think that actually because of pressure from the press we were able to get the proceedings recorded but were still not allowed to get a transcript. So to this day you cannot go back and look at the work that that panel did. You can't even look at the debate or how they came to their conclusions unless you listen through many, many, many hours of recording. I mean, the panel was well over a year. It travelled all over the province. There's a lot of content, much of it good content. You can't search it. It's not a searchable type of database. It is extremely disappointing.

But what would have happened, Madam Chair, if we'd had the ministerial panel – I want my colleagues to think about this – but the government had convinced us to agree that the press and the public could not participate at all in the process? They would not be able to see what the ministerial panel was doing. I don't know what you think would have happened. I can tell you what I think would have happened. We certainly wouldn't have gotten the proceedings recorded in the end, because the media helped us push for that. We certainly would not have had the media, including Paula Simons, writing articles pointing out the hypocrisy of the government of the day on some of these issues.

Instead, the public wouldn't have known about it, and then we would have seen examples like we did see, Madam Chair, concrete examples – you can go back and look at Hansard – of the minister rising in this Chamber and answering questions on this issue and claiming that the panel was reviewing the Serenity case. Members of the panel, including the Member for Calgary-Hays and myself, were saying: “Well, we're not. You're blocking us from reviewing this, Minister. Why? Was this your intention, Minister?” It was her panel, but she was not a daily participant by design. And then she would rise and say: “Oh, yeah. Of course. It can all be reviewed. You can look through Hansard.” Then on the very same day you would then leave this Chamber after question period and go to a panel meeting, and the NDP majority would block any conversation to do with Serenity.

Now, do you think that that would have come to light if the press weren't able to watch and to point out some of those hypocrisies? Probably not. So the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, in pointing out that this needs to be public, is very right. No longer can we continue to allow this process to be done behind closed doors. And not just because of the NDP government of the day. As we've been very clear about since the start of this debate, this is an issue that goes across party lines. It's an issue that has happened to the previous government, it's an issue that's happened to this government, and it's an issue that's happened to governments all across the country and, quite frankly, the world. But how are you going to fix it if you continue to hide it?

If I was an NDP member, what I would be most disappointed in is the fact that I was sent there to try to make sure that this was dealt with and that my government fell back into the trap, the same trap that other governments have fallen into, of trying to sweep the stuff under the rug and deal with it behind closed doors. Often I think that the intention is good, but the reality is that by doing that, we have just turned this all back over to the same department that failed Serenity.

You can't ignore when a reporter like now Senator Paula Simons – not minister but Senator – has written extensively on this issue. You know, there's some stuff that Paula has written over the years that weren't my favourite columns – that's for sure – but on this issue I don't think there's any member from any party, in any walk of life that would not acknowledge the hard work that she's done on this file, the incredible reporting that she did. The fact is that without her we would not even be standing in this Chamber talking about this. I don't know if she would consider herself an expert on this, but she's definitely extremely knowledgeable. I know that when I was on the panel, I sought a meeting with her to just talk about the history of this because she had reported on this so much, and she was a valuable resource to the work I did on the committee. I don't know if anybody else had an opportunity to meet with her.

When somebody like that, then, writes that the process did not work, that the report is wishy-washy, and that it won't save one child's life, should we not, then, be asking as a Chamber: what went wrong with the process? Not just the process that resulted in the death of Serenity but the process that we left this Chamber to go do for the minister.

You know, I talked about it earlier today, Madam Chair, again, that one of my great regrets – I don't know how the Member for Calgary-Hays feels about this – is that in the end we actually agreed to do this, not because I didn't want to review the issue but because our better judgment said that if we gave the minister the panel and we gave up on an all-party committee, this is what would happen. In fact, we all met about it, and we said: you know, this is likely what they're going to do, because this is, sadly, what other governments have done. But we realized that it was in the best interests of children in this province and Serenity's family and we had to give it a try, and we gave it a try.

That doesn't take away from some of the solutions that came from the panel. It doesn't at all. I think some of them are positive. I know I see some of my language, some of the ideas that I had, come out in it, and I'm sure the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays does as well. But what I don't see is anything about this: nothing about the issue that we got sent there for, nothing about how it was that it took well over two years for a cause of death to even be determined by the medical examiner, how the police found out about this case on the news because reporters broke it several years after that child's death, how it was that people from the medical community had reported that there was a problem and still nobody got in a truck and drove out there to check on that child.

5:30

I think the most shocking thing that needs to be determined is how a mother of a child who is now in care because that mother is dealing with situations in her life, who has her children in the care of a foster home where they, by all reports, were stable and they were doing well. Then those children are moved, and then that mother reports that “There's a problem with my children,” gives some information that would indicate that there is possibly a problem. And that doesn't mean that for sure there's a problem. I recognize that a family in that type of situation may report something that's not true. This mother certainly did not, but I recognize that that's a possibility. But then still, even after that, nobody got in a car and drove out there and checked on that little girl and her siblings.

An Hon. Member: Take a look.

Mr. Nixon: Just took a look. She would be alive today, Madam Chair, if that simple thing had happened. That's a fact. That doesn't mean that the government or child services are responsible for her death. That's not what I'm saying, but the fact is that if that step was taken, she would be alive today, almost certainly, and we were not allowed to poke through the process to find out why that step wasn't taken. It seems to me that that is the most important question in this entire case.

If you don't put a process in that's public, you will continue to see what happened with the panel which they had to make semipublic because of pressure from the media and political pressure but was really not that public, not as public as it should have been, that's certain. You would see the same process here again where it's not public, and how do we know what's going on? How would we know that we have another case like this and it's going to have a discussion on how you can fix legislation or make things better to make sure this case doesn't happen in the future, that the same process will not be done by the government of the day, to sweep this under the rug and actually not talk about the issue?

When I talk to most of my constituents about this and I let them know we weren't even allowed to ask those simple questions, like how the police did not even know about this, how the police did not have the file – that's a pretty reasonable question. I don't see that as a controversial question. I think that's a pretty reasonable question. Not allowed to ask it, which is why the member is proposing to make sure this is public, to hold this situation and people accountable for it in the future.

It's disappointing that, again, the government continues that process in the panel. I will remind you, Madam Chair, there's a possibility that they won't be the government the next time that this is an issue. I certainly think that at that point they probably would want this to be public so that they could do their job as the Official Opposition or the third party or the independent party or whatever they are at that point. But by doing this now, it's short sighted because they aren't able to do that, but further to that, it just ain't right. This is the right thing to do.

Yes, it will make it harder for the government of the day that is dealing with these tough situations, that are not easy to deal with, certainly. But that doesn't matter. Sometimes we have to make it tough to be able to get things fixed because the sad reality is, Madam Chair, that the way the NDP have approached this, we're going to be back in this Chamber talking about this again. And all of us are going to have to look each other in the eye and go: "You know what? The Chamber failed on this."

And they failed because of the NDP's leadership on this this time. That lands on the NDP's lap. Not the consequences of a child who's killed or something along those lines. You can't put that on them. They don't take those actions. But the fact that we're back here still having to deal with that lands on their lap. Private members across the way should think about that. They should really think about when we agreed to do this panel if this is what they expected the members of their caucus to do, to go in there and hide the issue and refuse to discuss the very issue that we sent there. They should really think about Serenity's family. They should think about that little girl who lost her life, but most of all, they should be thinking about the next little girl that may lose their life or the next little boy because that was our responsibility to get fixed.

The Chair: Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Chair. When we look at the amendment here, I think we all agree on what the intent is here. I don't think the Member for Calgary-Elbow, who participated in the panel meeting in good faith – and we had a chance to sit and actually do the blanket exercise together, which was very moving, to say the least. I think his amendment, A2, is here with good faith. I have to give him credit because I was on one end and he convinced me on another, which was the fact that there are some unintended consequences that might come from the subamendment.

With that being said, we intend to have these meetings public. We want to open these meetings up to public, but the Member for Calgary-Elbow has already outlined some very harsh, unintended consequences. To put a vernacular that the Minister of Service Alberta would say: we're all driving a car and we want to get from point A to point B, but we all have to gas up and we're thinking about gassing up this diesel car with regular gasoline. With that being said, what I would encourage is that members don't support this one but that we work together and we find more clarity in what we want to have public because the Member for Calgary-Elbow has already outlined concerns about the unintended consequences of people not feeling comfortable to come forward, the fact that we might not get people that we do want to hear from at these panel meetings. Let's sit down, and let's have a discussion around how we outline this to be conducted in public but that we have these safeguards in place.

With that being said, I'm not going to support the subamendment, but I'm happy to sit down. I am happy for us to get a bit more thoroughly into how we want this to be done in public because the intent that I have and I believe the Member for Calgary-Elbow has is that this meeting is going to be in public. But if we're too prescriptive with this subamendment, we run the risk of these unintended consequences that he's outlined.

The Chair: Any further comments? Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, I'm disappointed to hear that, Madam Chair. The government was on the cusp of doing the right thing. They were that close to grasping some transparency. You heard my description of the Member for Calgary-Elbow's amendment, where he argued for transparency and then against this amendment at the same time. Apparently, that crazy analysis won the day over on the government side, at least so far. So that's just – we are in bizarro land right now.

I'll tell you what. What the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw just said, about "we'll sit down and negotiate a better process": well, we tried that this time and then we got into the committee meeting and we weren't able to talk about Serenity. You know what? This is the problem. If you go back – and don't take my word for it. I think we'd all agree that Senator Paula Simons did a great job on this. One of the first things she started writing about with children in care, even before the Serenity case but more so during the Serenity case, is that part of the problem is the fact that there's too much hidden from the public, which is why it never gets fixed.

The hon. member now wants to be able to sweep stuff under the carpet. I was ready to heap praise on him here. I told him that I agreed with him before because he was right. Apparently, that inspiration in favour of transparency and accountability went out the window in the last 20 minutes somehow. That's very disappointing that the government has decided to – the government was on the verge of doing the right thing here. You know what? People, no matter who they are, no matter what party they're from, when they make a mistake, it's always tempting to hide the fact that you made a mistake. That's not an NDP problem. That's not a Conservative problem. It's everybody's problem. That's all of our problem. You know what? When something goes wrong, we always say, "Well, how do I fix it without anybody knowing?", but many times – many times – you can't unless you actually talk about it out loud and admit you made a mistake.

Twenty minutes ago the government was there. I guess they had – I don't know what they had – some kind of an epiphany that transparency isn't good, that kids in care aren't deserving of that transparency. You know what? I'm sorry. This is disappointing. This actually matters. This is how you get this fixed. By not doing this, you're feeding the narrative that there's the problem that the government, whoever is the government of the day, will hide the facts. Our government did it. That was wrong. This government is now doing it, and that's wrong, too. Come on, folks.

Mr. Ellis: This is an easy one.

Mr. McIver: This is an easy one. This is a gimme. We should all give our collective heads a shake and say yes. We can't fix the most embarrassing problem unless we're going to talk about it, because if you want to fix it, at some point it has to see the light of day.

5:40

If you're going to leave it to whatever government is in place – and I'm not saying who that's going to be. It could be you folks, could be us, could be some party that hasn't been invented yet. But five years from now, someone will be the government here. Someone will be the minister in charge of children in care, and that minister, he or she from that party, whatever it is, is going to be tempted to say: you know, this will be really embarrassing if we talk about it, so maybe the next minister can fix it; maybe the next government can fix it. That's where you're leaving it, folks. Now it really makes me wonder why you went to all this trouble.

This is like lesson 1. Even before the ministerial panel started, these things had to be more transparent, less hidden, less swept under the carpet, and now the government of the day is choosing more hidden, less transparent, more swept under the carpet, exactly the opposite of what's right, exactly the opposite of what gives us a chance of making it better.

Mr. Ellis: This is easy.

Mr. McIver: This is easy. It's unbelievable that the government, after coming to the right conclusion, was persuaded by an argument that said: let's be more transparent by not operating in public. This is what the government signed on to. The government just said: let's be more transparent by not operating in public.

Well, Madam Chair, you just can't make this up, and you just can't defend the position that the government and the Member for Calgary-Elbow have taken. Ridiculous.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the subamendment?

Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you. You know, I'll be very brief here, Madam Chair. Look, this is very simple: "The proceedings of the review committee must be conducted in public." As I've indicated here to my colleague from Calgary-Hays, this is a gimme. We are trying to do what's in the best interests of children here. Quite frankly, to vote against a very simple and transparent amendment like this would be utterly ridiculous.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the subamendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on subamendment A2-SA2 lost]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect. As members of the Alberta Legislature let us always be mindful of the privilege inherent in our role and the responsibility invested in us as we fulfill our obligations with honesty, integrity, and mutual respect, and may our first concern always be for the good of the people of Alberta.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 22

An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities

The Chair: We are currently on amendment A2. Are there any members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, are we ready for the vote?

[Motion on amendment A2 carried]

The Chair: We are back on the main bill. Any questions, comments, amendments? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, very much. I want to make a few comments initially to preface my remarks on this bill, and then I do have an amendment as well. Actually, what I'll do is that I'll hand the amendment off to our page staff, and they can get it distributed.

I want to start by saying that I'm really pleased with the work that was done by the ministerial panel and by the minister in continuing with this ongoing challenge we have. There can be no doubt that the entire area of child intervention, that the entire area of dealing, you know, with difficult situations of children in care is one of the most challenging that we have in governance. I'm not even going to say government but governance. It is a problem that is not unique to Alberta. It is a problem that is not even unique to Canada.

It is one that is a challenge to us, and I can't help when we have these discussions but think about our former colleague Manmeet Bhullar because when Manmeet was given the responsibility for this file, I still remember vividly – it would have been about five years ago; it would have been December of '13 or maybe January of '14 – being at a meeting where he talked about reviewing every last file where there had been a death of a child in care. I can tell you, Madam Chair, it is a memorable sight to see a 300-pound man weeping at a caucus meeting when he talked about reviewing each and every one of those files.

I am glad that this minister has tackled this issue, and I'd also like to say about the approach on Bill 22 that I've truly appreciated this minister and the approach that she has taken with regard to inviting amendments, inviting discussion to it. I think this bill so far has had some sort of record in terms of the number of amendments that have passed. Minister, that's a very good reflection on you and your department and the approach that has been taken on this piece of legislation, and I can't help but think that that's partly because this minister at one time was a member of TUXIS youth parliament. That has proven to be a very good training ground for young parliamentarians. One thing about TUXIS that was interesting is that it was nonpartisan.

So with those preface remarks, Madam Chair, I'd like to move the following amendment. Dr. Starke to move that Bill 22, An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities, be amended in section 3 in the proposed section 1.1 by adding the following after clause (d). That would be:

(e) the family is the basic unit of society.

Now, Madam Chair, that might not seem like a big deal. That might not seem like a major amendment, and in fact some might say: well, gosh, that seems self-evident to me. But in the feedback I've received on Bill 22, much of it has been very positive from my constituents. I have been especially pleased with the feedback I've received from people who are foster parents or who are formerly foster parents. They're especially glad to see the assistance that will come about with regard to indigenous children because in many cases if the foster parents or the foster family does not have any indigenous cultural background, it is something that they are unable to discuss or even to have a good working relationship with the child in care. So the families that contacted me are very glad to see this.

But I also had a number of people who were very concerned about a change in wording. It's small and it's subtle and you have to really dig to find it, but it is there. If one compares the wording of the old act, in the old act section 2(a) states, "The family is the basic unit of society and its well-being should be supported and preserved." In the new act the proposed wording under section 2(a) is, "The child's family has the primary responsibility for the safety and well-being of the child and the family's well-being should be supported and preserved."

Madam Chair, the second half of the original clause (a) is still there, but the first half has been amended or changed, and the very clear statement that the family is the basic unit of society has been eliminated from the proposed bill. I have a problem with that. A lot of Albertans that I have spoken to have a problem with it as well.

I want to talk a little bit about why it's important that those words appear. Those words are nothing new, Madam Chair. I'm going to quote now from the United Nations universal declaration on human rights, which was passed in 1948, one of the first documents that the United Nations agreed on. Article 16(3) of the universal declaration on human rights states, "The family is the natural and fundamental group unit of society and is entitled to protection by society and the State." That's in the United Nations universal declaration on human rights. While I know that there are in some quarters some people who doubt the activities of the United Nations, who feel that the United Nations is an organization that is no longer relevant in today's world, I think some of the base statements from the United Nations are ones that we still hold to, and some 70 years after this document was ratified, I think that those statements still hold true.

If you're not sure about that, Madam Chair, I'm going to refer to a letter, and this letter was written by Dr. Ruth Halperin-Kaddari. Now, Dr. Halperin-Kaddari is quite a remarkable woman. She was born in 1966. She is an Israeli legal scholar, an international women's rights advocate. She's known for her work in family law, feminist legal theory, women's rights in international law, and women and religion. In addition, she is the vice-chair of the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and has served on that committee since 2006. She was one of the first recipients of the U.S. Secretary of State's international women of courage award for her work on international women's rights in 2007, and she was rated as one of the world's 100 most influential people in gender equity policy just earlier this year in 2018.

I say all these things to establish Dr. Halperin-Kaddari's credentials as an expert in this area. In 2012 Dr. Halperin-Kaddari wrote a letter or made a submission to the recommendation from CEDAW. Now, who is CEDAW? Well, CEDAW is the convention on the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women. It is also a United Nations document. It was adopted in 1979 and has been ratified by 189 of the UN member states. Curiously, it hasn't been ratified by the United States, but it has been ratified by Canada as well as 188 other countries.

In her submission to the 2012 meeting, which was held in Istanbul – and I will table these documents later – she writes:

As stated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the family is the basic unit of society. It is a social and a legal construct, and to some, it is also a religious construct. The family is where all of us human-beings get our very basic notions of interrelationships: the understanding of the meanings of connections, care, as well as roles, duties and responsibilities. It is the place of socialization for children, who become young adults, and in the process they internalize the norms, the social patterns, the various family roles they witnessed in their families. When the family functions on the basis of gender equality and equity, these are the values that shall accompany those who grew in such families throughout their adult lives. When maltreatment, exploitation and inequality characterize the family, they shall characterize their members throughout their lives.

Madam Chair, Dr. Halperin-Kaddari in her opening statement in this letter to the CEDAW convention was very, very clear that the family is indeed the basic unit of society. I think that that is something that we should support, and in fact Article 16(3) of the universal declaration on human rights states that it "is entitled to protection by society and the State." Whether it's by oversight or whether it's something that was designed this way, the new legislation does not contain that statement, and that's a concern to me. That's a concern to many Albertans that I've spoken to.

The amendment I'm proposing is a simple one. The amendment proposes that we reinsert the language that the family is the basic unit of society. While it may seem most logical to put it into section 2, section 2 had already been amended, so when we were working with Legislative Counsel on this, we were unable to amend that section. But then I suggested and they worked with me on this that we add it to the section under guiding principles and that it be added at the bottom of the guiding principles section as:

(e) the family is the basic unit of society.

Madam Chair, to many this will seem like a small change. To many this will seem like this is just a cosmetic thing, but to many Albertans this is an important statement. Families define themselves. Families define who is in them by their own members, and I accept that. I also accept that our families take on many different forms in society today. But I think it is also true and, certainly, the intervention panel will have determined, I think, that where families have discord, where there is family strife or breakup, where children are not raised in a community of love, where they are not raised in a household or in a home where equality and equity and respect are the guiding principles, those children are vulnerable. Those are often the children that require assistance sometimes through a government agency or by other means.

I'm asking my colleagues in the House to consider this amendment. I don't think that this is a hugely significant amendment, perhaps in terms of being very symbolic, though. I think it is very important to many Albertans that I've spoken to. I guess my question is: if you're opposed to this amendment, you need to be able to understand or you need to be able to explain to Albertans why you are opposed. Why are you opposed to including the statement that family is the basic unit of society in legislation that deals with family matters?

With that, Madam Chair, I would urge all of my colleagues to support this amendment, and I look forward to the discussion.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. Rather than focusing on what is not in the act, I want to focus on what is in the act that clearly shows how important our government understands family to be when it comes to supporting the child. Bill 22 is actually called an act for strong families, showing that we clearly want to strengthen families and how they're supported. It puts families at the heart of every single step of the child intervention system, and to suggest otherwise is incorrect. All children should be safe, healthy, and live with their families whenever possible, which is why we're updating the wording in the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, so families are not simply the basic unit but have primary responsibility for the safety and well-being of the child and will help strengthen the focus placed on families. It recognizes that families have the primary role and must be supported and preserved whenever possible.

Bill 22 also broadens our understanding of family and will make sure that family connections are recognized, respected, and considered in every decision. Right now the legislation has no guiding principles, but with this act we are adding new guiding principles, including one which already says and clearly states the importance of family to every child. Along with that, under the updated matters to be considered it clearly states that family has the primary responsibility for every child and that family connections must always be considered when making decisions. This will help ensure that family connections aren't just an item on a potential shopping list of matters to be considered but are going to be embedded in every single court and caseworker decision when it comes to any major decision for a child.

Certainly, when I was meeting with Kee Tas Kee Now Tribal Council last evening to talk about this act and what was coming forward, we all agreed, very much so, that we need to support strong families. Strong families and strong communities are what our children know in order to grow and thrive, which is why we have embedded family throughout the whole, entire legislation, have made sure it's clearly understood that they're important to every child. As we go forward, there will be further amendments expected as we continue to engage with indigenous partners, but all of them will continue to clearly state and understand that.

With that, I do feel that we've fully embedded the importance of family throughout this legislation and will not be supporting this amendment.

The Chair: Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just quickly, I would like to thank the hon. member for his amendment. I completely, completely agree with this amendment. There's a huge difference between recognizing family and actually having a strong statement on family. The hon. member makes a very good point, that that unit, the beautiful thing that this entire bill is about protecting, has to be stated clearly, not just a statement of understanding but a clear statement about recognizing the family unit. I'm very, very happy to support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3? Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just a few comments in response to the minister. I certainly appreciate exactly what is in the bill. I appreciate that "family" is embedded in the bill. I appreciate that the title of the bill includes strengthening families. To me, it is incongruous that you would not support an amendment that further strengthens that statement. The statement that "the family is the basic unit of society" is not some construct that I've pulled out of thin air, it's not some construct that belongs to a specific political party or movement, and I don't think it's an idea or a statement that in any way threatens the integrity of this legislation. But I will tell you that its absence causes significant discomfort to a large group of Albertans, and its absence could be interpreted in ways that I think the minister doesn't intend. Voting this amendment down could also be interpreted in ways that this government, I think, has no intent to do.

The statement that "the family is the basic unit of society" is one that is entirely in alignment with the United Nations universal declaration of human rights, and it is a statement that gives comfort to those for whom the family unit is one that is extremely important. Now, I recognize that there may be differences of opinion with regard to that, but if this legislation is indeed as the minister states – there for the protection, the strengthening of families and to recognize the important role of families – then it should not have any difficulty stating that in the guiding principles. Frankly, I'm very pleased to see that the guiding principles section is included in this bill. I think that's really good, and I would agree with the minister that it's better that it's in the guiding principles than just one of a shopping list of items to be considered. Absolutely, I agree with that.

Why wouldn't this statement be included in those guiding principles? I'm not saying and I'm not advocating the removal of any of the proposed guiding principles. I agree with them. They are all strong statements, and they should be there. But the notion that the statement that "the family is the basic unit of society" should not be in this bill, should not be in the act going forward despite all of the other very good language in the act is troubling to many Albertans. It's troubling to me.

You have to then answer the question: why isn't it there? Why does this government not support including a statement that says that "the family is the basic unit of society" in a bill that they are proposing? I think that's an important question that needs to be answered. It won't need to be answered by me, it won't need to be answered by those who support this amendment because clearly they agree with it, but it will need to be answered if the members opposite decide to vote against this amendment. Certainly, it can be said – and it would be quite accurate – that this government does not support the notion that the family is the basic unit of society. If it did, it would be included in this piece of very important legislation. If it does get voted down, then clearly that's not the opinion of this government, and that is problematic, Madam Chair. It's problematic to many, many Albertans.

With respect, to the minister – and I agree with much of what she has said – what is not in this bill is, in fact, important to Albertans. It is, in fact, significant, especially when one half of what was a very strong statement in the original legislation is deleted from the new proposed act but the other half, the second half, that talks about preserving and protecting the family, is still there. I'm glad that it's still there, but when I saw that the first half of a statement that is basically lifted almost word for word from the United Nations universal declaration of human rights is removed, that's troubling.

I would urge members throughout the House, all of my colleagues, to support this amendment because I think this amendment reflects the will of Albertans. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak to Bill 22 in Committee of the Whole here. I'm going to move an amendment first, and then I would like to speak to it. I will wait until you've received the amendment and tell me to proceed.

Thank you.

9:40

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A4.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I actually rise to move this amendment on behalf of my colleague. I'll read this into the record. I'm actually not sure if I'm allowed to say the name in this one. Am I? No. All right. The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre to move that Bill 22, An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities, be amended in section 17 by striking out the proposed section 105.74 and substituting the following:

Director's duty

105.74(1) When a director becomes aware of

- (a) an incident giving rise to a serious injury to or the death of a child that occurred while the child was receiving intervention services, or
- (b) an incident referred to in section 105.771(1)(b), the director must, as soon as practicable, report the incident to the Minister and the Chair of the Standing Committee of the Legislative Assembly with the mandate to consider matters pertaining to the Minister's ministry.

(2) The Chair must distribute a report received under subsection (1) to all members of the Committee.

(3) Prior to providing a report to the Chair under subsection (1), the director shall remove information from the report that reveals or could reveal the identity of the child.

Madam Chair, I move this amendment out of memory, to be honest. When this issue first came to this Assembly a couple of years ago, at that time the then minister of human services – the process was to report to him – was neglectful in his duties and refused to act on the report that was provided to him by the office of the Child and Youth Advocate. We know that. The government eventually did respond, and now we have the Ministry of Children's Services and the Ministry of Community and Social Services, which I think is a good move because of the manner in which the minister mishandled this file so completely, which was absolutely disgraceful at that time. For so many of us it became such an emotional issue in this Assembly and for members of the public to hear of the disgusting abuse that happened to Serenity and the complete inaction from the government and the minister of human services at that time, in particular.

This amendment would make it mandatory that any incident involving the death of a child is reported to the minister but also, as a safeguard, to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities, Madam Chair. There's a safeguard in there where the identity of the child would not be revealed to members of the committee for reasons of liability, particularly. The name of the child is not necessarily relevant in that case. This will allow for members of this Assembly to hold the government of the day to account. This is important no matter who the government is. We hopefully will not see a situation again where the minister shows such disrespect not only to the child and their family but to this Assembly.

Madam Chair, we know that when the report of little Serenity was tabled in this Assembly and all members had the opportunity to read what had happened to her, the ministry was still refusing to give reports to the police, that they needed to conduct their investigation. This whole thing was just an absolute bungled mess. That's why we're here today with part 1 of 3, is my understanding, of the work that came out of the panel. Also, my understanding is that there were no conversations allowed to happen about what did happen to little Serenity, which is extremely unfortunate.

But we have a responsibility and a duty in this Assembly to make sure that that never happens again, that the complete mismanagement of this file and this case never happens again. This is a layer of accountability that I'm sure all members of this Assembly can vote for. Madam Chair, all members of this Assembly have to vote for this if we are truly concerned about not allowing this to happen again in this Assembly. This layer of accountability is important for the work that this Assembly needs to do, the minister more specifically. We know that committee can be a good place to flesh these things out, and if there's mandatory notification to the committee, that is certainly what I suspect will happen. It's the right thing to do.

With that, this amendment is moved, and I would just remind all members of this House of what did happen in this Assembly many years ago when the then minister of human services refused to act and work with the RCMP in their investigation. This is why this amendment is so important here today.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again, thank you for the opportunity to speak to this. I agree with the hon. Member for Airdrie. The opportunity to be able to flesh out ideas and talk about things in Committee of the Whole is incredibly important to the process of how it is that you carve out legislation. You know, if you're able to bring forward an amendment that offers really sound advice as to procedure – and to some degree the amendment that the hon. member is bringing forward is procedural in the sense that it adds an accountability piece to make sure, as she has said, that this doesn't happen again.

You know, I often go back to the article that Paula Simons wrote, the critical report on four-year-old Serenity. The reason I do this, Madam Chair, is because it's imperative that we don't forget. The emotions and everything that we went through, that this entire House went through as we went through this process is something that, as difficult as it was, is a necessary visceral reaction that you have not only to this situation but to really, really wanting to do something solid to make sure that that doesn't happen again.

I had mentioned the last time that I was in the House that just even recently a young man named Dakota actually died in care. He was actually hit by a vehicle. To a large degree, what was happening in his life – by the time he was 14, he had been moved 19 times. He actually died this year. He was living with a parent that, unfortunately, had succumbed to his addictions as well. Dakota was in and out of homes; he was in and out of addiction. There was just never a place that was able to handle the very complex needs of this child and, moreover, to offer that loving familial support. We had mentioned in an earlier debate how important that family unit is. When a child is moved along the system like that, you can't even imagine – I personally can't imagine it, Madam Chair.

Paula Simons actually talked about this in her article, about how important it was to know who Serenity was to be able to attribute the horrors that this child went through, actually knowing who this child was. She's not just an apparition or something that we made up. She was a real human being. It was interesting to read what the minister had mentioned, that it was an unfortunate error. I'm grateful that the minister did actually take responsibility on behalf of the government. That's not an easy thing to do in this situation.

I think that the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays was saying this yesterday in one of his speeches, that it's really difficult to acknowledge that something has gone wrong, especially when it includes the death of a child, especially when that's on us, right? Even though some of us were not in governance at that time, Madam Chair, now that we're here, we take on that responsibility with the unimaginable hope that we can actually change enough things so that no child would ever have to suffer like this again.

It's amendments like this one from the hon. Member for Airdrie that help to add that level of accountability to this legislation. It would be very, very difficult to understand why the government would disagree with this amendment. When such a horrible thing happens and the answer is that it was an unfortunate error, I think we need to take a look at – it's not just language. It's about acknowledging the loss of this life and the loss of this life while that child was in state care, acknowledging our responsibility to the children that are in state care and actually looking at all of the fundamental pieces of this legislation.

There are some really good pieces in this legislation, but we have pointed out some really fundamental things that bring it around to helping us to understand how it is that we build supports around these munchkins. You can talk about it lots. There's lots of great language in here around what we should do. But panels like this and our responsibility need teeth. They need actionable items that have teeth and that dig into it and that actually work to protect these kids and, moreover, to potentially put those families back together.

We all talk in this House, Madam Chair, about family-centred care. We talk about family-centred care until family-centred care isn't important all of a sudden. It depends on who's talking about it and how it's being used. Well, it is important. When we talk about kinship specifically, there's a piece in the legislation that the band council needs to be notified when a child goes to court. Part of the reason for that is because of the way that First Nations families work within the nation. It's a much larger piece; it's not just the family expanse.

It's actually very similar in my culture in that way. We talk to our grandparents, and we talk to our aunts. We talk to everybody when we're making decisions. I know my sons do. It's a huge family discussion when something is happening in our house. It might drive you crazy, but it's what we know and what we love – right? – about our family. My mother-in-law is actually an amazing woman. She's not able to read and write in any language, and she's the smartest woman I know. Her financial ability is probably beyond mine, so even when I'm making very, very difficult financial decisions, I talk to my in-laws all the time, actually. The reason for that is because of the family structure that we have. I really can honour and respect the complexity of the differences between cultures and the cultural provisions that have been put in.

But what we always have to come back to, Madam Chair, and what I think the government forgets is that this is a safety issue as well. We're not in this discussion because we're just talking about everyday families. We're talking about massive trauma. We're talking about incredible, horrible circumstances from which these children make their way to us. Why would we not want to strengthen the legislation to make sure that those kids have every bit of protection possible, to make sure that everything that we do is about helping them overcome things that probably many of us have never, ever had to endure. It's about helping them to potentially end up back with their families or what they would consider family.

I would like to thank the hon. Member for Airdrie for this excellent amendment, and I would hope that the government would vote in favour. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. Absolutely, you know, looking at the intent of this amendment, it is emphasizing the importance of accountability and transparency around the child intervention system, something that I agree with very, very strongly. I do want to look at this, though, within the context of the full suite of changes that are being made in terms of the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, in terms of not just this act but also, you know, Bill 18 in the previous sitting of the House around changes.

This section that we're looking at around the director's duties, section 17, previously required reporting to the council for quality assurance. Based on the recommendations of the panel, in Bill 18 the council for quality assurance was removed, and in fact we required, as a result of that, the office of the Child and Youth Advocate to investigate every single death. In fact, throughout the act there are mandated requirements to report, you know, all of these incidents immediately to the office of the Child and Youth Advocate. I certainly don't think the reporting should just be to the minister – we do need to do it – but we are reporting these incidents broadly to the Child and Youth Advocate.

Also, if you turn to section 22 of the bill on public reporting of serious injury, it actually requires the minister to “publicly report . . . an incident giving rise to the serious injury to or death of a child that occurred while the child was receiving intervention services . . . within 4 business days after being notified of the incident.” You know, Madam Chair, this goes beyond reporting it to a Legislative Assembly committee. It's about making sure that the Child and Youth Advocate, who investigates these incidents and can provide recommendations on them, knows as soon as possible, making sure that the public knows broadly, which includes, obviously, that every member of this House would have access to that same information. This is just ensuring, of course, that the minister who is accountable for the department also knows, on top of that.

You know, I really don't see our legislative committees as review committees. That's not necessarily their role. In terms of incidents, absolutely we need to look at the big picture in terms of what's happening in terms of reviewing the work that needs to be done, but that role falls very much to the Child and Youth Advocate. Individually we can look at that information, but I feel that at this point in time around accountability and transparency we've done great work moving forward to ensure that broadly the advocate as well as the public are notified of these.

I feel that we've already addressed accountability and transparency. I don't feel that a legislative committee is necessarily an addition to that, so I won't be supporting the amendment.

The Chair: Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I would like to just make a point of clarification. To the minister: thank you so much. We understand on this side of the House the role of the advocate. It's a completely different piece. I want to make sure that we're talking about the same thing here.

In the legislation the child advocate is legislated to do exactly what the minister said. I completely agree with that. We're not talking about that, though. We're talking about the standing committee and actually about the public knowledge that goes out. As you know with what happened with Serenity, Madam Chair, we didn't find out until the media brought it forward. This is about providing accountability to the standing committee that has been put together, you know, under the auspices of this government to be able to speak of and talk to the way that we tweak and alter legislation in order to make sure transparency is there. This is completely different.

Just to clarify, I didn't mention anything about the advocate. I understand the role of the advocate. All of us on this side understand the role of the advocate. We understand the legislative duties of the advocate. In fact, we've advocated on behalf of the advocate because all of a sudden the entire section of this went towards the advocate. Everything changed when that committee was disbanded and the advocate was legislated to stand in and bring forward all this information. We understand that.

This is a completely different piece of the legislation. Transparency and accountability come at many levels. The advocate is obviously going to do that, but by the time the public or even the opposition has the opportunity to review, see, or otherwise comment on files, especially when it only comes after the death or serious injury of a child, you can imagine the difficulty that the opposition would have in trying to amend or change or help out with legislation once this has already happened.

What we're asking for is another level of accountability. Just to clarify, we understand the role of the office of the Child and Youth Advocate. We want to clarify the role of the committee and the absolute necessity for that level of transparency within the process of making sure, as the hon. Member for Airdrie said, that this never happens again.

This has to be a common goal in this House. There's absolutely no point of this legislation or any legislation like this if the goal is not, Madam Chair, to make sure that no child ever undergoes what these children and, especially in this case, Serenity have undergone.

Please, I would beg that the government look at this as an opportunity to be able to report. Again, there's absolutely no way that extra reporting in this particular situation can harm the situation. It would only be helpful. I would ask that the minister relook at her no vote on this amendment and please vote yes.

Bill 23

An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta

The Chair: Moving on, we're on Bill 23, An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta, considering amendment A2. Any comments on amendment A2? The hon. Member for . . .

Mr. Cooper: Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. I know it's a little surprising to me, Madam Chair, that one could be remiss to remember the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. But I digress, and I appreciate the great work that you're doing in the chair this morning.

I'd just like to take a couple of quick seconds, Madam Chair, to sort of frame up where we're at. I know it's been a few days since we've been chatting about amendment A2, a good, solid amendment, I might add. I just think that I will remind the House about why this is important, and then I expect that some of my colleagues will be able to provide some context as to why it's important that we move forward with such a reasonable amendment.

You'll know, Madam Chair, that this particular amendment makes clear what third-party groups can and cannot do and how donations may or may not be attributed to their members. And you'll know that in this particular piece of legislation it creates an exemption for how non-union organizations would be treated compared to how union or employee organizations would be treated. While I heard from the minister at the beginning of this week that this is the exact same wording that is used in the provincial legislation, I just might like to add that during the debate on the provincial legislation it was highlighted, too, that this is not the best path forward, that creating one set of rules for unions and employee organizations and a separate set for others doesn't create fairness. It doesn't create openness. It doesn't create transparency and, in fact, allows unions to continue to collect mandatory dues and make a contribution or spend those dues without informing those who paid those dues as to what the usage of those dues would be.

We on this side of the House don't believe that that is appropriate. I certainly know that in the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills this is a topic of discussion that has come up around what unions are allowed to do, and not just, I might add, from folks that might have voted for the right-of-centre side of the spectrum but from some union members even who – I'll correct that, because in this situation it wasn't specifically a union member. It was a couple of individuals of an employee organization expressing some concern around their mandatory fees being used to support a cause or a political movement that doesn't align with their particular political stripes. They had some concerns about this. We have some concerns about it.

This amendment will ensure that all organizations are treated equally. I think it's important that we note that it doesn't prevent the union or the employee organization or the non-union from actually contributing. It just requires them to inform their members to do it honourably, to do it in an open and transparent process, and to not take money from those who might not like to support, say, the NDP or perhaps support the conservative movement in the form of third-party advertising.

So that is where we're at. I know it's a bit of a refresher for folks. I look forward to hearing from some of my colleagues on some of their concerns around this particular piece of legislation. I know that the Member for Livingstone-Macleod, who is an old sage, you might say, providing lots of wisdom and insight into legislation over a long period of time, has some comments as well as the young man from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, who believes in the democratic process and making sure that it's strong and robust.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you for the chance to provide some clarity on this. I'm not able to support the amendment that the hon. member has put forward as it would create a significant inconsistency between the Local Authorities Election Act and legislation governing provincial elections. The current proposed wording for section 170 in Bill 23 is essentially the same language used in section 44.3 of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. This alignment ensures that we have essentially the same set of rules in both provincial and municipal elections when it comes to contributions and disclosure of third parties and those that make contributions to them. By drafting section 170 in this way, it not only ensures consistency but reduces the risk of confusion between provincial and municipal elections and how third-party contributions are treated.

With specific respect to the member's stated concerns about the treatment of trade unions, I should clarify that the legislation will continue to treat trade unions and corporations in the same way when contributing to a third party. Corporations are not required to attribute contributions to the names of employees of the corporation, just as trade unions do not have to attribute contributions to individual members of the trade union. This recognizes that there is a significant difference between large organizations like corporations and trade unions and smaller, more informally structured groups. Groups tend to be a lot smaller than trade unions and are more ad hoc in nature, meaning that they are less permanent. However, recognizing that trade unions and employee organizations can be substantial in size and in their ability to contribute, this section had built-in clarity surrounding how trade unions may contribute to a third party.

In relation to the Alberta Labour Relations Code trade unions are treated more in accordance with corporations, meaning that they can be prosecuted, be sued, or are capable of suing. In contrast, groups are not defined in the same way. Members of groups are liable and able to be prosecuted, sued, or are capable of suing. This means that groups and trade unions are distinct entities from a legal context.

Bill 23 also recognizes these differences in the way it addresses offences that could be committed by various entities. Offences are distinct and different between an individual who has committed an offence versus an offence committed by a trade union, employee organization, or a corporation.

Based on all of the above and, in particular, in recognition of the need for consistency between legislation governing local elections and legislation governing provincial elections, again, I cannot support the proposed amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you. I appreciate the minister's comments. I just find them very ironic. You'll know, Madam Chair, that amendment A1 was to create similarities between the rules at the municipal level and the provincial level in terms of the requirement to disclose the amount of a donation. The provincial rules say that any donation over $250 needs to be disclosed, so we suggested that this is the best path forward. Yet the minister chose to leave the amount at $50. It wasn't because we had an ideological bent towards $50 or $250; it was just to create a certainty and similarity in the legislation. And he said that no, he's not willing to do that. Now he's saying: no, I'm not willing to make changes to this because it will create uncertainty in the legislation and discrepancies between the municipal elections act and the Election Act.

So I don't know. Is it an apple and an apple or an apple and an orange? When is an apple an apple, and when is an orange an orange? I don't quite understand the minister's logic or reasoning here. I think it's unfortunate because, in fact, both are good amendments, and he's picking when he wants consistencies and when he's comfortable with inconsistencies, and I don't think that that is a net positive for the legislation on the whole, but I'll let some of my colleagues speak more to the other points.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, good morning and thank you, Madam Chair. Good morning, everyone. It's an interesting debate that we're having here on the local elections changes for local councillors and so on and so forth for municipalities this morning. That's for sure.

As we went through the bill, we found an awful lot that was significant in there. And as we all know, throughout municipal elections, particularly in the larger urban centres, you see an awful lot of feistiness and you see an awful lot of unfortunate situations that some of the other members today may be speaking of beyond this particular amendment in terms of polling station issues and so on.

I would just like to readdress what's been discussed so far this morning a little bit by going over some of the stuff that has come to light when we were researching this. Just to remind everyone, what we're talking about here with this amendment, A2, is that we're going to be striking out in clause (b), under section 170, the words beginning with "other" that say "other than a trade union or employee organization," and also we're going to be striking out clause (c). So there seems to be a bit of a loophole in this little set of circumstances that we're discussing, from the manner in which it's been presented.

You know, section 56 in the proposed section 170 of the act outlines the rules for groups who wish to make an advertising contribution to the party. What is a group? You know, why this "group" is being separated out is a concern. I note, too, that if I go back into the earlier part of the briefing that we had on this, one of the things we were trying to do overall in these changes to election acts and the way they're working is to disallow corporate and union donations, yet here we have, it seems, a way for the unions to be involved. It doesn't make sense to me.

Anyway, the definition for group is important to note here, I think. It's section 162(1)(h), on page 55, which defines a group as an unincorporated group of individuals or corporations acting in consort for a common purpose and includes . . . and includes . . . a trade union and an employee organization or any combination of individuals, corporations, trade unions or employee organizations.

Now, that is what is in the definition in the act. I didn't write that myself.

It seems that Bill 23 is proposing that a group can donate to a third-party advertiser only, one, if its members donated the money to the group voluntarily and two, if the group made it clear to its members that the money it was collecting was being donated to a third-party advertiser and if the names of the members who made the payments and the amount that they paid each are recorded by the group and provided to the third-party advertiser.

So, you know, our amendment that we're proposing here would remove the exemptions for unions that allow them to donate money to third-party advertisers that was not collected explicitly for that purpose; in other words, union dues. Section 170 says that groups that are not unions or employee organizations can only donate to a third-party funds that were collected from its members voluntarily explicitly for the purpose of donating and that are attributed to the member from which the funds came. It seems like it is exempting unions and employee organizations from any of these restrictions.

On one side you've got one set of arguments. On the other side you've got another set of arguments within the same bill. This exemption, if left unchanged, would allow the unions to donate money to third-party advertisers that was collected from its members that the union told them was for, actually, possibly other purposes. It's disappointing to see this going in this direction, and what we're doing with our amendment is trying to clean that up, taking out the words in clause (b) and striking out "other than a trade union or employee organization" and closing a loophole.

Those are my comments at this stage, Madam Chair. I look forward to hearing what else may be brought up from others here at this time.

Thank you.

The Chair: Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you, Madam Chair, for the opportunity to speak here today on this amendment to Bill 23. I concur with my two former colleagues that this is a very important amendment because . . .

An Hon. Member: Former?

Mr. Dreeshen: My colleagues that went before me. Sorry.

I do believe that it does make a very important change to this piece of legislation. I do find it interesting, Madam Chair, that the minister and the NDP just couldn't help themselves. They had to create a backdoor, a trap door, exemption for unions to be able to have their hidden union money funnel in through to PACs. Really, it's astonishing. It's almost like they thought they could get away with it, and I think that it's great that we're actually calling this out. I hope the media actually does a good job in reporting this because unions should only be allowed to contribute to these third-party advertisers with consent from their membership. It makes sense that you would have to actually inform the unions' members that they would use this money for partisan purposes. I think it's very important not just for the benefit of democracy in Alberta but also to actually have unions' members and their rights protected through this legislation so that this sort of hidden union money isn't allowed in municipal elections.

Again, I do believe that the minister thought he could get away with it, but I think it's good that we have this amendment. I'm surprised the minister said that he wouldn't support this amendment.

Madam Chair, if you'd allow me, Jerry Dias, the president of Unifor, a couple of weeks ago came out with some very heavy partisan attacks against Conservatives and to say that we will stop Conservatives. It's interesting that here you have a union boss who goes out of his way to engage in hyperpartisan attacks and then weeks later the Oshawa plant closes and 2,500 of his members are going to lose their job. To me it's unbelievable when you allow unions to be left unchecked. They're not actually going to work in the best interests of their members, especially with this loophole in this piece of legislation allowing union bosses to be able to funnel money in through to third-party advertisers.

I think this is a very good amendment that blocks that abuse from happening from unions, and I do hope that the minister would actually consider this amendment. Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Chair. A couple of brief comments. I will not be supporting this amendment simply because the opposition just doesn't understand. It's that simple. It's remarkable that all of a sudden they care about union members and their dues. You know, they haven't cared about them before. I mean, all of a sudden there's this sympathy for union members. It's not true what they're saying, that union members don't know where their dues are going. There are monthly meetings held. There are strict financials. They know where the money is going.

The other thing is that most unions do not support political parties. They support ideas, good ideas, platforms, which is why they just don't support our friends on the other side. It's that simple. It is that simple. It's too bad that sometimes the opposition wouldn't stand up for other people that even aren't in unions, workers that aren't in unions. I mean, we've seen, you know, maybe corporations who do donate a lot of money to parties. Well, maybe all that money could've gone to those pensions that they failed to pay sometimes, right? There are a million examples. You've got an old one, Nortel, and Sears recently, where they're just not paying pensions but maybe that money is going into political donations.

I'm not sure about that, but I can't support this amendment because the opposition just can't come up with a strong enough argument to support it. I think the minister has done a good job of explaining this to them, and I'm trying to help them along, too. I will say that I will not be supporting this amendment and let's move on. If you have more amendments, bring them on.

Thank you.

The Chair: Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just in a quick response to the Member for Calgary-Klein, who just recently said that "unions do not support political parties." I find that extremely rich when the Alberta Federation of Labour, actually, in the New Democratic Party's constitution have seats. It's written into their constitution that they're actually part of the New Democratic Party. I find it fascinating that the NDP would stand in this Assembly and say that "unions do not support political parties." It's fascinating. I just thought that I needed to point out that inaccuracy in the member's statement.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak to the amendment by the hon. Member for . . .

Mr. Cooper: The outstanding . . .

Mr. Smith: . . . the outstanding constituency of Olds-Rimbey . . .

Mr. Cooper: Didsbury. Whoa, whoa, whoa.

Mr. Smith: Olds-Didsbury and . . .

Mr. Cooper: Three Hills.

Mr. Smith: Three Hills. Thank you very much. I know.

Mr. Cooper: He doesn't even care about me.

Mr. Smith: Madam Chair, I may have just burned a few bridges with that introduction there. I'm sorry. I apologize to the member.

I wanted to rise to speak about a gentleman that has been in contact with me over the last two or three weeks who has raised this very concern to me. We'll call this man John. John has some concerns about the fact that union dues, which are mandatory, are often used to promote issues that should be voluntarily supported by individuals rather than mandatory through the dues.

There are often times, we understand, when unions and other organizations are made up of a collection of people. That's the way it was when I was in the ATA as a professional organization. There were people of all political stripes within the ATA, some them Conservatives like myself and some that would have felt more comfortable in, say, the NDP. We all have different political points of view in these organizations, and for an organization to take a mandatory due and then use it for a political purpose which not all of its members would share seems to me to not pass the test of fairness. He has brought this to my attention, and he is very concerned about the fact that dues are being used for hyperpartisan and hyperpolitical positions and that that should not be legal.

This amendment addresses that. This amendment tries to level the playing field and make sure that the same rules would apply for those that belong to unions and other professional organizations and those that do not.

I think that most Albertans, when they look at this issue, can understand that there's a discrepancy here that this amendment addresses, and I think that it should receive the support of this House. Thank you, Madam Chair.

Mr. Hunter: Madam Chair, in listening to the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon – I got that right – I heard about John, as he was describing this guy. There was another situation that I had heard about from another union member, a new union member. He was newly inducted into a union. Because of being concerned about getting in trouble with the union, he's asked that I do not share his name. I won't call him John. We'll call him Pat.

Pat stated that when he joined the union, he had to sign two papers. The first paper, the first, I guess, contractual agreement, was that the union could use those dues to do what they felt fit, basically allowing them to decide where those union dues were going to go. The second was that he would pay union dues. The interesting thing that he thought was: why do they need to have two of these forms that they were actually signing? He felt that this was completely wrong and unacceptable and that they were overstepping the purpose of the union.

There's nobody in this House, I believe, that believes that unions do not have a purpose. They do have a purpose. They serve a very good purpose, as a check and balance on the private sector and governments that want to take advantage of them. They have to have that right to be able to unionize, and if they so choose, then that is something that they should have the right to do.

However, in this situation we are seeing, once again, a scenario where the government is stacking the deck in favour of those who are giving them a monetary reimbursement or a monetary instrument to be able to help them fight and win an election. In this situation, Madam Chair, this is the government that has proposed that they are going to take dark money out of elections. This is the government that said that they want to take corporate and union donations out. Yet they are making a provision here that would allow them to circumvent the complete narrative that they have presented to Albertans.

It is completely disingenuous, Madam Chair, and it's amazing that they would actually stand in this House, once we've caught them and brought it out, and try to say that this is absolutely not happening. It is plain that this is exactly what they're doing, and we're seeing evidence from union members that are actually sending us some letters saying, you know: we're very concerned about this.

Now, if it's the purpose of the unions to be able to advocate for their members, then do that. But if it's the purpose of the unions to act as a PAC, then let's at least be honest about it with Albertans: "You know what? We're a hundred per cent behind the NDP" or whatever left-leaning political organization that they are supporting. But be honest with Albertans about it so at least Albertans know what playing field they're dealing with, because every time that they argue the fact that big business is buying elections and point the finger there, three are pointing back at them. This is an optics problem that they're going to have to deal with.

I think that this is a reasonable amendment. I think that the hon. member has dug deep into this, has consulted with a wide variety of people, and this is the concern that has been brought forward. I think that this is the natural place that we can talk about this and bring this to light. If we so quickly say that there is nothing to it, once again we're seeing this arrogance that has cost the past government the government. I think it's folly – complete folly – for this government to do this after, basically, three and a half years.

I would be very much in favour of voting for this, and I would recommend that all of our members vote in favour of this. I thank the member for his diligent work, for being able to bring this to light, and for helping me to understand this situation.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment? Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you. Just another quick question, Madam Chair, and it might actually sway some votes on this amendment, hopefully. I just checked. The AFL is actually an association of unions, so the Member for Calgary-Klein can feel good about that. But I just wanted to ask the minister if he could at least tell us: in his consultations did union leaders from the AFL actually ask for this exemption to be put in the piece of legislation?

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

The Chair: Back on the main bill. Are there any comments, questions, or amendments? Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 23 this morning, An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta. I think, you know, the minister means well by this bill. I know he's a good guy and well respected amongst all the municipal councillors that I talk to. I think he's doing a good job. It's just that I find myself in this job as opposition. I guess it's my job to oppose government bills, so I'm going to have some comments. My comments are around the fact that I spent 15 years as a municipal councillor. I've been on that side of it, so I see this side, and I can tell this House that municipal politics, at least rural municipal politics, is nonpartisan. There's no partisan in it, so I have some concerns about this.

Talking to all my colleagues in municipal politics – I visit with them lots as part of my job – I've never heard concerns from them asking for these kinds of big changes in local elections, so I'm a little surprised at some of the things in this bill. You know, the minister, when he introduced it, said that he had support of RMA and AUMA. I'm sure he probably did talk to the chairs or whatever and they give him support. But I hope he didn't show them the bill before he introduced it. I'm sure he didn't. He probably just assured them that it was all good and it was a good thing for them, so of course they're going to support it. But, I mean, the bill has 89 pages in it. I don't think he went through all 89 pages with RMA or AUMA to explain the changes there. If he says that it's good, they'd believe him and say: yeah; we'll support you on it. But the devil is always in the details, and in 89 pages there's a lot of details.

I've talked to my mayor of Grande Prairie. I've talked to lots and lots of rural councillors at the RMA last week. I know a lot of them, and none of them that I talked to knew the rules in the bill. Most of them didn't even read anything about the bill, quite frankly. My mayor did, but he didn't know the details, and probably he shouldn't because he wouldn't have been shown the bill before. But they were all surprised when they heard some of the things in there, like nonresidency and vouching for as many people as you want. They all said, "That's not in there." And I said: "Yeah. Well, read the bill." Of course, none of them had.

So those are some of my concerns. They didn't agree with some of those things once they heard the details, and that's just a few of them.

One of the other things in this bill is moving municipal elections financing into PACs and unions like this government has done with the provincial elections. Now they're forcing it into municipal elections. I don't really agree with that, and I'm a little confused by this government. Like, a month ago they were saying how bad PACs were and they're no good. They say: well, we took big money out of politics. Well, I'm afraid they didn't. They just drove it underground. We don't see where it is in all these PACs and unions. Before maybe there was money there, but it was all accounted for and shown and reported and everybody knew where it was. Now I can tell you that you've got no idea where some of these PACs are getting their money from. Now they're trying to force that on municipal elections.

So does the government like PACs or do they not, and if they don't like them, why are they forcing them on municipal elections? I'm a little confused about that. I know that just, like, a month ago they were saying in this House how bad PACs were for it. I think forcing money underground so we don't know what's going on hasn't helped the transparency of either our provincial or now municipal elections. I'm not sure if this is the way for this government to have unions now influence municipal elections, whether the unions can get people on our big city councils to affect how those councils are going to vote and treat unions. I'm just not sure why. That's my suspicion.

The financial disclosure statements: I mean, it's all good to bring in all these more rules and make it harder. You know, there's a big difference between small rural councils and big city councils, and I know that in a big city maybe more rules are needed. But in the small rurals, most of it – I went through five elections there, five years, and never raised any money. It was all self-funded. Now all of a sudden it's going to make it harder to do that, all the rules and reporting. I saw it the last time that some good people got disqualified because they didn't follow the rules. Of course, there are a lot of rules and they don't understand them all and didn't deliberately do anything wrong, but they misstepped on some technicalities, and they were kicked out.

I just hope that passing this legislation and the way they're going – maybe we need to separate between small rurals and big cities. I'm not going to talk about big cities, but I just hope we're not taking people that live in their communities and really care what happens in their communities and are just good, solid people in their communities – I hope we're not chasing them away from running and we're going to build our councils out of lawyers and accountants because they're the only ones that can figure out these technical, crazy rules. Somebody else isn't going to bother with that stuff and just say: the heck with it. I know that back when I first got into municipal politics as a farmer, I wouldn't have. I would have just said, "To heck with it" and wouldn't have run. I just hope we're not doing that. That's why I have some concerns about this legislation.

You know, we say, "Well, we want to mirror the rules in provincial and municipal elections; we want everything to be the same," but then we've already heard in some amendments that they're not the same. Like, if we're going to make them the same, why not give municipalities the ability to give tax deductions? That's the way it is provincially. You want to make it the same but, no, not quite the same; you want to keep separate rules.

You know, these are just some of my concerns generally. I just think we should have a difference between small rurals and big cities. I'm not necessarily against the bill. There are a lot of good things in here, whether you vote for it or against it. I'm just not sure why we have all this stuff in the bill. I'm suspicious of it, and so are some of my municipal colleagues.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak this morning, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to my colleague from Grande Prairie-Wapiti. I know that his commitment to public service has been long standing. I think that between his municipal service and his service now in this House it's 26 years if I'm not mistaken. You know, anyone that has given their life's work to our province, whether it's at the municipal level or the provincial level, I believe deserves our thanks. Unfortunately for this place, that hon. member is not going to see too many more days here in this Chamber.

On behalf of the good people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills I personally would like to thank him. I know that I have learned a significant amount about what it is to serve the public, about what it is to serve this Chamber, about what it is to interact in the legislative precinct, you know, to act in all aspects of this job with integrity and honesty, and if there is anyone who has been a reflection of that over his whole career, it is the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

I actually hadn't planned on thanking him, but I do believe that he really does deserve our thanks. I can see him shaking his head back there. I know how uncomfortable this sort of public recognition of such an incredible commitment to our province makes him. That's just the kind of person that he is. He doesn't have a desire to have recognition for his commitment to the province. He really just wants to leave the place better than he found it, and I really, truly believe that that's exactly what he's done. So from the bottom of my heart thanks so much for everything and for what you've taught me and all of the work that you've done.

I hope that as an Assembly, as we get closer to the end of this term, we'll have an opportunity to recognize in a more formal way some of those that have done an incredible amount of service to this place.

Having said that, let's get back to the business of the morning, and that is this bill, Bill 23, that my colleague from across the way has proposed, the act to save local democracy or whatever it's called, something close to that. I would like to just propose an amendment briefly this morning on that, and I'll just wait for your command.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A3.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Cooper: Excellent. Well, thank you, Chair. I move that Bill 23, An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta, be amended in section 51 in the proposed section 147.34 by striking out "election expenses" and substituting "campaign expenses."

Now, Madam Chair, I believe that this should be a fairly easy amendment for us to deal with this morning. It appears that there was a small oversight in the drafting of the legislation. You know, I know that I have jested with the member across on how he talked about his consultation and how the bill is so perfect. Then he had to amend his own piece of legislation because it turns out that it wasn't perfect. I think that in the name of due diligence and consistent study we should make sure that the legislation accurately reflects the intention of the minister, which, in fact, from time to time is the main goal of the Official Opposition.

I believe that on page 41, section 147.34, where it discusses campaign expense limits being left to the regulations, the challenge is that it uses the words "election expenses" and not "campaign expenses" in the text of the subsection. As such, election expenses are not actually defined anywhere in the bill or, in fact, in the Local Authorities Election Act. It would create some significant uncertainty. I know that we've heard from the minister this morning that sometimes he's okay with inconsistencies between the municipal elections act and the Local Authorities Election Act, and other times he's not. But it's my sense that the minister, too, recognizes that this is a small oversight, and it would make good sense that we correct this particular section.

You'll know, Madam Chair, that on page 34 the proposed section 147.1(1)(a) does in fact define a campaign expense as any expense incurred, or non-monetary contribution received, by a candidate to the extent that the property or service that the expense was incurred for, or that was received as a non-monetary contribution, is used to directly promote or oppose a candidate during a campaign period, and includes an expense incurred for, or a non-monetary contribution . . .

The definition of campaign expense is clear; for election expense it is not. As such, I believe that we should go ahead and make this amendment quickly. We're going to have some significant discussion around these campaign expenses later on in some of the amendment process, but I think that for now it would make very good sense for us to go ahead and pass this amendment so as not to continue to create uncertainty for those looking for clarity around the rules of what is or what isn't a campaign expense and not, in fact, an election expense.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I will never claim to be perfect, but if the member keeps saying that, my face might be as red as the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti's when he, deservedly so, got kudos for his long service.

The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and I like to give each other a hard time and rib each other from time to time. Though we might not agree on much, Madam Chair, even a broken clock is right twice a day. In that spirit, I do believe that this is a good amendment. He's not even listening to my good jokes. Come on.

Mr. Smith: That's okay. I appreciate it.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Member.

We believe that election expenses and campaign expenses were basically the same thing, but the member raises a good point that "election expenses" is not defined in the act whereas "campaign expenses" is defined as a term under section 147.1(1)(a). This amendment would add consistency and clarity to the act, and I thank the hon. member for bringing it forward. I urge all members to support this amendment.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3?

Seeing none, we'll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A3 carried]

Larivee: At this time I would like to move that we adjourn debate on Bill 23.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 29 Public Service Employee Relations Amendment Act, 2018

The Chair: Any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you. It's a pleasure to be able to rise and speak to Bill 29, the Public Service Employee Relations Amendment Act, 2018. We've had a few good discussions, I believe, on this bill, and I had indicated earlier that I would be bringing forward amendments to this bill. What I would like to do, Madam Chair, is that I would like to provide you with an amendment at this time. I have the requisite number of copies.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A1.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. For this amendment I move that Bill 29, Public Service Employee Relations Amendment Act, 2018, be amended in section 8(1) by striking out "June 1, 2019" and substituting "December 31, 2019." This is, I think, a common-sense amendment that addresses the concern that the universities have provided in their written submissions to this government as they were crafting this bill. The submission and the concern that they had brought forward is that they needed to have more than six months in order to be able to implement for HR departments, for legal teams this act and this legislation.

I have crafted this amendment in the hopes that the government will take a sober second look at this and do the right thing and provide the universities, which this will be having a direct material effect on, with that necessary time. They had asked for two to four years; we're asking for just another six months. I think it's a reasonable compromise, Madam Chair, and I hope that the members opposite will take a serious look at this amendment in our debate here today.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for the suggested amendment. We have been in conversations with universities and those impacted by the changes to this bill. The member is correct that the postsecondary sector did request a longer adjustment time specifically for the moving of nonacademic staff from under PSERA as a labour relations regime into the Labour Relations Code. We have given them that longer adjustment period because the transition period for that move is going to be July 1, 2022. That date was chosen because it aligns with the change that is also happening for academic staff. This allows us to have a single bargaining regime in our postsecondary sector, because all academic and nonacademic staff will be under the Labour Relations Code, as opposed to having some under the Labour Relations Code and some under PSERA.

The changes that are happening on June 1, 2019, are dealing with a section that specifically excludes some workers from being able to be part of the bargaining unit based on some classifications. This is a section where we've received the strong legal opinion that it would not be upheld given the recent Supreme Court rulings around the importance of the right to collectively bargain. The reason that that section is happening on June 1, 2019, is because we're dealing with constitutionally protected rights of workers to be able to collectively bargain.

I can tell you, from the correspondence and the work that we've done with the postsecondary sector, that universities were expecting this change, and it had been communicated to them. Their concern about a longer transition period is really about the bigger change of nonacademic staff moving into the labour relations system. I'm very pleased to say that we were able to work with them and exceed their request for amount of transition time because that change will not happen until July 1, 2022.

Because extending the transition period or the implementation date would essentially delay workers having that Supreme Court protected right to collectively bargain, I will not be supporting this amendment. But the member's concern that we give appropriate transition to our universities is absolutely well taken, and we have done that in the areas where they have the greatest concern, again, by not transitioning nonacademic staff until July 1, 2022. I appreciate the intent, but I will not be supporting this amendment.

Mr. Hunter: Madam Chair, I appreciate the minister's comments on this. One question I have for her. As she was speaking, she said that she was concerned or that the ministry was concerned that this would not meet a constitutional challenge. Is there a constitutional challenge presently?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much. Section 12, that we are talking about, specifically excludes bargaining rights to people of five different titles. One of those I have personal experience with because the title is systems analyst. Working in the IT world, I knew many people with this title. It's a title that my husband has held at various employers in various pieces of the process.

Right now there has been a concern around whether this section is constitutional. Now, the lower courts, as the member mentioned in his opening comments during second reading – he's correct that some of the lower courts have said that they don't think that there's a constitutional challenge, but it's currently under appeal. It hasn't been fully litigated, and given the Supreme Court rulings in a number of cases it is the strong legal opinion that our government has received and my belief that under this new labour relations climate this section would not be upheld. It's a priority for me as Minister of Labour to make sure that we have a labour relations system that would meet the test of respecting the rights of workers to collectively bargain. For that reason, we are making this change and removing that exclusion for these five titles of workers.

My understanding is that the current challenge is moving forward into an appeal process, and this change will mean that that process would not need to proceed because we would remove the exclusion that is currently under legal debate. I hope that answers the member's question.

Mr. Hunter: Madam Chair, I appreciate the minister, and she knows that I have the deepest respect for her, but let's be one hundred per cent clear here. This is not just a few court cases or a court case.

I'm going to read into the record so that the members of this House have an understanding of the scope of how many times AUPE has actually challenged this: AUPE versus Alberta, 2014, ABCA 43; Alberta Union of Provincial Employees versus Alberta, 2013; Alberta versus Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, 2011; Red Deer College versus the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, 2017; Alberta Union of Provincial Employees versus University of Calgary, 2008; Alberta Union of Provincial Employees versus Northern Alberta Institute of Technology, 2015; Alberta Union of Provincial Employees versus Board of Governors, Northern Alberta Institute of Technology, 2011; Alberta Union of Provincial Employees versus Board of Governors, Northern Alberta Institute of Technology, 2010; Alberta Union of Provincial Employees versus Alberta, 2011.

There are nine challenges there that I've just read, nine challenges that indicate that AUPE has been trying to establish that 12(1) is their constitutional right. They have brought this forward not just in terms of a legal challenge, but they've brought this forward to the Labour Relations Board as well. Each time, Madam Chair, this has been rejected, and they have ruled in favour of the government and in favour of the universities.

I think that what the minister is saying is: the legal opinion, we believe, is that if it was brought as a constitutional challenge, it would uphold the AUPE's challenges for these many years. If that is the case that she's bringing forward, why does she need to actually give legislative right to the AUPE prior to that challenge happening? It would seem, in my opinion, that it would be prudent for the government to wait for the challenge to actually happen. If the AUPE believes in the efficacy of their argument, that it is actually something that is right, then I don't see why they need to have legislation to actually force – force – 12(1) on PSERA. This seems heavy handed to me.

Look, I'm interested in hearing a rebuttal to that. I think that Albertans and especially members of PSERA – I believe we're talking about almost 19,000 members. I believe they deserve to have an answer to this.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Chair. Really quickly, we're not talking about 19,000 members. We're talking about, right now, people of five job titles who are not part of the union because they've been excluded. We are talking about people who have been denied their constitutionally protected right to collectively bargain. The examples that the member cited of previous court cases all took place before the 2015 Saskatchewan Federation of Labour versus Saskatchewan ruling by the Supreme Court that reinforced and upheld that constitutionally protected right to collectively bargain. It's the result of that 2015 decision – our legal opinion now strongly suggests that this is unconstitutional. As to why we don't wait, again, it's because this government believes in protecting the constitutional rights of all workers, all Albertans.

Those are my just brief rebuttals. This is about fairness, and this is about making sure that all workers, their rights, are protected.

Thank you.

Mr. Hunter: Madam Chair, fine. I accept the argument. Once again it does not answer the question, which is: if she believes in the value of her argument, then – this is a court challenge – let them take it to the Supreme Court and let them fight it out there. Let AUPE challenge this in the Supreme Court. I don't see why, again, they have to have this heavy-handed approach to ramming this through. The only reason why I can see this happening is because this government is very concerned that they are not going to be in government in the next six months, and they have to have this legislative cudgel in order to be able to get this done for AUPE. If that's the case, I'm calling them out on it. I believe that Albertans deserve to have the right to know that this is what's happening.

Now, she said that this does not affect 18,900 of the 19,000 members. She's absolutely right. I asked her chief of staff, when we did the technical briefing on this, how many it actually does affect, and the answer was that they don't know. But our researchers are a little better than theirs – I just wanted to make sure you were listening this morning – and I found out that it's about 6,774 employees. That is a substantial number of people. I think that at least those members deserve to know the background on this situation and at least need to know how many times these five classifications have gone to court: nine times.

The courts have found that those classifications should be exempted from the collective bargaining because of the sensitivity, from what I understand, of the information that they have. I want to just read to you who those people are. We're talking about a budget officer, a systems analyst, an auditor, a disbursement control officer, a hearing officer. Those positions and those classifications have important information that could cause a material effect on collective bargaining, and this is the reason why they're exempted.

I once again think that this is just an issue that this government is bringing forward because they don't believe they're going to be in government and they need to be able to tie up these loose ends and bring a little more of their public servants into the union fold of AUPE.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Dreesen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would just like to speak in favour of this amendment from my good friend from Cardston-Taber-Warner because I think it's a simple one. We're ultimately just asking for more time. It's not just my colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner that is asking it, but also the universities have been asking for more time to wrap their heads around this. I think it's a reasonable amendment, and I hope the minister and the folks across the way will support this.

Just a quick question to the minister on the court case that is pending right now: what effect does she think this legislation in its current form would actually have on the ongoing court case?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much. It is my understanding, although I am not a lawyer, that the appeal that is currently planned and moving forward would no longer be necessary because this legislation would resolve the constitutional concern that that court case is discussing.

I would like to just clarify very quickly that this is not about AUPE, as the members across have suggested multiple times. This is about five professions of workers not receiving their constitutionally protected right to collectively bargain and being excluded from that collective bargaining process. There are a number of workers within those professions, so this is not about a particular union. This is just about fairness and making sure that we protect the constitutional rights of workers.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments?

Mr. Hunter: Madam Chair, I would like to bring forward another amendment to this bill. I will provide the necessary copies and wait for your information.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A2.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 29, Public Service Employee Relations Amendment Act, 2018, be amended in section 8(2) by striking out "July 1, 2022" and substituting "July 1, 2027."

Now, there is a five-year add to this. Very simply, Minister, this is an issue of: they asked for two to four years. This is adding more time because the transition is substantial. There's going to be a lot of work in terms of the HR and legal departments. I've already made the argument for increasing the timelines in the last amendment, so I will not pontificate anymore on this one.

I would urge all members to be able to vote for this. Again, the issue is about giving them the necessary time to be able to implement these things.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much. With the current transition timeline of July 1, 2022, we are giving sufficient time to the postsecondary sector. More importantly, that date aligns with the date when academic staff will be falling under the Labour Relations Code. It makes sense to have this transition for both academic and nonacademic staff happen at the same time rather than one many years later. So I will not be supporting this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A2 lost]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is really my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you 28 brilliant students from the greatest constituency in the province. Honestly, I'm sorry I missed a photo with them because I was enjoying so much time here in this Chamber while they were trying to get their photo. Seated behind me from George P. Nicholson school are the students accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Lorelei Campbell, along with their chaperones: Mrs. Kelly Miller, Mrs. Stephanie Pajo, Mr. Dennis Pajo, and Mrs. Nancy Mah. If they'd please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and to introduce to you and through you 48 students, the second group from Leo Nickerson elementary school in St. Albert. The students are accompanied by their teachers Dillon Knoll, Joel Wood, and Nacima Strader and their chaperones Carly Chalupa and Jenny Schroeder. I ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to the House a guest of yours seated in your gallery. Wayne Resch has been the acting president of Medicine Hat College since March of this year, but his history in the city and particularly at the college goes back nearly two decades. Wayne was a student athlete playing for the Medicine Hat College Rattlers volleyball team before joining the college's administration in 2003. He continued with the administration throughout the years, holding positions of manager of financial services, chief financial officer, vice-president of administration, and then was named acting president earlier this year. Wayne has been an invaluable asset not only to Medicine Hat College but the city as a whole. I would ask him now to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you some dear family members by marriage. First off is a fine young lad named Manitoba Watson, who is with his dad, Daniel, and his mom, Geraldine, from Fillings, France, a beautiful spot in the Alps that my wife and I had the chance to visit this summer. With them is Manitoba's grandmother, Sheryl Watson, from Devon, and Manitoba's great-grandmother, Anna Owen, from Edmonton. It is not often that we get the chance in this House to introduce four generations from one family, so I'd ask that my guests now rise and we give them a rousing traditional welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a friend of mine from Nordegg, Monica Ahlstrom, who, of course, is part of Ahlstrom helicopters in that area. She gets to live in one of the most beautiful places in the world. First of all, her family does a tremendous amount of work there, but she's also the president of Search and Rescue Alberta, so when you are in my backyard and you make a silly mistake or even if it wasn't so silly, she and her team are the ones coming to get you and get you back home. We had a great meeting with her today, and I would ask that she rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my absolute privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of leaders from the Lebanese community. Later today I will be speaking about the 75th anniversary of Lebanon's independence. I would ask my guests to rise as I call your names: Monsignor Charles Saad, Sheik Rabih Salamy, Father Issa Maamar, Joe Hak, Youssef Abou Rjeily, Bassam El-Ahmar, Joseph Rustom, Samir Bleibel, Marcelle Abou Rjeily, Nicolas Samia, and Tom Choucair. Thank you, all, for coming today and for your incredible leadership. I would ask that all members join me in extending the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Pat Garrett, who is the executive director of WINGS of Providence in Edmonton-Ellerslie. As we all know, November is Domestic Violence Awareness Month, and Wings offers a second-stage shelter and affordable housing for women with children who have experienced family violence. They address the social, psychological, and health issues affecting women and children, with inclusive programs for clients of all backgrounds. I had the privilege of visiting Wings alongside the Minister of Health last month and got the chance to tour their new youth room and visit with their families. I want to thank Pat and all of her staff for the amazing work that they do day in, day out not only for Edmonton-Ellerslie but for all Albertans there. Pat, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you and to all members of the Assembly Mr. Neil Rieger, president of the Edson Rotary Club. Neil has been instrumental in the club's highway to Mexico project, where used vehicles and supplies are driven to Mexico and distributed to communities in the Mazatlán area. The Rotary clubs of Edson and Grande Prairie have donated over 60 vehicles since the start of the project. I will speak more about the highway to Mexico later today. I will ask Neil Rieger to now rise to receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my distinct privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of stakeholders that are in the gallery today to watch as I introduce private member's Bill 211. This bill is a request to the government to look into establishing the mandatory underground infrastructure notification system. Over half of line strikes in Alberta last year were because no locate requests were sought out with Alberta One-Call. As I say your name, please rise: Michelle Tetreault, Alberta Common Ground Alliance; Sean Sullivan, Alberta Common Ground Alliance; Brian Bettis of Telus; Darcy Hurlock of Telus; Darwin Durnie of the Alberta Public Works Association; Mat Steppan, Association of Science and Engineering Technology Professionals; Iain Stables, ATCO; Melissa Pierce of Suncor; and Jonah Porter of Plains Midstream. They've already risen. Please accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly two amazing Alberta women, Christie Bergman and her mother, Jody Nicholson. Christie is heavily involved in politics – actually, I think that's probably an understatement – in the Leduc-Beaumont area. In fact, I had supper with her last week, and it was amazing to see the impact that she's had on her community and how much they love her and how much she has brought that community together. Jody is the executive director of VALID, an organization that supports persons with disabilities in Vegreville. These amazing, powerful ladies are both working to make Alberta a better place every day, and I am so grateful to them for that. Would you please rise, and let's give them the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there other guests to be introduced today? The hon. Member for Calgary-Acadia.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you someone who is well known to the Calgary New Democrat MLAs, our NDP field organizer, Ryan Robinson. He joins us today from Calgary. It's actually his first time getting to come see our government in action, which is great because that means we're going to send him home with the inspiration to make sure that there are just as many if not more of us on this side of the House come 2019. On behalf of all the Calgary MLAs and everyone else we work with, we wanted to take a moment to say thank you to Mr. Robinson for his work supporting our local ridings and the work to ensure term 2 for this wonderful government, that's doing its best to make life better for all Albertans. I would ask that he now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. Are there any other guests, hon. members? The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to introduce to the Assembly today a dedicated Albertan joining us all the way from Lethbridge. Kurt Schlachter serves as the chair of the board of governors at the University of Lethbridge. We met earlier today to discuss some of the initiatives that are being undertaken by that university. I am pleased to say that the new science building there is on track. Kurt told us those magic words that every minister wants to hear when it comes to an infrastructure project: on time and on budget. We're pleased to be opening that building in the very near future. In recognition of his service to the university and our province I'd ask Kurt to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'd just use this opportunity to remind all of you that there will an emergency testing taking place today at 1:55. That will be sent out to most cellphones. I'm sure there are no cellphones in here, but just in case there are, I kindly remind all of you to put your phones on silent.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Female Genital Mutilation

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. November 25th marked the International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women and launched 16 Days of Activism, a campaign to highlight the discussion around ending violence against women and girls world-wide. Even today 1 in 3 women world-wide experiences gender-based violence. This violence is not limited to faraway places with unstable political regimes. In fact, it's happening right here in our own backyard. Female genital mutilation, FGM, affects 200 million women and girls world-wide. A recent 2016 study found that FGM procedures have taken place on Canadian soil although the majority of FGM takes place when Canadian girls are sent abroad over their school breaks, a practice referred to as "vacation cutting."

Mr. Speaker, all of this is strictly illegal under the Canadian Criminal Code. Despite the prevalence of the practice, there has never been a criminal prosecution on FGM in Canada. In fact, last week in the United States I was heartbroken, absolutely heartbroken, to learn that a judge had dropped nearly all of the charges against a Michigan doctor accused of performing cutting on at least nine underage girls, claiming that the federal FGM law was unconstitutional. I am sickened that in this day and age, when we have the tools available to us to protect these girls, we have allowed them to be further victimized and this time by the justice system. It's unacceptable. This is an act of brutality that cannot continue.

Mr. Speaker, we must stand up and protect our girls. We have to take action. We have to talk about these issues no matter how horrific they are. We have to educate. We have to work with these communities. We need our governments at all levels to take accountability for putting an end to this practice.

As part of the 16 Days of Activism I promise to continue to use my voice to speak out against this horrific act and to do everything in my power to make sure that this despicable practice is a thing of the past.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Rotary Club Highway to Mexico Project

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I recognize the Rotary clubs of Edson and Grande Prairie on a successful 16th year of the highway to Mexico project. Since the project's inception in 2002 the clubs have made the annual 5,000-kilometre journey from Edson to Mazatlán, Mexico, in used school buses, ambulances, and fire trucks. Upon arrival the vehicles are donated to a partner Rotary Club, who distributes them based on greatest need throughout Mazatlán and surrounding communities. This past year one fire truck, five buses, and one rescue unit were donated. So far in total 88 vehicles have been delivered since 2002. And a historic landmark will be reached in 2019, when the project intends to deliver their 100th vehicle.

In addition to the vehicles, volunteers distribute much-needed goods, including school supplies, computers, firefighting equipment, first aid equipment, and wheelchairs. They also provide training and expertise to emergency workers. This allows local groups to protect the property and lives of the people in their communities. This project is truly an Alberta-wide effort, relying on the generosity of individuals, communities, and businesses from across the province. The city of Red Deer, MD of Greenview, Woodlands county, Mackenzie county, and the town of High Level as well as SemCams, Diesel Shop, Three Penguins Signs, Morad Communications, and Shell Canada have all generously donated to the cause.

Rotarians report that the extensive planning and gruelling week-long drive become immediately worth it after seeing the dramatic impact the project has on the quality of life for people in the Mazatlán region. To the Rotary representative with us today, Edson president Neil Rieger: thank you for your personal commitment.

Carbon Levy and Agricultural Costs

Mr. Cooper: Today I'd like to recognize the thousands of hard-working farmers in our province. Unfortunately, it wasn't a great harvest year, mostly due to unco-operative weather, but working long hours and accepting these risks are just what our farmers do. I think I can speak for everyone here in the House that we all are so, so thankful for their hard work. You know, farming is a tough business, and when it comes to this business, so much of it is out of their control. They deserve for us to have their backs.

Over the past two years I've heard members in this Legislature declare that farmers are exempt from paying this government's carbon tax, but that's not exactly true. Farmers pay the carbon tax in a variety of ways, be it heat, electricity, fertilizer, grain drying, or rail transportation. Recently my office has learned of yet another way that this government is going after farmers, through local suppliers. I have a constituent who provides feed-grinding services for local beef producers. The government recently ordered him to switch from the farm fuel benefit program and register instead as a tax-exempt fuel user. What's the difference, you ask? Under the TEFU program he's expected to pay carbon taxes. But it's a shell game. At the end of the day, he'll be forced to pass these costs on to his customer, the farmer.

The bottom line is that the farmer who owns his feed-grinding equipment will pay less tax than the farmer who hires to have the work done. The same amount of work is being done, the same animals are fed, the same emissions are produced, so who benefits from this bureaucratic arbitration approach to taxation other than government bean-counters? No one. Taxing them is just another backdoor tax on our farmers and ranchers. All farmers and ranchers deserve better. But the good news is, Mr. Speaker, that better is on the way.

Lebanese Community

Ms Goehring: Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to rise today and speak about the country of Lebanon and of the impact of Lebanese culture and heritage here in Alberta. In 1943 Lebanon gained its independence, and this past Thursday, on November 22, Lebanon celebrated its 75th year of independence. Lebanon is a diverse country, with a population of 6 million people and over 18 religious groups. It's home to beautiful scenery, a deep history, and very delicious cuisine, but most importantly Lebanon is home to a proud, generous, and hospitable people.

Alberta has seen this pride, generosity, and hospitality. Immigration to Canada started in 1882 and continues today. Lebanese-Canadians have succeeded as entrepreneurs, academics, politicians, athletes, actors, musicians, and soldiers. Many Lebanese-Canadians have served in the Canadian Armed Forces. With pride Joe Hak shared the story of his maternal ancestors that homesteaded in what is now Hanna, Alberta. Sam Hallaby and his two sons Stanley and Alex joined the Canadian Armed Forces in 1939. Sam and Alex returned, but Stanley and many of his brothers in the Canadian Armed Forces paid the ultimate sacrifice in the battle of Mount Cassino in Italy. As the government of Alberta's liaison to the Canadian Armed Forces I am grateful for this service and sacrifice.

My constituency of Edmonton-Castle Downs and north Edmonton are home to a vibrant and large Lebanese population. I attended high school at Queen E and fell in love with the Lebanese community, culture, and food. Across Alberta, Lebanese pride is visible throughout businesses, community associations, schools, mosques, and churches. Every day I am honoured to live in such a diverse and hospitable community and province. Every day I have the privilege to be a representative of this community as the MLA for Edmonton-Castle Downs, and I would like to thank Lebanese-Canadians for their contributions to Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Oil Price Differentials

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the leading experts in Alberta's energy industry says that we are facing, quote, a financial catastrophe with the price differential. Another has referred to this situation as, quote, a five-alarm fire requiring immediate action to prevent a potentially serious recession from being triggered by this price crisis. Will the government join with us in supporting mandatory curtailment of oil production in Alberta so that we can begin getting a fair price for our energy?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we know that the price differential is very damaging. That's why we've been working with industry since day one. That's why we created a special envoy. We certainly have all options on the table. Why do we need those options on the table? Because while the member opposite sat in Ottawa for 20 years, 10 years around the federal cabinet table, he said that, quote, it wasn't his job to defend pipelines. I think most Albertans would be shocked to hear that. It's no wonder why we're in this situation, and certainly our Premier is working diligently to fix it. I wish the hon. member would have done something when he had the chance for 10 years around the federal cabinet table.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the minister just fabricated a statement I've not made.

Today I just did a news conference on an issue that relates to our vital economic interests and for 45 minutes did not utter a single criticism of the government because the future of jobs in this province is more important than partisan politics. I would ask the government for at least for a moment to rise above partisan chippiness, to actually think about Albertans who are facing job losses, and to join with us in calling for mandatory reductions in energy production so that . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: I've said it previously, and I'll say it again: certainly, every option is on the table, Mr. Speaker, absolutely. Guess why? Because even though I'm Minister of Health, it's also my job to stand up for all Albertans and all of their jobs. Members of the federal House of Commons: it absolutely is their job, especially when they are minister of employment. To be minister of employment for two years and fail to say the word "pipelines" and pretend you're standing up for Alberta: the hypocrisy is astounding. I think most Albertans would be very disappointed and shocked to know that that's the hon. member's record. He should defend it, or he should revoke. I think we know what the answer is. He doesn't stand up for pipelines.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, that kind of response does a disservice to the office of the Deputy Premier. I sat around a cabinet table that approved four major pipelines, that doubled pipeline capacity by 1.72 billion barrels a day, while members of the party opposite were attending protests against the same pipelines.

Will the government at least consider amending section 85 of the Mines and Minerals Act to include bitumen in the definition of petroleum to allow for production reductions to get a fair price for our oil?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I've said it before, and I'll say it again: we certainly have all options on the table. This morning our Premier announced that she will be investing, if it comes to that, if the federal government refuses to do so, to get 120,000 barrels per day on rail. Why? Because the member opposite, when he was responsible for employment, failed to get a pipeline to tidewater. I am responsible for Albertans. Every person in Alberta who's elected is responsible to stand up for Albertans. Enough of the hiding. Take responsibility for the fact that the member opposite was around the federal cabinet table for 10 years, two of those being responsible for employment, and failed to get the job done. We failed to get market access to tidewater, and we . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Premier.
Second main question.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, Albertans watching that performance will be disappointed to see a senior minister acting as though this is some kind of a high school debate. We are talking about the vital economic interests of Albertans. Industry leaders are saying that we may be facing a financial catastrophe with tens of thousands of job layoffs that cannot be addressed by additional rail capacity a year from now. Action is required today. Will the government join with us in acting immediately to seek reductions in energy output to stop the glut that is driving down prices and jeopardizing thousands of Alberta jobs?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, again, the Premier is in Ottawa at this very moment continuing to champion our oil and gas industry. Why? Because when the member opposite was in Ottawa for 10 years as a federal minister, he said that it wasn't his job to do so. Our Premier will continue to do that. She will continue to accelerate rail capacity. She will continue to work to address the differential. All options are on the table, and she will continue to fight to get our product to tidewater because – guess what? – it's her job. It's every member of this government's job, and it certainly was the federal cabinet's job to make sure they got our product to tidewater when the member opposite had a decade of failure.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, instead of the Health minister angrily hurling partisan insults, perhaps I could actually ask the Energy minister to address this matter of the gravest importance to the workers and businesses in our energy sector. Does the minister not understand that if action is not taken immediately, companies are going to be slashing their capital budgets, shutting in, stopping drilling plans for this winter, that could have devastating effects in the service sector and in communities all across Alberta. Does the Minister of Energy understand this?

The Speaker: Thank you.
The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, as I've articulated, the Premier is working to expand rail capacity diligently. She is working, through the envoy and with a number of stakeholders, directly with industry to make sure that we address the differential as expeditiously as possible and as legally as possible. All options are on the table, and she's continuing to fight for that pipeline. Now, will the Leader of the Official Opposition acknowledge that he had responsibility when he was at the federal cabinet table to stand up for Alberta jobs, when he was the minister of employment to fight for Alberta pipelines to tidewater? That's the question.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, once again I will ask the Minister of Energy, whose responsibility this is, whether she will agree, at least as a preventative measure, to co-operate with the opposition in the adoption of an amendment to section 85 of the Mines and Minerals Act that would allow for production controls on bitumen as well as conventional oil so that we could see immediate price correction and then allow the market to come back into balance. Is the minister willing to commit to work with us in a nonpartisan way to achieve these measures to save Alberta jobs?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, certainly, the Premier, the Deputy Premier, the Energy minister, and every member of our government knows that it's our job to stand up for Alberta jobs and to make sure that we are protecting those. No matter what our title is, all of us owe it to stand up for Alberta suppliers. That's why we have the special envoy, that's why we're working with industry, and that's why we know that it's our job to fight for pipelines. The member opposite failed to do so. Don't worry; we've got a number of strong women who are certainly happy to do that with the support of a number of strong men on this side of the House because we know it's our job. The hon. member the Leader of the Official Opposition: it was his job, too.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, Albertans want to see their representatives discussing practical solutions to a crisis that is jeopardizing tens of thousands of jobs. They don't want to see an endless string of partisan insults hurled across this Chamber.

I will ask the Minister of Energy – the Minister of Energy – whose responsibility this is: will she join with us in seeking ways to enforce the fair application of rules with respect to apportionment on the common-use pipelines like the Enbridge main line to prevent the marked distortion known as air barrels?

The Speaker: Thank you.
The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. You know, as the Deputy Premier and our Premier have said, all options are on the table. As the leader opposite knows, the industry is extremely divided on the matter of curtailment, so that's why we've sent experts in to talk about the solutions that are going to be working. Certainly, the one he describes is one solution. There are many solutions. We need short-term, medium-term, and long-term solutions to this issue, and the long term absolutely is pipelines.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for a thoughtful and serious response.

Mr. Speaker, will the minister agree with me that there are legitimate concerns about manipulative marketing practices in nominating so-called air barrels that have created distressed barrels and pushed down the price? Will she not agree with me that action is necessary to stop this reduction in the price of Alberta oil, which belongs, after all, not to the oil companies but to Albertans? Will she join with us in addressing this problem around access to the main line?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government certainly is very concerned about the impact that the differential has had. That's why we know how important it is to get our product to tidewater. The only way we can have certainty in the long term is to make sure that we have access to global markets so we can get global prices. We're in this situation because of a decade of failure by the federal Conservative government while we had a provincial Conservative government in this House. Fortunately, we've got different people at the table fighting hard every day to make sure that we address the differential, that we increase our capacity by rail when necessary, and that we get our pipeline to tidewater.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, let me again ask the Minister of Energy, whose responsibility this is: does she agree with me that energy producers have reduced voluntarily production by some 200,000 barrels per day, approximately, but that we would need to see a sustained reduction in the range of 400,000 barrels per day for the current glut in inventories, at 35 million barrels, to be cut in half and to bring the market back to balance? Does she agree with that basic math, and does she therefore think that the voluntary approach is not sufficient to restoring balance to Alberta's oil markets?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, it's very clear that the member opposite has flip-flopped on his position on this than he did a few days ago. It's a good thing we didn't follow his advice at that time. What we've been doing is working with all of the partners in industry through the energy envoy to make sure that we get fair prices for our product. We need that because it's been 65 years since we've got a Canadian pipeline to Canadian tidewater. Sixty five years. I know that the member opposite had 10 years while he was in the federal government in Ottawa to fix that. He said that it, quote, wasn't my job. Well, it certainly was his job, but fortunately we're here to make sure that we move this forward and that we get the job done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government promised to get Alberta off the oil roller coaster. After committing to buy into the stalled federal Trans Mountain pipeline, we now learn that Alberta will be investing an unknown and unapproved amount of public funds in rail cars to carry oil. To the Premier: what are Alberta energy companies supposed to do to deal with the crushing price differential until rail cars are delivered next year?

Mr. Clark: We need help right now.

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we do need help. We needed help 10 years ago, we needed help 20 years ago, and fortunately we will continue to move forward to close that differential. One of the pieces is working through the envoy to make sure that we have the very best opportunities, to make sure that we address the differential immediately. That's why all options are on the table. Another additional piece is to make sure we get more capacity. That's why 120,000 barrels per day will be funded by rail if that's what it takes. We're certainly not going to back down from that. That's also why we need to make sure we get pipelines.

Ms McPherson: If and when we do get rail cars, the oil market we rely on will still be severely constrained for the next few years because scheduled oil refinery maintenance in the U.S. is ongoing. Our enthusiastic investment in drilling means we'll be over capacity in Alberta for some time. This is a long-term problem that can't be fixed by doubling down on oil exclusively. Why are we still balancing our books, our economy, and our future on oil?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of the job that the Finance minister did in taking a number of careful, cautionary decisions to make sure that we had room for unforeseen situations to be addressed within the budget and for us to still be on track to be balanced. This is important to all Albertans. It's important to all Albertans that we have good jobs, that we have access not just to U.S. markets but to international markets, and for the former minister of employment to say it wasn't his job to fight for pipelines is strictly false. Absolutely it was his job, and it's all of our jobs to fight for our market access.

Ms McPherson: The Alberta Party, industry stakeholders, experts, and finally the Leader of the Opposition have suggested curtailment. The government appears to have ignored calls for curtailment from small players in order to slow down well completion. While we will be waiting for more than a year for rail cars, Alberta will lose $4 billion in royalty revenues. Why won't the government immediately curtail production to solve this problem today?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. While certainly all options are on the table, that one option wouldn't have long-lasting, long-term impacts. It doesn't mean that we're ruling it out. All options are being considered. We certainly are considering it among others, but short-term options don't lead to long-term solutions. In an interim solution we'll be increasing capacity through 120,000 barrels per day on rail, and a long-term solution is to get the pipeline built. But don't worry. Even though members opposite thought it wasn't their job when they had the ability to do so in Ottawa for a decade and failed, we've got a Premier who's fighting every step of the way to get the job done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Transportation Infrastructure in Banff-Cochrane

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Transportation. A significant infrastructure deficit left by the previous government exists across my riding. This includes a number of critical transportation projects. In the hamlet of Waiparous there is a clear need to replace the bridge over Waiparous Creek in the near future. Can the minister commit that action will be taken on this important crossing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I can tell you that the initial look that we've taken at this indicates replacing the bridge at the existing position of the road. It's just an example of the neglect of the previous government for Alberta infrastructure. It's created a whole series of problems. Now they want to bring in a tax cut of $700 million for the richest Albertans. They want to lay off 4,000 teachers and 4,000 nurses as well. It's unacceptable.

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the residents of Waiparous have expressed concern with the proposed realignment, can the minister commit to ensuring that residents' concerns are addressed in the design phase of this project and that the department will work collaboratively with the people who call Waiparous home?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the hon. member for the excellent question. I can commit to you and to the residents of Waiparous that their concerns will be addressed. We're committed to finding a workable solution and will collaborate with the community on this bridge replacement, unlike the Official Opposition, who had 10 years in Ottawa to get a pipeline and didn't get it done.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the intersection at highway 22 and highway 758 in Bragg Creek is also in need of significant improvement, can the minister provide an update on this important project and when residents can expect some action from the ministry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you again to the hon. member for that question, Mr. Speaker. We know that thousands of Albertans go through this intersection every day. The member knows well that it's a four-way stop, and it's challenge to put in traffic lights because of the narrow right-of-way. I can update the member that we're in discussions with Rocky View county about a possible cost share for a roundabout, which would greatly improve the safety and quality of life for local residents. We are working very hard on this to make up the infrastructure deficit. Certainly, a $700 million tax cut for the richest Albertans would not help.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Tourists from Germany

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, this past summer a German tourist named Horst Stewin travelled to Alberta along with his family to celebrate his 60th birthday. After spending some time visiting relatives in the Vermilion area, they were on their way to Banff when Mr. Stewin was critically injured in a random drive-by shooting incident. To the Minister of Culture and Tourism: what supports were provided by our government to Mr. Stewin and his family in the aftermath of this incident?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the minister of culture will respond to the two supplementaries. I just want to take this 30 seconds to thank the hon. member for his service to the people of Alberta. We heard his announcement this morning. I think that the class, the civility, and standing up for LGBTQ rights within his party, even when it was very dangerous to do so, is something that will be deeply missed. Thank you, hon. member.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you to the Deputy Premier. One now knows the extraordinary measures one must go to to garner all-party support in this place.

Mr. Speaker, back to the Minister of Culture and Tourism: what specific measures have the minister, the tourism department, or Travel Alberta taken to repair the damage that this incident has had on Alberta's reputation as a safe tourism destination in light of the widespread coverage this incident has had in the German news media?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also join in thanking the member for his service now that he has announced that he won't be seeking re-election.

Mr. Speaker, I was saddened to hear of this senseless crime, as was the hon. member. Thanks to his diligence in giving me the phone number of the family, I did contact the family directly. Now, we do have plans in place through Travel Alberta and the Culture and Tourism ministry. We have talked to our partners in Germany to ensure that this is conveyed as what it is, an isolated tragedy that does not reflect the warmth and hospitality that Alberta is known for.

2:10

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that German tourists account for nearly a quarter of the booked room nights by international visitors to Alberta and given that this incident has seriously harmed our reputation as a safe and secure travel destination and has the potential to significantly decrease the number of visitors from Germany, to the minister: what impact has this incident had on visitation from Germany, or given the department's inability to gather accurate and timely visitor statistics, how would we even know?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We continue to monitor the situation, of course. We have contacts through the consul general from Germany, and of course we have an office in Germany that we work with from Travel Alberta, so we are definitely monitoring the numbers, the flights, and ensuring that we continue to convey the same message, that this was an isolated event, an unfortunate and tragic event but one that does not reflect our province and our hospitality.

Thank you.

Oil Price Differentials and Provincial Revenue

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, Alberta oil today is selling at less than $12 U.S. That's about 10 cents a litre, less than a fraction of a bottle of water. I believe it's the lowest real price ever for Alberta oil today. Professor Fellows at the University of Calgary estimates that a $39 price differential would cost the Alberta treasury $7.2 billion on an annual basis. This is a $40 price differential. Does the hon. the Finance minister agree with Professor Fellows that the loss to the treasury could be in the range of over $7 billion?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the Leader of the Opposition for his recent interest in this important issue. We know that this is something that matters to all Albertans and to all Canadians, frankly, that we get fair value for our resources. That's why under the Premier's leadership the mark has moved from 4 in 10 Canadians to 7 in 10 Canadians supporting market access to tidewater. We will continue to move forward on that as well as addressing immediate initiatives as required for addressing the differential and expanding our access by rail.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, the question was to the Finance minister about the estimates made by the Department of Finance of royalty revenues that would be forgone as a result of a $40 price differential. Is the Finance minister unable to answer that question? Can he please inform Albertans about the projections for forgone revenue as a result of an annualized $40 price differential?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. As Deputy Premier I'm happy to respond on behalf of our government to the Leader of the Official Opposition's questions. He certainly has the right to let any of his caucus members ask questions, Mr. Speaker, but I'll continue to answer his questions, and he can certainly call on any of his caucus members when he sees so fit. I think it's really important that people have the ability to speak up and use their voices to fight for pipelines. We have done that on this side of the House every day in government. We didn't have the job as employment minister for two years in Ottawa, fail to do so, and then say: oh, well, it wasn't my job. Of course it was the Leader of the Official Opposition's job to fight for pipelines when he was employment minister.

Mr. Kenney: I can only infer from these non answers and the refusal of the Finance minister to answer a simple, factual question that the government of Alberta does not actually have an estimate of the forgone royalty revenues for a $40 price differential. I'll have to accept Professor Fellows' assessment that it's in the range of $7 billion.

Mr. Speaker, a growing number of industry leaders are calling for immediate action through mandatory curtailment, the failure of which could double the province's deficit. Will the government respond if not to me then to those industry leaders by agreeing at least to seriously consider mandatory curtailment of production?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're certainly working with industry leaders and working with the special envoy to make sure we get fair and full value for our resources. Every member of our government is working on this. Our Premier is in Ottawa making announcements, fighting for international access to our products because the member opposite had a decade of failure to do so when he was in Ottawa because he said it wasn't his job. Quote: it wasn't my responsibility. Well, it was his responsibility then. It continues to be the Premier's responsibility now. She will continue to fight for us on market access through rail, making sure she addresses the differential and pipelines because it's our job.

Oil Price Differentials and Energy Industry Activity

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, given that the projections I've just offered in terms of a $7 billion loss in royalty revenue and given that industry leaders are indicating that there may be a massive reduction in drilling activity this winter if we do not take immediate action, does the government have any projections about the job losses that could result from a massive reduction of drilling activity this upcoming winter?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is working to address the differential. All options are on the table. The Premier is also working to expand market access through rail and through pipelines because those resources belong to all Albertans, and we're fighting every day to get full value for them. Decades of failure by successive federal governments have left Canada holding its own economy hostage, and now the member thinks that, well, maybe Alberta's economic well-being is his responsibility. It was his responsibility for a decade while he failed to act. We are taking action on all fronts. It's our responsibility to make sure we get full value for Alberta resources because we are the owners.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, in 1947, after the Leduc discovery, the then Alberta government brought in prorationing to ensure that production of oil did not far outstrip our capacity to ship it. That continued until the early 1970s. It was brought back by Premier Lougheed in the early 1980s. So through most of the history of our energy sector we have had prorationing of production. Does the government agree with the principle, established by previous governments and foreign countries, that in extreme moments like this there is a need to bring production in line with the takeaway capacity for shipping energy?

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I just said, all options are certainly on the table. Pipelines mean good jobs for Albertans, increased rail capacity means more barrels to market in the interim, and addressing the differential is certainly an important immediate issue as well. The reason why is because what the Premier isn't doing is modelling after the efforts of the Official Opposition for a decade while he was in Ottawa and failed to get the job done because he said that it wasn't his job. Of course it was his job, and it is our job to make sure that we get our products to market access, that we make sure that we close the differential, and that we continue to move forward protecting Alberta jobs.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I've said no such thing.

Mr. Speaker, the government keeps talking about rail capacity. Do they not understand that incremental rail capacity will only have an incremental effect on our capacity to ship Alberta energy, perhaps an additional 200,000 barrels by the end of next year? Do they not understand that that is inadequate to address the emergency that is happening right now as companies are laying people off and cutting their capital plans? Do they not understand this?

Ms Hoffman: As I just said, Mr. Speaker, all options are on the table. Just this morning our Premier was taking the fight to Ottawa to continue to get our product moving. She announced another step in our made-in-Alberta plan to get fair value for our resources. What was the member opposite doing? He was explaining yet again why in his 10 years sitting in the Ottawa cabinet he didn't think it was his responsibility to act on pipelines. He was literally minister of employment for two years. You can't make this stuff up.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, does the hon. the Minister of Energy have any current information on planned capital spending for the upcoming winter drilling season?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, as has been mentioned, we are working with special envoy experts to work with the industry. As the member himself knows, he's had various opinions the last week about this matter, and that's how divided the industry is as well. So we're looking at every option, as our Deputy Premier has mentioned, looking at short-term, mid-term, and long-term. We're also looking at diversification options which, we have heard from industry, will also bring value to Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps my question wasn't clear, so let me restate it. Does the hon. the Minister of Energy or her department have current information on planned capital spending for the upcoming drilling season in the winter of 2019, and if so, what is it?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to further articulate government policy on this matter. Our policy is that we are committed to making sure we act on three fronts: one, making sure we address the differential immediately, because instead of planning for a decade of failure, we're working and fighting for Alberta's success; making sure that we increase rail capacity as quickly as possible, 120,000 barrels per day; and making sure we finally finish the job that the federal government that was Conservative and the provincial government that was Conservative failed to do when they had 10 years of alignment because they, quote: didn't think it was my job. That's not true. It was their job, and we'll get it done.

2:20

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, should I infer from that complete non answer that the government has no idea what planned capital spending is for the upcoming drilling season?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, this certainly is an interesting style of questions now. Maybe the former minister of employment now thinks it's his job to ask about drilling. We're working on all fronts to make sure that we're moving forward by increasing drilling, and how do we do that? We do that by addressing the differential – all options are on the table – we do that by increasing shipping supply through rail, and we do that by finally getting the failure of the last 10 years of federal Conservative government out of the way and moving our product to tidewater, as should have been done when the member opposite failed to do his job in Ottawa for 10 years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Sexual Assault Services

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All Albertans deserve to feel safe in their everyday lives. When a person is sexually assaulted, an appropriate and timely response is key to preventing further harm and reducing the risk of mental health issues. To the Minister of Health: what health supports are available for people who have been sexually assaulted?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. More and more Albertans are coming forward, bravely, to make their stories of sexual assault known more publicly, and we owe it to them to make sure that they have the supports they need. The member is right: a timely response is very important. That's why sexual assault response teams provide co-ordinated crisis response to patients within 96 hours of an assault. The sexual assault response teams provide medical treatment and can help co-ordinate supports for survivors, including counselling, follow-up assistance, and working through the legal and court systems if survivors choose that option.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Are these supports also available for people in rural Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have sexual assault response teams in Edmonton, Calgary, the member's riding of Red Deer, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, and Lloydminster. Work is under way to implement these teams in Fort McMurray and Grande Prairie as well, and we will continue to expand these services across the province so that survivors living throughout our province can get the support that they need no matter where they live. Certainly, we've done a lot, but there is still much more to be done.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Me Too movement has led to an increase in reporting of new and past sexual assaults. How are we ensuring survivors get the necessary counselling that they need to deal with the trauma and potential PTSD resulting from an assault?

Ms Hoffman: Earlier this year the Association of Alberta Sexual Assault Services told us that they were seeing a significant increase in the demand for counselling services that were requested following the Me Too movement, Mr. Speaker. We heard their calls. That's why we took immediate action to support survivors of sexual violence with an $8.1 million increase to front-line services. This investment means that survivors are getting more timely access to the counselling and care that they need, because no matter what the price of oil, it's important that we invest in our communities, that we support survivors, and that we get them the help that they need.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you. Albertans are sick and tired of the over-the-top, divisive rhetoric and non answers coming from this Deputy Premier. I'm proud of my leader, who helped to build three pipelines in the national interest, including Keystone, Alberta Clipper, and Northern Gateway. Mr. Speaker, if you remember, my very first question in this House was asking you to help me get the answers on behalf of Albertans. And today I'm so disappointed. People are watching these non answers on television. Would you help us get straight answers in the interests of Albertans?

Speaker's Ruling Insisting on Answers

The Speaker: Hon. member, I believe that comments or questions to the chair are inappropriate, and I would be prepared to discuss that matter with you outside of this House. But the decisions that are made here are not made lightly. You have a responsibility, all members – that goes for all sides of the House – to determine whether you got your question answered or not. Did you have a question to the government about government policy?

Mr. Panda: I do. I'll try again.

Mr. Panda: Given, Mr. Speaker, that the price of WCS this morning was $11.56 U.S. per barrel, or roughly 7 cents U.S. per litre, a discount of almost $40 U.S., and given that the oil and gas CEOs told me that the mandatory 10 per cent prorationing of oil production will boost prices, royalties, and save jobs, Deputy Premier, if you don't act swiftly, we lose the winter drilling season. Time is of the essence here, and we are ready and willing to help as opposition. How long will your envoys be consulting before action is taken to protect Alberta jobs and the economy?

The Speaker: Tell you what, hon. member. I think you exceeded your time limit by about two or three times, so I'm going to consider that a main question. No more supplementals.

Is there an answer?

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I appreciate what the member is trying to ask. What I will remind him is that the reason his leader has changed his suggestions or position numerous times is because I think his leader finally realized that the industry is divided. This is part of the reason why the Premier created an envoy to engage with industry, with small, mid-sized, and large companies throughout the value chain, to understand the impact of curtailment. Now, as the Deputy Premier pointed out, all options are on the table, but they have significant consequences, which we want to make sure we evaluate to make the right decision. We recognize time is of the essence. This is exactly why the Premier is in Ottawa fighting on behalf of Albertans and Alberta's energy sector.

The Speaker: The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Bighorn Area Land Use

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Love Your Trails is a coalition of 14 different Alberta organizations, all stakeholders in the Bighorn. On Monday they stated that unless the framework and decision-making process ... [respects] the provincial organizations and associations on the landscape, including them as decision makers [for] the activities and users they represent ... [we] can not support this massive land use reclassification.

Why has the government no respect for all these Albertans?

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I completely disagree with the member's preamble. It couldn't be further from the truth. The Minister of Environment and Parks is in the process of engaging not only with municipalities, municipal leaders, but also with the different regions. I actually will point to the fact and will table this today that Clearwater county, which happens to be a municipality in the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre's riding, has said that they look forward to "working with Alberta Environment and Parks and to participating in discussions and consultation related to the Bighorn Country proposal."

Mr. Nixon: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order. [interjections] Order, please. First supplemental.

Mr. Orr: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, the mayor and hundreds of people have been excluded from that thing today.

Given that on August 16 the deputy minister of environment wrote in a leaked internal e-mail,

Colleagues ... government [will] hold off releasing and consulting on the draft [North Saskatchewan regional plan] and given that he also wrote,

My department will proceed with ... a proposed Bighorn complex and that, lastly, he wrote,

Reinforce within your departments the need to be silent with stakeholders [on the Bighorn], why is the department reinforcing silence with stakeholders? What happened to transparency?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned, the Ministry and the Minister of Environment and Parks are in the process of engaging with municipalities. The proposal has been posted. She will be hosting a town hall in the coming weeks that will allow every Albertan who is interested in participating to voice their thoughts and share them with our government, with us. What I find fascinating is that members from the opposition are opposed to a proposal that will be the biggest economic development opportunity that the region has ever seen. We're talking about thousands of jobs and a potential of hundreds of millions if not billions of dollars of investment. I'd like to know why the opposition ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. Second supplemental.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a document was recently received through a freedom of information request – 713 pages, over 7,000 responses to the North Saskatchewan regional plan, the complete results of a survey conducted by the government of Alberta this spring – and given that of the 3,809 respondents for or against the Bighorn park, 85 per cent of them voted specifically no for a park, why is the minister proceeding with the exact opposite of 85 per cent of Alberta respondents?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, we've heard from a number of different community members, municipalities in the region that are looking for not only economic development opportunities. They want parks. They want opportunities for their OHVs to be able to go through. They want to be able to continue to enjoy this part of Alberta that is beautiful. We are investing in this part of Alberta. You know, I find it interesting that today the opposition – or maybe it's every day – is opposed to job creation and jobs in this much-needed economy.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Fort McMurray-Conklin.

Federal and Provincial Energy Policies

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's oil industry is in crisis. Western Canadian select was selling at a mere $11.56 U.S. a barrel, yet there's no national reaction and no real understanding of this crisis. Alberta's economy is currently losing $3 million an hour, yet this Premier and her best friend and ally Justin Trudeau are still moving forward with policies and regulations that hurt our oil industry, like the carbon tax, the tanker ban, and the no-new-pipelines bill. Why did it take so long to ask the Trudeau Liberals to kill Bill C-48?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As has been mentioned several times today, our Premier is in Ottawa at this very moment taking the case for Alberta to the east. We know that she's announced today about purchasing railcars to move 120,000 barrels per day by rail. We know that's a mid-term solution, but we have spoken out loud about Bill C-69, that in its current form is not acceptable to Alberta. In fact, today with C-48 she said that this bill...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms Goodridge: Mr. Speaker, given that the oil price differential is truly a crisis and given that this is made worse by a lack of pipelines to tidewater and given that three and a half years ago we were told that there was a silver bullet called a social licence through a carbon tax that would magically build pipelines and given that we haven't seen any luck getting pipelines to tidewater actually built and we need plural pipelines to solve the crisis, will the government agree to scrap the carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I failed to mention earlier that I am the Minister of Energy and I do support pipelines. That is my responsibility. Our Premier is in Ottawa today. She has spoken against Bill C-69, that it cannot pass in its current form. She also said that the tanker ban needs to go back to the drawing board or, in fact, maybe the trash bin because it is not helpful to Alberta. We're working every day to find solutions for our market access. We absolutely know we need pipelines to tidewater. The pipelines mentioned...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the NDP government in B.C. announced yesterday that they were intervening in support of the Trudeau Liberals' fight against Saskatchewan's carbon tax challenge and given that your government has said that you will not proceed with Trudeau's carbon tax hikes until the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion is built, will your government intervene in support of Saskatchewan and Ontario and against your best friend and ally Justin Trudeau?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know what? I'm proud to be part of a government that not only acknowledges climate change is real but has taken significant action in order to curtail it. Now, what's fascinating is that the very member should talk to some of the oil companies in her own riding, like Exxon Mobil, that is investing a million dollars to advocate in favour of a price on carbon because they know that this is one of the tools and one of the ways that we're going to reduce our greenhouse gas emissions. Imperial made a great announcement a few weeks ago of $3.6 billion in northeastern Alberta, which is using technology that uses 25 per cent less water, reduces their greenhouse gas emissions while continuing...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. Thank you.

Ms Luff: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Oil and Gas Transportation

Mr. Loewen: Recently, in response to the ongoing market access bottleneck and the worsening oil price differential, the government announced their plan to increase rail capacity for oil by increasing the number of cars available. There is no doubt that we need to increase rail capacity, but with this government's current plan, by their own admission, new capacity won't be available until late 2019, with full implementation not happening until summer 2020. To the minister. Another year of this extreme differential is untenable. What else is the government going to do to deal with this crisis?

The Speaker: The Energy minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we're working on a number of fronts on this issue, and some of them I'd like to talk about. Certainly, we heard from industry that we need to bring more value-add to Alberta, so we're working on energy upgrading with a number of programs: partial upgrading, straddle plants, you know, feedstock strategies, and more petrochemical diversification. This is all going to bring value to Alberta. We know that we can't keep shipping to the U.S., something that the three pipelines that the Leader of the Opposition questioned...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Loewen: Given that Alberta is suffering under the pressure of this crisis and this crisis is immediate and given that the NDP allies in Ottawa are pursuing an accelerated phase-out of more than 1,000 jacketed railcars and given that the NDP-Trudeau alliance has failed to deliver market access through pipelines, will this government finally go to Ottawa, stand up for Alberta, and demand that the federal government immediately shelve the plan for the accelerated phase-out of railcars?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the Premier is in Ottawa today advocating exactly that plan. With or without the federal government's help we're going to purchase railcars to help with the bottleneck that we are experiencing. We've been assured by CN that the railcars they currently have are part of, you know, the latest standard of railcars, so that is not an issue at this time. We're going to continue to do a number of things, consulting with industry about short-term, mid-term, and long-term solutions.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Loewen: Given that the Premier is in Ottawa but she is not meeting on this, contrary to what the minister said, and given that our market access dilemma has been long standing and well known and given that we are selling our oil for $10 to $12 per barrel when the market price is at $50 plus and given that this means Albertans aren't getting significant royalties for their resource and given the inability of this government to get pipelines built, why did it take this government so long to come forward with a rail strategy for Alberta oil?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, you know, never will the opposition cease to amaze me. One day it's a spend day; the next day it's a cut day. One day it's a do-something day; the next day it's a do-something-different day. Listen, we know that this is a crisis. We have been communicating this to the federal government. We engaged in our phase 2 of Keep Canada Working, that is now fully going. Not a single Member of Parliament can walk into the federal building without seeing the clock which shows how much Canada has lost in revenue because of the differential. We know this is a crisis. This is why the Premier is in Ottawa. We are engaging with industry and looking at all options.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Athabasca University

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents in the Athabasca region were happy to hear the recent announcement of a partnership between Aspen View school division, Athabasca University, and Northern Lakes College. They're also happy to know that Athabasca University is at record enrolment levels and that its future looks bright. We've come a long way. To the Minister of Advanced Education: what work has your ministry been doing to grow Athabasca University and to protect jobs in the community of Athabasca?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's a tough but fair question from the hon. member. I want to thank him for being a powerful advocate for Athabasca University and the town of Athabasca. The third-party report into the future of Athabasca University outlined the need for AU to work in collaboration with other institutions to make sure that people throughout the north can receive a high-quality postsecondary education. This latest collaboration between the school division, Northern Lakes College, and the university means that people in Athabasca will have the opportunity to go from kindergarten to PhD right in their home communities.

We know that the university set up the Athabasca University . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for that answer. My constituents in Athabasca will be very pleased to hear that.

Can the minister inform the House on how these new partnerships can help bring more high-quality, mortgage-paying jobs to Athabasca?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member continues to pull no punches.

Given the previous Conservative government's deep cuts to postsecondary education it was only a few years ago that Athabasca University was concerned about going bankrupt. Today we're pleased that the university is on a solid financial footing and is growing. This is thanks to the commitment and hard work of the faculty, staff, administration, and board of governors. By providing stable 2 per cent annual increases to the operational funding of Athabasca and our recently announced $4.9 million grant to upgrade the IT infrastructure at that university, the university is growing. We understand that it's currently recruiting for six positions.

The Speaker: Thank you again, hon. minister.

2:40

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister assure the House that this government continues to be committed to Athabasca University as a critical part of the Athabasca community?

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad the hon. member only gets three questions because I don't know if I could stand much more of this barrage.

I want to thank him for his ongoing advocacy for his constituents and I want to assure him and the people of Athabasca that our government is committed to making sure that AU remains a critical part of the town of Athabasca. I know that he and others from the town are worried because the cuts to postsecondary education, that the members opposite continue to advocate for, had serious effects on the town from 2013 to 2015. Our government is committed to continuing to invest in postsecondary education in Athabasca to keep the university and the community strong.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we'll continue in 30 seconds.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Northern Spirit Light Show in Grande Prairie

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Each winter the Northern Spirit Light Show turns Grande Prairie's Evergreen Park into an enchanting nighttime wonderland. Please imagine a dark, icy evening with a soft glow from the snow-covered ground. You venture out to Evergreen Park, where more than 200 brightly lit displays sparkle in the crisp air. Some displays give the appearance of motion while others arc over the pathway, and when you look up, stars dot the sky. The bells of draft horses jingle softly as a team gently pulls you in a rustic wagon, where you huddle under a blanket with family and friends. This is the Northern Spirit Light Show, which has become a family tradition for tens of thousands of Grande Prairie residents.

The creativity and innovation of the charming homemade displays are wondrous to children and adults alike. Volunteers from the Peace Draft Horse Club dedicate countless hours to making this Christmas dream world a reality for our community. These hard-working, fun-loving people make the experience much more enjoyable for everyone. Through this event the club also collects contributions for charities like the Food Bank and the Salvation Army. Last year it raised $50,000 from donations alone.

Mr. Speaker, this club grants Christmas wishes every year. Our community values the immense work that goes into creating this magic. For this reason I'd like to share my own special Christmas wish. A generation from now I hope that my young granddaughters experience the same delight as Sherry and I when they, too, have the opportunity to cozy up in a horse-drawn wagon with their families at the Northern Spirit Light Show.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oil Price Differentials and Pipeline Development

Mr. Carson: Mr. Speaker, when I talk to people in my community, I hear constantly about the need to diversify our economy and get better value for our resources. The price differential we are currently experiencing is hurting Albertans across the province. Many ask me how we ended up in this situation.

Certainly, the Premier is doing her part. Just today she went before the Canadian Club of Ottawa to call for solutions to fix the differential, like adding rail capacity. She has fought since day one to secure a pipeline to tidewater because she understands the importance of opening new markets. When the Trans Mountain expansion is complete, it will be the first pipeline to tidewater in more than 60 years.

But there have been opportunities lost long before our government came into office. Take the Northern Gateway pipeline, a project that was mismanaged by the opposition leader and his pals in the Stephen Harper cabinet. The Federal Court of Appeal said the federal Conservatives "failed to make reasonable efforts to inform and consult." They said the Conservatives "fell well short of the mark." The Conservatives refused to listen to First Nations and provided incorrect information about this critical project. When asked about his record on pipelines in this very House this week, the opposition leader said, "I wasn't responsible for pipelines." Interesting.

Now the opposition leader is seeking a mandate with the promise that he will actually pay attention to our energy industry and our economic interests. Mr. Speaker, that's about as believable as an immigration ceremony hosted by Sun News media and the Leader of the Opposition. After all, the opposition leader was proud to bring in the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, who worked on the presidential campaign for Donald Trump. Just last week Trump was gloating about how the dictatorship in Saudi Arabia is deliberately suppressing the price of oil. With friends like these, who needs enemies?

Mr. Speaker, I'm sure glad that I sit on this side of the House, because as a member of the government caucus I can say without hesitation that I am responsible for fighting for pipelines to new markets, whether it's in my job title or not.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to give oral notice of a bill for the next Order Paper, that bill being Bill 32, the City Charters Fiscal Framework Act, which will be sponsored by the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Bill 211

Alberta Underground Infrastructure Notification System Consultation Act

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce private member's Bill 211, the Alberta Underground Infrastructure Notification System Consultation Act.

The goal of this bill is a reasoned request to the government to establish a mandatory underground infrastructure notification system. Unfortunately, Alberta One-Call, according to the act, requires only provincially and federally regulated pipelines to be registered. All other buried utilities or infrastructure participate solely on a volunteer basis. Fifty-one per cent of all damages in Alberta in 2017 went forward without a locate request to Alberta One-Call. This legislation will help with the path forward.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 211 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 74.1(1)(b) I would move that Bill 211, the Alberta Underground Infrastructure Notification System Consultation Act, be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship and that this committee report the bill back to the Assembly the week of March 4, 2019, in order to allow the necessary stakeholders the opportunity to provide their feedback before we proceed with debate.

[Motion carried]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings of reports. The first is the Alberta Gaming, Liquor and Cannabis 2017-18 annual report. I'm pleased to table five copies of it. The tabling of these five copies will ensure compliance with the Gaming, Liquor and Cannabis Act.

The second one is the Alberta Capital Finance Authority 2017 annual report. I'm pleased to table five copies of this report. It includes the audited financial statements. Tabling these five copies will ensure compliance with the Alberta Capital Finance Authority Act, Mr. Speaker.

Lastly, I am tabling five copies of the Alberta Securities Commission 2018 annual report. The tabling of ASC's 2018 annual report will ensure compliance with the Alberta Securities Act.

That's all I have to table. Thank you.

2:50

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. I wonder if you've had an opportunity to do any sailing lately. No?

Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite number of copies for three tablings. The first is a news release from Love Your Trails, a coalition of 14 different organizations in Alberta. I also include with this one a list of the 14 organizations so that everyone can see them.

The second one, Mr. Speaker, is a copy of a letter that we received, e-mailed by the deputy minister, outlining the fact that they were going to hold off on consulting on the North Saskatchewan regional plan, that they were going to proceed with the Bighorn complex anyway, and that members of the departments were to be silent about it with stakeholders.

The third one, Mr. Speaker, is a copy of a few of the 713 FOIPed pages, with some of the details, many pages of the comments, from individuals that indicate that 85 per cent of respondents to the North Saskatchewan regional plan survey were, in fact, clearly opposed to the creation of the Bighorn park.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, I rise to table the requisite copies of nine letters from Alberta stakeholders that support Bill 211. They are Alberta companies that support a mandatory underground infrastructure notification system. Requesting a locate with Alberta One-Call before you dig costs nothing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I sent you a note in advance asking your indulgence for about 60 seconds to read into the record a letter that I sent you this morning, before question period, dated today.

It has always been difficult for small parties and independents to make themselves heard in Alberta's legislature, but recent attempts by the Government and Official Opposition to monopolize power and even debate, has made this... task impossible.

I write this letter to you to highlight some of [the] already stated concerns, and would request an urgent meeting with you to help address some of the necessary reforms that are required to return some balance to the Assembly.

In this discussion with you I wish to address the correction of: question period rotation, committee membership, and the misuse [of] Standing Order 49.

The unprecedented actions of the Government and Official Opposition on the evening sitting of November 26th, 2018 was an open and malicious attempt to silence all members of the Legislative Assembly outside of their two parties.

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order has been noted.

Mr. Fildebrandt:

The imposition of Standing Order 49 without any debate whatsoever has never been undertaken in the history of Alberta.

I recognize your role as speaker as an impartial arbitrator [and upholder of rights of members] and as such...

Mr. Nixon: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm sensing that the House would like that this matter not be shared any longer. [interjection] If you would have a chair, please.

Thank you.

The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today in question period I had referenced a news release from Clearwater county, and I want to table the requisite number of copies. Clearwater county "looks forward to working with Alberta Environment and Parks and to participating in discussions and consultation related to the Bighorn Country proposal, as the process moves forward."

The Speaker: The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table several letters – I have the appropriate number of copies – from people associated with the Alberta Common Ground Alliance in support of looking at Bill 211, which this House sent to committee today to be looked at.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Acting Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Carlier, Minister of Agriculture and Forestry, pursuant to the Farm Implement Act the Farmers' Advocate office annual report 2017-18.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we are at points of order. The Official Opposition House Leader.

Point of Order

Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise under – I believe we're on the first point of order – 23(h), (i), (j), particularly "language... to create disorder" in this place. The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade, in response to a question that was being asked by the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, I believe, made a couple of statements. I'll be very brief in explaining to you my concerns with them.

He referred, first of all, to Clearwater county in a way that made it sound like Clearwater county was endorsing the NDP's plan, which is very far from the truth. Instead, what Clearwater county said is that they're looking forward to working with the government. Most of my community, Mr. Speaker, is looking forward to working with the government. We wish they would show up and talk to us. Lastly, he referred to open consultation during their 70-day period of consultation over Christmas.

Now, the reason I rise on this, Mr. Speaker, and I believe this language creates disorder in this place is that, first of all, that is not what Clearwater county said. I believe that is a misrepresentation which will cause disorder in this place. Second of all, this morning in this so-called consultation my staff were blocked and hundreds of people from Rocky Mountain House were blocked. That is not consultation. Further to that, not one town councillor was allowed to be in the consultation this morning.

For this government to continue to stand up in this House and pretend that they're doing consultation during their sham process creates disorder in this place. That minister should apologize, one, for their ridiculous...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I think I've heard the point. We're speaking more to the subject matter.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the Official Opposition House Leader and Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre is unhappy with the nature of the consultation around the Bighorn. Nevertheless, there is no point of order. Simply because he disagrees with the characterization of the minister of the consultation that took place around the Bighorn and is taking place around the Bighorn does not make it a matter of a point of order. If it causes disorder, it is only in – well, I don't know how to put this – the mind of the hon. member. I understand that there are people in the community that do not agree with the approach. But in dealing with the point of order here, it's a disagreement between members and nothing more.

The Speaker: Is there something substantive you have to contribute to the discussion?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Always.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think I've already concluded my decision with regard to this particular point of order.

In this instance I agree with the Government House Leader. This was a question of interpretation. I refer all of you yet again to paragraph 494 of Beauchesne's. It is a matter of disagreement about the facts.

I think we have a second point of order, and I think the second point of order is from Calgary-East.

Point of Order Recognizing Members in Oral Question Period

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order under standing orders 16 and 17, which state that every member wishing to speak will rise in his or her place and that when two or more members rise to speak, the Speaker will call on the member who, in their opinion, first rose. Now, today and other days I have risen towards the end of question period to be recognized, several times very clearly, particularly today, before another member has risen to speak.

Now, I recognize, Mr. Speaker, that it is the convention of the House to use lists to determine the order of question period, but there is no rule that states it must be so. In House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 505, it states that "the Speaker is under no obligation to use such lists." In a ruling of the federal House of Commons in 2013 Speaker Scheer noted that the chair's "authority to decide who is recognized to speak is indisputable and has not been trumped by the use of lists." According to page 317 of Procedure and Practice "it is the responsibility of the Speaker to act as the guardian of the rights and privileges of Members and of the House as an institution." Since as an independent member I am not involved in House leaders' meetings, I can't advocate to increase my number of questions. Therefore, it falls to the Speaker to make these decisions.

It is my understanding as per page 498 of Parliamentary Procedure that the role of question period is to allow members the opportunity to hold the government to account. Now, currently not all members in this House are given equal opportunities to perform this role. Official Opposition members get approximately 1.7 questions per week each. Alberta Party members get approximately 2 questions per week each, but independent members, Mr. Speaker, only get one question each per week. Now, I do recognize that backbench members of the government don't get that same opportunity, but I think that if you look at the role of question period as holding the government to account, it is fair that they get fewer questions. Also, in some parliaments in Canada backbench government members don't get questions at all.

I'd also like to point out that particularly today, Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition was not going according to the list. The Leader of the Official Opposition stood up when he felt it suited him. They messed around a little bit towards the end. I could tell, because I was able to stand up so soon before them, that they weren't entirely sure what was going on. I don't think it's entirely fair.

Also, I think it's fair to point out that nearly all of the questions from the Official Opposition today were the same question. They were the same question over and over and over again, and the government gave the same answer over and over and over again. That's not really a particularly good use of question period in my mind, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think I've heard the case you're making. I'm trying to determine if it's an explanation on decisions I've made or it is with respect to a specific standing order.

Ms Luff: Well, the specific standing orders, Mr. Speaker, are standing orders 16 and 17. I am challenging the use of lists as the way that we've decided to do things in question period.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I'm sure I'm going to hear from the Government House Leader and maybe the Opposition House Leader on this point.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. An interesting point of order, one that I think completely misses the point and the intent of the rules and the practices of this place. Now, the hon. member has quoted standing orders 16 and 17. Standing Order 16 says: "Every Member desiring to speak is to rise in his or her place and address the Speaker." Number 17 says: "When 2 or more Members rise to speak, the Speaker calls on the Member who, in the Speaker's opinion, first rose in his or her place."

Mr. Speaker, this of course refers to people wishing to speak in debate, because there's an entirely different set of rules, which the hon. member should know, surrounding question period. Let me just provide a little bit of enlightenment here. The long-standing practice of this Assembly is consistent with guidelines outlined in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, namely that the bulk of question period consists of questions from the Official Opposition as well as other recognized parties. Every day there is at least one question from an independent member who, based on the precedent of the Assembly, are each entitled to one question per weekly rotation.

The House of Commons Procedure and Practice says this at page 504. It's a little bit of a lengthy section, but I think it's worth reading.

At the beginning of the Thirty-Sixth Parliament in 1997, an arrangement for the conduct of Question Period was put in place by Speaker Parent after consultations with the House Leaders of all officially recognized parties. This pattern has slightly evolved to this day. It now consists of having the Speaker recognize the Leader of the Opposition, or the lead questioner for his or her party, for a round of three questions. The Leader of the Opposition, or a second Member from the Official Opposition, is then recognized for two more questions. Afterwards, lead questioners from the other officially recognized opposition parties are recognized. After this initial round of questions, the recognition pattern varies depending on party representation in the House and the number of Members in each party. Members are typically allowed to ask an initial question followed by an additional question; historically, the second one was to be a supplementary question, arising from the first, but the linkage between initial and supplementary questions is no longer required.

Members representing the governing party are also recognized to ask questions, although not as often as opposition Members.

This is important, Mr. Speaker.

Participation in Question Period is managed, to a large extent, by the various caucuses and their Whips and can be the subject of negotiations among the parties. Each party decides which of its Members will participate in Question Period and each day provides the Speaker with a list of the names and the suggested order of recognition of these Members. Each party's list is typically compiled by the Whip or the Member, or Members, managing that party's strategy for Question Period. Although the Speaker is under no obligation to use such lists, it has become a common practice of the House. With this list as a guide, the Speaker uses his or her discretion in recognizing Members to ask questions.

Members of political parties not officially recognized in the House and independent Members are permitted to ask questions, although not as frequently as those Members belonging to recognized parties. During the Thirty-Fifth Parliament (1994-97), when the number of these Members climbed as high as 17 over the life of the Parliament, the Speaker attempted to recognize at least one of them every other Question Period, if not every day, generally towards the end of the proceedings. Since 1997, independent Members have been recognized to pose questions on a regular basis and, in recent years, on a daily basis.

That is from the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, Mr. Speaker, which has long served as a guide for us in this House, although it can be that practices in the Parliament are slightly varied in this Assembly.

Now, Mr. Speaker, consistent with this and consistent with the practice of this Assembly, the various House leaders of the parties who have been recognized in this House met to discuss question period rotation and the rotation of members' statements and have reached an agreement and a proposal, which was put to you in writing. I don't have the date exactly. That was accepted by you, and this forms the guide for the conduct of question period for this House. The hon. member who has raised this is granted one question every four days, as are all the other independent members. She will have a question tomorrow, which is day 3 in the rotation, and in day 7 of the eight-day rotation. That is consistent with the practice of this place for independent members.

It may not have escaped people's notice, but the Westminster system is not a system that is designed for individual personalities pursuing their own goals and desires. It is set up as facilitating a team approach because the function of the parliament is to create a team of people who are capable of forming a government. That is not accomplished by a bunch of individual people each pursuing their own direction. I might add, Mr. Speaker, that caucuses, including whips and House leaders, are provided for in the legislation that governs this place. I hate to break it to the hon. member and some other independents, but this system is designed to facilitate the functioning of a government and an opposition who seeks to replace that government. It is not dominated by individuals, as some would perhaps prefer.

That, I think, Mr. Speaker, summarizes the position here. In my view there is absolutely no point of order. Of course, we were wondering why the hon. member kept popping up and down during question period, but hopefully she will get a ruling from you that will straighten out the matter.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The House leader for the Official Opposition.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks for recognizing me. I will not be as long as my colleague the Government House Leader. I think that there's no point in repeating much of what he has stated, though I do agree with what he has referenced. I will reinforce, though, that the standing orders that the hon. member references are in the category of debate and not question period. It's fairly clear within our standing orders at the top that it has to do with debate.

Additionally, I think the second point that I would like to reinforce through you, Mr. Speaker, is that there is a question period rotation and a members' statement rotation that has been agreed to by the House leaders. It is negotiated outside of the Chamber, but then it has ultimately been submitted to you. You have then read it to this place and have agreed to what the House leaders have recommended on behalf of their caucuses.

The third thing I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, is that you have asked us in your capacity as the Speaker and the chair, who is never wrong, to actually not have our members pop up during question period and to wait until they are recognized by you. I would like to continue to do those instructions for you whereas where the member is going on right now, we would have everybody attempting to pop up.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, as you know, in our caucus, in my role as Official Opposition House Leader, I quarterback question period. While I'm disappointed to hear that the hon. member did not like the questions I called, it's okay; I didn't like the answers that came with the questions that I called. That's the reality of my role.

As you know, I attempt to communicate with you as I make those changes to the order, and then I submit that list to you in advance to try to make life easier for you. We will continue to do that, but we will also continue to exercise our right and our ability to put up members that we think are most appropriate given what is happening with the tone in question period.

With that, I would ask that you rule against this point of order.

The Speaker: Member for Strathmore-Brooks, do you have something substantive? Again, I'd speak to the matter.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Of course, I do, Mr. Speaker. I would hate to disappoint you.

The Speaker: I think I have my decision on that, so I am going to ask you to be very brief and speak to the point of order.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yes. Well, you've allowed two members speaking against it and one for it. I do have further to add to it. I will not repeat arguments already made. The hon. Government House Leader referred to precedents around this that occur on question period rotation. It is based on precedents of one question every four days. I will withdraw if I am, in fact, mistaken, but if I am not mistaken, the two single-member caucuses for the Liberal Party and the Alberta Party when they were single-member caucuses – one still is – at the beginning of this Legislature had three questions every two weeks. I will withdraw that if the Member for Calgary-Elbow would correct me. But if I'm not mistaken, independent and single-member caucuses actually did have more questions during this very Legislature with three questions every two weeks. I just wanted to correct the record. And if I'm not mistaken, those questions were at a higher order of precedence in the question period rotation.

Now, the House leaders' agreements surrounding question period are negotiated by the Government House Leader, the Opposition House Leader, and the House leaders of other recognized parties. It is generally accepted that the Speaker accepts it but is not required to. But in this we are in a rather unprecedented situation where there are five MLAs, the G-5, if you will, who are not aligned with officially recognized parties. There are several other officially recognized caucuses, but the G-5 is an unprecedented number, and to have it entirely excluded even from consultation on a House leaders' agreement excludes a very significant, large number of Albertans.

I do consider this a point of order, but at the very least it's worth consideration that there are five MLAs, which is more than enough to form, actually, an official party, not that that's going to happen. That would be a bit of a stretch. Those five represent more than an official party. None of us have even been consulted or asked. That is to be taken into consideration. As the Government House Leader himself has said – I'll end with this, Mr. Speaker – when it comes to the House leaders' agreements, you are under no obligation to use such lists. So I would ask that you rule that this is a point of order and, in any case, consider calling a meeting of the House leaders.

The Speaker: I think the arguments that have been put forward are interesting. I have spoken to the Member for Calgary-East about this issue and have, I think, communicated a couple of notes to her. For the record, in addition to some of the other members of the House, I too saw you rising on numerous occasions over the last few days. But it's important to remember that you're correct, first of all, on the point about where it applies. The reference that you were dealing with was in a debate rather than in the OQP. Secondly, as it's been cited here, you are correct to the extent that the Speaker does have the authority, if need be, to determine how he or she would distribute the questions.

However, in this instance – and I'm trying to reflect – I believe there may have been one. I'm not certain, in my term in the chair, that I may not have accepted that agreement, but almost always consistently I have accepted the agreement reached by the House leaders. Now, in addition to that, there was the tabling. I believe the Deputy Speaker tabled an order on I think the date was November 20. It laid out the order of various questions to the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. I can't recall the exact configuration, but the principle was that myself as the Speaker had agreed to the agreement that had been brought forward.

I would encourage the Member for Calgary-East and others, if they wish, to make contact with the House leaders, express your concerns, and they may well consider the points of view being made, but it stands as of today. I've accepted it, and that's where we're going to move to.

Now, I think I saw four or five other points of order. Which one? Who wants to start, and who's prepared to withdraw?

Point of Clarification

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, under 13(2), "The Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision on the request of a Member." Today the Member for Strathmore-Brooks stood in his place and began to read out in full a letter that he had written to you. The first reason that I rose was because I was wondering why the member wasn't called to order. When people are tabling correspondence, they're normally limited to just a sentence or two to explain what the correspondence or what the document contains. That was the first thing.

The second thing I wanted to ask about was: the rule, as I understand it, is that because it's question period and to prevent members from deliberately disrupting and interfering with the conduct of a set of questions, those points of order are taken at the end. Now, as far as I'm aware, any other points of order that are made are to be dealt with at the time and the speaker is normally interrupted.

So I guess I would ask you to explain those two decisions.

The Speaker: To the first point about the amount of time that was used in getting it read into the record, it was excessive, and I did ultimately interject. However, I also know that in times past brevity has not always existed when documents like that – and I can't believe that the Government House Leader might be an example of that. But the normal practice that you speak of: I'm finding that there's very little similarity to what is normal. It has everything to do with at the time.

To the second question that you asked, you make a very good point. I'm going to take a look at that issue and see whether or not the manner in which I dealt with the matter was appropriate. Again, though, I would argue that the principle that I think you're addressing is that ultimately it is the Speaker's decision to decide that, as the Opposition House Leader has pointed out. Just because the two House leaders don't agree, it doesn't necessarily change my mind.

Are there any other points of order?

Mr. Nixon: My point of order is similar to the hon. Government House Leader's, and I will happily withdraw, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Orders of the Day Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 26 An Act to Combat Poverty and Fight for Albertans with Disabilities

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to once again speak to Bill 26, An Act to Combat Poverty and Fight for Albertans with Disabilities. We are so proud of this bill and have been overwhelmed by the responses of Albertans, Albertans who have said that they have been calling for this change for decades and are finally seeing a government listen, Albertans who have said that indexing will provide greater stability to their lives so that they can care for their children and plan for their future, and Albertans who have said that for far too long they have been stigmatized, made to beg for supports while politicians turned their backs on them. I can't agree more. This change is absolutely overdue, and we are proud to bring it forward.

The previous government did nothing in this regard for 44 years. They never indexed these supports despite repeated calls from disability and antipoverty advocates and when oil was trading at $100 a barrel. Instead, they made Albertans beg for supports. They portrayed people who rely on these supports as fraudulent and undeserving, just as the Member for Calgary-Hays did when he called health care for people with disabilities giveaways, or the Leader of the Official Opposition, who has called for spending levels in line with B.C., which would mean a $500 reduction to people's monthly AISH benefit.

The members opposite have shown a disregard for the rights and dignity of people with disabilities, and our government will not support that. Instead, we are taking action to fight for these Albertans through this bill. Our proposed changes will support a quarter of a million Albertans with disabilities and low-income Albertans. They will provide greater stability and predictability for families and improve affordability. We have been overwhelmed by the positive response to this bill, and we are grateful to the thousands of Albertans, disability advocates, and antipoverty advocates who have worked for these changes.

Before I turn it over to my colleagues to speak, I do want to take a moment to respond to a few questions that came up during second reading. The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre and the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills raised a question about access to medications. I want to confirm that this bill will not change medication coverage for AISH clients. AISH will continue to provide prescription and nonprescription drug coverage from any Alberta pharmacy through the AISH health benefit card. We are absolutely committed to protecting these important health benefits because we know how important they are to the people who count on AISH.

The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills raised a question about the funding for this bill. We have shared this information from the beginning, but I can certainly share it again. We are committed to providing strong and stable funding for public services, including health care, education, and social services, while staying on our path to balance. This much-needed investment in Albertans and in our communities will be $46 million in '18-19 and $194 million in '19-20.

The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster also raised the issue of supports for Albertans with service dogs. I'm pleased to address this, as this has been a priority for our government. I also want to recognize the important advocacy of many Albertans, including Mr. Les Landry, who has been a strong advocate for this issue. As the member may know, for too many years Albertans with disabilities, with PTSD have had to deal with long wait-lists. That is unacceptable. That is why in 2017 we made changes to increase Albertans' access to service dogs and cut down on wait times.

Our changes allowed more schools to train dogs, which gave more Albertans opportunities to participate in their communities. Individuals with owner-trained dogs can also get their animal tested to become qualified. For Albertans on AISH with service animals there is a monthly benefit available. This assists Albertans with the usual cost of caring for a service dog. To better support these Albertans, our bill proposes to index this benefit and other personal benefits as of January 1.

There was also a question about CPP. I mentioned this in my comments, and I am pleased to speak to it again. We know there is much more work to do to address the issues the previous government neglected. We are very interested in hearing feedback from Albertans on this issue. We know there are concerns, and we are committed to exploring this issue and all other issues that matter to them with Albertans. We would like to look at this more fully and in the context of other exemption categories. We have heard from people that they want an opportunity to share feedback on this issue, and we are absolutely committed to doing that.

The last thing I want to do before I wrap up is to speak to an amendment we are bringing forward. I would like to move this amendment on behalf of my colleague the Member for St. Albert. As mentioned during the Henson trust bill debate and in the second reading of this bill, we committed to looking at employment earnings exemptions. We have done this work and are pleased to bring forward an increase to earning exemptions caps for Albertans who count on AISH. We know these earning exemptions are very important to Albertans. Employment provides a connection . . .

The Chair: Hon. minister, if I could just ask you to pause for a second and maybe distribute the amendment before you go ahead and explain it. That would be helpful to the House.

Mr. Sabir: Sure. I can wait until it's distributed.

3:30

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair. I was talking about employment. Employment provides a connection to community and allows people to have more money in their pockets. These exemptions have not been changed for many years. The amendment brought forward by the Member for St. Albert changes that. Employment exemptions will be increased as of January 1.

The full exemption maximum for a single person with no children will jump from $800 to $1,072, an almost $300 increase. In addition, the client can exempt 50 per cent of employment income earned between $1,072 and $2,009. And single clients will therefore be able to exempt a total of up to $1,541 of employment income, which is an almost $400 increase. For families the full exemption maximum will jump to $2,612. Families can also exempt 50 per cent of employment income earned between $2,612 and $3,349. Families will therefore be able to exempt a total of up to $2,981 of employment income.

Going forward, the new income exemption threshold amounts would be increased in proportion to future increases to Alberta's minimum wage. In addition to this change, our amendment will increase passive business and spousal pension income exemptions to put more money in people's pockets.

I'm very pleased that my colleague is bringing this forward, and I look forward to her speaking to this amendment in greater detail later today. I also hope all the members will be able to support this, and thank you. I look forward to your comments and discussion in the House.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for — I'm doing it again — Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to the amendment. I would like to thank the minister, as much as it pains me from time to time to do that . . .

An Hon. Member: Feel free to do it often.

Mr. Cooper: Oh, I spent most of the day thanking the Minister of Municipal Affairs, all sorts of stuff. It wasn't my best.

. . . for sending the amendment to my office prior to now. As you can see, Madam Chair, it is a significant amendment with significant ramifications. I can't remember if it was on this particular piece of legislation or not, but I know that on occasion I have certainly made recommendations that we consult on legislation once it's introduced in the House. One of the reasons why members of the Official Opposition continue to make this recommendation is not just for fun but because these sorts of amendments — large six-, seven-, eight-page amendments — come before the Assembly asking the opposition to vote on an amendment on what, in many cases, is short notice. So I am grateful for the fact that we did have the opportunity to preview this amendment prior, but I think the point remains the same with respect to committee. One of the great things is that if we had been at committee, we would have been able to discuss more fully why this amendment is needed. We could have heard from individuals.

I know — and I'm sure the member will remember, and I definitely know that the Member for Calgary-Currie will remember — that the last time we discussed some of these very similar issues, members of the Official Opposition proposed amendments and made recommendations that are very similar to what is in this particular amendment. In fact, in a conversation that I had with the minister not that long ago, I had expressed some desire or an indication that the Official Opposition was in fact considering an amendment similar to the one that we have before us. It's not identical, and this particular amendment is a bit wider in its breadth than the one that we had prepared and were ready to move on behalf of individuals that are on AISH and would also like to earn income from jobs that won't have a negative impact on their AISH payment.

You'll know, Madam Chair, that there are massive, massive positive effects that can come from employment of those individuals who also receive AISH benefits, both benefit to the individual as well as benefit to the economy. It was the reason why initially the members from the Official Opposition had recommended an amendment similar on previous legislation, because any time that we can provide folks with more value, with more desire to strive, with more desire to be part of a wider economy and to reward their efforts for that – it seems so strange that if folks are able and willing and it is possible for them to have a positive impact, we would limit their potential.

I certainly will be supporting this amendment. I encourage my colleagues of the Official Opposition to do so, just as, Madam Chair, I will be supporting the legislation. I haven't had much of an opportunity as of yet to speak to that. I intend to do that a little bit later in debate, but on balance this particular piece of legislation is going to make a great impact in the lives of many Albertans and, in particular, those who receive AISH benefits.

I know that one of my favourite constituents – now, I know that that's a dangerous thing to say, Madam Chair, to single out any one constituent as your favourite. [interjections] I didn't say the favourite; I said a favourite, so you can have more than one favourite. Trust me. If you have more than one child, you know that you can have more than one favourite. Her name is Christine. She knows that during the legislative session I'm in the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills every Friday, so every Friday Christine pops by the office. She's also an AISH recipient, and she also has worked at the A&W in Olds for the last 14 straight years. She comes and sees me every Friday.

An Hon. Member: I thought you'd see her at the drive-in.

Mr. Cooper: Yes. I often see her at A&W as well, but in this particular case she comes and sees me every Friday, and we have a chat about all sorts of stuff.

She, for the record, really doesn't like the federal government. She's generally speaking not too keen on this government as well, but I gave her the news that she was going to receive a significant income should the legislation pass. Of course, I would never presuppose a decision of the Assembly, but I provided her the information that if the bill would pass – and I would expect that it would – she would receive a significant increase in her AISH payment. What an amazing difference it made to her, and she was so, so, so very excited about the things that she was going to be able to do now because of that. And then she was equally as excited when I suggested to her that I was also going to try and increase the amount that she could work at A&W so that it would be an added incentive for her.

That particular conversation took place prior to the conversation that I had with the minister where I found out that he had also decided that that would be a reasonable change to make at this point in time. I know that she was very excited, as are so many. I also appreciate the fact that the larger piece of legislation is going to be tied to the CPI and trying to depoliticize some of these sorts of decisions that can be made by the Assembly from time to time.

With all that said, I encourage my colleagues to support the amendment and look forward to continuing to support the legislation as we move forward in the debate.

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm very happy to speak to this amendment and actually provide a little bit of perspective to this amendment. Clearly, this amendment focuses on the people who currently receive AISH. There are currently 55,000 people who are on AISH. A lot of those folks do work, whether they work part-time, casually, some of them full-time, and they do that for a number of reasons that I'll get into. It's really important not just to take the really bold step to index AISH benefits but to also look at employment earnings, and I think tying those future changes to minimum wage was perfect because it was about employment.

But, again, what I'm going to speak to a little bit is that I think it's really important to provide some perspective as to how we got here. For people with disabilities who are tuned in today, I do want to speak directly to them and provide some important perspective.

For the last four decades, until 2015, Albertans have been under the rule of one political party. Under that one party supports for people with disabilities suffered the same fate as infrastructure, education, health care, and other social services. The reality of Band-Aid solutions constantly being applied to gaping wounds got us to the place we arrived at in 2015, when Albertans chose a new way. The opposition has taken the position of late that they will soon resume their rightful place as the ruling party. Using that lens, I would like to remind Albertans with disabilities where we came from and how we've progressed over the last three and a half years and how we got to this place today: Bill 26 and this amendment.

In the 1990s the Conservative mantra was Cut First, Ask Questions Later. As revenues from the oil and gas industry dropped more than 50 per cent, the Conservatives instituted a 15 per cent reduction in program spending over six years while giving out $11 billion in subsidies to agriculture, oil, and gas. The Conservatives' cuts focused on health care, education, and social services. Between '92 and 2000 the Conservatives cut 14,753 health care positions. As the international price of oil started to climb and the economy was showing signs of recovery, the Conservatives slowed that economic recovery. They slowed it by putting thousands of people out of work, overburdening social programs like AISH, and reducing the purchasing power of families. The Conservatives refused to invest in infrastructure, and we continue to deal with that deficit today. They made us more dependent on one resource, instituting a flat tax that literally took $2 billion out of government coffers.

So why am I looking backwards? I wanted to provide a context as to why this bill is so unique, so essential, and so important. It took a lot of courage for us to do this and to arrive here today.

During the Conservative focus on deficit reduction in the '90s we saw the AISH program's failure to adjust to the cost of living, a failure to protect people with disabilities from the effects of inflation. In 1993 AISH was $810 per month. Four years later AISH was raised by $18. In '97 AISH was $818 a month. Two years later AISH was raised by $32. Six years after that it was raised by $338. Obviously, prices were good. Money was thrown at this program. In 2005 AISH was $1,188 per month. Seven years later AISH was raised by $400. It seemed like a great win at the time, but the seven years leading up to that were brutal. In 2012 that put AISH at $1,588, where it sat until now.

Bill 26 proposes to do what no Conservative combination of government and leadership had the foresight or courage to do since the creation of AISH in 1979. Bill 26 ensures that Albertans with disabilities, their families, and allies will know that their AISH benefits will be adjusted to the consumer price index. It's important to compare this change to the actions we know Conservatives have taken when the international price of oil creates economic hardship in an economy that has not yet diversified sufficiently to absorb the shocks of falling prices. That's not all. The legacy of decades of one-party rule, Conservative Party rule, created deficits within the AISH program that we are finally addressing. Let me remind you that the AISH program provides over 50,000 Albertans with $1 billion in benefits.

The UCP told Albertans that they would feel pain. The UCP crow about B.C.'s spending levels, which are 20 per cent lower than Alberta's. Where do you think they're going to take us if they resume their rightful place? Imagine a 20 per cent cut to AISH benefits. A 20 per cent cut to $1 billion in AISH benefits is $200 million. What does a cut like that to AISH look like? If you use an annual benefit amount of $20,400, that translates to 9,800 AISH recipients. Add to that the cost of not funding intake, that means not supporting people who are newly eligible – perhaps they're injured or they moved to Alberta or they turn 18 – and the deficit is massive. The problem is huge. While I appreciate that the opposition members will stand up and act supportive of supports for people with disabilities, remember their history and listen to their nonplatform platform. It will hurt. They can tell you all they like about how much they support this amendment and this bill, but when it comes down to it, when the rubber meets the road, they will not vote for a budget that increases AISH benefits.

In November of 2016 Alberta's Auditor General brilliantly outlined improvements to AISH that were long overdue, once again ignored by decades of a previous government. People with disabilities, their allies, and families knew first-hand that the AISH application process was not easily accessed and was the opposite of user-friendly. I believe the Auditor General said that the AISH application process was best suited for people good at filling out forms. That was a system created under the Conservative government. Finally we're introducing changes that should have been made decades ago. The websites and links have been updated, tested, and revised. That's called consultation. The website is accessible from mobile devices. The AISH application is finally in plain language, and staff are being trained so that there is equity in decision-making. Applications for end-of-life care and for people who are already approved for PDD supports are shorter and simpler.

Albertans who have applied for AISH benefits know that eligibility processes were broken. They knew that. They knew for a long time. AISH application processing times were far too long. There were not sufficient processes in place to monitor processing times and practices. Information given at the denial phase was not consistent, and appeal panel decisions were not tracked. The huge number of very costly AISH decision appeals was an indicator of a broken system. The previous government knew that, and they didn't do anything about that. We've now addressed these old deficits and have installed mechanisms to enable us to track and analyze processes.

Alberta's Auditor General also told us that there were inadequate performance measures to monitor and report on the efficiency of the program, leaving us unable to monitor outcomes, identify gaps, and ultimately improve. We've changed that, and that's where you see real progress because we have a baseline. As we move forward, we will be able to make changes that matter.

In three and a half years we've continued to pull this old system into the 21st century. It's important to acknowledge the progress made in the short three and a half years. I acknowledge that the last three and a half years have not been perfect. I'm far from a patient person, and I would've liked it to happen a lot faster, but I am profoundly grateful that it is happening. There is a huge difference between our vision and the path forward and that of the UCP. They may not say much, but that says a lot. The difference is one of going backwards while claiming it's the Alberta advantage or one of continuing to consult and revise old systems while reaching for a future that embraces progress and inclusivity.

That future began in 2015, when Albertans chose a government that would create a future that doesn't leave anyone behind. In three and a half years while trying to manage the worst recession in decades, we did not cut and fire but began the process of addressing a system that was neglected, overburdened, and underfunded for decades. Over 50,000 Albertans who rely on AISH deserved better all along, and now they're getting it. A new vision and a path forward for AISH is what we are committed to doing: to improve the intake process and practice; to index and to increase AISH benefits for both the standard of living allowance and the modified living allowance; to maintain health-related personal benefits such as special diets, orthotics, equipment and maintenance of mobility aids, service animal supports, addiction-related expense, and special dietary needs; maintaining health benefits that are essential to people with disabilities; and amending employment earnings exemptions and indexing future rates to Alberta's minimum wage.

This was a dream for many people with disabilities and their allies. The fact that it's happening today: I'm just so enormously grateful. Why is this support for employment so important? Well, I think the member touched on it a little earlier. First of all, let me say that our government proclaimed DEAM. I think last year was the first year that we had ever done so. We joined countries all over the world to focus on Disability Employment Awareness Month, which is in October. We did that because there is an absolute value to affording and supporting somebody with a disability to be engaged in employment and to contribute to themselves, their families, and their communities through work. It affords people dignity and inclusion and respect.

We have to continue focusing on inclusive opportunities for people with disabilities beyond simply using a Conservative tactic to do so. Think back a few years. The Conservative government decided to focus on employment for people with disabilities by cutting supports to people with disabilities through the PDD system. A wholesale cut was set to devastate the lives of people. Using an assessment tool, the old supports intensity scale, the Conservative government projected test scores to justify wholesale cuts to supports beyond simply targeting employment standards.

That was when I met our Premier, Rachel Notley, and was inspired actually to run. Our response is much different: no more Band-Aids. It might take us a little longer to get there, but no more Band-Aids. We cleaned up some easy pieces that had been ignored for years, even during the good years. We finally removed the minimum wage exemption where employers could apply to pay people with disabilities less than minimum wage. We changed the Marriage Act so that people with disabilities no longer have to get a doctor's note before getting married. We paused the PDD safety standards and conducted an extensive, two-phased review. I have never seen a review like that, and I have been to so many reviews and consultations that I can't even count them.

We established a new standard for consultation and review in terms of the panel members, the process, and the result. It goes beyond plain language and access. It's about community. It's about leaders within the community. It's about self-advocates and their families and their friends, and it's about listening. I can tell you first-hand that's exactly what it was because I was there for every step of it when we did the safety standards review. What I can say is that I travelled the province with that group, and not one – not one – opposition member showed up to any of those community consultations. And they were in your community. That process led to the PDD review that is under way today. The panel that has been appointed and the process are essential and are groundbreaking.

Service dogs: we addressed a huge need, a life-saving support. We addressed the need for additional dogs to support people. We addressed the high cost. Is there more to do? Absolutely. But we know it's a need, and we've finally started talking about it. We talk about public information and awareness. It might just be a sticker on a business door, but it might just help one person. We've approved more service dog organizations, and now service dogs that may have been trained by their owners have the ability to be tested in order to obtain legal access.

We have an associate page program right here in this Chamber. Young people with disabilities can also apply to be a page and have a life-changing experience.

We have a disability advocate through a private member's bill which became government Bill 205. It established an essential position and committed significant resources, once again, in a budget that the opposition, I can almost guarantee, will not vote for. Certainly, it is not quite at the level of the Child and Youth Advocate, but it is a fantastic start. Think about the Leader of the Official Opposition and his friend in Ontario whose sentences he finishes. What did they just do to the Child and Youth Advocate?

I would also mention the Henson trust legislation that was introduced. I'll let another member speak to that because I know that's near and dear to his heart.

All of these changes have taken time and have required extensive resources, and in the three and a half years we have worked hard. We know there is much to do still. Let me just say how happy I am that we are finally indexing AISH, increasing the wage exemption, and linking future changes to minimum wage. This takes courage and foresight. We are unique. Alberta is a leader in Canada for people with disabilities.

I was at the Military Family Resource Centre not that long ago, and we were told that St. Albert is home to a lot of military families. We were told that many military families with members with disabilities specifically asked to be posted to Alberta because of the incredible level of support. When they heard about the changes, of course, that just emphasized why.

This is our Premier's leadership, and this is what we are committed to. When our Premier tells us that economic recovery is not complete until all Albertans are included in that recovery, I believe her, because she walks the talk every day. Our commitment to indexing is evident, even when times are tough. It's not about austerity; it's about being brave enough to say: nobody gets left behind. I'm looking forward to future conversations and consultation around other issues that are outstanding, some related to AISH and some not. But I know, based on the past three and a half years, that this government is not going to forget about people with disabilities and their allies. We're here every day doing the important work that we were sent here to do. We have much to talk about around cohabiting partners, around asset levels, and other clawbacks.

There are very stark differences between our paths forward for people with disabilities; our path forward and the opposition's path forward. We are committed to continue consultation and progress, not austerity. Their actions to date show no commitment. In fact, their leader has said as much. We are committed to moving forward and building an inclusive future. The UCP want to return to the good old Klein days and the Alberta advantage. We are committed to a future where no group of people is left behind, a future where a person with a disability is as important and as valued as a wealthy political donor or special interest group. That's the kind of Alberta we're building, where nobody is left behind.

Again I thank everybody involved for getting us to this place, and I encourage all members to support this amendment. Thank you.

4:00

The Chair: On the amendment, Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a privilege to stand and speak a little bit about my support for this amendment to Bill 26, An Act to Combat Poverty and Fight for Albertans with Disabilities.

I just want to, first of all, say that it gets a little discouraging when it doesn't matter whether we support it or don't support it and the same rhetoric comes from the members opposite. We believe that this is actually a fairly good, common-sense amendment and that the bill was good and that it's something that needs to be done, yet here we hear once again how bad we are for accepting it, supporting it, and voting for it. And the answer from the opposite member is: don't trust us, that somehow we're supporting it for nefarious means. Madam Chair, I don't know how they can continue on the same path, the same rhetoric and still think that Albertans are buying it. You can't say one thing out of both sides of your mouth and expect them to believe it. So that's the first thing I wanted to say.

The second thing I wanted to say, Madam Chair, is that when the government portrays the past and decides that they're going to rewrite the past, I feel it incumbent upon me to stand and to clarify what's happened. When they talk about a failed 44 years and then many of them have said how much they loved Peter Lougheed, I hate to tell them this, but that happened in 44 years. Again, Albertans are confused by their message. It doesn't make sense.

But let's just get back to this concept here that they're talking about, the idea of these wraparound services. The wraparound services that we have in Alberta – I had a very interesting conversation while door-knocking, talking to a teacher. I'd like to be able to let you know what was said when I talked to the teacher. I asked him what he thought about the government. He said, "Well, I think the government is doing a good job." I said, "Well, I'll take that to mean that you're going to vote for them in the next election." He said yes. I said, "Well, why are you going to do that?" He said, "Well, they're helping us."

I wanted to dig a little deeper. Normally I'd just move on, but I wanted to dig a little deeper, so I said to him, "Well, my question to you is: how much do you make?" He says: "I know what you're going to say. I know that I make more money as a teacher than any other jurisdiction in Canada." I said: "Actually, no. You make more than any other jurisdiction in North America." I said, "How did you get there?" He thought. "I got it; collective bargaining," he said, and I said: "Wait. I appreciate that there's good collective bargaining, and that's the ATA. But every other jurisdiction has collective bargaining units as well, so why did you make the money that you made in Alberta?" And he kind of said: "Okay. Why is it?" I said, "The reason why is because a Conservative government in the past actually helped public servants get to this point."

Now, what's interesting about it, Madam Chair, is that this government likes to say how bad it was under a Conservative government, but we have some of the top-paid public servants. Why? Because we did something different in Alberta. We had the thing called the Alberta advantage, which this member just stood up and said how bad it was, how we want to go back to it. Absolutely, and every public servant should want to go back to it as well because the Alberta advantage wasn't just helping private sector; it helped public sector as well.

It's interesting that the members tried to have this revisionist history lesson in this House, but the facts speak for themselves, Madam Chair. So when we stand up and we say that, you know, we want to get back to something where we can have fulsome employment amongst Albertans, that we can have an opportunity for Albertans to be able to really have something they can be proud of, that Alberta advantage – it's not just for private sector but for public sector as well – this is something that we should crow about. This is something that we should be actually proud of in this province, yet we have continued to hear from the other side of the House that they are ashamed of the 44 years. We have done something right in this province, something phenomenal in this province, and we should never be ashamed of it.

Now, when we stand up in this House and we say that they got it right, instead of the government side standing up and saying, "Well, we agree; it's fantastic that we agree here" and taking the high road, raising the bar in this House, which we have tried to do – still it's amazing, the heckling, the laughing. I don't know if they're ever going to get it. I hope they do because I think it just shows that they can be classy sometimes. The sad thing about it is that when we actually do agree on a piece of legislation or an amendment and for them to get up and have this overheated rhetoric, it's discouraging, and I think that a lot of Albertans are looking at this saying: are they truly a government that we want to have another term of? I can tell you that I've heard many, many times people say: thank you very much for raising the bar in this House.

I've said this before. I think that it's important for this government to be able to stand up and to raise the bar as well. We can have a policy debate. We can have a robust discussion. We can have a robust debate. But why does it always have to be couched in this overheated rhetoric and slamming? They only seem to know one speed, and that's anger.

We will support this. I think it's a very good amendment. We are willing to support any good amendment that's going to help all Albertans in the future. But let's remember that how we got to this point was through a Conservative government for 44 years.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. I'm going to support the amendment on the floor, and I just want to extend my appreciation to the Minister of Community and Social Services because he is the first minister on this file in Alberta's history that is actually bringing forward indexation of these important programs. The Conservatives had 44 years to do it, and they didn't do it.

What the hon. member on the other side was just talking about, that we should thank the Conservatives for their stewardship of this file: Madam Chair, nothing could be further from the truth. When times were tough in Alberta in mid-90s, the Conservatives, the ones he is lauding, cut this program, cut programs for people on welfare supports, as it was called then. They cut programs for people who were vulnerable. They cut programs for the families that needed our support as a government. They cut them, and they saved money. They said: we have to get back to balance, and we're doing it on the backs of the most vulnerable in this province. That's who he's lauding over there. That's who he's saying is providing the necessary importance of this program. Nothing could be further from the truth.

I'm glad he's supporting this amendment. I'm glad that side is supporting this amendment. That's really great. But, you know, we don't see what they would actually do; we only hear what they would do. We hear things like, you know: health care is too expensive; we need to cut it 20 per cent to match B.C. levels. We know that that would affect the workers in the health care system, the nurses, the insurance. The valuable health care provision that is in this province would be cut as well, the programs. We know that people would get less service. That's what we know from the other side. We don't have a shadow budget from the other side, so we really don't know if they would support this should they come to power. We really know that what they would do, from the things they have said they want to do, Madam Chair, is cut programs and services, and this is an area where they would likely go to first because the previous government, their legacy parties, did the same thing in the mid-90s on the backs of poor people.

Madam Chair, I want to go back to the actual work that this government and that Minister of Community and Social Services are doing. He has brought forward something that hasn't been done in this province before. In fact, I think he might have said that only very few provinces have indexed the programs that we're going to index starting in 2019, and that is something that I can tell you will benefit thousands upon thousands of families in this province going into the future.

We also know that the child care benefit rates in some of those programs are going to be harmonized and be something that creates greater dignity and more support for young people in those families, something, again, that the previous government left undone, left to be corrected by this government, actually, because we actually – actually – put children and families first, even those who are experiencing difficult times, Madam Chair.

I often have said that the thing that brought me to politics, politicized me, if you will, was the cuts to important supports for people in this province in the mid-90s, and that was supported by all of cabinet back then, but of course the Minister of Finance back then was the person who held the pen for those cuts. I'm proud as the Minister of Finance for this province, for this government, to hold the pen to make sure that that minister and ministry have the necessary supports for Albertans.

I went to my very first protest, you know, a young man growing up in Toronto, university, then came out here in the '80s. I worked in helping people out, worked in helping networks in Calgary. The first time I got politicized was during those Klein cuts of the mid-90s and the effect it had on the people that I was trying to support, the women and children, the families that I was trying to support. In 1993 or 1994 – I can't remember the exact date – I was on the steps here with 5,000 Albertans protesting those cuts. Many of them, of course, were clients of the system of those programs and services, and they were here to say: "You are cutting us back. We don't have the wherewithal to necessarily have the lobby support, the ability to raise funds to counteract, so we're coming out to do what we can do, and that is to be on the steps of the Legislature and to say to the government that we don't agree. We want you to roll back those cuts." That was not done, Madam Speaker. That was 1993, 1994, and after that period of time I said to myself: well, I'm going to get elected to help the most vulnerable.

In 1995 I got elected and served on council for 15 years, and my primary remit, the thing that I was most proud of and most interested in, was to try and improve the social programs in Alberta through my work as a city councillor. One of the areas that I was really proud of working in to see some change was in FCSS, family and community support services, that program for all Albertans. That was held at about $60 million, maybe even less back then, and the governments of the day, the Conservative governments of the day, did not increase that program to help preventive social services to keep people off of income supports. They kept it at an amount of money, and a bunch of us formed a coalition. We said: we've got to lobby for increased funds for FCSS. That minister, again, of Community and Social Services in our very first budget argued that the FCSS program should be increased from $76 million to $101 million, and it has stayed at that level for four years, Madam Chair.

As an hon. member from the other side talks about, you know, how we should recognize the good work of the Conservative governments in the past, I can point to two things right there. They didn't increase FCSS even though there was a coalition and everyone was saying that this needs to go up to prevent people getting into poverty. They kept it at the level they kept it at. Finally, with this government we increased it $25 million, and $100 million more has gone into that area since we were elected.

We don't know what the other side would do. The other side hasn't brought forward a shadow budget, so though they say that they support these amendments, that they would support these improvements to the income support programs, I am loath to believe that because they vote against everything. They are saying that they'll support this, but really we don't know. You know, it's a bit of shell game. You will only know if they bring a shadow budget and they put their pen to paper and say: these are the things we can support.

Who was it that said, you know: "Don't tell me about what your values are. Show me your budget, and I'll tell you what your values are"? Though those folks are saying that they value income support programs, that they value support for low-income people throughout this province, that they support increases, and that they support indexing, show me your budget, and then I'll tell you what you support. That's what I'll say, Madam Chair.

Just a point about – and I know that the Minister of Community and Social Services had talked about this earlier – the coalition, the interest that this bill, his Bill 26, has had with regard to combatting poverty and fighting for Albertans with disabilities. I can tell you that my friends in the poverty reduction community across this province are so proud to finally see the recognition their efforts have achieved in terms of this government and this bill. We are doing things, Madam Chair, to address poverty through the supports we're bringing forward.

In addition to, you know, "I'll tell you what your values are by looking at your budget," another axiom is that poverty reduction is not only about money, Madam Chair, but it involves money, and we are putting that money to the forefront with this bill. We are saying that for far too long these amounts have been too low. They need to go up with inflation every year. Only a few provinces have done this, and we as a province believe in this value. You can look at our budget and you can find out what we value. We value hard-working Albertans. We value supporting people who are vulnerable, supporting people who are trying to put their lives back together. When they have difficulty, they should be able to count on their government. On this side of the House they can count on their government.

That side of the House is all talk. They have no shadow budget. Until they bring forward something that looks like a shadow budget, we can assume that they're only playing politics, Madam Chair. That's what they're doing. Really, though they're talking about supporting this amendment, supporting these initiatives, I know that with the next breath they will get up and say: you know, this government is reckless. Well, we are supporting Albertans. It doesn't matter what they say. They need a shadow budget. Until they do that, really, it's all talk.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Chair. First, I'd like to say a couple of things. I'll be supporting this amendment. I'd also like to thank the Member for St. Albert for her incredible work that she's done on this. I know that she's worked very hard on behalf of that community, not just today but, I think, for most of her life. And I'll commend the minister for indexing incomes. Instead of it being a regulation, now it's legislation.

You know, Madam Chair, it's always interesting to me. I have sat in this Chamber now for almost seven years, and I, too, like some of the members, like the Minister of Finance, got politically involved because I saw places where we needed to change. We needed to evolve not just as a government, but we needed to evolve as a people in this province.

One of the questions that I ask grade 6 kids is: "What is the greatest invention ever created?" They say things like hockey, and some say oil or cellphones. But I say, "What about the caveman and the stone wheel?" They're, like: "Oh, yeah. Right." Then I ask them, "Did we ever run out of rock?" They go: "No. Look at the mountains. We have tons and tons of rock." But guess what? Times change. I say: "What do they make wheels and tires out of now? Completely different things."

I'm a bit disturbed when I hear the Minister of Finance, a minister of the Crown, in a roundabout way basically defame people that I know have sat in the office of human services, that have given their blood, sweat, and tears: the hon. former Premier Dave Hancock and the hon. Manmeet Bhullar, a dear friend of mine. It is disgraceful to think that those two people did not work tirelessly on behalf of Albertans. Now, I'll say this, and this is maybe something that we don't hear enough in this Chamber. Yes, I was elected as a Progressive Conservative in 2012, and whatever that government did in the day and whatever that government did in the past, I am happy to wear it all, because if you're going to blame the former government, then you had better thank the former government for a lot of the very good things that happened in this province.

There's a saying that pride cometh before the fall. While you have done an excellent job on this particular file, there are other places in your government where you just don't have it right yet. And if you think you have it right, well, then, I'll go back to that saying, that pride cometh before the fall. As Progressive Conservatives we certainly didn't have it right. When I sit as a minister of the Crown or even as an MLA, as a father, as a human being, as an Albertan, I don't always get it right. But I continue to work hard to refine myself, to refine my thoughts, and I think that Manmeet Bhullar was on that path, and I dare somebody in this Chamber to deny that. Trying to get to a place on a very, very complex file – and I'll say this as a paramedic on the street. When you see people in crisis with different issues and then you hear their stories about AISH and income supports and how people disrespect them because of the place they are in their lives, it is absolutely unacceptable.

So I am glad that we are getting, particularly on this particular file, to where we're getting it more and more right, where we're actually having a debate and where people are accepting amendments. That's what we should be doing in here. We should be trying to get to a place where both sides have some credibility on this issue. Look, I left the United Conservative Party, but I know that many of the people there if not all of them on this particular file absolutely do care. Their way to get there might be different, but I know they care. I know that the Alberta Party caucus cares. I know that the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill has done a lot of work on this particular file, and she should be commended.

But it's pretty easy in this Chamber to find where we have common ground – and I believe that this is one of them – and to have respectful debate rather than blaming. You know, nobody comes into this Chamber without a goal, I don't think. There might be a few that have the wrong intentions. When we think about Peter Lougheed, Don Getty, each Premier and each government has contributed in some way, some good and some bad. That's just the reality. But our job in here is to have respectful debate, to stand on the records that we have.

You know, Madam Chair, I'll tell you one of the things we did with the consultations on this particular file, and I'm going to say a couple of things in this Chamber that some people might be surprised at. I've had the opportunity to go to some of those things, and you absolutely feel heart-wrenched. You recognize that in that particular community there are people who over the years have been great advocates for their children and/or the people that they're caring for. They were great advocates, and they were able to get more money. Yet somebody who had more severe disabilities who didn't have a great advocate was getting less, and you saw them fall through the cracks. We tried to address that.

But I'll tell you some things. Again, when I look around the province, whether visiting my father in a rural hospital – I have to tell you that I'm absolutely embarrassed that with a government of 44 years, that I was a part of, some of the facilities look like that. I can say that. That's responsibility, and I'm not asking for any credit. But it's stuff that we need to continue to work on. This particular file, like I said, is very complex, and this is not going to end. I don't care who forms the next government. If you think that you've got it down, and if the next government that forms government, whoever it may be, thinks that this is going to be an easy file, it's not going away. There are going to continue to be issues.

Another time, in visiting a mental health facility and walking in there, I went: "Hold on a minute. We're one of the richest provinces in the world, and this is what this place looks like? These are the conditions we're asking mental health professionals to help our children and our loved ones in? This is what we've given them?" Well, you know, with all due respect to the government, you've been there for three and a half years, and these facilities still look the same way. I'm not blaming anybody. What I'm saying, Madam Chair, is that running a province, running the government is very, very complex. Everybody has a different approach. But we would be better served and more well served if we were actually collaborating on these particular issues.

I'll say it again: the government has done some good things. Everything the United Conservative Party talks about in trying to tighten the belts of our fiscal responsibility is not all wrong, nor are the amendments from the Alberta Party caucus and some of the independents. When we start looking at each other as fellow Albertans, remember this: if you are the government and you're there to govern everybody, are you not there to try to govern us and be respectful of us as taxpayers and vice versa?

There is an opportunity whenever an election is called. Whether Albertans feel I'm fit enough to come back to this Chamber or not, there's an opportunity, moving forward, for members that do get re-elected and for whoever forms government to start elevating the debate in this province to deal with files like this, where there are people suffering. You know, some of these people and the things that they feel they have to resort to to get the money that they need is just – again, I've seen it on the ambulance. It's despicable that we stand here and we argue about some of the petty things and who is to blame.

Madam Chair, I just think that if we were to collaborate more and be open to some ideas and not blame and say that the other side is always wrong, because they're not, then I think we'd be far better off. Isn't it our goal, at the end of the day, that I should be trying to help support this minister even though I sit on the opposition benches with the Alberta Party, to try to give him or the Deputy Premier on the file of Health or the Minister of Justice my best ideas? That's how I can best serve Albertans rather than my own political interests.

Madam Chair, I'll leave it there, but I will be supporting these amendments, and I look forward to further debate. Thank you.

Mr. Hunter: Madam Chair, I just want to clarify a couple of things. First of all, in terms of this bill I have a brother who was born with osteogenesis imperfecta, so he had brittle bone disease. By the time he was I think in grade 6, he had spent more time outside of school than in and had to be tutored and home-schooled so that he could keep up. It has been a devastating disability for him. He had a big heart, big ideas, but his body wouldn't keep up. You know, I speak very passionately about this.

I believe that it needed to be indexed for some time, and I was never in a position where I could advocate for that. I'm now in a position where I can advocate for it, and I want to be able to do that, because I've seen the face of an individual in our society, a close person to me, my brother, who has been affected.

Ms Ganley: Are you going to vote for the budget this time?

Mr. Hunter: You know, the heckling at this point is so unclassy, very unclassy.

Ms Ganley: That wasn't a heckle.

Mr. Hunter: I'm amazed. I'm sharing my heart here, telling about why I feel the value of this, and a member opposite cannot stop heckling. Unclassy. Absolutely unclassy.

But let me get back to the point. The point here is this. I believe that society has two parts. They have the heart and the head. The heart is those wraparound services for someone like my brother, who through no fault of his own is in a situation where he needs to have that hand up. He has tried where he can to be able to get the work that he can do and that his body will allow him to do, but as I've watched him – and we're very close in age – I've recognized that it's very difficult for him and that we need to be able, as a compassionate society, to have those wraparound services for him.

I believe that in this situation this is a good program for him, and I think that this will help him. This is why I personally am voting in favour of this amendment and in favour of this bill, because I believe it is the right thing to do not just for my brother but for the people that are struggling just like my brother has.

I want to just finish with this. There was an article in the Tyee, that's from B.C. It says Jump in Alberta Disability Benefits Leaves BC Far Behind. I can't go through it all because we don't have the time, but it basically goes on to say that B.C. would have liked to have followed the direction that Alberta was taking to be able to increase these AISH payments, but they couldn't, and the number one reason why they couldn't was because they were so far in debt. The cost to service the debt prohibited them from being able to make those kinds of decisions for the people of B.C. As you know, the Tyee is not a conservative magazine. They are just calling out the truth.

The reality is that Alberta had gotten us into a position where we had that ability to be compassionate, to be able to increase those AISH payments, and there were many people that were able to benefit in Alberta from it. In fact, in this article it goes on to say that many people from B.C. wanted to move to Alberta in order to be able to be involved in that AISH program and how compassionate it was.

That was the point I was trying to make earlier about some of the decisions that we made here in Alberta that allowed us to be able to have that benefit, not just the benefit to private sector and public sector but to actually benefit and to be able to provide a compassionate side. That's what I think is valuable. This is something that I think is a big reason why I am very much in favour of this amendment, and I just wanted to make sure that I pointed that out.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I just want to rise to ask the hon. member a question. I apologize that I spoke out of turn. I know that sometimes in committee people speak back and forth, and I perhaps took that a little bit too far. It obviously wasn't intended as a heckle, so I'll simply stand and state my question on the record for the hon. member. What I asked was – and it's simply because this is one of the things that made me passionate and drove me into government, the idea that ultimately our budget does signal what our values are. What I was simply asking was: you know, this bill does a fantastic thing. I'm very proud of the thing that this bill does, but it does cost a certain amount of money. Simply what I wanted to ask the hon. member opposite, since he feels so passionately about it – I think we found a point of agreement – is whether or not he intends to vote for the money in a budget to support this bill.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm hoping that we can change the tone of the conversation because this is a really good bill. It helps a lot of people, and this is a really good amendment that makes a bill even better. I'm really pleased to see a lot of the changes that this amendment introduces to the legislation. I think they're really important changes. Indexing of income: as you know, I introduced an amendment last spring to try and achieve a very similar goal to that. I think it's really important.

I want to thank the minister for being so open with information and also the Member for St. Albert. She's been a huge educator for me to learn more about this particular issue, and I really want to acknowledge her contribution both to me and to the sector at large. It's been really important.

I do have a subamendment that I'd like to introduce.

The Chair: This will be known as subamendment A1-SA1.

Go ahead.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to move that amendment A1 to Bill 26, An Act to Combat Poverty and Fight for Albertans with Disabilities, be amended as follows: Part A is amended by renumbering clause (a) as clause (a.1) and by adding the following before clause (a.1):

- (a) in the proposed section 3 by adding the following after subsection (2):
- (3) The provision and administration of benefits provided under this section shall be carried out in accordance with a client bill of rights established by the regulations.
- (4) A client bill of rights established pursuant to subsection (3) shall:
 - (a) include a requirement for the provisions of the bill of rights to be considered and applied by all persons authorized to administer and make determinations respecting benefits under this section, including eligibility for benefits;

- (b) provide that access and education regarding services and benefits should be culturally appropriate;
- (c) provide that clients and individuals applying for benefits must have access to supports to assist in navigating the application and appeal process;
- (d) require that, upon request, an explanation of an appeal decision be provided to a person who is refused a benefit;
- (e) be reviewed by the Minister and any impacted groups every 5 years, beginning 5 years after the date on which the bill of rights comes into effect.

(b) by adding the following after clause (d):

- (e) by adding the following the proposed section 3.3:

Consultation

3.4 The Minister shall, in accordance with the regulations, consult with any groups potentially impacted by proposed amendments to this Act or the regulations that would substantively change a benefit or the manner of determining eligibility for a benefit.

Part B is struck out and the following is substituted:

B. Section 2(5) is amended

- (a) in clause (a) by adding the following after the proposed section 12(1)(a.4):
 - (a.5) establishing a client bill of rights in accordance with section 3(3) and (4);
- (b) by adding the following after clause (a):
 - (a.1) by repealing clause (c);
- (c) by adding the following after clause (b):
 - (b.1) by adding the following after clause (d.1):
 - (d.2) respecting the requirement for consultation under section 3.4 with groups impacted by any substantive changes to benefit.

It's too bad we can't use visual aids because that's quite an exercise in logic right there.

The reason that I introduced a subamendment is because the amendment opened up the clauses that need to be addressed in order to entrench a client bill of rights and in order to entrench a requirement for consultation in the future for any changes. The client bill of rights came about because of conversations in my office with clients who are applying for AISH and appealing decisions from AISH. I think it's important that each of the clients of AISH understands either why they were turned down or how they can go about appealing the process, and they need to know what the standard of service is that they can expect consistently, regardless of which worker they may be working with.

The second part of the subamendment has to do with consultation. The reason that I wanted to incorporate that into the bill is because what I hear from the PWD community again and again is: Nothing about Us without Us. This entrenches that into the legislation. I'm sure all of us have had people dealing with AISH in our offices and seen the frustration, felt the pain that they have felt in dealing with what their circumstances are and in dealing with the AISH program. These issues are dealt with in the subamendment.

I think that in a compassionate way – I really believe that this subamendment makes the amendment better, and the amendment makes the bill better. For these reasons I really encourage everybody in the House to support this subamendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

4:40

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you, Member, for bringing forward this subamendment. With respect to some of the things that are mentioned in the proposal for the bill of rights – for instance, there needs to be better clarity with respect to eligibility for the benefits; individuals who are applying need to better understand the procedures – after that Auditor General report came out, we came up with an AISH action plan. Many of the things that are included here are somewhat addressed in there as well.

For instance, we created new simple-language forms, and along with that we created three more guides as well. One of them was explaining what this program is about, who is eligible, in very simple language. The other guide was talking about essentially every clause, every step of the way, what information is sought in that form and explaining what is expected and what is needed. There were many things addressed there. There was also an adjudicative framework that was part of that action plan to make sure that the decisions are consistent across the province. Also, there was a recommendation with respect to increased individualized support for individuals who are applying for those benefits, and it was expected that improvements were also made.

In bringing forward this piece of legislation, we talked to thousands of self-advocates, antipoverty advocates, persons with disabilities, their families, and I can even name certain groups like Disability Action Hall, Vibrant Communities Calgary, EndPoverty Edmonton, Edmonton Social Planning Council, Inclusion Alberta, Public Interest Alberta, Self Advocacy Federation, Momentum, YWCA, Calgary Housing Company, Poverty Talks! In Calgary. I was meeting earlier even with EndPoverty Edmonton as well. What I want to say is that, for the most part, pretty much what we did is that we worked with the community on all these issues. The reason we did that, that we believed in: Nothing about Us without Us. It's important that we consult them when we make any changes to this legislation, to the programs that affect them. Things that are included in this amendment were advocated by many of these advocates, and we received over 2,300 letters.

I would, I guess, ask for a little bit more clarity. Has the member consulted with the community on any of these amendments? What were, I guess, those discussions? Does she have anything more to share? If not, I think I will take time to consult on these issues. I recognize that these are important issues, but at this point, unless I have something substantial, I would urge my colleagues not to support this amendment at this time.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the subamendment?

Bill 28

Family Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise today and speak to Bill 28, the Family Statutes Amendment Act, 2018, here in Committee of the Whole. I want to thank my colleagues for acknowledging their commitment to this bill and identifying concerns, which I'll be happy to address.

The proposed legislation will modernize family law in our province to better support all families. First, it would provide clear rules about property division for unmarried partners. Second, it would clarify that applications for child support can be made for sick and disabled adult children of parents who are not married or are not divorcing. Lastly, it would repeal the Married Women's Act, which is now out of date.

I would like to address the questions that my colleagues have raised concerning second reading. First, a question was asked about whether existing agreements between unmarried partners will remain valid. The short answer is: if they were valid before, they will be again. Agreements that were enforceable prior to the new legislation coming into force will remain so, but I must reiterate that they needed to be enforceable before the legislation came into force.

Even if the legislation passes, people will still be able to choose to draft their own agreements for property divisions if they don't want the new rules to apply to them.

With our proposed amendments the presumption of equal division will begin on the date the couple began living in a relationship of interdependence. This rule will apply both to adult interdependent partners and spouses who live together prior to being married. A question was asked on what happens when partners can't agree on when their relationship of interdependence began. In the event that parties are not able to agree on this, it will fall to the courts to decide. A court decision will be made on a case-by-case basis and guided by the definitions and factors set out in the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act. These include considering if partners are emotionally committed to one another and whether the parties function as an economic and domestic unit as proven by factors like whether the persons have a conjugal relationship, their contributions to each other's well-being, and the degree of financial interdependence.

The member also asked about the potential impact of new property division rules on current or potential income support recipients. Income support, Madam Chair, is a needs-based program intended to provide for household units while supporting the transition to self-sufficiency. The amount of income support received is based on the difference between a household's needs and financial resources. As a result, any impact depends on the particular facts of each case, and any property the income support recipient receives as part of a property division claim or settlement may be taken into account, depending on the particular legislation.

With respect to wills and successions another concern that was raised was how our proposed rules will impact a deceased partner's estate and how it will be split. Simply, Bill 28 will not change the rules that are set out in the Wills and Succession Act. The act sets out how and to whom property is transferred when someone dies, Madam Chair.

Another question was if this bill will impact how pensions are divided. To clarify, we're not changing the definition of pension partner in the pension legislation. An unmarried pension partner refers to a marriagelike relationship and being in such a relationship for at least three years or of some permanence if there is a child of the relationship. This is a narrower definition than an adult interdependent partner. A person can be an adult interdependent partner in a platonic relationship although we have heard from family law practitioners that these types of relationships appear, from their experience, to be very few in number. A person can also become an adult interdependent partner in a shorter period of time than it takes to become an unmarried pension partner by signing an adult interdependent partner agreement.

Our proposed amendments include a provision that clarifies that nothing in the act enables transfers or payouts to a person who is not a pension partner under the pension plan where the requirements in the pension legislation are not met. However, the court is required to distribute the value of the pension benefit in accordance with the proposed legislation when making a family property order. This means that for those adult interdependent partners who do not fit into the pension division regime, while they cannot ask for a division of the pension from the plan, the value of the benefit will be taken into consideration in terms of the overall property distribution.

Madam Chair, our proposed new rules will apply by default, which means that parties will obtain the benefit of the new rules without needing to take action to opt in. Many people do not know how the current law operates for unmarried couples or that unmarried couples do not currently enjoy the benefits of legislated property division rules.

We recognize that the changes we are proposing could have a significant impact on many people's lives. We must give people the opportunity to become informed and provide them with the time to govern their financial affairs. That's why, if passed, the new property division rules for unmarried partners would come into force in January 2020. This provides us an opportunity to both inform the public of the changes and increase the overall awareness of the legal rights of adult interdependent partners in this area. The department will take advantage of this opportunity and will update and prepare educational materials targeted at the legal profession, the general public, government staff, and stakeholders.

I also wanted to echo a colleague's comments about how this bill will streamline the courts and help reduce delay. This legislation will provide certainty in the law and promote settlements where possible. This is intended to help prevent complex and expensive legal battles between unmarried couples and will free up court time. Madam Chair, we hear a lot in this place about court delays with respect to criminal matters, and those are certainly a concern, and I think they should be a concern to everyone. But I think it's worth noting that when we're talking about court delays, they can occur in family law matters as well. Each one of those is a family waiting for resolution, so I think it's important that we're able to take these steps to ensure that these matters can move forward in a timely manner as well.

Finally, a member asked whether the Dower Act should be repealed. We want to thank the member for raising the issue, and we will note it for future consideration.

Any time legislation is amended or repealed, there can be a wide range of impacts, and care must be taken to ensure that these are understood before future amendments are proposed. That's why with respect to these amendments we've worked with the Alberta Law Reform Institute, who has done fabulous work on a wide range of legal issues, and they provide us with great advice.

Madam Chair, our government believes that Albertans, married or not, deserve equal access to the law, and Bill 28 is just another step in ensuring a fair and accessible justice system. Thank you.

5:10

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill 28. Thank you to the minister for the answers to a lot of the questions that have been raised. I think these are important answers.

I'd just like to elaborate a little bit – it's appropriate, I think, for Committee of the Whole – on maybe some further dialogue back and forth in terms of some other potential questions. I'd like to start with regard to the 2020 deadline or date of implementation, I guess. A pair of questions go with that. Do people really need that long? Really, the important issue here is not so much time, but how are people going to be advised and educated? Two years could go by, and people wouldn't be any more informed than they are today. You did say that the department will be doing the information rollout. I guess my further question with regard to that would be: when can we expect to see some of that? What's the estimated cost, and is that coming out of the current budget or a future budget?

I do think that the awareness and education piece will be extremely important here, particularly with regard to, I guess, two demographics. I think that for youth, who may be unaware of legal realities and legal systems and all these kinds of things, who ease into a relationship but don't understand the implications or the consequences: how will we target awareness and education at youth rather than just the legal profession, staff, lawyers, that kind of thing? Secondly, I think, the demographic of seniors. There are many seniors as well who aren't particularly following all the legal stuff, maybe aren't online, who may be in relationships more because of economic reasons or for companionship. How are we going to target education and awareness to them? That's the first thing that I would like to raise.

The second one. I guess I would hope that there would be some guidance coming with regard to the content of adult interdependent agreements. The legal status of adult interdependent relationships is still not quite as clear as that of a marriage on a legal front, and the potential for complex legal issues is really and truly there. Is there going to be guidance on that? Is this the kind of thing that only a lawyer can draw up? I think that there's the possibility of many conflicting legal issues with regard to property and those kinds of things. Is the guidance going to be that, really, only a lawyer should be doing this?

I guess my third and last question would be: is there going to be some guidance with regard to the concern of resolving custody for children? I know that even in marriage dissolution and law all too often children are caught in a battle back and forth between parents. They're too often left literally for years in limbo as courts work through this process. What are we going to do for the benefit of children who may be caught in the crossfire of parents who are battling this out with lawyers? I think it's a really important issue that we need to be thinking about as we extend the rules and the legal benefits from marriage to also include adult interdependent relationships. Children all too often do get caught, and I think we need to be thinking about: how do we create systems and situations where they're not suffering unduly and for overly long periods of time because of legal conflicts?

Those are my questions and my concerns, and hopefully the government can give us some answers on some of those kinds of things. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to Bill 28? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's an honour to rise in the House today to speak in favour of Bill 28, the Family Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. This bill looks to address a very real issue, and I truly appreciate many of the questions that I had asked during second reading having been answered by the minister earlier today.

As I shared during my previous speech, common-law relationships are becoming more and more common across our province, and they're even growing at a higher rate than those of married couples. These common-law relationships have proven to complicate proceedings after the relationship has dissolved and, ultimately, ends and has created an unpredictable court process creating very inconsistent decisions.

This bill rises to meet the issues. It helps by streamlining the process and by giving clarity in legislation for our courts to make more consistent decisions. This will help with our limited funds and allow for more resources to be diverted to the more serious cases and the more pressing cases. Furthermore, it will help to make sure that those that are most vulnerable within our society are well taken of, and it would be my hope that we would see fewer Jordan decision cases dismissed. While this bill is not perfect, it has many good intentions.

Millennials are facing many challenges that generations before them did not face. While they did not live through the Great Depression or a world war, they have had to experience a different set of struggles. For example, the overall cost of living has significantly increased, which has been noted by many millennials as a barrier, and many are choosing to cohabitate and often enter into common-law relationships before even considering marriage.

Furthermore, homes are becoming more and more expensive for a generation that has not seen the same percentage of pay increases, which makes the dream of home ownership much more difficult. Millennials are holding onto the idea of home ownership, and therefore they tend to wait a lot longer to get married, if they even choose to. There are also factors in regard to the cost of postsecondary education having increased, causing even further delays in choosing whether to get married or not.

With these factors, common-law relationships are clearly on the rise, and Stats Canada data shows that this is very much true. Between 2006 and 2011 the number of common-law relationships grew at a rate more than four times that of married couples during that same period of time. In 2016 we found that 1 in 5 Canadian couples said that they were living in a common-law relationship, compared to just 6 per cent in 1981. As you can see, society has changed, and it's time that our laws reflect this change. In fact, here in Alberta common-law relationships or cohabiting couples doubled over the same period of time from 7.7 to 16.8 per cent.

We must be aware of the fact that the dissolution of common-law partnerships could create an increased strain on our already taxed court systems. More Canadian couples are opting to live together rather than tying the knot, which is particularly true for younger generations that value flexibility and individuality over tradition and formality, and more and more young couples are choosing to live together to test out whether their relationship will withstand a long-term match. In fact, many of my friends have shared with me that they would choose to live with their spouse prior to even considering getting engaged or married as a measure to try and reduce their chance of getting divorced. To some, not legally being married typically makes it easier for them to split if they find that they're incompatible.

However, with this trend, it can make things a lot more complicated when common-law relationships create families down the road and then those families end up dissolving. While the solution of common-law relationships creates, in theory, an easier breakup, it can create a messier family, something that I believe that this bill will help to solve, which is really important for society and our ever-changing reality.

Yesterday I talked quite at length about the Jordan decision and why it's important that we make sure that resources are diverted from less severe cases like common-law disputes towards more serious cases. I decided to go a little bit deeper into the subject matter, and I would like to share an example as to why I think that finding these efficiencies within our court system is so very important.

In the summer of 2016 there was a young mother in Fort McMurray that had to watch a man that she accused of sexually assaulting her walk free due to the charge being stayed because it took four years and four months to be seen, which was deemed too long under the Jordan decision. This was only one of five cases – and all five cases were sex-related charges – that were dismissed in the summer of 2016 across northern Alberta due to the Jordan decision.

This is exactly why we need to make sure that our court system has all the efficiencies available to it, so that we can spend our time and resources where they're most needed. In fact, there have been hundreds of cases across Canada that have been dismissed by judges since the framework was changed. The current system dealing with common-law separations diverts resources away from this very large problem for Albertans, and I'm glad that this bill aims to fix it.

This bill aims to create a process that creates a more stable and predictable process for individuals in common-law partnerships. This is a good, common-sense solution that will help make things easier during these difficult times. No one wants to break up with somebody. This is typically not something that you start a relationship planning to do, to break up. This is typically during a very difficult time in someone's life, so having this clarity in legislation makes this difficult time a little bit easier.

It will also add some much-needed fairness to couples that are in common-law relationships for an extended period of time, choose to get married, and then, unfortunately, end up getting divorced. This bill will allow the division of assets to take into account a more true version of the length of their relationship. As more and more millennials specifically and, really, all Albertans are choosing to be in common-law relationships prior to entering into a marriage, this change will help protect more Albertans.

It also removes some of the complexity for judges when making decisions on common-law separations. As it currently exists, it is left to the judge to make these decisions for the separation of assets using the concept of an unjust enrichment – basically, one person is enriched at the expense of another – and the courts are left to try and decipher how to split the assets between these partners, which could be a really complex and long-drawn-out process, much more difficult than most people would have expected due to them being in common-law relationships. This is also a much more expensive system, requiring a lot more time to go through the courts and putting a lot of onus on common-law couples to fight this rather than simply having a little bit more clarity, as married couples would have.

This bill also aims to remove the Married Women's Act. I must say, Madam Chair, that this was very long overdue. It's amazing to me to think that in 2018 a law that results in a husband acquiring all of a wife's land and income was still in place. While this was not used, I appreciate that the government has chosen to remove this piece of legislation. I can assure you that women are more than capable of managing their own land and income.

While there are a lot of good aspects about this bill, I still have a couple of questions. How exactly will a judge determine if a relationship is classified as common law? I know there are certain criteria that need to be met, but if one of the partners does not view the relationship as being a common-law relationship – what happens, specifically, when they disagree on the time when they became a common-law couple? Also, how will the government spread awareness about this piece of legislation? I think it's truly imperative that Albertans know their rights before they're entering into any kind of a binding relationship.

I've heard from many Albertans and many of my own friends that actually chose to be in common-law relationships to avoid some of the legal ramifications. In fact, the Canadian Research Institute for Law and the Family noted that many people in common-law relationships were unaware of their rights and entitlements and lack thereof. So I believe that the education piece around this bill is something that is really important and really needs to be addressed.

I just want to thank you, Madam Chair, for the opportunity. And thank you to the minister for answering my questions earlier. I truly appreciate it.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Pursuant to Government Motion 36 I would like to notify the House that there will be no evening sitting this evening.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to the bill? Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak in support of Bill 28, the Family Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. And thank you to the minister for her explanation of some of the subtleties of this bill.

Madam Chair, it's very clear that we've got an opportunity here to support some legislation which is in significant need of updating and changing. Reflecting on some of the information that I did some research on, it's very interesting. In the 2016 census common-law relationships were already on the rise. In that census over 320,000 Albertans, about 1 in 10 adults, did already live in a common-law relationship, and I suspect that that's expanding as time goes by. That's compared to nearly 1.6 million Alberta adults in marriages. Again, that's a significant percentage of that number. Of course, more same-sex couples are choosing common-law relationships rather than marriage. That's now a balance of 7,655 to 4,560, again, from the 2016 census, a number I suspect is increasing.

There's also adult interdependent relationships, which are currently governed by the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act, which is, of course, another key factor in a number within this particular issue. The AIRA defines an interdependent relationship as a relationship outside marriage in which any 2 persons

- (i) share one another's lives,
- (ii) are emotionally committed to one another, and
- (iii) function as an economic and domestic unit, which I think is a very technical way of explaining a relationship.

An interdependent relationship is recognized when two people cohabit for at least three years or with some permanence if there's a child from the relationship by birth or adoption or if they enter into a formal agreement establishing that relationship, obviously outside of marriage itself.

A person may not have more than one adult interdependent relationship at once, nor may a married person enter such a relationship while living with their spouse. That probably makes some sense, in section 5. Falsely alleging such a relationship incurs liability for damages, and the onus of proof, of course, for establishing that the relationship exists is on the person claiming that it does exist. So, again, there is some onus of proof, which is, I think, always a positive thing.

Of course, there are clauses for unjust enrichment as well, which we need to be cognizant of. Nobody wants unjust enrichment, and that, of course, is covered in this legislation and in other legislation. Division of property at the end of a relationship is currently governed by the legal concept of unjust enrichment, which is highly dependent on the individual interpretation of the presiding judge. Whereas divorcing couples who have lived common law before marrying may also be subject to this legal regime, again, there are some principles of fairness there which are invoked, including some of the property agreements. Common-law couples may and in many cases probably should enter into the equivalent of a prenuptial agreement regarding division of property if the relationship ends. That's probably put into place just to protect both parties, I think, under those circumstances, particularly if they've brought assets together in that relationship, which should be taken as something that they've brought together and which needs to be respected in the future of that relationship.

These agreements are provided for in the bill, in section 38, and each partner must make a free and informed decision and each must have their own lawyer. Again, that appropriate representation is key and, I think, very important in this legislation.

Market value of certain kinds of property will be exempted from distribution, as it currently is for married couples, and these will include things like gifts, inheritances, settlements, and insurance payouts, which may be, again, predating that relationship and therefore exempt. The rule for this is that the market value of the item either when it's acquired or on the date of entrance into a relationship is exempted, but the value of increase, of course, typically is not exempt from that as both parties may be contributing to that.

5:30

Madam Chair, the Alberta Law Reform Institute does a lot of great work on many different pieces of legislation and in this case has also done some great work in their report, which can be found on their website. Some of the keys there are relative to unjust enrichment, again, which requires a court to consider the facts of each case and exercise discretion to achieve fair results and provides a little guidance for future cases and different facts, in fact, there as well. Again, I think that these are very good and positive reviews by the ALRI, which I think supports some of the work done in this legislation.

For separating partners access to justice would mean being able to divide their property fairly. Without presumptions or formulas to help them negotiate a fair settlement or the resources to pursue a claim in court, separating partners experience barriers to access to justice. That, again, allows for the legal process and the justice system to properly and fairly address assets.

The lack of legislated rules made it difficult for partners to settle disputes without unjust enrichment. There were two main reasons for that, as pointed out by the ALRI. First, it's difficult to find and interpret the applicable law, particularly for self-represented individuals. The law of unjust enrichment is found in court decisions, not in legislation, so this is a positive move in this regard. Public legal education resources do exist but generally provide little information beyond the fact that a claim for unjust enrichment is possible, and it is wise to seek legal advice. Again, some instructive advancements, I think, with this legislation as well.

Secondly, it's difficult to predict the outcome in a particular case which discourages settlement, and when individuals or their lawyers cannot predict how a court would resolve their dispute, they have great difficulty in evaluating options for settlement. Again, there were a lot of grey areas that pre-existed this.

With respect to individuals they often have very different perspectives on what is fair, and they look to the law as a source of objective standards that can be applied to their case, which I think is always the case because there are different valuations on different assets and different perspectives on how to divide those assets, and when they cannot identify objective standards, it cannot be determined whether a proposed settlement is a fair one or not. Again, that's where it can be very subjective, but it needs to be looked at objectively with the new legislation and how that's allowed.

It's often difficult to settle disputes. Partners are pushed towards litigation, and litigation is both time-consuming and expensive for both parties in these cases. There's usually only one sort of level of enrichment that happens, and that's often with their legal counsel, who are enriched as they battle over things that are not appropriately covered. Again, both expensive and risky for both plaintiffs and defendants, and many of them don't have the resources. They're trying to preserve what little assets they may have from the relationship and to move those forward to start a new life and in many cases may have to abandon the claim due to the lack of access to an appropriate legal or legislative environment.

Again, the ALRI, Alberta Law Reform Institute, does also provide some other insights and some quotes. Unjust enrichment claims are risky. A plaintiff faces the possibility that the claim will be entirely unsuccessful after much hard work and litigation of that, and if so, the plaintiff will receive nothing while having to pay considerable legal fees. Again, that is never the preferred outcome, to go into long and drawn-out legal battles which may in fact burn up any of the assets that they sought to fairly and legally allocate and usually, of course, the paying of the costs going to the defendant, who may also face an unknown outcome with respect to their rights within that particular dispute.

Madam Chair, reform is needed to improve access to justice for the separating partners. Again, justice is what we all seek in terms of the legislation. Regardless of whether the separating partners negotiate or litigate, they would benefit from appropriate legislated rules with presumptions and formulas that can be brought forward in a more objective manner. The presumptions or formulas will help partners resolve those disputes without having to resort to going to court. They can do that outside of court. They can do it with negotiation and other means of settlement and streamline the litigation process for those who are unable to settle in moving forward with that.

Madam Chair, I think that I personally am very supportive of this initiative to try and update the legislation and update the protection of common-law partnerships and other relationships that are governed by this new legislation. I'm happy to support this.

In closing, I'd like to move that we adjourn debate on this bill. Thank you.

Prayers

The Acting Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect or pray, each in our own way. Today finds us in the middle of National Addictions Awareness Week. May we battle stigma and encourage education to better understand this devastating illness. May we support the loved ones whose lives have been upended by this disease. Perhaps most importantly, may we as elected representatives lead by example by being compassionate to those living with addictions.

Thank you, and please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 29

Public Service Employee Relations Amendment Act, 2018

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on behalf of the hon. Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Loyola: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am honoured to rise and move third reading of Bill 29, the Public Service Employee Relations Amendment Act, 2018.

This bill proposes changes that will give more public-sector employees their constitutionally protected freedom to collectively bargain, remove restrictions on what can go to compulsory arbitration, and create more consistency for postsecondary institutions. One proposed change would be to remove restrictions that prevent five classifications of employees from collective bargaining. The five classifications of employees that are currently restricted from collective bargaining are systems analysts, budget officers, hearing officers, auditors, and disbursement control officers. When we looked at other jurisdictions in Canada, we saw that it was rare for these types of positions to be excluded from collective bargaining, so by removing restrictions on these employee classifications, we are giving these employees the same rights as their counterparts all across the country.

I'd like to point out that removing exemptions from the legislation does not mean employees will be automatically unionized. If this legislation passes, whether affected employees are unionized will need to be determined by employers and unions. Factors such as whether employees are in a supervisory role or have access to sensitive information could influence the decision on whether they should be part of a bargaining unit. The process for determining whether previously exempt positions will be unionized may vary, depending on the employer.

Another proposed change would remove restrictions on what can go to arbitration, like pension and job classifications. These proposed changes align with our essential services legislation, which states that all issues can be considered under collective bargaining. They would also give public-sector employees arbitration rules similar to those under the Labour Relations Code, creating more consistency for Albertans. Earlier this month government staff met with affected employers to discuss the proposed changes to remove restrictions on the five classifications of employees and on compulsory arbitration. If passed, these changes would take effect on July 1, 2019.

Another proposed change would remove nonacademic staff at postsecondary institutions under the Labour Relations Code. Earlier this month government staff met with postsecondary institutions to discuss this proposed change, and postsecondary institutions provided feedback during the meeting. They were also given the opportunity to provide written submissions on how the proposed changes would affect them. We heard that this change could have a significant effect on postsecondary institutions and that they may need time to adjust. In response we're proposing that this change not take effect until July 1, 2022, giving postsecondary institutions more than three years to adjust. If passed, this change will create consistency for postsecondary institutions once implemented. It also means nonacademic staff will benefit from recent updates to the Labour Relations Code that are not in the Public Service Employee Relations Act.

If passed, Bill 29 would bring Alberta in line with the rest of the country by giving more public-sector employees the ability to collectively bargain and give public-sector employees similar arbitration rules to other Albertans and also bring all postsecondary staff under the same labour legislation, creating consistency for the postsecondary sector. I can only hope that all members of this Chamber will support this bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Just for a point of clarity, you are moving third reading on behalf of the minister?

Loyola: Indeed I am, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you. Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure to be able to rise this morning, and good morning to you and to my fellow colleague here this morning. We have had fairly robust discussions about Bill 29. Some things have come out that we didn't receive in the technical briefing. Actually, interestingly enough about this technical briefing: we were told as it was being introduced in the House that we would be allowed to be able to come to a technical briefing. It was a little spotty at first, and the information was not as forthcoming as we would have liked. However, here we are today discussing in third reading Bill 29, Public Service Employee Relations Amendment Act, 2018.

Now, I just want to talk first of all about what the bill is. The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, who just started the process here this morning, talked about those five classification exemptions. Those five classification exemptions include a budget officer, a systems analyst, an auditor, a disbursement control officer, and a hearing officer. From what I can understand, the reason why these were exempted in the past is because the information that they had for the employer was sensitive information, so when going into collective bargaining for these individuals, to be part of a union would be a conflict of interest. These five classifications were exempted and were kept from being part of the union, which was a prudent approach because, as we like to say on this side of the House, it's important to have the proper balance. Unfortunately, by taking away these five classification exemptions, it actually balances it in favour of the unions.

Now, I guess I'm not surprised at that as we have seen a plethora of bills coming forward in this House over the last three and a half years that have certainly stacked the deck in favour of the NDP's union buddies. I get that. They are their biggest contributor. In fact, some of the fees that every union member pays go directly into the NDP coffers, so I guess it makes sense that they're going to be giving back to those people who are, I guess, helping them get elected the next time.

But let's just be one hundred per cent clear here. This is stacking the deck for their union buddies, and that is the main reason for this. The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie stood up, and there were two things that he said. First of all, he said that most of the jurisdictions in Canada did not have that exemption for the five classifications, so we were just bringing it in line with the rest of Canada, but then he said that this will make it like everyone else in Canada. I don't know if you can actually have both of those; it's either most or everyone. I think there was a mistake in the statement that he made there.

You know, one of the things that I'm concerned about with those five classification exemptions being part of that union: he said also in his opening remarks that that does not mean that they have to be unionized. Now, in the context of this bill I would agree with him, but in the context of the last three and a half years I would not agree with him. They have certainly stacked the deck in favour of the unions in terms of union certifications. There was a situation where organizations received a remedial certification. They had no right – no right – no ability to vote. The Labour Relations Board slapped a remedial certification on them, and they were unionized. One day they weren't unionized; the next day they were unionized. This kind of heavy-handedness is exactly the reason why there needs to be balance between the employee and the employer and unions, yet this takes completely away that balance that we've had in the past.

You know, remedial certification is a big concern, and also taking away the secret ballot is a big concern. We've brought these issues up in this House many times, Madam Speaker, and it is something that we are hearing from employers and that we are also hearing from people who do not want to be part of a union.

Now, let's just carry on here with what is in this bill. It also talks about removing section 30, and that is what can go before a compulsory arbitration board. This can be very problematic as well. One of the problems that I see – and I'll just actually go through some of the things that they're allowing now. Section 30 basically said what an organization can bring before a compulsory arbitration board, and the things that were not able to be brought before were the organization of work, the assignment of duties, and the determination of the number of employees of an employer.

Now, let's just go with that last one, the number of employees of an employer. If this government is so sure that they're going to be able to balance their budget in 2023, which I'd like to talk about a little later on in my remarks, what would happen if the cleaners in every federal building decided that they were understaffed and that they needed to double the number of cleaners they had and took that to the compulsory arbitration board? The compulsory arbitration board now has the ability to say, "You know what; we're probably not going to give you double, but let's give you 50 per cent," and that knocks off the budget of this government. How are they going to be able to go back to Albertans and convince them that they have a firm grasp on their budget and their ability to be able to get out of deficit territory? When you take section 30 out, I can't see how they're going to be able to do that.

This bill talks about the timelines in implementation as well. We took a look at what the universities were asking for in terms of their nonacademic staff, bringing them into their union fold and making the changes. What they realized is that this is a monumental task. There are almost 19,000 nonacademic staff, and I recognize that not all of these are going to be affected by this five-classification exemption, but there are 19,000 PSERA staff. These individuals are now going to be affected materially by this legislation. Universities have said: give us two to four years in order to be able to implement this. We brought forward reasonable amendments to their start date timelines, and each of those was rejected by this government. Very disappointing as they had already been asked by the universities to be able to have these longer timelines, yet we're seeing the first implementation of the first sections, 1 through 7, from what I understand, by June 1, 2019, a mere six months from now. This isn't enough time. This isn't enough time for universities to be able to get their HR and legal departments onboard, and this is something that is very concerning. That was the other thing that we saw as a concern for this bill.

The other thing that I wanted to talk about with this is: why the need for this government to be able to move from courts being able to decide action or direction to legislation being able to decide that? Yesterday I talked about eight different court challenges that the AUPE had initiated in order to be able to change the section 12(1) provision in particular, which basically said that PSERA is a violation of section 2(d) of the Charter. This has been brought forward eight times at least in the course of a little over a decade. Each time, Madam Speaker, those courts have ruled in favour of the universities and PSERA.

Each time they have said that there is no Charter challenge, yet we see a situation where this government has said – in fact, the minister stood up yesterday if you'll remember – that they are quite confident that this is a Charter breach, that 12(1) is a Charter breach, so they are going to bring forward legislation. Now, if that is the case, why would they need to have a blunt instrument such as legislation to be able to do this, when in reality they have the courts? If they really felt there was a case, then they could take that case before the Supreme Court, let AUPE, in due course, do a Supreme Court challenge.

When I asked that question yesterday, asked for clarification on that, the minister was silent, would not answer that question, which is telling. Which is telling. We're in the dying days of this government according to all the polls. This government is moving as fast as they can in order to be able to help bolster their union buddies, and here we're seeing how they're throwing principle out the door in order to be able to use a blunt instrument to be able to get what the unions have been trying to do for the last decade. This is the sort of thing that's appalling to Albertans, it's appalling to this side of the House, and I'm calling them out on it. This is something that this government will be held responsible for.

The next question that needs to be asked is: does PSERA want to be AUPE members? Do they want to be rolled into the AUPE? The nonacademic staff that I talked to were not interested in that. They did not want to be a part of that. They felt that PSERA was doing a fine job and that they needed to have that representation where it was. I don't understand why this government – well, actually, I do understand why this government is doing this. They're doing it because AUPE is a major contributor to their campaign to win the next election.

Now, that being said, Madam Speaker, I want to get back to this issue of the government's claim that they can balance the budget. If they do measures such as this, which is going to allow this kind of collective bargaining for issues like how many employees you can have in a government organization or a public organization, this is just one indicator that Albertans are concerned about, that this government has zero interest in balancing the budget.

One of the things that I think is telling and one of the other issues that Albertans are concerned about is how they want to get to a path to balance. There was a CBC article on March 22, 2018, Alberta

Betting on Pipelines to Balance Budget. In it it says, “Alberta’s path to balanced budgets is built on hopes for construction of three new pipelines, including the controversial Trans Mountain expansion, plus reaping extra revenue generated by the federal carbon tax.” I remember the Finance minister saying that it was only built on two of the three, yet back in March they were saying how their ability to balance the budget was based upon three pipelines.

Then it goes on to say, “Plus” – so not just those three – “reaping extra revenue generated by the federal carbon tax.” Since March this government has waffled. They have gone all over the place. They have now said that they’re not going to increase to the $50 federal carbon tax until they get Trans Mountain built. This is a situation where Albertans are receiving mixed messages. It’s the same thing with this bill. With this bill it’s a mixed message. They cannot in good conscience tell Albertans, “We are going to be good stewards with your money; we are going to be good stewards with your tax dollar,” yet they bring in these types of things.

I just don’t know how they’re going to sell it to Albertans. How are they going to sell to Albertans that they can actually balance their budget by 2023 when they bring in all of these things that say that they can’t balance their budget by 2023. Granted, this differential has thrown everybody under the bus. Albertans are hurting terribly from it. But there are measures that this government could do, measures that they could implement. Our leader has given them a complete, fulsome plan about how to be able to address this issue of the differential. Yet what are they doing? They’re consulting more.

I would have to say that I don’t know whether or not this government is that committed to being able to get our resources to market and getting our resources a proper, fair value. Certainly, what we’ve seen in the past is pipeline protesting, anti-oil and gas protesting, yet now we see a complete 180 change. Again, that’s a hard thing for Albertans to believe, that these guys are genuine in their approach and what they’re saying.

I’ve tried to explain what I think are the concerns with this bill. I’ve tried to explain what I think is a reasonable reason why we’re not going to be in support of this bill. The timelines are not there. The universities have asked for a longer timeline. The nonacademic employees that I’ve talked to do not want to be part of the AUPE. This wide-sweeping change to who can go before a compulsory arbitration board is a very big concern.

With all of this taken into account, Madam Speaker, as we’ve tried to talk and figure out what this bill is, we have come to the realization that this is just the same old NDP approach to the economy and to our society, to give their union buddies what they’re looking for, give their union buddies their due, and hopefully those union buddies will take them to a win in the next election. This is no longer about what’s good for Albertans. It’s about what’s good for their political fortunes.

It’s the saddest thing to see, Madam Speaker. We’re supposed to be in here – we’re supposed to be in here – thinking about what’s best for Albertans, and in reality all we see is this cynical approach to what’s best for their buddies. You know, with all the talk and the rhetoric that we’ve heard from this government, the talk and rhetoric of them being such a champion for the little guy, such a champion for all Albertans and every Albertan, “We’re not happy until every Albertan is benefitting,” the things that we’re seeing here definitely don’t validate that.

With that, Madam Speaker, I will not be in support of this legislation passing third reading, and I would encourage all members of this House to vote no on third reading of this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Good morning to all. Good morning to you. I’m pleased to rise and speak today on Bill 29, the Public Service Employee Relations Amendment Act, 2018. Bill 29 amends the Public Service Employee Relations Act, the Post-secondary Learning Act, and the Labour Relations Code.

Madam Speaker, I understand that there are three changes being proposed. First of all, repealing five position classifications from a list of exclusions from the bargaining unit, repealing the provisions that restrict which matters may proceed to a compulsory arbitration board, and transitioning nonacademic staff at public postsecondary institutions from PSERA to the Labour Relations Code, giving them full compulsory interest arbitration rights.

It’s an interesting bill, just to sit and read it and read our brief. There are so many things to get your head around, and whenever that happens, Madam Speaker, I immediately wonder why the government is rushing things. Of course, we know that we are almost on the edge of an election. Of course, we know that the Alberta economy and the oil differential are huge – huge – concerns to all Albertans, to all Canadians for that matter. But this government, as we’ve seen so often in three and a half years, is absolutely determined to change the culture and the nature and the economic balance sheet of Alberta and fully intends to plow ahead despite the consequences, intended and unintended.

You know, Madam Speaker, I understand that my hon. hard-working colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner twice made amendments to delay the timeline a bit to allow our good, good Alberta public servants, our Alberta managers, our universities, our boards of governors, our politicians, our legal people, any Albertan that cares a chance to reflect on this, a chance to offer their 2 cents, a chance to help get it right. Of course, those two amendment attempts were defeated. This government is plowing ahead – plowing ahead – before the spring.

Of course, Madam Speaker, I’ve stood up several times over the years and talked about how so many of these bills should go to committee, a committee where the main thing is that Albertans with expertise, Albertans who are ultimately going to have to be paying the taxes, Albertans who are ultimately very much, and fairly, in receipt of the payments, whether it’s income or pensions or whatever, have the opportunity for their voices to be heard. Of course, any time that we on the opposition side try to have reflection, to put in the time so that Albertans can be involved or experts can get it right or Albertans can give us their good, good ideas, it doesn’t happen.

This government is absolutely determined to change our culture, to change our economy, to pile the debt on into the hundred-billion-dollar range. Madam Speaker, so many parts of this bill, Bill 29, the Public Service Employee Relations Amendment Act, appear to have not had the benefit of that full consultation, that sober second thought, that time for reflection. Again, I think the government, you know, in hindsight will be measured on that and the intended consequences and the unintended consequences. Unfortunately, too much of that will be the damage they have done to Alberta, our families, our communities, and our economy.

There are kind of five areas that I want to talk about in particular when it comes to Bill 29, the Public Service Employee Relations Amendment Act. Those areas, Madam Speaker, are around this government’s pledge to balance the budget, which, of course, according to their election campaign was supposed to be met this year, not missed by the $9 billion that our Finance minister and Premier missed it by. Secondly, unintended consequences, Madam

Speaker: what can happen so often when these things happen. Third, I want to talk about equity. I want to talk about autonomy. Then I want to talk some about labour peace as well.

I guess let's start with unintended consequences. One of the clear goals of the three changes – or is it the removal of section 30? – does have the potential to have consequences on government spending and on taxpayer obligation. Of course, that removal allows the union, if it's formed, and some of the existing unions the opportunity to go to the board and arbitrate on so many more things. My hon. colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner talked about how if a staff decided they needed more employees, it may happen: no regard for the budget, no regard even for the Finance minister. Can you imagine if the Finance minister really means that he wants to balance the budget and he has to add 4,000 more employees to the payroll? How in the world is he going to be able to do that?

How in the world is he going to be able to send a strong signal to bond-rating agencies? Madam Speaker, I don't feel I have to remind this House that our Finance minister has had his credit record downgraded six times. Six times. When I looked two days ago, the Alberta government is now borrowing, at 3.3 per cent, billions of dollars. It's billions of dollars of interest on the approximately $50 billion that's outstanding. I think that in October we the people, we the taxpayers of Alberta borrowed almost $3.2 billion. At 3.3 per cent, that's $100 million of interest, give or take, $100 million every year. That's just on one-eighth of what bills this NDP government has rung up.

Now, you're a rating agency. You're a person whose obligation is to get it right as to the financial shape that Alberta is in, and you realize that yet another part of what may cost the Alberta taxpayer is out of Treasury Board's hands. That bill may go up. Is that more or less likely to give us a worse rating? Madam Speaker, I know what I would do. Business loves certainty. Business needs certainty. Bond ratings are the same. They want to see a plan where expenses have some relation to revenue, where debt is only taken on responsibly and managed responsibly. Madam Speaker, it's clear that this bill, this yet NDP way of attacking what has worked so well in Alberta for so long, is going to have huge unintended consequences.

You know, let's not even talk on the macro level; let's talk on the micro level. Earlier this year, in March, the University of Alberta board of governors issued a 4 per cent cut – a 4 per cent cut – in response to the tuition freeze imposed on them. The Non-Academic Staff Association president, Elizabeth Johansson, said that in the past few months nonacademic staff positions were eliminated and people on contract were told their positions would not be renewed. Moving nonacademics from this PSERA to the labour code stops the board of governors from being able to change their remuneration, potentially. But where is the budget going to find its level? Where is the consequence going to come out?

I am very, very concerned that this removes a lot of autonomy from our excellent colleges and excellent universities. Madam Speaker, we're so fortunate that places like Medicine Hat College, the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary, my goodness, the University of Lethbridge have an excellent reputation for education. There are so many schools; obviously, I can't list them all. But those reputations and that service to our students, of course, mostly Albertans but all Canadians and people from around the world – that reputation for that good work has been earned carefully over tens and tens and in some cases hundreds of years. If all of a sudden the board of governors at the U of A realizes that they may not be able to control 3 per cent of their budget – I have no idea what the number would be – well, maybe the prudent thing to do, maybe the cautious thing to do is not to innovate, not to expand. Maybe the cautious thing to do is – well, you've got to make sure that you can pay your bills at the end of the month, at the end of the year. My goodness, I think that's any family, any business, any institution: make sure you meet your obligations.

You know, I'll digress to the Medicine Hat College for a second, how hard they work and how hard they innovate to look at trades and technology but at the same time add programs, four-year programs in conjunction with – I think Mount Royal and the U of C are the two main ones. Regardless, they keep working hard to find new ways so Albertans, of course, in my case, particularly from southeastern Alberta, have the opportunity to receive top-quality education close to home. Madam Speaker, I'm a believer that if you take away autonomy, if you take away authority, if you take away the ability to control making sure that you're being able to cover all your expenses from your board of governors, the unintended consequences may be serious. It may lead to a further decline in what this government has done to our education.

You know, I want to talk for a sec about the necessity of this, and I want to say why this NDP government's rush to change the culture and the makeup of Alberta surprises me so much and why I wonder – wonder – what the necessity of it is. Madam Speaker, I don't remember too many strikes in Alberta, so that tells me that we have pretty good labour peace. Thank goodness that Alberta has so many quality, quality public servants. Thank goodness that Alberta has so many hard-working people that every day show up to do their best to make an imprint on Alberta's future and our kids and our innovation and our technology. My goodness, we all know it's such a fast-paced, informative world right now that we have to be as good and as competitive as we can.

You know, Madam Speaker, I sit here and wonder. I remember reading about a year ago that Alberta had the highest wages in all of Canada, okay? We've got labour peace, and we've got the highest wages in all of Canada. And then I've seen the CFIB put out things that suggest that public service wages are comparable to 12 per cent higher than equivalent work in the private sector. Now, I absolutely know that to draw a comparison from one job to another across private versus public sectors, with different profit versus community or government objectives ... [Mr. Barnes's speaking time expired] My goodness.

Thank you.

9:40

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We now have 29(2)(a). Are there any members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to third reading? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to speak to third reading of Bill 29, Public Service Employee Relations Amendment Act, 2018. I understand that Bill 29 is set to do three main things, three big things: the first one is to repeal five position classifications from the list of exclusions from the bargaining unit; second, repeal the provisions that restrict which matters may proceed to a compulsory arbitration board; and thirdly, transition nonacademic staff at public postsecondary institutions from PSERA to the Labour Relations Code, giving them full compulsory interest arbitration rights. At first glance these appear to be reasonable, but as the expression goes, the devil is in the details. When one scratches the surface and takes a deep dive, there are concerns here with Bill 29.

It appears the government is repealing section 12(1)(f) as part of some kind of deal with AUPE to get them to move on other areas in collective bargaining. Individuals in the five positions under section 12 were previously excluded because these people were privy to sensitive information. Now, Madam Speaker, that fact has not changed. Section 12(1)(f) presently reads:

A person employed by an employer

- (f) in a position classified under the Public Service Act as
 - (i) a budget officer,
 - (ii) a systems analyst,
 - (iii) an auditor,
 - (iv) a disbursement control officer, or
 - (iv) a hearing officer who hears matters under the Provincial Offences Procedure Act, or performing for an employer substantially similar duties to a person employed in any of these positions.

In a number of decisions decided by the Supreme Court, the Alberta Labour Relations Board and the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench have both ruled that section 12(1)(f) is constitutional. Now, we've been hearing that the current government believes they have a case here that it's not constitutional, but a number of decisions have shown us otherwise. I cannot understand why one would want to unionize auditors and hearing officers, for example. These individuals will have definitely been exposed to sensitive information of their employer, and this would possibly put that information into the hands of those that are not supposed to be privy to it. It looks like a conflict of interest, oversight and adjudication all belonging to the same group as the front-line staff: a union.

Next up the NDP want to remove section 30. The removal of section 30 does have the potential to put the government even further into debt. We see where the potential for a loss of the ability to have control over hiring and control over numbers of staff can have a significant impact on the bottom line of the government. Madam Speaker, during a time of economic crisis the government should be focusing on the economy and jobs. Instead, their focus is on making changes that will make things more expensive for the taxpayer.

Madam Speaker, it's been three and a half years that I've been elected as an MLA, and over those three and a half years I've watched a government move in a direction that follows their ideology without fully comprehending the reality that is before us. We take a look at the significant impact of the downspin of an industry over the last three years, and I believe this government has been five steps behind throughout the whole last three and a half years. It appears that they're finally moving, trying to get into a position of having product moving to markets and accessibility to markets abroad for our oil and gas industry.

Madam Speaker, here again I look at NDP inaction on focusing on the real job at hand of ensuring that the economy and jobs are paramount and that we have the ability to actually take care of the people of Alberta and the social responsibilities that we have in our governance structure, take care of the needs of the market, the needs of the entrepreneurs and the employers within an economy, and many of the social needs that we are expecting as Albertans will take care of themselves.

Section 30 reads,

- (1) A compulsory arbitration board may only consider, and an arbitral award may only deal with, those matters that may be included in a collective agreement.
- (2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), none of the following matters may be referred to a compulsory arbitration board and provisions in respect of the following matters shall not be contained in the arbitral award of a compulsory arbitration board:
 - (a) the organization of work, the assignment of duties and the determination of the number of employees of an employer;

- (b) the systems of job evaluation and the allocation of individual jobs and positions within the systems;
- (c) selection, appointment, promotion, training or transfer;
- (d) pensions.

The NDP want to eliminate that law from the Public Service Employee Relations Act, Madam Speaker.

Then we have the transitioning of nonacademic staff from the Public Service Employee Relations Act to the Labour Relations Code. Almost 19,000 employees, Madam Speaker, will be directly affected, and this needs to be done democratically. Once again it appears that the NDP does not want to consult with Albertans and employees. The coming into force date of June 1, 2019, doesn't give the universities enough time. The universities' recommendation of an implementation date is, you know, two to four years, and here we're giving them six months. I believe we haven't given them full consideration in the recommendation that they have given.

Some of the excluded employees do not want to be unionized and are waiting to see the result of these fights to determine what happens to their jobs. They have not been asked what they want. This is not democracy. Thousands of employees will be directly affected. This needs to be done democratically.

Should there not also be a choice of union that they will be a part of? Maybe the nonacademic staff don't want to join the AUPE. Maybe they want to join another union, whether it be Unifor or whichever. This appears to be a case of the NDP making a side deal with the union, in this case the AUPE. Why else would they take an issue that the union has been losing in court for a decade and say that they have to do it to uphold the Constitution when the courts have said that the law is constitutional already? I dare say it is because the NDP is in a conflict of interest with the union because the union leadership gets guaranteed seats on the board of directors of the New Democratic Party. Bill 29, I believe, is another part of serving their union bosses only without taking into full consideration the impact on Albertans and Alberta taxpayers.

With that, I thank you for this time, Madam Speaker, and for the opportunity to address my concerns with Bill 29.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to third reading?

Seeing none, I will now call on the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to close debate.

Loyola: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Before I close debate, I just wanted to address a few things, the most important of which is that we need to recognize that in this province we have never really had labour peace. In fact, I remember, before this NDP government being elected, a number of times being out on the steps of this very Legislature with other union representatives, other union members, fighting for the rights that we should have. [interjections] Now, I see that the members across the way are chuckling. They're laughing at that. As a member of a union, you're part of a democratic institution.

See, this is the thing that Albertans need to know really well, Madam Speaker. You know, the members across the way try to accuse us of being ideological, but I can see no other members in this House that are more ideologically entrapped than those members from across the way because they are ideologically opposed to unions here in the province of Alberta. That's what their comments lead to. I want to remind them that unions are democratic institutions whereby the leadership of those institutions are democratically elected. I've gotten up in this House and talked about that before.

Now, my concern is that the members across the way think that in a free-market society organized labour should not exist. [interjections] I think I heard a "that's true" over there if I'm not mistaken.

Mr. McIver: I said "it's not true."

Loyola: I have to ask if the members across the way even understand the Labour Relations Code. The fact that this government has focused on updating that code and, of course, occupational health and safety right here in this province – we've dedicated so much time and energy to doing that. Why? Because the workers of this province have been asking for this for decades. For decades they've been asking for this.

You know, across the way the members will be like: oh, some of the members don't want this. Well, I have to remind all the members of this House that the plural of anecdote is not data. You could hear one story here, one story there, and one story, but the important part is that you put all this information together, you study it, you use statistics, and you understand: what do the majority of the people want?

I can speak to the fact that members of the Non-Academic Staff Association, not just the leadership, actually came to this government. Not only did they come to this government, but they also came and spoke with several of the members of this House and specifically requested that which is being done in this bill.

I want to say, Madam Speaker, that it's about time because these changes that we're doing right now are what are going to lead to real labour peace in this province, making sure that workers feel that their rights are protected, that their rights are being considered, and that they're being treated fairly in this province. That's what this is all about.

With that, I'll close debate on Bill 29. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Bill 26

An Act to Combat Poverty and Fight for Albertans with Disabilities

Ms Fitzpatrick: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise today and move third reading of Bill 26, An Act to Combat Poverty and Fight for Albertans with Disabilities, and to do so on behalf of the Minister of Community and Social Services.

Madam Speaker, our government is so proud of this bill. We have been moved by the response of Albertans across this province. Albertans from my constituency and across Alberta have said that this change is long overdue. They want stability and predictability in their lives, just like all of us. They are tired of politics determining whether or not they'll make rent each month. I have heard, my colleagues have heard, and I'm sure the opposition has heard Albertans say that they don't want to see cuts to their supports, and they worry about what they are seeing in Ontario, south of the border, and about comments that have been heard about cuts that will hurt from a member across the Chamber. We have heard these voices loud and clear, and we are indexing benefits to ensure these supports will forever be protected and grow as the cost of living grows.

I want to thank the minister for listening to Albertans and, in particular, listening to my colleague the MLA for St. Albert, who has been such a vocal advocate for persons with disabilities. I have listened to Chris, Ben, Veronika, Bev, Dave, and so many others and provided that feedback to the ministry. They listened. Those Albertans who have struggled and struggled are part of our community, and I believe that we have an obligation to support our community, all of our community. This legislation not only provides better supports today to help them to do just that; it ensures AISH clients and low-income Albertans won't need to fight to afford the basics tomorrow. It provides stability and certainty that as the cost of living increases, so too will their benefit rates.

I have to reiterate a few comments from second reading which I feel are worth repeating. My constituents with disabilities, seniors, and those needing income supports have told me and showed me how they have struggled to pay rent and put food on the table. This legislation not only provides better supports today to help them to do just that; it ensures AISH clients and low-income Albertans won't need to fight to afford the basics tomorrow. I have repeated it now in this House three times, so I hope you've heard it.

The opposition leader in our Legislature has said that we should match the B.C. spending levels. That would mean Alberta AISH benefits would be cut by $500 a month. I say absolutely not, and our government agrees that we cannot and must not do that.

Again, I must repeat this statement. Do you remember in the spring of 2015? The Premier at the time presented a budget which showed cuts across the board. A current member of the Official Opposition has said in the last couple of months that his party will cut and it will hurt. It sounds like the replaying of a bad record, a bad scenario for all Albertans, in particular vulnerable Albertans who are finally seeing some relief in their lives with this bill.

I am standing here today in support of this bill, and I'm doing so on behalf of all of my constituents and all Albertans. I must support it because it is making Alberta a better place for my constituents to live. I am proud to support this bill and to move third reading.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Pursuant to section 49 of the standing orders I move that this question be now put.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Would you like to speak to the motion before we proceed to anybody else? No? All right.

Just to clarify for the House again, the motion for previous question serves to curtail the debate and after it is moved and carried, no further amendments to the main motion may be moved. The motion may be debated by any member who has spoken to the main question. Are there any other members wishing to speak to the previous question?

Seeing none, I will put the question to a vote.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 30 Mental Health Services Protection Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Acadia on behalf of the hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Madam Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Health it is my privilege to move second reading of Bill 30, the Mental Health Services Protection Act.

It is fitting that we are debating this bill during National Addictions Awareness Week. Madam Speaker, when Albertans access substance-use treatment or mental health services, they should feel safe in doing so. They should be able to trust that they will receive quality services from appropriately trained and regulated professionals in a safe environment. This bill keeps a promise we made to Albertans in the Speech from the Throne this spring to introduce legislation that will protect Albertans seeking health care during a difficult and vulnerable time in their lives.

Albertans are often shocked to learn that service providers in this field are largely unregulated and that private treatment facilities are not regulated in any way. Our goal is peace of mind for patients and for their families.

Albertans who have needed this kind of help have shared stories about facilities that offered services of questionable value and in some rare cases were unsafe. On Tuesday you heard the story of Kim and Mike Argent, the parents of Taylor. In 2007, when he was just 17, Taylor died in a private treatment facility outside of Red Deer.

Taylor's parents believe that it was the lack of regulation and oversight at the facility that led to his death, and a fatality inquiry in 2010 agreed. In his report Judge J.A. Hunter noted that the facility didn't require certification from any body, governmental or otherwise, when it opened. There was no evidence that the facility was ever inspected by any agency of government. The operator had no formal training nor did most of his staff. Judge Hunter described the employee who was on duty the night Taylor died as "woefully unprepared to deal with anything out of the ordinary." What's more, Madam Speaker, even as Taylor's condition worsened, there was no attempt made by the facility to contact his parents or contact for help.

I'll quote directly from one of Judge Hunter's conclusions. "Anyone can start up a treatment facility and operate the same without any standards or measure of the care the participants receive." Can any member of this House imagine that statement being acceptable for a seniors' home, a child care facility, or any kind of health care facility? Yet here we are: a facility presenting itself as offering health care, but held to no standards whatsoever, with fatal results.

That was 2010, Madam Speaker, eight years ago. I think it's safe to say that the findings of Judge Hunter's inquiry and his recommendations were utterly ignored by the Conservative government of the day and by a series of Conservative governments that followed. Three Conservative Health ministers came and went, including the current leader of the Alberta Party, with no action taken. And the Argents, sadly, were not alone. Alberta Health is aware of dozens of complaints from patients and families describing steep fees, unethical business practices, ineffective treatments, and in rare cases abuse.

I am very proud that this government is taking action. This bill will finally provide Albertans with protection from this kind of exploitation. Initially the legislation will set out licensing requirements and standards for residential treatment facilities and provide a framework for future standards. It will also create a college of counselling therapy of Alberta to ensure professional practice standards.

Madam Speaker, a phased approach to implementing the proposed legislation will ensure that government balances the need for initial standards without creating onerous requirements on service providers that could shock the sector and lead to a reduction in services. It will require residential treatment facilities to have policies, procedures, and standards, including critical incidents reporting, consent in service standards and contracts, and clear record-keeping requirements. Over the next two years Alberta Health will work closely with service providers to establish common-sense standards that protect Albertans. This bill will give government the authority to follow up on any complaints, address concerns, and the ability to amend, suspend, or cancel a licence.

The legislation would also create new standards for substance-use treatment and mental health care professionals. Amending the Health Professions Act to create a new college of counselling therapy of Alberta will regulate about 5,000 currently unregulated health professionals working in Alberta's substance-use and mental health system. This will provide stronger assurances to Albertans seeking substance-use and mental health services that the professionals caring for them have the expertise needed to provide safe, quality care.

When we are sick or hurt, we assume that all of the people around us providing care are held to professional standards. This government believes Albertans have the right to the same expectation when they have a mental health or substance-use concern. These issues are health issues and should be treated as such. We've heard this call from many in the field, and I certainly note that the chair of the Federation of Associations of Counselling Therapists in Alberta was present at Tuesday's announcement. I'm proud that our government listened and is taking action. We would be the fifth province to regulate counselling therapists and the third province to regulate private residential substance-use treatment.

Madam Speaker, I would like to stress that there are many – in fact, the majority – well-run facilities and dedicated caregivers throughout our province, and this legislation will formalize the policies and standards that they are already adhering to.

Through Bill 30 we will ensure Albertans have access to safe, quality care when accessing residential substance-use treatment facilities as well as protections as consumers. I encourage all Members of the Legislative Assembly to support second reading of Bill 30, and I look forward to debating this bill with my hon. colleagues.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is an honour today to rise in the House to Speak to Bill 30, the Mental Health Services Protection Act. This bill in its current form aims to solve two very real problems here in our province. The first is a lack of consistency and accountability for our health counsellors. In Alberta right now there are 14 different associations that represent the different sections of counselling, and that means there are 14 different practices, standards of best practice, 14 codes of ethics, and so on, and so on, and this leads to a great number of discrepancies between the various sections, which does not benefit Albertans necessarily nor result in better outcomes.

Mental health is a very real issue today that our society has now truly embraced and recognized, but I understand that for the last – well, since time began, really, mental health is one of those intangible things that people have, I suppose, looked at more cautiously. But as our communities experience life-altering events like fires in their communities or floods and other disasters, when people deal with the pain of the opioid crisis in our province, and so many other issues, what we see in our society is that identifying those people who aren't as able to cope with a lot of these harsh realities as much is very difficult.

Certainly, when I was entering the health professions back in the year 1991, way back, the most mental health training they gave us was the fact that they made sure that we had the ability and knowledge to talk about the things. What it boils down to is being able to talk about the things with someone that you trust, someone who understands – maybe they can show some empathy – but sometimes by talking about things, we come out with how to address and deal with these things.

In emergency services there were counsellors available, but we often trained our own people as well. I myself had a course on PTSD, that's posttraumatic stress disorder, and I would work with my co-workers if we identified that any of them had any issues after a call. But that doesn't make me a mental health therapist 28 years later.

I guess the point here is that we have to make sure there are certain standards because the issues that they're dealing with are very critical, and as much as anyone who has any of these weekend courses or other different levels of education currently provided, I understand their intentions are good, but unfortunately the skills and the qualities that they may actually possess may not necessarily address the issues of those individuals.

It's for those reasons that FACT-Alberta, who represented all 14 associations, campaigned for this government and this opposition and so many other people across the industry to regulate mental health therapists. I think this is a good thing. To that effect, we do need to thank them for being advocates for their industry, advocates for our mental health strategies, advocates to ensure that people do receive the appropriate help that they need by qualified personnel.

The college of counselling therapy of Alberta, that this bill seeks to create, would result in just greater consistency, and they would all be subject to codes of ethics, which is excellent. They'd all be bound by a strong set of principles that focus on patient care and outcomes, and more importantly, Madam Speaker, they will be held accountable if they choose to abuse the sacred trust they have with patients. As we've seen with our other health professions, they do have a sacred trust, and these people, who are mental health therapists, are no different. They are expected to embrace people and listen to them and deal with their issues when the people that they're addressing are at their most vulnerable moment in their lives.

Again, this bill helps to create more consistent meanings of the word "counsellors." I have a PTSD course from 20-plus years ago, but is that fair for me to say that I'm a counsellor or a therapist? I'd have to say no. But that said, it should not discourage people from having the ability to speak to anybody about their personal issues that affect their mental health. That is a point, to be able to speak to someone that you know and trust. Just talking does a phenomenal amount of help with people's issues when they address things.

There are other groups that have always emphasized mental health. I think that our law enforcement groups have always emphasized these things. Again, that's another group that deals with a lot of hard issues on the streets. These are very stoic professions: firefighting, EMS, law enforcement. You know, we don't like to say that we need help, especially with mental health, but certainly that evolution, that change, in our society has helped bring those things to the fore, and it's easier for nurses and even doctors and other health professionals to come forward and say that they do need some help.

We cannot take Alberta's mental health for granted. I'm glad that this bill seeks to clarify a lot of the issues that surround this topic. I am grateful that this bill aims to expand the titles available for counsellors. Again, this will allow the college to develop a scope of practice more specific to an individual's area of expertise. Overall, Madam Speaker, I think we can agree that a college of counselling therapy in Alberta is a good thing and will result in a better standard of care for all Albertans.

I guess that some concerns we have, that may have been addressed when we were briefed on this by your government, are the concerns around a lot of these smaller groups that provide therapy. For instance, a lot of the counsellors that we use for drug addictions – not a lot, but there are some – may not necessarily have the educational background, but what they have is the experience in actually being in that situation, being that victim of pharmaceuticals. Their experiences are great in that they can truly understand the perspective of being under those negative influences and how to try to help. It gives them a level of empathy that helps them to address the issues when they're listening to these people.

We have other groups like Alcoholics Anonymous and other similar groups that have counsellors and stuff like that. These are venues where we're just trying to encourage people to talk. I believe that this bill does not discourage these groups even though they are not perhaps, as we hope to obtain, qualified mental health therapists. They're simply – what's the word I'm looking for? They're certainly to facilitate the conversation. They get people to talk about their feelings and their emotions and their experiences with the hope that that verbalization will help their mental status.

Ah, Mr. Speaker. You're so fluid.

The second area that this bill focuses on in its current form is the licensing of residential addiction treatment centres. This is another good thing that comes from this bill. Currently anyone can open a centre, hypothetically, that deals with addictions and treatments. Again, they tend to be all over the board in regard to some of the positions that they hold within these organizations and the qualifications. Some of these groups charge, like, substantial amounts of money in order to treat these people. Again, we just want to give anyone who is entering an addictions facility or treatment centre the assurances that they are being helped and treated by qualified people. This is a good thing. This is noble.

You know, we've heard stories from individuals who've lost their lives while in the care of some of these organizations, and we just need to make sure that these centres do have high standards in regard to their staffing. I recognize that when people lose their lives when receiving treatment, it's not necessarily the centre's fault. Let us be clear on that. But, again, it is about just ensuring that they do have a minimum standard so that we as a public have assurances that these facilities are good and real because many of these facilities require donations from community members, from Albertans, and we want to make sure that the money we're donating goes to a proper, legitimate cause that realistically addresses the issues.

Again, the standardizations that we're going to put in here I think are excellent. By bringing this bill forward in its current form, we are ensuring that these centres will be regulated and will have to adhere to a high standard of practice and that they would also be held accountable if they do not follow proper procedures. The procedures include the requirement to create and maintain records. They must also send records to directors, and if any of this is not done, the centre risks a licence cancellation and would be unable to apply for a new licence for two years after the decision.

The question I might have about this, though, is in regard to the volume of records that is being expected. Well, unfortunately, these are the things that come with regulation. Now, a lot of these small agencies, quite honestly, are going to be burdened by the fact that they do have to be held accountable, and their records are going to have to be that much more firm, and it will be difficult for them. There is also the financial burden that this creates. With all the work in becoming a legislated body and all the work in becoming licensed premises, they will have to invest money to ensure that their facility and their resources are upgraded and that their guidelines and everything else are up to date. Again, that all requires effort, which requires sometimes financial obligations. That is the one negative to this, I suppose, the increased financial burden but with respect to the fact that it is necessary.

You know, the bill, in regard to these regulations, in its current form also says that inspections will be randomly done from time to time, which will help hold these centres accountable. I think that's good as well. But, again, I wonder how it will affect things like the Edmonton Bissell Centre, the Calgary drop-in centre, and even the Lethbridge emergency centre, many of which are operated by volunteers with varying degrees of backgrounds in mental health. We don't want to discourage a lot of these things because it's important that people be given any opportunity to speak about their mental health issues, okay?

Our religious institutions. I know many people in this room might not value our religious institutions, but, you know, they provide a lot of support for our communities, and a lot of things that they do are providing mental health supports. When people need someone to reach out to, sometimes they walk into a church or something just to talk to someone. Again, I don't think that those are things that should be discouraged because the religious institutions I've talked to do have all the resources available so that when they recognize that someone has a need or something, they know which Alberta Health facility or what other supports, human services supports, are available to them, and they do guide them in those directions. It's just part of belonging to a society that overall really cares, and we have so many different areas trying to address the issues that are within our mental health.

If there is any guidance I could provide on this bill, it would be to tighten up the language used to describe a residential addiction treatment service. In its current use,

"residential addiction treatment services" means services provided to individuals who have an addiction in which overnight accommodation is provided for all or part of the duration of the services and includes, without limitation, withdrawal management services, but does not include services provided in an approved hospital as defined in the Hospitals Act or services provided by a person or service provider exempted by the regulations.

Because no scope has been laid out in the bill's current form, that means that this would apply to emergency shelters, transitional housing, permanent supportive housing, special care and addiction treatment facilities, intoxication shelters, and detox shelters, all of which would fit in the current definition. So the wording of one night as the time component when describing addiction treatment service: it loops in so many of these other organizations that we utilize to help our most vulnerable. In everyone's community, in all 87 of our constituencies, we have some sort of shelter, some sort of system there where people can stay for the night. What's common are mat programs where it's just a heated space, a place that's safe. You're given a mat, and you can sleep on that mat. It's not the most luxurious of accommodations, and there are a lot of people that enter these facilities with a lot of issues. I myself in my previous career had to go to many of these agencies to pick up patients that were having issues.

Again, the way that the Mental Health Services Protection Act is worded, I just worry about impairing a lot of these facilities from providing these very basic services that amount to one night when their intent might not necessarily be to directly address mental health but just to provide support to people who might have issues or are homeless. What will be the impact on these organizations if they now have to purchase licences? On that I'm very curious. Again, it's the financial burden. This government puts carbon taxes on all these charities, carbon levy, and . . .

Mr. Fildebrandt: Tax.

Mr. Yao: . . . tax. But, again, with making a whole sector more regimented, there will be additional costs to everyone involved. I mean, is it going to be a couple of hundred bucks, or a couple of thousand, or several thousand? Those will be the interesting things to see.

What the college of counselling therapy is trying to mimic, though, is also reflective in all of our other medical professions. We've always had the college of physicians. They're the pinnacle, the peak, of our medical professions, a very well-established group that's self-managed. Over time all the so-called sub health professionals from paramedics to X-ray technicians and diagnostic imaging and lab technicians have all fought for that ability to become their own college and manage themselves and not necessarily be run by government. For that, I commend this group.

A lot of the unanswered questions in here, personally, I'm not too worried about because I've seen a lot of those unanswered questions in a lot of the other health professional groups as they evolved to become colleges. It's only when they sit down and develop that college do they try to address a lot of the issues that are inherently questions in this bill. As much as I'd love for this government to provide more clarity on that, I recognize that we are going to have to rely on the college to address a lot of those issues, a lot of these questions that we have. A snap of a finger and a piece of legislation and a book is only the beginning of that. This is an evolution that every health profession has done and this group will continue to do for many years to come.

This isn't something that we create and then set aside. This is something that all 87 of us have to monitor in our own communities, talk to those agencies and see how they're addressing the issues. Again, it's not just the official addiction centres. It is your local faith groups. It is your local homeless shelters. It is your local counselling groups like your AADACs and whatnot. We've just got to make sure that their issues are addressed.

With that, Madam Speaker – Mr. Speaker. Sorry. Again, your fluidness just messes me up. I'd like to thank the government for introducing this bill, and I'd like to adjourn debate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mrs. Pitt: Just a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: There's a point of order?

Mrs. Pitt: The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo moved to adjourn debate.

The Speaker: Did the member adjourn debate at the end? I'm sorry. I didn't hear that.

Mr. Yao: Yes, sir.

The Speaker: I'm sorry. Is there still a point of order?

Mr. Clark: Point of order, Mr. Speaker, if I may. I'm not convinced that the hon. member managed to get the words "adjourn debate" out before the time had expired. [interjections]

The Speaker: Are we on the point of order at this point?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to say that the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow makes a good point, and we'd be happy to hear him speak. We withdraw our point of order is, I guess, what I'm saying.

The Speaker: Okay. The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is always an honour to rise in this House and speak to any legislation, but speaking to an important piece of legislation such as Bill 30, which really speaks to the heart of one of the issues that is most important to our province and our communities and something I hear a lot about in my constituency office and in my travels and talking with Albertans, both my constituents in Calgary-Elbow and beyond, and that is mental health.
